level of standards and how we would act in practice on the development of our oil and gas industry.

With that, I'd be interested to hear what some of my fellow members might say about the public interest test with its particular effect on the environment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

2:50

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: On amendment A19.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. You bet. I just want to touch a little bit more on the public interest.

I received an article written by Shaun Fluker, I think his name is, at the University of Calgary. He's a lawyer, I believe, or involved in the law department there. He touches on the public interest, and I'll read what he wrote here. The title is Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act: Setting the Stage for the Next 50 years of Effective and Efficient Energy Resource Regulation and Development in Alberta. A section of it says:

The bill removes the much maligned "public interest" test from energy project decision-making. (Currently, section 3 of the ERCA requires the ERCB to make project decisions in the public interest, having regard to the economic, social and environmental effects of the decision). So persons who conduct hearings on energy project applications or who review energy project decisions that directly and adversely affect rights of a person may be obligated to implement the will of Cabinet or the Minister, should either of them choose to direct the Regulator on what factors to consider or otherwise how to decide a particular hearing. And there is nothing in the proposed legislation to require this to be in the public interest. It is conceivable on the face of this proposed legislation for the Minister to favour one person's legal rights over another, and direct hearing commissioners to adhere to these politics in deciding an energy project application or a project review. The well-informed person, viewing the matter realistically and practically, can only conclude there is no independent hearing process at the proposed Alberta Energy Regulator.

Now, that has a lot to do with subsection (3) of my amendment, talking about the regulator conducting hearings, inquiries, or other investigations in respect of a proposed energy resource project, mentioning carbon capture and storage again, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, [and] give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, [and regarding] the social and economic effects of the project.

I don't know this gentleman. He's not writing this for me. He's just making a statement after he reviewed this bill. We have some lawyers in our caucus and there are some lawyers in their caucus who I think are pretty intelligent individuals. This gentleman: I have no idea what his political views are. I don't know if he belongs to any party for that matter, but he's taken a look at this from up above, not as a member of the government or as a member of the opposition and trying to say: "Well, you know, we're trying to make a point on public interest, and they're trying to make a point against public interest." He's looking at it as an Albertan, someone that can look at the bigger picture and say: "You know what? There are a lot of issues regarding the hearings, inquiries, and investigations in proposing new projects that will affect the public, and there need to be issues resolved in dealing with the public." There are some sections from a letter from the Environmental Law Centre also.

Like I mentioned before, putting the public interest in doesn't take away from property rights. I think it actually enhances the property rights of the individuals, not necessarily just landowners. You know, when we talk about property rights, we talk about the rights of every individual to own private property. There are issues that will affect towns, cities, villages, communities. You know, there are many small acreages around, and in today's world there are many people who don't want to live in town. They live close together. In my area there are a lot of landowners who don't own large tracts of land. You know, they're small landowners. I myself am a small landowner. I mean, I have friends that have 10,000 acres, and I have friends that have a quarter section. There are many, many houses – if you took a 10-mile radius, there might be 15 houses there.

So in regard to carbon capture and storage – I'm getting to that – this is in the public interest. As you've heard, there are some good explanations about carbon capture and storage. There are areas where it's going to work, areas where it's not going to work. As long as the people making the decisions about where these areas are going to be . . . [interjections] They're having a good time over there.

The Chair: Hon. members, could we keep the side conversations down, please. Thank you. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks has the floor.

Carry on, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: I was just talking about, you know, the conglomeration of houses in a certain area and about carbon capture and storage. I hope there are no issues with it. I hope that they can continue to make advances in technology.

You know, that's what this bill is partly designed to do. The more economically efficient, the more environmentally friendly our natural resources can be extracted from the land, the better. We're going to have to figure out ways to compete in the global market. Obviously, the decision was made for carbon capture to help that.

I had the opportunity of meeting with ICO<sub>2</sub>N, a group of companies that deal in carbon capture and storage, and they had some very good examples of how they're using CO<sub>2</sub> in the development of cement, concrete. I never imagined that they could use that for concrete. You know, there are other things that we can do besides pumping it into the ground. I think that with technology increasing and the intelligence of people around the world, they are going to find other ways to use the carbon that we're producing.

In the public interest many of these oil companies now are reducing their carbon footprint by technological advances. They're doing procedures when they're drilling wells. We have way more fuel-efficient engines on the rigs that are drilling these holes. You know, the way things are going is that it's in the best interests of these companies to reduce their carbon footprint because it takes a lot of energy to produce carbon. So they're going to keep their costs down if they can produce less carbon. That means they're running their equipment more efficiently.

You know, I do respect the carbon capture and storage initiative. Personally, I don't believe that the Alberta taxpayers should be putting upwards of $2 billion into the project. We should be encouraging these companies to do their due diligence in reducing their carbon footprint for the good of the public interest, for the good of mankind so that we don't have to enforce carbon taxes on them and make them do carbon capture and storage. I think that if we keep working with industry, ensuring that they are continuing to improve their technology, work with them to try to get it to be common practice that in everything we do we need to reduce the carbon footprint, it will be in the best public interest.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. For those of you following at home, you may have lost track a little bit about this amendment if you've just tuned in. I think it's important to give the context around the specific amendment so that there's full understanding. Of course, part of this amendment, a key part of it, is section 2. It says that section 2 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2). Subsection (2) currently says:

(2) The mandate of the Regulator is to be carried out through the exercise of its powers, duties and functions under energy resource enactments and, pursuant to this Act and the regulations, under specified enactments, including, without limitation, the following powers, duties and functions:

- (a) to consider and decide applications and other matters under energy resource enactments in respect of pipelines, wells, processing plants, mines and other facilities and operations for the recovery and processing of energy resources;
- (b) to consider and decide applications and other matters under the Public Lands Act for the use of land in respect of energy resource activities, including approving energy resource activities on public land;
- (c) to consider and decide applications and other matters under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act in respect of energy resource activities;
- (d) to consider and decide applications and other matters under the Water Act in respect of energy resource activities;
- (e) to consider and decide applications and other matters under Part 8 of the Mines and Minerals Act in respect of the exploration for energy resources;
- (f) to monitor and enforce safe and efficient practices in the exploration for and the recovery, storing, processing and transporting of energy resources;
- (g) to oversee the abandonment and closure of pipelines, wells, processing plants, mines and other facilities and operations in respect of energy resource activities at the end of their life cycle in accordance with energy resource enactments;
- (h) to regulate the remediation and reclamation of pipelines, wells, processing plants, mines and other facilities and operations in respect of energy resource activities in accordance with the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act;
- (i) to monitor energy resource activity site conditions and the effects of energy resource activities on the environment;
- (j) to monitor and enforce compliance with energy resource enactments and specified enactments in respect of energy resource activities.

So that's subsection (2).

Then in subsection (3) what we're saying is to add:

(3) Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

That's where that section slides in.

It is helpful when we're examining why we're here – you know, we're not the only folks that are worried about this bill. There are many others. For example, there's a University of Calgary assistant law professor, Mr. Shaun Fluker. He said that the retraction of landowner rights in Bill 2 is, quote: a colossal gaffe by the Alberta government and a substantial gift to political opponents of the governing Tories. Unquote. He said: I think it is a colossal gaffe because the government doesn't need to be stoking any fires by stripping away these rights. He said, quote: It just seems to me they are going to anger a bunch of people that they really don't need to. If you are the leader of the Wildrose, you must be licking your chops on this. Unquote. Well, I don't know about that. We're kind of sad about it, but I can see his point.

Fluker then said: it really doesn't help the landowner to be given notice of an energy development on their land because nothing appears to propel a public hearing until after the licence has been issued.

The Chair: On the amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Right. This goes to the amendment right here, quote: it will only happen after the shovels hit the ground. For example, shovels hitting the ground on a carbon capture and storage project. It's key.

Fluker said that there's nothing in the bill to ensure there's funding available to help landowners fight projects like carbon capture and storage – he didn't say that; I put that carbon capture and storage in there – and that it is unlikely the regulator will reverse decisions it has made when it hears its own appeals. Then he finishes off: the bill eliminates appeals to the Environmental Appeals Board and provides only narrow avenues of recourse to the court.

Now, let's remember that this individual is an absolute expert in this field. He's a property rights expert. He hasn't been travelling around the province or anything like that – he's at the University of Calgary – but he and many other professors have said, have pointed out that there are just so many flaws in this bill that, frankly, it will be a colossal disaster if it's passed.

What's so frustrating about it, Mr. Chair, is that it's just so unnecessary. There's no point to passing a piece of legislation that clearly – clearly – is not in the best interests of Albertans, clearly takes away specific landowner rights, does not adequately put them back or give them back or compensate landowners for them, and takes away that appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board. When you think about these carbon capture and storage projects, you know, one of the things we have talked about is that we've never done this on such a large scale before, and because we haven't done it on such a large scale before, there are going to be all kinds of different environmental impacts that are possible. If that's the case, then it's unfortunate for our carbon capture and storage project. It's unfortunate that we've taken away the right of a landowner to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board regarding a project like carbon capture and storage.

I think that what Professor Fluker has said here is that it is a colossal gaffe because the government doesn't need to be stoking any fires by stripping away these rights. And it's so true. It's just not necessary. There's no point to it. All it does is anger landowners. All it does is create a feeling and a reality, frankly, that the rights of the landowners are being put at the bottom of the totem pole, and everyone else's rights are ahead of theirs in this process. I think that that's why you see, again, such a strong push to hoist this bill and to send this bill back to the drawing board so that we can get it right. I think that's really important. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, please, if we could keep the . . .

Mr. Anderson: That's okay.

An Hon. Member: They're having fun.

Mr. Anderson: They're having fun.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: I appreciate that. They're having fun. I don't begrudge them talking about it.

You know, one of the things that I think we need to remember in this – and maybe we should review a little bit about what exactly carbon capture and storage is and what some of the risks involved in that are. I think that we do need further discussion on this because I think that it's pretty clear to me that the members opposite don't understand that there are severe social and economic effects of these projects when they are being contemplated. The section:

Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest.

Again, we've talked about public interest over and over and over again, but I think that it's important that we really hash that out as much as possible and make sure that we take into regard the social and economic effects of the project and its effects on the environment and so forth.

Just a few thoughts for the 3 a.m. crowd at home listening intently to proceedings here. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to this amendment again. There are a number of issues dealing with the public interest and this broad aspect of having a regulator that can take this under consideration. There's a situation right now brewing in Rocky View on an individual property owner's land where there's something pretty funky going on. Nobody understands exactly what's causing the land to swell up sort of like a minivolcano – that's what I can call it – but it is the impact of a resource development project that has caused this.

What happens is that when the regulator takes a look at the permitting process of an application, it does need to take a look at that broader aspect of: how is this going to work in relationship with other development? I want to bring up the issue of fracking, which has been both extremely productive and problematic in some areas. It is still . . .

An Hon. Member: Fracking? Is that A or B?

Mr. Anglin: It is still an energy project, my fellow member. It is just called fracking, and it is an energy project. I'm sure it's an energy project. It would be found under section B where it talks about "a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project." It has three phases to this: carbon capture, storage, and an energy development project. How do they all work in conjunction with each other? That's where this example is going.

When you're dealing with issues of fracking, the impact of that type of process can be small in scale or extremely large in scale, and how is that going to impact if it conflicts with the process of dealing with carbon capture? Well, one is shallow most definitely, and the storage of carbon capture is expected to be deep, but if one development interferes with the other – and we have that with fracking now. We have an issue where fracking has breached other well bores because the fracking generally goes horizontally. And we do have well bores that are interspersed. Some are known. Some are unknown. Some are abandoned, and those are the ones that probably cause more problems than others. That's exactly why in the public interest, Mr. Chair, that regulator should be looking at this because they're going to give an approval to a resource project, and you cannot ignore what has transpired or taken place prior to that.

As I mentioned earlier, that's exactly what happened in Innisfail. That was an isolated project doing a frack, and about one mile away we had an eruption. That was an accident. It was a preventable accident, of course. It's just that they were not following the proper protocols. But a regulator that has that broad power to consider how this is going to impact others has the ability to possibly prevent some of that because had they looked at the surrounding area, what they would have found were a number of bores that were much closer than anyone knew.

Now, in this example with an energy regulator that has that ability to look after the public interest and consider a wider, broader scheme of things on how this is going to interact, then that type of information could make it to the regulator. That type of evidence could make it so this could be considered, and the whole process, then, would be more efficient on an environmental scale and more efficient for this particular developer. This particular developer suffered greatly financially as a direct result of the accident. Now, some people would say rightfully so. Other people were not so harsh in their words. But it doesn't matter. The accident happened.

If we can prevent environmental accidents because we empower the regulator to take this under consideration, then everybody wins, and that's extremely important. I mean, what better aspect could we have by taking this amendment, putting it into legislation, and creating a win-win opportunity for not just the company that's developing the resource but also for the local property owner who has the development on their property and for the environment and for the greater community?

That would create a situation that I would hope the hon. members would want to be consistent throughout the process, which would in turn be the whole reason why we are creating a single regulator with the responsibility to try to streamline the process. In streamlining the process, having that ability to take into consideration the public interest not just on the social or economic effects but on the effects of the environment, that is one of the biggest selling cards we have as a province.

As I spoke to earlier, we have a huge tourism industry that is highly dependent upon our maintenance and our protection of the environment. As most Albertans do, I also go out to the west country and enjoy it. You can see why it has a large attraction for tourists. Why would we not want the regulator to consider that? Almost all of that is SRD land. That belongs to this government. It belongs to the people of Alberta. It is this government that is tasked with the responsibility for the protection of that land. It's for the enjoyment of everybody. We develop on that land.

On the issue of carbon capture I'm not exactly sure. I know I've heard different theories on where they would want to do this, where they would want to incorporate it on a large scale in Alberta, but nobody has come up with a definitive plan on exactly where and how they're going to do it. The central southeast was actually looked at at one time, but I know there are other formations that industry has looked at and thought were more applicable. Wherever they decide on, it has the potential to have a huge impact on that local environment. It goes beyond the actual carbon capture process. It is also about the building of the pipeline, the industrial development that takes place, however large, however small. In my area that could potentially cross First Nations lands, which now opens up another entire can of worms. But it doesn't change anything. We still have to deal with it.

Looking at this amendment, to empower the regulator in the conduct of a hearing to both inquire and investigate these proposed projects, based on the social and economic effects of a project or the effects on the environment, is, in my mind, paramount to the quality of life of these communities. It is paramount to the economic sustainability of many of these communities. That's one of the balances that I think sometimes gets missed in this discussion more than outside this honourable Chamber.

All the communities that I represent are pretty much oil and gas communities along with being agricultural communities. Without a doubt, I have a lot of farmers in my area, but most every one of them has one sort of relationship or another. If it's not direct employment, they may actually own a company where they service the oil and gas industry, or in one form or another they are participating in the development of oil and gas. So they have a vested interest as a public in this development, and they prosper as a direct result. What we're proposing here is that the regulator undertake on behalf of that public this jurisdiction to protect both the social and environmental effects by having to actually take that into consideration. That is balanced with the economic effects of how this all meshes together. It's no easy task when you actually think about it in those broad strokes.

There are, again, examples upon examples of how this would be effected or put into place in various communities and in various areas because of the changes in what takes place not just environmentally but what type of energy development occurs in those regions. In dealing with the issue of carbon capture and pipelines, where those pipelines will be located has a significant impact if you are dealing with situations where you have heard about management things like the elk and the caribou and how they're going to actually deal with this pipeline, whether it's going to be above ground, underground, or what type of pumping stations in particular and how those pumping stations, or pressurized stations, whatever you want to call them, are going to be energized.

These are no small projects. These are huge investments. It has a tremendous impact on the public welfare in the sense of the public economic effect, but it also has a greater value to industry, which is the public perception beyond our borders, our customers, who want to see that we're doing things right, who want to have that same sense of security about the environment that Albertans want to have. The public interest test takes into consideration, when they are empowered with this amendment, to look at these projects, and as the hon. member said earlier, it is the price we pay to play in this game. We do have to show our customers that we are going to do something constructive to deal with the issue of CO<sub>2</sub>.

The choice has been made right now that we are going to capture and store CO<sub>2</sub>, which is fine for the time being, but in the end, if we deal with that also in tandem with the reduction of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, we are that much further ahead of the game, and our industry prospers, our economy prospers, the individuals that participate in that economy prosper, and that's all part of the social effects of a project.

Again, getting into the very broad strokes of why this amendment is not just sufficient but essential to the effective application of a single regulator, it empowers that regulator to step outside what is a very narrow constraint at this moment to a broader constraint of the public interest, to look at these projects and consider these projects not just in the public interest and not just for the social and economic effects but also based on what's going to happen in the environment.

As some members in this House may be aware, we have significant issues in our environment. The icefield is still receding. We have an issue dealing with the pine beetle, that has still significant effects and has not yet abated though some successes have been made. The fact is that the pine beetle is still spreading and will impact our entire forestry industry, and I will tell you that our forestry is actually quite concerned. These developments that this regulator will consider in dealing with the environment: that's why they need to understand or have that power, that delegated authority to consider the environment or the effects on the environment.

There is a correlation between CO<sub>2</sub> and global warming. If there's not, then why are we doing it? It is important that our regulator be empowered to make good use of the authority that we give him via this amendment to make sure that what we do is not just economic but that it has that social benefit for the community at large, whether it be all of Alberta or just the surrounding communities, and, most importantly, to reduce the effects on our environment, to lower our environmental footprint.

By the way, the hon. member said: the price to play. It's a good quote, and the industry used it, too. It is a marketing tool for our industry. Our industry does a good job. There's no question about it. There are some pretty fantastic things that they are experimenting with. There are good things that they are actually doing, and the future looks bright in the way of technology development to make things even better. It's just a matter of how we're going to get there and how fast we can get there. That's really going to be a technological development as much as anything else, but having a regulator that is empowered to deal with the public interest, that is empowered to weigh in the effects on the environment, that, I say, will assist our industry in developing those new technologies to help them lower the footprint on our environment and to basically enhance not just our oil recovery but enhance our extraction of our resources so that we can get those to market.

Going back to the importance of having that regulator actually have that power or that jurisdiction, that they can take a look at a project and on their own volition look beyond the basic application and invite into the process a wider range of experts or a wider range of information so that they can make a better informed decision on a multitude of effects that this project could have could indeed change what we do and how we do it.

Now, I want to give an example because this came up the other day, and it was an interesting example. Should we approve small hydro projects on rivers?

An Hon. Member: That's irrelevant.

Mr. Anglin: That's totally relevant, and let me explain why. That's a good question. If you develop on a river like the Peace River a small hydro project, you will affect a very larger hydro project that was possibly planned. It is about layering or scaling the river in the sense of: how do you want to get the most efficient use out of that river flow that you possibly can? This was brought up to our committee the other day, and I hope to kind of explain it in these terms.

This would be a proposed energy resource project in the public interest. What was explained to this committee was that we need to think about the development of hydro in the long term and not the short term. Yes, you can develop small hydro projects, but if your goal is to maximize how you're going to get the most out of that river and if it is a larger hydro project that you're considering, those smaller projects will reduce the flow however much, and they will restrict it however much.

An Hon. Member: What's that got to do with section 2?

Mr. Anglin: It has everything to do, actually, with section B here on this amendment, where it talks about proposed energy resource projects. That would be an energy resource project. It just happens to be hydro. It has a real value in extraction of our bitumen up in Fort McMurray in the oil sands. All these projects are in many ways interlaced, and they are dovetailed. That's why this amendment is so important. You want that regulator to be able to step back and look at the larger picture of all the resource development and how it's going to mesh together because the ultimate goal is to maximize the energy for what our purpose is, which is to get this to market.

3:30

An Hon. Member: The bill doesn't apply to hydro.

Mr. Anglin: No, no, no. But if you take a look at this section B, (3) Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, what it talks about is in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project . . .

Did I just run out of time? I will explain that the next time I get up.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Chair, I think I've seen the light . . .

The Chair: Relative to the amendment, hon. member, proceed please.

Mr. Dorward: Absolutely.

. . . because I live right next to the Strathcona refineries, and I'm sure there are some social and economic effects of the project there. They may even apply under this act for something someday. And if they did, I could be here in the middle of the night working away, and I just might phone my wife and say: "Hi, dear. I'm fine. I hope you are. I hope there's no danger there in Strathcona and Capilano." Then I'll sit down.

Back to you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Again, hon. member, if I can remind you to try hard as you might to stay with the intent of the amendment, please.

Mr. Hale: Sure. This is right in the wheelhouse.

I'd like to talk about, with regard to public interest, the pipeline integrity review that is going on. I had the pleasure of attending the press release that the hon. Energy minister held there a few months ago albeit, after the media talked to me after his press release, I said: "Hmm. Nothing to disagree about. We agree that this pipeline integrity review needs to be done." And why does it need to be done? For the public interest, for the environment. It's something that affects the public.

We have thousands and thousands of kilometres of pipelines just in Alberta, and we need to review them so we don't have these mishaps and, you know, these pipeline breaks that none of the companies want. Nobody wants it. We don't want it. The environmentalists don't want it. We're doing this review in regard to public interest.

The people that live downstream of a pipeline break: they're hugely affected. The companies are hugely affected. They've got lots and lots of costs that they incur with the cleanups, you know, the fines. There are many, many opportunities for these breaks to happen. There are companies that really look after them. They have lots of testing that they do. There are regulations in place that require them to test their pipelines once a year if it's not sour gas. There's a bunch of different regulations that determine when they have to test them.

I think it's a very good idea to conduct this review to ensure that the regulations that are in place are proper, that they're being enforced properly, that the companies that are doing these pipeline inspections are doing them properly and are qualified companies. You know, it takes one little mishap to put a black mark on the whole industry, and that's something that nobody wants. I mean, we all agree – and everybody has stated it many times – on how important this energy industry is to Alberta, so anything that we can do to improve it and continue to improve it and continue our reputation around the world of being one of the best energy-producing provinces, let alone country, in the whole world.

You know, with respect to the pipelines and their integrity there's a county that's in my area – it's the Wheatland county – that's trying to work with the hon. Education minister and different groups to build an east Wheatland school. One of the issues they're having with the school is finding the proper placement of the school on the land, and the largest issue is the pipelines. They have to build this school on a corridor of land somewhere where there isn't a pipeline, so what they've done is that they've taken some sections that are available to them, and they go and have pipeline companies go and check where these pipelines are to ensure that they don't build a school over a pipeline. That's hugely in the public interest, you know, not to build a school overtop of the . . . [interjection] Well, it depends on if there's a pipeline break.

If there's a pipeline break and the school is overtop of the pipeline, what sort of issues can arise in that school? It's not safe. It's safety. It's public interest. I mean, I feel that my children are part of the public, and I'm pretty sure all of the members here feel that their children are part of the public. It's in our best interest and their best interest to have the safest environment possible, and that includes not putting a school overtop a pipeline or in the vicinity of a pipeline or any sort of other wells or any danger.

We have to continue to work with the industry and ensure that the pipelines that are being put in, the old ones that are put in – we have many, many old pipelines that are deteriorating, maybe from the way that they were put in 50, 60 years ago. I mean, pipelines are the safest, most economical, and reliable way to transport our product. This review will just enhance that and, hopefully, find some issues, and we can continue building on the public safety and the public interest with respect to pipelines.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is once again a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. I rise once again to speak in favour of an amendment put forward by my good friend the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, an amendment to help save Bill 2, to make sure that Bill 2 is in the public interest.

Now, I was trying to save this, but it's just too good not to share. It's another quote. You know, I do get to read books every once in a while. I love to read, and it gives me great pleasure to read. This one is Churchill in His Own Words, by Richard M. Langworth. It speaks specifically about amendments and criticism. It goes like this. "Criticism may not be agreeable, but it is necessary. It fulfills the same function as pain in the human body. It calls attention to an unhealthy state of things."

Like I said, this is very relevant because we're talking about an amendment. We're talking about fixing something in a bill. There is an unhealthy state in this bill right now, and we want to get that fixed. To do that, we're prescribing these amendments, specifically this amendment, the public interest amendment, one that would place back into the bill a reference to the public interest that will be removed when this bill replaces relevant pieces of legislation that exist now. Difficult as it may be to ascertain given the expanded and consolidated powers of this regulator, it is important, and it's a duty to consider that the public interest be present in this bill. I consider that my duty. That's why I keep standing up here to talk about public interest, to keep talking about this amendment.

We've proposed adding a third section to the mandate of the regulator that mirrors section 3 of the current ERC Act, which reads as follows:

Where by any other enactment the Board is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

Well, we've heard from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. We've heard from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the Member for Airdrie, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, the Member for Calgary-Shaw specifically on why we need to pass this amendment, why this amendment needs to be part of the Responsible Energy Development Act. I guess my question is: why don't we have this as part of it? I think we've put forward a very good case, and I'm sure the Member for Airdrie is going to continue on this because we are going to continue on this. We can talk and talk and talk and keep putting forward these convincing arguments as to why we need to have the public interest in Bill 2, in the Responsible Energy Development Act. You know, it's one that facilitates good corporate governance. It facilitates dialogue between the public and the regulator and makes sure that all sides are being heard and that no one group becomes out of balance or heavily weighted when we're considering energy projects or things like carbon capture or storage projects.

You know, we must consider conducting these hearings, inquiries, and investigations and giving consideration to whether the project is in the public interest. Having a project put forward that one group opposes just means that there's going to be constant fighting on that project even long after it's built. They're not going to want it there. Well, if we give everybody the ability to air their concerns in a constructive manner and come together on these things, we can have a situation like we have in my riding close to Joffre. We have the NOVA Chemicals plant. It is one of the largest plants in North America for the creation of polyethylene. The company there has done a very good job of making sure that all the other stakeholders in the area are kept in the loop as to what they're doing, how they're doing it, and where they're doing it.

I love being able to praise the job that they're doing because they are listening to the public interest. They are talking to the people that are around there. I don't see any reason why we can't expand that so that every time we are looking at a proposed energy resource project, all of these members of the community come together with the industry, with the regulatory board and discuss what their issues are because if they don't fully discuss what their issues are, they're going to come to loggerheads and they're going to butt heads on things. Society works so much better when we facilitate these things so people can talk out their issues rather than just having something railroaded through and not giving due consideration to all the stakeholders and all the citizens in the area and all the people that this affects.

When we have this kind of policy placed in our bills, it reminds the regulators to get everybody together, to get them on the same page so that they're not fighting, and they can work together, and we can see a harmonious relationship between industry and Albertans and all affected parties like I have in the riding of Lacombe-Ponoka. It is amazing that I get to stand up here and talk about that relationship that's out there. I've been to a number of the meetings that NOVA Chemicals holds with the surrounding landowners and stakeholders, and I'm in awe at what they've done. If all of the industry was doing this, we wouldn't be having these issues. These issues just simply would not exist. It's great to stand up here and praise something that works and then to make sure that this amendment becomes part of the act so that other energy projects and stakeholders that come in can emulate what has already been done and what seems to be effective.

Now, I can't say enough to praise the people at NOVA out in Joffre with the work that they've done on this, and it's a wonder to have this in the constituency that I represent. I have to say that it's wonderful to represent that constituency. It is, I believe, the best constituency in the province of Alberta. It's just a blessing and an honour to be asked to represent them and to stand up and share stories like this, where the industry has come with the other stakeholders in the area to strengthen Alberta, to strengthen the constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka, and to be a model going forward, rather than standing here and having to argue and put forward these persuasive arguments to make sure that this goes into legislation. I mean, this is just common sense that it goes into the act, so why don't we just follow common sense, vote this into the act, and save Bill 2?

Now, I don't know where else we need to go with this, but we can continue going on and talking about the public interest and the amendment that we're putting forward, that my good friend from Strathmore-Brooks has put forward, to make sure that these protections and these consultations and these hearings that bring public interest into the decisions of the regulator are continued forward. I mean, this was good in the last piece of legislation, the one that we currently have in force in the province here, so why would we scrap it? Why get rid of it? It's working. Let's keep it. Let's make sure it stays in Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. Like I said earlier, you know, the criticism may not be agreeable, but it's fulfilling a purpose, and that purpose is to make sure that the public interest is heard and that we have a good amendment to save this bill so we can pass it in good conscience and move forward with it and not have to revisit this.

Let us not make haste or waste. We must not rush forward with an incomplete act that ignores the rights of all stakeholders. We have the opportunity to get it right here this time, right now, this morning at 10 to 4.

You know, it's amazing that at 10 to 4 in the morning we're still here. We're debating. It's unfathomable to me that at 4 o'clock in the morning democracy is still working. I can't explain my great pleasure that I'm here.

Everyone sure knows that it is more efficient and effective to get this right the first time than to have to come back and repair legislation that had unintended consequences. Let's go back. Let's look at this amendment again. Let's talk about it some more and make sure that the public interest is not forgotten, that our regulators are reminded every time they go back to this act that public interest is of paramount importance, that we must get all stakeholders together when we're conducting a hearing, an inquiry, or an investigation to give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest and have regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment. This is what Alberta needs. I believe this is what Albertans want.

Thank you again for taking the time to listen to me at this wonderful hour of the morning. You know, in two hours people are going to be getting up and drinking coffee. It's just wonderful to know that we've been working on this all night and all morning and that their Legislature is working for them.

Let's pass this amendment on public interest. I'm sure the public is interested that we're doing this at 4 a.m. Thank you again for this. It looks like the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is going to continue on in this vein and push forward on this amendment to make sure that we get it in the bill and that we're saving Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I know you'll make great efforts to focus on the amendment and the subject of the amendment.

Mr. Anglin: Absolutely, Mr. Chair. I'm more than ready, and thank you very much for the reminder.

To the hon. member: when you really see the light and make me believe that you've seen the light, I know you'll be sitting over here, too. This is where the light really shines.

In dealing with this amendment on the issue of public interest and the broader scope of social and economic effects, one of the things we haven't talked about in dealing with carbon capture is transmission lines. Now, the fact is that you cannot capture carbon and pipe it any great distance without having transmission lines to power that pipeline. That is a fact.

An Hon. Member: No, it's not a fact.

Mr. Anglin: Oh, it is.

We'll explain it because it depends on where it's going to go and how far it's going to go. It's going to need electricity – all pipelines do – and it's got to be pressurized to push that. If you take a look at our existing transmission system along with what has already been approved by legislation, this is what a single regulator would be able to take into consideration when it looks at the overall impact of the project. With HVDC between Edmonton and Calgary, which is uneconomic to begin with, you can't tap into that in central Alberta.

An Hon. Member: I thought that was your idea.

Mr. Anglin: No. My idea was to come down from Fort McMurray. They seemed to miss that one. I actually believe in HVDC technology. I actually believe in AC technology, and I believe in transmission lines and the development of electricity, so that's not a problem. But if anyone said that I recommended a very short-distance HVDC line, that would not be true. I recommended using HVDC over long distances. Now, that would be true because then you can make an argument that it was economic.

Now, I actually brought that forward to the Energy minister, if I'm not mistaken, talking about bringing electricity down from the Slave River region all the way to the Redwater proposed upgrader, which would fit right into section B of this amendment, which is dealing with a proposed energy resource project. Here's where we have an example of why the regulator should have an expanded scope of jurisdiction to consider the wide project impacts, not just social but economic effects and the effects on the environment. Transmission lines and electricity are just as much a part of this as the extraction of bitumen. It is relative to the overall scope of the project. That's important.

When you look at the development of transmission in this province and what we're going to do about it, it's why we should always wait for the economic trigger. That's what you'd want the regulator to do. That's what this amendment would authorize this regulator to do: to step back, take a look at the wider aspects of how all these projects would dovetail together, and make a decision on the social and the economic effects in the public interest. That's all transmission lines are, the public interest. It's not really a private thing unless you're the regulated utility that owns the transmission line, but that's a different matter. That's a regulated company, and they're governed by different legislation. But other developments in the province will make use of that.

Here we're dealing with a situation where, if we were going to integrate carbon capture with what we were planning, we probably would not be building these short-distance HVDC lines. We probably wouldn't even be locating them where they're located. That would be a different matter altogether. But it could save us billions of dollars by doing the project right. So having a regulator empowered by this amendment to step back and integrate a number of projects or a singular project in the various aspects of development can save the public a sizable sum of money. That is something that we're looking at right now, building a couple of multibillion-dollar clotheslines that have no general economic value to the public, and maybe they never will, depending on how generation develops. This is a huge issue in the planning stages, in the approval stages, in the approval process of energy development.

The public interest or the public interest test is not a minor matter. It is a huge responsibility. That responsibility under this amendment is given to the single regulator. When this regulator can give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, that's the part that they can actually come back to and look at and say: we need to step in and make minor adjustments. In some cases they're minor adjustments, but they could affect billions of dollars in expenditures that would save the ratepayers or the taxpayers of this province a significant amount of money.

The other thing that it can do is create efficiencies. One of the ideas that has been floated in this province for some time – it seems to be developing pretty much on its own initiative in many ways, if that's a good way to describe it – is this green energy corridor, which is proposed by industry, on the eastern side of our province. Now, it's called a green energy corridor because I think it's just a good marketing name, but really what it is is a utility corridor. It is a corridor where we would locate our transmission lines, our pipelines, and other utilities for the enhancement and the development of oil sands projects and local oil or gas extractions.

How would we deal with the situation of advancing that green energy corridor unless this regulator has the ability to look at each individual project that comes before it, that would be affected by it, and how it would integrate with this green energy corridor? It's significant. This is a corridor that is proposed to come from the Fort McMurray area, down the eastern side of the province, and actually enter into Montana. If I'm not mistaken, down by Havre, Montana, is where it is currently recommended. Whether that will come to fruition or not would then depend upon this regulator. Do they move forward with it? Do they not move forward with it? How does it work?

I would argue that without the ability to have that broad jurisdiction to consider every element as these applications come forward, how they would be integrated in this green energy corridor would be an injustice if this amendment was not passed. The regulator will not have the authority to do that kind of long-term planning so that we get the most efficiency out of our development. That's really also part of that streamlining process. Not every development integrates naturally with the next development. Having a regulator that can have that vision, have that expertise, and have that jurisdiction as a result of this amendment to consider the public interest, that would be the mandate that would give the regulator the jurisdiction to step back, help design with a long-term goal in place to make the most efficient extraction out of our energy development.

The interest of the environment, which the hon. member from the third party opposition had brought up earlier today, was a great concern. I don't know if this amendment would relieve his concern completely, but it certainly would go a long way in helping to relieve that concern if the regulator had the ability to make decisions having regard to their effect on the environment. That is not just isolated to the third party in the opposition here. That is a major concern not just for environmental groups but for the public at large. I don't think it is a subject that is taken lightly in any jurisdiction. As our world grows, as our economy grows, we know we make an impact on the environment. Nobody disputes that.

What we want to do, what the goal is right there on the environment, Mr. Chair, right there on that authority, having regard for the effects on the environment – once it's accepted, this amendment would give that jurisdiction to this regulator, and that's important because we have a huge impact on the environment.

It's not just isolated to Alberta. We are 3 and a half million people and growing, and as we grow, one of the great mandates in front of us is: how do we lower our environmental footprint? If we give this authority, this jurisdiction, to the regulator, they can then take that mandate and actually make decisions to make the best use out of: how do we lower that environmental footprint? Now, the public interest test on that, then, gets carried forward, which really supports our industry.

One of the great things that benefits our industry is that the more we lower our environmental footprint, the less criticism we get. It's the whole idea behind carbon capture in many ways. It is the price we pay to play. Industry gets it; they understand. They have to get better at what they do. As I mentioned earlier, they're doing good things, but the technology that they're not yet using, that is in the future, that they see coming, can help them do a whole lot more. When you visit with the oil sands developers, which is a large industry group, they are more than happy to explain the new technologies, what they can employ to reduce their environmental footprint. See, we know we're going to develop the resource, and we also now know we can do it better. The future actually looks bright in the sense that we can even do it better than what we currently are trying to do.

Having a regulator that can take that into consideration when it is getting ready to make a decision or when it is adjudicating a process where it needs to make a decision and not have a set time frame, because that amendment was rejected, at some point it benefits everyone. [interjection] Did someone wake up and hear that joke? I didn't hear it.

It benefits everyone. It benefits the public at large, it benefits the industry that is planning the project, and it would benefit those property owners that are dealing with the adverse effects of whatever development they're dealing with.

The environment is no light matter. It is absolutely imperative that we protect the environment not only for ourselves but for our children, for future generations. There is a marketability to protecting the environment. We do a better job than other jurisdictions that are our customers. We have something to say: "Look at what we're doing to protect our environment. Look at the strides. Look at the accomplishments." The criticism, the black eye that our industry gets is sometimes justified, sometimes not at all. Sometimes it's totally fabricated. It is a battle that our industry undertakes on a regular basis.

I will tell you that one of the leadership applications that this government can take is to give jurisdiction to this regulator to make decisions having regard for the environment. That benefit of accepting this motion will actually give a payback over the long term, in my opinion, that has great, great benefits for our economic growth. It is, I think, one of those miscalculated, underestimated benefits of allowing long-term consideration of energy development having regard for the effects on the environment. In the absence of that, we risk not just abusing the environment, but we risk an opportunity to set the leadership and excel at some of these things that we absolutely do excel at. I know that this government takes great pride in pointing out everywhere it excels. You might say that this government is not shy about that. They're more than willing to make note of that.

If this regulator has the authority and the jurisdiction to make decisions having regard for the effects on the environment, I suppose our goal, then, will be for this government to be able to make the same type of boasting and take credit for an environment that has protection second to none. Nobody would be happier than, I think, myself and probably many of my colleagues. That would be significant not just for all our constituencies; it would be significant for the industry as a whole to show itself off to the world as to how to do this better than any other jurisdiction. Let's face it. It doesn't matter where you develop oil and gas. The criticism is there no matter what country you do it in, no matter what jurisdiction it happens in.

For our jurisdiction, as the hon. Minister of Education pointed out when he gave his speech at the breakfast the other morning – he can't hear me right now – we took great pride in where we excelled. It was just absolutely something where we think we want our industry to have that same type of credit, which is: we're going to develop our oil and gas with the regulator, with the authority of this amendment, to be able to monitor and take care of the environment. Nothing would make our industry more proud than if we were able to have this type of boasting example, which is how well we excelled in lowering our environmental footprint, in protecting our environment for future generations yet still creating an industry that's growing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, pursuant to Standing Order 5 I do not think we have a quorum of 20. I would ask that we adjourn.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 5 the division bell was rung at 4:09 a.m., and the Chair of Committees confirmed that a quorum was present]

The Chair: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you have the floor.

Mr. Anderson: I like to have an audience when I speak, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: I'm sure you'll be speaking very eloquently to the amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: To the amendment. Absolutely. To the amendment, as the minister is reminding me.

Obviously, this amendment talks about public interest, and I think that there is some interesting commentary pertaining to why the elimination of public interest is a problem.

I know that there's no great love for Mr. Keith Wilson in this Chamber except on this side of the House, of course. In a November 4, 2012, letter he sent to the Minister of Energy as well as the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the Liberal and ND oppositions, there is a note that he put together on elimination of public interest, and it's very germane to what we're talking about here.

Another aspect of the long-standing social contract is the mandate of the regulator as the overseer of what the energy industry is allowed to do on people's private lands.

The legal provisions that set out this mandate of the regulator are found in sec. 3 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act . . .

3 Where by any other enactment the Board is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

If you notice, that legal provision which is found in section 3 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act is what we're proposing here. It's not like we just took these words out of a hat. This is actually coming from a piece of legislation called the Energy Resources Conservation Act in section 3.

He goes on to say:

Bill 2 repeals this critical section. But Bill 2 it goes much further. Bill 2 removes every reference that exists in the current statutory framework relating to public interest. It carries none of the public interest provisions forward into the Bill.

Bill 2 effectively declares that the public interest no longer applies when it comes to energy industry development in Alberta.

The public interest provisions in the current law – the ones being repealed by Bill 2 – are the legal provisions that direct that the regulator is to exercise wisdom and judgment in its overall decision-making. A public interest mandate is a hallmark of substantive regulatory boards and commissions in modern democratic countries.

The government's decision to abandon public interest decision-making for energy projects is truly troubling.

I think that's a very interesting letter and thought with regard to this section. I think it's important to understand that last line:

A public interest mandate is a hallmark of substantive regulatory boards and commissions in modern democratic countries.

See, that's the problem. If you don't include the do-over bills, this is the fifth problematic land-use bill that we've had come through this Legislature. The other four have all had to be amended by subsequent bills except the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act, which still hasn't been amended. Bill 19, Bill 50, and Bill 36 have all come through this. It's like this movie just keeps replaying over and over again. We've done this every time, where the bill comes forward and the government says: "Oh, you're misinterpreting things. You don't know what you're talking about. The lawyer doesn't know what he's talking about. The lawyers don't know what they're talking about. The professors don't know what they're talking about. No one is listening to us. We've got it right. We've got it right. We've got it right."

We go through this process again and again and again, and then two years down the road, sure enough, the government says: "Okay. Well, we're going to clarify some things." Then they put in some clarifications, so to speak. Sometimes they are very substantive changes to the law to correct mistakes, and other times they are clarifications. That's what's so frustrating here, Mr. Chair. We have proposed – this is amendment A18, right?

The Chair: Amendment 19.

Mr. Anderson: Amendment 19. We're on amendment A19. We also had five subamendments, I think. How on earth can we go through this process and have 24 amendments come before this House and apparently not one of them is legitimate in the eyes of the government? I guess I don't understand that because, clearly, there've been some good ideas put forward here. I mean, the government said that the reason they denied our referral amendment to the standing policy committee is because: "Well, we've got processes in Committee of the Whole that we can do. We don't need to send it to a standing policy committee and delay the process further. We need this now. We can fix whatever we need to fix in Committee of the Whole."

The Liberals, the NDs, and the Wildrose have all brought forth amendments. I mean, I don't think any of us expect the government to agree with all of them, but surely there have to be some in here that the government can look at and say: "You know what? That's not a bad idea." You know, earlier we talked about the rights of landowners and recognizing that in the mandate of the regulator. In this case, why don't we make sure that when we're doing projects, there's a public interest requirement and when the regulator is assessing these projects, there's a public interest requirement, and so forth? I mean, we could go on, making sure that the board has people with the right expertise on it.

We just go through point after point, yet nothing seems to convince this government that they've done anything wrong, not wrong so much as that they couldn't even improve the bill with any input from the parties that represent 56 per cent of the voting public after the last election. This government has a majority; you bet they do. They got 44 per cent. They got a majority government. That's fine. Surely, they've got to think that the other 56 per cent of the people had a point and that their representatives have a few points that might be legitimate in the discourse. I just don't see any movement on that side on looking at the proposals we're bringing forward. That's why we're here at almost 4:20 in the morning right now. Frankly, I know our caucus. We represent the views of 450,000 Albertans, which, clearly, is less than whatever – 550,000? I don't know – the government got, but it's still a lot of people, and they're very concerned about these things. They've been contacting us. We've all got tons of e-mail on potential amendments, groups coming to us and saying, "How about these amendments?" and bringing forth all these ideas.

Frankly, I think we're just tired, not physically tired so much, just tired of the people that voted for other parties being ignored and just being taken for granted and being told that they don't have a point and that there's nothing we can do to improve this bill, that not even a word can be changed because this government has it all perfectly right. We saw what happened in the past in that regard.

What's frustrating about this is that we did indeed put out the olive branch on these amendments at the beginning. We released them early; we went to the minister early with them, with this and the 20 other amendments that we put forward. We're almost done. There are only two or three left. We asked for support from them. We were happy to work with them. Nothing. Absolutely nothing. Just zero. That can be a little bit frustrating, so we think that that needs to be pointed out.

It wasn't our intention to be here at 4:20 in the morning, but if that's what it takes to draw attention to this bill and how poor it is and how it's going to injure the property rights of Albertans, how it's not going to do what it's intended to do, which is to cut the time and streamline the regulatory process – I don't think it will do that either because there are still no teeth. There are still no regulations saying that it will be six months before a yea or nay is given. Taking out the Environmental Appeals Board process injures both landowner rights and, I think, the environment.

This is a bill that we were so excited to support. We wanted to support it. In second reading – go back and read the Hansard – we wanted to support this. We want to support it subject to a few caveats. We didn't expect to get all of them. We didn't even expect to get a majority of them, but we thought there might be something we could add. Apparently that's not the case. Apparently the government feels it's got it all completely correct. I think some people would say that that's a pretty arrogant way of looking at things. I think that everybody brings something to the table. We've been in here, and there are parts of this bill, the majority of this bill that I support. I've supported NDP amendments to it. I've supported – we all have – Liberal amendments to it. Of course, there are our amendments, and I think they would have made a much better bill, including this amendment that we're talking about now.

We're not going to allow without any fight a bill like this, that is this important to landowners, rural Alberta in particular, to be passed in the middle of the night, when people are asleep. That's just not going to happen. We're going to have to have a discussion about this, obviously, tomorrow. As long as the government wants to have the discussion, that's fine. We'll do it that way. The good thing is that we'll bring attention to this issue yet again, and hopefully over time it will create change. It already has, but there's still more change to be completed for sure.

I think the government will be happy to note that I do think that at some point we will vote on this amendment, but after this is, I'm assuming, rejected, we have to remember that this will have been rejected, the public interest requirement. They also voted against an amendment supported by the Wildrose that would prohibit the Minister of Energy from being able to demand any and all personal information like medical records that might have fallen into the hands of the regulator, a Wildrose amendment that would mandate the new regulator to uphold property rights, an amendment that would have mandated that should the regulator reconsider a decision it had made previously, it would notify those affected and hold the proper hearing on those issues, and so forth.

I mean, it's just amendment after amendment. These are good amendments. Absolutely some of them should have been accepted. It is unfortunate. Out of all 20 amendments, I think I saw one government member on one amendment stand up and say: yeah, that probably should have been included. I think it was the one that said that we should consider landowner rights. One of the members stood up. You know, I won't single him out because that's like being given the death stare. If an opposition member praises one of the members opposite, his colleagues get really upset with that, so we won't embarrass the poor man. It's disappointing. What can I say?

So here we are. You know, the sun will be coming up in a couple of hours. The folks will arrive, and they'll be asking what we've been doing all night. I'm sure we'll explain that to them, as will the government, and we'll let the people of Alberta decide how they feel about that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As my hon. colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka has said many times, it is an honour and a pleasure to rise in this House, even if it is 4:25 in the morning. It absolutely is an honour to sit here with the hon. Member for Airdrie and the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I'm the only one who knows your full title. I think it's probably because we're good neighbours.

It really is important that we get this bill correct. The amendment that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks is proposing does just that for landowners, for industry, and for the government. I think that that's the important part. What everybody in this House needs to understand is that putting these amendments forward is not being done just out of pure, "Jeez, this is fun; let's put down 10 amendments."

This actually came from direct consultation with Albertans. It came from direct consultation with industry members. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has worked very hard on putting these amendments together and making sure that they're fair and reasonable. As the hon. Member for Airdrie mentioned before, he went above and beyond in ensuring that the Minister of Energy had the amendments well in advance so that there was time to discuss them and time to consult their stakeholders as well.

You know, I think that it does pay some heed to mention that this isn't five Albertans; there's a significant number of them. I also know that this side of the House is not the only one receiving these concerns. For everything that we're receiving, from what we can see, they are also being sent to the Minister of Energy as well and some of them to other members of this House on the government side. So it's not that anyone is limiting them to just one specific party. They're actually limiting their concerns with regard to this bill to all MLAs for their consideration and for their discussion. Certainly, I mean, if we're tremendously way off and if there's absolutely no ability to have carbon capture and storage projects, which means a project for the injection of captured carbon dioxide, added into this bill, I'd certainly love to hear from the government members as to why that is absolutely impossible to do, as we would have liked to have seen on all the other 18 amendments that we've put forward, not to mention the subamendments. It's also interesting that in all parts of this bill, just as the hon. Member for Airdrie mentioned, the public interest portion has been completely removed from most sections of this bill, which should cause everybody a bit of concern.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks mentioned a document that he received from Shaun Fluker, which was written on November 13, 2012, which I believe he sent to everybody. I don't have everybody's e-mail on this, but it appears that it was sent to more than just the Wildrose Party. I have no idea who he is. I've never met him. I don't follow anything he does. Strangely enough, he's writing in defence of the current hearing practice at the Energy Resources Conservation Board because he feels that that process is more thorough than what we're doing with Bill 2. We're basically saying that we're going to streamline the process, that we're going to merge these departments into one single regulator, but then we're going to eliminate the processes that we have currently in existence which provide the public interest portion of this bill.

He also goes on to state that "Bill 2 significantly reshapes the governing legislation on energy project hearings, and . . . the Bill proposes to repeal existing statutory rights held by landowners" under sections 26 and 28. Now, that's only one part of what he's talking about. But when he talks about the significance of Bill 2 literally reshaping what landowner rights are, well, we've been here before, and if we don't get this bill right through this amendment, we're going to be back here, just as we were on Bill 50, and you're going to have the protests, and you're going to have the town hall meetings that we saw with bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. I'm pretty sure that the government really doesn't want to go there.

Repeatedly we've heard in this House how members of the government side are very much in favour of landowner rights, and I have no reason to doubt that. I strongly believe that there are many in this House that absolutely are. Unfortunately, there seems to be this idea that if they support any opposition amendment, that must mean that all of a sudden they're crossing the floor and becoming a Wildroser. You're certainly more than welcome to do that, but just because you side with what's right for Albertans doesn't necessarily mean you're changing your skin kind of thing. So that's always good. [interjection] No, you're absolutely right. It doesn't necessarily mean you're not either, but we don't hear from the other side, so I guess we don't know what that position is at all.

As I said, I'm more than willing to understand exactly why we would remove public interest in its entirety from this bill. It would be great if that explanation was provided at length and if that explanation could be provided to Albertans because I think they would love to hear it as well.

The next issue you go to as it relates to the amendment is that it talks about the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment. There's an interesting article from the European Environment Agency, and this was done in November of 2011. It promotes carbon capture and storage as a new and innovative way to go, and it talks about how it can bridge the gap for the next few decades in cutting emissions. I think that that's where the government is going, and I can applaud that because we need to look at new technologies and new opportunities to have bigger discussions on what's the best investment for Alberta and all of that.

But it also talks about that they have reporting that shows that "while CCS may have an overall positive effect on air pollution, emissions of some pollutants may increase. Understanding these types of trade-offs are extremely important if we are to deploy this technology.” Clearly, Alberta is deploying this technology. When we’re investing $775 million and eventually $2 billion into a carbon capture and storage program, we need to make sure that the social and economic effects of this project and of these types of innovative ideas are worth what we’re doing.

One of the things they do mention is that CCS requires approximately 15 to 25 per cent more energy depending on the particular type of technology used. Something that’s not been really made clear to Albertans, as far as I can see, is: what types of technology are available for CCS? How are they used, and what is the best methodology in using them? I think that would be very helpful for Albertans.

It goes on to say that “this in turn can lead to increased ‘direct emissions’ occurring from facilities where CCS is installed, and increased ‘indirect emissions’ caused by the extraction and transport of the additional fuel.” Now, this is where it can cause concern because if you’re asking landowners to store CCS underneath their land, then if it is possible – and I’m not saying that it is or it isn’t; I’m just saying that if it is possible – that there could be direct emissions, then that needs to be researched and that information needs to be provided.

We talk about research on asbestos. We talk about research on emissions from our vehicles. We’re very environmentally conscious on what we’re putting into the environment, and I don’t see that CCS is any different than that. Clearly, when the government of Alberta sees this as a strong technology and an opportunity to go forward, then it would behoove us to make sure that in the act itself it is covered under this amendment. We seem to have just pretended it’s not there.

Going on to more of the economic and social effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment, there’s also an additional effect. What is the effect of this on our children? Does the cost outweigh the benefits, and has that analysis been done? We have already heard from TransAlta that the costs for them don’t outweigh the benefits, even with a $779 million investment from the province of Alberta and additional funds coming from the government of Canada. Those costs and those related benefits, whenever they may come, will be something that our children will have to deal with. If we don’t even know really and truly the environmental impact of what CCS does, I don’t know that we should be really putting so much value onto the economic effects of the project when even TransAlta doesn’t really do that.

The generations going forward are going to be the ones that will have to pay. We hear in this House every day about how in the decisions we make we have to take into consideration the future of our children and those who are left after we are long gone to deal with the effects of the decisions we make today. We hear it about schools, and I think that’s an appropriate comment to make. What we do hear about schools is that we need to build schools in a way that impacts 20 and 30 years from now, but we’re not talking about that with carbon capture and storage.

What we’re doing today that might impact us in 30 years certainly has a direct relation to the social and economic status of this province. It also has a direct relation to the environmental effects on this province. If there is a possibility of direct emissions or indirect emissions going anywhere, do we really want to put any Albertan at risk for anything that we are not sure of at the moment, especially as it relates to carbon capture and storage? We wouldn’t do it with other emissions, so it would be sort of odd that we would not apply this to those same things.

The other part of it is that when we’re talking about social and economic effects, by not including carbon capture and storage into this bill, there are really no determinations of: where do these projects get decided, where do they go, how do they go in there, what are the guidelines of it? If it’s not covered directly under the single regulator, then literally the single regulator doesn’t really have to provide that kind of information. Yet if we provide it under the single regulator, then it’s easily transparent, it’s easily covered, and the single regulator knows: “Okay. This is something I actually have to be paying attention to. I have to make sure that we’re meeting all of the interests of the public, we’re making sure that landowners are appropriately notified, we’re making sure that industry gets proper notification, and we’re also making sure that this is in the best interests of all Albertans.”

Without carbon capture in the bill, those guidelines are absolutely missed, and not by intention, I’m sure. I think that literally most people believe that it’s implied, and I’m sure that it could be, but it may not be. This government prides itself on making sure that it’s thorough and consistent, that it’s covering all their bases. If we’re covering all our bases and we’ve invested so much money into carbon capture and storage, then clearly we should be covering it.

We also have to understand that when you’re talking about environmental effects and social and economic effects, those are a direct impact to landowners. When you go to sell your property and you have to disclose that you have carbon capture storage underneath your property, we don’t know at this point in time whether that devalues your property or increases the value of your property. In certain areas it may not matter, but in other areas it certainly might. What we are doing is we’re imposing a direct economic impact onto the landowner. We’re basically saying to them that the landowner is so unimportant that we won’t look at the public interest and we won’t give you notification and we won’t give you the right to appeal, but we also won’t give you any guidelines on carbon capture and storage programs.

Sorry. I absolutely will not stand here – as many of my caucus mates here I have a duty and an obligation to protect Albertans. When we see something that is so poorly written, then we’re going to be here until it’s righted. It’s an easy way to do it. We’ve proposed 19 amendments. In 19 amendments there were clearly at least one or two or 10 or however many that certainly could have been considered. None of them were. The reason none of them were had nothing to do with being open and transparent. It had nothing to do with whether they were the right or the wrong amendment. The only thing it had to do with was because it was coming from the side of the opposition. That’s just not a good way to govern. There is an opportunity here for the government and the opposition to work together and have a win-win for Albertans. That is really and truly what being a legislator is all about.

We saw it with the former Premier, Mr. Stelmach. He botched bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. He invoked closure on some of those. Many of those bills, unfortunately, were not even read or understood by many MLAs. I know even in my own riding, my own previous MLA admitted in a public forum that he had never even read the bill. He had no idea what it was talking about, yet he was promoting it as a good cause and good for Albertans. Clearly, on Bill 50 that wasn’t accurate. This government travelled the province and tried to convince Albertans that bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 were good for them, that they were in the public interest. Clearly, Albertans didn’t buy that. I would suspect that that’s a big portion of why there are 17 Wildrose MLAs in here today.

The reality of it is that the former Premier didn’t hear the voices of Albertans. Let’s not make that mistake again. The voices of Albertans are coming in. They don’t have to come through the Wildrose. The government is more than able to make these amendments on their own. Had they done that, the Wildrose would actually have supported them. Now, not every one of them.

As the hon. Member for Airdrie had already mentioned, there's nobody on this side of the House that thinks we're going to get a hundred per cent success. But, certainly, the government could have got a hundred per cent success by just listening to Albertans. You would have literally got support from the Wildrose, and you certainly wouldn't be sitting here at 4:40 a.m.

The important part is that we need to ensure that when we are passing legislation in this House, that that legislation does not have a negative effect on those that it's intended to protect. That's the most important social and economic and environmental effect that this amendment can have. We do not want to have a negative effect on Albertans, and that's what this bill does.

Repeatedly this bill does not meet the lowest standards for public input. It is clearly not wanting to put into the bill the idea of public interest and protecting landowner rights and doesn't afford landowners the ability to have a say in what are the effects on their land. They're the stewards of their land. The government doesn't own an Albertan's land; they own it. They paid for it. They're paying the mortgage on it. They own it. The title is in their name. And we need to always, a hundred per cent of the time, respect that that ability with the landowner remains the right of the landowner.

We take a look at bills like this that remove certain sections, seemingly purposely, that are in other bills all across this province, that have been passed by this fine Legislature and this fine House and the fine members in here, yet it's excluded from this particular bill. That's what's concerning to most Albertans. It is in other bills. We talk about the public interest all the time. We talk about the social and economic and environmental effects on Albertans, yet in this bill in particular we've neglected to put it in. For what reason? I guess that's the question that most Albertans are questioning here today.

I would implore this government just to take an opportunity to look at some of them. There are still three or four – I don't know – or however many more. The more time we have, the more we can make, I suppose. So have a discussion with the caucus about some of these bills and see if they do provide any value to you and see if Albertans have a voice in this Legislature, which I would hope that they would.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other hon. members? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have made amazing progress on this bill tonight. By my count now in Committee of the Whole on this very important bill for the future of Alberta in terms of the balancing of responsible energy development, responsible development, environmental impacts, sustainability, quality of life – it's a very important bill. That's no doubt why we have spent in committee so far 29 hours and 42 minutes, which is, I think, a fair amount of time to spend on a bill. Particularly when you think that this last amendment, if I recall correctly, deals with carbon capture and storage, an amendment to put "carbon capture and storage" into the bill, that is in itself very ironic given that the position that we've heard from the Wildrose in the past is that they've always been opposed to even considering carbon capture and storage. Now they want a regulatory body to deal with carbon capture and storage.

That quite aside, I also understand that there may be several more amendments. For some reason after probably four hours – I might be wrong on that estimate – on this last amendment, the members opposite still feel that they have things to say on that amendment. So I'm not sure if they just have difficulty getting their arguments together or whether it's just something that has to be talked out because it's so complex, that they can't get over the concept of carbon capture and storage. I'm not quite sure what it is, but I think we need to have an opportunity for them to regroup and consider their arguments and maybe see whether we could deal with some of the other amendments that they have. Of course, perhaps, as I understand it, there may be a need for someone to be here to address the amendments. Whatever it may be, I think we could probably use a change of pace.

I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 2.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 5 New Home Buyer Protection Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good morning. It's a chilly morning out, I understand. It's a pleasure to rise today to present for third reading Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act.

I'd like to thank all members who have participated in second reading and in Committee of the Whole for their supportive comments and for their questions, Mr. Speaker. Bill 5 is an incredibly important piece of legislation that will protect new-home purchasers and make a real difference in the lives of Albertans and families. You've heard me say this before: buying a home is perhaps one of the biggest purchases any person in this province will make in their lives, and Bill 5 will help protect that investment.

To recap, the legislation will give Alberta the strongest new-home warranty in Canada by requiring warranty coverage in four key areas. The first is one year on materials and labour, two years on delivery and distribution systems such as heating, plumbing, ventilation, and air conditioning systems, often referred to as HVAC. It will provide them with five years' building envelope coverage. Also, Mr. Speaker, warranty companies will be obliged to offer homebuyers an additional two years of coverage, so up to seven years of coverage, on the building envelope. Also, 10 years on major structural components such as foundation and framing will be offered on the home.

One amendment discussed in Committee of the Whole proposed to extend the coverage on materials and labour and on the building envelope. Mr. Speaker, the one-year coverage on materials and labour, sometimes the stuff that's called the fit and finish, is very much influenced by the people living in the home. It tends to be the part of the home that gets the most wear and tear, gets the most quick changes in the home when people decide they want new colour schemes or new countertops or new cabinets. Therefore, because it's most prone to wear and tear, it's hard to assess defects beyond one year that are beyond the homeowners' direct impact. It was considered in consultation with all parties that extending that beyond one year, at least for the time being, might make warranties more expensive, thereby cost prohibitive for young families who are trying to purchase a home.

It was also suggested, Mr. Speaker, that the five-year coverage on the building envelope is appropriate as our research shows that this is the time frame where most failures become evident. We also have added the requirement for a mandatory offer of two years of additional coverage, which makes it the strongest warranty coverage in Canada. It has been suggested that it should be a mandatory seven years right though, but in our consultations with some of the warranty companies and construction companies and with other jurisdictions that are undertaking the same enterprises, we've realized that this could also significantly drive up the costs of having a home warranty and, thereby, perhaps make the cost of a warranty prohibitive and affect the ability of young families to enter a new-home market.

I'd like to repeat that the requirements in this act apply to all warranty providers currently operating in Alberta and any future warranty providers. I know there were some questions about the Alberta New Home Warranty Program. That's not the new-home warranty law that we're adding here but the New Home Warranty Program. That, Mr. Speaker, is a private warranty company which is not insurance backed. There were questions about that. Because this company, this warranty provider, is not insurance backed, they have an exemption to the Insurance Act.

The questions and concerns were about whether or not that makes this an unlevel playing field, Mr. Speaker. Though the Alberta New Home Warranty Program is exempt from the act because it's not technically an insurance warranty provider, the exemption explicitly states that they still have to comply with all the rules and regulations that any other company does that is obliged to follow the Insurance Act. So it ensures a level playing field for any and every single company currently operating in Alberta or that may come to Alberta in the future.

There were also some discussions around exemptions. We need the ability to exempt types of dwellings, ones that we may perhaps know about now but ones that may arise in the future as an issue, that are currently in the province or ones we have not even seen as new construction technologies come online, Mr. Speaker.

There are also issues around aspects of common property in a condo that may not have been contemplated in Alberta. I did at one time point out that some bare-land condo associations also include bare-land property lands within the condo association. There's no intention for the new-home warranty to provide warranty coverage on lands, Mr. Speaker. This is supposed to be on homes, which means that the minister has to have the prerogative and the ability to avoid undue consequences and exempt perhaps land and bare-land condo associations from being included in the new-home warranty insurance claim.

There are also buildings, Mr. Speaker, such as hotels and motels and dormitories that will be exempt as their ownership model is completely different from single-family homes and condos, and they're not intended to fall under the new-home warranty. Our objective is to protect Albertans and to protect their homes as assets, not businesses.

We also discussed and I believe I made some comments, too, in Committee of the Whole that it may be required to provide exemptions for unanticipated solutions. It was suggested that perhaps trappers' cabins would fall under there or perhaps mobile trailers or, as some of my southern neighbours call them, homes with wheels or perhaps, Mr. Speaker, really, really fancy tents that some people live in. Those are not intended to fall under the new-home warranty, though some people may consider them permanent or temporary dwellings. We can't foresee all the solutions, and that's why the exemption is incredibly important.

The legislation considers the unique needs of the owners of condominiums with the requirement for a building assessment report. That was discussed a bit. I want to assure all members that the details around this requirement will be forthcoming in a timely manner in the regulations that we'll be crafting soon, not to be presumptive but once this legislation passes. We'll address the unique needs around starting the clock on the 10 years of coverage in a condo when people take possession of their condos at different times and the questions around when everyone takes possession of the common property, Mr. Speaker, because we need to know when to start the clock. That will also be done in proper consultation. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who had asked the questions.

The objective of the building assessment report, Mr. Speaker, is to support condo corporations as they make informed decisions about the needs of the building. An amendment was introduced in Committee of the Whole that would have required a home inspection to be conducted by a home inspector, as regulated in the Fair Trading Act, on a single-family dwelling. I'm really thankful that that amendment was not passed. I do believe I spoke against it. Quite frankly, I didn't quite understand the notion.

I think it needs to be put on record that I understand the member's intent for making it so that an inspection be done by somebody very independent. But a warranty company who's covering a house will want an independent inspector to give them a very critical report because they're the ones that are ultimately going to have the cost. Making sure the warranty company cannot hire the inspector and that the potential homeowner has to again drives up the cost for a young family looking to purchase a home and doesn't necessarily serve the needs or provide any added coverage or benefit by not having the insurance company pay for it. They're interested in making sure that the quality of the home is up to par so that they don't have future costs to themselves.

Mr. Speaker, in this act we also recognize that some Albertans wish to build their own homes. It's a critical feature from one end of this country to the other. Owner-builders are quite frankly exempt from the requirements of the act unless they sell their home within the first 10 years of building the home. If they do, they will be required to purchase remaining warranty coverage for whoever would be buying their home.

Now, I know there was some discussion about this in second reading. Warranty companies, Mr. Speaker, have very explicitly and publicly said that they will provide coverage to owner-builders who find themselves unexpectedly needing to sell their home in less than 10 years after completion. We have people all over this province who wind up with different jobs in another part of the province or another part of the country and unexpectedly have to sell. They will have the opportunity to purchase a home warranty for those that would be coming after them and buying the house. We anticipate the warranty companies will conduct inspections, and the cost of coverage would reflect the level of risk.

Mr. Speaker, owner-builders would be informed at the time they apply for their exemption that if there is any possibility they may sell before the 10-year period, they will be required to purchase the warranty for sale. Owner-builders will also be informed that they have the option to purchase a warranty at the time, which may be a lower cost in the long run, of when they build their home. Regardless, they will be fully informed of the risks of not purchasing a warranty and the potential costs that go with it and the requirement that they will have to buy one if they sell their home.

There were also concerns raised in second reading that administrative penalties seemed high, Mr. Speaker. The $100,000 maximum fine is just that. It's a maximum. For situations where a violation has resulted in significant financial benefit to the violator, I am sure that some of those maximum fines will not only be warranted but well deserved. We have got to make sure that violations of the building code, building improper dwellings, when somebody is making the largest purchase in their life is not a profitable situation for anyone in this province. If someone has paid an administrative penalty, it also should be noted they cannot be charged with an offence for the same violation. You cannot be charged twice. The fines are consistent with the types of administrative fines in many other pieces of legislation in this province.

For serious violations where administrative penalties aren't appropriate, the Crown prosecutor can charge an individual with an offence, Mr. Speaker, because ultimately this is about consumer protection, and the best way to protect consumers is to make sure there are punishments for those who wish to take advantage of them. A judge would determine the amount of the fine. It could be up to $100,000 for the first offence, up to $500,000 for second and subsequent offences. A judge can also award restitution if someone has suffered a loss as a result of an offence.

Again, these penalties may seem high, but in our housing markets today doing a quick turnover with a home and leaving somebody with a shoddy project may also be very profitable, and the penalties have to fit the crime to make sure that the people aren't taken advantage of. These fines are consistent through many other pieces of legislation.

As far as the regulations are concerned, program specifics will be contained in the regulations, which will be drafted, Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 2013. We're going to actually commence consultations as soon as this legislation passes, if it passes, with all stakeholders. This approach will ensure that we have flexibility, that we have a responsive program that can easily respond to Albertans' needs over time and over changing circumstances.

Some items will be worked out in greater detail on the regulations, including specifics around manufactured and modular homes, as I said, through further consultation, but we have been working with the industry to determine how these requirements for warranty will intersect with the manufacturers' warranties in those particular products.

Now, while most homes, Mr. Speaker, are built to withstand the test of time, if things go wrong, the legislation gives homeowners strong protection, some of the strongest protection in the entire nation, to get their homes repaired. We expect and have seen the quality of construction rise in other jurisdictions that have undertaken the same sort of new-home warranty protection we're undertaking here today. That's the ultimate goal. We do not want Albertans to need a warranty. We want them, in fact, to never need to call on the warranty because they get the best quality homes built in the entire country.

We have brought all stakeholders together on this, Mr. Speaker, everyone from builders and developers, from construction companies and contractors, and from homeowners and consumer groups, and we have yet to find one group in this finished product that we've presented here who is not thrilled about this because everyone wants to ensure that they have a quality product to buy, a quality product to build, and a quality product to sell.

I'd like to ask all members to support Bill 5 because, Mr. Speaker, ultimately this is about supporting fellow Albertans and building strong communities one house at a time. With your support for the new legislation we'll immediately begin work on the regulations, and a detailed implementation will follow up in the fall, when this warranty comes into effect.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to move Bill 6, the Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012.

Bill 6 is a very important piece of legislation which will provide amendments to three particular statutes for the protection of Albertans and to encourage compliance with codes which provide that kind of safety and that kind of protection.

The first is the Fair Trading Act, Mr. Speaker. The provisions here will provide for the levying of administrative penalties under the Fair Trading Act. The purpose of levying an administrative penalty as opposed to the penalties that are already provided for in the act is that it provides another level of enforcement, one which is, yes, easier but is in some certain circumstances more effective. In other words, if there's a violation of the act of a less than egregious nature, rather than going to a full prosecution and all the process that's engaged and the time that's engaged in that – and time is really the critical element here – the administrative officers can approach the party that is violating the act, can talk to them about the violation of the act, and if there is not progress made, if there's not a change in behaviour, they can levy an administrative penalty.

This amendment puts into place the ability to use an administrative penalty option, something that's available in many other statutes. Then, of course, there are the corollary pieces to that, which say what happens if you fail to pay the administrative penalty and, of course, the need for and ability to appeal. Obviously, there always has to be an appeal mechanism, so there is a process for appeal. There's a process to make sure that notice of the administrative penalty is made public, so there's a public record of that.

That's the process under the Fair Trading Act. It provides for a right to representation. It provides that if an administrative penalty is levied and paid, there cannot be, then, a subsequent prosecution for the same offence, so fairness rules in place to make sure that it's utilized appropriately.

One other section with respect to the Fair Trading Act which is important, and that is a change in the penalty amount under a prosecution so that if any person is convicted of an offence – this is going away from the administrative penalty part now and going into the prosecution side – that offence could be up to a $300,000 penalty rather than the existing $100,000 penalty.

There is also a provision in the act, Mr. Speaker, for a time limit for prosecution, and that's just to align the offences more appropriately. Under the Fair Trading Act the limitation was three years after the commission of an offence. What this provision puts in place is that where an offence is committed in the course of a consumer transaction or an attempt to enter into a consumer transaction, it would be three years after the date the consumer first knew or ought to have known of the offence and not more than eight years after the date on which the offence was committed.

Those, essentially, are the amendments to the Fair Trading Act.

Then the second act that's being amended here is the Occupational Health and Safety Act, one, Mr. Speaker, that's very near and dear to my heart. Of course, we have in Alberta a compliance process with respect to occupational health and safety that really focuses on working with industry to make workplaces safer. It's a process in which under the occupational health and safety code you're really outlining what the expectation is with respect to workplaces, with respect to employers, with respect to employees and how they can go about making sure that workers can operate safely in the workplace and go home to their families at the end of their workday. Some people do have a workday that actually ends.

So that's important. But in some cases, I'm sad to say, those codes are not followed or not complied with, so there are times when you have to utilize enforcement mechanisms or tools to encourage compliance with safe workplaces. Again, there are two tools that are currently in use. One is essentially an enforcement order – in other words, in the nature of a stop-work order that might be applied – and that can have some effect. It certainly can have effect if it takes a while to achieve compliance; in other words, work is stopped for a while. But in the case, again, of an offence that can be remedied rather quickly, a stop-work order has little effect, and when you have an offence that's remedied quickly and then repeated, it is not an effective tool. But you're not going to actually want to go to a prosecution for an offence like that.

We have on occasion in this province over the past year had, for example, three people who have fallen from roofs. Of course, you're supposed to be wearing a safety harness when you're on a roof, and you're supposed to be tied on. In fact, these three people were tied on, but the ropes were too long, and unfortunately we had three fatalities as a result of those three accidents. [interjection] You know, it's not funny, Mr. Speaker, because some people didn't go home to their families. There were tragedies. There are families who've lost a husband or a father or a brother or a son.

But if you're trying to change the culture that exists in some of the industries, you need to deal with those. You need to deal with them in a way that makes some sense. One of the things that we are going to do is have ticketing offences so that occupational health and safety officers could go to a work site, and when they see somebody either not wearing a safety harness, not wearing safety equipment, or wearing safety equipment that they're using in name only and it's not effective because they've purposely had a longer rope or whatever, they would be able to issue a ticket. Now, this act doesn't provide for the tickets. That can be done under existing legislation and with a change to regulation, but what this act does provide for is, again, an administrative penalty which could be applied in circumstances which might be more appropriate for an administrative penalty than a ticket, usually because the employer is not enforcing safety standards on the work site, not doing a proper review, those sorts of things.

Again, the Occupational Health and Safety Act, then, would allow for administrative penalties, and again, of course, you have the corollary amendments that are required. One of them, for example, would be to require the identification of a worker or an employer on a site at the request of an officer. Obviously, if you're going to write a ticket, you've got to know who the person is. You've got to be able to have the authority to require that identification. You also have to have appeal mechanisms. If you're going to have an administrative penalty, you've got to have fairness in its application. You've got to have the ability for people to appeal.

Suffice it to say that those provisions will allow for appeals to the Occupational Health and Safety Council and ultimately to the Court of Queen's Bench if necessary. Again, the provisions in the act provide for the limitation on what size of penalty can be administered. In this case the amount set is not to exceed $10,000 or, in the case of an ongoing offence, $10,000 for each day.

One of the other pieces that is being amended. Under the existing act, as in many acts that we have in this province, you can have – what's the term? – in essence, where the parties get together and determine that instead of a guilty plea and a payment of a fine, there will be a negotiated penalty, if you will, and instead of the fine being paid into the provincial coffers, it could go to an agreed-upon purpose. The circumstance, though, that we don't have in the act and that we need in the act is a provision where somebody agrees to that kind of negotiated payment and then fails to pay it. Those are very important changes.

The third change is to the Safety Codes Act. That's very simple. It's a question of increasing the amount of penalties – that's very important because the penalties are significantly out of date – and aligning the prosecution time limit.

Mr. Speaker, a very, very important act for Albertans. As we move forward, we make progress in protecting consumers and making the workplace safer. I would ask all members to support Bill 6 in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. Are there other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. It is my honour to rise and move third reading of Bill 9, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012.

I did want to just give thanks to the hon. members across the way for a number of good points that were brought up during the debate in both second reading and committee.

Did you want to me to stop, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: No, no. Sorry. As I said, it's been an early morning. Please carry on, hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: I didn't know whether you were trying to get my attention there or not, Mr. Speaker.

I just wanted to say thank you to the members opposite in all parties for their support of the Corporate Tax Amendment Act, which will ensure that Alberta maintains a fair, equitable, and competitive tax regime. I look forward to their continued support for third reading, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Are there any other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Bill 10 Employment Pension Plans Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's my pleasure and honour to rise to move third reading of Bill 10, the Employment Pension Plans Act, which is meant to make it easier and more affordable for private-sector pensions to operate and to change with the times.

There are a lot of things that are involved in the act, but suffice it to say that there has been a lot of very good discussion and debate in this House on the act as it moved through with support, again, I might add, from all sides of this House. Some very good comments, again, were put on the record. I want to thank the hon. members opposite for their support of the bill through all those readings. This is the culmination of a number of years' work, and it's a good piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I move third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
Are there other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 8 Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: I'll open the floor for questions or comments.

Mr. Anglin: As I understand you, this is Bill 8?

The Chair: Bill 8, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Caught by surprise.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will be introducing a couple of amendments, but I want to speak initially to this bill on a number of different issues. It is really important that we look at what has happened here. The government has accepted the fact from all the stakeholders that it should not be making this decision and should not have the jurisdiction to make this decision. I think that when I first spoke to this bill, when it was first introduced, the comment was that in the medical world you wouldn't want government taking their policy-making ability and turning that into making some sort of diagnosis. That's not what the role of government would be.

In electric utility that is the same. You don't want the government making the engineering decisions. You want the government to make the policies. In the case of what happened with Bill 50, the government decided to do away with the regulator and legislate these lines. The government legislated these lines, took the jurisdiction away from the Alberta Utilities Commission. As the hon. minister said: a different time, a different need. That's a good quote I'm going to continue to throw out to the hon. minister because it is about a different time and a different need.

There have been a lot of mistakes made, and one of the mistakes is that you have removed now or you're proposing to remove the jurisdiction of the cabinet and to return jurisdiction to the Alberta Utilities Commission. That is right, and that is just. It should not have ever been removed. But we have a bigger problem. We have not corrected what went wrong, and that is what's really important here. There's a lot of money at stake. I don't think anyone here was part of those original decisions, so they don't realize the magnitude of the problem that has been created over the years.

This started out as an application for one line, a 500-kV AC line. That's where it all started. AltaLink proposed it to the AESO. The AESO consulted not here locally, but it first consulted up in Fort McMurray, and it admitted that it made the determination to build the 500-kV line before it accepted any consultation from any participant or that it did any research and did its own engineering work, and that's problematic because that's not how you're supposed to do this. That document that they created was called the needs identification document, and it is right here. This is it. This is what it looks like. It's quite thick. It's quite detailed. I tabled it, so it's part of the record.

What you'll find in these documents is that they're quite detailed. That's what they're supposed to be. In this one binder alone there's nothing but wiring schematics on how the system is supposed to work if they do this. Now, what's wrong with this document is a couple of things. To create it, the authors had to exempt or did not consider the Balzac gas-fired generation station, any imports coming in from British Columbia, and they excluded consideration of all wind power.

By excluding those three items, the AESO was able to use the formula of that day to prove under existing rules and regulations that a line was needed. One of the presumptions was that there would never be any growth of generation in southern Alberta. We know now that that's false, but we knew that then. That's what some of the intervenors back then brought forward to the board. They said: we know that's not true; we can prove that because there were industries that were looking to build generation in southern Alberta.

Now, one of the coauthors of this document – his name is Trevor Cline – recently testified that based on the rules and regulations at the time, this is what they had to come up with. He was asked: is this in the public interest based on the circumstances that actually became reality? He answered no. Basically, what happened is that one of the coauthors of this document is basically saying that it was not in the public interest. Let me rephrase that.

He is saying now that it is not in the public interest. He stated that on the record under oath in front of the Alberta Utilities Commission. That's significant.

When any member across the House says that this was determined back in 2005, 2006, this is the document that you're referring to, but it also is a document that was approved originally by the EUB and then rejected. It was refuted, and it was voided by the EUB, and then the decision of the EUB was vacated by the Court of Appeal. So here you have a technical document that the government is relying upon, and the coauthor of this document says that it's not in the public interest mainly because the formula was wrong, and the assumptions have been proven wrong because generation has developed down in southern Alberta. The decision was vacated by the Court of Appeal and voided by the regulator at the time, so the decision should not play a role in anybody saying that it has already been determined.

So what is left is the 10-year plan. The 10-year plan is mandated by law. It is required in every jurisdiction. This is what we do. But a planning document is not supposed to be definitive as a document that indicates that something should be built. That's not what planning documents do. What should happen with an existing planning document is that there needs to be some sort of economic triggering mechanism that requires us to build a transmission line. In this case the requirement has to be that somebody or some industry is going to step up to the plate and say, "We are committed to building a project" or "We are committed to doing this," and that commitment is generally done in monetary terms. They put up a bond, or they put in an investment that is tangible in the sense that now the regulator, or in this case the AESO, can say: that's the trigger.

Now we build that transmission line, and we try to build it according to our plans, but reality dictates that because this is a dynamic market, we have to change to that reality. We can't build to a presumption, and this is where this has gone wrong. What happened under Bill 50 was that the government legislated lines based on the presumption of the plan. What we know now is that things have changed. Just like the minister said: a different need, a different time.

If you look at the proposal for the green corridor, which is what came up at the sustainable resource committee – and that is something that we have known for years – if we were to build a line from Fort McMurray down to southern Alberta, as the vice-president of ATCO stated, we would probably want HVDC. But somebody should be required to make the economic case before we make that decision. We would want to know whether or not the economic case was made, whether or not it was economical, because even though that is probably 700, 800 kilometres long, you still have to do the math to make sure that the technology you use does exactly what you need it to do.

The problem is that we legislated AC lines, and we did it in the wrong place. Now, we're not going to build those any time soon. That's not on the agenda. The lines from Edmonton to Fort McMurray: I think they're estimated to be built in 2020 or 2022. Things may change before we get to there, but the problem is that it's legislated in Bill 50, and we didn't repeal that part in this bill.

We know clearly now that with the upgrader going in Redwater, which we want to go forward, we're going to have a pipeline that's going to come south from Fort McMurray to that upgrader. Now, as I spoke about to the Minister of Energy, it only makes sense that we put that in the utility corridor. That's logical. Industry wants that. Landowners want that. It makes sense. That means that we'd want to put our transmission line in the same utility corridor. That's logical. That would make sense. I still can't tell you what should be the right technology. I think it should be HVDC, but without an economic case I hesitate to say definitively that that's what we should do, but somebody should be required to make that case.

The problem we have is that we legislated a line further west going in the wrong place, and we legislated AC, which may or may not be the right economic case, particularly if we develop the hydro north of Fort McMurray. If we don't change that legislation, if we don't amend that, then what's going to happen is that we will build something that is unnecessary and uneconomic for the public interest and the public at large.

Mr. Donovan: What would the public interest entail, Joe?

Mr. Anglin: The public interest is actually in this legislation, so we can talk about that.

That leads us down to these two HVDC lines that did get approved, one in the east and one in the west. They are amazingly expensive. I can tell you they are completely uneconomic because they don't even come to the proper length, where you can even make the cost-benefit analysis. That's what's happened.

The western line: $1.4 billion, a billion dollars more than an AC line. And, by the way, it doesn't work. It can't work. We cannot use it, and it stated so in the 10-year plan. That's an engineering defect because it's in the wrong spot. We cannot load that line to its proper potential for fear of shutting the lights off in the province. So what it says is that in order to make that line work, we have to double down and build an eastern line.

Now, this is the problem with the eastern line. It connects to Gibbons, down to Brooks, and it doesn't connect to anything in Brooks. It's a $1.6 billion line by AESO's estimation, and it doesn't connect to anything. Now, you know as well as I do that it will connect to something. The plan is that it will connect to two export lines sometime way off in the future. Nobody knows when, but that's the plan. It's in the 2009 plan. The problem is that until it connects to something, we can't use the western line to its full potential or even to any maximized potential, so it has to stay underutilized.

It's insane in the world of economics to construct projects this way, and nobody will take ownership of why this design came about. This minister was not here at the time, and many of you were not here at the time, and I know there was data that was left out. I'm going to explain some of the data that's left out. The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville fielded what we would call a softball question to the minister, which is: "What's the deal with the heartland line? We need that power to come up to the heartland." That's usually what's in the press. [An electronic device sounded] Was that my timer going off? Well, I'll be up again anyway. I mean, you know that.

The Chair: Please continue.

Mr. Anglin: At what point do I issue these amendments, anyway?

The Chair: Oh, you have an amendment, hon. member? [interjections]

Mr. Anglin: All right. Sounds good. I've just been up all night. I've got to get my brain in gear. Let me just continue on.

The hon. member asked the minister when the line would be energized, when it would be constructed, built, and energized, because we need power up in the heartland. Well, the interesting thing about that is that the heartland has 663 megawatts of generation capacity now. That's what they have. The heartland is a net exporter of electricity. Their baseload peak demand is 563 megawatts. That's the last data that the AESO published, which is consistent with being a net exporter. So why would somebody say that we need power up in the heartland when they are a net exporter of electricity? Since it's an AC line, which is unidirectional, you can't push electricity up there on that line and talk about exporting it at the same time. It's not a bidirectional line. Clearly, something is wrong with the estimation.

The reality is that when we develop up in the heartland, what happens is this. When that plant goes online, they will build a cogenerator. That's a given. We just don't know how big the cogenerator is.

An Hon. Member: No, it's not.

Mr. Anglin: Yeah, it is. It's always a given. It's economical for a major developer like that to cogen. It is always in their business plan, and it's smart business. It's a good business model. That's why the heartland is a net exporter of electricity. That's why they have excess electricity there.

When do you need a transmission line? What's the trigger mechanism for building a transmission line? Well, the formula is called N minus 1, which means normal minus one line. What that means is this. You should be able to lose a line, you should be able to have a line go offline, get a break, and all your transfer of electricity should be able to be carried by the remaining lines. If you have two transmission lines, you should be able to lose one. That one remaining line should be sufficient to handle all your transfer needs. If it's not, then you need to build another line. That's what N minus 1 means. They use N minus 1 or N minus 1 minus G, which is to take a generator offline.

What is the capacity up to the heartland now? Well, you have two 240 lines going up there, you have a third 240 line going around the north end of Edmonton, and then you actually have a twin 138 kV system. What you have there is that you're not bringing up any electricity to supply the heartland. You're bringing electricity away from the heartland when you need to bring electricity away from the heartland.

Now, two hon. members on the other side of the House here I believe went down to Idaho this last week to something called the northwest economic development partnership, something like that.

An Hon. Member: Pacific Northwest Economic Development Council.

Mr. Anglin: There you go. I'm tired. I've been up all night. Thank you very much.

Now, if you went down there, what you would have seen in one of those presentations – I looked it up on the Internet – is a map of a transmission line originating in the heartland and ending up in Buckley, Oregon. That was part of the plan anyway. That's always been number two on their list. Again, the idea that we are pushing electricity up to the heartland is not true. We are actually taking electricity south from the heartland.

One of the problems we have in our regulation and that this one does not correct, and it should, is that we allow private companies to build what they call market transmission lines. They can build their own transmission line, and basically they can put it in a great spot like the MATL line and just profit on a very short distance. It's a smart business plan. But the public, in correlation to or in comparison to that, are not allowed to build generation. Now, one of the things this province is struggling with is how to get generation located where it needs to get located.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Good morning. I'd just like to thank everybody and commend everybody for bonding in this House over the whole evening like this. Not to toot my own horn, but I got here and, boom, four bills through just like that in a couple of minutes there at 5 o'clock, so we'll see how it all rolls from here. I'd also like to commend the staff and the security that have been here all night. I guess we have the ability to trade off a little bit here, and, unfortunately, I'm not sure they do, so I commend them. And to the young gentleman that runs the Hansard mikes up top there: good on you for hanging in this long.

Now, it's an interesting bill here, Bill 8. This affects my riding quite a bit. We've identified that Bill 50 had some issues with it, and I think Bill 8 actually weakens the public interest provisions, according to quite a few different people. I'm not going to get into the public interest debate because I think we worked on it a little bit over Bill 2, so I'll lead on from that.

A lot of the surface rights boards are very worried and consider Bill 8 to be another attack on property rights. I know this is fresh to quite a few people around the table that don't see it the same way, but I guess the beauty of sitting in this House is that we get to debate all sides of what I might see as an issue and what some other people in this House, other members might not see as an issue. I guess the big question comes up of, you know, the needs assessments and stuff of what we're doing. Now, I see Bill 8 as good because it's going forward, saying that we need needs assessments on lines that are going forward from now, but ones that are already in the planning I guess I see as being pushed through.

Now, in Little Bow there's one line that AltaLink is trying to put through right now. It goes from Picture Butte to the Etzikom Coulee transmission line. Now, I know everybody in this House is very excited that all night tonight they got to listen to Mr. Anglin talk about Bill 8 and how it affects Bill 50. I was very fortunate to have the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre come down to Coaldale and talk to some producers down there about power lines.

An Hon. Member: I bet you were.

Mr. Donovan: I was very lucky, actually, because when you sit down there and we get down to talking basic facts – now, I'm just a grain farmer in Mossleigh, dry land. I mean, to go around a power pole truly isn't as big of an issue for me as it is if you have irrigation. You get into that south potato belt between Taber and Coaldale, it's very intensive agriculture in there, and there's a lot of money people have spent and a lot of years getting drainage on their land correctly. They've gone to variable rate irrigation so they don't have flooding in the low spots. Technology has come a long way.

Now, that's great when you've done that, but then when all of a sudden a power line comes through and they're told, "It's coming through whether you like it or not," and you put it through the middle of a half section pivot – with wheel moves I guess people could work around that. I mean, irrigation districts have gone a long ways to do a better job now and be more effective, and wheel moves weren't the most effective way to irrigate. I know the minister of agriculture has had an opportunity to be down there and talk with a lot of producers, and he knows that, so there are people on both sides of the floor that are well aware of the time and the money spent by agriculture to be more effective and more efficient in what they're doing.

In saying that, when I was campaigning back in April, we had a forum down there, and the MATL line that was going down there was put through with no consultation and no needs assessment.

Now, when that went through – and the debate with me and the candidate I ran against down there at one of the forums was that, you know, they can't ever force something through. Well, I had three different people get up at a forum and tell about how the RCMP came in with court orders telling them they had to let that power line start. They had to let the MATL line go in and start constructing it. That's very intrusive if you're a farm owner and you have irrigation.

Now, in the one particular situation there's a feedlot which has been situated in the corner of a field so that the pivot can go around, the quarter section pivots, in the most effective way to get a return back on their farmland. The way the line was put through – and this is why the gentleman was so much up for the fight on it. The MATL line that was going in actually went right in the middle of that pivot. It effectively deemed that quarter, I'd say, useless to anybody, so of course he's going to fight for his rights on that. In saying that, he had the RCMP come in and serve him with papers telling him that he had to allow that line to go in.

I mean, it's like everything else. You wonder if it's true or not until you actually have a ratepayer, a constituent stand up and tell you that they had three cop cars, RCMP come in there and tell them: you have to let them go, or we will restrain you. Now, to me, that's a definite infringement. As well as the PC candidate that I ran against, who I respect very much, we were both in shock over it. You know, you hear lots of these things happening, but until you actually have a landowner come up and tell you that they were told they had to put the line in, there was nothing they could do – now, probably the most frustrating thing was the inability to be able to negotiate in good faith.

I guess at the end of the day, once you figure out that, okay, the line is going to be here, it comes down to money. How is he going to be compensated fairly for the loss of use and for the inconvenience of it for the rest of his farming life? Again, these are farms that have been there for, you know, up to 100 years. Some over; some under. I mean, people have taken a long time to get that land into the situation it is. They do proper crop rotations. They do proper drainage. They do very time-sensitive irrigation so that they get their maximum use, and they show that they are stewards of the land. In saying that, when you are told, "No; this is going through; there is no other way," landowners obviously get very concerned about that.

In saying that, this person has yet to be compensated for that tower that went in, which is probably one of the most frustrating things he's said that he's had in the last two years. He's yet to be compensated. The second most frustrating part is that they haven't even put the lines up on it yet. For the moment, right now, he's got a large tower sitting in the middle of his field, which has affected his whole farming operation, and they haven't even had the common courtesy to put the power lines back up, the actual cable to it to transmit down it.

Now, his point was that it's frustrating enough to get forced to put a tower in the middle of his quarter, which affected, basically, his whole pivot, his income, everything else, yet to be compensated for it, be told it has to go in, and then the most frustrating part is that they're not even using it. I mean, the pigeons stand on it and the odd bird, you know. Other than that, I guess it could be a great view if you want to go up there with a set of binoculars. But it's not even doing the purpose it was supposed to do.

These are concerns that happened in my riding which I'm aware of because I actually heard them. That was back in April. We spin the clock ahead six months, had the opportunity to talk to some more people back in July when the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre came down to an open house. Still the same situation. Still nothing has changed on the MATL line. So I say we spin it forward to the line from Picture Butte to Etzikom Coulee, where they're talking about now putting lines in.

I fully understand the government in planning ahead. I mean, it's crucial to be able to plan. Being on county council I went to lots of land-use framework stuff. You know, you have to have a plan. I understand that. The key to a plan, though, is to be able to listen to both sides on what is in a plan. It's very easy for somebody else to come in and tell you, "This is how it's going to be," but it's a different side if you're not allowed any input to it.

Now, with the new power line they're talking about doing down there, they've ended up pitting neighbour versus neighbour because they come in with two different plans. In theory it's great: you have plan A and plan B. But if your neighbour is 10 miles away and that's where plan B is, your natural thing is to protect your own land and your vested interest, so you go to all the forums, you fill out all the forms, you tell everybody to go to plan B because that stays away from your land and goes over to somebody else's.

Again, we're dealing with pivots, not a lot of wheel moves down there because everybody has invested a lot of time and money into their farmland by going into low drip irrigation systems, which are the most effective, which goes back into why southern Alberta has, I'd say, an excess of water in their irrigation systems right now because they're that effective with it. They're not using the full allotted amounts they have. In saying that, there are lots of farmers now that are trying to get some more irrigation projects going because the economic turn back from irrigation is huge. We have the heat units down there, so it's very intense agriculture. I'm not saying that agriculture is different in the rest of the province, but with the heat units down there, there's so much willingness with the producers to sit and try different items. They have the potatoes; they have the beets. There are very large, intensive programs down there that are more highly intensive agriculture than you will find in a lot of the other parts of the province, and I think these people should be commended for that.

But when you go in there and you start telling them, "Okay; we're putting in a power line," that's going to truly affect how they've been planning their farm for 20 or 30 years. Most people have a plan on what they're doing on their farm. They're not just deciding to invest $200,000 on a pivot and an extra $80,000 on the variable rate technology for the irrigation drip nozzles on it. They're actually planning. Every good business should have a plan.

As well, this government should have a plan on stuff. Part of the planning – I think Bill 8 addresses that on the future power lines – is to have a needs assessment, the problem being that any of the ones that were put in ahead of that do not have to have this needs assessment. I think this is really where a huge issue came in this province between the government and landowners. It was due to that.

So you're sitting there looking at that, and you're the landowner, for instance, and you've got this power line that's been deemed to be needed down there, yet nobody seems to know. AESO was down there – back in, say, May or June they had an open house – and one of the things they did on that was that they were talking about, "Well, if there's ever a windmill farm put down in a certain area," and they had it shaded on their map, which was nice and warm and fuzzy. But the technology on that is changing all of the time. I think everybody in this House has seen that in different news articles and everything else on wind generation and how it's going to work or not work.

Now, I was lucky enough when I was reeve in Vulcan county to have Greengate technologies come down there. They're putting in a large wind farm down by Carmangay, in that general area where my predecessor, the MLA for the Little Bow riding, farms. They went in when they did their needs assessment and figured out where to put the windmills. They're putting a huge investment into that community, so obviously they're going to do their homework and figure out where they need to put that wind farm. Now, when they went in there, they talked to the landowners, got the buy-in first, got the community support, showed all of the economic positives to it, and they've literally had hardly any issues in that area in getting the landowners to sign up and allow the access roads and things like that.

Now, when Greengate came to Vulcan county to talk about it, the key reason they picked that area was the wind. You don't need a lot of wind anymore to make the windmills work. They've come in a huge, huge circle on that from what they used to have to have. When you look in Pincher Creek and area, everybody wanted that 50-mile-an-hour wind – not everybody, but the power companies did – because they felt that's how you had to run the windmills. Now, in this day and age they don't need that kind of wind, so they picked that area.

The second part of why they picked that area is because there are transmission lines there that could take the power that they're proposing onto that line. It had the ability to take that without having to put in new lines. You didn't need a new MATL line. You didn't need a heartland line. You had a line there that had the capacity to take the power that was being generated there right in. So then you eliminate the whole needs assessment, the whole fight for a new power line in that area – again, a huge issue – because then you have community buy-in.

The community buy-in should be great on these items. When you're talking 50 to 60 tandem truck loads of concrete to the base of one of those new windmills, that alone is a huge industry. In the county it's going to more than double the tax base, the actual taxable assessment in that county. Now, as a ratepayer in that county I think that's great because then we don't need to look at oil and gas all of the time and the linear taxes that come off pipelines to be able to do that. So it's a huge thing.

I checked wells for off-farm income for a while. That's how I supported my farm for a bit. There were some tougher years, so one tends to find extra work when one needs to pay bills, and that's been great. In our community I'd say that probably half the people are tied in some way, shape, or form to the oil patch, whether you're checking wells, whether you're a plant operator, whether you're plowing snow to wells, whether you're doing weed whacking and grass mowing at wells to keep vegetation down, or whether you're spraying. You're part of the process.

Now, in saying that, this is a whole new sector to that. Windmills need technicians to work on them. I had the opportunity to go through Lethbridge College here about a month and a half ago. There's an amazing program where they're teaching everybody down there how to work on the windmills, the whole rebuilding of them. It's great. I thank my colleague the advanced education minister. I know he's had the opportunity to go down through there. It's second to none down there, and it's another great thing in Lethbridge.

I'm sure everybody had the opportunity to deal with Team Lethbridge. The members for Lethbridge-West and Lethbridge-East are always very proud of what Lethbridge has to offer. I think it's a huge thing when you go into Lethbridge College and see the technology and see how industry is working with that college on how to train people properly. It's like everything else. If you have proper people working on it, you can be way more effective and get way more people to buy into the project. We have a situation down there where we have a college that's working with wind generation because they see it's a need.

Now, I guess I'll go back to the story of the windmills that Greengate is putting in at Carmangay. There are transmission lines already there. They picked that area to put in wind generation because there were already the power lines there to work with. There was no need to fight with anybody over new power lines coming through. That's a great idea. They have the community buy-in there.

In saying that, when we get down to this Picture Butte line, that AESO has decided is needed, they've shaded in an area down there, saying: "Well, there could be windmills in this area. We need to build the power lines so that if that ever happens, they have a way to generate back into the grid." I understand planning, but we're at the point where there's not even a company that has stepped forward and said that this is where they're going to put in lines. It's just that somebody sat there with a general land-use framework map, coloured in a nice green area, and said: "Yeah. You know, due to the studies we see that this would probably be a pretty good area to put in windmills and make some green energy out of that."

I think everybody in here is for that. I think we're all trying to make less of a carbon footprint. I think we're all trying to leave the country in better shape than we found it. I don't think there's anybody that can argue that. I think we've done a good job of that. I commend the government on the processes they've gone through to make that happen. The environmental farm plan was a key one. It's the little things. You know, you eat an elephant one bite at a time, and I think that's a key one. We've sat and we've identified the issues that we have environmentally in this province, and we're working on them.

I consider myself a steward of the land because I farm on it. It does me no good to hack up my land and butcher it in any way, shape, or form. I need to try to get the maximum return off that land but still not mine it. You need to keep it in good, balanced shape. Fifteen years ago we didn't do soil samples on what your fertilizer needs were. You basically went to your local fertilizer dealer. You put on your regular blend, whether it be 60 pounds N or 100 pounds N, some phosphorus, some sulphur, depending on what the needs were for the plant. It's a business. You pour a lot of money in. In my area – I'm just dryland – break-even is in that $200-an-acre range. It's not the old days, when $50 an acre covered all your input costs and you were good to go. You have a lot of money tied up in this. You sit and figure out what you need to do to nurture that and make it work.

You sit there and you look at the process. If you're south of that area of Coaldale and you're talking about putting in windmills, there's a lot of prime land in there. People obviously get on the defensive, having these products coming in here without a true needs assessment. That's what this comes down to. I commend this government for identifying in Bill 8 that there need to be needs assessments. The question comes in: why were there no needs assessments? Why was it skipped for so long in here? As a landowner and listening to constituents in that area, those are the same questions. I mean, the councillors in the MD of Taber now are quite concerned about this line that goes from Picture Butte to Etzikom Coulee. It's out by Barnwell. Now, they've worked very hard.

Out of time.

Joe, would you like to add anything to that?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to go after this bill pragmatically on the issue of HVDC versus AC. I know I've got the reputation of being – I think the hon. House whip said that I protested Ben Franklin when he first held the kite on a string. I teased him, and I said that I won that protest. We went to AC power, and I believe Ben Franklin had DC technology. I am in favour of electricity. It makes our economy run. It is important. It is extremely important, and HVDC technology is an outstanding technology when used appropriately. Absolutely. So is AC, but our whole system is AC technology.

I want to talk about the heartland because this is where it starts. I just want to give you an understanding that this is all based on fact. It's not something made up or assumed. What did the Alberta Electric System Operator, which is our AESO, say about the heartland? In their overview of the existing system when they filed their application on May 30, 2008 – that's the one that just got approved this last year – they said on page 9 under 1.2, "The Northeast region is currently mostly supplied by the on-site generation within the region itself." What that means is cogen. That's really what it is. Then it goes, "Because the region has more generation than load, the region exports energy to other regions." So, clearly, they're an exporter. The AESO says that they're an exporter. We know they have 663 megawatts of generation capacity, and their demand is 563 megawatts. It gives them about a 14 per cent reserve capacity. That's perfect, actually. That is actually correct.

Now, given the number of transmission lines that go to the heartland currently, since the heartland is self-sustaining, any one of those lines can fail and the heartland doesn't lose its lights. We know that's true. This idea that we have to build twin 500-kV lines because the heartland needs more power is not based on any evidence that supports that. It's just not there. If you say that it does, hon. member, show the evidence. That's all I ask. I know some of the people on this side of the House are more pragmatic in the sense that they want to find concrete evidence. So when the member over there says, "No, that's not true," I would rather see evidence than have someone just arbitrarily say it.

Now, if it were true – if it were true – do we spend $700 million to build a transmission line to bring power to the heartland or spend $263 million to build a 243-megawatt generator, which would increase the heartland capacity for electricity by 43 per cent? For half the price you could increase the capacity up in the heartland by 43 per cent. Why should the public, when somebody says that they need electricity, not have the option? Does a transmission line fit the need, or does a generator fit the need? The industry has the option of building a generator or a transmission line. What we're talking about is maximizing the public's money, and if we don't do that, then we're doing an injustice to the public.

The facts show that anyone who says that the heartland needs more power is not supported by any other data. None. So why are we building that line? I'll tell you why we're building that line, and it's the most important part. It connects the two HVDC lines, and it connects that . . . [A cellphone rang] Hello. I'll give you a call in a second.

It connects that to what was proposed back in 2001. You will find that in the needs identification document that I showed you a little bit earlier. In the appendices of that document the oil sands developers wanted to export their excess electricity. Even back then, in 2004, people said: that's not a smart business plan; that's not economic.

TransCanada looked at building an HVDC line from Fort McMurray to Buckley, Oregon. They thought it would cost them about $6 billion to do that. Their assumptions were wrong. They decided not to do it because it was not economical. That now has changed dramatically because the Oil Sands Developers Group has decided they no longer want to export their excess electricity. They want to use it internally for their own future development. I have to tell you that that's what people were saying back in 2003, 2004. They have come full circle, and they have publicly come out and said: we do not want to export our excess electricity. That's a smart business plan.

Why are we building all these lines? If someone says that we have to build these lines to encourage generation, what I say to them is: show us the data that supports that. This idea of building a grid that has zero congestion is not logical. Nobody in the free world does it that way. Only Alberta has that policy, and it causes us to overbuild the system. That is one of the premises of why we're moving forward the way we are with this, but we're not getting a good return on our money.

To make matters worse, under normal conditions not only do we normally require a needs identification document, as I've just shown, but all jurisdictions – and this one used to – require a cost-benefit analysis so that when that application is filed, the regulator could look at how much money they're planning on spending to build a line and what is the payback. Where is that? Well, it doesn't exist because it's not required. Nobody undertakes a project of this magnitude without a cost-benefit analysis. No private investor would ever do that, yet we are planning on doing that. That's not smart. We should make a concerted effort to do the math first and do what's right.

When we get into the amendments, what we should do is look at what the plan is. That plan now has adjusted. We have a potential for hydro development north of Fort McMurray, up in the Slave River region. We have a lot of potential up in the Northwest Territories that could be developed. If that energy were brought down to Fort McMurray, it would free up, on initial estimates, 500,000 barrels of bitumen each year. This is what the oil sands developer estimates: half a million barrels of bitumen that would be available for the market. What that would do over 20 or 30 years is provide a payback on those transmission lines that you would hopefully build south from those hydro projects. [interjections]

Can you be quiet, guys? I'm tired, guys. I'm sorry.

On the payback, though, that's what you want to look for. In other words, you build a line; what's the economic payback? If you look at this, even if we were to develop the hydro potential to its fullest immediately, which is roughly $60 billion – but that would be staged – you'd get a payback of about $48 billion initially on the natural gas and the bitumen at current market prices. That's significant. That's what you want to look at on all these lines that have been legislated. What's the payback?

Now, I have asked the Minister of Energy: do we need an HVDC line on the eastern side of the province? The way it's designed now, I would say no, but if you connect that to an HVDC line that's going all the way to Fort McMurray, then you have a case. It's the distance that makes it economical. Is there an economical case for an HVDC line west of Rimbey from Genesee to Langdon? The answer is absolutely not. It's too short a distance. You create too much of a problem. The real drawback to that is that you're not using the benefits of HVDC at all. As a matter of fact, the system loss for Alberta – and that's one of the things that I find offensive not from the political point but from the engineers, because they know better. Someone tells the politicians or cabinet that the system is bleeding when that's just absolutely not true.

When you look at the data on our electrical system, a normal electrical system loses between 5 and 7 per cent of its electricity. That's normal. We are under the normal range. We have a better-than-average system, and you cannot have an electrical system that's not losing electricity. That's called physics. Every time you put a generator on the system, you lose electricity. Every time you build another transmission line, you lose electricity. It's just a fact of life. If you run a line from point A to point B, the longer the line the more electricity you lose. It's just a fact of life. We deal with it. We're not going to build a zero-loss system. That whole idea of that policy of zero congestion – congestion is all about loss. In the end that's how you're going to measure it, and that's not possible. It's the dog chasing its tail.

What you do is that when you build a transmission system, you look at the system, based on your needs. It is congestion versus the cost of relieving congestion, and you optimize that where those two lines cross on the graph. What happens is that what triggers a transmission line to be built is when the cost of congestion rises to a point that it makes economic sense to build another transmission line to reinforce that area. That's smart planning, and that's smart management.

But to try to build a system for zero congestion: I always tell people it's like the road system. Our road system is similar to an electrical grid. All our roads are interconnected. Some are bigger than others. A zero-congestion road system does not make sense. We have stop signs and stoplights that cause congestion. We have accidents that cause congestion. You would not build a road so wide that you would never have a problem because in theory you can't make it work anyway. You have an accident; you have a problem; you have congestion.

It's true in a transmission system. You can try to build a zero-congestion system in theory, but it is impossible. It is not practical. You will always, inevitably, have a problem. It is the nature of the business. So we build a system that operates to the most efficient level, and we're not doing that. We have a policy problem that has not been addressed.

Dealing with the heartland issue, the people in the heartland, the people that have the most at stake, Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association, are absolutely opposed to the project. They believe it is grossly overestimated. They wrote that in a letter and submitted it.

Ms Fenske: Table it.

Mr. Anglin: I did table it. It's already tabled.

An Hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Anglin: People need to read the evidence. They testified at the heartland hearing, and it's in the transcripts. It's in the record.

Mr. McAllister: Mention the member that's speaking so it's on the record.

Mr. Anglin: I don't even have my map in front of me. You mention it later.

This is important when we get down to the hearing process. Here we have a system that we're building, and nobody in this House has any evidence... [interjection] Oh, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. That makes sense. Unfortunately, it would make sense if you'd look at the evidence.

We're not talking tens of millions of dollars. We're not talking hundreds of millions of dollars. We're talking half the annual budget of this province. That's a lot of numbers. Right now the AESO estimates that in their long-term plan at $16.6 billion. Now, when the AESO says – and we do this every time, and I believe it was just done on the eastern line – that this is only going to add a $1.40, $1.60 to your electric bill, that is not a true cost. What they're doing is looking at the wires and towers and saying: if I pro-rate that, I can get that figure way down. But that's not how you get billed.

You go home and look at your electric bill and flip to page 2 or page 3 and look at your transmission charge, and when you look at that, you will notice that you're being charged about $10 or $12 for every $100 your bill is. If your bill is $200, you're going to see $20 or $22 on that transmission charge. That's based on roughly a $2 billion asset. This province is proposing to add an eightfold-increase investment. The question I've always posed to the AESO: if that investment goes up eightfold, how does that charge not go up eightfold? For the average consumer bill it would double.

Now, when this first started, I had predicted that bills were going to double, and they did and they have. If you were part of the central Alberta REA or the southern Alberta REA, those transmission charges have already gone up 100 per cent. None of these lines have been pro-rated into the bill, and nobody can explain to them why. Now, there are a lot of reasons why, and hopefully when this report comes out from the hon. minister, we might be able to get to see some of those reasons because it has a lot to do with the ancillary costs, and they're significant.

It's a very complex formula on how we actually pro-rate those transmission charges, but it's not based strictly on the physical plant. There's loss that's based into that and other factors that the AESO allows to be pro-rated into that cost. This is significant. That's why the Industrial Heartland Association, that's why the industrial consumers' association, which is responsible for basically paying roughly 60 to 80 per cent of all electricity costs in this province, opposed this. When you talk to industry, they're not shy about this. Residential is 20 per cent of usage. Industry is 80 per cent of usage.

Claims that southern Alberta is going to need more electricity are actually quite ironic because when you look at the data, the demand from residential growth, although we are growing in population, is not really moving very far. It's slowly climbing but not to the degree that the normal demand of 3 per cent is growing. When you look at the AESO chart, it's quite flat going all the way out 20 years.

Now, there's a theory behind that, and I believe there's a very good reason for that. The projections were originally made before a lot of advancements had happened in what they call demand-side management, and that is that your appliances are getting more efficient, people are going to more efficient light bulbs – that's significant – and the fact that people themselves do conservation measures. Even though we're adding more homes and our population is growing, it is the demand on our industry that is growing leaps and bounds, not the residential market.

Where is that industry? It's northeast of Edmonton. That's where our industry is, yet the bulk of the lines are south of Edmonton. By the way, the heartland line goes from the Eberslie substation to a brand new substation in Gibbons and connects to what? An HVDC line that ends up in Brooks. It gets one feed at a 240 level, and that's it. That is proposed at a later date.

The idea that the heartland needs power is not based on anything that is proposed in the existing plan. We have a conundrum, and the conundrum is this. You have the ability to correct this, before we expend a tremendous amount of money, and do it right. We need to build transmission lines where we need them, and I have to tell you right now that we're not building those transmission lines. Industry will tell you that there are some industry projects that are still waiting for transmission lines to be built, to be connected, and we are focused on this so-called backbone that is absolutely not going to be necessary. The current transfer rate between Edmonton and Calgary right now is 2,200 megawatts. That's our current transfer capacity. Our transfer rate is 800 megawatts. Over the last three years it has dropped, and it continues to drop.

Now, what has happened? Well, we've actually developed more generation down south, and that's what was predicted as far back as 2003, but the big factor coming in: there's an 800 megawatt plant ready to go online in about two years or 18 months, depending on the Shepard plant completion. Once that goes online, the necessity to transfer electricity from Edmonton to Calgary, from Genesee to Langdon dissipates. We will probably be shipping power north to Red Deer.

Now, the other factor that was never factored into the decision is that we have a federal mandate, or a federal plan, for what to do to our coal plants, to either retire them early or force them into what's called gasification combined cycle.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just going back, of course, we're discussing Bill 8, which is an amendment to Bill 50. Throughout the election and previous to the election Bill 50 was a hotly-contested piece of legislation. I had the opportunity prior to the election to work with a group called VALTOA, which I'm sure the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville knows quite well. This is a group of landowners out in the Vegreville region. When they first started out, you know, a typical thing: they weren't sure exactly the process for transmission lines. They weren't sure what the government was doing.

At first, when the government decided to build a whole bunch of lines through a bunch of their property, of course they didn't want those lines on their property. It was more about: "Okay. This is on my land. I don't want it there." Eventually, after they became educated on the bills – and it does take some time to go through all the details, as my fellow member has indicated – looking at whether these lines were needed, that's when they said: "No. We don't need these lines altogether. There should be an independent needs assessment done by experts." That sounds relatively simple.

Instead, what this government did was that they put a decision to build $16 billion worth of transmission lines – $16 billion worth of transmission lines – to this cabinet here. I don't know where the expertise on electricity and generation is within that cabinet. I think Albertans were rightly shocked and outraged by that decision. This amendment fixes that ridiculous decision to give all the power to these cabinet ministers. It fixes that. The problem is that it doesn't go retroactively to actually stop the building of these transmission lines through that flawed process. That's the problem here. They came up with a flawed process of having some group of cabinet ministers sitting there and deciding this.

This decision wasn't just, you know, on a whim, that all of a sudden they decided to build this. This decision to push forward these transmission lines happened a long, long time ago. I recall meeting with the former Premier's chief of staff Ron Glen, and even at that time, five years ago I think it was, they were pushing about the need for transmission lines: we need to get these built. It always sounded a little bit suspicious. If there's a need to build transmission lines, go to an independent body, the Alberta Utilities Commission, who has the expertise, provide actual evidence that these lines are needed, and then build them if they're needed. Build them if they're in the public interest.

Instead, what they did was that they gave that decision to a bunch of cabinet ministers. It's just absolutely incredible. You know, I'm not an electricity expert. I shouldn't be making a decision on $16 billion worth of transmission lines. But these cabinet ministers, the Government House Leader must have been there deciding: "Oh, yeah. We need these lines." On what evidence was that based? No reports, no evidence.

Mr. McAllister: But they'll never do it again.

Mr. Saskiw: But they'll never do it again.

We're starting to see some of the results of this. We see record electricity prices. That's why I think this debate is very important. You go to the average Albertan. They get their power bill, and now they're starting to see the effects. Even though, of course, this government is mortgaging our future, we're starting to see the effects even right now on power bills. When there are these massive increases in power bills and you see $16 billion worth of transmission lines getting built, you start to put it together. The government's record on this is skyrocketing power bills.

I think one of the questions in the next election is going to be: do you want higher power bills? If you want higher power bills, vote for this government. You know, we've already seen the results of that.

The other big problem, of course, is the extinguishment of property rights that was in Bill 50. Previously if a landowner had their land taken away, they would have legal recourse under the Expropriation Act, and under the Expropriation Act there are a whole bunch of classes of compensation. If you had to move your family from that land, you'd have your moving costs reimbursed. If you had to prematurely get rid of your financing on that piece of property and there was a penalty associated, you would get those costs reimbursed. If you had a business on your property and as a result of a government decision to take away your property you lost business revenue, that would have to be reimbursed.

Well, what this government did is that they took the Expropriation Act out, so landowners no longer had those rights. The government can unilaterally take away someone's property rights without full compensation and without recourse to the courts. The compensation side is in the Expropriation Act. Then in terms of recourse to the courts what they did in Bill 50 was introduce what we call in law a privative clause, which prevents someone whose land is affected from appealing to a court. That's what this government did. So you have a landowner whose land is being taken away, transmission lines are going right through it, and you no longer have rights to the Expropriation Act, and you no longer have a right to go to a court to defend yourself when your property is being taken away. That's the legacy of this government. That's why so many Albertans in rural Alberta were upset when they learned about it.

I guess the problem is that it takes some time to learn about these things because you assume your government isn't going to do that to you. It takes a lot of education. It takes town halls. It takes the information getting out there. But I can tell you that as a result of this ridiculous Bill 2 and other bills on the property rights side, not the overall concept, as a result of the further extinguishment of property rights and as a result of this debate today, I can assure you that Albertans are going to wake up today seeing that the Wildrose is defending landowner rights. We will keep doing that. They're going to be interested, and they're going to learn about what this government has done to property rights in this province. I think that's what's going to backfire here.

Going back to the transmission lines, what also happened, of course, was that we saw some estimates of what these transmission lines were going to cost, but this government in Bill 50 – and this is just so absurd when you read this bill. There were no limits on the cost to build these transmission lines. So we already have massive cost overruns – massive cost overruns – sometimes double or triple the estimated cost for the transmission lines. What's going to happen, of course, and we're seeing it, is: power bills are going higher. Constituents come to my office and they ask me about their power bills, and I say: "Well, look. Bill 50 transmission lines. Not only are they going up; they're going to continue to go up." Four years from now, when the bills are even higher, when they are a record high in the country, that's going to be a big issue, I can assure you.

It makes Alberta less competitive. We used to have this thing called the Alberta advantage: low tax bills, the best health care, low power bills, low regulation. All of that's been completely evaporated. Part of that, of course, is the cost of doing business. If you're a small business and your power bill doubles or triples, your cost of business goes up, and it's less competitive. I've talked to owners of prefabrication companies. Some of them are doing well; some of them aren't. What they continue to tell me is that if these power bills continue to go up, they're going to move out of the province. Why build them here if you can go to another province and have electricity, which is a huge input cost for them? Why build them here? Build them in another province, and if the dollars make sense, ship them to areas like Fort McMurray. That's what's happening here. Alberta is much less competitive as a result of Bill 50 and as a result of the government ignoring what I think were very legitimate concerns from landowners as well as the business community.

The funny part of the government's messaging in this is that these transmission lines are needed for the province. They're needed for industry and all that kind of stuff. The problem with that argument is that some of the largest groups that consume the energy, whose whole business depends on electricity, said: "We don't need these transmission lines. This is a massive overbuild. We don't need this amount of transmission."

Their so-called evidence that this amount of lines was needed was totally negated by industry, whose business and lifeline depends on electricity, and, of course, was negated by just a complete lack of evidence. You don't go to the Alberta Utilities Commission, which has the actual expertise. No. This cabinet here decided to build $16 billion worth of transmission lines.

I think what's going to come out is that the building of these lines is going to be one of the biggest mistakes of this government. It's going to be interesting eventually to dig through how these transmission lines actually came about. There's a lot of profit that's made on these lines, of course. The utility companies, you know, get their costs reimbursed plus a certain guaranteed rate of return. It will be very, very interesting to see several years ahead how these decisions were actually made, who was lobbying whom, what money passed where.

Going back to the idea of cabinet deciding where these lines are, the problem with all the bills – 19, 24, 36, and 50 – is that you took the power away from the people or independent commissions and put all of that power into cabinet. All of that power into cabinet. No matter how smart these cabinet ministers are, you should not put that inordinate amount of power to those decision-makers. You should not give them the power to decide to unilaterally extinguish property rights. You should not give them the power to unilaterally decide how many transmission lines should be built in this province. In no other jurisdiction in Canada or North America do they actually take the decision on transmission capacity out of an independent commission and put it into cabinet. No other jurisdiction does that. Except they did it.

Now, this bill amends that ridiculous decision, but what they were saying to us when we were arguing this previously was that of course cabinet should decide that. Clearly, they were wrong. It's nice to see that they've admitted in this bill that their previous legislation was an absolute failure. That's what this bill is. This bill is demonstration that they've failed. They've failed Albertans. The unfortunate thing is that the amount of damage that previous bill has done is going to affect future generations for years and years to come. We're only starting to see that. We're starting to see it in the power bills. We're starting to see it in the massive cost overruns on the initial transmission lines that are being constructed. If you look at that number, $16 billion of untendered contracts were decided by this cabinet. They should be ashamed of that decision.

Going back to the group in Vegreville, you know, the Member for Little Bow talked about one of his constituents who was threatened with a restraining order and the RCMP coming if he didn't get off his land for a transmission line. I think Albertans could forgive the government for coming on their land. We all understand that some public utilities are needed. I think all Albertans could say: okay; if this government had actually gone to an independent body with expertise and completely demonstrated that these transmission lines are needed in the public interest, they're actually needed for our province to grow, then I think Albertans could forgive the government for all these other things: the unilateral extinguishment of property rights, the elimination of the appeal rights to accord. I think they could forgive that.

What happened, of course, is that they took that decision, that is normally made by independent utility commissions, and they put it into cabinet. It is not done in any other jurisdiction. We know that they may be called by different names if you look at the state level in the United States, or different provinces will call their commissions different names. But not one of those jurisdictions ever took the decision to build transmission lines out of their decision-making power into cabinet. Not one of them did that. The reason is because cabinet doesn't have that expertise. They absolutely have no clue.

We actually saw presentations that were provided to cabinet, and in those presentations industry said: we don't need these lines. The conclusion of industry – these are big players. These are Shell and other industry players that are involved in an association that specifically deals with transmission capacity. I can't remember the name right off the top of my head. It's the Industrial Power Consumers Association. These are big players. They consume a large amount of power in this province. They said that these transmission lines aren't needed, and the bottom conclusion is that the losers will be Albertans and ratepayers.

To think that through, you have the major industry players in this province saying that these transmission lines are not needed. This amount of transmission capacity is going to make Alberta less competitive. But what did cabinet do? Well, at that time it was pretty clear that they were whipped. They were whipped on the vote to have these transmission lines.

I remember when I used to be on the dark side and was chairing a meeting at a policy conference for the PC Party, and it was on Bill 50. I was chairing that meeting, and there were debates amongst the membership at that point in time. People were starting to look at this legislation and say: "This is completely ridiculous. Why are we going ahead with this? Why are we doing this?" Even at that point they were questioning it. They were starting to question it. They weren't in that groupthink mode that people can get into. So we were having the vote on Bill 50 because some constituency association had put forward a motion to repeal Bill 50. That grassroots process. What happened? You saw right before the vote cabinet ministers rushing people into the room to make sure they voted to keep Bill 50. Instead of having, you know, grassroots democracy at play, you had cabinet ministers rushing people in to make sure that this legislation went forward.

It was an interesting vote because it was so close, actually. It was basically a 50-50 split. The room was so packed. Normally if it's so close, you do a standing vote like we do here, but the room was so packed that everyone had to basically stand, so as chair it was a very disruptive meeting. But eventually it was literally a one-vote victory to keep Bill 50. Going back in time, it would have been really interesting to see what would have happened if a constituency association had actually passed that motion to repeal Bill 50 and we hadn't continued along this dangerous path of building these transmission lines without going through the independent needs-based assessment.

The other thing that we had heard throughout the election and previous to the election was that the way of the future is actually cogeneration, generating the power closest to the source. Rather than building these massive transmission lines to have power go all over the place, you actually have cogeneration in the area. From my discussions with many key stakeholders and industry players, that makes a lot of sense in a lot of areas. One of our members had indicated that up north the industry there is force-generating their own power, and they're going to consume that power for their operations. In many instances they have the capacity to export that power.

Instead what this government was trying to argue was that somehow the north needed all this power sent to them. That's just completely false. It's a complete falsehood that these companies needed power to go to them. They generate their own power. What's going to happen now that power bills are going through the roof? What are they going to do? They're going to go off the grid. What's going to happen when all these big companies go off the grid, generate their own power?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have to get up and at 'em. I wasn't planning to do this today. This is usually the time I'm turning over to get up. I want you to know that it's much easier to stay up all night than to have to get up in the morning, in my books. I realize that I will have several opportunities to speak, as was evidenced through the night with other members, so I probably won't get everything out in this one fell swoop.

The Member for Little Bow tabled some information on a motion that was taken by Strathcona county council when I was actually on that council. That particular motion, which was tabled – originally council was determined to ask that all of Bill 50 be rescinded. However, council saw the light, that there were some things in Bill 50 that really did not have to be rescinded. As the Member for Little Bow did mention, I like to do my homework thoroughly and represent my people, so there were questions.

In representing the people, we, too, at that time had questions on what the requirements would be because life had changed from 2008, when there were going to be eight or 10 upgraders in the area, to 2011, when there really was only one at that point in time. We did reasonably question that, and what that led to was that the government did take a relook at the actual needs. In February of 2012 the Powering Our Economy: Critical Transmission Review Committee report came out and again restated that there was a need for power. I would imagine that this report has been tabled, but I will table it again at the next opportunity.

Mr. Anglin: It's tabled. I tabled it.

Ms Fenske: It's tabled? That's excellent. It does say that we do need power.

Now, the other thing that came up was that I needed to do my homework because as the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said, a lot of this information started in 2001, when Alberta's Industrial Heartland was struggling to be identified. It was actually an idea whose time had not yet come. Alberta's Industrial Heartland, that particular organization, happens to be the member municipalities. It is not the industry component. They actually aren't the industry. That would be the NCIA, the Northeast Capital Industrial Association, who does not have an official position on power requirements.

I'm trying to get an education on all things with industry because it certainly relates to my area, so I had an opportunity to speak with people from the North West Redwater Partnership Sturgeon bitumen refinery and to ask them some questions. One of the things, of course, we all talk about is cogen. My question to them was: well, what about cogen? They said that companies now have changed their processes so much that if they are not utilizing all of their steam in their process or just having small amounts of low-grade steam excess, they are not efficient. Just like the way electric light bulbs have changed in efficiency, so, too, has how refineries are built.

Then I asked them: well, what is your position on the need for power? We need to know that, noting that it doesn't happen overnight that you can actually get transmission lines built. We do have to have some planning. I would like to read to you an e-mail that they sent to me, and I will table that at the next opportunity as well.

Dear Ms Fenske,

I understand you are seeking to understand concerns regarding power requirements related to the development of the North West Redwater Partnership (NWR) Sturgeon Bitumen Refinery. I am pleased to offer you the following statements of fact related to our project power requirements;

- Process power supply for the NWR Sturgeon Refinery will be 240 kV, 3 phase
- AltaLink will be constructing a new Substation to serve the NWR Sturgeon Refinery, to be located on NWR project lands within SE18-56-21-W4. This substation will be dedicated to the power needs of the NWR facility
- A relatively short (approx. 5 km) segment of new 240 kV transmission line will be constructed from existing 240 kV infrastructure near Shell Scotford facilities, directly to the substation within the NWR Sturgeon refinery. Much of the routing of these new transmission lines will be shared with existing 138 kV lines that serve the existing substation near the Agrium Redwater facility

- The new 240 kV transmission lines will be sized to handle the eventual power demands of three phases of the NWR Sturgeon Refinery, although the power flowing through the lines initially will be limited to the needs of phase 1 of the facility
- Through the processes of the Alberta Electric System Operator (AESO) and the Alberta Utility Commission, a “needs identification” review was completed, and it has been confirmed that the existing Heartland power grid is sufficient to provide the power needs of phase 1 of the NWR Sturgeon Refinery
- Through this same process, it has been determined that the Heartland power grid as it is today is unable to provide the power needs of phases 2 and 3 of the NWR Sturgeon Refinery, and that a reinforcement of the Heartland power grid is required to be completed before commitment can be made to provide such power
- As the design for all three phases of the NWR Sturgeon Refinery has been determined by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Decision 2007-058/Approval No. 10994 to be in the public interest, NWR will be expecting that sufficient power . . .

Let me repeat: they will be expecting that sufficient power

. . . will be available from the Heartland region power grid for the development of phases 2 and 3 of the facility. NWR has been working with the AESO to ensure that these power needs have been identified, and are on their load forecasts. Any failing of the Heartland power grid’s ability to provide such power to phases 2 and 3 of the NWR Sturgeon Refinery would result in severe economic impacts to NWR and the economic benefits we bring to the Heartland region, the Province, and the Country

I hope this brief background to NWR’s power requirements helps you understand our current and future needs. Please contact me if you have any questions re this.

Sincerely,

Doug Bertsch

As I said, I will table that to show that we have to be thinking beyond what we have today because we’ve heard loud and clear from industry that if we do not have the infrastructure, they cannot and will not locate in our province. That’s why planning comes in handy.

I know that a lot of us have been looking forward to a pipeline, whether it goes east, whether it goes south, or whether it goes west. Those pipelines, once they are in the ground, will require power, several 500-horsepower motors, to be able to push whatever product it is they’re pushing to that market. I’ve been told also that that is going to require a considerable amount of electricity. If we want to get our product to market, we are going to need to have that power in place.

So I was with many of you and questioned the need. The answer came back that we do need power. It came back through the Critical Transmission Review Committee report. Frankly, as I’ve heard our former Premier say many times, I don’t want to be without power when it’s minus 40. I leave that with you. I’m sure I’ll be speaking to some of these things again, but I just wanted to have that information available.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I’ll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have just one question. [interjections] I never thought I’d hear anybody cheer me on to talk. Yeah.

First off, I’d like to thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for clarifying the issues. I’ve known her for a long time, when she was on council, and she’s always done that. She’s always stood up for her constituents as a ratepayer at the time when she was on council. I commend her for that. That was just the one thing.

A quick thing. We talked about biodigesters and people going off the grid. The clarification is on that. I know a producer down by Taber that’s trying to put in a biodigester to use potato waste. They’re not even tying into the grid, yet they still have to pay the transmission fees back into the system for every kilowatt they make, which baffles me because it’s not even getting tied back into the grid. They’re using a totally closed circuit for their own thing. I don’t know how that works. If somebody ever has the chance to clarify that for me, it would be great. They’re running into a ton of red tape trying to put in their biodigester to be able to make energy. That’s great. I think everybody wants that. They have to pay it back, and it seems kind of like a fee on that.

On that note, I’ll sit down for a second because I believe my friend from Rocky Mountain House would like to add something.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville makes a very good point. We should be building the transmission lines we need. The heartland line does not connect internally to the grid system on a 240 system in the heartland. That doesn’t happen. It’s a 500-kV twin circuit going to Gibbons. It doesn’t connect where she’s talking about. This is why I say that we have to look at this. We have to really take a good look at it. She’s correct: we need to build the lines that we need to build. No one is arguing that.

Now, what you need to understand is this. The fact is that the heartland has more than enough capacity generation to serve itself. All the transmission capacity coming from the Wabamun area through Ellerslie and around the north side of Calgary amounts to – and you have to look at it at baseload, not at theoretical, because if you go to the RETA website, they’ll get angry with me when I give you what’s called baseload – roughly about 1,800 megawatts, maybe as low as 1,500 megawatts on baseload capacity going up there. That’s huge. That’s a tremendous amount. The heartland has 663 megawatts of generating capacity, and its ability to import electricity, if it needed to, from the Edmonton area is roughly well over a thousand megawatts. Now, the way I said it, RETA would get angry with me because on the theoretical side it is right off the chart, but we want to deal with some conservative figures.

The hon. member is correct. Individual companies are not getting connected up properly, so when they talk about that next phase, they will need another 240 line. I don’t disagree with that. What I’m saying is that you’ve got a 500-kilovolt DC line that that can’t connect into. It’s not there. It’s not in the plans. That’s DC, not AC. That 500-kilovolt DC power line costs a billion dollars more than what an AC power line costs. Boy, could we use that money elsewhere in infrastructure.

I tell you that we have another line over in the east: same deal. That’s not up in the heartland. We have oil sands projects that are not getting connected, and we know about that. All you have to do is talk to AESO. What we’re doing on this plan that she pointed out here, Powering Our Economy, is an embarrassment. This is an embarrassment because what they didn’t do was look at evidence. What they did was that they just took the assumptions from . . . [interjections] No. I’m serious. You’re an accountant. I would expect you to really go with the numbers.

They should have looked at the evidence. They should have gone back and said: this is the evidence we looked at. They didn’t do that. They just took the assumptions that were the original assumptions on what they thought was going to happen. That didn’t work.

I've got to tell you that this document relies upon that needs identification document. It says so. It relies upon the original needs decision, which has been vacated. I have to tell you that the coauthor of the plan that it relies upon, which is the 10-year plan – that's what this is – says: in my opinion, it would not be in the public interest. He has rescinded what he has written. The reason he did that is fairly basic. It's not a big deal. What he basically was saying:

In my opinion, especially with the change in the gas market and the emergence of low-cost shale gas which has a 30-plus-year life, gas generation is going to be the generation of choice, and gas generation sited at the point of load is much more economical than transferring power on transmission lines.

That is right from the author of everything that this government is relying upon. I'm not asking you to make a decision based on the facts that I'm giving you or the facts that the hon. member is trying to quote. What I'm trying to tell you is that when you hear the difference, you should be willing, given the amount of money, to take a real hard look at this. We were told the lights were going to go out by 2009 – so did Ed Stelmach – and the fact is that here we are, and the lights are working. They're working just fine because the assumptions of the AESO were not valid assumptions. They're not assumptions that you should be building transmission lines on. You build a plan on that, and that's important. There's a difference from actually triggering a transmission line.

Now, here's where you need to investigate, and you should. The package is a $16.6 billion backbone. The heartland line in that package was originally $240 million, $260 million. It is now up to $700 million. The southern Alberta transmission reinforcement, which was a 240 closed-loop system, was originally estimated to cost $1.2 billion. It is now expected to cost $5 billion. We haven't started the HVDC lines. They have not started. Every line that AESO has ever estimated has more than doubled in cost.

That should cause you some caution. You should be willing to at least look into that because, I have to tell you, everything has changed. I don't dispute that a project in the heartland area needs power, but what you have done doesn't fix that. It doesn't address that issue. That's the problem. That's a lot of money to not address what she says is an issue that needs to be addressed, and that's the difference. When she talks about a 240 system, you're talking barely $200 million, $300 million. We're talking about spending billions, and the need right over here might be $120 million to $300 million, depending on the exact project. I don't know the design. That's why you need a needs document. That's why you have to look at how you're going to provide the system and build on the system.

To approve these types of projects and not go through the whole process of determining what's best in the public interest, you can go left or go right in the wrong direction very quickly, spend a whole lot of money, and not have a whole lot of gain. That's a real problem, and that's a waste.

What we have going on here right now is quite simply this. The lights are not going out, and the AESO is not even telling you that anymore. They're not going out. We've actually developed some generation. Do we need to upgrade the backbone between Edmonton and Calgary? It still is a possibility, but you should require that somebody prove it. That's absolute because the Industrial Power Consumers Association will tell you that you probably should reinforce between Ellerslie and Sheerness. That was their first recommendation. Is it a valid recommendation today? I can't tell you that. You need to rework the figures. This is 2012. But if you say that we need an HVDC line, nobody has done their homework on that. That costs an exorbitant amount of money, and there's no gain. There's no gain, and it does not help what she's proposing in the heartland.

We need to look at this pragmatically. We need to look at this in a very fundamental, pragmatic, quantitative, qualitative way. What the engineer has told us now, who authored every document this government and, by the way, this panel relied upon, which they've never read by the way – they didn't do it. They just took their word for it. That's wrong. When you're talking billions of dollars, that's not sufficient. Somebody needs to dig in deep and start to rework the numbers to find out if it's actually worth it. I have to tell you that it's not.

There's nobody here that can convince anyone in the industry because the people in the industry won't even step up to take credit for it. It's like: who came up with the idea to place a 330-kilometre HVDC line? Whose idea was that? When you go to AESO, they blame you. When I talk to cabinet and I talk to the minister, he says: "No, no. AESO said." We get this circle going around. When I go to AltaLink, I say: "Come on, guys. Who really came up with this idea?" They like to throw up their hands, "Not us," because the engineers are embarrassed by this. You should wake up to that fact and question these people because there's a lot of money riding on this, and there's a penalty here for our economy that's unnecessary. We should build the right lines.

In the member's case that project needs to be looked at. They do a needs identification document. Where that grid needs to be reinforced, she's probably correct because it's a 240 system up there, so they would reinforce the 240 system. That makes sense. But there's more than enough power up there, and there are more than enough transmission lines if we need to push power up there. We're not. We're actually exporting power from there. You need a triggering mechanism to build these massive HVDC lines. Otherwise, they go underutilized, and that's a waste of money. You want the most efficiency you can get out of the transmission system. That's what makes this economy hum. I mean, we can go back and forth, but this information – we need to deal with what is factual.

Where that generation is potentially growing is one thing. Where it is and what has actually grown is another. We know that. We know generation has developed down south, and we know the whole system has changed on that schematic. This is what was tabled by me, the 2009 plan. You can see from even across the room that it is a straight line for the projected future for residential growth. That whole idea that we're building these for residential: it's not real. We should be building this for our industrial, just as the member has said. We need to be building it in the right place, not in the wrong place. That's the key. That's the key.

I have to tell you that there are good engineers at the AESO. There are good engineers at AltaLink and ATCO, and they come to me because they don't have whistle-blower protection, and they actually feed me information to give me... [interjections] I'm sorry, but they did. I've got all the data, hon. minister. The knowledge is good here.

I will tell you this. The problem for the AESO is simply this. I was a fibre-optic transmission engineer, and I understand the planning mechanisms behind this.

An Hon. Member: You're wrong.

Mr. Anglin: I know; you always say that I'm wrong. I'm embarrassed that an accountant can't figure this out, that numbers matter.

You don't need to be an expert in electricity, but you need to have some fundamental understanding of how much money is being spent. This is an incredible expense, as the Industrial Power Consumers wrote the entire PC caucus, I think, two years ago. They wrote that letter. What they wrote the caucus is that this is mortgaging our children's future, this is going to make us uncompetitive, and this is going to cost jobs. That testimony came forward. It came forward by Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association, in particular Mr. Ted Johnston of Alberta Food Processors, which is an extremely large employer. AltaSteel has said the same thing.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne tabled a letter from Alberta Newsprint up there. They said in that letter that was tabled in this Assembly that they could not handle their costs doubling, that that was going to be problematic. I know what they're doing right now, as a lot of companies are doing. They're looking to cogenerate so that if they have to get off the grid, they can get off the grid. They are sitting down, trying to make the numbers work. If they are able to get off the grid, that means more of those costs have to be passed down to whom? Those small businesses and the residential.

This has real implications that spread beyond what is initially going to happen. Someone has to listen. I realize some of the members can be mockingly . . .

Mr. Dorward: Mockingly?

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I wasn't referring to you, but I'd be happy to do that.

This is a real problem. This is a lot of money. It's half the annual budget of this province. That's not small change. That's significant. If we go forward with that, that gets passed on to every electric bill. I know that the information is that the bill would only go up $3.40 or $1.40 – I get all those figures – but that's not the truth. They're looking strictly at the material cost, not the overall cost, what's called the loaded rate, for dealing with that. We are looking at the average residential bill doubling again. We are looking at commercial being hurt more, and commercial is small businesses. Those small businesses pay a larger portion than the residents. Then our industrial, of course: for the most part the cogens are probably going to be safe, but those that don't cogen are going to be in serious trouble. That's not good for our economy. We need to get value out of these transmission lines, and someone needs to look at that to make sure we get value out of these transmission lines. We have to build the transmission lines we need. We don't need to be building transmission lines we don't need.

That's the difference between my argument and the hon. member's. She's advocating for transmission lines that we need. I believe that. We need that. We need to reinforce that 240 grid that she's talking about. The backbone of the system that the government has embarked upon is a 500-kV HVDC system. You just can't tap AC power off that. You have to go to the converter.

They're proposing to build a 500-kV AC twin-circuit system all the way up to Fort McMurray, but it's in the wrong place. Even industry says that that should come down to the heartland. You can't move that unless you change the legislation. That's why it needs to be looked at. Even the southern Alberta transmission reinforcement: all that has changed since they started that. They are overbuilding that system. We're not getting a very good bang for our dollar down there at all. It is really a problem.

The idea that we build in advance of the need has been in my view misinterpreted. That need has to be an economically triggered mechanism. In other words, as the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville says, you get a project that starts phase 1 and is looking to complete phase 2. There's that triggering mechanism. If you see an investment that people are making, you can build those transmission lines. One thing you have to remember is simply this. Transmission lines do not create electricity; they only move it from point A to point B. If you need electricity, generation is the most economical way to get your electricity. It creates more.

By the way, the generator that went in at Clover Bar was ahead of schedule, under budget, $263 million for a 243-megawatt generator. That's significant. Even down at Shepard the 800-megawatt plant is expected to go online ahead of schedule.

There is a lot of capital outlay for a generating station – there's no question about it – but there's a tremendous amount of capital outlay for transmission lines. If you put a $263-million generator somewhere in central Alberta, you don't need to reinforce the backbone. You just gave it an additional 100 years of life. That's how you can actually extend the life of your existing system. We are heading towards a distributed generation model not because we're intending to but because that's where the market is taking us. Natural gas has dropped in price. They expect it to be low because of the new technologies for quite a long time, a lot more than 30 years. That is the take.

There will be local natural gas generation investments because it's more economical to build a generator close to the load. When you do that, that centralized model of locating all the generators in one central spot of your region like the Wabamun area is more of a sign of the past. As a matter of fact, the Wabamun plant itself has shut down. We have shut down two generators, I believe, at Genesee. It could be Genesee or Keephills. I'll have to look it up. Keephills is still operating. So what we have here is that some of that plant is going to transfer over to combined cycle gasification, as the new technology says. The other is not. It's just going to go offline. The reason it's going to go offline is because it's probably going to be cheaper to build a gas-fired generator elsewhere to serve whatever load it was serving from a long distance. That's just economics. That's a smart plan.

If the heartland were to grow substantially quite quickly, it is smarter and more economical to build a generator than to build a transmission line from over by the Wabamun area. It's as simple as that. It's based on economics. It isn't about the issue that the heartland needs a 240-system upgrade because they've got a plant so we're going to build $16.6 billion of transmission line that doesn't serve it. That doesn't make sense.

We have other areas just like that example that the hon. member gave. It's all up in that northeast region of Alberta. That's where our oil sands development is happening. They need to be served by transmission lines. We're not building them. Those companies will tell you that we're not actually building them, so why are we spending all this money? It's sort of like when you need a road in a community, like going up to Fort McMurray. Why would you spend multimillions of dollars building a road where you don't need it when you need it up there? It's about priority, and that's what's happening with these transmission lines.

This was an embarrassment, and I know the engineers that were part of this. I also know that the person who led this committee was a former vice-president of the PC Party, a nice guy. When I talked to them – I testified in front of them – they refused to accept evidence. They didn't look at any evidence. Nobody was allowed to submit evidence. Nobody was allowed to examine what they were looking at. They gave four questions to all participants, and you answered four questions. For a $16.6 billion package I would have thought you would have wanted more.

So when I asked a question of the . . . [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Other speakers?

Mr. Casey: Mr. Chairman, I guess I just have a question here. I understood we were in committee on Bill 8. I have no idea what we just went through here for the last two hours, no idea whatsoever.

Mr. Donovan: I spoke on Bill 8.

Mr. McAllister: I spoke on Bill 8.

Mr. Casey: Okay. I guess a couple of you did. But let's say about the voice that's been up here for the last 10 or 12 hours speaking nonstop: I have no idea what all this is about. I think the hon. member here pointed out that he didn't feel the cabinet previously had the expertise to make these kinds of decisions. What this bill is about is to make sure the cabinet doesn't make those kinds of decisions. I don't disagree a bit.

Collectively in this room right now there's enough knowledge to be just about dangerous, but it's certainly not enough knowledge to make any kind of a decision. If we're looking at trying to make a decision around any of this, I would say that we need credible, independent information, but that's not what's on the table tonight. Bill 8 is on the table tonight. I'm not sure what we just did for the last two hours except to have somebody's opinion presented. I would really like it if we could get back to discussing what exactly it is we're in committee to do, and that's to address Bill 8 and the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, somebody would like a new voice to talk for a little while, and I'm charged up. That's good. I got five hours of sleep. I've got lots of talking in me.

I thank the Member for Banff-Cochrane for his comments on that, but I think that kind of why we're here is for democracy and to be able to speak about different things. Now, I get that we're not always going to see the same on everything all the time, and that's the beauty of democracy. Everybody gets to have their opinion on it.

I think the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has a pretty vast knowledge, as most of you have heard for the last, I'd say, little while here, on the issue. I think that's the key, to be able to listen to some of the facts that maybe weren't heard before. That's why I commend Bill 8 for that. It's identified that Bill 50 probably wasn't the best piece of legislation that came through. This is why we're reviewing Bill 50 with Bill 8. I think it's the process.

Kudos to everybody that's been here for the whole night. I was lucky enough to go sneak off for a little five-hour siesta, which I think is good for everybody. I mean, everybody gets tired and a little edgy; it's understandable. But I think that's why we're here, to be able to give our opinions on the issue.

In my riding it touches very heavily on that. I think there have been members from both sides who brought up issues in the last two hours since I've been here, since 5 a.m., maybe not exactly tied to Bill 8 itself but clarifying some issues that were brought up. I mean, I was part of that myself because I brought up some issues from the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville on some stuff that I'd googled quickly to talk about power lines and such. In saying that, I think that, except for maybe a couple of other parties in this morning, we're all at fault for that, getting off the topic a little bit.

I think the topic's pretty broad. I think Bill 8 covers a lot of things.

Mr. Hancock: Actually, it's quite narrow.

Mr. Donovan: Well, I guess I try to make it broad.

You know, when we talk about it, I think it goes back to the part about needs assessment. That's one of the things, the needs assessment, that needs to be added of the stuff that wasn't done. I guess that's what the great debate is about here and probably the amendments that will come forth on Bill 8 from our party, about how to put needs assessments back onto the lines that have already been talked about and have been started.

The question is: is there the need for it? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville brought up a very good letter, an e-mail, which she will table, so we'll have all the exact facts to read off it. I think the nice part to that is that it does show that, yeah, there is power needed in this province. I don't think anybody on this side of the floor has ever argued that. We've identified that power is needed. The question of transmission lines, which she brought up: there are about five kilometres, I believe, in her statement on new power lines that are needed for that particular development in her riding, in her area. Or I might even be outside of her riding, but it's in that area. This is what we're here to do, to bring up facts, bring up information from our constituents about what affects them.

Now, in saying that, there was talk of a substation in her comments, which is great. That's not new generation. That's just a matter of making it available to go the five kilometres to where it's needed. I don't think anybody on this side has ever argued that, that we don't need transmission lines. It's the needs assessment. I think she adds a very valuable piece of information there. This is actually a needed product in that area. It's shown that there is a need, and there is also the comment in there on public interest. Now, I did tap on my desk a little bit on that because I think we've browbeat public interest quite a bit on a different bill, and it's good to hear people bring it up once in a while. It's not a sacred word. I mean, it's not something that we have to hide in the back corner in any way, shape, or form. Industry uses the word quite a bit.

Back to Bill 8, after my little pre-ramble on that. You know, we've got, in my riding anyway, when I bring up a lot of the issues there, the Alberta Irrigation Council, for instance, which talks of all the needs and stuff that they are doing. Their big thing is on education, governance, innovation, publications, and research. Now, research, I think, is key. I think that goes back to Bill 8 and what you need for information to do the needs assessment. Again, it ties back into the line that they want to do in my riding, in my constituency, that ties into Cardston-Taber-Warner's riding and that the hon. member would have, I'm sure, the same opinion of. Agriculture is very affected by these, and this is why we need needs assessments. That's one of the things that I think we need to identify on that.

I'm just going to stop for a second because I think everybody would like the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to table some stuff, and I think he'd like to go get a little bit of a rest. Then I'll be able to have a fresh water and be able to continue my conversation. Saying that, I'll sit down for a second, but I'll be right back up.

The Chair: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to move an amendment.

The Chair: All right. Would you circulate the amendment, please, hon. member? Send three to the table. Oh, we have three.

Mr. Anglin: Yeah. You've got them at the table.

The Chair: Perfect. If you'd just circulate them. Thank you.

This amendment will be A1, hon. members.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This amendment amends Bill 8 by striking out section 3, and section 41.1 is repealed and the following is substituted:

41.1(1) A transmission facility designated as critical transmission infrastructure under section 41.1 of this Act as it read immediately prior to the coming into force of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, shall be reviewed by the Commission which shall consider whether the facility for which approval is sought is and will be required to meet the present and future public convenience and need.

(2) In determining present and future public convenience and need under subsection (1), the Commission shall consider:

- (a) the benefit that may accrue to Albertans as a result of the new critical transmission infrastructure;
- (b) whether the need of Albertans for critical transmission infrastructure can be met by the application of non-wire solutions or, in any less expensive but equally satisfactory way, such as upgrading an existing line, building electrical generators closer to the load and programs to reduce the load;
- (c) whether the cost to Albertans of the new critical transmission infrastructure outweighs the public's social economic interest and benefit; and
- (d) reasonable and economic operational alternatives to minimize system constraints, giving consideration to technical efficiencies, reliability and capital costs.

(3) The Commission may, notwithstanding the Hydro and Electric Energy Act

- (a) refer the application back to the Independent System Operator with directions or suggestions for changes or additions,
- (b) approve the application, or
- (c) decline the application.

What this is intending to do, Mr. Chairman, in response to the hon. member – my opinion is, I think, the same as everyone else's opinion. We should be building the transmission lines we need. We should not be building transmission lines we don't need. That's my opinion. When I read from official transcripts of people under oath, that is what they said under oath. That's fact.

When I read exactly what the ISO wrote in its report, that's what the ISO wrote in its report. When I read the testimony of the author of the ISO reports, that's exactly what that individual said under oath. So that's not my opinion; that's evidence.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Anglin: I know you can mock it, hon. member, but this is not a mocking kind of issue anymore.

Mr. McAllister: Just ignore them.

Mr. Anglin: That's okay.

This is a serious issue when we look at the amount of money. This is not like looking at the issue of public interest in the last debate. This is about real dollars that can be better utilized and more efficiently elsewhere. I know that some of the members on the other side have that mentality that we should be more efficient in our use of dollars because I've heard hon. members speak about that. That's a real issue that we have to deal with. I'm not here to say that this is what we should do versus this is what we should do.

What the amendment is asking is that we should take a look at this not from a political point of view; we should take a look at this from a technical point of view. We should trust the experts. This committee that looked at it, the transmission review committee: that was political, ladies and gentlemen. They didn't look at evidence. We want someone to re-evaluate the evidence and take in new evidence and do the right thing. That's really what this is about. It's a large sum of money.

Now, I just want to make a comment. How this connects all back to Bill 8, when I was speaking earlier – cabinet made the decision, and cabinet has determined that it should not make the decision. So if cabinet says that it should not be making decisions now and it should not be making these decisions in the future, how is it that the decision it made in the past is correct? That's a valid question. This is really important to the future of Alberta's economic activity, to look at this extremely large expenditure.

By the way, AESO's estimate of $16.6 billion: their estimates on every line they've ever recommended have doubled. That should make members look at this with some caution. When you ask ATCO or AltaLink when they propose a project, "Why does it double?" what they will tell you as the TFO is that they really don't care what the AESO puts out in their plan. What they care about is that when it's delegated to them, they work up their own numbers, and almost inevitably it's double. That's why, when the heartland line was first tabled, it was estimated to be $240 million to $260 million. It was tabled at nearly $500 million. I think it had more than doubled. I think it was $560 million. I'll stand corrected on a fact check, but I think it was tabled at $560 million. So it was more than double when it was tabled.

That should be a real eye-opener on taking a look at this massive package that has been legislated. We have problems with what's already been legislated. Those two lines going from Edmonton to Fort McMurray are in the wrong spot. If we develop the hydro, we should probably be using HVDC, not AC. It's going to require legislative change to make that change. So that's really important.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Of course, I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment.

Mr. Horner: No.

Mr. Donovan: I know. I didn't want to be the showstopper. It's 7:25 this morning. I'm kind of a morning person, and I, again, respect the fact of those who didn't have the chance to go have a nap. By any means, feel free to hopefully get traded off.

I think, you know, it goes back to the basics of when you present a bill, and I think we've seen it. I again commend the government for identifying that Bill 50 wasn't working. I think it was hastily put through at one point. I think Bill 8 has started to identify that, but like with any good bill you want to have some healthy debate back and forth across the floor. I think the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, as quite a few of you have started to learn, knows a lot about power. I guess that, like on my farm, when I need to learn how to fix something, I try to go to an expert, somebody with lots of experience. I think we happen to be very lucky to have that in this House.

Now, in saying that, I believe the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has moved that we strike out section 3, substituting the following: the design of the critical transmission infrastructure under section 41.1 of the act as it read immediately prior to the coming into force of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012 . . . [thought] to meet the present and future public convenience and need.

(2) In determining present and future public convenience and need under subsection (1), the Commission shall consider:

(a) the benefit that may accrue to Albertans as a result of the new critical transmission infrastructure.

Now, again, this amendment ties into my riding of Little Bow, where, like I say, we have a power line that's being put forward to go through. The situation right now is the needs assessment, whether we need that or not. I think that's part of this. Part of the old lines, I think, is one of the things approved before. I mean, this is a very large issue in my riding and probably one that led to my election. The original lines didn't have a needs assessment. This one that they're proposing right now still wouldn't need a needs assessment because it was proposed before this act, before Bill 8 was proposed to change that.

I guess the question from my constituents is: why can't we have these things done on the ones that are proposed currently? Is there, actually, a true need for them? You know, I guess that as landowners that's the key thing to these people. Are their rights being infringed upon? It's the needs assessment. I don't think there's anybody in my riding that isn't for moving forward in Alberta. I think everybody is looking forward to moving ahead and doing what's right. The key part is: is it needed? As I stated earlier, the needs assessment is key on these things.

When we put in this particular line from Picture Butte, for instance, it goes across some very high-end, I call it, agricultural farmland, which we've already invested a lot of money on for irrigation. We've already taken the time to do that. We've identified that it's good land, that it's arable with irrigation on it. It has a huge return on investment for all Albertans. I think that's key to this government because we put lots of money into irrigation projects. I commend our agriculture department for that. We've identified what we get returned back for stuff, and I think we've identified that our return on investment in agriculture is huge, especially in irrigation.

Next Tuesday the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association – if anybody is interested and wants to come down, we can carpool from here. I'm more than happy to work with everybody on all sides. Come down to Calgary to the Deerfoot Inn & Casino. They're having their annual conference there.

Mr. Denis: You just want to play blackjack.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. Well, whatever it takes, I guess. I'm not sure how many lawyers in the room I want to play cards with, but I'm not here to judge that. I guess it all depends how that works.

I mean, I think it would be good for any member of this Assembly next Tuesday night to take that drive down there. There will be constituents there who will tell you – I mean, when we talk about power lines and we talk about costs and people's bills, you know, a lot of irrigation over the years has gone from natural gas or just gasoline-burning pumps to pump the water out for irrigation to electric. That's great, but we're talking with farmers that are getting bills that are $20,000 to $25,000 a month for electricity.

Now, don't get me wrong. There's a return on investment there. They've taken the time. They're obviously doing this because there's a business plan to it. But when half of their bill is for transmission fees, we're talking $12,000 to $13,000 a month per farmer. This isn't a large area. This is one single farmer I talked to. That's a huge dollar. My question is: is there that much cost to transferring that power? That's where I have the argument, I guess, and this is what my constituents bring up to me. Somebody is gouging. I mean, there's a definite gouge there. You know, what I think people want to know is: where is that going?

I brought up the conversation about the biodigester of one constituent who's actually just a mile outside of my riding. He's actually in the Cardston-Taber-Warner riding. Very smart farmers. Very outstanding. They've led industry for a number of years – we're talking 30 to 40 years – in the potato industry, and they wanted to do a biodigester. Just to use the power, a closed circuit, in their own facility – and they have to pay back into the grid with that. It just baffles me why we're not promoting more of that, dropping the red tape. Now, I don't know all the facts of it on the government side of why that might be, but it just doesn't seem right to me, I guess. Why are we making somebody that's trying to move ahead, trying to do, I think, all the right things – they're trying to remove the carbon footprint out there. They're trying to make use of the waste, so a waste energy facility, you know, make use of it in their own facility. They've got over $400,000 invested in this so far, and they're no closer to flipping the switch on on that than I am on my own project because I don't have one.

I mean, it's taken that long and there is that much red tape. They've invested their hard-earned dollars into this and, I think, for the right reasons. The government has shown incentive to doing these things, but the red tape is holding them up on it. I think it goes back to when we have people looking at that, they're saying: well, why do I even do it? Then it goes back to this amendment of: what's the public convenience and the need for this?

When we look at that whole section of it, a transmission facility designed for critical transmission infrastructure – I think those are key words – are these lines critical that are being proposed? I mean, I can't speak for the rest of the province, but in my own constituency are they truly critical lines for Albertans, or are they being set up to transmit power outside of it? I think that's the question. I know some think not, some do, but that's the question I have in my constituency. Are they needed for this?

Again, I commend the government for identifying that we need needs assessments from here going forward, and I guess my debate will always be: why did we go for that time in there where we didn't have a needs assessment? The question leads into: was that to just be able to railroad some power lines through quickly and not do a public interest test of a needs assessment on it? I know the public interest question always comes in of whether it's there or not, but I think if there is need for power – I don't think anybody in here wants to go without power. We've heard it from numerous members. I mean, it's a daily item at our place. You throw a generator on once in a while if it goes down, but you can't do that all the way through.

You've got to look at the investment people in my constituency and constituencies around it have made. Cardston-Taber-Warner is a very large one also of how they've put, you know, some collaborative decision-making into what they're doing on their farms and spending the money accordingly to get an investment back for Albertans. It's not just that particular farmer, for instance, who gets the money back. It all goes back into the economy. We have the people that put up pivots and irrigation, the electricians. You know, it's the economic dollars, and it goes back to spending money provincially. If you keep the dollar close, we have something out of it. I mean, it's back into your economy. It keeps rural Alberta vibrant.

[Mr. Dorward in the chair]

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development I think has been very proactive in that, and I think that's how we need to keep Alberta sustainable, by keeping rural Alberta vibrant and keeping the development in rural Alberta vibrant. In saying that, I think this is a key way to do it, to figure out whether these things are needed. But it seems like we put up roadblocks once in a while as an agricultural producer of: are we gaining something by some of these power lines? I mean, what's the balancing act with them? Are we gaining something by putting them in? Are we actually being detrimental by putting in certain lines in certain areas on valuable land?

For those that have an agricultural background, that's great. For those who don't, potatoes have a huge investment to start off. I mean, these are people that are dumping $1,000, $1,200 an acre just on their input costs. Potatoes are very expensive to grow. They're sprayed numerous times during the year and everything else. I mean, as a farmer myself I'm pretty spoiled because I've got the odd gas well I have to drive around. Don't get me wrong. I collect an annual lease on it, and I can dodge them as need be for that value, but I don't have the irrigation to deal with on it. When you talk with people that have irrigation and they row-crop, you know, if you have a power line out there, it's a challenge for you because you're not nearly as efficient to go through and be back and forth. In this day and age it's about the bottom line and efficiency, so if you put power lines in places that I feel are probably not needed, you're definitely holding up what works for Albertans.

We've talked numerous times about roadblocks. I had the opportunity yesterday to introduce some people from the Alberta Barley Commission, some very forward-thinking people, about how to collaborate to show value-added stuff. Now, I had the opportunity to go to an ALMA meeting in Calgary the one day and talk about value-added and how to sell. I think that's where we're at in our industry. We've got to figure out how to make our product top-end to have our maximum return on it. In saying that, the Barley Commission has identified how we have to try to do that, how we've got to think forward and look outside the box. I know they've talked to the hon. minister of agriculture. I know he was very receptive to that, and I think that's what we need to do.

The one member, Mr. Logan, who's on it, whom I've known, as I said, since I started on council in 1995 with him, has always been very innovative and a forward thinker and a very strong supporter of the party across the floor, which is great. I think he's been doing it for the right reasons. He's supportive of all parties for agriculture. In saying that, one of his things is rural development. I guess I tie it all back around to the rural development side of it. If we have strong rural communities, we're going to have a stronger Alberta because then everybody isn't always focused on the larger urban areas; they've spread out.

That goes back to the infrastructure. We're spending on schools and roads and stuff. I mean, you've got to have a vibrant infrastructure program, or you're not going to have people out in those areas. It's the chicken and the egg. I understand the struggles this government has in trying to balance on how to finance all these items. But, you know, to go out and spend $3 million or $4 million on a school in a smaller community such as Arrowwood or Milo or you can go to the south end of my riding, where, for instance, Vauxhall just did a great job there on redoing their school: they thought forward. They put some time and effort into it. They actually did a needs assessment of whether it was better to rebuild the school or whether it was better to take a wrecking ball in and start fresh. I think those are the things that are going to keep Alberta going. If you keep strong rural towns going, you have young families move back.

In this day and age with technology you can sit and watch your farm grow on your computer and see what's going on. You have the technology to sit and see with variable rate irrigation systems, for instance, what you can gain back on that. You can't use that kind of infrastructure on your farm if you're putting in power lines that impede the progress of that. People wonder why they are going in. Again, the government is going in the right direction and has gone in the right direction on this with Bill 8 because they said: okay; we need a needs assessment on this.

I think that's what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is talking about in his amendment. The needs assessment for that and how to make sure that the wording is correct on that but also to identify for the ones that have been out there before that haven't actually started yet, as far as flipping sod and putting concrete in the ground to get the towers up: do we actually need them? My constituents are fine if there's a need for them, but if there isn't a need for them, it's a pretty hard sell as an MLA to tell them that.

I mean, it was just as hard of a sell telling them about the Little Bow continuing care centre closing, and I had numerous conversations with the Minister of Health about that. I'm a pretty level-headed person. If you can show me both sides of the coin, I'm more than happy to tell my constituents how that stuff works. It's the same with these power lines and the needs assessments of them. If I don't have both sides, I can't make a good valid decision on it of how to represent my constituents.

Unfortunately, right now all we hear on our side – and the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is a very strong advocate, in case anybody in here hasn't noticed that, about power and needs assessments and stuff. You've got to tip your hat to the man. I mean, he has a cause, and he believes in it. I know that some people are not always sure they want to hear about it for 10 or 15 hours straight, but that's what the man's job is. He's here to share his knowledge.

I think we've got to sit and talk about it. There have been members from that side of the floor that have sat and listened to him at a forum and have talked to another lawyer, Mr. Wilson, about it and actually listened to it. The predecessor from Cardston-Taber-Warner sat at a meeting as a past MLA and he actually said: you know, if I would have sat and listened to some of this years ago, it would have given me a better background on what was going on.

It's hard. I mean, everybody is spread thin here. I'm just a rookie. I've only been here six months, and I definitely tip my hat to everybody that's been here longer. It's a very challenging job, and I think we're all here . . .

The Acting Chair: On the amendment.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. I'm good. I'm working on it. Thank you for that, though, greatly. Two thumbs back up at you, Chair.

I think it's a challenging job, but I think, in saying that, it ties into the needs assessment. When we strike out some stuff, section 3 of Bill 8, under the amendment that was brought forward by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – and I hope that appeases the chair for a little while, adding that to it. I think if we look at all the angles, it's easy to sell this back to our constituents.

I'm not a snake oil salesman. I'm not trying to pound anything down anybody's throat they don't want. They need to sit and figure out if this is needed.

I can say that this bill concludes what we need for needs assessment, but we've missed a huge gap in here of about four or five years where we haven't been having those. I think that's where we see this large uprising of people that want to see some facts and some numbers. I mean, past members of your party, of the government, once they've seen some of these facts, can make a balanced decision. Everybody is allowed to sit and decide whether the information was valid or not valid. That's everybody's human right. That's why we're here, to be decision-makers. To sit back and just close your eyes and your ears to it – I'm not against the closing of the eyes of whoever has been here all night; again, I commend for that. Seriously, sit back and think about that.

I commend the Minister of Municipal Affairs for his commitment to be here all night and, you know, Agriculture and Rural Development and everybody else in here. I think we're here for the right reasons. I think people are here to show that they are here to listen and try to look at the information because nobody wants to go in blind. Nobody wants to go in with just one side of the information.

In my riding especially, as I say, we've got power lines that didn't have needs assessments. As an agricultural producer it's not right for those people who have invested that much time and energy into their farms, to show the info that they've put into it and the backbone and the hours and the sweat, I mean, and a lot of risk.

We talk of debt financing in here. It's always an interesting conversation. I don't think there are too many farmers out there that just write a cheque for everything they do. There's a lot of long-term borrowing to it. And at low interest rates I think that's when people invest and move forward, and it causes some interesting conversations on debt financing.

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

As a public figure I've been on county council for 16 years, and when I was on council I always said: "Would you do that with your own money? Would you do that on your own farm?" I've had some interesting debates with people across the floor and some other people in my constituency, and they ask the question about debt financing. They say, "Well, at cheap interest rates, would you do that on your own farm?" and it puts me in a tough position because . . . [Mr. Donovan's speaking time expired] I was just going to lead into a real deep conversation there.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. [interjections] The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View has the floor.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was very curious to hear the end of that. I would very much at some point like to hear it.

Mr. Chair, it's an honour for me to rise and speak to Bill 8, the amendment that we're discussing, which is effectively repealing Bill 50. Interesting to see democracy in action, too, as we discuss it. I guess to those of you who have been here all night: I hope it's effective in the long run. I mean, I guess that's the purpose although one could question how effective it is at this hour.

Let's go back to the amendment. Mr. Anglin moved that Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, be amended by striking out section 3 and substituting the following:

3. Section 41.1 is repealed and the following is substituted:

41.1(1) A transmission facility designated as critical transmission infrastructure under section 41.1 of this Act as it read immediately prior to the coming into force of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, shall be reviewed by the Commission which shall consider whether the facility for which approval is sought is and will be required to meet the present and future public convenience and need.

I think I'll probably come back to it a little bit more because I've got 20 minutes, but we'll leave it there for now.

On discussing this amendment, particularly where this bill is concerned, it strikes me that the government went around this province and spoke to Albertans and listened to landowners. I believe that the consensus generally on bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 was to repeal the bills. That is, effectively, what we're doing today. I guess Bill 8 is a repeal of Bill 50. That is a good thing. But it's like the government doesn't have a rear-view mirror. It can't see that what has already been approved is wrong, which is what this amendment, I think, tries to correct. It does need an assessment, and it does need a cost-benefit for Albertans.

Now, I know that we're all here to represent our constituents, and I know that we all want to do the best job that we can. This line is coming right through Chestermere-Rocky View. I do have a file back at the office. Maybe if these all-nighters continue, I'll have to bring it in and read a few of the e-mails and submit them. I would just say that my inbox has been filled over the last six months and even during the campaign by people questioning the lines justifiably and saying: how can we move these through my property if we haven't proven that they are needed and they're not good value for Albertans?

They do have, you know, very legitimate points when they ask those questions, and as their MLA I found it quite frustrating that I have to say to them, "Well, we do have Bill 8 coming through, which will repeal Bill 50, which means the government will never do that again." They say: "Yeah, but the lines are coming right through my property. I don't care if you never do it again. I don't want you to do it right now." I'm not able to give them the answer that they need. All I'm able to say to them is that we'll do, I guess, exactly what we're doing right now, and that is standing up and having a discussion about it in the early morning hours.

It seems easy for me and others that actually did get some rest last night. I can see how tempers get short and patience becomes thin when you have no sleep. You know, sleep deprivation is actually a form of torture in some places, so I applaud all of you that stayed up all night long. I'm sure that we'll all have our chances, including myself, to do it again the way things are going.

Sixteen billion dollars is an awful lot of money to spend. I guess it's nearly 50 per cent, as somebody has pointed out, of what our annual budget would be, our annual expenditures. I think it seems reasonable that if you're going to spend that kind of money, you would want to qualify that it makes sense to do so. That is the point that we continue to come back to. Is there a proper needs assessment done? Is there value for our money? Is there a regulatory approval process? The answers to all of these are no, which is a big problem. You'll understand why constituents in many ridings are questioning why it's going through.

The repealing of the bill is good, but if we just come back to the point of the whole thing for all the people that debate power, like the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, like the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Banff-Cochrane stood up, and I'm thrilled that members on both sides do. I guess the point I would come back to is: why repeal the bill if it made any sense? We're repealing it because it didn't. Effectively, what we're saying is: we'll never do it again, but we're going to do it this time. That's the problem. Just take all the power debate aside. I know there's a huge debate, and since I have 20 minutes, I'll get into that at some point, too, but that's the one that people are stuck on. That's the one that Albertans don't understand. If we've said that it doesn't make sense, if we've said that it was wrong, how can we look at people and say that we're going to do it anyway? Effectively, we've said: "We'll never do it again. We recognize that we're making a big mistake. We're sorry, but please forgive us this time while we push it through."

I mean, again, it's like my colleague from Airdrie spoke to when the bill was first introduced. It's sort of like your child stealing something from a store and you saying to them: "You can't steal, son. That's illegal. It's breaking the law. That's not how we operate." And then your son says: "Yeah, but you know what? If I could just keep this, I'll never do it again." Well, it's a terrible message, and that's how Albertans are looking at it. It's not how parents operate, and it certainly shouldn't be how government operates. If government wants to put it all to rest, all that has to happen is an independent needs assessment to show two things, that we need the power that they say we need and that we're getting value for our buck. Neither one of those things has taken place, so that is a big problem.

The point about the supposedly independent committee that looked at some of the information as to whether this was needed: I believe it was the Critical Transmission Review Committee, a four-person committee. Well, one of the people on that committee is the former VP of the government party. How could you ever look at that as independent? Again, I just say with great respect that the people look at that and say: even if your intention was true, if your intention was honourable, you could never make that sale because there's bias. It's clear.

Take any example you want. If you want to investigate something and you assign one of your own to investigate it, it's clearly biased. Albertans see that and understand that. They certainly do in Chestermere-Rocky View and, I think, in many other ridings as well. Maybe it is good that these things are discussed for as long as they are because I think it forces people to look at an amendment like the member is trying to pass. Is it going to pass? Probably not.

Mr. Horner: Call the vote.

Mr. McAllister: You'd like that. I know you would, hon. Minister of Finance. Well, we will at some point, I think.

But people want to pay attention when these things go on all night. I have a sneaky idea as to how the media operates. They'll be watching, saying: what are our tax dollars giving us? Then they'll look at some of these issues a little closer because someone in the newsroom will say: what was that amendment from the hon. member? Well, they won't call him an hon. member. They'll say: what was the amendment from the guy from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre? Then they'll read. They'll read, for instance, this section:

(2) In determining present and future public convenience and need under subsection (1), the Commission shall consider:

(a) the benefit that may accrue to Albertans as a result of the new critical transmission infrastructure.

Then some reporter will cross his eyes and say: "Oh, my gosh, I've got to look into this today, and this is very complicated. How am I going to do it?" Then they'll start to make a few phone calls. One side will say, "Well, we need power; the lights are going to go out," and the other side will say: "Well, I don't think we do need power. The lights aren't going to go out." Then they're forced to find out from an independent expert whether or not it's true.

Mr. Donovan: Or an accountant.

Mr. McAllister: Or an accountant. A shot across the bow there, I think. I do appreciate that whatever that member does, he seems to do it with a smile, so don't mock too heavily. We do enjoy that, at least. I would also mention that I think he's the best greeter during introductions of anybody in this House. Without question that is sensational.

Another point to this amendment: whether the need of Albertans for critical transmission infrastructure can be met by the application of nonwire solutions or in any less expensive but equally satisfactory way such as upgrading an existing line, building electrical generators closer to the load, and programs to reduce the load. Well, I don't claim to be a power expert. I don't think most of us do, Mr. Chair. But I do think it's a fair question to ask: what would be the most efficient way to build power should we need it?

What I've heard from people is that there are a lot better ways that we might do it, that we might look at alternate ways besides what's being proposed, these billions of dollars in projects. But that's part of the independent needs assessment that we did not do, and that is clearly wrong. The amendment calls for this bill to make sure that we are doing a proper needs assessment, to make sure before we build. [interjection] It's okay. I understand.

I also understand where this amendment calls for accountability. We pay for the lines, the companies own them, and they are guaranteed a 9 per cent rate of return. This is an interesting one. I wonder how it would be explained to your constituents, those that are invested in the issue. If you said to a farmer, for instance: "Tell you what. Why don't you go build some fences? We're going to pay for all of the posts, the wire, the wire stretcher, staples, nails, whatever it is you use. We're going to pay for all of that for you, top-of-the-line equipment, too. The very, very best, sir, whatever you need. We'll pay you for them. The more you build, the more we'll pay you. And we'll guarantee you a giant rate of return, that you can't get anywhere in today's economic world, of 9 per cent or better." Now, I often knock the farmer from Little Bow in good fun, but I think it's safe to say that if somebody said that to him, he'd be out with a fencing maul pounding in posts the next day just about everywhere he could.

You know, that's what we've done, effectively, and it's not right. We're going to pay for that eventually. We are going to pay for it because the company is going to need to recoup all of that money since they're making the money from it. It comes back to the people that put us in these chairs, and those are the ratepayers, whom we should be here representing.

If big business is paying, as the Member for Little Bow said, $10,000 or $12,000 a month . . .

Mr. Donovan: Just in transmission.

Mr. McAllister: . . . just in transmission costs, imagine if that doubles. This is important regardless, you know, of your take on the issue and where you're going to vote and everything else. Just give me these two minutes. If your bill doubles at home on the transmission cost, that's not a very big deal perhaps to some of us. I'll argue that it is for some in a second. You can live with that potentially. But if you're paying $12,000, $13,000, $14,000 a month on this kind of cost and it doubles, what you're saying to business is: go and operate elsewhere. I think that's what a lot of the big businesses are saying: you're potentially driving us out of the market.

This amendment is trying to prevent that, Mr. Chair. If their power bills are doubling just on transmission costs and they're running an efficient business and they're trying to make a company work, clearly, any business with effective managers and anybody that's interested in the bottom line is going to look to alternatives. And those alternatives may be out of the province.

You look at what's going on in Saskatchewan. They're doing a lot of things right there now. I mean, they've got the Riders: that's not right.

Mr. Denis: Go Stamps.

Mr. McAllister: The hon. Justice minister and I agree wholeheartedly on that point. Go, Stamps, go on the weekend.

I'll get back to the amendment, Mr. Chair. I'll get back. I promise. Like most of you, I'm just thrilled for Kevin Glenn. He deserves a shot for sure.

Saskatchewan is doing a lot of things right, Mr. Chair. Mr. Chair? I thought maybe you were doing your Clint Eastwood impression there for a second. They're attracting business.

Darn it, we're all proud of this province we live in. It's the greatest province in this country. I've been blessed to live in six of them and to move around the country. You know all the wonderful things we could say about Canada, and I know we all would, but we want people here. The Alberta advantage exists because we do things right, and I'm fearful that what we're saying to big business is: move a little bit east to operate, and you can save some money. I hear that from people all the time in industry and in big business.

On the point of your personal bill going up, I made this point, I think, yesterday or the day before or the day before that or whenever it was that we talked about this last. You know, if you're living on the edge financially and you're not making $156,000, which was $145,000, if you're not making that and your family is struggling and you don't have, you know, the luxury of an 8 per cent hike in your pay, it's tough to make ends meet. So what the amendment is calling for is accountability so that seniors that are struggling to pay their bills don't wind up in a situation where they can't pay them, and those that are on the edge of their financial survival are still enjoying the Alberta advantage.

We're concerned, which is why we've put this amendment forward. We're concerned that we're going to get to a point where our bills go up substantially. If we do get to that point, we're going to have a big problem in Alberta, and so are you, and I know that you as a government do not want that. I know you don't like it when the public is mad at you, and they will be mad at you when this happens, and justifiably so. Then we will say, you know: we were concerned about it and warned you about it. You've been here all night. It must be tough to take. I look at the minister saying: really? We want Albertans to be able to make ends meet, and our concern is that this will not.

When the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre puts this amendment forward, he's got so many points, and it's so technical to most of us that sometimes the message gets lost in all that he's delivering. But to those that really understand, it doesn't. You know, they understand what it is that he's saying.

I go back to some of the things that came out, you know, in the election campaign when Bill 50 was being discussed in town halls, in community centres, in gymnasiums. I go back to those discussions, Mr. Chair. One of the things that was raised . . . [Mr. McAllister's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise as well to speak in support of this amendment, but I'd also like to thank everybody for working hard through the night. I think it's a testimony to why we all put our names forward on April 23, and that's very important. I also want to thank all of the Legislature staff for supporting this process as well, and I want to say thanks for the teamwork that's going on. You see the rotation of those that sat through the night being replaced by those who are coming in this morning. I think that speaks loudly that this is a team effort, and it's a good effort. So welcome.

On this amendment I might bring a different aspect because Medicine Hat is in a bit of a different situation within the province. We do have our own utility. We have our own natural gas fields. We produce our own power. We transmit our own power within the city. You know, we generate revenue from that, and it's a bit different, so I'm going to try and tie that back into the amendment here.

I think it's important that you read through this:

A transmission facility designated as critical transmission infrastructure under section 41.1 of this Act as it read immediately prior to the coming into force of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, shall be reviewed by the Commission . . .

I think that's very, very important.

. . . which shall consider whether the facility for which approval is sought is and will be required to meet the present and future public convenience and need.

So there's quite a bit in there if you break that down. I like the fact that it's now going to be reviewed by a commission, which is very important. I would assume the commission is going to be staffed by experts. I think that's key there. The experts should be looking at information that is relevant and that is current, not something that's based on reports that were done in 2003, which were great at the time, or reports that were updated in 2007 or 2009. It's all great groundwork, but I think the fact of the matter is that times are changing so fast here.

Electricity is also one of those issues that changes very, very quickly. Technology is part of electricity. Innovation is part of electricity. That's what makes all the information in the past relevant to the past and a good groundwork, but it also should be used to create a new baseline for where we're at today and where the experts see us going, you know, in the near-term future and down the road. That is very, very important, that we have those experts involved to gather that information, to go out and seek and consult stakeholders and come up with a new presentation that can be presented and debated. Hopefully, cost-effective decisions can be made upon those discussions.

Determining the present and future public convenience and need, again, is key. What I'll tie it back to is that because Medicine Hat is a power producer for its local residents, we are unique. We do control the transmission to our residents as well as industry. In doing so, we help to keep these transmission costs very, very low. When you look at pricing models throughout the province on electricity itself, the city will actually find an average. They'll go out and check all the different numbers that are being thrown around by electricity producers, and they'll actually pick an average. That's what they sell to their consumer, their residential consumer. Their industrial consumers will have a price. Where they get the lowest cost benefit . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, if you could just keep the side conversations down, please, while the Member for Medicine Hat has the floor, we'd appreciate it. Thank you very much.

Mr. Pedersen: So what they do is take an average of the provincial electricity costs within Alberta, and that's what they charge the residential customers of the city. The industrial customers also get charged a different rate, where they control the overall cost. What gives Medicine Hat an advantage in power and electricity overall is that we have control of our transmission costs. When you put all those numbers together at the end of the day, the overall bill to a residential customer or to a commercial customer is one of the lowest in the province. I think that's key. That is the way they're able to control the transmission costs. One of the things that we're talking about here is that transmission costs are going to go up. By how much? There are different numbers being thrown around, you know, but that's a given. That's one of the things we know is going to go up.

The fact that Medicine Hat does this whole process differently gives us a bit of an advantage. Medicine Hat is in a position where we're in the southeast corner of the province, and we are dependent upon transmission lines as well because we want to be able to be connected to the system in case we have a catastrophic failure so that we maybe have to import electricity. We're also connected to the grid so that we can actually export power in times of need. So the city is able to actually make a nice profit any time they sell outside of the city. We sell much more than we actually import because our capacity built into our cogen system exceeds the amount of electricity that we need. They always have backup systems in place that they can turn on in times of high power demand peak, which gives us very, very good service, and it prevents anybody from having the lights go out, which is what some people propose might happen, which is what we don't want to have happen.

In saying that, because the city of Medicine Hat has natural gas fields, they also control their feedstock, which is beneficial to the residents of Medicine Hat, but they're also looking at alternatives in providing electricity. I think that's tying back into this determining "the present and future public convenience and need." We do that on a local level as well.

There is a current wind power program that's being discussed. They're looking at putting up three turbines within the Box Springs Business Park area. That's to help bring in some green energy and to offset some of the carbon emissions that the city is trying to take advantage of. It's an environmental solution. It's pointing towards current needs as well as future needs. They've done some negotiations with their partner to guarantee some long-term pricing rates. At the end of the day they've done this so that it is a cost-effective solution. They don't just want to go ahead for the sake of environmental reasons at the sake of the consumer. It has to have this balancing effect of money in, cost-effectiveness coming back, and creating efficiencies using the carbon offset credits that they would actually get for that as well. So they're looking ahead.

As mentioned, a lot of these projects don't happen overnight. It takes time. You know, you have to go through approvals, apply, make sure that you meet all the regulations, terms, and conditions. They spend a lot of time doing that. The end game is to secure energy from an alternative source that's environmentally friendly.

Wind power on its own also has some issues. I mean, you talk to environmental individuals, and there are different studies done around the low-frequency hum that comes from wind turbines. There are many studies happening in Europe that are actually pushing back on a lot of the countries in Europe that have relied heavily on wind energy for many, many years. They're finding out that there is some negative impact in going to wind energy even though it was implied that it is an environmental option to provide power and electricity.

Another thing about wind energy that we have to be conscientious of is the impact on birds and certain wildlife. I think that anyone who has studied it or who has looked at it or who has been impacted by maybe having a wind turbine placed on their property or near their property knows that they are a massive structure. They would certainly make a mess of any bird that would run into any of the blades. It's been a huge impact on a lot of the flying species, whether it's birds, bats. It's a study that's ongoing, and I think that's going to lead more into, you know, what the actual benefit is on the environmental side and the ecological side.

Wind power is one of the options. One of the things I look back on is that coming from Saskatchewan, near the Gull Lake area there's a huge wind farm there. It's one of the most efficient wind farms in Canada. I believe it's running at about the low to high 40 per cent efficiency, which for a wind farm is very, very high. It's very effective. But it also tells you that if it's only running at about 40 to 45 per cent efficiency. It's offline anywhere from 60 to 55 per cent of the time, so you don't always have constant energy flow from wind turbines. On the negative side I think that's one of the issues that you have to look at. You always have to have more of the conventional power generation sources available to you.

Wind farms do supply a nice amount of power, but it's not constant. It also has issues with fluctuations in the amount of electricity it produces at one time, so you have issues with your transformers and your substations, that always like to run more on a constant flow of electricity. With that being, you know, one of the great things about Gull Lake, it was identified that it was a great area to set up a wind farm. That was a needs assessment and location identification because you need the wind. Coming from Gull Lake, I know that it always seems like there's an incredible amount of wind. Now that I live in Medicine Hat, we seem to get all the wind that the Lethbridge folks don't want to use down on their wind farms.

It's a nice, constant flow of energy, but it is not consistent, so when you look at wind farms, you have to look at where you would put these wind farms and what would make them relevant to the area. You need the constant flow of the wind, which is your source for turning the turbine. That's very important. You also need your infrastructure because you're going to need power lines to carry that electricity. The problem with wind is that it doesn't just happen everywhere or anywhere. You have to pick the places where wind is prevalent and wind is constant and wind is steady. You don't have the choice of putting a wind farm close to where the power is required. I guess that impacts a lot of the larger cities and the industrial areas because those are the areas that require the power, but if you don't have wind, you can't put up a wind turbine farm.

Once you establish where you want to put these and it's determined that the needs assessment has been met, now you have to actually put in your infrastructure, which is your power lines. That's very important. You're connecting the power generation to where you want to get this power. That's the tie-in there. Again, the problem is that you have to take those lines and route them through somebody's property. You have to route them down some right of way. You have to impede somebody just for the sake of having a distant power generation source just so that the people who need the power can actually access that power.

The city of Medicine Hat has the Box Springs wind farm, which is approved and moving ahead. There are three turbines that they're going to be working with. I believe there are two projects either in the works or partially approved. I'm not sure if I got the names right, but I was looking on the Internet, and there's Wild Rose 1 and Wild Rose 2. But there are also the ones closer to the Cypress Hills. I might not have the names exactly correct. I know that there's more and more development going on with wind power generation.

So that is one of those sources that the fine Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre identified. In some of the earlier studies wind power was not as heavily considered as it is now. As we move forward, I think you're going to see wind have a larger play on the power generation side, not only on the needs side but on the environmental side.

The other interesting thing about the city of Medicine Hat is that we are one of the sunniest cities in Canada, so that also gives us the opportunity to look at creating energy through solar. So, again, when you're talking about determining present and future needs, I think we've identified the fact that our needs can be met, possibly, by some type of solar energy power generation. From what I understand, we're embarking on a program that is cutting edge. It's the first time it's happened this far north because the issue with solar energy is that, again, you need to have a constant amount of the power source, which is, obviously, the sun, but it's how direct the light is, as well.

So the further north you go, you lose some of that impact of having some of these direct light waves hit you. When you get farther into the south like in the U.S. and Mexico, where they have huge solar arrays set up in the desert, they're closer to the equator, of course, so the rays of the sun are much more direct, more intense, so their efficiency is much higher. That's been one of the problems in trying to develop solar power to augment or replace traditional forms of generating power. With the unique situation that Medicine Hat is in, we have that ability, being one of the sunniest cities in Canada. We are embarking upon that, and it'll be interesting to see how this plays out because by generating electricity from solar, this could have huge potential right across the southern part of Canada. We're a testing ground.

That gets back to the idea of why it's so important to get back to what is relevant today. What is the information today? What are technology and ingenuity saying today? What is relevant today? They're telling us that what was current in 2003 and 2007 and 2009 would not allow us to do this project in 2012. But because technology has moved, it's created a whole new baseline where we can actually put a project forward that was before deemed inefficient or, you know, you just couldn't do it.

So now we have wind power. We have solar power. And within Medicine Hat it's very convenient because we have our internal distribution transmission system. We're able to generate this electricity close to us and distribute it to the people, either residential or to the industry that is looking for secure forms of energy, which is primarily electricity, to run their businesses.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any others? I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo on amendment A1.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's really a privilege to be in here this morning speaking about Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, and the various ramifications and viewpoints that are out there on the future of our Alberta electricity system. There is no doubt that the way we get power, the way we move power around this province, the way that we harness various forms of energy in the coming decades if not the next hundred years is an extreme challenge that has to be met by the government of the day. This act is a very important act that sets the stage for the way that we will be doing things going forward.

I think I would be remiss if we didn't backtrack a little bit and talk about a few of the things that got us to the need for the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. It was a series of bills that were brought in – I believe they were bills 19, 36, and 50 – with a view to doing things in a non public disclosure manner, didn't lead to openness and transparency, and really tried to do things in an un-Albertan fashion. As a result, we saw a lot of blowback, a lot of people who were concerned about what their voice was as Alberta citizens in having their say on what an electricity system will look like. No doubt that was an impetus for much of the concern here in this Legislature this morning and last night, and that continues on. I think much of what we're speaking about today is a reaction to that series of bills.

Back to the fact that this is no doubt going to be one of the critical issues facing Alberta over the course of the next 50 years, we look no further than many of the challenges that are out there. We have an increasing population here in Alberta. We are going to add some 1.5 million people to our population over the course of the next 20 to 25 years. Of course, our system for our electricity needs has largely been based on coal-fired power plants, which, obviously, have a large environmental footprint associated with them. They will be decommissioned over the course of the next 50 years.

Of course, we need to find various ways to have our citizens connected to a grid, connected to energy to allow them to not only carry out their daily occupational endeavours but, frankly, to live in a modern world. We are going to have to look at things like hydro, we're going to have to look at things like solar, and we're going to have to look at things like wind development and ensure that our electrical grid is able to handle all of those forms in a flexible and diverse manner that to date has not needed to be looked at here in Alberta largely because of our ability to provide electricity through coal and other means that have traditionally served this province very well; hence, the need for a very robust transmission system, a very far-reaching transmission system that will allow Albertans of not only today but tomorrow to successfully take part in accessing electricity and, hopefully, at a reasonable, fair price that recognizes some sort of cost structure of what the electricity is actually produced at. That is no easy task, Mr. Chair.

In my view some of the amendments that are before us are trying to lend some clarity and some precision to what the people serving in this capacity will look at to determine what is critical transmission infrastructure. Even the term "critical transmission infrastructure" is one worth thinking about. You know, critical transmission infrastructure defines that we absolutely need it. We need it today, we need it tomorrow, and the like. I'm of the view that much infrastructure, whether it's critical or not, may be in the best interests to actually do. Sometimes doing things in a proactive fashion is actually a good thing, and actually moving to a system that is allowed to look at future need is, in my view, a good change to the legislation from where it was in 2000 and 2001, before we went into the series of bills 19, 36, and 50, which weren't able at that time to contemplate future need.

Just going back, I don't think there would have been a need for bills 19, 36, and 50 if that future-need component had been in the legislation prior to that series of bills. Really, if this government would have been looking down the path as to what was best able to achieve the hopes, dreams, and future of this province, it simply would have recognized that in early 2000 and said, "What is the best way to put together an electricity system?" and would have said, "Well, my goodness, it's by looking at future need" and incorporated that into the various statutes and legislation instead of ramming through a series of bills that tried to hide what, in fact, the government and other agencies were trying to do with our transmission system.

This amendment is trying to clarify some of those things. I look at it. It looks at:

- (a) the benefit that may accrue to Albertans as a result of the new critical transmission infrastructure;
- (b) whether the need of Albertans for critical transmission infrastructure can be met by the application of non-wire solutions or, in any less expensive but equally satisfactory way, such as upgrading an existing line, building electrical generators closer to the load and programs to reduce the load.

That is a noble idea, actually. If you look at the current mix of what is contributing to our energy grid, we do have a large resource of natural gas that can be converted to supply electricity to homes. Right now natural gas is at $2 and some-odd cents mcf, which is a historically low price. Who knows how long it's going to be there, Mr. Chair, and I grant that. We have to have a grid that is able to adapt to price changes in both commodities as well as structure and the like, to adapt to the various price points along the way. That's one of those things that I think this amendment is trying to accomplish, ensuring that the people who are interpreting this act are looking at all forms of what can go in to create energy at a reasonable cost and in an environmentally friendly way.

- (c) whether the cost to Albertans of the new critical transmission infrastructure outweighs the public's social economic interest and benefit.

That's always one of those things we have to balance, our social and economic interests, whether or not those two things are in balance. A term that you could have used there was whether it's in the public's interest to go forward on this one project or not. We have to weigh these things not only for this generation but to look forward to the next and see whether those things balance out.

We're looking at:

- (d) reasonable and economic operational alternatives to minimize system constraints, giving consideration to technical efficiencies, reliability and capital costs.

Now, one would assume that an organization looking at this would already do that. That would be part of their mandate and part of their abilities as a body. Nevertheless, incorporating it into an act doesn't really cause me much concern in that having this clarified in legislation leads to more certainty. It allows for people to understand what is happening. Oftentimes the average Albertan or a person seeking information will go online. They'll seek out the Electric Utilities Amendment Act. They will go to it, access it online. You can go get it, and you can look at it, but then you have to do the tricky thing, if you really want to get into the detail, of going to the regulations. Oftentimes rules and the way the system works are buried in regulations.

I'm of the view – and I think many people are coming to that conclusion – that acts must be written with more certainty to allow people to know their legal obligations or social obligations or economic obligations and what is truly in the public interest. That should be laid out clearly in an act and not be left to as much interpretation as I see in some of the legislation that is currently being written in this province. We should try, when the opportunity presents itself, to make our acts as clear as possible.

I think that would help not only citizens but Legislatures alike. Oftentimes in going to the act, you think you get a pretty good idea of what's going on, but the devil is in the detail, Mr. Chair.

Oftentimes our regulations can be much more stringent, much more strident, much more clear as to what the actual day-to-day workings of an act are than the actual act. That causes many people concern.

Sometimes our acts read like insurance policies. The overarching act lays out the principles like many insurance documents. You're covered for fire. You're covered for hail. You're covered for water damage. You're covered for all sorts of things. Then on the final page of the insurance document you go into a section on disclaimers or things that will make your policy null and void. In that section – and it's often in smaller print – they go through a long litany of things that will make your insurance invalid. Oftentimes these are onerous. These are often minor things that the person buying the insurance is either not aware of, not made aware of, or that are not highlighted to them at the time of purchasing.

For instance, I just recently went through my insurance policy, and it says that if I leave my condominium for more than I think it's three days in a row, my insurance is null and void. [interjection] I don't know. Give me some leeway here. The hon. House leader has pointed out that I may not be exactly correct on that thing, and I may not.

Mr. Griffiths: Don't let the facts get in the way of a good argument.

Mr. Hehr: You are right. You shouldn't let the facts get in the way of a good argument, and please let me continue with that.

Nevertheless, some insurance policies – and mine is one like that – have some differences as to when I'm protected under my homeowners' insurance policy that either I wasn't aware of, didn't check into, or where I was under the guise that I was protected. Although my facts may not be right on point, the general message is. I'll stick by that story, at least for the time being, and I'll stay by the point that our acts should be written with as much clarity and as much direction to the general public as we can.

I think this amendment goes some measure to try to clarify that not only for the people who are going to be interpreting this act, working on our day-to-day electricity needs, but allowing for those who are looking for how this act will affect them – how it will affect them as consumers, as ratepayers, as environmental stewards, and the like – going forward.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chair, and I look forward to other members discussing this amendment as well.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. After a wonderful night's rest, a shower, and a shave I'm returning to the battlefield, reporting for duty.

Mr. Donovan: Combed his hair.

Mr. Bikman: Combed my hair. I'm ready to re-engage the enemy.

I noticed a lot of cheering as members opposite, fresh faces, showed up for duty this morning. Some of it's because we were just so happy to see you, I'm sure, but I suspect that those who are now allowed to leave are being awarded their Purple Hearts for being wounded in action here last night. [interjections] Not really? Oh, okay.

I want to thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of this amendment, and I want to thank the party in office for giving us this opportunity, this forum, if you will, to allow us to continue to speak both here in this House and, of course, to the larger population, that's engaged in reading the reports about the events transpiring here and the tactics and methods being used to extend debate and to try to wear down the loyal opposition in an attempt to pass legislation that isn't complete. It's good as far as it goes, I submit and I'm prepared to admit, but it's inadequate. The duty of your loyal opposition, of course, is to spot those little weaknesses and humbly provide some solutions to them.

When we have someone as knowledgeable and capable and as well read, a true student of the issue that Bill 8 addresses and purports to fix, then I think it's incumbent upon all of us to pay attention to him. I'm sure that all of you have enjoyed your evening and the opportunities you've had several times over the past 12 hours perhaps of listening to my neighbour address the issues in his humble attempt to enlighten all of us. I certainly learn from him every time I hear him speak. I appreciate his commitment to this cause and his commitment to the genuine needs, when it comes to electrical transmission, of all Albertans.

Nobody wants to see their power rates rise. Maybe the allegation that rates may go up 200 or 300 per cent might be like scare tactics that we use as parents sometimes on our children: brush your teeth, or they're going to fall out. Well, they don't fall out fast enough, and that really doesn't motivate them, so we try to motivate through love and through persuasion and explaining that you'll have fresher breath, which means the members of the opposite gender will find you more attractive perhaps or that your friends won't shy away from you. Nevertheless, the truth is that once in a while teeth do fall out, and once in a while power rates do increase. Your bill, the transmission part of that bill, will go up. We know it's going to happen. It's bound to happen.

The system that's produced the situation that we're in has prompted the government, the party in office. Thank you for bringing Bill 8 forward, because it was necessary. It's kind of like shutting the gate on the corral after the horse has bolted. It's like shutting the gate on profligacy and irrelevance after these events have transpired, but thank you nonetheless. The gesture is, I think, more than a gesture and could of course be made far more effective if it included the ability to rectify some of the wrongs that have been approved and planned but not yet implemented, which we hope will happen.

Our amendment reads that section 44.1 is repealed and the following is substituted:

41.1(1) A transmission facility designated as critical transmission infrastructure under section 41.1 of this Act as it read immediately prior to the coming into force of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, shall be reviewed by the Commission which shall consider whether the facility for which approval is sought is and will be required to meet the present and future public convenience and need.

Much has been made, by many eloquent speakers over the weeks that we've been examining this bill and looking at it, of the fact that it's just prudent to plan ahead. We all ought to plan ahead. We all ought to be prepared for the future, although I submit, as has been mentioned before, that you can plan too far ahead and you can build in anticipation of those plans too far ahead. That's certainly what we're seeing here.

There is a whole host of people that agree, including those who have built significant businesses, commercial and industrial, in our fine province and who in an attempt to mitigate the impact of the presumptuousness of cabinet in ramming through the transmission lines approved by Bill 50 are doing, as prudent businessmen would do, what they can to relieve the impact and avoid the more significant and onerous parts of the impact that will come to the rest of us. They're finding ways to cogenerate and perhaps even pump back into the system power that will even further reduce their costs. But not all will be able to. We know that significant businesses that might be planning to come to Alberta will shy away from our province because we do have among the highest electrical bills in the country. This is a discouragement and a disincentive.

We're not doing our duty if we don't go back and try and rectify some of those errors of the past. It takes a great person, it takes a humble person to be able to admit: hey, with the best of intentions we nevertheless have made some mistakes. From whatever source the correction comes, wherever the feedback comes from, that allows us to course-correct on our path toward the nirvana of an industry-friendly, business-friendly environment in Alberta, a place that's not just a great place to live but a great place to raise children, a place where we can afford to live, where we're controlling our costs.

I think part of our responsibility as government goes beyond spending. I think it includes controlling our spending. We've submitted in this House and have suggested, quite frankly, that we don't need to go into debt as a province to continue to build infrastructure; we just need to control costs and sniff out waste and attack overheads and reduce those overheads. Billions and billions of dollars could be saved.

In preparation for a responsibility that I was recently given, I've been looking at some of the ways that postsecondary education can be provided more efficiently. I've been amazed at what's happening in other parts of the world and how low the cost of providing that education, a high-quality education, could be. That research has reminded me of the importance of accepting good wherever you can find it and saying thank you and implementing it wherever possible.

When I was growing up in this province, the city of Lethbridge, where I was born and raised, had its own power-generating station and owned its own power lines as many communities did. It gave them security of supply. It allowed them to control the costs of providing that energy. It provided jobs within our community. In my own company I can remember working with my dad when he would go to that plant to help with our heavy moving equipment, to take out generators and replace them with new or remove them to be repaired or do other things like that. I think the citizens were proud that they had that capacity. Well, in the interest of perhaps some short-term gain, selling that power plant seemed to appeal to the city council of the day, so they divested themselves of that with the promise that rates would stay the same or be even cheaper for a period of time. Well, of course, that doesn't last forever, and the reality hits.

When the provincial government steps in to try and make something better, it rarely happens. The three great lies that seem to be commonplace are "Hi. I'm from the government, and I'm here to help you," "Your cheque is in the mail," and "Of course, they'll still respect you in the morning."

We've been misled. We've been lied to. I think people are getting to the point where they're getting pretty darn mad. Part of that anger and frustration at not having a voice in decisions that are affecting them resulted in 55 per cent of the voting population in our province choosing a party other than the party that governs. Those people are entitled to representation, and I think it's incumbent upon the party in office to listen to all voices in the province. I don't think that an inadequate diagnosis allows you to prescribe and have that prescription be accepted with confidence.

It's like going to an optometrist because your vision is kind of blurry, and the optometrist takes a quick look at you. Gee, he's been an optometrist for over 40 years, and he says: "Gary, I know what you need. Here; these glasses have worked really well for me. Try them on. I think you'll like them." So I put on his glasses, and I can't see a thing. I say: "These are terrible. They don't work for me." He says: "Well, you've got a bad attitude. They work for me. You need to try harder."

Well, that's what the people of Alberta are saying to you, optometrists who've been in power for 40 years and have been practising your craft for 40 years. You think your view is right. You think your perspective is the only perspective worth considering. You make a show of travelling the province to see what landowners think about the landowner bills, but it's an exercise in public relations. I have to tell you that it was very well done. It was professionally presented. You made a show of listening. You didn't come to justify the mistakes you'd made. You said: we're here to listen. And everybody went away feeling that, oh, maybe at last we're going to redress some of the wrongs. Bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, the more onerous parts, will be modified. They'll be changed. They'll be tweaked.

You listened, but you didn't hear. You came back to the people of Alberta, this disenfranchised 55 per cent, and you said: "We were listening. We heard that you want a property rights ombudsman." You will be able to come to him and say: "My property is being confiscated. They're stepping onto my property without access to due process of law. They're taking advantage of my property. They're trampling on my rights." And this wonderful property rights advocate, another layer of bureaucracy, will say: "Oh, yeah. They are. I see that. Well, according to bills 19, 24, 36 and 50 they have the right to do that." And then his empathic reply: "I can see that you're hurting. Come and let me give you a hug." I attended some of those meetings. I didn't have somebody offer to give me a hug. I heard them say: scrap these bills and start fresh.

Some of the intent is good. We'll grant you that. There are some things that need to be polished and cleaned up, but for heaven's sake don't do this. You're trampling on historic rights. Hundreds of years of precedent in English civil law say that this is a disregard for my rights.

The amendment that's been proposed by my hon. friend is one that helps you do that. You have a great opportunity. You have an opportunity to rise from being politicians to being statesmen, to being people who have considered all sides of the argument and have acknowledged that there is a point: "Yeah, these glasses don't fit you. Your situation is different. Being mostly city dwellers we kind of missed that. Thanks for bringing it to our attention." That's, of course, what needs to happen.

Now, personally I've got my own little generator. It's an industrial-quality generator that sits behind my house in the event that the power does fail, not because we don't have enough transmission lines – let's get that straight – but because sometimes the wind blows lines down and sometimes heavy snowfall or lightning or other problems knock out a transformer so that we're without power for a while. A couple of winters ago in Stirling we were without power for three days. I sure didn't think we needed $16 billion of transmission lines to correct my power outage. The guys from the power company worked hard to get the lines fixed and get them restored. In the meantime I didn't have to watch television by candlelight. I could turn on my generator and have all the comforts of home.

If the prices rise as predicted, it may be cheaper for me to generate my own power because at the price of natural gas I could be able to do it and transmit it from my back shed to my house a hundred feet away a heck of a lot cheaper than it's going to cost me to pay the transmission portion of my own power bill. I suspect that others may discover this is possible, too. I think it will be industrial users, communities, cities who may decide that in order to keep their city competitive, they need to build a transmission line. Will they have to borrow to do it? Of course, they will. But they'll justify it by the return on investment that they'll get, a demonstrable reduction in their power bills.

I think that sometimes we allow certain voices within our society to gain more weight or more volume. We give them a loudspeaker. We give them a forum for their pet projects and their special-interest needs. I think sometimes in a genuine and legitimate desire to protect our environment, we allow those people who are environmental extremists to have more sway on us and to take more opinion because they get good press. But when we analyze some of their arguments, sometimes they don't hold water. Sometimes they aren't in the best interests of the public. They're not in the public interest.

Nevertheless, they've been granted a forum because people become afraid to criticize. It isn't PC – it isn't politically correct, or it isn't Progressive Conservative – to stifle these voices or to be seen to be stifling these voices when, in fact, it's a part of what you ought to be doing and is part of your responsibility when you have the privilege of governing. It's a privilege, incidentally, that is not granted by divine right but by the consent of the governed, in this case, again, less than 50 per cent of the governed, which gives you an opportunity to step forward and say: "We are the government for all the people. We do want to hear from those you've elected who have a different perspective because of what you've asked them to bring forward."

This environmental voice, which is an essential voice, nevertheless can be extreme. Extremism in the defence of any position is rarely justified. You may need to speak a little louder to get someone's attention, but when you've got it, you need to respect their right to weigh in on the topics and not be so dogmatically confident that only your opinion is right. I think that's a disease. I think some in this House have caught that disease whereas we humbly stand up to represent the wishes and the needs and the interests of the families, the interests of businesses, the agribusinesses, for example, and the interests of all industrial and commercial consumers. We stand up and speak on their behalf because we think that the true small "c" conservative voice needs to speak out on behalf of all who feel that way. That's what we're attempting to do.

We appreciate this forum. Again, you're providing us with this wonderful opportunity to speak. What the people are hearing, whether you're hearing it or not, the people who are at the grassroots level, the people that are impacted by the consequences of your decisions that disregard their concerns, is that somebody is a voice for them. The little man has a little woman. The little guys and gals in our society have a voice. There is somebody speaking out on their behalf. And we're honoured to have been elected to do that. We appreciate you using this tactic of having us speak all day and night. Perhaps this will go on for several days. I have no idea. We're up to the task. We have a plan. We can do shift work.

This isn't just a little four-man radical group that you had to face in the last Legislature. We have the wherewithal. We have the power. We have the commitment. We have the principles that are inspiring us. We're receiving on our iPhones and our computers an incredible number of e-mails that are critical of this tactic of yours and supportive of our efforts to continue to lobby and act on their behalf.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As always in here when you listen to debate and you hear different things that come forth in the Legislature when discussing amendments and in this case the amendment on the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, you're sometimes surprised. Sometimes you learn things that you may not have felt you would learn and the like.

You know, I was struck by some of the things that were said by the last speaker and, in particular, the reference to the Lethbridge utilities, their history, and that how they operated actually worked. It seemed to me that the last speaker, who is a member of the Wildrose caucus, was essentially recognizing that sometimes there is a need for government to be an organizing structure in people's lives. Sometimes that occurs in cases of transmission and electricity production. It struck me that the last speaker was looking at the public interest and longing for the good old days of governments running electricity systems. He hearkened back and longed for the days of the Lethbridge government being involved in the production and supply of electricity.

I was surprised by that, maybe, because of some of the misconceptions we have of political parties. My thought was that the Wildrose Party was essentially a party who believed in governments staying out of business and handing everything over to the private sector and the like. But I'm glad to hear that at least some members of that caucus recognize that there's a need and a role for government, and sometimes that's in the form of making citizens' lives better. Sometimes things are done at least through a societal organization or for ensuring that access to fairness for not only the wealthiest of our citizens but the poorest of our citizens is done in some fair and equitable manner. Sometimes that is done through the provision of electricity. Let's face it. Electricity is something that in this society you need, whether you're rich or you're poor or otherwise, and sometimes the vagaries of the marketplace disproportionately work against those in economically challenged situations.

So I'm glad to see that at least that member of that caucus believes in government being involved in some aspects of the economy and some aspects of performing things that all of our citizens need. I was glad to hear that, and I was unaware of that from that political party. It's good to remember that we sometimes have to take our blinders off when we're assessing what actually we all mean here.

You know, if we go back here, I thought it was a mistake when this government deregulated the electricity market, and you see over the course of the 12 years that that has not been the wisest of decisions. After we privatized the grid in early 1998, you immediately had spikes in electricity. The market was not working. It was not working efficiently or anything like that, and the government of the day at that time actually recognized that. They recognized that by writing cheques. They didn't like the fact that electricity prices spiked overnight. They didn't like the fact that the electorate recognized that almost overnight they were paying higher power bills in a deregulated system than previously in a regulated system. Because of that, our government then started writing cheques to individual people to subsidize the price of their electricity, all because of a mistake they made in a fit of ideological furor to privatize the grid. They fell into the zeitgeist of the times. They believed the Enrons of the world, that cheap energy was just in the hands of the private marketplace and that all things would be great if you just got government out of the way. Well, they were sorely wrong.

If we look, billions – literally billions – of dollars that should have been saved in our heritage trust fund or in some other form or fashion or invested in education went to cover up a government mistake. It went from this government having royalty wealth at its disposal, and it covered up their mistake. Instead of using this money more judiciously, more wisely, they chose to paper over a fundamental mistake in their thinking. They spent those billions of dollars subsidizing people's electricity rates because of a mistake they made.

That is an example of where the billions of dollars that this government has brought in, some $350 billion or so in non-renewable resource revenue, has gone. It's gone to paper over mistakes they have made because of some of the ideological furor that was around in the 1990s, early 2000 period. Mistakes were made, and they spent all that money trying to rectify those errors. That is a cogent example of where our billions have gone: the subsidization of electricity rates when they should have left the electricity grid system alone. It was working fine. There were no challenges. We had some of the lowest bills per household in the country. It was simply doing something to do something when there was no problem in the actual workings of the system.

Twelve years later here we are. I am of the full view that it'll be very difficult to reregulate the grid. Sometimes when things are undone, they simply can't be done again. You know, I haven't been convinced of the argument that they can, but we can make that system work better.

I got a call from a constituent of mine, Mr. Nick Clark. I believe he's in communication with the Minister of Energy on a regular basis. He informed me of going to the Charles River report. I look at some of our challenges on our electricity system. We have mass fluctuations in the pricing mechanism on almost an hourly basis. We know how that system works. Some people submit low bids into the system; some people submit higher bids. But on an hourly basis everyone gets paid on what was the highest price paid for electricity in that hour. The problem with the system is that everyone knows what everyone else is bidding. It's an open system, where everyone understands what everyone else is bidding. So at the end of the day they pretty much know what they're going to get paid. That's how we're getting mass fluctuations on an hourly basis, not really reflecting the true cost of energy production in this environment.

The Charles River report, that I mentioned and that my constituent Mr. Nick Clark continually brings up, brings up the New Zealand system, which has a blind system of submitting energy into the marketplace. Other competitive markets don't know what companies or organizations are bidding into the marketplace. This allows for a more efficient bidding process. It allows for less gerrymandering in the pricing. At least, in the New Zealand case it allows for electricity to be sold at a price more commensurate with what the actual cost of production is. I'm hopeful – and I'm certain he is because he receives e-mails from Mr. Nick Clark as well – that when we do see the changes to our electricity pricing mechanism, going to the New Zealand system, one that is proven more efficient and is seen to have been more beneficial for the consumers, will in fact happen. I know the Minister of Energy is listening to my comments with very much vigour and enthusiasm, so I'm certain he will consider that at the end of the day.

I do take a little bit of umbrage in one of the comments made by the former speaker in saying that there are now 17 Wildrosers, not simply an opposition made up of radicals. To be honest, I don't consider myself a radical; I consider myself a fairly pragmatic realist. I think I understand the challenge of the government. I think I understand the role of health care, the role of education, and the fact that we have a fiscal structure that is essentially broken and the like. Viewpoints expressed by other members of this House are not necessarily radical. They may be outside the mainstream, you know, but I really don't think so.

Essentially, if you look at blind polling of policy positions, our policies are very well accepted. Now, when you get labels thrown on things, well, then it's a little bit different. But if you look at a policy perspective and what people actually want from their lives, please don't look at my views as being radical because they're not.

Especially we see the Wildrose Party, some of their speakers, essentially saying that they want no school fees. That's a Liberal policy position. It's a Liberal policy position that we see public education as something that should be covered from government expenditures. If they had bothered to do research on the party, it is. They ran for a party under a leader who said school fees should be passed along to the end-user, that government should have a limited role in the provision of education, that people should take more of a pay-their-own-way situation when it comes to going to public education facilities. So I'm not sure. The way I hear people talk, at least on that side of the House they sound a lot more Liberal than their advertising goes. Nevertheless, you learn some things when you listen to debate, and those are some of those things that we discuss from time to time.

Let's look at the amendment. The amendment goes some way to trying to create some clarity and some rules of the game for people to follow when they're assessing a transmission system. Hopefully, it will add some clarity to the Albertans out there who wish to get more information on how our electricity transmission system will be created, what its goals and functions are and the like. So I think it's an amendment that is worth considering.

But let's also just get back to a couple of things. It's strange sometimes, Mr. Chair, how your mind works. There was a long speech that I think was referring to property rights and things of that nature and the Ombudsman and the like, and it was along the line that property rights had been entrenched in law for centuries. In fact, that is really not the case, okay? Governments have always had the ability, rightly or wrongly, to do things in the public interest, to do projects or things that needed to be done in the public interest.

For instance, there is a road in my community, Crowchild Trail, that will be expanded, that will probably cause 300 or 400 people in my constituency to pack up and leave. Is that nice? No. I'm not saying whether it's right or wrong at this time, but those are the things. If the city government looks at this as something that in the main a million citizens are going to need at the expense of the 300 homes, sometimes governments need to do that. What needs to be recognized is that there has to be an open and transparent hearing process, that the people affected will have an ability to speak and be allowed their arguments as to why this may not be in the best interests of the community, and they have a right to a fair value for their properties if the city takes them over.

That's no different than what the provincial government does. The provincial government has the right and the responsibility to do things in the public interest, okay? Sometimes that means a cleavage with individual landowners, individual companies, and the like. But governments have always had the ability. What they have to ensure is that people are given the right to be heard, the right to protest, the right to bring up things, the right to fair compensation. In the main those are there.

The most cogent example of governments being able to do things in the public interest is marching kids off to war. They have had that right. They will continue to do that in the future. You know, they'll march you to war with a bayonet attached to your butt, saying: you go fight. Okay? Governments have that power. I'm not saying that it's always nice. I'm not saying that it's always pleasant, those things. But governments do have that ability to do them, and I don't necessarily think we should be tying their hands when doing things in the public interest. The hon. Minister of Justice, who I see here this morning, has fully brought up the fact that we have an Expropriation Act here in this province that tends to do some of these things.

I understand that we need a process where people's complaints are heard. I understand that there is a need for the government to be open and transparent and allow those contentious issues to be discussed. But at the end of the day governments need the ability to do things in the public interest, and the big things sometimes have that cleavage with individual rights. That cleavage will exist regardless of who is in power or the like.

So I will point this out. There always will be a tension between private landowners and the public interest in moving great things. The thing is to do it in the public interest, in an open and transparent fashion that allows everyone to know the rules of the game and allows people to be fairly compensated.

In my view, right now the Expropriation Act allows for that, okay? When we go all hyperbolic on this issue and the like, remember that there are systems in play that allow that. That doesn't excuse the government for what they did on bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, which I will agree were not good bills. They really took away some of that openness and transparency, took away that ability to have concerns met. That was wrong, yet at the end of the day governments need the flexibility to do things in the public interest that allow for people to be heard and fair compensation to be paid, and if we have that system in place . . . The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm getting up and speaking on part of the amendment, whether the need of Albertans for critical transmission infrastructure can be met by the application of non-wire solutions or, in any less expensive but equally satisfactory way, such as upgrading an existing line, building electrical generators closer to the load and programs to reduce the load.

The Chair: I was just wondering, hon. member, if you were on the amendment.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah, I'm on the amendment. I just read (2)(b). I was just reading out verbatim.

The Chair: Thank you. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: I'm all for policy, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that we all keep on that because we wouldn't want to be here just talking aimlessly about events just to kill time.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Donovan: I don't think there's anybody on either side of this floor who would like that.

Speaking to that, it brings me to an interesting conversation on this amendment. In southern Alberta there's a southern Alberta waste energy coalition – ironically, it's where a lot of this side of the floor was voted in – which has tied a lot of the facilities together for waste. The concept of that is that we have so much waste, so let's cogenerate or come up with some way to make use of it instead of burying it for our children and grandchildren and grandchildren's grandchildren, as I've heard people talk about before. I don't think that's a viable way to continue on in the world.

Now, in saying that, I think we need to have some direction from this government and probably from the Minister of Environment and SRD to not allow landfills anymore. When we start giving more licences for that, it allows industry to think that that's still a viable way to do it. We have the technology out there which would feed energy back into the grid, which would allow people to be able to make use of the waste, probably using some off-sales steam and whatnot off that to run generators to pump back into the system. Again, it would use the existing lines that we have, which is also part of this amendment, and upgrade them.

If you go to the United States, they use the same corridors on a lot of stuff. If there's a situation where there's a power line and they feel it's not being used adequately or it needs to be upgraded, they go through the process of putting up more lines. It depends who you talk to as to what kind of waste there is off that, what kind of loss there is. There's talk of 5 to 10 per cent, but I've been assured by quite a few people that there's not that much loss to things.

When we talk about this bill and this amendment of that, this leads to the idea – I revert back to my riding all the time – of not wasting prime agricultural land where we'd be putting in transmission lines that I don't feel are crucial or needed unless we have a needs assessment. Bill 8 touches on the needs assessment on future lines, but it's not talking about ones that have been passed here in the last three to four years. I know that I'm going sound like a broken record on it, but where there's prime agricultural land, I think we have prime ways to deal with it whether it be wind energy or waste energy.

The key to waste energy is getting the buy-in from this government to promote that instead of promoting landfills. Before I was elected, there was a large issue in my riding where a large company wanted to put in a landfill near the hamlet of Blackie. There was public outrage and rightfully so because we're looking at burying something where we don't need to. There are means and ways out there to keep the tippage fees cheaper and not put this back into our land and potentially poison our water source.

We've always talked about how whisky is for drinking and water is for fighting over. I think this is a key thing, and I think that shows . . . [interjection] It's true. There have been lots of wars, and what people will fight over continues on in the world today, and water is key.

I think this is something that when we look at this – this amendment leads into that with section (2)(b) and building electric generation closer to the load lines just in case anybody thought I was getting off topic with it. I wouldn't want to be wasting anybody's time in here by going off topic at any time.

An Hon. Member: Are you sure?

Mr. Donovan: I'm positive about that.

The key to it, when we're doing this, is that we start building the generation where it's needed rather than putting in transmission lines that aren't needed. This goes back into that. Are they critical? I guess it's just like going to the hospital. If you're critical, you're going to get dealt with quicker in the emergency room than if you just happen to have a cut or a broken limb that can actually sit and take time and doesn't need to be dealt with. We take a doctor's word for what's critical and what isn't critical, yet we're not willing to listen to the experts in the industry as to what's critical for transmission lines.

I think, in all honesty, we've got to sit back and listen to the people. Bill 8 is a great piece of legislation because it's identified whereas in Bill 50 we didn't identify critical transmission lines. I understand Bill 8 is moving forward on that, but I think we have to look back a little bit and figure out all of the lines that we've approved in this province that are not critical. Again, this is near and dear to my riding and also Cardston-Taber-Warner's riding, with the MATL line that went through and the Picture Butte line that they're talking of right now going through prime agricultural land, divvying it up, and not even looking at the idea if it does need to go there.

If you go to Europe and you talk with people, they bury power lines over there. Yes, it comes at a cost, but what is the economic loss of parcelling up good agricultural land? That is a key issue in my riding, and that's what I'm here to represent, the people of my constituency. In saying that, that's what we've got to look at. Are we divvying up these parcels of land for critical power lines? The question is: are they critical? I go right back to Bill 8. We've identified that we need to do a needs assessment on what critical lines are from here on, but why are we not looking back at the ones that have been approved but have not started yet?

The question lies therein: how much does this government get back for the assessments? It's been proven – it's fact – that these companies are getting 9.25 per cent return on their investment. I think it'd be great if I could dump money back in. That's a guaranteed investment for them because it doesn't matter whether they are running a TV ad, a commercial in a local newspaper, which is good for the economy – don't get me wrong – or anything else. They sit there, and they run all of these ads and are guaranteed 9.25 per cent with absolutely no regulator, nobody on top of how many times they run the ad, how many times they do a public forum, how much of any of those things. They just keep doing it and doing it.

That's the problem. There is zero accountability to what they're doing. It's my understanding that they can sit there, they can run many ads, and they can do as many things as they want because as soon as they spend the money, they are guaranteed 9.25 per cent return on what they're doing. So this is where I'd always like the clarification on these things. If that's the case, my question is: who regulates? Who is the watchdog that watches what they do?

I'm very fortunate in my constituency. I get my power from South Alta REA. The nice part of an REA is that there is local control because you have local board members. Again, you get voted in, which is accountability. There's transparency because you're actually talking with neighbours and friends who are in charge of these things. It goes back to local decision-making, which I think is key. I think that's what's gotten lost in this, in our government so far and where our province is headed at such a fast pace. I understand we've grown quickly, but when are we going to start being accountable to the people that are paying the bills?

As I say, I'm very fortunate with South Alta because it's an REA. I mean, our Agriculture and Rural Development minister is still part of the process of that because some of the funding goes through that because of the way they're structured for their lending amounts. But they only build on what's needed. They are a very well-run organization. They don't just buy a new truck every year because they can. They go over a needs assessment. Is that needed? Are the power lines needed that they put up? Those are the things we have to work with.

There's nobody in this province who wants to go without power, and I don't think we're at that point. There's always talk about whether we're fearmongering on this side – the power's going to go out and everything else – and we fight the one side, and the government, obviously, fights the other, but the question is always raised: who's right? Until you have a separate, independent needs assessment, nobody's going to know. I mean, so far while I've been here, I haven't seen the lights flicker yet, so I think we're probably okay in this facility. I think we're probably okay in most of this province.

The question is: where can we start putting generation close to where it's needed? Then you don't need all these expensive transmission lines. The question was always raised in my constituency: are these lines just being put in because they're guaranteed money? Because there's no watchdog. There's nobody telling them where it needs to go. I think this government started to listen just a little bit because I think they identified that Bill 50 was not working out to the point where, you know, there was quite a swing in what the opposition looks like now. I think that's due quite a bit to Bill 50, Bill 36, and Bill 19.

I give Bill 8 full credit for that, that they've identified that Bill 50 was not working for a needs assessment. I guess from what I hear from my constituents, especially in the south end where there is a new line proposed in the Picture Butte area, which again severs up excellent farmland, does not have local buy-in, and does not have a needs assessment – they have a green area coloured in on a map saying that we need wind power, and it could be future wind power. I'm all for that. I'm all for making a better carbon footprint, so we don't have as much of a footprint in the world. I get that. I think there's not one person that's not for that. I think we've identified that.

The question is whether the technology is actually good on wind power. I mean, right now, say when I was reeve in the county, we had one company come in, and they've actually downsized how many towers they need by up to 30 per cent because technology has changed that much in three years. You know, I think the technology has changed to the point that in another five years or 10 years or 20 years from now is wind energy going to be viable, or is there going to be something better out there? Thirty years ago a lot of people weren't talking about wind energy or solar energy. It wasn't something that was dealt with or talked about.

You sit there, and you look back at the whole process, and you think: what could be next in 20 years? I get that we plan ahead – and we have to plan ahead – but is it critical right now? That's one of the key things that I think Bill 8 brings, the critical need for it. But we need to go back and assess the ones that have been licensed. Are they needed? Are they critical? I mean, we've watched this government go back on other contracts, so it's not like we can say that it's going to be the end of the world if we go back to some of these producers that have put in the AltaLinks of the world and say: "Jeez. I know we gave you the contract for putting in this power line, but we really truly need to do a needs assessment and decide if it's critical. Is it critical transmission that's needed in this area? And is it for Albertans, or is this just going to be another line that's set up to sell our power to the States?"

If there's a business plan for that, make it and don't try hiding it. But if we're putting this in as a transmission line to sell to the States, in my constituency that's not wanted. And if it is wanted, I guess, I'd open it up to all my constituents to please let me know by e-mail or phone call what they want. Again, I'm here to represent what my constituents want. Now, overwhelmingly I've heard over the election period and over the summer, visiting with lots of people, what people want.

The fact is that we can go back. We can change these power lines that have been given the right to go through near Picture Butte and along the coulees there and sever up excellent agricultural land. It's not like we can't go back on an agreement or a contract. We watched it in Fort Macleod. We watched where there was a contract signed, there was sod turned, and they went back on it. That to me isn't the end of the issue here if we can identify that it's not needed. I think it's a due diligence here to identify what needs to be done or not done. It goes back to, you know, upgrading existing lines.

You go down to the United States. You go all over. They have corridors. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has some valid points about doing a corridor on the east side of Alberta where you have power lines and gas lines and oil lines go down it. Now, I know some people might not think that's the way to do it, and some do, but I think we need to have the debate around here and bring the experts in and talk to them and lay out what's right or what's wrong. By no means am I an expert on it. I think it looks like a good idea. When you go down to the United States, there are all kinds of corridors along there. You know, they put numerous power lines together so you don't affect large areas and you don't wreck good agricultural land. I mean, it just makes sense to me. It's good planning. It's a good thing for what we need to do in this province.

I mean, you've got to sit there and actually look at what's right. You've got to sit sometimes and put your political hats to the side and not say: well, this is what we've done; we already did this three years ago; we're just going to keep forging ahead, even though it's wrong. I don't think anybody in this House thinks that. I truly don't. I think we're all here for the common good. I think we're here for the right reasons. I think we need to sit and listen to what people want.

Now, needs in this province bounce around quite a bit. I mean, it depends where you are in the province and what's needed. We have an excellent source of energy in the north end of this province in Fort McMurray. I've had the opportunity to tour the Suncor plant up there, and I think there's some excellent progress being done up there. To the two members from that area up there: I think it's a huge economic driver in this province, and we can't fight that. But we don't just sit there and clumsily plan everything on it. I think that's where we're failing here on these electric transmission lines right now. I think that's what Bill 8 is bringing to it. It's identified the errors we did in Bill 50.

This amendment on Bill 8 brings up upgrading the existing lines. When towers are already in place – and I'm by no means an expert on this – can we hang more wires on them? Can we upgrade the wires to be bigger to have more transmission down them if that is what's needed? Just to put up a line to put up a line, to say that there could be wind generation in this area 20 to 30 years from now, is that truly a good plan?

If you're the company building the power line, of course you think it's a great plan because you get a 9.25 per cent return on your investment. It goes back to what the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View spoke of earlier. If you were guaranteed that – there are a lot of people in here that are not getting that kind of return on their RRSPs, whether they're putting in the money themselves or the government pays it all. It's still a return that people are not getting.

Mr. McAllister: It's even higher than 8 per cent.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. It's better than a pay increase of 8 per cent, which some people think we possibly could have gotten here in the last Members' Services stuff. Again, that's still being identified so I can't talk about all that.

You know, the concept of that is: is this right? As a taxpayer in Alberta do you think it's fair to go out and put up lines that may or may not be needed when you're giving a company a guaranteed return of 9.25 per cent? If those are the correct numbers, which I've been led to believe, I don't think that's right. I don't think in any way, shape, or form you can look any of your constituents in the eye and say that that's a fair deal for Albertans. I'd like to know who makes those contracts. Who signed up? We only really have two major players that do power lines in this province. They've got a pretty sweet deal.

There are even members on that side of the floor that maybe weren't on that side of the floor a couple of years ago that had the question raised in this House. Their questions are in the Hansard: is this right for Albertans? You know, that's always the question. Can you look back in your constituents' eyes and say that this is right? Then you go back to the accountability and transparency of it. Who's watching this? Yeah, there's an advocate. There's talk of a watchdog in here. I'm not sure exactly what they're going to do for us other than maybe pour you a coffee afterwards and tell you it wasn't a good deal. But the question goes back to: is this right for Alberta? I argue the point that I don't think it is without actual needs assessments, and we don't have the needs assessments in hand.

Again, we've identified in Bill 8 that we need to do this going forward, but at what point did we decide the last five or six years weren't needed? Questions arise. You know, what kind of deals were made? There are two large power companies that basically get to run free. Who's in charge of them? I throw that question out to any members across the floor that have an actual, viable answer for that: who's in charge of these needs assessments for these transmission lines? We've identified that they've gone up in price. There's talk of 16 and a half billion dollars of infrastructure needed. Who says it's needed? Some say it's only 3 and a half billion dollars.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment A1, which essentially further delineates the inclusion of public interest.

Just on a general basis, I mean, we're here today debating bills in Committee of the Whole. We've been here for multiple hours, and I think the overall reason for this is that in Alberta we actually sit in the Legislature for the fewest number of days in Canada. That's a problem because not only is there no accountability the fewer days you sit, but you also are forced to rush through legislation and stay late because it's a pretty aggressive agenda in terms of the number of bills that are going through here. I think the number of days is 40 or 45, which is by far the fewest number of days that any provincial Legislature sits.

Going to this amendment, this is, of course, an amendment to Bill 50. How that's relevant in terms of this amendment and Bill 50 is that I think Bill 50 was forced through the Legislature because of the fewest number of days; hence, the need for the amendment in Bill 8. To some extent I think the Wildrose caucus is flattered by Bill 8 because it is essentially a reflection of what we've been arguing for the past two years, which is that in determining transmission capacity, that should be decided by an independent Alberta Utilities Commission, not by cabinet.

With respect to amendment A1 in subsection (2) it makes it mandatory. The wording is "shall." The Alberta Utilities Commission shall look at whether or not a proposed transmission line, whether there is a benefit that may accrue to Alberta.

- (b) whether the need of Albertans for critical transmission infrastructure can be met by the application of non-wire solutions or, in any less expensive but equally satisfactory way, such as upgrading an existing line, building electrical generators closer to the load and programs to reduce the load.

Of course, under subsection (c) there's a requirement to look at the public's social economic interest and benefit.

I think if we had an amendment like this two or three years ago and the Alberta Utilities Commission looked at the proposal to build these $16 billion of transmission lines through untendered contracts, it very well could be that these lines would not be built. Unfortunately, the decision to build transmission capacity was taken away from the Alberta Utilities Commission and put into this cabinet here. I don't know how many cabinet members in this room were part of that decision, but none of them here even today have the requisite expertise to make such a decision. That's the main problem.

I think Bill 8 is meant to address that issue. This government has clearly admitted that they had a wrong approach, that they were mistaken, that the approval of transmission lines being put into cabinet was not the right decision. It was a terrible mistake. But, unfortunately, Bill 8 doesn't go retroactive to the decisions that were already made. We have a situation now where there is $16 billion of transmission lines – there are already cost overruns – through untendered contracts and through a flawed process, yet this government is just going through.

For the Energy minister, I don't know why he has to continue this legacy. The Premier was in cabinet, but this is somebody else's legacy, a flawed legacy on Bill 50. And we shouldn't continue with that type of flawed approach. We're starting to see the effects right now. Power bills are going through the roof. They've more than doubled in the last few years. The inclusion of $16 billion of untendered contracts for transmission lines will only increase the power bills as we go forward. You know, three and a half years from now people are going to say: "Okay. Why did our power bills go through the roof?" It's because of these Bill 50 transmission lines. If they're not necessary, don't build them. If they're not in the public interest, don't build them.

Unfortunately, we had a situation where despite every other jurisdiction in North America that has an independent utilities commission – sometimes they're not called a utilities commission. They're under another name. Every other single jurisdiction had a requirement that on important decisions such as transmission capacity, those would be decided by an independent body that has the expertise, not by politicians and not by cabinet. But this government decided to ignore that long-standing practice in all of North America and put the decision to build $16 billion of transmission lines into cabinet, not looking at any evidence, not having any expertise. That, I think, is a shocking circumstance. I think that it's going to be a legacy that wears on future generations and current ones. Even though that cost is going to be amortized over a long period of time, we're going to start seeing even more effects on power bills.

It's fixed charges. A senior who's living in a house can turn off her lights, maybe use the stove less. She's still going to have to pay increased power bills because the Bill 50 transmission costs are a fixed component on the bill.

The government has admitted that this is a flawed process. We should have the Alberta Utilities Commission look at need, not cabinet. The government in Bill 8: the Energy minister clearly said that this is a reflection that it was a flawed process. It was a mistake. If it's a flawed process and a mistake, why don't we go back and look at those $16 billion transmission lines? That's a lot of money. If you compare that to our health budget, it's a huge amount of money that is potentially wasted. I think it's important that on such huge decisions we go back and say: "Okay. This was clearly a flawed process. Do we actually need these transmission lines?"

Mr. Saskiw: Get it right. If the Alberta Utilities Commission looks at all the evidence and says, "Yes, we do need these transmission lines," that's another story, but for the decision to be made behind closed doors in cabinet on this type of decision, where no one in that room had any expertise on electricity transmission, is shocking.

The other side of it, of course, is property rights. Through Bill 50 they took out a bunch of property rights that landowners have traditionally had through the Expropriation Act. I talked to various counsel in Alberta, and my understanding is that this is one of the first times when a government has just completely eliminated and extinguished property rights by removing key provisions in the Expropriation Act. Of course, there are innate rights within land and property, but those rights are codified in the Expropriation Act. If a government takes your land, you have these rights. You have various heads of compensation that are specified in the Expropriation Act, and you can go to court and say: "Look, the government took my land. I'm entitled to these types of compensation."

Not only did they take away those rights to compensation; they also eliminated the right to go to court. There's a privative clause in the legislation. A landowner has a line going through their land. The government didn't have to prove that it was needed. They took away their rights to compensation. Then they took away their rights to go to court. What type of government does that?

You know, at that time it maybe could be forgiven. Albertans trusted that their government wouldn't do that to them, that they would look out for their best interests. When there were meetings across the province, it became really self-evident that the MLAs didn't know what was going on in the bill. They hadn't read the bill. The minister had read the bill, but the MLAs just didn't know what was going on.

Bill 8 is a reflection that, clearly, it was wrong. The government has now found out that, yes, people apparently didn't read the bill, didn't know what the ramifications were. But now that that mistake has been identified, let's go back and say: "Okay. Should we be building a $16 billion transmission line?" I think that's an important attribute.

Going back to why I think Bill 50 came about, my understanding is that many members got the bill essentially the day that it was going to have first reading. There was very little caucus debate. When you add on that the fact that we sit the fewest number of days in Canada . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Around the clock. Well, I think it's pretty disturbing if the member opposite thinks that going around the clock actually makes good legislation. I don't know. Maybe you're a super-human. You've climbed Mount Everest.

But it's still very difficult to actually create good legislation. This amendment to Bill 8 actually does create good legislation.

An Hon. Member: Are you saying that we don't create good legislation?

Mr. Saskiw: I've got the floor.

The Chair: Hon. member, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has the floor.

Mr. Saskiw: Bill 8 amends Bill 50. Talking about how we used to have the Alberta advantage, part of that advantage was low power rates. What I think this amendment will do is help to lower power rates because what you're going to see is that the Alberta Utilities Commission will have to go through each and every one of these provisions. It will have to look at alternative solutions. It will have to look at nonwire solutions. It will have to look at less expensive solutions when it comes to transmission capacity. These types of things will actually help reduce the power bills, which will make Alberta a great place to live and help create an Alberta advantage. Unfortunately, over the last several years, after 41 years of the same government, that Alberta advantage has been lost.

Now, going back to the amendment, subsection (2)(d) requires the Alberta Utilities Commission to look at "reasonable and economic operational alternatives to minimize system constraints, giving consideration to technical efficiencies, reliability and capital costs." I think this is a common-sense type of amendment that the members opposite should definitely consider. This amendment goes further than just reversing the clouded decision-making that went on with respect to Bill 50. It goes even further than just requiring the Alberta Utilities Commission to look at whether or not certain transmission lines are needed. It goes further. It provides a set number of requirements. It's in the mandatory, not the permissive. It says: shall look at these requirements. You know what?

If the Alberta Utilities Commission doesn't look at these requirements, then there's a legal challenge saying: look, you didn't properly look at the requirements that were set out in the legislation, and that decision should be overturned. It far exceeds what happened previously, when the decision, again, to build $16 billion worth of transmission lines fell on a few select cabinet ministers behind closed doors, resulting in one of the worst decisions that our province has ever made.

What I think we'll see going forward with respect to amendments like this is that as time goes on, Albertans are going to become even more educated on the issue of transmission lines, and the reason is that their power bills are skyrocketing, and they're going to skyrocket through the wintertime. You have seniors whose bills are going up and up and up, and they're now going to find out that the previous decision to build $16 billion in transmission lines was flawed, and as a result of that flawed decision-making their power bills are going up. I think that's going to be a critical decision going forward. Do you want to have your power bills up as a result of flawed decision-making within a PC government, or do you actually want to have evidenced-based decision-making, where you go to the Alberta Utilities Commission to actually see whether or not these transmission lines are needed?

I had a local issue in my area, in St. Paul, where a bunch of landowners just recently were told that a transmission line is going to go on their property. If there was an amendment like this, A1, it would be a different story because in that situation the Alberta Utilities Commission would actually have to determine whether or not that line is needed. They'd have to go through all of these different factors. Some of those factors could be cogeneration. There could be other factors in there.

Unfortunately, we had a meeting there. There were ATCO representatives. They were just there to build the line. Every single constituent of mine said: "Do we need this line? Do we actually need this line for our power needs?” Because amendments like this weren’t in there, they couldn’t answer it. So we’re going to build a line without having to prove need. Property rights are going to be taken away without having to prove need. Expenditures are going to be made without having to prove need. That flawed decision-making as a result of this government is now working its way through decisions that have already been made.

Let’s go back to all those lines that were approved without having to go through the independent Alberta Utilities Commission to determine whether the lines were needed. Previously one of the members had mentioned a critical transmission report and the alleged fact that that had somehow proven that the lines were needed. Unfortunately, that committee was hand-picked by the Energy minister. The chair of that committee was a long-time PC insider, and that’s fine. If that person actually had the requisite expertise on transmission capacity, fine. That’s fine. But, unfortunately, what happened with this committee: no one had the required experience, and they didn’t look at any evidence. They had four very vague questions. We’re going to base a decision to build $16 billion worth of transmission capacity on a committee without the requisite experience and without looking at any evidence.

If there’s a flawed decision-making, it’s continuing on to another flawed decision-making. Bill 8 actually, going forward, gets it right. It forces the Alberta Utilities Commission to look at whether transmission lines are needed, so let’s go back to those previous decisions, that were through the flawed process, and revisit them.

I think that when this amendment says under subsection (c) to look at the “public’s social economic interest and benefit,” that could be read to actually look at whether industry needs this power. Again, if we had had this amendment in place previously, there’s no way that these lines would have been built. Industry – and, again, this is a big, big industry, that consumes a lot of power, whose business relies on power and a stable supply of it – went to the former PC caucus and said: “We don’t need these lines. If you build these lines, Alberta is going to be less competitive. If you build these lines, the only losers are going to be consumers.”

So in that circumstance I think this amendment goes a long way. It requires the Alberta Utilities Commission to actually consult with key industry players, key consumers of power, consult with the public, and look at whether or not the cost to produce a line is warranted and in the public need. Of course, here is an inclusion of public interest.

With that, Madam Chair, I speak in favour of the amendment to Bill 8, and I hope that the colleagues across the aisle will consider it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this morning to speak in favour of this amendment for a number of reasons that I’ll lay out. I find this amendment quite interesting. Coming from a government that is supposedly open and honest and transparent, you’ve got a bill which just is a testament to the fact that this government made a grand mistake years ago when they brought forward Bill 50.

I think what’s interesting is that although this government through their actions through Bill 8 may think that Albertans are fools and won’t see that they’re trying to close the barn doors long after the horses have left, Albertans will see through that and see that now four different major infrastructure projects have been rammed through. To go back and now make changes to legislation that clearly didn’t take into account the public interest, the public need, and what was in Albertans’ best interest?

We’ve heard from numerous speakers already about how these transmission lines, you know, have taken away certain property owners’ rights. They’re going to actually increase costs and download costs onto consumers and onto Albertans. It’s unnecessary and shameful. Once upon a time, not too long ago, Alberta used to have a regulated electricity market, and we had some of the most competitive rates in the country. Due to the wisdom of the government of the day, or in their view their wisdom, this market was deregulated. Unsurprisingly, costs spiralled upwards. So it’s with great frustration that we do have some of the highest rates in the country, considering Alberta’s capacity to generate electricity.

I think the amendment speaks to things like having a needs assessment, ensuring that with these infrastructure projects, when we’re talking about energy: first and foremost, is there is a need for them? You know, studies that I’ve read have indicated that there wasn’t a need for these major lines to have been approved had we looked at generating energy closer to the source as opposed to shipping it across the province and setting up infrastructure, which really looks like preparing to export much of our energy to our southern neighbours masked in this idea that it is needed in Alberta. A needs assessment is something that is crucial, again, and consulting with the public and looking at the public interest.

Interestingly, in the last week or so we’ve often discussed what is the public interest versus catering to one group or another. I find it quite interesting that this House hasn’t yet decided on an adequate definition of public interest. For myself, we’re looking at short-term and long-term impacts, the social and environmental impacts on people, our ecosystem, our environment, and how this is going to affect not only us but future generations as well. A bill like Bill 8 should have been introduced 10, 12 years ago. Now these projects have been rammed through, and Bill 8 doesn’t retroactively look back at some of the projects that were approved and I think misses the mark.

It’s quite disheartening, I think, to many Albertans when they look at Bill 50, the fact that you’ve got a government that grants themselves sweeping powers to make decisions behind closed doors based on the energy needs of a handful of individuals, who aren’t experts in the field, who haven’t done proper consultation, who are making decisions which affect all Albertans and spending, as colleagues of mine have pointed out, billions of dollars on infrastructure projects which are just going to be downloaded costwise to consumers and to Albertans. Again, is there a need for it? You know, one really has to wonder and question the logic behind some of these decisions.

For myself it’s quite evident that in many ways and many respects this government is quite out of touch with Alberta, with Albertans, and with what Albertans are wanting and needing. You know, this bill seems a little bit out of date, as far as 10 years too late. I think this amendment – I’ll get back to it – highlights some crucial factors that need to be in place in the future when we’re looking at energy transmission: looking at the public need, both present and future, and trying to have a bit of a long-term vision for this province. It’s quite apparent that this government seems to lack that. But that’s okay. We have a strong opposition that will help provide some vision for this government as far as the province goes and what we need in the future.

I mean, I've heard our hon. members on this side speaking about looking at alternative forms of energy and recognizing the fact that much of our electricity is generated through coal and many of our coal plants are now coming to term on their life and needing to recognize that we do need to invest in alternative forms of energy, which strikes me as interesting in that, you know, we're focused on building these critical infrastructure transmission lines. Critical can be debated. But are we looking at energy generation and introducing or expanding upon energy that is more environmentally friendly, that is cheaper, whether we're looking at solar and wind but also being able to power and provide energy for the needs in southern Alberta as opposed to building these lines that go through many different farmers', ranchers' lands? Many of them are unwanted.

The frustration with this is: where was the public consultation, where was the public need, where was the public input? That needs to be part of the formula when we're looking at approving projects like this, especially projects of such magnitude. For myself, for Alberta New Democrats, I mean, this market should never have been deregulated to begin with. Had we a regulated market with proper processes in place, we wouldn't be spending billions of dollars on unnecessary lines to transport energy from the north to the south. My concern is: where is that going next?

Ms Blakeman: Public ownership of utilities.

Mr. Bilous: Well, that as well. I mean, the utilities really should be public. They're being generated from energy from sources that belong to all Albertans. One of the frustrations of mine is that we're going to be subsidizing the cost of these lines, if not paying them outright, yet are Albertans going to be sharing in the dividends and the profits of this? No. We'll foot the bill, and private industry can take the profits. I have an issue with that.

I think, you know, that if Alberta had a strategy of looking at – how can we become not only an energy powerhouse but also how do we ensure that we'll be able to support ourselves for the long term but do it in a way that we can keep costs low for our consumers and ensure that we're looking at all different sides of projects?

I need to come back to the part of this amendment talking about, you know, building generators and generating stations closer to the load and putting into place programs that will reduce that. Again, focusing on one part of Alberta to be the sole generator of the bulk of our electricity needs and then having to ship it all over the province doesn't seem like the most economical or environmental way of doing things. There is lots of potential for unharnessed energy, especially in southern Alberta, that could definitely be tapped a lot more if this government was interested in looking at that.

You know, I don't think a proper needs assessment was thoroughly conducted. I think that had this government gone out and consulted or consulted to this day with many landowners, they would hear how happy they were about Bill 50 and what the government rammed through years ago. Again, this amendment is a step in the right direction but about 12 years late.

The only other thing I'd like to highlight at this point in time is the fact that it seems a little absurd to some of my constituents that this great Assembly is passing laws that are going to affect Albertans for generations and generations to come, yet it's happening in the wee hours of the night and the early hours of the morning, when members aren't fully rested and able to participate to the extent that there's an expectation that we do. I've had numerous phone calls already asking why we're debating things at 10 o'clock at night, 12 o'clock at night, 3 in the morning, 8 in the morning. It's a great question. I know that this amendment has been debated for several hours now along with Bill 8. It is cause for concern.

I hope that the government will seriously consider this amendment put forward by my colleagues and look at identifying needs and look at what's in the best interest of the public, of Albertans, not just of one stakeholder or another, whether it be industry or one group or another, and seriously consider where we're going and who's footing these costs.

You know, I can tell you that I already have constituents concerned about the rising electricity costs that they've been hit with, especially some of our most vulnerable citizens in this province, our seniors who are living on fixed incomes. Bills are going up and up and up. When I look to the future and when I think about when these transmission lines are going to be put up – I mean, already there's forecast from industry on how much homeowners are going to have to pay in an increase in their bills. Albertans are not okay with that and are quite frustrated and recognize that their costs used to be much more affordable, again, back when our market was regulated.

This government has taken us a step in the wrong direction and a second step with the approval of these lines. Like I said, now, unfortunately, Bill 8 is coming to close those barn doors, but that train has long set sail from the station.

With that, I will close. Again, I'm in support of this amendment and hope that the government seriously considers this. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to speak on amendment A1 to Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Chair of Committees, for the reminder of where we all are because we do tend to wander a bit when we've been at it as long as this good Chamber has been.

I think that to my mind and to a lot of my constituents we've sort of lost track of what this was all about. I have been here long enough to have seen most of this process now roll through this House. Now, I mean, with Bill 8, we're in the stage of: "Whoops. Let's go back and try and fix that because it turned out to be a bigger problem than we thought it was going to be, and we're getting beat up about it," not to put too fine a word on that.

So where did all of this start? Well, it starts with provision of electricity, provision of utilities, which is critical. I mean, we live in a place where you need to have provision of electricity. For a lot of people it runs the fans that blow the heat around your home, around your office, that is generated by whatever kind of boiler you've got there, a hot water system, whatever. Well, it's not blowing the hot water system. But you have to have it. Now, my colleague would argue and did that the government should own all public utilities. I actually differ with my caucus because I think that's the way things should be, too. I lost that argument a long time ago, but it doesn't change my mind. I believe that utilities should be public, and they should be publicly run. They're not. At the very least what you usually end up with is government regulating utilities because they are so critical to people and people must have them. So the government acts as consumer protection to make sure that it's delivered at a rate that people can afford to pay for it. [some applause] We are welcoming the Leader of the Official Opposition.

In 1995 the government started a process to deregulate electricity, and they allowed it, essentially, to be broken up into three pieces: generation, transmission, and distribution. Previous to that pretty much every company that we had in Alberta – they’ve all changed names, and I admit I’ve kind of lost track of them. We had Calgary Power, who became Enbridge – no; yeah – and we had ATCO, which I think has always been pretty consistent. Yeah. We had Edmonton Power at one point, that then became EPCOR. They spun off part of the electricity, and they are now Capital Power. It’s a bit hard to trace the names, but there you go.

What we ended up with was splitting the way we get electricity into three parts. Essentially, groups that didn’t want to do all three got out of the two they didn’t want to do and specialized in one. That’s why, when you look at your bill, you’re now paying administration fees on three different things that you didn’t used to. You had one service. It provided it to you from the generation through to the transmission from Wabamun to the city of Edmonton and then, once inside the city of Edmonton, the actual distribution to your home. That was all done by one company. You were billed by one company, and that was it.

Now we have three companies in the game, and they’re each going to charge you an administration fee for having done what they did. That, again, is why you look at your bill and go: “Holy mackerel. Why am I paying more in administration fees than I am paying for the g.d. product?” That’s why. We can all thank this wonderful government of ours for adding those extra costs to our bill.

Now, when we first started, we had relatively cheap, reliable electricity generation and transmission and distribution in this province, so it boggles the mind when we now turn around and look. We’ve had brownouts and blackouts. We’ve had the cost of the electricity go through the roof because three generators went down at the same time, two of them for regular maintenance and then a third one had a problem, so three of them were offline. Now we’re buying electricity from B.C. at absolutely top dollar. For anybody that’s following along with this, there actually is a place you can go online and follow along with exactly what people are paying for the price of electricity per hour at any given time. It’s fascinating to watch because if we’re not generating the stuff locally, then we’re having to buy it from somewhere else.

There was collusion at one point, which, of course, is one of the things we talked about when the then minister from Lloydminster was the Minister of Energy. We raised all this. We said that it’s going to be more expensive, it’s going to be less reliable, and collusion is possible. “Oh, no, no, no, no,” they said. Well, guess what? It did happen. We did end up with collusion at one point, which I think went to court and eventually got settled. They did play around with things so that we ended up having to buy electricity at, you know, $300 per kilowatt when we should have been able to buy it at 5 cents. You can imagine the difference between $300 and 5 cents. That’s a lot. And the ratepayers, the people that actually get that electricity into their small business, into their farm, into their manufacturing centre, into their office building, or into their home: they paid that.

We went from having reliable, cheap electricity to now not as reliable. I don’t want anyone to think I’m saying that the whole system is blown and we’re all sitting here in the dark. Clearly, we’re not. But is it as reliable as it was? No. The big bogeyman in the room at the time was: “Oh, if we don’t move to this system, we are going to be under capacity. People will not build generators because it’s not worth their while; they can’t make enough money.” Yeah. Right. Uh-huh. Well, we don’t seem to have had a problem with that, and they’re certainly making money on it, but it is not as reliable as it was. Now, when the government changed the way this whole process worked, there were certain companies that really benefited.

Thank you for coming in and listening to us at 10 o’clock in the morning. We appreciate it. Just a little fan club, sports fans. Thanks so much.

When the government did that, they changed it, and we ended up with certain companies that really did well. This is the kind of thing where transparency in party contributions becomes really important. On this side I would tend to say, “Did any of those companies donate and really benefit from this deal?” and I would say, “Yeah.” Of course, the government side would say: “They did not. They absolutely did not influence us with their ginormous donations.” Well, guess what? Without transparency in the system I can continue to say yes, but I can’t prove it, and they can continue to say no, but they also can’t prove it. That’s what’s wrong with election financing. Unfortunately, the bill that we now have before us does nothing to change any of that.

I’m sorry. That was a tangent, Madam Chair. I’ll admit that. But I thought it was worth while.

We’re looking at the amendment from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Maybe he talks so much because he’s got the longest name. Do you think? Maybe? Wait a minute; let me put this in context. Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, was amending two sections in the original bill. They were long sections, I’ll give you that, but two sections in the Electric Utilities Act, which is the one that we redid at the end of the ’90s. Section 41.1 was one of the sections that caused the government grief, caused a number of people in the community consternation because the government took a process out of place in which a number of other things were considered in approving large projects to go ahead. What they did in section 41.1(1) was give themselves – cabinet, also known as the Lieutenant Governor in Council – the ability to do this, the power to do it. You know, they would be given a particular plan, and then they would be the final arbiter, the final decision-maker. There really wasn’t an obligation to consult the public. There wasn’t an obligation to particularly consider public interest. This was Bill 50.

In Bill 8 we now have the big mea culpa from the government, going: “Bad idea. Shouldn’t have done that. Let me take that one back. Let’s change it. Sorry. Whoops. Uh-oh. Let’s take that out and change it to something else.” It really got them in a lot of trouble, and rural Albertans were so not impressed that we now have an Official Opposition caucus of 17 people from a different party.

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. Hon. colleagues, the noise level is getting quite high in here. If we could keep it quiet just a little bit so we can hear the speaker, that would be very much appreciated. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: I’m not the least bit offended if people are energized by my speaking in the House. Thank you for that, but I can speak a lot louder than I am now. Not to worry. Okay.

That, as I said, really did not go well for the government. We had the mea culpa bill, Bill 8, saying, “Oops, uh-oh,” backing off, changing this, reverse, and whatever word you want to use. Then we have this amendment coming from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre in which he is suggesting that we not even do what the government’s mea culpa is about. He’s saying: strike that out, and let’s go and have the whole thing reviewed by a commission that would be required to meet and examine “present and future public convenience and need.” I’m going to agree with the need. “Convenience” is a bit of a strange word to put in a document like this. I’m assuming it was done late at night, and maybe we could forgive someone for that.

Then he goes into a long list of things that should be considered, that benefits will accrue to Albertans. Now, remember before when I was talking about how I believe that utilities should be public because the feedstock for it comes from land that we own? They are resources that all of us own, so why don’t all of us get the benefit of that resource being transformed into electricity? Just one more plug for public utilities. This would work with that because it’s a benefit that would accrue to Albertans as a result of any new critical infrastructure.

It also talks about whether the need of Albertans can be met by the application of nonwire solutions or less expensive but equally satisfactory upgrading of existing lines or building electrical generators closer to the load and programs to reduce the load. That’s a mouthful, and he’s got huge ideas in that paragraph because he’s bringing up a lot of the arguments that we’ve heard over the last 15 years about why would we try – electricity doesn’t transmit very far. It just sort of dissipates. It’s very hard to send over long distances, and you do need to have your generators fairly close to the end receivers of it. Nonetheless, we had a number of plans before us in Alberta where we were going to build power plants near Edmonton to transmit the electricity to Calgary, to which clear-thinking people said: why wouldn’t we build the plant in Calgary if that’s where we need it? That led to a whole bunch of other arguments.

They’re also asking that cost be considered. That was another one of the huge arguments that went on. Who’s paying the price for this? Is it the ratepayers, or is it every single Albertan? Is it every man, woman, and child in this place that is going to pay for infrastructure that certain groups or certain people really get the huge benefit from? Did I talk about those companies that seemed to have done so well under this particular scheme and are also big backers and donors to the party in government and whether there was a close connection? Oh, yes, I think I did. At the same time I said that it’s really too bad that we don’t have stronger election financing laws because then we’d have a clear idea of whether, in fact, there was anything wrong or right. I’m happy to have the government be proved right occasionally, especially when it’s around that kind of thing.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is also suggesting “reasonable and economic operational alternatives to minimize system constraints” – and this could only have come from him – “giving consideration to technical efficiencies, reliability and capital costs.”

He then goes on to amend the second section that is amended in Bill 8, which is to “refer the application back to the Independent System Operator.” This commission could then send it back to the Independent System Operator to be approved, to be declined, or to be changed.

It’s a really comprehensive amendment, and I’m not surprised that we’ve spent several hours on it. It’s worth considering because he really has managed to capture the arguments of about the last 10 years pretty succinctly on one page. We do get dome disease in this place. We are all in here under artificial light. Some people have been here . . .

Ms Blakeman: It’s artificial light. You plug it in. It’s electricity. It’s what we’re talking about.

. . . for many hours. You do get kind of a funny dome brain after a while. You forget that, really, we’re in here to make decisions for the people that live out there. You know, when I sit in those committee rooms, you’ll notice how I always sit so I can look out the window. It’s so that I can look out the window and see my constituents going by and remember what the heck I’m doing in that committee, so that I don’t forget and start to float around with all kinds of weird ideas. We need a little reminder now that everybody has been sitting in here for 15 hours that the point of this is to serve our constituents, to serve the people of Alberta. What is the best way to do that?

I think the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is very thoughtful, and I’m sure he’s spent a lot of time on this. He’s actually been thinking about this for probably 10 years. He has managed to encapsulate most of the problems that were identified. Would this bring us back to the point where we had safe, reliable, and cheap production, transmission, and distribution of electricity? Probably not. I think those days are done, frankly. I think that last bird got killed. It’s over. That dog don’t hunt no more. We’re not going back there.

So what are we going to do with what we’ve got in front of us? I know the government is not giving this serious consideration because they’re all looking really cranky over there, but you should.

Mr. Rodney: What?

Ms Blakeman: There it is, a big smile – thank you so much – from Calgary-Lougheed.

You should because this issue has been a particularly bad one for this government. You haven’t come through it very well. The mud is still sticking to you on this one. You all have beautiful suits, and the mud just doesn’t go with the suit, right? You have got to figure out more positive ways to work your way out of this one.

What you gave us with Bill 8 is not strong enough. It is not addressing the very high cost that people are paying. It’s not addressing the reliability. We had absolutely reliable delivery of power, and ever since the government did this, we get brownouts, we get blackouts, we get points where too many generators come offline, and we’re paying $300 a kilowatt hour. I mean, come on. You should have been able to do a better job than that, and you didn’t. Bill 8 is not going to dig you out of the hole that you’re in. It’s not going to take the mud off your lapels, and it’s not going to make Albertans think any more kindly about you around electricity. I think you should have tried harder and gone further on that one.

I do agree with and I am willing to support this amendment from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for having made an attempt to try and capture some of the most egregious omissions and commissions that were made with bills 50, 36, and 19.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to that. I really appreciate it, and I look forward to hearing from the other side.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on amendment A1.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak in favour of this amendment. In my previous life, before this political life, I spent 35 years as an electrical contractor, as a journeyman electrician, then a master electrician, and then I operated my business for 35 years. So this whole issue of electricity and transmission and generation and so on has been very interesting to me. When we first deregulated the system, being a true conservative and believing in the whole business situation, I was encouraged by it. I thought this was probably a good way to go. I've since learned that governments don't do business very well, so again free enterprise should be able to handle this whole situation. Over the years since we first deregulated this system, we've all watched our power rates increase significantly, and that started to concern me, but businesses have to make a profit. To get that service and keep those businesses operating, they need to make a profit. Granted.

Bill 50 really set off the alarm bells. When it first came in and I looked at all these proposals, I thought, oh, my God. What are we doing here? Number one, I'll go back to land rights and property rights again. They seem to have been thrown out the window so that we could get these critical transmission lines in place. I started paying attention to what was going on a little more, and about that same time as Bill 50 came in, we started to get information that the coal-fired generation plants in Wabamun, west of Edmonton, were close to the end of their life cycle.

In fact, my numbers may be a little bit off, but roughly 600 megawatts of power generation was shut down in the Wabamun area. At the same time as that happened, we saw Enmax build a gas-fired generation plant at Crossfield. Now Enmax is in the process of building an 800-megawatt plant east of Calgary in the Shepard area. You don't have to be much of a mathematician to realize that we've shut down 600 megawatts of power in the Wabamun area, and we've created just over a thousand megawatts of power in Calgary, which will be enough to effectively shut off half of Calgary on demand on that line. We need to see a needs assessment done on this line because the math just doesn't add up, folks. It just doesn't add up.

Then they recommended DC lines. I'll get to DC lines a little further down here. What was really troubling was that this $16 billion to $20 billion build-out was just handed to two companies: no competitive process, no bidding process, nothing. You can imagine that if a $16 billion to $20 billion contract was put out on the street, it would attract bidders from around the world. There is no question with a contract that size. Not only that, they were guaranteed 9 per cent profit. There was no – absolutely no – incentive for any cost control whatsoever. Even the advertisements that we all saw on our TV sets and in our newspapers and everything else – we paid for that – and those companies made 9 per cent profit on those commercials to brainwash us. That, my colleagues, is unheard of anywhere else. It's unheard of.

They did put in a cost control committee, if you will, to supposedly oversee this. As I understand it, the government approved just over a hundred million dollars for preparation to build these lines. The cost today is over $1 billion. There's no cost control. In fact, the mandate of the cost control committee is not to interfere with the installation of these power lines. So where is the cost control? You and every Albertan are going to pay the price for that.

If our power bills react in the way that we're told they're going to react – if you're a business owner in Alberta, if you're a manufacturer and you manufacture widgets or whatchamacallits or whatever it is and that process is highly electricity dependent, if you use a lot of power, you're going to have two choices to make in the future. Those two choices are going to be to pick up your marbles and go to Saskatchewan or B.C. or you're going to cogenerate.

In either case who's left to pay the bill when these industries leave Alberta? Who is? All Albertans are left on the hook. Mom and Pop are going to be left to pay the bill because these guys are going to be long gone. That's a fact. The Industrial Power Users group uses by far the most electricity in Alberta. They're going to be the ones that are most impacted by this. Yes, Mom and Pop Albertan will be and seniors, seniors' homes. That's all going to be impacted in a very, very negative way. We need to get a handle on this and do it right.

I would hope that in the future – just before I make that statement, I'll refer back to (2)(b). It reads:

Whether the need of Albertans for critical transmission infrastructure can be met by the application of non-wire solutions or,

read into that cogeneration, in any less expensive but equally satisfactory way, such as upgrading an existing line, building electrical generators closer to [where] the load [is required] and programs to reduce the load.

I've talked to several people in my riding, especially farmers and ranchers because they're quite able to do it, who say that if this happens, they'll just go right off the line and start producing their own electricity with gas-fired generation plants. They will do it.

I would encourage anyone who has an interest in this to google Bloom Box, bloom just like the flower. It's a home generator, and it's very, very quiet. It makes about as much noise as your average air conditioning condenser. It's expensive, $15,000 roughly, but if I was a young person building a home that I expected to live in for 10 or 15 years, I wouldn't think twice about it. I would just go off the line. That's going to happen more and more and more, the more onerous the bills we inflict on people. So that's very, very important.

I'll just read some comments here. You may hear a lot of terminology mentioned during the debate in reference to AC power versus DC power and far too many acronyms to mention. What you need to remember is what is printed on your electric bill: watts. A generator produces watts of power. The transmission company transmits watts of power. Distribution companies sell watts of power to consumers, and we all purchase watts. Whether it's megawatts, kilowatts, or milliwatts, a watt is a watt is a watt. If you have no idea what is being talked about in the debate, just say watt and you'll be back on track.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Rowe: Watt.

Generator companies generate electricity as alternating current. The power is delivered to consumers in the form of alternating current, or AC. All of Alberta's transmission lines and distribution lines are designed to carry AC power. Transmission lines are high-voltage electrical lines and distribution lines are low-voltage electrical lines. Why then is Alberta proposing to build two high-voltage direct current lines for transmitting electrical power from Edmonton to Calgary if everything is designed for AC power?

High-voltage direct current can be highly efficient alternatives for transmitting bulk power and for special-purpose applications, particularly over great distances. Whether or not high-voltage DC technology is a correct technology to use is a function of many variables. That said, it is well established and accepted in the industry that HVDC technology only has an economic break-even point at roughly 600 kilometres or more. Stated another way, to even consider using HVDC technology, the proposed project length should be a transmission line greater than 600 kilometres or more in distance or length; otherwise, it just doesn't make economic sense. The two HVDC transmission lines being proposed in Alberta are 330 kilometres and 500 kilometres respectively. Both are well under the break-even threshold of 600 kilometres.

I would hope that in the future our grandchildren are not driving down a highway one day and looking at our transmission lines, that we still owe money for, and viewing those in the same way that we view telegraph lines down old railway beds today. That's not such a stretch. Who would have thought 15 years ago that we would be using these things in the manner that we're using them today. Imagine your life without this wireless communication. That's what we could be looking at in the future, folks, not $20 billion power lines that Mom and Pop are going to be left to pay for.

This is a very, very serious issue. All Albertans need to pay extreme attention to this because it's critical for the future of Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Now I'll recognize the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I wasn't expecting to be in the Legislature this early in the morning. I think we're now in our 15th hour of debate on one of what will ultimately be three bills that the Official Opposition and members of other opposition parties believe need to have significant amendments to in order to make them right.

The amendment that is before us on Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, is, I think, the only way that we are going to truly correct the problems that were created when Bill 50 was passed, inappropriately in our view, inappropriately in the view of many watchers of the electricity business, inappropriately in the view of landowners. Bill 8 as it was put forward demonstrates, I think, that they're at least recognizing they made a mistake when they passed it in the first place. But to truly undo the damage that was created when Bill 50 passed, we need to also pass the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Before I get to the meat of this amendment, I do just want to talk a bit about process. As a new MLA, a new Member of the Legislative Assembly – and I speak, I think, on behalf of many of my colleagues who are new in the Legislature – we actually took the words of the Premier at face value when she was running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party a number of years ago. I find it remarkable that we are in a position now where we have a government that is prepared to go through and make the exact same mistakes as they've made in the past. I think that this is contrary to what the Premier promised Albertans. I think this is contrary to what we in the opposition expect. I think it's contrary to what new members, not only on this side but also on that side, expected that their Premier would do once she won another majority government.

I want to read a column from the Premier that was written in August of 2011, and I think it goes directly to the issue of what we're facing today. We've got an amendment before us to correct a piece of legislation that was passed in haste, that was a mistake, and now here we are years later having to come back to correct it. What the hon. Premier noted in her leadership campaign was:

We need to change how we make decisions. We must make time and processes available for consulting with Albertans before we pass laws. That doesn't mean every Albertan will agree with every decision, but there will be time to learn about the issue and [there will be time to] weigh in.

We need to change how the Legislature and MLAs operate. More free votes so MLAs can reflect constituents' views...

and, importantly,

... more time between proposing and voting on legislation. This was a commitment.

The Deputy Chair: Could you please table that document that you just quoted from at the appropriate time?

Ms Smith: I will be happy to table the document at the appropriate time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Now, I think that if you look at the manner in which the opposition and the new MLAs have been conducting business in this Legislature, you'll see that we genuinely thought that we would be doing business in a different way. There have been, I think, 700 pages, if you count Bill 7, of legislation that have been dropped on this Legislature to go through, review, for us to identify amendments, to debate as a caucus. We are now in our fourth week of debating these issues. In that time, when I look at the way in which we have been able to work constructively with the government, we look at, for instance, Bill 1, where one of our own members, the Member for Calgary-Shaw, was able to propose a number of amendments. One of the amendments was duly debated. It was discussed, it was agreed to, and it was ultimately passed. I think it made the bill better.

It's I think a credit to this Legislature when you look at how that bill passed through its different processes, where the government gave due consideration to the amendments that we put forward. Again, as the Premier said: we may not agree on everything, but we can agree on some things. In that case we did agree on some things. We improved the bill, we made it better, and when it passed, my recollection is that it passed with unanimous consent of this Chamber. Every single party felt that they could support that bill. That to me is the way this Legislature is supposed to work. Again, we may not agree on everything.

I can go to looking at Bill 3, another example where the opposition put forward multiple amendments. One of them was put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, working with the whip on the other side to put forward an amendment that would strengthen the provisions for our schools to be able to deal with issues of weapons on school grounds, to deal with drugs on school grounds. This to us and I think to all of the members in this Chamber was an important amendment. It was debated, it was discussed, it was agreed to, it was given due consideration, it was passed, and I think it made the legislation better.

Now, not all of our amendments were agreed to. We know that the Education minister spoke at length about why he opposed many of the other amendments that were put forward by the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. But the point is that the process in that case worked. We put forward our amendments. We debated them in the light of day without having to go through a full evening session where no one got any sleep. We had respect on both sides of the Chamber. I understand that the debate got heated from time to time, but we were able to debate it, we were able to look at the amendment appropriately, we were able to come to an agreement, we were able to improve the bill, and, ultimately, it passed.

I wasn't here when it was passed because, again, I think it was passed in the wee hours of one of the evenings. I would have liked to have been here, to have been able to have a final moment to be able to discuss that and to lend my support to it and to vote on it. Again, this is an example of how you can work together collaboratively, come to a conclusion, and pass the legislation in a way that I think respects all of the members in this Chamber.

Now, last evening, I don't know how things got off the rails. I thought that our House leader and the House leader of the party opposite were working pretty well together getting legislation through this Chamber. I thought that there was an agreement, some mutual respect, some understanding that the members on this side of the Legislature take the issue of being serious parliamentarians seriously. We read the legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'll just remind you that we need you to be speaking to the amendment.

Ms Smith: Absolutely. As I said, this is all related to the fact that we have different processes that worked for dealing with amendments that improved the bills. This is what we are attempting to do with this amendment that we've put forward on Bill 8. We are attempting to go through a similar process that successfully managed to improve Bill 1 and get our support, that managed to improve Bill 3 and get our support. We think that if the government takes that same approach in dealing with this amendment as the way that they dealt with our previous amendments, with respect, with due consideration, we may be able to improve this bill in a way that will not only satisfy the needs of our constituents but also will satisfy the needs of the constituents of the members opposite.

I think you can't talk about this amendment until you talk about why this process has become so dysfunctional in the course of 15 hours. I don't know what occurred over the course of the last 15 hours that has caused us to go from a process that was working reasonably well to going towards a process that is not working for any of us and which, I think, violates the spirit of what the Premier had suggested when she talked about slowing legislation down, when she talked about having a process where we could take time between readings, where she talked about free votes and giving due consideration. I, frankly, haven't seen that. I'm once again wanting to support my colleagues on this side in the fact that we have been constructive in developing a process that we think leads to better legislation.

Last night there were an additional four bills that passed. The home warranty legislation passed which, once again, is one that did not receive a lot of push-back from other members of the opposition. We had issues with Bill 6, the fact that they were increasing the fines extremely without putting those dollars into a special fund to be able to deal with the victims of those violations. We think that could have made the bill better. There wasn't an opportunity for us to be able to amend it, but we certainly spoke to it and made that point. Another piece of legislation that passed, Bill 9, was the bill where we were dealing essentially with some housekeeping issues in dealing with changes to the corporate tax structure. Bill 10, the Employment Pension Plans Act, again allowed for our oversight bodies to have a greater purview to look at a range of pension plans.

Once again, I believe that the opposition members have put forward amendments, they had them debated, there was due consideration. We didn't get our way on all of those amendments, but at least we felt that there was due consideration being given to these bills. Unfortunately, again, something happened in the last 12 hours, and I'm not quite sure what it was. We're not seeing, I don't think, a level of respect and decorum for the process, that was promised by the Premier when she ran for the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

I'm glad that the Deputy Premier is here. I'd kind of like him to give me a display of the kind of behaviour that we saw last night. Maybe I'll model it. My understanding is that as our members were speaking, he was doing something like this and actually handing pieces of paper back to others so that they can go like this. [Ms Smith scrunched a piece of paper] I think there were a couple of hon. members from the other side that were doing things like this as we were speaking. [Ms Smith tore a piece of paper]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please address amendment A1.

Ms Smith: I'm just trying to understand what we're going to be experiencing today as we debate these amendments. I'm trying to understand whether the hon. members opposite take this process seriously. We have discussions in this Chamber about bullying. I have been to events in the last couple of weeks talking about bullying. The behaviour that I am seeing on that side towards these hon. members is outrageous, the fact that they're sitting here now pretending that they didn't behave this way last night.

I can tell you that what this does is that it diminishes the process. When we come here and we are putting forward hours and hours of our time to go through and read these bills, we are putting forward hours and hours of our time to go through and talk to stakeholders, hours and hours of our time to go through and draft amendments to come here to debate them, that is the behaviour that we see on the other side. Now that we're in the light of day, maybe the Deputy Premier isn't going to behave that way. But I think the media, I think the public need to understand that we have a government that does not take this process seriously. That, I think, is the biggest shame. I do not think that is raising the bar.

What would we do if we were elected? We talked about doing something quite a bit different on the process, and I think what we had proposed was very much in line with what the hon. Premier proposed as well: taking the time between amendments, taking the time to go back and consult, taking the time to make sure that we get the legislation right. We would not be here today addressing this issue and addressing this amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre if the government had actually had a different process, where we would be able to go through and properly assess legislation, talk to stakeholders, and be able to get an appropriate result.

On the issue of this particular amendment one of the reasons why it is coming forward now is because the government once again took a half measure in how they were trying to assess and deal with the problems that they brought forward because they passed inappropriate legislation in the first place.

I'm going to read into the record a column that was written and appeared in the Calgary Herald which quotes the Energy minister. It talks about the reason why we need to go back, pass the amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and actually fix this bill once and for all.

[The Energy minister] introduced legislation to repeal controversial Bill 50, but he says the law that empowered cabinet to approve $8-billion worth of critical transmission projects without a public hearing was necessary at the time.

He said Tuesday it was not a mistake to pass the Electric Statutes Amendment Act to seize that power from the Alberta Utilities Commission in 2009.

"Different times; different needs," he told reporters at the legislature.

"Now it's important that we send this responsibility back to the Utilities Commission. The decision to pass that bill to move forward with that critical infrastructure was needed at the time it was done by the government."

The law, which sparked outrage across the province, enabled cabinet to give the green light to five transmission projects, including two high-voltage lines connecting Edmonton and Calgary – worth more than $3 billion – as well as a $400-million line into the industrial heartland northeast of Edmonton.

Now, I'll go on referencing this once again because it goes directly to the point.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you will table that document as well at an appropriate time?

Ms Smith: I'm happy to table this document.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Ms Smith: It goes directly to the point that this amendment is trying to address. We have acknowledged in our second reading of this bill that part of what occurred when the bill was being drafted, debated, and what's happened today is that the world has changed. Bill 50 was created in a world where we thought that we would have cheap and plentiful coal-fired production into the foreseeable future, where we would see natural gas prices remain sky-high in the double digits, where in this province we were even looking at other potential options.

I recall going up to the Peace Country and talking to a number of people who were concerned about the creation of a new nuclear power plant, with 4,000 megawatts of power. We know that there have been discussions, potentially, about bringing hydro power online.

What has happened between the time that this bill was introduced and crafted, the time that the hon. Energy minister talks about, is that the world has changed. Now, they recognize one portion, that the world has changed to the point where we have to go back and allow for the Alberta Utilities Commission to do a full independent needs assessment. We completely agree with that. We, in fact, felt that we should not ever have taken that power away from the Alberta Utilities Commission because if we had maintained that power with the Alberta Utilities Commission and we had given an appropriate oversight of these various projects that were approved by cabinet fiat, by legislation that allowed the cabinet to make these decisions, we wouldn't be in the position we are in today.

We, actually, would likely have a number of statements on the record by a number of different groups that would either affirm the government's position that, indeed, this critical infrastructure is necessary, or it would reject the government's position and support the position that we have heard from multiple landowner advocates, multiple property rights advocates, multiple consumer association groups. We simply think the government made two mistakes, not only in removing that regulatory process, but the second mistake was thinking that they were power engineers and could figure out what the power needs of this province would be on a go-forward basis.

Now, let's remember what we're hearing now. We're now hearing that at the time the reason why they said that we needed this transmission production was because of the fact that Calgary would be in the dark, that the lights would go out, that we would have blackouts. Well, now what we're hearing is that the argument has changed. Now the argument that we hear is that the reason we're building it is because we're actually building out 30 years into the future. So what has happened is that, yes, the world has changed – and the government has recognized that – but rather than correct the true error that they made and take these projects and put them back to the Utilities Commission for a proper review, they're trying to change their argument to justify why they're going to burden consumers and industry with the cost of building a bunch of additional transmission lines that we simply don't need.

We believe that by putting forward this amendment to repeal section 41.1 and replace it with the following, we will be able to accomplish this task. So 41.1(1) in the amendment that we're proposing would state that "a transmission facility designated as critical transmission infrastructure under section 41.1 of this Act as it read immediately prior to the coming into force of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, shall be reviewed by the . . ." [Ms Smith's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Good to be back in here. I'd like to thank the opposition leader for a wonderful speech. That was music to the ears. [interjection] The Deputy Premier is showing all the class that he has, so much class. The Deputy Premier, beloved by all.

This bill, Bill 8, and the amendment, of course, that we're talking about here are an attempt to fix this disaster. This bill is a very frustrating piece of legislation because it's saying: "We admit that we did something wrong. We admit that, in fact, we made a mistake by granting powers to our cabinet, that they were all of a sudden pronounced mechanical engineers, power engineers, that they all of a sudden had all this expertise to decide what was needed in this province with regard to power by circumventing the independent needs assessment process, which had been put in place for years." This is a frustrating bill. It's a very frustrating bill.

How can a government on one hand go out there and say: "You know what? We made a mistake in giving cabinet those powers, but even though we used those powers to approve $16 billion in transmission lines, we're going to go ahead with those mistakes. We're going to go ahead with those $16 billion in transmission lines, but we're going to take away the power we gave ourselves in order to do that?" I mean, honestly, if it wasn't so serious, if it wasn't so expensive for our seniors, if it wasn't so expensive for our corporations and businesspeople and the people that have businesses and own small businesses, it would be funny. But, unfortunately, it's not funny because of how expensive this is. It's just shocking.

I remember, when I was a member over on the other side, that this issue did come before caucus, and it was actually a pretty divided caucus at the time. You'll remember that, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. It was actually very divided at the time between those who felt that Bill 50 was a good bill that needed to go forward and those that did not. In fact, it barely – barely – passed caucus. I remember very clearly then Minister Morton voting very strongly and speaking very strongly against the bill to build these power lines. I also spoke against it and voted against it, as did many others in that caucus at that time. Unfortunately, it went through regardless.

Then later on we saw that same minister become the Energy minister, and then all of a sudden he was in favour of it, after being in a position to do something about it. But, you know, we can't be hard on that individual because it happened with so many folks over there who said one thing and then, instead of standing on their principles, did not. [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: Well, we're talking about principles. That doesn't include the Deputy Premier, guys. I mean, jeeppers, calm down. We're talking about principles here.

It's very imperative, I think, that this government account. There has to be a reason why you would say that you shouldn't have given yourself a power, but you use that power to do a bad thing, in our view, and then you take that power away and say: oh, sorry; we shouldn't have given ourselves that power, but we're still going to go ahead with the bad thing. This is wrong. It is just absolutely wrong. You cannot justify doing this. We are talking about $16 billion in unnecessary transmission lines.

Madam Chair, once we start building these, there's no going back. There's no going back. Once they're built, they will go on power bills. They will have to be paid for by my family, by your family, by the families of everyone in here, by the seniors living on fixed income, by families that have, you know, five kids and a single mom or a single parent at home struggling to make ends meet. It'll have to be paid for by that small business who is trying to eke out every last cent because it's so hard. The labour market is so hard, and they have to pay such high wages to their labourers, and then on top of it, they're going to have to pay these power bills. And we go on and on, and all of these different people are going to have to pay this. Then we're going to look back, and we're going to have this massive 16-lane highway that has four lanes of traffic on it. It's going to make no sense at all, and we're going to be paying for it. It doesn't make any sense, and it's wrong.

One has to wonder why. Why would the government do this? I mean, clearly there are intelligent people over there, right? So why would you do this? Think about this. Why would you base your assessment of what to build in 2012 on 2003 AESO statistics? The world has completely changed. Technology has completely changed. Growth rates have changed. Cogeneration technology has changed. Everything has changed since that time. We're in a totally different world with regard to the technology being talked about here, yet we're going off that. It makes no sense.

Right now the University of Calgary School of Public Policy, IPCCAA – I mean, we can go down the gamut of all the folks aside from AESO. They keep holding up AESO. Every single organization independent of government is saying that this is an overbuild, that it's not needed, it's expensive, it's going to cost too much, that we don't need it, et cetera, yet we're going ahead with it anyway. Honestly, I just for the life of me can't figure out why that is.

We know for a fact that Calgary has more than enough power supply because of the new Shepard plant that's coming onboard and a couple of others coming onboard. There's actually going to be double what is actually needed for the city of Calgary in coming years, especially when you tack onto that all of the incredible energy conservation efforts and cogeneration and everything that's going on, people putting their power back onto the grid.

There is going to be absolutely no need for these lines to keep the lights on in Calgary. Don't you think the MLAs from southern Alberta would be worried about power if that was a problem? Of course we would be. We would be the first people saying: you've got to keep our lights on down here, okay? We've got 15 MLAs south of Red Deer who are directly on the hook if the lights do shut off, so why are we sitting here saying that this is a complete waste? Because it is a complete waste. All of us are going to be the ones paying for it. There is more than enough power, and obviously there does need to be some upgrade of transmission on the grid, but we need an independent assessment process to help us understand what exactly that is so that we don't spend any more money than we possibly need to spend in order to get this done so that we can keep our power bills as low as they possibly can be.

Madam Chair, I think it's absolutely critical. I think there are folks over there – not all, but I think there are many over there – that do take this process seriously. I don't see how we can move forward in this Chamber and have any kind of reasonable debate when we are up till 11, 12, 1 o'clock in the morning as a matter of regular business, talking through business and then having 10 bills thrown at us in a two-week, three-week period to analyze them, then having leg. counsel draft up 50 amendments. Fifty amendments in that time. It's insane to be doing business this way. No other jurisdiction does business in this way. It's not normal. You don't come back for five weeks or six weeks – probably five weeks is what I think is being aimed at here, but six weeks at the most – to do 10 bills, sitting morning and night, morning and night, morning and night, and then last night coming right through nonstop. It's insane. You can't do it that way. How can we focus on amendments like this, Madam Chair, if we keep doing it this way? It's not parliamentary to do it this way.

I mean, we're going to have our disagreements and so forth, but the people of Alberta expect that bills are going to be debated in the light of day like this, and amendments are going to be debated in the light of day, that there's going to be a regular question period, that there's going to be a time for accountability and members' statements and introductions of guests and tour groups and so forth and all that stuff. That's what they expect their business to be like. They don't expect what this is devolving into.

I really do hope that in the next little bit we can get back on track, that we can kind of find ourselves again. Look, I mean, obviously we're down a track here where we have these evening sittings. I know the House leaders are going to be talking about this in the sessional break, about morning and night sittings, but this is ridiculous. This is insane. I mean, we cannot continue to do it this way. If we have to do it one night or maybe two nights a week to a specific time, a reasonable time like 10:30 or 11, that's reasonable. Anyway, maybe we can do that. If we continue to do what we're doing here, we're making a mockery of this process. We should do better, especially with a Premier that promised to do better.

You know, I bought into it, too. That's what's so funny about it. You have these hopes, and you listen to the stuff. Even I said: "You know what? I disagree with that Premier on a lot of things, but, darn it, maybe she's serious about transparency and changing the way we do business in the Legislature." It's gotten worse. It's gotten worse with regard to how we do legislation. It's like legislative sausage-making at its worst. It's icky.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please speak on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: That's why you get icky amendments from time to time. This is not an icky amendment, though. Let me tell you. It's a special, very good amendment.

Madam Chair, I just hope, again, that the government will reconsider, that they'll support this amendment, that they will get those power lines immediately stopped before any more damage is done, and that we will reconsider the gong show that we're in right now and start conducting our affairs in this place in a way that, you know, doesn't ruin the reputation of this House.

I mean, read a newspaper, guys. Read some of the letters that are being sent your way. You think Albertans are impressed with the way things are devolving right now, with all of the scandals and the lack of transparency and these bills that we were all looking forward to and what's been lacking? Anyway, I think that there are a lot of folks that are disappointed. Maybe not in every constituency, granted, but I really feel that this is making a difference, and I think you're going to start seeing real indications that things are unfolding in a bad way for the governing party here if this continues.

So, Madam Chair, with that, I will take my place and ask that we please reconsider supporting this amendment, that the government support this amendment, and that we get our act together in this House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate an opportunity to speak on this amendment to the Electric Utilities Amendment Act. I appreciate the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for bringing this forward. I think that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had an interesting insight into this Electric Utilities Amendment Act, talking about need both in the present and the future and building electricity generating capacity closer to where the electricity is being used.

Both the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and I dealt with this issue at considerable length a number of years ago when there was the proposal to build a high-tension line to the west of highway 2, running from Wabamun and then south through many areas, including this Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House area, down towards Calgary. While initially I was involved as the Energy critic here in the Legislature, responding to landowners' concerns around this high-tension wire, I started to become more aware of just what the provincial grid system was like here in the province of Alberta and what our needs and our electricity generating capacity actually were.

As I learned more, I realized that a lot of what the AESO was putting out very strenuously about the dire need to increase our capacity and the need for long-distance, high-tension wires across the province not only in the highway 2 corridor but across the eastern side of the province of Alberta towards Saskatchewan and so forth – a lot of it wasn't adding up, quite frankly, Madam Chair. Both the structure and the choice of transmission lines and the math around what our actual needs were in the province according to the AESO were actually not congruent with what we were finding in reality.

What I started to realize was that sometimes in regard to electricity, logic and reality are bent to meet the needs of certain generators and generating companies that have their own ambitions around producing electricity. As soon as we started to apply more pressure on the proposed western line through the Lavesta group and others and hearings started to pop up both in Red Deer and then later in Rimbey, we started to see that other generating companies – right? – started to look at it as a sign of weakness for that one proposal and started to propose their own generating proposals, then touting those as the correct way to move forward for our electricity industry here in the province of Alberta. There are lots of different ideas, lots of different versions of reality, not any of them necessarily meeting the needs of what was required for future public convenience and need.

That's why this amendment I think is so prescient. It reminds us of the confusion and the problems we have around a deregulated electricity market here in the province of Alberta. Electricity deregulation has not been good for consumers. It has not been good for sound, rational planning of our electricity grid here in the province over the last 20 years, and certainly it just adds a great deal of confusion for the future and for legislation such as is being brought forward here in Bill 8.

The root, I would suggest, of the impasse that we've come to here, Madam Chair, in regard to Bill 8 and in regard to electricity generating capacity and consumers being ripped off when they open up their bills every month is the fact that we don't need a deregulated electricity market here in the province of Alberta. We need some semblance of sane, rational, reasonable regulation like most other jurisdictions across the country and most developed nations around the world.

Electricity is not something that you can buy and sell like used cars and pizzas. It's an essential service that we live by as a modern, industrialized country. Right? We don't simply buy and sell them in the normal market circumstance, nor has any normal market circumstance evolved or come to pass as a result of these many years of a deregulated market. We were sold a bill of goods on electricity deregulation. We will not come to any reasonable resolution on legislation until we reregulate the market as it should be done and as it's been done in all other reasonable industrialized societies around the world.

It's not as though, as I say, a market has actually developed with any more diversity than we had before this inappropriate decision was made to deregulate the electricity market. It's not as though electricity is a product that you can simply buy and sell in the same way as you can other products, like I said.

Again, this amendment is very useful. This amendment I think speaks to the folly of our choice to be a deregulated market. Inside of it at least it tries to look at some bandages that we can put in place in the meantime. The idea of generating electricity where it's close to being used is an idea whose time has come. We had the high-tension line west of highway 2 going to Calgary and probably south to Montana to sell electricity to the United States as well, as it happens. When that was disapproved, we saw companies such as the local Calgary utility company saying: "Well, we will generate electricity. We will generate dozens of generators around the city of Calgary. We'll produce that electricity, and it'll be used close to where it's generated in the first place."

Every kilometre that you move electricity down a line, you lose a percentage of that electricity. It's gone. So the idea of shipping, let's say, coal-generated electricity from east of Edmonton to southern Alberta is not only absurd; it's highly inefficient. It does not speak to the physics and the science of electricity and how it decays over time when it passes through a line.

The other issue, of course, as I said, is that we have these different companies producing electricity and generating electricity each coming up with their own version of reality in terms of why we need these lines and where they should go. Again, if we are looking to the public interest and the present and future public need and convenience, as this amendment says, then perhaps we will inject a higher degree of honesty when different energy or electricity companies are touting their latest megaproject that inevitably probably needs public subsidy and an increase on our line charges on our electricity bills for us to pay for it.

Again, with the electricity line running west, which was eventually quashed, we saw all manner of absolutely abhorrent behaviour by not just the electricity company involved but by the AESO and other parties as well. At one point the public hearings were put behind closed doors for some trumped-up charges of potential violence or disruption and so forth. As an elected MLA I went down to Rimbey to participate in these public hearings, and even I was barred from doing so – I don't know why – because somehow someone put a rule in front of that. That was absolutely absurd, it was absolutely inappropriate, and it spoke to the fact that there was something really very wrong with what was going on on the other side of that door. I often still joke with some of the guards around here in the Legislature who were there in an unfortunate position, to bar people from going into those public hearings. Of course, you know, we joke because it was a useful and helpful thing for our cause because it hit the front page of the paper, and it became more apparent to the public how absurd the whole situation going on there in Rimbey was.

Just one more small thing about the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and I dealing with electricity is that we worked with a group that had sprung up and grew to quite large proportions along that corridor. That group, we learned over time, was infiltrated – get this, infiltrated – by a spy hired by the AESO to spy on us. I was part of that group as well. The AESO hired a spy to spy on a group of which I was a member. Right?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I remind you that you're speaking on amendment A1.

Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: That's why we need amendments like this – right? – to make sure that they don't stick spies amongst us. We caught that spy, the lawyer for the Lavesta group. We caught him in the bathroom, and after about two seconds' worth of interrogation, he confessed. He wasn't a very good spy. I guess they didn't get him from the top-shelf spy list that they might have somewhere. He confessed almost immediately.

An Hon. Member: You have to check your agent status.

Mr. Eggen: That's right. You only get what you pay for, apparently, when it comes to spies and private investigators.

Anyway, once again, I mean, a clear illustration of the absurdity of what was going on in regard to building this electricity line, which was not needed, between Edmonton and Calgary. Thank goodness for the citizens that live between Edmonton and Calgary that stood up to that. Thank goodness for the good work of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and all of the people in the Rimbey area who stood up to this nonsense of overbuilding high-tension lines for moving electricity over long distances here in the province of Alberta, losing that power along the way and probably aiming to ship that power right out of Alberta and sell it to the United States market. The whole thing was a car crash.

You know, we're trying to help the government here. That's what I really want to do. It goes to my best nature to try to help people, so I reach out to the Energy minister. We've worked a lot together on all kinds of different files. Here we are going from health to electricity. Who knows, Mr. Energy Minister, what file we might be working on together next? You never know. We could be doing justice or transport. I'm just saying that we've gone from health to energy. I'm trying to give you a hand here with this amendment. It's very useful.

Certainly, this is a very well-thought-out amendment to Bill 8. You know, I think another missing element we have here is that there's an electricity report out there somewhere. Wouldn't it be useful to have that electricity report so that we could actually put that missing piece of the puzzle into this so that we actually knew what was going on? Where is the future heading in terms of electricity? We've seen so many right turns, left turns, backups, car crashes on the deregulated electricity market in this province. Maybe it's time for us to sit down and take a long, sober look. Maybe we can reregulate some elements of our electricity market here in the province.

The last element which this amendment speaks to very clearly and succinctly is the fact that Albertans are tired of getting ripped off every month when they open their electricity bill and see all kinds of extra line charges, administrative charges, and a price variation which is like riding a roller coaster. People can't budget for their electricity and utility prices from month to month when they fluctuate so wildly, right? Then somebody comes along, some young people banging on the door and being quite rude, trying to sell you one of these packages, which everyone's sixth sense says: there's got to be something fishy about this.

An Hon. Member: Offering steak knives.

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Yeah, exactly. Using the same techniques that people use to try to bully you, to sell you some kind of cleaning liquids or something. Instead, they're selling you electricity, right? Lots of people that I've had to deal with in Calder come to me and say: did I do the right thing signing this thing under duress? I say: no; look at the clause and find a way to get out of that contract because you're just getting ripped off left, right, and centre.

We're left with having to be exposed to extraordinary electricity bills because things like the items that are mentioned here in this amendment are not being addressed in an honest and reasonable way. I know that the deregulated market is a long and tangled road, and it will take us a while to get out of it. I'm willing to acknowledge that, that we can't just turn it back with a stroke of a pen. But maybe with three or four strokes of a pen we can. Maybe over a very short, reasonable amount of time this same room and same Chamber that made the mistake of deregulating our electricity market can start getting back on the road to recovery. I know that people in my constituency would love that.

I know that almost nobody with a straight face can tell me that they actually benefit from a deregulated electricity market. I don't know. Maybe if you produce your own electricity somewhere and so forth, but even that is cumbersome and difficult. Maybe this amendment will help us to open the door for people to produce their own electricity and have it sold through differential pricing back onto the grid – right? – another huge missing link here in the province of Alberta that has been blocked turn after turn by the heavy-handedness of the AESO and under direction from this PC government.

We do have a net energy bill, but it doesn't have the means and the mechanism by which we can price different kinds of electricity appropriately so that it is affordable and makes economic sense for individual consumers and small businesses to start generating their own electricity and selling the excess back onto the grid. People say: "Oh. Well, other countries do it. How come we don't?" It's because they put solar energy and wind energy and geothermal energy on a different price level according to the value of it so that it makes it worth while for people to actually generate it. I could generate electricity in my place. I intend to do so when there's enough of a differential price so that I can have those solar panels functioning for my family and I could also sell the difference back to the grid and pay off the system over a reasonable amount of time.

That's what this amendment really talks about, too. It says, "building electrical generators closer to the load," and "the present and future public convenience and need" of our consumers here in the province, right? We have to think way ahead, and we have to think past the interests of the big utility companies who tend to write these laws for themselves. We have to start thinking about the consumers and the possibility that, in fact, we may be generating electricity in radically different ways than we are here today.

An Hon. Member: Have you got something against coal?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, I do in a way. I mean, coal has been generating electricity us for a long time, but clearly it's time for us to move away from the dependence on coal. We have the technology and means by which to do so if we choose properly.

Madam Chair, I'm really happy that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – he should get an acronym for that, really, shouldn't he? – has put this forward, and I will be very proud to support this amendment when the vote comes, if the vote comes.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thought it might be interesting to just start my comments once again on the amendment by reflecting on the practice of speaking at length. The practice of speaking at length to a piece of legislation has been an effective tool for delaying unpopular, contentious, or, in the cases we see with this bill, bad legislation. If you want to know where the first use of it came from, we see its first use in ancient Roman times. Cato the Younger, a Roman senator, would use the rules requiring senate business to be concluded by dusk by speaking continuously until nightfall. Quite interesting. One of the famous times that Cato used this technique was in 59 BC in response to a land reform bill.

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me. Hon. members, I know you're having some important conversations, but can we keep the level of noise lower, please? Thank you.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again, they may not believe this on the other side, but we actually are trying to give them an opportunity to correct a piece of legislation, that has caused them great grief for the last three years, through this amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Going back to an independent needs assessment is absolutely favoured by this caucus, is favoured by the landowners who have been advocating against this bill for some time, but it is not going to be enough for the consumer groups, especially the industrial consumer groups, who are still going to be harmed under the legislation as it is currently written unless we empower the Alberta Utilities Commission to go back and review these five pieces of infrastructure that have been passed by legislation without going through the proper process of scrutiny.

I'm still not quite sure why the government doesn't see that this is actually an opportunity for them to either get independent assessment and approval and validation of the decisions that they made, which will give them the ammunition that they need – and I'm sure they're confident that these transmission lines are needed. It will give them the ammunition that they need if on the table we have the Alberta Utilities Commission saying: "Yes, they're needed. Here are the reasons why. We've done the cost-benefit analysis." Right now we have a situation where we've got the government saying: "We're not experts in this field. We're looking at a report that was given to us in 2003. The world has changed because of the different prices for coal and natural gas, the different requirements on coal, but we're going to go ahead with it anyway. We've changed the rationale now for why we need them."

That is not going to fly with landowners, and it is not going to fly with consumer groups. If it is the case that we truly need those five independent transmission projects, the government should not have any fear of going through the regulatory process to assess and get the validation that they need. Once you have that independent regulatory approval, once you have the regulator saying, "Yeah, this is important critical infrastructure," I think that what they will find is that a lot of landowners will say, "All right, then." Right now landowners simply don't trust that the government has done the due diligence on this because the rationale for why we need these projects keeps on changing.

The rationale, as I mentioned before, initially began because they said we were going to be in blackout in Calgary in 2009. That clearly hasn't happened. Then there were reports that suggested that part of the reason this transmission needed to be built was so that it would enable the export of power, which, you can imagine, has a number of landowners very concerned that it's Alberta ratepayers who would be paying the price for lines that were ultimately to be able to give American consumers lower electricity costs.

I have to go back to when I first began to be introduced to the issue of electricity and the concerns that we had. I remember back in 2006 that the world was a different place. People were concerned. We had just been seven years into deregulation. As the Alberta director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business I was receiving calls from my members about the concerns they had about the cost of power. They were actually so concerned about the cost of power that we got involved with the government in trying to change the way the Utilities Consumer Advocate did its work.

What we were hoping to do as I was a representative for small business – and I think this was Bill 46 – was to be able to get an independent oversight body on the Utilities Consumer Advocate. It would have included a representative from small business through the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, it would have included a representative from the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, it included a representative from the REAs, it included a representative from the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, it included a member from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, all of whom were very concerned about being able to have an opportunity to intervene in a regulatory process to ensure that costs were reasonably shared, to ensure that we only built the amount of transmission that we needed, to ensure that there was oversight of the transmission line and distribution process so that we weren't having extra costs being built into the costs that would ultimately flow through to consumers.

I remember that at the time there were two associations that did not want to be part of this process. One of them was the Consumers' Association. There were a couple of lawyers there who were very, very concerned about all of the groups getting together to do a single intervention. The government was making the argument that by having a single intervention, it would streamline the regulatory approval process, we would be able to move forward ensuring that we weren't having overlapping arguments, we wouldn't end up with weeks and months and years of potential delays on these types of projects, and we would be able to ensure that we were also doing our work of protecting the consumers.

The other group, though, besides the Consumers' Association, that rejected this process was IPCCAA. They were the big, institutional representatives. The Consumers' Association and IPCCAA, like all of those other associations that I've mentioned – AUMA, AAMD and C, the REAs, the gas co-ops, and CFIB – had expertise on staff to be able to do their interventions at these rate hearings and also interventions when transmission lines were proposed. What was happening is that they were overlapping with each other, so the government wanted to streamline the process. The reason the Consumers' Association and IPCCAA did not want to be part of the process, though, is because they never believed that the government would truly make the Alberta Utilities Commission independent, and they worried that if they collapsed and moved into a government body and did not have that independence, ultimately what would happen is that we would go down the path, and the Utilities Consumer Advocate would not be able to be that effective voice for consumers.

I ended up opting out of this process because it seemed to me that they were going in the wrong direction. At the time CFIB chose not to continue with having a representative on this board. I can tell you that from what I've seen that has happened in the subsequent years, the Consumers' Association and IPCCAA were absolutely right because what happened through the process of Bill 50, when these transmission lines came forward and were approved by cabinet, is that we didn't hear the Utilities Consumer Advocate able to speak publicly about it. They commissioned a separate report, a separate report that actually confirmed what we heard all these other industry groups saying, all of these other consumer groups saying, that it was an overbuild that was unjustified. I feel badly that I didn't listen to the Consumers' Association and I didn't listen to IPCCAA back then. I actually trusted that the government believed that the regulatory process could be streamlined, that all of the interests would be listened to and heard, that the consumer interests would be protected. What we've seen in the subsequent years is that that hasn't been the case.

I suspect part of the reason why the government is not seriously considering the amendment that's been put forward by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is because they've lost control over the costing process, especially for the two HVDC lines that are being proposed for the west as well as for the east. I recall reading a report that was provided to me by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre where the regulator had actually approved a certain amount of costs for the preconstruction and all of the pre-engineering work that needed to be done on these two lines, and they'd received approval for about a couple hundred million, if my memory serves me correctly, of construction costs. What actually happened, though, is that these two companies went ahead and invested well over a billion dollars in both of those two transmission line projects.

Here's the thing. If this is the case, that part of the reason why the government is fearful of going back to the drawing board on these lines is that they're not going to be validated and approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission and they're worried that they're going to potentially have to break contracts with those two transmission line companies, my view is that it's better to compensate those companies for their sunk costs now and limit your liability rather than potentially go through with projects that we don't need and impose tens of billions of dollars of costs on ratepayers.

I will have more to say about this, Madam Chair, but I think maybe if we did a motion to adjourn and came back to this later this evening, that might satisfy everyone. I'm prepared to make the motion to adjourn, to do that so that we can move on to Bill 2. I will then abridge my comments and hope that we can return to this later.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, did I understand that you did make a motion to adjourn debate on this amendment?

Ms Smith: I did not.

The Deputy Chair: You did not?

Ms Smith: No. I was prepared to do that, but I gather that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona wants to say a word or two on this. I may resume my comments later.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to this amendment to Bill 8 put forward by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I want to say that I'm in favour of this amendment. Now, I need to sort of put it in the context, of course, that this amendment is an attempt to fix a flawed system, and, as we've already said in a number of different contexts, there are much more substantial changes that we could make to correct those flaws and to bring about a better outcome for Albertans in terms of the delivery of electricity services throughout the province. Having said that, though, and understanding that this bill has gotten quite a bit of debate thus far, I think that this amendment by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre attempts to make the system less flawed, shall we say, Madam Chair.

As we know, I mean, Bill 8 as a whole is a bill which is essentially a half measure – and I would suggest not even a half measure; it's a fraction measure – to address the tremendous insult perpetrated upon the people of Alberta through this government's introduction of Bill 50 back in 2009 wherein they, not uncharacteristic of this government, brought to themselves great authority into cabinet behind closed doors to make a whole bunch of decisions that had wide-ranging implications for all Albertans, quite frankly, and to make those decisions behind closed doors. This bill removes some of that authority from this government.

Now, it's interesting that as far as I could tell, they'd never actually utilized this section, that, in fact, they used their authority through cabinet simply to establish the schedule. As far as I can tell, this particular section that they're eliminating was never actually used to do anything above and beyond the schedule, which was also included in Bill 50, which remains completely unaddressed through Bill 8. So the establishment of the six projects as critical transmission infrastructure through the schedule, which also were immune from any kind of public consideration around what is public interest, remains in place, Madam Chair, and the elimination of the one part of the bill doesn't have an immediate impact on the injustices perpetrated against the people of Alberta through the government's initiative.

Nonetheless, what this bill is attempting to do and what this amendment is attempting to do is inject some greater consideration of the interests of Albertans into the deliberation around those projects which are listed in the schedule as well as any future projects. It is an attempt to compel the government to truly consider what is in the best interests of Albertans and to do so by specifically highlighting the kinds of issues that the commission needs to attend to. That is a very valuable introduction into this deliberation because up until now, Madam Chair, that kind of work has not been done either by the cabinet or by the AUC.

One of the things our party has called on the government to do separate and apart from this is to make the AUC much more independent of industry and also to change their mandate and the mandate of that very body to ensure that they must represent and make decisions in the public interest by injecting the set of criteria which are included in 41.1(2) of this amendment. It's an effort to do the same kind of thing that our caucus has called on the government to do and represented to Albertans that we would do as part of our energy policy, which is, as I say, to insist that the AUC do a much broader consideration of what constitutes the public interest in deliberating on these projects.

Now, I think it was the Member for Edmonton-Calder who made the very basic comment that electricity is not simply a commodity that we buy and sell in Alberta like other commodities. In fact, electricity is a fundamental need for all citizens of the province and, therefore, as with other utilities, we need to do a job of ensuring that it is accessible and affordable and well managed not only for those hoping to make a buck off it but for those citizens who simply need it as part of their daily living. As things stand right now, we've not been doing a very good job of it.

Other speakers have pointed to the historical policy initiatives of this government wherein they shifted the obligation to pay for transmission infrastructure from the companies hoping to make the money off of it to local ratepayers. Of course, those local ratepayers will then be paying the cost of the infrastructure used in some cases to transmit that particular commodity outside of the jurisdiction, which is a ridiculously unfair situation for Albertans, particularly given that we have such a generous corporate taxation policy in this province. Those corporations who make incredible amounts of money with our natural resources are not through any mechanism paying close to their fair share, so to then have Alberta consumers and Alberta industry pay the infrastructure costs of these corporations adds salt to the wound, shall I say.

Other speakers have also spoken about the fact that in (2)(d) we talk about having the commission consider "reasonable and economic operational alternatives to minimize system constraints, giving consideration to technical efficiencies, reliability and capital cost" and also under 41.1(2)(b) where we're talking about whether the critical transmission infrastructure needs can be met by other alternatives that are less expensive but equally satisfactory. Those clauses are there to get at the reality, which has been identified by a number of opposition members at this point now, that the energy delivery system in this province has evolved in a way that it is really questionable whether or not we need to build six transmission lines which could in many ways amount to an eightfold overbuild in our province.

Then the question becomes: well, what are the other things that we can consider, and what has changed? Many speakers have talked about that already. Of course, we have potentially the availability of more natural gas. We have the capacity to enhance our solar production and something that hasn't really received a tremendous amount of attention in the debate thus far, the ability to engage in conservation techniques.

I think it was in about 2008 that the Pembina Institute produced a report that talked about the trajectory of Alberta's greenhouse gas emission production, and they identified what most of us in this room know, which is that at this point, notwithstanding all the talk about the potential of the oil sands to remarkably increase our greenhouse gas emission production, really it's coal production primarily for electricity which is driving our province's greenhouse gas emissions. They focused their efforts on what could be done to create an electricity production system in Alberta that would significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions in those sectors and therefore reduce greenhouse gas emissions for all of Alberta and all of the world since, of course, it's something that goes over boundaries.

At the time they identified that the single biggest reduction in greenhouse gas emission production through coal use in Alberta could be achieved simply through restraint and conservation measures throughout the province, that simply by having the government invest in responsible conservation efforts, we could reduce our reliance on coal-generated electricity by 50 per cent by as early as 2025, I believe. Yet since that report came out, almost nothing has been done in that regard. Yet were language like that which is included in this amendment included in the level of consideration that the AUC had to engage in, we might actually be able to have some objective, science-based, balanced, well-thought-out conversations about how we proceed with electricity and energy generation and production here in Alberta. We might be able to use some of those assets that we have at our disposal to truly move towards a more renewable energy future rather than simply putting out press releases about how we'd like to but then never actually doing anything on it.

The members for Edmonton-Calder and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview reminded me that we've been talking for years about the need to consider feed-in tariffs in Alberta to promote local electricity generation mechanisms that would reward consumers, both industrial as well as residential, for making the investment in conservation and renewable energy use as opposed to relying on the energy that is generated through coal. This infrastructure, these six overbuilt lines, are pretty much all premised on the notion of increasing our coal production and electricity generation. It really confounds statements that were made in Disney-like press conferences by this government when periodically they suggest that conservation is a concern.

Having said that, though, it really does all come down to protecting the consumer in Alberta, Madam Chair. I do think that the subclauses in section 41.1(2) are pretty much all focused on, in one fashion or another, protecting the Alberta consumer. When we talk about protecting the Alberta consumer, we talk about doing it in a way that looks at, obviously, the price that we're compelled to pay and the degree to which that impacts on their daily lives. We also talk about the local consumer in terms of local business, in terms of what they need to pay to have businesses viable and productive within Alberta's economy. We also talk about other aspects which impact on the consumer. Again, we talk about social interests and long-term economic interests that indeed impact on how we manage the environmental risks that accompany increased energy production and development and energy use in Alberta.

All of these things are focused on consumer protection, Madam Chair. That is something that was lost completely in the Bill 50 discussion. It has been lost completely by this government in every decision they've taken around electricity production, distribution, and sale in Alberta right from when they chose to deregulate electricity and then download the cost of transmission infrastructure upgrading onto all consumers and then now with Bill 50 also jeopardizing the rights of private landowners and giving them very limited say in infrastructure development in and around the land which they own and in many cases are already using quite productively in other ways. In all cases it's really about consumer protection and compelling the AUC to listen to those needs, the needs, the interests of the average Albertan, the needs, the interests of our landowners, of our consumers, of those in our community who are concerned about the balancing that needs to be successfully put in place between energy development and environmental preservation.

Those are the considerations that need to go into deliberations on these projects, not simply direction by some major mega-electricity transmission corporation which calls up their friends in cabinet and says: this is what we want, and we're not really going to tell you why or where. Albertans need to be part of this conversation. They haven't been up until now except as engaged political citizens who have tried valiantly outside of this Assembly to get the attention of government. Unfortunately, as I've said before, I don't believe that Bill 8 really represents success in that regard because Bill 8 has absolutely no impact on the plan of action that was crafted by this government without consultation or consideration of Albertans' needs. That plan will continue to go full speed ahead regardless of Bill 8.

This amendment would ensure that going forward a much more qualitative form of deliberation would occur and a much more collaborative form of deliberation would occur with respect to our electricity production and delivery system in Alberta. For that reason we do congratulate the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for proposing this amendment, and we are very pleased in the NDP caucus to support it.

With that I will end the conversation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers who wish to comment or speak on amendment A1 for Bill 8?

The Deputy Chair: Hon members, we now have under consideration in committee Bill 2.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I love your efficiency, but I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 8.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

The Deputy Chair: We are debating amendment A19. Are there any members who have any comments or who would like to speak to amendment A19, Bill 2?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Calling the question in committee on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, amendment A19.

[Motion on amendment A19 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have another amendment that I would like to put forward. I have the recommended number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while that amendment is being distributed.

Seeing that the majority of our members have a copy of amendment A20, I would ask the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to continue.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment that I'm putting forward deals with part 2, Applications, Hearings, Regulatory Reviews, and Other Proceedings. It's under Applications to Regulator, section 30. I will read my amendment.

30.1(1) A decision on an application made in accordance with the rules must be made by the Regulator not more than 180 days after the application was received by the Regulator.

(2) The Regulator may, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, make regulations establishing a different period of time in which decisions on types of applications that cannot reasonably be processed in 180 days may be made.

Now, in my discussions with the hon. Energy minister these last few weeks we talked a lot about timelines. The whole theory behind this bill is timelines, shortening the timeline, shortening the process to get these approvals through, but there's nothing in this bill that states timelines. That's what this whole bill is about, timelines, but there are no specific timelines.

This amendment will hold the regulator accountable to the principle of this bill. It'll ensure that industry has certainty in the approval process, which is something that they want, they need, and is the reason behind this bill. If we don't state specific timelines, it gives the regulator the authority to make up timelines that may not be in the best interests of industry. Joining the two sectors and making them one for the one-window shopping is great, but if it does not improve the timeline process of the applications, then what good is it? You know, our fear is that it will create more red tape and a more strenuous application process that these energy companies must go through.

Now, we realize that there are different application procedures that must be followed for the different types of energy businesses out there, be it oil sands, shallow gas, multiwell pads. There are lots of different factors in this approval process. That's why we put in section 2, which will give the regulator the opportunity through the cabinet to make changes to set other specific timelines, but for the general shallow gas, conventional oil systems we feel that 180 days should be sufficient.

That's kind of the gist of my amendment, to actually put in some specific timelines, give these guys a little bit of meat to hold on to, and hold the regulator accountable for this bill that's trying to go through the House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm delighted to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I would just make note that we probably could have avoided being here throughout the entire night if the members opposite had been, I think, respectful of the process, acknowledged that this was the amendment that I was hoping to be able to speak to because I feel quite passionately about it. Now we've gotten, after a lot of lack of sleep, to the point where we were hoping to have been yesterday when the two House leaders began speaking.

I appreciate that the members opposite have allowed me the opportunity to be able to speak to this amendment because it is something that I think is missing from the current legislation. I do think that this will go a long way towards giving the energy sector the certainty that it needs when it comes through this approval process.

In the second reading on this bill I mentioned a couple of examples where the regulatory approval process had been excessively delayed, which I think was the reason why the Energy minister and the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development embarked on this process for how we might be able to reduce the regulatory timelines. One was an example where a company was able to get approvals in Saskatchewan in two hours but took nine months here. Another was a company that looked to get approval in Saskatchewan and got it within 54 days; it took over two years here. Another was an oil sands project that took nine years and 300 permits and licences and approvals to get through the process. This is the very nut of what it is that this bill is trying to accomplish.

Unfortunately, by failing to put in specific time frames for how the regulator is expected by this Legislature and expected by our elected members to proceed with and approve these applications, it has been left out of the bill. The way the bill is currently written, it gives all of that discretion and latitude to the regulator, and we wouldn't be in the position that we're in today if the regulator had demonstrated responsibly that it was able to proceed with these applications in a time frame that was reasonable for industry as well as respecting the needs of landowners and the needs of our environmental community and the concerns that they have.

When I was down in Montana, I talked with a number of people who were in their department of environment about the process that they went through for approving the leg of the Keystone XL pipeline through the state of Montana. It was very interesting when we began our conversation. They said, "Well, once we received the application, we had nine months to be able to dispense with it." I asked: "Where's this magical nine months? Where does that come from?" They said, "It is prescribed to us that we have to complete this application process within nine months." Now, there are different avenues that can go off that path, but what had happened is that it created a discipline among the regulators that they had to get all of their work done within a period of time. I think that that's the job of this Legislature. It's to actually set those parameters for the regulators and then have the regulators work towards that.

Now, I do recognize, as the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks pointed out, that it isn't a one-size-fits-all. We have talked to industry, and we understand that there are many, many different types of applications. For some you may only need four or five days to get approval for, to be reasonable. For others it may take longer, particularly with some of these oil sands projects. It may end up taking a year or two. This is why I think it has been crafted in a way that allows for the kind of flexibility that the minister believes he needs, which is allowing for cabinet to be able to make the different time periods and different rules, but it sets the overall objective that generally speaking we want the regulator to come up with a decision within 180 days, within six months, once an application has been submitted.

We think that this is a way for us to be able to set a certain amount of parameters that allow us to also have some measure of whether or not we're being successful. Once you've actually established that most applications should be completed within 180 days, then you're able to go back and assess how much success they had in doing that. I know that this is something that the minister wants to have in regulation. What I worry about is that if we leave it to the discretion of the regulator, we're not going to achieve the certainty for industry that we want. I would ask that the members opposite consider this amendment seriously. We think it is something that industry needs to be able to get the certainty that they need.

The only disappointment I would register. Myself and the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks have had lots of opportunity over the last week to talk with different associations. We've spoken with CAPP. We've spoken with CEPA. On Monday we spoke with the geophysical contractors. I know that the Freehold Owners Association is taking a look at this legislation, and they would like to have amendments. I am saddened that we are coming to the end of the process to amend this bill. I'll speak more about that when we get to the third reading. I think that because we rushed through it, because certain groups haven't been able to see the actual letter of the legislation and would have liked to have been able to make changes, we actually are shortchanging all of the associations that I think this bill is supposed to benefit. We're shortchanging the landowners, who remain concerned that their interests are not going to be fully protected and actually are seeing that some of the current rights that they enjoy are being rolled back, and the issue of public interest and the concern that the public has about making sure these decisions are made in the public interest, with due respect for the environmental concerns.

I'm worried that because we have raced through and I think the government has not given due consideration to the full range of stakeholder consultation that needed to be done once this bill was introduced, there are still going to be some serious problems with this legislation. To me, though, this one is an amendment that I can't see why the government would oppose. They've stated on the record they want to have timelines. I think it's the job of this Legislature to meet that expectation with the public, with the industry, that there are going to be some timelines. That's what this amendment aims to do.

I would ask the hon. members to register their support. I'll be voting in favour.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to comment or speak on amendment A20 to Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A20 lost]

Mr. Hancock: Perhaps, Madam Chair, if I could, unanimous consent to shorten the bells if there are any bells?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the bells be shortened.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: We will shorten the bells. They'll ring for 30 seconds and then one minute, and then they'll ring for another minute after that.

We are back on Bill 2. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm sure that the government will be very pleased that this is my last amendment. I do have the required number of copies I'd like to pass out.

The Deputy Chair: We'll just pause while that amendment, that will be known as A21, is passed out.

Seeing that the majority of our members now have the amendment, we can proceed. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks on amendment A21.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment that I'm proposing moves that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, be amended as follows: section 1(1)(r) is amended by striking out subclause (ii), and section 68 is struck out.

Section 68 currently reads: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make rules in respect of any matter for which the Regulator may make rules under this Act or any other enactment." This is probably the biggest statement in this bill. It doesn't really matter what rules the regulator makes, what rules the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Energy minister makes at any given time. They can come back and change it. This should bring a lot of uncertainty to the energy industry, knowing that these rules can be changed at any time. Now, I do know that that's the way it is in the ERC Act and the environment act, but as I stated before, just because that's the way it's always been done doesn't make it right. We need to have certainty in our energy sector, not as we see in Bill 8, that's put forward amending the electricity statutes amendment act. They're not experts in all facets of Alberta.

I'm sure there are many individuals on the government's side that are very well versed in the energy industry and have vast knowledge. But are they going to be the ones making the decisions, making these rule changes, making up these regulations? Don't know. Nobody really knows for sure. Throughout the years as the members change – and some may not come back; some may – the ability to change these rules will also change. This goes a long way toward what the government has been talking about, the openness and transparency. If we take this section out, then that regulator and the commissioners will be at arm's length from the government. I think that will go a long way to our energy industry and to the people of Alberta, showing that – you know what? – maybe we do have a regulator that can act on behalf of Albertans and not necessarily act on the wishes of the cabinet.

I would hope that you would look at this amendment and vote in favour. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers on amendment A21 to Bill 2?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A21 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on Bill 2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have provided the table with a copy of my amendment, and I believe people are distributing it now.

The Deputy Chair: We will pause for a moment, Member, while that amendment gets distributed.

Ms Blakeman: It's A22. Well, you know, it's got a nice ring to it.

The Deputy Chair: We can now proceed. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I am moving a motion written by my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo that is seeking to amend section 2(1)(b) in the act. It's attempting to do two things here. One is to set out a preamble, and the second is to as part of that preamble enshrine the concept of public interest.

Now, it is unusual to have a resource bill that doesn't have a preamble. While that preamble can't be argued in court – it doesn't have legal standing, unlike the rest of the bill – it really does help shape the context. For those that are trying to apply the bill, it helps them understand the direction that we, the Legislature, intended. To bring forward a resource bill without a preamble is, well, a little odd. We don't. We go straight from, you know, the usual "enacts as follows" straight into interpretation. We come out of interpretation, which is always the second section, and go into section 2(1), which is the mandate of the regulator.

The mandate of the regulator as it stands now under section 2(1), on page 8 of the hard copy for anyone following along, is

- (a) to provide for the efficient, safe, orderly and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta through the Regulator's regulatory activities, and
- (b) in respect of energy resource activities, to regulate
  - (i) the disposition and management of public lands,
  - (ii) the protection of the environment, and
  - (iii) the conservation and management of water, including the wise allocation and use of water.

We are proposing to add in a third subsection under that that would say:

- (c) to consider the broader public interest of Albertans including the energy, economic and environmental needs of those Albertans not directly affected by its decisions.

There are two things you need to know as part of this. One is that the phrase "public interest" would now be enshrined in the bill, and it is not in the bill, surprising because it has been in the previous bills. It is very strange. We've got two related things. There is no kind of preamble that sets out the course to be followed, and when we would expect to see something that was enshrining public interest to replace it, we don't have that either. What we're trying to do is essentially make a preamble out of that first section, the mandate of regulator, and in that to enshrine the broader public interest.

The second phrase that's important here is "directly affected." You've heard the arguments many times now in the House about the narrowing of the scope to which much of this applies, to only people directly affected, and how much concern that has caused. So if you live across the road from where the pipeline or the transmission line is going in, well, you may not have much standing, but if it's actually on your property, then you're directly affected. We wanted to make sure that we were getting that in there as well.

I should make note that I did consult the ablawg.ca, which is the University of Calgary Faculty of Law blog on developments in Alberta law. They have actually written a paper on this particular bill if anybody wanted to look it up and have a look at it. They do raise these two points, which I was very happy to see because it supported what my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo and I felt very strongly needed to happen.

In the case where there are conflicting interpretations and approaches, this particular amendment would give some context and direction for those that are trying to implement it and would put the phrase "public interest" and all of what that means back into the bill. It's fundamental to the current ERCB's mandate. It's surprising, but it's also unnerving that it has completely disappeared out of this bill, the Responsible Energy Development Act, and it hasn't been replaced with anything even close. So that's what we were attempting to do with this.

I don't want to take a lot of time because I know there's another amendment coming. I hope I can get your support in doing those two things. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak on amendment A22 to Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A22 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now on Bill 2. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll give the proper couple of pages of the amendment. There you go.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We'll pause as we distribute the amendment.

Hon. member, we can now proceed with amendment A23 for Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. What I'm proposing to do is to amend section 61, adding in section 61.1, which basically says that notwithstanding the rules made under 61(r), the rules under 61(r) shall not "limit the ability of the Regulator to award fair and just costs to an eligible person as defined under section 36(a)." I will just be brief on this. This government has always made it clear that it wanted to treat property owners, landowners fairly and justly. All this amendment does is put it into legislation in a prescriptive form.

Thank you very much.

12:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 21, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. For some of you, good morning.

Let us pray. Dear God, thank you for shepherding us through the various difficulties, deliberations, and decisions that engulf our daily lives and duties, and thank you for providing us with the stamina required to perform our daily chores for those whom we have been elected to serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Donald M. Hamilton
Former Ethics Commissioner

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is with profound sadness that I advise you that on November 14, 2012, Mr. Don Hamilton passed away. Mr. Hamilton had a long and distinguished career in public service, which many of you would know about. Most notably, he became an officer of the Alberta Legislative Assembly on May 28, 2003, when he took on the position of being Alberta's second Ethics Commissioner, a position that he held to the best of his abilities until May 27, 2008. During his term he served many functions, including being responsible for the implementation of Alberta's lobbyists registry. On your behalf, hon. members, I have already sent our deepest sympathies to Mrs. Mary Lou Hamilton, his widow, and to the Hamilton family.

Therefore, in a moment of silent prayer I would ask you to join me in remembering Mr. Don Hamilton as you have known him. Please rise. Rest eternal, Dear Lord, grant unto him.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the ministerial liaison for the government of Alberta to the Canadian Forces it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly six members of the Canadian Forces who are seated in your gallery. This group of six resident Albertans is drawn from regular and reserve elements of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army, and the Royal Canadian Air Force and collectively represents the services and dedication of the entire Canadian Forces. They are here on behalf of those who they serve with, so we may thank them on behalf of all Albertans. After all, it is important that we recognize the special and unique conditions of service of these individuals both here at home, in domestic operations, and when deployed overseas. These servicemen and -women contribute to our nation's defence and security needs and obligations with unwavering commitment and dedication.

Mr. Speaker, sitting in your gallery today – please rise as I introduce you – are Able Seaman Shawn Baker, Sergeant Richard Haggarty, Corporal Philip Millar, Master Corporal Rachelle Holland, Sergeant Brenda Woods, and Master Corporal Chad Smith. Earlier today on behalf of a grateful province and all of the members of this Legislature I was pleased to be honoured and distinguished to have lunch with these fine men and women of our forces. Please welcome them to this Assembly in our usual fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to introduce on your behalf your guests, who are seated in your gallery. I would ask them to rise as I call their names and to remain standing until they have all been introduced. Then I'll ask the Assembly to greet them together. Mr. Yash Sharma, managing editor of the Asian Tribune; Mr. Baldev Singh Jakhar, a veteran athlete at the provincial level visiting from Punjab; Mr. Harbans Brar, a retired public health engineer also visiting from Punjab; and Mr. Gurtafeh Brar, a partner with Bell Connections here in Edmonton. Hon. members, please join me in giving our guests the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members 12 grade 6 students from Lighthouse Christian academy. With them is their teacher, Mrs. Katrina Swart, and a proud parent, Mrs. Abigail Schimke. I met with this fantastic group of future leaders earlier today, and I can tell you that they were quite interested to know why we had been here all night and how that process exactly works. They were generally excited to watch the proceedings of the House. I will ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a long time since I actually stood up in this House. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House 17 grade 6 students from my hometown of Rimbey and the Rimbey Christian elementary school. Unfortunately, I didn't get a lot of time to spend with them due to the business of the House, but I'd like to thank them today for attending. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 61 brilliant students from Highlands junior high school in my constituency, where my son attended and graduated a number of years ago, as well as their teachers, Mallory Koberstein and Derek Lindscoog. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Spencer Dunn, a University of Alberta student. Spencer is studying bilingual political science because he believes that it will be an integral tool for Alberta in its future economic negotiations throughout Canada and the world. Spencer is also concerned that with amongst the highest tuition fees in the country Alberta students are graduating with higher debt, that Alberta has the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the country, and that government policy is hurting our industry, our economy, and the future of our young people. Despite this, Spencer is determined to push ahead and complete his program and perhaps become a future Liberal MLA in the House right here. I'd ask Spencer to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Calgary-North West.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Team Alberta, the national aboriginal hockey championships. Last April in Saskatoon Team Alberta won the silver medal of the 2012 national championship. Players on Team Alberta hail from all over this province: Sturgeon Lake First Nation, Frog Lake, Carry the Kettle, Sarcee, Bigstone, Fort McKay, Wabasca, Calling Lake, Fort Vermilion, Sucker Creek, Saddle Lake, Hobbema, Beaver, Gift Lake, Peavine, Jasper Cree, and many more. Composed of bantam- and midget-age aboriginal hockey players, Team Alberta competed against 12 other teams representing each province and territory in Canada. Last night the team was attending an Oil Kings and Swift Current Broncos junior hockey game and this afternoon had a chance to meet with myself, the Minister of Education, and the Associate Minister of Wellness. I had an opportunity to congratulate the team before question period. I hope they continue to enjoy their visit to the Legislature.

I would ask that coaches and executives Taylor Harnett, Justin Penner, Jack Wilson, Jon Armbruster, Clyde Goodswimmer, and all Team Alberta players please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the House three guests here at the Legislature for eye health day. The first is Mr. Brian Wik, the executive director of the Alberta Association of Optometrists; the second is Dr. Troy Brady, the director of internal communications from the Alberta Association of Optometrists council; and lastly, Dr. Aaron Patel, president of the Alberta Association of Optometrists. I ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of guests who are members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. These workers, representing nearly 90 licensed practical nurses, health care aides, housekeepers, and food service staff, have been locked out for almost five months. Their employer, Triple A Living, is subsidized by the PC government yet continues to pay wages up to 27 per cent lower than industry standard while making a healthy profit. Despite the cold weather their spirits are higher than ever, and they will continue their struggle until they get the deal they deserve. I would now ask my guests to rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: AUPE president Guy Smith, Gopal Ayre, Editha Spencer, Manjit Basi, Laxmi Chand, Milan Gauchan, Eric Ngai, Sushant Shrestha, Nicole Truong. I'll invite all members to join me in giving them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very special guest of mine, Dr. Bin Hu. He's a professor in the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Calgary and head of the division of experimental neuroscience at the Hotchkiss Brain Institute. Dr. Hu led an innovative team and produced some world-leading research in the area of Parkinson's disease, one of which is called AmbuloSono, which utilizes an iPod device to automatically link walking speed to music playing as an innovative way to treat patients with Parkinson's disease. He is here in the capital city today to discuss that. AmbuloSono is now running in six Alberta cities and includes patients living in several rural areas who have no access to specialized rehab and medical devices. This program attracts international attention and has been recently cited in Canadian Parliament's Standing Committee on Health as a successful example of research and a community-based approach to health and well-being. It has great potential to be implemented into the family care clinics movement that this government has led.

I'm looking forward to connecting him with the right department and professionals in this. Dr. Hu is in the members' gallery. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Legislative Process

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has tried to bully doctors. It bullies municipalities into donating to their party. It bullies landowners, and now it's trying to bully and intimidate the opposition into passing horrible pieces of legislation. This from a government led by a Premier who says: "We need to change how the Legislature and MLAs operate. More free votes so MLAs can reflect constituents' views. More time between proposing and voting on legislation." When will we see that change? Today? Sometime in the middle of the night tonight? Tomorrow? Ever?

Mr. Speaker, members of this Assembly on this side of the aisle are doing their jobs, reflecting the views of the people who elected them, proposing alternatives and adjustments. It's our job. It's a function the Premier referenced in a piece that she wrote when she was a candidate for the leadership of her party. She said: "We need to change how we make decisions. We must make time and processes available for consulting with Albertans before we pass laws." Now that she's the Premier, the time for lofty ideas, for generous interchange of ideas, for reflection of the wishes of the people is gone. There is no time. There's minimal consultation. There's a ramrod approach to the legislation: let's do it their way or no way. We say: enough.

Mr. Speaker, the democratic process matters. We are elected by Albertans to come to this Assembly and make sure everything that comes out of it is debated, vetted, tweaked, adjusted, and voted on to represent our constituents' views. That is how this is supposed to work. The arrogance of this government is astounding. Bills are introduced and passed in a matter of days. Amendments are steamrolled as though perfection has already been achieved. Committees are sidestepped. Consultation is ignored. This process has to stop. We cannot keep making laws like this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

New School Construction

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. New schools are being built all over this province, but they are quickly being filled up to overflowing. In my riding of Edmonton-Calder the Elizabeth Finch school is at full capacity after just two years. How can this be? Census data recognizes more than a thousand children in the area from zero to the age of four years. The information is there, yet still there's no proper strategy to build adequate space when these children reach school age. The only contingency plan this PC government has in place is to warehouse these students in the hallways of the school, in the gym, to bring in portables, or to increase class sizes in the school. Why didn't this government build larger schools with more module capacity, especially when modules are supposed to be a better solution than portables? And why did this government hide the details of these P3 contracts when they built these schools in the first place?

Mr. Speaker, is it fair just to jam more students into a classroom because of poor planning? If we continue on this trajectory, where are we going to find the space for students in full-day kindergarten and prekindergarten? Is this government just building new schools that are too small and inflexible in an attempt to suppress these long overdue programs?

Mr. Speaker, students, teachers, and the parents at Elizabeth Finch school will fight hard to expand the capacity of their school for the sake of their community but also for the sake of every school in this province that is overflowing and underresourced. This government has failed to respond to the challenges of early childhood education, increasing class sizes, changing demographics and communities, and the hardship of school fees for many families. It's time to make our children's future a priority and to get serious about making public education the foundation for all Albertans' future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Eye Health

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had the privilege of meeting with an optometrist from my constituency, and today many members of the Alberta College of Optometrists were here for eye health day in the rotunda of the Legislature Building. My constituents raised the important issue of the limitations of the scope of practice of Alberta's doctors of optometry. I believe that examining the wider scope that optometrists have in a few provinces and some U.S. states could benefit Albertans, and increasing that scope would allow optometrists to practise what they, clearly, have the education to do. This could include allowing them to give oral medication for eye disease treatments, removing the restrictions on glaucoma treatment, ordering lab tests and imaging, the removal of skin tags, and the use of optometric lasers to treat certain uncomplicated conditions of the eye.

Mr. Speaker, since the last changes to their scope of practice happened in 1996, this may be a good opportunity to really re-examine the changes that might better support practical, timely, and more efficient eye care for Albertans. One example that was brought to my attention is that a simple bacterial eyelid infection diagnosed by an optometrist currently has to be referred to a family physician or ophthalmologist for appropriate treatment if the treatment requires oral antibiotics.

Re-examining the scope of practice of optometrists would be an important step forward in allowing allied health care providers to practise to the full extent of their abilities and training, and that would be a valuable thing for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's not often the case that the Assembly sits right through the night, having started yesterday afternoon, having sat all afternoon, having sat all evening, having sat all night again, and having sat all morning this morning. That having been said, I'm sure that most of us are very tired from having been on duty or being on call or whatever the case may be, so let's be guided by a little bit of extra courtesy today, bearing in mind how tired some members likely are.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams." I love that quote. Those words stand as a stark warning to governments that think that borrowing is the way to prosperity, and those words should be etched into the collective minds of governments that think deficit financing is a wise choice. This is good advice that Alberta would do well to follow. Does the Finance minister agree?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course I do. The ability for us to use all of the tools that are available to us is sound financial management. It's responsible financial management. That's what Albertans elected us to do for them, to be responsible managers of their finances. Debt is one piece or one tool in the tool box, no different than P3s, no different than cash. It's no different than deferring it to a future date, when it'll cost more. That's a tool that we can use too. We're not saying that we're going to use one to the exclusion of any other. We're going to use the entire tool box.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the Finance minister didn't actually hear the quote, so I'll read it again. "Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams." I quote that because it was spoken in this Assembly in October of last year by this Premier. Why won't the Finance minister heed the Premier's warning?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we have a financial management act in this province that precludes the Minister of Finance from borrowing for operating, and we intend to adhere to that financial management act and that piece of that act. The fact that we will not borrow to cover any operating deficit is clear. We will balance our budget. We will have a savings plan, and we will have a capital plan. There is no doubt in my mind that the world economy is suffering. In Canada, in fact, the federal government has deferred their balancing by another year. We will use all the tools necessary to provide Albertans with what they need.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, capital debt is still debt. Roads and schools are the basics. We should look after these needs out of our regular spending, but this government has made too many unsustainable promises and now insists that it has to borrow for what should be regular upkeep. Why can't the Finance minister prioritize and budget better than this?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member had a school recently completed in her riding. That school was built using a P3 model. It certainly shows the financial illiteracy of the other side when they can't see that the P3 is a financial commitment of the people of Alberta for 30-plus years, similar to any debt instrument that we might issue. The reason we use the P3 is because it's a right and sound responsible financial management decision to use. It provides the assets for Albertans today and for tomorrow. It's not a money-in-the-mattress mentality. It's sound financial management.

Ms Smith: Long-term debt is not sound financial management.

Another quote: we need to ensure that our actions are fiscally responsible and fair not only to this generation but also to those that follow. That is also worthwhile counsel. It could form the cornerstone of a responsible, prudent financial plan of any government, but we've seen anything but that from this government. They will pile up new debt, incurred because the PC government cannot or will not prioritize its spending. Does the Finance minister agree with this counsel?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely agree that we will have a sound financial plan that will have an operating plan, that will have a savings plan, that will have a capital plan. Why? Because every Albertan today wants to have a home in the health care system, and every Albertan tomorrow should, too. Every Albertan today should have a place in an education facility in this province so their kids can achieve their dreams today and in the future. We will not penalize Albertans because of some ideological idea that we will not use all of the financial tools available to us. That includes using the capital markets.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What he calls ideology I call being principled.

Here is the irony. The words I quoted were spoken by the Premier just a few months ago, yet she is going to burden this generation and those that follow with new debt to pay for basics like roads and schools. Why the flip-flop?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, absolutely no flip-flop. We will not use debt to cover our operating deficits. We will not go down that path that other jurisdictions have gone down, including our federal government, including a number of other jurisdictions. The opposition talks about delaying capital projects. Which schools, which hospitals, which roads are they not going to build for Albertans? Our Premier talks about a vision for this province when we have 5 million people, where every Albertan needs to be able to participate in the economy of today and tomorrow. We will fulfill that vision because Albertans asked us to do it.

Ms Smith: A perfect place to start is by rolling back the pay hike the PCs just gave themselves.

Mr. Speaker, another quote from Hansard. "We will keep the province's coffers full and its outlook bright no matter what the world economy throws our way." Same speaker. Same Premier. But that same Premier now blames the world economy for having to borrow. The fiscal reality has changed, she says, although her Finance minister insists that they were always going to borrow for schools. So what is it, borrowing and debt because of the economic downturn or borrowing and debt because they promised too much?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would do well to listen to some of the financial advice that even some of her backers are providing us. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce have told us that a responsible borrowing plan is the right way to go. Businesses in this province, including businesses that have been donors to their party and probably to her leadership race – I don't know; I haven't checked the list. We have net assets today as a province. We have a triple-A credit rating, the envy of the western hemisphere. We have a strong cash balance sheet. That will not change. What will change is that we will build the infrastructure Albertans need today for the economy of tomorrow.

Ms Smith: The fact remains that they did not campaign on that.

Health Regions' Expense Reporting

Ms Smith: When we raise questions about evidence of clear contraventions of the Election Act, the Deputy Premier tells us to submit the matter to the Chief Electoral Officer for investigation. We did. Yet the Health minister, when he is presented with evidence linking a current health executive to such practices, ignores it, and he points to a new policy about expenses that Alberta Health Services has adopted. He says that everything's fine. It's not fine, Mr. Speaker. It's a mess, and this minister refuses to clean it up. When will he clear the air and make all expenses for all executives for all regions publicly available?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what continues to be concerning and, if I might say, laughable in some cases is this hon. member's attempt to present so-called evidence and connect issues that are simply not related. This question has been asked and answered several times. The hon. members opposite know full well that that information is available to them through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. They've had no difficulty accessing this information, talking about it in the media and in the Legislature. What this government stands for is the most stringent travel and expense policy in place in this country today. It applies to government. It applies to many of our agencies.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yet today there were more revelations of lavish expenses, this time at Covenant Health, an organization that receives $700 million in taxpayer money to provide health services. Expensive wine, fancy dinners, liquor during business hours. They say they'll change their expense policy, but Albertans deserve to have these kinds of expenses repaid. That's why we want all of the expenses of all of the executives for all of the health regions released going back to 2005. When will the minister act?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about the hon. Leader of the Opposition, but the people on this side of the House ran to be the government in 2012. If the hon. member wants to insist on looking into the affairs of health regions that no longer exist, from years gone by, that's entirely up to her. What I can tell you is that these expenses have been made public, including the ones that the hon. member referred to just a moment ago. They are available for Albertans to examine as well as all members of this Legislature. Most importantly, as she has said, the board of Covenant Health has indicated clearly that they will be adopting our Premier's new travel and expense policies, the strongest in Canada.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that these same executives are still on the AHS payroll.

Yesterday the Health minister said that we were trying to influence the inquiry process with our questions about Lynn Redford. The inquiry is actually asking for the public's input. Right there on the inquiry website it says, "Do you have confidential feedback regarding preferential treatment in the public health services field in Alberta? If so, we would like to hear from you." That's what we are doing, Mr. Speaker. We are seeking the truth. Don't Albertans deserve the truth, Health Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing that the hon. Leader of the Opposition continues to present an affront to an independent inquiry under way in this province by continuing to drag the names of people who may have done nothing wrong through the mud in this Legislature. If the hon. member wants to present documents and information to the independent inquiry, that's entirely up to her. Using this Assembly as a way to bring the names of individuals into disrepute and to defame them is, frankly, shameful.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, this would be an appropriate time to just remind you of our standing agreement in which it says that supplemental questions ought not be preceded by any preamble. Now, typically, as you would know, those of you who have been here for many years, Speakers have allowed a bit more latitude for leaders of the opposition when they are asking their questions and their supplementals. However, I would ask again that the Government House Leader and the other opposition House leaders please get together and review this because at the moment the wording reads that supplementals should not be accompanied by any preambles. On the other side of that, of course, we could instill "must not," and that would make this job that I'm trying to do a lot easier and lead to a lot less flare-ups.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Health System Executive Expenses

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone knows that Albertans shouldn't drink and drive, but submitted receipts have shown that senior health officials and even the Premier have been travelling lavishly and drinking on the job. A FOIP request by the CBC revealed that senior Covenant Health executives have also been expensing fine dining and booze on the taxpayers' dime. Obviously, this government has lost control and driven our health care system off the road and into the ditch. To the Premier: will you order Covenant Health to disclose all of its expenses, with the receipts, so that taxpayers can see exactly how many fancy dinners and bottles of booze they've bought?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is a person in this House who can deny the fact that this government right now has introduced some of the most strict travel and expense policies for all members of government – also, I believe opposition will follow – but also for executives and for employees of our public service. Now, we have also requested that agencies that work indirectly for government or with the government of Alberta adopt these policies, and I believe most, if not all, have already started looking at their expense policies to comply with those of ours.

What I find particularly offensive, Mr. Speaker, is to make allusions that the Premier is drinking on the job. I hope that this member reconsiders that kind of language.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that 50 per cent of the government's $41 billion budget is contracted out to agencies, boards, and commissions with little accountability on how they spend public money and given that not only do these executives get huge salaries and golden parachutes, but they're charging taxpayers for all the extras, to the Premier: why are you keeping agencies, boards, and commissions exempt from your new expense policies? What else are you hiding? How many more bottles of booze and fancy dinners are wasting Alberta taxpayers' dollars?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we won't engage in that practice. I can almost assure you that right now if we were to pore through the expenses of any member of this Assembly, we would find that the members of the Assembly work late hours, and then often during evenings and at nighttime they go to events. I can tell you one thing. Maybe the opposition could do a better job on Public Accounts. They have the ability every year to bring every agency before Public Accounts and to examine their expenditures of the last year in the public forum of the Public Accounts Committee. I would invite them to call these agencies and put them before Public Accounts.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, only in this job will they drink and bill the taxpayer for the receipt.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier's own sister has been implicated in using public health dollars for illegal political donations, it's no wonder the government wants to keep this issue bottled up. To the Premier: why does the Premier still refuse to order a line-by-line forensic audit of all health spending and the disclosure of all health executive expenses from previous years to the present? What else does she know? What else is she not telling Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have to tell you that we are extremely proud of the thousands of public service employees who work for the government of Alberta and do their job diligently every day. I can assure you that when any person's life is in the hands of medical professionals, those professionals are not in any way drinking on the job. I can also assure you that just like in private-sector jobs, just like the leaders of the opposition and all members of this Assembly and, frankly, every Albertan, from time to time as part of your job, when you go to a reception, they may consume a glass or two of wine, and I think that would be perfectly acceptable. With respect to charging it to government, bring it before Public Accounts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In defending the Premier's sister over her delivery of public funds to the Conservative Party, Alberta Health Services stated, and I quote: Ms Redford and the Calgary Health Region were meeting the expectations and norms at the time. It's clear now that the policy of this government is to ensure that none of the facts surrounding donations of public funds to the Conservative Party prior to 2009 will ever see the light of day. To the Premier: is this what she had in mind when she campaigned on being open and transparent?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let's deal with facts. As you know, our leader was the first one to post all donations to her leadership campaign on the web, making it public. Some leaders, particularly the Leader of the Opposition, did it two years later. She has instilled the most rigorous rules for travel and expense policies of any government in this land. Right now we have an Election Accountability Amendment Act on the floor that will make it one of the tightest acts in this country. If that member has any specific allegations, we also have a process in this province that deals with that. Just throwing loose innuendos simply is not doing anybody any good.

Ms Notley: My second question is to the Justice minister. Given the former Justice minister defended this government's failure to prosecute 19 Election Act violations by saying that "in some cases it is not necessary to prosecute. It is only necessary to ensure that the behaviour does not happen again" and given that two years later the Chief Electoral Officer found at least 51 more instances of Election Act violations, to the minister: why are you covering up details of government agency violations of the Election Act that are more than three years old?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's true that the election accountability act was introduced yesterday, and I'll be speaking to it in second reading tomorrow. The principle behind the whole act – pursuant to section 52 of the legislation we're going back three years – is that whenever there's been a letter of reprimand issued, whenever there's been an administrative penalty done, which is typically a fine, or when it's been referred to a prosecutor and a charge has been laid, we're having this completely open and transparent, and I encourage this member to speak in second reading and support this amendment to the legislation.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that this government would love to run away from their record.

Given the long history of inappropriate fundraising by the Conservative Party and illegal donations by public bodies run by this Conservative government and given the cover-up by this Premier through legislation designed to keep Tory skeletons firmly locked in the government's closet, why should the citizens of Alberta ever trust you?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, you will probably agree with me that this question doesn't even deserve an answer because it broke every single rule that one could possibly break in one question. However, let me again be perfectly clear. Let me say it slowly. If there is any member of this House or any member of the Alberta public that has any evidence, any facts, any information that would in any way implicate a member of this side of the House or of the public service, please table it to the appropriate authorities. It will be investigated, and the facts will be found out. I find it offensive that terms like "cover-up" relative to innuendos would even be used in this Chamber.

The Speaker: On that note, a point of order by the Government House Leader has been noted at 2:10 p.m.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Family Care Clinics

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that this government has a record of wasting precious health dollars from patients and from the front-line workers. We know that this government shies away from listening and getting advice from our doctors as they're too busy keeping them in the dark. We still have no document showing how much this Premier's new family care clinics will actually cost, especially compared with the current primary care networks that are in place. Will the Minister of Health please tell Albertans the cost of family care clinics per patient compared to the primary care networks?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is consistently interested in, I guess, a battle on service delivery models within the primary health care system. What we're concerned with as the government, obviously, are the outcomes that we derive from the delivery of primary health care across the province. The fact of the matter is that this government spends about $181 million a year in supports for primary care networks. We recently expanded that from $50 to $62, and we're continuing that into the future. We have budgeted in this fiscal year alone $75 million to support primary health care, including the development of family care clinics.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, he doesn't want to answer the question.

Given that the Health minister on Monday said that "the Primary Care Alliance is an integral part of our Advisory Committee on Primary Health Care," can he please explain why the AMA is today asking for its Primary Care Alliance to be involved in the family care clinic process? Who's telling the truth, Minister, the doctors or your government?

Mr. Horne: I think the real question, Mr. Speaker, is: who's more confused? The Primary Care Alliance is a committee of the Alberta Medical Association. They have been involved with us in work on the Minister's Advisory Committee on Primary Health Care. I met with members of the Primary Care Alliance at a conference recently in Banff, a major primary health care conference in our province. Doctors are involved, in fact, in many ways with the work that we're doing in this area. They are, obviously, critical to its success. They are a very important, very highly trained and, in some parts of the province, a very scarce resource. We involve them fully in these discussions, and they play a very important role.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking at a memo I've got, dated November 20, AMA expectations of the Alberta government: the entire FCC process needs to be transparent, open, and fair; the AMA's Primary Care Alliance board needs to be involved in the development of the expressions of interest. Are they telling the truth, Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, you know, I really have to say to the hon. member that I'm not going to engage in a game around what documents she may or may not have, who she may or may not have talked to. I speak to this Assembly in my capacity as the Minister of Health, and I have continued to explain to the hon. member – and I'll say it once again – that the AMA and, more importantly, the physician workforce of Alberta, some of whom are represented by the AMA, are fully engaged in the work that we're doing. They're playing a critical role. The hon. member would do well to take note of the very important and constructive things that doctors have to say about primary health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Whistle-blower Legislation

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Justice. While it is all well and good to tell people to take their complaints to the CEO or other investigators, why aren't you doing something to make election rules tougher and the penalties harsher so that people actually start following them?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we're doing under the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012. Under the Election Accountability Amendment Act penalties increase 10-fold, from $1,000 to $10,000 per infraction. Of course, it is up to the Chief Electoral Officer to enforce these penalties. It is independent, and investigations will continue in the Chief Electoral Officer's sole and unfettered discretion.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you rose on a point of order at 2:15?

Mr. Mason: I did.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:16? Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. The government committed to being even more open about its expenses in the last election, yet seven months later expenses still aren't posted online. When is the government going to act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All of the information the member is asking for will be available online this December, and it's because of the leadership of our Premier. We've enacted the strongest expense disclosure policy in this country. Institutions like the Taxpayers Federation have come out and said: they have gone further today, and we couldn't be more pleased. Members of the Assembly and members of the media across this country are asking other Premiers to follow the lead of this Premier. We are leading this country with the most rigorous expense disclosure policy in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people in my riding had expected that when the government brought in whistle-blower legislation, it would include those who do work for the government. Why has this not happened?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to tell my colleague that this is in fact happening. We've introduced whistle-blower legislation that covers any Albertan who wants to make a report. We have created a situation where there's an independent officer of the Legislature who can investigate any complaint of wrongdoing, whether it's by a contractor, whether it's by a volunteer or anyone that does business with the government. This is part of our Premier's commitment to an open and accountable government, and we are achieving it.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, a point of order at 2:18. Is that correct? Yes? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Electricity Marketing

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's that time of year again when consumers can expect electricity prices to spike on a sudden change in weather. Given that Alberta's wholesale electricity market guarantees that consumers are charged the highest price for the lowest cost electricity, to the Minister of Energy: how does Alberta's wholesale electricity auction market benefit Albertans when consumers can be forced to pay as much as $1,000 even when a producer is willing to sell that electricity for $45 a megawatt?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the hon. member to bring forward a consumer invoice paying $1,000 for electricity in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Challenge accepted.

Given that the rolling brownouts of July 9, 2012, gouged Albertans and forced . . . [interjection] I didn't say retail. Not in there. It doesn't say retail, does it? It says consumers, ladies and gentlemen. No backpedalling.

Will the minister provide this Assembly . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I stand; you sit. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, you can see what happens when we don't follow some of our own basic rules. I just checked on this a little while ago. I just advised you all that our supplemental questions should not be preceded by preambles. So, those of you who are still on the roster, please review your questions now. I know most of you have prepared them and written them down. Please try and eliminate any verbiage ahead of the actual question.

Would you like to rephrase your first supplemental now?

Mr. Anglin: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Electricity Marketing

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the rolling brownouts of July 9, 2012, gouged Albertans and forced Albertans to pay $1,000 a megawatt for electricity, will the minister provide this Assembly and table a comprehensive list of members who were offered and willing to sell their electricity on July 9 for much less than $1,000?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure I actually heard the whole question, but perhaps I don't need to. The market surveillance agency, which is responsible for overseeing the market in electricity in this province, has issued their report on the events of the 9th of July, and they found that there were no reasons or cause for concern, in their view. I'm still awaiting another report from the AESO, which would give me further evidence on that front, and I look forward to sharing that information with the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the withholding of electricity from the market for the sole purpose of manipulating prices is illegal and in some cases criminal in some jurisdictions, can the Minister of Energy explain why this practice is legal in Alberta, and how does this price manipulation practice benefit Albertans?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Market Surveillance Administrator is actually quite well aware of what market manipulation is and what market manipulation isn't. I would say that I take the market surveillance agency's report at face value. They are the experts on this, not the hon. member in this case, remarkably, and I look forward to the report from the AESO.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Health Services in Cold Lake

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government's budget of 2012 commits $75 million to strengthening primary care services over the next three years in Alberta. This includes funding family care clinics. In the city of Cold Lake the only major hospital, the Cold Lake health centre, is overwhelmed with patients and has previously relied on community donations for urgent needs. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Health. What can be done to ease the demands placed on the Cold Lake health care centre?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the hon. member for the question. Our data, in fact, shows that the health centre in Cold Lake is not being overwhelmed with patients. AHS's most recent quarterly report indicated that 98 per cent of the patients were discharged from the emergency department within four hours, which is well above the provincial target, and 96 per cent of patients were admitted from the emergency department within eight hours, again well above the provincial target of 75 per cent. We know that the health care centre is routinely below capacity, but that said, the hon. member mentioned primary health care. There are initiatives under way to expand primary health care, and I'd be happy to elaborate.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how does the Minister of Health decide which jurisdictions are eligible for and in need of a family care clinic?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, in the next few months we'll be making an announcement regarding the process that communities would be asked to follow, the criteria that communities need to meet if they are interested in establishing a family care clinic. We will also announce similar criteria for primary care networks that wish to expand their services to meet some of the new objectives that we're setting for primary health care provincially, a process in which physicians are involved.

Implementation of FCCs will be phased in, with first consideration, I believe, given to communities that are the most high in need; in other words, the most underserved areas of the province. The clinics will feature many features, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What can my constituency do to highlight its candidacy for a family care clinic, which we so desperately need in the city of Cold Lake?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and her constituents have already been very effective in alerting me to their interest in developing a family care clinic in their community. I believe some information has been made available to the hon. member, and as I said, in a few months we'll have a process that is outlined for communities to participate both in expressing their interest and being involved in the design of family care clinics that could potentially serve their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has consistently stated that provincial achievement exams for students in grade 3 and grade 6 would be eliminated. A private member's motion by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake was supported by all members in this House in this regard. The ATA, an organization that represents 95 per cent of the teachers in this province and reflects the views of most of the teachers in this province, has been long on the record that this testing is redundant and not in the best interests of student learning. To the Minister of Education: when will this province follow through on the Premier's promise of eliminating these provincial achievement tests?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. Our commitment has been clear. We are committed to eliminating the grade 3 and the grade 6 provincial achievement tests because Albertans have told us that they are less than ideal. On the other hand, we still have a strong commitment to some form of province-wide assessment for students during the life of their K to 12 career with us. We think there is value in that and that's important. Those types of standardized assessment will evolve over time. What exactly a replacement assessment will look like and when it will be delivered and how it will be delivered and what it will ask for, I don't have an answer for that at this particular time.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, it saddens me. I heard that exact same answer from the last two ministers who were in charge of this file, that they were looking into alternate arrangements for these performance testing measures that teachers disagree with. When can you give a timeline, an indication of when these new tests will be implemented?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that we can separate assessment out of curriculum. They come hand in hand. As Albertans know, we've been working on evolving the education system in Alberta. We're working on new curriculum. We're working on new ways of assessment. I would envision that the grade 3 PATs will be the first ones to be removed and replaced with something else. But I would also like to point out that there have been a lot of commitments made by this government and this Premier that have been delivered on, and this is just another one in the long line of great things that the Premier has promised to do and that we will do.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that teachers overwhelmingly agree that every hour a teacher feels compelled to worry about a provincial achievement test or some other replacement test that you wish to put in is time not well spent for helping children learn and become more critical, curious learners, when will the minister listen to educators and simply realize that standardized testing in any form or fashion does not work for the education system?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I don't subscribe to that point of view. I think there are many people within Alberta that have a stake in education outside of just educators, as important as they are – those include the students, and they include the parents, and they include every Albertan, including taxpayers – to make sure that the system is delivering what it is expected to deliver.

We've been working on many of the promises that the Premier has made. She promised to reinstate $107 million in funding. She did that within two weeks of becoming the leader and the Premier of this province. She promised predictable and stable funding for school divisions. She did that with her very first budget. She promised to pass the Education Act. We just did that, Mr. Speaker. She's promised 50 new schools and 70 modernizations, and we're in the process of that. She's promised full-day kindergarten. We're looking at that as part of the early childhood development strategy. And we're going to deliver on the promise of changing the PATs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Electricity Marketing Review

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have faced some of the highest and most volatile electricity prices in history as a result of this government's failed deregulation scheme. In an attempt to avoid public anger before the last election, the Premier, of course, appointed another commission to study the issue. The commission's report was sent to the Energy minister months ago, but he is refusing to release it, so my question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is he keeping the report of the Retail Market Review Committee secret?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great report, and I look forward to sharing it with all Albertans very soon. In addition to that, I look forward to the response of this committee that addresses the mandate of some of the issues that the hon. member has raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's a man behind the curtain who knows all about this report, but the rest of us are in the dark.

Given that Albertans on fixed incomes are harmed by roller-coaster power prices and given that the government is refusing to be open and transparent on this issue, will the minister release the report this week so that it can be discussed in this session of the Legislature? And if not, why not?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's quite clear. I mean, I share the concern of the hon. member with respect to the impact of volatile electricity rates on vulnerable people, so what we're doing is the government is ensuring that when we bring this forward, we have fulsome and well-thought-out and well-articulated responses and initiatives that we can take that protect the vulnerable, that reduce the volatility in the electricity system for retail customers, and which meet the objectives for which this committee was originally established.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has these wonderful intentions and given that it seems that he wants to make the decisions on the recommendations before the report has been released, why doesn't he release the report first so that he can take advantage of the public discussion before he finalizes his decision on the recommendations of the report?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I commit to this hon. member that there will be plenty of debate once the report is released – I'm sure of that – and that I will take into account the views of Albertans as we release that report and as we put forward the choices that we think Albertans face in dealing with these recommendations. There are 41 recommendations. There are 390 pages. I know that the hon. member will read every page of this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Infrastructure Planning and Maintenance

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a lot of discussion across the province lately about the best way to pay for new infrastructure projects. We've heard some interesting analogies from the government as they try to justify a poorly conceived plan to borrow billions for new infrastructure spending. Despite the announcement of taking Alberta back into debt, the government has not yet answered a rather basic question. To the Infrastructure minister: what is the current infrastructure deficit in our province?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I've been working all summer long with my colleagues to build this infrastructure plan and capital plan going forward, and that includes the infrastructure debt. It's in that plan. I'm working on it with my colleagues, and it'll be presented when we present the budget this spring.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Well, we'll wait with bated breath for that one.

Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta is a growing province and our communities have a lot of wants and needs when it comes to new infrastructure projects like schools, hospitals, and roads and given that the Associate Minister of Finance said that it is sometimes too difficult to prioritize these projects because often they are so innovative and there are often multiple parties involved, when will the Infrastructure minister stop making these excuses and release a prioritized infrastructure list that shows both the current backlog and the plan for the future?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question. Daily across the floor – we've heard it today – everybody has infrastructure projects they want in their constituency. Their answer is to push it forward five or 10 years. They're not concerned with the infrastructure for our citizens of Alberta today. They want to push it forward five or 10 years, when it'll cost more.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has always had a hard time distinguishing between wants and needs. Given that the Associate Minister of Finance has acknowledged that operating costs are initially higher when a new facility like a school is constructed and given that the Premier recently said that no new infrastructure will ever be built in our province again unless money is borrowed, how does this government plan to pay for the operating costs of these new infrastructure projects once they are built, with a bottomless pit of debt?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there were a number of inaccuracies in the preamble to his last supplemental question. It's very obvious to me that the hon. members are not listening in question period. We will be bringing forward an operating plan, a savings plan, a capital plan that will include all of those facets. Albertans told us they want us to save, they want us to build for the future, and they want us to be prudent and responsible with the day-to-day operating. That is exactly what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Airdrie.

Colchester and Fultonvale Schools

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Colchester school in my constituency faces imminent closure as parents concerned about health risks to their children will be removing them once the heartland transmission line, which is less than 200 metres away from their playground, is energized next fall. They're anxiously awaiting news about a proposed expansion to the Fultonvale school nearby. My question to the Minister of Education: what can the minister tell us about the status of this very important project?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that the official decision on closing the Colchester school has not been made yet. That is a local school board decision. In the meantime the renovation and the modernization of the Fultonvale school I know is the top priority on that school board's list, and it's being looked at as we speak as part of the capital plan that we're developing, that's going through the budgeting process here within the government. I know there's already some preliminary planning being done by my department and helping facilitate with the local school board.

Mr. Quest: Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker, but what reassurances can I pass along to these parents, who are very concerned about ongoing renovations and what it would mean to their kids at Fultonvale since these renovations could actually take several years?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what reassurance I can give the parents and the folks from that area is, I guess, the same I would give any, and that's that we'll continue to work with the local school board to make sure that if they decide to close Colchester school, we're taking all of the steps we possibly can to make sure that there are desks for those kids when they come to school in the fall, and any capacity issues that are created by enrolment pressures we're doing everything we can with the school board to try and address.

Mr. Quest: We'll assume that means modulars or something along those lines to accommodate, but the question is: does moving modular classrooms in and then moving them out again really make sense to the Minister of Education?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it may make sense. It depends on the situation. Certainly, we can move modulars in a lot faster than we can build a brand new school, than we can do a major modernization. So moving modulars in could be an option, but that doesn't mean that it's a waste of money. A modernization may take longer and then free up those modulars. We have a lot of demand for modulars around the province, and we'll have no problem finding a place for them once the modernization is done at Fultonvale.

Safety in Long-term Care and Private Rehab Centres

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to address two constituent-related issues regarding health and safety today. The first involves bathing regulations for seniors in long-term care. I have constituents who are very concerned about the sores, infections, and other sicknesses their loved ones are contracting in long-term care facilities due to a lack of adequate bathing. In the case at issue only one bath is provided each week, and often it is just a wipe-down. My understanding is that there are actually no regulations requiring regular bathing in provincial long-term care facilities. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: why are there no bathing standards for our seniors in long-term care, and what will you do to address this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not the bathing standard; it's the appropriate standard. We need to make sure that in all of our facilities our caregivers that are here today, that are some of the best Albertans that provide care for our parents and our loved ones, have appropriate standards. [interjections] Let's not get hung up on the number. We want to make sure that in each and every place our loved ones get the care that they need. If there are some specifics that you'd like me to go through on a one-to-one basis, my office is open. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's yield the floor to whoever has it. Right now it's Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I think one bath a week at least, probably two, would be more than reasonable.

Mr. Speaker, my other question involves safety standards at private rehabilitation centres. In 2007 a 17-year-old at the privately run Serenity Ranch rehab centre tragically died from drinking antifreeze from an unlocked shed. An inquiry was held, and recommendations were given but have not yet been implemented by this government. I also have a constituent whose son recently almost lost his life at this same centre also because of a lack of treatment standards. To the Minister of Health: why are these private rehab centres not regulated for health and safety when they deal with such at-risk patients?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure what type of facility the hon. member is referring to and how it is licensed. I can tell the hon. member that if it is a continuing care facility in Alberta, it is subject to the provincial accommodation standards as well as the provincial health care standards. If that is not the type of facility he is referring to, we'd be happy to look into his constituent's specific circumstances.

Mr. Anderson: It's Serenity Ranch, and it's a private rehabilitation centre.

Mr. Speaker, the judge-led inquiry into the tragic death of Taylor Argent – that's who I'm talking about here – was completed in 2010, and recommendations were made to the government to regulate and inspect private addiction recovery centres. Why has it taken so long for the government to accept and implement these recommendations knowing that lives are at stake? It should be the same for private as it is for public with regard to safety.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty agreeing with the hon. member that the standards should be the same regardless of the provider. I would have to look into the specific circumstances at Serenity Ranch. I'm happy to do so, and I'll respond in writing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

2:40 Early Childhood Care

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early childhood education and care is one of the most important investments we can be making to help young families throughout Alberta. However, many families in my constituency and, I'm confident, around Alberta struggle to get quality, affordable, and accessible care for their children. We have taken some really great steps to expand the numbers of families who are eligible for child care subsidies, but our lack of a comprehensive system means far too many families cannot find or afford quality care for our youngest citizens. To the Minister of Human Services: could the minister please provide the Assembly with the current number of child care spaces for children zero to six years of age, the wait-list, and an assessment . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are approximately 92,000 child care spaces in Alberta that are regulated. Sixty per cent are licensed or approved for children of age zero to six, which I think was the question. There are 12,000 additional child care spaces available through approved family day homes and innovative child care programs serving children zero to 12. I can't give her a precise number with respect to zero to six, but it is within those spaces. Seventy-eight per cent of those child care spaces are occupied. Wait-lists exist for the very popular and successful programs or in certain communities or cities, but overall there are quite a number of spaces.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Could the minister please tell the Assembly an estimate of how many low-income families are not able to afford the parent portion of child care and day home costs even if they are eligible for the government subsidy?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I don't have an exact number for that, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell you that on April 1 we increased the threshold level for accessing the full subsidy from about $35,000 to about $50,000, a 42 per cent increase. That meant that 9,000 more Albertan families were able to get a full subsidy or an increased subsidy for child care spaces, so for low-income families more of them able to afford quality child care in this province so that they can earn a living and support their families and take their children out of poverty.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister my final question: could the minister please tell the Assembly if the government's new social policy framework includes a plan to expand the not-for-profit early childhood education and care system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The social policy framework is not going to be that detailed at this stage. It's going to deal, firstly, with the concepts of what kind of society we want to have and what our roles and responsibilities are in creating that kind of society. I can say that of course as we implement the social policy framework with respect to government programs and the collaboration of government with social agencies and others in the community, we are very seriously interested in early childhood development, early child care, safe places for our children, good opportunities for our children to maximize their potential, opportunities for them to be fed appropriately in order that they're able to go to school and learn. So early childhood development is a very high priority for this Premier and this government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. In a few moments we will resume with Members' Statements, beginning with Calgary-South East, followed by Lethbridge-East and then Calgary-Shaw.

National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims, a day on which we remember those we've loved and those we've lost in tragic collisions. Let me remember some of the calls that I did as a paramedic, the times I had to tell the mother in the rollover that we couldn't find the child that was in the back seat, and when we did find the child, it was too late. Let me recall the countless times that I've been in the hospital when we've taken somebody in and we've done everything we possibly could, but the parents come through, and we usher them in to spend their last minutes with their child's body.

Every day countless Albertans get behind the wheel, and almost every day one of us is killed.

What can we do to stop these tragedies? How can we get drivers to be more cautious?

In 2007 the Alberta government introduced a traffic safety plan, the first plan of its kind in Canada, and the plan is working. From 2007 to 2010 traffic fatalities dropped by 25 per cent, the lowest number of fatalities in our province since 1965. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that with the memories that I have of those people – and they weren't even my own family members – we're not doing enough. We need to continue to be vigilant and make sure that we're educating drivers and giving our children and our loved ones every possible chance to make it home safe.

Today as we remember – and some of us might be affected by these tragedies – let's take a moment to remember them. Let's all get home safe.

Thank you for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Family Violence Prevention Month

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November is Family Violence Prevention Month in Alberta. This issue affects far too many women, children, and men in Alberta. Alberta ranked third among provinces in the rate of police-reported family violence in 2010. We will continue our efforts to protect children and support Albertans struggling with the trauma of family violence and help them to rebuild their lives.

Young people have the highest risk of dating violence, and this is why it will be a focus during this month. On November 6 at the Salisbury composite high school in Sherwood Park we held a panel discussion webcast about dating violence. This discussion is available on the Human Services website.

Family and dating violence are pervasive issues. They are bigger than what we can solve on our own as a government, but we have many dedicated individuals and groups as our partners. This month we celebrated the exceptional work of these partners at the first Alberta inspiration awards. The awards recognize those who work to end family violence and inspire others to take action and make a difference.

This government is working closely with families and communities to provide support for those affected by family violence. Supports for family violence emergency shelters, victim support programs, safe visitation sites, and public awareness and education efforts are among the many programs and services. If an Albertan knows of any abuse in their family, I encourage them to call the family violence info line for information at 310-1818, without any area code needed, or visit familyviolence.alberta.ca. This scourge in our province must be eradicated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing how the PC government is taking Alberta back into debt, and some ministers are going so far as to call us in the Wildrose hypocrites as we rally against it. I thought I would take this opportunity to share some insight with this House and offer some concrete examples of genuine hypocrisy.

The first is a direct quote from Hansard, which I will table. It goes like this:

I'm sad to say most provinces in this country and, in fact, most jurisdictions in North America operate under . . . this sort of deficit finance. They don't take in as much tax revenue as they need in order to pay for the programs they want to provide for their citizens. So they run deficits, Mr. Speaker, which accumulate into debt. That's, quite frankly, undertaxation, and it's just another tax. Only it's not a tax on the people who are working and functioning today in society; it's a tax on the next generation because they'll be the ones who pay for it.

I think most members in this Assembly, regardless of what party they come from, will agree that we're wealthy enough that we should never have to consider whether or not deficit financing and undertaxation is an option in this province, Mr. Speaker, particularly because it can be incredibly detrimental to any country, any province, any jurisdiction. I mean, that's why Alberta has a triple-A credit rating: we have no more debt; we don't run deficits.

Wise words indeed, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Premier and her government should take them under strong consideration, seeing as they were delivered in this House by none other than her current Minister of Municipal Affairs. Hypocrisy indeed.

In the same debate the current Minister of Justice and Solicitor General is quoted as saying, "First of all, we have to understand that the government must never go back into deficit financing."

Two members who used to stand for fiscally conservative principles now openly berate the opposition for taking the same positions on debt and deficit financing that they had held just a few short years ago. What's changed, Mr. Speaker? Outside of cabinet appointments for the aforementioned members, I and my party would suggest: nothing at all.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the 2011-2012 Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta annual report on behalf of the Minister of Health. The Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta consults with seniors and seniors' organizations throughout the province and provides advice to the government on legislation and policies affecting seniors and co-ordination of programs and services for seniors. This report illustrates the council's dedication to fulfill the Alberta government's commitment to seniors and their well-being.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the question period I was asked to show some proof and table it. I have the requisite copies here of the Market Surveillance Administrator's report detailing how electricity jumped from $11.90 a megawatt to $1,000 a megawatt. I understand the minister asked me to show how consumers are charged that, and with the greatest respect, if the hon. minister would release that report, I will be happy to show him.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Tablings are not an opportunity to prolong debate. You'll catch on.

Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(5) of the Election Act I'd like to table five copies each of the following two reports. The first is a report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the 2011 provincial enumeration and the Monday, April 23, 2012, provincial general election of the 28th Legislative Assembly.

The second report, Mr. Speaker, is the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the Senate nomination election on Monday, April 23, 2012.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are you done, hon. member?

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky is done, so I will recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me today to table two reports on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health. Both are reports from the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors. The first is their 2011-2012 annual report entitled Building for the Future. Highlighted in this report is the college's newest mission statement on health and wellness, in which they strengthen their commitment to comprehensive and collaborative health solutions.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to table the financial statements from June 30, 2012, for the college. The statements include the report of an independent auditor as well as the college's financial details for last year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Someone on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark? Calgary-Buffer?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah.

The Speaker: Proceed, Calgary-Buffer, then.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I tabled a report from the Democratic Renewal Project that indicated that Alberta's election finance laws are systematically corrupt. In the same report it noted that Manitoba has done some excellent work on not only limiting financing, no corporate or union donations but also limiting individual donations to a very reasonable amount. It just troubles me. If the hon. minister would like to look at a good act, I am tabling five copies of the Manitoba Elections Finances Act. If people are interested to look at how to do good legislation, they should...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Edmonton-Centre, did you have a tabling on behalf of?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I do.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: I'm tabling this on behalf of the leader of the Liberal opposition. He did mention it in his question this afternoon, and it is a news report from CBC News and attached receipts showing senior staff from Covenant Health claiming expenses back for glasses of Renwood Syrah, bottles of wine, and they're clearly, well, drinking on the job. I'll table the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition demanding that the government take immediate action to twin highway 63. Again, this petition contains 37,751 signatures. Today I am tabling 3,013 of those.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of an e-mail that I referenced in the dark of night, which was really the morning, in a submission that I made. It's on the North West Redwater Partnership Sturgeon refinery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mine are tablings to the Clerk. Is this the proper time or later?

The Speaker: We're at tablings. You're welcome to table it if you want. If you filed it with the Clerk, then he'll table it under his part, but you're up, so why don't you go ahead.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the program from the dinner that celebrated Lethbridge's Dr.

Robert Hironaka's induction into Alberta's Order of Excellence. It describes the amazing life and accomplishments of Dr. Bob, a founder of our world-recognized Japanese gardens, which, by the way, traditionally do not have flowers. It is an area of serene beauty and calm. Dr. Bob has also been a very great influence in our community and led in many areas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a number of tablings based on some of my comments today. First, I'm tabling a copy of the August 21 column from the Calgary Herald written by the hon. Premier, which I quoted.

I'm also tabling five copies of the news article from October 24 in which the Energy minister is quoted with respect to changes to Bill 50 through Bill 8.

I am also going to table some documents related to the exchange I had with the Health minister yesterday, where he indicated that it was his opinion that he felt my letter to Justice Vertes asking for Lynn Redford to be called as a witness was interfering with an independent, judge-led inquiry. To educate the minister, I'm tabling five copies of the front page of the Health Services Preferential Access Inquiry, which features a section on how to send information to the inquiry.

I'm also tabling five copies of the rules of practice and procedure for the inquiry. In particular, I would direct the Health minister to read rule 4 on investigations, which directs persons with any knowledge of items that might be of interest to the inquiry to provide them at "the earliest possible opportunity."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of Hansard dated April 28, 2008, referenced in my earlier member's statement.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Denis, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2011-2012 for the period April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2012.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Khan, Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education, the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta annual report 2012.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under points of order I have four listed, beginning with the Government House Leader from 2:10 p.m.

Proceed, please. A citation and so on.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Beauchesne's 492 at page 149 and Standing Order 23(h). Standing Order 23(h) makes it an offence to make an allegation against another member, and Beauchesne's 492 makes it an offence to use the term "cover-up." I'll start with the term "cover-up" because cover-up can be used in a number of different ways, and in fact I would indicate that elsewhere in Beauchesne's it says that cover-up can be used in an appropriate way.

But today we heard on two separate occasions in a question raised by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that she made a specific allegation against the Minister of Justice in asking why he was engaged in a cover-up of election offences or whatever it was – I wrote it down here: why was he covering up the details of corrupt practices? – and then followed that by making an allegation against the Premier of a cover-up of a similar nature.

Now, in both cases those are direct allegations against a member. There can be no question about that. In both cases they use a term that is used in a very derogatory and inappropriate manner and, in fact, accuses them of an action which it's clear they didn't do. They're not covering anything up. That kind of an allegation has almost a criminal connotation to it. It's absolutely inappropriate. It absolutely offends the integrity of the members.

What the hon. member meant to ask was why they didn't put disclosure into the act further back, I'm assuming. They're talking about three years in the act, which, again, could be another point of order because you probably shouldn't be debating what's in an act that's going to come up for debate, but the fact of the matter is that they did. They're suggesting some positive, perhaps illegal, and certainly inappropriate act by the Minister of Justice and by the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you instruct the hon. members to consider their actions and withdraw their very inappropriate comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In response to that, I want to indicate that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was raising a number of issues that are of great concern to us on this side of the House. In doing so, she drew attention to the fact that there had been a number of violations of the election finance act which predated the period covered by the legislation introduced yesterday. Because of this statute of limitations imposed by the act, a number of violations, including 19 that are known to have been referred by the previous Chief Electoral Officer to the Justice department for prosecution and were never prosecuted, will never see the light of day.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of more recent revelations that we have seen in terms of freedom of information requests dealing with other individuals, including one very close to the Premier, that will also not be subject to investigation and will not see the light of day because of the statute of limitations that has been imposed by the government. In that sense, the government has taken direct action to prevent the possibility of examining and exploring these particular offences.

Furthermore, the Premier has refused to answer requests about her knowledge of any of these events and refused to take those questions here in question period. Furthermore, election finance legislation currently in place, which was introduced by the former Justice minister who is now the Premier, is being used by the current Chief Electoral Officer to withhold any information with respect to investigations into illegal activity under the elections finance act or to reveal any penalties or findings that he may have undertaken.

Mr. Speaker, it is the firm belief of the hon. member that the government has quite consciously and deliberately prevented any public disclosure or investigation into a number of illegal acts which are very likely involving the political party to which this government belongs and is doing so consciously and deliberately. In doing that, I don't believe the hon. member was aware that the specific term "cover-up" had been ruled unparliamentary. It would have been more appropriate to use other words that are not ruled unparliamentary like "conceal," "hide," "disguise," "obscure," or "mask." In that sense, those would have been more appropriate words to use. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I will certainly gladly withdraw the use of the term "cover-up."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think that concludes that issue. I was preparing notes heading in that direction as I was listening to the arguments and reviewing the Blues and so on. The withdrawal has been read into the record now, and we're grateful for that.

Let's move on to the next point of order. That is from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood at 2:15, or was it in relation to the previous one?

Mr. Mason: No, thank you, it was not, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A new one. All right. Proceed.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Mason: Yes. During question period today the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo – and I'm sorry; I don't have the benefit of the Blues – asked a question to the Minister of Justice with respect to provisions that are contained in Bill 7. As we well know, Mr. Speaker, those of us who have spent more than a couple of days in this place, you're not permitted to ask questions directly dealing with legislation that is currently before the House. Therefore, I stood on a point of order, just wanting to make sure that everything is fair and equitable, that when the opposition is not permitted to violate that rule, also government members should not be allowed to violate that rule.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, do you wish to respond?

This is a simple matter that I can clarify quickly, but let me yield to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for something brief. Thank you.

Mr. Saskiw: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. Just to echo the other member's comments, it appears that there was a direct violation of 23(e), which states that a point of order can be called where there's an anticipation "contrary to good parliamentary practice [of] any matter already on the Order Paper," and of course Bill 7 is on the Order Paper. In the past our members have been rightly cut off – our questions were cut off; our mikes were cut off – when we were talking about something that was already on the Order Paper. We would hope that there's some clarification in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an interesting area, and it is relatively straightforward, but it does parse some points. The practice of the House, as I understand it, has always been that one does not raise questions, in accordance with the rule quoted, with respect to a bill that's on the Order Paper for the debate that day. Those are the key phrases. It has not been ruled out of order to raise questions about the subject matter of bills that were on the Order Paper. But specifically about bills that were going to be debated that day: it has been ruled out of order. It might well be ruled out of order in circumstances where it's a specific question about the specific clauses of the bill. That's the difference.

I don't recall exactly how the question was phrased. It seems to me that the standing orders, the way that they've been interpreted in this House, say that you can't ask a specific question about the specific contents of a bill. You can ask a question about the general purpose of a bill but not on the day that the bill is up for debate.

The Speaker: That is correct.

The hon. Minister of Justice, very briefly.

Mr. Denis: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. Just to augment the Government House Leader's comment, I believe that the question asked was as to a general issue about penalties, not as to a specific section.

I'll take my seat, sir.

The Speaker: Thank you.

This is a very straightforward matter. Today is a little bit unusual, obviously, because, as you all know, the House sat around the clock for almost 24 rather consecutive hours. By the time the House convened, there was, I think, a bit of a recess of only about 18 or 19 minutes, so we were not alerted specifically by 1:30 as to exactly what was or wasn't coming forward, at least the Speaker wasn't.

Having reviewed this matter, I can tell you that Bill 7 is not up for discussion and debate today; therefore, it does not qualify for the anticipation rule. In a general sense, just as an educational matter, if we were to employ that rule in any different sense, then no questions would have been allowed today that would have pertained to electricity or to utilities or to public interest disclosure or whistle-blowers or anything else because they, too, are listed on the Order Paper. What's important is what is listed on the Order Paper that is up for debate on the day, and today Bill 7 is not scheduled in that regard. I hope that clarifies that matter.

We'll move on to the third point of order, which is Airdrie, from 2:16 this afternoon. Someone on behalf of? The hon. member.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that's in regard to a second question along similar lines with respect to a question that anticipated something on Bill 4. I would take a different reading of 23(e), which states a question that anticipates "any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." I believe that Bill 7 and Bill 4 are on the Order Paper, and there's no supplemental requirement that it actually has to be up for debate for the day.

The Speaker: Thank you for reading that into Hansard. I was trying to save the House some time, but I appreciate you having done it.

Just so that you know, the precedent of this House is the part that deals with it being on for debate today, the day of. That's how it's always been interpreted here, hon. member, but it's a good advisory and, again, a little bit more education for everyone.

Let's move on, then. That concludes the third point of order. Let us move on to the fourth point of order. Airdrie or someone on behalf of raised a point of order at 2:18.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Withdrawn.

The Speaker: That point of order has been withdrawn, and accordingly we move on now to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to have the opportunity to move Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, for third reading.

The bill itself has been the subject of a significant amount of debate in the House. In fact, if I recall correctly, it had a very significant time at second reading, and it had probably close to 30 hours at committee. It has been thoroughly digested and spit out. It's a very important piece of legislation. I'm not sure that this is a record in my time in the House, but I think it might be, to have 21 amendments considered to a bill.

Certainly, it's a considerable amount of work that's been done by all members of the House. It takes a lot of work to first of all read and digest a bill of this size and then, secondly, to come up with amendments to the bill, and then, of course, to be able to receive those amendments on the floor of the House and discern what they relate to and how they impact and what the unintended consequences might be. So I think a good piece of work by this House to take a bill like this, to understand it thoroughly, to debate it copiously, and to have so many amendments that the members of the House have to familiarize themselves with very quickly and then be prepared to understand whether or not they do make an appropriate amendment to the bill.

I think it's important in reflecting in third reading of the bill to understand why so much work goes into it and so little result comes out, you know, when you have that many amendments. And I don't want to in any way be derogatory about the amendments. I really do not. I want to instead talk on the record about the fact that sometimes when amendments come forward, they may look like they're appropriate amendments that will enhance the quality of the bill, and people say: well, why did you not accept that amendment? One of the roles as Government House Leader is to, in fact, very quickly look at amendments and find them in the bill and figure out what they are and talk with the bill sponsor and understand whether or not it might be a friendly amendment or one that's acceptable or one which will improve the bill.

That actually is quite an interesting challenge on a bill like this. You look at the bill, and I would say, you know, just as an example, that one of the amendments that came forward named the ministers who might be responsible in a certain section. It was necessary to say: well, that sounds reasonable to say who would be responsible, the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and such other ministers as may be named. But it was important to be able to reflect back to the fact that our practice in the House and in government in this province for a number of years now has been to do all of that in the Government Organization Act so that as governments reorganize from time to time, you don't have to go back and re-amend the bill.

Now, the general public would not necessarily know that practice, so it's important that that's understood. When you're saying no to an amendment, it might be for that type of fairly innocuous reason, not for the principle of the amendment.

The same thing. There was considerable discussion about whether the bill is in the public interest or whether the regulator must act in the public interest. Well, you know, there are understandings. There are processes. I mean, one would hope that everything that's done in this House would be done in the public interest. That's an underlying thesis. It's an assumption that I think has to be determined as being valid. Whether we agree as to what's in the public interest, now that might be entirely different, but what the House does should always be in the public interest, and what we do in the name of our constituents ought always to be in the public interest.

There are those sorts of issues and debates that go on and amendments that come forward, and there may be differences of viewpoint with respect to an amendment as to its value in enhancing the bill, or it may be an amendment which is simply seen as being a different philosophical viewpoint. Most amendments, I would suggest, are ones that you look at and say: "Well, you're changing a word here and a word there, but what are the consequences in terms of the parallelism or the construct of the bill? How does that impact elsewhere? Do we understand how that might impact and what we do with it?" Obviously, you can't adjourn after every amendment is tabled, so unless you're aware of the amendments ahead of time, you sometimes have to say: well, it looks innocuous, but I can't guarantee that it is innocuous.

We have had careful time and planning going into bills. Putting a bill like this before the House takes a lot of work. I must commend the now Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development because prior to being in that role, she chaired a task force, as an associate minister of Energy at the time, I believe, and that task force laid the foundation for this bill, laid the foundation to show that we needed, yes, to have a much stronger and more streamlined regulatory process, that people, if they wanted to engage in appropriate, sustainable, or renewable or other types of appropriate development, had one place to go but that in going to that place, they still had to adhere to the standards that are required for safety, environment, public interest, all those other things. That's the nature of the bill. It's based on the idea that the policy background, the policy work is in fact done here. The policy work is done by government and, where appropriate, brought to the Legislature for legislation or enacted under regulations with respect to existing acts.

Clearly, the report that the now Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development did was to outline how you could do a streamlined regulatory process which made it easier for business to do business but still ensured the protections of the environment, the safety of the public, the protection of the interest, and the opportunity for people who were affected to intervene and be involved in the process, so a streamlined regulatory process while still ensuring that the process itself did not create the policy. The policy was, in fact, the purview of the government and the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, a very complex piece of work, a very good piece of work, now thoroughly discussed and digested by the House. I would ask members of the House to now give it its full and final blessing in third reading.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like the government is going to get its way with the Responsible Energy Development Act without any amendments put forward by the opposition. This government and the Energy minister have decided to leave the serious flaws in Bill 2 even though they have been thoroughly dismantled in this Assembly by myself and my colleagues. This is a most unfortunate situation that could have been solved. Now, due to this government's ramming through of Bill 2, another ineffective bill will be on the books. The intent of Bill 2 is admirable. Its execution is pitiful.

Bill 2 wants to reduce red tape and streamline the regulatory process, but while attempting to do that, it extracts a high price to pay from landowners. The reality is that nothing in this bill will ensure applications are reviewed by the regulator in a timely manner. While the intent of this bill is to streamline development, it may just result in more bogged-down applications. An amendment to ensure appropriate timelines are followed would have corrected this, but this government didn't think so, so it will pass this ineffective bill instead. The timelines would give our industry some stability. Instead, this government opted for instability.

Bill 2 does away with several traditional rights in the same way the Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act did. As the government was forced to amend bills 19, 36, and 50 due to the public outrage that followed these outrageous power grabs, the government can take this as a fair warning to expect further widespread backlash to Bill 2 from landowners. I look forward to debating these amendments in the future in this House.

The right to an independent appeal must be restored. The government has yet to provide a justification for eliminating the right to an appeal before the Environmental Appeals Board under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the Public Lands Act. The public is right to be wary of the limiting of their right to an independent appeal. What does the government propose to replace their right to an independent appeal? Bill 2 sends the appeal back to the regulator. People who disagree with a decision of the regulator have to appeal to the same regulator who made the initial decision, as if this regulator will change their mind the second time around. The public will not be able to have faith that their concerns have been addressed by this faulty way of doing business.

An independent appeal would offer a fresh perspective. A landowner could have confidence in a second appeal weighing the merits of a case, but in Bill 2 landowners will just have to suck it up. An amendment would have fixed this fatal flaw, but the government thinks it knows better. Somehow this government went through amending bills 19, 36, and 50 in the last year without learning a single lesson. What will it take for this government to listen? It rams through bills, then denies they have encroached on landowners' rights. Then they make amendments and go on to pass another bad bill. This is the government that never learns from its mistakes. Instead of getting it right the first time, this government will no doubt go on another consultation tour through the rural areas to try to justify their decisions. At the end of the day a few amendments could have fixed these problems, but the government voted down amendments one by one.

Given the dictatorial powers granted to this regulator, the selection process for the board of directors is incredibly important, yet this government plans to install its party friends to such an important position, one could assume from how this law is crafted. The Wildrose put forward an amendment to rectify this problem which stipulated that the appropriate expertise be present on the board of directors, but this government decided to go its own way and to be able to appoint its friends to the role regardless of whether they are qualified or not. How can Albertans have confidence in this process? They can't. The board should be comprised of industry, environment, and property rights experts. The Wildrose amendment would have solved this issue, but the government decided it knows best. We'll see about that once Bill 2 reaches the implementation phase.

Further, this bill includes a ludicrous provision to allow the minister to meddle in the private affairs of citizens and to contravene the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to collect information submitted by private citizens to the regulator. What does the minister plan on doing with this information? What guarantee will applicants have that this private information will not be used inappropriately? The regulator is supposed to be an arm's-length, independent body, but apparently the minister wants to have his hands in it at any given moment. The reason for regulatory bodies to be at arm's length is to take politics out of the decisions. Applicants can't have confidence that this will occur under section 68(1).

Another fatal flaw is section 43, where the regulator is granted the right to review its own decisions on a whim. This will make it hard for industry and landowners to have any faith that the regulator will have consistency. This problematic section creates the risk that the regulator will change its mind without due process or notification.

Finally, it's baffling how government MLAs fought so hard against our amendments to include public interest and the respect for landowners in the mandate of this regulator. The public interest was in previous legislation. Now it's gone. I listened carefully to the arguments presented by the government as to why they thought public interest should be taken out and failed to hear a coherent argument for this. Well, at least it's clear. This government does not want to take the public interest into account regarding energy development in Alberta. An amendment would have reinstated the public interest and landowner respect, but the government voted them down, showing the contempt it holds for Albertans. This is most unfortunate for a government that tries to talk about accountability and transparency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I had hoped after this whole process to be able to rise and speak in favour of this bill because at the outset – and we said so when we were debating this in second reading – we said that generally we and I think all of the stakeholders support the idea of having a single regulator, support the idea of having streamlined regulations. But the problem, as we have seen in previous bills, is the same problem that we have with this one, that the intent of the bill is often not reflected in the actual legal wording of the bill.

Now, I know that the Energy minister and others have claimed that they have spent two years consulting on this. That may well be the case, that they spent two years consulting on the idea, on the notion. Fair enough. If you were just asking people what they thought of the idea or the notion, then you could move ahead, but what they have not spent time doing any meaningful consultation on is the actual wording of what is in this legislation. This has happened a lot with this government. I don't know if they're getting bad legal advice, I don't know if they're not taking due diligence behind closed doors when they do their statutory review, but something is missing between the intent of the bill and what they intend to do with it and then the actual clauses that get written into the wording of it.

This is the reason why we appealed to the government over and over again to slow this legislation down, to allow the time for it to be vetted by stakeholders so we could get the appropriate stakeholder feedback, to allow for it to go into committee so that we would be able to go through it clause by clause, identify the problematic clauses, have the time to discuss it. I appreciate what the House leader has said. He's absolutely right. It takes a lot of effort on both sides to go through, read the legislation, come up with the amendments, read and digest the amendments in the process of doing this through the Committee of the Whole, listen to the debate, and come up with a reasonable response and make a decision on whether to vote it up or vote it down. It's not a good process, and we identified that from the very beginning.

We thought a much better process would have been to have this bill go to one of our policy committees. I think the Premier had intended for those committees to do that sort of work. I sort of gathered that that was the intention that she had when she established those, that they would do meaningful work about the bills that were coming forward in this Legislature, meaningful, all-party work so that we would be able to call witnesses, so that we could hear their feedback directly, so that we were all getting the information from the same groups of people, be able to assess it and analyze it, and then be able to decide on its merits whether or not something should be accepted or something should be rejected. I think that would have been a far better process, and it would have resulted in far better legislation.

We see that they don't make this mistake all the time. As I mentioned before in one of the earlier readings, they didn't make this mistake with Bill 10. Bill 10 is a bill where a lot of the meat and the rules are clearly defined in legislation, and very little is left to regulation. Very little is left to the cabinet to decide afterwards. It almost feels, when you read this bill, like they were in such a rush to get it passed that they figured: well, we can figure all that other stuff out later. It may well be that they have earned back a modicum of credibility with the energy sector over the last number of months, that the energy sector is willing to give them the benefit of the doubt, that the regulations are going to turn out and that they're going to match what the intention of the bill is, and that all will be made clear.

I have to tell you, though, whatever modicum of credibility they have earned back from the energy sector, they have not even begun to earn back from the landowner community, they have not even begun to earn back from the environmental community. That's what we worry about with this legislation, that it does not balance all of the stakeholder interests in developing our most important resource in this province, nor do we think it gives the energy sector the certainty that it was designed and that it claims it was intended to do.

The energy sector, as I've mentioned many times before, has been looking for certainty around the regulatory process. They are concerned about the fact that you have the potential to have multiple intervenors, much like the Gateway hearing process, who are not directly and adversely affected by the legislation entering in at different points of the process and derailing decisions and ultimately delaying them for months or, potentially, even years. The problem is that that part of the legislation or that part of the process problem I don't believe has been rectified by the legislation as it's been put forward. That is one of the reasons why we think the government has erred in trying to force this through.

The government also does seem to have – I don't know why – a disconnect between what we're hearing and what they're hearing. We are just the bearers of the information that is coming out through a variety of groups, individuals, and legal experts who have taken a look at this legislation and have found that it falls short. I'm going to quote a few of these, and there are others.

This bill is "a colossal gaffe by the Alberta government," and "the government doesn't need to be stoking any fires by stripping away these rights." That was Shaun Fluker, University of Calgary. He was quoted in the Calgary Herald on November 15, 2012. It's not the only one.

Bill 2 is sloppy legal drafting and bad policy insofar as it strips the most affected by energy projects of their legal right: Keith Wilson, a property rights lawyer, who, incidentally, started out many years ago in the government's own Farmers' Advocate's office. This is somebody who has a great deal of credibility with landowners and at one point worked for government in providing advice to landowners.

Third. Under Bill 2 the consolidated regulator will be making decisions respecting the landowner's land, but if the landowner has some objection or if there's been something overlooked, they can't appeal: a law professor at the University of Alberta named Russell Brown, November 5, 2012.

Fourth. Changing it to being the regulator's call on if and when hearings are called, I would say that's a step backwards for landowners who may be affected: Cindy Chiasson, executive director of the Environmental Law Centre, once again on November 5.

This is only a sampling of the critics of this bill.

We've been trying to once again prevent the government from making the same kind of mistake that it made in previous bills. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks made mention of those, and others in this Chamber, I'm sure, in third reading are going to also make reference to those.

When you look back at the history of this government having passed, first of all, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, where they purposely went out of their way to create a process to freeze landowners' land into green zones and limit the amount of compensation those landowners would otherwise be eligible to receive through the provisions of the Expropriation Act, which had 19 heads of compensation, it's no wonder that landowners across this province began to wonder whether or not the government had their best interests at heart. It's no wonder that landowners became active and agitated and pressed the government to change it.

Now, to the government's credit, they realized their mistake, and they came back with amending legislation that closed this loophole and restored the ability of landowners to receive full compensation. But why did they have to go through the process? Why didn't they take the time to get it right? Why did they pass flawed legislation in the first place and create all of that ire and anguish and public response only to be forced to come back?

Well, you would have thought that having gone through that, they wouldn't have made the mistake again. Yet they did. They made the same mistake with the Land Stewardship Act, when they brought it through, having such a broad parameter for what the decision-making power of cabinet would be, allowing cabinet at a whim to be able to cancel any kind of statutory consent, extinguish rights – that was the term in the act – without full compensation, without an opportunity to have recourse to the courts. A horribly flawed piece of legislation. All kinds of landowner advocates and activists let them know that they'd made a mistake.

They did come back, and they made certain revisions. They at least made it very clear that they wouldn't be able to cancel your land title or your marriage licence or your driver's licence. That's how broadly and badly the original legislation was written, that it would have potentially given cabinet the power to do that, again without recourse, again without full compensation. So having made that mistake, come back, once again, made the revisions, you would have thought that they would have learned. Two learning experiences of passing bad legislation, rushing it through, and then having to come back and make significant amendments to it.

The third one, though, Bill 50 – we've just now gone through a process where they passed the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, made a mistake in handing the power over to cabinet. Rather than going to the AUC to do an independent needs assessment on whether transmission lines are needed, they've locked us into $16 billion worth, potentially, of transmission lines, a portion of those identified through this critical infrastructure list that they have in their legislation that we probably don't even need. It would be nice if we could go back. Hopefully, we'll have an opportunity this evening to convince the government once again that they should go back and have a look at those particular projects so that we can do an independent review of them.

Once again, it's the same principle. Landowners responded, consumer groups responded, industry advocates responded, said that they'd made a mistake, and finally – finally – they come back and make a major revision to this bill. Here's a third example of them rushing through legislation, getting it wrong, getting pummeled by different landowner interests, different consumer advocates, and then finally – finally – realizing that they had to change it.

We haven't seen what will happen yet with the carbon capture and storage amendment act. I have no doubt that that's going to go through a very similar process once people start getting forced access to have people come onto their property to take advantage of the government-owned pore space under their property. I suspect that one is coming in the future.

We know what's going to happen here. We know. I can make a prediction right now. What's going to happen is that the government over the course of the next months or years – who knows how long it's going to take them to develop the regulations – are going to bring forward regulations, and they're going to be found wanting. Either the energy sector is going to find that its trust in government was misplaced and there are going to be things that were missing, that should have been in legislation but weren't; or the landowner groups are going to find that what we have been raising as concerns was absolutely legitimate, that their rights have been diminished, and the government will be pressured to come back and make amendments; or the environmental groups are going to put enough public pressure and international pressure on this government that they're going to have to come back and restore concepts like public interest into this legislation, that already does exist but has been stripped out. These are the things that we fear.

We fear that by racing ahead, rushing on badly written legislation, on flawed legislation, not taking the time to do the stakeholder consultation properly and doing this right, we are going to be in exactly the same position with this bill a year or two years from now that we were in with those other bills over the last few years.

This is not an idle concern. When you have a piece of legislation that stands to impact two of our principal industries in this province, energy being one and agriculture being the other, blindly being forced through with only a mere few weeks of debate, without proper consultation, without any real consideration, in my opinion, given to the amendments, legitimate amendments brought forward by the opposition based on the consultation and the feedback that we've received, then you're now in a position where you are creating way too much uncertainty in our economy.

We already know that there is international, global uncertainty in the economy. The last thing that our industries need is for our government to continue to foment this uncertainty and interfere with their ability to make investment decisions and feel confident that they're not going to be walking on quicksand as they try to make their decisions on investments going forward.

The amendments that we brought forward I believe were very reasonable. I don't think that it would have changed at all the intent or desire of the government to create a streamlined process to do energy regulation; for instance, the various motions that were brought forward to bring back this issue of the public interest. In the current ERCB regulations the public interest is mentioned four times, yet when you look at some of the wording of the new legislation, the new bill, they've struck out the words "public interest." I'm looking at section 9(1)(a), as an example. First of all, it says "honestly and in good faith." That's fine. But why doesn't it say: honestly, in good faith, and in the public interest? Why can't we have provisions in here that talk about the public interest? I think we need to.

It's quite clear that without some due consideration of public interest, you can end up with massive problems. I'll just use Bill 50 as an example, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act. When government took it upon themselves to decide in cabinet that we needed to have a bunch of critical transmission lines built based on old information, it resulted in a massive overbuild, a proposed overbuild of transmission lines. It's unclear which ones we need, if any of them, and there is no way now for us to go back and have a reasonable debate about whether or not this is in the public interest, whether or not the benefits outweigh the costs. This is the reason why the public interest has to be considered when you're making these kinds of major investment, when you're doing these kinds of major developments. You do have to do a cost-benefit analysis. You do have to make sure that the public interest is served.

In addition, the debate that we had just before question period: I think that absolutely the most important part of this bill that is missing is the issue of having timelines. The government in multiple places throughout the legislation talks about handing it over to the regulator to establish the timelines for when different applications are going to be heard and when they're going to be decided on. Unfortunately, if we had a regulator that we had confidence in, if we had a regulator that was able to deal with these applications in an expeditious and timely way, we wouldn't even be here talking about this legislation. So the very idea that now we're going to be leaving it up to the regulator to set the rules and timelines defeats the entire purpose of the legislation, in my opinion. This is the job of the legislators, to give an indication to the regulators of what our expectations are of how they're going to deal with these applications in a timely way.

Now, that doesn't mean that they approve every one within a 180-day period, which is the period of time that we proposed as being reasonable, but it does mean that if they're going to say no, they have to say no within that period. If they're going to say yes, then say yes within that period. Give our industry a reasonable period of time and a reasonable expectation of when they might get an answer so that they don't end up having to wait excessive months or even years to be able to get these decisions.

We also had a debate over the issue of an external appeal process. I'm not sure why this is such a foreign concept to the government. It seems like when they get something right in another area, for some reason – maybe it's because the departments don't talk to each other, maybe it's because the ministers don't talk to each other. I'm not sure what it is. Why can't we take structures that we know are working and have those same structures replicated when we're creating something new?

In the case of having an external appeal, of course, I'm thinking about some of the development appeals that happen at the municipal level. The municipalities go through a process where they examine development proposals and make decisions on the basis of the information that they have at the time, balancing different landowner interests, balancing stakeholder input, balancing the public interest. They make a decision about whether or not they're going to agree or disagree with a certain development. But then if they reject it or if there is something that needs to be appealed, there is an opportunity to be able to appeal that to another level. We have a process that works, doesn't interfere with the process.

By and large what happens is that most people acknowledge that the decisions that are initially made by those councils are reasonable ones. We're not seeing a situation where every single decision is appealed every single time. In the case of the Environmental Appeals Board our understanding is that in the last year it heard 12 cases. What is the difficulty with creating a process so that if something goes wrong – if there is an approval process, if the development occurs, if mistakes are made and there is something that needs to be addressed, what's wrong with having someone other than the body that approved it listen to the arguments and make a decision about whether or not there needs to be redress?

It's not an appeals process that's being overused. It certainly cannot be argued by the industry that this is something that is creating bottlenecks in their approval process. It's not. It just gives that extra protection to landowners. Now landowners fear that one more right and opportunity for them to appeal these kinds of actions has been taken away from them. That's one of the pieces of feedback that we get. Through this act our landowners are feeling like their opportunities to have their rights respected are being diminished. We think that it would have been something that could have been very easily resolved, that it wouldn't have been anything that would have impacted the timelines for industry. It's just one more thing that unnecessarily antagonizes our environmental community, one more thing that unnecessarily antagonizes our landowners.

The fourth area, this whole notion of restoring notification. Now, I know that the minister attempted to clarify what he meant by notice by putting in this term "public notice." But there is quite a bit of difference between giving a public notification, putting an ad in a newspaper, putting something posted on a website, when you're not going to be the person impacted. If you have an idle interest and you've got a little bit of time, you may want to daily go on and have a look at the different approvals that have been granted that may or may not impact a variety of developments throughout the province, but I'm quite sure most of us don't do that.

I'm quite sure that the people who most need to know when somebody is going to be coming onto their land as a landman and asking for drilling access, the person who most needs to know is the person who has the surface rights to that piece of property, which is why it wouldn't have harmed anyone – it wouldn't have harmed anyone – it wouldn't have interfered with the process, it wouldn't have changed anything beyond the status quo of what we have today if they had simply agreed to take the section that was in the current ERCB rules, section 26, and carry it forward into this legislation, replacing section 32 with a very clear process that the regulator would have to follow for notification and hearings.

I think this is so important. I'm going to read it into the record again because this, I think, could have gone a long way towards changing the concerns or addressing the concerns that landowners have. It certainly would have gone a long way towards addressing the concerns that the lawyers that I mentioned had brought up. I'm going to read it into the record because I'm, once again, going to predict that a year from now we're going to be back doing an amendment that's going to put this in the act anyway, so I might as well put it into the record.

This section would have said under our amendment:

32(1) If it appears to the Regulator that its decision on an application may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person, the Regulator shall give the person

- (a) notice of the application,
- (b) a reasonable opportunity of learning the facts bearing on the application and presented to the Regulator by the applicant and other parties to the application,
- (c) a reasonable opportunity, after filing a statement of concern in accordance with the rules, to furnish evidence relevant to the application or in contradiction or explanation of the facts or allegations in the application,
- (d) if the person will not have a fair opportunity to contradict or explain the facts or allegations in the application without cross-examination of the person presenting the application, an opportunity of cross-examination in the presence of the Regulator, and
- (e) an adequate opportunity of making representations by way of argument to the Regulator.

(2) When by subsection (1) a person is entitled to make representations to the Regulator, the Regulator is not by subsection (1) required to afford an opportunity to the person

- (a) to make oral representations, or
- (b) to be represented by counsel, if the Regulator affords the person an opportunity to make representations adequately in writing, unless the statutory provision authorizing the Regulator's decision requires that a hearing be held.

This, again, would have balanced the rights of the energy sector to be able to get the certainty that they wanted; it would have limited the number of intervenors to those who were directly and adversely affected; it would have allowed for the landowner to have some clarity in the process that would be used in the event that there's going to be development on the land that they have rights to, whether in fee simple or through a lease; and it still would have given the regulator the flexibility to be able to receive a submission written or through a hearing process. We see no reason why the government and why the Energy minister would not have taken this very reasonable amendment and just carried forward legislation that is already in place. I mean, we already have these practices. If we already have these practices and these are not the practices that are causing the issues, then why break something that is not broken? Why not just bring this part of the legislation forward.

I have every confidence that we will very likely be returning to that amendment at some future point. I'm just disappointed that the government chose not to listen to the concerns of those who were raising it and make the modification to their legislation today.

On the issue of the reconsideration. This is another area where it just confuses me why the government would not have looked at this and realized how important it is for the sake of providing certainty to the industry. We're all trying here to find provisions that will give certainty to the industry. Yet right now we have a provision in the act, section 43, that allows for the regulator to reconsider at any time for any reason. We believe that we needed to give some certainty back to those who are subject to the decision about something that may be reconsidered or changed, so providing a minimum of 60 days' notice of reconsideration to any landowners, companies, or other persons directly affected by the decision. What would be wrong with providing a period of time in which people understood that there was going to be a reconsideration rather than having it occur at any given time, willy-nilly, without the appropriate amount of notice? We don't think that this provides certainty to the industry, and this is the reason why we proposed having a change.

The issue of having a chief hearing commissioner be independent and accountable. I think that we have already seen through a number of the issues that have been brought up in the media, through a number of the issues that have been brought up in this Legislature, through the fact that we have seen certain former members of government get waivers for them to be able to take positions back with their previous government departments that there are real concerns about the level of independence that we have between the people who are appointed to do jobs through these agencies, boards, and commissions and the connection that they have to the current governing party.

We want to make sure that the very best person is in the position of being the chief hearing commissioner, and we think that the best way to have ensured that would have happened, to ensure that they were truly independent is that they should have been appointed, as we do see with other officers of the Legislature, through an all-party committee so that we could all have the opportunity to have input into that decision so that we could go back to the various stakeholders and demonstrate that that person had been vetted and that person was the best person to be able to balance all of those competing interests. I think that by not agreeing to that amendment the government, once again, erred.

Related to this, ensuring that the directors of the board are representatives that are not entirely beholden to the minister goes to the exact same point. Having the minister able to make the decision on every person who is appointed to this commission and for it not to be balanced, specifically with particular types of people who have particular expertise, is something that is going to once again, I think, create problems for this government. One of the issues when they first brought this bill forward was that they were going to populate the board with just three people and those three people were all going to be former ERCB employees. Well, once again, those who have the expertise to be able to ensure that all of the different stakeholders are properly represented are not necessarily just going to be former government employees. We want to be able to ensure that we've got people with a variety of expertise, and we don't have that now.

We wanted to have a provision in there that would have allowed for us to ensure that at least one person on this board had some demonstrable expertise in property rights. I've just quoted a number of people who have demonstrable expertise in property rights, a couple of whom I'm quite sure would have been more than happy to serve on this board. We wanted to see one person with demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation. There are a whole range of individual groups in this province who are doing terrific work on negotiating environmental easements with our landowners, who are doing terrific work on stewarding landscapes and helping us to recover landscapes when we've seen disturbances. Having somebody who has that demonstrable expertise, I think, would have been a real addition to this board, and then, of course, having two individuals with demonstrable expertise in the energy industry, each from different aspects of the industry. We certainly would need someone with oil sands expertise and someone with conventional oil and gas expertise.

I remember talking with somebody who had been an employee with the ERCB and is now working with one of the large energy companies. He said how his perspective has completely changed now that he's working for industry. When he was on the one side, he told me that he was absolutely adamant about every single rule being followed in exactly the way that he had interpreted the legislation. Now that he's on the other side, he realizes just how unreasonable some of the requirements of the regulator had been that he had previously been in support of. It's this importance of being able to be on the receiving end of the regulatory rules, restrictions, and interpretations that provides the important perspective about what reasonableness is, about how a rule is being enforced or how a regulatory requirement is being enforced, and I think we miss that by not having people who are on this board who have expertise in the energy industry.

Now, of course, I suppose the Energy minister has the ability to take this under advisement and make those kinds of appointments as it is, but we think that's not good enough. We think it needed to be written into the legislation if we were going to be able to win the confidence of all of the different stakeholders, including the landowner groups and the environmental activists. I think they missed an opportunity to do that.

We even were talking in our caucus about proposing a different type of approach for how that board of directors might be chosen. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler – oh, he's not here today – had looked at the Railroad Commission which now in Texas is also responsible for doing regulatory approvals on utilities. The Railroad Commission is actually an elected commission that oversees the regulatory aspects of those important projects. He suggested that we even go that far, suggested that we have a board of directors where they would be subject to regular elections from the various stakeholder groups. We thought that that would be too far for the government. Clearly, we were right because even this modest proposal that we put forward was rejected. But the point still remains that having people with these different types of expertise would have been ideal on this commission, and it would have gone a long way, I think, towards identifying the issues before they erupt.

I mean, this was related to another provision that was voted down by the government. There's this transition board that is going to see us through to this new permanent board, and our understanding is that those transition directors are going to become the permanent board of directors. This was the perfect opportunity, the perfect time to be appointing people from these four different aspects – a property rights expert, an environment expert, and then those who have expertise in both aspects of the energy business – to make sure as the regulations are being developed, as we're transitioning to this new approach, that we've got the right people on board to help us with that. I think the government has missed an opportunity on that, and I think, once again, we'll be addressing that once we see the regulations come out.

It would have been easy for them to have created a bill that would have secured the interests of landowners by just making one simple change right at the beginning so that it set the framework for the entire legislation. Under section 2(1) they talk about what the bill is intended to do, how it's intended to develop the resource in a responsible way, how it's intended to do so in a way that respects the environment. The only thing that was missing was having a clause that would have amended that section to add "in a manner which respects landowners," and I may also add "leaseholders." If they had put that right in at the top, as a recognition that we're trying to develop a piece of legislation here that balances the various interests, I think that they would have gotten some credit from the groups that are now the biggest critics of this legislation.

It would have been a simple amendment. It would have been in some ways an important symbolic amendment. Sometimes symbols are important when you've completely destroyed your credibility with a group, as this government has. They've completely destroyed their credibility with landowners. And this kind of language would have gone at least a step of the way to recognizing that we needed to have this important consideration as we're developing the regulations around how our energy development is going to take place in this province.

We also believe that we need more transparency with regard to extraprovincial agreements. This is one of the things that has us concerned, especially as we hear our various politicians in other parts of the country or even the U.S. President talking about things like a cap and trade program and things like – and you've heard this before – the federal Liberals campaigning to ban tanker traffic off the west coast or have other types of provisions that would have the federal government intervene in our ability to regulate our own industry. I'm very worried that for the interests of expedience there might be some of these things that are agreed to under the auspices of the Premier's national energy strategy, and we have no ability, it would seem, under the way the legislation is currently written, to be able to have that come back for debate in this Legislature. We think that's a problem.

We think that any extraprovincial agreements that could potentially impact our ability to develop our resources and have our autonomy to do so or affect us in a financial way should come back to this Legislature within nine months of the execution of the agreement. We're not quite sure what this provision in the legislation might open the door to, but we wanted to have some certainty that there weren't going to be a number of interprovincial or international agreements signed that we simply couldn't live with without even knowing about it or being able to weigh in on it or be able to have the stakeholder feedback. Again, I don't think it would have been an interference to the government for us to be able to have that opportunity. I'm not sure what this opens the door to, but I am quite concerned that we've given this amount of power through this legislation to that regulator.

We also have concerns about the government's expansion, potentially, of the ability to collect private information about individuals. I'm still not quite sure why it is that they had the provision to allow the government to collect private information on those that they're regulating. It seemed like an odd provision. It seems to me that there should be some fairly standard information that gets collected on those who are doing business with government, those who are taking out leases or developing the resources on our behalf. I'm not quite sure why the government thinks that they should be able to also collect private information, and I'm a little bit concerned that it isn't clarified about what kind of private information they would be collecting.

Privacy rights are an increasing concern for all citizens, especially since we have so many mechanisms to have our privacy invaded in a way like we never used to. Before Twitter and Facebook and YouTube and e-mail and all of the electronic communications it may have been easier for us to be able to protect our privacy. It's harder to do that now, and to give government carte blanche to collect a bunch of private information, unclear about where the parameters around that are, unclear of how it will be protected, how it might be shared, we think is an unnecessary provision. It would have been a very easy thing for them to accept that amendment without it changing the provisions of the legislation and what it's trying to accomplish, but once again it was voted down.

The catch-all clause which has us most concerned is, of course, section 68. That is, to us, the same kind of provision that the government granted itself through those previous bad bills. When you look at Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, one of the things that the stakeholders had the biggest problem with was the government granting itself so much discretionary power to make decisions in cabinet, behind closed doors, in the absence of any check and balance on their ability to do so.

The problem that people had with the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, once again, is the inordinate amount of power that cabinet has given itself to be able to make decisions to abridge landowner and leaseholder rights without full compensation, without recourse to the courts, being essentially the appeal body as well if there are concerns or if compensation does need to be negotiated, the ability, for instance, to even withhold the ability of municipalities to receive their fair, appropriate transfers or to take away their bylaw-making power if they pass certain local rules that conflict with regional plans.

This kind of power that the cabinet has given itself is something that has our landowners and other bodies very, very concerned, and here we have a replication of the same problem in this act under section 68. It says that regardless of all the other nice things in this legislation at any time the cabinet can override any of the rules of the regulator. If we were trying to get some certainty for our landowners and for our energy sector, for that matter, about what it is we were trying to accomplish through this legislation, I think that section on its own pretty well undermines that ability, and this is the reason why we thought it should be struck.

We do think that this legislation could have been greatly improved with these amendments. We're disappointed with the approach that the government took. I think that at the beginning of this whole process we had kind of thought that we might be able to make some progress with the Energy minister.

Mr. Hale: We sure hoped.

Ms Smith: We certainly hoped. We did. I remember talking with the Member for Strathmore-Brooks and him saying that he thought that a couple of these amendments might actually be approved by the Energy minister. We were even delighted that the Energy minister took the opportunity to go out and have a debate in the Little Bow riding with the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. We think it was a respectful debate.

It was very clear and should have been clear to the Energy minister through that process that people are interested, but they're unfamiliar. They don't really know what's going to happen. They don't really know how it's going to impact them. I think the minister has missed an opportunity to actually go out and talk to landowners and educate them about what he feels this legislation will do, but even more importantly I think he missed an opportunity to go out and get the feedback that we get every single day through e-mails, through our direct consultations and direct contact that we have with our constituents about the very legitimate concern that they have that their rights are being interfered with, that their rights are being eroded, that their rights are being undermined. We hear this every day.

It may well be that the minister does not get into the rural areas as much as we do though I know he comes from my neck of the woods. I know that he's got a lot of friends in the Highwood area. I think he must know that the landowner concern about previous bills is being carried over into concern about this bill because they see that there are similar types of clauses, similar types of approaches, similar reductions in the protection for landowners. I think he's created, unfortunately, an unnecessary amount of skepticism and fear and potential backlash by being in such a rush to pass this through, by being in such a rush to pass through the amendments, to avoid taking them seriously, to avoid doing the consultation with the stakeholders. We were still in the process of consulting with even the energy stakeholders that are impacted by this bill.

I remember what happened with the Land Stewardship Act, and this feels very similar to what happened in that process. It was, I believe, April 27 that the bill was introduced into the Legislature. It was passed through first and second readings, Committee of the Whole, third reading, and declared into law by something like June 8. Within five weeks a massive piece of legislation was passed through all of those different phases. I don't think it was until the summer of that same year that the legal experts and the landowner groups started reading through it and saying: what on earth does this bill do? That, I think, is the same thing that we're going to find with this legislation.

There have been a number of different stakeholder groups that we have phoned to get feedback from. Many of them have said: well, we haven't had time to read the bill yet, but we're sure hopeful about what it's going to accomplish. That, I think, is the fundamental problem. It's one thing to consult on a concept. It's another thing to consult after you've actually got the provisions, the exact legal language in front of you, because that's where the mistakes get made. Once we've finished with our work here, then it gets handed into the hands of the lawyers to do their interpretation.

Now, I know there's lots of work that needs to be done on the regulations, but this is just it. Once we've done our work here, if we have not been clear about what our intentions are as a Legislature, then it comes up to different lawyers to be able to battle out their different interpretations. I think we're going to find over the coming months that as legal experts take a closer and closer look at this bill, we're going to end up with multiple issues with multiple clauses, and we will have to come back in a period of time to be able to make some of the amendments.

What I would have liked to have seen with this bill – and I'm hoping that we will be able to see this with other pieces of substantial legislation that this government brings forward in future years. I think that we have to all recognize that the fall session is a pretty difficult time for us to be able to pass through substantial pieces of legislation with enough opportunity to debate, to do the stakeholder consultation, to do the amendments, and to see it through. I have such great sympathy for Parliamentary Counsel, who have had to draft all of these amendments for all of these bills, not just this one, and the incredible amount of pressure that we are putting on such a small team to be able to do this in this compressed period of time.

There could have been another way to do this. There was an opportunity to have this bill go to a committee so that it could have been more thoroughly examined. But I would just offer this to the government, having seen now how these pieces of legislation get pushed through. It would have been far better for them to introduce a piece of legislation like this in the spring and then have the opportunity for us through the course of the spring to do the work on it, to do the proper debate on it, to do the proper consultation because, of course, in the spring every three weeks you've got an opportunity to go home and talk to your constituents. You have the opportunity to send out a mailer or a survey to ask them if they have any concerns about an issue.

Then you can continue on through the fall session, making any final amendments that you need to do through Committee of the Whole. Split it up. I'm not sure why the government has gotten into this habit of thinking that everything has to be forced through within a matter of weeks. I think that what we would far benefit from is taking the advice of the Premier that she put forward during the leadership race and taking the time between the different readings so that all of us, those on the government side and those in the opposition benches, are able to take the time that we need to be able to do the due diligence so that we can get this right.

As I mentioned when I started, I would have liked to have been able to support this bill. I think that we did an incredible amount of work as an opposition trying to put forward appropriate provisions that would have allowed for this bill to be improved, that would have allowed for us to be able to support it and go back proudly and tell our constituents that we supported it and the reasons why we did.

Having failed to convince the government and failed to convince the Energy minister that even one of these amendments was worth passing, it seems to me that this has been a process where the foregone conclusion was already reached before we even went through these 30 hours of debate. I know the House leader thinks that a great deal of care and consideration was given to these amendments as we went through. We certainly sure did spend an awful lot of time on them, we certainly did speak an awful lot of words on each of them, but I don't know if there was a whole lot of listening going on.

As a result of that, I have to say that I'm going to have to vote against this bill, much as I would have liked to have supported it. I look forward to debating this bill, or at least an amendment to it, in a year or two's time because I'm quite certain that once the landowners, the environmental groups, and the energy sector see how short this falls from the ideal of what they wanted to accomplish, they'll be calling us asking for us to support amendments and to put forward amendments to be able to repair the damage that's been caused. I hope that I'm wrong. I hope that the government does get it right on the regulations, but having seen how wrong they got it in the drafting of the legislation, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not hopeful.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Speaker's Ruling

Question-and-comment Period

The Speaker: Just before we go to it, because I have received some calls and notes over the last few weeks about how 29(2)(a) works, I just want to remind you that when it was brought in, it was brought in exactly for this purpose.

- (a) Subject to clause (b) [below], following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments;
- (b) the 5 minute question and comment period referred to in clause (a) is not available following the speech from the mover of the resolution or the Bill in opening or closing debate, or

- (i) the Member who speaks immediately after the mover.

In this case the Leader of the Official Opposition is the third speaker, so 29(2)(a) is available. However, what I've noted in reviewing Hansard is that frequently a lot of people simply stand up and say: is there anything you wish to add? Now, the hon. Leader of the Opposition spoke for almost 60 minutes or thereabouts or 50 minutes, and it was very riveting, I'm sure. I'm not commenting on her speech; I just want you to know. But 29(2)(a) was put in for a very good purpose, and I would just ask you to consider what the real spirit of 29(2)(a) was for subsequent speakers after this one.

That having been said, I will move now to the associate minister for persons with disabilities, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona and then Little Bow and then Calgary-Buffalo, and I'll add others as they come onto the list. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've asked to rise today. I feel I would be remiss if I didn't rise and say something about Bill 2 and about property rights as they relate to my constituents. All of us in this House are duly elected by our constituents, and all of us have equal right to be here and equal right to our opinions. I don't and won't criticize the opinions or the points of view from other corners of this House. But I'm concerned that we've had a big, big debate about property rights and land rights and a supposed assault by our government on personal property rights in this province for quite some time now in the last few years.

It's really been evident in the last few months of debate in this House. I've found that the chair, not that I question any decision of the chair, has allowed great latitude in the discussion of property rights. For example, in the last speech we had a considerable diatribe on the government's approach to property rights.

The Speaker: Excuse me. Could I just clarify? Are you rising under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Oberle: No.

The Speaker: No? Would you mind if I just interrupted for a moment? I had explained what 29(2)(a) was, and I had assumed that maybe you were speaking there as well. I didn't see anyone under 29(2)(a).

Is there anyone under 29(2)(a)? The hon. member, quickly.

Mr. Strankman: Well, I'd just like to speak to our Wildrose leader's comments about property rights. I was wondering if she could add the differentiation between property rights for landowners and property rights for people who may not necessarily be landowners, that may be in more urban situations.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, before I recognize you, let's keep the questions brief like that. That was well done, hon. member, and we'll try and keep the answers brief as well.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that the hon. member raises a very good point. Part of the reason why I think there's a greater sensitivity about issues of property rights in a rural environment is because it's those who are in a rural environment who can see, through various pieces of legislation, how it is that their land value and investment may be diminished. I mean, let's be perfectly frank. When you're living in an urban environment, an urban centre, the chance that there's going to be a major infrastructure or utility project that is going to take away your property rights is much less than if you live in a rural environment. In an urban environment we do see it happen, though. There have been issues, I believe, in the riding of the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills about development of wells, a sour gas well, very close to an urban environment. Was that the Member for Calgary-Foothills? Calgary-Northwest?

In any case, I think that we have seen that there are urban residents who have seen how development can impact their ability to develop their property. We've also seen, for instance, that there are small towns and many communities where they actually have well sites that have been abandoned that are located right near suburban residences. I know that there have been some concerns that those well sites have not been restored and may impact future property values of those urban owners.

We've also seen, for instance, in the case of the development of transmission lines people purchasing homes expecting that they have a green space that is located near them and being told, whether appropriately or not, by their real estate agent that a certain project won't get built and then suffering through the fact that there's uncertainty about the construction of those lines and the impact on their property value that takes place in the meantime in addition to the fact that they're not able to sell their homes. I think we've seen those kinds of instances.

We've seen instances where road widening occurs, and it results in expropriations. It results as well in property being taken. We've seen in the case of Lynnvew Ridge in Calgary a whole community that suffered losses as a result of inappropriate cleanup by the previous developer. Some of those landowners never felt like they got the full compensation that they were entitled to when they had their rights diminished.

So there are all kinds of instances where urban property owners face the very same issues that rural property owners face. I suppose the difference is that in a rural environment you do see that the attitude, I believe, among perhaps the government, perhaps some of those who are proposing development, almost seems to be that they are not taking into consideration all of the different future value that that particular landowner in the rural environment factors in when they're making considerations about purchasing land.

We've seen rural landowners see their land value diminished when they're put into a green space. We've seen rural landowners see their land value diminished when they are found to have historical resources on their property. We see that their rights to develop are diminished when any kind of pipeline or transmission line project comes through their property. I do believe that the issues that rural and urban property owners face are the same, but I think that the sensitivity in the rural area is much, much higher because the incidence of being impacted through a whole range of different types of development is much higher than what you might expect in an urban environment.

There are other ways, though, in which urban individuals are impacted by development. We've raised the case, for instance, with the issue of the transmission line construction. It's not just those residents in the Sherwood Park area who are going to be impacted in their land values when those big power lines get built, but it is also all of us as ratepayers and consumers who are going to get impacted if all of this transmission gets constructed, and we end up seeing the portion of our bill related to transmission lines increase by double or triple or even further. These are the kinds of arguments that I think it's important for us to engage, those who live in an urban environment.

I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

Speaker's Ruling

Question-and-comment Period

The Speaker: Hon. leader, I'm sure it does. The point I was trying to make is that Standing Order 29(2)(a) is usually reserved for short snappers back one way and the other. I realize this is a complex issue, and there's nothing the Speaker can do – you have the floor; you can speak the full five minutes if you want – but let's just keep in mind what the spirit of the debate aspect was when 29(2)(a) was first brought in. It's a unique feature of this Assembly.

Our next speaker, then, is the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Debate Continued

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for the mix-up with regard to 29(2)(a). I did not make my intentions clear. I'm glad that happened, though, because it kind of underlines my point. The questioner under that 29(2)(a) exchange asked the speaker, quite rightly – as you pointed out, that's what 29(2)(a) is for – if they could expand on a specific point that probably wasn't covered in the previous speech.

The ask was: could the speaker comment on property rights in municipal situations where the person involved might not actually own property? Property rights of persons that don't own property is an interesting concept, Mr. Speaker. We could be talking about personal property, firearms or other such things, but that exactly underlines my point. We've wrapped everything in property rights, whether or not it's involved in the debate on any particular topic. I'm quite sure that if we'd been debating about – I don't know – naming a new provincial mosquito this year, we'd have found a way to wrap that issue in property rights. You know, there would be the proper hue and cry.

I think we'd all agree, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of people in our province that have made, well, pretty good careers out of debating property rights out in the public arena in the last few years, many of them opposed to what we've done as a government. You know, there are a lot of pseudo-facts out there and some facts, but the fact that some of the assertions are blatantly untrue has never seemed to slow a lot of people down, and I find that troubling.

I think one true measure of what this government has done about property rights in the last few years, Mr. Speaker, would be to go to the other end of this. Let's examine outcomes. How many people, actually, have had this government infringe upon the use of their property or seize their property without due compensation or without due process? Of course, the answer to that would be zero, but that seems to be an untroubling statistic, and the debate rages on.

Now, in the response to that last speech, when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was responding to the question, she started talking about the inappropriate cleanup by a developer. Somebody had left a gas station inappropriately cleaned up. What exactly does that have to do with the bills that the government passed in the last couple of years, that we've been talking about property rights? We wind everything into property rights, Mr. Speaker.

She also talked about municipal infringements upon property rezonings. Well, the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that that's been going on for years and years. I don't recall us changing the Municipal Government Act in the last couple of years. That's how municipalities plan.

At the other end of this, as a litmus test of how we're doing, let me bring forward an example from my constituency briefly, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you're shocked, but I will bring it back to the bill. As I said, you allowed that speaker great latitude to talk about property rights, and I need to correct a couple of things.

I have a landowner that built a new house along a paved highway, a transportation road. It's a labour of love. It's a country residence. His wife practises massage. There are corrals, horse barns. It's a beautiful place. It's absolutely phenomenal. He built it on the curve of a highway. There was a slump on that curve. A culvert failed. Plus, we needed to build a new intersection on the highway two kilometres east. We had to cut the road right across his field, so we notified him right away. The inhumanity that our own legislation forced us to notify him right away that we're going to infringe upon his property. He's upset because he built this house by himself. It's a beautiful place, as I said. There we are. We're forced to notify him. That's what Bill 19 did to us. We were actually forced to notify him. Imagine.

We talked to the landowner. The road doesn't impact his house – it's going to cut through the corrals at the back – but the fact that he's losing the corrals impacts the whole property. That's why they built it, so they could have these corrals there. He wants to negotiate with the government. The inhumanity that our policies and legislation would allow us to sit down and negotiate. We presented an offer to this landowner which he was unhappy with. He immediately asked that we access the Expropriation Act. The inhumanity, Mr. Speaker, that he would have access to the Expropriation Act, which he did after Bill 19 passed and which he did before Bill 19 passed, and that was explicitly lied about in the public arena by people travelling around this province telling landowners what the new state of affairs is.

But guess what? The Expropriation Act prevents the government from buying his whole property. They can only expropriate the piece that they need for the highway. Clearly, that wasn't in his best interests. It didn't meet his understanding of what his property rights were, so he went back. He actually negotiated a deal to his satisfaction and sold the property. Unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, the inhumanity of our property rights system.

Just down the road from that, oh, maybe three kilometres away I have another landowner in a similar situation, Mr. Speaker, except in their case the road isn't needed. In fact, for some currently unknown piece of time, again, the government was forced to notify the landowner and show the plans. That landowner, despite the fact that the road does not impact their house, has sold their entire property because, again, their enjoyment of their property is impacted by that future road. The inhumanity that they were allowed to trigger when that sale happens was because of Bill 19.

You know, there's a lot of bunk out there about property rights. The fact of the matter is that I'm on the receiving end of this, as everybody is in our constituencies. I talk to landholders who are impacted, and I see what the legislation actually does with those landowners in co-operation with those landowners, and I'm comfortable with that.

Now, Bill 2, Mr. Speaker. I heard the hon. leader's one small speech. It wasn't clear to me whether she was referring to Bill 2 when she said this, but I heard it a couple of other times: if it ain't broke, don't fix it. I thought that on other levels we had some agreement that it was, in fact, broke. Let me tell you that in my constituency it's broke. I'm sure you're aware that I have some landowners that are very deeply concerned – opposition members are aware and raised these issues – and deeply, deeply impacted by odour emissions in the Three Creeks area. The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley is also impacted by energy developments there. Part of the problem, not by any means all but part of the problem, is inconsistencies, confusion between dueling regulators out there. We're not doing the job that we should be doing in regulating the energy industry out there.

Mr. Speaker, I see this bill going a long way to fixing those problems. I'm eager for the imposition of this bill. This has been many years in the making, and it has been under consultation for many years as well. I'm very keen to see us move forward with this bill. I think the bill is necessary. The system needs fixing, needs improvement. I think that Bill 2 moves us forward while protecting the Crown's interests in development, while protecting the provincial interests in development, and while protecting private land interests in development.

Our province is going to develop. How do we do that in an environmentally sound manner, in a manner that allows us to achieve the most from our natural resources, and in a manner that respects the rights of those people on the landscape that own property? I think that's what is crafted in Bill 2.

I'm very eager to see that we move ahead, Mr. Speaker. I thank you so much for the time to state so.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Little Bow under 29(2)(a), followed by the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Peace River for his, I could say, slightly sarcastic tone to that, which is fine. I have a couple of questions about his speech. First off, I know of landowners in my constituency, where the MATL line went through by Coaldale – I will try to get you the names by the end of the week – that were forcibly taken in by a power line which your government so graciously allowed to go through. One had three RCMP cars in his yard serving him with the papers, telling him that that power line was going on his property. If you'd like, people, I'm more than happy to bring that up. If you're looking for a name for the mosquito that might be flying around in this national park that we're looking to do, you could probably call it the Wildrose because we're going to be biting you guys in the rear-end for probably quite a while.

I guess that goes back to the audacity that people in this province have the common courtesy to sit down and, God forbid, make a thought on their own on whom they want to vote for in this province. It's fine to vote for whomever they want, but the fact is the sarcastic tone to it. I mean, the humanity and these poor people and what they've had to go through because they decided to sell their land. I'm a very sarcastic person, so I do appreciate your tone on that. But if we sat in that little glass dome and thought about that our whole lives, nobody would ever vote but just for one party, and it would be a big Kumbaya, and it would be a dictatorship. I don't think that's what people want. I thank you for that. I do appreciate the sarcasm, though.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that I don't actually detect a question in that comment, I did start out my speech by pointing out that all of us are duly elected by our constituents, are free to stand here and have our own points of view and be respected in this House. I fully respect that hon. member. I await that information.

The question about property rights is: when property needs to be accessed or impacted, is there due process? Does the landowner have full compensation available, and does he have access to the Expropriation Act, to the courts, some appeal mechanism? I don't know that that particular situation relates to that. I look forward to that information, Mr. Speaker.

My sarcasm, my tone, arises from the fact of this constant criticism of land rights, of property rights, and of our government's supposed infringement on same. Several speakers there but more broadly in our province have talked about, for example, Bill 19, and I pointed out concrete examples of the exact two changes that Bill 19 made to the property rights regime in our province. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, that hon. member is probably not interested in the answer, but fortunately I'm not addressing him.

Bill 19 made exactly two changes. First of all, we are required now to notify landowners at the front of the process, and second of all, the landowner gets to trigger when the sale happens if indeed a sale is going to happen.

You know, I'm glad the member is not offended by sarcasm. I don't use it that heavily too often, but I thank the member for his comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did want to rise also to acknowledge that I, too, am a landowner, both of an acreage-sized land as well as a quarter section sized land. I also have surface rights on my property as well, so I am also keenly aware of the property rights issue, and it's very close to my heart.

I'm also very aware of the issue the hon. member talks about in the Three Creeks area in northern Alberta, and I'd be very interested to hear a little bit more about his relationship to that issue and what we're doing here. As I recall, this bill is the culmination of two years or more of consultation with landowners, energy, aboriginal groups, the environmental groups, the NGOs, the major industry players. Again, there was a tremendous amount of consultation that went into the building of this act to create what we believe to be very good legislation. I would be interested to know the hon. member's relationship to that, to the Three Creeks area, and perhaps to the resolution of that situation.

The Speaker: Hon. associate minister, you have 20 seconds.

Mr. Oberle: I will attempt it, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it removes one of the problems that I have on the Three Creeks landscape, the conflict, almost, between two different regulators and the confusion that that causes. That's removed by this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to finally get the chance to rise to speak to Bill 2. Ever so briefly on that last topic, it's interesting that the Member for Peace River characterizes the matter as being resolved because, indeed, just this week I heard from residents of the Three Creeks area, and resolved is absolutely not the way it was described to me. Indeed, the frustration that they experience in terms of the responsiveness of the ERCB and the inability to have consistent measurements and transparency and accountability – any sense that the actual residents there have a say in the process is simply absent. If anything, the Three Creeks situation is a prime example of how the ERCB has not functioned in a way to effectively balance the interests of not only landowners but community members on one hand and industry on the other. It is, in fact, a cautionary tale.

Mr. Speaker, as has already been stated by other members of our caucus, we are emphatically opposed to this bill. We think that it is wrong and bad in an endless number of ways. We think that the government is capitulating to industry, ignoring the environment, and disrespecting landowners by bringing this piece of legislation forward and by allowing it to pass.

The very initial premise that the government comes to this House with in terms of justifying this bill is that what we need to do is that we need to streamline and hasten the industrial development pace in this province. We're apparently not developing fast enough, and we need to do it even faster. It's really quite something, Mr. Speaker. You know, there have been a number of legitimate and independent and – dare I say it? – former Premiers who have actually outlined that as a general rule of thumb the pace of development that we're currently engaging in is probably not a great idea and that what we need to do, while promoting development, is to ensure that we do it in a reasoned, balanced way that ensures that the best interests of all Albertans are taken into account and that the multiplicity of impacts around development are fully considered. Those are the representations of former Premier Lougheed, and I know he's probably been quoted in this regard repeatedly. The fact of the matter is that that is the case.

Interestingly, the Pembina Institute published a commentary about two or three days ago. The Deputy Premier sort of looks up and says: oh, well, the Pembina Institute are, you know, just a bunch of scientists who aren't funded by industry, so we would never want to give them any due. However, the fact of the matter is that they published a report yesterday after having sat through three-quarters of the Jackpine expansion hearing in both Fort McMurray and Edmonton. All the lawyers there have, you know, clearly laid out the facts in a way that we're rarely given the opportunity to do in this Assembly and have concluded that the approved development in the oil sands, let alone the planned development in the oil sands, stands at this point to breach a number of different land-use standards and environmental standards at the current pace.

Now, it doesn't mean that you don't develop necessarily, but it does mean you acknowledge that as things stand now, that balance is not being achieved, and by the very rules that your very industry-weighted process created, you are going to fail against those rules. You are going to exceed air quality. You are going to exceed water usage. You're going to exceed those things. That is on the record at the Jackpine hearing. Shell itself is acknowledging that that's the case. It's not really clear to me that what we need to then do is ramp it up and put steroids into our development approval process, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe that that is in the best interests of Albertans, and I think that when you poll them, they will agree with that statement. Anyway, the very fundamental point behind this legislation is problematic to me.

Now, the next thing that a lot of people have talked about, public interest. This legislation clearly takes public interest out of consideration in terms of the decisions that are made by the new regulator. The House leader can argue all he wants that, oh, in theory everything we do here is in the public interest, but I think we all know that when it comes to considering the very, very few, narrow settings where any judge is ever going to be allowed within 19 light years of the decisions made by this regulator, if we ever do, the question of whether that regulator is compelled to consider the public interest in the same way that they were compelled to under the environmental legislation or the SRD legislation or the public lands legislation, they don't have to under this legislation. That is significant and substantial. It is a very clear political decision made by this government to ensure that the public interest doesn't get confused with the primary mandate of this regulator.

What is that mandate, Mr. Speaker? Well, it is to provide for the efficient, orderly, safe, and – oh, wait for it – environmentally responsible development of our resources. It doesn't ever talk about protecting the environment, doesn't ever talk about improving the standard of the environment, doesn't talk about improving or building on the social or economic benefits to the community, none of that. It is very clear that it is to provide for development. We'll throw in a few adjectives, but at the end of the day it is to provide for development.

Now, that's fine if that's all this regulator was doing, but what this government is doing is that in creating this regulator, they are also eliminating the role of the ministry of environment, who in theory, even in this government, has a mandate to actually not only responsibly develop the environment but, in fact, to protect it and maybe even to improve it. God forbid that we actually try to improve the quality indicators of the health of our environment in this province.

That was the mandate of the ministry of environment. That is gone. It is now completely subsidiary to the mandate of this regulator, which is to provide for development. There is a very clear political decision to say: "We don't care anymore about the environment. It is a footnote to what we do here, and we're going to do whatever we can to eliminate the mechanisms through which those who do care about the environment might possibly – possibly – be able to advocate for those outcomes."

The other thing that we're concerned about, of course, is that this regulator only has to report to the Minister of Energy. There's no obligation to report to the Minister of Environment and SRD, yet this regulator is taking over monitoring and studying and enforcing and developing policy on environmental issues that relate to the energy industry. Well, I hate to break it to you, folks, but about 75 per cent of the environmental challenges that we face in this province are related to the energy industry. This body says: "No. The ministry of environment doesn't need to have anything to do anymore with three-quarters of what their ministry is because this little separate regulator, this non-Crown corporation body over here on the side, is going to deal with all of it without actually having a mandate to protect or improve our environment or our water supply or our air quality or anything like that in this province." This is an incredible affront to not only landowners but to all Albertans who actually have a vested interest and a concern about the future of lands and water and air in this province.

A perfect example: we no longer have the ministry of environment overseeing or being involved in pipeline cleanup. Well, that's all right. We can count on the regulator to handle that. It'll be fine. Interestingly, though, the regulator, the ERCB certainly, is no longer publishing or setting out any standards in terms of what a good pipeline cleanup looks like, but we're just going to put it off to them. As long as it amounts to environmentally responsible development, it's fine.

The review process under this new legislation is also grossly, grossly eliminated or undermined, and in so doing, we, of course, take rights away from individual Albertans and people who are concerned about the air quality and land quality and water quality in the province. The government's amendments to our review process, Mr. Speaker, were superficial, entirely designed to look like one thing but, in fact, maintaining exactly the process they had in place before, which was to limit the rights of landowners and Albertans concerned with their environment to participate in any kind of oversight mechanism around energy development.

It limits hearing participation. It limits the occasion of hearings. There's no longer an obligation to have hearings. It limits the obligation to provide or consider providing funding to people who might appear before the panel who don't have access to the $400-an-hour lawyers that the energy industry hires from downtown Calgary. That's gone. As we've said before, they no longer have to actively have an obligation to give notice to affected parties. That's a significant, significant giveaway to industry, that now what you have to do is that you basically have to live at the regulator's office to try to keep track of what things are being slipped by by this government and their new regulator.

They don't want to have an external appeal process. They figure that once the regulator makes its decisions, the regulator is absolutely the best person to review its decisions. Well, you know, we had that at one point. We had that situation at the Workers' Compensation Board, Mr. Speaker. Strangely, that was a disaster, and then people started killing themselves in the parking lots. The appeal process was so incredibly captured by the agency of which it was a part that it became absolutely not credible to anybody participating in it. It was captured by the agency of which it was a part. That's the kind of thing that this government wants to put in place with the regulator.

They also want to ensure that the ability of anybody who has actually managed to find the money and fit through the very narrow criteria around who it is that gets to actually participate in the appeal process and then actually managed to convince the regulator to have a hearing – if all that happens, we're going to limit the degree to which that process is then subject to judicial review. That, too, is a problem. Then even if the person gets that far, the regulator always has the option next time around, to avoid all that confusion, to simply come up with its own system of an alternate dispute resolution with no rules around when or how that happens. They could easily come up with something that completely defies any notion of natural justice and just bring the whole thing behind closed doors, which we know is kind of a favourite forum for these folks when it comes to making sure their friends and insiders get what they need.

Transparency is a huge problem with this, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the finances around this body are clearly a problem. They will not be subject to the same level of scrutiny or broken down in the same level of detail as they would have been with respect to the functions that currently reside under the Ministry of Environment and SRD. The ERCB doesn't have to answer for the line-by-line stuff in the same way that ministries do, and I suspect the regulator will not either. Interestingly as well, the staff and the commissioners at the new regulator will not be governed at all by the Public Service Act. I'm not exactly sure why that is, but I do wonder if that exempts them from the conflict of interest provisions that would ensure that industry is not sitting in any of those positions. That's a question that I would certainly like to have answered.

As well, this new regulator has the option to choose not to publish any of the penalties that it may at some time impose upon somebody for breaching the act. Well, that's interesting. That sounds really familiar, Mr. Speaker. That sounds just like what we've been talking about with the Election Act. "Oh, let's not publish anything. You know, these people really were not trying to throw chemicals and stuff into the river. We were working together with them for 20 years while we were telling everyone in the Legislature that we weren't contaminating the river, and they really didn't mean to contaminate the river. Now that we've seen that it's happened, we don't think it's important for people to understand or know what the consequences are." That is provided for under this act, that those consequences stay secret. It's up to the regulator whether or not they choose to publish that stuff. So this is a remarkably draconian piece of legislation.

Enforcement. There's nothing in here that appears to be an absolute offence, Mr. Speaker. It appears as though if someone actually is found to be in breach of the vaguest of standards that are set out in this piece of legislation, they have a broad opportunity to defend themselves in that it's simply a question of whether they took reasonable steps on the balance of probability. Therefore, that's not even there.

There are just so many things that it's really hard to cover them all. Suffice to say that we're letting down Albertans with this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona what her thoughts are on the change in this current bill regarding public interest.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. You know, as I said before, I think that when you have language about the public interest, the kind of language that exists within the current environmental legislation, for instance, it is incumbent upon the regulator to consider matters that go beyond simply: how do we develop this land as quickly as possible and as efficiently as possible and as safely as possible with the primary view being to develop it? That's sort of what the mandate is now.

Public interest would actually ask this government to engage in a bit of governance, a bit of consultation with the people of Alberta and actually ask them what they think the public interest is and perhaps do some broader studies around that, just as we are doing in the more complex hearings that are going on right now but that will not be replicated under this.

The other difficulty that exists and impacts on the public interest is that we've also written in the ability of the regulator to avoid consulting with aboriginal people. It's not clear to me, Mr. Speaker, why in heaven's name we would do that. Yes, we've decided that this won't be a Crown corporation, I guess, presumably to make it more arm's length and give more plausible deniability to the folks here in the Legislature. Nonetheless, in doing that, we negate one of the fundamental obligations that we have as members of this Assembly to ensure that we develop our resources lawfully because the fact of the matter is that many of the areas of the province which are going to be subject to development are currently areas which impact on the rights of our aboriginal peoples. Trying to legislate out having to consult in a meaningful way with the aboriginal community: it shocks me that they would do it.

Obviously, there'll be other mechanisms for the aboriginal community to do that, but it will make it more difficult, more expensive, and more complex. This regulator will in fact be engaging in the vast majority of the work around balancing energy development, land-use planning, environmental protection, and aboriginal stewardship that go on in the province. This regulator will have more authority than possibly imagined. To write out of this regulator's obligation the need to work closely with our aboriginal communities is shameful, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely shameful.

The Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

If not, we'll move on to the next speaker. A couple of alterations have happened since. We have Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Buffalo, and then we'll go to Cardston-Taber-Warner and Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to stand here today and talk to Bill 2 in third reading, I guess our final kick at the cat. About 12 hours ago I got to sit in here and talk about Bill 8 and a couple of other items. So it's nice to put in a full day.

First off, I'd like to thank the Energy minister for his work on this bill and, obviously, the two years previous to this that led up to this. I mean, the bill obviously had a lot of time and effort put into it, even some of the amendments that came up, the ones that he brought himself and also the 21 that we brought, which maybe weren't quite as successful as the government's.

Last week I was very fortunate to have the Minister of Energy come out to Vulcan and have a good discussion about Bill 2 with about 50 of my constituents, and we had a couple from other constituencies there. It was a very open and candid forum to sit and talk back and forth. We had the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who's also our Energy critic. I think there was some good debate, some lively debate. The Member for Lethbridge-East was also there. I think we had a pretty well-balanced group of people on all sides of it.

In saying that, I think the intent of the bill was good. I know that our caucus, when we first started talking about it, were actually quite excited about the concept of less red tape, a single regulator, and that process. But as a lot of members in this House always say, the devil is in the details. Unfortunately, that's where we got hung up a little bit. Thinking that democracy still works fairly well, we tried some amendments. Now, my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks, I know, spent countless hours on this. I mean, the House leader talked about the 30 hours of debate alone that we've had on this bill, which I think shows that it's a pretty big issue in this province and shouldn't be taken lightly.

I guess that when we sit and look at that, the concept of back and forth, where everything got hung up is when we started talking about public interest and property rights. Now, the conversation always goes off – you know, some members in this House always talk about how, I guess, we could compare a new breed of mosquito versus property rights. I know there was some sarcasm to that, but it worries me that that's the kind of disregard we have for property rights in this province. I think that's why you see a fairly large opposition of a conservative nature across the floor. We take property rights very seriously as do our constituents.

Mr. Dorward: So do we.

Mr. Donovan: It's great to have the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar again add a couple of comments from the back row. It's always nice to have his two or three cents put in, and it's not an actual introduction of anybody that he's introducing to the House, so I appreciate that from him. I always enjoy the conversations that we do have.

In this one, for instance, if those members do agree about property rights, I have a struggle with why everybody voted them down almost in disregard of the concept of them. I mean, to sit down and have some discussion on them, that's democracy. That's how you do it. To just have a piece of paper put in front of you and you look at it and then decide as a team that you're not doing it: I guess I always wonder if that's truly how democracy was supposed to work in this province, first off, and in our country.

I mean, probably the biggest thing – now, my riding has lots of oil industry and energy sector in it, and it's a very large tax base. As I said, when this bill first came forward, I was excited about the concept. Also, having been able to work a little bit in the oil patch, I know the regulation process is quite a burden to any of the industries that are trying to work with it. So I was excited about that. I guess I have to represent everybody on it. In saying that, I mean, the energy sector, of course, is great with the idea because it gives it the green light to do whatever it wants.

You know, as soon as you appoint a regulator from possibly a member of the family, that the cabinet ministers appoint, that's where the concern is. I guess as the MLA for my riding I'm concerned about arm's length, whether it's actually going to be a biased person in that position or not. I'd really hope that this government would take that seriously when they do appoint somebody for that, that it's not just somebody that's convenient to them and that's going to only work with one side of the industry on that.

With the current legislation the biggest concern is that it also removes the landowners' rights to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board and gives the regulator the power to review its own decision. Now, that's much like me deciding to review my own decision after I've decided to buy something. I've got it. Why would I review it? I can look in the mirror and say: was that a good move? In my heart I'd probably say, "Maybe not, if I'm asking the question. But who else is better to review it than yourself?" That's the concern I have on that. You know, it takes away a very important opportunity to appeal from landowners.

Now, I know that side of the floor has always talked – I mean, we talk of landowners in bills 19 and 24 and 36 and 50. I agree that there are some members over there who think, you know, that these aren't concerns to Albertans, but I can guarantee that at least probably 15 people on this side of the floor were elected due to those bills. So, actually, I do thank you for those bills because that let me become the MLA for Little Bow. I truly appreciate that, and I'm sure everyone else in here appreciates also having some nice robust discussion on these things. But to sit here and to shoot landowners down, it just baffles me. We've spent hours talking about public interest and how public interest works. I mean, I brought it up last night and it got, you know, kind of tossed back up in the air. We have a bill, Bill 4. Public interest: that's the name of it, yet we won't put it in this bill. You know, it's too bad that we can't have that process and work through it, but that's democracy, I guess. That's why that side of the floor gets to veto vote what we're doing. That's fine.

I guess the other side of this, you know, is that I'd be a little worried on what could happen down the road with this as it is now. Like most bills the concept is good. You start off with good intentions. Then we leave it to the regulator and the regulations. "We'll figure that out in the regulations." That's a real challenge for me, I guess, because you put it back in, generally, a bureaucrat's hands or somebody that has a direction of where they want the bill to go anyway. You sit back and you wonder: is that really where we want to be going?

Once the bill is made, that gives you the footprint of where you're going with the bill. The regulator is the person that's going to, you know, sit and decide what's right or what's wrong. The regulations are what he's going off. But if he's going to write his own regulations and the regulations are made that way, it would be nice to have those at least come to the floor of this Assembly so we could see what the regulations are and have a good debate on them. I'd hope the Energy minister would take that into consideration while he does that.

Now, in 30 hours' worth of amendments and conversation and debate over this bill, along with thanking the Energy minister for his time and effort in this, I mean, we've definitely worked the staff over well in this Assembly. The Parliamentary Counsel, I think, deserve quite a bit of credit for all the amendments they've had to put through and deal with in a very short fashion. I want to definitely acknowledge the time they've spent on this because they've put in a ton of time also.

Now, we spoke earlier today as we sat here within a half hour of being a 24-hour session. This was a prime example of what I felt as an MLA when a bill is laid out. How do you have an actual debate in your constituency and try to get a voice from your constituency of what they would like? You don't have the time. It was tabled to us. We started doing amendments in good faith, thinking that there would be something that we could come together on with the governing party, because we want to do what's right for Albertans and, first and foremost, what's right for our constituents. As we try doing that, the bill gets looked at, stuffed at us fairly quickly.

I was very lucky to be able to have the minister come out to my constituency after one of my constituents told me that it would be a good idea to have a Bill 2 meeting and sit and actually talk to people about it. So on a Tuesday it was just a quick Facebook message of: hey, I think we'll have a quick meeting in Vulcan. On the Thursday night the hon. Minister of Energy asked if he could come, which was greatly appreciated. We had 60 people out on three days' notice, which I thought was pretty good because of short time, and we really didn't advertise it. We were just trying to get some points from people. It's very hard to represent a riding and a constituency when you have that short notice to be able to try to talk to people and get some valid points of what does and doesn't work in a bill.

It leads back to: you just talk to your contacts that you have. You end up calling people, I mean, from both sides of these parties. Obviously, my contact list and your contact list might differ a little bit because my contact list would have quite a few land-use owner groups and advocacy groups like that. That is generally where our support was in my riding. Now, your list might not have that. It does make a challenge when you're trying to represent your constituency when you don't have the ability to really, truly get out there and talk with everybody. You have some time to call. I think we all know in here as members how busy this job is. You see by the hours we put in and everything we do that it's definitely a challenge.

But I think the challenge is for us to be able to represent to our constituencies what these bills are when they come out. As I say, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks put in an abundance of hours. I know the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and also our leader and lots of people also helped him. There was definitely a team effort on this side of going over amendments that we thought would help this bill along to make it so we could support it. In saying that, you don't want to get the dome disease, where you get in here and you truly think that you're smarter than all your constituents and you don't give the opportunity to talk to them about it. I guess that's what worries me.

This is a general conversation of how we've been pushing bills through here. Just being new at this, we're always up for the challenge. That's what I signed up for. But the fact that we're putting bills through this House as fast as we are, working through the night debating them, which, hey, that's part of the game – I farm; I know what it's like going all night in a combine. That's what we signed up for. But is it really, truly the way we want to lead this province, by doing bills in such a fast manner when there really isn't a lot of conversation back and forth with our constituents?

Now, I get that CAPP had their input to it. I get the Energy minister. Obviously, for two years previously – as I've heard from the Minister of Finance, this just didn't happen overnight. I appreciate that, but in my constituency it somewhat did happen overnight because we didn't have the ability, or I sure didn't have the ability, to be able to get out and get all the feedback from all the players in the game for it. So it's sad. I think if one had that, it'd be a lot easier to stand here and make a right or wrong decision on it. I think we're here trying to do the right thing. I think there are 87 of us in here who are trying to do the right thing and do what's right for our constituents.

Now, when we're doing that, I think there's the process of this. I just caution it towards what we're going to do from here on. I personally would appreciate more time on these things so you can actually have some time. If it took two years to come up with it to where this point is and then the Energy minister pulled out – were there about 10 amendments?

Mr. Hughes: Seven words.

Mr. Donovan: How many amendments were on it, though?

Mr. Hughes: About 15.

Mr. Donovan: Fifteen amendments? So 15 amendments with only seven words that were changed. I understand that, but it took two years to get up to. I appreciate that the hon. Energy minister noticed that this was obviously an issue and did 15 amendments with seven words, but in all honesty was it going to kill anybody if we brought this bill forward and actually had time to go out and have dialogue with our constituents on it? Not a rushed dialogue, not put a Facebook message on it on a Tuesday and have a meeting on a Friday night, which, again, I was very happy to have the minister at.

These are the concerns we have. Some people consider it bullying. I don't go that far. I don't bully. I see that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar feels sensitive about that word. I'm not a bully, so don't feel bad. I don't think you guys were truly bullying on it. [interjection] I know. Lawyers are here to save all the bullies, and I thank you for that. But I really think the process could have slowed down, and I think we could have had a lot better conversation and probably would have made everybody a lot less stressed around the House as we spoke about it.

I mean, I talked about Parliamentary Counsel. The poor people were working through the nights trying to do all these amendments. We were putting amendments on. We were back and forth trying to get the wording right on that, making sure that the Minister of Energy had seen the amendments, finding out later, I guess, that it wasn't that warm and fuzzy on the amendments we had. But I guess you've got to start somewhere, and you still hope that everybody listens on both sides.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do take a little exception to some of the comments that I may not be representing my landowners appropriately or my property rights because, as I said earlier, I am a landowner, and I represent a number of landowners, and I'm related to a lot of landowners.

But you did tweak one question, hon. member, that I want to ask you about and that related to the membership of the board. It twiggged the question around judges on courts. Is it the party's position that judges should be elected and not appointed?

Mr. Donovan: Not to sound like a lawyer, but I don't know if that's really relevant. I'm not going to speak for all my party members on this, but my personal opinion is that I think there are lots of pros and cons to it. Again, I'd like to be able to have the time to look at that and think about it before I come out with an answer on it rather than sit there and bounce back and forth on it.

It was not my choice or plan, and I hope I didn't hurt anybody's feeling on that side by saying that they weren't representing their landowners or property owners because that is not where I was going with that. I was representing what my owners are telling me and my property rights. For me, that's what I want to sit and talk about, what my constituents want. I'm not the person to sit here and throw as much mud as I can at the other side. As an MLA I have to sit and try to represent my riding. In doing that, I have to try to be able to work with the ministers on that side to get something for my constituents because that's what they're here for. I think what they sent me here for, anyways, to represent them.

Now, in saying that – I can see the Speaker would like me to stop on this.

The Speaker: There's another person with a question. That's all.

Mr. Donovan: Okay. Well, just one second. I'd like to finish this out. It means a lot in my heart.

An Hon. Member: You have a heart?

Mr. Donovan: Yes. It must be very weird for a lawyer to hear the word "heart," but they are out there.

In saying that, I think we're all here to represent our constituents. You know, the debate – the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster had brought it up yesterday when we talked about it, and I know the Member for Peace River brought it up also – was about property rights and about whether a renter actually has property rights or not. I guess if you've ever tried to evict a renter, it does seem like they have a lot of property rights in that conversation. Landowners are landowners. I mean, I think it does vary across the province of what people consider what bothers them and goes from there.

My personal thoughts on it: we're all here to represent our landowners, our constituents, our retailers, our oil patch people, our industry people because that's where they're going in life. What makes this province roll along is energy, and I don't think too many people in this room don't understand that that's definitely one of the economic drivers in this province.

Now, in saying that, you've got to balance it out. I had the opportunity to be able to work for an oil field company in the winters, and then it turned into a bit of a full-time job for a couple of years. I think that was the key to why they did well. They got along well with the landowners. They didn't need the regulations to tell them how to do it. They figured out it was business. There are regulations sitting there, but they got along. We have a vast knowledge of people in this House that have oil field experience and have run large companies. That's one of those things that to me is what we've got to pull on, the knowledge that people have in this House. Have the respect to listen to them. Maybe not always mumble back and forth, whether you think they have the respect or they don't. That's one of the things to me, I guess, of what we should be doing in this House.

To sit there and to say that one party represents landowners better than the other I don't think is probably right to do. In saying that, I wouldn't want to have offended anybody's feelings over there, especially any of my lawyer friends because I know they have big hearts. [interjection] Close enough, though. To me I think the whole purpose is that we're here to represent the people. You see oil companies do well and gas companies do well. If they don't do well, if they go out of business fairly quickly or they're sitting in front of the board doing appeals all the time . . . [Mr. Donovan's speaking time expired] Sorry. I would have liked to have answered more questions.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Question-and-Comment Period

The Speaker: Again, hon. members, this is just a request to review the purpose of 29(2)(a), with no reflection on the answer just given or the previous question. One person stands up and asks a question. It takes 20, 30 seconds maybe, and then the person answering gets up and consumes the rest of the time, and that's okay. You're within your rights so far to do that, but it prevented two other people from getting up and engaging in a little exchange with you.

I want to tell you that we've been down this road before, and I've personally been down it because I was the Deputy Government House Leader for almost 14 years. When we created this rule, it was to allow for a little bit more of an exchange back and forth, which you can't do during second reading and you can't do at all during third reading. That's why 29(2)(a) exists during second and third readings, so you can get a little bit of that interchange going across the bow, as it were.

Just keep that in mind. That's all that I'm asking you to do, and if necessary I am prepared to make a ruling to that effect. Today I'm going to make a recommendation only, and that is that questions during 29(2)(a) shouldn't take more than 30 seconds, and an answer shouldn't take more than one minute. That would allow at least three sets of questions and answers, perhaps more depending on how it goes. Just consider that.

That having been said, let's move on to Calgary-Buffalo, please.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I have talked quite extensively on this bill so I don't know if I will go on at great length. Needless to say, I won't be voting in favour of this bill. I think it falls short of what the bill's goals were and, actually, the hopes and aspirations of many people in the community: business interests, environmental interests, some landowner issues. People's right to be heard is the thing that I'm most concerned about, which appears to be absent from the bill.

Now, there's no doubt that this has been a tremendously difficult undertaking to put together. This Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, is trying to replace 10 other regulatory bodies that are currently in existence that deal with our oil and gas issues as well as our environmental concerns surrounding that. No doubt that this is an arduous attempt.

What I thought would be tried to be accomplished through this bill would be an overarching framework where energy and the economy are two sides of the same coin. We often throw that out there as to what the new world order should look like, a recognition that without environmental concern for the future we can't really go ahead with developing haphazardly or without thought to future generations, without thought to how what we do today has implications not only for this generation but several generations after.

In that vein I don't believe this bill goes far enough to recognize that principle, that our environmental stewardship is very much tied into what we do not only today but tomorrow. It also ties in very closely to Alberta's social licence to continue to develop our oil and gas industry, to continue to develop our oil sands, hopefully in an environmentally sustainable way, to the message that we are sending to not only our citizens and other provinces but the rest of the world about how we're doing on the environmental front. As we've seen over the course of the last number of years, the world's eyes are on us. I believe this act doesn't necessarily make a strong statement that we are truly taking our environmental responsibilities as close to heart as we can and allowing all views to be heard at the table.

Some of my concerns around the bill consider the vagueness of the direction we are giving the regulator. Much of this bill that we have seen in front of us and much of what it will actually be deemed to be trying to achieve is left to the regulations. If you look at the commentary by other organizations, the University of Calgary Faculty of Law blog, if you look at other commentators from the Environmental Law Society and just conversations with people who are currently working in the current environmental structures of our province, they are not sure what this act is going to mean. They're not sure of the prescribed rules, what the direction is for this new body, and the like.

In other acts, as I said, the 10 other acts that this act tries to replace, there's often clear direction in those acts as to the goals, the mandates, the broader principles, what the act and what the people working under the act are supposed to achieve. That's where we get into my first real concern with the bill, the removal of the public interest test.

Everyone knows what's in the public interest, but it's difficult to define. I think that was the beauty of the test. It allowed for people to take a broad view of what was in the public interest. I would say that that was looking at our environmental concerns, our economic concerns, our concerns about land use, water use, and the like, all those things. Removing that public interest test and narrowing it down in the way that we have done and leaving, I guess, this to be defined in regulation concerns me because we have no idea what considerations are going to now make up a public interest test. Or, in fact, is there going to be some component of a public interest test?

I guess I could assume that in regulations there is going to be some reference to cumulative effects, some reference to water, some reference to what the regulator should look for on emissions, but in no sense do I have any sense that that is in fact going to happen. I'm simply left here as a legislator hoping to trust the minister that this will all be encompassed. Frankly, I think that leaves me in a frightened state that some of this may not get into regulation or that if it does make it into regulation, it will be subject to changes in ministers, changes in government directions, changes in pressures put to bear on ministers from time to time to deal with various complaints.

I guess, you know, I'd be less concerned about not having a public interest thing if there was a preamble to the act that actually stated some broad-ranging goals and principles of what the bill is supposed to achieve because then we could get a sense from at least the preamble. The people who work in this new responsible energy development regulator would have a series of principles or guidelines that would guide their daily decisions. But as this bill is written, we don't have any sense from the government as to what the overarching goals are, how they're going to achieve those goals, how they are going to balance those responsibilities. To me, that leaves, I guess, some who are less trusting than I believing that this is just basically a way to speed up development, to not allow people to be heard, not allow people whose rights have been affected and/or just general groups who have concerns about the scale, size, scope of our development practices in Alberta to be able to be heard.

I'm also concerned that this bill does not seem to appreciate the fact that governments are increasingly expected to or required to – and even if they're not, they should – take into account their duty to consult with our aboriginal peoples. There appears to be no recognition of that in this bill, and that gives me high concern. Who is to decide whether the Crown has met its duty to consult and accommodate? We have no indication of how that is going to be implemented, if it's going to be implemented, or whether, in fact, there is going to be much of an onus on the new regulator to do that work and due diligence in the manner that we should be. That, to me, is highly concerning. Yes, I can be hopeful it's in regulation, but, you know, I'm skeptical. I am skeptical. So that's another concern.

If you look at this bill, it appears that we have a regulator who will grant a decision, and then if that decision is not perceived to be fair to certain members who are directly or adversely affected by this legislation, then the regulator will then get to decide again whether its decision has been fair. Now, just think about that for a second, Mr. Speaker. How many times do you think that a reasonable person thinks that a regulator will think that the first decision they made is unfair if they're asked to review the decision they made?

It doesn't seem like a logical process we've set up to have a new, fair, and objective last resort that people can go to and say: "Look, in my view, this has been wrongly decided. Here are the reasons and concerns I have. Can you look at this objectively and tell me whether or not I am right?" That provision is not here in this bill, and that is highly concerning. I guess the argument you could always say is: well, you can take it to court. But we all know that with the structure of these things the court is only allowed to look so far as the government lets it. The privative clauses that are contained in this bill would be on very narrow circumstances where anything of substance would be allowed to be brought to our courts of law. That is very concerning to me.

It appears that we are eliminating the ability of groups to attend to add their commentary to the goings-on. In fact, there seems to be a limiting of this. Formerly there was a practice of paying the costs for people to attend to give their commentary, to give their views on the bill, and this no longer seems to be present.

Also, like we're talking about here, we can go back to some of the work done, and I guess that in the lead-up, the consultation for this bill there was a piece in there that said that there was going to be a policy management office set up. I don't see that referred to in the bill. I am concerned that a policy management office is no longer in the works. I am concerned that this policy management office would have taken all sides into consideration, would have set policy for this new, wide-sweeping organization with vast amounts of power, set policy direction on a continual and ongoing basis that would allow us to keep up with the best practices throughout the world and protect our social licence to operate and protect people's interest and ability to be heard. I don't see that component referenced anywhere, and that was highly consulted on. I don't see that recognized here. There's no indication that it's going to be forthcoming, and I thought that one of the good things that came out of the consultation process was that public policy piece and that that was going to be implemented. The policy management office was an excellent idea that is nowhere to be found.

Those are my concerns. I guess I hope and pray that many of these concerns are not to be worried about and that they will be covered in regulation, but I doubt it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available, and I'll just stress what I've stressed before. Its purpose is to "allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly," and it goes on. Are there any brief questions or comments with respect to the previous comments just made?

Seeing none, we'll move on from Calgary-Buffalo to Cardston-Taber-Warner, please.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak today, but it gives me no pleasure. I want to talk about Bill 2, and I also want to talk about a couple of basic human needs that seem, to me at least, to perhaps not have been addressed as fully as I would have liked or as the situation called for.

One of them is that people have a need to have a say in decisions that affect them – at least, that's what I keep telling my wife and this House – and I'm not sure that I have a complete sense that that has happened. They also need to be listened to until they feel understood. One of my professors, Dr. Stephen Covey, developed the seven habits of highly effective people, actually identified them and codified them. Habit number 5 was "seek first to understand, then to be understood," which is another way of suggesting that it's important to diagnose before we prescribe. One thing I know for sure is that everyone acts rationally from their own point of view.

Therefore, I won't judge or presume to know the motives of individual MLAs. Perhaps you'll be as kind in return. It's hard, though, isn't it? At least, it's my nature to be critical and judgmental and to jump to conclusions about why people are behaving the way they are, but people that I care about in my life have tried to help me overcome this tendency.

I'm troubled by the collective conclusions I see that have led to Bill 2 and the ignoring of some of the things that I think would have made what we all hoped would be a great piece of legislation into something that I fear may be less. I know that everybody has good intentions and wants to do a good job. I know all of you do. I know all of the people that I associate with over here do. We want to do a good job for our constituents. We want to do a good job for industry and for businesses in general and for the environment. I know you believe your Bill 2 will achieve its stated goals. I hope you're right. I want you to be right for my own constituents and for the industry, my own industry, the oil field service industry, and for our province.

I'm normally an optimistic and pretty cheerful kind of guy, but my study of history and my experience with regulations, et cetera, in my business life here in Alberta does not make me feel warm and fuzzy. I hope I'm wrong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), let us move on to Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the opportunity to stand in third reading and speak to Bill 2. I didn't take the opportunity to do that during second reading. I think that, you know, we've had a pretty good process here over the past couple of weeks. I mean, we have talked about the amount of time that the bill was debated, roughly 30 hours. A lot has been said today about the unfortunate nature of how a lot of those amendments weren't accepted, and I would tend to agree because the reality is that when the Government House Leader stands and says that we've had 30 hours of debate, that sort of insinuates that there's a two-way conversation going on here.

The unfortunate reality is that that's not what we really saw or felt. So probably what gave rise to a lot of the frustrations from this side is that a debate is just that; it requires a back and forth. The only time we actually got the back and forth was when it was the hon. minister's amendments. As we discussed, that was about changing a whole seven words. Yes, granted, there were a handful of other government members who rose to speak at various points in time, but outside of maybe five or less it was a one-way conversation.

You know, we've also talked about how that debate impacts, I guess, the overall perception of what we do here. I know that this party likes to remind Albertans – I apologize for my lack of coherent thought at this juncture; it's been a long day, Mr. Speaker – and invoke Peter Lougheed and talk about how this is the party of Peter Lougheed. I beg to differ with you, and I say that for one reason. Peter Lougheed had the opportunity when he was first elected to sit in opposition, so he looked at this through a bit of a different lens than the members opposite tend to look at things today. I don't think you will ever have the opportunity to govern the way that he did because you've never experienced the same thing that we experience here. So I would just ask you moving forward to consider that. Part of the reason that he was so good at what he did was that he worked and he respected the opposition, and they created a mutual partnership to move the province forward. That's not what we see here today. So I just wanted to raise that point.

That being said, I understand that the idea of speaking in third reading is: what's going to happen now that this bill is going to be passed? You know, I think the concept of a single regulator, as we've all said, is something industry has been asking for. It's the right direction for this to go. Yes, we've had discussions about various issues with it, whether it be, you know, landowner rights or whatnot. I don't need to rehash all of this. It's not why I'm standing today.

I want to thank the minister for some of the responses he did give during the debates in Committee of the Whole. I want to believe that he's going to follow through on some of the things that he said he was going to in creating the regulations that are actually going to govern this act. It was a fruitful discussion at times, so I look forward to seeing that result actually translate into, you know, what this is actually going to do and what it's actually going to mean for those who it intends to impact. Obviously, you know, there are issues around public interest. Perhaps there are issues with writing that in. Understandably, we have concerns around that. Again, I put my faith in the minister that these things are going to be considered.

Now, many of my constituents in Calgary-Shaw are heavily involved in the oil and gas industry and have identified to me that they would like me to support this particular bill. The single regulator will speed up the process. It will be of benefit to the industry. It may come as a surprise to those members sitting opposite that although I do proudly stand shoulder to shoulder with my Wildrose colleagues here, who have stood and advocated for their constituents and the concerns of their constituents as I would suggest every member in this House do on a daily basis because that is why we're here, I will be supporting this bill. That, my friends, is the beauty of a free vote.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Dorward: I do have a question, Mr. Speaker. We get criticized here for our members perhaps having a lack of debate. I just should probably explain something. Although I'm a newbie, and I'm explaining to newbies, the truth of it is that we have ample opportunity to have debate. We debate within our caucus. We debate within our regional caucus. We have access to the individuals that have written the legislation. We have access to the ministers. We have access to researchers. We've likely been through the issues often. So we're interested to hear the amendments, but likely the amendments are already thought through and gone.

Finally, it's frustrating from our side of things to know that we have sat here – I sat, I think, between 1 a.m. and 3:30 a.m. – while three members of the opposition went around in a 20-minute circle of a continuation of comments. The comments were debated back from this side by saying: relevance. There was no relevance – Hansard is there; people can go and check it and read it if they're interested – to the amendment that was proposed by that side. So you ask us to debate an amendment. Perhaps they could debate the amendment as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of things. First off, thank you to the Solicitor General for motioning to his member to sit down and stop embarrassing himself.

I would like to simply point out, sir, through the chair, that part of the issue is that when you drop a bill on our desk here, it's the first time we're seeing it.

Mr. Dorward: No. Your researchers have seen it.

Mr. Wilson: Okay. Maybe they've had a week's notice. I appreciate that.

The reality is that, yes, this has been legislation that's been built for a while. [interjection] I have the floor now, sir, with all due respect. The reality is that we live in different worlds. You guys do have the opportunity to debate it in caucus. We don't necessarily see that. We don't understand your position on things, and none of you stand up to speak to them when we do ask. So, yes, what we see is a one-sided debate, and it's not necessarily that debate.

Anyway, I have nothing more to add, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

If not, are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat is a great snapshot of many, many areas of our great province that are home to ranchers and farmers as well as being involved in the energy sector. These two areas of the economy do not have to be in conflict. In many ways they work well together, and in fact many Albertans are connected to both systems.

The government introduced Bill 2 because of concerns our oil and gas industry has raised about Alberta's regulatory system, and I agree that changes to the current system are necessary. It is unacceptable for a province like ours that is so rich in resources and has so many Albertans employed in the energy sector to rank as one of the worst jurisdictions for energy development due to all the red tape within the system. Even with such an inefficient regulatory system Alberta is the economic engine of our country. Imagine how much better we could be with a more efficient system.

I fully support the intent of Bill 2, which is to cut red tape and make our regulatory system for oil and gas projects more efficient. This is important, Mr. Speaker, because if our system is made to be more efficient, there will be more economic growth in our province and in my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat. Cutting red tape and increasing economic growth for our province truly would benefit Albertans. Unfortunately, I have not been convinced during the course of debate on Bill 2 that this legislation will actually do the job of making our regulatory system more efficient. There is work to go there. There is certainly a place for government regulation, especially in efficiently maintaining a balance between environment, landowners, and industry, but I am not convinced Bill 2 will generate this efficiency, and I am not convinced it strikes the right balance between the environment, landowners, and industry.

In terms of efficiency Bill 2 essentially takes the failed bodies that were in place and stuffs them into a new single regulator, but I have not seen any evidence or heard anything from the government to indicate that the new single-window regulator being proposed will in practice streamline the regulations of the three government bodies being brought under one roof. I am not convinced that in merging these different entities, duplication will be taken out of the system. In short, if this is not done properly, what will happen is even more red tape, even more inefficiencies. Needless bureaucratic duplication does nothing but cost industry millions in lost time and productivity as well as the wages of workers. Inefficiency in the system sacrifices the economic growth of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to listen to and consider the amendments the Wildrose has put forward. We have been receiving countless e-mails and phone calls from all Albertans who are concerned that in this rush to consolidate the regulatory system for oil and gas projects, the government will skip over the deficiencies in the current system. Our amendments would have ensured that Bill 2 would truly streamline the regulatory approvals for energy development and actually encourage development, protect landowners, and respect the environment.

Albertans do not want another law that tramples on landowners' rights, removes independent appeals, and gives the minister sweeping powers over development, similar to bills 19, 36, and 50. Bill 2 needs to enshrine the right to an independent environmental appeal to protect landowners from the destruction of the land and the water they rely on. Bill 2 also needs to mandate the proactive informing of affected landowners and guarantee the right to a hearing as part of the licensing process as is currently the case with the ERCB.

I mentioned a week ago during one of the amendments that during constituency week I had approximately 10 to 15 phone calls from landowners very, very concerned about the removal of the appeal and very, very concerned about Bill 2's ineffectiveness and where it was going.

At an interesting meeting last night, Mr. Speaker, with a group of people from south Edmonton we spent a great amount of time talking about what the size of government should be – smaller, current size – and I think at the end of the day we decided that a government should be responsible and accountable. Our discussion immediately swung to Bill 2, which surprised me in an urban setting. I'm sad to report to the government that a number of people in south Edmonton feel that Bill 2 does not meet this responsibility and accountability guideline. They are concerned about what it does to landowners. They are concerned about the duplicate regulation. Again, I think, as some other members have mentioned, that with a full-blown, more consultative process this could have been outlined.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, we'll move on to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise at this time to speak in opposition to Bill 2. I've had the privilege of speaking several times to this bill, so I will keep my opposition comments to this bill very, very terse. First and foremost, the fact that this bill takes out the public interest is quite a frustration for me and the New Democrat caucus. Again, when we look at public interest, we're looking at what's in the best interest of all Albertans, not just individuals directly affected by future projects but acknowledging the fact that our interest lies in weighing collectively our interests, whether we're talking about the environment, whether we're talking about the economy or the long-term future of Alberta.

It's with some frustration – you know, when I was canvassing for years before the last election, many constituents of mine had talked about wanting the government to develop a very reasonable, responsible pace for the development of our resources, taking into consideration our environment, looking at Alberta's long-term future. Many requests came up as far as doing more in the way of developing our resources, keeping quality jobs in this province, and ensuring that Alberta will be prosperous for the long term. It's unfortunate that that was not addressed in this bill whatsoever.

Another issue is the fact that the regulator, first of all, is not publicly selected or at arm's length from the government. It's going to be a regulator that's appointed. The number of individuals sitting on the regulator board is smaller than what was proposed or what has been with the ERCB. As well, concerns are only going to be addressed through the Ministry of Energy, not through the ministry of environment. I think that if we talk about balance, if we talk about wanting to ensure that different perspectives are acknowledged and weighed equally, that piece is really crucial, and it's unfortunate that it's missing.

The other issue I have with Bill 2 is the fact that especially First Nation aboriginal groups are being put off through federal legislation, and they really do need to be considered, first and foremost, as stakeholders in all new projects and have an equal seat at the table as opposed to the regulator making decisions.

The appeals process leaves much to be desired. My colleagues from the Wildrose have pointed out numerous examples of how this bill will actually infringe upon landowners' rights. I believe many Albertans have spoken out in opposition to this bill for a variety of reasons, whether they focus on the environment, whether they focus on their own rights. What we expect from government is that they have a process that involves a public inquiry, involves steps for remediation, a process to ensure that we are really balancing the needs and interests of all Albertans. Unfortunately, this bill seems to only acquiesce to one group, and that would be industry, to speed up and fast-track more development projects. Again, Albertans are asking for a sustained approach to a reasonable pace, a responsible pace of developing our oil sands.

For those reasons, a lack of appeal process and a lack of environmental monitoring that's truly unbiased, I cannot speak in favour of this bill, and I will be voting against this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Just before we recognize the next speaker, hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, do you wish to address the House?

Mr. Denis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand that we're nearing the end of the bill here, and I would just make a motion that any standing votes for the duration of the proceedings today be held on a one-minute interval rather than a 10-minute interval.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Justice has requested unanimous consent for the division bells to ring in the following manner: 30 seconds ringing, one minute of interval, followed by one minute of ringing. Does anyone object to the request for unanimous consent to that effect?

The Speaker: The next speaker. The hon. Minister of Energy to close debate, then.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, sir. Well, Mr. Speaker, time is short, much has been said, and it's time for us to move on. I'd like to start by simply thanking the many Albertans, some physically here in this room and many elsewhere, for their feedback, for their advice over the course of the development of this legislation. I believe this is a historic bill. It's a once-in-a-generation opportunity to renew and move to the next generation of regulator of the energy sector in this province. It's important, and it will create a new entity that will become known as the Alberta energy regulator, the AER. That will be something that we will talk about for years.

I want to thank everybody for their engagement in this. I'd like to thank on the other side of the House the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – and south Boston – and, in particular, the Member for Little Bow, who very generously worked with me and allowed me to improve my understanding and to also learn a lot in terms of the work that needs to be done in the wake of passing this legislation. There is much to be done, and it should reflect.

On this side of the House I'd like to pay particular tribute to our colleague the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, who has been a constant source of excellent advice to me and a colleague-in-arms in working on this and for years of hard work on her part. I'd also like to thank all of our colleagues who stepped up in so many ways. So many offered advice. They offered to stand up and speak. They wanted to weigh in. They wanted to contribute to helping to create a better understanding of what we're doing here today amongst Albertans. So I thank our colleagues in that respect.

You know, we're building on history here. We're building on the original regulatory body, which was the Turner Valley Gas Conservation Board in 1938 – for a kid who grew up at the south end of the Turner Valley, this is important – and, of course, all the other predecessor organizations from the Turner Valley Gas Conservation Board right up to the ERCB and the regulatory processes within the environment department.

We found a balance here, Mr. Speaker, a balance where we create regulatory certainty for applicants. We've respected the importance of environmental interests and landowner interests, and now it's time to move on.

With that, I take the counsel of my colleagues here, and I call the question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Energy has requested a vote on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, and 29(2)(a) is not available. He has risen and closed debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. The records tell me amendment A1 was defeated on a division, so we're back to the bill. Speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

An Hon. Member: Shocking.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Hopefully, it's not just shocking that someone would see the light once the light is turned on.

I rise to speak to this bill. It is important. Beyond the rhetoric, beyond the craziness that has surrounded this subject for years, the fact is that the government now is repealing its jurisdiction, its authority to make decisions on approving transmission lines. I want to talk a little bit about the importance of why the government is doing it and why I support it. I think that got lost this morning when we picked up Bill 8 because I was so tired I don't even remember what I said. But I know I said something.

Throughout history we always undertake projects in a qualitative and quantitative way in dealing with the data. I've heard the hon. Minister of Energy, the Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, and so forth and so on talk about the various projects that they will undertake. Now, granted, we have been asking the government for a priority list, but it is presumed that the government is looking at these projects in a pragmatic way. I have some sort of faith that they are doing that, that they look at the data, they look at the return on investment, and they somehow prioritize which projects are going to get built first. That's no different when we look at transmission lines or look at the electrical grid, so I want to talk a little about that before I introduce my next amendment.

The whole purpose of the regulatory process is that government policy gives to a board of experts a mandate to not just operate the grid or operate the system, but to do it also – and we're not going to debate this tonight, ladies and gentlemen – in the public interest. It is always managed in the public interest. That's the whole purpose of the Alberta Utilities Commission. That was the purpose of the Energy and Utilities Board when it had jurisdiction over the grid. It is also a delegated responsibility of the AESO, which is the Alberta Electric System Operator.

I want to look at these various projects that were approved by this government initially. It's important to realize that what this government did when it passed Bill 50 was two things. It eliminated sections 34, 35, and 36 of the Electric Utilities Act. Section 34 required that proof of the project be necessary, be brought forward. Section 35 allowed the AESO the ability to look for an alternative. Section 36 allowed anybody else to propose an alternative to fulfill the need. Those three sections of the act were set aside, and cabinet made the decision instead. Nobody else was allowed to bring anything forward as a suggestion, whether it was the AESO or anyone else.

The cabinet chose basically five projects, actually six lines: two HVDC lines, one east and one west between Edmonton and Calgary; two 500-kV AC lines going from Edmonton to Fort McMurray; a twin-circuit 500-kV AC line from Ellerslie to a new substation in Gibbons; and a $300 million substation, that nobody knows what's going to hook up to it, but it was approved.

Now, when you look at the project – and I'm going to just concentrate on the HVDC line between Edmonton and Calgary – the government relied upon the needs identification document that was first published in 2003. I explained that a little bit this morning, where in order to make that document meet the current standard that was set out by the government, that document excluded the Balzac generating station, it excluded any consideration of wind, and it excluded all imports to make the numbers add up and prove that a line was needed between Edmonton and Calgary. The capacity between Edmonton and Calgary right now, as it was then, is 2,200 megawatts. Two thousand two hundred megawatts.

If you look at how they decided this and the plans that the government used, the projections were going to be that there would be no development of generation in southern Alberta. Opponents of that proposal argued that that would not be true. What we now know to be true in 2012 is that the opponents were correct and the assumptions that the AESO made were incorrect. As the hon. minister has said: a different time, a different need. Things have changed, and there has been development of generation in southern Alberta as the opponents thought there would be. There's going to be more generation in southern Alberta.

We have a capacity between the two cities of 2,200 megawatts, and the rated transfer, or the transfer capacity, on average on a daily basis is 800 megawatts. So we have a substantial under-utilization of the existing system as it stands today. When the Shepard generating station goes online, that utilization then drops even more. As a matter of fact, Enmax, and rightfully so, is planning on shipping electricity north to central Alberta, in the Red Deer region, and that would actually make sense given how it's all connected.

What we're proposing is to increase that capacity, that 2,200 megawatts, another 4,000 megawatts with these two HVDC lines. By doing that, we're now going to have a capacity of 6,200 megawatts of transfer capacity between the two cities, and that's the daily average baseload of the entire province. That doesn't make sense, and that was one of the points I brought up this morning.

When I bring this amendment forward, you'll see why we need to relook at these things and why, dealing with this bill, this government should take a look at not just why it should not make these decisions but whether the decisions that were made are now correct because it's a different time and a different need. We're not talking a small amount of money here.

The proposal by the AESO – and what I'm going to do is to sort of lay out a case, and I'll table all the documents tomorrow after question period. On the current projects that have been approved, that $1.6 billion line that was approved by cabinet back in 2009, the AESO writes on page 37 in its long-term plan that the line "cannot be fully utilized without the second line being in service as the loss of the first line would create too large of a contingency." Now, I'm going to explain that in plain English. What they mean by contingency is that if that line were to take any kind of fault, we would risk shutting all the lights off in the province if that line was loaded to any certain level or any reasonable level of its rated capacity.

What we're proposing, Mr. Chair, is to build a transmission line of roughly $1.4, $1.6 billion dollars, and we cannot use it. It does not even have stand-alone capabilities. That is an engineering defect, and that would be a policy defect to continue with that project without rethinking how we're spending that money. The eastern HVDC line is absolutely needed to make the one in the west actually work. In engineering terms that's bordering on ridiculous. We've doubled down on cost because the first line we approved cannot work alone. Nobody should ever build a road, a building, or a transmission line that cannot be utilized by itself, and that's what we're proposing with this plan.

That is in the long-term plan, and there is an issue here dealing with the people who actually drafted the long-term plan and actually drafted every document this government has come to rely upon to prove that these are needed. Two of the senior engineers who did the testifying for AESO at all of their hearings on every project are Mr. Millar and Mr. Cline. I will submit this tomorrow. If you overbuild – and one of the great criticisms here is that we're building way too much, more than what we need. Now, there's a logic out there of: "So what? That's a good thing. We'll use it eventually." Well, it doesn't work that way. It's a little bit like booze at a party. If you have a little bit too much, you can ruin the party, maybe, for some people.

Mr. Millar is a senior executive vice-president at AESO, the senior engineer of their agency. On page 498 he was cross-examined under oath and asked about overbuilding the system. The question was: "If the transmission system were overbuilt, would it maintain options for long-term development of the system?" He answered: "I would suggest not necessarily in response to [that]." He said, "An overbuilt transmission system may have already closed off other alternatives." That's really important because one of the things that this government said it did not want to do was to pick winners and losers. Here what we have is the senior engineer that designed this who said that if you overbuild, you create that kind of a problem. That's in the official transcripts going back to the 2004 hearing.

Fast-forwarding to 2012, the coauthor of both documents that this government has relied upon was asked about this western Alberta line. He basically said, "It would be my opinion that it's not in the public interest." That's a change in what's happening here.

At this point, Mr. Chair, I would like to submit and amendment.

The Chair: If you would send that to the table, hon. member. This will be A2.

You may speak to the amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In this amendment, marked A2, I am moving to strike out section 4 and substitute the following, that section 41.3 be amended by striking out "and an order under section 41.1(1)," by renumbering section 41.3 as section 41.3(1), and then by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) An application made under subsection (1) must include the following:
  - (a) a technical and economic cost benefit analysis with a comparison of alternatives that could improve economic and technical efficiencies;
  - (b) a description of the rationale, including the assumptions and supporting data on which the rationale is based, supporting the nature of the preparatory operations and estimates of the total cost to ratepayers;

- (c) an assessment of current transmission system capability;
- (d) the planning criteria used for the assessment of transmission system capability;
- (e) a forecast for at least 20 years of the load on the interconnected electric system;
- (f) a forecast for at least 20 years of generation capacity and appropriate reserves required to meet the forecast load; and
- (g) the studies and analyses performed in identifying the timing affecting or that will affect the economic and technical efficiencies of the proposed transmission line.

Now, it sounds like a lot, but it's not. What it does is that it outlines what is normally done in every jurisdiction before these projects are undertaken. To the hon. members: of all the Bill 50 projects that are in the schedule and that have been legislated, none have been built. You need to understand that. The closest one to even starting to be built is the heartland line. So if we were to require that we look at these technical aspects, particularly the cost-benefit analysis but also how the system is going to work – you just can't overbuild any more than you can underbuild a system. That's what's really critical about this.

I think I have to sort of reinforce that point. Bigger is not better, and that can be a problem. That's what the engineer who drafted the original needs identification document, that's what that engineer who led the group that drafted a 2009 plan was referring to when he basically said: when you overbuild the system, you don't necessarily allow for that competition that you thought you were going to. This is really important, and what this government wants to set out in its policy is to create a competitive framework for the development of generation. What's happened here with Bill 50 and why the amending act first had come along and why now this amendment is that we want to enhance or bring this policy of competition forward, and what we're actually doing, if we continue down this path, is probably picking winners and losers to the detriment of some other generators, and that could be a problem.

On the surface when you look at the data – and anyone can go onto the AESO website and get the data – and you look at the transfer of electricity, transferring electricity from Edmonton to Calgary is going to become something of a moot point when the Shepard plant goes online. It also becomes more problematic as we retire the coal-generating plants. Now, nobody knows how many generators we're going to retire. The AESO can presume and make an assumption. But we do know this. Some generators have already gone offline, and that has reduced the transfer to begin with. Other generators will upgrade and go to combined-cycle gasification, which is mandated by the federal government, but those businesses that don't want to go down that path are not going to do that. The business case for not doing that would be to retire the coal-generating station rather than upgrading it. Am I speaking too loud?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Anglin: Well, that's because I can't hear myself over the hum. I will try not to speak too loud, but I will speak. I can't help that.

The Chair: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Anglin: I have the floor.

What we're doing on the western side of Rimbey, from Genesee down to Langdon, is adding an additional 2,000 megawatts of capability when we're actually going to be accelerating the decommissioning of many of those coal-generating stations. That's not logical. That's not building for the future. Under the current system that the AESO would do their normal evaluation on, using their normal algorithms, this line will be turned off by 2022. It doesn't make sense to spend $1.6 billion to bring forward a line of that size that may never be used.

Where our growth is happening – and nobody disputes this – is northeast of Edmonton all the way up to Fort McMurray. That's our industrial growth. I've not met anyone who's arguing that point. Bringing a line down from Fort McMurray would normally – whether it's AC or DC doesn't matter. I'll probably be saying that a lot tonight, too, AC/DC. [interjection] Well, you can bring your own innuendoes, but I'm talking about electricity.

We know we're going to build a pipeline coming down from Fort McMurray. That is something that is in the long-term plan. Industry would like that pipeline to go into a utility corridor. Industry wants that pipeline to go to the new upgrader in Redwater. It only makes sense.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lac La-Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just referring to this amendment A2, by my fellow colleague, it's some very, very substantive stuff. Some of it's very technical, and I'd just be interested in hearing some more about this particular amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? Then I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Looking at the economics of this, the Industrial Power Consumers Association, which represents the major consumers of electricity in this province, is a business group large enough that it claims to directly affect the employment of anywhere from 70,000 to 100,000 Albertans. That is significant-sized employment. They looked at what this government has approved, and they had written the previous PC caucus back in 2009. They said that if the government goes through with this, this could make some businesses uncompetitive. It could cause job losses. They did that on the basis of cost and cost only. What they were saying was that there was no reason for building such a large system when there was no need for it. Their projections at the time were that we would probably develop gas-fired generation, which has seemed now to have come true, in which we would go to more of a distributive generation model versus a centralized generation model. Doing so would require fewer major transmission lines, and this wasteful spending, as they refer to it, is absolutely not in the public interest.

Beyond the Industrial Heartland Association, Dr. Church from the University of Calgary did a study on these lines. He looked at them. He called them uneconomic. He was critical of the AESO, saying that their projections were unrealistic. The government then assigned to the Utilities Consumer Advocate to hire and do its own study. They employed a company called ADC out of Calgary. They did a study for the Utilities Consumer Advocate, and that study said that this is uneconomic, that we should not do it, and that the Utilities Consumer Advocate should advocate against it, that it was too expensive and not necessary. Again, nobody was listening.

So here we are today with this amendment, and what we're asking is not necessarily to hold anything up but to look at what we are doing going forward to require that an application has to be made with a technical and economic cost-benefit analysis, which used to be required, that this government make it a requirement now as we repeal this act, that we describe in that report a rationale, including the assumptions for the supporting data.

Dealing with the assumptions, bear in mind that our Alberta Electric System Operator belongs to two jurisdictions. One is called the Northwest Power Pool, and the other is called the Western Electricity Coordinating Council. Each one sets a level of standards that we agree to comply with. Now, the Western Electricity Coordinating Council, called the WECC, sets out the parameters, the rules, the protocols for 22 western states, the province of B.C., the province of Alberta, and, I believe, two jurisdictions in northern Mexico. They set the protocols for how that western grid will work. Members of our AESO actually attend training at the WECC to learn how to plan and do it in a manner that's consistent with planners across the entire western electric jurisdiction. They tell planners in their programs that nobody has ever built a 10-year plan because the system is too dynamic. That's not the purpose of a 10-year plan. What we are engaged in, what this cabinet approved back in 2009, is the building of a 10-year plan without a cost-benefit analysis, absent of any rationale, of critical analysis of the assumptions of the data used to come up with the plan.

Here's where we're going wrong if we continue to build these lines. Typically, in the planning stages plans generally change all the time as reality comes to bear, which is that you have a new plant that goes on line or a new facility or a new generating station, which now has to change the long-term plan just because of its location. To bring an example to this, the heartland line runs from Ellerslie to a new substation in Gibbons. The hon. member last night from I think Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville – I don't have my chart in my front of me – mentioned something about one of the plants in the heartland needing a transmission line for their next phase. They need an upgrade to the 240 system that they're currently connected to in Fort Saskatchewan. That's probably true. Without even looking at it, I think that any time a major plant goes in, they need an upgrade. But you cannot mistake upgrading a 240 system with the construction of a 500-kV HVDC line that it cannot connect to. You cannot mistake that with a twin 500-kV AC line that goes from one substation in Ellerslie to another substation in Gibbons and doesn't do anything to help connect that new facility the hon. member was talking about. That's not what happens here.

It is important when we look at the system, look at the projects, that the people who have an understanding of them have the ability to look at the data and make a determination based on a public mandate, that they do what is best economically. You can look at the social impact, but realistically it is all about economics. What is the best electric system for our future growth? I will continue to stress that overbuilding the system is problematic, and it will cause problems. Overspending alone is going to raise rates. That's significant.

Some of you may remember a situation during question period when we talked about rates. There was an assumption that the public didn't pay. So I brought a document. It's basically an AESO document – I'll table it tomorrow – on who pays for transmission costs. It lists all consumers. We know that to be true. It's the same with everything in the marketplace. Eventually all costs are passed down to consumers. That's where this is going to hurt this province economically. The average person is going to see their bills rise. I understand members are saying that it's only going to rise so much per line, but that's not the whole story. That's being misrepresented. That's not looking at the all-in cost of what's happening.

Again, you only need, members, to go home and look at your own electricity bills and look at what you're paying for transmission today, never mind what you're paying for distribution. If everybody is correct and the system that we have today is old and we've already paid for it, then when you look at that transmission charge on your bill, ask yourself: why is that so high? It's a valid question. Ask the AESO to describe to you how that charge is calculated. That is not just the physical plant. That's not the $3.40 charge that they say an HVDC line would put on your bill.

What you find on your bill is a charge based on the entire system, which is currently valued at roughly $2 billion. We are proposing a $16.6 billion upgrade. The first two projects out of that have more than doubled in cost. That should wake some people up. Why? If this continues, we're not looking at a $16.6 billion charge. Before the former CEO of Enmax left, he said that we're going to have a hard time keeping it under $25 billion. I'm telling you right now that we're on a path where keeping it under $30 billion will be very difficult.

Somebody needs to look at this before that money is expended. That's why I came up last night and said: we are looking at something here that's probably somewhere around half the provincial budget. That's significant. That's not just change. We have an opportunity here to just backtrack a little bit and take a look at this on an economic level, look at the real data, have the experts do it with a mandate of the public interest, and I'm confident we will make the right decision.

There are two things that happened here. Political interference started this problem, created this problem, and political interference is currently the problem.

Mr. Weadick: Joe, stop blaming us.

Mr. Anglin: I wish I could. I'd rather you read the data, hon. member, because it is the numbers that matter the most. They don't lie. It's what we need to question.

Mr. Chair, I'll go back to the simple part, that one aspect of what would be corrected by this amendment, and that would be the heartland line. As I made mention this morning, there was a question by the hon. member about the heartland to the Energy minister, I think, sometime a couple of weeks ago.

It has been said numerous times in this Chamber that the heartland needs more power, but when you look at the data, the heartland has 663 megawatts of generation capacity right now. Its baseload is 563 megawatts, which gives it a reserve capacity of around 14 per cent. That's normal. The capacity for transmission feeding the heartland on a baseload measurement is probably just under 2,000 megawatts. That's nearly three times the capacity of the generation up there, and it's almost four times the capacity of the baseload. The existing transmission system actually meets the needs of the heartland. So why are we pushing a twin 500-kV system up there for an additional 2,000 megawatts when the baseload of the region alone is only 563 megawatts? It doesn't make sense.

It's an overbuild beyond reason, and you need someone to take a look at this data and make a decision based on the public interest. What is best for this province? Particularly, what is best for this province in economic terms? If we don't do that, if we don't bring some common sense to this, there's going to be a problem in paying for all this when we can't get a utilization, and that's the reason for the cost-benefit analysis. The purpose of a cost-benefit analysis is to look at how much money we are investing and what the payback would be to the public. It's the public that's paying this, and I think it's a reasonable request that the public have an answer to some of these questions, not from me but from somebody independent that has a mandate to act in the public interest.

I'm not asking for this amendment to appoint anybody. I'm saying: use the tools that you have; use the existing system. It can work. I know most of the engineers that work for many of these companies now because of my involvement. They're good people. They've had some good people leave, but all in all these people are competent, and they know their job. Many of them are idealistic; they want to do a good job. The political interference is what caused some of these good people to leave. It is what causes some angst in dealing with these projects. I can tell you right now that you'd be hard-pressed, any member in here, to go out there to an independent engineer with any kind of knowledge of our system and ask for a commentary on the benefit of an HVDC line from Edmonton to Calgary, never mind two of them, on such a short distance.

Now, I know I've been criticized and some of the members here have criticized me for being anti transmission line. I'm not, and I'm not against HVDC any more than I would be against AC technology. As I said earlier, I was criticized, I believe by the hon. whip for the other side, that I had protested Ben Franklin when he first hung a string to a kite and found electricity. As I pointed out to that member, that was DC technology, and I won the argument. We adopted AC technology from that time forward. We have an AC grid now, and DC technology could be beneficial if we were to utilize it over a very long distance. But we're not utilizing it over a very long distance; we're doing just the opposite. So we don't get the technical benefits from the line. The average loss for an electrical system world-wide is between 5 and 7 per cent. That's called normal. Alberta's system operates year after year at 3.5 per cent, 3.8 per cent. It is now just over a 4 per cent loss, operating well below the norm.

Something the hon. member did not hear last night is: why are we building two HVDC lines, each with a capacity to have 6 per cent loss, when the advantage of the HVDC is to get loss figures below 3 per cent? It's a reasonable technical question. The type of conductors that have been chosen to be bundled together are rated to lose 6 per cent of the electricity that is transported. That doesn't make sense when you're spending that kind of money. You should be less than 3 per cent, and we're going to be in that 6 per cent range.

The added price for spending an extra billion dollars for a DC line over an AC line is not logical. The argument is that it uses less land. If you average that to the price of farmland between Edmonton and Calgary – and there are some places that are more expensive than others – it comes out to about $42 million a quarter section. Of course, you'll never have an objection from a farmer at that price, but it doesn't make sense to make the public pay that price for DC technology versus AC technology. We're not talking about transferring any more electricity over either technology. So why the added cost of billions of dollars?

Now, one hon. member said something about the advantages of low EMF. When you use this technology next to AC lines, the only thing you've done is create a larger field of EMF anyways, and I'm not going to get into whether it's harmful or not harmful. I'll let industry do their own studies, and they can be the judge of that. The fact is that when you run parallel lines, the more parallel lines you run, the larger the field you will create. You can run a barbed wire fence next to a power line, and you'll help create a larger field of EMF. So you don't get that advantage by running an HVDC line parallel to the AC lines that exist.

Here we're using a technology that does have advantages, and we're not getting any of the advantages it has been designed to give the system because we're misusing it. That's why I'm opposed to these lines on a practical level. On the practical level of finance, economics, the numbers just don't add up. We are building lines that we do not need. If somebody – and somebody may; it's logical that it could happen – were to put a gas turbine, 240-megawatt generator in and around the Red Deer area, maybe around Wetaskiwin, anywhere in south-central Alberta... [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. [interjections] The Member for Drumheller-Stettler has the floor. Thank you.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just want to ask the member – my constituency... [interjections] I thought I had the floor, but apparently the hearing isn't quite...

The Chair: Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you. My constituency, too, is going to be affected by this ongoing development. I want to know what the potential lifespan of this development would be. I understand that there's a different technology used, but I want to know because my landowners are also upset.

The Chair: The hon. member may have the chance to get up again, and if he does, I'm sure he'll probably take you up on answering that question, hon. member. Thank you.

Others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: I'll take questions from anyone, Mr. Chair. Hopefully, some of the members might have some questions. It might sound comical, but I will tell you this. When you look at the amount of money, it's not comical. That's the problem. It's not. It's serious, and it affects all Albertans.

The ones it's going to hurt the most are the small businesses, the hard-working Albertans that are living, you know, cheque to cheque, and the seniors who are on a fixed income. I know that when the hon. Minister of Energy releases his report, which he will, hopefully that will be an eye-opener for this Chamber, that we need to address a significant problem dealing with the pricing of electricity. But going forward with what we're planning on doing is going to exacerbate any attempt to correct the electricity pricing model.

I will not throw out those terms like "If the government doesn't do this, this is what's going to happen." I don't want to be accused of threatening. But I want to bring to your attention that when electricity prices spike, all of you generally probably get calls to your constituency offices or even hear about it. What we have created is a system where we're not encouraging reserve generation to be built. We are not encouraging generation to be undertaken. There's a reason for it, and it has to do with our wholesale system, and the hon. Minister of Energy got some questions dealing with that today.

We have a wholesale system that is actually designed so that a plant could run below cost, lose money for two or three months, and in one day when that price caps out at a thousand dollars a megawatt, they can make up all the difference providing they are not the one that went offline. But given the number of agreements that are out there, it's a complex web to find out who profited and who did not. That, of course, didn't come out in the report that was published about the last power outage.

The point I'm trying to make is that the system right now, the way we've designed the auction system from the wholesale market, is designed so that at some point the goal is to elevate the price to its cap, to its level so the industry can get a thousand dollars a megawatt. In the end, all of that, whether you're on a fixed contract or not, is passed along to the consumers.

I am quite confident that we will see something to that effect when this Retail Market Review Committee releases its report. Fixed contract or not, whether you are on the regulated rate option or a fixed contract, those ancillary costs are not fixed. Those are variable. They shift. Some of you may have noticed this; others of you may not have. But if you ask around, you'll find somebody who experiences it. Where somebody owns a building, a house that they're not using, the actual electricity costs could be as low as $10 or $12 a month, but that bill comes in at $60 or $70 a month. That's the ancillary cost. That is transferring everything else down onto the consumer that eventually always ends up on the consumer. We build these transmission lines, and all of that ends up onto the consumer.

So asking for a technical and economic analysis: the whole purpose behind that is that it will take that into consideration. The AUC, the Alberta Utilities Commission, would take that into consideration when the approval for these lines is brought forward to the next stage, the process of locating. That is a nice check and balance to hopefully bring this back and do what is right.

As I talked to the hon. Minister of Energy, we've legislated two critical lines from Edmonton to Fort McMurray. They will cost well over a billion dollars each. Nobody knows when they're going to be built, but they've been legislated. They are in law. The only way they can be stopped is by changing the law. They're in the wrong place right now for what industry needs, for what Fort McMurray needs and for what Edmonton needs.

This green corridor that I spoke of this morning is something that industry wants. It is something that consumers want. It is located on the eastern side of the province. It is where we are developing right now our pipeline system. We're going to continue to develop pipelines from Fort McMurray, and the next plan is a pipeline to the Redwater upgrader. It's all logical. It's all part of the business plan. Should we develop a utility corridor? I would say yes. Industry is saying yes. It makes sense.

Oh, by the way, landowners as a general rule like the idea of utility corridors. It just takes the political will to make that happen.

But if we build a utility corridor for what they call a green energy corridor, which is on the eastern side of the province, that means the lines that were legislated under Bill 50, that cannot be denied until we remove that from legislation, are going to be built in the wrong place. They're going in the wrong direction. They're not doing what we need to have done. It's a mispending of the public's money. We cannot afford to double down.

What should happen is that this amendment should be passed. Those lines would not necessarily be removed from legislation, but I can guarantee you that they will probably change in location significantly, and there's a likelihood that they would change in technology, that they would go from AC to HVDC. That would be as a result of whether or not hydroelectric development took place and was pursued up in northeast Alberta. I suspect it will be. That is something that industry wants. I think it is something that consumers should have. I think it is something our economy needs.

It's a matter of crunching the numbers and making the projects work. But in order to develop that, you would want to get that electricity down here. That would be more compatible to HVDC technology, but we've legislated AC technology instead. So passing this amendment will allow the jurisdiction of the regulator to make changes, to look at that and bring that back. This is important. This is important for the economic viability of many industries. It's important for the economic viability of many communities.

Electricity, regardless of what we do with oil and gas, makes our economy run. The interesting thing about electricity, even with the demand of it, is that it's so consistent year after year. If you look at a 75-year history of the growth of electricity demand, in a stable economy it runs on average 2.5 to 3 per cent. In an economy that is just humming along you might get over 3 per cent growth in demand for electricity.

Ironically, residential demand as projected by our AESO is fairly flatlined. Although our residential growth will continue to grow at whatever rate it is, in the last few years the people who paid for the transmission systems, who paid for the lines actually only grew it 1.4, 1.5 per cent, yet we have high growth of residents in Alberta. The reason I bring that forward is that our growth in electricity is not residential; it is industrial. Our industrial consumers consume roughly 80 per cent of all the electricity produced in this province on a regular basis. They have more to gain, they have more to lose if they run out of power, yet they have come out against these lines, and nobody is listening to them.

The Industrial Power Consumers Association has been steadfast and critical of this overbuild, and someone needs to listen. They employ a lot of people, and they want to do business in this province. Having the ability to reassess and re-evaluate the data based on changing economic times – and they have changed. Some projects that were proposed to go forward are not going forward. Other projects that nobody thought about are now going forward. The Shepard plant is a big project that is going forward, 800 megawatts of power.

As a person who is in favour of a lot of renewable – and I applaud this province for pursuing renewables – wind power itself is more problematic than it is an advantage. Because of the unstable effect of wind power on the system, there needs to be what's generally referred to as a stabilizing generator or a stabilizing source to compensate for the unstable nature of wind. That doesn't make sense, in my view. I think wind power makes sense on an individual's farm that can manage it, but as an industrial component to a system that's going to sell electricity commercially, it is not a system that is, in my mind, economical because it requires additional generation just to make it stable.

What we have in this province, though, is that we are extremely wealthy in something called energy. We have natural gas, whether we cogen or build natural gas facilities. If somebody takes a look at what we're building, we are building some of the most efficient natural gas generators of today. Unfortunately, we're building some of them in the wrong place. That has to do with something they call the overbuild of this transmission system.

Regardless, if we were to use natural gas – compared to coal, natural gas can turn on quite quickly whereas coal cannot, and coal cannot shut down quickly unless you trip it offline, which makes it that much more difficult; natural gas is much more flexible in its ability to meet demand – if we were to bring that online with hydro potential, particularly the significant hydro potential that is available in Alberta, with our natural gas facilities Alberta could do something that no other jurisdiction can do or most other jurisdictions want to do, which is to create a distributive generation system.

What that means is that your generators are distributed all around the province versus one central location. Your grid becomes what they call an Internet grid. You don't need major, huge, expensive transmission lines. You need smaller and multiple transmissions lines, creating what's called a spider web, or an Internet, grid. What gives us the ability to develop it and what gives us an advantage over all other jurisdictions is that we have a natural gas system in place today. To develop natural gas is not that difficult compared to other jurisdictions that don't have the pipelines and the gas plants the way we do.

We have a natural gas facility going in south of Calgary, we have a huge natural gas facility, the Shepard plant, going in east of Calgary, generation that is proposed with the new Clover Bar facility northeast of Edmonton, and so on and so forth. We're building a backbone that has been legislated, that cannot serve that type of system effectively. We need to take a look at the premise of a different time, a different need.

Mr. Chair, passing this amendment brings the information forward. It allows us to reassess and re-evaluate what we're doing before, in my opinion, we do something wrong. I could live with the decision as long as I had faith that more qualified people took a look at the data and that they made a determination based on a public mandate, and that mandate would be for our economic system. This mandate that originated to build this was based on the assumption that the oil sands wanted it to export electricity. I know this government denied that for the longest time, but too many reports, authored even by our own AESO, confirm that that's what this was all about.

As I mentioned, two members went down to the Pacific Northwest Economic Region conference. In that region their second-highest priority was what was called the heartland line. It was electricity from the heartland to Buckley, Oregon. The heartland is an export region of the province. It does not need more electricity. It exports electricity. Does it need an upgrade to the 240 system for a new project? Probably more than likely. All projects require upgrades. They very rarely don't. So we're back to that situation where we've legislated lines, and once we've legislated them, we have to build them, yet we're not building the upgrades where we need to build the upgrades.

If you take a look at it from this perspective, if we upgrade the system to the hon. member's plant, that produces an economic value on the next phase. We try to time it so we meet that on the next phase. But when you're building lines of what I would call the bridge to nowhere, the road to nowhere, you're building lines that do not produce any other economic activity. There's no great payback for the public, and there has to be some sort of payback to the public. This is nothing more than an expense. We need to get a handle on that, and we need to get that under the microscope of those that are more qualified and to make a determination of: should we go forward, should we change it, should we modify it, or should we just deny it? That has to be part of this.

It has been brought to my attention that these lines cannot be stopped now that they have been legislated. I do not believe that for one minute. The TFOs, which are the transmission facility operators – there are only about five of them in the province – are regulated companies. The fact is that we are going to build a transmission line from around the Edmonton region, which I would call now the heartland, the Redwater area, to Fort McMurray. That would be no different than what has been currently legislated. Now, I know AltaLink has their eyes on that, but it has not been decided whether AltaLink or anyone else is going to build that. The heartland line upgrade: even though I see the towers out there, those towers still can be used for other projects. It is not problematic. Buying the wire is not problematic. The wire can always be used elsewhere, and the engineering is always done on an continuing basis. Will there be a loss? There'll be grumbling, but there'll be a gain when we build the lines in the right places. There will be a significant gain, in my mind, if we do what is right for our economy.

This political interference that I referred to that started way back when – and it was political interference in many ways. I'm not going to reiterate the whole spying scandal nonsense that went on that's been now well documented in this Chamber. The political interference I want to refer to is that at that time, in December of 2006, I had brought a motion forward to the EUB that the EUB did not have jurisdiction over an export line. They did not. The federal government did. Of course, some of you may well know that this government for many years has denied that these had anything to do with export. Within a matter of two weeks there was an order in council giving the EUB jurisdiction over an export line, which the cabinet had the authority and jurisdiction to do. But you can't have it both ways. Either it was for export or it was not for export.

There is a study that I did table. It's called the Canada-Northwest-California Transmission Options Study. It's coauthored by our own AESO, and in this study is every line that's in Bill 50. They're all there in a number of different capacities. That's a planning document, and the whole document was designed on: how do we get the excess electricity from Fort McMurray, in the heartland down to southern California? The problem is that it's just not economic. It's economic to ship natural gas. It's economic to ship bitumen and oil. It's not economic to ship electricity that far. It's just not. Private industry looked at that. TransCanada looked at that project.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize next the Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to make a couple of brief comments on this amendment by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I certainly appreciate what he is intending to do here because it's something that I am deeply concerned about as well. I did make some comments on another amendment of his this morning, and I focused on the individual consumer side of our electricity situation in the province.

You know, I had the occasion to actually go to an event in my constituency here earlier, just before this evening's session. Lo and behold, people at a local crime council were talking about their electricity bills, opening their electricity bills and finding all of these ancillary charges that were bringing up the cost of their electricity bill considerably. You know, one gentleman who went away and was not even using the house at all last summer said that his bill was still quite significant without any use of electricity whatsoever. He just turned everything off. People do talk about this. For people, seniors especially, who have a modest fixed income, their utility bills sometimes are the thing that is driving them out of their homes.

We need to look and remember that we produce power for the development of our industry here in the province and we produce power for the benefit of the people who live here in the province. To look at it strictly in any other way, I think, confuses the notion of what electricity does as a medium to provide that development of industry and to provide those benefits to consumers. As we look around, in the many industrial countries that are successful, they make sure that they carefully regulate the price of their electricity to ensure that you're not putting unfair burdens on industrial development and individual consumption, right? This is not for the sake of wanton consumption, leaving all the lights on and all that sort of thing but, rather, using and understanding. Again, electricity is not just the thing to profit from unto itself but, rather, the medium by which we can build things that we can make profit from in other circumstances, right?

In order for us to understand this more clearly, we have to make sure to know that regulation is the essential part of a modern electricity grid, so the hon. member's amendments here in regard to taking a long view of developing our transmission capacity and looking at at least a 20-year assessment of the load of our interconnected electricity system is absolutely essential because this is an essential service, right? We're not talking about an optional service that people might opt out of. All of us use electricity as absolutely central to our daily lives and, as I said, to the industrial development of our province.

You know, at this juncture I think we need to look at where electricity goes and plan it very carefully and plan it in conjunction and harmony with how we want to diversify our economic system here in the province. We rely too much on primary resource extraction and not enough on secondary industrial development of especially bitumen into synthetic crude oil. All of these processes need a great deal of power that we can develop in a more intelligent distributive generation system that doesn't rely on single large places where we produce power.

Another interesting and not insignificant place that we can, I think, draw from is the considerable secondary electricity generation capacity of our oil sands in and around Fort McMurray. We know that that electricity is there. We know that those industries have been interested in selling that electricity for quite some time. I mean, a modest proposal is to perhaps bring that electricity down to our population centres where we want to develop our industry – the industrial heartland here in Edmonton, large population centres including Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, and so forth – in the most efficient way possible and then selling it in the most reasonable way possible, too. All of these things take a tremendous amount of central planning and long-term planning. This amendment certainly does speak to that, and I commend the hon. member for bringing that forward.

From my certainly not comprehensive but, you know, considerable analysis of the trends in our electricity generation system from five or seven years ago, we could see that the large producers and AESO were orienting our transmission capacity and building our lines with a view to exporting electricity to the United States. While this in itself doesn't seem unreasonable, it does when we are trying to build a distributive, integrated electricity system here that can be more reliable and more affordable for domestic consumption, right? If we have some of the highest consumer and industrial electricity prices in the nation, then that is something that casts a shadow over proper economic diversification in our province and affordable living for all classes of people here in the province, too.

Making some small amendments to Bill 8, as this hon. member has done, is not unreasonable. I don't disagree that we need to have considerable reform of our electricity system and considerable reform of how we make choices about our electricity system. The way to do that, I think, is a reflection of what is the best system that could be put in place for this province, which is to not rely on one or two or three different large producers but, rather, to diversify considerably and put into the basket of possible electricity generation ideas and add to that basket in an exponential and organic and creative way.

Yes, perhaps wind energy, as the hon. member said, has problems, but it belongs in that basket of a distributive and diversified electricity generation system. So does biogas; so does solar; so does geothermal, right? All of these things are recognized around the world as a way that you strengthen your electricity system through diversity.

That's my metaphor, Mr. Chair, that we strengthen our electrical grid and the debate on Bill 8 through diversity as well. Part of that diversity is to take the best ideas, the best practices that might come out of this Chamber, including this one here from the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and thus strengthen Bill 8 as we endeavour to strengthen our electrical grid.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, good evening, Mr. Chairman, and thank you very much. It's a pleasure to speak to everyone tonight. It's my first opportunity to speak to this bill.

The Chair: To the amendment.

Mr. Stier: Right.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Thank you for that correction, actually. Yes. I'm in favour of this amendment, and I think I'm in favour of it mostly because I think it will guarantee a proper review. But before I get started, I'd like to compliment the minister, who has spent an awful lot of time here in the past 24 hours. I appreciate his coming back here tonight. It's good to see you again.

Mr. Chairman, when I started in Livingstone-Macleod, one of my most primary concerns was power costs that I heard about frequently, in fact, and, of course, Bill 50. At that time there was no review by the AUC, and it raised an awful lot of concern with a lot of people out there. There are a lot of people down in the south who have a lot of power lines going across their properties, a lot of power lines being planned, a lot of windmills, a lot of things happening that they were concerned about. I think it's justified because a lot of times when these things are going across land, it renders the land somewhat difficult to work with. It also in terms of, perhaps, a resale point of view interferes with values. I had an awful lot of these folks mentioning this to me, and they still are doing that today.

When we look at how we have been evaluating it in the past and when Bill 50 came along, it was certainly something that concerned me greatly because I thought that there must be a better way to do this than what had been decided several years ago. So in October of '09, when the review was put back in and the Utilities Commission was allowed to get back involved, I was certainly relieved, but despite this recent change to put them back into the process, these lines are still being planned, and they're still going forward. That gives me a lot of concern.

When I read the amendment by the hon. member here, who has spent so much time in this business and gone through an extra step or two to ensure he's worded it correctly with all the good folks involved, it looks to me like a pretty good thing. It gives a proper review to ensure there is or there is not a benefit to the new infrastructure that's being considered. It determines whether there's really a need for it and whether it's best met with whatever method might be appropriate. It verifies whether or not the new infrastructure really is worth while or outweighs the public interest. He spent a lot of time talking about that. The learned gentleman knows an awful lot, and I think it would be fair to give the gentleman a chance to say more on these topics because it's very important.

Lastly, it provides for a consideration of alternate routes or ways of evaluating efficiencies and reliabilities and so on. All this is very important because we the taxpayer and my constituents will be the ones that will be footing the bill, and these things will appear in their transmission costs on their bill.

I certainly hope that there will be good support for this amendment. It's a serious situation to all landowners and all power consumers, whether they're rural, urban, commercial, or what have you. I think it's extremely important, and I hope everyone in the Chamber will support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to just cover a couple of topics because I've heard some people mention that they would like to go home, and as soon as I know everyone has listened to me, I want to go home, too. Okay. Now I have their attention. Good. Actually, when I stand up, I should probably still say, "Good morning, Mr. Chair" because it's never ended for me since last night.

I want to talk about a couple of things. There needs to be greater consideration to a number of complex problems that have been created because of what I would call bad policy. We do not allow our AESO, our ISO to consider utilizing nonwire solutions, and to me that is what has led to our current problem that we're dealing with in this amendment. Our AESO can only employ new transmission lines to address any problem. They are not allowed to use nonwire solutions as a permanent solution. That is a problem because technology has advanced so far in recent years that there's a lot our AESO can do that is far more economic than building a transmission line.

I always like to use the Dr. Benjamin Rush example, and some of the members may have heard me use this before. Dr. Benjamin Rush is famous for one thing and one thing only. He was a doctor in the late 1700s, the 1790s, early 1800s. He invented the laxative. It didn't matter what ailed you. You took Rush's Thunderbolt, and that was the cure. If you had tonsillitis, you took the laxative. If you had a swollen knee, you took the laxative. Maybe that made you forget what your real problem was. I don't know.

I will tell you this. Our AESO is the Dr. Benjamin Rush of ISOs. It is only allowed to build new transmission lines. It is not allowed by our current policies to utilize nonwire solutions, and that is extremely important, that we give our AESO the full spectrum to deal with the system in the most efficient and economical manner that it needs to utilize. There's a lot out there they can do.

The second thing. I'm going to debunk some of the information that some people have been hearing. The idea that we haven't done something major in the last 20 years or 40 years to upgrade the system: in 2010 the Alberta Electric System Operator published their annual major upgrade completion report in which they listed nine major projects they had completed. The point I want to make is that the ISO is always upgrading the system, as they should be, both small and major, when it's required. We do this, and we expect them to do that on a normal basis.

The idea that our electric system is bleeding or losing a lot of electricity is just not supported by the ISO's own data. In 2008 the system lost 3.8 per cent of its electricity. In 2009 it lost 3.5 per cent. In 2007 it lost 4 per cent. In 2010 it was actually below 4 per cent; it was 3.27 per cent. In 2012 it's 2.93 per cent. That's outstanding for a system. A normal system loses between 5 and 7 per cent. Anyone who says that our system is bleeding and losing a lot of electricity: it's not supported by the data that the AESO has publicly available on its website.

We have another policy problem as a result of a policy change, and that is that we used to have a policy that Albertans would not subsidize export. That was written into section 15(4) of the transmission regulations, 15(1) to 15(4), and that was repealed. Hon. members, somebody needs to ask the question why that was repealed. Now Albertans subsidize the export of electricity. We pay for it.

This act is a direct result of the amendments to the Electric Utilities Act. One of the things that did not get repealed that will conflict either with this motion or without this motion is the fact that we changed the mandate of the Alberta Electric System Operator from that it must build a system that is required by industry to that it must build a system that may be required by the industry. That change in that wording is not a change of flexibility. It is something that basically allows any approval to be made, whether it's required or not. That leads to the overbuilding, and as I read earlier from the engineer that pretty much drafted every document this government has relied upon, if you overbuild the system, you build problems into the system. There's no advantage to overbuilding, any more than there is an advantage to underbuilding. Both are problematic.

This amendment would address those problems in the sense that it would give the experts, the board, the opportunity to re-evaluate based on quantitative and qualitative data and do a technical and economic analysis of what should take place versus what somebody wants to take place. That's the difference. We still live in a system where, although people say that we need more electricity, our economic environment produces excess electricity each time we grow because, really, it's the oil sands that drives it.

I see the hon. member shaking his head, and I will direct his attention to the AltaLink website, and he can look it up. Since 1996 the generation capacity in Alberta has risen 38 per cent, and demand has only risen 21 per cent. That's the data right on AltaLink, who is, by the way, the biggest proponent of the lines. The reason for that is that when we develop an in situ mining operation or any other upgrader, it's not a matter of: will they have cogeneration? It's a matter of how large that cogeneration will be.

There are a number of distortions that are just not true, and I just explained that about the number of years. The biggest distortion was that the lights were going to go out in Calgary, and that was just not true. The prediction back in 2006 was that if this was not built before 2009, Calgary would experience rolling blackouts. The system would fail. It even made the front page of the Calgary Herald in June 2006. I can assure you, standing here in this Assembly in 2012, that the lights have not gone off as a result of any transmission line over the backbone between Edmonton and Calgary. The lights, however, did go out when six major generating units went offline. I assure all the members of the Assembly that I don't care how many transmission lines you build, if you turn the generators off, the lights will go off, too. This idea of line loss costing millions is just not true.

There is another problem. I did bring this. This amendment will address this problem, hopefully, if members here accept it. The Keystone pipeline did a study of multiple jurisdictions that they need electricity in, and they, of course, need electricity via transmission lines in Alberta. What they found in their study – and I believe they gave it to the hon. minister – was that building transmission lines in Alberta cost twice as much and sometimes three times as much as building a transmission line in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas.

Somebody needs to be asking this question. Why does it cost so much to build a transmission line in Alberta when it's the same companies building it, buying the steel from the same companies, buying the cables from the same companies, utilizing the same employees, which are generally first-class linemen that have to construct this, and using the same techniques? These jurisdictions were chosen because they had similar geographical characteristics to Alberta. The data was stunning. There's no rational explanation for why it would cost Alberta twice as much and in some cases three times as much as these other jurisdictions.

Now, there's a theory that I have. It's the only one that I know of, and I'd be willing to take another one. There's no oversight here. That's the one difference between these other jurisdictions. We do have a cost monitoring committee that has been appointed by the former Minister of Energy, but that cost monitoring committee does not have a right to access all the financial information, and that cost monitoring committee does not have the jurisdiction or right to demand it, and that cost monitoring committee does not have the right or jurisdiction to slow or hold up or stall a project. That, I say, is problematic, and I have a funny feeling that that is the reason why it costs so much more than other jurisdictions.

This amendment would do probably a pretty good job of bringing that forward because if you did an economic cost-benefit analysis, I think that would be a glaring figure that would jump off the page to a reasonable, educated person who's qualified to make an informed analysis of that data. It is a question that I would hope these hon. members would even take back to their caucus to debate. There's no rationale to have that added cost to building a transmission line in Alberta. There is none there.

In my opinion, because I just gave a lot of facts, and I will be tabling them tomorrow, I believe that if this amendment is adopted and we make sure that the regulator has the proper mandate – that's important – we would develop hydroelectric generation up in the northeast of Alberta. It makes economic sense from a long-term perspective, not just to provide ourselves with generation but to dovetail with the development of local gas generation. It could make Alberta one of the cleanest greenhouse gas emission provinces in North America – I'm not saying it will; I think it has the potential where it could – and that's without carbon capture. That's significant.

As many members well know, there is a program right now where the federal government has mandated that these coal generators either have to meet combined cycle gasification emission standards or close, that is equal to a typical gas plant. What that program will do is probably force some of these coal generators – rather than to gasify the coal, on a capital basis it may make more sense to decommission the coal plant and just construct a gas plant in its place or even in another location.

In closing . . . [some applause] I was waiting for that. I just didn't know if anybody was listening, that's all. I fibbed.

Nobody actually builds a long-term plan, and somebody has to ask: why in Alberta are we trying to actually build a long-term plan? I want to just read from something that I had written as a submission. It is something that is with the Western Electricity Coordinating Council. Our AESO has to maintain compliance with the Western Electricity Coordinating Council. It also has to maintain compliance with the national energy regulatory commission down in the U.S. They have mandatory planning standards, and the objective of the long-term planning, as outlined in the standards, is to provide high-level information to support operational decision-makers in determining possible solutions and alternatives to help ensure that interconnected electricity systems are reliable, low-cost, efficient, and environmentally sound.

The planning standards expressly state with regard to the long-term system plans that the plan is informational in nature. It is intended to advise and guide rather than instruct. And that's the whole concept of plans. It is not something that is supposed to be deterministic of what should be built. It is supposed to serve as a guide. Where, in my opinion, we went wrong with government interference, political interfere is when we adopted that long-term plan and just made a commitment and said: we're going to build this. That's wrong. The world turns too quickly for that, and it changes rapidly. To quote the hon. Energy minister: a different time, a different need. That's true, and I'm going to continue to quote that because we are in a different time, and that need has evolved.

These lines are not necessary. The lines that are necessary are not what we are building, and that's why there needs to be an economic trigger, which there always is in every other jurisdiction. We require industry to commit before we spend billions of dollars or hundreds of millions of dollars so that we can get the most value for whatever project we build.

In this case a perfect example was made known right here this morning. In the heartland there is a project going forward where they need an upgrade to the 240 electrical transmission system internally, within what they call the heartland node. I don't know the status of that, but the local company there says that's what they need. Well, that makes sense. They've already invested money. They have built phase 1, and they're looking to build phase 2.

But we're not building that line. What we are building are lines that have no economic trigger to cause them to be approved and built. That's what's missing, and that should be taken under consideration. This amendment brings back to the table the cost-benefit analysis.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will sit down.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We've been joined this evening by five guests, who are in the public gallery. I actually had the pleasure of having dinner with them tonight. Now, some might suggest that they're here because they don't have much of a social life, but they're actually here because they're keenly interested in the political process. They represent the Alberta

Cattle Feeders' Association. This is an organization that this coming year is about to celebrate a 40th anniversary. They're a very influential group that does great work in our agricultural industry, so it's a real pleasure to be able to introduce these gentlemen. I'll just ask them to stand as I call their names and remain standing. They are Ryan Kasko, Glen Thompson, Leighton Kolk, Joe Novecosky, and Greg Van Vaerenbergh. I'd ask that my colleagues all extend the traditional warm welcome

The Chair: Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012

Mr. Saskiw: Well, I'll be quite brief on Bill 8. Of course, the first thing about Bill 8 is that it's purely a recognition that there was a mistake and a failure in the previous process. That was under Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, which of course gave the power to make decisions on transmission capacity. It took it away from the independent Alberta Utilities Commission and put it into hands of cabinet, a cabinet with no expertise on transmission capacity. As a result of that, we see a decision now where we're questioning it. My hon. colleague is questioning the need for these lines and rightfully so because we didn't have an independent utilities commission look at the data, look at the evidence to determine how many transmission lines were needed and, subsequently, where they were needed.

We have a situation where $16 billion worth of transmission lines went out through untendered contracts. They're already in a situation of cost overruns. This is a huge amount of money, Mr. Speaker, to allow a select few cabinet ministers sitting behind closed doors to make a decision on. Clearly, this bill on a go-forward basis fixes some of the problems, but why would we not go back and look at the $16 billion decision and look at some evidence and see whether or not they're actually needed?

There is some continuous fearmongering by some members about the fact that if we don't build these lines, there are going to be brownouts and blackouts and that kind of thing. There's absolutely no evidence of that. If anyone actually looks at the data – you can see online where the power consumption is – it's clearly not the case that there are going to be any blackouts or brownouts.

In fact, I think that argument is almost put to rest. I don't think they even make that argument anymore. But we heard that argument when Bill 50 was initially produced.

I heard it when I was working with a group called VALTOA, a bunch of landowners in the Vegreville area, where these lines were being rammed down their throats. When they questioned the need for these lines, the inevitable response was, "If we don't build these lines, there are going to be brownouts, and no one's going to get their power," and that kind of stuff. It's a completely ridiculous assertion, but we continue to see those types of statements made by then-former prominent cabinet ministers who are no longer with us.

The second part about it, of course, is that it has a real impact on people and our province. We're seeing right now record power bills. We see some of the highest power bills across the country. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? It's because of decisions like this, where you build transmission lines without determining whether or not they're needed. If they're not needed, they shouldn't be built. We now know that they're going to get built, and there are already cost overruns which are going to further increase people's power bills and, of course, make Alberta less competitive. If you're a small business, compare your power bills to other provinces. There are drastic differences.

Because this bill, of course, doesn't go back to the old lines, if these lines go forward, those power bills are going to further escalate and further make Alberta businesses less competitive. You know, we used to have the Alberta advantage in this province: lowest tax rates, low power bills, best health care, low regulations. Of course, we see with health care that we have some of the longest waiting lists. When you look at almost every main performance indicator, it's high. You look at tax rates: we're getting caught up by other provinces, and there's talk about a provincial sales tax by former Finance ministers.

Now we're seeing the other side of it. It's the input costs for businesses. Power bills. Power bills are going through the roof. We have record power bills, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, despite the hon. Energy minister making the amendment, admitting that it was an absolutely dismal failure, that Bill 50 was a complete and utter mistake – despite admitting that on a go-forward basis, he's unwilling, apparently, to go back and look at those previous decisions. I question why. That was a legacy of a former Premier, of a former Energy minister. Why not just go back, look at it? You're admitting with this bill that it was a mistake. Go back and look at those previous decisions to see whether they got it right. I think that's a very reasonable thing to do, especially when you're looking at the magnitude of the expenses that are going forward.

The hon. member mentioned two lines costing a billion dollars each. If we don't need these lines, we shouldn't be building them. Can you imagine? Even right now I think that cabinet ministers would admit they shouldn't be the ones that make the decision on building $16 billion worth of transmission lines. I don't think any cabinet minister here would even think of doing that. But that's what was done in the past. That was a decision that was made.

It was not made in a vacuum, Mr. Speaker. There was a group from the Industrial Power Consumers Association, a group whose composition is some of the greatest and biggest power consumers in our province. These are the big guys, the main industry, chemical producers, industrial producers. They went to cabinet. A copy of that presentation was leaked out. In that presentation it said that Alberta was going to be less competitive. We don't need these power lines. Under the slide that said Losers, it was the Alberta public. They're the ones that are going to have to pay for these transmission lines through their power bills.

Unfortunately, it's not one of these cases where, you know, you can reduce your consumption and thus reduce your power bill. This goes directly on the fixed component of people's power bills. That's what we've seen escalate. It's not the variable rate. It's that fixed component that has been escalating and escalating. There are rider fees. There are all sorts of other fixed fees. It's making Alberta less competitive. We pay some of the highest rates in the country. It's going up and up. Take a look at all the evidence. It's in the papers.

What happens is that you have some record power bills. [interjections] The hon. members are mentioning that there's no debt. Of course, the Finance minister has clearly said that he's going into debt. Stay tuned, guys. There's going to be some debt coming forward.

What we're seeing is that we pay exceptionally high power bills. Look at a fixed-income senior whose power bill over the last few years has doubled. Go and actually visit a senior and ask them about their power bills and compare them from three or four years ago to now. It's almost doubled. That's very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, when you have seniors who are on fixed incomes, who need their services. They need, you know, some money to make ends meet, and their power bill has doubled. Why has their power bill doubled? It's a result of Bill 50, which the former cabinet ministers here decided: $16 billion transmission lines without going through an independent needs assessment. We have cabinet ministers who have no expertise in electricity, none whatsoever, deciding $16 billion transmission lines.

It's shocking, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker. That was a big election issue in my area, and I know it was a big election issue in other areas. At the time there were folks saying: well, this is fearmongering. But we're starting to see the evidence come forward. We're starting to see the power bills go through the roof. We're starting to see these cost overruns. The more people become educated on the transmission lines, I think the more they're going to question that decision back then. Why was that decision made? Mr. Speaker, you know, we're going to see power bills continue to escalate. We're going to see people continue to question and say: well, why are our power bills going through the roof? They're going to go back to that flawed decision. Yet in this bill the minister refuses to go back to that flawed decision and see whether or not we actually need these lines.

The secondary component, of course, to Bill 50 was the extinguishment of property rights. Under that bill the cabinet had the ability to ram through transmission lines without full compensation and without recourse to the courts. Those are two very valuable rights in our society. In any western democracy property rights are essential for business.

I recall an hon. member saying that there has been no extinguishment of property rights. Mr. Speaker, that's completely false. We saw earlier this year the extinguishment of 19 oil sands leases. The question I would ask: if the government can extinguish an oil sands lease for a big company, what's going to happen to the farmer or the landowner? What chance do they have if an oil sands company's lease can be unilaterally extinguished without a right to compensation? Now, the government is negotiating with those oil companies to try and provide some type of compensation, but there's no legal right to – that's the problem – and there's no legal recourse to a court.

Under Bill 50 they took out the Expropriation Act, which gave a landowner the rights to various heads of compensation and a right to appeal to a court. Even if these lines were needed, even if there was a public need for these lines, a landowner shouldn't have to bear a disproportionate burden for that public good. He or she should be compensated if their land and their rights are taken away. This bill didn't do that, and that's why people were upset.

Mr. Speaker, it's great to see that the Energy minister has seen the light here and saw that that process was flawed. On a go-forward basis there's going to be a look at the Alberta Utilities Commission. I think the amendments that were put forward would have assisted in that regard in terms of what the Alberta Utilities Commission could look at, which principles and guidelines. It's unfortunate that he's unwilling to go back and look at those previous decisions because if he were, some of these lines that are being built right now may be deemed unnecessary by the Alberta Utilities Commission, and we wouldn't be potentially wasting a lot of ratepayers' money and, as a result, see power bills continue to go up.

With that, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to be repetitive, but I do want to summarize. I even get sick of hearing myself being repetitive, just so you know. [interjections] Thank you to the member for pointing that out.

One of the biggest problems affecting our system is the spiking of electricity. Yes, we have competitive pricing and we have high prices, particularly on the ancillary side.

Mr. McIver: You said the opposite.

Mr. Anglin: No. I'm agreeing with them. You're not listening. We can go back into second reading, and we can debate this.

It's the spiking of electricity that's really problematic. We are the only jurisdiction that suffers from that, and that needs to be looked at. That is part of this problem with political interference of what's happened. We created a market, and we took control of the transmission system politically, and it's not working well. When we spike electricity to $1,000 a megawatt, that has a tremendous impact on our commercial activity. I know we discussed in question period today about consumers, but it has a tremendous impact on commercial. That can actually be corrected by changing the policy to something called day-ahead firm pricing, and I would ask the members to think about that as we move forward.

This bill is a step in the right direction. I'm going to support the bill. It's unfortunate the amendments or at least one of the amendments didn't get taken, and I realize that. Getting the politics out of this system is paramount if we're going to make the system work. We need to change the onus of risk. We need to remove it from the consumers and put it on the producers that want to participate in a competitive market. Right now there's no risk for those producers. The risk is all on the consumers, and that's unfortunate. It's a market that's imbalanced by that.

9:30

There are a number of reports. Enmax produced a white paper back in 2009, I believe. The University of Calgary actually published an addendum to the original study by Dr. Church. The Utilities Consumer Advocate hired the company ADC, who does a lot of work for our own AESO. They all are consistent that these transmission lines are at overbuild and unnecessary in that sense.

Now, nobody is saying that we don't build transmissions. That's not what's happening here. What we're trying to say is that we should be building what is correct and what is needed. The Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association has come out, and they are part of a lawsuit right now trying to stop this. There's a federal mandate to accelerate the decommission of our coal plants, which significantly changes this whole grid that we are proposing, and that has never been taken into consideration. We never took into consideration – we were in denial – the development of our natural gas facilities in southern Alberta. That was presumed not to take place, and the opposite has actually happened. It has occurred, and it is occurring.

The political interference started the problem. The political interference exacerbated the problem when we passed Bill 50. Thank you very much to the members for introducing this bill to start a path for correcting the problem. Cabinet should not be making this decision.

We should not stop there. We need to continue on this progress. We need to make that the mandate for the ISO. In that public interest and in the interest of industry to the tune of when these lines are needed, they must be, not may be, required by industry. They must be required because that was the mandate before we started political manipulation. We need to remove the political interference altogether. We are trying to create a competitive market. As any businessperson knows, you can't have the political interference in that competitive market because what you end up doing is picking the winners and losers and upsetting the market.

So our electricity market actually has a number of problems. We talked a little bit about that during question period today. There are solutions. There are alternatives. We need to start thinking about this in intelligent and pragmatic ways rather than bickering or throwing humorous jibes at one another. This is serious in the sense that it isn't just about the cost to consumers. It's about the future of our industries, and it's about the future of our associated industries, those industries that use our natural resource.

It is important, and I firmly believe that there's not a person in here that doesn't want this to work. I know that. I believe that anyway. I don't think anyone here would stand up and say: I don't want this to work. But to make it work, we have to admit sometimes that mistakes were made, and we have to have the courage to stand up and minimize, marginalize, or somehow remedy those mistakes. There was a mistake. We had political interference that approved a number of transmission lines. That needs to be looked at. What we can correct, we should correct. For what we can't correct, we have to live with the fact that we made a mistake. But we should not continue with the mistake and exacerbate the problem.

I would hope that people would take that under consideration as we move forward. I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will also be supporting this bill but, you know, with some reservation. Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, is an amending bill that is trying to correct the most contentious provisions of Bill 50, and this is because of strong public pressure as a response to the Critical Transmission Review Committee report of February 2012.

As the four projects formerly designated critical, including the heartland transmission line from Edmonton to the site of a proposed oil bitumen upgrader, the northeast transmission lines from Edmonton to Fort Mac, and most controversial, adding the lines between Edmonton and Calgary, will go ahead as planned. Only new projects will be affected by this legislation. It could have been good if the minister could have taken the decision to scrap everything and start afresh, but still Bill 8, you know, is a step in the right direction. Had all those amendments put forward by the opposition been accepted, those could have probably strengthened Bill 8.

As transmission is paid a hundred per cent by regular Albertans as electricity consumers on their power bills, some estimates said that many felt the lines were too expensive. We have been talking about 16 and a half billion dollars. Are we talking in today's dollars, or are we talking about when those lines will be built? Who knows how much they will end up costing us when we start building them?

Also, many felt that the lines were too expensive – some are to be built as high-voltage direct, HVDC, which is more expensive but has less of an impact on land and on landowners – and that it's unnecessary. Some are worried that that would eventually be used to export electricity. So there are some concerns that the consumer, Albertans, will be paying for those lines, and they will be used to export electricity. I think the producers should be paying for the lines if they are exporting electricity. Albertans shouldn't be paying for the lines because the private companies would profit by selling electricity to the States, et cetera.

Finally, there was opposition to the fact that while transmission is private, the province is divided into zones, where private companies such as ATCO and the eastern transmission lines have regulated monopolies, and those were not acting in landowners' best interests.

As the need for the new transmission lines has been in the works for 30 years, the process got bogged down before with a lawsuit brought by landowners in 2007 saying that the regulated process was unfairly biased against them in favour of companies building the lines.

There was also the spying scandal. I don't want to go back into the history there.

As Alberta Liberals we opposed Bill 50 basically because having cabinet decide where and which power lines are built is just a bad process. We also came out with an electricity policy of our own, one that dealt with the actual problems in the system and that could stop Albertans from having the highest electricity prices in the country. Our leader called at the time for Bill 50 to be repealed. We understand that the new transmission is a necessity, but he knew that Bill 50 was a very bad process for deciding on where and when to build it.

Good government policy is an objective policy, and objective decisions are best made by an independent body like AUC, both on needs and location. We have supported the good, objective process to make the hard decisions, but we are glad that government is trying to correct its mistakes in passing Bill 50 with this bill. So I commend the minister for that.

Most Alberta electricity is generated by coal, and those coal-powered plants are supposed to be retired in a maximum of 45 years under the government's federal regulations for environmental protection. The most likely replacement will be natural gas and natural gas power plants. They can be located almost anywhere because of Alberta's very robust system of gas pipelines. The plants don't need to be near the source of the gas, just close to the pipeline. This means that building those power lines to move electricity from coal plants that could be retired in 45 years may not be a good idea. It doesn't look like it's a good idea.

Simply put, there are many, many factors involved, and it's a complicated enough decision not to have cabinet ministers with not enough knowledge to make it. Also, it is very important that the process that is in place is fair to everyone. Why should the Alberta consumer pay for the lines used to export electricity? Shouldn't they have the guarantee that they won't? Landowners should have their rights respected as much as possible and not have their land taken over by power companies just because it might be cheaper than another option. At the same time, we need to respect Albertans' need for low-cost electricity. Residents of Edmonton and Calgary should have some assurance that someone somewhere can make an objective decision about which power lines to build before there are blackouts or brownouts in Edmonton or Calgary.

This bill corrects Bill 50, which was simply a quick fix to the fact that the government could not get this process right. Had the government accepted some of the amendments put forward by the opposition, that could have strengthened their bill. Still, I will be supporting this bill because it is a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, do we have any other speakers on the bill? The question has been called.

The hon. Minister of Energy to close.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm particularly pleased so late in the day to rise and move third reading of Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012.

Bill 8 would ensure that the need for all future transmission projects will be determined by the Alberta Utilities Commission, not the provincial cabinet. Mr. Speaker, over the course of the debate for this bill my colleagues here in this House have had a lot to say. While I've heard their concerns about the bill, much of the debate, particularly from across the way, has focused on Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act of 2009. While I can appreciate their ardour around the issues of Bill 50, I want to keep the focus on the bill which is currently before the House.

This bill is not about deregulation, nor is it about sending previously approved projects back to the drawing board. Bill 8 is about moving forward. We'll move forward with the critical transmission infrastructure that this province needs. The strain on our electrical system increases as more people move to Alberta – a million people in the last 10 years, probably a million or more in the next 10 years – and as the industries that continue to contribute to our prosperity continue to grow.

Demand for power in Alberta has increased more than 20 per cent in the last 10 years. That demand is forecast to increase by two-thirds over the next 20 years. These statistics, Mr. Speaker, are not from the government but from the Alberta Electric System Operator and are publicly available from the operator's website. So as you can see, putting these critical projects on hold is not a solution. We cannot ask Albertans to refrain from using electricity while these projects get sent back to the drawing board. We can't. We should not put brakes on growth. That would be irresponsible.

Mr. Speaker, the four transmission projects in Bill 50 were first identified by the system operator almost 10 years ago. The need was identified again and again in AESO long-term plans. Moreover, the government of the day struck the independent Critical Transmission Review Committee to look at the method utilized by the Independent System Operator to assess future need. The government asked them to look at the lines that were determined critical, the staging of the lines, and also the technology that had been suggested for the lines. In all cases – in all cases – the CTRC determined that the forecasts by the operator were reasonable.

There's one point that I must touch on. Hon. members keep throwing numbers around. It causes me to note that Halloween was over three weeks ago, yet one of the hon. members opposite keeps trying to frighten small children by throwing around outrageously large numbers like $16 billion. He should stop frightening small children. It's simply not the case. The AESO's 2011 long-term plan identifies the critical transmission projects required to 2020 at an estimated cost of 13 and a half billion dollars, but only $5.2 billion is related to the projects that were put in place under Bill 50. The rest is for smaller regional projects and customer connections. Make no mistake. That is still a pretty significant investment, Mr. Speaker, but it's a needed investment, and it's serving the needs of a growing province.

Planning for transmission need is about the future, and Bill 8 helps us move towards the future. The authority to approve transmission will be returned to the Alberta Utilities Commission. This will reinforce the principles of respect, transparency, and integrity in the transmission approval process. We respect the views of Albertans and want their involvement in assessing the need for future transmission infrastructure. Moving that authority for future decisions to the AUC will allow decisions to be made in a transparent manner and will allow them to withstand greater scrutiny. We're confident that the AUC as an agency independent from government has the expertise, practices, and processes necessary to consider the need for future transmission infrastructure.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, responds to both the recommendation in the Critical Transmission Review Committee report and to commitments that we made to Albertans. With that, Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to support this bill unanimously.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Minister of Energy has moved third reading of Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, seeing that it's a quarter to 10 and I think we've made some pretty good progress over the last two days, I would move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:46 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members.

Let us pray. May the scruples by which we abide be evident in our words and actions, may the disagreements we encounter become tools for amelioration, and may we always be blessed with guidance to make the right choices on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure and privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the hon. members some bright young students visiting from Yellowhead school in my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. They're here as part of the School at the Leg. program with their supervisors, Mr. Brian Gizzie and Mrs. Nancy Beirnes. I know they're going to enjoy their experience here today. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm recognition of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 120 students and 10 adults from the Father Lacombe high school located in the great constituency of Calgary-East. Father Lacombe is the only high school in my constituency, and it is the best in Calgary. The last time I visited Father Lacombe, I was told by the teachers and the principals that they have 54 different languages spoken in that school, and that's indeed an extension of the United Nations. I would like to thank the teachers and parent helpers that are here today, and I'd ask them to rise when I call their names: Dr. Adriana Bejko, Ms Linda Dibattista, Ms Carol Rinkist, Mr. Manuel Campos, Ms Margaret Akiyama, Ms Lorie Michelini, Ms Catherine Taylor, and Mr. Augustino Lacano. I'd like to ask the parents, the teachers, and the students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Carla Sojonyk, and her very close friends Vicki Webb and Jim Richl. Carla is the wife of the late Frank Sojonyk, who was without question a huge philanthropist in the prostate cancer area and also in animal companionship. The Member for Edmonton-South West will speak to Frank's outstanding accomplishments in a member's statement later today.

It has been said many times that behind every good man there's an even better woman. Truer words could not be spoken for Carla. She stood with Frank, working and sharing his passion in which ever endeavour he was involved, through health and in sickness. With her today is Vicki, a close friend of both Carla and Frank. Vicki was a friend that helped in whatever way she could, whether it was picking up medicine, running errands, whatever was needed to help with the care of Frank and to assist Carla with the many things that needed doing. Jim Richl is here today. He's known as one of the Bird Dogs, the fundraising team which raised over $14 million towards research and finding a cure for prostate cancer. Carla, Vicki, and Jim are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House my lovely wife, Serena Donovan, seated in your gallery. She's been the support I've needed. The House leader just spoke about how behind every man there is a woman, and this is my driving force and a very patient woman. There are a million things that we could add to her list. I'd just like for her to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce you and through you to all members of this House a member of my legislative staff. Many of you will know Candice Kalyn, my scheduling assistant, who has worked in this building for five years. I'm fortunate to have such a diligent and conscientious person in my office. I thank her for her efforts on my behalf and on the behalf of Albertans every day. Her office title is director of preparedness. It's a pleasure to introduce Candice today as she is celebrating her birthday. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I invite her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a few of the people who have been working very hard for me and for our ministry and for all Albertans for a long time to make the new Education Act a reality. While I don't think our galleries have enough seats to hold all the people that have invested a lot of time and effort and blood, sweat, and tears on this important act over the last few years, we've asked a few of them to join us today. They're in the members' gallery. I'd ask you to please welcome them and ask them to rise and remain standing as I say their names. From Alberta Education we have Rakhi Pancholi; Christine DeWitt; Chelsea Evans-Rymes; Michael Walter, our ADM, who's been in charge of this project; Kimberly Emerson; and from my office Erin Morris, my special assistant. I'd ask the entire Assembly to give them a well-deserved thank you and welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly our special guests from the Hong Kong Canada Business Association here in Edmonton. This association has been building foundations for promoting business relationships with Hong Kong and China by bridging language and cultural differences by providing information and connections in the Chinese business environment. The association has been assisting small- and medium-sized business as well as promoting the study of Asia by providing scholarship opportunities to students at the University of Alberta, MacEwan University, and the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology.

The Edmonton section will be receiving an award in Hong Kong on December 5 for the best innovative award in North America for their innovative iPic competition with postsecondary students here in Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery. Please stand as I call your names: Mr. David Tam, Mr. Frankie Lee, Mr. Herbert Chui, and Mr. Michael Lam. I would ask the members of the Assembly to join me in giving them the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly board members of the Christian Immigrant Support Services, also known as CISS. CISS is a valuable resource for new Canadians in Edmonton. A faith-based organization, CISS provides essential programming for youth and adults, focusing on education and employment assistance. Their mandate is to help all immigrants receive available services to make their transition to Alberta easier. Their aim is to collaborate with existing organizations and help immigrants with their settlement and adjustment to life in Canada. I'm proud to introduce Mr. Charles Balenga, executive director; Mr. Daryl Reneau, board president; and Mr. Selmer Hanson, vice-president. I ask that these three guests here please rise, as they have, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker Anniversary of 2004 Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we proceed with Members' Statements, let me remind you that there are a number of individuals here who for the past eight years have had opportunities to make their own members' statements, and indeed they have done so because they were either elected or re-elected on or about this day eight years ago. I would ask those members who were first elected or who were re-elected to please rise now and receive the warm congratulations of all other members. The class of 2004.

Thank you, hon. members.

Let us proceed with Members' Statements. Edmonton-Southwest.

Members' Statements Frank Sojony

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to rise and recognize a truly remarkable man, Mr. Frank Sojony. Frank battled prostate cancer for over two decades. He fought this disease with unwavering bravery and optimism. Sadly, Frank Sojony's battle with cancer ended peacefully on October 15.

Frank was born and raised in Regina, Saskatchewan, the oldest of five children. He had a distinguished career in hospitality, recreation, real estate development, and venture capital to name a few. He was not afraid of risk. There wasn't a challenge from which he backed away.

Frank will be remembered for his philanthropic endeavours. He volunteered and contributed in every community he lived in and donated and fund raised with generosity for animal welfare and prostate cancer research. The Carla Cumming Sojony Adoption Centre was made possible by Frank's donation to the Bow Valley SPCA. Together the Sojonkys created the Frank and Carla Sojony animal welfare endowment and the Carla Cumming Sojony spay and neuter endowment through the Edmonton Community Foundation.

Frank researched prostate cancer voraciously and was devastated to read the statistics and shocked at the lack of support and understanding. He was determined to make a difference. He started with a personal pledge of $275,000. He then learned from his oncologist, Dr. Peter Venner, that a remarkable 3-D diagnostic tool was available. He did not hesitate. He advised the oncologist to order it. He would find the money, and indeed Frank did find the money when he turned to his friends and colleagues to raise a substantial amount more. Then he asked Dr. Venner what else was needed to make a difference.

Frank was grateful for the fundraising efforts of his fellow volunteers, a group that became known as the Bird Dogs. Frank and his team raised over $14 million, an astonishing number, for prostate cancer research. The Frank and Carla Sojony chair in prostate cancer research was endowed.

Mr. Speaker, Frank received a number of honours such as pet hero of the year from the Pet Therapy Society of Northern Alberta, local hero from Prostate Cancer Canada, and he and Carla were named Edmonton's volunteer fundraisers of the year by the Association of Fundraising Professionals. Most recently he was awarded the Queen's diamond jubilee medal for his huge fundraising efforts for prostate cancer and his contribution to community, a recognition most deserved.

*Frank had boundless energy. He was a proud Albertan and Canadian. He worked hard and passionately to make the world a better place. He leaves a legacy of hope, determination, and financial support that will improve the lives of his fellow cancer patients, citizens, and their companion animals for decades to come. His record of service is an inspiring example for us all.**

Carla, please know that Frank's legacy will forever continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Violence against Women

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the second member's statement that I wrote on the various campaigns and days to recognize the elimination of violence against women. The first was too raw and angry for public consumption.

I still shake my head at the nice sayings and hopeful jingles that accompany this time, but I am a woman forged by the Montreal massacre. Fourteen women, students and staff, were shot by a misogynist who felt women had denied him a place at engineering school. He went into École Polytechnique, told the young men to leave, which they did, and then he roamed the classrooms and hallways shooting the women. This event changed my life and still drives me forward.

I don't think the collective we deserves congratulations on eliminating violence against women. We've known about the statistics, the money spent, the lives scarred, and the effect on subsequent generations, and still we raise boys who think violence is a useful tool in relating to women. Where are they getting this? Attitudes are not genetic. We are still teaching our children this is okay. We've poured money into shelters and programs and now even recognize bullying as a beginning behaviour for violence. But – oh, yes, the big but – we have school boards refusing just yesterday to pass a resolution specifically prohibiting bullying of gay kids along with statements about not drawing attention to themselves. Are you kidding me? When do we stop saying that wearing certain clothes or having an effeminate demeanour means they deserve abuse.

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

We even still make spouses meet their abuser in court over child care arrangements even when the women have protection orders from the same courts for the men to stay away. These things connect. So in 2012 do we get to celebrate success? No, we don't, but all the shelters and the programs and funders should be thanked for so many years of trying.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

National Addictions Awareness Week

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in this Assembly today in recognition of National Addictions Awareness Week, November 19 to 25. Addiction can affect every demographic. It can promote unsafe behaviour with detrimental consequences, and it can leave long-lasting emotional and physical scars on our communities. Moreover, the emotional and financial toll that addiction takes on families is immeasurable. Studies have shown that addiction is frequently linked to mental health issues and that often people use their addictions as a coping mechanism to offset stress.

For example, Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada estimates that 4 million to 5 million Canadians engage in excessive, high-risk drinking, which can lead to fatality, crime, and violence. National Addictions Awareness Week brings to light the complex nature of this sensitive social issue. By promoting empathy and providing information to all Albertans, the stigma surrounding addiction can be eradicated. The government of Alberta has allocated $100 million for primary health care, addictions, and mental health strategies, recognizing the social cost of addiction and proactively mitigating its consequences.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all my colleagues in this House to find out more about National Addictions Awareness Week in the coming days so that we can continue to help all of our constituents to live healthy and fulfilling lives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Airdrie.

Property Rights

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many members of this House come from rural backgrounds even if we live in and represent urban ridings today. We've been called urban elites, city dwellers. Some even think we lack common sense.

As I've shared with this House before, I grew up on a beef farm, a feedlot in southwestern Ontario. My parents, siblings, and extended family still farm in that area today, just as our grandparents had. As many hon. members know, for families like ours a farm is not just a piece of land, a livelihood, or an economic asset. It's a legacy that passes from one generation to the next, and it's a very real part of our family's history and identity.

When I was in law school, our family farm was expropriated by Ontario Hydro to construct a 500-kV power line from the Bruce Peninsula to southern Ontario. Yes, there was consultation, access to courts, and, ultimately, fair compensation, but the impact of losing the barn with the family name on it lingers still.

I share this with you, Mr. Speaker, so that hon. members will understand that when I speak of property rights, it's not theoretical or legal. I'm speaking as someone who's lived through the experience of expropriation, as someone who understands the emotional value land has, far beyond its value on a balance sheet.

To ensure that all landowners in Alberta have access to effective notice, genuine consultation, and fair compensation, our government passed the Property Rights Advocate Act last spring, creating an independent advocate to assist landowners with independent and impartial information about their rights and process.

Mr. Speaker, whether we represent urban or rural constituents, we need to continue to heed the lessons landowners have sent us. We need to listen to landowners and think about what they're saying and turn what they have learned into action. This expropriation of land is something that should never be done lightly, but when it is absolutely essential, I am grateful that this government is making sure that landowners get the support and fair treatment everyone deserves.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There appears to be a double standard in the way government handles health expenses and illegal donations. One health employee who made lavish but legal expense claims was fired. Another health employee who claimed expenses directly related to partisan political activity, which, of course, is against the law, still has her job. Is this because the person they fired wasn't the Premier's sister?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there are double standards. While this government is trying to focus on governing this province and reflecting what we have committed to do during the last election, there are a number of double standards. The opposition continues to dredge through receipts. But what they won't tell you is a double standard is this. For example, the Leader of the Official Opposition signed off on inappropriate expense claims and threw her staffer under the bus to take the blame. What they won't tell you is that the MLA for Airdrie solicits political donations from the president's office at Olds College. Lastly, what they don't tell you, I'll tell you later.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'd love to see the employee in question pay those expenses back.

Now that they have been caught, however, the government points to changes that they've made in the hopes that we'll all ignore their past transgressions. But, Mr. Speaker, promising to never do it again isn't good enough. When will the minister clean house and discipline every single employee who has broken the law?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I know, Mr. Speaker, you waited eagerly to hear the rest. Lastly, what they won't tell you is that while they're accusing Catholic charities and organizations and pejoratively referring to them as holy people who take individuals out for lunch or a drink, they won't share all their receipts. I'm looking at a receipt that shows that the leader of the Liberal opposition was treated by, quote, unquote, holy people at an establishment, a local watering hole in Edmonton, on a Tuesday, a weekday, at 2 p.m.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you. The Premier blames the opposition for daring to raise such questions, and I can see that the Deputy Premier feels the same. He expresses outrage. He implies that this is innuendo, but it's not innuendo. It's a clear statement of fact. Legal expenses, not a relative: the person is fired. Illegal donations, the Premier's sister: not fired. Why?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, unlike the members of the opposition who choose to focus on dredging, I said very clearly that we won't get into that because that doesn't make Alberta any better of a province. We'll leave that to them.

But I will tell you what we will do. We will make sure that there is a process in place, that when they actually come up with any evidence or any issues, they have a place to turn to, where an independent investigation will take place. We'll also focus on governing this province and reflecting what Albertans truly asked us to do. Mr. Speaker, if there are issues, they know what the process is. The process is diligent. We'll provide them with any answers that they want relevant to our receipts and the ones that they won't show you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 1:52, and it has been noted.

The hon. leader.

Health Regions' Expense Reporting

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve to have the truth, all of it, about this mess of illegal campaign donations, lavish health care expenses, and other failures and mistakes, but no matter what the problem the government has, they have a giant blind spot. Illegal donations to political parties: well, their new legislation won't look back past 2010. Queue-jumping: well, the inquiry's hands are tied; it can only look at whether preferential access is happening now. Health expenses: the minister shrugs and insists that everything is fine today. This is not raising the bar on openness and transparency. When will the Premier raise the bar?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health will comment on matters within the health care system, but I can tell you that we have a bill on the floor right now that makes elections and election financing the most accountable in the country the moment we pass it. The Premier has raised the accountability on travel and hosting expenses, which are now the most stringent in all of the country, more stringent than the ones in the federal government. We will be releasing all expenditures of all ministers from the election as they have been appointed to cabinet to the public without having FOIP requests. We are setting the standard. It is time for them to catch up to it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a curious answer. If we look at just this one area, health expenses, we found huge issues with expenses in 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008. Some of those involve the Premier's sister and contributions to political parties. Is this the reason why the government refuses to release all the expenses of all of the executives of all of the health regions dating back to 2005?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that was rather an extensive preamble, but I'll do my best to address the issues that were raised within it. As we've said many times and as the hon. member is aware, this Premier has introduced the most aggressive, the strongest, most transparent travel and expense policy to be found anywhere in this country. The question of expenses that were claimed by previous health regions is not only, in fact, not relevant to the question of what the policies are today. The hon. member does a disservice to the people whose names she continues to raise in the Legislature because she ignores the fact that those expenses may very well have been in accordance with the policies that were in place at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Going back to 2005, it's always been illegal to take public money and contribute to political parties.

Over at the queue-jumping inquiry we've asked that Lynn Redford and other government relations executives from that time be compelled to testify. The Premier is shocked, says that we're interfering, yet the inquiry people say that they are actually asking Albertans to participate. It is a public inquiry, after all. Now, I'm no lawyer, but if they ask you to participate and you do, that's okay, right, Minister?

Mr. Horne: You know, Mr. Speaker, that absolutely is okay. But if I recall correctly, the hon. member's question to me yesterday when she discussed her correspondence to the head of the inquiry, was if I would join her and her party in asking the commissioner of this inquiry to call specific witnesses before his panel. That would clearly be political interference, and that is something we will not do.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Physician Services Agreement

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health mess is not just about expenses. It's not just about queue-jumping. It's not just about bullying. This minister now has a big problem with doctors and their latest contract. Last night the AMA president, Dr. Michael Giuffre, made an impassioned appeal for a return to the bargaining table, and he lambasted the minister for his unprecedented abuse of physicians' rights. How does the minister plan to fix this?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was actually present at that gathering last night, I'm sorry that I missed her presence.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that I had the opportunity to speak to several hundred physicians who are members of the Calgary & Area Medical Staff Society. We discussed a variety of issues that were of concern to them, including the current negotiations. I found that after having had the opportunity to listen and to answer a number of questions, our doctors are actually very supportive of the work under way to achieve an agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've brought Dr. Giuffre's speech so that we can table it in the Legislature so that people can see what he actually said. He warned that the minister would try a divide-and-conquer approach, cynically giving in on a few small items but retaining the major fundamentals that are imposed by the settlement. He even said that the minister might be contravening the Canada Health Act, section 12, which requires that binding arbitration be available. The minister has refused. Why?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, excuse me if I get this wrong, but it would appear that the hon. member thinks that she knows what the president of the AMA thinks better than he does. I, by contrast, have spent many hours in discussion with Dr. Giuffre, with physicians across the province, and it is true that there are several issues that are unresolved. That should not be a surprise given that it's been more than 20 months since we've had a contract in effect with the AMA. My commitment, the commitment of this government, unlike the hon. member, is not to divide doctors in this province. It is to unite them, and it is to unite them in our common vision for the improvement of the health care system in this province. Our discussion is one to one, which will not occur in this Assembly.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I may not be a lawyer, but I can read, and I would encourage the Health minister to read the speech. Dr. Giuffre asked a question in his speech last night, so I'll ask it, too, so that Albertans can hear the answer. Does the Health minister really think he can run the health system without the confidence of physicians?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'd very much like to pose a question to the hon. member as well, and the question is: why on page 13 of the Wildrose Balanced Budget Alternative does the member's party state, "Considering we already have the highest paid public sector in the country, we believe it is important to re-direct the hundreds of millions in savings... from freezing salaries to services in priority areas like health care and education"? Does this member support an increase in funding for doctors in this province, a freeze, or a reduction?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2 o'clock, and it has been noted.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to remind the government that it's answer period.

Last night the Minister of Health had a showdown with the Calgary & Area Medical Staff Society. Their president, Lloyd Maybaum, described the minister as, quote, trying to hoodwink and bamboozle the public with nonsense numbers and figures. Unquote. While the minister continues to cloud the issues by talking about fees and money, physicians simply want a little respect, more involvement in health care decisions, and for this government to negotiate in good faith. After last night we need clarity from the minister. Have you imposed a settlement on the doctors, or are you still negotiating? Which is it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll be delighted to give the hon. member clarity. The fact of the matter is that this government has provided a plan to increase funding for doctors' fees by $463 million over the next four years. His colleagues in the Official Opposition, however, appear to believe that doctors' salaries should be frozen, perhaps reduced. We don't know. Albertans would like to know.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, he just proved the fact that doctors aren't talking about fees and money; they're talking about respect.

Given that the Minister of Health and even the Premier have said that they support the Canada Health Act and given that this act recognizes the value of conciliation and binding arbitration to fairly resolve disputes that arise in negotiations with medical organizations, to the same minister: why then would you violate the spirit of the Canada Health Act by refusing binding arbitration?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the hon. member's first point this government and this minister continue to show respect, continue to listen, and continue to work with doctors. There were many doctors there last night that were quite willing to acknowledge that. With respect to the Canada Health Act exactly what it does provide for is that provinces where an agreement with doctors is in effect shall provide "reasonable compensation." I think 29 per cent over the national average is pretty reasonable compensation.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it must be a topsy-turvy world because respect according to this Minister of Health is by saying no: no to a public inquiry on physician intimidation, no to physician involvement in family care clinics, and no to the AMA's request for binding arbitration. To the minister. This question is quite simple for the minister to answer. Do you recognize the AMA as the legitimate bargaining association? Yes or no? Are you trying to break the backs of the doctors again?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we of course recognize the importance of a constructive relationship with our physicians. We have enjoyed one of the most progressive relationships over the years, which the hon. leader of the third party has benefited from in his practice as an emergency room doctor. This hon. member needs to make up his mind. Does he want to politicize organized medicine and relationships with government, or does he want to play a constructive role in the dialogue that will lead to an agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Without warning this Health minister cancelled negotiations with Alberta's doctors and imposed an arbitrary settlement. This high-handed move has enraged doctors. The president of the AMA stated that the minister was trying to hoodwink and bamboozle the public with nonsense numbers and figures. My question is to the Health minister. Will he cancel his arbitrarily imposed deal with Alberta doctors and return to the negotiating table immediately?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the government has done is not imposed a settlement. The government has made a clear indication to physicians of the maximum amount of money that is available for addition to physicians' fees in the coming four years, and that amount is $463 million. There are many areas that are left to be discussed in the negotiations. While we had reached an impasse, and while that was one of the reasons that we made the announcement that we did last week, we certainly remain open to discussions with physicians. We presume that we will eventually be successful in reaching an agreement. I look forward to continuing that process.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, that answer was entirely false. The minister has imposed a deal, and he's written the conditions, and he's put it forward in public. So how can he stand there and mislead the House?

The Speaker: Hon. member, did I hear you say "mislead the House"?

Mr. Mason: I did.

The Speaker: Do you want to rephrase that question in a different way? Frankly, we don't use those kind of terms, and I think you know that, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why has the minister given information that he knows to be incorrect to the Assembly?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have done no such thing. The government was very open and transparent in its decision to indicate what its best financial offer would be to doctors after almost 20 months of negotiations that have been unsuccessful to this point. That was done for the benefit of physicians themselves in order to provide some clarity around funding increases in the future, to provide some stability after a very long, extended period of not knowing that information. It was done in the spirit of good relations with our physicians. What this hon. member is doing is attempting to taint that and to position this further discussion with the AMA to be unsuccessful, and that is reprehensible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm reprehensible, eh? Well, I can tell you and I can tell this minister that what he has done by trying to characterize what he's done as improving relations with physicians is so laughable as to not even deserve a question.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is laughable is the absolute ignorance of the hon. member with respect to the issues that are at hand in the discussions with the AMA.

Ms Notley: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horne: If the hon. member's comparison of the AMA is to a union and if the hon. member compares these discussions to that of a union agreement, he has a lot to learn, Mr. Speaker. We'll leave it at that. We're committed to continuing our negotiations with the AMA. We will not do so on the floor of this Assembly, and we will not do so through mediators such as leaders of opposition parties.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I believe, Edmonton-Strathcona, you rose on a point of order at 2:07, and it's been noted.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Could I just make a brief comment here about preambles. The leaders of all three opposition parties have now spoken. I indicated yesterday that the tradition of the House has been to allow leaders of opposition parties quite a bit of leeway in terms of their supplementals. However, it's been brought to the Speaker's attention by a few members and by a few members of the public that perhaps that might be creating a double standard here. I would ask you again as House leaders to please review the whole issue of preambles, preferably as quickly as possible – it would be helpful even before Monday – because the current rule says that supplemental questions should not be preceded by any preambles.

It's during preambles that we get these uproars. More often than anywhere else it's during those preambles. Then that, of course, means that a minister rises and says something partly in answer to the question, partly in answer to the preamble, and that leads to another uproar. That creates a problem of violating the rules. Secondly, it creates a difficulty for the Speaker hearing what is being said and then trying to make a ruling or a judgment call.

Let's respect each other in this House and give the floor to whoever has it. Right now that floor belongs to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the former Minister of Justice has become Premier, account after account of misuse of public funds and the culture of corruption in the government family have been exposed. Her own sister expensed the Health budget to cover donations to political parties, but of course despite the law and ethics AHS says that this is just how business is done in the good old government family. This Premier continues to avoid the issue. Will this government finally clear the air and tell Albertans when the Premier first knew about these illegal indirect donations?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think we have been clear. I'm not sure if I have to say it 55 more times or if I should have been saying it slower. There is a process in place. If any person has any evidence or any allegations against any member of this House or, frankly, against any Albertan where they believe that somebody has illegally donated money to any political entity, there is the independent Chief Electoral Officer that will gladly take that information, do an independent investigation, and report to you, Mr. Speaker, accordingly. Now, on top of that, there is additional legislation being debated in this House that will make the laws even clearer.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier's sister was referred to as the go-to fixer for politicians dealing with wait-time inquiries partially because of her good genes, will this government tell us when the Premier or her staff personally became aware of any incidents of political fixing and queue-jumping, or will they continue to hide and protect the government family?

Mr. Lukaszuk: A couple of comments on this. Number one, the Premier's sister will not be treated any differently than you would be, Mr. Speaker, or the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills or myself. She's an Albertan, and she will go through entirely the same process. The process is transparent. It is rather unfortunate that we have stooped to this level in this Chamber where we actually point out relationships of individuals and insinuate that that in any way is going to be of assistance to that person. I think that Albertans in general find that somewhat offensive.

Speaking of double standards, Mr. Speaker, we have information that they dredged up that actually shows the very same behaviour. This is not the way that we will conduct business in the Chamber.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, all people should be responsible for their crimes.

Given that the Premier once argued for a comprehensive health inquiry because . . .

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

Mr. Saskiw: People should always be guilty of crimes. That's ridiculous, Dave. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Shall we just adjourn the session and have you argue amongst yourselves for a while? Unbelievable. [interjections] Unbelievable. Better decorum is expected not only from each one of you, but it's expected by the constituents you represent. There's absolutely no honour in going back this weekend to your constituents and having to defend why the Speaker overlooked you in question period for the next week because you broke the rules.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I'm well aware of the time. You need not point it out to me. I take no pleasure in rising to do these things, of which sometimes you personally may be the cause. So please. [interjections] Please. I'm not here to engage in debate with you.

Now, I would ask all of you to please, please, remember what the decorum and civility of this House is supposed to be and try and abide by it. Questions below the belt or accusations against members who haven't had their chance to explain themselves in this House or elsewhere or in a court are totally inappropriate. I have cautioned you about that before. I will caution you yet again.

Let us move on now, please. The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Airdrie.

Alberta Energy Regulator

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Energy, and it's a bit of a review and looking ahead. Yesterday this House passed Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. It was the subject of much debate, and concerns have been raised about this bill. Now, when I go back to my constituency, a constituency filled with energy companies and landowners, they will ask if they will be negatively impacted because of Bill 2. The question: what would be your answer to them, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all get questions like that, and I'm happy to take them. Obviously, there was a great deal of debate, but let me assure the hon. member and all Albertans that Bill 2, creating the Alberta energy regulator, is a well thought out, pragmatic, balanced piece of legislation. It's built on more than two years of public consultation, and indeed it provides regulatory certainty for applicants, for industry. It strengthens landowner participation rights, and it maintains our long-standing commitment to responsible, balanced energy development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: would you please take some time to again explain why, if this bill was so good, we needed to make some amendments?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard from this MLA, and I thank her and her colleagues for advice throughout the piece once the bill was introduced. There was feedback from Albertans around the province and from my colleagues and from colleagues across the way as well. It was quite clear that there was misunderstanding, and my goal was simply to ensure that we have public notice clearly provided for all applications, that the decisions must take into account the interests of landowners by the regulator, and it also allows landowners who believe that they are directly and adversely affected to self-identify into the process and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: when are we going to see more specifics on how the new regulator will operate, and will Albertans, especially landowners, have any input?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to have that question. Very soon there will be more specifics coming out. Obviously, we will be consulting in the new year with Albertans with respect to the details of the regulations and the rules of practice. I have made a public commitment to do that consultation, and I look forward to that. Consultation is an important part of the next step. Also, people can look forward to advertising for the new chair, the new board members, and the CEO, and I invite qualified Albertans.

Justice System Review

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have lost faith in their justice system and in the PCs that oversee it. When quizzed about an Airdrie sex abuse case being thrown out for system delays, the Premier called us a disloyal opposition and said that it had nothing to do with the lack of resources. Well, the problem is that we just got the court transcript. Guess what it says from the judge herself? The reason for the delay was, quote, an endemic problem of resources. Unquote. To the Justice minister: is the judge disloyal, too, or has your government failed to adequately staff our justice system, leaving victims without justice?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'd say respectfully: none of the above. As this member knows, I share his concern, and immediately when I found out about it, I launched an inquiry. The investigation is fully independent, and when it comes out, let's see what it has to say. I'm not going to handcuff the investigation. I respectfully suggest that neither should the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: It is not an independent investigation.

Mr. Speaker, given that the defence lawyer and the Crown prosecutor in this case's transcript agreed with the statement that, and I quote, it is common knowledge that there are limits to resources, and we are seeing trials being set as far as one year or longer down the road, unquote, and given that in the Airdrie case the judge found 444 days of delays were due to the Crown and 523 to the courts, Minister, when are you going to admit that you and the previous Justice minister, the Premier, have failed to do your job, leaving victims of crime open to be revictimized by a lack of access to justice?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I agree with this member that access to justice is important, but that's, unfortunately, where the agreement ends. I and the previous two Justice ministers have been on this file. This year two more judges. Next year two more Provincial Court judges. We'd been lobbying the federal government for four more Queen's Bench judges before this even came to light. We're on this file.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. You're on the file, then.

Mr. Speaker, given that our research has uncovered multiple recent cases stayed due to Crown and court delays, the names of which I will table shortly, including an aggravated assault, an assault of a police officer, a DUI, a child rape case, two domestic assaults in Airdrie, and, get this, robbery and assault with a deadly weapon – Minister, this is a complete disgrace – will you go on the record now, admit that our Crown and courts are entirely underresourced, and commit to calling a full and independent investigation into how we can repair this problem immediately and start today?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the first set of responses, we already have called a full and complete investigation. As I mentioned in the second place, we are appointing more judges, we are looking at more court resources, and we've asked the federal government for more resources as well. Instead of politicizing this issue, I hope this member will join me in lobbying the federal government for these additional resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors' housing involves a lot of stakeholders – operating societies, charities, private providers, Alberta Health Services, and, of course, the residents – and it's vital to have the support of municipal governments because that's where zoning and land-use decisions are made. My question is to the Associate Minister of Seniors. What progress can he tell the House about on work being done with municipal governments to increase affordable, appropriate, and accessible continuing care within our communities?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, this is my 26th consecutive year of being elected, 15 as a municipal councillor and mayor. I know the importance of dealing with our municipal associations like the AUMA and AAMD and C, and I know the importance of dealing with big-city mayors both in Calgary and Edmonton. I'll tell you that the Calgary and Edmonton mayors are very receptive to repurposing lands in their communities and making them available for such things as seniors' facilities.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: how is your department actively involved in breaking down the barriers that exist to securing some of these unused joint-use sites for the development of long-term facilities?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I know there are issues in municipalities about repurposing some sites and making sites available for seniors' facilities. We've seen that happen here in Edmonton, and I have to really say a big thank you to the mayor of Edmonton and the council for taking charge and repurposing some of these sites. But any time there's an opportunity through our available capital grant process and we have identified sites in municipalities where there's problems rezoning, we're there to help out.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: There are people in our hospital system waiting for long-term care. What's your department doing to ensure that adequate space exists to transition these people from hospital care to long-term care when their health circumstances permit?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you very much for that question. Mr. Speaker, we know that there is a shortage right now of assisted living places and proper places to have our seniors be discharged to from our hospitals in assisted living. We have a five-year plan that we're two years into. We've opened more than 2,000 spaces. Each and every year over the next number of years we're going to open a thousand spaces, spaces for couples to live in, spaces for people to enjoy accommodations with health services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Bullying in Schools

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a long history of trampling on the values in the Canadian Charter of Rights and those in the Alberta Human Rights Act, whether it's Mr. Klein's refusing to recognize sexual orientation or Premier Stelmach's Bill 44 and now this government's Education Act, which by its passing groups of people are under the misguided notion that gay, lesbian, and transgendered students do not need to be specifically stood up for. To the Minister of Education: is the minister aware that children who are gay, lesbian, and transgendered, or even those who are believed to be, are being targeted for bullying in our schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to say is that it's inappropriate that anyone would think that a child brings on bullying by how they dress or who they choose to love. I was disappointed, and as a parent I'm offended, that anyone would insinuate that my kids should hide who they are under any circumstances. As a minister I expect and this government expects that every trustee in the province is going to be devoted to protecting the rights of every one of Alberta's children. Any bullying at any time, at any place, for any reason is unacceptable, and that's reflected in the new Alberta Education Act.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that last night at the ASBA meeting trustees overwhelming voted against a motion that would have recognized the fact that gay, lesbian, and transgendered students are being bullied at rates much higher than others, what will this minister do to ensure that school boards and trustees are taking this issue seriously?

Mr. J. Johnson: You know, Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. Our education system is not governed by any ASBA resolution. It's not governed by the comments of one trustee. It's governed by the Education Act. This Education Act that we've just passed is one of the strongest in the country with respect to bullying. It's got a strong definition of bullying. In diversity and respect, section 16, it talks about that all programs and instructional materials must reflect and promote understanding and respect for others. It establishes and codifies a bullying awareness and prevention week. Under board responsibilities it requires a board to develop a code of conduct that contains many elements, including one or more statements to address the prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Mr. Hehr: Well, the minister knows full well that the way he passed that Education Act leaves wiggle room, and there are people out there who don't believe they have to follow the Human Rights Act.

Given that many trustees in this province appear to be under the misguided notion that our gay, lesbian, and transgendered students do not face increased amounts of bullying, will this minister commit to ensuring that in any school in this province if the students wish to have a gay-positive club, they will be allowed to start one with the support of his ministry?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we want to protect and support every Albertan in this education system. I want to just emphasize that this new act requires school boards to have a code of conduct, and everyone in that school division, including the trustees, will be required to accommodate and to comply with that code of conduct. If not, it gives boards the ability to remove those trustees. I'll even go further and I'll call on all parties in this House to support us in our protection of members of the gay and lesbian community from bullying at any time. This important issue and timely issue will I hope be discussed at the upcoming convention of the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Chief Electoral Officer Investigations

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of taking responsibility for a broken election funding system, yesterday the Premier told Albertans: "We have systems in place . . . we have to respect the processes and that's what I'm going to do." But the legislation states that an investigation "may be commenced within 3 years of the commission of the alleged offence but not afterwards." Most of these offences took place before 2009. The Premier knows that, and many illegal activities will remain secret as a result. To the Premier: is that why she's so confident in the process?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the greatness of this province and this country actually is in large part because of the fact that we collectively believe in the integrity of the system, the system being this Chamber, the system being the courts, the system being our public service and judicial inquiries. I recall, and you do as well, that for months the opposition was asking for an independent judicial inquiry. Our Premier agreed. That's what they have right now. Let's allow the independent judicial inquiry to do its work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Deputy Premier always leaps to his feet to tell the opposition to "file a complaint to the Chief Electoral Officer . . . have it properly investigated, and then we can talk about facts" and given that the Chief Electoral Officer actually cannot investigate these illegal actions because of the three-year limit, why won't the Premier admit that the legislation this government set up is working as intended because nobody in this province will ever learn the truth?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] The Wildrose opposition obviously doesn't want to hear the answer, but I'll try anyhow. The Premier went one step further. Not only did she call an independent judicial inquiry; she also tabled an act in this Chamber, which we will be debating over the next few days, that will bring the election laws and election financing laws to a much more stringent place from where they used to be. The fact is that there are statutes of limitations, and there will be a limit on how far back they can go. We will carry on with governing the province into the future. They can remain in the past if they choose.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier says that she has confidence in the system and given that the system is designed to conceal, hide, disguise, obscure, mask, and hush up illegal donations to the governing party, will the Premier admit that what she's really confident in is a system that has been created to conceal the truth?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I really find it troublesome, to say the least, that this member would now malign thousands of public servants – shall I remind the members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees? – who do their job every day to make sure that this system actually is such that Albertans can't have confidence in it, that he would undermine the authority and the integrity of judges, that he would undermine the authority of doctors. The list goes on and on. At the end of the day they're all Albertans doing their work, and there is no hidden conspiracy among all of them to make sure that this one member somehow has truth concealed. It simply makes no sense.

Ms Notley: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you rose on a point of order at 2:29. It has been noted.
Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Sherwood Park.

Government Relationship with Physicians

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has mismanaged our health care system for years: illegal donations from health executives, outrageous expenses on alcohol and fine dining. Now Alberta doctors are saying that they've had enough of the abuse from this government and enough of living in the most oppressive, intimidating environment that any group of professionals could find themselves in. Will the Minister of Health finally recognize that years of systemic waste, abuse, intimidation, and disrespect on the part of this government have led to this crisis situation and immediately change his course of action and start addressing the obvious concerns of our health professionals?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, my ministry and Alberta Health Services work with health professionals every day on a variety of issues, issues which are of concern to this member's constituents as to all of our constituents, issues with respect to access and quality in our health care system. A very good recent example, Mr. Speaker, is the work of our health professionals that resulted in a significant reduction of occupancy rates in acute-care bed hospitals and a very major reduction in the number of patients waiting for placement in continuing care.

Mrs. Towle: They don't trust you, Minister of Health. Doctors have absolutely no confidence in this minister. Doctors are now moving towards job action. So why should Albertans in general feel any confidence in this government and this minister when it comes to health care?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I might, I think what Albertans are going to lose trust in is an Official Opposition and other opposition parties that persist in undermining the credibility, the hard work, and the service of health professionals and that seek to undermine public confidence, I should say, or at least it would appear so, in the health care system as a whole. Our job as government is to work with health professionals. We are doing it. We are having constructive dialogue. We do have issues in labour relations to deal with in a number of professions. With all due respect, we do not need a mediator in the form of members of this opposition to help us with that.

Thank you very much.

Mrs. Towle: Well, given the response of the AMA clearly you do need a mediator.

The minister's actions have shattered the trust of your health professionals and damaged the health care system for Albertans. When will this minister provide a plan to Albertans with any certainty on how to regain our trust?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, trust and confidence and job satisfaction on the part of health professionals and others that support the system are first and foremost affected when they hear constructive dialogue among their elected representatives about opportunities and hard work to overcome challenges. The people that work on our health system are the ones that are delivering on this. Quite frankly, I don't think they appreciate the persistent overtures from members of the opposition to suggest that they aren't doing their job. They're doing it very well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Student Loans

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the 2012-13 school year well under way I have real concerns about the levels of debt that many postsecondary students seem to be carrying. My question is for the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. What is your ministry doing to ensure that the student debt is manageable and doesn't discourage potential students from furthering their education?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question. I'd like to start by saying that it's the responsibility of this government to provide opportunities and pathways for any Albertan who wishes to choose postsecondary as an avenue. I'd like to share with this House that I've met with CAUS and a number of student groups around this province. I've also met with the Students Finance Board, and they've shared this as one of their primary concerns, the load of student debt. That's why we have the student aid Alberta program, that helps students fund their education. We've shown that with the dedication of $268 million in provincial student loans we are one of the richest in all of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also for the same minister. Let's say that a student finishes their education and has a $20,000 loan. What would you do to help this student manage their debt?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, beside the fact that our loan program has very low interest rates, I'd like to advise this member that our Alberta student repayment rate is also one of the highest in Canada, very close to 90 per cent. Our student support continues even after they leave school. This plan is flexible. It allows students to make affordable monthly payments. In the case of students who are having trouble making those payments, we even give them a break from payments. Last year we helped over 7,500 students through this innovative program.

Ms Olesen: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the same minister. Will you listen to the students and put the tuition cap back into the Post-secondary Learning Act so that we can be sure any tuition increases beyond the consumer price index will have to be approved by this Legislature?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, again, thank you for that question. I want to clarify that any increase to tuition beyond the consumer price index must go through a very stringent formal process. This regulation is part of the Post-secondary Learning Act, and it's there for a very good reason. We do not approve market modifiers on a whim. The year 2010 was the only time market modifiers were allowed and approved in this province. Any requests for market modifiers are made by institutions. We have a very stringent process in place. They go through very stringent regulations led by my ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

PDD Administrative Costs

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. KPMG recently conducted a thorough review of the PDD program in Alberta and found many causes for concern. One example was the PC government's inability to manage the extremely high costs of administering the program, which accounts for $31 of every $100 spent, a full $24 higher than other jurisdictions providing similar services outside of Alberta. What is the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities doing to ensure this money, accounting for over $100 million, starts to flow to the front lines?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what happens in other provinces and what the levels of administration are, and I commit to this member that I will follow up on that. I can tell him that we have an excellent system in Alberta. I can tell him we have a number of front-line workers, that we're addressing front-line workers' wage issues. But I'm very confident in the structure and the operation of the system. It provides excellent services to persons with disabilities in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These same reports suggest the administrative cost of using a family-managed service is about 6 per cent of what it costs for an individual to be cared for by the province. What is the same minister doing to support and enhance this clearly more cost-effective option?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, family-managed supports are available across our province to families that have the capacity to take those on, and we're certainly supportive in every instance where they, in fact, request that. In many cases family don't have that capacity, but we are most certainly supportive of that. I know of a number of instances in my own constituency where that occurs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The apparent complexity of the family-managed services agreement makes the program inaccessible, confusing, and overwhelming for some families, ultimately preventing them from choosing this far more cost-effective option. What has the minister done to simplify this process for families looking to care for their loved ones?

Mr. Oberle: Well, that's fair, I suppose, to say that, Mr. Speaker, but I'm not aware of any incidents where the process itself has prevented anybody from entering into family-managed care. But if the member has any specific cases, I invite him, as always, to refer those to me. I want to point out that this whole program is going to be one of the first to go through our results-based budgeting exercise, and I'm looking forward to some improvements to come from that exercise, as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Anthony Henday Drive Noise Levels

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the completion of the interchanges on the western end of the Anthony Henday freeway my constituents and other commuters have enjoyed the free flow of traffic; however, some communities close to the Henday such as Lymburn, Wedgewood, Jamieson Place, and Cameron Heights are really concerned with the amount of noise generated by this traffic. So my question to the hon. Minister of Transportation: do you have any plan to tackle the excess noise that is coming from this freeway?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I also thank the member for the question and also thank him for recognizing the positive benefits of the Anthony Henday freeway here in Edmonton. Unfortunately, you can't build a road or a link like that without creating noise, and I want the hon. member to know that we follow the guideline of a noise threshold of 65 decibels over a 24-hour period, which, incidentally, is what's also used by the cities of Calgary and Edmonton and a lot of other places across North America. The noise study for the southwest Anthony Henday conducted in 2007 indicated the noise levels are lower than that threshold now, but we will check in the future should we get more evidence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the volume of the traffic and the noise level have increased over the last several years, will there be any plans to administer another sound test along the Anthony Henday?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the traffic there is about 35,000 to 55,000 vehicles a day, and the projected noise level in the study that was already done is based on 80,000 vehicles a day because it wanted to be forward looking and not leave Albertans that are on the edge dealing without the services that they need. So based on these results, we don't plan another study, but in the future if we get evidence that the noise has changed, either through an increase in traffic or other factors, we will indeed consider a study at that time.

Mr. Xiao: My last supplemental to the same minister: you know, where can my constituents find this information regarding this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, I want to thank him. I know he works tirelessly for his constituents. On this matter he can go to the website at www.transportation.alberta.ca. I think they can find information there. Of course, either the hon. member or his constituents can call the Transportation ministry directly, and we'll do our best to get them the information they require.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. In a few seconds from now we will resume with members' statements, and we'll start with the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Mr. Anderson: The PC rhetoric justifying their plans to borrow billions for new infrastructure shows a frightening lack of financial literacy. By 2004 Alberta had paid off its debts and had paid cash for all infrastructure projects with very, very few exceptions. From 2004 to 2011 Alberta spent $45 billion on capital, roughly double the rate of any other province. Despite this the Premier justified her decision to plunge Alberta back into debt by falsely stating that we won't be able to build anything if we don't go back into debt.

The Minister of Finance inappropriately compared government going into debt with young couples taking out a mortgage on a home. What complete nonsense. Government roads, bridges, and hospitals, though very important, are depreciating assets that are never sold. They cost billions annually to staff and maintain, and debt-financing them puts taxpayers at risk. On the other hand, a home mortgage is generally an appreciating asset that is regularly sold, and if things go badly, taxpayers are not on the hook. The same applies to a business loan, where an individual risks personal money to buy assets that are intended to generate revenue. Government assets don't make money; they cost money for as long as they exist.

Alberta is not a young, struggling couple looking to buy a first home. We are arguably the richest province in North America. We are like a couple in our early 50s, making millions, with three lake cottages and multiple streams of income-producing assets. If Alberta can't balance its budget, no one can. The fact is that we have more than enough money to build what we need. We just have to exercise a little self-control. We can't give politicians 8 per cent salary increases. We can't build $300 million new MLA offices or spend $2 billion to help companies pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground.

This Premier did not campaign on plunging Alberta back into debt. Her party would have lost had they done so. They should either scrap their debt-financing plans or put the question to a provincial referendum. Otherwise, they can add voter fraud to their growing list of scandals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Valour Place

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 2 I had the great honour to attend the official opening of Valour Place, located on 111th Street and 111th Avenue in Edmonton. Although the day was cool and light rain was falling, there was tremendous warmth in the air. Among the many dignitaries in attendance we had you, Mr. Speaker; the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, the Hon. Don Ethell, and Her Honour Linda; General Walter Natynczyk, past Chief of the Defence Staff of the Canadian Forces; and His Worship Mayor Mandel.

The Valour Place committee, led by Honorary Colonel Dennis Erker of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, came together in January of 2010 to raise funds to build and finish a barrier-free 12-bedroom home to be named Valour Place. The committee, whose membership is drawn from both the civilian and military communities, all share a connection to the Canadian Forces. Their vision is to construct a state-of-the-art facility for injured soldiers, RCMP, veterans, and their families who do not reside in Edmonton and who require a place to stay during the period of their medical treatments and appointments.

With this vision, Mr. Speaker, Valour Place, the first in Canada, has become a model for community action and support for Canada's military. Over $10 million was raised from over 2,000 donors. It is evident that Valour Place is bringing Edmontonians and Albertans together to show that we understand sacrifice, that we appreciate freedom, and that we support the people that have given us the life we enjoy today.

Congratulations to Colonel Dennis Erker and his committee on the successful completion of Valour Place.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, November 26, 2012, written questions 2 and 3 will be accepted and Written Question 1 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bill 204

Irlen Syndrome Testing Act

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act.

Mr. Speaker, Irlen syndrome, also known as scotopic sensitivity syndrome, is a neurological perceptual problem related to the brain's ability to accurately process the light spectrum and can be corrected with a pair of filtered, coloured lenses. Irlen syndrome is a condition that adversely affects the reading ability of many children as it causes word distortions to appear on a printed page. The objective of Bill 204 is to ensure that all educators are aware of the symptoms of Irlen syndrome. Bill 204 also seeks to establish a screening process within the educational system whereby children who display symptoms can be tested and ultimately receive corrective lenses to correct the distortions.

Mr. Speaker, no child should be left behind. Each child should be given every opportunity to read to the best of their ability. Bill 204, if passed and proclaimed, will go a very long way to improving the literacy for children suffering from Irlen syndrome and, thereby, help to make their educational experience and, indeed, their lives far more successful.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table the requisite number of copies of the 2011-2012 Northern Alberta Development Council annual report. The council has been championing the cause of Alberta's northern economies and communities by exploring opportunities for growth. For close to 50 years the council has developed and implemented regional strategies, programs, and initiatives with the private sector, community-based organizations, industry, other jurisdictions, and ministries to help 150 communities and over a quarter of a million people build vibrant lives and careers in northern Alberta. This year's annual report highlights many of the council's economic development initiatives that support their work. It also demonstrates the council's dedication to fulfill our government's commitment to grow Alberta's economy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Centre and the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition demanding the government take immediate action to twin highway 63. The petition contains a total of 37,751 signatures. Today I am tabling 3,231 of them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Deputy Premier and Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is an article in which some of the comments that I made during my private member's statement appear, particularly around the increasing number of women that are staying in shelters.

The second is also a news article, from CBC news, around the quote from the school board member who suggested that gay students should try to be less open about their sexual identity.

The final is a copy of an Ontario statute, an act to amend the education act with respect to bullying and other matters, which had Royal Assent on June 19 of 2012. The legislation allows gay and lesbian students to start gay-positive clubs at any school in the province.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. I would like to table a press release issued by the leader of the Liberal opposition urging that more stringent policies by Covenant Health relative to their dining and consumption of alcohol during work hours be adopted. Here are the requisite number.

Then I would like to table a receipt from Covenant Health showing that the leader of the Liberal opposition was engaging in a dining and a wining exercise at 2 p.m. on a Tuesday, paid for by Covenant Health.

I also would like to table a letter dated February 29, 2012, written by the Wildrose member from the riding of Airdrie addressed to the president's office of Olds College soliciting donations to the Wildrose Party, which I believe is prohibited.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have here five copies of the document I made reference to earlier, the speaking notes of Dr. Michael Giuffre to the Calgary & Area Medical Staff Society, where he goes through in quite some detail the 20 months' worth of negotiations the government and the AMA have been involved in and, in particular, of course, made reference to the fact that the trust has been sorely damaged. I urge the Health minister to have a read of this speech because I think it is quite illuminating about what the doctors truly believe about the state of negotiations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a document that I referred to in the wee hours of our debate on Bill 2 called: Carbon Capture Concerns Raised.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, the Speaker would take the liberty of tabling the requisite number of copies of a memorandum that the chair received today from the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park requesting early consideration of his private member's Bill 201 to allow for his bill to proceed to third reading on Monday on the assumption that his bill may have been reported from Committee of the Whole by that time. The chair will be commenting on this further on Monday.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah. Under Standing Order 7(6) I ask for the projected government business before the Assembly next week.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For Monday, November 26, 2012, in the afternoon will be private members' business and as per the Order Paper. In the evening of November 26 will be second reading of Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, and Committee of the Whole of Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

On Tuesday, November 27, 2012, in the afternoon will be second reading of Bill 7, Committee of the Whole of Bill 4, and as per the Order Paper. In the evening will be Committee of the Whole of Bill 4 and Bill 7 and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, November 28, 2012, in the afternoon will be Committee of the Whole of Bill 4 and Bill 7 and as per the Order Paper. In the evening, Mr. Speaker, will be Committee of the Whole of Bill 7, third reading of Bill 4, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, November 29, 2012, Mr. Speaker, in the afternoon will be Committee of the Whole of Bill 7 and third reading of Bill 4 and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were five points of order. I'm not sure if all five will proceed, but let's see how it goes.

We'll begin with the hon. Member for Airdrie, or someone on behalf of, who rose on a point of order at 1:52 this afternoon.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing on behalf of the Member for Airdrie, and it's actually a point of clarification with respect to the question that I had made. I had stated in my question that all people should be responsible for their crimes. At no point did I refer to a member or any specific person. Some may have anticipated that would occur, but it didn't, and I would like to clarify that.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the first point of order that I have on behalf of Airdrie was at 1:52. I think it's a different point of order.

Mr. Saskiw: That's withdrawn.

The Speaker: Is that one withdrawn, then?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes.

The Speaker: That one is withdrawn.

Let's move to the second point of order. There was another raised by the Member for Airdrie at 2 o'clock. Does someone wish to respond to that?

Mr. Saskiw: Withdrawn.

The Speaker: Withdrawn as well. Thank you.

Edmonton-Strathcona, you rose on a point of order at 2:07. Please proceed. Citation first.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

Ms. Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under sections 23(h) and (j) of our standing orders in particular, suggesting that a member will be called to order by the Speaker if in the Speaker's opinion that member makes allegations against another member or uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Mr. Speaker, the comments to which I'm referring are the comments that were made by the Minister of Health directly to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The language that the Minister of Health used – I don't have the Blues with me, but I did write it down. He said that the member is absolutely ignorant. He did not comment on the ideas of the member, and he, of course, spoke directly to the member, both of which have been noted in the past to raise concern. As well, as I'm sure the Speaker is aware, the use of the term "ignorant" has been ruled unparliamentary in this House on at least four separate occasions by a broad range of Speakers over a period of time.

Should there be some suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that it was simply, notwithstanding the tone of voice, a polite way to say that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was wrong in his suggestion that the Health minister had in fact imposed a deal and was no longer negotiating with the doctors in this province, I would suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has a fairly strong background in terms of negotiations and labour negotiations.

Indeed, most people would suggest that when you're involved in labour negotiations, Mr. Speaker, and you impose a cap on how much you will give to the other side, when you impose conditions on wages and fees and premium payments and things like that, that is not a negotiation. Most people, actually, who are quite aware of negotiations would acknowledge that that is not a negotiation; that is an imposed settlement. Indeed, that is the point that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was attempting to make. When you take pieces of compensation and come to a decision about what they will be and then impose them on somebody and say, "The discussion is over," that is the end of negotiations.

It was quite a legitimate point for the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to make, and I would suggest, as I say, that he probably has more professional expertise in the area of labour negotiations, which in effect this is a form of, than the Minister of Health. So I would suggest that the notion that the Minister of Health was calling the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood just unaware of the facts is probably a little bit of a stretch. Instead, by using the word "ignorant," he was in fact making an accusation and engaging in abusive and insulting language likely to create disorder.

On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood we would very much appreciate it if the Health minister would withdraw that particular comment. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this under 23(h) and (j) of the standing orders. The comment in question was in regard to a member of this Assembly, calling them ignorant. I refer the Speaker to page 146 of Beauchesne's, which lists words that have been found to be unparliamentary language in the past. The word "ignoramus" is there, and I would submit that that is similar to ignorant. Of course, we have to look at the totality of the tone. In this instance, I would submit that it was quite dismissive, and we saw that it resulted in disruption in the House. The member that was called ignorant in this instance has been a member of this Assembly for a long, long, long time.

I think it's inappropriate to call someone ignorant in this Legislature, and I hope that it's withdrawn.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has always been said by you and by previous Speakers, context is extremely important. I was a little bit closer to the hon. member at the time that words were spoken, and I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I know that there was a lot of shouting going on. So I think that Edmonton-Strathcona probably missed the full statement that was being made by the Minister of Health. In fact, as I heard it, the Minister of Health, who is a person who is above reproach at all times with respect to his level of discourse in this House and elsewhere, essentially was saying that the hon. member was ignorant of the facts in this particular situation. I think he's absolutely right. In fact, it's ironic that the point of order came after some very abusive language that was used by the questioner only a little bit earlier and quite inappropriately.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in her point of order talks about when you take pieces here and there, you don't create the whole context. In fact, again it's very ironic because what they're attempting to do is to take pieces from here and there and indicate that as a result of that, something which she has described as labour bargaining, which I think the doctors involved in AMA discussions would find offensive in and of itself and perhaps even a little bit ignorant – the fact that that would be called labour bargaining is crazy.

In fact, what the Minister of Health has been doing over the last 18 to 20 months in working with the AMA is to talk about a comprehensive suite of issues around how the health care system is managed and how we deal with primary care, how we deal with issues of electronic health records, how we deal with a rebalancing of the fee codes and those sorts of issues. There are many very, very complex issues involved in that. In coming forward to indicate that after that 20 months there are some uncertainties in the system, that it will improve the system if the doctors are aware of what is going to happen going forward with respect to certain parts of that process, that's what the Minister of Health said publicly, that's what he said in the House, that's what he has explained over and over to the member.

So when he goes forward in answering and responding very humbly and quite appropriately to a question while being yelled at by members opposite rather extensively, she misheard, I think – and, again, the Blues will correct this – the hon. member basically saying that he was ignorant of the facts in this particular case. That's not unparliamentary. That's quite appropriate. You might use different words, I suppose, and say that the hon. member is not fully acquainted with all of the facts, that he's taking certain of the facts out of context, but it all comes to the same thing.

While I think it would be quite in order for you as Speaker to find somebody calling another person an ignorant person out of order – I would certainly support that – when you indicate in the context of a question that a member is ignorant of some of the facts, it only means, as I understand it, that it's a state of being uninformed or having a lack of knowledge. It's an adjective describing a person in the state of being unaware, which is often an appropriate description in these circumstances.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Ms Blakeman: Well, just briefly, I have concerns for the hon. Government House Leader's health given that the contortions he's just involved himself in may well bring him in urgent need of some sort of additional assistance from the medical community by way of a chiropractor or physiotherapy. That was quite an amazing convulsion of limbs, and I think we're all very impressed with how he could manage to get his foot over top of his head like that. I just want to express my admiration for him.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Speaker has had a chance to review what Blues are available. They're not all yet available, so I'm going to wait on that. However, I do side with the concept that members who make statements sometimes in the heat of battle frequently do regret them later. In this instance I will cite for you House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 614. I believe it's line 9, 10, or 11. "A Member will be requested to withdraw offensive remarks, allegations, or accusations of impropriety directed towards another Member." In that respect, I'm going to give the hon. Minister of Health an opportunity to comment as he wishes, and I will make a ruling accordingly on Monday.

The next point of order I have is the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Just a matter of clarification on the last one before I start if I may. Are you suggesting that once everybody reads the Blues and understands the context, there may be further comment on that point of order?

The Speaker: What I've said, hon. Government House Leader, is that I will await the full context of the Blues so that I can review them carefully myself. In the meantime I will also allow the Minister of Health, should he wish to comment on it, to do so on Monday. Thereafter I will make a ruling about this point of order.

Let's proceed with the next point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you very much. I think you dealt with my next point of order rather adroitly. It was a question, and I'll just indicate that under Beauchesne's one should not be referring to people who are outside the House, and 23(1) includes "any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the [House]." It was around a statement which in and of itself, taken out of context, might not be as bad as it sounds, but when somebody gets up in the House and says something about a person committing crimes, that is making a judgment.

Put into the context of the other statements that were made in and around that same time, it was very clear who they're talking about and what they're talking about. To say that that statement in and of itself is not offensive or should be allowed – it has to be read in the context. However, I will not pursue it further, Mr. Speaker, because you dealt with it at the time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that issue has been dealt with, but I would remind people once again that it is out of order to raise a question and, by extension, also to give an answer that might create disorder or some other form of disobedience in the House or that leads to argumentation. Those are in the rules, and you might want to visit those.

My final comment on this matter, which will conclude it, is that context is indeed important, as I just indicated in the previous ruling about the point of order raised by Edmonton-Strathcona. Context is important. I would particularly like to remind new members, those who have just been elected for the first time to this House, that when you are recognized by the Speaker to rise and ask your questions, you are allowed one main question and then two supplemental questions that are connected to the main question. That is why I've ordered the Blues – I haven't got all of them just yet – so that you could see the context of the questions.

Now, this is just an admonishment at this stage, hon. members, but context is important, and context flows from the very first question right through the connection to the second, to the third. They are generally always on the same topic. They generally always refer to the same issue. Unfortunately, in some cases they refer to the same person that may have been named, which is against the rules, or imputed upon in the earlier question. That concludes that matter.

Edmonton-Strathcona, you had one more point of order at 2:29 p.m. Proceed.

Point of Order False Allegations

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I rise again to raise a point of unorder against the comments made by the Deputy Premier in response to questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. In fact, again the citation is Standing Order 23:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

The comments about which I'm concerned, Mr. Speaker, are those where the Deputy Premier suggested or, in fact, stated that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was impugning the work of AUPE members. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to put this in context and talk about the context, particularly in response to and taking into account the very statement that you just made and the citations that you just referred to, where neither a question nor an answer should be designed to bring about or create disorder.

Now, in this particular case the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was raising a question that arose from comments made by the Premier yesterday in a media scrum. In that case the Premier stated that a particular concern that people have been discussing in this House around whether or not the information that public agencies, which are accountable to ministers of this government, had engaged in activity that is illegal under our Election Act was something she was prepared to comment on. The Premier repeatedly said: I have confidence in a process; there is a process that will deal with this.

So the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview quite appropriately rose to ask the Premier or her designate how that would work given that the legislation governing the process to which she was referring very clearly excludes entrance into that process of the consideration of matters which form such significant concern for many people in this Legislature as well as, appropriately, many Albertans. What he was talking about were decisions and actions by this government as it relates to the terms and the impact of legislation for which they are responsible. It's just the nature of the legislation. Also, he was talking about comments made by the Premier. At no time in the farthest stretch of the imagination, Mr. Speaker, did the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview ever call into question the work ethic, the dedication, the focus, and the competence and skill level of any AUPE members anywhere in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this was specifically designed to create chaos and unhappiness in the House, disorder in the House. Of course, you know, if you look over many years, the irony of that statement is so incredibly, incredibly profound. This government has been the last agency, I would suggest, that has treated the majority of AUPE members with any version of respect. I mean, practically every day we have AUPE members coming in who are on month 5 of a strike that's been created by this government's decision to hand out public dollars to for-profit operators, who then shortchange these AUPE members from the wages and working conditions to which they would otherwise be entitled, and this government has done nothing about that injustice. Meanwhile, I would suggest, the NDP caucus has been a consistent advocate for the rights of working people in Alberta, for their working conditions, for legislation that protects them and promotes their interests and promotes equality for these particular members of society.

In particular, then, for this Deputy Premier to suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was somehow undermining or impugning the work of AUPE members was absolutely insulting. It was designed to create disorder, it imputed false motives, and it was an allegation which was profoundly and deeply untrue.

Ms Blakeman: It's nefarious.

Ms Notley: It's nefarious. The Member for Edmonton-Centre suggests that they could be very fairly characterized that way.

Indeed, when you look at the substance of the issue that we were talking about, there is absolutely no way you can connect a statement by the Premier that a process would deal with a bunch of illegal activity and the inability of the process because of the legislation that governs it to actually deal with that illegal activity to the good work done by the members of AUPE.

I would very much appreciate it, Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Premier could be called upon to withdraw that entirely untrue and vicious allegation against the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Irony abounds, that the hon. member would rise under 23(j) about making comments which are intended to create disorder or have the result of creating disorder right after and actually in respect to a question that was raised – which in the way it was raised was very carefully worded, by the way, and quite skilfully done – clearly to create an innuendo that the Premier was somehow engaging in a practice as though she owned the legislation that was tabled in the House but that by bringing that legislation, she was actually trying to do something that would benefit herself. I would challenge the hon. member who raised the question to deny that that was the innuendo that was clearly underlying his question. Then because there was a response to that question – actually, I think the Deputy Premier misheard the question because I think he responded about the inquiry when he was talking about election expenses, but that's just my view of the world. There's a quote about pots and kettles that I think fits this.

Let's be perfectly clear about one thing. Members on this side of the House, members of this government, and, I think, members on that side of the House would all agree that members of the public service, represented by the Alberta union of public employees or otherwise, do good work in this province, are to be respected by all of us for the work that they do, and that all of us do have a full respect for the work that is done. Any comment by the Deputy Premier with respect to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's question would not have been intended by him, should not have been taken by anyone to bring into disrepute or show any disrespect to members of AUPE because on this side of the House, as on that side of the House, we fully respect the people who work every day for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you. I'll be very brief, just in support of the point of order under Standing Order 23:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false . . . motives to another Member.

I think that when you take a look at the Blues, the Government House Leader could be correct that the Deputy Premier misheard the question, but the fact of the matter is that if he misheard the question and answered it in a certain way that violated the standing orders, then that should be retracted.

I also agree with the Government House Leader that every single one of the members in this Assembly respects the good work of provincial employees, AUPE members, but what happened is that the Deputy Premier imputed that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview questioned the ethics, integrity, and competence of the AUPE members. If that has occurred, that should certainly be withdrawn. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, that's a vicious comment to a member that I believe supports the good work of those members and of those employees. Nowhere in his question did he ever, ever in any sense of the question question the integrity of those individuals. He was talking about a health inquiry, and it had nothing to do with that. If the Deputy Premier misheard the question, then he should retract his answer.

The Speaker: Are there others? Thank you.

Edmonton-Strathcona raised a point of order here with respect to an answer that had been given by the Deputy Premier in response to a question given by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Again, I regret that I don't have the Blues for the entire question, so it's difficult to tell. However, based on the arguments that I've heard, I want to say that it is never appropriate to attribute comments to others that they did or did not personally hear being made. In this instance I think there was a little bit of an uproar in the House, and I'm not sure who heard what. Clearly, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills seemed to have a very vivid recollection of what was said, and I would assume so does Edmonton-Strathcona since she is sitting there, and I would assume maybe the Government House Leader did, too, because he's sitting just a couple of chairs down from the hon. Minister of Health.

Now, we all know that in this House, frequently during question period in particular but sometimes during other aspects of the House, insults are hurled, attempts at shaming others are endured, and there are accusations and other motives and so on that occur. Usually, I would hope that those occur inadvertently and in the heat of the moment, and then people would have the courtesy of standing up and withdrawing them and doing the right thing. You know and I know that we would not get very far in this House if we stood up on a point of order every time somebody accused somebody of something, and we're going down that slippery slope more and more as the session wears on. It's not only in the questions, hon. members. It is frequently also appearing now more and more in the answers.

So I ask again that you please be very vigilant about the words that you choose. In this case, Edmonton-Strathcona, I think you have done a very good job clarifying the position in your case on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and that record is now there for others to read. I, too, will remind all of you again of the hon. member's comments, and as such I'm going to remind the Deputy Premier and others about this. I believe this matter has now been clarified, and I will pursue it as necessary and if necessary again next week. That concludes the matter for now.

Do we have any other points of order today? Then let us move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise to speak today on Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

When I was preparing my speaking notes in second reading here, I recalled a time in May of 2006 when I had the privilege of speaking about elections law and a couple of topics at a conference in Ottawa, and I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition was a member of that same organization.

Bill 7 amends four pieces of legislation: the Election Act; the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which deals with finances; the Senatorial Selection Act; and the Local Authorities Election Act. The Chief Electoral Officer provided the vast majority of these changes in the provincial election and senatorial selection proposed in the bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, on May 29 I wrote to the Chief Electoral Officer – and the letter has been tabled to this Assembly – and I asked the Chief Electoral Officer for comments on improvement to the existing elections laws, and on May 31 he wrote back to me. That's also been tabled.

So this legislation is largely based upon the comments of the Chief Electoral Officer, who, as you know, is an independent officer of this Legislature. He does not report to me as the Minister of Justice, to another other minister, to any other private member. The Chief Electoral Officer provided 101 recommendations, and there are 90 of those which are accepted in this legislation.

I'm going to begin with changes to the proposed Election Act, and of course, Madam Speaker, the Election Act deals primarily with procedure. The proposed changes will allow for more efficiently conducted elections. They would authorize the Chief Electoral Officer to appoint additional persons as election officers and appoint information officers. They would also authorize supervisory deputy returning officers to perform the duties of other election officers. Further, they would authorize returning officers to hire election officers and supervise them in the conduct of the official count.

This bill will allow for future enumeration of voters through the Alberta Income Tax Act, the form that is provided for filing your annual income tax. Now, Madam Speaker, the federal government has been doing this for many years, and it has been largely successful. The federal Chief Electoral Officer's website boasts an 84 per cent compliance through the income tax based enumeration. There is one other province that is doing income tax based enumeration, and that is the province of British Columbia, which estimates it saves them $25 million per election.

Essentially, Madam Speaker, with this new enumeration you end up with a better result for less money when it comes to enumeration. You get a better list. With getting a better list, I would submit to this Assembly that you are going to have a more orderly conduct of the election. If you have a more accurate list, more people with their correct addresses, names, and information on this particular list, you're going to have fewer people that are required to show additional ID, sign stat decs. It also protects against elections fraud as well. So, simply, this is the best way to go.

Bill 7 also allows postsecondary students flexibility in where they cast their ballots. They would be able to vote either where they live while attending school or where they live immediately before attending school. For example, if a student is attending school in Edmonton and they normally reside in Calgary with their family, they'd have the choice of where to go. This has been supported significantly, Madam Speaker, by the Council of Alberta University Students, and I thank them for that endorsement.

Other changes to the Election Act include providing the Chief Electoral Officer with authority to develop a code of conduct for scrutineers, which will be posted in each polling location, to meet with representatives of parties that are represented here at the Legislative Assembly, and also to include recommendations for legislative amendments in his reports to the Assembly.

Madam Speaker, Bill 7 proposes giving the Chief Electoral Officer the authority to impose administrative penalties under the Election Act. Of course, administrative penalties are typically but not limited to an economic fine. It also would give him the authority to determine whether to investigate or cease to investigate if a complaint is frivolous or vexatious or if there are simply no grounds for the investigation. If a complaint was deemed to be frivolous, vexatious, or without grounds, then the Chief Electoral Officer would be required to provide notices to the complainant as well as to the person investigating. The Chief Electoral Officer will also have the authority to provide notice to other persons involved in a matter if necessary.

Now, Madam Speaker, these amendments enhance the authority of the Chief Electoral Officer to disclose the information. He will be able to disclose on his website his findings, his decisions, and any additional information he considers appropriate to a particular circumstance when an administrative penalty has been imposed, as I mentioned, which is typically a fine; when a letter of reprimand is issued, which is a letter basically saying, "No, don't do that"; or in more serious infractions when requested to do so by a person who has received notice that the Chief Electoral Officer has ceased to investigate. Of course, in the event that the matter is referred to a prosecutor and a charge is laid, that, of course, will remain fully public.

Another important area where changes are proposed is with respect to elections advertising. It requires disclosure when an advertisement was approved by a political party or candidate. In addition, the Chief Electoral Officer advised he received between 800 and 900 complaints about demon dialers, otherwise referred to as robocalls, automated dialing answer devices, what have you. We all know what those are. Under this legislation blocking the phone numbers of calls would be prohibited, and a caller ID must be capable of being displayed.

Bill 7 also authorizes the Chief Electoral Officer to establish and post guidelines on election advertising. He would be able to remove printed or electronic ads that are not in compliance with these rules. We all require advertisements, and I'd suggest that none of us would be here if it wasn't for advertisements, but we need to set some rules around them. For the most part these changes proposed for election surveys mirror the changes proposed for advertising. The person conducting the survey would be required to provide their name and contact information and the same for the organization on whose behalf the survey is being conducted. This information must be provided at the beginning of the survey, and the surveyor must indicate whether the person or organization approved the survey. As with the election advertising, caller identification must not be blocked and must be capable of being displayed. The Chief Electoral Officer would also be authorized to establish and post guidelines on election surveys.

Now I'm going to move to the next act, Madam Speaker, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which deals primarily with election financing. Bill 7 makes important changes to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, one of the most important ones being that the threshold for disclosing contributions is being lowered from $375 to $250. Disclosure will include the name and address of the contributor and the amount and the date of the contribution. Reporting of contributions to political parties and constituencies: it will now be made quarterly rather than annually. As well, third-party advertisers will be required to disclose contributions in accordance with the new lowered threshold.

I want to move to leadership campaigns. Currently there are no requirements for financial disclosure for leadership contests. Well, Madam Speaker, that's changing. With this bill the threshold will again be $250, and disclosure will also include the name and address of the contributor and the amount and date of the said contribution.

Several amendments to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act will also help increase compliance. Bill 7 adds a provision that would make a contributor responsible for ensuring that they are not prohibited from making a contribution and that they are not making a contribution in excess of the prescribed limits. Proposed amendments will require the chief financial officers of political parties to make every reasonable effort to ensure that prospective contributors are aware of the provisions of the act with respect to contributions. Contributions are now only to be accepted through the candidate's chief financial officer. Receipts must indicate that the contributor acknowledges that the contribution is made in compliance with the act.

Bill 7 will broaden the Chief Electoral Officer's ability to impose administrative penalties. Currently he can only impose administrative penalties on contributors who exceed the contribution limit or are prohibited from contributing at all. With these amendments he'll be able to impose administrative penalties not just on contributors but also upon recipients. He also would have the authority to impose administrative penalties for any offence under the act.

The Chief Electoral Officer will be able to issue a letter of reprimand or an administrative penalty up to three years after the date of an alleged contravention of the act. That is not changing. That currently exists under section 52 of the act. This is consistent with the current limitation, as I mentioned.

But I must also mention a word on the law on this particular point. Retroactive legislation is almost always prohibited, Madam Speaker. Retroactive legislation is when you go back and you want to change the rules for something that happened in the past.

Now, I'd submit to us that none of us has a time machine here, and this is inappropriate to do. Retrospective legislation is exactly what we're doing, shining a light on things that happened in the past.

In that line, Madam Speaker, Bill 7 also updates, amends, and reorganizes the provisions of the act regarding investigations and disclosure. The Chief Electoral Officer would have the authority to decide whether to investigate or not to investigate if he deems the complaint is frivolous or vexatious or there are no grounds. Again, that is in his sole and unfettered discretion, irrespective of any political interference.

If the Chief Electoral Officer decides not to investigate for one of these reasons, he has to provide notice to the complainant and the person who would have been investigated. As well, he must also provide notice to the other persons involved in the matter. This mirrors the provision under the Election Act, as I mentioned.

The bill would give the Chief Electoral Officer the authority to disclose his findings, decisions, and any other additional information he considers appropriate in the circumstances with respect to his investigations. He would make this information available on his website when an administrative penalty is imposed, a letter of reprimand is issued, or is requested to do so by a person who received a notice of the Chief Electoral Officer to cease to investigate.

He will also be able to make this original information available with respect to offences that occurred within the last three years. It has always been my position that the Chief Electoral Officer has had this authority, but at the end of the day this is an independent officer of the Legislature, Madam Speaker, and he will have the final say. This will fix this issue that has inadvertently come up. This goes back three years. We will be prohibited by the current limitation period from going back further. I would like to go back as long as possible, and that is exactly what we are doing.

Madam Speaker, with Bill 7 we are also increasing fines for general offences from $1,000 to $10,000. Bill 7 will adopt the same rules for the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act that I outlined earlier that are proposed for political advertising under the Election Act.

There are also several amendments proposed under the Senatorial Selection Act. These amendments will make the act consistent with the other two acts that I had mentioned. For example, changing the nomination date to the 10th day after the date of the writ. Another proposed amendment would require the Chief Electoral Officer to publish senatorial candidates on the chief's website as well as in newspapers. We felt both of those were important.

We are also proposing that the Chief Electoral Officer use his discretion when it comes to allowing a candidate's nickname on the ballot, interestingly enough.

I also want to mention again that we are accepting a provision under his recommendation that would allow him to consult with political parties of people who are represented in the Legislature here.

There were also some key changes to the legislation governing the provincial election and the senate selection. Bill 7 will help Alberta's provincial election finances and contributions disclosure laws to be stronger and will also increase accessibility and accountability. I note that our contributions remain unchanged, and I note that the Chief Electoral Officer today on the radio indicated that the $15,000 limit has been prescribed since 1982. I submit to this House, of course, that there's been a significant amount of inflation since that time.

Now, I wanted to move to the Local Authorities Election Act amendments. I wanted to particularly thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for his work on this particular file. Municipal Affairs held a consultation with stakeholders and the public over the last summer. These recommended changes to the Local Authorities Election Act are items which received strong support from a broad range of respondents. For example, number one: four-year terms. We're proposing changing the term of office to four years effective 2013 and onwards. We have strong stakeholder support for this change, including municipalities, school divisions, municipal associations, AUMA, and AAMD and C.

I wanted to mention as well that the returning officer of a local authorities election accepts all submitted nomination forms, including all those missing the required number of nominator's signatures. Madam Speaker, if a candidate who was elected did not complete the nomination form, their eligibility for nomination and subsequent qualification as a councillor can be contested before the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta. We're proposing a requirement to ensure that returning officers refuse a nomination form that is not signed by the required number of electors. Five people. Wow. The proposal also received strong support from all key stakeholders.

Currently local authorities use their own discretion in determining whether or not to require voter identification in a local election. We're proposing that for the 2013 election voter ID requirements be similar to those in the provincial Election Act. In municipalities that maintain a voters list, an elector who is on the list need not produce that information. As in the Election Act, an individual who is on a voters list will be able to vouch for an individual who's not on the list. In these cases, a person being vouched for would not need to produce identification. In municipalities that do not maintain a voters list, all electors would need to produce identification.

Currently a potential candidate may accept campaign contributions under the Local Authorities Election Act prior to nomination day, but there's no mechanism in place to track these candidates should they decide not to submit a nomination form. On behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs we are proposing that a potential candidate must register with the municipality before they accept campaign contributions. The existing campaign financing and disclosure requirements would continue to apply to candidates who are registered with the municipality but do not submit a form. The requirement, again, would come into force after the 2013 election cycle in order to ensure that the rules are not changing midstream for candidates that already plan to run in that year.

In 2009, Madam Speaker, a private member's bill was passed to add increased accountability around campaign finance and disclosure for local authorities elections. One of these amendments was to require a candidate who is not running in the next general election to donate any surplus campaign funds in excess of $500 that were collected in the previous election to a registered charity. Pursuant to that, any surplus funds below $500 may be kept by that individual. Bill 7 will change this. It will require all surplus funds, including funds under $500, to be donated to a charity if he or she does not submit a nomination form for the subsequent election, and these requirements will be scheduled to come into force in December 2015. All stakeholder groups showed support for this change.

I wanted to mention clearing deficits. The act does not specify that campaign deficits are to be cleared in the event the candidate does not run again. Although campaign deficits are discouraged, they can result if campaign finances are not carefully controlled. In most cases deficit amounts are not significant and may be cleared through fundraising from a subsequent election campaign. It is proposed that candidates be required to clear their campaign deficit if they're not running again, and the consultation proposal was again supported by all key stakeholder groups.

Currently the act does not restrict a candidate from running in a subsequent election after failing to file a disclosure statement on campaign contributions, and it's proposed that a candidate would become ineligible to run for municipal office for two subsequent election periods if he or she failed to file a disclosure statement as required under the act. Stakeholder feedback showed strong support for this policy change as the stakeholders, Madam Speaker, indicated that this new provision will compel and provide incentives to candidates to comply with the disclosure requirements and provide greater accountability on election financing.

Recommendations also include some nonpolicy related changes to the legislation to clarify its intent and better align its requirements to other provincial legislation.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, the amendments to the Local Authorities Election Act follow through on the Minister of Municipal Affairs' commitments to municipalities. They're based on changes called for by municipal organizations, and they represent areas of broad consensus at the local level. They are changes that will ensure strong governance at the local level and well-run election processes while also respecting local autonomy and flexibility.

The spirit of the amendments to the Local Authorities Election Act is also shared in three pieces of legislation: the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, and the Senatorial Selection Act. They will provide greater transparency of provincial elections and campaign financing.

With these amendments we're making good on the Premier's commitment last spring but also my commitment during the one-week Legislature session that we had just after the last election. It's another promise made, it's another promise kept, and it's another promise that is a result of a lot of consultation across this province, including in this Chamber.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 7.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:40                    Government Bills and Orders                              Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I will now call the committee to order.

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any who wish to speak on this bill? I recognize the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and start the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, 2012. To begin, we'd like to take this opportunity to clarify what this act is intended to do. Bill 4 will facilitate the disclosure of wrongdoing, address wrongdoing through investigation and reporting, and protect those making disclosures from reprisal.

We'd also like to take this opportunity to clarify what this bill is not intended to do. It is not intended to be the only framework under which illegal acts can be sanctioned. Wherever a wrongdoing contravenes provincial or federal legislation, the wrongdoer faces potential sanction in accordance with that legislation. This act is only meant to facilitate disclosure of those contraventions. Moreover, any disciplinary action against a wrongdoer under the organization's human resource processes, including termination of employment, remains available.

Madam Chair, we have heard concern that this legislation does nothing to compensate whistle-blowers for any damages they suffer, and that is true. The commissioner can only make recommendations. The act is meant to complement, not to replace, existing avenues that whistle-blowers have to seek corrective action for damages they sustain. An employee can seek redress through their union grievance process, file a complaint with the Alberta Labour Relations Board, or make a claim for damages through the courts.

To be clear, however, this legislation does have teeth. I've taken a look at the act, and here's what I'll point out. Where either an internal investigation or an investigation by the commissioner is launched, full and complete co-operation is expected by all involved. Anyone who wilfully attempts to obstruct an investigation under this act or counsels another person to do so faces sanctions. Anyone who makes false or misleading statements to any investigator or to the commissioner or knowingly withholds material information from an investigator or the commissioner will have committed an offence.

Critical information about a wrongdoing or reprisal may be contained in official records. The act makes clear that anyone who destroys, conceals, or falsifies a record or counsels another to do so has committed an offence. As was the case with reprisals, those committing such offences may be subject to prosecution in court or, if convicted, face fines of up to $25,000 for a first offence and $100,000 for second and subsequent offences.

With that, Madam Chair, I am pleased to start the debate in Committee of the Whole. We've already had some very lively discussion about Bill 4, and I look forward to the continuation of this debate and will be prepared to answer questions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am just thankful for the opportunity to stand and speak to Bill 4 here today and say that I am in complete agreement with the intention of this bill. Whistle-blower legislation is something that is badly needed in this province. There is a however. I'm sorry. We spoke at great length on public interest the other evening, night, morning, late morning. We could go on. This bill does not meet the intentions that are put forward.

Now, I am going to reiterate some of my comments that I made during the second reading of this bill just because I want to prove that the intention is correct. We need whistle-blower legislation. Whistle-blower used to be a dirty word, Madam Chair. It was used in the same way as rat and tattletale. I can't help but see it completely differently. Whistle-blowers protect the public interest and safety by courageously stepping forward despite odds against them. In a word, they're heroes. Heroes are selfless. They sacrifice for others. They are brave when they stand up against insurmountable odds. They are David to Goliath, and we should do everything we can to make sure that David wins. That is why we want to see whistle-blower legislation.

Allan Cutler was a hero. We saw him come forward. He blew the whistle on the Adscam sponsorship scandal. All Canadians owe him a debt of gratitude. We owe whistle-blowers a debt of gratitude. Adscam wasn't just about the incompetent use of tax dollars; it was about the deliberate and fraudulent use of tax dollars for political purposes. We've been talking about that lately, too.

For too long civil-spirited public servants have been afraid to come forward or are destroyed if they do. With this piece of legislation I think that fear is still going to be there. Careers can end, jobs can be lost, and, ultimately, the livelihood of a person and their family is put at risk when someone in the public service wants to step forward and bring attention to outrageous and egregious behaviour. So I was pleased when this government after 41 years in power finally saw fit to bring forward whistle-blower legislation. It's about time.

There are also limitations to prevent frivolous claims against the government.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Fox: I'm glad you've got a question on the bill. I have many, too. We'll get to those.

Whistle-blowing is too vital to a free and healthy democracy to be bogged down with the bitterness of some. This legislation should be reserved for those who know of serious wrongdoing in public institutions.

I do, however, have many reservations about this piece of legislation. If the government is to be believed, this piece of legislation before us will protect those working in the public sector when they blow the whistle. They won't have to fear reprisal, we're told, from their supervisors or from other management executives in their department. The problem, Madam Chair, is that I don't believe this government. I don't believe this bill was intended to protect employees in government. This bill reads a lot like our FOIP Act. That, as we know, was to protect the government from its employees.

The highest standards should be used to facilitate the whistle-blowing process. If they were, this bill would read much differently. From the beginning of my reading of it, Madam Chair, this bill has seemed a bit suspicious. Why would legislation only apply going forward? I remember the speech from the associate minister when he stood up at the end of second reading and told us that we were incorrect. I'm just going to pull out that section of the bill right here, part 1, Wrongdoings, and read it for you.

(2) This Act applies only in respect of wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act.

Yuck.

Ms Blakeman: Is that a technical term?

Mr. Fox: Well, I had other four-letter words, but I don't think you'll allow me to use them.

Wouldn't you want to know about the gross mismanagement of public funds or reprisals against employees who spoke up in the departments prior to this coming into force? One could conclude that there is something to hide, Madam Chair, especially since if this bill is passed, it would not be implemented for some time. There will be a bit of a black hole, especially with this section. What kind of message does this send our civil service right now? The expense scandal in our health system was only brought to light by a FOIP request from the media. The government tried to hide that. I would surely doubt that this government does claim to be perfect, so why gag your civil service? Why not make the promise here and now in the Legislature to protect those employees against reprisal from this day forward, not some distant-future, kind-of, sort-of date that's undefined?

Another issue with this is the definition of wrongdoing. Now, I've had a chance to examine legislation in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia. I've talked to and read reports from FAIR. That's what they do. They examine this legislation throughout the world. The bill we're debating is quite similar in many ways to the other provinces mentioned, but this government under this Premier has talked endlessly about being a leader in Canada. Well, with this bill we're not a leader. I think we should be the leader on the whistle-blower legislation, though. We should set the higher standard of wrongdoing. As it stands right now, wrongdoing is limited in this bill. It's limited to gross mismanagement of funds, assets, and civil and criminal laws.

Well, I think we can do better. We should be looking at ethical behaviour. What about the intimidation and bullying of our health care professionals? What about the Merali expense scandal? The CEO of Capital health signed off on those expenses, yet we all know how unethical it was to have five-star dinners and automobile expenses picked up by the taxpayers of Alberta. I'm just frustrated with this thing. Somehow, you know, we keep pushing this thing forward.

At the end of the speech that I gave on Bill 2, I moved a motion to put this forward to a committee, to get the committee to do the job that it was put there for, to go over legislation that we're putting forward here in this Legislature. And what happened? You voted it down. I wanted to work with you. I wanted to help you. I wanted to make this a robust piece of legislation that we all could be proud of. And what happened? You voted it down. Shame. That is shameful.

So where are we here today? Well, we're going to get started. In my hand here, Madam Chair, I have an amendment that I would like to move. I have the original on top and the required number of copies needed to be tabled.

The Deputy Chair: We're not tabling it. We'll just pause for a moment while you hand them out to the members of the House, please.

This amendment will be known as A1. Seeing as the majority of our members have a copy of amendment A1, the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka may proceed.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let's get going on this amendment. Where are we starting with this? Well, we're going to start with one of the key shortcomings as noted by FAIR. Let me tell you a little bit about who FAIR is. FAIR is the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform. They promote integrity and accountability within the government by empowering employees to speak out without fear of reprisal when they encounter wrongdoing.

Our aim is to support legislation and management practices that will provide effective protection for whistleblowers and hence occupational free speech in the workplace.

Founded in 1998, FAIR is a registered Canadian charity, run by volunteers and supported by individual contributions. FAIR does not solicit or accept funding from governments or corporations.

I will table what I'm reading from on Monday.

Key shortcomings according to them. "There are some shortcomings in this Act so significant that they render the basic design ineffective. These are listed immediately below." In the latter section there is a list of other shortcomings which are also important and need to be corrected, but fixing these without addressing the key shortcomings will be fruitless. By analogy, if a car has no engine, then fixing a flat tire or topping up the gas tank isn't going to make much difference. Key shortcoming 2: "The Commissioner has unlimited discretion to do nothing."

Let's read what's currently in the bill.

Exemption

31(1) The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.

(2) The Commissioner may impose any terms and conditions the Commissioner considers appropriate on any exemption provided for under subsection (1).

(3) The Commissioner must provide reasons for giving an exemption under this section and must ensure the exemption, including any terms or conditions imposed, and the reasons for giving the exemption are made publicly available.

Well, let's talk about regulations. Who's setting the regulations? This is part of section B of our amendment here. Under Regulations section 36 in the act is:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

In layman's terms, cabinet. Then we need to get rid of section 36(1):

- (1) respecting the exemption of any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act.

So what we're seeing here in regulations is that cabinet can make a regulation that excludes anybody cabinet really wants to see excluded. Wow.

An Hon. Member: Or a class of persons.

Mr. Fox: Or a class of persons. This is just shameful. Why would cabinet want to exclude anybody from this? Where is the transparency in that? That makes this thing about as clear as mud.

Now, let's keep going on this. The commissioner will be given the ability to exempt anyone or any group from this act. I mean, really? Come on. This is beyond belief. Why would anyone want to exempt anybody from this act? I mean, should we be exempting people from whistle-blower protection? Is there really anybody in this province that should be denied the protection of this bill? I don't think so.

An Hon. Member: What if you're a friend of the PCs?

Mr. Fox: Maybe if you're Evan Berger. [interjections] Well, you know, he was exempted from the conflict-of-interest legislation. There was an exemption. Are we going to keep using these kinds of pieces of legislation to exempt unethical behaviour?

What we're proposing is to delete section 31 from the act. This section, as we have stated before, allows the commissioner to exempt anyone or any group from the whistle-blower protection act. You can't hide behind them. We've seen the government hide behind commissioners. Well, you're creating the rules, the regulations that the commissioner is operating under. You send him an order in council changing the regulation. That commissioner now has to abide by that. That's not transparent. There is no transparency in it. It's shameful. It's just absolutely shameful. I don't get it.

I mean, I want this to be the most robust piece of legislation in the country. This must be the most robust piece of legislation in the country. Albertans demand it. My constituents demand it. Your constituents demand it. We must have it.

Now, again, I'd asked to do this in committee. I wanted to do this in committee so that we could bring before the Legislature a bill that I could stand up and support because, believe me, I want to support this. There's no reason why we should have to have all these amendments going forward. We could have used the tools put there before us. We've been given these opposable thumbs.

Why not grab the tool and use it? Well, we're not. We're absolutely not, and I just don't understand it. I'm baffled by this piece of legislation. I'm baffled that it came in front of us in the manner that it did, looking the way that it did.

4:00

I mean, this is just one amendment of many, my friends. One of many. We could have fixed this. We could have fixed this in a committee. We could have fixed it and brought forward something that would have been given support from both sides of the Chamber instead of having me stand up here and try to convince you of these much-needed amendments, ones that have been asked for by people who make it a point – they make it a point – of analyzing these kinds of laws and protecting our citizens. They want to see good, robust, strong whistle-blower legislation not only in Canada but around the world. I have to admire what these people in FAIR are doing because they're trying to get governments to be accountable. They're trying to bring about democratic reform.

We stand in here and talk about public interest and being open and transparent with the citizens of Alberta, with the citizens of our constituencies. Well, here was a perfect example of where we could have done that, and we're not. I mean, I'm making the assumption here, but I'm sure that you're going to vote down all of our amendments, but I hope you don't.

I guess because of my passion for democratic reform I stand up here, and I'm bellowing a bit, but this is important to me. This is important to Albertans. This is important to our constituents to get right the first time. What happens if we pass this the way it is? We're going to have to go back. I don't want to go back. It's a waste of time. It's a waste of resources. Let's get this right the first time.

With that, we've got this amendment in front of us, one that I believe will go forward in strengthening this particular bill, Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. Let's make sure that those that are willing to stand up and be heroes are offered our protection and that we do it in a way that is transparent and protects everybody, not just some.

If we want to keep going, I can keep going. You're ready to go? All right.

The Deputy Chair: You have a minute and 29 seconds left, but you don't have to take it.

Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you. I'd like to respond to the comments made by my colleague here, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. Madam Chair, the act when it's fully implemented is going to cover a lot of different organizations, and this clause that he's speaking to is necessary to ensure that the act doesn't unfairly impact one public entity.

For example, when a public body is extremely small, maybe only has three employees, it would be inefficient and practically impossible to have functional and effective internal disclosure procedures as required by this act. This section allows the commissioner to exempt such an organization from establishing these internal processes. This section also allows the commissioner to attach conditions to such an exemption. In this circumstance the commissioner could require that all disclosures go directly to the commissioner for review and investigation.

By this amendment the opposition appears to be assuming that the commissioner will use this discretion in bad faith. What the opposition doesn't emphasize is that the commissioner is obligated to publicize every exemption they grant and the supporting rationale for granting such an exception. In short, the commissioner can be held accountable by all of us in this Assembly for each and every exemption they grant, and I assume that you will do that. Further, the commissioner's decision to grant an exemption may be subject to judicial review just like any other exercise of discretion. Clearly, there are checks in place to ensure that the commissioner's discretion is not abused.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Three Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: I'll be very brief. Just in response to that and the question of whether or not the commissioner would act in bad faith, I think that one should never assume that anybody is going to act in bad faith, but we saw an example with other legislation. It was the conflicts-of-interest legislation in which an individual was granted an exception under that act. Along the same lines of this legislation the commissioner in that situation did put conditions, but despite allowing an exemption, despite adding conditions to that situation – of course, I'm referring to the Evan Berger appointment – that still didn't make it ethical.

I think that's a fatal flaw in this legislation, to provide the cabinet the unfettered power to grant an exemption to anybody. It should not be given. If there are circumstances, as the Member for Calgary-Varsity suggests, where, you know, there are two or three people or something like that, spell that out in the legislation. Make it very specific right now or at least give some reasonable parameters. To give complete, unfettered discretion to the cabinet to provide an exemption to any individual for any reason I think is not acceptable and is not going to provide a full and robust piece of whistle-blower legislation.

Ms Blakeman: Speaking to the amendment, which is A1, yeah, I support this amendment. They are related sections that are being amended here because in section 31, which the amendment is proposing be struck out entirely, it does allow – sorry. I'm just going to back up a bit. This entire piece of legislation is very loosey-goosey. A technical term, I know. It's a bit like nailing Jell-O to the wall. There are a lot of loopholes, a lot of ways things can slide sideways. Truly, we have learned a few things. The Ethics Commissioner – which I'll remind you all, I did speak in this House about how he was likely to cause us some grief, and indeed he did – has given us all a lesson that I hope we learn.

Let me just step to the other side of this. You do need to have the Assembly working in a way that the government is allowed to do its job. You know, it has to pass legislation; it has to keep stuff moving along. There are rules to make sure that we're not silenced, that we get our time, that we can make a fuss if we want to as appropriate.

The same thing with this legislation. You know, you have to be giving the commissioner the ability to stop work and to not expend resources on vexatious claims. You have to. I expect that a good number of us in this House have dealt with claims like that where, you know, whether there's a mental illness behind it or they just don't get it or they just are going to keep going on this until they get what they want, they're wrong. The legislation is not supporting what they ask for or what they want, and you have to give the commissioner the ability to say, "This is vexatious, and it's not going any further," and to not expend any more resources on it. I don't see that kind of narrowness of focus in section 31. Once again, a shell bill.

Before I die, I would like to see legislation that doesn't come in here with: the commissioner may in accordance with the regulations. Of course, we have no idea what the regulations are, and we have to pass this bill never knowing what the regulations are. The regulations could say, "Paint yourself blue," for all I know because we never see them until they're actually published in the Gazette, which is a major problem in trying to work in this Assembly and trying to do good work in this Assembly.

4:10

Historical vignette. We used to have a committee called Law and Regulations. It was an all-party committee. It was one of the special standing committees. All legislation, once passed, went there, and that committee looked at the regulations that were going to apply to the bill. It was struck out, I guess, in 2007, maybe in the Standing Orders that were revised then, and now we have no way of knowing. Even before that the government was no longer referring anything to that committee.

You understand how frustrating that is when everything we look at – just about every second paragraph in here says: according to the regulations.

31(1) The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, that say to paint yourself blue, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.

Not one word about vexatious in here. Not one word that narrows the focus. This just says that they've got the ability to wipe out anything they want, according to the regulations, and we don't know what they are. Funny-looking commissioner, painted blue, but there you go, which is not a reflection on whoever the commissioner ends up being.

The next part:

(2) The Commissioner may impose any terms and conditions the Commissioner considers appropriate on any exemption provided for under subsection (1).

Well, it's going along with it. It's just too wide. It's too loosey-goosey. It's too Jell-O.

The final piece:

(3) The Commissioner must provide reasons for giving an exemption under this section and must ensure the exemption, including any terms or conditions imposed, and the reasons for giving the exemption are made publicly available.

Well, good. That's a good thing – pat, pat, pat – to make things public. But it's after the fact. The exemption has already happened. And there's nothing in here about vexatiousness. I would be a lot happier if there was. Since it's not there and it doesn't seem to be intending to cover that, I'm in agreement that it should be removed because it is just too big a loophole to drive that truck through.

The second part of this amendment is striking out clause (1) of section 36. Just let me find that. Section 36 appears on page 25, for those of you following along at home or even in the Assembly, which happens occasionally. Oh, look. It's my favourite clause: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations." What a surprise. Then it goes on for two pages of where it can make regulations, which is, you know, everything. But specific to this amendment, which is trying to take out subsection (1), subsection (1) is: "respecting the exemption of any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portions of this Act." That's removing the regs section that would go along with section 31.

I suspect that given the lack of interest from my colleagues on the other side this amendment is not going to be greeted with great enthusiasm and support, but you need to listen because you have made an omission here, and you need to figure out a way to fix this mistake. It's a big one, and it almost renders the legislation moot. It doesn't really. I don't want to, you know, make any wild statements here. But, truly, the point where the commissioner can exempt anything and anyone for any reason – we don't have to be told the reason; we just have to be told after the fact that he or she did it – is very problematic. The point of this legislation is to protect whistle-blowers. It's to make them know that if they come forward, we will protect them. That is not clear from this legislation.

The second piece that's not clear but that we'll get to in the future, I'm sure, is the make-whole concept. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity had mentioned in her opening comments that there were lots of ways for people to find redress if things went against them in this when they reported something. You know, there's a lot of stuff out there about what happens to people. There are very long court cases. People can be harassed at work. They can go on stress leave. That gets cut back. There are a lot of ways to punish someone for doing this.

To bring forward legislation that does not bring with it a make-whole concept is why I said I wouldn't recommend anybody do anything by way of whistle-blowing for this government. This doesn't protect them. If you're two years out of work and you use up everything that's available to you before the court case comes up, you're stuck, honey. If you lost your house, too bad. There's nothing in here that would make you whole, that would make up for the lost wages, the lost house, the lost car, the divorce proceedings cost, you know, whatever comes as part of that, additional medical. Nothing.

So why would you pursue this? I'm going to rebut what the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has said because while you can get it from the unions, well, this government is renowned for being anti-union and making it as difficult as possible in this province to organize a union. Honey, there's no – sorry, that's rude, but you know what I mean. There is no first contract legislation in this province. Where the biggest and nastiest fights have been is where we've got a union formed and they go to negotiate a first contract with the employer and the employer just folds their arms and says: get lost. Dynamic Furniture, Gainers. Isn't the one they're doing right now about a first contract?

An Hon. Member: Gainers wasn't a first contract.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. I've been corrected. Gainers wasn't a first contract, but most of the big, ugly, long, long, long-running organized labour issues in this province have been around a first contract.

To say, "Oh, that's no problem; the unions can look after you," well, there aren't that many people in Alberta that are covered by unions. There's a reason for that, because this government doesn't make it easy for them to be covered by unions. So we're really looking at somewhere around 3,000 people out of our 3.5 million that are actually union members that would receive some kind of help. The rest of us, the other 3.2 million, not including and then taking off the women or the children that wouldn't be workers: you're on your own, toots. If you want to throw them onto the employment standards, well, good luck. Get in line, you know. That's a heck of a long lineup. I don't hear any talk from the government that they're going to beef up employment standards staff in order to deal with additional people that are coming forward, looking for help.

Ms Notley: You get two weeks' pay.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, and the end result of all of that would be – wait for it – two weeks' pay. Wow. That'll sure pay the mortgage for six months.

I understand the good intent behind all of this and behind the member's comments. It just does not reflect the reality of working in Alberta. I think that's what we have to anticipate if we're going to give – how did the member keep calling it? – robust legislation that people believe and that they will feel protected by and that they will step out and tell us what we need to know about what's going wrong and would require a whistle-blower.

Having said that, I am in support of this, and I will take my seat to let others speak.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. It's one of the amendments that our caucus as well had identified needed to be discussed. Now, it's interesting. We have to sort of start with the overall context because throughout the whole deliberation on Bill 4, deliberation which I hope will go for some time, I am going to be constantly conflicted because, quite honestly, you know, there's part of me that says: "Well, you know what? Let's just give that commissioner the opportunity to exempt folks, and let's just campaign to have as much exempted as possible." Let's exempt everybody from this act because this act does not do what this government suggested it does. It will not protect people. It will not allow for transparency. It will in fact create a bureaucratic labyrinth that will keep information that should otherwise be public tightly closeted in the deepest, darkest halls of government for a really, really long time. That's what this piece of legislation is geared to do. So there is part of me that says: "Well, you know what? By all means, exempt away. Fill your boots. As many people as you can protect from this act, the better."

However, in the same way that previous speakers have said, you know, you can't make – I don't think you can make good or bad assumptions about the way the commissioner will perform his or her duties, so you simply have to look at the legislation on the face of it. If we assume for a moment that it is actually possible, through probably the 20 amendments that the opposition collectively will be bringing to the floor to try and improve this piece of legislation, that it's possible to improve it to a point where it actually represents a benefit to Albertans and those employed in the public sector, well, then, obviously, you'd want to make sure that its application is considered wisely and judiciously in line with the principles that we all agree should apply.

In one sense a part of being conflicted is this whole issue of the exemption. It might have been helpful if this particular amendment had come forward after we'd had a chance to see what happened to the other 20 amendments the opposition will collectively be proposing because, quite honestly, if all those other amendments fail, I might have wanted to propose a subamendment to this and suggest that the commissioner shall exempt all employees from coverage by this bill. If we don't fix this legislation through the many amendments that the opposition will be bringing forward, as I say, I'm not convinced that it is a benefit to anybody.

Having said that, though, and hoping that with good faith this may actually be improved to a point where it is palatable to people, I think it's really important to look at what it is the government is trying to achieve here. Now, there's no question there have been lots of self-congratulatory public relations events and a message box and talking points and various and sundry little opportunities for the government to claim that they are going to be more transparent and accountable and open and that the whistleblower legislation is part of that process.

Personally, I find that the minister of what the opposition, I think the Wildrose caucus, has started referring to as AT and T – and I find that kind of amusing. In my mind when I hear the name of that ministry, I think of the minister of funny walks because it's, you know, somewhat self-deprecating and, quite frankly, about as rationally connected to the work of the minister and the outcome of the minister as the actual name that is applied is. Having said that, there's been a lot of self-congratulatory work on the part of the government to suggest that we should think of them as being more transparent and open.

Now, throughout the last three and a half weeks in this session we have learned from a variety of different sources and for a variety of different reasons that if anything this government has become decreasingly open, decreasingly transparent in pretty much any forum that you can name. We just passed a bill, Bill 2, which will significantly reduce public oversight of programming and spending priorities in environmental initiatives that will impact the vast majority of the environmental protection work to the extent that there's any remaining in Alberta by this government. That's an example.

You know, we have a Premier who, you know, maybe doesn't make herself as available as she should to this House or the press or people in general. We have legislation which the Minister of Justice claims: "Oh, wait for my election legislation. I'll make sure everything comes forward." Then, in fact, no, we've got legislation that makes sure everything does not come forward. So, I mean, they're not really interested in transparency.

What this amendment does is try to get at the first element of this legislation, which at this point supports my thesis, which is that it's all about the press release; it's not about the outcome. So if you give to the commissioner carte blanche ability to exempt agencies from the application of this act, then . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it's time for the committee to rise and report.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 26, 2012

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to better understand and accordingly to prioritize our duties in order that we can properly fulfill the requests of our constituents and of all Albertans who are counting on us for help. Amen.

Hon. members, it being Monday, I invite you to remain standing to join in as Mr. Paul Lorieau leads us in the singing of our national anthem. Join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour today to rise on your behalf and introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a very special guest. Seated in the Speaker's gallery is Scott Hamilton, son of the late Don Hamilton, our former Ethics Commissioner. Scott joins us today to remember and celebrate the many achievements in Don Hamilton's extensive career in the public sector. Mr. Hamilton's long and dedicated service to Albertans was exemplary and inspirational. It is with great sadness that we have lost such an extraordinary individual. I would like to extend my deepest sympathies and condolences to the family during this difficult time. At this time I would ask Scott to rise, and I ask all members of the Assembly to join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce through you to all members of the Assembly 53 of Alberta's brightest young students from Julia Kiniski school, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. They are joined today by teachers Mr. Dale Mandryk and Mrs. Susan Skillings along with parent helpers Mrs. Tracy Martin, Mrs. Rhonda Paterson, Mrs. Gail Teasdale, and Mrs. Sherisse Hume. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several guests from the Mental Health Patient Advocate office of Alberta. Joining us today are Fay Orr, the Alberta Mental Patient Advocate, and three members of her office's staff: Carol Robertson Baker, Ryan Bielby, and Bev Slusarchuk. Accompanying them are three individuals who are featured in the office's 2011-12 annual report, which I'll table this afternoon. Hana Marinkovic, the chief of staff for the hon. Minister of Human Services, is here. Hana's mother is living with schizophrenia. Austin Mardon, a friend and long-time leader in Alberta's mental health community, is here as well as Paula Murphy, a worker at Anderson Hall, a transitional home for young adults learning to live with and manage their mental illnesses. Please join me in thanking these Albertans for their commitment to mental health. Please stand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some brilliant students from St. Alphonsus school in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. There are 17 students, teacher Mrs. Shauna Wasik, and parent helper Mrs. Bonnie Moddejonge. I would like them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Minister of Health, you had a second introduction. I wasn't aware. Go ahead, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 35 individuals representing the political action committees of medical students at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. These students are here today meeting with members of the Assembly to raise issues of concern to their committees. This year they have chosen to focus on the integration of aboriginal health into their education, a very worthwhile endeavour. I had the pleasure of meeting the students at lunch today, and I felt we had a very productive discussion on a variety of topics. I'd ask our guests to rise, and I invite all members to provide them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Fred Alexandruk. He lives in Edmonton, but he is the owner and operator of Pinehurst Lake Wilderness Cabins, which has boat access only. He met with me here today to try to resolve some of his outstanding issues. I'd like to invite my colleagues to give him the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really excited today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 21 employees from the local government services division of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. They are participating in the first public service employees tour, and they are very excited to be here. The group includes both new and long-term staff who are looking to better understand the context in which they work and just how important their job is to the work that we do in serving Albertans. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Sara Ahlstrom, JD Kliewer, Irene Black, Pat Chapman, Lisa Awid-Goltz, Carmen Auld, Clara Bartha, Jeremy Schiff, Haley Wasserman, Catherine Dunn, Daniel Mireault, Irfan Ansari, Christina Kortmeyer, Arlynn Neuman, Ronda Morgan, Karen Clarke, Mary Harron, Christina Ward, Olimpia Pantelimon, Joanne Campbell, and Aleks Nelson. I'd ask that the members here please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my sister-in-law JoAnne Watson, who is up in the members' gallery. She is the youngest sister of my dear late wife, Heather, and every time I see her, I tear up. She's here today for meetings with the CLPNA, the licensed practical nurses. I think that's what that stands for. I'd ask, Jo, that you stand and that everyone please give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Michael Martyna. Michael is here with a group of medical students advocating for aboriginal health. Not only is he a medical student; he was a candidate for the Alberta Liberals in West Yellowhead. Michael was studying to get into medical school, was running as a candidate, and in the dying days of the campaign Michael worked hard to help me get elected in Edmonton-Meadowlark and sacrificed his seat for West Yellowhead. I would like to thank Michael and all medical students for their advocacy and ask the Assembly to give him the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you, Michael.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Foothills started something great. We're good colleagues and friends, so I'll finish it. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Health it is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a guest who's joining us from the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta. You got part of it. JoAnne Macdonald-Watson is the president of the college, and she's a licensed practical nurse from Red Deer working in the emergency department of the Red Deer regional hospital. I just want to mention that later this afternoon our hon. Health minister will be tabling the college's annual report, and we're pleased that JoAnne is able to join us for that today. One more time could we have JoAnne rise? I'd invite all members to give her another warm welcome.

Donald M. Hamilton

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to Mr. Don Hamilton, who served as an officer of the Legislature from 2003 to 2008. Mr. Hamilton was born and raised in Alberta. He believed in helping to make the province a better place. As an ordained minister Mr. Hamilton lived his life for the good of others. From his work in establishing the Alberta service corps to serving as the first executive assistant to an Alberta Premier under Premier Harry Strom, Mr. Hamilton strove to make Alberta a caring and inclusive community.

Mr. Hamilton also believed in the value of sport. In addition to being involved with the 1978 Commonwealth Games and the horse-racing tribunal, Mr. Hamilton was also inducted into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame as the general manager of the 1962 to 1964 Edmonton Huskies junior football team. Winners of three consecutive Canadian championships, the players and staff of this team were a shining example of working together for success.

In his capacity as Ethics Commissioner Mr. Hamilton worked passionately to educate Members of the Legislative Assembly, their constituents, and Alberta's youth. He believed that engaging youth was crucial in developing the next generation of leaders in public service. Mr. Hamilton was a regular participant in School at the Legislature, where he would talk to grade 6 students about his role. He advocated for the creation of a lobbyists registry and witnessed its fruition during his tenure as Ethics Commissioner. He was also involved in the review and subsequent amendment of Alberta's conflict-of-interest legislation. Transparency and accountability were always paramount in his mind.

Mr. Hamilton served the people of Alberta as part of the public sector for over 30 years. His contributions and his legacy will be long remembered with our admiration and with our gratitude.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Physician Services Agreement

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week on a number of occasions I asked the Minister of Health to rescind the contract he imposed on the doctors of this province. I asked him to do the right thing and get back to the negotiating table with the AMA. The minister responded, saying he didn't need opposition telling him what to do, and he certainly wasn't going to talk about negotiations on the floor of the Legislature.

So what did he do? He started talking about it in the media. Over the weekend we saw in local newspapers the government's massive PR blitz spinning the facts around the minister's imposed contract on doctors by brushing aside opposition questions and avoiding the scrutiny provided by this Assembly. This minister is doing an Enron on accountability.

He won't talk about it to me, but he's more than happy to spend thousands and thousands of dollars on radio and newspaper ads to tell half of the story. The other half of the story is that doctors in Alberta have the highest overhead demands in this country. Doctors pay more in Alberta to set up and run their clinics than they would in any other province. Under this contract imposed by this minister programs that used to provide some financial support to doctors' clinics have been eliminated. Sure, the government is throwing cash at doctors up front, but they're clawing it back and more in the end.

Mr. Speaker, in the end it isn't about money. Doctors say that it's not about money, but it's about respect. The minister's repeated attempts to demonize doctors as money-grabbers is not factual. What is factual are doctors' demands for fair negotiations and their demands that the minister be truthful to Albertans. Albertans trust their doctors. What they don't trust is this government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I said that I would have a comment on members' statements, and I will do it later this week.

Let us proceed to Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Decorum and Civility

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after your election you urged members to develop a personal credo. As a former youth parliamentarian and a passionate adherent of our British parliamentary heritage, I was inspired by that address. I was further encouraged by the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition when she wrote to you, "I look forward to working with you along with other members in the House to improve decorum and respect." Wow, I thought. I was going to be part of a new era of civility, decorum, and respect.

Mr. Speaker, it has become clear that members of the Official Opposition are having a tough time meeting their leader's lofty ideals. Virtually every day you are forced to admonish the Official Opposition for their unparliamentary language and behaviour. Last week you severely admonished the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for making criminal accusations against someone not in the Assembly and unable to defend the accusation.

That behaviour extends outside the Assembly. When the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville said on Twitter that she was looking forward to visiting the constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, the local MLA responded, "Nothing gives me more energy than a bunch of PC hacks visiting my constituency." This is a poor reflection on the promise of the opposition leader to foster decorum and respect.

More recently one of the opposition leader's staff members characterized government supporters as "PC bootlickers." Really, hon. member? Is this the decorum and respect you refer to in your letter?

Mr. Speaker, sitting in this Assembly is indeed a privilege. Inside and outside of this august Chamber we must embody the title of honourable members, but sadly some of the members of the Official Opposition and their supporters do not want to improve decorum and respect either within or outside the Assembly. I ran for office hoping to elevate the level of discourse in this province. I had hoped that all members would join me, heralding a new level of enlightened political discussion. Sadly, some prefer to debase and coarsen that debate. Personally, I would prefer to serve Albertans with respect and integrity. Albertans expect and deserve nothing less.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, having heard the first two members' statements, I hope that this is not a path we're going to continue down from either side of the House. I will give you that speech very soon, but in the meantime please visit House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 422, where guidelines for members' statements are indicated.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Violence against Women and Girls

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to encourage my colleagues and all Albertans to wear a white ribbon to recognize November 25 as International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women and the beginning of the White Ribbon Campaign. The White Ribbon Campaign is the largest effort to end violence against women in the world. Started by a group of Canadian men, it has evolved to include men and women standing together to end violence against women and girls.

At least one out of every three women around the world has been beaten, coerced into sex, or otherwise abused in her lifetime, with the abuser usually someone known to her. Violence against women and girls takes many different forms and is not limited to any culture, country, or specific group of women.

No one should ever have to be part of a violent relationship where they feel threatened or intimidated. No child should grow up watching a parent being abused. Wearing a white ribbon is a personal pledge to never commit, condone, or remain silent about violence against women and girls and to remember the 14 young women whose lives ended in an act of gender-based violence in 1989 at l'École Polytechnique de Montréal.

Mr. Speaker, violence has significant consequences for our children and families and should not be tolerated. We all have a role to play in helping end violence in this province by supporting and building strong families and communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Corporate and Union Donations to Political Parties

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the current rules on campaign donations can lead to problems. We all know of the hundreds of thousands of dollars directed to one party by one individual with many different business interests before this government, and we've seen union members balk when their dues are used to support political parties with which they may not agree. In the spirit of raising the bar on openness and transparency, will the government now join the growing chorus of voices and put an end to political donations from both corporations and unions?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear to Albertans. With the advent of our Premier's assuming the leadership of this government, we have introduced legislation on provincial elections and donations, which is currently before the House and will be one of the most transparent ones in the land. We have also introduced a public disclosure act, which is known as the whistleblower legislation, which further speaks to those points. We have instituted what I would consider, and probably most would, to be the toughest expense and travel policies for not only elected officials in government but also for all public-sector employees and third parties. That shows leadership, and we are taking that leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is quite specific because the government's proposed legislation doesn't include any provisions to limit the source of donations. Earlier today we made a policy statement on it. Now, the Premier does like to talk about policy in question period on the odd occasion, so will she now agree with this policy and put an end to union and corporate donations?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, legislation has been tabled on the table. I don't think we will be discussing it in question period. The member, if she chooses to do so, will have ample opportunity to not only debate the legislation as it stands, but she can also file additional amendments. She knows she's privileged to do so.

Let me point out one difference. While these individuals continue to complain about standards and practices, this side of the House actually is introducing changes and brings in much more transparency and much more accountability to finances in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our understanding is that we specifically can't amend this section in the legislation, which is why I am asking this question today. We believe that putting election financing entirely in the hands of individuals is the easiest way to protect the process from even the perception of undue influence. Now, the feds have done it. Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and Quebec have done it. Isn't it time for Alberta to clean things up, too, and ban corporate and union donations?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I can't be more clear. The piece of legislation that speaks to that was introduced by this government and by this leader. That is why it is on the floor of this Legislature, and that is why we are debating it. If that particular member feels that there are ways of strengthening that legislation, instead of making innuendos during question period, table amendments, debate the legislation as it comes up for debate. All we're hearing is innuendos. I'm looking forward to some meaningful discussion out of the opposition.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would suspect that Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, may be up this afternoon, so let's be careful of the anticipation rule.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister is preparing to release his next quarterly update, and we all live in hope that it isn't another work of fiction. The minister has been insisting for months that there won't be a deficit because he won't have to borrow to cover operating, but that's just juggling the books. The minister is moving the province's capital spending out of the total budget into a new separate, different, alternative special budget so that he can then claim that things are balanced. They're not. It's borrowing. It's debt. Why won't he just admit it?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure where the hon. member is coming from because what we're doing on our budget is that as a budget we're bringing forward the operating plan, the savings plan, and a capital plan. It's all one budget. I'm not exactly sure what kind of fiction the hon. member is trying to put into Albertans' minds. Does she believe that they're gullible or something? I don't know.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're looking forward to seeing a balanced budget.

I want to ask about this quote from the Premier. "We will spend wisely and save intelligently, managing our finances to protect future [generations of] Albertans." She said that in this Assembly just 13 months ago. Why has she decided it's no longer necessary to protect future generations of Albertans?

Mr. Horner: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the instructions that I have from our Premier and this government are to ensure that we are doing exactly that, that we are protecting the economy of today for tomorrow for future Albertans, that we are ensuring that the infrastructure that Albertans need today and tomorrow is there for Albertans. We will not deficit finance the operations of this government. We have never said that we will.

Ms Smith: That's just the kind of doublespeak I'm talking about, Mr. Speaker. The minister refers to using everything in his financial tool box to get things done. If that tool box even exists, it's clear it doesn't have an axe, a razor blade, a sharp pencil, or even an eraser. Why won't he just admit that alternative financing, going to the capital markets, and public-private partnerships are just another way of saying debt?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think I've been fairly clear. I do agree that a P3 is a tool of financial borrowing just as going to the capital markets is, just as borrowing for the school that is in her riding that was built with a P3. Is she now saying that we should have waited until the school was 20 per cent higher in cost and the students were doing their school work in the street? Is that what the Wildrose capital plan is? The Wildrose Alliance policies are from before 2000, even, not today. Albertans need a policy for today, not yesterday.

The Speaker: Third and final set of main questions. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: We're just asking for the kind of policy that Ralph Klein would have introduced in this Chamber.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the growing body of evidence that this government, rather than raising the bar on openness and transparency in Alberta, is doing exactly the opposite. Instead of a quest for truth we get stalling, roadblocks, and hiding. On the simple issue of health care expenses the only formal investigation is looking into one individual at one health region. Why won't the minister order the release of all of the expenses of all of the executives for all of the regions dating back to 2005?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing that apparently we're going to go through a second week of questioning on this same line. This question has been asked and answered. I've lost count of the number of times it's been asked and answered.

The question that is before the government, and the question that should matter to all members of this House is, in fact, the expense policies that are in place today for travel, accommodation, hospitality, and all the other expenses. I think we've proven clearly that we have the most aggressive set of policies in the country. Everything we do in health care is to support better publicly funded health care. These policies support wise use of taxpayers' dollars in this regard.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This isn't the only example. There are also the examples of illegal campaign donations. The new legislation that the government is touting as the toughest in the land shuts the door on most of the past transgressions. This quote applies. "We can easily forgive a child who is afraid of the dark; the real tragedy of life is when men are afraid of the light." Where is the transparency?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it's peculiar that the member would say that because these policies for campaign donations – she wants to go back all the way to 2005. I note that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was the policy vice-president for the PC party till 2010, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek till 2010, the prior Member for Fort-McMurray till 2010, the Member for Airdrie. They were all developers of this policy. Now they choose to step aside and demand transparency. While this government is actually introducing transparencies, all they are doing is criticizing the policies that they were part of developing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been against the law since 2004, and it's not the only example. The queue-jumping inquiry is restricted, too. It can't look backward to where the evidence points. Rather, it seems designed to produce a result that the government can spin as a clean bill of health on ethics. I wonder: if it was someone other than the government family accused of misdeeds like this, wouldn't the investigations be a bit more vigorous and thorough?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, yet another innuendo. I've said clearly on a number of occasions that no matter who it is, if you have evidence, present it, and that person will be investigated.

However, let me show you the difference between leadership and the lack thereof. When the member of the opposition files illegal expense claims, she throws her secretary under a bus.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: When she ends up with intolerant candidates, she throws their associations under a bus. When she loses an election, she throws gullible, quote, unquote, Albertans under a bus. That is not leadership. What's happening on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, is leadership.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:01, and that point of order has been noted.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A health system that does not have a well-engaged medical profession will not succeed. In his November 22, 2012, letter AMA president, Dr. Michael Giuffre, says: "Does [the minister] really think he can run this health care system without the confidence of physicians . . . If the minister says [yes, he does], then I have news for him. He is losing it . . . This cannot go on." To the Minister of Health: do you or don't you want the respect and trust of Alberta's doctors by treating them as partners in health care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government works collaboratively with physicians on a number of levels. The Alberta Medical Association agreement and the negotiations that are going on toward that end are one part of our work with physicians across the province. We can cite many examples. I talked last week, for example, about the improvements in acute-care occupancy in our seven major hospitals and the significant reduction of the number of patients waiting in acute-care beds for admission to continuing care. All of these things were accomplished because of the collaboration and leadership that physicians continue to show in our health system. We count on that as a government, and we will continue to count on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have amongst the most demoralized physicians in the province and in the country and given that Dr. Lloyd Maybaum, president of the Calgary & Area Medical Staff Society, said that the minister was trying to hoodwink and bamboozle the public with nonsense numbers and figures and given that the government of Alberta recently placed radio ads advertising how much doctors are paid – Albertans deserve to have a government that bargains in good faith – to the same minister: why are you then wasting taxpayer dollars on radio ads instead of doing your job and getting back to the negotiating table?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, in the last month there has been some tremendous information released by the Canadian Institute for Health Information about our health care system. If the hon. member actually cares about the morale and the confidence of physicians and other health workers in other disciplines in our workforce, I am sure he would agree with telling Albertans that the province of Alberta has increased the number of physicians in this province by 60 per cent in the last 10 years compared to 23 per cent nationally. I'm sure he would agree that Albertans want to know about that. I'm sure he'd also want Albertans to know that our physicians are the best paid in the country, 29 per cent ahead of the national average.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I do care about Alberta's physicians. That's why I spoke up about physician intimidation and gladly left that side of the floor for this side.

Given that AHS has been a partner in the trilateral process of negotiating with Alberta's health care staff and doctors and given that the resulting negotiations will ultimately affect AHS operations, to the minister. You've cut the doctors out from their own negotiations with your unilateral imposition. Why have you also cut out AHS? Aren't they a partner?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member's idea of leadership is engaging in negativity, cynicism, and personal attack, if that's how he defines his role as a parliamentarian, we leave that to him. [interjections] We are engaged in discussions with the AMA toward a new agreement. We have a meeting scheduled for later this week. [interjections] We're very confident that we will be able to reach an agreement on all the issues, but it will be the right agreement for Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's please give the floor to whoever has it. This talking across the aisle is starting up again. We have young people here who are trying to learn something about the democratic process. Let's show them the best example we possibly can.

The leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Bullying in Schools

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Alberta School Boards Association rejected a proposal to provide protection of gay students and staff from discrimination and bullying. Clearly, gay and lesbian students need protection, and they're not going to get it from the ASBA. The Edmonton public school board, on the other hand, has implemented an effective and proactive policy on bullying that should be the standard for the entire province. To the Minister of Education: will you act to ensure that schools provide the highest level of protection to GLBT students from bullying and discrimination?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we absolutely will, and we did. We passed the Education Act. It has very strong measures with respect to antibullying that protect all Alberta students under a very broad and very inclusive framework. We expect every trustee and every school board in the province to comply with that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government caved in to the extreme right and removed any mention of the Human Rights Act from that Education Act, will the Minister of Education admit that this government's totally inadequate Education Act was a clear signal that school boards do not have to make ending the bullying of gay and lesbian students a top priority?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, many things in that statement are simply not true, in particular that the Human Rights Act is not referenced in the Education Act. It's in section 33, and I referenced it in a quote last Thursday when I was asked a very similar question. Maybe the hon. member would like to just review Hansard.

Mr. Mason: We know that they took that piece out, Mr. Speaker, because we saw the old act.

Given that the government has made it a human rights offence to discuss sexuality and religion in the classroom without previous parental consent and given that this provision hinders attempts by teachers to educate students about the need to be inclusive with all students will the minister admit that the government's policies harm and limit attempts to combat bullying of gay and lesbian students in our schools, and will he commit to repealing the offending section from the old Bill 44, and if not, why not?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, if he wants to talk about the Human Rights Act and Bill 44, I'm sure the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for that bill, would be happy to respond to him.

What I can say is that in his last question he talked about kowtowing to special-interest groups. Well, Mr. Speaker, those special-interest groups are parents. I wouldn't exactly call parents special-interest groups when you're talking about the education of their children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Expense Reporting by Ministers

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has promised to raise the bar on openness and transparency, but I'm not sure this government even understands what those words mean. Further demonstrating that this government cannot be trusted, we have learned that three ministers are preventing the release of their expenses. The Human Services minister, the Minister of Education, and the Deputy Premier are denying a request to see how they spend public dollars, information Albertans deserve to know. To the minister of accountability, transformation, and whatever else it is you claim to stand for: what is your government hiding?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in addition for it to be totally inappropriate for the hon. member to make allegations against another member, he's totally wrong. There are FOIP requests to the three ministers mentioned, and in each case the reply has been that all of those expenses will be made public. There's a section of the act which clearly provides that if all the requests are to be made public, then it is not provided specifically to the requester but to all of the public. Very open and transparent.

Mr. Wilson: To the same minister: what are you going to do about these three rogue members of your cabinet who are actively trying to suppress information that Albertans by law have a right to know now?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader rose on a point of order at 2:10. It has been noted. I was going to make some points of clarification. We'll wait for the point of order.

The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, unbecoming to be calling a member rogue when the member doesn't even understand the rules. Three requests under FOIP have been made, and three offices have responded to that request advising that all information – more than FOIP is requesting, all information – will be made public not only to the person that requested information, but it will be posted to the general public. Hence, no one is avoiding anything. The information will be made available. I take particular offence to that kind of language in this Chamber.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question was posed to the minister of accountability, not the Minister of Nothing at All, but I will simply ask for one clarification: when?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I stand, and you please sit.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, we don't have any ministers of nothing in this Assembly, and I would ask you to please reconsider how you phrase questions and to whom they go in the future.

We do have an Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, and I will recognize him now.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, we have the toughest and most transparent expense disclosure policy in Canada. All of the expenses are going to be posted online. That's going to happen in December. In addition to not being able to read the legislation that we've tabled in the House, they obviously can't read press releases either. It's been disclosed in a press release when it's coming out. Read it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Council of the Federation Energy Strategy

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that Alberta's future economic success is tied to getting products to market, yet it seems that every time a private-sector pipeline proposal is made, there is stiff opposition that threatens it. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is being done to help convince other jurisdictions in Canada that Alberta's resources can be transported securely to key markets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is certainly correct that helping to diversify Alberta markets really is the government's single most important economic challenge. That's one of the reasons that our Premier has led a push for the Canadian energy strategy, a strategy that will ensure that we take advantage of all the regional energy strengths that our country has to offer. Unlike the opposition, the Premier believes strongly that being at the table with other provinces will help fully realize the economic opportunities for everyone in resource development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's all fine in theory, but B.C. is still complaining. My second question to the same minister: what success has Alberta had in working with other provinces on these issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is just returning from what has been a very successful Council of the Federation meeting in Halifax, where Premiers engaged in a lot of discussion on the topic. The Premier met with the Premier of Quebec, where it was determined that the provinces would strike a working group to share expertise on responsible energy development and examine key issues around pipelines. The Premier also received strong support from other Premiers for a proposal that would see more of Alberta's oil shipped to eastern Canada. That's leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Energy. What are the benefits of such a west-to-east pipeline to Alberta and to all of the rest of Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the benefits are spread right across the country. The benefits accrue not only to Alberta but to the many provinces across central and eastern Canada that can benefit from having competitive, good-quality, western Canadian crude and petroleum products that can serve the energy needs of central Canada and eastern Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo asked the Justice minister when he would make election laws tougher and penalties harsher. Ironical since that member was on the board of the Wood Buffalo Housing Development Corporation in 2007 when it gave a $2,250 donation to a certain political party. This is an illegal donation. The election finances act prohibits housing management bodies from making political donations. To the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: when will your ministry raise the bar on openness and transparency and voluntarily disclose all illegal donations regardless of timing?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really have no clue how to answer those questions over and over again in a way that is comprehensible, in a way that those members can understand. What is particularly interesting about this question is that the member to whom she is referring, because she is referring to a PC member, is one Guy Boutilier, who was then a Wildrose Alliance member of this House. So, first of all, I would advise the members of the opposition that, if they have any allegations, table them appropriately and be very cautious who you are pointing fingers at because, again, here is another member who is no longer a member of this Assembly.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Nonmembers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me just remind you all, beginning with the Deputy Premier in this instance, that we should not be referring to people who are not here and not able to defend themselves. I've commented on this before. I would say the same to members of the opposition as well.

The next question, please.

Mrs. Towle: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I'm referring to the current Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, who was a board member at the time.

Section 1(l) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act clearly spells out that management bodies under the Alberta Housing Act such as the Wood Buffalo Housing Development Corporation, of which the current member was a board member at the time, are prohibited from making contributions to political parties. To the Justice minister: given that this diversion of money intended to support the poorest Albertans happened five years ago, does he understand why Albertans might find limiting disclosure to only three years problematic?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we are debating this bill this evening, I understand. The hon. member will have ample opportunity to discuss this then. I would also refer her to section 52 of the legislation, which imposes a three-year limitation period. Also, if the hon. member has any particular information, again, that she'd like to disclose, I welcome her to contact the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mrs. Towle: My final question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, whose department is responsible for making sure that the poorest Albertans can access subsidized housing. What have you done to make sure that tax dollars intended to help very low-income Albertans are being used properly? Can you confirm that this money will or has been returned?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, all I can confirm is that I haven't heard anything about this case. But it is very clear in law that donations like those she's insinuating cannot be made. I'll look into it. Everyone should understand that whether it's a municipality or housing body, they do not make those donations. It's their responsibility to make sure that they don't.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Liquor Distribution System

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission has one liquor distributor for the whole province of Alberta, with a warehouse located in the city of St. Albert. The distributor operates as a monopoly. All of the liquor in the province is distributed through that warehouse. Many liquor imports are coming into the province through the city of Calgary, trucked up the QE II to St. Albert, from where they're then distributed, oftentimes back down to the south end of the province. The result is an inefficient system. My questions are for the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance. How do Alberta's liquor distribution costs compare to other . . .

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I would suggest, first of all, that I disagree that it's an inefficient system. As most members will know and as was pointed out, Alberta has Canada's only fully privatized liquor retail system. Having said that, independent reviews have been made on the efficiency of our distribution system. In fact, PricewaterhouseCoopers recently studied the model and came to that conclusion, that it is a very efficient system. That study, I'm told, is available on the AGLC website.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: will the government introduce some competition into the liquor distribution business in Alberta? [interjections]

Mr. Horner: Well, it's interesting that the left side of the House would be interested in that type of a question.

Mr. Speaker, the system is working quite well. We're not into fixing systems that aren't broken. The service of the private operator is very closely monitored. There is some contracting out that goes on with that. The costs to liquor businesses have either held the line or gone down in some instances for many years. The system is working quite well.

Dr. Brown: Well, will the minister undertake to eliminate some of the inefficient necessity of having to truck the liquor all the way up from Calgary, where it's flown in from international cities, to St. Albert and then going back down there? Is there some way to get rid of that inefficiency?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I agree that we always want to be very cognizant of whether or not these systems are being efficient. To that end, I do know that the AGLC has hired third-party verification of that system over the years. We've also asked them to look into whatever are the best possible options. As they look to expand, we want to ensure that they are expanding in a very efficient manner. That's why these outside parties, who have expertise in distribution and warehousing, are being asked their opinion. We believe that they will give us the best advice.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Alberta continues to be one of only five provinces to fund private schools. Further, there is little or no accountability for the public money that is going to these private institutions. For instance, a Calgary private school was found to be inflating grades, teaching children in the basement of a church, the principal and founder of the school was deemed to be unemployable in our separate school system, and to top it off, he had purchased a luxury car and signed a $1.1 million mortgage, all being paid for by the private school receiving taxpayer money. To the Minister of Education: how is it that the International School of Excellence is still operating with next to zero accountability to either the children learning in the school or the taxpayer dollars?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let me just respond to the specific question by saying that that particular school has been under a great deal of oversight and monitoring over the last year. There have been some measures taken, and Albertans can be assured that the dollars we are investing in private schools are going through to instruction based on the accountability measures that we've put in place.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we can.

Let me ask you a specific question: how does someone get to operate a private school if they're deemed unemployable in our separate school system? How do they get a licence to operate a school, to run it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I caution the member because his comment is not accurate, and he is talking about someone who is not here to defend themselves and was not fired from the public system.

I guess it gets to the root of a real question that we wrestled with through Inspiring Ed. Is it the success of a system or a school division or a school that is important to Albertans, or is it the success of every child? Should we be investing in a system, should we be investing in a school, or should we be investing in children and the success of each child? Every child is different, unique, and their parents may choose to send them to different . . .

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, why are we funding private schools that tend to divide communities on the basis of wealth or religion when we should be committed to one publicly funded education system?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad he allowed me to expand here. In Alberta it's the parents who get to choose where the kids go to school and not the opposition. We want every child to succeed, and that's why we provide many different opportunities for those children to succeed. We recognize that not every child can be fit into the same box. Every community is different. We want to invest in their success, not just invest in a school and not just invest in a system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Full-day Kindergarten Programs

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend the Education minister said that full-day kindergarten might be ready by 2014. Before the election the Education minister claimed that it would be ready by the fall of 2013. When the Premier was running for the leadership of the PC Party, she promised to introduce full-day kindergarten within a year of being elected. Well, more than a year has passed, and we're still waiting. You didn't run on maybe a kindergarten in 2014, Mr. Education Minister. How can we look upon this as anything but another broken promise?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think it's a good and fair question, but I think the members would probably acknowledge for Albertans that we actually do have full-day kindergarten right now. Full-day kindergarten was operating in 2012, and it will be operating in 2013, and it will be operating in 2014. The question is: are we going to expand that? Are we going to offer it to more Albertans? How are we going to pay for it? Who is going to deliver it? And how does it fit into our early childhood development strategy? We're going to have those things settled very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that all research suggests that children who have access to full-day kindergarten perform much better throughout their school years, when will this government take real action on the Premier's promise and introduce full-day kindergarten in Alberta on their dime, not the Edmonton Public School Board dealing with it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, Mr. Speaker, not to split hairs, but the Edmonton Public School Board's dime is our dime. There is one taxpayer. We fund school boards, and we're happy to do it, and we think it's a fantastic investment. We recognize that every kid deserves the best possible start in life, and that's why we commend the school boards that are offering full-day kindergarten for targeted kids. We know that we want to expand that, but we're not quite sure how much investment that's going to take in infrastructure and how that will tie in with other programs. We want the best possible solution.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this Education minister is really giving us no idea of when this full-day kindergarten is going to come, what it's going to look like, maybe in 2014, will the minister then admit that the absence of full-day kindergarten for Alberta's children is a particularly egregious broken promise?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member talks about an absence of full-day K. I hate to repeat myself, but two minutes ago I just acknowledged that there's full-day kindergarten right across the province today. And he should be reminded that the Alberta School Boards Association even voted last week that they don't support mandatory full-day K. So there's a little bit of work to do to make sure we understand how this is going to fit so that each child that needs this resource to succeed is going to – we're going to put the resources where they give Albertans the most benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Government Relationship with Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing more fundamental in our health care system than the concept of respect. It should be the guiding principle for how government interacts with our front-line staff and our health professionals. Instead, this Health minister is busy wasting thousands of dollars on radio ads trying to mislead Albertans about the contract imposed on our physicians while our surgeons are saying that they are in favour of fiscal responsibility but that the proposed changes are arbitrary and imprecise. Will the minister, then, stop muddying the waters, be open and honest about some of the costs facing doctors, start showing them a little respect, and stop your bullying and intimidation?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've noted the point of order from the Government House Leader at 2:27.

I'll just remind Calgary-Fish Creek and others that the minute you use terms like "mislead" in the way it was just used, it's going to surely result in a point of order, and it's going to surely consume time. So let's be very careful, okay?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to use House time to answer personal accusations presented by the hon. member opposite because, of course, as we know, she didn't ask a question of government policy.

What I will use the time for is to take this opportunity to inform the House that I am meeting with the president of the Alberta Medical Association later this week, remind the House that we have been over 20 months in negotiations toward a new contract, and remind the House that we continue to work for a new agreement because we believe that's in the public interest, provides for the best possible health care for Albertans, and preserves our position as the best province in Canada in which to practise a health discipline.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has bullied physicians, broken a promise to call an inquiry, and now has imposed an agreement on our physicians, that has left them very angry, alienated, and disillusioned, when will this Health minister get it into his head that this isn't just about money? This is about respecting the doctors that hold our entire health care system together.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the premise of the question, the hon. member is right. This is certainly not just about money. This is about standing up and defending a strong, publicly funded health care system to serve this province and lead this country. This is about a discussion about public policy to support a health care system that is second to none in this country. Most of all, this is about a government and a caucus defending against an Official Opposition which seeks to privatize and dismantle and to undermine confidence in that publicly funded health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie has risen on a point of order at 2:29. It's noted.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's just get this on the record. The minister is full of you know what. Given that our surgeons have argued for fiscal responsibility and given the fact that the former AMA president, Linda Slocombe, has stated that the PC government has failed to address the issues around engagement of physicians within decision-making, when will the government put an end to its bullying tactics and get back to the negotiating table with our doctors?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I have just said, this government is having further discussions with the Alberta Medical Association this week. As I said last week, I'm not going to engage and I'm not going to support the hon. member, in fact, in undermining confidence in these discussions, in undermining confidence in public health care, and in calling into question anyone's motives, be it the members of the government, physicians, other health care professionals, or anyone involved in this system. We are committed to a strong agreement with physicians in this province. We will continue working with them to do our best to achieve that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Student Finance System

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am the father of three beautiful daughters who are currently in postsecondary and graduate studies. Even though they work one, even two jobs to pay for the incurable expense of being a student, they do come to dad every now and then for some financial support. I'm okay with that. But they would rather go about taking out a student loan than come to me. I guess my interest rates are too high for them. My question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. I understand you've recently made changes to the student loan program, yet there still is a lot of frustration out there with getting that support. Can the minister explain what new improvements were actually made to support students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that question, and I thank the hon. member for that question. We've been listening to students, and in consultation we've made a number of changes to make it easier to provide access to our student funding programs. We certainly understand and appreciate that today's students are digital natives, and as such they've told us that they want and need and use online services. As such, we've launched a new website this past spring called studentaid.alberta, which eliminates the stress of students having to wait days and weeks to find out about their funding. They can find out now in real time how and when they qualify for student aid. This is just one of the changes we've made, and we look forward to working . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Well, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker, my second question: a postsecondary education is expensive, and many students can't even afford to attend without a loan, so can the minister explain how the amount that a student qualifies for is determined?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, we certainly appreciate that every student's circumstances are somewhat unique, so we assess each student on a case-by-case basis. There is a formula, and basically the education and living costs a student faces minus the resources they have available equals their financial need. I can tell you we've made some significant improvements this year. We've eliminated the use of RRSPs, savings, part-time earnings, and parental contributions from the eligibility requirements for those student loans. Alberta has the most generous student loan programs in all of Canada, and we'll continue to work and improve those access issues for our students.

Mr. Webber: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if a student disagrees with the amount granted for their student loan, do they have any means for appeal at all?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I would encourage any student who is denied funding or doesn't feel they've received adequate funding to contact student aid Alberta. The staff in my department are dedicated to finding solutions to help students. I will tell you that if we can work within the framework of the system, if a particular student needs help, we will find them the help they need.

New School Construction Priorities

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Education minister. Given what's happened today, he should be good and warmed up by now, I think. The government talks about fulfilling its commitments, but when it comes to building schools, boards, parents, and communities wonder if their needs are going to be met. In the Chamber the Minister of Education talks about building schools based on priority according to capital plans. Outside the Chamber, though, he mentions that the government may have special projects that aren't on anybody's capital plans. To the Minister of Education: why would you do that, and what would you say to a community that doesn't get its school because you built a special project?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the member is referring to. I haven't talked about any special projects that are going to be pulled out of the air. We're talking about trying to incent collaboration and co-operation within the community and build hubs, and we're going to try and be nimble to proposals that may come forward from communities, from school boards, from parents, and from people within that community to build those hubs. I'm sure the member wants us to listen to the community and listen to parents. That's exactly what we want to do.

Mr. McAllister: I very much do, Mr. Speaker. For clarity to the Minister of Education, it was comments made during a breakfast with the ASBA last week.

Given that boards spend time and resources developing their capital lists, why won't the government commit to drafting a list of the top 50 priority education building projects so parents, boards, and communities aren't left in the dark and they do know who'll be getting their school?

Mr. J. Johnson: You know what, Mr. Speaker? It's a very good question, and if he asks it of our Infrastructure minister, he'd tell you we actually do publish the lists. The lists are online of all the projects that are approved. Each school division has lists that they send to us of their priorities, and we're wrestling with that and measuring those against each other. The list I would really like to have that could help us inform our capital planning with school boards is the secret list of the Official Opposition of the $1.6 billion in projects that they would defer. I'm sure some of those must be schools, and if they can advise us which ones they think can wait longer, we'd be happy to consider that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The Wildrose Party would find savings. I'm sure that most Albertans recognize the bloated bureaucracy that needs shaving on the other side.

Albertans want and deserve to have the politics taken out of decision-making when it comes to where schools are built. Parents want to know that their communities are going to get the schools that they need. To the minister: why aren't projects chosen based on needs, instead of the whims of this bloated government?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how to answer that. We're trying to do a good job of balancing the demands right across the province, which are significant, which is why our Premier has mused about financing. That demand for schools seems to be in direct opposition to their demand that we take on no debt or take on no financing. It's interesting that last week alone the Member for Airdrie was turning sod on a financed school in his division beneath a government sign, a P3 school. I'm not sure how you reconcile those two.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

New-home Buyer Protection

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend I heard some concerns from my constituents regarding Bill 5. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Now that Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, has passed third reading and almost into legislation, how does this impact Alberta? Will the purchase of a new home tomorrow be protected under this act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very excited that we have passed – unanimously, I'd like to say – Bill 5 through third reading in this House. Unfortunately, Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, won't be retroactive. It also doesn't apply to homes that are built today or built tomorrow. Once the legislation is passed, we have some foundational work to do to processes and policies and paperwork to put into place. We're still anticipating it will be in place by the fall of 2013.

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister again: given that homeowners are looking for protection as quickly as possible, what steps need to occur for this legislation to be enforced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The biggest piece of work yet to do is to build the regulations around the legislation. Actually, as soon as the bill was passed, we started online consultations with stakeholders. We'll be meeting with new-home buyers' organizations, we'll be meeting with the builders and the developers, with the warranty companies to construct the regulations. We've already made a lot of good progress. Once those are complete, we anticipate we'll be ready for the fall of 2013.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you. To the same minister. For some homeowners who already have warranty coverage, it is very difficult for them to get their claim processed. Will the minister assure us that with this process it will be easier for them to get home repairs if something goes wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have heard from a lot of people who have purchased homes – a warranty comes along with it – about the process in place. It's not an official or legislated process, but now that we have mandated new-home warranties, it will fall under the Insurance Act. There were new rules brought forward just this summer, I believe, for the Insurance Act on the appeals process and making sure that you got satisfaction. All new-home warranties, when this is in place, will fall under that. Customers will know they're getting satisfaction then.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Stony Plain.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The citizens of Blackfalds have been waiting to see a shovel in the ground for a new elementary school that has been waiting on the school board's capital plan for over three years. This government inaction gives a lot of uncertainty for the parents of 180 children of the age of three who will need classroom space in two short years. Can the Minister of Infrastructure tell my constituents where the new school for Blackfalds falls on your government's infrastructure priority list?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, here we have another example. I wonder if the member is willing to take a P3 school, which would be a financed school. Nonetheless, we recognize that there are some significant pressures in this member's constituency. We appreciate that. We're going to do everything we can to try and deliver the school desks where they're needed in Alberta, either for growth-enrolment pressures, like in his case, or in areas where we've got buildings literally falling apart and we have health and safety issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections]

Hon. Member for Airdrie, please, if you have a point of order, rise on it. Otherwise, yield the floor to your colleague, whom I've now recognized. Thank you.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not talking about extra money. I'm just talking about a priority list.

Given that my constituents are left up in the air about a new school, I'm sure that many other Albertans across the province are, too. When will the Minister of Infrastructure release a province-wide list of provincial infrastructure projects along with upgrades and the criteria used to create it so Albertans will know where their priorities are ranked in your ministry?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, those lists of what the province intends to build – from the Alberta museum to all the schools across the province, investments in health care and hospitals – are all on the website. Those lists are announced, and they're announced with the budget. It takes a long time to build those lists, and they're changing all the time. When you think about thousands and thousands of projects across the province, what happens when you have a Slave Lake? What happens when you find mould in a school? What happens when a roof caves in? Do you just tell them, "No. You're further down the list. We're not nimble enough to respond to that"? It's not quite as simple as they'd like.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell this isn't really going anywhere. To the Minister of A, T and T: when will you heed the call of Albertans, live up to the name of your ministry, and demand that the government release a public infrastructure list with the criteria used to create it? That would be truly transparent to Albertans. This would be a true transformation for this government.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would refer the hon. member to the Alberta government website. Approved projects are on there. What the member is asking for is a preview. I don't blame him for being curious because we have a very good budget process. The fact is that we release on an annual basis the budget process, a lot of those priorities, and when we do that in the spring, the hon. member will see what the next schools are on the list, the next roads on the list, the other infrastructures projects on the list. We set priorities, and we do our best to follow them every single year.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. In a few seconds from now we will begin with our next person in line for members' statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Joint Action on Arthritis Framework

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 18, 2012, the Arthritis Alliance of Canada, or AAC, released the Joint Action on Arthritis: A Framework to Improve Arthritis Prevention and Care in Canada. I was pleased to speak at the launch in Calgary that day.

As there are more than 4.6 million Canadians who suffer the effects of arthritis, this is a chronic disease that impacts many around us. I myself am a sufferer. There are three pillars of the framework that help address this impact: one is advancing knowledge and awareness, two is improving prevention and care, and finally, supporting ongoing stakeholder collaboration. In the framework everyone has a role in working towards these pillars: the patients, the health care professionals, the government, the industry partners, the AAC members, and, of course, the general public. It's important that these groups come together.

Arthritis can affect people of any age, and it is the most common cause of disability in Canada with the pain and limitations it can cause for those who have it. The AAC's framework executive summary notes that "the total economic burden of [osteo- and rheumatoid arthritis] in Canada, including direct health care costs and productivity losses to the economy, will grow from $33.2 billion in 2010 . . . to over $68 billion in 2040." Mr. Speaker, it's through the collaboration suggested by the report that an impact can be made on the daily lives of those with arthritis and lessen the burden it causes both financially and physically.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Family Care Clinics

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the government made a last-minute and expensive election promise to build 140 new family care clinics in our province. They made this promise without consulting physicians. They made this promise without providing any evidence that these clinics will benefit Alberta families more than our current system of primary care networks. They made this promise without explaining whether they plan to shut down existing primary care networks in order to pay for the new government-run clinics.

The Health minister needs to provide Albertans with a cost-per-patient accounting of a family care clinic compared to existing primary care clinics. To date we have not seen this information. The Wildrose supports family care clinics where a need for them can be shown and where they will not put existing primary care facilities at risk.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans in both rural and urban centres want a government that will put forward meaningful solutions to some of the problems they experience in our health care system like long wait times. Instead, what they have is a government that mismanages our health care dollars and throws money at risky experiments.

There is no evidence that establishing family care clinics in rural communities will decrease wait times or improve access to health care. Family care clinics will do nothing to address the huge issue of physician shortages that so many of our rural communities are facing. People in rural Alberta are concerned that if they have a family care clinic in their area, they might actually have a more difficult time recruiting physicians. Why would doctors want to invest in establishing their own private clinic in a rural community where they are going to face direct competition from a government-run and -financed family care clinic?

Mr. Speaker, it is unacceptable that this government is putting primary health care for hard-working Albertans at risk across the province just to try and win a few votes.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice pursuant to section 15(2) of the standing orders that at the appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege concerning the failure of the Chief Electoral Officer to distribute his recommendations for legislative amendments, submitted to the Minister of Justice on August 27, to all members of the Legislative Offices Committee and the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That is noted.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the minutes of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo's regular council meeting dated January 24, 2006. This is showing that the current PC MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was appointed treasurer of the Wood Buffalo Housing & Development Corporation as of January 24, 2006.

I also rise to provide five copies of the current PC MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo's bio, which shows that he was a Wood Buffalo housing corporation director from 2005 to 2010.

I also provide five copies of the 2007 PC annual financial statement and five copies of page 46 of the PC annual financial statement showing that the Wood Buffalo Housing & Development Corporation donated $2,250 to the PC Party.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the requisite number of copies of the 2011 Alberta College of Medical Laboratory Technologists annual report and the 2011 College of Alberta Denturists annual report on behalf of the Minister of Health. Both organizations are key partners in providing safe, efficient, and professional health services to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings if I may. First, I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta 2011 annual report. Licensed practical nurses are health professionals regulated by the Health Professions Act. The legislation gives the college the ability to govern and regulate the profession of licensed practical nursing in Alberta. This year's annual report highlights collaboration, quality education, practice excellence, growth of the profession, and their continued commitment to the protection of the public.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling, with the requisite number of copies, is the Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate office 2011-2012 annual report entitled We're in This Together. The Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate works to promote and protect the rights of mental health patients and those acting on their behalf by ensuring they are informed about their rights under the Mental Health Act. This year's annual report focuses on the theme of compassion and features interviews with several Albertans speaking about the role compassion has played in their lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters from the Chief Electoral Officer. The first letter is dated August 27 and is addressed to the Minister of Justice. The second letter, September 24, is a letter to the chair of the Legislative Offices Committee addressing questions raised by MLAs in committee on September 13, 2012.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his stead I have the appropriate number of copies of a collection of photographs and messages put together by Fort McMurray residents who are demanding immediate action to twin highway 63. It's called Reality: A Collection of Photographs Illustrating the Common Dangers on the Torturous Gateway to the North Known as Highway 63.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has tabled the document I was going to table.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. On behalf of my colleague the leader of the Liberal opposition and Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Medical Association President's Letter which he referred to in his questions today.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to table the requisite number of copies of a number of documents: firstly, the letter that I referred to in my member's statement from the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition dated May 23, 2012; a copy of the Twitter comment made by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, dated September 13; a further Twitter comment made on November 15; and finally, the requisite number of copies of a final tweet that I did not reference in my member's statement because I don't think I could have gotten through the member's statement. It was made by a Mr. John Winslow, who was introduced in the House on May 28 as a good friend of the Wildrose by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. On Thursday, August 3 . . .

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, for crying out loud.

Dr. Starke: I just want to read this into the record, though, so that it is in the record. I quote . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please. Hon. Member for Airdrie, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, please.

Hon. member, just table the document, and everyone will be able to read it simultaneously. I'm going to be reminding people again about tablings and what the procedure is for that. I'd again ask House leaders to remind their own caucuses of what the procedures are. Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the invoice received by Alberta Transportation for the asphalt heater used earlier to assist in line painting for 36 kilometres of a new section of highway 63. I had promised at one point to this Assembly that I would provide the final amount for this additional work done to help ensure the safety of drivers on the twinned section. Today I can tell you that the final cost was $43,682.75. The use of the asphalt heater helped to clear the ice off the highway and heat the pavement to help accept the paint and then to keep it there.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I just noticed that I'll be tabling very soon all of the comments of a Mr. Craig Chandler, who was introduced by the Solicitor General the other day, and the comments he's made in the past, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. This is for tablings. This is not for notices of tablings. You've been here for a few years. You should know that by now.

Let us move on. Are there any other legitimate tablings?

I believe we have no tablings to the Clerk and no more tablings, so we're going to deal with the points of order. [interjections] I am sorry. I was sensing some interruptions there while I was speaking.

We have a point of order raised at 2:21 by the hon. Member for Airdrie. Please proceed with your citation and your point.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Anderson: Three points of order, actually, Mr. Speaker, but I'll do one at a time in the order that you request. The first one was certainly the most egregious. The Deputy Premier, someone that you would think would understand procedure and decorum in the Legislature, as he always claims to do, stood up and said: when the Leader of the Official Opposition makes illegal expense claims. Illegal expense claims.

Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to the standing orders under 23. There are a whole bunch of them here because they all virtually apply.

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder . . .

and

- (l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

Also, I would turn your attention to Beauchesne's, specifically sections 486, 488. Obviously, it talks about the context the comments were made in and so forth. Section 488 as well as 489 specifically say that it's unparliamentary to refer to a member as doing something illegal, taking illegal actions and so forth.

Here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. We have been going through this for a while. We do talk in this Legislature about illegal donations – no doubt about it – made to the governing party. Absolutely. And we do table proof and evidence of those things. But one thing that I certainly can't recall – and I would ask the members opposite to please correct me if I'm mistaken and to produce the Hansard where that was done – is any folks in this room saying that someone over on that side, naming a specific member, has done something illegal. I don't think we've ever said that.

We've obviously said that there have been illegal contributions made to their party that haven't been paid back and so forth. We've gone through that whole exercise. But, of course, we all know that when it comes to talking directly about another member of this Assembly, there is certain language that is completely unparliamentary. Saying that a member of the Official Opposition has done something illegal is, clearly, unparliamentary language of the greatest degree, in fact.

Now, the second part of it, Mr. Speaker, is that it's not even factually accurate. First of all, the Leader of the Opposition did not submit the expense to the Legislative Assembly Office. It was never submitted. The only reason anybody knows about it is because it got incorrectly put on the website because this opposition member wanted to put all of her expense claims on there, and this one, which was withdrawn before it even went to the LAO, did get into that pile and posted. An unfortunate accident. It happens, for sure. But it was never ever submitted. So that's not true.

Secondly, even if it was submitted, Mr. Speaker, it is not illegal in any way, shape, or form at all. In fact, it's not even against LAO policy. The LAO policy is very clear that we make claims, we put them into the LAO, and they decide whether a claim is legitimate or does or does not fall under the reimbursement policy and then say yes or no as to whether to make that reimbursement.

Many of us, I would assume, in this Legislature have made a claim and then had it come back; for example, a claim for a hotel room or some kilometres or something like that, where it's been submitted, and our totals might have been off by a few dollars plus or minus. Who knows? The LAO will come back and say, "No, you've made a mistake here; that's not correct" and so forth. Then you make the adjustment, and you proceed further. That is standard practice. That is the policy. So not only did she not break the law; she did not even break the policy even if she had submitted it.

It is absolute malarkey for this Deputy Premier to stand in this Legislature and accuse this member of doing something illegal. The facts don't match it up. It's completely unparliamentary. Now, I know that member, the Deputy Premier, obviously thinks he knows what's illegal. He has no problem calling the police when a 70-year-old senior citizen on oxygen asks him to get off his porch. He has no problem thinking that that somehow is illegal and calls the police in to protect him against that 70-year-old senior on oxygen.

I would request that this Deputy Premier, frankly, get his act together and stop pointing to this ridiculous statement. If he wants to hold it up in the media, that's fine. Go for it. But don't come in here and say that this leader, who has got more integrity in her little finger than that member does over there – don't come in here and start calling into question her integrity – has done something illegal. That's got to stop, and it stops today, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here is the problem, to quote the hon. member. The members opposite engage in this mudslinging and bottom-feeding process of trying to malign everybody in government with all of these accusations and then have problems when the same thing happens to them.

Mr. Anderson: We accused you of doing something illegal?

Mr. Hancock: Yeah, as a matter of fact. The hon. member back there, which we'll talk about in the next point of order.

Here's the problem. The hon. member is exactly right with respect to the fact that one should not make allegations against another member, and I'll come back to that piece. His seatmate just last week was accusing people of committing crimes, and he hadn't provided any evidence of that. If you go back and read the Hansard, you, in fact, interceded, and I raised a point of order on that. Other members have done exactly the same thing. It's not in those members' hands to determine whether something is an illegal act or not an illegal act, but they have been using that term almost on a daily basis since this session started.

I would suggest to the hon. member that if he wants to take umbrage at it – and quite frankly I don't blame him for taking umbrage at it. I take umbrage at it, too, because I think this is an honourable place. I think we should all adhere to a standard where we don't accuse other people of crimes, where we don't sling these innuendoes across. There are appropriate processes for investigating appropriate things or inappropriate things. Even in his own comments he says: withdrawn before it went. Well, which was it? Did it go, or didn't it go? You can't withdraw it before it goes. You can only withdraw it after it goes.

That would be semantics, Mr. Speaker. There's other language. He says that it's not illegal; it's not even against the policy. There is nothing which allows an hon. member to make a donation to another political party out of their constituency funds, whether it's provincial or federal.

We could get into this back and forth on the details of things, but what's very clear is that every time somebody raises these allegations in the House, throws things around loosely, which they do on a daily basis, it casts mud on all of us. It brings the whole process into disrepute. It's all inappropriate, Mr. Speaker, every last bit of it.

I would withdraw the remarks that were made by the hon. Deputy Premier. It's inappropriate to allege that another member has done something illegal, absolutely inappropriate. I would ask that the other side take that into account every day in question period before they bring their malicious and false accusations against the members on this side.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe that clarifies this issue, and we can move on to the next point of order. Thank you, Government House Leader for withdrawing those remarks on behalf of and also for the reminder to other members of the House from the opposition to consider some of their remarks and perhaps withdraw them on occasion as well. Let us move on.

At 2:10 the Government House Leader rose on a point of order. Please, a citation.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 23:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature . . . to create disorder.

I'd ask you to call the Member for Calgary-Shaw to account for his totally unparliamentary comments during his question earlier today.

The member specifically named three ministers, myself being one of them –and I almost consider this to be a matter of personal privilege, in fact – in a question in which he was making allegations that we were not providing reports on expenses which were requested under FOIP. The hon. member obviously does his research on Twitter because last week there were a few twits about . . .

An Hon. Member: Tweets.

Mr. Hancock: No. They were twits.

They were twits making tweets about the fact that the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, Alberta branch, had made a FOIP request and had been turned down. But, in fact, if they had gone one step further and looked on the website of that organization, they would have found exactly the copies of the letters that were posted in return to those members. I will quote:

Your request . . . is denied under section 29(1) of the Act which states that the head of a public body may refuse to disclose to an applicant information that is to be published or released to the public within sixty days after the applicant's request is received.

The records will be available in the Legislature Library no later than December 14, 2012.

That is on the website of the Taxpayers Federation, the only people who've been raising this issue, and I presume that's where the hon. member got his research done because they're the people who raised the FOIP request.

It's been clearly asked and answered, the time frame is clearly there, yet this member gets up in the House and calls three ministers of the Crown rogues and alleges that they're not willing to release their information, making the innuendo that there's something to hide.

Mr. Speaker, this may sound like a fairly modest point of order. The fact of the matter is – and it goes back to the previous point of order – that the only thing we have in this House, really, is our integrity. We come here as honourable people to serve our constituents. I, for one, am an honest person. I shouldn't have to get up every day and say that I am an honest person, serving the public honestly.

If you want to disagree with me on my viewpoints with respect to a policy issue, have at it. If you want to disagree with me with respect to a matter of public policy, great; let's have a debate. But don't bring this institution down and don't bring me down by alleging that I am somehow dishonest or misusing the taxpayers' money for personal gain. That is not on. That is not right. That is reprehensible.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments from the hon. House leader. I want to make it very clear, I believe, on behalf of the member that he was not alleging that there had been an abuse of taxpayer money. We'd have to obviously take a look at the expenses, and I'm assuming that there is nothing in those that we should be worried about, especially from this Government House Leader. I've seen nothing in anything he's done in the past that would warrant any suggestion that any of his expenses are incorrect. He's an honourable member of this Assembly, for sure, absolutely.

That's not what was alleged in the question. Now, I will say that maybe it was because of the long nights that we've been sitting over the last week or something, but there's no doubt that on both sides there's been some language used that certainly could be better. I think that, clearly, inferring that members of this Assembly are rogues is not parliamentary language. On behalf of the member I'll withdraw that statement as well.

The Speaker: Thank you. That concludes that matter.

We've had one withdrawal on behalf of a government member, and now we've had one withdrawal on behalf of an Official Opposition member. That sort of squares that off. Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, I know you'll be visiting that comment, and I know that the hon. Government House Leader will be visiting his point with his colleague as well.

Let us move on to item 3 then. This is a third point of order, raised at 2:27 by the Government House Leader when the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was speaking.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This point of order is under Standing Order 23(h) and Beauchesne's 489. It refers to when the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was raising a question with the Minister of Health and indicated that this member is spending thousands of taxpayers' dollars misleading Albertans or to mislead Albertans. I'm not quite sure, exactly, of the syntax there. First of all, under 489 an allegation about misleading is clearly out of order and not parliamentary language. Secondly, under 23(h) this is clearly an allegation against a member.

There are many ways to raise appropriate questions in this House, as you've said over and over again. We are, actually, over the course of this fall session going further and further into the abyss of using unparliamentary language, showing a complete lack of respect for each other.

The only way this process can actually work, Mr. Speaker, is if we actually understand that each of us is elected to do a job, that we do and should respect each other as individuals coming to do that job and use language which does not detract from that respect as we try to bring out the areas of clear interest to Albertans. It's not in the interests of Albertans to throw around accusations of lies and misleading and falsehoods and all those sorts of things. It is very much in the interests of Albertans to have questions and answers which clearly delineate what the issues of the day are and how government is dealing with those issues.

There is no reason why government cannot and should not be held to account in an appropriate way in this House, but using the language that's been used in this specific case, the language of misleading Albertans, is a deliberate accusation, a deliberate slur against the Minister of Health, specifically directed to him and specifically using unparliamentary language.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My feeling on this is that this should be more of a point of clarification. I heard the question, too. I do not have the Blues in front of me, but from what I heard the member say, she was clearly referring to the ads being misleading, not the member being misleading, misleading the Legislature. It was referring to the ads that are running on the television right now, that in the member's opinion are misleading the public with regard to the issue with the doctors' contract negotiations with the government. I hope that clarifies it. If in your opinion or if after examining the Blues she unintentionally said that the member was misleading, then I'm sure she'll retract those comments. But what she was referring to, clearly, were the advertisements themselves.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, let me just remind you here. I don't have all of the Blues yet either, hon. members, but it was clear that the Speaker did hear the term "misleading the House" or words to that effect. I immediately rose and mentioned it to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, so that issue has been clarified.

Let's just be reminded, hon. members, that words like "misleading" or other words we heard today – "bullying" I think I heard today or a day ago – "intimidation," words of that nature, attributed to a member are going to lead to a point of order almost every single time. I've said it before – I hope to one day be able to stop having to say it – and that is that these issues consume enormous amounts of time. That having been clarified and admonished appropriately, let us move on.

Hon. members, I did have another point of order here, but there were so many coming at once, I may have gotten one of them out of order. I believe, Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order as well. I don't have the time noted on that one, unfortunately, but why don't you proceed with it.

Referring to a Nonmember

Mr. Anderson: Right. There were two, and perhaps these can be quick. If you could just remind the members opposite who are constantly reminding us of this, as are you, Mr. Speaker. A member rose and specifically attacked the former Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. He is not here to defend himself as a former member. Again, I'm just looking for some consistency on both sides in that regard.

The Speaker: Are you under 23(h), (i), (j) or somewhere in that neighbourhood? Just give us a citation so that Parliamentary Counsel can review it as well.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. Specifically, 23(l): "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." As you've said many times, we try to avoid, if possible, and make sure that we do not name members that are not here to defend themselves, so I would ask him to take care of that.

Also, I would note, too, that the contributions in question did occur in 2007. The member specifically made an allegation that that money somehow was with the Wildrose board, that it was while he was a Wildrose member. That's absolutely incorrect. The money did go to the PC association, not the Wildrose association.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This very clearly outlines exactly what we've been talking about. What happened during that exchange was that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake made allegations about another member. In doing so, she was not very clear in defining who that member was, so when the Deputy Premier rose to respond, he indicated that the member for that particular district at that particular time was actually a different member than it is now. It was more in the nature of clarifying that at the time the person that was referred to was not the same person. I was sitting here. That's the nature in which the hon. member rose and clarified.

But it brings about again what we've talked about. I think this has been a very useful discussion this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, because if hon. members would stop maligning other members in the House and stop bringing things in to raise specifics of that nature which are more appropriately dealt with in other forums and would stop bringing the whole reputation of this place into disrepute, others would stop engaging in the same manner, and life would be much better.

The Deputy Premier clearly did not make any allegation against the former Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo but merely indicated in his response to the question that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo at the time the hon. member was talking about was, in fact, someone other than the current member.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know, both the Member for Airdrie and the hon. Government House Leader have made some very valid points. At no time is it appropriate to cast aspersions on other members. At no time is it in the character and in keeping with the traditions of the House to use any opportunity, when you are recognized to speak, in some way to impute false motives either directly or indirectly. I have risen many times on this in the House. The Member for Airdrie is quite correct. I have cited that on many occasions.

I'm not going to go through the complete list again, but take a look at when these items come up. Most often these items such as accusations or attempts at character assassination of one form or another, generally speaking, come up during extended preambles, which are not allowed, prior to supplementary questions. Today, for example, uncharacteristic of the House we actually heard a few members use their private members' statements for purposes of drawing attention to another member of the House, not necessarily in the most polite way. That is not why private members' statements were designed, and I will make a comment on that a little bit further.

So take a look at some of the admonishments of the past and please heed the advice, if you will, of the chair to not engage in that kind of derogatory comment-making. I just get so concerned when I hear members going down that path because I know exactly where it's going to go, and I also know what the previous Speaker frequently admonished all of us about, and that was that more hon. members have talked their way out of this House than ever talked their way into it.

I know that we're dealing with some veterans, and I also know we're dealing with some rookies, so to speak, so I've been fairly lenient up until now. This session will end soon. Government House Leader, you and other House leaders are going to convene a meeting, I hope, and talk about some of these issues. The chair is prepared to enforce whatever you decide. But until that time I have to enforce what's already there.

I appreciate this clarification from both sides of the House. Hopefully, we won't need to rise on it again.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, that concludes that point and for the hon. Government House Leader as well. Did you have a final point of order?

Mr. Anderson: No, I don't.

The Speaker: It's been dealt with. It's been withdrawn. Okay. Thank you very much.

Let us move on.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Under points of order on Thursday of last week I was asked to rule on a point of order which was raised, I believe, by Edmonton-Strathcona pertaining to certain comments that were attributed to the Minister of Health. I indicated I would give everyone a chance to look at things over the weekend, and then I would rule accordingly. Prior to doing that, I would like recognize, however, the hon. Minister of Health for a comment.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The point of order to which you refer was raised with respect to an exchange between myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood beginning on page 961 of Hansard from last Thursday, November 22. In response to a question from the hon. member I expressed the view that I did not believe the hon. member was aware of facts that I thought he ought to have been aware of. In the course of conveying that, I used a term that I should not have used to describe that. I did not understand at the time that that remark would have been considered not appropriate, and I'm very pleased to take this opportunity to withdraw my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has withdrawn his remarks. I believe that concludes that matter. I see Edmonton-Strathcona nodding her head. Thank you for that as well, and thank you, hon. Minister of Health. That has been accepted.

I don't believe there are any other points of order or issues outstanding relating to points of order, so we can move on and recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a question of privilege.

Privilege Distribution of Election Act Amendments

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) this morning I provided written notice to your office of my intention to raise a matter of privilege today, and that notice has been distributed to all members in the House. This point of privilege relates to my ability as a member to participate fully and fairly in debate around Bill 7, and I'm pursuing this point of privilege in relation to the Chief Electoral Officer, who as an officer of this Assembly is a creature of the Assembly and accountable to this Assembly.

I'd appreciate it if you would allow me to present very briefly the facts and timelines associated with this as well as a brief review of my arguments about why the matter is timely as well as why I will be asking you to conclude that the matter constitutes a prima facie case that there has been a breach of my privilege as a member of the Assembly.

To the issue of the facts, Mr. Speaker, on August 27, 2012, the Chief Electoral Officer provided his recommendations around changes to the Election Act to the Minister of Justice. At that time he copied the chair of the Legislative Offices Committee, but the recommendations were not distributed to members of that committee at the time. The August 27 letter itself was provided to all committee members on Thursday, November 22.

The Legislative Offices Committee met on September 13, 2012. The Chief Electoral Officer was asked about the whereabouts of his recommendations. It was clear from that meeting that they had not been provided to the committee members, and the Chief Electoral Officer did not advise at that time that the committee chair was provided with a copy.

In a follow-up letter dated September 24 directed to the committee chair, the Chief Electoral Officer stated, "Our recommendations for legislative amendment, which address the issues you raise, were sent to the Minister of Justice... for the consideration of the Legislative Assembly." Once again he did not take the opportunity to advise that the recommendations had been provided to the committee chair.

On October 25 opposition critics of Justice and Solicitor General were offered their first briefing on Bill 7, wherein the ministry distributed a list of the recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer that were rejected by the government in developing Bill 7. So a partial list, Mr. Speaker.

On November 19 following opposition protest of it not being included in consultations concerning Bill 7, the Ministry of Justice provided a briefing to opposition members, which coincidentally included the provision of the entire list of Chief Electoral Officer recommendations. That was on November 19, Mr. Speaker.

The very next day, on November 20, the Minister of Justice tabled Bill 7 along with the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations for the amendments. For the first time all members of the Assembly were made aware of their content. There were over 100 recommendations.

At the Legislative Offices Committee meeting of November 23 MLAs had their first opportunity to question the Chief Electoral Officer about the distribution of his recommendations, and he was asked at that time why he had not provided his recommendations to the committee or taken the opportunity to clarify that they had been provided to the chair when advised that members of the committee had not been provided with his recommendations.

His response came in two parts, Mr. Speaker, which is in and of itself a bit concerning. He originally responded by simply advising the committee members of his August 27 letter, which copied the chair of the committee, and he stated that it was his intention at the time that it be distributed to all members. Fair enough. But subsequent to this response he was then asked about the meeting of September 13, when he was clearly made aware that members of the committee were not provided with the recommendations. He was asked why he did not advise the committee at that time that the chair had been provided with the recommendations. He was asked why his subsequent correspondence of September 24 did not advise the committee that the chair had been provided with the recommendations.

Now, to his credit, Mr. Speaker, when pressed on the matter, the Chief Electoral Officer did state that he does and should share some of the responsibility for the failure to distribute his recommendations to the Assembly rather than to the Minister of Justice alone. However, he also stated that he chose not to discuss the failed distribution of the recommendations to all members of the committee with members of the committee because he was unsure of what the process was for that distribution. "I was not aware at this time of what the timeline was for the distribution of the document. When we wrote this letter, we did not know whether or not there was a timeline that was being followed." It is worth noting that this deliberation of whether or not there was a timeline on the part of the Chief Electoral Officer occurred a month after he first sent the recommendations to the Minister of Justice.

Now, on the issue of timeliness, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that this is the first opportunity for me to bring this matter forward for consideration by this Assembly. Although the facts in question span several months, it was not until Thursday, November 22, that the August letter was made available to all members of the Legislature through their disclosure to the Legislative Offices Committee members. It was only with the release of this letter that the real failure on the part of the Chief Electoral Officer became apparent. It is the combination of the letter dated August 27 and then the Chief Electoral Officer's conduct at the meeting of September 13 and his formal response on September 24 that is the first of a two-part foundation on which we base our concerns. We could not have known about those until at the very earliest Thursday, November 22, when the August letter was delivered to the offices of committee members.

Regardless, Mr. Speaker, the second component of the facts which give rise to our concerns is the response of the Chief Electoral Officer to our questions on this matter, which we only heard at the Legislative Offices meeting of November 23. In particular, it was the Chief Electoral Officer's explanation for why he failed to use the opportunity provided to him on September 13 and again on September 24 to fix the mistake in the distribution of his recommendations which gives rise to the privilege motion here today.

The explanation was made on November 23. Not only was it reasonable for the opposition to bring the matter to the Chief Electoral Officer through the Legislative Offices Committee prior to bringing it before the whole Assembly and yourself, Mr. Speaker; it was really only when we heard the explanation from the Chief Electoral Officer that the extent of the breach became apparent. As such, I would argue that this point of privilege meets the timeliness requirements laid out under the standing orders.

Now, as to why the distribution issue represents a breach of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief comments on why it is we would ask you to find that there's a prima facie case to be made. Officers of the Legislature report to and through the legislative branch of our government. This is because certain matters are deemed to be sufficiently worthy of independence from the executive branch of government as to require the full authority and oversight of the whole legislative body which contributes to the governance of our province.

For example, the conduct of individual members of this Assembly is deemed to be worthy of the attention of this whole Assembly through the conflicts of interest commissioner. Investigations into fundamental unfairness of certain actions by the executive branch of government are conducted by the Ombudsman and are, once again, accountable through the whole Assembly. Administration and investigation into the transparency of the executive branch of government is managed by the freedom of information and protection of privacy commissioner, and again she reports through this whole Assembly. Likewise, Mr. Speaker, administration and enforcement of the Election Act is another function which all jurisdictions, including ours, have concluded, quite accurately I would suggest, require independence from the executive branch of government and, instead, require the attention of all members of the Assembly.

Now, as a member of that legislative body, specifically this Legislative Assembly, the rights and privileges of which I know you, Mr. Speaker, value greatly, my ability to do my job is compromised when an officer of this Assembly chooses to report instead to and through the executive branch of government rather than through this Assembly. This is what happened here with the development and distribution of the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer around the need for changes to the Election Act and the election finance administration act as well as others. It is well understood the Chief Electoral Officer must act at all times with objectivity and fairness in order to ensure that the process of implementing and enforcing elections law is beyond reproach.

Allow me to review the standing orders and the relevant legislation. Standing Order 55.01 states that "reports of the Officers of the Legislature shall stand referred to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices unless otherwise ordered." I do not believe that there are any outstanding orders that would suggest there has been an order otherwise.

With regard to the legislation section 4(5) of the Election Act states that the Chief Electoral Officer shall, immediately after each enumeration, general election, election under the Senatorial Selection Act, by-election or plebiscite or a plebiscite or referendum under any other Act, prepare and have printed a report including a summary of the Chief Electoral Officer's conduct respecting the enumeration, general election, election under the Senatorial Selection Act, by-election, plebiscite or referendum, as the case may be, a breakdown of results and a summary of costs and shall transmit the report to the Standing Committee, which shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly, et cetera, et cetera. Now, as was, I believe, the spirit and intent of this legislation, it has been the accepted practice of previous Chief Electoral Officers that all recommendations for legislative amendments be sent to the Legislative Offices Committee for their consideration and distribution to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, probably the most relevant legislative authority resides in section 3.1(1) of the Election Act, which states:

Before beginning the duties of office, the Chief Electoral Officer shall take an oath to perform the duties of the office faithfully and impartially and, except as provided in this Act, the Senatorial Selection Act or the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, not to disclose any information received by the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer under this or any other Act.

The question of impartiality is critical here.

I would like to quote again from the statement made by the Chief Electoral Officer at the Legislative Offices Committee on November 23. "I was not aware at this time of what the timeline was for the distribution of the document. When we wrote this letter, we did not know whether or not there was a timeline that was being followed." Implicit in this statement is a deference to a so-called timeline, one which by necessity would be defined by those who had the document in relation to those who did not. In short, there is deference to either the Minister of Justice, who is a member of the executive branch of government and the governing party, and/or also to the chair of the committee, who is also by definition a member of the governing party.

In addition, the Chief Electoral Officer did not explain why he believed that there might be some schedule that would permit the Minister of Justice to be in the possession of recommendations from his ostensibly independent legislative office while the Legislative Assembly was without that information for almost three months. He also did not indicate any efforts to inquire into or resolve what would seemingly be a breach of the standing orders and current legislation. The level of deference demonstrated by that statement and its inherent conflict with the obligations of the officer as defined by section 3.1(1) gives rise to my concern that my ability as a Member of the Legislative Assembly to fulfill my functions effectively as they relate to the oversight of the work which falls into the realm of responsibility held by the Chief Electoral Officer is therefore impaired.

In short, we cannot do our job, Mr. Speaker, if the Chief Electoral Officer is unclear that he is responsible to all members of the Assembly equally and if he fails to conduct himself accordingly. Members of the government, who, coincidentally, were also the beneficiaries of the Chief Electoral Officer's conduct, will undoubtedly argue that this was merely an honest mistake. However, this so-called honest mistake resulted in the executive branch of government and, by extension, the government caucus members of this Assembly receiving and having the opportunity to deliberate upon the work of the Chief Electoral Officer for almost three months longer than all other members of the Assembly.

As the act which appoints the Chief Electoral Officer compels all members of this Assembly to take part in the review of and in some cases the deliberation about matters which fall under his purview, the partial distribution of his recommendations interferes with my ability to fully complete my duties as a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Maingot at page 13 states:

If someone improperly interferes with the parliamentary work of a Member of Parliament – i.e. any of the Member's activities that have a connection with a proceeding in Parliament – in such a case that is a matter involving parliamentary privilege.

I would suggest that Beauchesne's 92 makes the same point. As such, I respectfully request that you find that I have made a prima facie case of a breach of privilege and that you allow me the appropriate time within which to bring forward a motion with respect to the disposition of this case.

Thank you for listening to my comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for her comments. I just wanted to add a few things. First of all, when you look at the actual Standing Order before 15(2), of course 15(1):

A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member constitutes a question of privilege.

It is my submission that there has been no breach based on that standard, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I appreciate that the point of privilege today is against the Chief Electoral Officer and not myself or the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I do nonetheless want to make a submission to you as to why there is no point of privilege here. Incidentally, I have not spoken with the Chief Electoral Officer about this. These submissions are my own.

The mandate for the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, Mr. Speaker, states:

The Standing Committee on Legislative Offices is an all-party committee consisting of 11 Members of the Legislative Assembly. The committee approves the budgets of the Officers of the Legislature, including the Auditor General, the Child and Youth Advocate, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Ethics Commissioner, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and the Ombudsman, and also reviews the salaries of the Officers on an annual basis.

It also states:

The committee can entertain Officers' requests regarding proposed changes to legislation and forward the recommendation to the appropriate ministry. However, it is important to note that the committee does not have the mandate to approve changes to legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has correctly noted, on May 29 I sent a letter to the Chief Electoral Officer asking him for recommendations to increase the openness and transparency and clarify the rules for disclosing results of these investigations. The letter was subsequently tabled. The letter does state inter alia: "Amendments to the Elections Act would involve your Office being fully consulted to maintain the independence of your Office and avoid arbitrary amendments passed in the Legislature." On May 31 the Chief Electoral Officer also sent me a letter indicating his willingness to send recommendations to me "based on years of cumulative experience" among staff in his office. Again, the letter was tabled.

There was also some commitment made by several ministers of this side of the House that legislation would be tabled in the fall that would address the issue of the disclosure investigations. Promise made; promise kept. I received the recommendations in the fall, and we went to work on accepting as many of these recommendations as possible, actually 90 out of 101.

Mr. Speaker, my ministerial staff, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has noted, met with the opposition on October 25 and again early last week. I also met with the House leader for the third party on October 29. I provided a list of recommendations that we were not accepting and explained that the recommendations were the backbone of the legislation and that I could not supply those as there would be a risk, in my mind, of the bill going out of order.

Mr. Speaker, having met with all three opposition parties, it was never raised once that they wanted a copy of the Chief Electoral Officer's comments.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we don't recognize points of order on points of privilege, but I would ask the hon. Minister of Justice to please continue in wording that suits the traditions of the House.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I submit that this was not a formal report to the Assembly as we receive from many of the independent officers. I would have to differ with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, in fact, that there was no mistake. There's no obligation on behalf of the Chief Electoral Officer to provide that. We are going to have a debate in this Assembly, and we've tabled all the documents. We haven't even started second reading debate. I would indicate, as I indicated in my May 29 correspondence, that it's important to avoid arbitrary amendments. There's a difference between a recommendation from an independent officer of this Chamber, i.e. the Chief Electoral Officer, and a formal report that's tabled here. These were his recommendations.

I would also indicate, Mr. Speaker, based on my comments, with respect to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that there is no point of privilege here. I would also indicate that even if there was a point of privilege, which I do not admit but deny, the transcripts from the November 23 meeting of the standing committee that I mentioned are not yet available, so we're just dealing with hearsay and innuendo, things that would not be made admissible in any court of law.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I would respectfully submit on behalf of the government that there's no point of privilege in this matter.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a really interesting situation. My understanding of a point of privilege is that the ability of a member to do their job has been impeded or impaired or in some way stopped from going forward and that that is particularly wrong if it reflects on the member in such a way that their constituents would believe they weren't doing a good job or working properly for them.

In this situation we have recommendations that came through an officer who reports to a standing committee of this Legislature. They don't report directly to the Minister of Justice. They report to a legislative committee. Whether we want to get into wordplay, that the Minister of Justice is so fond of, I'm not interested in that. What I'm looking at is whether there was fair play here and whether I was impeded in doing my job, whether the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was impeded in doing her job. I argue that we were.

There were recommendations that, clearly, a group of people had and another group of people didn't have, and we were supposed to. The Chief Electoral Officer did send them to the chair of the committee with the obvious understanding, which he admitted to during the meeting on Friday, that they would be distributed to the committee. Now, what's interesting is that when it became clear that they had not been distributed to the committee, goodness' sake, everybody seems to forget how process works and what would usually happen and what makes sense. It's just that they all got kind of funny about it. We get these strange things where I point-blank asked the Chief Electoral Officer where the recommendations were. That told him that I didn't have them in my hand and I didn't know where they were. I clearly did not have them.

Now, here's an officer of the Legislature who was to send some information through to this committee. He says he did. He hears very clearly from a member that she doesn't have the information and is actually asking him on the record where it is. Well, he tells us in his written response from the 24th of September that he sent it to the Justice minister. That's all he says. He forgets to tell us that he'd already sent it to the chair of the committee and that it should have been distributed to us. So I'm not sure why those things happened, but that's the crux of this. We needed that information to do a good job.

When I met with the Minister of Justice, I did ask him where the recommendations were. It was the obvious question. He was standing there handing me a package that said: "Okay. These are the recommendations that we are not accepting from all the recommendations that the Chief Electoral Officer gave us." And I said: "I don't have the recommendations. Can I get the recommendations?" He says he told me I couldn't have them. I walked away from there believing that I was going to get them at the end of the meeting. We won't argue about that one. The point is that that committee was supposed to get that information, and it didn't. When the person who was supposed to give us the information knew that we didn't have it, they still did not give it to us. That's what's wrong here.

In the development of the arguments for a very dense bill – Mr. Speaker, this ain't easy stuff. These are four pieces of very technical, detailed information in one act. Yeah, we've had the bill for a couple of weeks here, and we had a briefing in which we had from the Justice minister the recommendations that they weren't going to do. That was helpful. Didn't tell us what they were going to do but, rather, what they weren't going to do. I was supposed to – what? – by osmosis figure out the ones that I didn't get through the committee? Do you see what I'm saying? There is a point here where the timing, the obvious response and process – that is, it went to the committee when it clearly hadn't gone there. He should have produced it again and not played footsie with us. That continued right up to Friday. So the context, the timing, the obviousness of what should have happened are all important here.

I don't envy you trying to make a decision on this one, Mr. Speaker, because it's complicated. The end result is that you had a number of people here that – I don't know if the government members on the committee got the information or not. I can tell you that the opposition members on the committee did not have the information, and I believe that we were intended to. That's what's wrong with this. We did not get information that we were supposed to get, and we were the committee that was supposed to get it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be quite brief because the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona as well as the House leader for the Liberal opposition did a great job outlining the facts. I think this is a clear prima facie case of a point of privilege. It goes to the basic point of: you have an independent officer who is supposed to report to the Assembly, who is supposed to report to this committee, and instead that report was distributed to just two members, the Justice minister and the chair of a standing committee.

In Beauchesne it talks about impairing a member's ability to do their job. I had in fact asked a question to the Justice minister, asking him when the report from the Chief Electoral Officer would be made public. I specifically asked that right here in question period. There was a non answer. If he had the report at that time, it should have been made public. He should have known that we obviously didn't have the report. It's especially egregious in this circumstance because we have legislation that's before us. How are we supposed to do our jobs as opposition members if other people and other members have information before we do? In fact, it appears that they've had it well in advance of the opposition members.

Going to the solution – one of the members alluded to that earlier on – what can be done, I refer the Speaker to page 30 of Beauchesne's, where it talks about what the Speaker can do if he is inclined to find that a point of privilege has been met. The mildest form, of course, is that a simple declaration that there has been a breach of privilege is provided, but also I refer the Speaker to paragraph 124, which says that occasionally the individual "will be given an opportunity to purge the contempt and promise better conduct in the future." In my submission that's the minimum of what should be done here.

Of course, given the seriousness of this breach, where you have an independent officer of the Assembly only giving it to the Justice minister or a chair of a standing committee, I would suggest that one potential solution is that this piece of legislation be hoisted to a future session so that all opposition members can have the same information to prepare themselves to debate the bill instead of giving two individuals an undue dissymmetry of information at the outset.

Those are my submissions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very interesting point of privilege being raised – an important point of privilege being raised – and a very interesting set of facts. What it clearly points to, though, is that there's not a point of privilege here, but there may be an opportunity to clarify some of the ways in which processes happen. What's clearly in question here is the differentiation between the role of the Standing Committee on Leg. Offices with respect to dealing with Leg. officers and reports that are tabled in the House and referred automatically, as was pointed out by the Standing Orders, to Leg. Offices for review and the ongoing process of setting budgets for Leg. offices and those sorts of pieces. The committee clearly has that role and function.

Legislation has clearly assigned, at law, the responsibility for specific pieces of legislation to members of Executive Council, so various members of Executive Council, primarily the Minister of Justice, have responsibility for the legislation that establishes the Leg. offices and provides the legislative framework for them. Amendments to those legislations are brought by the minister responsible in those areas. In the case of the CEO that would be the Minister of Justice. In the case of the Ombudsman I think that's also the Minister of Justice. In the case of the Ethics Commissioner I believe that's also the Minister of Justice. In the case of the Child and Youth Advocate that would be the Minister of Human Services. In each case there's a minister responsible for the legislation, who also has responsibility there for review and renewal of that legislation from time to time and for bringing that legislation forward.

There is nothing in our Standing Orders or process or practice which suggests how that review of legislation ought to be done or that indicates that there's a specific role for the legislative committee in dealing with that legislation although from time to time there have been times when the standing committee has actually dealt with legislation. Mostly that happens when an officer of the Legislature in their report suggests that there should be amendments to the legislation, and therefore the report goes to the Leg. Offices Committee, and the Leg. Offices Committee then deals with that request. On occasion a Leg. officer has made a request through a Leg. Offices Committee for amendments to their statutes, and there's one, in fact, before the committee now with respect to the Child and Youth Advocate. We're dealing with that process, because I then received as Minister of Human Services a letter from the chair of Leg. Offices saying that Leg. Offices had met, had deliberated, and was recommending to us that there be changes made. So there are a number of ways of going about it.

What's happened in this case is that during the spring session, actually, in which many questions were raised about a particular section of the Election Act and the similar section in the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which had been interpreted to say that the Chief Electoral Officer was unable to release certain information, it became clear that that was not the interpretation which had been intended when the legislation had been amended to allow administrative penalties and reprimands to be put forward rather than all matters which the Chief Electoral Officer had investigated and found conduct which he believed to be deserving of sanction being referred to a prosecutor for decision.

So the act was amended. The amendment was interpreted by the Chief Electoral Officer and his office to say that he couldn't release information because that particular piece of the section hadn't been changed. That was part of the discussion in this House last spring. The commitment made by the Minister of Justice was to bring forward an amendment to clarify that it was always the intention that determinations should be released, and that he would approach the Chief Electoral Officer.

I believe he's indicated today that he filed a copy of the letter in the House indicating that he'd asked the Chief Electoral Officer for the Chief Electoral Officer's views on amendments to the act. That's an entirely appropriate process, Mr. Speaker. It's entirely appropriate not to have a kind of discussion with a Legislature officer with respect to the operations of their office, but asking advice with respect to the constating legislation is entirely appropriate, and it's done.

Then the question is: when the officer of the Legislature, in this case the Chief Electoral Officer, responds to that request, he is perfectly entitled to respond to that request directly to the minister responsible for the legislation. He may share that with the chair of the committee – as I understand it, in this circumstance that was shared with the chair of the committee – but he's not bound to do that because it's a different portion of the role. It's relating to the drafting and the changing of legislation. It's the government's purview to bring before the House any proposed amendments to the legislation. The House may then determine to refer that proposed legislation to a committee for further review if it wishes. We have to be very clear that up until now, at least, there had been these two very distinct functions, and the Legislative Offices Committee deals with the Legislature officers and their independence on behalf of the House.

The government still has the responsibility to deal with the legislation and to review that legislation from time to time and ask for input on that review and may ask for input on that review from the officer of the Legislature and get a response on that. It's not unparliamentary for him to do that. It's not unparliamentary for the Legislature officer to respond in that way. Asking for and receiving advice with respect to bringing forward amendments to the legislation is certainly something that's within the purview of the minister. It's certainly something that the Chief Electoral Officer, even as an officer of this Legislature, may respond to, and it in no way interferes with other members' ability to do their jobs to have that happen. The members have the same opportunity they have with every piece of legislation that comes before this House, to deal with it fully and completely at the various stages at which it's debated in the House.

Now, going forward, it would be useful to clarify because there's nothing really – I've looked at this with respect to this situation on a couple of occasions when it's been a question of how you go about amending the constating act for a Legislature officer and what process ought to be followed. We may wish to follow that up and set up a process to be followed, but in fact there is not one now.

In fact, there are two distinct functions that need to be understood. One is the role and function of the Legislature officer as an independent officer of the House, reporting to the House and responding to the committee with respect to his or her reports to the House and dealing with the committee with respect to the necessities of life, if you will, in terms of budget and operation. Then there's the legislative process, which is clearly a function of the Legislature and operates in the same role and manner as for every other piece of legislation in this House.

There are many boards, the Labour Relations Board being one of them, the Workers Compensation Board being another one of them, where they are independent boards, but their legislation belongs to this House, and the person who is charged with the evergreening of that legislation is a member of Executive Council. That member of Executive Council must have the opportunity to consult with the Chief Electoral Officer or the head of any of those boards or agencies in order to get advice as to whether that legislation is working appropriately, which does not in any way preclude, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Leg. Offices from time to time requesting the CEO to come before the committee and talk about changes that could be made and make recommendations from that side.

It's a fine point, Mr. Speaker, but it's a very important one, because the processes are ongoing processes which need to happen. They need to happen with clarity. We don't have actual clarity in our rules and standing orders at the moment with respect to these functions, but it's very important that a member of Executive Council charged with responsibility to improve an act, particularly when the House has demanded that changes be made to the act, be able to bring forward those changes and do so with the advice of the appropriate person in terms of what they believe should be extant in the act both in terms of the specific issue that was raised and the invitation of the Minister of Justice to all other issues.

So no point of privilege. Clearly, it's an issue that needs some clarity around it, and clearly nothing has impeded the hon. members opposite from their ability. Even though it's an act with a lot of details, I would suggest it's not as complex an act as one of the members opposite suggested. It's very clear. You can go section by section and look at it and say, "Okay. That's what that's about," and come to some determination very quickly as to whether or not you believe that that is an important amendment, and you can look and see which other amendments you think might have been important.

No member's ability to carry out their duty has been impeded, but it does beg the question, Mr. Speaker, of whether we should delineate more appropriately a process for things to go before standing committees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, briefly.

Mr. Anderson: Very briefly, but it's a very important point. I'm not going to dwell on or repeat what's been said already, but I would note this. If you turn to House of Commons Procedure and Practice and look at pages 82 and 83, Mr. Speaker, there's something very serious that needs to be addressed here. Obviously, we're talking about the point of privilege, and sometimes if it doesn't fall exactly within a point of privilege, it can be found in contempt of parliament. I think that in this case it's actually quite clear that there has been a contempt of parliament and therefore a breach of privilege.

If you look in this document and look at page 83 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, specifically:

The United Kingdom Joint Committee on Parliamentary Privilege attempted to provide a list of some types of contempt [of parliament], what it would look like. Two of the points are specific to this case. First off:

Deliberately altering, suppressing, concealing or destroying a paper required to be produced for the House or a committee.

The second point is:

Without reasonable excuse, refusing to answer a question or provide information or produce papers formally required by the House or a committee.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear. We've got the Blues, and we've got the Hansard for that. In a second I will read it into the record because it is very germane to this.

If you look at the first point, "Concealing . . . a paper required to be produced for the House or a committee" – it has to be deliberately concealing. We do understand that, Mr. Speaker. I think it's pretty clear from the discussions that have been had here and the evidence given by the House leaders and the deputy House leader, who is also the Justice critic, who was involved in these discussions, that there is no doubt that the Justice minister knew that he had the report . . . [interjection] I don't see how that's out of order. He knew that he had the report and deliberately did not give that report to the opposition. He knew he had that report. He had it sent to him previously. I think that's very clear.

To the second point, "Without reasonable excuse, refusing to answer a question or provide information," I take you to the Hansard from October 29, 2012. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills specifically asked – I'm going to skip the preamble:

Will the Justice minister . . .

when referring to this report,

. . . then simply reveal to the Legislature the Chief Electoral Officer's report and recommendations today, or will he continue to hide behind this government's pattern of secrecy?

The answer given by the hon. Justice minister was:

Mr. Speaker, if this member has a particular complaint about any particular financing, I suggest he go and talk to the Chief Electoral Officer, who is an independent officer of the Legislature. He does not report to me. He does not report to anybody else.

That is very clearly: "without reasonable excuse, refusing to answer a question or provide information or produce papers formally required by the House or a committee." He knew he had these papers. He was asked a question about these papers.

Mr. Speaker, if this is not a point of privilege, then it absolutely is a contempt of parliament. I think that it is very serious. This should not be downplayed. You've had 41 years to make this clear, hon. Government House Leader. This could not be any more clear as a point of privilege and a contempt of parliament.

I would think that with regard to solutions to it, frankly, this is so serious that it does need to be contemplated to table this legislation and bring it back once we've all had an opportunity to properly go over these recommendations, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, this is a unique circumstance. Uncharacteristically, I'm going to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to clarify a quick point, and then we'll go to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. Briefly, please.

Ms. Notley: Mr. Speaker, I was going to simply rely on my opportunity to very briefly end debate, but I'm certainly prepared to let the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill precede me.

The Speaker: Thank you. You did have considerable time at the beginning, which we appreciated.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to this issue. There is no point of privilege in this case. The minister responsible for the administration of the Election Act made a direct request of the Chief Electoral Officer to give his suggestions for what changes he thought might be appropriate, and that's exactly what he did. The document that he sent back with the recommendations is not a formal report to this House. It was not a formal report to the committee. I would submit that there is no requirement for distribution of that letter and the accompanying recommendations to all members of the committee, let alone dictating the timing of that distribution.

Nonetheless, would it have been preferable for that document, given its importance, to be distributed to all of the members of the committee? Yes, it probably would have. However, in my respectful submission, Mr. Speaker, the CEO did nothing wrong. There was no intention on his part to hide the contents of the recommendations from the members of the committee, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has alleged. In fact, he did copy the chair of the committee. Obviously, it was clearly not his intention to deny that information to the committee. However, for one reason or another that was not distributed to all of the members of the committee. If anything, there was a misunderstanding, and I would submit it was nothing more than that. It was a misunderstanding regarding the distribution of that document.

You know, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is inferring ulterior motives and bias and impugning the character of the Chief Electoral Officer. But what I would submit, Mr. Speaker, is that what it boils down to is merely a misunderstanding. There's no point of privilege, and nothing wrong was done.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, very briefly, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Ever so briefly, going to two points made by the hon. Government House Leader, he says that the distinction here in the issue is subtle, and he is correct. It's subtle. But notwithstanding its subtlety, it is profoundly important, and it is incumbent upon all members of this House to understand it and comprehend it fully. Adoption of the interpretation advocated by the Government House Leader would result in the mitigation of the role of any officer of the Legislature to being that of simply a senior member of the executive branch of government.

At one point the House leader equated the operations of the Chief Electoral Officer to the operations of the board of the Workers' Compensation Board. Well, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that board by legislation reports through the minister. The import of a Chief Electoral Officer or any officer of the Legislature is that they report through this Assembly. The last thing we need is to adopt an interpretation that would allow for a precedent where it is okay for officers of the Legislature to act like senior bureaucrats and have one-off sideline conversations with members of the executive branch of government. That goes against the very point of their establishment.

Now, quite frankly, I don't expect the executive branch of government or the Minister of Justice to disclose to me legislation at any point before they choose to introduce it. That's their prerogative. It's not exactly fair, but it is what it is, and that's the tradition of the House. However, I do expect any officer of the Legislature who does work and comes up with recommendations and relies upon his expertise, absolutely – any minister can ask that Chief Electoral Officer or any other officer of the Legislature for advice, for recommendations, all that stuff. That's completely appropriate.

What is not appropriate is for the response to that request for advice to be done off the side of a desk between only some members of the Assembly. That goes to the very heart of what it means for somebody to be an officer of this Legislature. When they report, when they come up with opinions, when they advise, it should be done for the benefit of this whole Assembly and through this whole Assembly so we can all participate in it. To adopt the proposals suggested by the Government House Leader will be to absolutely undermine the credibility of the concept of an officer of this Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I've mentioned this before because we've already heard at least one point of privilege in this House. I've raised it before that points of privilege are extremely serious matters. They do require a lot of study and a lot of effort to come to a proper conclusion. In fact, they are so serious that some of the books that were cited today, parliamentary books such as House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which I encourage you to visit and visit often, has over 100 pages – well, actually 101, I believe – dedicated to points of privilege of various sorts and issues arising out of it. Similarly, Beauchesne's has pages on it; similarly, Erskine May has pages and pages on it. The tables of contents are sometimes pages long when trying to describe privilege, and a lot of you would know that.

Nonetheless, I want to make a couple of quick points. First of all, all of the speakers made some very, very good points in defence of the position that they were occupying. In fact, uncharacteristically, I think we've heard from I believe six or seven different members today, or at least that many speeches were heard. In spite of the fact that I've heard and listened to or been part of numerous points of privilege over my years in this Assembly, I don't recall having met this particular issue before. This one seems to go into a different area, and I'm sure some of the veteran members would probably agree with me.

Secondly, it concerns an officer, who is a member as such. Not a member in the way you are a member, but he's an officer of the Legislature, so he has a different sort of classification of job, if you will. The reporting structures have to be looked at here. The committee that was raised and pointed to by a number of speakers: I have to review some of that as well just to make sure that I'm understanding it all.

I'll take a little bit of time to study this one. I'm not sure I'll be able to get it all digested and consult with Parliamentary Counsel and others and read all the references that speakers raised in time to render a decision by tomorrow, but I will take the appropriate amount of time to study this one, I can assure you. I'll go through all the citations, I'll go through all of the speeches that were written and read, and I'll come to a conclusion, I hope, within a couple of days on this one.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, thank you for raising it. Hon. members who have participated in debate, thank you for your points of view as well.

I believe that that concludes orders and points of privilege for today, so we will now move on.

I've just had a reminder from Parliamentary Counsel that there was a request made by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Thank you for that, hon. member, and I did go through this as well. I got very involved in the point of privilege, and I was just about ready to overlook this one, and I'm glad I didn't. Thank you to the table as well.

Statement by the Speaker

Private Members' Public Bills

The Speaker: Before we go to Orders of the Day, I want to comment briefly on the order of business that is about to occur. Last Thursday the chair received a request from the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park requesting early consideration of his private member's bill, Bill 201, for third reading immediately following Committee of the Whole this afternoon. The chair tabled the memorandum last Thursday, November 22, 2012, and it is recorded as Sessional Paper 301/2012. Given that this is the first time in this Legislature that this issue of early consideration of a private member's bill has arisen, the chair wants to explain to the members how we're going to proceed with this.

First of all, I'm obliged to inform all of you at the very edge here that this request is hypothetical at this point since there are still 74 minutes remaining for consideration of the bill itself in Committee of the Whole. Now, before Committee of the Whole is called, the House must first conclude second reading debate on Bill 202, of which 23 minutes still remain. If there is any available time remaining for private members' bills this afternoon, then further to the hon. member's request the House would then proceed to third reading of Bill 201. If there is no time remaining following the bill being reported from Committee of the Whole, Standing Order 8 requires that third reading of the bill be called first next Monday, December 3.

Now, by way of quick background, this process concerning early consideration of private members' bills has been in place since 1997, and there have been numerous occasions when the Speaker has cautioned the House about these types of requests as they do give rise to potential conflicts with other members. Now, previous Legislatures, in fact even the one immediately before us, have been cautioned about this practice as recently as March 14 of this year, and that can be found at page 514 of Hansard for that day. I would reiterate the suggestions of Speaker Kowalski on March 14 and going back to 2001 that this matter should be given further review by either House leaders or a committee of the Assembly so that due consideration is given to options that do not unduly prejudice other members and the progress of their private members' bills.

Just to recap, we'll see how this goes with time allocation and everything else. I did have an opportunity to hear from the member, and I believe that member took some liberties to speak with others so that potential conflict could be avoided. So there's a good spirit of co-operation that was attempted to be built. That will be the process that we will follow for this afternoon.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't wish to prolong this any longer than need be, but under 13(2) I'd like to ask you to explain one piece of your ruling. You indicated that Bill 202 would come up, I think, for a further 23, 24 minutes. I note from Hansard at page 513 on November 5 that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill was recognized to close debate, and therefore there are only actually five minutes, actually four minutes and 50 seconds, as I recall. He rose to close debate and started by saying, "Given the time . . . I would [ask] that it be called 5 o'clock." So he, in essence, rose to close debate and then moved for the consent of the House to change the clock. While he was doing that, the clock hit 5, and I then rose to ask that we have unanimous consent to extend. But it's very clear from the record that the hon. member was recognized to close debate, and therefore there are not 23 or 24 minutes. There are only five, or actually four minutes and 50 seconds, to be precise.

The Speaker: Just a moment. Hon. Government House Leader, I was reviewing this matter, actually, over the lunch hour along with a number of other things, and since there has been some issue raised about this, I want to just take a brief moment here and just recap what actually occurred on that day. I've been receiving numerous pieces of paper here as you can see.

Just seconds before 5 o'clock the Acting Speaker recognized the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, at which point the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill rose and according to Hansard said: "Well, Madam Speaker, I'm prepared to give a closing speech, but given the time I think I would move that it be called 5 o'clock." Now, the Government House Leader at exactly 5 o'clock according to Hansard rose and said:

Madam Speaker, I beg your leave to ask for unanimous consent of the House to allow the hon. member his five minutes to close debate so this bill can be voted on, and then we would proceed with the motion at 5:05 or when the vote is done.

Unanimous consent at that point was denied, and the House went on to Motions Other than Government Motions.

So Bill 202, to be clear, was last considered by this House on Monday, November 5. The bill was moved for second reading, and it received 97 minutes of debate. As noted on the Order Paper, this bill still has 23 minutes remaining for second reading, which includes five minutes for the sponsor to close debate.

There is some misunderstanding as to whether or not the sponsor was recognized to close debate on November 5. That was not the case, and that is not what the hon. member was apparently recognized for. Although the sponsor was recognized by the chair, he actually rose to move that, "It be called 5 o'clock," as I just read out and as is noted, for those of you who wish to look, on page 513 of Hansard for that day. Then I read the request that was made by the hon. Government House Leader for the sponsor to close debate. That was denied.

Now, there is a record of who speaks and in what order and how they get recognized and so on, which you're able to seek clarification on if you wish. The point is that, to be clear, there are still 18 minutes remaining for other members to speak at second reading of Bill 202, following which the sponsor will be entitled to speak for up to five minutes to close that debate. I would refer all of you to Standing Order 8(7)(a) if you want to acquaint yourselves further with the rules governing second reading debate of private members' bills, which most of you, I'm sure, are very familiar with.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you had indicated earlier that you wanted to rise on a point of clarification, and then the Member for Airdrie.

Ms Blakeman: I did. I'm just aware that if we don't get at it, there won't be much time to do anything with the member's bill 201.

I wanted to put it on the record again how strong my dismay and objection to this particular procedure is. Nothing against this particular member. I've raised this objection with anyone that's ever done it. I think asking to waive Standing Order 8(7)(c) really is unfair because it does mean that someone at the end of the queue has not got a hope in heck of getting their bill up and even being able to say: "Mom, Dad, look. I actually got a bill before the Assembly."

I recognize that the member has gone to some lengths to consult his colleagues to see if it's okay, and I know it's entirely within the ability of the Speaker to grant the early leave. In fact, the precedent is that he does grant the early leave. Goodness knows that we've been admonished often enough as House leaders to deal with the dang thing and haven't managed to do it. We will mark it on our hands in ink to try and get that done before the next sitting, but I still think it's wrong.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: On a point of clarification as well. I don't know. Are we starting business right now? If not, I just do have a question of clarification with regard to Written Questions. There is a written question to deal with. Do we deal with that now, before, or after? Yes? Okay. I just wanted to clarify that.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Availability of Mental Health and Addiction Beds

- Q2. Mrs. Forsyth:
How many mental health beds and addiction beds on average were available to Albertans in 2011?

Calgary South Health Campus

- Q3. Dr. Swann:
What was the original 2007 estimate of construction costs and projected opening day for the south campus hospital in Calgary versus the actual cost on completion and actual opening date?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

4:20 Availability of Long-term Care Nursing Beds

- Q1. Mrs. Forsyth asked that the following question be accepted.
How many long-term care nursing beds on average were available to Albertans in 2011?

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Written Question 1 be accepted. I look forward to the minister's response, and then I will provide some comments after that.

The Speaker: Is there an amendment here?

Mrs. Forsyth: I understand, Mr. Speaker – and I'll be corrected by you if you want – that I have to move the question first, and then if there's an amendment, it has to come from the minister. There may be an amendment on the table, but we're not aware of that. It hasn't been tabled, so we need to discuss the question first before we move an amendment.

The Speaker: You have an amendment to this?

Mr. VanderBurg: Yes, I do.

The Speaker: Before this? Okay. Move your amendment, please.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to propose an amendment to the question posed by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I understand the copies are ready and able to be distributed.

The Speaker: We'll just take a second here and clarify where we're at with this, please. There's an amendment being circulated here.

Go ahead. Distribute the amendment, please, quickly.

Hon. Associate Minister, do you wish to read the amendment into the record while the pages continue and conclude distribution of it?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, for the record the amendment reads that Written Question 1 be amended by striking out "on average were available to Albertans in 2011" to be replaced with "were available to Albertans as of March 31, 2012." The amended written question would read as follows: How many long-term care nursing beds were available to Albertans as of March 31, 2012?

Mr. Speaker, the minister is proposing this change because the Ministry of Health conducts a survey at the end of March of the number of long-term care beds that are staffed and in operation. This amendment allows the minister to provide an answer to the hon. member that is making the request.

All colleagues in the Legislature today, I'd ask that you accept the amendment to this question so we can get proper information to the hon. member across.

The Speaker: Speaking to the amendment?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that I'm challenged by this amendment because we heard from the Clerk just prior to this that they've accepted Written Question 2, which is the exact same question that we're asking about long-term care beds but it was about mental health beds and addiction beds. So for the associate minister to stand up and say that they don't have these figures till the end of March on their long-term care nursing beds perplexes me because if they can find out about the mental health beds and the addiction beds that were available to Albertans, the identical question of Question 2 – they have no answer.

We have been trying for some time to get how many long-term care nursing beds there are. The associate minister knows that I did question him about that when we were debating the budget. At that particular time, I think at the very end of the day, we had three or four different numbers thrown at us. I cannot for the life of me understand why this government cannot tell us at this particular time exactly how many long-term care nursing beds we have in this province because it's economics. It's very simple. It's about demand. I mean, currently I am dealing with my mom that's in the hospital. I can guarantee you that they need to know if there is a long-term care nursing bed available or if there's not.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It's embarrassing, I would suggest, for the government not to be able to have these numbers in front of them because they have to move these patients back and forth. They're a bottleneck within the system right now. I can tell you that by phoning any one of the doctor contacts that I have, they'll be able to tell you exactly how many seniors they have tied up in an acute-care bed in the hospital and where these seniors have to move to. My colleague the Seniors critic may want to add to this particular amendment.

Associate Minister, quite frankly, this is embarrassing for you and your government. It was embarrassing when I questioned you during the budget. You threw three or four different numbers on how many long-term care nursing beds you have. Surely to goodness after that embarrassment when we were in the budget debate, you would know eight and a half months later how many beds you have. You're the government. You're supposed to be able to know exactly how many beds you have in the system. Both you and the Minister of Health stand up continuously and repeatedly about how you're adding 1,000 more continuing care beds to the system. Please, on behalf of Albertans, tell us how many long-term care nursing beds you currently have in the system.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment here also raises huge concerns for me as the Seniors critic. I did read through the estimates, and I've read through many of the discussions that the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors has had and provided, and there are at least three different numbers that are provided on how many long-term care nursing beds there are. More importantly, this government talks about a continuing care strategy and the funding that goes along with it. Albertans have a right and this government has a duty to tell them exactly: are the dollars going to continuing care beds? Are the dollars going to long-term care nursing beds, which we know are drastically different?

Currently the funding model is based on hours of care, and the dollars from taxpayers are going to facilities based on those hours of care, and they're based on care levels. For example, a continuing care facility that's housing SL3s and SL4s might have allocated long-term care nursing beds which receive a different funding model. If this government doesn't know where those taxpayer dollars are going, how can Albertans be assured that taxpayer dollars are being spent appropriately? It seems that the only people who currently know where the $16 billion health care budget it being allotted would be this government. Surely, this government would know what those numbers were for any given year and especially for 2011.

It is very, very imperative that we make sure that we are spending taxpayer dollars in an appropriate way, that we're making sure dollars get to the right places and appropriate care. This government tells us every day that that's what they're doing. It's interesting also that repeatedly in the House this question has been asked about how many long-term care nursing beds there are, how many continuing care beds there are, how they'll be funded, and how the continuing care strategy is going to affect Albertans going forward. Repeatedly we're told that this information is available, that we're just supposed to do our homework, that we're supposed to go and find it. Yet, clearly, the government doesn't even have the answer.

If the government doesn't have the answer, how is this opposition supposed to? More importantly, how are Albertans supposed to stand up and understand exactly where their taxpayer dollars are going? How do we hold the government accountable that you truly are creating 1,000 more long-term care nursing beds as you continuously state you're doing?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question, I guess, around an amendment is that usually an amendment is – you change the intent of the question, and I think we have that here because we're changing it by a full year. The intent of the question was to ask, as it says in the question: how many were available to Albertans in 2011? Now we've changed the intent of it to 2012. I've been around county council a long time, and as soon as you add an amendment and you change the intent of it, it's not an amendment anymore. You're changing what the question is. The question was very clearly written by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The question was for long-term care beds. I'm confused on how we can have an amendment that changes the clear date on it.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: Other members? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in opposition to this amendment for one simple reason. As a person who has an accounting background and an understanding of how government actually operates . . . [interjection] Oh, I do. I've got lots in my background. I actually went to university for it. I have a lot of education, hon. member.

Government keeps records. One thing government does that everyone complains about is the bureaucracy of the paperwork. Had the request been for 2001 or 1991, it seriously would have required a tremendous amount of work to go back into archives. But we're looking at just going back to what should have been readily available, around March of this year, for all of 2011. It should have allowed all the accounting to come forward.

I'm troubled by the amendment because this information should be readily accessible through departmental research that should actually be able to produce these numbers. We're not talking about something that goes back multiple years. We're just talking, you know, roughly 18 months or a little bit longer than that. That information should be available. That's really, in my opinion, not a difficult task for any person taking care of the budget or any accounting person that is actually responsible for record maintenance.

I'm troubled by it because – and I hate to say this because I do not want to incite certain members – it almost looks like a cover-up. [interjection] I know. We went there. The perception of that alone is fundamentally wrong. I just want to point that out. It's not generally a cover-up that is always the problem or a bias that is a problem. It is the public perception of it that always creates the problem. Here we can avoid it completely by just producing the records and eliminating the perception.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm new to the Legislature, and this is the first opportunity that I've had to see how written questions are delivered. Now, I guess I'm just a little bit worried about setting the precedent. The very first written question that comes back is one where the government doesn't actually return what it is the opposition is asking for but answers the question that they want to answer in the way they want to answer it. We have enough of that in question period, the fact that they don't actually answer our questions in question period. We're trying to use the process as it's been outlined in the House rules. We are taking forward questions that require them to do some research. They've had plenty of time to go and dig up this information.

It troubles me that already, on the very first question coming back, we're not getting the information that we want. The hon. member is asking for something very specific, and she's been asking for it in question period in a number of different ways not only in this legislative session but in previous ones before the election. She wants to know on average how many beds were available to Albertans in 2011. It is an average. It's important for us to get that average.

If you take a point in time, I suppose as the government is proposing to do with their amended question, to know how much it was as of March 31, 2012, well, how do we know that they didn't happen to choose the date that was the high-water mark of the number of beds that were available? Or how do we know that they didn't happen to choose the date that was the low-water mark? I think the average is what's very important.

We understand that there's an ebb and flow of long-term care beds. We understand that there are going to be some that are converted. That's what the government is doing. They're talking about continuing care. They're talking about moving away from long-term care. We know that they've already closed 20 beds for long-term care in Carmangay. So we understand that there have been some changes over the course of the year. Having the amended question does not get at the information that the hon. member is looking for. She's looking to understand the average for 2011. I can tell you where this question is probably going. She's probably going to ask a follow-up question at some future point about what it was in 2010 so that we can have some point of comparison.

If we cannot get the information that we're looking for in this question, how are we to know that there is any integrity in this process? How am I to know that when my questions are due tomorrow, I'm going to get the information that I've asked for? Or any of the other hon. members: how are they to know that they are going to get the information that they had asked for?

I would also note that this amendment came in late. It came in at 11:03. I would expect that the government would actually follow its own rules and make sure that it's submitting – it may only be three minutes, but I can tell you that if we did something three minutes late, the doors would be locked. I think that there is a precedent here, that we have rules we expect everyone to follow. I think that this is not in keeping with what the member has asked.

If the government doesn't have this information, if the government can't get this information, that's even more scary because they're supposed to know this. They're overseeing a health system that is one of the most expensive health systems in the entire country. It is the portion of our budget that is the largest expenditure of taxpayer dollars. If we can't get basic information like this, having waited months and months and months to get it, asking for it in a way which I think is quite clear, it does call into question how we could possibly use this process that's been put to us as members to be able to use the written questions to be able to get detailed information.

We cannot get this information any other way, and I would ask the Speaker to instruct the government to go back and sharpen its pencils and find the answer to this question. If they can't give it to us today – it sounds like they can't – then let us find out when they can get us this information. From what I've heard from my hon. colleague, this is not adequate. This is not what she asked for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a brief comment on this. The question as posited by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is imprecise and incapable of calculation, I would respectfully submit. She said: "How many long-term care nursing beds on average were available to Albertans in 2011?" Average of what? Daily average, 365? Weekly average, 52 numbers? The average per month? What the minister has offered to give you is something that has some precision to it. I mean, average of what? Average on a daily basis? Weekly? Monthly? We don't know.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate on the amendment. Your speech at this time will be to close debate on this amendment if I recognize you. Oh, I just need a little help from the table.

Hon. member, you've already spoken on the amendment. I just needed to be clear on that.

I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie, who has not spoken on the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Well, here's the problem with what the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill said. Written Question 2 is:

Mrs. Forsyth to ask the Government the following question:

How many mental health beds and addiction beds on average were available to Albertans in 2011?

Guess what? They accepted that, and they provided an answer to it. Now, we're happy to see what that is.

Written Question 1 is: "How many long-term care nursing beds on average were available to Albertans in 2011?" My reading of that is that we're talking about the average over the period of a year. I think that's what 2011 is referring to, a year. I think that's what that means.

Clearly, I'm assuming that's what was meant when Written Question 2 was answered. It uses the exact same language. You have to admit, hon. members, that it's kind of inconceivable that they would have the information needed to answer Written Question 2 regarding mental health beds and addiction beds but do not have the ability to answer Written Question 1. I mean, how can you not have that information?

This is a continuing problem here. The continuing problem is that, hon. minister, you keep saying continuing care beds, and we know what you're talking about, and we agree with you. There needs to be aging in the right place. We all get that, and we agree with it. But there absolutely is an acute short supply of long-term care beds, long-term nursing beds. We know that . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: David, why don't you come to the nursing home with me and visit my mom?

Mr. J. Johnson: He'll be there shortly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: You know what? Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education just made a comment about this member's age, and that is totally inappropriate. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please. The Member for Airdrie has the floor. If we can keep the side conversations down, we might get through this motion. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I apologize. The Minister of Education was making a comment about the Minister of Human Services' age. I just heard that. My apologies to the minister on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: A little defensive about mom, okay?

I just think it's really important, you know, that we understand that this debate has gone on for a while with regard to continuing care beds. All we're asking for is that the government give us the numbers so we can have a debate on this. They have the numbers, they know they have the numbers, yet they continue to refuse to answer the question. It's the easiest question in the world. Frankly, it would be beyond belief – if they don't know the answer to this question, then they're not competent to run the government. It's that simple. They should know the answer to this question so we can understand what the needs are going forward, Mr. Speaker.

In the health care system we all know in here that it costs a lot more to run an acute-care bed in a hospital than it does a long-term bed, yet we have many, many, many seniors sitting in hospital beds or laying down in hospital beds right now that

This government, this Education minister and others that come in and say: oh, what would the Wildrose cut? Well, we wouldn't cut stuff. We'd do things with half a brain. We would say: look, you know what? Maybe what we'll do is that instead of putting . . . [interjections] It's so easy, it only takes half a brain. That's right.

If we could take some of those folks out of the acute-care beds in hospitals and put them into long-term care beds, which are cheaper, more affordable, better care for the situation, then we would be able to free up a whole bunch of new hospital beds and wouldn't have to build as many massive, billion-dollar new facilities anyway. Sure, we'll have to build more, but we'd get the same results with spending less. That's what we're offering here.

But until we know the basic answers to this basic question, Mr. Speaker, it's going to be hard to debate this issue and have an intelligent conversation. It's just going to go back to the lowest common denominator. Well, where would you cut if you want to add those beds? No. We want to redistribute resources in a way that will get us more bang for our buck, so to speak, and that's just good, sound, prudent fiscal management. If they don't have an answer to this, it shows just how poorly mismanaged the system is, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

You can only speak once, hon. member, so I'll recognize another member.

Seeing no other speakers, I'll call the question.

Other speakers on the question?

Do you wish to close debate?

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. Yes, I'll close debate. Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it's a disappointing day, obviously. We have been asking this question for some time and thought that, well, if we can't get the answer in budget and we can't get the answer in question period, maybe we'll try a written question because that's yet another process. So three times asked, I guess, not third time lucky this time. It's unfortunate because, quite frankly, I think Albertans need to know this.

On behalf of Albertans I'm going to tell the government how disappointed we are in them.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we'll now call the question as amended.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Public Funding of Private Schools

504. Mr. Hehr moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to implement a policy to eliminate public funding to private schools.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I'd like to recognize the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 33(1) and (2) and section 2(2) and (5) of the Conflicts of Interest Act and with the advice of the Ethics Commissioner I must advise the Assembly that I am withdrawing from debate and from the vote and from the meeting on this particular motion. I wanted to ensure that I got this on the record.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We'll allow the member to leave the Chamber.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank all members for being here to pay attention to some of the points I make. Hopefully, it'll go along the lines of discussing the direction of education in this province. In my time in this Legislature I've come to understand that above any other government department or what we do here in this Legislature, education is the single most important thing we can do not only for our children but our society as a whole.

As we look at the changing landscape of what we will need in a society, maybe not now but 50 years from now, a hundred years from now, having continued vigilance on this file, having a continuous commitment to the roles, the responsibilities of what we pass on to our younger generation in the form of education is of utmost importance. In my view, Mr. Speaker, that is best served through a publicly funded education system which shares the values of all our citizens, where children of whatever background – whatever religious background, cultural background, whether they're wealthy or poor – can attend a public education system that is rivalled by none other throughout the world.

Albertans along with our fellow Canadians share a civic culture that includes both individual and community values as well as political institutions such as democracy, the rule of law, and the protection of human rights. We transmit these shared civic values from one generation to the next through the education system, and I submit we do this most successfully through public education. In my view, the government of Alberta has lost track of the role that public education plays in the nurturing of our civic culture. Embracing choice and thinking that more choice leads to better results is misguided at best and has serious implications to our broader society. We must remember that by embracing choice, we are sometimes embracing the concept of consumerism, and consumerism by its nature leads to fragmentation, which is very problematic when you're trying to instill a shared civic culture.

I think I was remiss, Mr. Speaker, when I didn't note that the nature of my motion today is to eliminate funding for private schools. It is my view that private schools tend to divide children on the basis of wealth, religion, cultural values, and the like. In my view, they do not lead to building a tolerant and understanding society, a society that says that we're all in this together, a society that recognizes that we are Alberta today, a multiethnic, very diverse society that embraces all views equally and embraces all values on democracy and our participation in a civil society above all else.

If we think about this, the public school is really a place where these values are taught and learned and enshrined. It's where kids from all backgrounds get to go regardless of wealth, regardless of religion and the like.

Ms Blakeman: Sexual orientation.

Mr. Hehr: And sexual orientation, yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed that out.

Regardless of all of these things that are listed, they all get to attend, children with disabilities as well. Our public schools are open to them. I believe this has been a tremendous success of our society, and we should not lose that going forward.

The current Alberta policy in regard to the funding of private schools is, in my view, somewhat against these general principles. Right now in Alberta we fund private schools to 70 per cent of the funding level of what the children would receive if they went to a public school. This Alberta policy is by far the most generous of any other of our provincial counterparts. In fact, most provinces do not engage in funding private schools at all. They deem it unegalitarian and not serving in the best interests of their overall educational goals.

Let's look at private schools. If we're being honest with ourselves, if we really look at private schools as they exist today, they tend to separate on the basis of wealth. We have institutions out there like – let's name them – Strathcona-Tweedsmuir, West Island College, the Webber Academy that charge between $15,000 and $20,000 for people to attend that school. Let's face it. Let's be clear: not every Albertan can go to that school. They have been priced out of that school. They are unable because of their economic circumstances to go to that school. This is a cogent example. We have 3,000 families, I believe, in this province who can't even pay their school fees, that are less than $180 a year, and we expect, under a misguided notion, that they can attend some of these elite private schools or private schools for the wealthy. That is just a misnomer.

Also, let's face it. When it comes to private schools, if they're not for the wealthy or the elite, they tend to be of certain cultural or religious distinctions. That's a fact. It's something we can't deny. People who wish to have a look at the world that resembles that of their own family tend to start these schools, and children of one religion or one cultural community often go to those institutions. Does this lead to a pluralistic society? Does this lead to us understanding each other? Does this lead to us learning how to respect differences and respect others' opinions? In my view, it does not. If you spend your entire life with only one group of people, it's very difficult to understand other groups.

We must remember that we have set up a policy here in Alberta that actually encourages that type of fragmentation. It encourages people to do this. It actually makes it easier for them to set up this type of schooling, one that doesn't recognize our overarching goals of this Legislature, which should be to have a civilized society that embraces diversity and respect for others and understands that at the end of the day we've got to care, share, and play together.

Furthermore, many private schools aren't accessible to all our children for other reasons. I brought up the instance last year in question period of the Edmonton Islamic school, which on their website said that children with disabilities need not apply. It openly stated that on their website. Private schools have an ability to pick and choose their students. They are allowed to exclude students, whether on the basis of disability, maybe on sexual orientation, maybe if they don't condone the religious philosophies of that school.

Should we as a Legislature be funding that type of institution, that has exclusions to it? You know, our Human Rights Act says that we shouldn't allow that. Should we as a government really be allowing for this type of institution to exist, that openly discriminates and openly discriminates not only on disability and some visible things but on the wealth component? Our goal in this Legislature should be to try to foster equality of opportunity. The philosophy of whether you're... [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired] You got the general view.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for putting forward this motion as education is something very close to my heart. As many of the hon. members in this House know, I was a schoolteacher for 18 years. As such, I was able to see the real strengths of our education system. I saw the excellent work done by teachers and staff in all areas of our education system, and I've always been very, very proud of it. We do have one of the best education systems in the world. Alberta schools are world class, and so are our teachers and staff.

The member wishes for the House to endorse the following: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to implement a policy to eliminate public funding to private schools." I do not believe that the implementation of such a policy would be in the best interest of our school system. Perhaps the member believes that the resources currently directed to support students in private schools would instead be directed toward current public school students. Most importantly, economic analysis disproves this assumption. This belief ignores the potential impact of an increase in tuition at private schools. It is possible that cutting support for students attending private schools would induce significant shifts in where students attend school. These shifts could raise enrolment in public schools. This would in turn put extra strain on provincial resources, possibly to an extent that exceeds current resources directed to support private schools.

We can equally expect that many registered private schools would easily assume the status of unregistered private schools. If private schools are going to lose funding anyway, why would they still comply with those regulations and standards set out by the province in order to determine whether they should receive funding? Effectively, this would result in less adherence to the standards expected of public schools. As such, it would reduce standardization and provincial compliance among private schools.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that the member has considered all of the potential consequences of implementing this proposed policy. In fact, British Columbia estimated that educating the close to 75,000 private school students in the public system would cost an additional $564 million annually. This amount is $306 million larger than the current operating grants to support students attending private schools. As such, per-child costs are actually lower for students attending private schools, thus allowing the government to direct finances elsewhere.

For example, resources could be used to increase specialized supports in the public system or to limit the education property tax. This is why many provinces like British Columbia and Alberta provide support for students attending private schools. British Columbia provides up to 50 per cent of per-student grants to nearly all students attending private schools in the province. Saskatchewan has implemented similar supports to encourage choice in their education system. The government of Saskatchewan contributes funds on behalf of students attending private schools up to 50 per cent of the provincial per-student average. To be eligible for government support in Saskatchewan, schools, hon. member, must participate in the provincial student assessment program.

The government of Quebec has supported private education systems since 1968. Upon meeting certain standards, students attending private schools are eligible for approximately 50 per cent of the per-child amount paid to public schools. Based on a government report from 2006 to 2007, the most recent available, the Quebec government's contribution to private school funding is significantly larger than the parental contribution in the form of tuition. Imagine that: the home of social democracy in Canada supporting private education to such a significant degree. Mr. Speaker, I bet some of my friends of that persuasion in the House are rather surprised by that fact.

Our friends in Manitoba are also supporting students in private schools with support of 50 per cent of the provincial per-pupil amount upon the school meeting certain qualifications. We do know that governments across Canada from all ideological backgrounds have recognized the benefits of providing support to students attending private schools.

I would like to thank everyone who participated in this debate, and I would like to again thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward. We may not always agree in this House, but the exchange of ideas is at the core of our democracy. I will enjoy hearing other members' points of view on this matter, and I urge all hon. members to consider the unintended consequences of the government following the recommended course of action proposed in this motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by providing my genuine appreciation to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forward this motion. It's an important motion, and it raises an issue which is long overdue. I can say that the NDP caucus also supports the substance of the motion with respect to what it's calling for. I have one small proviso that I'd like to make with respect to that, but I'll get to that in a minute. I'd like to first begin by talking about why the motion is so important and why the principle is so important.

When you look at the fact that we're providing 70 per cent of the funding, that 70 per cent of what goes to public schools on a per capita basis is also going to fund private schools, I think it's really important to look at whether we actually have that money to play with. Now, the government loves to say: "Oh, yes. Well, if you stop funding the 70 per cent to private schools, in fact we'll have to increase the funding by 30 per cent for all those students that come flooding back into the public education system."

Well, the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that a lot of these private schools charge a tuition of around $20,000 to $25,000 a year. Now, if you suddenly say to them that they're going to have to spend another $3,000 a year to stay in their exclusive private school, the odds are good that a very good chunk of them are not going to come rushing back to the public system. Quite the opposite. They're just going to pay the other $3,000 a year and continue to rely on the income which gets them through the door to that exclusive private school in the first place. So I don't buy the argument that the government keeps putting forward on this because I don't believe it represents good economics.

Then the question becomes: is our public school system in such great shape that we can afford to kick a further 70 per cent out the door to families who are going to use their economic advantage to provide greater educational opportunities for their children in comparison to the average Alberta child? I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot afford that in our public education system.

We have class sizes that have long since exceeded that which has been recommended by relatively objective, neutral groups who have identified the amount of kids that ought to be in each class in order to achieve best practices. We have in excess of that in all grades, even in the so-called younger grades that the government says it's focusing on in order to justify being so far in excess of those guidelines in the older grades.

We have a gargantuan infrastructure deficit when it comes to funding education, and we hear about that regularly in the Legislature. We have a policy of not banning school fees. So as it is, our public schools are often going to parents with hat in hand asking them to write additional cheques. For low- and middle-income families, that can represent a hardship and a challenge.

We are the only province in the country, Mr. Speaker, that does not fund school lunch programs, something which, all the research shows unequivocally, significantly increases the educational outcomes of kids who are otherwise at risk. Yet somehow we don't do it. Here we just accept that out the goodness of their hearts restaurant owners around the city will happily drop off extra food periodically at the schools where kids are going to school hungry. That is shameful.

Of course, ultimately, we do not provide anywhere near the supports that we should be providing to our special-needs students in the schools. It's that particular group that I want to talk about that does give me the slight qualification on my support to this motion, although I will definitely vote in support of it because the long-term objective is one which I absolutely support entirely.

But before we get to that, why do we have a public system of education? Well, the idea behind that was to provide to all children of citizens of this province an equality of opportunity, to provide to them an equality of access, to provide to them an equality of the quality to which they get access with respect to their education, and to ensure that we are able to educate all children in this province in the civic values that are consistent with the pluralistic society in which we live. We do that in the public system through a mechanism that ensures public accountability, transparency in terms of how our schools are run, and also electoral accountability through the opportunity to elect not only our Minister of Education but also our school board trustees. So that's what our public system does.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that we can get in a public system is a common understanding of the rights and responsibilities of children and parents and all citizens in this society to respect certain basic fundamental values which we all sign on to when we are part of this society, those which are reflected in our Constitution, in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and in our human rights code. Those are things that should be fully and unapologetically taught in all of our schools.

So what happens when we end up funding private schools instead? Well, in effect, Mr. Speaker, we subsidize not inclusivity but exclusivity. We subsidize a lack of equality of access and a lack of equality of opportunity. In many cases many of these schools do provide an elevated education because they fund and the parents pay 3 to 1, 4 to 1 in terms of their money versus the public dollar that goes in there. So we're not providing equality of access because the majority of students in Alberta cannot afford nor can their families afford to attend those schools.

Now, in addition, as has already been mentioned, many of these schools also deny access on the basis of other issues which, frankly, they have no business denying people on at the same time that they are receiving public dollars. They should not be denying access to these schools on the basis of whether or not you have special needs. They should not be denying access to these schools on the basis of whether or not you think women are equal participants in society. These are things that we should not be funding. Parents may have choice, but we should not be using taxpayers' dollars to fund schools which happen to on occasion teach that women are somewhat secondary players in society, for instance.

What we need to do, Mr. Speaker, is ensure that we fund properly our public schools, which represent our civic values and which enjoy the benefit of all those accountabilities which I talked about.

Now, I would like to say briefly, Mr. Speaker, that the one thing that an NDP government, if I had my way, would do when it came to looking at this kind of motion is that I would ensure that we did not move forward on it until such time as we were able to promise without qualification to those families who scrimp and save and sacrifice to put their children into expensive private schools because the public system has abandoned their children with special needs. I know that there are families out there who have done that, who sacrifice, who pay for things well beyond what their income level could possibly provide because the public system is unable or unwilling to provide the support that their children need in order to succeed in the education system.

We have a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which actually outlined that the public system does need to provide appropriate support for our special-needs children. But what happens right now is that there are a lot of special-needs families that are accessing private schools because that is the only place their children can get the attention and the support that they need to learn what they actually have the ability to learn, Mr. Speaker, with just a little bit of extra help so that those kids will graduate with the same academic background, the same qualifications, all those kinds of things, but they will have needed a little bit more time from a teacher, a little bit more time from a speech pathologist, a little bit more time from an OT, whatever, but they will ultimately get there.

Right now what's happening is that our public system is not doing its job with respect to those students. It is failing those students. Now, I'll be fair. It's not just the Alberta government that's doing it; it is happening across the country. But this is supposed to be the richest province in the country, and if we cannot do right by our special-needs students, then I don't know who else can.

Now, the fact of the matter is that even though some families are doing that, of course, what we know is that many, many families really can't afford to get into these private schools that give extra help to the special-needs kids. What we're doing is once again putting an additional level of discrimination against those special-needs kids because not only aren't they able to get the support they need, but their families can't afford to pay the extra super-duper premium that is required in this province to make sure that there is fairness of education.

I support the motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark and then Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As much as I respect and admire the track record of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo and as much as I respect any discussion on education, I'm not going to be able to support this member's motion. I agree with what was said on the other side and, you know, had a minispeech prepared, but I think I'd just like to present a few points as many of them have been covered already and many of them, I believe, are the direct opposite of what was just presented.

I think a distinguishing feature of Alberta schools is the fact that we have the choices that we do. It is all about choice in Alberta education. It's what makes us so strong. Kids have options to go to different schools. Public schools are doing a great job, and I want to say that I'm a big supporter. Every chance I get I tell people that my children go to the public school system. I went to the public school system. You could argue that they might have done a little bit better with me, but here I am, in any event, and I'm quite proud of how things went.

It's hard for them to be all things to all people in public schools. The inclusion issue that we've talked about here – I know the Minister of Education and I have talked about it. I've heard it from several around the province. It's hard to balance all the needs in today's classrooms. Some of these private schools are wonderful about providing opportunities for kids that they might not otherwise have.

This motion, if passed, would take away those options for a lot of kids. To suggest that the government shouldn't provide any funding I think is disconnected from what I hear when I go around the province. I hear from people that, obviously, choice is good, and we should be supporting parents and kids to go ahead and access education in different ways.

You could also present, I think, if you looked at the debate and just tried to separate any of the emotion that ties you to the pro or con, that choice has made our public system stronger. Public schools have stepped up because of it. They've offered unique programs as well. It is a benefit to the system. If we were to take all these kids out of the private system and put them into the public system – and I know that one member suggested that would happen and another suggested it might not – I'm not sure we'd have funding right now in the public system the way that it's set up. If you had to top up that 30 per cent for all of the kids that could no longer go, if you took away the funding for private schools and essentially eliminated that choice for many kids, I don't know what the dollar figure would be, but that would be worse for public education, not to mention that I'm not sure where we could put them all.

You ask where the government would get the money if we did such a thing. The previous speaker did mention fees. On that point I agree with her wholeheartedly. I promise not to use this as a soapbox issue to get onto the fees subject, but it will indulge me to make a point. We've gotten to a point now in the public system that mandatory fees have become, you know, a way of survival for a lot of boards to make things work. If we were to suddenly eliminate the funding for private schools, I can't imagine the fees that our kids would be charged in the public system.

Parents want choice for their own reasons. If that niche market exists, and if a school can make a go of it, I think what we're doing is increasing, you know, the level of tolerance in society. We're giving people a chance to grow in their own areas. We're not saying: "It's one size fits all. This is public education. That's it." It's one of the greatest things about Alberta.

In my riding we have a specialized Sikh school. It's a tremendous school. The kids are phenomenal coming out of that school. They have every right to go to that private school. You know, another is the Edge school in Springbank. That's wonderful. We've talked about Quest in the past, I know, in my caucus and the great work that it does. I think, if I'm not mistaken, that Quest did begin as a not-for-profit society to enable students with special challenges to learn and develop to their maximum potential in a caring and safe environment, something that allows them to focus on exactly that and provides that for parents and their students. Why shouldn't they have access to that if there's a market for it? Clearly, it's our duty to make sure that those things happen. They grew into a designated special education school. I believe, again, they combine therapy and education in each of the classrooms. The goal is so that students can achieve their maximum potential. That is the goal, I know, of any school, be it public, private, home-school, charter. Every child is unique.

We are so blessed in Alberta and as parents to have the choices that we have. As I said earlier, I'm a big fan of the public system, but I'm not a fan of taking money away from the private schools and systems because I think they serve us well.

I mentioned choice and innovation. We'd be remiss if we didn't mention charter schools and, you know, the great work that they've been able to do. You can see the pride when you go around and travel and meet with these individuals and find out how the students are responding. I said earlier that public schools have responded to competition in private. I believe that they have. They've increased the programs that they offer kids. We should be discussing ways, I think, to continue the culture of educational choice in Alberta and to provide for our kids in innovation in our province. I clearly won't be supporting this motion.

I just want to make one final point. Sometimes people want to label those that choose another option as intolerant. That's the part that really sticks with me and the great majority of people that I speak to. It is not intolerant to have religious views of your own. It is not intolerant to think that sport is good for your child or art is good for your child or that this special need suits you. That is tolerance. That is what's made Alberta what it is. And a bouquet to that side, who recognized that with Bill 3, and to the current Education minister, who made the changes that he did.

Again to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo: thank you for the motion. I think I've made my points loud and clear. I won't be supporting it. I will conclude by saying that I think we've got the greatest education system in the world although some pressure points. We've got to work on those, but I'm proud of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to support the motion from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Liberals believe in freedom of the individual, equality of opportunity, and fairness to future generations. It doesn't matter who you are or where you're from; your child should have a chance in this province and in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we believe in choice within the public system. Choice is a good thing. In Edmonton we have Meadowlark Christian school in Edmonton-Meadowlark. We have French schools. We have sports schools. If your children want to take film or art, there are many different, diverse aspects of education you can get within the public system. We have Catholic schools here. There is choice, and that's one of the reasons we have one of the best education systems.

That education system also does come with many problems. I'll tell you what the problem with our public education system right now is, Mr. Speaker. We have 650 fewer teachers today than we had two years ago in Alberta, 650 fewer teachers at a time when there's so much more to teach and the needs of the children are greater than ever. Now, we have a 20 to 25 per cent high school noncompletion rate. Do those 650 fewer teachers have something to do with that? Maybe.

Mr. Speaker, we also are in the midst of a baby boom. We're going to have 100,000 more children in the school system 10 years from now. Albertans are making love more than ever, and we have immigration on top of that. That's a good thing. With immigration comes high needs. I know. I was the son of new immigrants. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie stood up and spoke. He should know. In his community there are tens of thousands of brand new Canadians who've showed up with their kids with high needs. In his community, where he was a teacher, there are fewer teachers today than there were two years ago and more kids with high needs.

The government's job is to fund public education with public tax dollars. The current Conservative government has been starving the public education system for years, so our school boards have to nickel and dime families for school fees, and they're going to increase even more by 2014. School fees for a child to go to grade 1 are akin to what tuition was for university a couple of decades ago. I know it's pretty tough for hard-working families with three, four kids. That's a couple of thousand dollars a year. We've got children showing up at school hungry. You can't learn on an empty stomach.

Government's job is to equalize these barriers, especially for our children. Now, it's okay if you're rich and you've got money and you want to send your kid to a school that charges 20, 30 grand. That's all right. You should have that choice, but it shouldn't be funded with public tax dollars when the needs of the public school system are so great. Many of these institutions cherry-pick the students. They have the choice of who they want to attend, and that's wrong. Mr. Speaker, we as a government are not here to subsidize the wealthy, but I'm not surprised because that's what the right-wing Conservative government wants to do. They've been subsidizing the wealthy in every part of society.

To those who say, "Hey, if we bring these kids into the public system, the public system is going to be stressed," excuse me? Going to be stressed? Unless these members haven't noticed, the public system is already stressed and distressed because of the fact that they've starved public schools from funding. Twenty-four thousand students – 24,000 students – when we have a cohort of about 600,000 students in the province are only about 4 or 5 per cent. Well, you know what? The public system delivers education efficiently. Adding 24,000 students to that education system with 600,000 and bringing back that funding will not stress it as much as it's currently being stressed.

With all due respect to the other members, this is why I said that it is a problem if you have a right-wing Conservative government and a right-wing conservative opposition. We support education. We think we have a good education system, a very good education system. We just believe it has an opportunity to be a great education system that delivers a quality education for every child in this province regardless of race, colour, creed, sex, or socioeconomic background. I'm a product of a public education system, as are my children. I thank the Minister of Education. I acknowledge the challenges that he has. The reason we're speaking up is to actually support the current Minister of Education so that he would have more funds for the public education system, that he has to manage.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to a very important matter. It's really about the future of our province and the future of our children. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a lot to say about this issue. Unfortunately, there are probably only six minutes left, but I'll still try to make my points here.

You know, I'm very happy today to talk about this issue, education. By listening to all the members who spoke before me, I've got to remember, people, one fundamental issue, that the parents of all of the kids are taxpayers as well. My children have absolutely the same rights as any other children to have the funding for their education, to have their education funded by public dollars.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Xiao: Yeah. Sure.

That's why I'm going to tell you that as parents we all have the same interest in having the best possible education for our children in the world. However, I must say that we have very different ideas on how this can be achieved. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start straight off by telling the member that I'm not going to support this motion. There are a number of reasons for this. For me, the biggest reason is that I believe it's all about freedom of choice. I think there's an important role for private schools to play in our education system.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk personally about my children. I have two boys. One is 24 now, and the other one is going to be 18 years old next year. Both of them went through slightly different paths. My eldest son, Allen, graduated from Tempo School. It's a private school in Edmonton. He graduated from junior high and then proceeded to his high school education in a public school called Old Scona academic high school. The reason he went to Tempo was because he liked the programs. Only Tempo School offered a Latin program, and they offered an extensive program about world history and about geography.

I can tell you a story, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 we as a family travelled to Europe. We went to the Vatican. We went to the Sunday prayers by Pope John Paul II. When I heard that my son could translate all the Latin into English, it was amazing. It was amazing. By training I'm a geologist. I know some Latin, but I was so thrilled to see that my son could translate Latin into English when we were visiting the Vatican. I can tell you that this is something that a public school cannot offer. Also, he knew all about the history of Europe. He actually booked all the hotels in Europe by himself just based on historical stories. But he was very disappointed, I can tell you. When we checked into those hotels, we couldn't find a trace of anything, you know, from the Second World War. It doesn't matter. That shows that he had such an extensive knowledge about world history.

I'm very happy to tell you right now that he is going to graduate with his second bachelor degree, in history. He received, I believe, the only award for Russian studies in the University of Alberta this year. He speaks very good Russian. I have to say that I have to attribute all of this, his achievement, to his education in Tempo School. I can tell you that he's getting two degrees. He just got an LSAT score – we've got some lawyers here – of 166. He is well on his way to being a lawyer. I can tell you that. My second son is graduating from Old Scona academic high school with distinction this year, and his average is 96. So we have a very sound public school system and also a very good private school system.

I really support both systems. It's all about freedom of choice. I always remind the members that we as parents are taxpayers. I expect my children's education to be funded by tax dollars.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the House will stand adjourned at 6 p.m. We will conclude this matter at the next available opportunity for private members' business, which, time permitting, will be next Monday. We will conclude this motion. The House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 26, 2012

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 7

Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

[Adjourned debate November 22: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had adjourned debate. I had made my comments, 18 minutes of talk, close enough to 20 minutes. I am pleased to let the next speaker take his or her turn.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to rise today to speak in favour generally of Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act. We're very pleased that the government is bringing forward this legislation, but I think it's worth reminding the Assembly of why we're here.

I mean, when we were in the brief session in the spring Legislature, the hon. minister began by seemingly refuting that we needed to make this change to the legislation. I remember that at the beginning of this legislative session there seemed to be some confusion about whether or not the Chief Electoral Officer was actually permitted to release the results of his investigations when he found wrongdoing. I think, if everybody in the Assembly recalls, through that week we kept going back and forth and back and forth until, sure enough, a member of the chief electoral office went to the media and pointed out that, no, in fact, they believed they could not release the results of investigations and, no, in fact, they had never given the government the recommendation that the results of their investigations should be kept secret.

We were pleased that the government at that point announced the intention to go back and change this bad portion of the law, but I don't think that there should be anything that the Justice minister celebrates today. This is a portion of the law that never should have been implemented in the first place. That being said, we'll give credit where due, and we are pleased that we are now here debating eliminating this section of the law to give that freedom to the Chief Electoral Officer to be able to release the results of his investigations.

Let's also remember why we're here. I guess the minister has said that he's accepted something like 90 of the 101 recommendations that the Chief Electoral Officer has put forward. Many of those recommendations had previously come forward from the Chief Electoral Officer Lorne Gibson, who did not have his contract renewed. I think that's a stain on the government's record, the fact that we are now debating recommendations that probably should have been debated when Mr. Gibson was around to be able to take some pleasure in seeing them implemented.

Also, I think it's worth noting that there were some 19 files that Mr. Gibson had put forward with a recommendation to prosecute that the previous Justice minister chose not to act on. I think it's a shame that we will never know what the results of those 19 investigations were and why he made the recommendations to prosecute.

Once again, I think that we're looking at this bill as a bit of a mixed blessing. We're glad that we're closing some of the loopholes. However, it doesn't go far enough. We believe that there are still some major reforms to this bill that are needed, and we think that there's an opportunity to do that.

Let me tell you what we have heard loud and clear from Albertans. First of all, they want to know that elections and governments aren't for sale to corporate and union interests. They want to know that contribution limits that are defined in law cannot be skirted around. They want to know that there won't be excuses like, "Well, gee, I didn't know the law applied to me" or "Well, gee, this was sort of standard practice at our organization even though it violated the law."

They want to know that illegal activity will be reported, and not just illegal activity that took place over the last three years; they want to know that all illegal activity going back a reasonable period of time is going to be corrected. They want to know that investigations, the results of them, especially when wrongdoing is found, will be revealed. They want to know that political parties that solicit illegal donations are also going to be punished, not just those who are giving donations to political parties. They also want to know that illegal donations will be paid back and that nobody is going to profit from illegal donations.

This is why we will be putting forward some important amendments to put elections back in the hands of hard-working Albertans and to make meaningful improvements to the elections bill that we have before us.

As written, Bill 7 does, actually, very little to improve accountability and transparency in our democratic institutions and practices. Hopefully, we'll be able to improve it dramatically before it passes. Let me just go through a couple of the things that the hon. members will expect to see from us as we debate this over the coming days.

First of all, for context – let's remember the context in which we're debating this legislation – the Chief Electoral Officer was asked to investigate a number of different potential violations of the bills. Back on July 9, 2012, Elections Alberta confirmed that they had opened 81 different investigations. As of that date they had found 37 illegal contributions that required them to issue some kind of fine or penalty in addition to 14 investigations where they issued a warning or censure to those who were involved. So we're looking at, out of 81 investigations, 30 which saw the individuals cleared and 51 which found that there had been wrongdoing. We'd like to know how many more illegal donations are out there. I think that you will find that as we learn more about this, especially when we see how this legislation plays out and what limits we ultimately end up with, you will probably see that there are far more than the 81 investigations that the Chief Electoral Officer has already gone into.

Let me start with where we began today. My caucus members the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills as well as the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I issued a policy statement on what we would like to see in this bill related to the treatment of corporate and union donations. We think there should be a ban on corporate donations. We know that there is, unfortunately, whether it's real or whether it's just perceived, a perception in the public that big money from big corporations can influence government decision-making. I think that we have seen a number of examples of this.

The example that we raised this morning that has caused a lot of concern to our members, particularly those in the south, is the awarding of untendered, sole-source contracts for major transmission line projects done through Bill 50. The value of those projects is several billion dollars. The value of the entire plan when it's finally fully implemented is somewhere in the order of $16 billion. If you go through and you look at the Progressive Conservative donation book, you see that any number of transmission and power line companies as well as those who are involved in the power business have given significant contributions to the political party.

Now, we have tried and tried and tried. I know the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has tried to make the argument about how this level of transmission build doesn't make sense. It didn't have any impact on the government side. That's what causes the public to wonder. If they make decisions that don't seem to make sense and you draw this line from all of these heavy contributions coming from corporations, is there a link? The perception is, I think, what is damaging the credibility of this government. The way you resolve that is that you put in place a ban on all corporate donations. Let's take the influence of corporate dollars completely out of the political process.

Now, we know that we would be harmed by that as well. We put forward the numbers today in our press conference. If this rule had been in place, sure enough, during this past election there would have been 160 of our donations that we wouldn't have received. Keep in mind that we have thousands of donations, thousands of donors, so this is a very small portion of our overall donations from an actual number of donations point of view, but it would have been a significant amount of money, $750,000. So we know that in proposing this, we also would be impacted by it, but that's how strongly we feel that we need to go the extra measure to restore public confidence in the process, and this is why we would propose a ban on corporate donations.

Now, unfortunately, with the way the legislation, the amending act, has been written, at this moment the advice we're getting from Parliamentary Counsel is that we may be unable to put forward an amendment that would be able to ban corporate donations. We're hoping that we can find a way to be able to do this. I would think the government would make it a little bit easier for us. We've seen this before, for instance, with Bill 2, where the minister came in with a suite of additional amendments to be able to add to the list in Committee of the Whole. I would ask the Justice minister to consider doing the same, opening up this section of the bill so that we can have a robust debate about corporate donations and union donations. In the absence of that, we're going to still try to find a way to be able to amend the bill. Our reading of it at this precise moment is that we may not be able to do that.

That leads to my second point. We also issued in our policy statement today that we need to see a ban on union donations as well. This has been controversial for a number of years. There are many, many union members who hold a variety of different political viewpoints. Many will support the Progressive Conservatives. Many will support our party. Many will support the Liberals and the New Democrats. To have the union able to take dollars that are received through mandatory contributions – we do have a system where you have to pay mandatory union dues – and see a portion of those channelled to a political party which those rank-and-file union members don't support is something that has caused some controversy over the last number of years. Other jurisdictions are taking the lead on dealing with that.

We think that this is the reason as well why we'd like to see a ban on union donations, to be able to have that parity. If you're not going to have corporate donations, you shouldn't have union donations. You'd once again restore to each individual union member the choice of being able to support the political party of their choice rather than being forced to support causes that they don't support.

Again, as mentioned before, because of the way that this amending act has been written, it does not appear at this moment that we're able to put forward an amendment to ban union donations, so once again I would ask the Justice minister to consider, when we get into Committee of the Whole, putting forward this amendment so it can be debated and voted upon.

The third area of policy that we produced today was reducing the contribution limit. That would take us from $15,000 during a nonelection year to $5,000 during a nonelection year. The reason why we chose those limits is that we're cognizant that most people, when they're looking at elections law, are very familiar with the federal rules. At the federal level there's an $1,100 limit on individual donations, a ban on union and corporate donations. But that contribution limit came into effect at the same time as they brought in a per-vote subsidy. We're not arguing for a per-vote subsidy. We don't think that taxpayers should be forced to support political parties. We think that it's our job to convince rank-and-file members of the public to support a political party. With that in mind, it does mean that we think there needs to be a tolerance for a higher level of individual contributions than what they have at the federal level but certainly lower than we have right now.

In addition, we recognized that during a campaign – the concept of this makes sense to us – that you would double the contribution limit because we all know that campaigns are a lot more expensive than running a political party in a noncampaign year. You've got additional brochures and lawn signs, advertising that you need to do. So we would like to see that contribution limit moved from $30,000 in a campaign period down to $10,000 for similar reasons.

Now, the unfortunate thing about this amendment as well is that based on the way Bill 7 has been written, this is also a section where Parliamentary Counsel is telling us that we would not be able to put forward an amendment because it is not currently in the act. But we would invite the Justice minister to bring forward an amendment in Committee of the Whole to be able to address this as well.

We have heard loud and clear from Albertans that they believe that these contribution limits are way too high, and they would like to see them lowered. They'd like to see a lower limit that is more in keeping with what they're expecting out of this legislation. What they're expecting out of this legislation is that we're going to try to remove the influence of large corporate donors and the perception that they have an influence on government decision-making.

I think it's been said before. No one is going to believe that somebody who gives $5,000 to a political party is going to affect a politician's decision. I think everybody sees that. But once you start seeing $30,000 contributions or 30,000 contributions multiplied out through a circle of friends and family multiple times so you have a $430,000 contribution, that's where the line gets drawn with members of the public. I think that the way that you address this issue is that you bring the contribution limits down not only during a nonelection year but also in an election year, and I hope that the Justice minister will consider doing that when we get into Committee of the Whole.

The fourth area is closing the Katz loophole as I think it's been called. If it is the case – and I'm glad the Chief Electoral Officer is investigating the Globe and Mail report – that a single donor wrote a cheque to a political party for $430,000 and then after the fact divvied it up between a variety of friends and family, co-workers, and business associates, that is quite clearly offside with what the elections law is supposed to do and is intended to stop. We think that we need to close this loophole so that it's incumbent upon the recipient of a large contribution to make certain that if they receive a large cheque, they have the background documentation to ensure that the legality of the Election Act is being upheld. We will be putting forward amendments to be able to address this loophole, and we are hopeful that the Justice minister will see to it for the integrity of the political fundraising process, the integrity of all of us who run for political office, ensuring that this loophole is closed.

Now, I was saying that having these lower contribution limits also impacts us as well. I gave these results earlier today. We did have 11 individual donors who had given us more than $10,000 during the election. If these contribution limits had been put in place, that would have cost us $120,000. In combination these proposals that we're putting forward would have impacted our party to the tune of about $870,000 in the last election. Again, that's how strongly we feel that the public is demanding this kind of change. We are aware that this would impair our fundraising, but we believe that if everyone is willing to play by the same rules, this will go a long way to restoring the integrity in the process.

The next area I wanted to talk about was the issue of the connection that people perceive between the variety of public institutions that have come under scrutiny as a result of the Chief Electoral Officer's investigations. We've seen school boards, health regions, libraries, municipalities, housing management agencies, universities, and Crown corporations, whether it was Calgary Lab Services or whether it was ATB, all scrutinized and investigated as a result of what appeared to be illegal contributions. We don't know the result of those because we haven't actually seen the result of the Chief Electoral Officer's investigations yet.

But I think this is an area that has us most concerned because there is this perception among these various contributors that they believe they have to support a certain political party in order to be able to secure the grants that are coming to their agencies. We think that that is one of the biggest problems that we have right now, the perception that there is some kind of relationship or some kind of fear factor at play, some kind of intimidation at play, that all of these different agencies feel that somehow they have to give, especially to the governing party, in order to keep the flow of funds going. We think that this is an area which, once again, we hope to be able to address by seeing more transparency in the investigations. We're glad we're going down that route.

I would say that the concern we do have, though, is that part of the reason why this was not corrected when we first encountered this problem back in 2004 was a change in the legislation. It was made very clear that this kind of contribution was illegal, yet it persisted through 2005 and 2006 and 2007 and 2008 and 2009. I think the reason for that is because there have not been the kinds of prosecutions and investigations done by the Chief Electoral Officer. Prosecutions can play a very important role in educating people about what the law is. We haven't done these institutions any favours by creating a shroud of secrecy over the kind of contributions that have gone to different political parties.

This is the reason why we think it is vitally important that we go back a longer period of time to be able to address this issue. We know, as I've mentioned, that in different years we have found evidence ourselves of contributions that appear to violate the Election Act. Unfortunately, the way this act reads is that the government would only allow the Chief Electoral Officer to go back three years. We think that's insufficient. We think that seven years would be a far better period to go back. There's a reason for that seven years. It's not just arbitrary. The decision in the tax code for the record keeping that you have to do to be able to justify the expenses that you have and the things that you write off is a seven-year requirement.

There seems to be some parity here. If people are required to keep their personal records of their tax contributions and tax receipts going back seven years, we think that that would be a nice parallel in this legislation, that we would also go back seven years, identify the areas where we did see illegal donations, and ensure that they are addressed. We think that three years is insufficient, and we're going to be putting forward an amendment to go back a longer period of time.

We're also disappointed at one of the recommendations that the government refused from the Chief Electoral Officer. There were a number, but there are a few that I'll mention in my comments here tonight. First of all, there was a recommendation by the Chief Electoral Officer that any entity, any corporation or agency that received one-third of its dollars from government funding would be added to the list of prohibited corporations. Now, of course, we've already said that our first option would be to ban union and corporate donations altogether, but in the absence of being able to get the government to agree to that, I think, accepting the Chief Electoral Officer's provision that any entity that received a third of its dollars from government would also be on the prohibited list.

There's a reason for this. We have to go back to the principle about why it is that public institutions are not permitted to give money to a political party. It's because we don't want to create a scenario where taxpayer dollars are being funneled through a public institution and then going back to fund partisan political activity. I think that what the Chief Electoral Officer was getting at with this provision is trying to create the same kind of parity. If you're getting a third of your dollars from a government entity, a department, a ministry, then it would make sense to treat that entity in a very similar way that you treat other public institutions.

We may even want to go further than that. We know that there are other companies who may not receive a third of their dollars, their total revenues, from government, but they receive a substantial amount of money from government, whether it's those companies who receive dollars through the venture capital fund or whether it's those companies that are invested in through AIMCo or whether it's those companies that receive dollars through the carbon capture and storage fund or whether it's those companies that have the bulk of their work contracted work with government.

The danger that we see and what we're trying to eliminate here is this idea that somehow the contributions to a political party have some impact on an individual entity being able to receive dollars or receive contracts. Again, we think that this could be cleaned up most easily by banning corporate and union donations, but in the absence of that we have to take a look at what kind of bar we want to set for what constitutes a prohibited corporation for the purposes of the Election Act and make that list public.

We believe that the principle should be that zero public dollars, zero taxpayer dollars, should be going to fund political campaigns through this mechanism of granting and then having it circle back. We already have a very generous political tax credit. That is the way in which a person is able to get a portion of their contribution back for supporting the political party of their choice. That is a reasonable and appropriate way for people to be able to benefit from a contribution to a political party: getting a return of their own tax dollars. It's when you have taxpayers in general being forced to fund a political party which they do not agree with where we see the problem lies and why we need to see more rules around what constitutes a prohibited corporation. Again, we want to go back seven years.

We think that there's another concern with this legislation in that we don't have any guarantee that when fault is found, those dollars will be paid back. What we want to see is some guarantee that there is some follow-up done to ensure that an illegal contribution is returned so that no taxpayer dollars go to fund political parties.

The other area we're concerned about is that there doesn't seem to be any requirement of proof to be demonstrated that the fines have been paid. We know that the Chief Electoral Officer has the latitude to be able to impose administrative penalties, and it's fortunate that we're now going to see what kind of administrative penalties are being imposed, but we want to make sure that there is some mechanism to provide proof that these fines have been paid.

The next area I'd like to discuss is the issue of making the details known, and this is an absolute must. We're pleased that the minister has agreed, albeit in a limited way, that these details will be made known. It's totally reasonable, we believe, that as investigations are taking place, they take place with some confidentiality. We do understand that there is a potential for allegations to be not what they seem and that when you go in and you take a look at the actual details, you find that, clearly, no violations have occurred. That has happened, as I pointed out, in 30 of the cases. We'd love to know even which of the cases that were made public did not have any penalty levied against them. I think that there would be some value in knowing that so that we can clear the air on some of the allegations that were made public through the media and elsewhere. At the very least we need to make sure that the details are known of those entities that do violate the law and are found to be in violation of the law and the kind of fine or administrative penalty or censure that is levied against them.

We also believe that it's important for this information to be revealed as we go, issuing a press release as these investigations are completed so that we have the information, so that for those entities that are found to be in violation, it is made clear publicly right away what the fine was, what the penalty was so that the public can know. Again, it serves a really important educational role. We can't continue on for the foreseeable future with people saying that they don't know the law. The best way to encourage people to learn the law and know the law is for them to see that when violations occur, they are discovered quickly, penalties are levied, and it's made public.

The other area that we're interested in is that we want to see the Chief Electoral Officer able to release his recommendations when he is putting forward proposals for prosecutions. We are very concerned that the previous Chief Electoral Officer had put forward multiple cases where he felt prosecution should proceed, and they never ended up proceeding. If the Chief Electoral Officer, who is an officer of this Legislature, believes that a violation is so serious that it warrants prosecution, we believe that that should be made public, and if it is not pursued by the Crown prosecutor, then we need to understand the reasons why. We think that having this shroud of secrecy around that is not helpful in trying to educate people about where the lines are in this legislation so that they can stay on the right side of them.

We're also very concerned that the Justice minister did not appear to take the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer when it comes to penalizing the party. We know that most people don't wake up in the morning and say: gee, I'm going to cut a cheque to a political party. That doesn't normally happen. There's a lot of call on our dollars. There's a call for personal and family obligations; there's a call for charitable contributions. The chances are that if somebody has given a donation to a political party, it's because there has been some solicitation. Someone has asked for that contribution.

The very idea that it is the donor who in all cases is going to be the one who suffers the fines and penalties and the public flogging seems to be imbalanced. We need to make sure that there are fines and penalties and censure on the political party who, quite frankly, should have a better grasp of the legislation and where the rules lie. We think, actually, that it's the political parties who are the most at fault when we see a series of illegal donations, and we think that penalizing the political party or the individual candidate is the more appropriate way of being able to have this balance in the legislation.

A related area that we're concerned about I think came out of a recent disclosure of tax receipts from a senior health executive from the Calgary health region, a $300 purchase of tickets to, I believe, the Calgary-Elbow fundraising dinner. At the bottom of the receipt the political party had asked: who should the receipt be made out to? We think that there is a potential for there to be another parallel investigation from the tax administration because if an individual has received full compensation for a $300 contribution to a political party and then, in addition to that, is getting a tax receipt made out in their name or the name of a colleague, we think that this is offside with what most reasonable people would think would be appropriate.

We think that there needs to be some language around this to ensure that this is an additional level of scrutiny that the Chief Electoral Officer goes into to make sure that not only are we not seeing illegal contributions from public institutions, but we're also not seeing illegal tax receipts going out to recipients who did not pay out of pocket to give money to a political party. We think that that's another area of concern.

Let me turn briefly to the issue of municipal election campaign financing because we recognize that that's kind of been smooshed into this legislation as well. I think the government had initially started off thinking that the only legislation they would bring forward to change elections law was at the municipal level. I think we were thinking at that time that we would just see a change to a four-year term, but there is actually quite a bit of election law change in here regarding the financing for municipal elections.

As you can imagine, there are some mayoral candidates of some large cities that have already announced their intention to run once again for political office, and they are expressing concern about some of the provisions that are in the legislation. I am sympathetic to that, especially when you are looking at the large cities like Calgary and Edmonton.

8:00

The Municipal Affairs minister has already acknowledged that Calgary and Edmonton need to have a discussion about having city charters because the issues that you're dealing with when a city gets to be over 500,000 people, or over a million people for that matter, are quite different than in municipalities where you may have less than 10,000 people. I've spoken to many municipal council members who finance their own campaigns. Many of them had very, very modest campaigns. But when you look at what happens in Calgary and Edmonton, particularly with the last municipal election in 2010, at least one candidate, and perhaps two, spent over a million dollars on those campaigns.

There is some argument to be made that the size of the city may require a different type of approach to election financing. The argument has been made – and we'll be talking about it as a caucus to see whether or not we can put forward amending language around this. I'm quite sympathetic to the notion that a city of a certain size, perhaps 250,000 people, should be given the latitude to pass laws that are even more stringent on the election side than what is prescribed in the provincial legislation. Since this is the way our municipal level of government operates at the moment, I think it's appropriate for the provincial government to pass legislation that governs municipal financing; however, I do think that large cities should be granted some latitude to be able to put in place their own election financing laws if they are over a certain population size.

I mean, I can imagine how we would feel here in Alberta if Ottawa came in and told us that they were going to set our election financing laws. If we are going to treat our municipalities as another order of government, if that's what the whole process is that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is going through, to establish that Calgary and Edmonton are truly another order of government with a sense of autonomy in their own right, then I think we have to start looking at ways in which we can provide that sort of latitude to those municipalities where because of extremely high campaign contributions and extremely high campaign expenditures they may require additional rules around how that operates.

At the very least, we have to make sure that we are not imposing election financing rules on our municipalities, particularly Calgary and Edmonton, that are more rigid than what we would have on provincial politicians. That, I think, is the big concern that we are hearing from those municipal leaders in the large cities, that they're feeling that some of provisions that have been put forward would never fly at the provincial level. The very idea that you couldn't start raising money until you've registered after the writ period drops makes it almost impossible, I think, for candidates, especially those who are not incumbents, to be able to raise enough money and put forward a campaign that would allow them to be able to be successful.

I think that what we would like to see here is an opportunity for someone who is seeking municipal office to have a similar type of approach as we have at the provincial level. At the provincial level each of us has a constituency association, so we're able to raise money throughout the year. From the moment that the campaign is over, we can start raising money again.

We believe that if we can create the same kind of approach, where a municipal candidate, someone who knows they want to run for municipal office in the next election, is able to register early, establish their official agent and their bank account so that they can raise money in trust throughout, this would create a parity in the way we treat provincial politicians seeking elected office and municipal politicians. I think it would also meet the needs of what we need to see in our two major centres.

As I say, because many smaller municipalities have candidates who self-finance their campaigns, having this restriction as it's written in the legislation of only being able to start raising money when you register may not be a big deal, but when you look at what's happening in Calgary and Edmonton, there is just no way that you can have a similar kind of restriction. Otherwise, you're going to, I think, impair the ability of every candidate to have a fair fight in those local races. It's important that we get this right now because there are many politicians who are already announcing their intention to run.

I've got just a couple more, but one of the last major points that I want to raise is on the issue of a fixed election date. Now, we know that the Premier, when she was running for the Progressive Conservative leadership, did campaign on a fixed election date. I think that if we went back and we were to pull the quotes, everybody would have expected that we would have actually had a date in the calendar that was a fixed election date. It wouldn't have been unusual. Other provinces have done it. I think six provincial jurisdictions have done this. In addition, we already have it at the municipal level. We have a fixed election date. It's interesting that in making these changes to the different acts, nobody is messing with the notion of having a fixed election date at the municipal level, so there seems to be buy-in for that at the municipal level.

We just wish we saw similar buy-in at the provincial level. I think that when you look at the Chief Electoral Officer recommendations, this is another recommendation that the Justice minister rejected. The Chief Electoral Officer looked at the current legislation and saw that an election could be held between March 1 and May 31 and every fourth year following, but he proposed that we specify an election date. There were reasons for this, and he has some fantastic reasons here, which I'll read into the record.

I think that, actually, when you look at the rationale for the amendments, this is the one that had the longest rationale. First of all, he said that it "would increase openness and transparency by providing all stakeholders with an abundance of advance notice of the coming election." I can tell you that from my own experience in recruiting candidates, the fixed election window is helpful, but actually knowing what the election date is helps people to do better planning. They can figure out the period of time in which they need to take a leave of absence from work or wrap up their business affairs or wrap up some of their personal affairs to be able to run a campaign. To be able to have all of this information publicly available so that everybody knows what the exact date is would allow for all of us, every political party, to be able to have that ability.

It would also provide advance notice to electors, and that may promote participation. We hear every single time we have an election the pundits bemoaning the low voter turnout, the low outcome. I think in this last one we had 60 per cent voter turnout, which was higher than the previous one.

My riding of High River in some parts of town becomes a bit of a ghost town during the winter months, from January through to about May. If you actually knew when the election was going to be, many of those snowbirds would be able to either return home to vote or be able to register and ask for an advance ballot, or they would be able to do an out-of-province ballot. We would be able to get much higher voter turnout. But, again, you'd need to know when the election date is. I remember that there were some of my supporters who left before the writ was dropped and didn't come back until after it was over. As a result, many of them were unable to vote. Providing advance notice to electors, I believe, would go a long way towards increasing voter turnout.

The Chief Electoral Officer also said that "electors who plan to be away could make appropriate plans for participation," as I mentioned. "Political parties and candidates could prepare appropriately." He talks about how "election officers could make appropriate plans for participation, which could increase the number of persons willing to accept the key positions of Returning Officer, election clerk and administrative assistant."

When you think of the number of polling stations that we need to have in 87 constituencies and to have this constant concern about how they're going to properly staff, how they're going to establish the location, the logistics of that take a lot of effort. To not know when that's going to occur and to have to do it at the drop of a hat is putting undue pressure on that office. If we had a fixed election date, it would make it a lot easier for them to do the recruitment and establish all of those administrative details.

Elections officer training could also "be scheduled well in advance, but near enough to the election to avoid the need for refresher courses." Once again, the Chief Electoral Officer could see a benefit of having a fixed election date so that he was able to do this rather than have a window of three full months in which he would have to try to recruit people.

People's lives change. You may decide that you might want to do this work on an election, and then if it doesn't happen for two or three months, you might change your mind. If you actually knew when the election date was going to be, it would make that training that much easier. It says that "returning officers could serve candidates and the public more effectively, by establishing offices in advance of the election period." Once again, for those who are travelling out of town, being able to know where the advance polling station is going to be in advance because of the actual dates being known is another way that you'd be able to increase participation.

"Cost savings may be achieved, since the delivery and installation of necessary supplies and services could be planned well in advance, thus avoiding express delivery surcharges and holding charges for reserving necessary equipment and services until they're required." We're clearly putting additional pressure on this office because they're trying to make contingency arrangements, not knowing which of the three months is going to be chosen for the election date. We would be able to reduce costs if we had a fixed election date.

"Administrators of schools and other facilities often used as polling places could plan their schedules to facilitate their use on Polling Day." This is clearly creating some problems for our public institutions, which are the hosts of most of our polling stations, and the Chief Electoral Officer believes that this would help resolve some of that if we actually knew what the date would be.

"This would also be consistent with election legislation in other jurisdictions, including BC, New Brunswick, Ontario, Canada, and [he points out] Alberta municipalities." So this is not an unreasonable request, and I think that it is something that – as we're looking at moving to a four-year election window for municipalities maintaining a fixed election date, it's a perfect opportunity for us to consider doing something similar for our provincial office as well.

I'll end on this point. I think the big problem that I think we've seen with the election legislation as it stands and the fact that we have seen so many violations of the Election Act – and we see this in a number of different ways – is that it seems that after 41 years in power the PCs don't know the difference between appropriate work that they're doing as government and appropriate work to do as a political party. We constantly see in the Progressive Conservative Party and the government that there's a blurring of these two lines.

The fact that they don't seem to know the difference is very interesting because the approach of the Legislative Assembly Office with the opposition parties is quite different. We have all on the opposition benches faced the scrutiny of the LAO when they perceive in any way that the materials that we're producing or the actions that we've taken potentially cross the line into partisan activity.

I remember that our website didn't get funded when I was the unelected leader because they demanded that my face be taken off the website. They demanded that my name be removed from press releases. These are the kinds of things that we've experienced on this side, so we know on the opposition benches how seriously the LAO takes this division between partisan political activity and the work that we do as elected representatives. I think that after 41 years, though, the governing party has not had the same level of scrutiny. I think some bad practices, quite frankly, have slipped into their behaviour.

Fortunately, we have this legislation before us. It allows us to go through, identify the issues, hopefully close some of the loopholes, and be able to give to Albertans a piece of legislation that I think will restore their confidence that the governing party does actually know that there's a line between legitimate elected activity and partisan activity. But this legislation won't do it as it stands. We believe that we need to go through and make a number of amendments, many of which I've spoken about this evening. I'm sure my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and my other colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will go through a number of others.

Let me just summarize the main things that we believe this legislation needs to do. We need to address the issue of corporate and union donations, and we need to ban them. We need to make sure that there are rules in place that have more strict contribution limits and also that they cannot be skirted around. We want to make sure that illegal activity is reported and not just for the last three years, going back to the same period as the requirement for maintaining tax records. We also want to know that the results of all of these investigations will be revealed, including confirmation that the fines have been paid back and that the illegal donations have been paid back because I think Albertans are really looking for some certainty that taxpayer dollars are not going to be used and funnelled back to support partisan political activity.

When we put forward our package of potential amendments for this bill, we hope that the government gives due consideration. Many of them have been endorsed already and proposed already by the Chief Electoral Officer, so there is that extra level of validation, and we think that a number of things have been missed from this current legislation. We hope to be able to make the amendments so that we can improve this bill and restore the confidence of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought I'd take the opportunity since the hon. opposition leader made some comments about amendments to the Local Authorities Election Act to clarify some of the confusion that might have come on. Now, we had a limited time to do consultations for the Local Authorities Election Act. As the member well knows, the election was over in the spring, but it was incumbent upon us to do appropriate consultations with members of the public and locally elected officials because any changes that would take place for the next municipal elections, which are scheduled for the third Monday in October of 2013, need to be made this fall so that municipalities have appropriate time to incorporate those changes and those recommendations.

There is one phrase I heard the hon. opposition leader say. She was concerned that we were imposing regulations locally elected officials would have to follow that we would not accept ourselves. I want to clarify that in the changes that we made, the most significant changes, every single change we made, I had a couple of guidelines going forward. Given the limited amount of time that we had for consultation, I would only bring forward into this legislation things that were approved and supported strongly by members of the public and by locally elected officials.

The second principle I had, Mr. Speaker, was that we would impose nothing on locally elected officials that we didn't already have imposed or would be willing to take on ourselves at the provincial level.

The first change that we made was to move to four-year terms. As everybody who has worked at a municipal council knows, both the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, AAMD and C, and AUMA passed resolutions asking the province of Alberta to move to four-year terms. I know that I've heard some people suggest that you're not going to get as good a democracy by having elections every four year rather than every three years, Mr. Speaker, but you yourself were in municipal politics and everyone in this room – and there are many of them – who has been in municipal politics knows that you can be a more effective elected person when you have a four-year term, where you actually get to work for a few years if you're trying to get a good job done.

Now, municipal councillors who were serving for three years typically came in in October – and they still will – to approve a budget that they had very little opportunity to work on. They went forward for a year and a half before they started to get ready for the next election, which didn't necessarily give them the ability to do long-term planning for their municipality. A full four-year term will allow them, actually, to be more effective municipal leaders than ever before. On top of that, it saves millions of dollars just moving the election to a four-year term so that you have three elections every 12 years instead of four, and that's taxpayers' money that we're saving.

Another one of the requirements, Mr. Speaker, was that the signatures on the nomination form – it seems probably a bit strange to consider that the returning officer when they received a nomination form had to accept that form whether it was appropriately filled out with the requisite number of signatures or not. Anyone who knows the legislation knows that that didn't make much sense. If you have a required number of signatures, you have to entitle the returning officer, give them the power to not accept a nomination form that's not appropriately filled out with the requisite number of signatures. A very simple change.

The idea about voter identification. We have many larger municipalities that do utilize voter identification, Mr. Speaker, and we're not changing that. All we're saying going forward, just like under the provincial guidelines, is that if you are not on the voters list, you will have to provide some form of verifiable identification to demonstrate who you are. It's not a very encumbering requirement to make.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we're requiring potential candidates to register with the municipality. Now, I know the Leader of the Official Opposition suggested that this really bound the hands of people who are seeking nomination because they weren't allowed to fund raise until they'd registered, but this registration is intended to be one page that you sign at the bottom that says: hey, I'm going to check into running. I'm sure the Leader of the Official Opposition would support me on this. If she looked at the legislation, she would realize that the previous system, before this legislation was introduced, only required a candidate that was running to file papers and disclose what they did with any money that they raised from the point they filed their actual nomination papers forward, not any time before.

Many candidates in municipal elections just like in provincial elections start to run or start to explore that years in advance. If they don't have to declare how much money they raised, what it went towards, what they did with it and then don't file nomination papers because they decide not to run in the first place, the public will never know what they did with that money. All this is is a one-page form that they will sign at the municipal office that says: I intend to run. Then they will have to disclose the money they raise, what they do with it. Even if they don't file nomination papers in the end to run, the public will still be able to see what they did with that money, Mr. Speaker. That's just openness and transparency and accountability so that the public knows.

I have to say that for 99 per cent of people who are considering running for municipal councillors, this won't be an issue, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member noted, in many municipal elections we're not talking about small campaigns that are self-funded or that only use a thousand or $2,000 to run. We are talking about some very substantial campaigns. The public has a right to know how much money is raised and what it's spent on, whether the candidate runs or not, because they are using funds.

Mr. Speaker, another change that we made was surplus funds. The law already says that if a candidate decides not to run again – so come the next election they just don't enter the race – they are required to donate either to the municipality or to a charitable organization any funds over $500. Well, we heard a lot of members of the public say: "What difference does it make whether it's over $500 or under? Why would any candidate who doesn't run again be allowed to keep an amount just because it's under $500? It was money raised and intended for an election, and if they don't run again, it should not go into their pocket." So we simply reduced the threshold to zero. Any money left over in a campaign fund when a candidate does not run again must be donated to the municipality or to a charity of their choice.

Mr. Speaker, you would think it would go without saying that when a candidate decides not to run again, they would be obliged to clear up any campaign deficits, but that has not been a requirement in the past. Just like it is with us, it's going to now be required of municipal candidates that if they don't run again, they cannot carry debts anymore. They must clear them up.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the issue about campaign reporting. If a candidate runs and does not file final disclosure statements, they will not be eligible to run in another municipal election. It seems like that would be obvious, but again that hasn't been the case in the past. In fact, we do have the requirement at the provincial level. I do believe one of the hon. member's Senate candidates across the way was disallowed from running in the Senate election because he did not properly file his disclosure statements. That's a good system. It prevents people from circumventing the law. And it's going to now apply to municipal councillors.

Mr. Speaker, these are good changes to the Local Authorities Election Act, and I ask all members to support them through the end of second reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012. Albertans have been waiting quite some time for these changes, so it's great to finally be discussing this subject. I want to take this opportunity to thank the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if I may just pause. I'm sorry. I omitted Standing Order 29(2)(a) after the last speaker, and that is available. You wanted to speak on 29(2)(a), hon. member?

Mr. Dorward: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed, then. We'll reset the clock for the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Go ahead.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess in the mode of saving paper and possibly some amendments, with regard to going back on donations, I actually want to agree with the MLA from Highwood. The tax rules absolutely could be followed in this regard. However, the rules are very clear with CRA. It's three years, not seven years, that in present legislation, you know, would be acceptable.

It's not seven years, Mr. Speaker. It's three years, which is exactly what the legislation is right now and exactly what the legislation should remain in the future. As the good member said, I would totally agree with that as a benchmark. Three years is acceptable.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the Minister of Municipal Affairs brought up some ideas there about the four years and the timing on that, and I agree with him on that. One of the conversations I had with some constituents and some elected officials was that if they made the election – instead of October they bump it into April, May. Then it conflicts with some agriculture issues and whatnot, but if they got elected in the spring, that would give them about four or five months to know what the budget is like for the fall. I totally agree with them. When I got on council when I was 19, you got on in October. All of a sudden you're trying to pass a budget in December, and it was a lot of numbers tossed at you fairly quickly.

You know, that's a thought, I guess. I just wondered what his thoughts were on if they alternated in the spring a little bit just to make a little bit more time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very good questions, actually. I considered much of that the same, and in a lot of discussions with members from AAMD and C and AUMA the same questions were brought up. If an election was held in April, you could hopefully miss the risk of lower turnout because of snowfall or inclement weather, but then you get close to a challenge that many members of AAMD and C in agricultural jurisdictions would face in being busy in the spring.

Mr. Speaker, we did put that on the public survey, and I did solicit some feedback from councillors. We did very deliberately decide that we were going to focus on things that were publicly supported and supported at the municipal level. The majority of people checked off an "I don't care" box. For the rest I would say it was about 2 to 1 that still supported keeping elections in October.

This is something that I think the discussion has only begun on. It came in a short amount of time, and after the next municipal elections, when we do deeper consultations on potential changes to the Local Authorities Election Act, I believe this will be an issue that will be further discussed, and we might get some more consensus. It might still be in October, but I anticipate we'll have 90 per cent, actually, check off one or the other rather than "I don't know" next time. I'm sure it will continue to come up.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member mentioned, you know, the fact that someone can raise money in that interim period. I'm assuming it'd be through a trust fund, that the money would be held in trust. Do you have some idea of whether it'd be the municipality that would manage those trusts accounts, or would you have the province deal with that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. That's a good question, too. That would be something that would be up to the individual municipality. When someone fills in their nomination papers and submits that, then they set up a campaign account. I would assume that when they file the form with the municipality, the municipality would have requirements on how that money would be accounted for. The point is that it will be accounted for and publicly disclosed, which I think is very important.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. minister also. He made the comment about the four years versus three years. I'm in favour of the four years, and I think it can save money, but I would like to know if the minister could comment on the issue that for really small communities the cost of a by-election is really no different than the cost of an election. Some of the criticism or concern was that going to a four-year term might increase the number of by-elections. My comment or my question would centre around this one size fits all. I know our hon. leader here talked about, you know, the cities being able to have flexibility. I was just curious as to the minister's opinion on some cost-saving flexibility for the smaller communities so that they don't have to go through that same type of expense if the number of by-elections goes up. I'm not sure if that's been thoroughly investigated, so if he has a comment, I'd love to hear it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, you have 15 seconds.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. No, we didn't consider it, Mr. Speaker. One, the concern would be with too much ambiguity when you've got municipal elections going on at all different times. We have heard the issue about more by-elections going to a four-year term, but we've had just as many comments that we'll have more committed councillors, so we could have fewer by-elections anyway.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. We'll restart the clock from zero. You may start again. My apologies. Thank you. Please proceed.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. As I mentioned, Albertans have been waiting quite some time for these changes, so it's great to finally be discussing this subject here this evening. I did want to take the opportunity to thank the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs for the opportunity to sit down with him and discuss some of these issues prior to coming here. I very much appreciate the opportunity to do that, so thank you very much for that.

As you know, Bill 7 amends three different acts. I will begin my remarks on the changes being made to the Local Authorities Election Act, a piece of legislation that I am familiar with. Some of the hon. members here will know that prior to being elected to represent the riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills in this Chamber, I served as a local councillor for and then as mayor of the village of Beiseker. Over that period I also had the pleasure of sitting on the board of directors for the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. Now I am honoured to serve as the Municipal Affairs critic for the Wildrose Official Opposition.

The Local Authorities Election Act sets out the election processes and procedures for municipal elections as well as school board elections. As the level of government closest to the people we need to make sure we have good processes in place around the way municipal elections are held. A significant change Bill 7 will make to the local authorities act is extending the municipal terms from three to four years.

In the Wildrose we believe that the best people to solve problems are those closest to the challenge. In my role as Municipal Affairs critic I often hear from locally elected officials who support increasing municipal terms to four years. In fact, many municipalities have been calling for this change to be made for quite some time. By extending municipal terms to four years, people elected to municipal office will have more time to settle into their role and familiarize themselves with the budget cycle, which often begins soon after an election is held. Generally federal and provincial elections occur every four years, and municipalities would like a similar time frame. Another point to note is that more time in between municipal elections also means fewer municipal elections. Elections are quite expensive, so an extended term limit will also translate into fewer costs to the taxpayers, always a positive thing.

By extending municipal terms to four years, Bill 7 is making a change that Alberta's municipalities have been asking for, and I and my colleagues are very supportive of this measure.

A proposed change in Bill 7 that I am quite concerned with is the addition of section 147.21(1) to the local authorities act. This section reads: "No candidate may accept campaign contributions, including the funds of the candidate, unless the candidate is registered under this Act with the municipality in which the candidate intends to run." This change would actually make the rules governing municipal elections more stringent than provincial elections. One reason why this is so concerning is that if municipal candidates are unable to raise any money until an election is called, it will be a huge advantage to incumbents.

Another reason for concern is that the candidate registration usually occurs one month before election day or, in other words, when the writ is dropped. So how will candidates be able to spend money on campaign items that need to be ready to go as soon as the writ is dropped, like campaign signs, campaign office space, advertising, and so on? Is each municipality going to decide how and when candidates must register? Will that be flexible? If so, this information and how this will be accomplished must be made public.

This is somewhat mitigated by clause (6) in that same section, that states: "This section does not apply to a candidate if the candidate's entire election campaign is funded exclusively out of the candidate's own funds up to a maximum of $10 000." Now, that mitigates it for most of the smaller communities, villages, and small towns, but it does place a very large onus on the larger campaigns. As was mentioned earlier, Edmonton, Calgary, the bigger cities can spend $500,000, a million dollars on a campaign. You can't do that in that 30-day period. So if the minister can explain that, that would be great.

I sincerely hope that the government has thought this addition through, and I will be listening closely to my colleagues opposite who are speaking to Bill 7. If they can't answer these questions, we need to do some work in this Chamber and make sure that before Bill 7 is passed, these concerns are addressed and are made very clear.

Bill 7 is also proposing changes to the Election Act. When I read through the proposed changes, I was quite disappointed to see that no move has been made to set a fixed election date. Mr. Speaker, do you ever hear stories of people complaining about fixed election dates? Never. What you hear about is people calling for fixed election dates, and this certainly includes people in Alberta. Alberta has set an election season for provincial elections, but in the Wildrose we believe that we need to go one step further and set that fixed election date. Having an election season of three months allows for the government to manipulate the timing of an election for their own advantage, just the same as having no fixed election date or season does.

In the last decade we have seen many more jurisdictions in Canada move to implement fixed election dates. British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Labrador, Ontario, Saskatchewan, and the Northwest Territories all have fixed election dates. Earlier this month the government of Quebec proposed legislation that would establish fixed election dates in their province. Even the federal government has legislated a fixed election date for national elections, and I think it is fair to say that Canadians were happy with this change.

The government had the perfect opportunity to propose a fixed election date in Bill 7, a bill that is already opening up several different acts to make changes to municipal and provincial election rules. It is unfortunate but not surprising that the government passed up the opportunity to act on something Albertans are asking for just to keep a political advantage for themselves.

Bill 7 will also make changes to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, but unfortunately there are more notable omissions than additions to this act. For example, the government rejected the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer to include corporations that receive more than a third of their revenue from government as prohibited corporations. The government doesn't seem to realize that zero public money should go to political campaigns, and the only way to ensure this doesn't happen is to add corporations that receive a substantial amount of public funds to the list of corporations that are prohibited from making political donations.

This government also rejected the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer to be able to levy fines against recipients of illegal donations. The Chief Electoral Officer needs the muscle to put a stop to illegal donations, and the only way to do this is to make the political parties responsible for their donations. It is unacceptable that Bill 7 does nothing to address this.

Another glaring absence in Bill 7 is that it does not propose any measures that would assure the public that illegal donations will be repaid, nothing in Bill 7 that would allow the public to be notified when illegal donations are returned, so the public will never know whether or not illegal donations are returned. How can the government put forward legislation like Bill 7 with such glaring omissions on election accountability issues and still continue to call themselves transparent?

Speaking of transparency, Bill 7 says that the Chief Electoral Officer may release details of investigations in the last three years. Real transparency would make it mandatory to release this information. Albertans deserve nothing less than full disclosure. The results of investigations should automatically be released to the public rather than being at the discretion of the CEO.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to be spending a lot of time on Bill 7 over the course of this week. I have given my thoughts on its contents, and I am looking forward to hearing the comments that my colleagues have. There are some good measures in here, but there are also a lot of things that we need to improve upon. Albertans expect real, concrete steps to be taken on elections accountability, and my colleagues and I will be here in this Chamber, late into the night if need be, to ensure that this government does what Albertans are asking them to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recognize 29(2)(a) is for both questions and comments. I just have some brief comments. Then I'll give the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills some time to respond. I want to respond to a couple of his comments but also the Leader of the Opposition's comments.

I heard a comment from the Leader of the Opposition that she agrees that we should not go to a per-vote subsidy, and I agree with that. I don't think that the public should be paying for us. We should actually have to go and raise money ourselves, and I think that there's wide bipartisan support on this one.

I have to correct one comment. The Leader of the Opposition indicated that the previous Justice minister had elected not to prosecute. Mr. Speaker, that actually is false, with no disrespect to the Leader of the Opposition. We don't live in a province or in a country where I or whoever else as the Justice minister could simply walk in, tell the prosecutors: listen, go and charge person X or person Y. Prosecutions and investigations are fully independent. So that was actually incorrect about the previous Justice minister.

I also wanted to address the corporate donations issue that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills had talked about. It's very interesting that his party has benefited from over a million dollars of corporate donations, that I would suggest may not even exist today. They were happy to accept all of these corporate donations, and I don't suggest that they shouldn't have, but now all of sudden they want to ban corporate donations at this point. I don't know what the intent is there, and I'm not going to go afoul of the rules. I will leave that to other members to actually go and decide.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in my May 29 letter to the Chief Electoral Officer at no time did I put any restrictions on his comments. He did not recommend any increases or decreases to contribution limits. He did not recommend banning any corporate or union donations. I think that's what we should follow.

I just wanted to indicate as well that the $15,000 limit that goes from an individual union or corporation to an actual political party, that actually has been unchanged since 1982. The Chief Electoral Officer indicated that last week on the radio. If you actually go and just look at the inflation since that time, the factor is 2.313, which means that a $15,000 donation in 1982, if you whittle that down, is $6,485.08. That was my 2 cents as well.

In conclusion, I also wanted to just indicate that under this bill we are indicating that there is a 10 times . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, again, under 29(2)(a) you don't have to offer a question; it is also comment. The fines also go up by 10 times. [interjections] Again, in case you didn't hear me over the boos and catcalls over there, it is 10 times that the bill increases the fines. We're serious about compliance under the Election Act, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to respond.

Mr. Rowe: Well, I won't respond for the comments that our leader had made, but I will respond to one comment, if you will, and that was the corporate donations. I believe our suggestion here is that only corporations that receive public money would be exempt from corporate donations.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others under 29(2)(a)?

Then I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's a privilege to rise and get to speak in this House as a member of this honourable Assembly. This is speaking on the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012. I must say at the outset that I was hoping for a little more from this government on a number of files. First and foremost, I was looking for some movement on contributions to election campaigns in terms of the amounts and the like. I was also looking for some more specificity around openness and transparency, the ability for the Chief Electoral Officer to have a wider leeway both in what he does and what information he can bring to the general public, and some other minor comments around a fixed election date and things of that nature.

I recognize that this act has tried to pull together numerous references to various statutes that have been organizing our elections and municipal elections in this province for a number of years. To be frank, the method in which it has come in front of opposition parties makes it awfully difficult for us to (a) get to the bottom of the bill in a timely fashion and (b) to actually offer any serious amendments. The reason why I say that is because it appears that the fashion and the way this bill has been amended leaves very little wiggle room for you to actually put suggestions in through amendments and offer broad-based changes to what is being offered.

I say that because, for instance, if we move into some of the substantive measures like contribution limits, it doesn't appear from looking at the act that this section is actually being opened. So to get a discussion about that in an amendment is going to be very challenging. Nevertheless, we're going to attempt to do that.

That gets me to, I guess, looking at this Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, in more of a broad sense. We all know that elections in this day and age can attract a wide source of donations and can tend to come from generally wealthier citizens or corporations or unions. If we look across the country, there is no doubt that Alberta has the highest contribution limits of any of the provinces out there. In my view, that is not necessarily something to be proud of. In my view, bringing in changes that would allow for the average Joe and Jane Albertan to get the same recognition, the same ability to contribute to the politicians of their choice has merit. Let's face it. Whether we like to admit it or not, money influences politics.

Mr. Donovan: No.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, hon. member, it does.

We see this in play, and I guess it's easy to look down to our American cousins to the south. There is no doubt that the billions of dollars spent on that election came at a cost. It came at a cost where governors or people who accepted that money will now be expecting to receive phone calls from various donors, various corporations, various interest groups that expect those elected legislators to have to take their considerations maybe more validly than others.

[The Speaker in the chair]

If we continue to deny that fact, I think we're burying our heads in the sand. If we don't admit to ourselves that money can and does influence politics, well, I think we're just ignoring the obvious. In my view, given that Alberta has the largest contribution limits, I think that should have been changed. For instance, if the hon. Solicitor General, who is putting forward most of the changes in this act, would have bothered to look, there's excellent legislation across this country on governments who have actually taken openness and transparency as well as electoral finance reform to heart.

One is Manitoba, that in a recent report by an organization was found to have the best provincial legislation of any of our provincial Legislatures. There they have very clear principles for their elections officers to follow, very clear principles on donation limits of only up to $3,000, only from individuals – no union, no corporation donations – and some very forward-looking stuff of that nature that really allows us to be open, transparent, and accountable. That's what's disappointing. There is oftentimes much good legislation that's already been written, much good legislation from other people who watch and study democracy and the influence of money on various jurisdictions and how to eliminate this practice from happening, where jurisdictions have acted in a proactive, honest, and forthright fashion and actually changed the legislation to something meaningful. Manitoba would have been a good place to start.

Another jurisdiction where, in my view, the hon. Solicitor General could have gone is to our federal government, which I believe in 2004 or 2006 introduced some real changes to the contribution limits to our federal parties, and that's the $1,100 limit per man and woman in this great country to contribute to political parties. In my view, it eliminates the influence of money, the influence of the powerful, the influence of corporations, the influences of unions in our political decision-making. It frees us up to do work in the public interest as we're not beholden to any individual or group for the financing of our election campaigns.

Frankly, I was very impressed with the fact that the Wildrose has come on the record as saying that they, too, are in favour of no corporate or no union donations. I think that is a bold pronouncement by them and one that I agree with and have agreed with for a long period of time. I will not be one of the people who sits in this Chamber and denies that money influences our decision-making, whether it's on a local campaign or an MLA's campaign or a provincial government campaign.

Simply put, the necessity to raise money and the like behooves us to answer phone calls from different people in different forms and fashions. I'm not saying that it's right, but we all know it happens, and that's why we need legislation that actually sets a tone for what the Alberta populace should expect. It should expect that everyone has an ability to contribute to political campaigns but that they don't have an ability to contribute too much.

It was my hope that Alberta would move forward in some fashion on this part of meaningful election accountability, but it looks like we're going to have to wait for another day. That, to me, is disappointing for this government has known that people have made this observation about Alberta. They have called it the wild west of electoral financing, and it appears that, beyond some window dressing, that is going to continue. Really, if you don't deal with the contribution limits, you're not really dealing with a whole heck of a lot.

You know, bringing in comprehensive election finance limits would solve a lot of this problem. If mistakes were made along the way, it would not impact the election very much. If Mr. Katz hadn't misread the donation and given six cheques from his family and friends and the like, as it is alleged to have happened, it would have totalled $6,000, not $430,000. You see, just by limiting those contributions, you allow for those things to be open and transparent and not have any one individual or group have too much influence. In my view, that's missing from the act, and it is highly disappointing.

Moving on, I thought we could have done a better job in firming up, actually, an official fixed election date. The last election has come and gone. We know that was under a new circumstance. We had a new Premier, who ran on giving a fixed election date. The Premier sort of got there, and I thought she could have gotten there all the way by just picking a date and leaving it at every second Monday in April or something of that measure.

We would have known, and we wouldn't have had this silliness of having an election season, and I think it would have gone a long way to trying to assist not only political parties but voters in this province to know when they vote. I think it's an excellent system that we have in municipal government, where now every four years they will know that they go to polls on October 3. I think that has allowed for people to understand that, and I think it will pay off in the long run in getting people to vote in that election. By the way, while I'm talking about that, I agree with the change to four years on municipal councillors. I think it's a change that will lead to better government at that level, will allow aldermen and alderwomen to do their jobs without having to worry so much about the next election being right around the corner, and will lead to better results at our municipal levels.

I think another change that is absent is that the list of prohibited corporations does not include corporations that are funded through grants from the government. Actually, in the former Chief Electoral Officer's view, he wanted to expand this definition to include a corporation that received more than one-third of its operational funding in any calendar year through the government of Alberta. I think that would have been a wise move that would have addressed some of the concerns by many members of this House in question period on government-funded agencies simply kicking back into the political party of the day who's running the province, which, really, in my view, is something that shouldn't be countenanced in this day and age, and changes should be made to ensure that that temptation is minimized and the like.

Those are my initial comments, Mr. Speaker, but I will hope that as debate goes on, we all consider the fact that money does influence politics, that money does affect our ability to do things that are necessary in the public interest. It is my greatest hope that even for the government it would free you guys up to do some things maybe that you feel queasy about or feel beholden to certain interests because they fund your elections. I think it would help.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and let's remember the cautionary note I gave on November 21. Let's not consume all the time with one speaker only if possible. Let's exchange in some fruitful dialogue.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you and good evening, Mr. Speaker. I just noted the hon. member's comments, and I know that he has considerably more experience than myself. As a bit of background to this, today our party called for a ban on corporate and union donations. I was wondering if he had seen any other examples in his experience where perhaps these corporate donations or union donations may have affected previous campaigns.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I think common sense would indicate to us that it has. Alberta has had a reputation as being the wild west of election financing. In my view, it continues to this day with $30,000 contribution limits in any calendar year. We exceed the contribution limits of any jurisdiction across Canada, and if I'm in error there, maybe the Minister of Human Services can tell me where I'm wrong. Nevertheless, there are very proactive government bodies out there. Like I mentioned before, Manitoba has election limits of $3,000 per individual there, with no corporate, no union donations. Our federal government has no corporate, no union donations, $1,100 limits per individual. I think those are examples of responsible fiscal contribution limits.

I don't know. I'd like to hear the hon. Minister of Human Services' comments, maybe on whether he can compare our current election financing limits to theirs and explain to me how theirs aren't more responsible to the public perception of democracy. In my view – and maybe I'm going to be proven wrong – in anyone's estimation it is more responsible. It eliminates the perception that money influences politics. I think it's more than a perception, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a fact. If we can eliminate that from happening, that, to me, would be worth while.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member has been here for quite a while, my question is: has there ever been a circumstance where there's just a seemingly outrageous type of decision that doesn't make any sense that you could potentially attribute to corporate donations or any type of influence that way?

Mr. Hehr: To be honest, I guess that if I'm asked, I'd look at the influence that our oil and gas sector may have on our elections, okay? I can't specifically look at that, but I look at the amount that we collect in royalties, the amount that we seemingly leave on the table in that regard. I look at the way that we seemingly do not want to have our own Alberta energy company when we have 14 national oil companies in this province currently, you know, digging up oil, making lots of money, sending money home to their countries, and doing quite well at it.

You know, with some of these decisions I wonder if it's because of who's footing the bill on paying for the elections. Now, I could be wrong, but I'm a suspicious man, and I think some of the public is suspicious about that as well. That's why we need to bring in, actually, no corporate, no union donations, actual limits on what it is. I think it would free the government up to do what decisions are in the public interest. They may well be right now, but it's like the Caesar's wife rule. You know what I'm saying? Caesar's wife can not only be pure; she must be seen to be pure. I think that would be a good thing for governments to remember, especially when we talk about election finance limits.

There are many good examples out there. Look at the good examples. Don't just try and come up with something on your own. Oftentimes learning from other jurisdictions is not a sign of weakness but a sign of common sense and a sign of an ability to look where things are working and look where people have studied democracies and given criticisms of them and looked for other ways to do things, how the rules and regulations could be written better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to speak to Bill 7 in second reading here, regarding our Election Accountability Amendment Act. I'd like to begin by saying that Albertans have been calling for reform to our election financing for some time now. I've been hearing this from voters at thousands of doors that I've knocked on to speaking with colleagues from this House from other parts of the province. I'm happy on the one hand to see that there is some reform coming. Unfortunately, there are a number of flaws with this bill that I will attempt to illustrate.

First and foremost, the fact that this bill has been written without the consultation and input from all of Alberta's political parties is a flaw. You know, it's unfortunate that the minister seems to think that sending some briefing notes is the same thing as a consultation with genuine input from different political parties. However, they're quite different. It's important to note that election laws are really fundamental to our democratic process here in Alberta and in all democratic countries and regions, and our election laws cannot be based solely on the interests of one political party or in this case of the Progressive Conservatives alone.

It's interesting to see that, first and foremost, parties on the opposition side of the House are calling for a ban on all corporate and union donations. This is something that the NDP has been calling for for a long, long time. In fact, for decades we've been calling for the ban of corporate and union donations. Elections should be decided by the voters, by Albertans, not by special interests or by dollars. We all know that dollars influence elections but also can sway elections, so much so that other jurisdictions have recognized this undue influence and have banned them. We have examples from Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and even our country as a whole. Canada federally has a ban on corporate and union donations. It's time for Alberta to follow suit.

Contributions need to come solely from individuals. You know, it needs to be clear that we need to take big business and big dollars out of politics. The amount of influence that corporations and unions can exert in our elections is not just shocking, but it's actually taking away from the democratic process. In order to ensure that we as elected officials and as candidates who are running in elections are acting on behalf of individual Albertans and only in their interests, not in the interests of the big companies and unions, both of them need to be banned.

Second of all, we need to lower the contribution limits. Alberta has, actually, the highest contribution limits of any jurisdiction within Canada. During an election year political parties and candidates can actually receive up to $40,000 from a single contributor. Now, I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but most people in my experience, in my lifetime (a) cannot afford to contribute $40,000 in any year and, second of all, I mean, it's basically giving some people an elite pass while others and the rest of Albertans who cannot afford it are not on the same playing field. It also gives certain political parties, you know, an advantage, and it makes the average person's, the average Albertan's contributions less significant. It takes away from their voice, their ability to contribute.

Albertans are talking about real electoral reform when we're talking about political contributions. The Alberta NDP are talking about lowering this limit to $3,000. I mean, we released that on November 15. That's something that we've been talking about. Federally it's even lower than that. It's $1,200 a year to each party and $1,200 to associations and candidates. This is something that when it's coupled with the initial amendment of pulling out corporations and unions as far as their ability to contribute to political parties and we put a limit on individual donations, we're now levelling the playing field for all political parties, for all candidates.

You know, it also makes candidates go out and work harder because now your contributions are – you're relying solely on individuals. You're going to visit individuals asking for reasonable donations as opposed to phoning up a few of your bigwig friends to issue $100,000 cheques or several hundred thousand dollars. So that's something that is absolutely necessary if we want to reform our elections financing.

The third thing that needs to come into this bill is a limit on campaign expenses. Again, Alberta, interestingly, is the only province that does not have campaign expense limits. Political parties at the moment in Alberta are able to spend an unlimited amount of dollars on an election campaign. You know, following the same line of reasoning as my first two points, if we want to ensure that our system remains democratic, that we have a fair playing field, we need to place limits on how much political parties can spend, and this needs to be reasonable. The Alberta NDP is calling for a limit of a million dollars for political parties, and we're talking about adjusting this to the consumer price index as well. This piece should be included in this bill.

In addition, there isn't at the moment financial limitation on leadership campaigns. Leadership campaigns should be governed by the same rules as elections themselves. Donation limits, reporting rules should apply to all candidates for party leadership. Any kind of donation to a leadership candidate should also be regarded as a contribution to the political party, which essentially it is.

9:10

Fifth, some of my colleagues on this side of the House have spoken to fixed election dates, which I think is absolutely crucial if we want to ensure that all parties have an equal opportunity to begin their campaigning and to start off on the same foot. You know, it's interesting. I've spoken to colleagues and friends to the south of us in the United States who also find it equally absurd that the governing party can choose when the election is called. I give this example often. It's like a teacher in a classroom who gives all of the students a whole bunch of candy and then says to them, "Now, who is your favourite teacher?" Well, who do you think the students are going to say? I mean, as my friends on the other side of the House will remember, there was an election not too long ago where folks were issued Ralph bucks right before the election, which seemed to please some voters. In a sense, I think that if there's a fixed date, all parties can plan.

Other points have been raised. We can ensure that the folks working for the elections are, first of all, properly recruited, that there's an open and transparent process, that they're properly trained. I think that would ensure the election would run a lot more smoothly. It seems a little absurd that we have no fixed dates, you know. At best the Premier took a half-step forward and gave us an election season.

Yet for many folks who are considering running and becoming an elected official, this unknown period of time is a barrier, and they're unable to really campaign to the point where they can put in the appropriate amount of time to have a legitimate shot at getting elected. You know, as many people in this House will recognize, campaigns are much longer than the 28 days of the actual election, and serious candidates have to start much sooner than that. Without a fixed election date you're pretty much guessing on when it's going to be called, and again this favours the governing party.

The last point I'd like to bring up is about some of the recommendations that were first of all brought forward by the CEO, Chief Electoral Officer. Many of them have been shot down or rejected. You know, I find it interesting and frustrating that, first of all, in this piece of legislation, this bill, the Chief Electoral Officer can only go back three years. Alberta New Democrats feel that this is not long enough to go back into the past to look at illegal donations and really scrutinize what's transpired. There shouldn't be a time limit on how far back the Chief Electoral Officer can go. This begs the question: what is the party on the other side of the House hiding, and why do they want to limit it to only three years instead of opening it up to a much broader time frame?

I think as well that it's frustrating that there have been 19 charges of illegal donations yet still zero prosecutions. I think folks in Alberta are frustrated with our current system, with the fact that there are illegal donations or accusations of illegal donations and proof of illegal donations, yet there's been little to no action on them. You know, that's unfortunate because many voters in our great province are getting quite frustrated that you have examples of wrongdoing, yet they're going unpunished. Nothing is being done about them.

If we want to restore faith in our democratic system, I think we need real electoral reform in this province in all of the areas that I've mentioned, from banning corporate and union donations to lowering the contribution limits that individuals can make to putting a cap on the total spending of a political party, which, again, will level the playing field between all of the parties, as well as putting these same rules in place for leadership campaigns.

I think that there could be potential for this bill with some serious amendments, that we will be putting forward once we move into committee, but these things need to be flagged. There are serious concerns. This is another example of a bill that the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General can speak very highly about, yet when the rubber hits the road and we look at the details of this bill, it doesn't go nearly far enough to ensure, first of all, that financial contributions are within reason, that we can go back to Albertans in good conscience and say, you know, that we have done our best in this House to level the playing field to give everybody the same starting point and take away these unfair advantages that some in the House currently hold.

So I'll ask the minister and the members from the other side of the House to seriously consider the amendments that parties on this side of the House are putting forward in order to ensure that our system is fair and that we're restoring and ensuring that democracy, first and foremost, is our number one goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I see that another member rose, so I'll be brief in the interests of democracy. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has raised a lot of good points. I've got to say that he's also a really good speaker. I could probably use some lessons from him when it comes to the rate of speech.

He talked about the interests of one party. Well, I have to agree with his sentiment, but that's where the agreement ends. On May 29, again, I wrote the Chief Electoral Officer and said: "avoid arbitrary amendments passed in the Legislature." So my submission to this member and to all members of the House here tonight is that the bill is largely based on what the Chief Electoral Officer had to say. We're accepting 90 of 101 amendments. It's not about what this member thinks or what I think or what any other member thinks. It's what the Chief Electoral Officer thinks is fair.

Secondly, I just wanted to mention again that we are increasing penalties up to $10,000 under the administrative level. Again, it is not up to me or anyone else here to direct any prosecution. That is up to the actual individual prosecutor. They don't report to me, Mr. Speaker.

Lastly, I just wanted to allow the member to comment here. If you reverse to page 4 of Bill 7, the second paragraph, section 4 is amended at (2.1), indicating that the Chief Electoral Officer may from time to time meet with representatives of the registered political parties that are represented in the Legislative Assembly concerning the election process or activities under this Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act or the Senatorial Selection Act.

This is a recommendation, Mr. Speaker, that we believe should be accepted. It allows him to consult with other parties.

I also wanted to mention again that, of course, I've met with that very member, and I've asked him, if he has amendments, to please give them to us beforehand so we can actually consider them.

So I'd like to know what this member thinks about this particular section that we would recommend the Assembly accept.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the minister for his question and compliment as well. You know, I think it is positive that the government has accepted several recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer. As I stated previously, I don't think this bill goes quite far enough in several areas. I can appreciate that the fines have been increased, but I think, you know, part of the problem is contributions and how much individuals can give and the loose parameters that are in place in this province at the moment.

Again, speakers other than myself have indicated that Alberta, first of all, allows for the highest amount of donations. Our limits are very, very large. Again, many Albertans are not going to be able to contribute near the maximum, which means, then, that you're only allowing certain individuals coming with certain wealth to be able to contribute, which therefore gives unfair footing. If every donation, every dollar, had to be raised by individuals alone, we would see a very different-looking map in the province of Alberta.

As far as the minister's question, you know, I think that a consultation with the Chief Electoral Officer as far as processes and suggestions is a nice gesture, but it's what we're debating right now that's going to become law that will decide how elections and election financing are changed, so I would have liked to have seen this consultation happen long before this bill was ever drafted.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the member: when you spoke of candy from a teacher, would that have any ties to, say, schools or overpasses or any kind of infrastructure before an election, do you think?

Mr. Bilous: I'd like to thank the Member for Little Bow for that question. You know, the purpose of that is, again, that if we want to truly make our system as democratic as possible, there are certain things that we need in place. One of them definitely is fixed election dates and cutting down the possibility of either incurring favour or having to return favour. Again, you know, I find it very interesting that when tens of thousands of dollars, if not hundreds of thousands of dollars, from individuals or groups are handed over, they don't come with some kind of exchange.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to comment very briefly on a few comments. I'll start with the last. I find it actually quite appalling that when we get involved in these discussions about election finances, contributions, and disclosure, there's this immediate assumption that somehow people who fund the democratic process expect a quid pro quo. I've been involved in running in elections and running elections and campaigning in elections for almost 40 years. I can honestly say to this Legislature that I have never, ever considered the fact that somebody has contributed financially or as a volunteer to a campaign as in any way buying favour or buying policy. I think it really brings the whole process into disrepute when you start from that assumption. This idea that people are all crooks and that we have to have legislation in place to keep them honest is absolutely absurd.

We all come to this as honest people. There are some dishonest people in society for whom you need rules and regulations and for whom you need to bring down the strong arm of the law, but the fact of the matter is that most people come to the political process with an intent to do good. We can disagree on what doing good means. We can disagree on the right or wrong of what is a positive thing for the province. But I would challenge members to actually have a change of concept in mind if they come to this House, if they come to this process believing that people are bad and need to be constrained by the law in order to do the right thing.

The fact of the matter is that we have an open Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which says that for every donation over $325 – and when this act is passed, if this act is passed, it will bring it down to $250 – the donor must be disclosed. So it's open. Everybody can know who makes the contributions. That is fair. That's reasonable. The public knows who is financing elections and why.

In terms of the amounts, Mr. Speaker, $15,000 during the year or $30,000 during an election for a party, a thousand dollars for a constituency, $1,500 during a campaign are not excessive amounts. I can tell you that on a number of occasions doing fundraisers in my particular constituency we have had to return contributions. Why have we had to return them? Because you don't know when the contribution is made whether somebody has made contributions in other constituencies. If they add to up to more than five constituencies at over a thousand dollars, they're running afoul of the act, so the contributions have to be returned, which then goes to other aspects, this automatic assumption that people make that they somehow uncover these nefarious things happening all the time, when really what's happening in most of those circumstances, if they would simply look at it, is exactly the same thing as the reference of the Leader of the Official Opposition. You have to actually have a look back sometimes to see what's happened.

For example, somebody buys a table at my lobster boil one year. That will probably be a thousand dollars, and then they might go to some other event and purchase a table at that event. I might say that the tables that they purchase at my lobster boil are no more expensive and, in fact, are considerably less expensive than similar tables that they will buy at many fundraising activities for charitable agencies in our community. There are people who will support charities and who will support candidates and who will support members of the Legislature who they think are doing a good job, and they're not asking for anything, Mr. Speaker. Never once have I been asked for something because somebody made a donation. I can tell you this. If somebody did ask me for something, that would probably be the last time we had a chat because I am not for sale. I don't think anybody in this House is for sale.

This process requires financing. It requires citizens to step forward in a number of different ways. Some of us step forward to be candidates and give our time and our effort and, yes, forgo income that we might otherwise earn so that we can participate in this way. Others support us as friends and people who believe that we're good people. Others support us because they believe the party is going in the right direction. Nobody finances a campaign so that they can get a specific political action, and to suggest otherwise I think is really just drawing this down into disrepute. So I wanted to start there, Mr. Speaker.

I also wanted to indicate that one of the reasons that this bill was brought forward this year arose out of some allegations last spring that there were investigations made and the Chief Electoral Officer could not report on the results of his investigation and that he ought to be able to report. We all agreed that he ought to be able to report. His legal advice, I guess it was, must have indicated that the language of the act as it exists now didn't allow him to do that because when the act was changed – previously the only option that the Chief Electoral Officer had was to investigate a complaint and then refer it for prosecution.

Now, we've been through the ground already, but I'll say it one more time. Prosecutors make decisions to prosecute based on whether they think it's in the public interest and whether the evidence, if proved, would result in a conviction. There are two tests that they use. There is no political test in it whatsoever. It's entirely independent of the political process, and it must be. Prosecutors will determine from time to time whether something is in the public interest, and as a result, many of the things – and I know this from the occupational health and safety side. Sometimes it's difficult to get minor things prosecuted because they have other things to prosecute.

So the act was changed. The Chief Electoral Officer was given other tools: the ability to reprimand, the ability to levy an administrative penalty. Unfortunately, the language wasn't clear enough to say that in those cases he could then disclose just as it would be disclosed if a charge was laid.

We're perfecting that by saying that, yes, absolutely he should be able to disclose, that in fact he must disclose at any time that he has issued a reprimand letter or an administrative penalty. That fixes that particular problem. You won't hear anymore, I don't believe, of things being referred for prosecution and no action taken. My assumption, and I think it's a valid assumption, is that those are relatively minor matters which prosecutors determine not to prosecute. That fix in the act actually makes a very important change which will require the Chief Electoral Officer to publish on his website the names and the incidents with respect to where he's found wrongdoing and where he's issued a reprimand or an administrative penalty. Those two things are, I think, very necessary to mention.

People have mentioned fixed election dates. I challenge them to show any place where a fixed election date has improved democracy. There was mention of south of the border. We've seen what happens with elections south of the border, how the focus is on constant fundraising and constant electoral process and much less on what's good for the people. People mentioned that civic elections are on a fixed election date. Is there any place where we have a lower turnout for election than at civic elections? I think not. Fixed election dates are not the panacea that people bring forward with respect to elections.

The Leader of the Official Opposition suggested that they were in some concern because they didn't believe it was appropriate for them to be able to bring forward an amendment to remove the ability of corporations or unions to make donations, and she suggested that we do it. Well, if it's not within the purview of the act, it's not within the purview of the act, and therefore an amendment is no more in the hands of government than it is in the hands of the opposition. I wanted to mention those things.

The last thing I'll mention is this question about three years' prosecution. Under section 52(3) of the existing act there is a limitation on prosecution. "A prosecution under this Act may be commenced within 3 years of the commission of the alleged offence but not afterwards." That's the provision in the act. If you change that provision, you're creating offences retroactively, which is something that's really frowned on in the parliamentary world, creating a retroactive offence that you can then go back and charge somebody for. That three-year limitation is in the act already. It makes sense to make those three years the three years for disclosure. It's not a question of covering anything up or hiding anything. It's a question of being parallel to the offence provision which is already in the act. You wouldn't want to change the offence provision in the act. Nobody goes back and creates a new offence retroactively and then goes and charges somebody for it. That's ridiculous. Mr. Speaker, the time frames are set out for a purpose. They're parallel to the time frames that are already there and make it clear that anything that's happened after that the Chief Electoral Officer can disclose.

There are a number of other things that I'd speak to, Mr. Speaker, but I think that I'll leave it there. I want to do one further thing, and that is that under Standing Order 49(2) I would move that this question be now put. There are new members in the House, so allow me, after making that motion, to say this. It does not mean that we're going to vote on this bill right now. It's called calling the previous question, and every member will have the ability to speak to this bill in second reading before the question is put. But what it does is preclude somebody bringing in an amendment which would send it off to committee or hoist it or do something else. It does not forestall debate. It does forestall antics, and thus, Mr. Speaker, I have moved that the question now be put under section 49(2).

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would encourage you to visit Standing Order 49(2), which covers the issue of: "The previous question shall be in the following words." The question has now been put by the Government House Leader. You may also want to visit Standing Order 18, which I think the hon. Government House Leader alluded to. I'll just read it to you quickly so that it's clear where we're at.

Mr. Saskiw: They shut down democracy.

The Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, just so we're clear, under debatable motions it states, "Motions that are debatable include every motion," and that includes "for the previous question." Essentially, the rotation can start all over again. We follow the same rules: 15 minutes of speaking time, 29(2)(a), and at the end of all of that, depending upon how many people want to speak, of course, then the question on second reading of Bill 7 will be put.

That having been said, are there any speakers to this?

Mr. Donovan: Just a question. So there's no 29(2)(a) from before? Just as clarification.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. You're asking for clarification of . . .

Mr. Donovan: Standing Order 29(2)(a), where I get to ask a question.

The Speaker: Yes, proceed. You have something about the speech he just made?

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. I was just wondering if that's still possible.

The Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like I must have touched a nerve over there. Never at any point did I say that anybody in this House is a crook or anything. I was merely asking the colleague from the party to the left about where he was going on that. I'd just like to clarify that never at any point did I think that anybody is a crook. I've brought up in numerous speeches in here that I think we're all here for the right reasons. I, too, have been in politics for 16 years, and I never did have to raise money for a municipal election I was in because there wasn't that big of a drive for it.

Again, I'm not at any point trying to point fingers about what a government does or doesn't do before an election. I was merely tossing what we call a puffball, I believe, over to a colleague so he could finish explaining one of his thoughts.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I certainly appreciate that clarification, but I think it's fair to say to all members that the things we say in here matter and that when we toss around aspersions lightly, it sticks to all of us. We have a number of different rules that have been put in place over the years, the Conflicts of Interest Act and others. When I was Minister of Justice, one of my colleagues asked me what the Conflicts of Interest Act said about a particular matter, and I said: "I don't know. I haven't read it." And he looked at me amazed. I said: "I don't have to look at the Conflicts of Interest Act to know how to act. I don't do anything I don't think my mother would appreciate reading on the front page of the paper."

You know, we come to this House as good people with good intentions to do good things. Every time we talk about writing rules to protect the people from us, we diminish the status of the House and we diminish the work that we do. I'm not suggesting that we shouldn't have an Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. I'm just saying that we shouldn't start every debate by suggesting that everybody is a crook.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a very nice speech by the hon. minister. Nevertheless, I think part of the discussion is around our finance limits and, unless I missed it, the fact that there is a general public out there who expects some reasonable limits on financial donations. For instance, if you can believe what happened, with Mr. Katz giving $430,000 to a political party, in the form of cheques or not, there has to be . . . [interjection] Whether he's going to go ask the Premier for a favour, who knows? Whether he's going to ask you for a favour? You'd clearly not care. You would tell him to go pound sand, and I believe you when you say that.

Nevertheless, there is a perception out there in the general public that politicians are bought. I realize we feed into that, but I think the general rule is that we should be trying to do election finance reform that actually eases the public's discontent with politicians and that perception of money influencing us. My question: does the minister see the need for us to assure the public that money is not influencing us even though we know full well it never does?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, I think most of the angst that comes up – I've never had a regular constituent approach me and say: you're receiving money, and you're going to be biased by it. That's never been a problem for me, and I raised some of the largest amounts of any constituency in the province year after year after year. Nobody has ever said to me: you're biased by the fact that you're receiving this money. It's never been a problem.

Where it becomes a problem is when people assume that the law has been broken and then continue to talk on that assumption. You raised the name of a particular citizen in the House just now and said that he gave $430,000. Well, the law doesn't allow him to give $430,000, so I think the assumption should be that he didn't until somebody investigates that and shows that he did.

That's the way I would make the assumption of this rule, and that's the way I think most Albertans – most Albertans get upset when you assume that they're guilty before they're proven guilty on anything. I mean, .05 is a perfect example of that. The only objections I had to .05 – not the campaign against drinking and driving. Everybody agreed to campaign against drinking and driving. What they complained about was the potential that they might be considered guilty before they had a chance to be heard. Yet day after day in this House we have opposition members who are assuming people are guilty before they've taken it to the appropriate process for an investigation and before a result has been determined. It's absolutely inappropriate to say that Mr. Katz or anyone else gave $430,000. The law does not allow it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his comments. I just need to mention that perception is reality . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Little Bow, you were on the list. Was that for 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Donovan: Yeah, it was.

The Speaker: Okay. In that case we'll go to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, are we back to the bill? My request was to speak on second reading of the bill.

The Speaker: The motion that's just been put is with respect to the question being now put. However, that entitles you to speak not only to the motion of the question being put but to the bill itself. You're welcome to enjoy the time you have.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the time I have, so I will speak, then. Thank you very much.

One of the things that hasn't been asked yet is the whole purpose of the amended act, this bill that's been brought forward. It is the purpose of the existing laws that we have. I want to speak to what's going on. The whole purpose here is to ensure fairness, to keep order, and, most importantly, to preserve the integrity of the democratic election process. The question that is not being answered in my mind is: how does this facilitate those three points, particularly the integrity of the democratic election process?

The bill, overall, is something that I favour, particularly the principle of the bill. If we make the process fairer, if we ensure that the integrity of the system is not just intact but maybe enhanced and also in keeping order in the election process, there are a number of things that concern me, and some of the hon. members picked it up. It has to do with the perception. It's not necessarily the allegations that are made. It's the perception in the public so that the public has confidence that the process is fair and just.

It's interesting. The hon. Minister of Justice brought up a point. I'm not sure – I'd have to go back in the Hansard to hear how our leader responded – but I can basically testify to the fact that there were situations where the Chief Electoral Officer chose not to elect to prosecute in instances of forgery, false filings, and illegal loans. Luckily, it's not against any party here. It was submitted to the Chief Electoral Officer, and the Chief Electoral Officer has the right not to pursue that. Now, under this new law the Chief Electoral Officer must at least give in writing that they're not pursuing any type of prosecution.

Where I think this act falls short is that, in my mind, what should happen here is that the Chief Electoral Officer must prosecute whenever the evidence is there that is prosecutable. Basically, what it does is provide, keep consistency with the integrity of the system. That is really important. Some of the members talked about that when they spoke about: if there were illegal donations, are those donations going to be forced to be given back? This is really important in this whole process.

Speaking on the issue of fixed election dates, like many of the members who have just spoken, I certainly favour that. It does a number of things. We're seeing the value of fixed election dates in other electoral districts or jurisdictions, and I see no difference here. It has that value. We find that, basically, in the system of municipalities, how they can plan, particularly with their election staff, which is generally their municipal government staff, who handle all the elections. Being able to plan on that exact date is economic in many ways.

But I do want to speak about the whole issue of money and the influence of money. Now, the fortunate part of being here in Alberta and being Canadian is that there is a limited role for money, but anyone who watches elections certainly saw what happened across the border, which is a real perverse system of how money influences elections. We always have to be on guard against that. Those are some of the allegations that have been made here. To make light of it doesn't do the argument justice. It is truly something that we have to worry about in dealing with any electoral process, to make sure that money does not influence it.

That's a tough situation because we all have to raise money for our campaigns to conduct an election process, but certainly corporations and, I know, equally unions – and I am opposed to both being involved in the electoral process because this is truly something that is for the individual. Only individuals are allowed to vote. If you look at the corporate interest – and I've always liked this because there have now been a few authors who have referred to it – if a corporation was diagnosed as a person, they would be diagnosed as a psychopathic, sociopathic, and antisocial personality disorder.

The function of a corporation is to enhance its wealth. In some cases corporations have been found at fault for looking at the law and stepping over the line on the simple premise that it was more profitable to violate the act, whatever act they were violating, as long as the penalty was less than the profit. Human beings don't necessarily act that way. Human beings have morals or some sort of moral compass or standard. As a matter of fact, the corporate entities that generally do are governed by the individuals that are running the corporation, who could easily be replaced, and then, all of a sudden, you lose the moral standard or the moral compass.

The other thing that I think is troublesome – and unions have been alleged to be guilty of this – is using members' money to donate to an election campaign which the members themselves have not agreed to, or they may actually oppose those certain individuals. Well, the same is true of a corporate entity, particularly large corporate entities. Their investors, who purchase stock, may or may not necessarily agree with what the corporate entity is actually doing to try to influence an election.

Now, if you look at our process, there is enough there to warrant concern by the general public. It doesn't mean anyone is guilty. It doesn't necessarily mean that there's been a violation. The perception alone is enough to diminish the public's confidence.

I will use a particular example. In the example of the company AltaLink, who is the recipient of a massive transmission line contract that was not tendered, management were not only donors to the party in power, but they were also lobbyists for the original act that gave them that advantage. I have to tell you that they employed some very qualified people to act on their behalf full-time, all the time for a couple of years. Whether or not that was successful, that's a matter of interpretation. But it doesn't change the fact that they engaged in it. I have to tell you that for many of the landowners who were involved in dealing with that issue, their perception is a reality. They believe it did influence the system. It's their confidence that was reduced, not necessarily enhanced.

When we look at corporate donations, that's just but one example. There are lots of examples that anyone can draw upon, particularly when corporate entities get involved in lobbying, where they spend lots of money to try to influence politicians. The hon. members will clearly state, you know, that they were never influenced, but that doesn't change the public's perception of the matter.

It is, in my opinion, important that we do a couple of things when we look at increasing our electoral standards and passing this act, and that is that we increase the public's confidence in the integrity of the system. We should listen to all the criticism that has been levelled at Alberta, whether it's justified or not, and evaluate it on its own merits. The fact is that even if something is false and that criticism keeps coming up and keeps coming up, it should be looked at as to: how do we deal with this one particular issue in our electoral process?

Certainly, donations fit into that, whether there's any wrongdoing or not. One of the things that I see in our system is that if anyone accepts a donation, if they were held accountable and responsible, if the donation was not a legal donation or, in other words, they could be subject to a fine, now you would have balance on two sides of the equation, one from the donor, who, if they intended to do wrong – or maybe they didn't intend to do wrong. They just thought they were acting in good faith and did not understand the law. But if it's incumbent upon the candidate not to accept that or suffer penalties, that's significant. That throws another check and balance into the system.

Now, I'm not looking to throw people in jail or make criminals out of them. What we're trying to do is make sure that the process itself is not only just, but it is actually something that all across Canada we could be the model of the democratic process. That, I say, would be something that would be a shining star on Alberta.

We have issues that must be addressed, and it is significant in many ways. One of the things I did touch on with the hon. minister earlier, and it did come up, and it's unfortunate we didn't have an opportunity to – we're counting down, so what I'll do is that I'll sit down, and I will be rising later.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering whether the hon. member would acknowledge that his experience is the same as mine and that is that usually it's the people who have the weakest arguments in any particular presentation who resort to nefarious allegations of bad practice because they can't win the discussion on the strength of their arguments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you. I think that's a valid point. What I will say is that if it's nefarious, the answer would be yes, but if it's factual, then we're on a different playing field. So there are two levels to look at what has been stated or said. Clearly, I firmly believe and I've always conducted myself, particularly in the field of transmission, that if you stick with the facts, that helps you better in the argument, but if you basically get into the allegations and the personal attacks without any premise of the facts, then it is something of an indication of a weak argument. So I would concur on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this member talked about the facts while, I guess, pounding the facts. I'm sorry, but I'm going to pound the law for a minute here. I just want to correct a particular statement he had made about the process for infractions under the act.

The process is that if the Chief Electoral Officer finds that there is an infraction, he can levy an administrative penalty, which is typically a fine. Under this new act the maximum fine goes from $1,000 to $10,000, obviously a 10-fold increase.

Another thing that he could do is give a letter of reprimand, which is basically: don't do that again.

The third thing that he could do is refer it to a prosecutor. Where I must correct this member, with no disrespect to this member, is that the decision whether or not to prosecute is totally independent and is totally based on where the prosecutor would actually like to go. I have no say in that. This member has no say in it. Mr. Speaker, nobody has any say in that here. It's fully independent. So it's not the Chief Electoral Officer that decides not to prosecute. It would actually be the prosecutor, which, again, is fully independent.

The Speaker: The hon. member, briefly. I have one more question.

Mr. Anglin: I appreciate the comments. My comment was that the Chief Electoral Officer does have to make the recommendation when it's reported to the Chief Electoral Officer. That's what I was trying to point out. The recommendation was never made to a prosecutor to actually refuse in my example. That's what I was saying when I said that this would strengthen the confidence of the law if there were solid evidence, and that was what I brought forward, cogent evidence. To me in any type of civil or criminal – now, I'll use criminal because I had some experience there. If there really is a crime and there's evidence of it, you want that prosecutor. [interjections] Well, I mean, you want that prosecutor, right? That's justice.

It's the same true on civil offences, particularly with elections fraud. I'm not accusing anyone of elections fraud, but I'm saying that if it shows itself and is cogent evidence, in my mind what helps to give stability to the system is that it shall be or should be prosecuted as long as the evidence is there. I see shaking of no. I tell you I'm not saying that you throw people in jail. The statute is still correct. There can be a letter of reprimand. There has to be something versus nothing at all.

This act does address it partially. At least this time if evidence is submitted, there is a letter that's brought out to the person making the submission saying they're not going to pursue it. That's partial in my mind. But when there's cogent evidence of significant wrongdoing, there needs to be justice in the sense that we've got to maintain the integrity of the system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre can comment on the motion on the previous question that has actually been put forward at this point?

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's some clarity here if you wish to . . .

Mr. Anglin: Well, I took the liberty to speak just to the act because I wasn't fully up to speed on the motion, so I'd rather speak to what I'm fully up to speed on.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader had referred to the fact that, you know, the act only goes back three years, but the fact of the matter is that the Chief Electoral Officer has found illegal donations going past that date. What's your opinion on whether those illegal donations going to a specific party should actually be made public so that everyone can see that?

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you wish to comment?
Are there others, then?

I have Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on the list now to speak to the motion, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Banff-Cochrane, did you wish to go instead?

Mr. Casey: Maybe just a couple of brief comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: This is to the main motion now or the bill?

Mr. Casey: To the bill.

The Speaker: Yeah. Well, you can speak to the main motion and to the bill at the same time.

Mr. Casey: Okay. Thank you. I think it's time we sort of think about the accusations flying back and forth across the floor here. There seems to be an understanding and an implication here that only Conservatives take contributions from corporations, and that's simply not true. There also seems to be an implication that every time we take a contribution from a corporation, that somehow compromises us and compromises that corporation by simply making that contribution to us.

There was also a suggestion that contributions made by organizations were somehow inappropriate because their members hadn't had a chance to decide on that. If I look at the opposition's contributions quickly – and I mean very quickly – I see that they've had a contribution from a hotel/motel lodging association. They've also had contributions from contractor associations. They also have had a $10,000 contribution from a national brewers' association whose headquarters happen to be in Vancouver. They've also had personal donations of $60,000 that obviously came from a husband and wife team. Yet all of that is just perfect and okay because it was them collecting the money. But if it was us, it would be a crime.

We would be told that we had somehow accepted illegal donations, somehow we had stepped out of line, somehow those people that legitimately donated to our party somehow had done something illegal. Those are exactly the words that are used in this House time and time again with anybody associated with donating to our party. This act covers both sides of this House, and both of these parties and every party in this House accepted corporate donations. The sheer matter of accepting those donations does not compromise any member, nor does it compromise the party because they were done within the law. If they weren't done within the law, then leave it to the people that make those decisions to decide that.

But I do think it's gone beyond what is reasonably – reasonably – an argument in this House, that individuals in the opposition have somehow become judge, jury, and executioner when it comes to making those determinations. I just want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that with a very short time of going down the list, there is no difference between who contributed to us and who contributed to the opposition.

If we could get to speaking to bill instead of throwing accusations back and forth, that would be a miracle for all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, I'm so glad you suggested it because I was just about to point to the bill while you were speaking to help you out. But you got there on your own.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have one question. You know, we talk about allegations of illegality. The Chief Electoral Officer has found 39 illegal donations to a particular political party, where there were donations from a municipality or donations from a school board or donations from a university or a donation from a college. They have found illegal donations. We're not making this up. The opposition is not the judge, jury, and prosecutor; it was the Chief Electoral Officer that was.

All we're suggesting is that perhaps this should be made public. When someone has been found guilty of making an illegal donation, that should be made public. That is the case in every other jurisdiction in North America. It is made public.

The second part that we were talking about is that it should be made public that any illegal donations are repaid. Currently under the law the Chief Electoral Officer does not have a positive obligation to actually disclose that the illegal donations have been repaid. I ask the hon. member if that is fearmongering or something like that. This is a very simple concept. If someone has made an illegal contribution, it should be publicly disclosed, and all illegal donations should be repaid regardless of which party it is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. Since, Mr. Speaker, you reminded me that we were talking to the bill, I will talk to the bill. The bill does exactly that. It requires that those investigations are made public and that they are done in the public, and the results of those investigations will be made public to everyone. This bill is doing exactly what the member asked it to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? I have Little Bow, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had run out for a second, but the Member for Banff-Cochrane had started to talk about donations and who had had more and whatever else. I mean, I'm not sitting here trying to swing the biggest one around, but I think we clearly beat that party. We're not blaming the government for that. We're saying that if we pull out the donations like that, I think that helps everybody. We'd actually be the ones that would lose the most out of it. I just wonder where the member had come from on that idea that we're always pointing at the government. We're not doing that. I think this is to make it level for everybody. It gives you a chance to catch up.

Mr. Casey: Well, I don't think I dreamt it up. I heard your leader tonight stand up and do everything but accuse us of robbing the bank. I mean, I think it's fair to say that it's very clear that the implication across the floor for the last five weeks has been that somehow someone has decided that a donation of $430,000 was illegal before anyone had the chance to review that and come to a decision on it. It's been said at least 10 dozen times in this House and responded to exactly the same way by our ministers, that that is simply something for the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate and determine. When that determination is made, then there will be a result, but until then don't use it as a hammer every time someone stands up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm currently reading a book entitled The Best Way To Rob a Bank Is To Own One, so I won't go down that path with the ATB.

Mr. Casey: Excuse me. You're an owner in that as well. I just thought I'd point that out.

Mr. Anglin: I know that. The book – it doesn't change.

I'd like it if the member would comment. One of the issues here is – and we acknowledge this – that if we were to get this provision passed, I think all parties would see where they would not get corporate donations or union donations or whatever. But there is a microscope that is always on the party in power more so than any other party for the simple fact of the perception that money would influence, not that it necessarily did, but that it could or would influence.

That's the perception that the public has that the opposition parties don't necessarily suffer from because we are not the party that can actually vote and make those decisions, ultimately, in the end. We are not the governing party. The real concern here on the perception side is that it influences the decision of cabinet or the government itself, and that is where the public derives that perception. Going back – and the member can comment on this – what I used was an example had nothing to do with a party here and referred to continually the integrity of the process.

The Speaker: I have the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills next, and that's all I have.

Mr. Saskiw: There'll be more, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Saskiw: As the Wildrose Justice critic I'm pleased to be able to rise here today and speak to the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, Bill 7. However, I'm not so pleased with the content or, rather, the lack of substantive content in this act. To fully understand how this act came about, it is helpful to look at the events leading up to Bill 7, and for my constituents it hits home.

Last year a CBC investigation revealed that a municipality in my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills had made significant and ongoing illegal donations to the PC Party. From this investigation, it became clear to my constituents and, indeed, all Albertans that the PCs have blurred the lines between government and party, with municipalities stuck in the middle, and they broke the law consistently over a number of years. The PC Party solicited heavily for these illegal donations with the implication that if the municipalities and other prohibited corporations didn't pay up, funding would dry up. This put municipalities, colleges, and other prohibited corporations in a tight spot. In fact, in my own constituency an e-mail from the CEO talked about the fact that they needed a cabinet minister in power and the fact that they had to get behind that.

The subsequent issue that arose in my constituency is the fact that despite a political party illegally soliciting donations, the fine was actually levied on the municipality. Not only did the municipality have taxpayer dollars go to a political party, the fine itself was, again, paid by those ratepayers, and most people in my constituency find that particularly egregious.

Further, news reports revealed that this problem was not confined just to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. It was a seemingly deliberate and methodical means of raising funds, more or less expropriating the taxpayer, by the PC Party. To be clear on this, government MLAs and cabinet ministers demanded that prohibited corporations pay up or they would be made to pay or their institutions and municipalities might suffer. This is wrong, wrong, wrong. Not many people thought the Alberta government, embarrassed by scandal after scandal after scandal, would have made – many Albertans thought they would actually have put forward something that would actually fix the problem going forward and rectify past wrongs.

In my constituency and as Justice critic I've heard time and time again that the laws regarding political donations need to be strengthened so that this never happens again. This government has commended itself in bringing forward Bill 7, but let's please hold the applause. It seems that while pretending to respond to the ongoing scandal of illegal donations to the PC Party, Bill 7 does nothing, absolutely nothing, that could in any way be interpreted as putting an end to the illegal donations solicited and accepted. Bill 7 does nothing to make political parties caught red-handed pay back the money they accepted.

This seems like a bizarre concept in a modern democracy, that if someone makes an illegal donation, there doesn't have to be proof that that illegal donation was in fact repaid. That seems to be a very basic principle that should be outlined. There are no provisions that penalize political parties that do this. The onus requirement is less on the political party and more on the donor rather than the donee, and I think that's something that has to change. Nothing in the act is indicating that it would punish repeat offenders like one particular party which seems to rely on illegal donations for its lifeblood.

Wildrose is calling for full disclosure and evidence that illegal donations have actually been repaid. After several MLAs pocketed the money from the no-meet committee, it is particularly important to enshrine into this law that parties don't keep illegally raised money. There was and still will be no deterrent to the PC Party accepting illegal donations with Bill 7, because this law doesn't include anything to make the party pay back the illegal and, if not illegal, unethical donations it accepts.

Basically, the PC government has made off like a bunch of bandits in the night with the wallets of hard-working Albertans. This is what you see with ratepayers. Their tax dollars are going to individual political parties. This is wrong. The PC government rejected the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendation to levy fines against parties that have received illegal donations, and that raises the question about what it will take for this government to follow the rules. Unfortunately, this is only the beginning with Bill 7.

10:10

Bill 7 fails to act on the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer to add corporations which receive a third or more of their revenue from the taxpayer to the prohibited donors list. One has to question why that type of common-sense recommendation was rejected by this government. Zero public money should go to political campaigns. The only way to ensure that this doesn't happen is to add that these partially publicly funded corporations are added to the prohibited corporations list. However, if a party receives significant funds from corporations which take a ton of taxpayer money, then it's no wonder that this government would not follow the CEO's recommendation.

The bill says that the Chief Electoral Officer may, not must, release the results of investigations. It's in the permissive, not the mandatory. I think that's an amendment that this government should strongly consider and that has been talked about very recently. Investigations should be released automatically to the public once there's been found to be a wrongdoing. There's absolutely no justifiable reason to make such a power discretionary on the Chief Electoral Officer.

Furthermore, Bill 7 would only allow the CEO to release going back three years. Many cases that have come up over the past year involved illegal donations going back much further. There are many examples of that. We saw that a current executive of Alberta Health Services had actually expensed donations going to the PC Party. That occurred more than three years ago, yet this government apparently finds it acceptable to allow those donations and the consequence of the investigation, the resulting penalties, to be kept secret. One has to question why they wouldn't just go further back.

If there is evidence, if the Chief Electoral Officer actually knows that there have been illegal donations made, it should be made public no matter how far back it goes. This is not a case of retroactive legislation going backwards. It's just shining the light on previous wrongdoings and indiscretions.

An Hon. Member: That's the definition of retroactive.

Mr. Saskiw: Apparently, there are certain members that don't understand the difference between retroactive and retrospective, but I'll continue on.

Many cases that we've seen are clear-cut. There's evidence. There are invoices. Of course, those cases have been referred to the Chief Electoral Officer. But if those cases of illegal donations are more than three years back, which there are thousands and thousands of dollars going illegally to the PC Party more than three years back, that will not be made public. Any investigations into those illegal donations will not be made public. Second, of course, there will be no publication of whether those illegal donations have been repaid.

Next, after some media out there reported that there was a $430,000 cheque that went to one political party, it's at least an appearance that this could potentially influence a party. When one-third of a political party's donations essentially come from one person or entity, I think that the public is right to be forgiven thinking that that could influence public policy. I know that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader has talked about the opposition talking about a presumption of being influenced by donations. I don't make that case whatsoever. But I think that if there's a perception, if a third of your donations come from essentially one entity, there has to be a problem there, especially if that entity is asking for public funding.

The problems with Bill 7 don't stop there. Bill 7 continues to allow corporate and union donations. In today's age the public just doesn't feel comfortable with unions and corporations potentially exercising undue influence on the electoral process. Apparently, this government is quite comfortable continuing to rake in cash from union dues and contributing to the politicization of unions and to letting corporations influence the electoral process. Albertans think differently. Bill 7 virtually ensures that scandals could occur in the future.

Going back to the issue of corporations, of course we've seen federally that they have banned corporate and union donations and they've put a cap of $1,100 per individual making donations. The sky hasn't fallen. We've seen a process where I think there could be no argument that there's any type of influence coming from a person making an $1,100 donation to a federal campaign.

Of course, that donation limit is quite low because there was previously a per-vote subsidy that was instituted federally. That's why the Wildrose is still suggesting a reasonable limit for individuals going forward but certainly not something to the extent of $30,000 in a campaign period or $15,000 during a normal calendar period. We're suggesting $5,000 during a nonelection year and $10,000 during a campaign period.

You know, I guess in the numbers you can see why there is such resistance on the other side to go this route. In the last election it just seems unbelievable, to show how rotten the core of a certain party is, that for donations under $375 there was only $68,000 that was raised for the PC Party. It's just incredible how far the party has dropped away from its grassroots members, when you see that type of stagnant growth on a low donation level. Of course, that just emphasizes why such a large donation of $430,000 may have just saved the party in the last election.

If this government had listened or consulted with the municipalities, it would have heard that they want more control over their electoral process. Large urban centres have unique needs. We must have faith in our municipalities to govern themselves on some things, but this government doesn't think so.

Finally, Bill 7 could have fixed another problem, a broken promise by this government to create a fixed election date. Now, the Government House Leader talks about how the opposition is talking about a fixed election date and how that won't help the electoral process. But, in fact, it was his own leader, the Premier, who in her leadership campaign specifically promised a fixed election date. There are reasons for that, and those reasons I think are very well expressed in the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations. Some of those reasons are more openness and transparency. Here's an opportunity for this government to actually take a recommendation from the Chief Electoral Officer to create a more open and transparent government, and what do they do? The first thing they do is reject it.

The second reason is that I think it helps with participation in the political process. If you have families or businesspeople, you know, they have to govern their lives, and to have no certainty on when an election is going to take place, it is very difficult for them to organize their affairs and get engaged in the political process. I had the opportunity to recruit candidates. It's very difficult in some cases to get both men or women with young families if they don't know when exactly the election is going to be. So I would hope that the government would strongly consider a fixed election date, strongly consider taking the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Part of those recommendations, the rationale for a fixed election date, also included the reduced costs of having a fixed election date. As this government at least talks about being fiscally prudent, one would hope that they would take such a common-sense recommendation going forward.

It's not surprising, I think, that most of the substantive amendments of the Chief Electoral Officer have not been accepted, but it's disappointing. We saw that a former Chief Electoral Officer had previously put forward substantive amendments, and the Premier, who was then the Justice minister, rejected each and every one of them. Over a hundred recommendations, and the Premier simply ignored them. As a result, it's not surprising, I guess, that that individual's contract was not subsequently renewed. Perhaps he was overstepping his boundaries by putting forward positive recommendations that would potentially shed light on the PC Party and this government.

Mr. Speaker, there are a bunch of minor changes that I think the hon. Justice minister . . . [Mr. Saskiw's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

10:20

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Calgary-Shaw, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member if he can comment on the feedback we consistently seem to be receiving regarding the three-year limitation. As a lawyer I'm wondering if he would have an idea as to how we could make this legislation either retrospective or retroactive in order to look beyond the three-year limit imposed in the current legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess what I see when I talk to constituents about this legislation – I get many calls on it. When I talk to them and they hear that the legislation only goes back three years, so any illegal donations that were actually found – this isn't an allegation; there have been illegal donations found, proven by the Chief Electoral Officer – when they find out that those are not going to be made public, when they find out that either the fine, the reprimand, or the putting forward of a prosecution of those illegal donations isn't going to be made public, when they find out that the question of whether or not those illegal donations have been repaid is not going to be made public, they are understandably quite frustrated with this government.

The Government House Leader had mentioned that there are cases – the Chief Electoral Officer can shine light on the previous three years. Well, why not go back seven years? If there have already been cases that have been found where illegal donations have been made, why would you put a time limitation on that? You know, most businesses – obviously, with the Income Tax Act, which is the area that I practiced law in, you have a certain time period. You have generally seven years to retain documents. One would expect that that's the type of general limitation period that we should have. Have it go back to at least 2005. I'd even go one step further. If there are donations before 2005 in which the Chief Electoral Officer has found, has evidence, that an illegal donation has been made, that should be made public.

In no modern democracy, in no democracy in North America is there a case where illegal donations to a political party are kept secret. There's just no case of that, and there are reasons for that. The public has a right to know when someone has made an illegal donation. The public has a right to know when someone has accepted an illegal donation, when someone has illegally solicited an illegal donation. I think that one has to question – you know, we're not saying that this is perhaps deliberate, but the way that this has been set up, where there's the avenue to easily go back beyond three years, yet the government is refusing to do that, it strikes me that there's just something to hide. If there's nothing to hide, let it go back seven years. What's the big deal? The evidence is there. If the Chief Electoral Officer has the documents, let it go back seven years.

Now, I don't know. You know, this bill was delayed for a significant period of time. Potentially, the new revelations that were put forward in question period as well as just recently with respect to a senior executive of Alberta Health Services and the fact that these reimbursements of political donations were beyond the three-year period, maybe this is why this is the type of legislation that has come forward. When the Chief Electoral Officer was questioned in a committee earlier by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I think he made it quite clear that it was not his recommendation to just go back three years. It was not his recommendation. I don't see why it would be. If the evidence is already at the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, one would expect that he would be more than willing to put forward these instances of illegal donations.

The question of limitation. Clearly, retroactive legislation generally isn't allowed under the Charter, I guess, unless other extraordinary measures are taken, but the idea of retrospective legislation is commonplace in every other jurisdiction. I'd expect the government to look at going beyond the three-year limitation period and going back much further, whether it's seven years or even further than that if necessary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills used to practise in the area of income tax law, and like me he shares the comments about the necessity to save money. No one has talked tonight about the issue of income tax enumeration, which B.C. has employed and estimates to save them $25 million per election. The federal government says . . . [Mr. Denis' speaking time expired] Oh, I guess I'm cut off.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 7. You know, unfortunately, as we see all too often, this government seems to do one thing right and then a couple of things wrong. As one of those examples I'm just going to briefly speak to this motion on the previous question. It can be found in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice in the chapter called The Curtailment of Debate. You know, the hon. Minister of Justice has said in good faith that he wants to invite amendments from all three opposition parties so that we can have a robust and fruitful debate. Yet a motion like the one on the previous question just simply sets up the government to be able to invoke closure on this bill later on this week.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Hancock: It does nothing of the sort.

Mr. Wilson: That's not the intent?

Mr. Hancock: It doesn't do anything of the sort.

Mr. Wilson: Okay. Well, it just seems as though it's unfortunate that on a matter of democratic reform the Government House Leader would play a procedure like the motion on the previous question to move debate along in that manner.

Regarding the bill specifically, we see once again that government has selective hearing. They once again are failing to see and take the necessary action to follow through on their commitments. Mr. Speaker, when all of the opposition parties are raising similar concerns, it should be a clear signal to this government that they've made a mistake. However, once again we see this trademark PC arrogance showing with a refusal to listen to the Chief Electoral Officer and his recommendations.

My colleagues and I on this side of the House have issued a call for a ban on corporate and union donations. This is a major step in ensuring fairness in our electoral system. Democracy belongs to the people of Alberta, not the corporate and union pals of the government or any other party.

We also issued a call for the lowering of donation limits. As it stands, an individual or company can donate a maximum of up to $30,000 during an election year. Now, I know that that is roughly half the cost of one of the government fleet vehicles out there, but it's far more than what the average, everyday Albertan can afford. What this ends up creating is a perception, not necessarily the reality but the perception, that campaigns can go to the highest bidder.

In the case of this election the reality is that there was an alleged donation of $430,000. I do not believe, hon. Government House Leader, that any one of your members would personally invite that or find that personally okay. I do believe that every one of you that sits in this House and every one of us that sits in this House has the personal integrity to understand that that is wrong. The problem is that it's unethical, and if it did happen, Albertans have a right to know.

I do think that, as the hon. Government House Leader likes to say often in this House, when somebody does something wrong, it reflects poorly on all of us, as does this case. If 20 per cent or 25 per cent or 28 per cent of a party's political donations, a party that ends up forming the government, come from one source, the perception is that that can be essentially influence peddling. It may not be, but the perception is there, and it's real. I just think that it's something the government should take into consideration when we raise it. It's not that we're coming out here and saying that every one of your members solicited this money and that every one of you is now bound to do something for it. I don't think that any one of you probably knew that it happened until it broke in the Globe and Mail. The unfortunate reality is that we're here now.

Now, the independence of the Chief Electoral Officer needs to be strengthened, especially given how the last electoral officer was sort of bullied out of his office and, you know, the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices did not renew his contract. Now, yes, he is an officer of the Legislature, but that is a government-majority committee. I do believe they decided that they were not going to renew his contract.

Even though the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General likes to talk about how the Chief Electoral Officer can make recommendations, what he fails to mention is that his government doesn't like to actually follow all of the recommendations. In some circumstances 90 out of 101 would be pretty much a resounding success, as some members opposite have relayed. But it does fall short of the hype provided as we were waiting for this legislation to be tabled. There have been a number of cases of illegal donations that have been made public recently, and I think we all know which party the lion's share of these donations have gone to. This bill still fails to make those automatically public, and nothing in this bill ensures that Albertans know whether or not the illegal donations have actually been repaid.

Mr. Speaker, while we're on the topic of disclosure, which is something that this government trumpets as part of its open and transparent mandate, the bill says that the Chief Electoral Officer may release the details of investigations that have taken place over the last three years. Nowhere does it say that he must make these investigations public. Now, in the committee that we had on Friday, the Chief Electoral Officer confirmed that he has evidence of illegal donations back to 2005. Nowhere does he recommend to this government a three-year time frame. That three-year time frame was something that was either put in by the minister that sponsored the bill . . . [interjections] I look forward to engaging with you on Standing Order 29(2)(a), hon. Government House Leader, when that comes up, as to where that came from.

The reality is – the Chief Electoral Officer confirmed this at the committee – that he did not recommend that. That means that that number was arbitrarily put in there either by current legislation or it was put there by the minister or cabinet or the Premier.

Now, as well, Bill 7 still fails to follow through on the Premier's promise to have a real, fixed election date. Promise made; promise broken. Instead, we're left with a flexible election window that leaves the decision up to the government of the day, leaving the advantage to the government of the day and denying Albertans the certainty of an election. Fixed election dates do work. They were recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer as far back as 2006. Our municipalities have had elections on the same day every three years, likely soon to be every four years, and the world has not come to an end.

The Chief Electoral Officer suggested the cost to taxpayers was around $350,000 a month leading up to the April election as they had to secure office space and staff for this election when they thought that there was a potential that it could happen in the fall. That's $350,000 a month taxpayers of Alberta were on the hook for just because this government decided that it was going to play politics with an election date, despite the fact that the Premier had actively campaigned on not doing so, clearly, because of the advantage it offered.

Mr. Speaker, there are many loopholes that need to be closed. There are some glaring omissions that need to be addressed. I'm sad to say that I doubt the PC government is going to be able to admit that they've made an error and that they will refuse to make the changes that are needed to make this a better piece of legislation. Again, the Justice minister has suggested he will in good faith look at the amendments. I certainly hope he does.

One of the pieces that was inserted into Bill 7 that was not a recommendation – it must have come from the Justice minister – was the quarterly reporting by local constituency associations. I really would encourage the government to reconsider this, not only because of the increased volume that it's going to have on our Chief Electoral Officer, who is already busy enough as it is, but because that's 348 filings annually. It makes sense from a party perspective, but from a local CA perspective, that are generally run by volunteers, this is going to have an impact on every single one of our ridings. It's just an unfortunate reality that you decided to stick it in there. There's no added benefit or value to Albertans to having this every quarter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I in the Wildrose and in all opposition caucuses are working hard to listen to our constituents, to stand up for Albertans and represent their views here in Legislature. As a result, I know there are other aspects of this bill that are good, that are a step in the right direction, positive steps regarding postsecondary students, where previous homes or campus residence can be where they vote. Better access to voting for youth living away from home is definitely something we can all agree on.

Mr. Speaker, I think we know that there is a difference between talking the talk and walking the walk. I came here to do what I said I was going to do and to say what I was going to do. I wasn't going to oppose bills needlessly for the sake of opposing them, and you've seen that. We've passed many pieces of legislation that were solid, good pieces of legislation. We've had a couple that we found contentious. That is democracy. I, unfortunately, cannot say the same about some members from the other side as we propose our amendments.

Mr. Speaker, we need to respect democracy, we need to represent our constituents, and we need to make decisions in the best interests of all Albertans. With amendments and corrections and by listening to our constituents, I know that we'll be able to do that with Bill 7. However, without ensuring that we make the best possible piece of legislation, we will be doing a disservice to our constituents and to Albertans. I know the PCs have some issues with numbers, and maybe that's why we can't balance the budget, but we all know that they have a majority in this House. What that means is that they really don't have to listen to Albertans and make some changes, and there is only so much that the opposition can do. We will do everything that we can to try and add teeth to this legislation and implore the PCs to listen to their constituents as well as the opposition and the Chief Electoral Officer to make sure that this is a piece of legislation that is strong and accomplishes exactly what Albertans want and the Minister of Justice has promised it will do.

I will close with this, Mr. Speaker. We all need to remember that we came here as part of a democratic process. We came here because our constituents put their trust in us, and they put their trust in us not only to represent their views but also to uphold and strengthen the democratic process that we're all a part of.

With that, I'm looking forward to the ensuing debate and the hopeful passage of amendments that will truly strengthen this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I recognize the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a quick question to the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I appreciate his comments on the record. As part of the new elections act, if it is passed, we will be doing income tax based enumeration. The people will check off a box if they want to be on the provincial list of electors. The federal government has had an 84 per cent compliance here. On the same token, B.C. has instituted a similar process which indicates a $25 million savings per election. I'm just wondering if that's something that he supports.

Mr. Wilson: I'm not sure I fully understood the question. If you could please clarify.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, there is a section in the Election Accountability Amendment Act, Bill 7, that allows for enumeration by way of income tax. So when you file your provincial income tax, you tick off a box: do you want to be on the provincial list of electors? It's very similar to what the federal government has done since approximately 2006. Basically, my assertion is that you get a better election list for less money and less people knocking on people's doors and annoying them. Lord only knows, there's enough of us that do that. I'm wondering if this is something that this member supports.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that amendment makes sense. I think that it does require a little bit more looking at, but I would generally be in support of that. Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very appreciative of the opportunity to speak to Bill 7. For the most part I want to clarify certain comments I made earlier about which it seems that the hon. House leader had gone a little bit on the defensive, insinuating that the amendments that the New Democrat caucus will be putting forward are a tax on either individuals or others. The truth of the matter is that what we're trying to do is to strengthen this bill in a number of areas that I think and that Albertans have told us will help to strengthen democracy. So we're definitely not on the witch hunt for individuals. I think there should be an improved process if illegal donations are made. However, I'm not going to go down that path for the moment.

I'm just talking about how Albertans and individual voters are the ones who decide elections. If we truly want to democratize our process further, we should be bringing forward or strengthening or lowering the limitations on how much individuals can donate, political contributions. All of us in the House here, obviously, have to do a certain amount of fundraising in order to afford everything from office space to signs to printed material and advertising.

However, by lowering the limit that individuals can make, it forces all candidates to go out and cast their net even wider as far as relying on the grassroots for funding because they're forced to go to more people. As opposed to making 10 phone calls for $30,000 or $20,000, candidates are forced to speak with hundreds if not thousands of individuals, soliciting a much lower and more reasonable amount that the majority of Albertans would be able to contribute.

You know, I can think of many people who have donated to my campaign, and there is no way that they could afford more than a few hundred dollars, never mind thousands of dollars. Lowering the limit to even $3,000, it's still a significant amount of money to get from any individual. Again, looking at reasonable solutions here, if the government of Canada – let's just say all of Canada – has a limit of $1,200 per person, I'm not sure how it is so offensive to the governing Tories here that going down to even a few thousand dollars is just outrageous in their opinion.

We look at many other jurisdictions across the country, and it's smaller contributions which then force candidates to go out and talk to more people as opposed to relying on the big donors. I think another way to strengthen democracy is implementing election campaign expense limits so that on the whole parties can't spend an innumerable amount of money on an election, keeping the amount reasonable so that we're relying on more people. A figure that the Alberta NDP is putting forward is a million-dollar limit for spending by a political party, which, when we look at other jurisdictions across the country, is more than reasonable.

Adding to all of it is banning corporate and union donations. There definitely is a sentiment amongst many Albertans that business has no place in financing political campaigns. Again, I'm not pointing the finger at anyone. Alberta New Democrats, as is widely known, do receive donations from unions. In order to level the playing field for all parties, we're not calling for a ban on just corporate donations. We're calling for a ban on all union and corporate donations, which would ensure that every political party has to go to individuals as opposed to going to certain businesses or organizations or unions and asking for the big cheques.

I think it's safe to say that all parties in this House would stand to lose a significant amount of donations if that was enacted. Again, as opposed to just a self-preservation mentality, you know, members on this side of the House are looking at what is best for Alberta, what is best for democracy, and how we ensure that all parties are playing on a level playing field. I find it quite interesting that you have three different parties on this side of the House, covering the full range of the political spectrum, yet unanimously calling for a ban on corporate and union donations.

The only party that seems to be opposed to this is the party in power and, in my opinion, the party that stands to lose the most because when you look at where the bulk of PC donations have come from, it is not from grassroots members; it is from the larger donations coming from corporations. I mean, personally, I just interpret that as the Tories being scared of getting the legs knocked out from under them. Meanwhile, most Albertans see this as a step in the right direction. Like I say, level the playing field, and accept an amendment that three out of the four parties in this House are calling for.

I don't think it's that absurd. We're trying to strengthen democracy. We're trying to increase voter turnout. We're trying to reestablish in the public a trust and confidence in the work that we're doing. I think that, as other members have pointed out, there is a perception amongst many Albertans that politicians or parties are influenced by donations. I'm not making any accusations, but I'm saying that in order to quell that sentiment and to send a message to all Albertans that – you know what? – if it's the voters that elect the politicians, then it should also be only the voters who can put dollars toward politics and politicians and political parties. I think that would send a strong message to all Albertans that we are truly trying to strengthen the fabric of democracy in this province.

Again I will call on the government members to seriously consider amendments that are going to be put forward this week calling for a ban on corporate and union donations, looking at limiting donation amounts that individuals can contribute along with putting some limitations on leadership campaigns. It seems a little odd that we're putting some limitations on actual campaigns during general elections, yet there are very few limitations on leadership campaigns. It's quite surprising to many Albertans when we learn how many dollars are spent on leadership campaigns. I don't have the numbers in front of me to look at the Tory leadership race from last fall; however, I know that there was a significant amount of dollars spent.

We've touched on fixed election dates. I think that, again, making our elections as predictable as possible for Albertans will help to increase our voter turnout. I think it'll also help to restore faith in our democratic system. I mean, it does seem a little odd that the governing party gets to decide on a whim or whenever is convenient for them when the election is going to be called as opposed to giving all parties the same footing, a level playing field where everyone knows within the province exactly when the election will be called and can prepare in response to that.

I look forward to the debate that's going to be following on this bill. I think that there are amendments that need to take place if we want this bill to truly reflect the interests of Albertans and what we've all been hearing at the doorstep, for those of us that go regularly door to door, about how we can improve our democratic system and elections in the great province of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(29)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting. Say we sit here tonight and we debate lots of things on Bill 7. I guess we always try to find the positive in things. I'm not here just to be a naysayer to all the ideas that are part of this bill.

In saying that, I guess there are a couple of things that I think I agree on with the Premier of this province. As she stated back before she became the Premier, one of her things was to commit to calling elections every four years on a set date. I quote. She said that Albertans are supportive of this idea, and several other provinces have already used this; they understand the issues that are coming, and they don't believe that any political party should have an upper hand in managing the political agenda by picking the date accordingly. She was also touting the idea, some other ideas in here, of electronic voting and stuff like that.

I guess the thing to me is that what one says and what one does afterwards are quite a bit different. This was on September 23, 2011, before she was Premier, telling people what they basically wanted to hear in this province. It was great of her to do that because she had travelled around the province in her leadership campaign to become the Premier of this province, to become the leader of the governing party at the time. It's funny what people will say to get elected. It was quite good, actually, to hear that she was listening to what people said because it's renowned in this article that I'm reading here, that I'll table tomorrow, which I'm sure I'll have to do because I quoted from it now.

She had the mindset and the foresight when she went around the province and she was actually listening to Albertans on what they wanted when she wanted to become the leader of this party that runs the government now. I think it's key. I mean, we're talking just over a year ago. I don't think there's been a 180-degree change in what Albertans wanted. I think it was very clear: fixed election dates. I mean, obviously, that's what she heard as she toured around. I actually got to hear her in High River one day, and it was interesting. I mean, it's interesting when somebody starts with what I think is probably a good idea, hearing what Albertans wanted, and we bring up a bill to do that, and then the question always arises: is that what people want? You know, they come back to that. It saddens me.

We've had that process where at one point we actually listened to what Albertans wanted. We campaigned on what Albertans wanted. The Premier of the province did that. She went around, and she listened to the people at the time. Now when things start to get whether you want to call it dug out or looked at, however you want to go about saying it, then the question comes back: do people really want four years? I kind of kicked it around, and, yeah, all the Albertans I talked to wanted a fixed election date, and they want it so that they know that the government – and these are her own words. What happens is that the government has the upper hand by not saying the exact date. That's kind of a card up the sleeve if you're a card player. I just find it quite interesting, you know, at different times of the year what people will say or different years depending what their position is for power. I always worry about that, I guess.

We talk about credibility in this House, and we talk about that, you know, obviously, people aren't crooks and they can't be bought. I never try to assert that. I put a spin on it once in a while, get some blood pressure climbing here and there, but that's not my intent. I guess I just sit there and wonder sometimes, you know, year to year what people say and what they come back with. I get that you have to go out and listen to what constituents want and ratepayers want in this province because things do change. We can't go back five years or four years to what people wanted to what it is now because, I mean, times and places are different.

Some of the pros of this act – and I'll give that to them, you know. If this goes through, are we going to let some people that are younger work at some polling stations? In my riding it becomes a challenge a lot of the time to find people to work at these.

My colleague from Calgary here talked about the money that was spent by not having a set election date, by Elections Alberta having to set up in different places, rent spots and have them ready for when the writ was dropped. To me, that's just wasted money. If we went to a fixed election date, these are things that can be identified so that we let people go out, and they know. Elections Alberta – I mean, that's the key one there, your tax dollars and mine in there – can actually set up shop, and they don't have to spend upwards of half a million dollars renting locations that just sit empty until the writ is dropped.

Very frustrating when you talk to people that were working. Again, I'm not sure about the urban centres, but in the rural ridings it's a challenge to find people to be in that because it's a very thankless job. It's not what everybody lines up to come and do. So when they do that, you know, they're putting their lives on hold because they don't know when they're going to be called, when the election is going to happen. To me, it's a financial thing as much as anything.

Public illegal donations to be repaid: I think that horse has been beaten more than adequately in this Assembly right now. You know, how much money people can donate to an election, whether it be a corporation or personal, I think is kind of key. In 2010 I believe the city of Edmonton had quite a few people running to become mayor. Then everybody discloses all their stuff, which is great. You could really see the difference in a couple of different campaigns of big corporate donors – donors. [interjection] You can't go wrong with a big sandwich.

When you have the big corporate donors, you can see that they backed one person because the finances showed that that particular candidate had lots of $5,000, $2,000, $5,000, $1,000 donations and very, very few under the hundred-dollar donation mark, I mean, almost limited. Then another candidate that was successful, I'd say, pulled back from the grassroots side, had way more donations that weren't at the $5,000 mark. It's interesting. If you're ever bored, go scan the spreadsheet of one person. Literally, it's just $5,000 written down the right-hand side of donors. The other, of one of the candidates, anyway, was $250, a thousand dollars tops, and it bounced all the way along there.

To me, that's interesting. If we go back to that, I don't think it would hurt anybody where your maximums are. I'm not going to sit here and drag people through what they did or didn't donate and make sure that the loopholes are closed. It's always nice to hear that the member who is the Solicitor General, who's bringing up this bill, is looking to hear inputs and have some backing on that.

One of the other ones, that my colleague from Calgary here also talked about, was the CAs having to do their quarterly donations and to make sure that that's done. I think that's going to be an onerous task on Elections Alberta themselves and on the CAs. The 87 people in here know that for most CAs it's all volunteers. You know, to get a strong CA can be a challenge sometimes, and sometimes it's not a challenge. I guess I'm new at that end of it.

I mean, I sat on the previous MLA's constituency board for a number of years, and I enjoyed it, met lots of people on it. But, in all honesty, there weren't a lot of meetings for it just because it's hard to get people out and to donate. If you start putting the task on them that they're going to have to do quarterly financials, I'm not sure what we'd gain out of that, in all honesty, if, say, it was 348 extra filings in a year with 87 candidates. Again, I guess you take that to the ones that didn't win also. To me, I'm just not sure if we really gain a lot out of that other than that it gives everybody a warm and fuzzy feeling.

A couple of my notes on that. The one that I guess drives back to me would be the straight election dates, making them fixed. It's not often you can quote me, but I agree with the Premier on this one. She said a year ago that these are things that Albertans told her they wanted done, and I think those are things that we should follow along with. It's nice that we're following along with the election officer's ideas. They came up with 90 out of 101, I believe. Correct? I mean, it's a start. That's 90 per cent. That's pretty good where I come from.

Would I like to see some changes? Yeah. You know, the big one is the corporate donation limits and the fixed election dates.

With that, I'll wrap up my conversation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Young: I heard lots of protest about the three-year limit on looking at investigations, and then at the same time they're protesting the quarterly reporting. I get that quarterly reporting is onerous on our volunteer organizations, but isn't it more prudent to be more frequent and be up to date on the donations rather than wait for it on an annual basis and then continually try to do a historical review and catch the historical stuff as opposed to keeping up on the donations in a more timely fashion?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow to respond.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. I couldn't agree with you more. The historical is a great way to find out what happened. In all honesty, if any CA from here on in was to take illegal money and not understand where it should have come from, I guess I'd have a real hard problem believing people didn't know if it was legal or not legal. I guess it's been beaten around in the media. It's been beaten around this House a ton. I think people pretty well know, you know, that the towns, the MDs, the counties, the odd school board here and there probably shouldn't donate to any legal entity of an elected official. It doesn't look good at any time.

Again, the quarterlies: I get that that could be, I guess, a question of whether it would work or not. To me, I think the yearly works on that end of it. In my constituency, for instance, we're not pumping in a lot of money every quarter, so it would be a lot of zeros and send it in. The question is: when you're asking your volunteers to do that, are you actually gaining value out of that? As far as the constituency level, I mean, that can be done. In my constituency, for instance, my CA board: we could head down the road, go have a pizza, and get that figured out one day. But the onus comes back to Elections Alberta. They're going to have all these extra filings – 348 is one number that's come out – that come to them every quarter.

I'm not on that committee membership, but my understanding is that Elections Alberta would like more money to be able to fund what they're doing because they're already in a challenge on that. I'm not sure that we'd be gaining anything by doing that for them. If there was something to be gained out of it, I'm always open to ideas, but in my vision right now I think it's more of a play on words to make everybody feel good about it. It's going to hinder Elections Alberta more than help them. Those are just my thoughts.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Young: Well, I've just been sitting in this House for a long time, hearing about all this stuff going back to 2005. I know many of us got elected in more recent years, and I'd rather bring the conversation on election issues to be more of a current one.

Quarterly reporting is getting the opportunity to – if those errors or omissions or misplaced donations happen, I'd rather have it exposed or reported sooner rather than later, rather than trying to look back seven years ago. Wouldn't you agree that a quarterly reporting to find out any kind of errors is better sooner rather than later?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll say no just to argue with you. In all honesty, I don't think it's going to help. I think we identify the ones that are coming in. I think that people have figured out in this day and age what they should or shouldn't have. I might not have heard your comment correctly. I assume you mean going back to 2005, not that you've been in this House since 2005. I missed that part. It's late in the night. I'm not here to quiz you on it.

I think the yearly is working. I don't think that's the discussion. I think it's whether people have identified what's a legal donation and what's an illegal donation, and in all honesty I think most everybody has figured out what an illegal donation is. I guess I could have the illegal donation in the 11th month of the year before you file. You're going to identify it just as quickly.

Again, I just think it's going to be onerous towards Elections Alberta to have to deal with all these filings every quarter, but that's just my thought. I guess what scares me, too, is that you're going to have people that don't file their papers right. I know that there are members in this House that didn't get their Elections Alberta stuff filed right.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers on the motion or the bill?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the motion that's before us.

[Motion on previous question on Bill 7 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The rules, hon. members, are that having dealt with the motion on the question, we will now call the motion on second reading of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:04 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 27, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. O gracious God, remind us daily of the efforts put forward by those who came before us and of the impacts of our decisions today on those who will come after us. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly someone who is no stranger to most of us here. Seated in your gallery is city of Edmonton ward 4 councillor Mr. Ed Gibbons. As many of my hon. colleagues are aware, Mr. Gibbons is a dedicated champion of the city of Edmonton and his ward and the entire capital region. They may not be aware that he was just recognized by Chief of the Defence Staff General Lawson with a Canadian Forces medallion for distinguished service. Along with his commitment to his city Councillor Gibbons has fostered an outstanding relationship between the city of Edmonton and the Canadian Forces since 1994. Indeed, this relationship has not only benefited the city but has also cemented our province's respect for and relationship with the Canadian Forces. I ask Councillor Gibbons to rise and accept the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise on your behalf and introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislative Assembly some special guests. Seated in your gallery are Peggy and Hilary Lynkowski, the spouse and daughter of the late Doug Lynkowski, our beloved Deputy Minister of Service Alberta. Joining them is Maureen Towle, Doug's long-time assistant. During Ministerial Statements we will remember the remarkable life and career of the man affectionately known across the government as Deputy Doug. I would ask Peggy and Hilary and Maureen to all stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly 65 guests from Evansdale school, which is located in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. Evansdale school opened in 1972 as a community school and is named after Judge Harry Marshall Evans, an Alberta coal baron of the early 20th century who in 1917 served as Edmonton's 14th mayor. In keeping with their motto, Evansdale school strives to develop partnerships that involve the students, their parents, and the teaching staff all working together to be the best that they can be. The grade 6 students are in both the public and members' galleries, and they're joined this afternoon by teachers Mrs. Amy Hines; Mrs. Rebecca Grams; Ms Katie Lee, student teacher; and Mr. Brian Ha, also a student teacher. Parent helpers include Mr. Sleiman Darwich, Mrs. Nabeela Dahrouj, and Mrs. Yusra Chamseddin. I would ask the students, the teachers, and the parent helpers to now rise and please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you the very bright students of Grace Martin school from the Mill Woods constituency. They are joined today by their teachers: Mrs. Nicole Morley, Mr. Joel Stephens, and Mr. Farooq Maseehuddin. Now I would request that they please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make this afternoon. First, it is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from the Alberta College of Optometrists. Dr. Lori Jaffray is the president of the college. Dr. Jaffray is an optometrist from Calgary and has practised there since 2003. Joining Dr. Jaffray this afternoon is Dr. Gordon Hensel, registrar of the Alberta College of Optometrists. Later this afternoon I'll be tabling the college's 2011 annual report. I'm very pleased that both Dr. Jaffray and Dr. Hensel are able to join us for this tabling. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health, you have a second introduction. Please proceed.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Also joining us today are guests from the Alberta College of Social Workers. Mrs. Lynn Labrecque King is the executive director and registrar of the Alberta College of Social Workers. Joining her is Ms Lori Sigurdson, manager of professional affairs at the college. The annual report of this college will also be tabled this afternoon. I'm very pleased to have college representatives with us, and I'd ask them to rise and also receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two different groups. The first is a group of public servants who keep Albertans safe during natural disasters and emergencies. Earlier this month the government of Alberta received two awards from the International Association of Emergency Managers for our public warning system. That system utilizes social media, so it's no surprise that we have 25,000 followers on Facebook and another 19,000 followers on Twitter. It's very important because that's one of the fastest ways to get emergency alert messages out to the public. It's through the tremendous efforts of the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and all its public safety partners and media partners who work together that Alberta emergency alert's success works. I would now like to introduce the members of the Alberta emergency alert team. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly as I call their names. April Diver, Andrea Kennedy, Kevin McClement, and Shie Boychuk, please rise in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five individuals from the Calder seniors' drop-in centre. Calder seniors are kicking off a $4.5 million fundraising initiative to do a much-needed expansion and renovation to their centre. The fundraising efforts are starting right here today. I ask all MLAs and Albertans to rally around these seniors and go to helpcalder.ca and make a $5 donation so they can continue to engage in healthy and socially inclusive activities. Spearheading these initiatives are Bill Sim and his wife Gladys, Joyce Ruptash, Debbie Creaser, and Allison Boychuk. There is an MLA who used to say: it's all in Calder. I ask these folks to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, you had a second introduction. Please proceed.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. My second introduction: I'd like to introduce Vicki Martin. She's with the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, where she provides oversight for a portfolio of key initiatives for the ministry. Prior to joining ESRD, Vicki was at the Ministry of Justice, where she led the development of integrated Justice services programs sponsored by the ministries of Justice, Solicitor General, Human Services, and Health Services. Now, you might ask why I'm introducing her since I'm the Minister of Municipal Affairs, but Vicki was the winner of the Municipal Affairs United Way fundraiser, which is a fantastic cause. Vicki is here with her father, who is visiting from B.C. I know they're both incredibly proud of each other, but I'm pretty sure Vicki knows that her dad is very proud of the work she does with this government. I'd ask them to both rise – they're in the members' gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly some wonderful people from the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. These are members of the Elk Island Art Club, who meet regularly in the hamlet of Josephburg, and it's always better in the 'Burg. I'd like to ask them to rise as I call their names: Diane Smith, Luree LeBlanc, Evelyn Yost, Evelyn Melnyk, Jamie Panych, and Ralph Smith. I would ask you to give them the warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 26 people from the Calder seniors' drop-in centre that we brought in this morning on the ETS bus. The Calder seniors' drop-in centre has some of the most vibrant and engaged individuals that I've ever had the pleasure of representing. We are in Edmonton-Calder, the seniors' drop-in centre, building an extension with a kitchen and an elevator. Although it's in Calder, it services people throughout north Edmonton. So anyone who is a senior or has plans to become a senior should be contributing to our extension and the very best seniors' centre, I think, in all of Alberta. Can they rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, my two guests have already been introduced by the hon. Health minister, but I just want to add more beyond that introduction. Dr. Lori Jaffray and Dr. Gordon Hensel not only are outstanding optometrists in their profession but passionate community leaders. Dr. Jaffray covered campaign miles with me in the last election and currently volunteers for the Calgary-Hawkwood PC association. I want to acknowledge her work in the community, so thank you very much.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Douglas Lynkowski

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a heavy heart and profound sorrow that I rise to pay tribute to an esteemed public servant and a gracious and loving family man. The government of Alberta is mourning the loss of one of our own: our friend, our colleague, and the man lovingly known as Deputy Doug. Doug Lynkowski, our beloved Deputy Minister of Service Alberta, passed away at the age of 56.

I admired him as an honest, hard-working man whose focus and attention was on improving the lives of Albertans, and I admired him as a gracious and generous man who loved his family with every ounce of his being. He is survived by his wife, Peggy, and his daughter, Hilary. This devoted public servant, a kind and gentle man, lives on in the hearts of all who had the honour and good fortune to work with him.

Peggy and Hilary, all of those missed dinners and all of that time that he spent away from you and with us was to make this province a better place. Thank you. [applause]

The Alberta public service, Mr. Speaker, has a rich history, featuring many devoted individuals whose legacy has shaped the Alberta we know today. Doug Lynkowski was among the finest of these proud and devoted public servants. Having earned his designation as a chartered accountant in 1985, Doug joined Alberta Treasury, where he was the chief internal auditor. Always being a community-minded man, in 1991 he joined the city of St. Albert and served as its chief financial officer. He led the city's strategic planning process, literally building the community in which he lived, the community in which he raised his daughter, Hilary, and the community in which he and Peggy were pillars through their involvement in their community associations.

Doug rejoined Alberta Finance in 2003 as executive director in the office of budget and management. In this position Doug was instrumental in implementing business planning standards for government. Doug was appointed Provincial Controller in 2006 and worked closely with the Public Sector Accounting Board to establish accounting standards for government entities across Canada. In 2011, Mr. Speaker, our Premier appointed Doug as the Deputy Minister of Service Alberta, where he earned the affection and esteem of his staff and colleagues for his warm and effective leadership and genuine open-door policy. In fact, employees in Service Alberta will always remember him as Deputy Doug, an example of his welcome leadership style. He was a tremendous contributor to our entire deputy minister team and a key leader in their efforts to continue to renew the Alberta public service.

There is no doubt that we worked hard together. We went through a few battles together, and we were in the midst of making significant change together. I wish that we had also spent more time laughing together. I will miss the live play-by-play stream of text messages we sent each other. It reminded me of the feelings I had many years ago while chatting with my friends on MSN Messenger.

I knew he was a compassionate man when during our very first meeting I got a message that a family friend had unexpectedly passed away. At that moment I first witnessed his thoughtfulness and consideration. It was clear that he did not see me as a minister but saw beyond that and saw me as human being with a very personal story. Doug did that, Mr. Speaker. He didn't just see others by the position they held but, rather, by the feelings in their hearts, desires of their dreams, and all the little things that, when added up, form a complete picture of a human's life. I knew he was a considerate man when he would buy me Starbucks because I took a break from Tim Hortons.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, although Doug's professional achievements and skills were immense, it's not his briefing notes that I will miss. It's the way he used to say, "Yeah, hi, Manmeet," when he picked up the phone. I know that he is in the comfort of the Creator now because he was a gentle soul, a man that genuinely appreciated everyone that crossed his path. He was a man that showed his appreciation of people by taking the time to get to know them, by reaching out to them, by being gentle with them when they slipped and being generous in his appreciation of them.

Simply put, he passed the test of being a truly caring human being because he brought people up when they were down, he encouraged and helped them progress, and he never let them sit in defeat alone. He was always with them. I know, Mr. Speaker, that soon enough Service Alberta will have another deputy minister, but we will never have a leader so gentle with the hearts of his fellow team members as Doug Lynkowski.

Peggy and Hilary, no words can fill the void that the loss of Doug has left in your hearts, but know that from our hearts to yours we've all been made better for knowing Doug Lynkowski. We will never forget him. God bless you. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. That was a very moving – very moving – statement. It's very difficult to follow that, so I'm going to keep this a little bit brief. I'd just like to pass along my sympathies. On behalf of the Wildrose caucus please accept our deepest condolences in your most difficult time. To the friends, family, and colleagues of the Deputy Minister of Service Alberta, Mr. Douglas Lynkowski, thank you so much for sharing Doug and his many talents with the province of Alberta during his life of public service. He did Alberta proud, he did your family proud, and we are better for having had him serve us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a request for permission to participate has been received from the third and fourth parties. It requires unanimous consent. I'll ask one question. Does anyone object to the members of the Liberal caucus and the NDP caucus offering their statements at this time?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Minister of Service Alberta for his compassion and respect for a good man. It's always difficult when we lose a close member of our family, and I'd like to offer my sincere condolences to Doug's wife, Peggy; his daughter, Hilary; and their entire extended family, including the extended family in the civil service as well as the Legislature. I want you to know we hold you in our thoughts and in our hearts. I understand what it's like to lose a father and a loved one.

I'd like to recognize the exemplary man Doug Lynkowski was and to acknowledge the work that he did for this province. Public service and politics can sometimes be a rough business, but Deputy Minister Lynkowski was a kind and thoughtful man who worked diligently to ensure that Albertans receive the best service possible. Mr. Speaker, members of the civil service are the unsung heroes who make our democracy function. They work hard day in and day out, sometimes 24 hours a day, and their family members also work alongside them. Doug Lynkowski was the epitome of a public servant. He gave his life and heart and soul to this province.

On behalf of the Alberta Liberal opposition I offer my sincere condolences to Doug's family and to his many, many friends. We were lucky to have had him serve Alberta. May God bless Doug. God bless his family.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the New Democrat caucus we would like to offer our condolences to the family and friends and thank Doug Lynkowski for all of his years of service to this Assembly and to Albertans.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to express my condolences to the family of Doug Lynkowski. Thank you so much for being here today and for sharing your father and your husband with the province.

Premier's Participation in Oral Question Period

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, question period is a time-honoured tradition across parliamentary democracies. The government answers questions posed by the opposition, and usually the Leader of the Opposition questions the leader of government, the Premier, about matters of policy and other accountability issues, but here the Premier rarely answers the questions that are put to her. More often it's left to the Deputy Premier to run interference, blather on, or resort to name-calling. When will the Premier raise the bar on transparency and accountability and directly answer the questions?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm heartbroken that the Leader of the Opposition is not enamoured with me, but I'll have to live with that.

While the Premier has been meeting with political leaders of this country, with Premiers of other provinces, while the Premier was developing good relations with the newly elected Premier of Quebec and looking to sending our commodities to and via Quebec and strengthening our industry, while she's meeting with world-wide investors in infrastructure, the Leader of the Opposition has been dredging up receipts and has been printing posters. I suggest to you that our Premier is serving the province very well.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, since the election the Premier has answered less than a third of the questions that have been posed to her. One of her peers, Premier Darrell Dexter of Nova Scotia, was in question period for 100 per cent of the sitting days in the fall session. Robert Ghiz in PEI is there 90 per cent of the time. Will the government agree to set aside a certain number of sitting days where the Premier will answer all of the questions put to her?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether our Premier has answered fewer questions than other Premiers may have answered in other Legislatures, but I can tell you that our Premier has spent the entire summer serving Albertans, meeting with communities, meeting with political leaders. She was not examining political systems in the United States; rather, she was developing a plan for this province that reflects our commitments during the election. She is focusing on education, on health care, on building seniors' homes – I'm sure the seniors in the gallery will be interested – and developing markets for our products and pipelines throughout the country, which is not something that we can say about the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in the United Kingdom the British Prime Minister respectfully answers at least 30 solid minutes of questions each week in Prime Minister's Questions. Here it feels like the Premier hasn't answered 30 minutes of questions for the entire session. Will she make a commitment to answer the questions posed to her by Alberta MLAs rather than making speeches in vote-rich Ontario?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Leader of the Opposition has spent extensive time studying American systems. Now she's studying British systems. Our Premier is committed to Alberta, and she has full confidence in all of the cabinet members that you see on the front bench to be able to very capably answer any question that the leader may have on any particular portfolio, which is unlike the Leader of the Opposition, who doesn't allow her members to speak during and after campaigns.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to the Absence of Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just remind you that the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 126 and page 614, line 7, clearly makes reference to the fact that it is inappropriate to refer to the absence or presence of any members of the Assembly. Please bear this in mind going forward so that we don't have to rule any good questions out of order.

Mr. Anderson: A point of clarification.

The Speaker: A point of clarification. We'll deal with it later.

In the meantime let me recognize the leader of the Wildrose opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you have a look at my questions, you'll see that they were very carefully crafted not to make any reference to the absence of any member.

Health Regions' Expense Reporting

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, more health expenses, more lavish spending. This time it's the chief information officer of the former Capital health region. It's a pattern that we're seeing over and over. Now, the minister will say that – and I already know this – health region doesn't exist, and he'll also say that now the expense rules are really tough, but Albertans deserve to know how things were managed in the past to trust that they're being run properly now. Many of the same executives still work for AHS. Why won't the minister just release all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2000?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, leaving aside the questions that the hon. leader asked and answered for herself, what I can tell you is that the answer is very simple. The fact is that the policies and procedures that govern the expenses in question, which go back seven years, in fact, are not the policies and procedures that are in place in Alberta today. As you'll know, Alberta Health Services has adopted the government of Alberta's new travel and expense guidelines. They are among the most stringent you'll find in North America. They are endorsed by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, which should be a source of immense pride and gratification to the members of the Official Opposition, and we stand by those.

2:00

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the lavish lifestyle of the Capital health chief information officer included $700 at one restaurant, $1,000 at another, and even included 75 cents for a newspaper and mileage claims as low as 1 kilometre at a time. Honestly, minister. The minister will say that these expenses were in keeping with the norms of the time, and that is precisely why the minister should clear the air by releasing all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the regions going back to 2005.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is going to continue to ask me a question and then answer it on my behalf, I don't know why I would waste House time by standing up and answering. But I will say to you once again – and for the record I have never said – that these expenses represent a, quote, norm of a period of time. These expenses are of as much concern to members of this side of the House as they are any other. The fact of the matter is that people in government, people who ran for government in 2012, not 2005, have a responsibility to deliver policies and procedures that Albertans would expect today. We have done that. Those are in place. The information is there for all to see.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fair enough. It was AHS who said that the rules were in keeping with the norms of the time.

But, Mr. Speaker, not all the news is bad. The latest release proves that the government relations officer in the former Capital health region, Brian Hlus, was very modest in his expenses. Why won't the minister protect the reputations of other good employees like Mr. Hlus by releasing all of the expenses of all the executives of all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what should be the most transparent of all to everyone in this Assembly is that the Official Opposition persists in regurgitating public information, including the names of particular individuals who served under former health regions, in question period every day. Their motives are beyond our ability to comprehend. What I can tell you is that if the Official Opposition wants to persist in looking up policies and procedures of health regions that no longer exist, we allow that to be their prerogative. They also told us that they want to take us back to the days of local hospital boards, when a province-wide policy on travel and expense claims like we have in place today would not be possible. We leave it to Albertans to decide which they would prefer.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition for third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Our motive is simple, Mr. Speaker. We're just trying to raise the bar on openness and transparency.

Provincial Budget

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the next quarterly fiscal update is coming tomorrow, and we hope the Minister of Finance is going to be a lot more open and transparent than he was three months ago. Oil is holding steady at around $15 a barrel below the government forecast, energy revenues are dropping, and looking out a couple of years, oil will be nowhere near the $108 the government is predicting. Will the minister provide the details of the adjustments to spending in the current fiscal year to offset the drop in revenue?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the quarterly update is tomorrow as the hon. member said. I wouldn't presume to preclude the announcement tomorrow. In fact, we'll have a technical briefing in the morning.

Ms Smith: What I fear that means, Mr. Speaker, is that it's going to be spend, spend, spend as if nothing is wrong. The Premier talked recently about the new fiscal reality as the reason she has to borrow for the basics like roads and schools, yet the Finance minister says that everything is fine and that he'll deliver a balanced budget. What's the truth?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the financial illiteracy from across the way continues. I would like to just quote something out of a report that I have here: the P3 approach is an essential part of our government's future plans; at the federal level we intend to do more P3s. Mr. Flaherty, our federal Finance minister, urged governments to avoid an ideological approach to P3s. Is the hon. member now criticizing the federal government? Or perhaps we should look at the Saskatchewan budget update. I'll come back to that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this side we don't believe in debt, and on that side they didn't used to either.

Frankly, this needs a lot more explaining. Just yesterday in the House the Finance minister claimed that we will not deficit finance the operations of this government, and then he talked about operating, capital, and savings budgets. It's an all-in-one budget, he insists. Let's be clear. Within that all-in-one budget – operating and capital and savings – will it be balanced?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I guess I'm going to have to correct the hon. member across the way. I never said that we were going to have a savings budget or a capital budget or an operating budget. I said that we were going to bring forward a budget that will include an operating plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan, the way that Albertans understand how they do their finances, the way businesses in Alberta do their finances, the way the Alberta Chambers of Commerce has encouraged us to do their plans and our plans, the way the Saskatchewan government is going to balance their budget next year, the way the federal government is going to deal with their finances. I guess they're the only ones in North America that understand financial accounting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

AHS Care Centre Showering Policy

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had the opportunity to meet with many individuals living in the long-term care centre at the Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre in Calgary. These are seniors and people with disabilities, some as young as 20, some as old as 90, who need assistance with daily living. I was shocked to learn that the policy of AHS in regard to these Albertans is that they're only given one shower a week. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: is it your view that it is reasonable that seniors living in the Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre are only allowed one shower a week?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the member doesn't understand the process. [interjections] What's available for residents is appropriate bathing and appropriate care in all our facilities. [interjections]

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll enlighten you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, proceed, but let's please cut down the interjections. We happen to have an esteemed group of seniors here who are very interested in this question and the answer, I'm sure.

Mr. Hehr: Clearly the minister doesn't understand the policy of the wholly owned subsidiary of AHS who is delivering the care there. It is one shower a week for seniors there. Is this a reasonable policy for people in this province to live under, to only get one shower a week?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, maybe this time I'll say it slower. The number of showers, the amount of bathing, the amount of safety provided in our seniors' facilities is what's appropriate and what's needed. I'd never get down to saying one per week. In some cases maybe the residents may need more, and that's what the local decision-making, the local administrator will always do. They'll make the decision of what's best for the senior in the appropriate place where they live.

Mr. Hehr: The hon. minister clearly doesn't have a clue what is going on. The people living in the Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre are only allowed one shower a week. Is this reasonable for our seniors and people living with disabilities in this province?

Mr. VanderBurg: I will say it even slower, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] The appropriate care is always provided for our seniors and the residents in our seniors facilities across the province. If this member or any member would like to travel with me when we travel around the province and talk to seniors that live in facilities, not that want to raise a little bit of an issue in here, those people that live in those facilities are very well taken care of. [interjections] The caregivers treat those people with care and compassion. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, some decorum would really be appreciated. I've asked for it once, I'm going to ask for it a second time, and after this I just won't tolerate any more interjections like that. It's rude, it's impolite, it's offensive, and it really hampers everyone else from hearing an answer to a question. I've said before that you may not like the questions, hon. government members. Opposition members, you may not like the answers. But people have a right to say what's on their mind in response to a question or to ask a question such as it may be. Failure to abide will just mean I'll have to overlook you, and I'm serious about that. Let's move on.

The leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not sure the hon. member here would want to travel with the minister if he only had one shower a week.

2:10 Premier's Attendance in the Legislative Assembly

Mr. Mason: The Premier and her government were elected on a promise to be accessible, open, and transparent, yet since the election the opposite has been the case. The Premier won't answer questions in the House, ignores reporters, and travels extensively while the Assembly is in session. My question is to the Premier. What are you hiding if not to avoid accountability?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, while the opposition is lamenting that the price of oil is dropping and that we have limited access to markets and at the same time asking us to increase our operating costs by providing better services, which we would like to – and we are committed to do so – our Premier actually is travelling the country right now trying to open up markets for our commodities so that we can sell our precious commodities at a better price and to more markets.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is talking to students at Queen's University.

Albertans just can't trust this Premier or her government to be accountable. Given that the Premier has only answered two questions out of 17 put to her in the last five sitting days, will the Premier admit that she is refusing to be accountable to Albertans? Why won't you answer questions in question period, Madam Premier?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, accountability to Albertans is multilevel. The Premier is accountable to Albertans through making sure that she puts together a cabinet that is capable to answer any single question that these members can come up with. As such, I don't believe that there are any questions that are unanswered. She has full confidence not only in her cabinet but in the fact that all questions will be answered for the opposition by these capable cabinet members.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a bit hard to take, this Deputy Premier claiming that all questions get answered here.

Given that the Premier has spent much of this session travelling outside of Alberta and given that Albertans expect the Premier to be inside the Assembly doing her job, will the Premier tell this Assembly why she is in Ontario today?

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to the Absence of Members

The Speaker: Did you not hear what I just said, hon. member? Referring to the absences or presence of a member is not on. It applies to questions, and I meant to say that it also applies to answers. That was the point of clarification I was going to make for Airdrie.

I'll allow you to rephrase your question. But, please, future references like that that are a blatant abrogation of the rules will cause a violation and will cause me to stand and overlook you. Please rephrase.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize, and I'll rephrase that.

Premier's Attendance in the Legislative Assembly

Mr. Mason: Given that the Premier spent much of this session travelling outside of Alberta and given that Albertans expect the Premier to be inside this Assembly doing her job, how can the Premier do that if she is travelling in Ontario?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would gladly answer that question. The member's disregard for the rules of the House: I don't take them personally. I think it's a disregard for Albertans.

Our Premier has met with the Canadian Council for Public-Private Partnerships at a conference in Toronto, Mr. Speaker. She has also been speaking with political leaders relative to the importance of building infrastructure not only for the benefit of this province but for the benefit of Canada so that we can move our agricultural products, our petroleum products, and other products not only to the United States but to other markets through other provinces and spread our wealth from coast to coast to coast.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has shown an utter disregard for being open and honest about the misuse of public funds for political parties. While the mayor of Toronto was removed from office for a conflict of interest, this government gets away with repeatedly hiring insiders with no job competitions and blowing taxpayer money on partisan purposes. The Chief Electoral Officer has noted that several ridings are under investigation for accepting public dollars. Can the Justice minister tell the Assembly which ridings are under investigation?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been through this already, and I'll give the same answer to roughly the same question he's asked before. The Chief Electoral Officer operates independently. Prosecutions are independent. Investigations are independent. I would not know about any direct investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in January it was confirmed that 10 ridings were under investigation for accepting public funds, can the Justice minister tell this House if any member's riding is under investigation and, if so, whether he really thinks it's a good idea for them to be voting on legislation that puts them in a direct conflict of interest?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Glad to help this member because you know well that the Justice minister nor any member of cabinet can know and does know what is being investigated, but I do know of one investigation. One certain candidate for the Wildrose in Edmonton-Castle Downs was giving away large-screen TVs and scholarships if you voted for him. He is investigating that for sure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, I recognize your point of order at 2:15. Deputy Premier, I recognized you for an answer. You may get another chance.

Right now the floor belongs to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: It would be interesting to see how he knows that, unlike the Justice minister.

Given that the Premier talks about transparency but also accountability, will the Justice minister turn the page on this government's ethical failures and ensure that no member whose riding is under investigation will be involved in debate on laws about disclosure and penalties for exactly these investigations?

Mr. Denis: I appreciate the member's comment, but again we don't know who is under investigation, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, nor should we know because we don't live in a banana republic where the Justice minister can just walk in and say, "investigate" or "don't." [interjections]

The Speaker: Edmonton-Strathcona, you have made the list. Airdrie, you have also made the list. One more peep and you'll lose your spot. I see you're listed later, so let's be careful.

Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, please, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Infrastructure Alternative Financing

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has used P3s and has talked about borrowing for important capital projects like highway 63. Many critics and opposition members say that this type of financing is just putting the province back into debt. To the Minister of Finance: does alternative financing save money in the long run, or does it just unduly burden future generations with debt?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta right now has a triple-A credit rating. It's the result of some very good financial management over the years. What it means is that today we have access to 30-year bonds at somewhere around 3 per cent. To give you an indication, the heritage savings trust fund earned 8.2 per cent this year. Does it make a lot of sense to take money out of something that's making you 8.2 per cent and put it into the highways or the schools or the roads when you can borrow at 3 per cent? You're losing money.

The other point is that you could defer it. Well, we know, Mr. Speaker, that the deferral will cost you 5, 10, 15, 20 per cent more than if you build it today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. Well, talking about roads and their costs – and we know that they're very costly, having just gone through this with highway 63 – to the Minister of Transportation: how does using P3s and other alternative financing fit into the roads construction plans for our future success?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads, started in 2005 under Premier Klein, this fiscally prudent government is saving Albertans up to $2 billion on a construction investment of $5.1 billion. We're meeting the safety and infrastructure needs of our people. We're doing it so that people can enjoy it now instead of waiting for generations to come, and we're doing it so that the people that use the infrastructure pay for it instead of, as the opposition would have, having everybody pay for it now and everybody who's using it for 20 more years not pay for it. This government is using good fiscal practices that give Albertans the infrastructure they need when they need it in order to drive this province forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. Roads are one thing, Mr. Speaker, but can the Education minister tell us how he's used alternative financing to deliver schools in Alberta and where the government is at in getting classrooms to kids where they live?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we need to exhaust every option at our disposal to build schools for the kids that need those spaces. Since 2007, when this government announced it was going to take on some debt through P3s to build some schools, we've built 28. We have 12 more on the way. That will be 40 schools, and that will be a total of over 30,000 desks for kids across this province, kids that are learning their ABCs and 1-2-3s in alternatively financed schools in communities like Airdrie, Okotoks, Chestermere, Brooks, Beaumont. As icing on the cake, by investing about a billion dollars in P3s, we saved about $245 million off of traditional methods and got these schools done years quicker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Family Care Clinics

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government continues to mismanage our health care system, preventing essential health dollars from reaching patients in the front lines. There is perhaps no better example than with the expensive promise to build 140 family care clinics with no plans, no outreach, no research, no evaluation, no consultation, and, more importantly, ignoring the advice of physicians and health experts across Alberta. To the Minister of Health: was there a comprehensive evaluation done on the three pilot projects before promising to build a hundred family care clinics?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, family care clinics are part of a broader initiative in our health system to raise the bar when it comes to primary health care, the first point of contact for Albertans with their health system. The three very successful pilot projects that the hon. member referred to were offered as demonstration projects in different parts of the province. They were designed to meet very different needs. The family care clinic in northeast Edmonton, for example, is designed to serve new Canadians and designed to serve a community with very high addictions and mental health needs that were previously unmet. Family care clinics, like the evolution of primary care networks, continue to evolve in our province. We'll continue to work with local communities and do what meets their needs.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that Alberta Health documents that we have obtained, which I will table, show that there is no evaluation mechanism in place for the three pilot FCCs and that evaluations themselves aren't going to be complete until late next year, can the minister understand the concern Albertans may have as you barrel ahead on potential billion-dollar health care gambits?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, when Albertans get concerned is when they don't have timely access to primary health care in or near their own community. This government has committed an investment of $75 million in the budget for this year and the next two years to support further development of primary care networks and family care clinics. We are working broadly with stakeholders, including a Minister's Advisory Committee on Primary Health Care, to develop the criteria. Most importantly, the business that we are engaged with is the understanding and action on community health needs as expressed to this government. We make no apologies for that. We will continue to do that. The hon. member can table whatever documents she chooses.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's your request for proposal, not mine.

Given that on a major undertaking like this an open and accountable government should be consulting, just like you said, with experts in the field and in primary health, why won't the minister bring physicians to the table, consult with experts, and, most importantly, be transparent and tell Albertans exactly – now listen, Minister – how much money the FCC initiative will cost and where you are getting the money from?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I guess there is one point on which the hon. member and I might agree, and that's that an open and transparent government does talk to people, and that's what we spent the summer doing when members of our caucus conducted over 190 community consultations on primary health care in every constituency, whether represented by our party or another party in this House. We've reached out broadly to health stakeholders. Physicians, nurse practitioners, and others have been working with us since last year on the development of the family care clinic model. We're actively working with primary care networks now to discuss how to enhance the services they offer, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Moving along on the access to health care, my constituents in Vegreville are concerned that the St. Joseph's general hospital will no longer be able to handle the medical needs of the town and the surrounding areas that access this facility. It's been difficult attracting doctors when the infrastructure of the hospital is rapidly aging. We know that you should have received a report earlier this year, Minister of Health, that would support our cause. We would like to know: will the government commit to reviewing or, if you don't have a business case, to preparing a business case to support an upgraded or replacement facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Well, of course, we're committed to investing in infrastructure that meets the health needs of our growing province and as we come to understand those needs through Members of the Legislative Assembly who talk to us about those needs. Currently Covenant Health and Alberta Health Services are developing a service plan for St. Joseph's hospital and will ensure that it aligns with the broader service plans for that region of the province. A needs assessment is also in development, and once it's finalized and submitted by Alberta Health Services, we'll certainly take a close look at those needs and decide the next steps.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: could you perhaps give us some projected timelines to ensuring that we will have an improved facility?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we expect the needs assessment to be completed and submitted by the end of this year. As soon as we have an opportunity to review it within the context of the zone plan for that part of Alberta, we'll make a decision on what needs to happen next to ensure that we're going to meet the continuing and growing health needs of that part of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister. The hospital is now in need of some upgraded medical equipment to be able to handle the needs. What are we doing to ensure that all of the facility upgrades and the replacement are being done in a timely manner?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member's question. The first question, of course, is going to be what the needs assessment determines or suggests as far as the specific services that should be offered at St. Joseph's hospital and how those relate to the broader zone. Once we have a chance to review the needs assessment, that will lead to some conclusions with respect to equipment and fitting out of the hospital in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Groundwater and Hydraulic Fracturing

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Is fracking affecting our groundwater? Well, nobody really knows. Why in 2012 do we still not know the answer? It's because this government waited too long to get a baseline, and it still has not made progress on the recommendations from the 2006 Coalbed Methane/Natural Gas in Coal final report. So to the minister of environment: why has the government failed to fingerprint the gas in the water so that it could be proved or disproved that it came from fracking or deep drilling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. In fact, this government and this province are testing groundwater. We've been doing groundwater mapping in different parts of the province, making sure that we have that baseline data. We also look at baseline water testing as well. We are moving in this direction.

Ms Blakeman: Madam Minister, the groundwater testing is not the same thing as what I'm talking about here.

Why didn't the minister and the government take every possible scientifically rigorous action to determine the cause of water contamination following drilling in Rosebud or the Wildmere field or the Campbell or Jack wells?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do do baseline testing in this province, and we continue to do that. We know that we have a strong regulatory system in this province. We know that we've been drilling in this province for a number of years, over 60 years, hundreds of wells. We take this very seriously. That is why we also ground water map to know what we have in the science. That's why we do base water testing as well.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the same minister: why would the government be any more diligent in using scientific advice in 2012 than it was in following the advice in 2006? Is it because you really, really, really mean it this time?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've made a commitment in this province to make sure that we are doing the baseline testing. We are also in the new year going out and having a water conversation in this province. One of the four topics that we will be talking about, because it's important to Albertans, is hydraulic fracturing. We'll hear from Albertans, and we'll be able to tell them the story and the facts about what we do in this province to make sure that they have the facts out there with regard to mapping and with regard to baseline testing and not some myths that some people like to tell.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During her run for the PC leadership the Premier said, and I quote: we have to have farm workers protected; hired employees on farms are entitled to that protection. End quote. Now, over a year later, not only has the Premier broken her word to farm workers, but her government has also stopped reporting farm fatalities. This government breaks its promises and then hides information from the public to stop them from finding out the consequences. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. Will he admit that this government's inaction on farm safety is yet another broken promise?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that 10 years ago this government's own labour code review said that farm workers should receive protection as soon as possible and given that the farm advisory council's recommendations from February were as predictable as its industry-dominated membership, will the minister admit that his government's ongoing delay is just another broken promise from a government too weak-kneed to stand up and do what is right?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we are doing a very, very thorough review of this particular area. I've been working very closely with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. We've been talking with the people engaged across the province. There are three particular areas that are of importance in this area. One is with respect to workplace standards, another is with respect to occupational health and safety standards, and a third is with respect to workers' compensation. All three are very complex areas that bear us doing a very considerate look at it both from the perspective of the individual protection of the individual farm worker and the support for their families as well as for the farm industry itself.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this has been going on for well over a decade and given that Alberta is the only province that hasn't already extended basic protection to farm workers and that that protection ensures that they become more safe, will the minister admit that the only deliberation still required is that about the strength of this government's principles on keeping its promises and protecting vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely the last thing that I would admit. This government is keeping its promises.

One of the things I'd ask the hon. member to do is to review across the country the change in workplace safety regulations and laws – workers' compensation laws, occupational health and safety laws, and workplace standards laws – and tell me where she can show that the agricultural industry has been improved in its safety record by a marked amount. So legislation is not the only answer to this. Legislation and protection of workers is very, very important. I'm certainly advocating that we move in that direction, but we want at the end of the day to achieve results. That's safe places for farm workers and support for farm families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Care Centre Showering Policy

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's seniors deserve dignity and respect. We're hearing from seniors across Alberta about how they struggle to receive more than one bath per week even after soiling themselves. In Alberta one would be hard-pressed to believe that as seniors age in place, that would mean a total loss of basic personal hygiene. My brother Ron lived at the Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre, and I can tell you that he received one shower per week just like many others in facilities, and that's cruel. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: do you honestly believe that it is fair to tell seniors that they get one shower per week based on a care plan and not based on just common compassion?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, you know, the issues around the province when I visit facilities – I visit people that are the caregivers of our most precious commodity, and that's seniors. These caregivers care about the people that they take care of. They take good care of them with compassion and care each and every day. I really don't care for these comments made about our caregivers. These are top-notch people, and they have the ability to do what's right and what's appropriate for our seniors in those facilities.

Mrs. Towle: It's interesting to know that the associate minister doesn't care for these comments because I was my brother's caregiver.

Given that many seniors and their families find it degrading to only be showered once a week, if they're lucky, will this government make a firm commitment to stand up for our seniors and ensure that they have a basic right to more than one shower per week?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, you know, the whole ministry, the supports from the ministry, and the caregiver supports are absolutely outstanding in this province. Everything we do is about the seniors' care and safety and health outcomes. I will stand by the work that our caregivers do each and every day. [interjection] I guess you don't want to hear the rest.

The Chair: Hon. members. Let's return to some decorum here. I'm trying to put a finger on who it is that's interjecting here, and I'm going to focus on you during this next question and answer to make sure that I identify who it is. That person will lose their place either today or tomorrow or the next day, and that's that.

Hon. member, you have the right to ask a question and be heard. Hon. minister, you have a right to give an answer and be heard, and both should be done with respect.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that I and the associate minister go with one bath per week and see how we like it.

Given that this province already allows customers of our provincial judicial system access to a shower a day, can the Associate Minister of Seniors please explain why our fragile seniors are not allowed the same affordability?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, what our seniors afford is the best care in this province that can possibly be given. I've said over and over that the caregivers in our seniors' facilities are caring, dedicated, loving people and would never allow anything less than the best care possible for our seniors in this province, and I'll stand by that care. Thank you. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, decorum, please.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Airdrie.

Foreign Qualifications and Credentials

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. There are many foreign workers, professionally trained, who are coming to work in Alberta. As you know, Alberta employers are very desperate to hire them. They come here as very highly qualified professionals, but our system is so complex, and it takes so long to get their foreign credentials recognized. My question to the minister: do you think it is fair for your ministry to charge them a hundred dollar fee for their qualification against Alberta's standard? Should we waive this service fee at least for immigrants who are already living in Alberta so we can get them into the workforce faster?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The service that the hon. member is referring to is the international qualifications assessment service, which we provide for a fee to landed immigrants or those thinking of immigrating to Alberta. This fee is one of the lowest of its kind in Alberta, and we want to use that as an incentive to encourage folks who want to come to Alberta to ensure that their skill set matches up with job qualifications.

However, we also acknowledge that those folks who are living here in Alberta who want to have that service can go to one of the 60 offices we have in the province and have that fee waived if they meet the criteria.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. Getting foreign credentials recognized can take a long time. What are you doing to ensure that foreign-trained professionals can quickly and easily start working in their occupation once they arrive here? How are you ensuring that a doctor is not driving a cab or an engineer becoming a security guard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Assessing and recognizing foreign qualifications is complex. Just as no two individuals are the same, neither are their credentials. That's why we work with professional regulatory organizations, employers, and educational institutions to ensure that we have the adequate tools and resources to make sure we're matching skill sets with those job requirements.

A week and a half ago I had the honour of co-chairing a federal-provincial meeting of immigration ministers. One of the things that we discussed in terms of future movement is the expression of interest model, which will ensure that we are now placing emphasis on demand rather than supply of workers in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. In the Alberta immigration nominee programs we used to have a very, very precious class called the family class. Now the class has been removed. Can the minister explain to me why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The family stream under the Alberta immigration nomination program mirrors changes that the federal government has made to their programs. Our program now focuses on nominating temporary foreign workers to meet our labour demands. As the hon. member mentioned, we have, mirroring the federal system, eliminated the family stream application. However, we know that families coming to Alberta add so much to our communities and add so much to the fabric of our society, so Canadian citizens or permanent residents may be able to sponsor eligible relatives under Citizenship and Immigration Canada's family class program.

Thank you.

New School Construction Priorities

Mr. Anderson: Speaking of financial illiteracy, Mr. Speaker, the government seems to have great difficulty understanding the concept of an infrastructure priority list, so let me explain it. For schools you list all the requests made by school boards onto an Excel spreadsheet. Then using an objective formula, you sort the list, putting the most urgent priority on top, followed by numbers 2, 3, 4, and down to number 1,000. Then you put an estimated cost by each project. Then you post it online for all to see, subject to changes if circumstances dictate. Minister of Education, why have you not provided such a list?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we had a good discussion about this yesterday at great length. I guess I'd reiterate that we have literally thousands of schools in this province, and we have hundreds, if not thousands, of requests coming at us from school boards. To list all of those schools onto one list that won't change from one month to the next, when you come up with situations that are thrown at you from the perspective of growth pressures that you didn't forecast or the perspective of finding mould in a school you didn't expect or having a storm rip a roof off a school, is just not practical. We're doing everything we can to build a proper list, and Albertans are going to see the announcements of new schools in short order.

Mr. Anderson: You can change the list. It's okay. The point is that it's public, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that according to the former Minister of Education's most senior staff member, who in 2009 told me that roughly 30 schools announced prior to the 2008 election were placed in locations based on where votes were needed most instead of where student needs were highest, and given how tight money is right now, wouldn't it make sense to publish a full prioritized list of all requested school projects so that we can ensure that every dollar allocated for new schools is spent on the most urgently needed ones first?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think we can agree that we want to spend dollars on the schools that are most urgently needed. The rest of that was just comical. I mean, if you look at the schools that were awarded, are you saying that the urgent need didn't exist in Airdrie, didn't exist in Fort McMurray, didn't exist in Okotoks? Those are the constituencies that got the most schools in the last round of schools, and those are all opposition ridings. If this member is saying that his constituency wasn't as big a priority as someone else's or that it shouldn't have been on the priority list or wasn't of urgent need and that the decision was made purely on politics, I challenge him to stand up in his community and say that it wasn't a big need.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, that's not what I was saying at all. I was saying that we need to build schools in the most prioritized areas. That's all it is. Over on this side we don't care – we don't care – where the schools get built as long as they get built where they're needed the most.

How many times do we have to get through to this minister, Mr. Speaker, before he'll release a public list so that every single community member across this great province of ours will know where they are in the priority queue and when they can expect to get the school? Quit playing politics with education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the lists are very important, and they are a work-in-progress. I think the open disclosure of the list is very important as well. As I said yesterday, the Official Opposition has an alternative infrastructure plan that's very specific. It's not $2 billion, $1.5 billion. They want to defer $1.623 billion worth of capital – $1.623 billion – so someone put a lot of work into that number. They obviously have a very specific list, and I'd like to know which schools, in a collaborative effort here to come up with a best possible plan for Albertans, they think we should defer because, obviously, it's not the ones we were requested to build.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Organ Donations

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Organ donations save lives. Unfortunately, Canada and its provinces lag behind many countries such as Spain, U.S., France, and others in organ donation and transplantation. This is of concern to me and my constituents. To the Minister of Health: what specific strategies will the government of Alberta undertake to address this shortfall in our health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to thank the hon. member for the question because organ donation in Alberta is lagging behind other parts of the country. I've committed to this House and as part of government to Albertans to developing an intent-to-donate registry that will allow Albertans to formally and in electronic form declare their wish to donate organs and tissues. We're also creating a provincial advisory working group for organ and tissue donation and transplantation. The group will be tasked with developing initiatives to improve donation rates in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Research has shown that an effective registry program helps save money and lives for people waiting for organ transplants, yet Alberta does not have such a system. To the same minister: when will Alberta establish a robust donor registry system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this topic has been the subject of work by several members of this Assembly over a number of years, and it has been well studied. The time for action is now. We will create the intent-to-donate registry as quickly as we can. Obviously, we want it to be effective. We want it to provide an opportunity for people to make informed consent. And for those Albertans who do wish to express their informed consent, we want that information to be accessible in the times and the places when it is needed most.

Mr. Luan: Thank you. That's encouraging.

To the same minister: would the government of Alberta consider modifying the existing legislation so that other family members cannot override the original donor's wish when they wish for organ donation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question, and that is something that the provincial advisory group is going to have to study in detail. As you can appreciate. There are legal considerations. There are ethical considerations, there are health system considerations involved in establishing an intent-to-donate registry. We want to make sure that while we move as quickly as possible, we do take the time to study all of these implications very, very carefully to ensure that when our registry is launched, it will stand up to any challenge and scrutiny that it could possibly face.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we will commence with the first of six members' statements, beginning with Edmonton-Riverview.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

100 Years of Women in Policing

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nineteen twelve was a noteworthy year. The unsinkable Titanic sank, the first Calgary

Stampede was held, Edmonton and Strathcona amalgamated, and Annie May Jackson became the first woman police officer with the Edmonton Police Service. Annie was the first woman police officer not just in Alberta but in Canada as well. This was such big news that her hiring was mentioned in newspapers as far away as London, England. Like the Famous Five Annie blazed a trail that many other women have followed.

Mr. Speaker, long gone are the days of female jobs versus male jobs, pink versus blue. Policing is a modern career choice for modern women. Policing has embraced a more community-based, problem-solving approach, and our police services effectively reflect the interests of our community.

Women bring a perspective to policing that is required and highly valued. As a police officer I have certainly benefited from such influences of female members. When I was with the Edmonton Police Service, I certainly benefited from my training officer, numerous members of my squads over the years, and several partners.

I applaud and am proud of the work that all Alberta police officers, both men and women, accomplish each day, the efforts and services that these officers provide while engaging the community, solving problems, preventing and detecting crime and disorder as they advance public safety for all Albertans. And they do this with the highest level of professionalism.

One hundred years of women in policing started with Annie Jackson and continues to this day with women of the police services across Alberta at every level of rank and file. I am confident that the next 100 years will see women in policing continue to play a strong role in ensuring public safety in this province and shaping how we deliver policing today and in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-South East.

2:50 New School Construction Priorities

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise today as we always do in this Chamber on behalf of Albertans, the countless Albertans that have asked me about this issue. We have continually asked the Minister of Education to release a priority list of education projects so that we all know when and where schools are going to be built and renovated. The government continues to refuse. Yesterday and today the government seemed confused about what we are asking for and even offended that a member would ask about a school in his riding to know where it was in priority. So let's clarify what exactly we are asking for to alleviate the confusion.

First, open Excel on a laptop computer. Second, list every single request made by a board for a new school or a major school upgrade. Third, prioritize that list using objective and publicly disclosed criteria. That should result in putting the most urgently needed school first as number 1, and number 2 is second, et cetera, et cetera, until you get to the bottom of the list. Fourth, provide an estimated cost for those schools. And, fifth, post it online so everybody in the province can see it.

Once this list gets posted, then the real fun begins, Mr. Speaker. The government should announce how much money it plans to spend on new school projects for that year, apply that money to the project, and when completed, strike it off the list, and move the other ones up. It's not that difficult.

We might disagree about how much money to spend, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the government will say that we need to spend more as they are planning to borrow and go into debt to do so. The Wildrose will present a debt-free capital plan that's more modest but still takes care of the needs of Albertans.

It's long past time that we did the right thing, provided boards, parents, students, communities with the list so they know where they stand and when they are going to get the schools that they so desperately need. It's the right thing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

South Health Campus

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to thank the voters of Calgary-South East for giving me the opportunity today to rise and talk about the new South Health Campus, located in Calgary. This campus will redefine the way in which health care is delivered within the community. The facility, when completed, will be state of the art in its use of innovation and technology, education, and research. The South Health Campus will focus on wellness, inclusive care, community connections, and, most importantly, serving Albertans in a timely and high-quality manner. It will service a catchment population of over 2 million people – and this number includes residents of Calgary, the immediate surrounding region and rural area, and the population of southern Alberta – as a referral centre.

Every facet of the South Health Campus operations will be guided by four key pillars: patient- and family-centred care, collaborative practice, innovation, and wellness. Innovation and cutting-edge technology, while a major part of the health services delivery within the facility itself, have also played a large role in the design and construction of this campus, in particular making its operations environmentally sustainable.

The South Health Campus is undergoing a process of phased openings. At this point in time the family medicine teaching centre, diagnostic imaging facilities, and neurosciences labs are completed and open for operations.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's especially noteworthy that citizen participation played a key role in the design and planning process of this new facility. Nothing could be more important for health services delivery than input from those who receive and use those services. This involvement reflects that campus's orientation towards patients and families.

Over the course of 2013 the final phases of the campus will continue to become operational. I look forward to witnessing the community that has invested so much in the innovation and technologies and practices of this new facility begin to reap the numerous benefits of this new facility. I'm very excited that the South Health Campus is located in Calgary-South East, the constituency which I am proud to serve in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tribute to the Moustache

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the popularity of the moustache in society has been a long journey full of ups and downs. Over the course of history men with facial hair have been ascribed various attributes such as wisdom, sexual virility, masculinity, and even high status. Equally, the moustache has fallen on less illustrious times, and its popularity has dwindled as a result of being sported by some notorious dictators of the world.

That said, the moustache has proved itself to be resilient. Just when it's thought that the moustache has been resigned to the halls of history, a cultural revolution has swung the pendulum back and has ushered in a new day for moustaches.

During November each year, Mr. Speaker, Movember is responsible for the sprouting of moustaches on thousands of men's faces – and some women's faces, but mostly men's faces – in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world. With their mo's these men and women raise vital funds and awareness for men's health, specifically prostate cancer and mental health initiatives. During the month of November the people participating in Movember effectively become walking, talking billboards for their cause. I applaud all my mo bros in the House here today and across the country for sporting their moustachery.

Mr. Speaker, some interesting facts. Did you know that on average a man with a moustache touches it 760 times in a 24-hour period? And did you know that a one-month-old moustache is capable of holding approximately 30 millilitres of beer before leaking down the face of the owner? Most importantly, women – yes, women – are more attracted to men with moustaches.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I encourage you and all members of the Legislature to visit www.movember.com and give generously to this great cause. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Support for English Language Learners

Mr. Quadri : Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be making this statement in the language called Urdu in support of English language learners. Before I speak in Urdu, I would like to give a little background about Urdu. I know you must understand Urdu very well.

Urdu is spoken and understood by over 1 billion people in the world. Its root lies in Hindi and throughout the years has been nourished by Persian and Arabic. Urdu has all the sounds needed for an individual to pronounce words in English, French, and German. Urdu literature has been translated in Russian, German, and English.

Urdu is the national language of the country called Pakistan. Urdu and Hindi share the same Indo-Aryan base and are so similar in basic structure and grammar. One important thing: usually English is from left to right. Urdu is right to left. They write in the Persian way. Today the combined population of Urdu and the Standard Hindi speakers is the fourth largest in the world.

Now I will begin in Urdu. Please bear with me. I think you all have the statement in front of you, so you can see what I'm saying. [Remarks in Urdu] [Mr. Quadri's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We'll read the rest of it in translation.

Mr. Quadri: [Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of us in this Legislature agree that Alberta is a great place to live and learn. For many new Albertans the challenge they face when they come to Alberta is learning English, especially young people who come to Alberta with their families.

The increasing number of students who don't speak English is also a challenge for our teachers. That is why the government of Alberta has developed a new online resource to help teachers address the unique needs of students who are learning English as a new language. The supporting English language learners website, which can be found at learnalberta.ca by entering the keyword "ESL," includes tools to help teachers gauge each student's language proficiency and plan lessons accordingly. The site also includes a series of videos showing real-life English language learners in the classroom. These videos provide teachers with a model for how to assess the speaking proficiency of their English language learners.

This is a perfect example of our education system striving to make sure every student is successful even if English is not their first language. All Alberta students should have the opportunity to learn and be inspired, and that means having resources readily available to assist with learning. I encourage teachers, school administrators, and members of the public with an interest in the education of newcomers to check out the supporting English language learners website.

Thank you. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Out-of-province Health Services

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Russell Coyne, a constituent of mine, suffered with 30 per cent compression in his spinal cord with loss of function and sensation in his left arm. Mr. Coyne was advised that despite being placed as urgent, it would still be a two-year wait time. The Alberta orthopaedic specialist advised him that if it was not taken care of soon, he would be teetering on full paralysis, and this needed to be addressed urgently.

Mr. Speaker, my constituent took the advice of the specialist and had the surgery completed in Vancouver, False Creek, and I'm proud to say that he's making good progress on the road to recovery. My constituent paid $27,000 for this surgery and through the out-of-province health and wellness issues management was only reimbursed a mere $1,500. This is the second constituent of mine that has faced this issue.

Health care is something that concerns all Albertans, and all citizens deserve treatment within an appropriate time frame. If the government is not able to provide these services, then we must have means through out-of-province and out-of-country services to ensure Albertans are not being paralyzed while waiting for their surgery.

Mr. Speaker, this is about the universality of health care, this is about Albertans being able to receive care when they need it, and moreover this is about having a government who actually wants to do something about it.

3:00

The Minister of Health has had this file on his desk since June 27, well over four months. Mr. Speaker, I argue that this response time is no more appropriate than the time frame for surgery in Alberta. I would like to know when this hard-working Albertan can expect an answer on the fair remuneration he deserves. I will be tabling the untimely correspondence between myself and the hon. minister. Hopefully, this will serve as a reminder to follow up on his commitment as the Minister of Health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that it's 3 o'clock, I'd ask for unanimous consent of the House to complete the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has risen pursuant to our own standing orders requesting unanimous consent to proceed until we complete the Routine since it is now 3 o'clock. I'll ask one question: does anyone object to giving unanimous consent for that purpose?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Minister of Health, you have two tablings?

Mr. Horne: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do. Thank you. My first tabling is the requisite number of copies of the Alberta College of Social Workers 2011 annual report. The College of Social Workers is both a designated regulatory body for the practice of social work in Alberta and the professional association representing the interests of social workers within our province. Currently over 6,000 people are members of the college. Members are usually individuals with a diploma or a degree in social work. This year the Alberta College of Social Workers is celebrating its 50th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling today is the 2011 annual report of the Alberta College of Optometrists. The College of Optometrists is the regulatory and licensing body for the profession of optometry in our province. The college is also responsible for the establishment, maintenance, and enforcement of standards of practice, competency skills, and a code of ethics to ensure the optometrists practise their profession in the best interests of the public.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to table an article published by the founding member of the Alberta Grandparents Association, who resides in my constituency. The report's name is A Special Relationship: Grandparents and Grandchildren.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter, and I have the requisite number of copies. It's a letter from Bill Smith, the past president of the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta. He's writing a letter to the presidents, the CFOs, and the MLAs indicating that Elections Alberta has decided to formally investigate 10 constituency associations as it relates to prohibited donations.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter that I received from the Health Services Preferential Access Inquiry. Last week the Premier, the Health minister, and the Deputy Premier all made statements of concern about me writing a letter to the inquiry. I'm happy to inform them and you, Mr. Speaker, that the inquiry thanked me for my letter, informed me that it was consistent with their rules, and assured me that they would follow up on the information provided to them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table the request for proposals that I mentioned to the Minister of Health earlier in regard to the evaluation framework for primary health care. I'd like the minister to note that this is an Alberta government document, and he should be paying attention to it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, I have the required number of copies of the letters that I made reference to in my member's statement.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the last item here we're going to deal with is the points of order. I have Airdrie with a point of order at 2:15 this afternoon. Did you wish to proceed with it? It's been clarified? Thank you very much.

Statements by the Speaker

Preambles to Supplementary Questions Members' Statements

The Speaker: While I have the floor, very briefly, hon. members, tomorrow I'm going to more strictly enforce the no preambles rule that we have. I have indicated to you before that the current rule or guideline that we're following says that supplementaries should not be preceded by any preambles. Tomorrow I want to see if we can get through with no preambles.

The primary reason for it is twofold. One, it cuts down on the amount of noise and flak that arises when people get a little carried away with some of the preambles. It applies to both sides of the House, I should say. Secondly, it precludes members who are further down the list from getting up to ask their question at all because inevitably it creates some disorder, and the Speaker has to intervene, and that consumes valuable time. I do not like that practice, so I'm going to try and enforce more strictly tomorrow no preambles to your supplementary questions. Please pass that on to any other colleagues who are interested to know.

Secondly, members' statements. I'm reflecting on what happened on Monday, when members may have used that occasion for members' statements to deride, defame – in other words, try to destroy – the character of a member of this House or perhaps someone outside the House. Let's be reminded that tomorrow for any members' statements that dip into this area of personal attacks on another member or for a member of the general public who is not here and able to defend himself or herself, I will intervene. It's been done before, and I am going to do it again if necessary. It will be my first time having done that if I do it at all.

The last little note is just a request. Please, if you're speaking at any point, delivering an answer or giving a question or participating in the debate, frequently you will have notes. Please do not hold them between yourself and the microphone because it does not pick up well on audio. While that might be at times desirable for some, generally speaking it is not. Thank you for that.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Colleagues, I will call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 4
Public Interest Disclosure
(Whistleblower Protection) Act

The Deputy Chair: Under consideration is amendment A1. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, thank you very much for allowing me to start off the speaking today on Bill 4 as you refer to amendment A1. I think this is going to be a fairly long boxing match. I'm not sure how long boxing matches go, but I can tell you that this is our first amendment of many. We have been very, very fortunate on this side of the House to get some unbelievable help in regard to what is good about this bill and what's not so good. I can tell you that the not-so-good outweighs the good by far. It has been an interesting conversation that we have had back and forth with the experts in whistle-blower legislation.

Amendment A1, which is our first amendment of many as I explained today, talks about section 31. What it talks about is:

- (1) The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.

It goes on to:

- (2) The Commissioner may impose any terms and conditions the Commissioner considers appropriate on any exemptions provided for under subsection (1).

Then the third one is:

- (3) The Commissioner must provide reasons for giving an exemption under this section and must ensure the exemption, including any terms or conditions imposed, and the reasons for giving the exemption are made publicly available.

What we are proposing in our amendment is to delete section 31 from this act totally for various reasons, obviously. What we have proposed on page 21 of the act, for all of those who are watching or have access to this, is the deletion of section 31. I guess that for us it's that the commissioner will be given the ability to give anyone or any group exemption status from this act. My only comment for that is that it's beyond our belief that anyone or anybody should be exempting anybody from whistle-blowing protection. It's just one of those shake-your-head minutes.

I spoke on Bill 2 about this bill. I found it very interesting that the bill is called the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act when, in fact, the only one that is protected in this bill is the government. You know, I wonder how you have the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation and the Service Alberta minister speak in a press conference about the groundbreaking legislation that they're introducing in this Assembly.

My question to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: who did they talk to about this particular section? I can tell you that the sources and the people who are helping us are from all over North America. They're all quite stunned about the fact that a government would even consider putting this particular section in a whistle-blower act. I think what would be important for the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation – I know he's here – would be his willingness to stand up and explain to Albertans whom they spoke to in regard to this particular section, because if he can do that, I'm quite frankly willing to listen. I'm going to be asking, on probably what I consider a very long day and a very long night, where they got some of this information.

I can tell you, Madam Chair, that every whistle-blower legislation across this country, including the federal legislation, including legislation in the United States of America, including legislation in Australia, does not have that section. Somewhere or somehow this particular minister has gotten his advice, which I think government should do. They, you know, talk to the stakeholders, and they say: we're bringing this innovative, groundbreaking piece of legislation to the Assembly because we want to protect whistle-blowers in this province. He needs to explain where section 31 came in and what brought him to bring this particular section into the legislation.

The commissioner under Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, has a lot of power. It's interesting to me that this particular commissioner has also got the power to say, "Hmm, maybe; hmm, maybe not" or "Yes, maybe; yes, maybe not." This exemption goes to the heart of what's happened when we have a conflict of interest piece of legislation and the commissioner or the person at the head decides to make an exemption under that particular piece of legislation when it clearly says: one-year cooling off for a minister. We saw what happened under that with a former member who was given an exemption and has now set up his office in southern Alberta. He didn't even know what job he was doing. It's the power that this particular commissioner has.

Madam Chair, let's go to you, a former minister of seniors if I recall. You have an employee in the seniors ministry, and they have all of these checks and balances that they have to go through for the legislation. They have to go to the manager. You and I both know that for any public servant that's working very hard on behalf of the minister, the last place they're going to go is to the manager, especially if they know there are some wrongdoings going on in the office. This same commissioner can all of a sudden say: hmm. In accordance with the regulations that we have not seen, he can exempt any person, class of person, public entity, information, record, or thing from the applications of all or any portion of the act or the regulations.

For us as the Wildrose, as I explained to the members that are currently sitting in the Legislature, it's like a boxing match, and we're going to go round after round after round. I know members of the opposition also have several amendments that they're going to bring forward. So I put the question on the table, and I think it's important for the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, who I know is sitting there and listening. What brought them to bring this into the act? I was at that particular press conference where they talked about the groundbreaking piece of legislation. I haven't got all of the words because we were at that particular time trying to go through the legislation quite quickly as to what's important to be contained in legislation.

I will tell you, though, Madam Chair, that people need to understand the definition of what a whistle-blower is to understand why our proposing to have section 31 struck right out of act is important. Now, I don't know if you know that Ralph Nader – everybody knows who Ralph Nader is – in 1972 defined whistle-blower legislation, which is very important. You need to understand this isn't new. Whistle-blower legislation isn't new. It's been around. He defined it as an act of a man or a woman who, believing that the public interest overrides the interest . . .

And this is important.

... of the organization he serves, [publicly] blows the whistle that the organization is involved in corrupt, illegal, fraudulent or harmful activity.

That is the definition of a whistle-blower, which, interestingly enough, I'm having trouble finding. Maybe the minister can point out to me where they've defined what a whistle-blower is other than alluding to certain sections in the act. There is never any definition.

I have to say that this is first year of legislation that we're seeing from the government where I haven't seen the whereases. We haven't had the ability to go through the whereases in any of the new legislation, quite frankly, that the government has put forward in the spring or in this particular session.

So, as I explained, our amendment is deleting section 31 from this act. This section, obviously, allows the commissioner, as I explained, to exempt any one or any group – I lost my train of thought; sorry – from the whistle-blower protection act. By deleting this section, cabinet couldn't exempt certain people or groups at a later date by regulations.

Madam Chair, I am really quite interested to sit down because the last thing we want to be accused of is filibustering. I expect it's going to be a long night, but you know what, Madam Chair? I won't use up my time. That time can be used up by the government members to stand up, talk about why they feel it was important to put this particular section 31 in.

There are several cabinet ministers here, including the minister responsible. The minister of advanced ed is sitting there nodding away, so I know he's excited to get up and speak about this. I, again, am looking forward to hearing not only from the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education but the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation. In regard to this particular section maybe the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin would like to answer why this section is in the act, who suggested that you put it in the act, and who you consulted that said that this was a good section to put in the act.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll sit down, and I look forward to hearing from the minister, to be honest with you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I would remind hon. members that it is not appropriate to refer to the attendance of members in the House while we are in the House. Just a reminder.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've been really looking forward to debating this bill in the House. Of course, this is kind of the first full session of the Legislature that we've had since 17 of us in our caucus were elected, so this is kind of one of the major pieces of legislation that the government has brought forward that we want to take a look at and go through carefully along with Bill 2 and Bill 7. So we're really excited to be here and to talk about these amendments. Our caucus has put together roughly 20 amendments. I believe it's 21. Or is it 20?

Mrs. Forsyth: Twenty-one.

Mr. Anderson: Twenty-one amendments. We're looking forward to moving through these at a relatively steady pace after they're debated fully.

I think it's important to perhaps let members on the other side understand that what we do in this Legislature is, frankly, very rare in Canada. In fact, it's almost unheard of, Madam Chair. We sit for a very short period of time, and to pass a bill as important and as substantive as this in a one- or two-day period is, frankly, unheard of. Usually it takes much longer. Usually there are weeks of debate or certainly a week of debate on things like this if you went to the House of Commons or other provincial Legislatures in the major provinces. We as opposition MLAs in Alberta, where democracy is conducted a little bit differently than in other areas of the country, really have to be on our toes because the government, obviously, doesn't fool around when it comes to getting its legislation through as quickly as humanly possible.

That said, we're like the Eveready bunnies over here. We're ready to go all the time. We're going to go through this and are going to attempt to get it through in a very, very more-than-reasonable time period. I hope that by the end of tomorrow we can have fully vetted this bill. But, of course, that's not just our call. It's the government's call. The other two opposition parties, of course, might have something to do with it.

For our part we're willing to do that over the next two afternoons and two evenings, go through all 21 of our amendments and over a dozen amendments that the other two opposition parties have and hopefully put together a good piece of legislation going forward. I hope that the government will be open to some of these amendments, hopefully all of the amendments but certainly some of them. Some of them are so reasonable, it's painful. To not pass them would hurt us, physically hurt us in our hearts not to pass some of these, so we hope that the government will do that.

It is not our intent at all – and we have no intention whatsoever – to filibuster this bill, but we would ask the government's co-operation to make sure that we're not here till 4 or 5 in the morning every day and that we get out at a reasonable time, debating these amendments so we can have things in this bill complete, hopefully, by the end of tomorrow evening. That, I think, would be a benefit to all Albertans, but that does mean a ton of debate, 10 to 15 hours, possibly more, and lots of time to go over this. That's a subjective assessment. Lots of time would probably be closer to double or triple that, but we're in Alberta, so we'll go fast.

The first amendment we're dealing with here – and such good work has been done on this by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and of course the amendment is from the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka – talks about section 31 being struck out. Of course, section 31 is talking about:

- (1) The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.
- (2) The Commissioner may impose any terms and conditions the Commissioner considers appropriate on any exemption provided for under subsection (1).
- (3) The Commissioner must provide reasons for giving an exemption under this section and must ensure the exemption, including any terms or conditions imposed, and the reasons for giving the exemption are made publicly available.

Then, also, it would amend section 36 of the bill by striking out clause (1) which is simply:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

- (1) respecting the exemption of any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act.

This right here is one of those wonderful things that the governing party has become very adept at putting into almost every bill that they pass, which is an exemption in certain completely unprescribed – for just a completely random reason, they may exempt a party from an act. We saw this very clearly earlier on this year, before the session started, when the former minister of agriculture and Member for Livingstone-Macleod was given a job without any kind of public tender at all by the government's own admission. It was just that they felt he was the right guy for the job, and they gave him the job. The only problem was that in the conflicts of interest legislation it specifically states that former ministers may not be hired back into their ministry within a six-month period after they leave office.

It's called the cooling-off period. They do that for obvious reasons. There's a conflict of interest because, obviously, a minister, when they leave office, has a lot of friends, has a lot of associates that are good friends in office and in the ministry they were just overseeing, which is fine. Nothing wrong with that. It's good. Of course, the people doing the hiring may not be very objective when it comes to that person.

Now, a six-month cooling-off period, frankly, is a bit of a joke. Six months is not even close to enough time for a cooling-off period. It should be at least a year, probably a term, certainly a couple of years. But even though we have a very poor time period for the cooling-off period in that conflicts legislation, the government still hired this individual before the cooling-off period had ended.

3:30

How did that happen, one would say? How did they get around that? Well, even though it says strictly in the conflicts legislation specifically about that exact purpose – there are clauses in there, verbatim, to keep that exact thing from happening – the reason the government got around it is because of a clause just like the one we read here, virtually exactly like the one we read here. In that case the Ethics Commissioner, if he feels that it's appropriate, that there's no conflict, et cetera, can exempt the rule and allow for the hiring to occur within the cooling-off period.

Of course, this is very offensive to Albertans. Everybody knows it's wrong. It is wrong. It's not even a matter . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking on amendment A1? We are on amendment A1. This is connected?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. This is part of the debate, Madam Chair. This is a great thing.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair. I like looking at you. Through the chair. [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: Sorry? I don't even have a mustache? I don't even know what that means.

I'm very excited that this chair is keeping me focused. I like having focus. My parents always said that if we could just focus his energies – focus his energies – he'd be unstoppable. You know, that's why it's important that you focus my energy. If I'm all over the place, it's a mess.

Mr. Hancock: Still a work-in-progress.

Mr. Anderson: That's right, still a work-in-progress. The Government House Leader always helps me with that as well. It's like I have, you know, extra parents in this Chamber, Madam Chair. It's heartwarming. It's just like home. It's just like home.

That's why it's so important, Madam Chair, with regard to this clause. An exactly similar clause, virtually the same clause, exists in that conflicts-of-interest legislation and has allowed for the Ethics Commissioner in that case to exempt individuals from that particular clause, which is why it's so critical that we do not make the same mistake here.

That is why with regard to section 31 we need to make sure that we do not give the commissioner the power to exempt people or exempt portions of this act, to "exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application." That's very important. What if – Madam Chair, let's just use our imaginations. Let's use our imaginations and think that possibly maybe one day somebody in the position of commissioner might – I know this is hard for people. Brace yourselves. I know that this is a huge stretch to something that might happen, but there could be someone with ties to the governing party that becomes a commissioner under this act. I know that's hard to believe, but it could happen. If that happens . . . [interjection] There are lots of good folks with ties to the governing party. No doubt about that. I'm not saying that there aren't.

Let's say that an individual with ties to the governing party becomes the commissioner in charge of this act and that with one of his friends – you know, one of the ministers who is his friend – all of a sudden something happens, and there's a whistle-blower that comes forward and wants to blow the whistle on one of his friends on something that might have happened in that friend's ministry. Well, then all of a sudden this commissioner is in a tough bind. He's in a tough bind because he's got to make a choice. Is he going to choose between his friend in government . . .

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Or she.

Mr. Anderson: He or she. Absolutely. Once again, focusing me. That's good. That's right. Absolutely.

Is he or she going to pick between protecting the minister or protecting the whistle-blower? I don't think it's fair, frankly, for the commissioner to be put in that position. He or she should not have to be put in that position. It's truly not something we should do. Whereas if we take this out, then the legislation is clear, and then that individual, even if he or she has ties to the governing party and members of the governing party or members in the government or deputy ministers in the government or – who knows? Maybe it's no relation to the governing party at all. Maybe it's just friends within government. We all have friends within government that work for different public bodies and so forth. It could be anything, but because there's this exemption there, there's that temptation. Essentially, it opens this act up to be meaningless. Many people would say that the current conflicts-of-interest legislation is in a lot of ways, specifically with regard to the issue we talked about earlier with regard to the cooling-off period, essentially useless legislation. It has no force and effect, essentially, because it can be circumvented by a clause just like this.

I think that this is a very good amendment. I think that in order to make this the strongest possible piece of legislation, we absolutely must get rid of this kind of get-out-of-jail-free card – not a get-out-of-jail-free card but this throw-the-act-to-the-wind-and-not-enforce-it-if-it-makes-us-too-uncomfortable clause. That would make it a much stronger bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, just to clarify the record, there is a typo on your notice of amendment, and it has been corrected in the official document. If you would like to correct it so as not to refer to it again, we have changed the “Mrs.” to “Mr.”

With that, we’ll continue debate on amendment A1. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. It’s a pleasure to be here today and participate in this act of democracy where we’re talking about the important things that we’ve been elected to do to represent all people of Alberta, not just our own constituencies but them first, of course, by design. Nevertheless, this bill affects us all, and it’s a good bill. I was excited to see the bill and pleased that it was being introduced, and I retain in spite of its shortcomings high hopes that because we are people of integrity and have been elected because of this to do a good job for the people of Alberta, we will give serious consideration to this very essential amendment.

I suggest, subject to debate, that this amendment speaks to the very heart of why whistle-blower legislation needs to exist and that this amendment allows the bill to be viewed with credibility and will allow the bill to do, in fact, what its stated purpose is, which is to encourage people who are aware of misdeeds, inappropriate acts, misappropriations, unfairness in the commission of their duties to be brought to the attention of a commissioner, who, hopefully, has been selected in an objective, arm’s-length way and can be not only just perceived as neutral and objective but, in fact, actually is and that the laws are in place to ensure that he behaves in that way.

Now, I suggest and I admit that the governing party has been in power for 41 years because it’s been perceived to have been doing a very good job, and I think that most of us on this side agree with that up to a point. It’s when that point of deviation occurred, which I think that we can see in the minds of some Albertans – perhaps 35 per cent of voters think that that has happened. You’ve been able, hon. members of the government, to pretty much do what you’ve wanted to do. Now, we know that democracy is only a fit form of government for a moral society, and as we drift from our moral anchors, it becomes more and more necessary that our laws become more and more specific.

That’s what we have here now. For 41 years you’ve pretty much been able to do what you wanted to do. You’ve had the majority. You’ve had on very rare occasions a vocal, articulate opposition, but you do now. I think it’s a good thing that we’re here. We’re glad to be here. We’re glad to play the role that we play, which is to help you stay on point, to help you, as the chairwoman was doing with the hon. Member for Airdrie, to keep focused and on point.

Where am I headed with this? You’ve been able to do what you want to do, but it isn’t about perpetuating that ability to do what you want to do. It’s about seeing that you do what you ought to do. That’s what this amendment is all about, Madam Chair. It’s about seeing that the government does what it ought to do. If I was to ask every member of the House what kinds of calls they mostly get from their constituents, it has something to do with some aspect of the government or some government agency perhaps not executing its mandate properly. Well, if your situation is that different from mine – my most common call has to do with workers’ compensation, which is some aspect of being an arm of the government, I believe.

Laws are required because not everybody is honourable. Now, if I were to assume that everyone in this room always dealt honourably and that everyone out in society and in all of the agencies of the government always dealt honourably and honestly, fairly and equitably, then we wouldn’t need laws, would we? What would we need laws for if everybody was honest and honourable?

Mr. Denis: Lawyers.

Mr. Bikman: Well, I know why lawyers need laws. I know that one lawyer in a small town starves to death, but the minute a second one moves in, they both make money. I know I’m stating the obvious. Nevertheless, the occasion seemed appropriate.

Mr. Hancock: When you haven’t got anything else to say, pander to the crowds by mocking lawyers.

Mr. Bikman: I couldn’t hear you. I’m sorry. Being partly hard of hearing is the secret to a happy marriage and managing 13 kids.

Back to the point, we need laws and rules, and they need to be clear and transparent. The person who is charged with this incredible responsibility of being the commissioner needs to be somebody who is allowed to do his job. He or she can’t be subject to influence by outside bodies, nor can he or she be allowed to exercise discretion about which people should be exempt from the rules of law. That simply is not just. That’s not honourable. I don’t know how this portion got into the act. I can’t conceive of anyone thinking that whistle-blower legislation could be perceived as effective, could be perceived as fair and transparent when you allow one person the power to decide whether or not the act applies to this specific situation.

Now, I can understand that there need to be exemptions for vexatious or other types of complaints. Of course that needs to exist. The discretion for those kinds of situations can be narrowly focused and written instead of giving this blanket, as the Member for Airdrie said, get-out-of-jail-free card or get-out-of-avoidance-for-the-consequences-of-your-actions-and-statements charge. We can’t allow that. This can’t go on. This can’t be included. If all of us really are intent on seeing that this whistle-blower legislation is, in fact, the best legislation in Canada – why not in the world? – then it can’t have a clause like this.

It will never ever be perceived or taken seriously if somebody has the ability to be exempted merely because of the party they belong to or the way they cut their hair or the fact that they don’t have any hair or because of the jokes they tell or the jokes they don’t tell or whatever else the situation might be. Whatever the circumstances might be, we cannot have it be at the whim of somebody who just simply decides: “Well, you know, they’re pretty good guys. I don’t think they meant it. I don’t want to embarrass them. I’ve known them for years. I know their family. It would really be hard on them if they got brought up on these charges, so I’m just going to make them exempt.” If it isn’t transparent and if this kind of a law exists, how are you going to know that that’s not happening? How are we going to hold somebody accountable if they’ve got this kind of opportunity . . . [interjection] Really? Pardon?

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: Gary, get the minister to get up and speak to it.

Mr. Bikman: Well, I’d be pleased to hear from him, and I’m sure we all would. He is a very intelligent fellow and, certainly, somebody we all admire, and he always has something to contribute. If he wishes to address or answer my points, I’d be pleased to hear them.

In the meantime, while I still have the floor, I think we can’t overemphasize enough that clause 31, the exemption clause, undermines the whole purpose of the legislation. That’s why we’re introducing it first. Quite frankly, if this passes, if this is allowed to remain in the bill, you’ve already neutered it. You’ve already rendered it impotent to do the job it's intended to do. You're really asking for an incredible leap of faith and an incredible amount of trust, which, I submit, is not the point of the bill. If that trust existed, we wouldn't need the bill in the first place.

All people aren't honourable. We all often act in our own self-interest, and we can always justify it. If there's one thing I've learned from raising 13 kids and running a business for 30 years, it's that everybody acts rationally from their own point of view. I'm sure that the government has a point of view in allowing this clause to be here, but I can't understand it. Now, I'm not the smartest guy in the world, but I don't think I'm the dumbest either. I'm certainly literate. I can read, I can study, and I can seek outside information to try and see what other whistle-blower legislation has a clause like this. I haven't found one. Maybe you all have, but I haven't. If you have, how is it working? I suspect it ain't.

That's the reason why I think it's important that you really are open. I'm not accusing anybody of intentionally trying to subvert the purpose of the bill. I'm prepared to accept that you're trying to do the right thing. You brought it forward, and I don't think you brought it forward as some sort of sleight of hand, trying to fool people into thinking that now they're really protected. I know you take pride, as I would, too, in being able to say that something is the best or this is the most robust or this raises the bar to the highest possible level. I want it to be so. That's why I rise to speak to it. I want this to be the best whistle-blower legislation. But saying that it is is not the same as making sure that it is. I submit to you that this clause cannot stay if we want this legislation to be taken seriously.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to it, and I'll yield the floor to someone else who might be prepared. Otherwise, I'll keep talking.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak again to this amendment, which I believe I have spoken to once, to have an opportunity to give a bit more consideration to it and to outline again why it is a good amendment and, indeed, is one of the amendments that we had initially considered putting forward. A lot of people have talked about the problems that exist with credibility if you allow the commissioner unfettered access or unfettered authority to exclude entities from coverage of the act as well as to exclude types of information from protection under the act should that be something that is disclosed through the process.

But I haven't heard as much discussion about section 36, which is also something that this amendment is geared towards amending in that it asks the government to consider amending that section which would allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations "respecting the exemption of any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act." Basically, not only are we giving the commissioner carte blanche to pick and choose pieces of the act that apply and don't apply and all that kind of stuff, but we're actually also giving cabinet carte blanche to turn around and pick and choose pieces of the act that apply today, may not apply tomorrow, who it applies to, not only who it applies to, Madam Chair, but also the types of information that it applies to.

Imagine this kind of scenario. Imagine you're in a situation where we get back to a point where people are really concerned about the issue of climate change in Alberta. Let's say for discussion's sake that we actually manage to convince the Official Opposition that it's a real issue and the public starts pushing us on this issue and we get back to the level of conversation that was going on in about 2006 or 2007 around that issue. Perhaps it was the early 2000s that I'm bringing to mind right now. But imagine that's the case, and imagine that you have a public health official who works for, let's say, AHS, and they decide to exercise their rights under this legislation to go forward and publicly disclose their concerns around issues that relate to climate change and this government's actions with respect to climate change.

Well, as you may recall, that was actually sort of the scenario that impacted the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Indeed, there being no whistle-blower legislation, he was fired from his job by a public entity as a result of his decision to speak out on a matter that was of grave public interest in his view.

Now, the interesting thing is that what this bill allows the government to do is to simply with the wave of a pen go behind closed doors, as cabinet does, and exempt public officials engaged in the provision of public health from the application of section 3(1)(b)(ii), "a substantial and specific danger to the environment." That particular type of information can be exempted from the list of wrongdoings that a person is otherwise protected from should they report it. We can decide: "Well, you know what? There's a lot of public interest in this whole issue of protecting the environment right now. People are more and more interested in holding us accountable, and society has evolved to a point where they actually make their voting decisions on the basis of whether or not our government is actually conducting itself in a way to protect the environment, such that we would not ever want to see the government engage in anything that would result in a substantial and specific danger to the environment."

As a result of that, you know, there are a lot of people that are suddenly thinking: "Well, you know what? We need to avail ourselves of the so-called protections under this legislation, and we need to go public with it." As a result of section 36, all that has to happen is that the government can go behind closed doors and pass a regulation that says: "Yeah, you know, 3(1)(b)(ii) is a little politically awkward right now. I'd rather not have people disclosing about substantial and specific dangers to the environment. So you know what? We're just going to temporarily suspend the operation of that section of the act."

Interestingly, unlike under section 31, where at least the commissioner is compelled to report that he has exempted that section of the act and provide some rationale for the exemption from that piece of legislation, section 36(1) has no corresponding obligation on cabinet. Cabinet can pick and choose and apply and unapply and use and not use at will, Madam Chair, with no obligation to ever explain to people. I find it very interesting that section 36(1) does not require the cabinet to provide any explanation, but section 31 does require the commissioner to provide an explanation for why we would exempt either a body from the coverage of the act or the nature of their wrongdoing or the nature of the information that would be disclosed or whatever the case may be.

So we don't require cabinet to explain itself, but we do in the act require the commissioner to explain themselves. Now, I'm all for having the commissioner explain themselves, although the better solution, as outlined in this amendment, is to simply not have the commissioner in the position where they're explaining themselves. Rather, they simply apply the act, and they're not constantly compelled to consider whether they should be exempting people from the act or exempting bodies from the act or all that kind of stuff. That, of course, creates a huge, huge source of controversy for the commissioner.

At least in that case the commissioner is compelled to explain to Albertans why that piece is exempted. Madam Chair, why would we not expect the cabinet to do the same? Why is the cabinet giving itself the authority? Why? Why? Please, tell me why cabinet is giving itself the authority to exempt any and all elements of government from coverage of this act at a whim. Well, I suppose, I mean, you know, the previous speaker talked about anticipating and relying on and looking forward to the goodwill of the cabinet at all times, knowing that they would only ever do anything in the public interest. Let's just hope that everyone operates that way.

Madam Chair, we've had, unfortunately, a number of examples under this 41-year-old government. I know they like to say: "Well, you know, the election was just eight months ago. It's a brand new group of people. Our record is clean. It's all fresh. Anything before April 23, 2012, we are no longer responsible for, nor should we be held accountable for it." You know, that's an interesting argument in Disneyland, I suppose, but I think that most Albertans do know that when you've got a 41-year-old government, you know, the chickens do come home to roost, and that's an appropriate place for them to end up. Regardless, the point is that we have a history of the government periodically resisting full disclosure of pieces of information which might serve to embarrass them.

I mean, you know, one of the biggest examples of that, Madam Chair, in my first term in office here was when we discovered that emergency room physicians had provided this government with exceptionally sensitive and damning and important information about the state of our emergency rooms. Government went to great lengths to keep that information secret for at least two and a half years and failed to disclose it and, in fact, ran an election with that letter in the hand of the Premier who was running, yet that certainly was not disclosed in the 2008 election, nor was it disclosed afterwards until the cracks started to show within the caucus itself. The point is that that is exactly the kind of information that Albertans should hear about. That's exactly the kind of information that people in the public health system should feel they are able to disclose without fear of repercussion.

Now, the degree to which this act ever actually allows that information to see the light of day is a whole other set of problems with this act and is a whole other set of reasons for why it probably needs to be rejected in the whole. Nonetheless, if you assume for the moment that it's possible to actually allow this act to do the job that the government claims it will do, which is allow for transparency as opposed to a 25-year-long labyrinth of a process that keeps everything tightly controlled behind closed doors, if you assume that it's actually going to allow for transparency, then the fact of the matter is that that information should come forward, and the people who have that information should be protected.

What section 36(l) would allow is for cabinet to go behind closed doors and go: "Man, you know, that letter from the ER physicians is a little dicey, a little sensitive. We could take a bit of a hit in the media on this one, just a teeny bit. So you know what? Let's exempt that kind of information from the application of the act. Let's just exempt it. We can do that under section 36(l), and we don't have to give any reasons for why we've done it," although I'm sure they'll talk about the privacy of the patients involved because that's the standard rationale for not disclosing stuff, even though it's usually the patients that are out there that are the first ones to talk about the problems.

Anyway, Madam Chair, 36(l) is an absolutely outrageous provision in this legislation. It begins the process of ensuring that Albertans question what it is this government is actually trying to achieve. If it gives itself a backdoor escape clause through which they have no legislative obligation to explain to Albertans and if they write that in before the process even starts, one can be forgiven for considering the very distant possibility that perhaps this legislation is more about public relations than it is about actually ensuring transparency because there's always that escape clause which the government is so keen on keeping in the legislation.

Were the government really interested in just focusing on that transparency, then I would suggest that they would agree with this amendment, and they would eliminate 36(l), and they would also eliminate I believe it's 31 so that we know they can't change the rules of the game three-quarters of the way through that particular match. That would start the very long, slow, arduous process of restoring some semblance of trust in this government when it comes to the issue of accountability and transparency.

I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment for these reasons. If we carry on without fixing this fundamental flaw for them to run away from the act the minute it gets inconvenient, then I think that, quite frankly, all subsequent conversations about the so-called value of the act become suspect.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to say to everybody here that it's such an honour for a first-timer like me to stand and speak to you in this situation. It's democracy at its root. It's exciting for somebody like myself, and I appreciate the fact that you're giving me the opportunity to speak to you. I hope that you'll take into consideration what I say, and then I hope there's some conversation back and forth because I'm learning from you, and I hope that you can learn from me.

I want to thank the Associate Minister of A, T and T, just to keep it short, for putting this bill forward. A lot of the heavy work has been done, and we realize that. But also we understand that as opposition our role is to look through these bills with our own eyes and with the judgment of experts that we can bring onside and to offer amendments which we think strengthen the bill, make the bill better, build upon what you guys have presented to us. At the end of the day that's all we're trying to do, to make something that has been presented the best that it can be.

I don't think that we want to be happy with one of the best bills or one of the best set of rules and regulations. I think we have the opportunity to actually lead the way, make other places look to us as the point of reference for best in class. I think there's an opportunity for that, and I hope that the fine minister doesn't take offence to the number of amendments that are coming across. It's not the intent to offend; it's the intent to improve, and I hope that's the way it's perceived on that side. That's how I want to present this.

Our party was very excited to see this bill. I think that, again, being new to the Legislature, this is something that I would have thought would have been in place, and I'm fairly surprised that it isn't already actually in law. Alberta and Albertans need this. We need this protection so that when there is wrongdoing, individuals can feel that they have the safety and they have the support behind them to actually go to somebody to report an indiscretion, to feel that their lives and their livelihoods and their reputations are not going to be smirched or are not going to be ruined or that they're going to lose their jobs. I think that's very important. Of course, people coming forward have to have a grounded reason for coming forward, and I think, hopefully, the bill balances that out.

On this side of the House, you know, we're trying to represent about 56 per cent of the voting population. Again, I think that our amendments do have some validity. There's no way that we think that we're going to get all of our amendments through, but I do think that a lot of the amendments do deserve to be read and to be considered. Hopefully, the government members will have a look at them and consider implementing a few of these amendments. It would greatly increase the participation of all voting members in Alberta.

As we've stated before, between the opposition parties there seem to be about 30-plus amendments, so it does present a little bit of observation that there is some tweaking to be done. There are some opportunities for improvements and to close some loopholes. I think that's probably the biggest thing that we want to do is to close loopholes, to make legislation that works and take it out of the hands of the regulators. Once it leaves here, regulations can be made by bureaucrats, and it's out of our hands at that point.

I am standing to support this amendment to the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. The amendment is A1. We're talking about section 31. Again, the word "exemption," I think, just gives me a whole lot of bad feelings when we're talking about whistle-blower protection. It's just a simple clause. This whole part of the bill gives me reason for concern. I say that with all due respect. Exempting, you know, in this bill just creates a really, really bad impression, in my opinion.

31(1) The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, . . .

which, again, without knowing what the regulations are going to be at the end – you know, what are they? How is that going to affect individuals through the exemption process? I think that's something that we have to consider.

. . . exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing . . .

Again, there's that word "thing" here, which is very ambiguous.

. . . from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.

We have to ask ourselves: what is the purpose of the exemption? You know, why would we want to exempt any one of those individuals in this bill? I mean, this is what's creating the opportunity for some great things in Alberta, for indiscretions to be reported, for individuals to come forward. Once you talk about exemptions, you're already scaring individuals from coming forward. I think there's a problem there.

(2) The Commissioner may impose any terms and conditions the Commissioner considers appropriate on any exemption provided for under subsection (1).

Again, why? We're referring to subsection (1). I think it's not really encouraging anybody to come forward because, oh, guess what? Somebody could be given an exemption. If that's the case, why would you risk it? That is a real serious question.

(3) The Commissioner must provide reasons for giving an exemption under this section and must ensure the exemption, including any terms or conditions imposed, and the reasons for giving the exemption are made publicly available.

When I read this, to me this creates subjectivity instead of objectivity. You're talking about, you know, creating a whole set of rules based upon somebody's subjectivity. I think that's a concern. What grounds or precedence is used to create the reasons? Again, what grounds or rules are used to create the exemption? What grounds or rules are used to create the terms and conditions imposed? I mean, there are a whole lot of issues at stake. Having this clause in here just creates a myriad of questions.

I think it's just best that this whole section be taken out. It would support the belief and the reasoning for creating this bill. I don't know. I think it would be so much better. It would strengthen it, and it would make it so that people really believe that this bill is supportive of them.

In saying that, I'd like to sit down. Hopefully, we can get some responses back. I'd really appreciate that.

Thank you.

4:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to stand in support of this amendment proposed for Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. Reflecting on this from my own experience as a would-be whistleblower in 2002, 10 years ago, I wonder what might have transpired if this legislation was in place at the time I was summarily dismissed from Palliser health region at the recommendation, privately I gather, of the then minister of environment, Taylor, to my board chairman, who didn't like my comments about the need for real action on climate change and my support for the Kyoto protocol at that time to reduce our carbon emissions in this province and to show some leadership in the country.

That not only offended the minister, apparently Premier Klein didn't like it, and the former Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who was the board chairman at the time, took their advice to heart and fired me within 24 hours of making a statement in support of this important global commitment to serious action on climate change.

We're still, 10 years later, struggling to find leadership in the western world on climate change, in my view, probably the most serious threat to our generation and the next generation according to many, many authorities, including the CIA in America, for example, who have said that climate change is actually the biggest threat to their security and stability. I would take that to mean that Canada, too, is going to be seriously threatened by all kinds of unrest as a result of food production problems and new infectious diseases and, of course, pine beetle and West Nile virus, floods, droughts in different parts of the world.

If this bill were in place, this whistle-blower legislation were in place, and this particular exemption were in place, I wonder: if the information got up to this level and the commissioner reviewed my data and was asked to rule on whether my raising issues of public health significance was appropriate and if it was done through the proper channels and if it was helpful to the public interest, if he or she might also have said that, well, this kind of action isn't appropriate to the public interest, and we'll have to exempt this as relevant to whistle-blowing and a legitimate public concern.

I don't know. What I do know is that after 41 years in government, it's very easy to rationalize all kinds of things in the name of maintaining power, maintaining position, continuity, stability, maintaining some kind of consistency, I guess. There is a famous quote about consistency that has to do with lack of innovation and a lack of using evidence, but I can't quote it particularly.

My argument, I guess, Madam Chair, is that if this was being presented by Premier Lougheed back in the '70s and '80s, I doubt that we'd have as much debate about this. I don't know that we would have the concerns that we have today, after 41 years. Some of the examples that we've heard around election irregularities and cover-ups, donations, abuse of power, and the lack of accountability and the hiding of information: I doubt that we'd have this kind of debate in Lougheed's time. In fact, I think we might even skip over this particular issue and say that we trust that this man has integrity. He's trying to do the right thing. He's bringing in some legislation to allow people in the public service, not in the private sector but at least in the public service – trying to move us into the 21st century with whistle-blower legislation.

That isn't the case today. There is a tremendous cynicism, I think well earned by this government, especially in the last decade or so, that we're not sure about the integrity of decisions, about the interference in officers' actions. We're not sure how much influence 41 years of power and one government has meant for some of those who would like to be independent and want to say they're independent in reporting to the Legislature but may not feel truly independent because of the experiences we've had.

Madam Chair, I happened to hear from a contractor who was involved in an injury on the work site that when the occupational health and safety inspectors came, who are supposed to be independent officers of the government, they were told not to call in the RCMP and get the records from the contracted company, in this case CNRL. It related to the deaths of some workers. They were told not to pursue it in the records of the CNRL. That was a disturbing revelation to me. These are independent officers of the government, and it was worth their job if they pursued evidence within a company when the minister herself was saying: don't go any further. That gives us all pause when we think about legislation that's designed to expose more abuse of power and expose attempts to hide information, in this case hide it from the courts. I think Albertans and, certainly, the opposition party would have very grave concerns about giving this government more power to decide what is and what isn't appropriate to the whistle-blower cause.

While it looks good to have, finally in 2012, a whistle-blower act – and I applaud the government for at least bringing it forward – I think that if they are really serious about wanting to set the standard in the country, we have to learn from some of the rest of the country and actually go the next step and make it impossible for people to feel vulnerable by coming forward. Take it outside of the bureaucracy. Make sure there are avenues in which the government has no capacity to interfere. Make it truly independent and set a new standard for whistle-blower legislation.

My caucus and I will be supporting this amendment and hoping that over the course of the next couple of days we'll see some of the amendments that will actually make this the best whistle-blower legislation in North America.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Lest there be great excitement over there, I only rise to ask for unanimous consent to shorten the bells.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent to shorten the bells. Are there any opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: We will shorten the bells if and when the time comes.

The hon. Associate Minister of A,T and T. That's easier.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Chair. One of the reasons that I'm proud of this legislation is the wide scope of the act. It will have the broadest application in Canada, governing the Alberta public service; provincial agencies, boards, and commissions; postsecondary academic institutions; school boards; and health entities. Additionally, municipalities and Métis settlements that wish to adopt the legislation will have the ability to do so.

The opposition has decided to focus on the perceived misuse of the exemptions in the act as opposed to what the section is really about. That, Madam Chair, is the flexibility given to the commissioner so that organizations with diverse mandates and sizes can be governed effectively by this act. For example, where public bodies are extremely small – for example, three employees – it would be inefficient and practically impossible to have functional and effective internal disclosure procedures as required by the act.

As explained previously in the House, section 31 allows the commissioner to exempt such an organization from establishing these internal processes. This section allows the commissioner to attach conditions to such an exemption. In these circumstances the commissioner could require that all disclosures go directly to the commissioner for review and investigation. Again, what many opposition members are neglecting to recognize is that the commissioner is obligated to publicize every exemption they grant and the supporting rationale for granting such an exception. That's contained in section 31(3).

Madam Chair, we have said time and again that this government is committed to accountability and transparency. To suggest that we would want to thwart the process of our own act is ludicrous. In short, the commissioner will be held accountable by all of us in this Assembly for each and every exemption they grant.

For these reasons, Madam Chair, I do not support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. If I may, I'd like to thank the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation for getting up and reading into the record his response to our first amendment. Unfortunately, he's not answering the questions that our members have been trying to get on the record. It's interesting. He talks about internal disclosure. Minister, one of the things that we're opposed to is this disclosure process that you seem to have in place, where you have an employee that wants to go to the manager, and then the manager has to go there. We believe it's important.

I can tell you that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is a prime example of what he was alluding to in talking about losing his job in the Palliser health region. You can't even imagine his position as an employee of the health region at that particular time going to his supervisor to explain all of those things. You know, he alluded to the fact that he wondered what would have happened if the whistle-blower legislation would have been here 10 years ago. Well, I can tell the member . . . [interjection] Madam Chair, I wonder if the Minister of Human Services, because of the conversation that he's throwing across the floor, would like to get up and speak to the legislation.

I'm not a lawyer – I can tell you that – and he is. I can only tell you that I have talked to a lot of lawyers. I have talked to a lot of world-renowned people on whistle-blower legislation, and what they're telling us is simple: this law is a backwards step because it does the opposite of what it claims, effectively shielding the government from embarrassing publicity while doing nothing to protect the whistle-blower or the public.

You know, the associate minister stood up in regard to section 31. Well, let's talk about that just for a minute. The commissioner has unlimited powers to exempt any person or organization, placing them above the law, an extraordinary provision to put into any legislation. As I explained when I first stood up and spoke in regard to our amendment on striking section 31, there is no other legislation in the world with whistle-blower legislation that contains section 31, which we have been trying to amend by striking out not only section 31 but section 36 by striking out one of the particular clauses in that legislation under our first amendment.

With that, I'm going to sit down, and I'm hoping that the associate minister – we have two ministers here, actually. You know, I really hate to call him A, T and T. I hope he's not offended by that, but it seems, Madam Chair, that you got away with calling him the Associate Minister of A, T and T, so I'm sure the opposition can.

Also, the Service Alberta minister was at the press conference, and I look forward to having him stand up and speak about the legislation. I know he was very enthusiastic at the press conference about this groundbreaking piece of legislation.

With that, I'll sit down and hope that someone else will speak.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes. In the hopes that the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation will get up to engage in debate again, I listened intently to his comments around the fact that we ought not be concerned about the exemptions provided for in this bill under section 31 of the act. He talked about, as we'd already discussed, the obligation of the commissioner to outline his reasons for giving an exemption under this section and how although we weren't pleased with the opportunity, at least we saw it as some safeguard.

I'm wondering if the minister can then speak to the application of section 36(l), which appears to allow for the same type of exemption from coverage of this legislation with the same degree of the kinds of things that can be exempted by cabinet without a corresponding obligation to provide an explanation or be accountable to this whole Legislature, say, for instance, through an officer of the Legislature. He made a compelling statement, but then, of course, it truly begs the question: well, if that's the safeguard from the commissioner making inappropriate exemptions, what is the safeguard from cabinet making inappropriate exemptions? If there is no safeguard from cabinet making inappropriate exemptions, would it not then be appropriate to at least consider eliminating section 36(l)? Otherwise, it appears as though some of our very significant concerns, for all intents and purposes, remain unaddressed by the comments made by the associate minister.

I look forward to hearing from him about the concerns under section 36. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. Just to speak to a few of the points that were just raised, there was a point raised a moment ago about the internal procedures and how they work. I just want to bring to that member's attention section 10(1)(h). If there's fear of reprisal, you can go directly to the commissioner. I'm not sure if the member saw that in the materials, but it's section 10(1)(h). If there's fear of reprisal, you go straight to the commissioner.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, I've seen it.

Mr. Scott: Oh, I see that you have it all tabbed up. Sometimes when I hear comments, I'm not sure if people have actually read the act. I'm impressed that you at least have tabs on it.

Again, the intent of this section is to make sure that we have the ability to deal with flexibility in situations. We want the commissioner to be able to deal with situations where there's a small number of employees, for example, in an organization. We believe that this section does provide that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. Listening to what the associate minister had to say on the exemption, I'm curious what he was thinking "class of persons" and "exemption of any person" would be. We did hear about the public entity. What people are you looking to exempt specifically? Not just organizations.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm going to be brief. I actually admire the courage of this particular member, the associate minister, in standing up and trying to defend his legislation. You know, it's like my colleague from Medicine Hat indicated earlier when he was speaking. It's his first time in the Legislature. He talked about how important the debate is. I know that this member is a first-timer in the Legislature, and I appreciate him getting up to defend his bill.

I want to put on the record – he talked about how interesting it was that I tabbed everything – that I can tell you, Member, that I have spent an incredible amount of time on this particular bill, more time than I really hoped I'd have to. I actually was quite excited about the whistle-blower legislation, and I had that on record.

I know the member pays close attention, and I know he knows that I have a motion on the floor in regard to the government bringing whistle-blower legislation forward. I'm not sure if he knows, but my private member's bill for the spring Legislature is number 2, and it's whistle-blower legislation. I have probably been working on this particular legislation for a year, have spent a lot of time talking to people not only across this country but in the United States and, quite frankly, in other areas of our fine world.

Having said that, I am going to sit down, and I'm going to hopefully have the government think about our first amendment in regard to striking section 31 down. I look forward to the votes.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other comments on amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will return to the bill. Is there anyone that would like to speak on Bill 4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I am going to move that Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended after section 11. I have the number of copies that are required.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute those copies.

Mrs. Forsyth: You betcha. Do you want me to sit down while it's being distributed?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, for a minute or so, please.

We will call this amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, if you would like to proceed on amendment A2.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to mark that down. As I've explained, we have numerous amendments, and I know the opposition has numerous amendments, so I'm going to start marking our amendments.

Madam Chair, thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak. I guess we've lost the first round, so we go on to round 2. Under section 11, which if anyone is interested is on page 12 of Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure I'm Going to Protect Whistleblowers Protection Act, what we're doing here – I need to get some introductions in this particular bill if I may. Under section 11 – and the associate minister alluded to this actually – it talks about disclosure to a designated officer. Section 11 reads:

11 As soon as reasonably practicable after a disclosure is made under section 10(1)(f), the employee must also make a disclosure about the matter to the employee's designated officer.

I can tell you how we feel about an employee having to go to a designated officer, and we will be bringing one of those amendments forward on that also.

Our amendment talks about adding under section 11, on page 12 of the act:

Reporting a wrongdoing to a Member of the Legislative Assembly

11.1 Notwithstanding any provision in this or any other enactment, an employee may report a wrongdoing to a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

I am sure that the members opposite are going to support this because their role as MLAs obviously is to represent the people that they're honoured to serve, who have voted them in and asked them and given them the ability to be their MLAs. We have got a situation where we've added this amendment in here, and I just know that the associate minister is going to accept this amendment because it's so reasonable. Again, I look forward to him standing up and speaking to why he will not accept this amendment.

It gives the ability if you have a whistle-blower that is not comfortable with his designated officer or, for that matter, not comfortable with going to the commissioner – I can tell you what I've learned over the last two and a half years, soon to be three years, as a member of the Official Opposition and having people coming to me all the time, especially as the Health critic. I can't even explain how many people I've had come to me in regard to health issues, some of our fine physicians in this province, Dr. Tony Magliocco being one that went through all of the processes, every single process that was available to him.

The incredible thing about Dr. Magliocco at the time was that he kept a record, as most doctors do because it's important to keep records, of all of the processes he went through. He went through what this act would probably be suggesting, his designated officer. He went to the Alberta Health Services chief operating officer at that particular time. Virtually ignored. He finally out of desperation – and I had never met Dr. Magliocco, to be quite frank with you – came to us and spent an awful lot of time going through his file and the history of his file because he was turned down at the process. He came to me as an opposition MLA and the Health critic, quite frankly, and decided that he was so concerned about what was happening to the patients at the Tom Baker cancer centre that he thought it was important to go public. So he went to a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

I think this is a reasonable amendment. If we have a whistle-blower that is not comfortable with going through the process of his designated officer or, for that matter, through the commissioner, he has an opportunity to go to his MLA. It's going to be interesting as we go through round 2, as I'm going to call it, listening to members of the government to see the rationale for them to vote against this particular amendment on whistle-blowers having the ability to go to their MLA and provide them some protection and provide them the opportunity to be able to talk to their MLA, especially if they're concerned about something that's happening.

Now, the nice thing about being able to go to the MLA – and I know that we have all had the opportunity where we have had people come to us, and you've listened very, very intently, and you think about the fact that: "Hmm. I'm not too sure about this. Maybe I should do some checking." I can tell you that I did that when I was a government MLA and I did that as a member of the opposition. I've had the opportunity over the last just about three years as the Health critic to be able to get what I consider is both sides of the story.

It is included in this legislation about frivolous complaints, so that can be weeded out very fairly and very quickly so that we're not having someone as a whistle-blower that, for example, would complain about 101 different things. That's important when we talk about who is a whistle-blower. In the broadest possible terms any person who exposes or reports wrongdoing is a whistle-blower. For example, an employee of a company who reports fraud, whether to a supervisor or to the police or anyone, for that matter, is a whistle-blower. It also refers to the bureaucrats that we have working in this government who report mismanagement.

We're going to be dealing with another amendment shortly, and I would like the minister to consider amendment A2 and explain the rationale of why, one, this was excluded when both he and the Service Alberta minister talked about the fact that they had consulted extensively. I'm still waiting for the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to explain to members of the Assembly. While we think no one is engaged at this particular time in regard to what's happening in this Legislature, I can tell you, Madam Chair, that there are lots of people watching what's happening with Bill 4, and they have been waiting patiently for us, the Official Opposition, and, I know, other opposition members, actually. We've fielded a lot of calls, myself and the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, in regard to what particular amendments we are bringing forward.

I know that amendment A2 allows for – and I've explained this, and I want to repeat it – the ability for a potential whistle-blower to go to their MLA and discuss their concerns if they're not comfortable, as I've explained on this particular bill, with the designated officer or, for that matter, the commissioner. What's important to emphasize over and over and over again – and I'm going to read it into the record – is that this amendment would allow anyone dissatisfied with or distrusting of their designated officer or the commissioner to go directly to an MLA with their complaint or disclosure.

I want to emphasize once again that this current bill is extremely restrictive, and it's stifling. I talked about all of the work that I have put in on whistle-blowing and the knowledge that I have received from some incredible, talented people in North America, to be very honest with you, who have spent an incredible amount of not only time but energy in regard to whistle-blower legislation in North America. This amendment, which came from the United States of America, allows any military personnel to go to a member of Congress.

While we're referring to the United States, I think that if Alberta truly wants to be on the map – and the minister truly talks about his groundbreaking legislation – this amendment has to be brought into the Legislature. I know that the minister's staff is listening because I've been on that side when I've brought legislation forward. While he's receiving text messages or e-mails from his staff or, for that matter, briefing notes, maybe your staff would like to also tell you how many other provinces across this country have this particular amendment in the legislation.

I'll take it one step further because it was you, associate minister, not me, that talked about the groundbreaking legislation that you're bringing forward and how you're following the Premier on her open accountability and how she's going to raise the bar and, quite frankly, how she criticized one of the members that she was running against about his legislation not being strong enough.

Having said that, I know that there are several people that want to speak to this particular legislation, and I am looking forward to them standing up and speaking on this particular legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm really pleased to get up and speak against this amendment. As MLAs it is our job to represent our constituents and our regions. We are a governance body, not an operating board. The appropriate administrative structures are in place for the public service to operate. Delving into operational matters could be seen as political interference. Adopting this amendment would not do anything meaningful or have any legal effect.

As has been made clear many times before, nothing in this legislation prevents an employee from reporting a wrongdoing to a Member of the Legislative Assembly already. This amendment offers nothing further. An MLA has no powers or obligations to investigate, make recommendations, compel the production of records, or offer the whistle-blower any protection other than what an MLA can currently offer. So I fail to see, Madam Chair, how this amendment would add any value to this act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Interesting, let us say. Thanks for sharing your opinion, hon. member, but I guess I would say that I think you're sadly mistaken. Obviously, what we're talking about here is that you cannot have a whistle-blower protection act – we all know that we get the little brown envelope sometimes. I think we all understand that, and we have to go out and verify whether they're accurate and so forth. Sometimes you get a whole bunch of off-the-record conversations from people. We get them every day, telling us about some of the things that this government has done or is doing, and they would make your hair curl. It's pretty bad. It's pretty bad stuff in a lot of cases. You'd be surprised, especially you new members, about how bad it is.

I'll give you an example. Just the other day I had a justice of the peace give me a call, and he was absolutely insistent. He said: you could say that I'm a justice of the peace in a question in question period, but you can't, obviously, name me because I feel I would lose my job if it came out who I was. So we talked for a bit and had some very interesting conversation about some of the unbelievable waste and mismanagement going on in our judicial system, actually, with regard to how we manage resources and how those resources could be better managed so that we could put more time and resources and effort into cases that are more serious and not have them stayed or dropped, as was the case with a sex abuse case in Airdrie, for example. It was a very good conversation with a very well-known and experienced justice of the peace, just a very good conversation.

Anyway, that's the kind of fear that they live in, and that's just one example, the most recent one off the top of my head from this week. But if you go back, I mean, there have literally been dozens and dozens and dozens of conversations similar to that, hon. member, where folks have been coming forward to us with instances of bullying, intimidation, corruption, and I don't use that loosely. It is what it is. I'm not saying that it necessarily always involves members in this Assembly. Often it does not. Often it involves people in different institutions of government. Of course, the government is quite large, so there are always going to be a few bad apples amongst all the good. There always are. But they're very serious issues.

The problem is that a lot of these folks feel, and probably rightfully so, that if they come forward and tell folks about this information, their jobs will be lost. That's why they have to come forward anonymously. How many times have we heard the government in there, “If you have any proof, if you have any witnesses, take it to this person or tell the police officers,” to tell this, that, the other thing? We say, “Well, you know, we’d love to do that, but we’ve already made a promise to certain individuals who are afraid for their job that we won’t do that.” I think we have to respect that. I don’t think it’s right for us to break that trust when people come forward to us in that regard.

However, it does create a problem when you can’t bring forward a witness to some of these things because they’re not willing to come forward because they’re scared out of their minds for their job, in some cases for even more than their job. By putting this section in there and saying that one has to go to a specifically designated officer within their – what’s the exact language used?

11 As soon as reasonably practicable after a disclosure is made under section 10(1)(f), the employee must also make a disclosure about the matter to the employee’s designated officer.

That, to me, is completely wrong. They should not have to go to their designated officer. I don’t blame them for coming forward and feeling that they would be intimidated by that section. The designated officer: who knows? Maybe that person is the problem. To put this “must” language in there, that they have to come forward and report it to the designated officer, I just think is unreasonable.

If you look at section 10(1), which is what this refers to, it says:

Subject to section 12, an employee may make a disclosure directly to the Commissioner only . . .

Very narrow language. Have you noticed that?

(f) if the employee reasonably believes that a matter constitutes an imminent risk of a substantial and specific danger to the life, health or safety of individuals, or to the environment, such that there is insufficient time to make a disclosure under section 9.

Okay. Let’s use a graphic example here. Let’s pretend that somebody in a hospital discovers that tools, scalpels, equipment were not being properly cleaned. We had that issue – was it at the Vegreville hospital? – a while back. It was Vegreville. The Health Quality Council released a report and so forth, so there was all this stuff.

What if you had the whistle-blower in this situation, that seems to constitute this here, finding out that the manager of his hospital, because of poor management and so forth, wasn’t doing his or her job properly, so this risk to public safety occurred, “an imminent risk of substantial and specific danger to the life, health or safety of individuals”? So he or she wants to blow the whistle and wants to do so faster than what section 9 permits, which is the regular disclosure by an employee to the designated officer, which we also disagree with. We think it should not be a designated officer, period. The whistle-blower would be forced under this to then, “as soon as reasonably practicable after [the] disclosure is made” to the commissioner, also make a disclosure about the matter to the employee’s designated officer.

Okay. What if the employee’s designated officer is an individual that might be responsible for the situation or might know folks that are responsible for the situation? What if there’s just a lack of trust there? I mean, that person would be sweating bullets. What happens is that if they’re legally required to do so and they’ve told the commissioner that but they don’t want to tell the designated officer that, then the commissioner knows that, essentially, they’re breaking the law if they don’t tell the designated officer. They know for a fact that this person didn’t tell the designated officer right away because he or she was afraid for his job or for being advanced in the future and so forth. Therefore, that person is contravening the act, and the commissioner would know that. The commissioner would fully understand that.

So it would seem a very reasonable amendment in this case. “Notwithstanding any provision in this or any other enactment, an employee may report a wrongdoing to a Member of the Legislative Assembly.” What that is saying is that they do not have to go to the commissioner; they can go to a Member of the Legislative Assembly. And the protections afforded by this act would extend to that person if they did not go to their designated officer, did not go to the commissioner but, instead, went to a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

Now, perhaps an MLA isn’t the best person that we should put in here. Perhaps it is somebody else, hon. member. The point here is that we need to make sure that the protections afforded under this act, Bill 4 – and there some protections there if you go through the right hoops – are made for folks regardless of whether they go to their designated officer or whether they go to the commissioner or whether they go to neither and just report it to the media or whether they report it to their MLA or whether they report it to anybody they deem will make something happen to correct the wrong, to stop the imminent danger from occurring or whatever.

Right now this act as written does not do that. This act is not going to protect folks enough that they’re going to come forward. People out there are really scared, a lot of them, for their jobs and so forth with regard to coming out and telling people about some of the problems in our system. They shouldn’t have to be scared, not in a province like Alberta. We can do better here. You know, we have an act that is meant to be a whistle-blower protection act, but it’s not. It doesn’t protect whistle-blowers because it creates so many hoops. It produces danger so that folks have to report to people that may be the problem. They have to report to people they may not be comfortable reporting to for whatever reason. I think that that has to be alleviated.

I don’t know if this amendment in and of itself is going to cure that wrong, but I’ll tell you that as Members of the Legislative Assembly one of our duties is to not only represent our constituents in here, but it is to protect them. I feel it is my duty to help protect my constituents. I feel it is my duty. For example, the case that we’re dealing with in the Justice portfolio right now on that. I just feel that those folks went through every single process. They went to the Crown. They wrote letters to the government. They did everything they possibly could to take care of a situation where Arizona, which is her alias, was harmed and didn’t get her day in court because of problems in our justice system. They felt that they had absolutely no recourse but to go their MLA.

I think that everyone in here has probably had a similar experience to that. For those that are new, I’m sure you’ll have it soon if you haven’t had it already.

I think it makes sense for that to be the case. We’re their elected representatives. In some cases we’re the only folks, the only voice that they have left. The bureaucracy of government can be an absolute labyrinth, and it can be very confusing for people. I think that in putting in this legislation, the powers of protection that this bill does afford will extend to those that decide only to go to their MLA and report these issues, report a wrongdoing. I think that’s legitimate. I think that the act should cover those folks.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to respond to the comments from the hon. Member for Airdrie. I understand entirely your comments about an MLA having an accountability to constituents and a need to be available to respond to queries and to offer guidance. However, I'm very, very concerned that if we add MLAs to this list in the act as suggested, we're going to very much cloud the constituents' understanding of what our role is and the role that the legislation is there for.

There is nothing in this legislation that precludes someone from talking to an MLA and asking these questions. I'm sure that will happen and that that guidance will be provided, and I'm sure that MLAs will point out this legislation and clarify people's understandings of it. But to suggest that an MLA can step into the shoes of an independent commissioner I think is terribly confusing.

I am not the ombudsman for my constituency members. I am not a commissioner. I think it's very, very confusing for people in the community to believe that an MLA has the same independent powers. We've talked so much about having independence in this House and the need for MLAs and for the political process and governing to be independent of bodies that we create that I'm a little bit confounded by your request, actually, to include it in this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. You know, it's a good question. I'll always remember, though – it's kind of funny. You'll have to tell Premier Stelmach that because when I was first elected as a member of the PC caucus, he specifically said: you have three roles as an MLA. The very first one that he said was ombudsman. "You're an ombudsman for your constituents." You know what? He was absolutely right. He was an ombudsman. MLAs are ombudsmen for their constituents. I think one of the most critical roles that we have, actually, is that of ombudsman. It's when government institutions fail our constituents. It's at that point, when they have nowhere else to go, that we are there as almost, you know, a last voice for them should all the other ones fail. I think that advice was extremely sound and is absolutely correct.

I mean, obviously, we can discuss back and forth whether this provision is the exact way to go about doing this or not, but I think the fear is that if we want to extend the protections of this act to individuals who perhaps don't feel comfortable going to the commissioner but do feel comfortable going to their MLA, I think that that's a mistake. I think we should be able to extend those protections to folks that decide to report wrongdoing through their Member of the Legislative Assembly and that all the protections afforded under the act should be given to those folks as well, not just those who go through the commissioner.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I should defer to my hon. friend, but I just want to say that I think the Member for Airdrie has misconstrued the context. Of course, we play a role as ombudsmen for our constituents. Our constituents come to us with their problems. Often their problems are problems related to dealing with government in one way or another, and we work with them to help achieve the type of result that they want to achieve. We do not act as ombudsmen insofar as we do not investigate independently their claim. We do not act as an Ombudsman does in terms of reviewing in detail whether they've been treated fairly and then making some comment back to the department or the individuals involved and trying to get a response and trying to get it back on track. So there are two different contexts there, and the Member for Airdrie has chosen the language and suggests that there's something wrong in that.

I think the former Premier's characterization of the role of an MLA is absolutely correct. That is the major job of an MLA in many ways: helping our constituents find the right connection with government in terms of some of the problems that they deal with. But we do not do the job of the Ombudsman in terms of the deep investigative role, the review of a complete file, requiring a department or requesting a department to review and do again. I think that's the distinction that he's missing in the process.

By analogy, with respect to a commissioner, a public disclosure commissioner, an MLA can already do without the benefit of this amendment exactly that job. We do it all the time – at least I have – where people who work for government come to you and they're concerned about something that's happening. They'd like something to be done about it, but they don't want to be necessarily associated with it, so they come to the MLA because that's who they feel comfortable with. We do on their behalf, sometimes without disclosing who they are because they've requested nondisclosure, find a way to have a discussion around what's happening and get to the bottom of it. We will continue to do that role, I am sure. However, we do not perform the role of the public disclosure commissioner of the investigation and the thorough analysis and the protection of that person's job. We can't. That is the role of the public disclosure commissioner. So very appropriate comments by Calgary-Varsity in terms of the role we play and what we don't do as MLAs.

The fact is that the amendment that's being brought forward actually very significantly confuses the issue by suggesting that someone can come to us to do an investigation when we don't have the resources to do that kind of an investigation. We don't have the resources to do what a public disclosure commissioner does.

We already have both the authority and the ability to maintain confidentiality to do the role that the hon. Member for Airdrie is talking about.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, we've got some debate in the Legislature, which is nice. It means we've obviously woken some people up – and I don't mean that literally as in woken them up like they're sleeping – to the fact, maybe, of the importance of this particular piece of legislation.

What's astounding to me is how people see the role of an MLA and the advocacy of the role of the MLA. I'm going to take you back a bit of time in regard to something that happened in this Legislature about two years ago. The fellow's name was Dr. Paul Parks, an emergency physician, a well-thought-of physician who went through the processes to alert this government in regard to the crisis in emergency. He did all of that. He did exactly what he should have done, including going to the Premier of the province. Guess what? Zero. Zip. Nothing happened.

Meanwhile the crisis in emergency continued, continued, and continued. Finally, out of frustration he goes to the members of the opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who's an emergency physician, brought it to my attention as the Health critic. He tabled his lengthy letters continuously that were written to government members who chose to do nothing. Guess what hit the fan?

Then we realized the crisis that we're in in health care. Two years ago, probably just about to the date, we're in an emergency debate in the Legislature that the particular Speaker at the time approved because he knew in the Legislature the situation of what was happening in our emergency rooms. To this day Dr. Parks and several other doctors in regard to their concerns have sat patiently, tried to go with what the government says, and again we're hitting that iceberg. We're in constant conversation with them in regard to what's happening in emergency. Now, in this government this Health minister can talk about occupancy spaces and how he's improving the health care system.

The idea for anybody to be able to even try to go through the process that's written in here – and I know that the member is an honourable person and obviously very caring and intent on listening to the debate. On page 12 of the bill it talks about disclosure to a designated officer. Section 11 talks about: “As soon as reasonably practicable after a disclosure is made under section 10(1)(f).” I want you to go to 10(1)(f), and that talks about the disclosure to the commissioner. You know, this bill is very complicated. You have keep going, well, back and forth. Trust me. I've read it 101 different times.

“The employee must”: you've got to love this. I used to sit on the Legislative Review Committee, and I got some pretty good lessons from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who is the Government House Leader, when I was the Solicitor General, actually, and when I was trying to learn this legislation. There is a huge difference between “must” and “may” in legislation because “must” means that you must – must – do that. It says, “The employee must also make a disclosure about the matter to the employee's designated officer.”

Here we have Dr. Parks, a well-known physician, and you know what, Member? I bet you he would be pleased as punch to talk to you because he tried talking to his MLA. That didn't work, so he chose to come to you. That's the idea. You have someone that's in a crisis situation. They've gone to their designated officer, and the designated officer at that particular time said: “Hmm, not listening to you. It's not an issue.” “I'm reporting it directly to the Minister of Health.” “No, I don't want to.” It's like that mushroom all of a sudden comes out. It's like putting that umbrella over your head so you don't get wet. You know, I just can't emphasize it to you.

This allows that person, Dr. Parks – and we talked about Dr. Magliocco earlier. I could name the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. All of these people went through the right processes. If we don't have this amendment about allowing them to come to their MLA, the unbelievably dedicated health people like Dr. Parks, Dr. Magliocco, Dr. Maybaum – I mean, honestly, I have 65 physicians in this BlackBerry that have tried to go through the process, who don't have that opportunity. They're not making things up. They're not trying to usurp the process. All they're trying to do is bring it to the attention of someone that will listen to them. Our role, as much as we may or may not like it, as an MLA is to advocate on behalf of the people that come before us.

You know, I've been around as an MLA on both sides, as the government and as a member of the opposition, and I know there are times we get those constituents whom we have some doubt on. I'm getting calls from constituents that haven't liked what you as a government MLA have said to them. I'm smart enough to say: have you contacted your MLA? Then we start digging a little further, and we think: hmm, I bet they've done as much as they can in their role as a government MLA, and this person just isn't going to take an answer, or they don't like the answer either the government or the opposition MLA has. I can give you hundreds of examples of that over the last three years as an opposition MLA and 15 years as a government MLA. You know, that's okay. It's learning how to weed out.

I think we need to understand the importance of this amendment, where it's coming from, and that any constituent or employee with this government or, for that matter, anywhere else wanting to make a disclosure should be able to go to their MLA if they feel that the disclosure that they've brought forward isn't being handled properly. We're not trying to be the law. We're just trying to help people through a system that they feel they haven't been treated right. If people in this Assembly have read this legislation as much as I have – and I know the minister has probably read this legislation – in this legislation it talks about frivolous. That is particularly covered under that.

I just want to emphasize once again that we don't willy-nilly bring these amendments forward. We want you as the government to have strong whistle-blower legislation that people in this province, all of the employees out there that have a concern – and it can go to what happened in Vegreville-Vermilion. It was very interesting to have the member speak up because there's a prime example of what happened to your hospitals in your constituency at that time, with your Premier, which was ignored. It needs to be brought to attention.

Mr. Hale: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mrs. Forsyth: If I've got your constituency wrong, I apologize.

But, Members, it's important for everyone to think about what we're saying. We don't willy-nilly come up with 21 amendments because we think that's important as the Official Opposition and should be contained in the legislation. I can tell you that the amendments we're bringing forward are coming from hundreds and hundreds of hours of talking to what you consider your stakeholders. I have yet to hear from the minister whom you consulted with, and I look forward to that because every single person that I have consulted with on whistle-blower legislation – and there are numerous ones that are known across this country – has not heard from the government.

If the minister can explain that to me. Maybe I've missed something. I could very well have missed someone that I should have consulted with and that I didn't consult with who is an expert on whistle-blower legislation, and for that I apologize. I'd be more than willing to get the name, get the number of whom you've consulted with, talk to those people, sit down with you, Minister, and sit down with the people you've consulted with. I can bring the people that we've talked to, and I know that they're prepared in a heartbeat to have a conference call with your people and hash it out so that we're not spending hundreds of hours on this particular legislation and debating the 21 amendments. I'd be pleased to do that. If you want, Minister, I will make my time available so that I can understand who you've consulted with.

I know the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has spent an incredible amount of time on this particular bill. We will drop everything. We will meet with your consultants. We'll hook you up with the people that we've talked to, let the consultants duke it out, for all that matters, and say: “Well, we'll give you this. You give me that. We'll understand why you're doing this, and we'll understand why you're doing that.” You know what? You probably will end up with the best piece of legislation not only in this country but in North America.

With that, Minister, I'm going to sit down. I'm going to challenge you with that. Maybe you can text your staff, your deputy. I've been there, done that as a previous minister of the Crown. I'm more than willing to talk to the people that you've consulted with, and maybe they can explain. I look forward to hearing from you on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move that amendment A2 to Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended in the proposed section 11.1 by adding . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll just pause till we get that distributed to the other members in the House, please.

It looks like we have distribution. If you would like to proceed, hon. member. Just to keep things in order, this subamendment is known as SA1.

Please continue.

Mr. Fox: All right. This amendment amends Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, in the proposed section 11.1 by adding "or the media" after "Member of the Legislative Assembly" wherever it occurs. Now, there are a couple of reasons why I decided to bring this forward. One was because, actually, the Premier campaigned during her campaign for the leadership of the party on not using the Ombudsman approach to whistle-blower protection.

What is this bill designed to do? Is this designed to protect the individual coming forward. Or is this just meant to put in place a process so that we can kind of shuffle it off to the side and just have a report year after year after year, where we don't even really know what's going to be in that report? There's nothing in this piece of legislation that states exactly what this commissioner is going to report back to the Legislature other than just a line saying that they've got these wrongdoings that came forward, that this was the date, and here's your report. We don't know if that's going to happen. I would hope that that doesn't happen.

I think that if we're going to have real whistle-blower protection, we're going to protect the whistle-blower no matter what venue they choose to come forward through, be it the Ombudsman – how do we put it in here? – the designated officer. Or why don't we go to the MLA, maybe even the media? Where would we have been with the federal sponsorship scandal had that whistle-blower not come through the media? Had Allan Cutler just stayed in a corner, we would not have known what was going on. We would not have seen a fundamental shift in the way the government of Canada operates. He was a hero. These are heroes coming forward.

I was listening to the Member for Calgary-Varsity, to what she was saying about MLAs being persons that a whistle-blower could come to, stating that they wouldn't be independent, that they don't have . . .

An Hon. Member: Investigative.

Mr. Fox: Investigative abilities. That's it. That is the word I'm looking for.

I'm asking: what makes the designated officer any more able to investigate than the Ombudsman? I mean, it states here in section 7(1) that "a chief officer may designate a senior official to be the designated officer for the purposes of managing and investigating disclosures." I'm not clear on how that person is going to be independent. How is somebody who works for the department going to be independent of that department? I don't see how that can happen. I think they're going to be worried about their department.

Now, hopefully – hopefully – instead of looking at protecting the department or protecting the government, we're going to think about protecting the whistle-blower, the person coming forward with vital information, somebody who can help change the direction of how a matter is being handled within that department, that ministry, that public entity. I would hope – I would absolutely hope – that you'd want to see that person protected and you'd want to see that information come out and come forward so that it can be fixed right away, not maybe a year down the road or a year and a half down the road or two years down the road when the investigation is finally completed and it's kind of swept under the rug.

It is of paramount importance that we look at protecting the whistle-blowers themselves when they come forward, not the public entity that they're coming from. I would hope that everybody here would be in support of this amendment and in support of what the fair recommendations are. The independent body that is looking at this – I mean, right now under this act no matter how egregious any wrongdoing uncovered by the commissioner, the public may never learn about it.

The Premier, who released her democratic renewal strategy in May, said she would pass a law that protects whistle-blowers no matter what the manner they choose to expose the wrongdoing. Right now in this bill there is no place – no place – that states this. We are prescribing the manner in which they can come forward and blow the whistle with this bill. We're not protecting them when they choose to come forward in a manner of their choosing.

I'm going to read this again because it's very important. The Premier, who released her democratic renewal strategy in May, said she would pass a law that protects whistle-blowers no matter what the manner they choose to expose the wrongdoing. When you start saying that a whistle-blower must report to the Ombudsman, you're being prescriptive again about the structure that is in place in an effort to manage the information. I think that defeats the purpose, the Premier said. I think they need to be protected if they go to the public with it, the Premier said. The Premier proposes to protect whistle-blowers who go to opposition politicians, media – I think that's this subamendment and this amendment – as well as the courts, as well as the Ombudsman and internal managers. She said that the political leaders need to send a message that allegations of wrongdoing will be examined in full no matter how they come to light. I'm going to repeat that little bit again: no matter how they come to light. You either have an open government or you don't, the Premier said.

Because we've brought these amendments forward, that specifically address what the Premier said, to put these provisions in this act to protect the whistle-blower, I would hope that all of you would stand in support of the subamendment and then this amendment because it supports what your Premier has put forward and has said.

With that, I'll sit down. Thank you for the opportunity to put those arguments forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, this is the first time I've seen this, so I really don't have an awful lot to say, but I am pleased to rise to speak to this subamendment. I guess it brings some reasonable question to the practicality of what we're doing here. We've been discussing and debating the amendment regarding reporting wrongdoings to Members of the Legislative Assembly, but to add in media, this does two things. I think what we end up doing – section 11 is specifically designed to say that the employee has a duty within a certain reasonable amount of time to disclose the matter to a designated officer.

I think that if you are going to put in any amendments to add other individuals, whether it's a Member of the Legislative Assembly or the media, you in fact cloud the matter to a point where it could be felt that the media are now designated officers as well. We end up getting to a point where we're debating things in the media and we're negotiating things and trying to fix problems in the media.

I believe that the intent of this act as it's been designed by the hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation is that we're putting a process in place that is going to work for any employee that feels that there's been wrongdoing, that they can come forward through a designated process, through a designated officer, and be treated in a manner which treats them with respect and will come out with results.

Madam Chair, for that reason alone, to add anything as 11.1 under section 11, "Disclosure to designated officer," I can't support this amendment. I certainly don't believe that it would be appropriate to name either Members of the Legislative Assembly or the media as designated officers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chairman. This is a very interesting amendment. In fact, it speaks to issues that we, too, had prepared for amendment, which I actually think will probably still be in order, and we'll have an opportunity to discuss them even if this is defeated because our proposal for how to address this issue is more limited in its application than this one would be. I think it will be a different outcome.

I'd like to take this opportunity to talk about the principle that the members of the Official Opposition are trying to get at through both the amendment and the subamendment, which is part of the amendment. Like all members of this Assembly, I've taken the opportunity to read through the act and look at the particular expectations and prohibitions and directions within this act. As you know, Madam Chair, my preliminary concerns about this act are that, really, rather than serving at its very essence to be an act which protects whistle-blowers, in fact, what it does is that it sets out a very limited set of circumstances in which the whistle-blower can disclose.

Then it sets out about – I don't know – 30 rules around that disclosure, and it sets out the authority for probably another 30 rules to be set out around that disclosure. Then it basically suggests that nobody can penalize that whistle-blower if they follow the collective list of roughly 60 rules, although if they don't follow the rules, they may themselves be subject to discipline under the act. It's really not clear that what we're really doing is getting at the so-called intent of the Premier, just quoted a couple of speakers ago, in terms of ensuring that a whistle-blower will be protected no matter how they choose to disclose information which is important to the public interest.

[Mr. Goudreau in the chair]

What this principle is getting at is ensuring that the efforts of the whistle-blower are not lost in the incredibly detailed and rule-oriented process which exists here. Because here's what it looks like, Mr. Chair. First of all, under section 5(2) each body needs to come up with procedures relating to 11 different issues, which will circumscribe the process for the whistle-blower to follow. Now, we don't know what those procedures will be. They may not be consistent. The obligation for those procedures to be fair is not really laid out in the act, but they need to come up with at least 11 sets of rules in each public body.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Then, once they've done that, assuming that the rules are remotely functional and in themselves don't create a process which can go at least 12 months or 24 months or 36 months – we really have no idea how long that procedure would last, and there are no limitations on that procedure and the sets of rules that are being laid out.

Then after that what happens is that the whistle-blower is compelled to disclose their issue to the designated officer, who will then follow the rules set out by the public body, and we don't know what they are yet. Then in certain limited circumstances the whistle-blower could disclose the issue to the commissioner. But it's not an absolute ability to disclose to the commissioner. They can only disclose to the commissioner under certain circumstances. If the 12 or 13 or 14 procedures that were described under section 5 have not yet been established, then you can go to the commissioner. If they have disclosed unto the designated officer but the investigation is not following the procedures, which we don't know what they are, then you can go to the commissioner, although you can write procedures in such a way that it's very easy to say: yeah, we're following them.

Anyway, if they haven't followed the time period under those procedures that we don't know what they are; if they have actually completed the investigation and the employee is dissatisfied – but bear in mind that because we don't know about these procedures, they may not complete the investigation until, you know, three years after they've first disclosed – then if the subject matter actually is related to the designated officer; if there's a possibility of imminent risk, and we've talked about that already; and if there has been a reprisal taken against the employee. Of course, if there's been a reprisal against the employee, I'm thinking that their first priority is to actually get a job and put food on their family's table rather than go to the commissioner, but that's an opportunity to go to the commissioner. If the employee reasonably, to an objective standard, believes that a reprisal might be forthcoming, they can go to the commissioner. So there are a lot of hoops that have to be jumped through before an employee can actually go to the commissioner.

Now, should they go to the commissioner, though, Madam Chair, it's not all tickety-boo at that point because in fact there are – oh, my goodness – at least one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine circumstances under which the commissioner can choose not to investigate or to kick it back to the designated officer or kick it back to the public body. In fact, if that person actually manages to climb that hill of getting the attention of the commissioner, the commissioner can under a whole slew of circumstances kick it back. There are so many opportunities that the commissioner has to not act on it. One of them is simply that – you know what? – if it happened more than two years ago, the commissioner can stop the investigation.

So even if this person has dutifully gone through the process that the public body has set up – and let's say that that public process took a year. They get through that process, the decision is made, the person is not satisfied with it, and then they get to the commissioner and the commissioner has a six-month waiting list, which, quite frankly, for most investigations by administrative tribunals – I think everybody on that side knows that any response within six months is dreaming in Technicolor. Within about a year – no administrative tribunal manages to dispose of a matter within six months – let's say that they get there, then the investigation starts. Say it's a complex matter. Boom. We hit two years. The commissioner can just stop. "Well, yeah, you know, I realize that it took awhile to get here, but the act says that if two years have passed, even if I've already started my investigation, I can stop in the middle of it."

So there's a whole slew of ways in which this act allows for the whistle-blower to basically fall through the cracks. Why do we care if the whistle-blower is able to manage to avoid falling through the cracks? Well, basically it's because all of this act hinges on section 24, this notion that section 24 will protect this person from being disciplined or harassed or fired because they've chosen to try to disclose.

Now, quite frankly, you can drive a truck through section 24, the loopholes written into that. But notwithstanding that, the point of all of this is to keep the person able to still hold onto section 24 and not have their livelihood stolen from them by somebody who decides to engage in reprisal because this person has questioned their activity or questioned the activity of the public body.

The point of going through this process, Madam Chair, in so much detail and pointing out all the ways in which the person can go through the cracks is to then explain why it is so important to have a fail-safe that ensures that if the whistle-blower falls through the 25 or so cracks that have been written into this act, then there is a fail-safe, and they can go to an MLA or go to the media and have some semblance of hope that they can rely on section 24 of the act.

You know, we've had previous speakers say that there's nothing stopping people from going to MLAs right now. No. No, there's not. Except that they could be fired for it. And be very clear: they could be fired for it. So section 24 is designed – it's the lynchpin of this act. Not a very well-constructed lynchpin, a bit rusty, likely to fall out, doesn't actually fit the tool with which it's gauged, shall we say, but it is nonetheless the lynchpin of the act.

Section 24 currently does not apply if the person goes to their MLA or an MLA, nor does it apply if the person goes to the media. When we're talking about transparency, folks, we're talking about a public debate. We're talking about ensuring that the media has the ability to share these facts with those in the community who presumably, through that little process we call an election, hold this government accountable. When we talk about regular accountability, accountability outside of that four-year period, well, we're talking about debate and conversation within this Legislature, which doesn't happen if this whole process is hidden inside a whole bunch of bureaucratic silos designed to keep it from the light of day. This amendment is geared towards putting a fail-safe in place.

Now, we will be proposing an additional amendment. Should this amendment not pass, we shall be proposing an additional amendment which, I would suggest, amounts to a compromise because it limits the scope or the opportunities at which the whistle-blower can go to the MLA or go the media. However, the general principle here is correct. Should this pass, then obviously, yeah, our amendment would be unnecessary. [A cellphone rang] I think I do feel the need to question the member on his musical taste. Nonetheless, I hope you're enjoying it, and I hope I didn't interrupt your enjoyment of that music by speaking about this.

Mr. Khan: No, not at all.

Ms. Notley: In any event, that's what these amendments together are geared to do. It's really important that the discussion with the media is clearly delineated because it, frankly, doesn't help to simply allow an MLA to become aware of it and then have the MLA constrained by the very same confidentiality which constrains the commissioner and would constrain the Assembly from engaging in a proper debate around whatever issue it is that is raised through the information provided by the whistle-blower.

It's really a natural link to include the media because you need for there to be an open, transparent – you know, it's amazing that I'm saying this. I mean, it seemed to me during the election that all the Premier could ever say was: open, transparent; open, transparent. Here we're actually trying to make it happen, yet this bill is all about: "No, we shall not be open and transparent. We shall not let the media know about it. We shall not let the Assembly know about it. We shall keep it in this small office, and it will never ever come out of that little office." Well, this is about trying to change that. This is about really trying to create open and transparent debate and conversation about whatever issues the whistle-blowers bring forward. So we absolutely support the principle behind these motions.

I will say, Madam Chair, that throughout this process we will be constantly examining what are best practices in other jurisdictions. And be very clear that this piece of legislation that we have here before us in total, as I've said before, mirrors legislation brought forth by that government known nation-wide for its commitment to openness and transparency, the Tories in Ottawa and the Prime Minister. Just to be clear for those listening, I am being very sarcastic when I say that.

This legislation is modelled on legislation that exists in Ottawa, legislation which experts on the issue of openness, transparency, government accountability have long since concluded is not transparent, is not accountable, and is not effective at protecting the rights of public servants when it comes time for them to exercise their conscience and disclose potential wrongdoing on the part of any branch of government, including the most senior people in the executive branch of government.

As a result of that, we're not going to get true transparency in this legislation as it currently exists. We will get an enhanced level of opaqueness. We will actually be injecting darkness into the window and ensuring that fewer people can see what's going on if we pass this act.

This amendment is clearly geared towards introducing a fail-safe, as I've said before, to a process which, as I've described, includes roughly 30 or 40 cracks through which the whistle-blower can fall to not only their demise but to the demise of open and transparent public debate in this province. So we're certainly happy to support the principle behind these amendments.

We do think that it's important to include the media in this amendment as much as the MLAs. If I had to choose one, I would say that it should just be the media because if the media is aware of it, then the MLAs become able to have the conversation in an accountable fashion within the Legislature and in other places. Quite frankly, it's really only when the weight of public opinion through the work of the media starts to pressure this government that we ever see any kind of response. As a result, if I had to chose, this subamendment is easily the most important component of this combined amendment by the Official Opposition, but we're certainly happy to support both.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let me speak to this amendment. You know what? I think that on the face of things this sounds great: let's go to the media; let's go to our Member of the Legislative Assembly. Those are all good things.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's your Premier that wanted it.

Mr. Fraser: Absolutely. But I think the question is: does this bill preclude you from doing that? Does it allow you not to do that? I don't think it does. I think you can do it. In fact, Madam Chair, a wise man once told me that not all media is good media.

When we talk in the best interest of people, the people that we're here to serve and protect, let's look at a couple of things. Let's look, for instance, at Alberta Health Services with a hundred thousand employees. You can't tell me – and in fact, I've worked there – that everybody gets along. I would imagine that there are whistle-blowers there right now, whether it's against a physician, a paramedic, or a nurse, or the governing colleges, the labour groups. Those problems are being solved based on the process that we have today, but this bill goes one step further. It creates more transparency. It gives more ability to the whistle-blower to feel protected.

Now, at the end of the day when we think about media and we think about the way that we need to move, wouldn't we as politicians always love to control what comes out in the media on both sides? But that doesn't always happen. The media doesn't always report things in the best interest of the person or the entity. They're there for a particular reason. I think that when we include this, that's what we are saying, that they're a definitive protection, and they're not.

Further to that, I'd even say this. If you go to your MLA, which you should be able to, the MLA should do everything to fight for you in your best interest. I can tell that when I was president of the Calgary paramedics, I had to protect people. I had to give them advice, whether it was dealing with the media or with their supervisor.

Well, you shake your head, but I've been in Alberta Health Services and I can tell you that when you talk about bullying and you talk about that process, you should be injected into the front lines to see how that works. It is really important to understand how that works. It's really important to understand what the long-term effects of that are. Once again, as I've said before, the way this legislation is written, and over time whether it's all legislation, we will see the proven effectiveness of these bills as they move forward.

Now, you say that we need to have this large collaboration as if this government didn't have it, as if we're not meeting the mandate that the Premier gave us. You're talking about 61 different diverse points of view, people that went to school like myself and our chief government whip that protect people every day. You can't tell me that the dialogue that we have in our caucus isn't to put people in the front. There has to be some rationality here. The good people that have been serving these people and constituents in this province, not just today but for many years: we continue to build on those strengths.

So to say that because the media is not in it – ask yourself that question. The media is not always the right way to go. Your MLA is not always the right way to go. There is a process, just like we have processes in our families and in our other businesses that we hold dear to our hearts. There is a process that we follow. I encourage, in fact I dare, the members across the aisle and other parties to follow this process, to get out there. [interjection] You know what? My Premier empowers you and every other person in this province to go to their MLA. I'm on the record.

Mrs. Towle: And the media.

Mr. Fraser: Go to the media if you feel that's your best avenue. The Premier is not saying not to do that. The Premier, in fact, said to go ahead and do that.

Our job should be to see if that is the correct action, to follow a process, to make sure that we are not breaking any laws or precluding anybody from getting the kind of justice that they need. It doesn't always need to be politicized. It doesn't always need to be on camera. Sometimes the best work happens behind closed doors.

You know what? I know that the members across the way know that. You're laughing, but you know this. In fact, I'm a testament to why I stand here, because you know what? I didn't hijack meetings with union members. I went on my own and I talked to people and built credibility. I built a relationship. And that's what this is about.

I'm happy, and I'm proud to stay here. I will stand here until the end of this campaign in the next four years, and you know what? I'll stand behind the work I did. I'll stand with the members on this side and all sides that did hard work, that were honest with Albertans, that work for Albertans.

I believe this bill speaks to that, and I won't be supporting these amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, time is short. Actually, it's interesting that the member talks about the mandate that the Premier gave them. What he is discussing is exactly the mandate that the Premier was trying to sell Albertans on when she was running for the leadership.

We've already had the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka speak, and I think it's important for the member – and I admire what he is trying to do. I'm sure when he talks about the processes in place and he talks about his paramedics, which I know he has . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it is now 6 o'clock, and the committee stands recessed until 7:30 p.m.

Thank you.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 27, 2012

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order.

Just as a reminder, I will remind you that the times between bells has been reduced to one minute. We had unanimous consent prior. Because we just recessed, we still have that approval to keep the bells at one minute between rings.

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

The Deputy Chair: So we can continue. Are there any members who would like to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that just before we adjourned – it was probably about one or two minutes before 6 – I was responding to the Member for Calgary-South East. We had a brief conversation as we were leaving, and I wanted to just get it on the record. In speaking, he talked about the mandate that the Premier gave them. I'm not sure what mandate the Premier has given the government members, but I can tell you – and it's been read into the record by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka – the mandate that the Premier told Albertans that she was going to have as she was running. I need to read this once again into the record because it goes to amendment SA2, that we're talking about.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the noise level is a little high. Can we lower that noise level, please?

Mrs. Forsyth: If I may, Madam Chair, it's important to read this into the record because it goes right to what the amendments were talking about. I'm reading an article into the record.

Redford, who released her democratic renewal strategy in May, said she would pass a law that protects whistleblowers, no matter what manner they choose to expose wrongdoing.

"When you start saying (a whistleblower) must report to the ombudsman, you're being prescriptive again about the structure that is in place, in an effort to manage the information. I think that defeats the purpose," she said. "I think they need to be protected if they go public with it," she said.

Redford proposes to protect whistleblowers who go to opposition politicians, media or the courts, as well as the ombudsman and internal managers. She said political leaders need to send a message that allegations of wrongdoing will be examined in full, no matter how they come to light.

"You either have open government, or you don't," Redford said.

Those were words spoken by the Premier when she was running for the leadership of this party and the commitment that she was giving to Albertans at that particular time.

Again, my comments are brief. The process is in place that the Member for Calgary-South East talked about. I've again encouraged him to read the legislation because the processes are in place.

In his comments he talked about the paramedics, that he is a paramedic, and that he has represented the paramedics as a former paramedic and now as a government member. I guess my question to him in regard to the paramedics, because I've just met with him, is on the processes that he has in place or what he's done to bring the issues forward that the paramedics have right now in regard to the ambulances, all of their pensions, if he has represented that to the Minister of Health, and to get on the record what the Minister of Health is doing to address those issues that are current. Those are just a couple of the issues that the paramedics have brought up. The new ambulances that don't fit them and having problems with the stretchers getting into the ambulances: I'm sure he's well aware of all that.

I'm sure that in his role as the MLA for Calgary-South East he has brought those issues – and he's said in this Legislature that he has brought those issues – to the Minister of Health. It alludes to the fact that it is important that if you have a concern, Madam Chair, in regard to what's happening in health care issues that is wrong, that needs to be addressed, when you have paramedics in ill-fitted ambulances, that those issues be brought to the forefront, to the Minister of Health, and that if they're not dealt with through the processes that this hon. member talks about, the processes in place, they have an option to be able to go to their MLA or this MLA, or they can go to the media.

Having said that, I look forward to hearing more debate.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who would like to speak on subamendment SA1?

Mr. Fraser: On the amendment let me tell you first and foremost that when it references an MLA or it references the media, what I have been known for and what I'll continue to be known for: I will stand up for anybody that needs standing up for. I will stand up for the paramedics always, without question, and the members on this side, including the Minister of Health and all other ministers, can tell you in full force that I've addressed every issue that a paramedic has brought to me in terms of me being able to represent them and their best interests. However, I also recognize that in that role not all media is good media, that there are fantastic people – let me reiterate that: fantastic, qualified people – in Alberta Health Services who are working every day to make better outcomes for the patients that they serve, and that includes this minister.

I will say this. We will continue to work, and we'll find the best collaborative solution. But it is not below me or above me if I felt that I needed to advocate through media for a particular person. I will do that, and I will do it to the best of my ability. Whether it's for a constituent, a paramedic, or for the minister himself, I will do that. I hope that answers some questions. Again, I will tell you that there are excellent people here.

The processes that I've used in the past to represent the paramedics during the transition – I believe the Member for Airdrie cosponsored the bill of that transition. We tried to meet with him, which we never did, and I don't think it was about a refusal. Let me get that clear. We just never got that opportunity. But we did meet with most of the government members.

To reference the members from the NDP caucus, they laughed about the closed-door meetings. What I meant by that is that I don't believe it's pertinent or prudent to hijack a meeting by saying, "I will show up in the meeting" and then bring all my friends. I feel sometimes that if we can take the politics out of the process, sometimes we can gain way. If we can take the media out of the process, we can gain way.

Further to that, when we reference the media, unwittingly when we put things in the media, sometimes we'll scare people away for fear that that's always the solution. That is not always the solution. That's not always the process that we take. If we put it in the media, people sometimes will be afraid to report. That's not what we want in this legislation. We want people to feel comfortable, but we also want people to know: you're absolutely free. Let me make it very clear. This legislation does not say that you can't go to the media. This legislation doesn't say that you can't go to external people or your MLA. You absolutely can, but we want people to follow the process. We want to protect them through this process.

Again, we want to protect them through this process if they feel that there's wrongdoing, and there are many avenues for that. Coming from a paramilitary organization like EMS, like police, two services that are very highly regarded in the community, I can tell you that the process works more often than it doesn't.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak on subamendment SA1? The hon. Associate Minister of AT and T.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. This act is structured to enable disclosure through either the internal process or directly to the commissioner. One of the points that my hon. colleagues didn't mention as they were going through some of the various examples that they were bringing up is that there is an anonymous disclosure process, and that's in section 21 of the act. With some of the examples that were being given by my colleagues, I do believe that they will fit within those anonymous disclosure procedures. I would just ask that they consider that as they think about this act.

I know that the decision to make a disclosure can be very difficult and stressful, and I also know that whistle-blowers are not necessarily after headlines. Many want their complaints to be heard, investigated, and resolved without being in the spotlight. This legislation requires that each public body has an internal process in place. This internal process is critical for every employee who wants to do the right thing but address the matter internally. Of course, this legislation also makes it clear that wherever an employee does not feel comfortable with the internal process, has suffered a reprisal, needs to make a disclosure urgently, or has a disclosure concerning the chief officer or designated officer in their public entity, they can go directly to the commissioner.

This amendment would also present a risk of personal information being disclosed. A key advantage of this approach is that it limits the number of people with access to personally identifying information. The approach in this legislation will prevent malicious or vexatious allegations from being prematurely aired in public. Let's be clear. This amendment would not protect employees, as the opposition is claiming it would. An MLA or a member of the media has no powers or obligation to investigate, make recommendations, compel the production of records, or offer the whistle-blower any protection other than what an MLA or the media can currently already offer.

Madam Chair, Australia completed a major project entitled Whistle While You Work, which is the largest survey of whistle-blower policies, legislation, and perceptions of both management and employees. Let me share a quote from one of its reports.

It is clear that journalists and parliamentarians see only the tip of the whistleblowing iceberg, and are also more likely to encounter cases of whistleblowing that are already complicated, if not rancorous. While this more public whistleblowing may well be justified, on occasion, by the failure of organisations to address alleged wrongdoing in the first instance, the greater extent of internal whistleblowing does not automatically mean that wrongdoing is simply swept under the carpet.

We want to ensure that employees are protected when they make disclosures. We also want to ensure that disclosures are made to an office that has the power to investigate.

One of the key benefits of the legislation as it currently stands and the reporting processes that are currently in place is that they permit something to be done about the disclosures. If we have a system set up where disclosures are made to parties other than what we've designated, that doesn't necessarily lead to a resolution of whatever the concern is. I believe that the legislation that we've created provides an avenue that not only protects somebody who is going to make a disclosure; it also lets us solve the problem. That's really one of the aims that I want to see this legislation achieve.

For this reason, Madam Chair, I do not support the amendment or the subamendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate what this member is saying, and I'm going to again put this to him. He has come up again in regard to some answers or maybe possible answers to some of the things we're bringing forward. I want to put this challenge to him. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and I would be pleased to meet with your staff, your deputy, and your people that you have consulted with in regard to this legislation. We'd be pleased to do that. We would be even more pleased as a caucus to pick up the cost of conferencing in our consultants so that they can discuss the legislation. We may save probably tons of time in regard to the 21 amendments we're bringing forward, and I can't speak on behalf of the opposition.

He talked about the Australian model, and I forget his comments in regard to Whistle While You Work. I can tell you that your legislation, Minister, has been criticized as being too weak to even blow a whistle, let alone whistle while you work. I mean, this isn't something members of the opposition have made up in our heads. We're going by countless stakeholders across this country that have chosen to go to the media and speak about your whistle-blower legislation, have chosen to call us and discuss it personally.

Again, Minister, I know you talk about the anonymous allegations under section 21, but please read section 21. It talks about "may," "must manage and investigate the disclosure in accordance with the procedures established under section 5." Report back to whom?

It's okay for you to be able to read what your department has asked you to or what you want to put on the record, but it's also important to anticipate the questions that you're going to get when you make these statements in the Legislature. Trust me, Minister. I can tell you that I have spent hundreds of hours on this legislation, and I've talked to numerous people. We want this legislation to be what's good for Albertans, and what's important for Albertans is to be able to blow the whistle and be treated fairly and taken care of when they do blow the whistle.

Once again, what we're asking on amendment A2 is, one, to include MLAs in the legislation. My colleague has brought in a subamendment in regard to the media. Allow the whistle-blower to have the ability, if he's not comfortable under the section where he has to go to his immediate designated officer under section 11, to have these avenues.

With that, I'll sit down once again.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to make any comments?

Seeing none, we'll go to the question on subamendment SA1.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. Are there any members who would like to comment or speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and Calder thanks you as well for remembering where I come from. I rise with interest to speak on this whistle-blower protection act. In fact, I think this is my first opportunity to do so. I came with a number of amendments that I would like to distribute now, please, with the appropriate amount of copies and the originals.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause at this moment and have your amendment distributed.

Hon. members, we will call this amendment A3.

Would the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder like to proceed?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I would. Thank you, Madam Chair. As you can see, this amendment makes a change to section 3(1) by adding a clause after subsection (d), the clause reading: "(e) a statement made to the public by public officials that conflicts with information known to an employee." The rationale behind this is that the current bill outlines wrongdoings to which the act will apply; however, it does not currently touch on misleading statements potentially made by public officials. The amendment will ensure that discrepancies between what is known and what is communicated by public officials will be considered a wrongdoing.

In order to restore trust in the public service, Albertans need to know that the information that they receive from department officials, AHS officials, or representatives from other public entities is consistent with the information that is internal to those offices. Employees of these offices and public entities would often be privy to information that might not be available to the public. Then employees can identify cases wherein true information does not match up with what is made to the public by public officials. This amendment also ensures that public offices responsible for carrying out investigations in the public interest are subject to this clause, which I think might help to ensure that information is accurate, complete, and not misleading.

I think this is a reasonable amendment, and I hope that each member of this House might consider it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to comment or speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would support this amendment. It seems like a very reasoned amendment. It says here: "This Act applies in respect of the following wrongdoings in or relating to departments, public entities or offices of the Legislature or relating to employees." Among them would be a statement made to the public by a public official that conflicts with information known to an employee.

You know, perhaps this could have helped us recently where a question was posed to the Solicitor General. The question was very clearly: could he provide the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer? He said he could not, that he didn't have those recommendations, that the Chief Electoral Officer does not report to him. In fact, he had received those recommendations. It would have been interesting to know. Perhaps we would have had a public official that could have gotten up in that instance and said: actually, no, that's not correct. That's just one example. There are probably hundreds of examples that we could go through, but I won't belabour it. It just makes sense that if there's a statement made to the public by a public official that is incorrect or untrue or is a blatant falsehood, an employee should be able to communicate that so that that individual in the government can be held accountable.

I know we were going to introduce an amendment that was similar to this. We would have to bring it by subamendment now, but we won't belabour the point in the interest of time. That means we'd have to talk this one out forever while we got the subamendment ready. I know Parliamentary Counsel would just love doing that, having to scramble right now. They would be more than willing to do it. I know that. But we won't put them through that.

Just for the record we were going to amend and, instead of what's stated here, say that it would be a gross violation: this act applies in respect of the following wrongdoings in or relating to departments, public entities, or offices of the Legislature or relating to employees' gross violation of established policies or procedures of the department, public entity, or office of the Legislature. That, you know, is another thing that probably should be reported. I think that it might fall under subsection (c), which is "gross mismanagement of public funds or a public asset." One could argue that that could be included in that. I actually think that this amendment would work as well, the NDP amendment. I know that I will be supporting it and hoping that my Wildrose colleagues and friends in the government will as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's important, like my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere . . .

Mr. McAllister: Hey, I'm Chestermere.

Mrs. Forsyth: Sorry. From Airdrie.

. . . to get on the record in regard to supporting this particular amendment, which talks about section 3, adding a section under 3(1). He's added section (e), which is "a statement made to the public by public officials that conflicts with information known to an employee."

My colleague from Airdrie has also talked about the fact that we had a proposed amendment that we were going to be tabling. Time is important, obviously, but we don't seem to be getting too far with the government on the amendments that we have proposed on behalf of Albertans. I think my colleague has also put into the record what we were proposing.

Anything, in my mind, that's important or is going to strengthen this bill is something that needs to be debated in this Legislature. I look across from me and I look at all of the government colleagues that are sitting very quietly over there and haven't spoken other than the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, or as we've got to know him, the Associate Minister of AT and T. He has done his best to try and stick up for this bill and has actually spoken eloquently in regard to some advice that he's obviously taken upon himself or maybe even from his stakeholders that have advised him in regard to what should and shouldn't be in this bill.

We've got on the record that my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka and I would be pleased to meet with his stakeholders and hook them up with our stakeholders and have a good discussion about what amendments need to be brought forward on this bill. If he can convince us otherwise, great. I've got better things to do at 10 after 8 on a Tuesday night than debate legislation. I could be home on the couch reading a good book, watching TV, or even maybe, for that matter, talking to my husband.

So, again, I look forward to hearing what the minister has to say. I will put on the record for my colleagues that we support this amendment. It's another round in the boxing match that we're probably going to be playing over the next several hours. I honestly look forward to hearing from some of the colleagues on the other side.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to stand and speak in support of this amendment from my fellow colleague from Edmonton-Calder. The reason I want to support his amendment is that the wrongdoings definition in this bill is very narrow. What they speak about are acts violating a statute or a regulation, gross mismanagement, or endangering someone's life, health, or safety. These are all things that needed to be in the bill. What's missing is violations of policies, codes of conduct, and the like.

8:10

These can have very serious consequences as well. For example, most of the misconduct exposed within the financial industry, which might have been part of the meltdown we had back in 2008, would have been found in violation of policies, codes of conduct, and other ethical and moral areas. I mean, I think we need to have this. We must have this. This addition of wrongdoing and expanding it allows more members of the public service to come forward and talk about some of the issues that they're seeing rather than just being pigeonholed into having to define it under violation of statute, gross mismanagement, or endangering somebody's life, health, or safety.

There are many, many, many other reasons to step forward to blow the whistle in protecting Albertans to make sure that the services that the government is offering are being offered to everybody in a way that would be becoming of the government. I've had my own experiences with the front lines of the health industry, and I have to say that those people on the front lines are committed, and they are looking out for what is best for themselves and for Albertans. It's touching the way that they are committed to that. Personally, I've got a story of my own, where a nurse who had been present when my mother passed away, unbeknownst to me, had been given a message to give to me on my grad day. I would like to think that somebody who is so committed to their job and to Albertans like myself would be able to seek the protection when they're seeing a violation of a policy or procedure so that they can step forward and speak out in the interests of Albertans.

I think that the Member for Airdrie was speaking earlier about a problem in a hospital where tools weren't being cleansed properly. That would be a violation of policy. Maybe it didn't put anybody's life, health, or safety at risk in that instance, or it may have, but the fact that the policy itself wasn't being followed should have been enough to have a whistle-blower come forward and be protected under this. You know, I feel for these people on the front lines. They're doing the very best that they can with the tools that they have, and they really do care about Albertans. That's why they're doing the jobs they're doing. Let's make sure that when they see something that needs to be brought forward, it's going to be investigated and not just swept under the rug.

We did have an amendment on this, and I just want to make sure that it's in the public record that we were going to amend section 3(1) in this bill by adding a subsection (e), which would have been: gross violation of an established policy or procedure of the department, public entity, or office of the Legislature.

Again, thank you for allowing me to stand up and speak for the constituents of Lacombe-Ponoka and for all Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, if everyone were honest, we wouldn't need bills like this, but they aren't. Most are, I'm confident, but there are temptations. Desperate situations occur, perhaps external pressures from whatever source. Conflicts of interest can tempt one and lead one astray. I think it's incumbent upon every employee that has such knowledge to come forward. They need to know that they're encouraged to do that and that they can do it without fear: fear of retribution, fear of discrimination or, perhaps, of any other actions by their peers or their employer. I think that failure to do so makes one complicit in the transgression. So I think that they should know that they can do this and would be protected.

I appreciate the amendment, and I'll certainly be supporting it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to comment?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to Bill 4. Are there any members who wish to speak?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, as I said, it's a boxing match, and now I think that we're on round 4.

Mr. Anderson: We lost the first five rounds, though.

Mrs. Forsyth: I know, but that's how you box versus how I box. You see, I don't give up. Somebody is ringing a bell over there, and as hard of hearing as I am, I can hear that.

I have the amendment, if I may, and I'm sure that our wonderful pages will be – as it's being passed out, I'll sit down for a minute.

The Deputy Chair: Yes, we'll pause for a few moments while we have the amendment passed to the other members.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you may proceed. This will be amendment A4.

Mrs. Forsyth: Amendment A4. Fourth round, right? You were right.

Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, here we go, round 4. This is going to get the lawyers going. I'm looking forward to the Minister of Justice getting up and speaking on this particular amendment.

Let's start off, for all of those that are interested, on page 6, section 3. I'm prepared to move that Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended as follows. Section 3 is amended by striking out subsection (2), which currently reads: "This act applies only in respect of wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act." Very interesting – very interesting – to see that when we first saw the legislation. To be honest with you, it was probably one of the things that struck us the most when we were looking at the legislation very carefully.

Our amendment is as follows. Section 3 is amended by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) This Act applies in respect of wrongdoings that occur, or have occurred, on or after January 1, 2003.

Item B is section 19. For those that are interested, that is on page 14. Section 19 is amended by striking out subsection (2). Section 36 is on page 26, and section 36 is amended by striking out clause (j).

8:20

The issue is the time limitation within this bill. No wrongdoings will be investigated if more than two years have passed. This amendment will make any wrongdoing in the last 10 years reportable. Violations of laws performed by government and its employees that occurred before whistle-blower protections were introduced should still be reportable.

Now I have read the amendments in. I know this is going to be a good one for the Justice minister and Solicitor General because I've heard him on Rutherford when he was talking about the Election Act and was questioned about this.

This amendment is deleting the statute of limitations on this bill, which I have said before. I know we're going to hear about the retrospect for three years. Currently Bill 7 is retrospective for three years. This question is to the Justice minister. Why can't Bill 4 apply to wrongdoings in the recent past, especially when it's the future reprisals that come from blowing the whistle that matter?

I am going to sit back and listen. I'm falling over. Sorry. It's late at night. I've got heels on, Madam Chair. I should be taking them off, actually.

Wrongdoings, including criminal and civil wrongdoings by government departments, should always be made . . . [interjection] Excuse me? What did he say?

Mr. Anderson: He said how he thought this amendment was a real nice piece of work.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: I know that we're going to hear about the retroactive, so I want to get it on the record that laws can't be retroactive, but any wrongdoing committed in the last 10 years can be reported under the proposed amendments, and the whistle-blower will be protected from reprisal.

I am very interested to hear what the Justice minister has to say about this. Interestingly enough, this is information that we're getting from some of his federal-provincial Justice people that he's talked about in the past when he goes to his FPTs, I guess. We have talked to other lawyers, actually, that support this amendment. It's how you read it.

I'm looking forward to hearing what the Associate Minister of – I'm sorry if I'm offending him – AT and T, what they have to say. If he has a problem with that, he can let me know. The chair has always referred to that. The last thing I want to do is do anything other than use his full title.

I know my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka wants to get up and speak on this. This is one of those amendments where we've actually reached out for legal advice, and we've reached out to some of our federal-provincial-territorial counterparts to get their advice. We've actually reached out to FAIR and those people that are renowned for their experience on whistle-blower legislation. It's important for us to hear what the government has to say about this particular amendment.

I'll be back up again. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate you recognizing me. It is late, but unlike the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, I'm not wearing heels.

I'm going to chat just about the issue of retroactive or retrospective legislation. [interjections] You know, it's really interesting. I've been very, very attentive here. I hear catcalls across the way. I'm just going to keep on talking.

When you deal with the issue of retrospective or retroactive legislation, there's a key distinction. I'll give this House just a brief overview on it. Retrospective legislation is shining the light on something that happened in the past whereas retroactive legislation is changing the rules in the past. I've always felt that retroactive legislation is improper unless you have a time machine, and I don't believe anyone here has a time machine, Madam Chair.

Where the prohibition comes from, dealing with retroactive legislation, Madam Chair, deals with section 11(g) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I'm just going to pull it up on my computer here. This is just on the criminal statute. It says:

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right . . .

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations.

Of course, that only deals with criminal statutes, which typically deal with fines, penalties, incarceration, Madam Chair. What's interesting here is that this statute, of course, is civil. This House has no authority whatsoever to bring in a criminal statute. That is a matter under section 91 of the Constitution which solely rests with the federal government. That being said, there are a number of enforcement mechanisms that make this statute very close to the criminal area. In fact, it does impose significant fines. It is not criminal, but it does involve offences.

For example, penalties as a result of prosecution for an offence under this act include a $25,000 fine for a first conviction and a $100,000 fine for subsequent convictions. Fairly significant. It does, in fact, have teeth. So we would ask ourselves: should we be making legislation that is retroactive, when someone in the past didn't know about this legislation? How could they? It wasn't even introduced. Madam Chair, this legislation wasn't introduced for a period in the past, yet at the time the opposition under this amendment suggests that we should make the rules and rewrite that for the past.

I would respectfully submit to all members of this Assembly that that would make this portion of the law de facto unenforceable. I would even go so far as to suggest that it would leave this law open to a constitutional challenge because this is a grey area. It is not a criminal statute, but at the same time it does impose significant penalties. As I've said, none of us have a time machine per se. So where does this leave us if we go and put this in? I would suggest that this is largely a political amendment from one of the members opposite that thinks that we should just have no statute of limitations whatsoever.

Well, interestingly enough, Madam Chair, almost every piece of legislation has a statute of limitations. The general one is found in section 3 of the Limitations Act, which is two years from when a person knew or ought to have known to an absolute limitation of 10 years. It is a fact of legislation, and it's been found to be necessary. It's been upheld in courts throughout this country.

I would suggest that the act in its entirety doesn't apply to wrongdoings before the enforced date that the commissioner would be required to investigate, but it would have the discretion if they consider it to be appropriate. So I would suggest, again, that the amendment would effectively force the commissioner to investigate old wrongdoings even if it was eminently clear that any and all evidence that might have assisted him was dispensed many years ago with the passage of time. So you're going to have issues of trying to call witnesses back from many different years. Of course, there's going to be a defence raised in whatever action there may be. As I mentioned, there may be a constitutional challenge.

The commissioner is an independent officer, and this would be a very difficult one for him to actually go and enforce. If you wanted to try to go back five or 10 years, you're going to have old evidence. You're going to have witnesses that understandably forget things. That's why Canadian jurisprudence is so reluctant to allow for this type of retroactive legislation.

I would suggest that the provisions that the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation has suggested are adequate here and that this amendment should be rejected for the reasons that I have indicated.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I will save you a spot soon. I'm just so anxious to speak on your amendment.

It's interesting, you know, that although we didn't confer on this particular amendment, we in fact had something almost identical to this: section 3 amended to strike out subsection (2), section 19 striking out subsection (2), section 36. It's almost exactly a mirror image. I think both of our research teams came to a very similar conclusion on the problem that's associated with sections 3, 19, and 36. This current bill only applies to wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this act. The bill also allows the commissioner not to investigate a disclosure if two or more years have passed since the wrongdoing was discovered. It feels like a problem there. Absolutely. The amendment will ensure that time period applications do not hinder the commissioner from investigating and resolving issues that pertain to wrongdoings and public interest disclosures.

8:30

We may well have seen wrongdoings in the province that have gone unreported due to a lack of strong whistle-blower protection in the past. In other words, whistle-blowers would have likely felt intimidated into silence in the past because there have not been safe procedures in place for employees to, so called, blow the whistle.

So I say, Madam Chair, that if this government is serious about uncovering wrongdoing in the name of the public interest, then it would allow for this act to be applied to cases that have gone unreported in the past. Wrongdoing in public entities and in the workplace in general is often systemic and long standing. Typically gross mismanagement and illegality begin with a single instance repeated over time and spreading to other areas and other individuals. There has to be retroactive application of protection for whistle-blowers under this new bill that we're reading here today to ensure that offices wherein there is systemic wrongdoing may be found.

The commissioner should not be able to drop investigations arbitrarily after a two-year period as well because this will allow the commissioner to allow investigations to, so called, time out, to run out the clock. Although investigations should be completed in a reasonable amount of time, which would ideally be much shorter than two years, there are conceivable cases of much more significant wrongdoing involving entire offices or entities which might require long-term investigation by the commissioner.

Deleting this section would ensure that a loophole for ending investigations according to an arbitrary time limit is then closed. Quite simply, investigations should be conducted in a reasonable time frame, and closing investigations according to any sort of meaningless, arbitrary time limit will limit the commissioner's ability to remedy wrongdoings in carrying out his duties.

Also, an arbitrary time limit will likely increase the likelihood that whistle-blowers may publicly release information relating to a wrongdoing. If a whistle-blower feels frustrated because a commissioner ends an investigation, then he or she may feel inclined to pursue other avenues for disclosure. This is in the best interest, I believe, of all parties involved to ensure that the commissioner commits to the beginning and the completion of investigations.

Again, in closing, it's interesting that both our researchers and the Wildrose came to a very similar conclusion here. I think it's a question of common sense rising to the top – right? – as does cream. The idea that we would have these limitations in place I think goes against the spirit of giving a potential investigator, a commissioner the full powers to be able to carry out their job in the office that we are going to create here.

I certainly would invite other comment on this. I would like to learn more about how your research came together on this and how both of our research teams came to a very similar enlightened and reasonable conclusion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. We came up with this amendment based on what's going on right now. When we're looking at what's happening and where these complaints are coming from, we want to make sure that the commissioner can investigate what has been going on in government, in our public bodies if there is issue to do so. Now, I think this is more retrospective than retroactive. We want to make sure that the commissioner can't refuse to investigate or to discontinue an investigation when it has been under way as well. If more than two years have passed, according to this piece of legislation, they can stop investigating it. If their staff drags their feet long enough, we might not ever get to the bottom of that particular individual's concern. We want to make sure that anything that's going on right now is seen.

What happens if we've got somebody today – today – who has an issue, who has seen wrongdoing? Where are they going to go? Well, they can come and talk to me, but what's going to happen? They're not protected. They could go and talk to the media, but again they're not protected. They're left open to reprisal. They're left open to dismissal. They're left without any protection. Where are the Albertans in this? Where are the taxpayers? If somebody has something that they need to come forward with, it should be investigated. We might not be able to put forward a penalty on it, but at least we can see that the procedures are going to be changed to fix whatever issue is happening in that public entity.

The way this reads now, the commissioner need not ever investigate that. We won't ever see it corrected, and we'll just see this issue roll on and on and on until maybe somebody else has the gumption to step forward if it happens. But if it stops, well, we still don't know that there's been a misuse or a misappropriation or whatever the issue might be. We just won't see it happen. We won't be able to make sure that that issue has been rectified. We've got to make sure that our public entities are running the way that we envision them to. We're here in the public interest. They're there in the public interest.

We've got to make absolutely sure that when there is an issue, if it's today, not when this is signed into law and given royal assent, that person and their issues will be investigated when this becomes law, not just pushed off to the side and told: oh, well, sorry; your issue, your problem, what you're blowing the whistle on, well, it didn't really exist because this law hadn't come into force yet. We absolutely need to make sure that they have the ability and that we have the ability to go back and make sure that our public entities are following the best practices at all times, not just from this point moving forward.

I hope that some of my other fellow members will have some more comments on this. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to this amendment, but I'm going to disagree with the hon. Minister of Justice in the sense that wrongdoing can actually be investigated under criminal law under the statute of limitations, whatever rules and regulations apply accordingly. This is about so-called protection of the whistle-blower. It has nothing to do with, certainly, any type of criminal activity that would fall under the auspices of the Department of Justice and all the rules and all those regulations.

You know, the prime example on a political level is something akin to the sponsorship scandal, that took a long time gelling before investigations were complete. This isn't about a defined wrongdoing in the sense that something has been proved. This is about an alleged wrongdoing that could possibly be investigated. That's all it is, giving protection to the whistle-blower. That could still be investigated anyway without protection to the whistle-blower. If the intent of the act is to protect the whistle-blower, this doesn't affect whether or not the minister and the officer or the commissioner has the right to investigate wrongdoing or make whatever type of administrative changes they want to make.

The idea that this would not have some sort of effect coming into force on January 1, 2003, is interesting because this government has routinely passed laws that came into force on past dates. That goes back to not just the last government but the government before that and the government before that.

When I look at this, this is just a very basic step in making sure that this act is inclusive in the protection of the actual whistle-blower, not necessarily in whether or not somebody has found a wrongdoing or an offence to civil law or an offence to criminal law. That is something that would be completely different.

I'm not sure I understand the whole idea of retrospective and retroactive because that would technically, in my mind, be dealing with something else altogether in the prosecution. This is just dealing with the protection of the whistle-blower to come forward and report something that they alleged as a wrongdoing. The commissioner or the officer then has the ability to take a look at it under this act and give protection to that whistle-blower. Whether or not they find a wrongdoing is another matter. Whether or not they even investigate is another matter. That falls under different provisions, and they have to make the evaluation. But the alleged wrongdoing, to say that they can't or nothing applies until this comes into force, I suggest, makes the public extremely suspicious of what the intent of this law is.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you Madam Chair. I'm going to be brief. I really need some clarification. I've said in this House on several occasions recently that I'm not a lawyer. When you're not a lawyer, you listen to lawyers and look for legal advice from other lawyers. The joke is always that you can never get a bunch of lawyers in a room to agree on anything. You look to their wisdom and you look to their guidance and you try and understand from a common sense or a common practicality. I guess it's like a judge sitting. They listen to the lawyers, and they listen to what's brought before them, and then they make the decision even though you've got two lawyers fighting on the same case, one proving something innocent, one proving something guilty.

One of the things that this minister brought to my attention – I, again, was listening very attentively, but he talks very fast – is the fact that he referred to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms under section 11(g). I don't have that in front of me. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been around for quite some time. Under that Charter of Rights and Freedoms he talked about the criminal statutes. It only applies to criminal legislation. Then he went on to say that this isn't a bill that's criminal, but it could be very close to criminal statutes because this is a civil statute. My colleague from Airdrie, I'm sure, will be able to fill us in better than anybody, as a lawyer, about criminal statutes versus civil statutes. I don't quite understand that.

What was interesting was that as I listened very intensely, he went on to say that this could very well become a constitutional challenge. He doesn't want that to happen. Yet in the same breath, when we're talking about .05 to .08 legislation being a constitutional challenge, he doesn't have a problem with it. Here we have two bills in this Legislature, that have hit this Legislature floor. One on .05 and taking people's licences away and, for that matter, their cars. This minister is just standing in this Legislature passionately talking about the fact that they were expecting a constitutional challenge and that they would challenge it to the fullest degree. So we take that one step further. Now we're talking about people's lives, their careers, their livelihood, their integrity, their reputation, bringing forward a solid piece of legislation under Bill 4 because they have had the guts – and that's the only word I can think of – to blow the whistle on somebody doing something wrongful, and he's afraid to step that one step further and talk about a constitutional challenge.

To me, it's absolutely frustrating that in one breath this government can stand in this House and has no problem, when somebody blows over .05, taking away their car without due process, and we have another bill that's talking about protecting the rights of people who are blowing the whistle on some very, very serious charges. It could be serious if you look across this country at whistle-blower legislation that has been blown in the past. Serious, serious things have happened. He doesn't want to take that challenge.

I always sort of think of when I was a minister, and I can think of several pieces of legislation, as you can, Madam Chair, that challenged constitutionality. I want you to remember a piece of legislation that you brought forward in this House, that you were so passionate about: PCHAD, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act.

Hence, I can talk to you about a piece of legislation that I was very passionate about, which was PCHIP, which was the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. Both of us through that process – I was with you through that process when you were bringing the PCHAD legislation; you weren't with me through the PCHIP, but I know you would have been if you were there – talked about: "You can't do this. You're going to get a constitutional challenge." Well, guess what? They challenged me constitutionally about the PCHIP legislation, and guess what? We won, which now protects probably, the last count I had, 950 children apprehended under PCHIP. I would challenge you, Madam Chair, to go to your government and ask them how many kids have gone through your PCHAD legislation and how many of those children have been saved.

It boggles my mind that we're backing down. This is a government and a province that brags about its entrepreneurship, and it brags about the people in this province that are in the forefront of everything. And we cannot – cannot – stand up on behalf of the people in this province who have the guts and want to bring forward this government or anyone else, for that matter, in regard to the wrongdoings that they're doing, and this Minister of Justice says: I don't want to have that constitutional challenge. Yet he'll do that with .05 or .08.

I'm looking forward to my other colleagues talking. I'm looking forward to the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation – and, Minister, I'm still, still, still struggling with the name of your ministry when I still haven't seen any of that through all of this legislation so far that your government has defeated. People across this country are watching this bill, and those same people are saying that this is the worst legislation in the country. So let's get on. Let's move forward. Let's talk about some of the amendments that are going to make this bill maybe even half-assed good so that we can move forward and help the people in this province.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak to this amendment. I actually think this is a critical amendment that we added, and I really wish the government would look at this. There's no reason for them not to. It's amending section 3 to make sure that

- (2) This Act applies in respect of [all] wrongdoings that occur, or have occurred, on or after January 1, 2003.

8:50

Now, I think that the extension of it back a few years is something worth looking at. Remember, what we're looking at here is that we're not necessarily – and I could be wrong. Please correct me if I'm wrong, but I do not remember coming across parts of the bill where there are actual penalties against the wrongdoers for the specific things. That would be so broad. How can you put a jail sentence or fines or whatever on someone who may have done something dangerous in the health care system or whatever? There are other ways of dealing with those issues. I understand that.

If we were sending folks to jail in this legislation for things that occurred from the whistle-blowing acts that had been given, then I could see that maybe there'd be a problem with extending the term from three years to seven years. But this is really just looking at how long we're going to allow this bill to look back with regard to whistle-blowers and how much protection we're going to extend to them. Really, this is almost like a shield bill. It's not really a sword bill. Because it's a shield bill for whistle-blowers, I don't think that that's a problem constitutionally, but I could be wrong. I look forward to the Minister of Justice explaining to me why perhaps that is a problem, but because it's a shield, I'm not sure why that would be a constitutional issue. If it was a sword, then it might be. I'm not sure, so I would like some clarification around that.

The other thing: these are the really offensive parts of this that absolutely need to be fixed. I mean, you have section 19 amended by striking out subsection (2), which is:

- (2) The Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure or, if an investigation has been initiated, may discontinue the investigation
  - (a) if more than 2 years has passed since the date that the wrongdoing was discovered;
  - (b) in any . . . circumstances prescribed in the regulations.

Again, I don't understand that, that two years passes from the date that wrongdoing was discovered. Well, if it was discovered three years ago, but this legislation doesn't come into effect until now, then why would we have this provision in here? It doesn't make sense. What do we mean by "discovered"? Who discovered it? Was it known to the whistle-blower or known to the commissioner? I'd like some clarification on that, minister of transparency.

Mrs. Forsyth: And accountability.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'll call him minister of transparency just to shorten it up.

Why are we doing that? Who does this apply to? Is it the commissioner? Two years has to pass since the date of discovery of the wrongdoing by the commissioner or by the whistle-blower? Again, this is important. As you know, judges, I think, would need to know this in order to interpret this law. They're going to look to the Hansard and see what was said in that regard. Are we talking about discovery by the whistle-blower or the commissioner or some other person? Even if it is either of those, why the two-year limit?

Now, the second piece, the one that's a real problem, is section 36. Again, this makes this bill just very, very unpalatable. It specifically says in here that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

- (j) prescribing circumstances in which the Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure.

Well, that's great. What that section says is that the cabinet can decide unilaterally to make regulations when they feel that they don't want something to be investigated, so prescribing circumstances in which the Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure.

Guys, gals, members, that's really weak. I mean, how can we honestly put that in there? You're basically allowing the cabinet to have the ability to make regulations unilaterally without coming back to this House that specifically could change the intent of the entire bill. They could come and say: "You know what? In circumstances where we know the minister is involved, we're not going to allow the whistle-blower act to apply to this individual."

Please, minister of transparency, let me know if I'm missing something here. It seems to say that the cabinet has unilateral authority to essentially wipe out the entire use of this act, basically say: "You know what? We're going to make . . ." If something is embarrassing to them, they can make a regulation that specifically exempts whatever is embarrassing to them without coming back to the House.

So there are three major problems. There's section 36(j), which our amendment would strike out, which seems to be more than reasonable. Then there's section 19, which needs to be clarified at the very least. Are we talking about the commissioner or are we talking about the whistle-blower with regard to that two-years-from-discovery statute of limitations, so to speak? It's not really a statute of limitations, frankly. It's just saying when you can investigate something. In my view, that's different from a statute of limitations, so I don't think that's the right way to describe what this is. Then section 3 allows the investigations to look back. Section 3(2): "This Act applies . . . in respect of wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act."

I would like to know from the Minister of Justice. He practised law for a lot longer than me. No doubt about that. I was a baby lawyer. I got out before it ruined me. I haven't been corrupted like some in this House. My decade of practising law. There's a spark of idealism still burning.

Even though I haven't practised for a while, I understand that you can't have an act that's retroactive with regard to giving out penalties and so forth. I get that. I understand that. But with regard to this, I don't think that's what this act does. With regard to what we're talking about here, if we're talking about investigations into wrongdoings, if a whistle-blower wants to blow something on something that occurred three years ago, shouldn't the whistle-blower protection act protect that individual for something that they're now letting us know may have happened three years ago? I'm not sure how that would make the bill retroactive. It would make it retrospective.

Mr. Denis: No, that's retroactive.

Mr. Anderson: Well, how would it make it retroactive? It's being used as a shield, not a sword.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: I don't claim to be an expert on it, but I don't understand, you know, how it could possibly be unconstitutional to say that whistle-blower protection law can't protect somebody for bringing up something that happened before it goes into effect. That doesn't make sense. In other words, an individual comes forward after this law is proclaimed and says: last Monday I saw the Premier doing X, Y, and Z. Or the minister or an MLA from this side or anybody. If he says that, apparently the investigator, the commissioner, can't investigate that. Not only that, but the protections in the act don't apply to that individual whistle-blower. I mean, it just doesn't make sense. I'm not seeing it here. I certainly think it's a debatable question.

Please, hon. Justice minister, tell me how it would be so awful to allow the commissioner to investigate things that happened before this act came into effect.

I could see if there are penalties in the act, specific penalties. [interjections] No, no, no. Hear me out here. If there are penalties that specifically say that if you've done something wrong in government and the whistle-blower blows his whistle on you and there's a fine of $50,000 when that happens, which isn't in here, but say that it was, then I could see that being a problem. You can't make something illegal that wasn't legal before. But that's not what this says. This says that you can't even look back and blow the whistle on it. How is that retroactive? I'm not seeing how that's retroactive. You should be able to look back and blow the whistle on it and still have protection under this act. I don't think the law with regard to retroactivity applies here in this instance, but I could be wrong.

The section 36 issue is unconscionable. That needs to be passed. There's no way that cabinet should have the power to unilaterally make regulations specifically, as in the words here, "prescribing circumstances in which the Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure." What is the point of passing the act in the Legislature if you allow the cabinet unilateral authority to essentially wipe out the entire intent of the act? It makes no sense, Madam Chair. It makes no sense. I mean, you could literally pass this legislation and think it's the greatest in the world, and then the cabinet could individually, according to whatever circumstances arise, say specifically: you know, we're going to pass a quick regulation on this so that the commissioner can't investigate us.

Is that wrong? Is that not what it says? If it's not what it says, please clarify it for me. If it is what it says and you know that – and we've pointed it out to you now – then one must ask why it's in here and why you know it's in here yet are leaving it in here despite having an amendment brought forward in this regard. That to me is a recipe for a cover-up. That's what it is. Tell me I'm wrong. Minister of transparency, please. I beg of you. Tell me I'm wrong on that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to talk on this amendment and say how important I, too, feel this amendment is. I want to agree with the hon. Member for Airdrie here. I think that when I read this, "prescribing circumstances in which the Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure," that's exactly the same thing we saw in Bill 2 with the Lieutenant Governor in Council being able to make any changes to the regulations at any time. Basically, I think the easiest way to explain it is that it's their get-out-of-jail-free card, that at any time they can make changes to suit what they think is necessary.

Now, that could be what is in the best interests of the public. You know, maybe it'll work out for the best. Chances are, probably not. Going to where the act applies only in wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force, well, if it was wrong a week ago, it's still wrong today. There's no reason – and the constitutional challenges. Like the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said, well, maybe we need to make a stand and say: okay; let's have a constitutional challenge and get by that. I mean, if we know it's right, we have to take this opportunity to put it in legislation, to make those changes to ensure that the public is represented and protected. You know, if there are other circumstances that come up that happened a year ago that somebody finds out about, well, there should be no reason that that person can't have the whistle blown on them.

I mean, the ministry that brought this act up is "accountability." That's the first word of the ministry. Accountability. This is being accountable to the people of Alberta. We have to be accountable to them and not go and say: "Well, you know what? We're sorry that in your workplace this happened a year ago, but we can't be accountable for what happened a year ago to you. We're only going to be accountable from this day forward. Sorry. Take your lumps and carry on. We're just looking from this day forward."

We were elected back in April. We've been accountable since April. This Legislature has been here for 100 years. It's been accountable for 100 years to the people of Alberta. What makes us think that we can bring in an act that only makes us accountable from one day forward? We have to look after the people that elected us. I mean, I sure would hate to have someone come into my office and say: "We sure wanted to blow the whistle here on this seniors' home or this hospital or this public building or with some public employee. You know, what's going on is really bad, and it went on six months ago, and I'd sure like to talk to you about it." I'd hate to have to be the one to tell him: "Sorry. There's nothing I can do for you. This act only counts from Thursday forward."

I really think that we need to have a strong look at this and really think about who this act is affecting and how we can make it all better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, the saying is: are you prepared to die on this mountain? It's one of those mountains that, you know, you're prepared to die on. We have the House leader and Member for Airdrie over in the corner obviously talking to the minister of accountability and transparency to try and get some clarification from him in regard to some questions that we had that needed to get answered.

The struggle that we're having in this particular legislation is the fact that we just don't have the answers. We have the Justice minister that stands up and goes into his computer under section 11(g) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and talks about a criminal statute. This isn't criminal legislation. I know for a fact that anybody can serve in a provincial jail and do two years less a day, or you can serve in a federal jail for two years plus a day. Criminal statutes come under criminal legislation. For example, the Criminal Code is what I assume he's talking about. Under criminal statutes it depends on what you're charged with, obviously, under the Criminal Code.

Then he talks about civil statutes. As I explained earlier, I'm not a lawyer. Maybe he'd like to get up in this Legislature and tell us the difference between civil statute and criminal statute. Yet he said that this is more like a civil statute. But it's bordering on criminal statutes. I guess in my eyes it's either criminal or it's not criminal. It's either civil or it's not civil. Quite frankly, I would really like some clarification from him on what the difference is.

Then we get into the retrospective and the retroactive. You know, laws can't be retroactive, but any wrongdoing committed since any period of time can be reported under this proposed legislation. Our proposal under our legislation is 10 years.

The other thing – and I'm sorry to be repetitive on this kind of thing – is the comments that were made in regard to the constitutional challenge, and I've talked about that. I was very, very thankful that when I brought forward the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act – and we were challenged constitutionally – the government at the time, the PC government, decided to go to the wall. They decided that they were going to challenge this, and it didn't matter what. Alberta was different from other provinces and unique. We didn't want to be like every other province in this country, so we were going to be different. That particular PCHIP legislation still stands today as one of the most innovative pieces of legislation in North America along with your legislation.

9:10

When we talk about constitutional challenges and the minister stands up not six months ago and talks about the constitutional challenges he's prepared to endure and to have the government go through a constitutional challenge on the .05 legislation and then says in this House when we're talking about protecting people who want to blow the whistle that he can't support a constitutional challenge, one must scratch their head.

Mr. Denis: Keep scratching.

Mrs. Forsyth: He's told me to keep scratching it. And he talks about the chirping in the background. This is the Justice minister and Solicitor General of the province, that's supposed to be setting an example for everyone in this province as the Justice minister and Solicitor General. It's absolutely an embarrassment as far as I'm concerned.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j). That's rather abusive and insulting language. I'd ask the member to please withdraw that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Is he asking me to withdraw something when he is yelling across the floor telling me to scratch my head when we're talking about a constitutional challenge and what's important to the people of this province? I say that in his role as the Solicitor General, someone I was for four years, and in setting an example for the people of this province, that is an embarrassment. Madam Chair, no.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we need to stick to speaking on the amendments and not enter into personal attacks.

Mrs. Forsyth: Madam Chair, the personal attacks came from that side first. Let's be clear. I was talking about what the amendment speaks to.

The Deputy Chair: From this point on we will refrain from making personal attacks from either side of the floor.

Mrs. Forsyth: I was not making personal attacks. What I was saying was that this was an embarrassment for someone in that capacity to be yelling across the floor in his capacity as the Solicitor General.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I have ruled that we will refrain from making personal attacks on either side of the floor.

Please continue with amendment A4.

Debate Continued

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Let's continue on the amendment without comments from across the floor, Madam Chair. I'm fine with that.

As I was saying, I listened to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General when he was talking . . .

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: I was looking at you other than looking at the paper to refer to my notes.

Under section 11(g) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms he was going on about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms applying to criminal statutes. He also made the point that this bill is not criminal statutes; it's civil statutes. It's close to criminal statutes, but not really, and about the constitutional challenge.

What we're trying to find out from this government, which is in the amendment that we're speaking to, is some clarification from the minister of transformation on some very critical questions that have been asked his way both from the Member for Airdrie and myself. So we would appreciate – I think the Member for Airdrie has had a conversation with the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, and maybe he would like to stand up and clarify the questions we've asked him.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment A4?

Mr. Anderson: Well, I will clarify as much as I think I've had it explained. My understanding is that with regard to 3(2), because it's in the wrongdoings to which this act applies section, they're saying that "this Act applies only in respect of wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act." The wrongdoing provisions apparently are being assumed here to be the sword provisions – right? – the ones where there are penalties attached to them.

Now, I really think this is fuzzy, guys. I think it could be interpreted that wrongdoings could mean wrongdoings that the whistle-blower whistles down and that need to be investigated. In that case, then, it would apply. In other words, it would shut down any wrongdoings – there's an argument to be made that this act essentially says that anything that happens before we pass this thing this week and it gets a stamp by the Lieutenant Governor is not subject to this act. I mean, I really think you can read it that way. I hope not. I hope that the minister will get onboard and stand up and clarify that because judges will look at Hansard to determine what was meant by it. If the government can stand up and say that it is absolutely their intent that the shield provisions in this act – the protections, the investigative powers, all those things – are intended to be in place and be available for acts that occurred before this comes into effect, then I think that would be very helpful. So perhaps they could do that.

With regard to section 19 it's specifically in the investigations section, so we know that it does apply to investigations. It specifically says:

(2) The Commissioner is not required to . . .

I guess he may but is not required to.

. . . investigate a disclosure or, if an investigation has been initiated, may discontinue the investigation

(a) if more than 2 years has passed since the date that the wrongdoing was discovered.

We don't know if that's the wrongdoing discovered by the whistle-blower or by the commissioner. Again, poorly drafted.

Then section 36. I'm not going to put words in the mouth of the minister, but I do not understand how – and I think he had questions about it in the past, too – we can say that the cabinet should be allowed to prescribe circumstances in which the commissioner is not required to investigate. Doesn't that seem just a little bit asinine, that we pass a whistle-blower legislation act and then in the act we give the cabinet the ability to make regulations that would allow them to tell the commissioner not to investigate themselves? I don't know. It just doesn't make sense. I mean, apparently, it's so they can pass rules regarding vexatious. That's covered in another portion of the act, so it doesn't make sense.

I just don't understand. I don't understand why we can't refer this thing to a committee, get it properly dealt with, or – we're in committee right now – why we can't fix this thing. It would make all the sense in the world to do so. Government, please, you know, bring a subamendment or tell us that you're going to bring a subamendment to this section, and we can move on and talk about Bill 7 for a while while you get it ready if you don't like all of it.

Surely – surely – section 36(j) is out of line, and surely 19(2) should be clarified so we know what the heck it means, whether it means commissioner or whistle-blower, with regard to the date of discovery. Then just some clarification. If the minister of transparency is saying that the investigative powers and the protective powers of this act apply to acts that occurred before this act comes into force and effect, if he's saying that, that's good. We agree with him. That's what the act should apply to, but the act seems to either contradict it or certainly cloud it. If we could just clarify that, I think that we'd have a much better piece of legislation. I know what the lawyers, quote, unquote, are saying there who helped draft this, but it's not the lawyers from Alberta Justice that are going to be responsible for interpreting this act. It's judges and regular Albertans. So if we're not clear on the rules, it doesn't really matter what Alberta Justice thinks it means. It's what the judge thinks it means and it's what Albertans think it means that matters. Hopefully, we can get some clarification, at least get it on Hansard, anyway, so we can move on and proceed.

9:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to comment?

Mrs. Forsyth: If I may, Madam Chair, I don't know how much more we can beg and plead for this hon. member, the hon. associate minister, to do some clarification. You can understand why across this country this bill has been slammed by the renowned organizations in regard to whistle-blower legislation. Now, I can see you sitting there, and I can see you mulling this over in your head. We're prepared, actually, I guess, to adjourn debate on this particular amendment so you can get some clarification. We've tried as best we can to give some information on what we think are faults in this bill, and I just am struggling to no end with the fact that we have had no answers yet in regard to some of the questions that the Member for Airdrie has asked.

I guess I will sit down again. We will wait for the minister to get up and try and clarify the wrongdoings under section 3. It clearly says: part 1, Wrongdoings. We've asked some good questions. Section 19 is the same. None of this makes any sense. You talk about subsection (2):

The Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure or, if an investigation has been initiated, may discontinue the investigation

- (a) if more than 2 years has passed since the date that the wrongdoing was discovered.

Minister, I can tell you that there is legislation in this House that has passed over two years ago that we spent hours and hours and hours debating, and I'd be more than prepared to table it. It was urgent for the government to do it. The Health Act comes to mind. It still hasn't been proclaimed the last time I checked, which was about a month ago. I can't remember how many pieces of legislation that have passed in this Legislature in the time that I've been here where, when we checked to see if it had been proclaimed, it hadn't been proclaimed, but there certainly was some urgency to it. We're in the same boat today.

Again, I'm going to ask you on behalf of Albertans, on behalf of the judges that are going to have some questions and probably again look at this legislation and say: where is the clarification here? I know we have a ton of lawyers in Justice. I know you have a leg. review policy that I'm sure this legislation has gone through, and surely to goodness somebody has some questions somewhere.

With that, once again, I'll sit down, and hopefully the minister will get up and speak.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment on or question amendment A4 to Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act?

Mr. Scott: Madam Chair, I said this during second reading, but let me emphasize it again. The act already allows the commissioner to investigate wrongdoings before the in force date. The act in its entirety does not apply to wrongdoings before the in force date. However, the commissioner would not be required to investigate but would have discretion to do so if they considered it appropriate. The opposition's amendment would effectively force the commissioner to investigate old wrongdoings even if it was eminently clear that any and all evidence that might have assisted them had disappeared many years ago or all the relevant possible witnesses are long gone.

The commissioner is an independent officer who reports to the Legislature as a whole and should have the discretion not to investigate where such investigations would not serve the public interest or constitute a good use of resources. For that reason, Madam Chair, I do not support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. minister.

Are there any other comments or questions on amendment A4 to Bill 4?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will return to the bill. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You have an amendment at the table for me, which I would ask be distributed, in the yellow envelope right there.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause until we have that amendment distributed to the other members. We will call this amendment A5.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, if you would like to proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Perfect. Thank you very much. This is going to look familiar because we're starting to see in this discussion the same sections coming up over and over and over again. They seem to be the ones that are causing either the most questions or, as it's believed by a number of people, are most in need of changing. In other words, we disagree with what the government chose to do here.

My amendment, which I'm moving on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-McCall, is to amend section 3 by completely striking out subsection (2). Whereas the previous amendment wanted to change it so that it said anything that happened on or after January of 2003, I don't think there should be a limitation on it. Now, I understand the argument that the minister is making: "Oh, come on. You know, what if we have to go back and look at something and the witnesses are dead and all paperwork is dust? That's impossible." Fair enough. But the minister has given himself the ability in section 19, for example, to dismiss anything or to not investigate something that is frivolous or vexatious or doesn't have adequate particulars about the wrongdoing.

You know, legislation is kind of a magical thing in that when you really start to get to know how this stuff is put together or you work a lot with a piece of legislation, you start to see how the whole thing is put together. If you look at the index, that starts to sort of walk you through how it works. For example, part 1 is on wrongdoings and what's covered and what's not covered by the act. Then a little later on it talks about investigations. So you can have a wrongdoing that may not be investigated. I wonder if you could do it the other way around. I'm not so sure.

So what my colleague was trying to do and I'm now talking about was to make the statement that on anything that you can possibly investigate that might have been a wrongdoing, the whistle-blower would be protected. I mean, I take the point that the minister made previously about, well, you know, we can't go back forever. That's true, but you're also not likely to have a whistle-blower in need of protection. If they're having to go back that far, they're probably dead, so it's not an issue.

When you look at how long it takes to dig information out of this government or to put all the pieces together on some of the big issues of wrongdoing like Enron, that was a long time in putting that together. Even with this government we're dealing today with information that has been dug out from freedom of information requests that took place in 2005. That's seven years ago, and we're just beginning to start to understand the implication of what some of those FOIP requests are revealing to us. So to say that we don't call it a wrongdoing – let me get the exact language here because, boy, is language ever important here. Section 3 says "Wrongdoings to which this act applies," and section 3(2) is essentially saying that a wrongdoing that occurs before this act comes into place is not a wrongdoing.

The minister himself was trying to tell us earlier, I think, that a commissioner could still investigate something even if it wasn't classified as a wrongdoing because it didn't meet the test of having occurred after the act came into force. The point that I'm trying to make here is that especially in this day and age and particularly with this government, not that I'm accusing you of any wrongdoing, but honestly it is so hard to get information out of you folks that it can take us years. When we do start to find out that there has been something that at the minimum requires explanation, there's just so much blocking, again, of additional information or of the ability to get an explanation. It seems to take a very long time.

I think we have to recognize that if we're going to offer protection to people, we may have to go back to before this act occurred. We're trying to do this to have a better government, and we're trying to do it to make sure that we're all consciously doing the best we can. You do fall into bad habits at times. You do get used to doing something a certain way and may forget that it used to be done a different way. I don't know, but I can't agree that it's only appropriate to consider an act being a wrongdoing after this act has come into commission. It's just not realistic.

That's the point of this. We don't have to spend a lot of time on it because the same concept but a slightly different application was applied in the previous motion. To be honest with you, I can't see that my amendment is going to be any more palatable to the government members than the previous one, especially because they only said after 2003 and I'm saying forever, as far back as you can go and manage to produce information.

For anybody who just wants to write this stuff off really quickly, go through some of the other sections in the act that give protection and give context to what is going on here. So you want to look at section 3 along with section 19, which is the section that says when an investigation is not required, and also, further along, look at things like 52: proceedings of the commissioner are not subject to review. That sort of starts to stack up if you take a longer view at it.

But I won't talk about a different section. I'll try and amend it. That's coming. I know you're excited, and you look forward to that. In the meantime for most of the arguments I've heard about why this section should stay, actually, the answers to them are found elsewhere in the bill.

I would ask for support for amendment A5, which is to amend section 3 by striking out subsection (2).

Thanks very much.

9:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment?

Seeing none, we will proceed to the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on to Bill 4. Are there any members who wish to comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on Bill 4.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have an amendment, with the original on top and the appropriate amount of copies to distribute to the House.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause while we have that distributed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A6 to Bill 4.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you may proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. You can see that this is a fairly comprehensive amendment, looking at section 5, striking out subsection (1) and then substituting the following:

(1) The Commissioner must establish and maintain, in accordance with this Act, a uniform set of written procedures, including time periods, for managing and investigating disclosures by employees for whom chief officers are responsible.

As well, striking out in section 5 subsections (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), and (9) and, finally, in section 13 amending clause (d) by striking out "department, public entity or office of the Legislature" and substituting "Commissioner."

Madam Chair, the current bill as brought forward allows each department to have different sets of procedures as developed by the chief officer within each department. This amendment will ensure that the commissioner will establish a uniform set of procedures for disclosure and ensure a high standard of whistle-blower protection across departments, offices, and public entities as well.

Allowing each department, office, and entity to establish their own internal procedures I think will create vast and difficult differences in the process for so-called blowing the whistle here in the province of Alberta, which will create confusion from the perspective of the administrators of the commissioner's office and employees in the province. We think that the commissioner should be responsible for ensuring that all of the province's entities have uniformity of procedure for blowing the whistle to ensure fairness in the disclosure process of an individual choosing to blow the whistle. Employees who may transfer from one department to another as well must be confident that the process that they have learned in their original environment will be transferable and that they will continue to be protected in their new workplace.

From an administrative perspective a uniform set of procedures will allow the commissioner and the commissioner's office to ensure that regulating the chief officer's internal process is manageable. Each chief officer internal to each department will have a different understanding, otherwise, of what whistle-blower protection looks like.

Although minimum requirements for internal processes are an important first step, these requirements can and should be regulated by the commissioner across all public departments, entities, and offices to ensure fair and consistent protection for whistle-blowers. This will ease the burden on the commissioner's office because it will not have to review different sets of procedures, which will be presented in different formats. Instead, hard work at the front end by the commissioner's office should pay long-term dividends because then the commissioner will not have to continuously review the compliance of varying internal disclosure procedures.

This is a bit of a bureaucratic amendment, Madam Chair, but it also, I think, mirrors the approach that other jurisdictions have used. I think it's eminently sensible to put into the hands of the commissioner that would be created by this bill the opportunity to provide uniformity throughout the public service in regard to a person who desires to come forward with information that they think is a problem somehow in their department. By allowing that oversight by the commissioner's office, we start from the front end creating something that people can recognize as the standard procedure, so to speak, in public service when they are choosing to disclose public information in the public interest.

This is not something that we just made up, right? It's a bureaucratic process that we've seen employed elsewhere, and we think that it's an eminently reasonable idea that I would encourage all of our fellow MLAs here this evening to support. With that, I leave it.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to comment?

Ms Blakeman: I am not sure what the hon. member is up to. If we strike out subsections (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), and (9), it appears – essentially, this is setting out how the investigations are supposed to be managed and that there are to be a number of processes regarding this and that and the next thing, which is all laid out here, to be established in each department. I just wonder why you've done this. For example, if you cut out (3), then there would be no jurisdiction, no empowerment for the commissioner to ask the chief officer of any given department to provide a copy of their procedures. There would be no ability under section (4) for the commissioner to review those procedures.

I know that in the first section you're trying to get a uniform set that sort of carries through, but I don't understand what you're hoping to achieve by deleting the rest of the sections in here. For example, if you have a department that has a set of procedures but they're not great, under section (5) the commissioner could determine that those procedures that were established are not great, that they don't meet the criteria, and be able to notify the chief officer and the employees that those procedures are not very good and need to be corrected.

It seems to me that this is an intermediate stage which is allowing the commissioner to work with the processes that have been put in place by various ministries. By cutting it out – he's going to speak to it, I can tell – it looks to me like you're taking away the efforts of the commissioner to work in a nonadversarial and a co-operative manner with the various departments to put whistle-blower protections in place.

I'm going to sit down and let the mover speak to this to help me understand what he's trying to do.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. Thank you very much, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, for pointing this out. To the best of my understanding, the rationale behind this amendment. First, the insertion in section 5(1):

The Commissioner must establish and maintain, in accordance with this Act, a uniform set of written procedures, including time periods, for managing and investigating disclosures by employees for whom chief officers are responsible.

That is to, I guess, set the precedents and the standard from the commissioner's office so that this doesn't preclude the possibility of, you know, the interaction between the commissioner and each of the heads of departments in acting, carrying out the set of rules that would determine whistle-blowing protocol in each department and/or ministry and so forth in the public service. It sort of sets the bar and standard from the commissioner's office emanating outward to each ministry and/or to all four corners of the public service, quite frankly.

When you're setting up a bureaucratic procedure, really, you're setting up a chain of command and who is ultimately responsible for the enactment and the execution of this law. I think that's the way this amendment has been set up. The commissioner is setting the standard from which the regulations in each ministry and all aspects of the public service will take their direction in setting up their procedure so that we have more similar language and protocol and, ultimately, the responsibility for execution of this bill coming from the commissioner's office.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. That's why language is so important. Now it's much clearer to me. There are words that are added into the amendment that are different from what you see in the bill. The words "The Commissioner" and "a uniform set" have been added. That makes more sense to me now. Essentially, it wouldn't be each department that would be establishing its own set of rules. It would be the commissioner that provides the template, the uniform set that applies to everybody. So each department couldn't do their own version. You don't need all the rest of this stuff where the commissioner could go in and look at what a department has done and go, “No, it’s not good enough” because everybody would be using the template that he supplied.

The issue there is that I’m not sure that it’s flexible enough to deal with the various kinds of agencies and entities that are covered by the act. If you go back and look, for example, we have got departments, the legislative office, all of the different officers of the Legislature. You’re covering a lot of different kinds of agencies and the way they operate, and I don’t know how easy it would be to overlay a uniform set of rules on them. If you could do the same thing to a department that you can do to the office of the Auditor General – or even in some cases I’m seeing some referencing to health. Public entity: “Any agency, board, commission, Crown corporation or other entity designated as a public entity.” I think that might be the issue on that one: how do you get a uniform enough set of rules that they apply to a department and to the tire recyclers and the ERCB? You know, since I’ve been elected, this government started to do delegated administrative organizations, and now there are more of those than there are government departments because each department has four or five of these things. That’s how they actually get stuff done now.

I’m not convinced. I’ll leave it at that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to comment?

Seeing none, we’ll proceed with the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to the bill. Any members wishing to speak or provide amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have the correct number of copies that are to be passed on to colleagues in regard to the next amendment that I will be proposing. I’ll hand them over and then sit down.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We’ll pause while we distribute the amendment.

This will be known as amendment A7.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you may proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Round 7. As I said to my cowboy friend next to me, if he thinks he’s a good bull rider, I’m on my seventh try.

Madam Chair, I move that Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended in section 1(k) by adding the following after “Crown corporation,” that we are going to include “, a facility that is recognized or accredited to provide insured services under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan, a facility that is licensed under the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act.”

What that means, Madam Chair, is that we would like to include in the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act any insured or any licensed facility that is recognized or accredited to provide insured services under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan. What that in general means is that we’re now looking at incorporating that this amendment would make the act applicable to all licensed facilities in this province. As it stands right now, the act is fairly limited on who comes under it. This amendment would allow staff at a private seniors’ facility to blow the whistle under the whistle-blower legislation.

Now, why I think this is important is that it’s important for our beloved seniors to be able to be protected even if it’s a facility that doesn’t receive any public dollars. I think what we need to understand here is “licensed” by the government. It’s important that the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Seniors listen to this particular amendment because of the fact that they are responsible for the licensing of all facilities in this province. It doesn’t necessarily have to be a seniors’ lodge, but they are the ones that hold the licences and control the licences of all facilities in this province, and it could be for seniors.

What we are asking is for this amendment to be included under this act so that if a senior – and we can use my mom if you want, who is in a private assisted living facility that is licensed. We’ve checked the supportive living under the licence act, and we’ve pulled all of the facilities that this government licensed, and we just wanted to make sure and get some clarification. The home that my mom is in currently is a licensed facility, licensed under the government of Alberta. I would suspect that if something was happening in that facility that I’m not aware of and that is not drawn to my attention as having a mom there, the employee could blow the whistle on the facility.

Now, that could be as simple as – and we talked about it today. My mom is under a care plan, and the minister talked about his care plan today in regard to how many showers or baths a senior should be having in this province, whether they’re in a public facility or a private facility. Subject to the act and the regulations that this minister is responsible for, each facility must have a care plan for their seniors. He knows that. If under that care plan it says that Heather’s mother should be having two showers a week and I happen to be up in Edmonton all week, and I’m not aware whether she is getting showers or not, and her caregiver that the minister talks about with great respect – and I can honestly tell you that I can say the same thing for the facility that my mom is in, with great respect. They do a very difficult job under some pretty difficult situations.

If she is not getting her required two showers a week, which are regulated under her care plan; for example, if there are some health conditions within the facilities – let’s say that you have a senior that has chronic kidney failure. Well, when someone is in chronic kidney failure, they’re usually under a dietitian. So it could easily be that they can’t have, you know, potassium. Potatoes are full of potassium. Certain things where their diet requirements aren’t followed could be abuse.

The government brags about the importance of reporting of seniors’ abuse. I think it’s important to include not only public facilities but any licensed facility under this government. That could go to our group homes or anything.

I am interested in hearing again what the minister thinks, again what the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation may want to add, why he hasn’t incorporated this in the act and the rationale behind that. We have gone through the act to find out where that could be included and haven’t been able to figure it out. We think that the proposed act should cover all facilities licensed by the province, including public facilities and private facilities. The private sector deserves the respect, the same as the public sector, for our seniors, not because they’re getting any public dollars but because, like I said, they’re licensed. I think that’s what we need to do. If the government is going to license these facilities, then they should be responsible for these facilities.

Now, I know that some of my colleagues would like to speak on this particular amendment because it’s an important amendment to be considered. I’m sure the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation may want to add some words, or the Seniors associate minister or Health minister may want to add some words to it also, especially the Associate Minister of Seniors because ultimately, at the end of the day, he’s responsible for the seniors in this province.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I particularly appreciate this amendment because my 91-year-old father and 92-year-old mother are living in St. Therese Villa in Lethbridge and receiving excellent care, I'm happy to say. I really appreciate the staff there and the management, the way they involve us as family, to consult with us about our concerns, and they try and address them whenever they're raised. I doubt that this would ever be needed, but I would hope that if it were, someone would have the courage to and feel the obligation to and draw strength and reassurance from this amendment and this act itself and then be able to step forward to alert whoever needed to be alerted about the circumstances that may have put my parents or other seniors needing that assisted living in jeopardy in any way.

I certainly hope that you will help me look after my aged mother and father, who were born and raised in our province and have contributed all of their lives to the quality of life in this province through providing employment opportunities for others as well as, I hope, raising pretty good children. They've got great grandchildren; I can tell you that. But I really think that they need the kind of support and help that this simple little amendment will provide.

I appeal to your better natures, if they're still awake at this hour, and hope that you will support this simple little amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. It's interesting, the comments that you provided. Of course, we all care for the protection of people in our care in Alberta, in fact, so much so that back in July of 2010 the Protection for Persons in Care Act came into effect. There is a duty to report. Upon all of us there's a duty, and all those that work in facilities must take reasonable steps to protect people from abuse while providing care or support services, and they must maintain a reasonable level of safety for people in care.

If you don't know it, you might want to write this number down. For external reporting there's 1.888.357.9339. It's a toll-free number. If people expect some action, well, you call that number, and you're going to get some action if you're worried about abuse or any type of issue that may occur in one of our facilities.

Staff in all our facilities are very, very well aware of this act. Unfortunately, it's been used. It's an act that I'm proud of. I'm not proud that we had to have it, but there is an opportunity for people to report wrongdoing. In fact, reporting abuse is mandatory under the persons in care act, and failure to report abuse is an offence under this act, and individuals can be fined for withholding evidence from the persons in care branch.

We talked a lot about care and bathing, and any of us that have had parents in our facilities know that there is a care plan. The government, the minister doesn't develop the care plan. The caregivers and the administrators of our facilities do. The care plans are developed with loving dedication and care from all the individuals and with family input. If anybody wants to grandstand about a bath or two baths, that's not what I'm interested in. I'm interested in providing the adequate amount of bathing, the adequate number of safety standards that are put into place, the adequate amount of food. That's what we should all be concerned about.

Those of us that have had parents in these facilities know – they know very well – that there's an opportunity for family members to have input into these care plans. As I travel around the province and I talk to families and I talk to individuals in our facilities, they're very proud of the care that they get. I'll stand by that, as I said earlier.

If any of you want some information on the persons in care and the reporting of the act that we developed on July 1, 2010, it's already there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks. I'm sure that this minister means well, but, man, does he ever offend people quickly, and I'm one of the people that he's offended. Of course, anyone that has family members knows that you can be involved in the care plan. Not one person in here has said in any of these discussions that we feel that the care providers are in any way deficient. Not one of us has said that, and for you to try and turn it around in a discussion does not speak well of you, sir.

What we're trying to say is that there are not enough resources and capacity in that system to do it. Even when I want my relative to have more than one bath a week, shower a week, they can't do it because there aren't enough staff. So care plan, no care plan, there isn't enough capacity in that system to give them what they want. You can get up and say: oh, no, no, no; you can have whatever you want. That's just not realistic, and none of us have put this on the providers. We all know that they're working the best they can. Okay?

There are as many people in this House in this situation as there are outside of this House. We are no different than the rest of the population, and we represent the aged population as well. Please be careful of the way you speak about that.

I can also speak about the Protection for Persons in Care Act, which, frankly, failed me unbelievably. There was an incident with my relative, and the Protection for Persons in Care Act never contacted me, never gave me a final report, and did not comment at all despite the fact that they were phoned. Now, the facility did. They investigated. They got back to me. They gave me a final report. The Protection for Persons in Care Act did zip. I was very disappointed when I was actually in that situation and found out what they didn't do. You can get up and tell me that they should've and it's terrible they didn't. Yeah, it is, but they failed me, and I'm in here. You'd think they wouldn't fail me, but no. They failed me and my family terribly. The facility didn't. Care providers came through for me.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act is an educational tool that has no teeth in it to actually enforce anything. All it does is an investigation and gives you a report, if they actually give you a report. I'm the relative on record. I never got a thing. Okay? So don't tell me that act is going to solve all the problems and leap out with a cape flying out behind it and save people from abuse. It doesn't. Be realistic. It is an educational tool that comes after the fact and may have an investigative portion to it, and that's it. If you've been in the same situation as I, then I'm willing to hear a bit more, but I've been there, and it failed me completely more than once.

Thanks very much, Madam Chair.

Let me talk about A7. I'm just going to clarify here that the sponsoring member intended to just capture the supportive living facilities because I'm looking at the act that has been referenced here, and it really is the supportive living facilities. It's not long-term care. It's not a hospital. It's not anything under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act.

You are trying to capture the facilities where they often have an independent unit, or maybe they're in sort of a room or a suite or something. They get meals provided if they want or not. The hallways are well lit, and there are banisters and stuff like that. There might be programming. There'll be day trips and that kind of thing. But this is not one where they are, you know, lifting people out of bed and into a wheelchair every day.

I mean, the dividing line for me is always: if there's a fire in the middle of the night, can people get out of there by themselves? In what you're talking about, they could get out of there by themselves. I'm looking at the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, and it says that it doesn't apply to a nursing home or an approved hospital or an auxiliary hospital or a Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. It is for a supportive living accommodation for four or more people not related to the operator and arranges for services related to safety and security according to standards, one meal a day, and housekeeping services.

Mrs. Forsyth: I can answer that.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Good.

My experience with this is that once you start a list – I've had this argument with somebody over there before – you need to start making sure that everybody is on the list because now the list itself becomes important, and you're going to have to make sure that everybody is in there. The way the courts interpret it is that they go: "Okay. There's a list. Check, check, check. Oh. Not on that list. Okay. Then they're not covered by this."

We have a general definition here that's saying that a public entity is "any agency, board, commission, Crown corporation or other entity designated as a public entity in the regulations," but now we're adding one piece, a sublist, so it would be agency, board, commission, Crown corporation, "a facility that is recognized or accredited to provide insured services under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan, a facility that is licensed under the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act," and then it would continue, "or other entity designated as a public entity." So I'm a little worried about starting a minilist and leaving the rest of them without lists because it tends to get us into problems a little bit further down the road.

So thanks for sharing the information.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks. I think it's important, first of all, to just get some clarification on the table, if I may, and maybe some words similar to what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said which we're enjoying at 20 after 10 at night. It's too bad we're inside and Edmonton-Centre is outside.

Every time this Associate Minister of Seniors tries to explain, he somehow manages to take his foot and stick it in his mouth further and further and further. He talks about the fact . . .

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: He talks about the fact . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, excuse me. If you read the amendment, it talks about including licensed facilities under the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, and I believe the member is speaking of that. Thank you.

Hon. member, please continue.

10:20

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, if they have a problem, they can stand up and call a point of order, speak to the point of order on which they feel that I am not speaking to the amendment. I'd be more than pleased to deal with that.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, the night is late. Honest to goodness, let's call a spade a spade. We're talking about the supportive living. The Associate Minister of Seniors talks about how proud he is of the protection of persons in licensed care and about how reporting of abuse is mandatory. Well, I can hearken back to when we were in estimates and I was questioning him about all of the horrific reports that had been under this act. He didn't have the numbers then, didn't have the long-term care numbers there.

I guess that when a minister talks about grandstanding and when a minister talks about the care plans, I can tell you, Madam Chair, that I live with a senior. Day in and day out I'm dealing with a senior in an assisted living facility, and I'm dealing with probably 20 other seniors that are in the same facility and other seniors that are in different facilities in my own riding. My mum doesn't live in my riding. She happens to live in Calgary-South East. When they say two showers a week, we're lucky if we get one. That isn't criticism about the people that are taking care. Those poor people are run off their feet, and they're trying to do what they can and trying to take care of seniors however they can with limited resources, limited facilities.

It's like the Member for Edmonton-Centre talks about. To be accused of grandstanding on an amendment when we're just bringing the facts to the Legislature, it's not grandstanding, in my mind. If he wants – he's more than welcome – I'll take him to my mum's facility. I'll take him to the two facilities in my riding so that he can talk to the seniors there. They don't even get a bath let alone a shower. If they want to have a bath, that costs them an extra $20, I think. It depends on the facility.

To the member's question talking about supportive living, the government has been very interesting on their continuing care plans and what they consider continuing care. I'll use my mum as an example. She's in an assisted living facility. They can be charted at an SL 4 or an SL 3, which means how much care they have, how mobile they are, et cetera. Right now in the assisted living facility my mum is in, the government's model is to move this continuing care model where you're seeing more long-term care patients being put in an assisted living place. All of a sudden they lose their mobility, as do the seniors that are in the particular facility.

Two weeks ago my mum was quite mobile, ended up in the middle of the night in the hospital. I just got her home late last night, now in a walker, now on oxygen, and she isn't going to be moving real fast at this particular time. I can guarantee you that if the fire bells go in the middle of the night, she isn't one of the seniors that is going to be in their walker, that is going to be wheeling out of that home real quick. She will have to be assisted.

So you have seniors that are currently in a lot of the assisted living facilities – and my mum is in a private facility – because of how the government is changing the continuing care model, and they're moving the SL 3s and the SL 4s and taking the seniors that should be in a long-term care nursing bed or, for that matter, a lodge, and they're putting them into the continuing care model. They're all of a sudden designating them as an SL 4, which means they're not mobile.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm sure you are going to relate this to the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: I am talking on it, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. Madam Chair, you should know that. You're the former seniors minister. So, yes, I am talking about the amendment. I'm trying to explain to the Assembly something that you were instrumental in as the minister of seniors in moving the continuing care model under the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. You know that as the former seniors minister.

What we're trying to do is incorporate – I don't even want to call Bill 4 a whistle-blower act because it's not a whistle-blower act; I have to come up with a name for it. These seniors' facilities that are licensed by your government under your Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act: the people that are working there do not fall under the Protection for Persons in Care Act. So let's be careful there. They're the people that are in care, not the people that are blowing the whistle. The minister should know that. Incorporate them in Bill 4 so that they're protected if they see a serious incident, so they have the ability to blow the whistle if something is happening at my mom's facility or any of the hundred other facilities in this province.

Having said that, I wanted to get some clarification from the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Certainly the Associate Minister of Seniors needed to get, obviously, some clarification who he knows exactly what the Protection for Persons in Care Act does – yes, reporting abuse is mandatory – and, again, can discuss what his care plans aren't doing under that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before we proceed, I would just remind all of you that it is getting late and to please keep your remarks on the amendment – it's A7 right now – and also to refrain from making personal attacks. I would appreciate that very much.

We will move on with amendment A7. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

An Hon. Member: You should tell your minister that.

The Deputy Chair: That was for everyone, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has the floor.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to stand in support of this amendment. The reason is because it's to protect the employees of those facilities. Specifically, we want to protect them from reprisals. You'll notice something here tonight. We have taken no issue; there are no amendments to part 4, reprisals, sections 24 through 27, because we feel that the government built this legislation properly in this area.

I don't understand why we would not bring those employees under that. If there was an issue in one of these assisted living facilities within the system, something that's licensed by us, by the government, why wouldn't we want to protect those employees if they saw an issue coming and had to report it? We would want to protect them from reprisals. That's exactly what this amendment is going to do. It's going to protect them from those reprisals if they do come forward and blow the whistle. It gives them the ability to do so without fear.

I'm going to keep my comments relatively short on that. This is a good amendment. This is something that is just going to backstop the persons in care act, which the Associate Minister of Seniors stood up and informed us on. I appreciate those comments from him, so I would ask that you would please consider this amendment and consider it just for the ability under part 4 to protect those employees from reprisals when they come forward with issues that deal with some of our most vulnerable in society.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Madam Chair, I'll be very brief as well on this. Hopefully, we can vote on it. I hope that we can vote to pass it. I do want to be on the record. I brought this up in the House the other day with regard to our seniors. Having our seniors bathed once a week, if that – and that often is not even mandated in a lot of cases; that's just voluntarily done by the long-term care facility – is absolutely not enough.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A7.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely.

Honestly, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the way you act sometimes, of all the people over there, makes me shake my head the most.

Absolutely we need to have this amendment passed. It deals with the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act facilities. The reason is because sometimes in these facilities, obviously, there have been issues of folks being burned, there have been issues of – I know that in my constituency the wife of an individual who is in one of those long-term care facilities came to me with pictures. They were pictures of the sores and things and diseases that were all over their body and some of the awful things that occurred there. It was just awful to look at. You know, I understand that 99 per cent of our caregivers are doing a fantastic job. I think we all understand that. But we also have to understand that that isn't the case all of the time.

The folks that brought me these pictures and so forth were scared because they're older folks as well, and they feel kind of helpless. They feel that if they complain, their loved one might lose their spot in the facility. They have these fears. Some of them are rational, and some of them are irrational, but the point is that they have them. Again, I just want to be clear on the record that these facilities do need to be in this act.

For the Associate Minister of Seniors to say that because this is already dealt with in other pieces of legislation and that if there's abuse, we need to report it and so forth, that's fantastic. Great. But to say that that means we don't need to include these types of facilities under this act doesn't make sense. Why wouldn't we want to beef up the tools? I mean, we're always talking about tool boxes in here. Why wouldn't we want another tool in the tool box to add protection to these folks that are in supportive care? This would do that.

Then, of course, absolutely, without question I want to go on the record, because the Seniors minister sure did and didn't get interrupted and heckled down, as saying that one shower a week is not enough. I think it's reasonable and not in any way grandstanding, as this minister has suggested, to say that basic personal hygiene should be required. Under this act, Madam Chair, if basic personal hygiene requirements are not being met, they should be able to report it, and there should be whistle-blower protection if something like this happens because, frankly, it's inhumane. Jeepers. I mean, some of the conditions are just inhumane. It's not at every facility. It's not with every person. But our seniors deserve better than this.

I just had a grandfather pass away this year and my other grandfather the year before. These are great men and women, and they deserve to be able to age with dignity and with our respect after all that they've given us. That doesn't always happen in these facilities, so we need to put pieces of legislation in place that give us tools to be able to be alerted to wrongdoing.

You know, it's just like the other day, when the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, I believe, handled a terrible tragedy, an issue that came up, with absolute class and professionalism. He said: this is what happened. He was very clear. He was alerted to it. He made a game plan for it. He released it in advance, told everybody what he was doing in advance, and there was no hiding it. There was no sweeping it under the rug. There was nothing. He was just completely up front and forward. That is how whistle-blowing is supposed to work. In that case he was alerted to the situation, and he dealt with it professionally.

A lot of times when these things happen in our facilities and a whistle-blower comes out and alerts us to it, whether it's in a facility like this or if it's another case, if some of our ministers would deal with it in the same way as that minister did, you know, there wouldn't be a lot for us to gripe about over on this side. Of course, in so many cases, whether we're talking about the whistle-blower act, which could apply to a whole bunch of different things, illegal things that happen or what have you, exorbitant expenses and so forth, instead of dealing with these issues, you try to hide them or cover them up or make excuses for them. You say, "Nothing has been proven yet," even though, you know, the receipts are all laid out, and it's all there. Nothing has been proven yet in a court of law or something. Well, good grief. That's not what this is about. It's about doing the right thing.

If we can make sure that we do what we can to make it easier for whistle-blowers to come forward – and that would include these supportive living facilities – then I think this bill will be a lot stronger. I hope we can pass this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is always a pleasure to get up and speak to a piece of legislation, even when we're in an amendment on a piece of legislation. Even when we're trying to get them through relatively quickly, I think it's important that we take the time to go through them and analyze them and see how we might improve them.

I would ask that Statler or Waldorf or whatever he calls himself keep it down there in the back row while we try and get through this.

It is a good amendment because I think what it does is protect employees so they can protect the very people that we need to protect. That's what whistle-blower legislation should do. It's put in place so that we can protect people so that they can blow the whistle and protect in this case our loved ones in these facilities, which is what this amendment is for, which I think does relate to the amendment because some of the practices happening at these facilities are worth reporting. It's imperative that we report some of the things going on in these facilities so that we can fix them.

I know from your background that you would agree with that wholeheartedly. I speak through you, and thank you for listening. I always feel like you do, so you fake it well.

When somebody is in one of these centres and is potentially receiving inadequate care and somebody is aware of a system that isn't working, that someone should be held accountable for, we have to pave the way for that person to come forward. I don't believe that this bill does although initially I was quite excited about it. I thought: wow; this is pretty good. Whistle-blower legislation. Public interest disclosure act. These are all words that the public likes to hear. I mean, I can imagine a husband and wife sitting around the table and discussing that. "We've got this whistle-blower act. Did you know that, honey?" "Wow. Whistle-blower act. That sounds great." And then you think of 10 government members riding giant white steeds across the prairies, up over the hill, trumpets sounding. Dun da da da. And then you realize when you read it that – wah wah – it's just flat. So we don't actually protect the people that we're trying to protect, and Albertans see that.

This amendment challenges us, challenges the government and us on this side to get together and work it out and fix it. This process would work if we'd actually discussed what was proposed to be amended with the concept that maybe it makes sense even though it comes from the other side. Maybe we have loved ones in one of those facilities.

When the Associate Minister of Seniors gets up and says that opposing one bath a week for a senior is grandstanding, he ought to be ashamed of himself. We're all going to have people in these facilities at some point. We need the people in those facilities to feel comfortable about coming forward. I would suggest that that grandstanding comment was probably sent to him by somebody in an office over yonder. I hope he wouldn't throw that out there and actually believe it. It's not grandstanding to stand up for somebody in one of these facilities; it's the right thing to do.

It's why we're proposing this amendment. The amendment reads: "a facility that is recognized or accredited to provide insured services under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan, a facility that is licensed under the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act." The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek proposed a couple of extra words in here so that, I think, more Albertans would feel protected.

I've appreciated listening to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek tonight because I think she understands the issue better than most of us. We should probably respect somebody that not only has a personal connection to how these facilities operate but is somebody that's been in the portfolio that she has, with the contacts that she has. This woman does more research on bills than any of us could ever imagine. I have great respect for her because she doesn't come in here thinking: I need to protest the government no matter what it does. She sits around our caucus table discussing these amendments and begging us to carry on and to point out how important they are and the reason that we need to try and get government to agree to change some of these things. I couldn't be prouder to stand alongside her. You know, I just want to get that on record, too, because I think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is so honourable in her representation of seniors, and this amendment would help seniors. It would help so many more people if we would just realize that it's the right thing to do.

The only way to honour transparency and accountability is to take doubt out of the equation. Well, it's not taken out of the equation here. We've allowed it to be present. People know that. People write about it. They're still writing about it. I was prepared tonight to let those that are driving this specific bill in their portfolios and those opposite to have a discussion, to listen, to learn, but I would say that when one is accused of grandstanding to stand up for a senior getting a bath once a week, it tends to raise the ire of people. We saw that. The Associate Minister of Seniors should be wiser in how he describes our opposition to that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will return to Bill 4. Are there any members who would like to comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have another amendment, which I sent to the table for ease of distribution. It is amending section 51. If I could get that distributed, that would be great.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute that amendment, hon. member.

Hon. member, I think we have most of it distributed, if you would like to proceed. This will be known as amendment A8.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. There are a couple of issues that, in my mind, are moving forward sort of lockstep. The first part of it is this section 51. You often see this clause in legislation where it indemnifies the particular officer and their staff from being sued in carrying out their job. But my concern around this one is that I don't think that any employee or officer should be exempt from having any investigation done on them if a whistle-blower needs to come forward, including the commissioner.

There are two things going on here at the same time. On the one hand, you want to say: "Okay. Fair enough. You're doing your job. You shouldn't be sued for doing your job." You really see that at the end of section 51(1), where it says: "in respect of anything done or omitted to be done in the exercise or intended exercise of any power under this Act or in the performance or intended performance of any duty or function under this Act." You know, no wonder people think we're weird when we start talking like that. Essentially, it's a fairly common clause that's saying you shouldn't get in trouble for doing what you're supposed to be doing.

My problem is that it's actually exempting the commissioner and the commissioner's staff from having any whistle-blower concerns about them brought forward. I haven't been able to find anywhere else in the section where that might happen. Of course, there's never any intention of that. I don't believe that anybody that's going to be hired into that position or assigned to that position would normally undertake anything that could possibly get them in trouble. Nonetheless, I think that the way it's written, we have left a loophole there that shouldn't be left.

It goes in lockstep with a couple of other things that are going on. The commissioner does not – in some of the investigations that he does, he can wait out a two-year period, and then he doesn't have to give a report to the whistle-blower about why he didn't proceed with an investigation. You can also add into that or stack into it or it's the next step, clause 52, which basically ends up saying that any decision of the commissioner can't be challenged in an upper court.

When you knit those three together, I think there is a problem. I couldn't figure out a way to do it in one fell swoop, so I've sort of gone at it separately. And that's why this is in here. If the drafters over there that are good at this kind of thing, the Government House Leader, the Justice minister, maybe the ag minister, if they can do something off the top of their heads, that's great. Otherwise, that's what my concern is. You know, it's not enough to stop the train in its tracks, but it is a small flaw in the writing of the bill.

I think when you consider that this does remove the commissioner and their staff, his staff or her staff, from scrutiny from an accusation of wrongdoing and from an investigation, and you put that together with the fact that if the commissioner sits on a whistle-blower investigation for two years and does nothing and at the end of the two years doesn't even have to tell the person why they didn't proceed, and you look at section 52, which says that nothing that they do can be appealed to a higher court, I think you've got a problem.

So that's why I brought this forward. I agree it's nitpicky for 5 to 11 at night. But it is the kind of thing where, if you're trying to get a good piece of legislation moving forward, you want it to be the best it can be because my experience is that once you launch this kind of new legislation, it's really difficult to get the Legislature to come back to it or the ministers to review it for about 10 years. Whatever we do here, that we, you know, crack the bottle of champagne on in a week or so and send it out there, that's going to be it for a long, long time, and everybody is going to have to live with it. Glass half full, glass half empty. I'd rather we do the best job that we can possibly do to the act now because once it's out there, I don't think that we're going to get it back for a while. This is the kind of thing that becomes problematic as you work your way through it.

That's why I've done this. I hope I can get support on it. Unless I can answer any questions, that's about all I need to do.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Scott: I'd just direct my colleague to section 12 of the act. I believe that that section addresses the concern that you raised, if I understood the concern properly. It sets out the procedure if somebody in the public interest commissioner's office wants to make a report and what occurs in those circumstances.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 4. Are there any members who wish to speak or comment or provide an amendment?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Madam Chair. I do have an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while we have that distributed. Thank you.

We will identify this amendment as amendment A9. I would like to point out there is an error, a typo, at the very beginning of the amendment. The number 21 should not be there, if you just want to cross that out.

You may proceed, hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment is one that I asked to be prepared and something that I feel quite a bit of passion about getting changed, so I sure hope that the government would think about doing so. It refers to section 18(4) of the act, which currently says:

(4) The Commissioner shall not investigate any decision, recommendation, act or omission made or done by any individual in the course of acting as a solicitor or Crown prosecutor in a department, public entity or office of the Legislature.

Our amendment is to move that that section be struck from the bill.

You know, this one I feel strongly about because there's just been such a vivid example recently of a situation where there was this constituent of mine in Airdrie whose daughter was sexually abused for nine years. We brought it up in the Legislature many times. The case was stayed due to over 500 days of court delays and over 400 days of delays by the Crown prosecutors' office, which conflicted with the accused's Charter rights with regard to having a speedy trial. The charges were dropped, thereby denying this victim her day in court and, essentially, revictimizing her. This person, the accused anyway, right now drives around our city of Airdrie, you know, to this time and has access or easy proximity to other children as well.

11:00

So it is absolutely an awful, awful thing and an awful blemish on our justice system and something that we have to live with in our city every day until he decides, hopefully, one day to move out of our city. But then he'll be someone else's problem, so it doesn't fix it because that's not good either.

The problem with this section here is that it specifically does not apply to whistle-blowers who blow the whistle, so to speak, with regard to an omission or some kind of act of a solicitor in their capacity as a Crown prosecutor. That's just not acceptable.

Our Crown prosecutors across Alberta by and large are fantastic people. The vast majority, 99 per cent of them, more than 99 per cent of them, are fantastic people. You know, frankly, they're the best that lawyers have to offer, I would say, and no offence to the other lawyers in here. But it is true because they actually take less money in a lot of ways, in a lot of cases than some other folks that practise law.

They take less money and fewer benefits to be a Crown prosecutor, and one of the reasons they do that is because they feel very passionately about justice and about getting justice for those who have been victimized in our country and in our province. They still make reasonable money, but it's not anywhere near what they could make if they were going to go into corporate law or in some cases even criminal law as a defence attorney. They do their job, they do it very effectively. It's a great public service, what they do, and we should commend them.

However, as is the case in every single sector of our society, in every profession, no matter what it is, there are those who fall short. Sometimes it's very egregious and there are egregious abuses and awful things that happen, and sometimes it's unintentional. Sometimes it's individuals who mean well but are incompetent, and that does happen.

Sometimes when that happens, whether intentionally or through incompetence, bad things happen. Things happen like what happened in Airdrie, where now we have a case that has kind of opened people's eyes not just to that case but to other cases around the province where similar things have happened, where serious criminal charges have been dropped or stayed because of a lack of Crown resources or a poorly managed case. For whatever reason a case is managed poorly, or the court system is managed poorly and something doesn't get scheduled on time. Whatever the case is, these incredible injustices have occurred in more than one instance.

Now, some of that we're debating in this House on a day-to-day basis with regard to the amount of resources the justice system has at its disposal to do these things given the caseloads that it has and whether they're being overburdened. I think that certainly is part of it.

Whether this case is such an example or whether it is not, there are cases when something bad will happen in the justice system, something that brings doubts into people's minds as to whether we have a true justice system or whether it's just some kind of judicial system as opposed to a justice system. Those things happen, and when they happen, it is absolutely imperative that we deal with them. Like everything else, we cannot sweep these things under the rug when they occur. We have to allow people the ability to stand up and blow the whistle on situations that need to have the whistle blown on them, whether they be intentional or negligence or whatever.

There is no reason for this clause to be in there. I'm sorry, but there's no reason whatsoever for that clause to be in there. The justice system is, frankly, in a lot of ways the most important system that we have in all of government because without that basis of safety, that basis of law and order, everything else we do, whether it be health care, education, seniors, all that other stuff, would not be possible without a functioning justice system. It just wouldn't be possible. It would be the Wild West. That's all it would be. You couldn't have hospitals because you couldn't protect the hospitals. You couldn't have very much commerce because you wouldn't be able to enforce contracts, et cetera.

The justice system is absolutely critical. So to say that we're going to exempt Crown prosecutors and their actions is just not right. I don't know how this clause got in here. I don't know what the reasoning behind it is. Obviously, it should come out because in the department if there's something that's happening that is systemic, that is going to lead to someone like Arizona – this is not her name; it's the alias that she uses, the victim in this Airdrie sex abuse case. If a situation were to occur that will likely lead to more Arizonas, that has to be blown. Somebody in the Crown prosecutors' office or in the justice system or someone in there needs to be able to blow the whistle on that and not be worried about retaliation. I'm not saying that it was the Crown prosecutor's fault in this particular case. That's still being investigated.

This is a pretty obvious one. Now, we've been in here, and we've talked. This is the ninth – this is A9 – and we've also had a subamendment. Every amendment has been voted against. At some point I would hope that the governing party can admit that perhaps the opposition has a good idea or two on this.

Now, I would ask the minister of transparency – I'm not even going to try to do the full name; I've given up. Transparency is good enough. Could that minister or the Justice minister or the Government House Leader please explain why this clause is in there and if it is justified being in there? Just the reason why it's there. I know one of the thoughts might be that somebody might not be happy with the fact that a Crown prosecutor wanted to pursue a case or not pursue a case or didn't do a good enough job in a case and so forth.

Again, the commissioner already has that discretion. He doesn't have to look into every single thing, every single complaint that's brought. If it's a frivolous or vexatious complaint, he already has powers under this act not to pursue that.

That already exists. That's not an excuse. You can't say: oh, well, if we did that, everybody would be . . . You could use that same excuse for any person that does come under this act.

Please consider this. Let's make our justice system safer by shining a little bit of light on it. I think this is a reasonable amendment, and I would ask the government to support it.

11:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I thank the member for his submissions tonight. I cannot support the amendment for a number of reasons, which I will outline.

First of all, I've often talked in question period about the importance of the independence of the judiciary but also the independence of prosecutions and the independence of investigations, and it is very, very important that we maintain this. There are many things that I think any of us wouldn't agree with if we looked into every type of prosecution. Again, we don't live in a banana republic, Madam Chair; we live in a place where these decisions are made independent of any political influence. Any one of us cannot just say: listen, here, go and get the bad guys. It doesn't work like that. Frankly, I wouldn't want to live in a province or in a country where things operated like that.

I wanted to mention to this member, who is legally trained, as am I – I think we used to work a few blocks from each other, actually – that the quasi-role of Crown prosecutors has to be protected. Crown prosecutors are governed by other rules, including those in the Law Society of Alberta's code of conduct, which, again, is a self-governing profession and, as such, is entirely accountable. Further governance, I would suggest, is unnecessary.

I have a particular issue with removing 18(4) because it also deals with solicitor-client privilege. I'm not talking about solicitor as in the Solicitor General, of course. I'm talking about the solicitor as a barrister and solicitor. That is something that can never be infringed. This is a common-law tradition that goes back hundreds of years, goes back across the pond in another country where our legal system originated, and it is also recognized even in civil law systems throughout the entire world. My submission to you, Madam Chair, is that allowing third parties to reveal legal advice sought or received could and would negatively impact on the information provided to lawyers, including Crown prosecutors, by their clients and threatens the effectiveness of the legal advice sought and could seriously jeopardize the Crown's interest.

The last part: we talked about the Crown's interest. There's lots of talk about the public interest in this Chamber the last couple of weeks, Madam Chair. The Crown's interest is the public interest because they are the defenders of the public interest in our legal system. I would say that they are equally as important as the police, and we have to respect their individual judgment.

I would also just mention to this member that I do not know of any other whistle-blower legislation in the country – and perhaps the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation could correct me – that is without a similar provision such as this.

The last thing I will mention, Madam Chair, is that there are other mechanisms such as the investigation that we're doing for dealing with unfortunate situations like the member mentioned in his own constituency. Again, the investigation we're doing is independent. Without this particular section you would see a floodgate of arguments coming in, and it would really threaten the fabric of the whole independent aspect of both our prosecutions and our investigations. We must maintain their independence.

I respect where this member is coming from with this amendment, but unfortunately I cannot support it for the reasons that I've indicated. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I know how strongly the Member for Airdrie feels about this particular situation. I just have a caution that building legislation around a particular incident may not be the best way to go. That's not to diminish the seriousness of that particular case.

Part of what occurred to me: under the purposes clause it talks about facilitating the disclosure and investigation of significant and serious matters in or relating to departments, public entities or offices of the Legislature, that an employee believes may be unlawful, dangerous to the public or injurious to the public interest.

Now, I'm not sure that the intent of this is to cover the kind of incident that the member is raising. I mean, obviously, he's followed this particular case a long way and is more aware than I am of other possibilities and other remedies that are available in this case which don't seem to have been very successful.

I do wonder about this. I don't see in the purposes where it is moving into that arm of the courts, and I don't think it's intended to according to the purposes section, which is section 2, for anyone that's following along. I go back and look at the section that he wants to remove, which is 18(4), which is appearing on page 14: individuals that are acting as solicitors or Crown prosecutors in departments, public entities, or offices of the Legislature. You know, I've got a number of friends that provide those services in different departments. To me, this clause is that same protection clause that I was talking about previously, where you have to have something in there that says that you've got to be protected. If you're doing your job, you've got to be protected for doing your job. You can't have somebody going after you for having actually done the work you were supposed to do.

I think that's what's being covered in subsection (4). I understand how important this is. I'm just struggling to support this particular amendment because it would leave a number of the people that I know that provide legal advice or act as a solicitor in various departments wide open to any number of accusations from people that are ultimately unhappy with the way an act comes out or the way it's been implemented or anything else that's involved in that. I really believe in that separation between what we're doing and what happens in the court system.

You know, I look to the States – and I'm a little, tiny bit off here but not on too bad of a tangent – and I see where they elect their judges, and I just think, "Oh, save us from that" because that truly does politicize the system. I think we're right in keeping those two branches as far apart as possible. As soon as we start interfering in that process – you know, constituent A comes to me and goes: you’ve got to get involved; I’ve got a particular problem with WCB, maintenance enforcement, any number of other things. Pick one. If I interfere, well, I could be causing the person on the other side of that particular dispute – it’s not for me to interfere in that dispute, and I have a real caution about doing that.

The second thing I often talk about in this House is if we write – what’s the word I’m looking for? – vague law. If we write legislation that isn’t clear or is unclear – and I’m not putting this onto this particular case, Member – when it gets to the courts, the judges do the best they can with stuff that isn’t very directive to them. Often they’ll end up sending it back to us, saying: you guys have got to write a law to clarify this. To then turn around and accuse them of judge-made law makes my hair catch on fire because it is such an unfair accusation when we, the legislators, didn’t give them a very good piece of legislation to make decisions on.

It really comes back to this House to be doing a good job, and again I’m not referring specifically to the case the member is talking about. I’m really uneasy about it for a number of reasons, but I’m going to listen to the rest of the discussion and see if I can settle my unease.

Thank you.

11:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Madam Chair, some interesting questions there for sure. First of all, this has nothing to do, in my view, with the independence between the Legislature and the judicial branch. We have that separation. There is no doubt. I mean, there still are, obviously, correlations between the government and the judiciary. For example, the government funds the judiciary. The government funds the Crown prosecutor’s office. There are these attachments, okay? A case-management system, for example: you can’t put a case management system together if you don’t have funding to put a case management system together. Therefore, there is that attachment and that relationship between the government and the judiciary, the Crown prosecutor’s office, and so forth. That’s just the way it is.

Now, what the government can’t do, as it always says and rightfully so, is go in and instruct a Crown prosecutor to pursue a certain case. There’s no doubt about that. We all agree with that. The problem, though, Madam Chair, is that that’s not what we’re talking about here at all. We’re not talking about the government going in like a banana republic. I guess that makes the United States a banana republic because they can do that in the United States.

Anyway, in other systems of justice the politicians can in fact go to the Crown prosecutor and say: hey, you should be prosecuting that; that’s something that you need to do. And then the voters or the dictator holds them responsible. It’s certainly not a system that I think is appropriate either. I much prefer the way we have it here, with independence.

What we’re talking about here is not related to that. That is not what we’re talking about here. What we’re talking about here is – and I’ll go over the application and purposes of the act real quick.

The purposes of this Act are

- (a) to facilitate the disclosure and investigation of significant and serious matters in or relating to departments, public entities or offices of the Legislature, that an employee believes may be unlawful, dangerous to the public or injurious to the public interest.

Well, look. Here’s an example. What if a Crown prosecutor is having a bad year? We’ve already established how good 99.9 per cent of them are. Let’s say that one is just tired of the baloney, is having a bad time, and says: “You know what? I need a break. I’ve got too many cases on my plate, so I am going to start plea bargaining down as much as I can to get as many of these cases off my desk as is humanly possible.” Okay? So that’s what they do. They get into this rhythm, and pretty soon they find out that it’s easy to do that, so they keep plea bargaining down, plea bargaining down, plea bargaining down. So people are getting out on the street without going through the system properly and being properly held accountable for their crimes. They’re on the street, and they’re out there being unlawful, being dangerous and possibly injurious to the public interest.

Somebody within the Crown prosecutor’s office who sees that, if it is a pattern, needs to be able to come forward and share that information with the commissioner in this case and with – what do we call it again? – his designate. That needs to be pointed out. That is very important. That person who points it out says: look, this guy is purposefully offering bottom-basement plea deals or is, you know, mucking up things or perhaps falsifying documentation or whatever the heck it is. Whatever it is, there needs to be protection for the person who decides to bring that wrongful act forward, to bring that wrongful thing that’s happening forward.

Now, I do not think in any way that that would make Alberta a banana republic, nor would it threaten the independence between the judiciary and the legislative branch. I don’t think that’s the case at all. I mean, we could talk about the same thing for solicitor-client privilege as we could for physician-patient privilege. Yet this does apply to the health care system, as far as I know. The College of Physicians and Surgeons has rules, Justice minister, lots of rules for their doctors. So why are we saying, “Okay, the College of Physicians and Surgeons has rules; the Law Society of Alberta has rules for their lawyers; we’re going to allow whistle-blowing in our public health system, but we’re not going to allow whistle-blowing in our public legal system”? I’m not understanding the difference. There is no difference, frankly. I’m just not seeing it. What this legislation does not do, I think, is allow for the political branch of government to in any way interfere with the judicial branch. I really do not see how that amendment would allow for that.

Again we’ve got to quit – and I’m saying this as a lawyer. Maybe it’s because lawyers write all the legislation. Honestly, lawyers have got to be the most protected people on the face of the planet. We write all the laws. Lawyers write all the laws. It’s just amazing the protections that they find to put into every piece of legislation humanly possible to protect themselves.

Well, look. At some point there has to be accountability. People are tired in this province and all across the country, frankly, of a justice system that allows people like the one in my city to be running around free without having to face his accuser in a proper trial. They’re sick of that. It’s not just happening in Airdrie. It’s happening in other places. If somebody has information on that, as to why that’s happening, why can’t they bring it forward to the commissioner? Perhaps it’s a breakdown in the case management system. Perhaps it’s a Crown prosecutor gone rogue. Perhaps it’s a ridiculous policy that has been put forward where they’re directing Crown prosecutors to plea out very low sentences in order to move cases along because of a lack of resources. Maybe it is a lack of resources.

I just had a justice of the peace, I mentioned earlier, call me this week. He said that a lack of resources is an absolutely true problem – no doubt about it – in our justice system, and it is causing a lot of chaos and a lot of disadvantages for the Crown in many different cases. But that person can't come forward to the commissioner to blow the whistle on it because of this piece in here, because of this section.

Guys, if we're going to get serious about whistle-blowing – I mean, that's what section 2(d) is intended for: "to promote public confidence in the administration of departments, public entities and offices of the Legislature." Good grief. Public confidence in the justice system? Go poll that. We have polled it. Honestly. Don't give me this garbage about how polling doesn't mean anything. Just go poll it properly, scientifically. You will find that the vast majority of Albertans today do not have confidence in our justice system. They don't. You ask them that question. They don't. Now, you can deny it and say: oh, well, blah, blah, blah. No. That's a fact. They don't. Just go talk to some of your constituents. There are some that do; most don't.

The reason they don't is because when these problems happen, I just think it's easier for us politicians to say: "Oh, you know what? We'll just ignore it because we don't want to be a banana republic. We don't want to threaten the separation of the judiciary and the legislative branch. So we're just going to forget about that. Let the lawyers deal with it. Let the Crown prosecutor deal with it. They'll get their act together. They'll do it." Well, then why are things like Airdrie happening? Why do things go wrong in that regard? I don't think it's just about this one case. I think it's about many different cases, as passionate as I am about that case.

I don't think it threatens the common law aspect of solicitor-client privilege. I think that's a complete red herring. I don't really care if it's used in other Legislatures across the country. I mean, if the government is going to start going there, do you really want to start comparing this legislation to other whistle-blower legislation across the country? Really? Do you want to go there? If you do, we'd better just start up from scratch because this is the weakest whistle-blower legislation in the country by far. Every independent analysis that I've seen on that, that has looked at this legislation and has commented on it, has said the same thing.

11:30

Is it an improvement over what we had before? Possibly, I guess. Optically it is. There might be a few improvements. But it is very weak legislation, overall, for many of the reasons we've said. So let's not go into this thing: oh, this isn't done in other legislation. I don't know if that's true. I'd have to look into that.

Those are my comments on that. I think we should support this. I think that if we started supporting measures like this, we may actually have a public that is confident in our justice system instead of feeling that they don't have a justice system that is functioning. That is the case right now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I'm not a lawyer, but I stayed in the Holiday Inn Express last night, so I think my comments may have some relevance here.

We aren't here for ourselves, I'd like to remind you all. We're not here to pass legislation that protects us or other special interests. As recurring comments from our constituents, sort of verifying and following up on the hon. Member for Airdrie's comments, the things that I hear from my constituents in Cardston-Taber-Warner: "How come the government can get away with that?" or "How come the government doesn't have to follow its own rules?" or "I thought the golden rule was do unto others as you would have others do unto you, not that he who has the gold, or the power in this case, makes the rules but doesn't have to follow them."

I have to tell you, quite frankly, that I still haven't recovered from your defeat of the exemption clause that we wanted out at the start of discussions today. I really think that's a huge mistake. Exemption clauses like this hurt us all, and I'll tell you how. They bring scorn and skepticism to this process. They bring disrespect and disregard for the things that we're trying to accomplish. They bring mistrust and misunderstanding. Now, I'm not going to continue with the alliterations, but I hope you get the picture. We're not helping ourselves. We're not helping the people that we've been elected to protect. We shouldn't be protecting wrongdoers, as this section potentially does.

We're supposedly allegedly trying to protect whistle-blowers, who see this stuff happening and think it ought not continue, that it ought to be stopped, but they're afraid to. We need to be protecting them, and everywhere that wrongdoing occurs, including in the Crown prosecutors' department, it needs to be reported and needs to be followed up on and acted on. I agree that it does not violate the separation that needs to exist. If we can't trust our justice system to be fair and transparent, if the people that elected us can't trust our justice system to be fair and transparent and treat all people equally and subject to the same clauses and laws as the rest of us, then we've sunk to a sorry state and, in fact, are consigning ourselves to become the banana republic that the Justice minister keeps referring to.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment? The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Chair. Prosecutors in this province are independent. We trust them with the discretion to choose when to prosecute offences. There are a range of reasons for choosing whether or not to prosecute. A great many of these reasons may be technical in nature. The commissioner is not expected to be an expert in the exercise of legal discretion, and to be blunt, this is not the appropriate forum for second-guessing a prosecutor's decision to prosecute or not. Like our legislation, New Brunswick's states that information relating to the deliberations of Crown prosecutors cannot be disclosed. Like our legislation, all other Canadian legislation protects information in a client-solicitor relationship. For that reason I cannot support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A9?

I'll call the question on amendment A9 to Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to Bill 4. Are there any members who wish to speak or comment on Bill 4? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

11:40

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move an amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute that amendment.

Hon. members, this amendment will be known as A10, and I would remind everyone it is getting late and that we are speaking on amendment A10.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, this amendment is a very small amendment. It's replacing one word. We're striking out "committed" in section 50 and substituting "discovered." So let's read it the way that I'd like to see it amended. "A prosecution under this Act may not be commenced later than 2 years after the day the alleged offence was discovered."

Now, the reasoning behind this is fairly simple. We want to make sure that wrongdoings, when they are discovered, are investigated and prosecuted. Just in this one very minor amendment we would be able to make that change so that crimes would be punished. I think that's something we can all stand for in this House. We want to make sure that we hold those that are responsible responsible and that their actions do not go without consequences. We want to see them go through the system and have just punishment for the acts that have been committed.

Now, if I were a whistle-blower and I were to come forward and bring to light a scandal, for instance, I would want to see that it's taken from the investigation stage all the way through the due process to the point where if they are prosecuted, there is punishment for it. I believe that in this amendment we're doing exactly that, and we're not allowing something to be swept under the rug with a very small statute of limitation.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on this, and I will defer to some of the other members now.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A10, are there any other members who wish to comment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We shall move on to Bill 4. Any members wish to speak or make amendments to Bill 4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I have an amendment at the table. If I could get it distributed at this point, please.

The Deputy Chair: We'll just pause for a moment for that.

Okay, hon. member, we're almost there. This will be known as amendment A11. Bill 4, amendment A11. You may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. For those that are following along in hard copy, this amendment A11 is amending section 52, which appears on page 33 of the hard copy act. I've seen this kind of clause a couple of times recently in what the government is trying to do. Paramountcy clause isn't quite the right word, but it essentially says . . .

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. The noise level is quite loud again. Can we bring it down? If you have a really important conversation, you can always take it out into the Confederation Room. Thank you very much.

Hon. member, you can continue.

Ms Blakeman: The Chair is very kind, but it doesn't bother me in the least.

It doesn't essentially say this; it does say it. "No proceeding of the Commissioner is invalid." It can't be challenged or reviewed or quashed or called into question in any court. So it says that, you know, this is it. What the commissioner decides is the end of it. It can't go any further. I always have a problem with that. No one is perfect. No one can foresee every circumstance that could possibly apply. You have to allow that there could have been a mistake made and allow someone to be able to appeal. So that's the number one argument for why this particular clause should be struck.

The second argument is a bit more complex – I touched on it when I was speaking before to a different amendment – and that is that when you look at this idea that the rulings, the decision of the commissioner can't be challenged in any court, and then you go on and look at 49, which says, "any person who contravenes," and then there are a number of clauses that are set out there. Essentially, it's the section on reprisals, on false statements, on obstruction, or on falsification. If they contravene that, then they're guilty of an offence and they're liable.

The commissioner can decide. That's what this clause is there for. If somebody has operated in bad faith or, you know, that they shouldn't have brought this forward, the commissioner can then decide that that's it. If it's bad faith or it's vexatious or whatever, the accused can't get a more thorough investigation or be able to bring it to any kind of an appeal. Once the commissioner says that that's it, then they can't go any further. Essentially, there can be a situation or situations where there is no protection for the whistle-blower, so they have no ability to protect themselves from being fined or punished if something is coming forward.

Now, you go: "Okay, how many people are we really talking about here? Are we changing the whole law just for one or two people out of an entire population?" Possibly, but if that's the case, then I would revert to the first reason for doing this, which is that you have to allow that appeal. To say that nothing is appealable is, I think, particularly problematic.

Usually what the government says is: well, okay, you can go ahead and appeal it, but you're going into a civil court system and you're on your own, honey. Okay, fair enough. Lots of people come to my office and say: well, that's not fair because I don't have enough money to take it into that court system. But the truth is that, you know, if it's really important to them, if they really want to do it, if it's truly egregious, it's there. The appeal process is there for them. In this case it's not there. It makes that commissioner God, and I do not think it's appropriate for this Legislature to bestow that kind of power on one individual or one office. It just is not right to me.

I have on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-McCall brought forward this amendment A11, which does ask that we strike out section 52, which says:

Proceedings of the Commissioner not subject to review

52 No proceeding of the Commissioner is invalid for want of form and, except on the ground of lack of jurisdiction, no proceeding or decision of the Commissioner shall be challenged, reviewed, quashed or called into question in any court.

It's too much. It's just too much power and discretion to be applied to one individual when we're taking away a protection that is supposed to be offered to people for bringing forward a wrongdoing that's happening inside of the government. It just doesn't sit right with me, so I would ask for the support of the Assembly in deleting that section 52.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Any other members to speak or comment on amendment A11?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will return to the bill. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment here that I would like to move on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause for a moment.

Hon. member, we can proceed on this amendment. It will be known as amendment A12.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment here is one that would strike out section 18 and substitute the following:

(2) An investigation is to be conducted as informally as possible and to be concluded within 12 months from the date the investigation was commenced.

What we're looking at here is putting in a firm timeline for investigation. As it stands right now, there is no timeline for the commissioner to conclude an investigation. This can put the employee at risk. As well, it means after two years the commissioner could refuse to continue on with the investigation and drop it. We see that under section 19(2), where it says:

The Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure or, if an investigation has been initiated, may discontinue the investigation.

We want to make sure that when the commissioner does start an investigation, it is completed, and we also want to make sure that it is reported back in a timely manner. If we find out that the commissioner has been investigating for two years – two years – we may not see that report until the next annual report. It could be three years after the initial disclosure that the whistle-blower made. For three years this Assembly isn't going to know what's going on. We're not going to be able to hold that public entity to account. That employee may not even see satisfaction in blowing the whistle because their issue has been dropped by the commissioner because we're beyond the two-year timeline. So we just want to make sure with this amendment that investigations are concluded in a timely manner.

You know, it actually brings it kind of in line with what's in the FOIP Act. The FOIP Act right now does contain firm timelines at various stages of the process, and I think it's reasonable within that act to hold the office to deadlines. I can't see any reason why it would not be reasonable to hold this office to account with deadlines. I would hope that you would support this amendment and make sure that these investigations are concluded in a timely manner.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A12?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 4. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment that I would like to move on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We will pause for a moment while that gets distributed.

This amendment will be known as amendment A13.

Hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, you may proceed.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment that you have in front of you is one that speaks to the very idea of transparency. The idea of this amendment is to make all of the written rules and procedures established under this section of the act viewable, seen by all members of the public so that they can understand how this process works from beginning to end throughout all of the public entities, throughout all of your ministries. Now, transparency is something that is very important, and I believe that this is something that would raise the bar, so to speak. I think that's a phrase that the hon. Premier likes to use fairly often. Well, let's raise the bar on transparency.

Now, what this is going to do and what this can do is help nonemployees, because there is a provision in this act for nonemployees to blow the whistle, to understand the procedures that they're going to have to go through and what those procedures will look like for the commissioner when he investigates this. Also, it gives them some anonymity when they're looking for information on how to do this. It's impossible to be anonymous to blow the whistle in a process when you actually have to go to your designated officer or go to the commissioner just to get the very information required to blow the whistle.

This amendment is a very friendly amendment. This is one where, I think, all Albertans would benefit just by understanding the process by which this government works, by which your ministries work. I don't see any reason why we can't all support this amendment. I feel that this is one that should get unanimous support here in the Legislature because it is such a wonderful amendment, that just goes to the core of what government transparency should be. I would hope that you would stand with Albertans when they want to stay anonymous or they want to understand how these procedures are going to work.

With that, I would hope that there might be one or two comments on this before we vote on this amendment.

Thank you so much for your time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak or comment on amendment A13?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move along, back to Bill 4. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. In light of the hour and in light of the wonderful progress that we've been making on this most remarkable bill, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: I would also move that we rise and report progress on Bill 4.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Will the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley please report.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Continuation of Enactments

15. Mr. Olson moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve the continuation of the following enactments:
- (a) section 33 of the Agricultural Societies Act,
  - (b) sections 3 and 36 of the Rural Electrification Loan Act,
  - (c) section 2 of the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act, and
  - (d) sections 32 and 33 of the Rural Utilities Act.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At the risk of incurring the wrath of colleagues on all sides of the House, I'd like to get through this motion. I'll do it as quickly as I can. Briefly, all of these pieces of legislation have a provision which requires that every five years the loan and guarantee provisions be examined and debated for the purpose of determining whether they should be repealed or continued. That's the question here. I'll go through each act very briefly.

The Agricultural Societies Act does provide for guarantees of a maximum aggregate of $50 million. There haven't been any new guarantees for 20 years. When the last review was done in 2007, there was only one outstanding guarantee at that time. There are now no outstanding guarantees of agricultural societies. The logical question would be: well, then, why don't we just repeal it? Madam Speaker, we are going to be undertaking a review of this act, and we are looking at agricultural societies generally, so we think it's prudent to just leave the legislation sitting where it is. We have no plan right now to be using the guarantees, but there aren't any outstanding.

In terms of the three utilities pieces of legislation, there's one for gas and two for electrical services. The two electrical ones. In 1953 the Rural Electrification Revolving Fund Act was created. That was to help finance electrical services to farmers, either to individuals or to rural electrification associations. It evolved into the Rural Electrification Loan Act. There are two different types of loans: one for individuals, one for capital upgrades. Now, in this case there's been a history of these. They have evolved as well. Interest rates used to be very low. They then became market rates. Associations used them for major upgrades, changing their infrastructure.

The other electricity piece of legislation came a couple years later, in 1955, the Rural Electrification Long Term Financing Act: same types of purposes, same types of loans. These loans were generally made to farmers. They were charge-secured by liens on land, or they were secured by assets of the rural electrification association in the case of loans to the REA.

Now, there are outstanding loans here. In the mid-1970s there was over $75 million in outstanding loans. By 1997 there was only about $31 million left. That amount is declining. We probably still have about 10 years to go. It should be paid out in about 2022. What happened here is that in 1997 the government decided to get out of the business of financing these. They turned these outstanding loans over to the private sector. Part of the deal was that they would maintain this security. So even though the loans are administered by banks, the security is still there, and the government has a responsibility to maintain that security.

The last one is the Rural Utilities Act. That's the one that deals with the gas utilities for, obviously, provision of gas services. That was done for rural gas co-operatives to construct individual services secured by lien note. The last guarantee issued was in 1998. They've all expired, but there are about 36 outstanding loans. These would be delinquent loans worth about $130,000. So there's still a reason to have that security in place and to keep these provisions in place.

In summary, over the years, over these decades some 90,000 farm electric services have been installed with the help of this financing and some 200,000 rural natural gas services, which is the largest natural gas system in the world. So there is a reason for each of these to stay there, but they're eventually probably going to die a natural death. I'll be happy to answer any questions if there any, or I'd be pleased to hear the comments from my colleagues.

12:10

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to commend the minister of agriculture for actually bringing this before the House and spending the time to walk everybody through it. It didn't take that much time, and it was very much worth it.

My concern is that this minister did this, but a number of other ministers haven't. Over the summer and fall I've been watching the OCs go through, and there have been 24 OCs extending 29 acts, and all of those are extending the review date further on, pushing it further out. So while this minister actually brought this before us, explained why he was pushing the reviews out and made a good case for it, there have been 24 OCs extending 29 acts for things like the health and wellness grants amendment regulation, that they pushed the date for review out to July 31 of 2022. The employment standards amendment regulation, extended the date for review to June 30 of 2018. On and on and on it goes: the business corporations amendment, extended to 2017; the Garage Keepers' Lien Act, extended to 2015; the personal property security amendment regulation, extended to 2015; the personal property security forms amendment regulation, 2015; the government emergency management amendment regulation, 2017.

I don't know what's in this stuff. Of course, you can do it, but it's not easy, and I don't have the capacity to do it anymore. You see the OC come out, you read what it is, then you've got to go back and actually go into the system to find out what it actually says and what it's amending. Otherwise, it just says: OC this number on this subject. To find out what it actually says, you've got to go into the system, print it out, and go: okay; it's this section. Then you've got to go to the bill, look up the bill, and go: now I understand what they're doing. It's not easy, and it's fairly time consuming to try and figure out what's going on.

Lots of these may well be completely innocuous. I have no idea because I don't have the capacity to find it out anymore. You've got the wildlife expiry date amendment regulation pushed out to 2014. The Alberta chicken producers' plan amendment regulation, 2017; the environment grant amendment regulation pushed to November of 2022. Why? If these things need review or don't need review, why can't we hear about it in the same way that this minister managed to bring it forward? The Alberta heritage scholarship amendment regulation, 2019; the Calgary election amendment regulation, 2015 – well, that would be fairly current, I would think, given we've got an Election Act in front of us – the Edmonton election amendment regulation, 2015.

All of these regulations have the deadline for review pushed out. We don't know why: you don't have time; you're not interested; you don't care. I don't know. But it all went through in OCs over the summer.

I don't mean to pick on the minister of agriculture, but I do want to commend him for actually bringing this before the House and spending the 10 minutes to tell us why. I don't know why the rest of you couldn't do that and explain what's going on here because this is part of what makes people go: why are you so secretive? You may not be secretive. I don't know. I can't tell because all we've got is an OC that when you dig deep enough, you find out that they've pushed a review out, you know, whatever it is: two, four, 10. The furthest one out was pushed to 2022. I have no idea.

My compliments go out to the minister that actually did the work. My question is as to why the government and the rest of the ministers can't be bothered bringing that information forward to us.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be very brief so we can all go home. I just want to commend the minister as well for his explanation. I will say that the Wildrose wants to make very clear that our REAs have played an integral role in the development of Alberta and that we support them fully. We think they'll be key to rural Alberta's development in the future.

With regard to these specific acts, obviously, we think that it would be good to continue to review, particularly as it pertains to the liability aspects of some of these things and the liabilities that the province still has on its books, that it's been paying off for a long time now. I think that we just need to be careful in that regard. I think that the minister has given a good explanation for that, and we seem to be moving in the right direction with regard to paying back those debts.

That is all.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Mr. Hale: I just have a quick question for the hon. ag minister. I might have missed it in his presentation. Under the Rural Utilities Act you said that you had a hundred and some thousand dollars left to pay. Has that been turned over to private institutions? Are you seeing further loans going out? Just to clarify that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, there is no Standing Order 29(2)(a) at this point, so we'll consider that to be your speech. Perhaps the minister can answer through a note or something, but there is no 29(2)(a) at this point.

Any other members?

Seeing none, I'd ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to close debate.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll try to answer a few of the questions that were asked and comments that were made. First of all, I'd like to take credit, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, for doing this, but I'm mandated by the legislation to do it. I think that's the difference between some of the orders in council that you referred to.

Ms Blakeman: I take it all back, then.

Mr. Olson: I think you mentioned chicken producers in there, too. I'm also responsible for one of those OCs. I'm always happy to answer if you have questions about, you know, whether there was an extension of time.

Now, I just need to clarify that this has been a wonderful initiative – all of these have been – for Albertans and particularly rural Albertans, but this is not about debt owing by the government of Alberta. We don't owe any money here. We do have some contingent liability when we are guaranteeing other people's obligations. As I mentioned, the ag society legislation is there, but there is no contingent liability. It's zero right now. We don't have any liability whatsoever unless we were to guarantee some further loans, not to us but to ag societies. So we're the third party guaranteeing the debt.

That would be the case with some of these other ones as well. There are two pieces of electricity legislation. That's for REAs and for providing services in rural Alberta. The one of them does have significant money left, but that's not a debt owing by us; it's a debt owing by the people who have the services. Now, if they didn't pay, we could be at risk there, but that is a declining number. I think there's lots of protection there. There are also liens on the property, which provides security. So they're not unsecured debts. The one of them did have some outstanding delinquent debt. That's not delinquent debt owing by us; it's delinquent debt owing by the debtor, which we could be responsible for, and it's $130,000 in 36 loans. It's not a significant amount.

You know, I think we are nearing the end, perhaps, of the usefulness of some of these provisions. Whoever drafted the legislation back when they drafted it in their wisdom decided that it was important to come back every five years and just ask the question, "Do we still need this?" and put it in front of the House and debate it. That's why I'm here, and I really appreciate the comments from my colleagues.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 28, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Holy and Great Creator, guide us in our discussions, in our deliberations, and in our actions that they might exemplify what a democratic system looks like in its finest hour. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a rather large group of grade 6 students from Muriel Martin school in St. Albert. You know, St. Albert has a long history, which includes our francophone heritage. Included in this group are a large number of students in French immersion. They are accompanied by teacher/group leaders Mrs. Rhonda Surmon, Mrs. Jody Bialowas, Mrs. Linda Saunders, Mme Danielle Jean, Mme Paylig Oltadjian, Mme Skye Cloutier, Mme Linda Foley, Mme Julie Mann. I believe that they are seated in both the public and the members' galleries this afternoon. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for your first of two introductions.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students and teachers from George P. Nicholson school, located in the new constituency of Edmonton-South West, that I'm so honoured to serve. Accompanying these 20 bright and energetic students are teacher Mrs. Marcie Syme and parent Mrs. Michele Saul. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask the students and guests from George P. Nicholson school to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of my constituents, who are observing the proceedings of the Assembly for the first time. Both reside in Twin Brooks in the constituency of Edmonton-South West. I'd like to ask two fabulous ladies, Sheila Balash and Carol Costa, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great group of people from my constituency, Grande Prairie-Wapiti. Seated in the members' gallery are the mayor and council from the city of Grande Prairie. They were here yesterday and hosted a reception. I know that they had a chance to meet lots of people in the House. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names: Mayor Bill Given, Councillor Lorne Radbourne, Councillor John Croken, Councillor Kevin O'Toole, Councillor Kevin Mclean, Councillor Justin Munroe, Councillor Dan Wong, and administrator Mrs. Janette Ferguson. I'd ask the House to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Martha Castañeda, the director of international programs at the Council of State Governments – West. Miss Castañeda was of great assistance this past summer when Alberta hosted the 65th annual meeting of the Council of State Governments – West and helped contribute to the overall success of the event. We again welcome her to Alberta. We know that our friendship with the CSG – West will continue to thrive under her leadership. I invite Miss Castañeda to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a good friend and a constituent of mine, Mrs. Shelby MacLeod. Shelby is no stranger in this House. I know many of you will have worked with her during her tenure here with Clint Dunford. He did a fabulous job of representing Lethbridge-West as well. Shelby is a strong community member. She supports many organizations, including the Lethbridge Food Bank, and she's here today supporting our beef industry and working with the Alberta Beef Producers. I'd ask Shelby to rise and accept the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to proudly introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly my daughter Pamela, who is with us today in the Assembly, and a good friend of our family, Dr. Glenn Baron, who resides in Sherwood Park and has hunted in our area for a great number of years. I'd like them both to receive our Assembly's warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the entire Assembly two individuals who are seated in the public gallery, Miri Peterson and Bryan LaFleche from Crystal Kids. Crystal Kids impacts young people in ways that strengthen their resiliency and empower them to choose education and a productive future over street life, misery, and reliance on social support. Miri Peterson has been executive director for Crystal Kids for nearly nine years, and Bryan is the president of the Crystal Kids board and uses his experience from the business to spearhead the strategic plan for the organization. At this time I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Derek Fildebrandt. As many of you know, Derek is the Alberta director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. You've likely seen him around the Legislature, pushing us to be more fiscally accountable. It's important for the government to heed Derek's advice as he's also an Aussie rules football player in his off time. He might just tackle the government if they don't listen. I'd like Derek to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

For my second introduction I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Kevin Mclean. Kevin is not only a councillor for the city of Grande Prairie, but he's also a former Liberal candidate for Grande Prairie-Smoky. Now, Kevin is still working hard and is committed to working for the good citizens of Grande Prairie and all Albertans. The needs of Grande Prairie are great. They need not just roads and highway expansions but also schools and hospitals and general infrastructure. Kevin literally helped build Grande Prairie with his involvement in the home building industry. Kevin has a lovely wife, Tina, and two daughters, Kendra and Keira, who keep him busy when he's not working on city issues. Mr. Speaker, I'd like Kevin to rise again and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Nelumni Fernando and Indra Chaudhury. Nelumni Fernando is a 2012 MBA graduate from the prestigious University of Brighton in the United Kingdom. She has previously worked with the city of Brighton in the accounting division, and she's a proud member of the Institute of Financial Accountants in the United Kingdom. Indra Chaudhury, who is my campaign manager and also my office manager, has an MBA from the University of Brighton and is very talented. When I'm talking about him, I'm getting very emotional because we have what seems like a marriage together for such a long time. He's a very kind gentleman. At this time I will ask Nelumni and Indra Chaudhury to stand up and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly Dr. Alike Lafontaine. Alike practises anesthesiology in Grande Prairie – it's Grande Prairie day here, I think, today – and he's the only aboriginal anesthesiologist in Alberta's northern zone. He is the youngest ever recipient of the highest honour aboriginal people give their own, the national aboriginal achievement award. Alike lives with his wife and three children in Grande Prairie. He is seated today in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to rise so that he can receive the traditional welcome.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for your first of two introductions, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have just one introduction at the moment. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of guests who are members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. These workers are from Monterey Place assisted living and are yet another group who have made their trip up from Calgary despite the horrible weather and driving conditions. Nearly 90 staff members have been locked out by their employer, Triple A Living, for five months and two days. Once again, they're here to remind the PC government that private operators like Triple A Living are receiving government subsidies yet paying salaries up to 27 per cent lower than industry standard. I'd now like to ask my guests to rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Kavita Ben, Shayne de Leos, Jaswinder Dhillon, Pramila Ghimire, Balvinder Gill, Kidist Hailemariam, Kurt Rubiano, Jagjit Sran, Kevin Barry, and Nancy Burton. Please join me in welcoming these guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly a very special visitor and friend of mine. Seated in the members' gallery is Lorraine Kuffner, a former constituent of Calgary-Bow who now resides in Edmonton. Lorraine has been an active citizen in Alberta for many years now. Her energetic spirit has proven highly effective over the years as she has acted as an advocate on behalf of many seniors throughout this province. She also served as an advocate for her late husband, Louis Kuffner.

In addition to her time spent advocating on behalf of seniors, Lorraine always had time to be active in her own constituency. She was politically involved in my 2008 campaign, and I can't thank her enough for her generosity and support throughout the years. Our province is blessed with citizens like Lorraine Kuffner, and we don't say this enough, but we are lucky and grateful to have you. At this time I ask that Lorraine Kuffner please stand and for all the members to join me in extending the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand and invite my current but soon-to-be former constituency manager Mike Brown, his wife, Lauren, and Mike's dad to stand in the visitor's gallery and be recognized by the Legislature. He has been working tirelessly for me for the last two and a half years. Now moving on to the nonprofit sector, he's been a tremendous asset to Calgary-Mountain View. Please rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly two friends of mine who've been friends for many, many years. Karen Lynch I met on the eve of election in 1975 at Lou Hyndman's campaign headquarters. She was barely born then. We have campaigned together on many occasions since that time, and she is a dear friend. In fact, I was invited to be the best man at her wedding many years ago. I'm very pleased that she is now in the building and helping us out on the details of the Premier's schedule and other things. Susan Elliott was one of my first campaign managers way back when I ran for a nomination. I think it was in 1982. I think that was also the first campaign the Premier worked on. Neither of them was actually born at the time. Two very wonderful women who've actually contributed a lot to the political process in this province over the years, I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to my verbal advisory yesterday and my written memo that went out to each one of you shortly thereafter, I will remind you that the rule that we must abide by is this. Members' statements must not be used to denounce, defame, or attack any member of the Assembly nor any members of the general public who are not members of the Assembly and therefore are unable to defend themselves in this Assembly. As I indicated, I will intervene to enforce this rule as necessary. Therefore, I would ask for your co-operation in not violating this rule nor, for that matter, any of the rules that guide our proceedings.

That having been said, let us proceed with the first member's statement. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are alarmed to hear about the Premier's potential conflict of interest, which we will explore today in question period, but for everyone's benefit I would like to give a chronology of events so we can understand just how troubling this case is.

First, in May 2009 we have first reading of the Crown's Right of Recovery Act, which paves the way for the Crown to sue to recover health care costs for treating smokers. In late October 2009 that act passes third reading, and nothing much happens for a year. Fast forward about a year, and this thing really begins to take shape. On October 25, 2010, the then Justice minister and now Premier announces the government's plan to recover health care costs through the act. A week later the Justice department invites several law firms to complete an RFP to be a Crown litigator. A deadline of November 15 is set, and three bids are received.

On November 17, after the bids have been received, officials in the Justice department inquire to see if any of the applicants are involved in litigation against the government of Alberta. In essence, they changed the rules of the game after the puck was dropped. On December 7 the Justice minister receives a brief that rates all three bidders as being capable and roughly equal. One week later, on December 14, the Justice minister writes a memo awarding the contract for this made-in-Alberta litigation plan to the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers. How about that, Mr. Speaker? A $10 billion litigation suit tendered, evaluated, and awarded inside of seven weeks. When has the government ever acted this fast?

The questions arising from this warp-speed process are almost endless, but it boils down to this. It doesn't pass the smell test. The Premier awarding a multibillion dollar litigation suit to a firm connected to her ex-husband, close friend, political confidant, regular donor, and the man who oversaw her transition into the Premier's chair, in a seven-week span is a matter of serious ethical concern.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Crystal Kids Youth Center

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Crystal Kids Youth Center from Edmonton's inner city. The nonprofit community organization began in 1992 as a safe recreational facility for at-risk youth with an emphasis on physical fitness and health. Recreational activities were accompanied by a strong educational component to promote healthy eating habits and personal hygiene.

Over the course of two decades the centre has evolved into something far beyond this initial vision. Crystal Kids is now an integrated community support centre which focuses on building resilience, providing opportunities, and encouraging lifelong learning for all its visitors and members. One program, offering literacy and educational support, delivered over 4,680 hours of supervised literacy and homework activities in 2011. Another program called Heroes offered strength-based mentorship. It has been accredited with helping thousands of young Edmontonians develop healthy behaviours, leading to healthy life choices.

The Crystal Kids Youth Center has proven that mentorship can positively impact those who are at risk, in turn reducing crime and addiction. The centre has been an overwhelming success, but this has not come without its challenges.

Thanks to the strong leadership and dedicated volunteers, it has lived up to its vision. The Crystal Kids Youth Center continues on as strong as ever leader this year. It has celebrated two decades of nurturing and supporting at-risk urban youth. To all youth centres and mentors everywhere: thank you. To Crystal Kids Youth Center: a job well done, and you should be very, very proud of yourselves.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we start the clock, two quick notices. One, the order of members' statements was altered at the request of one of the members who wished to be placed later down, so that explains that. Thank you for the notes, those who sent me some.

Secondly, in my advisory yesterday and my subsequent memo I also indicated that another rule that guides question period in particular is that supplementary questions should not be preceded with any preamble. I also indicated that I would be enforcing that rule more strictly today, and I intend to do that. Hopefully, this will result in more members being able to be recognized for their important questions today than has previously been the case, and it will also help us preserve additional order in the House today. That having been said, let us proceed. The clock can start now with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we should be talking about the fiscal deficit today, but I'm disappointed to have to be raising questions about the ethical deficit here. The awarding of a multibillion dollar Alberta government legal case to a Calgary law firm with close ties to the Premier raises disturbing questions of conflict of interest, perceived conflict of interest, manipulation of the process, and at the very least horrible judgment on the part of the then Justice minister, now Premier. How could the Premier let herself and the province's reputation be so badly damaged?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Justice has spoken very clearly to the process that was followed. The suggestion that the Leader of the Opposition is making is absolutely inaccurate and false. In fact, when the decision was made by the government of Alberta as to who to retain on this file, I was not the Justice minister. I was not a member of cabinet. I was an MLA running to be the leader of this party. I will tell you that we are confident that the decisions that have been made to recover billions of dollars from the tobacco industry are in the hands of a firm that was of good service to taxpayers, cost effective, and selected by other jurisdictions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, since documents that I will table make it clear that it was the Justice minister's sole decision and since the conflict of interest legislation states in section 3 and section 4 that a member is in breach if he or she uses their office to improperly further another person's private interest, isn't it plain to the Premier that this is exactly what occurred?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the hon. Leader of the Opposition will also table the document from the previous Justice minister, the now agriculture minister, in June of 2011, when he was the one that signed the final item deciding to go with TRL.

Ms Smith: As I say, Mr. Speaker, I will table the December 14, 2010, document with the former Justice minister's signature on it which shows that she was the sole decision-maker in this case.

When one of the principals in this firm in question is the Premier's ex-husband, a 20-year political associate, a campaign regular who even led the Premier's transition team when she became Premier, you have to ask: why didn't she recuse herself as Justice minister in making this decision?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there's been lots of talk and innuendo here, but there is nothing new. This has been public for months, literally for months, yet when it suits a certain political advantage to bring it up, they bring this up against the Premier today. I think this House deserves better.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. Your second main set of questions. [interjections] You have the floor, hon. member.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me refresh the Premier's memory because the Justice minister's memo, the December 14, 2010, decision granting the contract to the consortium that includes her ex-husband and long-time political confidant's firm cites "perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest, the structure of the contingency arrangement and the importance of a 'made in Alberta' litigation plan," which is why, she writes "the best choice for Alberta will be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers." How could the Premier miss the perceived conflicts of interest that were evident when she was making the individual decision to select this firm of her former husband?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, you rose for a point of order at 1:56. That's been noted, as has the other one that was raised at 1:48.

The hon. Minister of Justice in response.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What the hon. Leader of the Opposition does not disclose is that there was a committee that had appeared before this. It was an independent review committee. There was also a tendering process where there were four firms that expressed matters of interest. As I mentioned in the earlier exchange, the final decision was made by the previous Attorney General, who is now the minister of agriculture, who is in no way anywhere near connected to this alleged conspiracy.

Ms Smith: I'm afraid, Mr. Speaker, that's simply not true.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Ms Smith: I will also table the January 13, 2011, status update, which states . . .

Mr. Anderson: Sit down, Dave.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. member, telling your own leader to sit down is not an appropriate statement to be making. It's an interjection that ought not be tolerated here. Let's cut down on the interjections. As much as people appreciate a little bit of applause, we've been pretty lenient over the years to allow applause at times on both sides of the House. However, there is a time when we can maybe shorten it a bit to move on with question period.

The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: . . . "no one consortium stood out above the others" in the process the Justice minister just spoke about, but "shortly before Christmas, [the then minister, the Premier] selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers" above Alberta-based Bennett Jones, above Alberta-based McLennan Ross. Why is it that it came down to choosing a Florida firm with Alberta connections to a smaller firm tied to the Premier?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is quoting a newspaper article, and I thank her for that. As I've dealt with the particular issues, if you look at all the other firms that expressed interest, every one of them talks about being part of a national office. Well, we want a consortium that acts solely for Alberta taxpayers in the event that there's another opportunity to deal with our particular issue and it is not the same interest as another province's like B.C. or Saskatchewan. We need a made-in-Alberta solution, and that is what we got in this process.

Ms Smith: It's obvious that the four other provinces involved in tobacco litigation saw no problem having Bennett Jones as their lawyers, no problem at all. Won't the government admit that this decision had nothing to do with the litigation and everything to do with political reasons?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I say once again that I'm fully confident that Albertans are receiving the best possible legal representation pursuant to this open and public tender. We picked the one of the four that best represents our interests. Again, it's on a contingency basis, so if this firm receives no money, guess what? The Alberta taxpayer pays no money.

Mr. Anderson: The Law Society code of conduct states: "A lawyer must not act personally in a matter when the lawyer's objectivity is impaired to the extent that the lawyer would be unable to properly and competently carry out the representation." The explanation provided underneath this rule says that this refers to "situations in which a lawyer's professional objectivity in a matter may be threatened or destroyed by circumstances personal to the lawyer, such as a family or other close relationship . . . [or] a financial interest." To the Premier: as the province's lawyer, why didn't you remove yourself from awarding the tobacco lawsuit when such a clear conflict existed?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta made a decision as to who to retain. I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision. The opposition can stand up every single day and say that I was, but I wasn't. It is simply not the case. It is not true. I truly believe that Alberta and the government of Alberta made an appropriate decision, a cost-effective decision, and hired a firm that is highly capable of undertaking this litigation in the best interests of Albertans. I congratulate the government for making that decision.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I quote from the memo written by the Premier at the time.

Considering the perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest, the structure of the contingency arrangement and the importance of a "made in Alberta" litigation plan, the best choice for Alberta will be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers.

It's signed by you. It's black and white, Madam Premier. Why did you do this? Why did you not recuse yourself?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I will allow this question, but the preamble that just took place ought not occur again. Let's please abide by that because I have to strictly enforce it.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there are four factors cited in that memo. In that memo we look to the fact that we do talk about perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest. These are entirely appropriate to be raised by the Department of Justice. On top of that, we had the opportunity at that time to talk about a made-in-Alberta solution and cost-effective service for taxpayers. At the time that memo truly reflected what needed to be considered. The government of Alberta four months later, when I was not the Minister of Justice, I presume considered the same factors, and that's why the decision was made. It would be incorrect to highlight one factor over others. It's time for this to stop.

Mr. Anderson: To the Premier. I have another problem, so I need to ask, Mr. Speaker. If I need to make a complaint on behalf of Albertans to the Law Society of Alberta for what seems like an egregious violation of professional code of conduct, how can I feel comfortable doing so when the president-elect of the Law Society of Alberta itself happens to be Carsten Jensen, senior partner in – you guessed it – the exact law firm that you awarded the tobacco contract to? The tangled web never ends, does it? [interjections]

Ms Redford: This is getting absolutely absurd. There is a legal profession in this province made up of a group of people called benchers who absolutely protect their independence. The members of the benchers, the Law Society of Alberta, elect a president. If this person, who theoretically should understand what the Law Society is, is now prepared to malign the legal profession in this province, then I have no idea where this discussion is supposed to go. But I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member decides to make a complaint, go ahead.

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hancock: And there would be a point of order for maligning people who are not in the House.

The Speaker: A point of order by the Government House Leader at 2:05.

Provincial Fiscal Reporting

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, let's change gears a little bit here. The Premier promised in her fudge-it budget to balance the books by 2013-14. Now with the release of the second-quarter fiscal update it's clear that government is hiding the true fiscal reality from Albertans. First they changed the definition of balanced budgets, and now it's breaking its own Government Accountability Act by refusing to release details on fiscal assets and liabilities as required by law. To the Premier – welcome back, by the way – when will your government come clean and tell Albertans how much income your government is taking in and how much money it actually owes?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased today that the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board had the opportunity to again update Albertans on our current fiscal circumstances. In the last week as I've been travelling, I've met with the Prime Minister, with the governor of the Bank of Canada, with Premiers across this country, and there is no doubt that we are all facing challenges that were unexpected nine months ago. We simply have to look at what's going on in the world to know that we are in uncertain times. I'm very pleased that today Albertans can see very clearly what our way forward is. We are going to be able to continue to provide services to Albertans, we are going to make sure that our operating budget balances, and we're going to continue to invest in the infrastructure that's going to allow Alberta to continue to grow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that sections 5(1)(f) and 9(1) of the government's own accountability act require the government to disclose the assets and liabilities and given that it has now failed to provide this information in both fiscal updates and in the FOIP request by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, to the Premier: why is Alberta's balance sheet of fiscal assets and liabilities a cabinet secret? Why won't you tell the public?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll be tabling in the House a little bit later on the second-quarter fiscal update and economic statement. I am not tabling the third budget of this year in this House. I am tabling an economic update as per the requirements of the legislation. If the hon. member would care to peruse this document, which, I might add, is more information than most jurisdictions across Canada provide at a mid-year point in time, he would be able to ascertain exactly the answers he is looking for if he bothered to do the research that he needs to do. We clearly have outlined the revenue that we are generating in the province, we have clearly outlined the debt that we have on the books today, and we have clearly outlined where we are six months into our budget year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it requires courage to balance budgets and courage to balance the fudge-it budget and given that Premier Lougheed had a progressive tax and even Prime Minister Harper has a progressive tax, will the Premier have the courage to bring in a fair progressive tax so that we can increase our revenue stream so we can balance the books today with oil at 90 bucks a barrel?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The simple truth of the matter is that when we bring forward the budget next year, it will have an operating plan, it will have a savings plan, it will have a capital plan because Albertans have told us that they want to have a home in the health care system, they want to have their kids have access to postsecondary education for their future, they want to be able to get to work on time, not congested, and they want to get products to market. All of that will be in a balanced budget presentation for the '13-14 year. We have made that commitment. The Premier has told me that it will be done because it meets the vision that she has for this province when we have 5 million people in the province. That's what this government will do.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On top of government scandals involving the Katz donation and illegal political fundraising involving the Premier's sister, we have a new revelation involving the Premier herself. According to documents obtained under the freedom of information act, the then Justice minister directed that an extremely lucrative legal contract be awarded to a law firm in which her ex-husband and former transition team leader is a partner. My question is to the Premier. Did you not realize that it was inappropriate at the very least for you to be involved in a decision that would likely involve a substantial financial benefit to your ex-husband?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for his question, but unfortunately that's where my thanks must end because the premise of his question is incorrect. The decision was made by the former minister, now of agriculture, who sits in this House, to hire the particular firm by way of a contingency fee agreement in June of 2011 when this Premier was not even a member of the cabinet. So we can just go on to the next.

Mr. Mason: Unfortunately not, Mr. Speaker. Given that the definition of conflict of interest is not just related to the final decision in this case but also to attempts to influence that decision by someone in a position to do so, will the Premier stop trying to avoid the tough questions and admit that this is a question of common-sense ethics and that she has fallen far short of the standard that Albertans expect from their leaders?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty much the same question, and it's the same answer. The people here are trying to malign the Premier for a decision that she didn't even make the final one of. I don't know where this issue is. The lawyers that were hired were in the best interest of recovery of Crown funds that we've expended over the last number of years dealing with tobacco-related illness. That's what this is about.

2:10

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at 2:10. It's been noted.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the current Justice minister is attempting to define this question in a way that completely misleads Albertans and given that the director of the Centre for Professional and Applied Ethics has stated that the then Justice minister, now the Premier, behaved, quote, unethically and possibly illegally by not recusing herself from this decision, unquote, will the Premier admit that her conduct in this case . . . [interjections]

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a seat for a moment. I hate to interrupt here. I'm going to give a little speech about the word "given" at the end, but technically it is allowed, and he does technically have 35 seconds to phrase his question. I have indicated before that it's very difficult, in my view, to even imagine a question going 35 seconds in length. The House leaders will be reviewing this, I'm sure, before too long.

But at the moment, Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you do have the floor.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have seen the incredible shrinking time available to opposition members to ask their questions over the years.

Given that the director of the Centre for Professional and Applied Ethics has stated that the then Justice minister, now the Premier, quote, behaved unethically and possibly illegally by not recusing herself from this decision, unquote, will the Premier admit that her conduct in this case was at best a mistake and apologize to Albertans for her breach of ethical standards?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked and answered today, but I just want to provide a quote from a lawyer whose firm lost the competition, for the edification of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Quote: no concerns about the transparency of the process. That should speak for itself.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, you rose on a point of order at 2:11. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at 2:12. That makes it about seven or eight points of order so far.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know this Premier inherited a culture of corruption and entitlement, but now we see that her own fingerprints are all over this latest scandal. She personally chose her ex-husband and transition leader's law firm to handle a $10 billion lawsuit.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a seat. Please. There are a number of rules that say that the Speaker should intervene whenever statements are made that may cause disorder or disruption in the House. Clearly, you have done that. Now, I have indicated a great amount of leniency and leeway over the past couple of weeks. You all know that. You have all seen my comments in Hansard. I wish I could stop making them. I wish I could stop having to be forced to make them. However, if you persist in that kind of language and disorder results, I have no choice but to rise. Now, it happens from both sides of the House on occasion, so I'm not chastising only one member here. I'm reminding all of you. Would you please rephrase your questions in such a way that it doesn't result in this kind of potential disorder being created.

The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try, but it's quite difficult.

The Premier personally chose her ex-husband and transition leader's law firm to handle a $10-billion government lawsuit. It's crazy that the Premier can't see this conflict of interest. Can the Justice minister see it?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at 2:14. It's been noted as well as the 2:12 one.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I spelled this out before; I'll spell it out again. Prior to that memo that they're referring to, there was an expression of interest from four different law firms. They made their presentations to a review committee. That included an ADM from Health, an ADM from Justice, and also included a senior lawyer from Justice. Then what happened was that there was the memo, but the actual contract wasn't signed until June of 2011 by the current minister of agriculture when he was Minister of Justice. I'm sure that with the vast years of legal experience that this member has, he could understand that that memo is not a contract.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Premier has given away the biggest litigation contract in Alberta's history to a law firm tied to her, how can this government possibly argue that the Premier was not in a clear conflict of interest?

Mr. Denis: You know how far back that we have to go. Again, I refer that member to Section 1(5) of the Conflicts of Interest Act and the definition of a spouse. Nowhere there does it say former spouse, let alone does it say spouse of 20 years, Mr. Speaker. Which way is up?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier do the right thing and self-report to the Ethics Commissioner, or is she going to have to wait for us in the opposition to drag her kicking and screaming into yet another ethics investigation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the opposition has clearly indicated that they will be filing a complaint to both the Ethics Commissioner and to the Law Society, and the Premier has invited them to do so. I certainly hope that they do that. What I find also very interesting, and that is another thing that the Leader of the Opposition won't mention, is that the ex-husband in question also was a partner at Bennett Jones, to which, she says, contracts should have been awarded. Would she be then complaining of that being collusion as well? We're dealing here with allegations which are so farfetched. Perhaps some rulings on that should be made. Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm sure some rulings will become necessary, and I would just remind you of 23(h), (i), and (j). Please review those with subsequent questions before they're asked.

Calgary-North West, followed by Highwood.

Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard in the House that seniors in our long-term care facilities are receiving only one bath a week. It doesn't seem right. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: what are you doing about this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. You know, my mom lived in a seniors' facility, and like all family members here that have loved ones in care in our seniors' facilities, I too care about the well-being and the care and the safety of the residents. I've discussed this matter with the Health minister, and together we're going to have a look at this issue, sir.

Ms Jansen: Also to the Associate Minister of Seniors. It's fine to say that there are standards, but when we hear that some of these seniors are getting only one bath a week, how can we be confident that their needs are being met?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the standard for personal care is developed with the personal attendants at each of our seniors' facilities. They're trained professionals. With input from family members a care plan is developed. I'll stand by that care plan. Like I said in the previous answer, I will have an opportunity to review this matter.

Ms Jansen: Also to the same minister. It still doesn't tell me why some people may be getting only one bath a week. Does the Associate Minister of Seniors believe that's appropriate?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, what's appropriate is that we follow the care plan and that the care plan is updated on a regular basis with family and that family has the opportunity for input. The safety, the care, and the love that's given to our residents are always paramount for me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Arthur Schafer, director of the Centre for Professional and Applied Ethics at the University of Manitoba, has reacted to this situation involving the perceived conflict of interest and is scathing in his assessment. I will table his biography later today in the event that the hon. members on the other side wish to see it. He has said: the Minister of Justice, in my view, behaved blank and possibly blank by not recusing herself in making this decision in this matter. What is the Premier's defence?

Mr. Mason: Don't be glib, Thomas.

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's right. One has to be very cautious when using blanks because I'm certainly tempted to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you this. The Premier has been very clear that at the time when the final decision was made, it was made by a different Minister of Justice. Frankly, the Premier was not in cabinet at that time, and I can attest to that myself personally. The fact is that there is no conflict of interest. The best firm was chosen through an open process, was at the lowest cost to Albertans, and had the best expertise to recover money for Albertans from tobacco companies. Now not only are they alleging that there is a problem with that, but the Law Society is somehow implicated in that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, just because her successor affirmed the decision that she made does not negate the fact that she made the decision. All three consortiums were considered capable. No one consortium stood out before the others, and shortly before Christmas she was the one who selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers. Professor Schafer says this on that: her failing to recognize or failing to act after recognizing she was in a conflict of interest is worse than shabby; it is shameful.

The Speaker: Hon. member, question, please.

Ms Smith: How can the Premier defend herself?

2:20

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, the defence is relatively easy. The Premier was not a cabinet minister. She stepped down to run for the leadership of the party in February of 2011. She came back as Premier in October of 2011. The decision was made during the time she was not a cabinet minister, not the Premier. I fail to see what the issue is here. I think the member should look at her notes.

Ms Smith: With all of the evidence suggesting at a minimum the perception of conflict, why did the then Justice minister not stay out of the decision completely?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, she didn't make the decision. The decision was made by another member of cabinet. She was not even a member of cabinet. There is no conflict of interest whatsoever.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at 2:19 p.m. It has been noted.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're all aware that the global economic uncertainty persists. It's clear from today's second-quarter fiscal update that Alberta is not impervious to its effects. My question is to the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. With the significant decreases in resource revenue we have seen so far this year, is it realistic to suggest that we are still on track to balance the budget in 2013-14?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, I have been asked this before although not as politely and not in as well-phrased a manner. Looking ahead to Budget 2013, we will have, as I said, a fully funded operating plan, savings plan, and a fully funded capital plan. Those plans will speak to the vision that our Premier has, the optimism that Albertans have for the future of this province. I know that some don't share that optimism. We do. We also will recognize the challenges that we face as they relate to our largest customers, relate to the global economy. We certainly understand that Albertans expect us to be looking at those things. We will do all of them.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Also to the Minister of Finance. I share your optimism, but given these decreases in resource revenue and the invariable impact they'll have on our current budget, what are we doing about spending?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, our fiscal reality has changed since the budget was tabled in this House. We understand that, and in response to that we are holding the line on spending. In fact, we have asked all departments to share half a billion dollars' worth of savings in this year. We're moving forward with the results-based budgeting initiative, where every dollar that we spend will be scrutinized to ensure that taxpayers are getting full value, that we're getting the objective that we were striving for. The bottom line is that we're going to control our spending while still continuing to meet the priorities that Albertans have told us they want us to meet: health, education, and infrastructure.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: given that many jurisdictions around this world are facing economic downturn, what is this government doing to manage the risk that the vast majority of our oil is exported to a single market?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. Today when I was presenting the documents, which I'll table later, on our second quarter, I put up a graph that showed the differential spread between what we get for our oil and what the international prices are. It's widening. That speaks to the market access question. I'm very proud that our Premier was at the confederation of regions talking to other Premiers about allowing access for our pipelines to cross their territories and get to markets like Quebec. That is what's providing benefit to Albertans. That's how we'll deal with market access. I'm proud to have a leader who is willing to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities (continued)

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Seniors minister. Staff shortages and inadequate training continue to weaken community care at a time when increased nursing is needed to keep services and patients out of hospital. The government has just not gotten it. Alberta Health has standards, but each centre has its own policies, Mr. Minister. Imagine, Minister, having incontinence two, three, or more times a day and having a single bath a week. This is both a risk to the individual and to spreading infectious disease in an institution and the community. I know that in some centres there's not even a licensed practical nurse supervising during some shifts, no oversight, with short staff in some cases. To the minister: lack of in-house nursing ability and caregiving means . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for the question. Each and every one of our facilities goes through a rigorous inspection and accommodation standard. We have very well-trained staff that go to each and every one of our facilities. It's publicly noted on the website any infractions or any issues that each facility has. It's there for public knowledge. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that

I've been to lots of these facilities around the province, and I'd hold them up to any facility across this country.

Dr. Swann: No consistency, Mr. Speaker, according to the Auditor General.

Given inconsistent nursing services and care – I mean, many of these seniors are sent back to the institutions from the emergency room, to the same conditions that caused their evacuation of the long-term care. No wonder EMS is struggling with unacceptable response times; they're being held up in emergency departments. What are you doing to make this a more consistent care centre for people?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that question. One of the things we know is that the demand-supply curve is out of whack right now in the housing options for seniors. One of the issues that we're going to move forward on and very aggressively is a five-year action plan on housing. Over the last two years we've developed over 2,100 spaces. We'll continue to develop 1,000 new spaces a year, with care provided in those centres, sir.

Dr. Swann: I'm aware, Mr. Speaker, of declining staff morale. As well, families who don't trust their loved one's care are increasingly obligated to feed and assist their loved ones to make up for deficits. When will this minister assure and ensure consistent training and staffing numbers for our seniors?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I ensure is that the support for our seniors' programs, their independence, their quality of life, and positive health outcomes are paramount to me and to the Health minister and to everybody on this side of the government and, I'm sure, to all of you. We'll continue to have the best services across this country, and I'll stand beside those workers any day, anytime, anywhere and promote that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government won re-election on a platform full of expensive promises. The Premier pledged to do everything from building 140 new family care clinics to putting billions of dollars back into the sustainability fund. The promises this Premier made during her campaign have been costed out at between $3 billion and $6 billion, but now the deficit makes it look like there's no way that this government will be able to pay for their promises. To the Premier: was it her intention to win re-election on empty promises and then govern on cuts?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member to make that accusation, I guess he can see into the future, because at this point in time we are planning to meet all of our commitments.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that this Conservative government intentionally misled Albertans by using a budget based on overly optimistic projections – in other words, rainbows and unicorns – and given that the price of oil is still lower than this government's projected price, to the President of the Treasury Board: will he admit that the way to rectify this situation and ensure that Albertans get the public services they need is to increase royalties to an amount competitive with every other jurisdiction in the world?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, here is what I'll admit to. I'll admit that I think the hon. member is not reading any of the material that was provided to him. The federal government budget that was announced this spring used $100 for their oil number. The Saskatchewan government, which just recently released their mid-year statement, used $100 for their oil projection. The opposition, the wild alliance, in their fudge-it budget used our royalty and our revenue numbers. I'm not sure what the NDP fudge-it budget might have been, but I'm sure they would have used our numbers as well.

What we are doing is presenting projections that are based not on what government has said, what private forecasters have said, what public forecasters have said. We take the best information available just like those other jurisdictions have, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Bilous: To the same minister: given that in order to pay for the Conservatives' corporate welfare program – in other words, corporate tax cuts – the government has cheated Albertans out of nearly $14 billion in corporate income taxes since 2001 and given that there are no plans to increase corporate taxes to a competitive rate in order to offset this government's current $3 billion projected fiscal deficit, will the minister please explain to Albertans what programs are going to be cut in order to pay for their corporate giveaways?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, here are some news flashes for the hon. member. When I table this document this afternoon, I certainly hope that he'll read through it because what it tells you is that the Alberta economy is extremely strong. We created more jobs in this province than any other jurisdiction in Canada. That's what the corporations are doing. Personal income in this province is rising faster than even what we projected at the beginning of the year because there are new Albertans coming into our province. Why are they coming here? It's because this is where it's happening. This is a province of opportunity, and we will continue to make it so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were led to believe that this Premier was serious about finding a made-in-Alberta approach to tobacco litigation back in 2010. She was so serious, in fact, that the Premier hand-picked a group largely based out of Florida to receive the contract. We are told the Florida firm is the muscle in this group. They are the ones with all the tobacco litigation experience, making the Alberta firms merely hood ornaments. Can the Justice minister explain how shipping the work associated with the lawsuit to sunny Florida qualifies as a made-in-Alberta solution?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, TRL has many lawyers throughout Alberta, and I need to correct another item that the Member for Calgary-Shaw mentioned. The Premier did not hand-pick this particular item. She was not a member of cabinet. She resigned on February 16, 2011, and wasn't back until after the leadership. [interjections] What happened – if I could even hear myself think – was that in June of 2011 the contract was done by a different minister, not the Premier. Let's stick to the truth here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Justice minister: how is the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers firm a more made-in-Alberta approach than Bennett Jones, which employs hundreds of Alberta-based lawyers at their headquarters in Calgary and once counted amongst their staff the hon. former Premier Lougheed?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there are many firms throughout this entire province who applied. There were four actually which were chosen as part of the consortium. TRL was chosen because it was in the best interests of the taxpayers. I've outlined all of the issues here. I'm sorry that the member does not accept the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Justice minister seriously expect Albertans to believe that Bennett Jones, an Alberta law firm with years of tobacco litigation experience, was passed over in favour of an American-backed consortium simply because it was of better value to Albertans, or was it just better value to Albertans who have ties to the Premier's office?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you go through almost every law firm, you'd find ties to every party in here. I have many lawyers who donate to me. I know there are lawyers over there. There are binders full of lawyers everywhere around this entire province. I'll tell you that we got the best deal for the Alberta taxpayer, and we're going to keep acting in the interest of the Alberta taxpayer.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at 2:29 during Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's question, and that has been noted.

Support for the Pork Industry

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, in my veterinary practice I had the privilege of serving Alberta's hard-working pork producers. Many of them are coming to me now, asking me to save their bacon in a different way. Our pork industry is in crisis. While high prices benefit other commodity producers, pork producers have been crippled by falling prices, soaring feed costs, and unfavourable foreign exchange rates. Producers are suffering huge losses, causing some to downsize or terminate production entirely. To the minister of agriculture: are any new or additional measures being contemplated to provide much-needed financial support to our beleaguered pork producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding the comments of my colleague down the way, I think I still have this job, so I'll answer the question. We are certainly aware of the ongoing challenges that exist in the pork industry. They have been having some tough times in recent months and even years, but there are a number of programs that are in place that are partnerships between the federal government and our government and other governments across the country to support the pork industry and other industries such as AgriStability and AgriInvest.

Now, we're working with the industry and with the federal government to maximize the effect of these programs. We are trying to make sure that they are fully utilized and that applications under these programs are given priority. We also have a hog price insurance program in Alberta, which is the envy of many other jurisdictions. Unfortunately, it's fairly new and undersubscribed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: given that high feed prices are a significant contributor to the current crisis, will the minister indicate whether he is contemplating any changes to the current government programs and policies that favour ethanol production, which essentially funnels feed grains into the production of fuel rather than food?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that was brought to me by the Alberta pork people last week, when I was at their AGM. It is something we hear about from time to time. The fact is that the federal government does mandate that a percentage of fuel come from renewable sources. In Alberta 5 per cent of our fuel has to come from renewable sources. However, less than 1 per cent of grains in Alberta are used for the production of ethanol. There is only one ethanol plant in Alberta; that's in Red Deer. They're using wheat. They're producing food, and it's only the by-product that is used for ethanol.

Dr. Starke: A final supplemental, Mr. Speaker: if the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development can't offer much in financial help, could he offer producers some assistance with another challenge facing their industry; namely, the recruitment and retention of workers for their operations?

Mr. Olson: Workforce is an issue not only in the pork industry but in many parts of the agri-food industry. We do have a workforce development strategy. We have specialists who counsel producers and processors in terms of efficiency and also recruitment and retention. We have some grant programs up to a maximum of $25,000 for the purpose of becoming more efficient and for using the programs of recruitment and retention. So we have assets in place to help.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, this is all very disturbing. It looks like the Premier used her position as Justice minister to send a great big chunk of business to her long-time political confidant's law firm. What we can't dispute: we know that partner at JSS headed her transition team, donated thousands to her leadership bid, co-ordinated and organized five leader's dinners. Now, the government claims it's all okay. This is all above board. Well, it sure doesn't look very good. Did the Premier think to consult the Ethics Commissioner to get an okay before this contract was awarded?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will mention to this particular individual is that the individual he did not name – and I thank him for that – was not part of the bidding process, was not part of the lawsuit. It still has nothing to do with this particular item. I don't know where they're going with this.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, even the appearance of conflict is damaging. I think we'd all agree on that.

To the Premier or anybody else over there that would like to answer: don't you see that you are shattering – yes, shattering – Albertans' confidence in all of you?

Mr. Lukaszuk: For the last seven months, while this side of the House was focusing on governing Alberta and creating a bright future for all Albertans, they have shattered the confidence of Albertans in the health care system, in the educational system, in the justice system, now in the Law Society, and now undermining the process of law firms being retained in this province of Alberta. This is all that we can expect from that side of the House, and they can carry on. But, Mr. Speaker, just a word of warning. Pretty soon they will run out of family members of individual members of this House and of institutions that have been credible for over 100 years in this province.

Mr. McAllister: Translation: I know you are, but what am I?

Mr. Speaker, we've seen health expenses, illegal contributions, all kinds of scandals in the last seven months. Can the Premier look Albertans in the eye, convince them that she is raising the bar on accountability and transparency or anything else for that matter?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let me introduce to you Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East. Please proceed.

2:40 Postsecondary Institution Infrastructure Planning

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Lethbridge, named as Canada's undergraduate research university of the year, also has the top third ranking in the highly touted Maclean's rankings. These designations are despite having outdated – and that's a very generous word – teaching labs in the sciences. To train scientists to a standard that allows them a seamless transition to Alberta's workforce, modern labs at postsecondary institutions are crucial. To the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: can the minister advise the Assembly how his department is identifying the critical infrastructure needs at Alberta's postsecondary institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. My ministry works closely with all 26 of our Campus Alberta partners to identify their infrastructure needs and priorities, and through this process we identified the need for expanded science facilities at the University of Lethbridge. In fact, last year we provided the U of L with $2.3 million to plan a new facility that will ensure that they can deliver up-to-date science in their global initiative and in all that they do at the U of L.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you to the minister. Given that modern science facilities at the U of L are key to continuing to attract top students and faculty from across Canada and the world, can the minister tell the Assembly how his department is prioritizing the critical infrastructure that's needed at Alberta's postsecondary institutions?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, my team and I visit all the postsecondaries around the province. We visit them first-hand, and we inspect their facilities. We meet with the stakeholders, and we learn what their needs are. As well, my department collects comprehensive data from all of the publicly funded institutions, and this allows us to make evidence-based decisions on capital priorities. Our focus will always be to respond to the needs of our students, our schools, and the economy in all regions of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue to talk about the U of L, but my next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Recognizing the many different infrastructure needs in the province, how can we ensure that the critical infrastructure needed today will be done in a timely manner?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, Albertans expect their government to invest in key infrastructure projects and use their tax dollars wisely, and that's what we'll do. I've been working with my colleagues to build this year's capital plan. For example, we have been successful in using the P3 model to build new schools two years sooner than traditional builds. As the minister of Treasury Board and Finance has said, we will look at all the tools in our financial toolbox, and we will continue to invest in the public's infrastructure to ensure that Albertans have the quality of life they deserve now and into the future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. In a few seconds from now we will resume with Members' Statements, beginning with Lesser Slave Lake.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Aboriginal Content in Education Curriculum

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years aboriginal people like myself have requested that aboriginal content be included in Alberta's curriculum. Today I stand to salute an innovative professional resource for teachers produced in collaboration with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit members and elders across Alberta, Walking Together: First Nations, Métis and Inuit Perspectives in Curriculum.

There are approximately 50,000 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students in Alberta, many of whom we know are not achieving to their full potential. One of the reasons has been a lack of understanding of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people's culture, history, and language amongst teachers. I believe Walking Together now provides that understanding.

The activities within this online resource are designed to encourage greater insight and deeper understanding of issues impacting aboriginal students, their families, and communities. The resource aims to initiate classroom conversations addressing topics like culture, language, oral traditions, aboriginal and treaty rights, and indigenous connections to the land.

Postsecondary institutions, particularly those involved in teacher training, anticipate the resource will increase educators' confidence to bring First Nations, Métis, and Inuit content and perspectives to life in their classrooms, and Walking Together can help teachers initiate conversations that address aboriginal issues in a caring and collaborative manner. That will assist Alberta's teachers to ensure that their classrooms are welcoming, caring, and respectful learning environments for both their aboriginal and nonaboriginal students. After all, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have told us they want an education system that values diversity and respect.

To the Education department: nih nah sku mun, hai hai!

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

eCampus Alberta 10th Anniversary

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize eCampus Alberta and its member postsecondary institutions. This month they celebrate 10 years of leadership and dedication to improving access to lifelong learning opportunities for Albertans. eCampus Alberta uses online learning technologies to extend the reach of Alberta's postsecondary system across the province. This consortium of 16 postsecondary institutions currently provides access to more than 800 online courses and 70 provincially accredited online certificate, diploma, and applied degree programs.

Through online learning Alberta's students can pursue postsecondary studies while continuing to work, raise a family, and remain at home in their community, and more and more Albertans are taking advantage of this great opportunity. In fact, eCampus Alberta has seen growth rates of nearly 25 per cent per year in recent years.

The success of eCampus Alberta is a direct result of its leadership, a visionary group of senior executives from our postsecondary institutions. Thanks to their co-operation eCampus Alberta has facilitated more collaboration between institutions than any similar consortia in the country. In fact, this group of outstanding leaders often receives queries about eCampus Alberta's success from their colleagues right across Canada. eCampus Alberta is a great example of the successful collaborative and co-operative relationships being built between Campus Alberta's 26 publicly funded postsecondary institutions.

On behalf of this government and the citizens of Alberta I'd like to congratulate eCampus Alberta on reaching this important milestone. The convenience and flexibility provided by eCampus Alberta to access a postsecondary education remotely allows Alberta students to better realize their full potential and contribute to their families, their communities, and, of course, to the success of our province. We look forward to eCampus Alberta leading the way over the next 10 years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Ethics in Government

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much hay has been made in the past five weeks about illegal donations and the perceived unethical behaviour of individuals with close ties to the government. The reality is that the public perception of what happens here in this House every day, both positive and negative, reflects on all of us. In a province like Alberta, that was founded on principles like my word is my bond, the cowboy code, and where a handshake seals a deal, it makes you wonder just how far we've come when we require laws to be written to define what is right and what is wrong. But here we are by force of circumstance reviewing and drafting laws on what should be just good common sense.

Yesterday a mandatory review of the Conflicts of Interest Act was launched, and I am pleased to be on the committee to do just that. I look forward to working with the committee to strengthen our democracy, and I welcome the opportunity to work with MLAs of all parties to navigate the process of redefining conflicts of interest for the 21st century. Clearly, this is long overdue in Alberta.

I am a very trusting person, always looking to find the best in people and more often than not will give someone the benefit of the doubt even though I probably at times should not. It appears that a major breach of this act has occurred, Mr. Speaker, and it is with truly mixed feelings that I react to this revelation. Today the reputation of our entire democratic system has been called into question, and I'm not sure what is more disturbing, the allegation itself or this government's blind defence of it.

It is said that the true judge of character is what one would do if they thought they would not get caught. Unfortunately for all Albertans, I believe we have just witnessed a major blow to the character of this very institution, and that, Mr. Speaker, reflects very poorly on every one of us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the PCs provided Alberta with their second-quarter fiscal update. It should have been a positive and hopeful update, providing Albertans with the economic security they need and deserve. However, the update they provided is a sobering reality of the kind of future Albertans can expect under this government.

During the election the Conservatives misled the people of this province about the dire fiscal situation we're in. The reality is that we're running huge infrastructure deficits, fiscal deficits, and social deficits. Prior to the election the Conservatives released a budget that projected an $868 million deficit. Today they again admitted that the deficit is likely to be between $2 billion and $3 billion. There are also hidden deficits within crumbling roads, bridges, and schools and an overreliance on nonrenewal resource revenue, which financed nearly 30 per cent of program spending in the last budget year.

Mr. Speaker, the fiscal fiction that the Conservatives are spinning is based on overinflated revenue projections, yet they campaigned on promising new infrastructure and programs that Albertans know they can't pay for and enjoy under this fiscal framework. When will the Conservatives understand that you can't have your cake and eat it, too. You can't have balanced budgets, low revenue, and continue to deliver on the services that Albertans depend on and deserve.

Since the Conservatives started cutting corporate taxes for their corporate welfare program in 2001, the government budgeted for Albertans to miss out on nearly $14 billion of lost corporate income tax, and their ideological adherence to a flat tax is costing taxpayers billions of dollars a year. When it was introduced in 2001, the same year that the government began cutting corporate taxes, it cost Albertans an estimated $1.5 billion a year. This flat tax sacrifices public services and punishes the poor for the benefit of the very wealthy.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's New Democrats are calling for the government to increase revenue and balance the budget by making corporations and wealthy Albertans pay their fair share.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 30 of the standing orders I'd like to move a motion.

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need for the government of Alberta to suspend all activities and proceedings related to any contracts it has with International Tobacco Recovery consortium, including Jensen Shawa Solomon Duguid Hawkes LLP, that are related to the tobacco recovery litigation until a full investigation has been completed by the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta and all results therefrom made public.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Bill 205

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012.

This act would amend the Fisheries (Alberta) Act to formalize a consultation process by which fishing quotas would be set each year, and it would help to make regulations concerning the consultation process more consistent and transparent by entrenching the process in legislation. It will also advance the government's commitment to clarity and transparency and would assist in the inclusion of key stakeholders in the decision-making process that directly affects them.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Three tablings.

Mr. Quest: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Pursuant to section 16(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table the 2011-2012 annual report on the fund.

Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act I'm also tabling the 2012-2013 first-quarter update on the fund. Copies of these two reports have previously been distributed to all members.

Finally, pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, I am pleased to table the 2012-2013 second-quarter update on the fund. The copies were distributed to members' offices this morning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the President of Treasury Board and the Justice Minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to table the 2011 annual report of the College of Dental Technologists of Alberta. Members of the college provide a strong supporting role to other health care professionals by creating, repairing, and maintaining prosthetic and orthodontic devices. They pride themselves on providing Albertans with the safe delivery of quality care. This report outlines the great work that they are doing as well as their financial statements for 2011.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the second-quarter fiscal update and economic statement, which reports on the results of the first six months of the 2012-13 consolidated fiscal plan. The 2012-13 second-quarter fiscal update and economic statement has already been provided to all members and released publicly as required by sections 3 and 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief in interests of time. I have three tablings, five copies of each for you. The first is a statement from JSS Barristers.

The second is a backgrounder regarding Tobacco Recovery Lawyers.

The third is just some information on the Nunavut tobacco file for the records here.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Leader for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a memorandum dated December 14, 2010, from the Justice minister at the time to the Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General that makes it clear that this minister at that time had indicated that the best choice for Alberta in this litigation will be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers.

I also have a subsequent follow-up from a backgrounder requested from the deputy minister as a status update, dated January 13, 2011, in which case it is affirmed that shortly before Christmas the then Justice minister at the time selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers, the Jensen consortium.

I also have a biography of Arthur Schafer, who is the director of the Centre for Professional and Applied Ethics at the University of Manitoba.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, then we can deal with the points of order. Hon. members, most uncharacteristically, we have 10 points of order to deal with today. I'm going to start with the Government House Leader's first point of order. We'll hear how that goes.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the interests of time perhaps I can narrow down my points of order to two, one with respect to the various offensive actions of the Official Opposition questioners today and the other with respect to the offensive actions of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

With respect to the first point of order – and I'll deal with all of the others in it, subject to your telling me not to – it's under 23(h), (i), (j), and (l). Often members get up and just ream those off as points of order just to have something to speak to, but they actually fit perfectly in this circumstance today. Standing Order 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member;" 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;" (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder;" and also (l), "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition offended all four of those rules and, in fact, many, many other rules in the book. The performance today could only be characterized as cheap theatrics by a failed actress. The fact of the matter is that there are many appropriate ways to raise issues that a member of the House believes are of public importance. Certainly, an issue with respect to an awarding of a contract in the Ministry of Justice may be that type of public interest, particularly when it deals with an area of public interest like tobacco policy.

If the hon. members wanted to raise questions about a process to award a contract, whether there was an open and transparent process, whether there was anything around the process, they could actually do that and with a small, rather modest application of talent bring up questions which actually were relevant. But today, instead, full-frontal and intentional – full-frontal and intentional, Mr. Speaker – on numerous occasions they directly made allegations against the Premier. Now, I'm not going to repeat all the allegations. People can read the Blues themselves. It was very evident what was happening today, allegations against the Premier with respect to conflict of interest.

Mr. Speaker, we have a rule against allegations against a member for a reason, and the reason is that this House has to be held to a standard of operation. We have a rule about respecting each other, a rule about decorum, a rule about how we engage in respectful public discourse, and we have processes for investigations of allegations if and when they come up. We have an Ethics Commissioner. If there are any allegations about a conflict of interest or the ethics of a member, there is an appropriate place where that can be determined.

Why, Mr. Speaker, do we have that? Why do we have such a rule? Well, we have such a rule because from time there may be allegations made. These are very serious allegations when they're made because what we have in this House as individual members of this House is our integrity. What we bring to this place is honesty, integrity, and ability to serve Albertans to the best of our ability.

Now, allegations will come up from time to time, and they should be handled extremely carefully. They should be handled appropriately. An allegation is just that. It's not proof. It doesn't necessarily have all of the facts surrounding it. In fact, when we see them come up in a role like question period, the facts are usually selective, and indeed the statements are rarely fact. So it's absolutely inappropriate to make a full, direct allegation against the Premier or any other member, and it's against the rules for a reason. There is a process to deal with ethics allegations. If somebody wants to deal with ethics allegations, they can deal with that in the process.

Now, we can't control what the press says, and nobody would want to. People will judge the press for themselves. We have some reporters who engage in this sort of stuff. That's fine. But in this House, in government, and in Legislatures and parliaments there is an important process that we engage in, and it is important that the public sees us as being above that kind of smear technique, above that kind of tactic.

We have appropriate processes in place if hon. members have any allegations against another member that they think violate any of the rules or ethics or any laws of that nature. If it violates a law, they should report it to the police for investigation. If it violates the ethical standards or even if they perceive that it violates ethical standards, if they have an allegation in that regard, they can go to the Ethics Commissioner. When it comes to the House, they can ask questions. Every member can ask questions in the House to members of Executive Council with respect to matters of policy, with respect to matters of how that policy is carried out. There are very appropriate ways to ask those questions, none of which were used by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition or the Member for Airdrie or the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills today.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to admonish the members not to approach questions in that nature. In fact, I would not only ask; I would very seriously insist that those members be called to task and asked to recant their allegations. We cannot go through question periods in this House where we raise points of order and wait until the end, where those members are on prime-time television talking to Albertans, making allegations in a wildly accusatory manner without the benefit of proof, without the benefit of investigation, without the benefit of anyone, in particular the Ethics Commissioner, having an opportunity to review the matter. That's precisely why we have the rules, and flagrant violation of the rules cannot be allowed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think we need to put some of this in a little bit of context. I think that a lot of folks over here on this side of the House, today especially, feel very strongly that freedom of speech itself in this Legislature right now is at stake. I've never seen 61 folks cower so completely to 17. It is unbelievable, the yelling across the aisle that took place today. [interjections]

When we came in here, Mr. Speaker, we had read your memo. We had read your memo. We went through our caucus together, and we read it out loud and said: we are not going to engage in heckling and screaming across the aisle. For the most part, I would say, other than me asking the Government House Leader to sit down after his 10th point of order, we did our job on this side. Meanwhile the folks on that side have been literally screaming this entire time, and I don't think they have been called to account. I think we need some context here. We are trying to use a civil tone, and no one is more civil in this House than the Leader of the Official Opposition. She wasn't the one screaming, like your leader over there.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, it is very clear from the questions. Now, I don't have the Blues in front of me, but I do have the Leader of the Opposition's questions that she used. It is very clear from these questions. I don't know how she could be more delicate in how she worded these things. Can I give an example, or will that be called to account?

The Speaker: Just stay to the point. Let's move on.

Mr. Anderson: Well, this is the point exactly.

Mr. Speaker, since documents, which I will table, make it clear it was the Justice minister's sole decision and since the conflict of interest legislation states that a member is in breach if he or she uses their office to improperly further another person's private interest, isn't it plain to the Premier that this is exactly what occurred?

How on earth is that out of order?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't know which specific question this hon. member is referring to. I have all nine that the Official Opposition leader read into the record, and I have mine as well. I think, first of all, that for a point of order to be called in this case, it would be incumbent on this Government House Leader to actually say which. I mean, I know he called 10 points of order today or nine or whatever it was. Which one is he referring to? Which specific question is he referring to? I cannot see a question that's out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I would also point out that the Legislatures in this country and the Parliament of Canada have, actually, a long history, as you well know, of looking into scandals that have occurred and ethics violations that have occurred and having questions and free and open debate in the Chamber regarding several scandals. If you look back at your history – and I know you have, of course – the big one that kind of started it all was the Pacific Railway scandal. Go read the debates from those. Read them. They make what happened today look like absolute child's play. That's what happens. Yet it wasn't called out of order.

It's important because this is the people's Chamber. They need to understand that if there's an alleged ethical violation in government, the people need to be confident that their representatives can with open and free speech debate that issue in the people's Chamber. That's important. Not just the Pacific scandal had this, but the robocall issue, that we just went through, if you want to take it to a more modern context. That went back and forth. The Conservative Speaker of the House was not admonishing the NDP, the opposition, for carrying on with those questions even though it involved some very strong ethical charges of voter manipulation and all kinds of stuff like that.

We have, of course, the sponsorship scandal. How many questions did we watch there, Mr. Speaker, question after question asking the Liberal government of the time to account for their perceived ethical violations? Literally probably hundreds of questions. They were allowed to do so because this is the people's House, and they deserve it. You go through every Legislature in the land, and you will find illegal donations and such related scandals and members of the opposition asking the government, as is their right, to account for situations like that of perceived illegality.

Now, we all agree in this House that we have to keep the tone reasonable, Mr. Speaker, but if we're not allowed as the Official Opposition to question something that directly – we tabled the documents, and we'll talk about it more in the section 30 motion today. These documents have the signature of the Premier or her deputy minister on them and say exactly what is being alleged by the Leader of the Official Opposition, two specific letters before the Premier resigned to run for the leadership. It couldn't be clearer, and all this member of the opposition is doing is pointing these things out and saying, "Premier, will you please account for it?" and using the language.

I mean, no one takes it more seriously than the Official Opposition leader. How many times does she come and say: "Is the language too harsh? Is it too much? Is it over the line? Do I have to dial it back?" She's always concerned because she doesn't want to be cut off, and she wants to be seen as diplomatic because she feels that's her job as the Official Opposition leader, and she takes that very seriously. She asks us regularly: can you please make sure to reword something because that might cross the line, and the Speaker has ruled on that? So we've been trying to do that, Mr. Speaker.

But every time we allege something that makes the government uncomfortable, they scream, holler, yell, and essentially interject until we're just basically shouted down: that's a point of order. Ten points of order today. Well, it sure puts you in a difficult position, I agree, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader alleges 10 points of order. Good God Almighty, we'd better start giving a few of them to them. That's a tough job that you've got there, for sure.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no doubt that if the Official Opposition leader is called to account and told that she cannot raise such questions in this House after she had so carefully prepared, after our caucus did everything we could – with one exception, one comment compared to, like, the 15 comments each of you have done in the last five minutes – to try to increase the tone as per your memo, then, honestly, at some point we may as well just pack it up and everyone go home because there's no point in being here. There is no point if we can't raise these questions in the House, in the people's House. There is no point.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to respond to the Government House Leader's consolidated points of order. First and foremost, points of order require specificity. They need to be about a specific statement, and they need to quote exactly what was said and be within the context of what was said. You can't make a generic, omnibus point of order in an attempt to shut down legitimate questions in the Assembly.

It is the role of the opposition, not just the Official Opposition, to hold the government to account. Now, the government has repeatedly attempted to define the role of the opposition, outside the long-established parameters in the British parliamentary system, as merely to ask questions about policy. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is well established in this place and in other parliaments that it is the role of the opposition to hold the government to account not just for its policies but also for its administration of the government. It is an important role of the opposition to ensure that the government conducts itself in an above board fashion with competence and honesty. Unfortunately, this government has sometimes fallen short in some of those respects.

When you get into questions on officers of the government who may be involved in an alleged conflict of interest or a potential or the appearance of a conflict of interest, it's not often pleasant. It makes the government and all of us somewhat uncomfortable. When it, in fact, is the Premier's actions that are called into question, it is unpleasant. But the very fact that it is now the Premier rather than a minister or somebody who is on the board of directors of some college or something that did something wrong in a campaign donation, the fact that it's now the Premier, the highest office in the province, does not make it out of bounds, and the government seems to think that it does. You can raise a question about anyone else, but if you raise a question about the Premier, suddenly it's not allowed.
