There are a few legal eagles in the room here, a few people that know their stuff in terms of legislation. I had been playing with this a little bit as a novice for many years in my municipal days. I didn't think it would be too difficult to take what is normally expected in legislation, such a thing as definitions, and insert them so that we could give clarity to what I thought was a clause that needed a little bit more refining. So I would like to suggest to those of you that have some of that background and knowledge to give this some serious thought.

I saw last night in our deliberations some people from the government side not necessarily always voting the same way as the rest. I would ask you folks with experience and knowledge in legislation to answer this one question: where have you seen an act that doesn't have a definition? Where have you seen a clause that sometimes refers to something that is missing a definition? I'm just suggesting that these definitions will add proper clarity. They'll refine the clause you already had and make it better. I think it's an improvement. It's not throwing out something you had; it's just making it so much more clear for everyone that's going to be working with it in the future.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I yield my time. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

8:10

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wonder which of the lawyers in this room would be counselling their clients to sign a contract that lacked clear definitions about the conditions that are going to bind their client. I suspect that none of you would. You're too sharp for that, and you take your responsibilities towards your clients too seriously.

I submit to you that all of us have clients, and those clients are the people that elected us. We know the saying: good fences make good neighbours. Well, good definitions make good covenants, and good covenants make good contracts. Good laws require good definitions. How can we find common ground if we don't use a common language? We each see life and perceive things based upon our perceptual filters that are based on our life experiences. That's the lens that we look through and that we communicate with.

Let me give you an example. The word "dog" means to some a pet, a friend. Maybe to a high-society matron on Park Avenue, New York, it's a little poodle that's got the proper cut and the proper pedigree and the diamond-studded collar and the Gucci leather leash, and that's what she thinks of as the word "dog." Some people might see a dog as an alternative to having a child, somewhat easier to clean up after and certainly easier to raise when it gets into the teenage years. But do you consider that the word "dog" could also mean, to some people who would hear it, transportation, protection, warning, food? You know, 20 ways to walk your dog.

Unless we know what the definition is going to be in the legislation that we're creating, it's pretty hard for people to expect us to measure up and meet their expectations of having good laws that will protect them, that will guide the decisions of the government on their behalf. Let's face it, folks, we're here talking about how to best deal with the tragedies that occurred this past spring and summer and the long-term consequences of future events. I don't think there's anybody here that thinks we've seen the last flood in these areas. They're happening with more frequency, and we need to make sure that the legislation that we use to deal with the consequences of the past one will work in future ones. Hopefully, because of steps that will be taken to incorporate the Groeneveld report recommendations, the impact in the future will be far less and far less costly to deal with.

But in the meantime good, honourable people – taxpayers, citizens of our province – are relying on us to create legislation that will deal fairly with the circumstances they now find themselves in, for the most part through no fault of their own. I think it's our responsibility to soberly consider the benefit of creating this legislation to be as strong and as tight as we can make it because of the long-term consequences. It impacts families. It impacts their investment. It has impacted many of their memories, and some of them have suffered trauma that they may never recover from. We certainly don't want to add to that trauma by creating laws that will allow caveats to occur where they're not needed or allow caveats to be left off where they are needed. The definitions that my honourable friend has suggested be included: it's a common-sense thing. Certainly, people in the country would recognize that.

Good laws should have as little ambiguity as possible. I think that what the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod is proposing reduces ambiguity, creates more certainty, and would allow for better decisions to be made on behalf of those who right now are rather fragile and who right now are rather concerned about their inability to sell a house or uncertainty about whether to rebuild or where they can rebuild or exactly what they're going to do.

I would encourage all of you who take your jobs seriously – and I suspect that's all of you that are currently reading something or doing something else right now. Nevertheless, this is important. I don't think that we're here just as an exercise to give the appearance of living in a democracy. Hopefully, you have the freedom to vote the way your constituents want and the way common sense suggests is required. Nay, it's not just required but demanded because our constituents, all Albertans, need us to be creating good laws.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A7.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on the main bill.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have great feelings of despair when I don't get something that I've worked so hard on put through that made such great sense.

If I could beg your attention again, we're looking at something that I was threading to my definition amendment. I have another amendment to bring forward in a couple of moments. This one has to do with how we can work the questions we were working on earlier, flood fringe and floodway mapping and so on and so forth, into what was presented as Bill 27.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to be supplying you with the appropriate copies of an amendment, please.

The Chair: All right. Hon. member, that will be amendment A8.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members, what I have here is a short and sweet amendment with respect to the question of flood mapping and the up-to-date information required for flood mapping and the requirement for up-to-date information. I'll just try to give you a quick rundown on it.

What I've said here in this amendment is to move that Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, be amended in section 2(3), which is on page 3 of the bill. What we're looking at here is putting at the end of clause (b) just a little qualifier. We're going to put in the word "and" at the end of (b) in section (2) and say:

- (c) must be based on flood fringe and floodway area maps updated after the most recent flood event or within the last 5 years if no such event has occurred.

Now, earlier on – this afternoon, I guess it was – we had talked about that a little bit in one of the other amendments from one of the other members. I had at the time indicated, prior to the supper break, that the idea of up-to-date flood mapping and the idea of having proper definitions for that was not my own creation, nor was it anything that the rest of the Wildrose had. This actually was something that was created several years ago – and it was probably being talked about for many years prior – by a former member, George Groeneveld, MLA for Highwood, who had put together the report, as we know, that was shelved for some time after it was done in 2006.

The first recommendation, in fact, that came from Mr. Groeneveld – and I'm going to say this again – was: "We recommend that Alberta Environment coordinate the completion of flood risk maps for the identified urban flood risk areas in the province." That was the most important thing. I know it was discussed earlier that if they were to do that – the associate minister had worried about the cost in conversations earlier this evening. I might add that the recommendations in the original flood study estimated that it wasn't going to be that big of a problem to manage. It was only going to be about 2 and a half million dollars to look after all of these initial database services they needed to do and processes they needed to follow to get a good amount of baseline data to work from.

The second recommendation from Mr. Groeneveld's report said that they had to follow that up with a map maintenance program, and that map maintenance program was because, as I quote out of the recommendations here, situations may arise where an existing flood risk map no longer adequately represents the flood risk for a location. This may result from changes in the river or immediate area, updating a rural flood risk map or errors in the original study. Flood risk maps should also be reviewed regularly particularly after extreme flood events when public and municipal government interest is high.

I did not create these clauses I've just supplied to you. They were done by the government of the day, this government here today, and I would urge you, if you have the opportunity, to review those clauses that he had and those recommendations.

Just to put a dollar amount to the updating portion of that recommendation, after the initial database was found and done, that estimated budget was only $50,000 annually. Just imagine if we could have gotten some of this stuff done years ago – it's only seven years ago – for 2 and a half million to 3 million dollars.

We'd have the database done. We could update it every year for $50,000, and we could have been so far ahead in our work, that we're now paying a high price for today in terms of mitigation and engineering.

This amendment that I have would have been tied to the definitions that we just haven't allowed. Nonetheless, I think we now know because the associate minister has said that we can find those definitions on the website. Well, I don't know how often lawyers will be looking at a website. They usually try to get the definitions within their acts. Nonetheless, this little clause here could be added, and therefore I'm suggesting in this amendment to add it this time to the Municipal Government Act in 693.1(1), which you guys have already made.

I'm not looking to cancel again or throw out any of your ideas that you had there. I'm simply asking for this to be added onto the bottom to add clarity to what you already have and make it better. I would suggest to you that this is something that all of you have already admitted is needed with the programs that you've mentioned this year. All of these things that we're talking about you announced on the radio and the TV and you advertised throughout the province as necessary. We've put a little clarity to it. We've suggested it must be based on updated flood fringe and floodway area maps, just like Mr. Groeneveld did in his report in '06, and we've suggested that it should be done "after the most recent flood event or within the last 5 years if no such event has occurred."

Why do we want that in there for five years? Well, things beyond flooding can change in an area, whether it be development or other kinds of infrastructure, objects placed in a riverbed, a stream, or on a shoreline, whether it's pathways, whether it's bridges, whether it's culverts, and so on and so forth. We know that. That's why that has to be in there. It has to be reviewed. We're suggesting that if we were to have followed and can follow or should follow – maybe we should follow your report, where you say that you've already done 75 to 80 per cent, I think the Municipal Affairs minister has claimed. We're saying that if you would follow this, just simply add this clause in – it's not going to cost any money to add this clause in. It's only going to make your bill better.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That's all I have to add for that portion.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If I could interrupt your various activities for a moment to ask a question, by a show of hands how many of you have a GPS either in your car or a separate one that you use and plug in? [interjections] How many? Okay. Some of you have a GPS. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is the only one that has the floor at this time. Thank you.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: If the GPS is even a month or two or six months or a year old, have you ever relied on it to help you find an address that's not in the GPS yet? Has anybody been lost with the help of their GPS? [interjections] Never? I have. I've flown to Arizona and taken my GPS with me, used it to travel all over the Phoenix area, but when I tried to find my daughter's house, apparently she didn't have a house.

The Chair: On the amendment, hon. member. I'm sure you're trying to tie this to the amendment.

Mr. Bikman: Are you having trouble seeing where this is going?

The Chair: Well, I just want you to help me, hon. member, to assure me that you're speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Bikman: You've done this to me before, Mr. Chair. This is going somewhere.

The Chair: Relevant to the amendment, hon. member?

Mr. Bikman: Absolutely relevant to the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Proceed.

Mr. Bikman: What's the amendment about? Is it about maps? I can't believe that you couldn't anticipate where this was going. You must go crazy at movies wondering how it's going to end. I thought I telegraphed my intentions so obviously that the punchline would have been wasted on you. [interjections] Hey, I'm just the straight man. You're giving me the good lines.

If you don't update your GPS regularly, you can get lost. You can't rely on a GPS if you're not updating it often, and you can update it by plugging it into your computer.

Ms Calahasen: Jeez, I use the stars.

Mr. Bikman: I beg your pardon?

An Hon. Member: She uses the stars.

We rely on modern technology. Some of you may not know – but some maybe do – that to keep the mapping updated that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has recommended be included here would cost about $50,000 a year. My gosh, what a cheap investment in reducing the possibility of seriously harming somebody because we make decisions based upon incomplete or inadequate or old information. Ambulances that are centrally dispatched, to the delight of the hon. Health minister, wouldn't get to the injured parties or the accident victims if they didn't have updated GPS. We talked to an ambulance fellow recently, and he said that the GPS system is working well now but that they had to update it. They had to see where it was wrong, and it probably cost some people extra pain and suffering because the current system wasn't working fully. It wasn't updated and completed.

Where will people build? Where will they rebuild? Who will decide which properties need caveats on the titles? You can't make good decisions if you don't have good information. I can't know that I'm driving down a road with a bridge out if my GPS tells me that I'm on the right track to get to where I want to go. We've got some bridges out, literally and figuratively, and we need to make sure that that mapping is updated.

Thank you, all.

The Chair: Are there others?

We'll call the question on amendment A8.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you again, Mr. Chairman. This is my final pitch for the evening, as much as I hate to say it. I think I have gotten the attention of some of you, and I don't think I've been as lengthy as some others. I've actually tried to put some facts towards my statements.

Regardless, I will pass this out, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Do you have another amendment, hon. member? It will be A9. If you'll circulate that, that would be great.

Mr. Stier: Yes.

The Chair: Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, hon. members, for being so patient with me. This last amendment is a simple one. I think it is probably in most respects a repeat of perhaps one that was brought to your attention earlier today. What we're asking here is to look at Bill 27, page 1, at the bottom, and we're asking to strike out item (c.2). We have a lot of reasons for that. This is, again, related to the other matters that we talked about earlier. I won't take too long.

We feel that this clause is a little bit premature. We don't have adequate definitions about flood fringe or floodway in this bill, as I've pointed out already, even though we suggested that there could have been a modification to alleviate that problem. Therefore, we've created a bit of a difficulty, I think, for the next few months in how this process would be proceeded with as the flood mitigation plans and the DRP plans and the offers to buy people's properties are trying to be addressed.

Also, in my mind, I don't think I've ever heard yet how this process could actually be done with the realtors and the land titles office and the lawyers and all the people that are involved in property transactions. How are they going to put a caveat on? How are they going to amend caveats? How are they going to take them off? Who's going to administer that? These things are up in the air. The brokers, the realtors: I think there might be a couple of those folks in the audience here tonight. These things are very, very heavily argued at the best of times. If there's not clarity in how these caveats will work and the definitions aren't there, we're going to set ourselves up for what is already, I would say, destined to be quite a difficult situation to deal with. We're going to set ourselves up for something even worse after the fact.

We know, too, that with properties that are subject to flooding in many respects throughout southern Alberta – High River, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Drumheller, Fort Macleod, you name it – we've got all kinds of properties that are subject to perhaps devaluations or some sort of impact to their property values. It may be, in fact, that they're not just limited to Mr. and Mrs. Smith's regular dwelling. It could be a commercial property. It could be a big investment property right along the Bow River, where there is some speculator who has bought some land thinking he could put up a 32- or 40-storey office tower. This kind of thing could be a very, very big, expensive problem if we don't have all of the ducks in order prior to proceeding.

My suggestion here. Again, I'm not asking to blow the moon out of the water and change a whole bunch of wording or wordsmith the heck out of something. I'm saying that we need more clarity here. You may recall earlier on this afternoon and this evening I said that after this huge disaster we've had, we've only got a bill that is five or six pages long. There's not enough clarity here. We should be worried about this caveat situation. We should be worried about what this could do to our friends, our neighbours, the people that live in Alberta.

Please give this solid consideration. I'm often, as many have said, willing to look at amendments. If we wanted to leave this in but put more clarity into it, I'd consider that. I look forward to hearing the discussion on that, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. While I appreciated the intent of the previous amendments brought forward by this member, I have to admit that I'm a little perplexed by this one. While the other ones I didn't support because they provided very little value, this particular amendment actually devalues the whole policy intent of what we're trying to do here, and that is to make sure that we're not developing in floodways and that we're using taxpayers' money responsibly through the disaster recovery program.

We've been quite clear on what our policy is, and that would be formulated in regulation. This piece of legislation, Bill 27, this particular clause, allows the minister to make these particular regulations. We've been very clear. Anybody that exists in a current floodway and that experienced damage during the flood has two options. They can either access the disaster recovery program to rebuild or repair their house on their piece of property – and if they do so, there will be a caveat on their piece of property; they will not be eligible for any future disaster recovery assistance due to flooding, Mr. Chairman – or they can take a floodway buyout program, in which we would pay for the total assessed value of their house, in accordance with the last assessed property tax value, to move out of the floodway. We're leaving that option up to the individual homeowners. That will be very clear. This clause enables that for those regulations to be put in place to enact that policy.

Again, we talked about clarity for people making their decisions. By taking out this clause and not allowing the minister to be able to make that particular regulation to develop that policy, you've thrown it all up in the air. Where I'm really, really confused is that particular party a couple of weeks after the flood put out their report and indicated that they supported all of the recommendations in the Groeneveld report. Okay? This follows through on the last couple of recommendations that weren't implemented, and that is to try to get people out of the floodway. That's what this does, so I don't understand why that wouldn't be supported over there, Mr. Chairman.

The only other piece where there would be caveats on property would be if they are identified on current flood maps as being in the flood fringe and they're accessing disaster recovery programs. They're going to be provided additional money on top of what they would to repair their homes to repair their homes with a minimum standard, approved material, that we've made public. If they decide not to do that, to use the disaster recovery funds but not meet that particular standard, there will be a caveat that is put on their property.

It's quite simple, Mr. Chairman. We've brought out this policy and made this very clear with people that have been affected. This legislation allows us to implement that particular policy in the regulation, so this legislation is enabling that. I think we need to do the right thing in this Legislature, provide the certainty and clarity around those policies that we've already announced by passing this legislation and letting the minister get on with taking that policy and putting it in the regulations so people can move on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate it, and I appreciate the passionate response by the associate minister. He's right. In our flood report many of the recommendations that we put forward are mirrored in this act. The reason why we put forward this one to blow the whole thing up is because it all starts with accurate maps. Without the accurate maps you're putting restrictive measures and caveats on property, and it's not right. Permanent caveats based on flawed information is just not the right way to go about it.

I appreciate the fact that you read our report. I'm sure that you've probably also read the former MLA for Highwood, George Groeneveld, who basically said the exact same thing in his first couple of recommendations. We recommend that Alberta Environment, one, "coordinate the completion of flood risk maps for the identified urban flood risk areas in the province." We recommend that Alberta Environment "develop a map maintenance program to ensure that the flood risk maps are updated when appropriate." Huh.

The reason why we're putting this amendment forward now is because clearly you didn't want to do either of those things, which now makes this bill a piece of junk.

Thank you.

8:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Just one or two short comments. [interjections]

The Chair: Keep the side conversations down, please, so I can hear the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Thank you.

Mr. Bikman: Yeah. You won't want to miss this, you guys. Thank you. Clearly, we want to do all we can to reduce and shorten the suffering of these people. But if we make decisions based upon incomplete, inadequate information, that hasn't been updated, the quality of the decision is going to suffer, and we may cause premature evacuation.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A9.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to kind of summarize, I think, what happened in Committee of the Whole here. What appears to happen is that, you know, the Official Opposition as well as other opposition parties put forward substantive amendments that can actually fix legislation. We put forward constructive proposals to legislation to make it better, and there just seems to be no appetite to go through the well-established tradition of strengthening legislation by properly debating amendments.

Mr. Chair, on this particular piece of legislation the reason why we need amendments, frankly, is that there isn't much confidence in the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Again, he's the gift that keeps on giving for us here in the Official Opposition. Given his recent performance we're just not confident in his abilities to properly implement the legislation as it's currently written. That's why we're putting forward these amendments. It seems that the Premier has confidence in him, but no one else does.

Mr. Chair, what we'd like to see is a government that actually listens to the Official Opposition when they're coming forward with constructive proposals. We have two individuals within our caucus with a lot of years of municipal experience who genuinely put forward real, solid proposals, but there just doesn't appear to be any appetite on behalf of the government to listen to those proposals.

We heard comments from the Member for Calgary-Bow, saying that the old flood maps are not inaccurate, but the rivers have changed. It's these types of nonsensical comments, Mr. Chair, that give us cause for concern. That's why in our amendments, that we put forward, we actually wanted to put forward the requirement to implement accurate flood maps.

Mr. Chair, what's also quite concerning is that this government actually expended money to put forward a report in 2006, the Groeneveld report, but what's happening – we're seeing right there; that member there is actually disavowing it. He's saying: "The Groeneveld report? It's worthless. We're not going to implement it." I find that a little alarming, throwing that member who put forward that report under the bus. I think most people panned that report and thought it was a pretty good report. If there are good recommendations in that report, implement them.

Mr. Chair, in these circumstances where the government is not willing to listen to real, positive, substantive proposals, that the Official Opposition is putting forward, it's disconcerting. We're going to continue to do our job and demonstrate that we're the government-in-waiting if Albertans give us the responsibility of doing so in 2016.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chair, I wasn't going to rise. I've actually been listening very attentively for the last hour and a half to a number of amendments where I heard one of the members say, "Well, this is the same amendment I tried earlier; let's see if it works again," where members have said, "You know, I know you're not going to support this, but I want to put it forward anyway." The hon. member across the way just said that he has no confidence in the minister. Well, quite frankly, I have no confidence in the quality of the amendments that they're bringing forward here tonight. I've been listening very attentively, and I'm not going to support any of them. I didn't, and I won't, even moving forward, with some of these kinds of amendments.

The hon. member talks about the Groeneveld report. Nobody threw the hon. member previous under the bus, Mr. Chair. In fact, many of the recommendations, most of the recommendations from that report have been implemented or are in the process of implementation.

What the other side fails to understand, Mr. Chair, is that we are not standing still waiting for something new to happen down the road. We're making decisions today, and as information changes, yes, we will adapt, we will adjust, and we'll move forward. But just because my GPS is out of date doesn't mean that I stay in the driveway. It means that I go. Simply saying that we disagree with the hon. members opposite and the ridiculous amendments that they've put forward does not mean that we are not listening.

I will not be supporting this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think what's important in this Assembly is that – I understand that the hon. minister may be campaigning for the leadership spot, but the leadership review hasn't even been done. I know you're trying to garner support here, but . . . [interjections]

The Chair: The member has the floor, hon. minister. Please. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Chair, I'm just stating my point, and I think I have the floor, and I have the ability to do that.

What I was trying to say was that if you look at the Groeneveld report, one of the major recommendations in that report was the preparation of flood maps. That was one of the major recommendations there, and now they're disavowing that. That, to me, is throwing that report in the garbage. That was one of the main thrusts of that report. You know, you can accept a bunch of recommendations, but if you don't act on the material ones, the significant ones, on a particular report, then that's not actually implementing the report. I appreciate the passion on the other side, but we'll stand by our position.

I think what's ridiculous is him calling our amendments that we've put forward, that we've put many, many hours into – we've researched them thoroughly. They're well written. For this member to say that they're ridiculous is ridiculous itself. I think it's disrespectful of democracy. I think that if you put these amendments in front of any objective third party, they would look at them and say, "Look. These are some real amendments. Let's actually debate them," so for the member to call them ridiculous is just disrespectful of democracy as a whole and here in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chair, it must be getting to be a long week because I'm getting baited, and I'm actually taking the bait. The reason that I'm getting baited is because the hon. member says one thing and then does the exact opposite. The hon. member talks about respecting this House and then actually says that he has no confidence in a minister of the Crown of this House. The hon. member talks about us throwing an hon. member under the bus because we're not doing the recommendations, knowing full well that that's a lie. We are doing the mapping . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order.

Mr. Horner: Okay. I withdraw the remark. It's not a lie; it's just ignorance of the fact.

The Chair: You have a point of order, hon. member, but I believe at about the same time I heard the minister say that he withdrew the statement.

Mr. Saskiw: I appreciate the minister withdrawing the statement. It did offend me, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Okay.

Now I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: It's a bit of a drive-by thing, though, don't you think, Mr. Chairman, to say, "Oh, I'm sorry," and sit down?

The Chair: I'll accept the withdrawal, hon. member, and we'll carry on, but I thank you for noting that.

Mr. Horner: And thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who is obviously well-versed in that procedure.

Mr. Chairman, again, when he talks about us ignoring the report, he's absolutely wrong. He should check his facts. We are doing the mapping across the province. That's part of what we're doing, that mapping. It's the outcome of the Groeneveld report. But, again, you don't sit in your driveway just because your GPS doesn't work. You go the old-fashioned way. You make some decisions, and you move forward. That's exactly what this government did when the flood hit us. That's exactly what we're going to be doing now and have been doing with the task force.

We're responding to the biggest disaster this country has seen, and we'll continue.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do believe that the amendments, many of them brought forward here, were – some of them had some good merit, I'll agree. But each of them had things that the hon. members on our side explained that we were not going to support. They should simply accept that and not claim that democracy is ruined because we don't agree with them, which is very simple-minded.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hon. Minister of Finance. I'm not looking to bait you in any way, sir. I'm just merely looking to point out, as my colleague may have done in a different way, that I take offence to the "ridiculous" comment. I'm glad that you clarified that some of them had merit.

I would point out to you that there were times that we put forward amendments that no one from the Municipal Affairs department stood up and spoke to. So there isn't a dialogue. There isn't a discussion. If you were interested in the process of democracy and if some of them did have merit, rather than finding one word that you don't like and voting against them, perhaps instruct your ministers or your colleagues to propose friendly amendments or subamendments or have a dialogue before or after these things are voted on. You know, then you wouldn't hear us complaining about the lack of progress or lack of commentary on certain amendments.

Thank you.

Mr. Horner: I know, Mr. Chairman, that I shouldn't, but I'm going to. You know, if I was interested in democracy – my family has three generations of serving democracy. I wore the uniform of this country serving democracy. That hon. member should understand that I have a great deal of interest in democracy, which means that the majority is the vote that is going to carry the day. Maybe he should accept that.

Mr. Anglin: Let's talk about some ridiculousness. Let's map without definitions of what we're mapping. Now, that's ridiculous. To call some of these amendments outrageous just doesn't make sense. Let's talk about something that's ridiculous. Let's create a report about flood mitigation, and let's just let it sit on the shelf for six years and do nothing. The community that I represent, Sundre, needs flood mitigation. It needs this mapping, it needs the report, and it didn't get it. It's still asking today, and there's still no response.

The idea that you're moving forward – to the hon. member, you don't need GPS; you need some tires on the vehicle so that you can move forward. It's not happening. We've had a major, major disaster, and what we want to do and I would think that everybody in this House wants to do is move forward, but how do you do that if you're not even sure what you're mapping, if you don't even have consistency in the definition? The idea that that's ridiculous just doesn't cut it. It is absolutely imperative that we have a defined definition of what a floodway, flood fringe, and a flood plain are so there's consistency in the mapping.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Seeing no other speakers, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Those opposed? Carried.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, are you moving that the committee rise and report?

Mr. Denis: Actually, no, I'm rising to get a standing vote on the last vote.

The Chair: The vote has been called.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, did you wish to move that the committee rise and report?

Mr. Denis: Am I rising in time now, sir?

The Chair: You're rising in time to move that . . .

Mr. Denis: Oh, just wanted to check. Okay.

I move that the committee rise and report, please. I hope that gave you enough time, sir.

The Chair: Thank you. Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you wanted to move that the committee rise and report Bill 27?

Mr. Denis: Bill 27. I hope that was enough time as well.

The Chair: Yes. I thought that's what I heard you say.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: All members have returned to their places?
I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That is carried.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 31

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to move third reading on behalf of the hon. minister of environment.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, I'll move third reading of Bill 31 on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Are there speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was expecting one of the ministers to address the issue before I did. I rise, unfortunately, to oppose this bill. Right from the onset the bill is mistitled. It's called Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, and the minister actually admits that it doesn't even protect the environment. That's not what it's intended to do. So it's mistitled before we even begin reading the bill.

It's unfortunate because there were a number of amendments that were brought forward that were quite logical. They weren't outrageous in any sense of the word. There are going to be scientific panels that are going to be appointed. One of the amendments – and it might have even been included in a couple of amendments – was to have some sort of criteria, some sort of qualification to be outlined, not necessarily in legislation but in regulation, of what would be required to sit on these scientific panels.

There were numerous regulations or amendments that were submitted to strengthen the independence of what this agency is intended to be. The minister was quite clear and the hon. member said numerous times that they wanted this agency to be an arm's-length agency, to operate independently of government, but amendment after amendment to strengthen that, to make sure that they could be further protected or at least reduce the appearance of any influence or connection to the government or cabinet was rejected.

Now, it's understandable that they want to reject some of those amendments if there were valid reasons for rejecting them, but nobody gave a valid reason. It seemed very logical, the idea that the frequency that determines the agency's reporting on the condition of the environment would be determined by the agency. That was denied.

To create a code of conduct or outline what the conduct and ethics would be as a requirement, which is done on multiple pieces of legislation – I know the Alberta Utilities Commission act does that. I know the ERCB act does that. There are numerous acts that this government has where it outlines the code of conduct of the board or the committees. And this was rejected. Now, granted, they can create it under legislation, but it's just not listed in the legislation. There's no valid reason why it was denied. So on and on we brought amendments forward to try to strengthen this bill, and one after another they were denied.

I want to talk about one in particular. This agency is designed to monitor the environment and issue scientific reports. There's no question in this Chamber that that's how the minister sees this new agency, that that's how this government wants this new agency to be. In order to give the scientific reports validity, other scientists in the field need to be able to look at these reports and validate these reports through the raw data that constructed the reports in the first place. We wanted to make sure that that data would be available to the public, to the scientific community so that whatever report was issued by these scientific panels could be verified. They could substantiate what the scientific panel was basically conveying to the public.

Now, this is extremely important for numerous reasons, but it's extremely important particularly for our industries and for the markets that we want to access. Nobody disputes one bit that we have environmental concerns where our customers, whether it's the U.S. customer, whether it's the Asian countries whose markets we want to access, want us to reduce greenhouse gases. It isn't just good enough to say that we're doing it or to say that it's done. They need to see independent proof that we're actually making headway, that we're achieving goals and are actually reducing greenhouse gases. Without the mechanism to verify any of the reports, what we're going to be giving to the public is hearsay, and what we want is scientific proof.

Clearly, the amendments offered were logical, they were pragmatic, and they were intended to strengthen the bill and not weaken it or bring into disrepute any government official or anything like that. It wasn't designed to be repetitive. What it was designed to do was to help all Albertans. In particular, it would be of tremendous assistance to our industries in accessing the international markets they so greatly desire access to.

With that, I'm a little bit disappointed that we weren't able to strengthen the bill. Where I have real concerns with this bill is that we are creating an independent agency that is modelled very much like AHS, which applies to our health care system and the Ministry of Health but that has not worked out very well. I know some members will say that it's doing very well. But we've seen even just recently the entire board fired. We've seen turnover after turnover. It's been a task, to say the least, to try to make AHS work for our health care system. There are lots of problems.

So here we are in the world of Environment, and we are creating a separate agency that is modelled after what we have constructed for AHS, and what I think the public's concern is, which is our concern, is that this will become a bloated agency. There are no mechanisms, particularly in legislation, that say: here are the outcomes that we want, and this is how we're going to measure those outcomes for efficiency and productivity. There's nothing there in legislation.

If this agency goes sideways, it will go sideways because people that get appointed to the board are not qualified. That is one way it could happen. It can get bloated with employees where it gets out of control very much, in my view, like AHS, where the intention was to be efficient and to save costs. It has all the potential to grow and become its own little fiefdom, yet to measure the outcome for what the agency is supposed to do to assist monitoring the environment, to measure the outcome for what it's supposed to do to assist our economy, there are no mechanisms outlined for how we're going to measure this. And then it circles right back to credibility, that they're pretty much on their own.

Now, I think we all hope that it will work out for the best or even better than our expectations, and that's all well and good, but had we strengthened this legislation, we wouldn't necessarily need to hope. What we would be able to do is to actually rely upon the direction that the legislation gives the new agency for creating its regulations and then watch that work as we instructed it to work. But that's not what's happening here.

This legislation, as I told the minister – and I do not mean this in a derogatory way – is hollow. It's legislation that doesn't have any real substance to it to tell us how this agency is really going to function productively and in a cost-efficient way. It's just not there. It should be there, but it's not. So this has the potential to become this giant white elephant, a massive cash cow, so to speak, that could increase costs and not do much more than what's happening today. That's why I referred to the bill as hollow because the whole idea of monitoring is that we'd move some of our monitoring mechanisms that we're doing today into this agency. There's nothing here that says that we're increasing. There's no funding that says that we're going to be doing more than we're doing now.

As a matter of fact, when you look at the funding that's outlined in the legislation – and I don't have the legislation in front of me – I believe it's to 2015 or 2017, and we don't know how it's going to be funded after that. So right away we're only looking at something that is measurable just a few years out, and then we're uncertain how the agency is going to continue, how it is going to be funded. So that doesn't give a lot of confidence that it would be consistent.

When I had a chance to ask one of the industry members, a significant industry member, about the bill, the only word they had was "uncertainty." They didn't have criticism and they didn't have praise. They just looked at it and said: it creates more uncertainty because we really don't know what it's going to do; we have an idea, but there's no substance here. Again, that's why I go back to describing it as hollow.

The premise is good. The idea of monitoring is good. I will not dispute that. But how we monitor, what we do with the data, how we report it, and how we support the agency to give it credibility is weak in the legislation, and it doesn't provide any confidence to industry that we're going to do better than what we're doing. So the question becomes: why are we doing it?

That was the question that I posed to the hon. minister earlier. This type of monitoring we're supposed to be doing now. The legislation comes forward, and it doesn't increase monitoring; it doesn't change the monitoring. It doesn't make any changes at all to what we're doing environmentally, except that we're going to have an arm's-length agency that's not going to be arm's length, that's only going to be funded for a few years, and we have no idea how it's going to be funded beyond that. What does it do, then? How are we going to use this agency more than what we have today?

Listening to the hon. minister when the legislation was first introduced, the whole premise seemed to be that this was doing exactly what we said that we were going to do a few years ago, that we are supposedly doing now, but we now are going to do that through an independent agency which is really not independent. There's a lot of control still right at the ministry, so that contradicts the whole independence claim. We go full circle with this bill. We're going to create an agency that's going to be no different than what we have today, but we will have no idea how big or small or expensive or inefficient or effective because we don't have any type of guidance in the legislation that says: this is how we're going to measure the outcomes, these are what our expectations are, and this is what we want to do moving forward.

I suppose it creates a scenario without a whole lot of vision or pragmatic goals for making some sort of achievable reductions in greenhouse gases. I'm going to conclude with that because it really is all about our greenhouse gases. The public wants us to reduce greenhouse gases. Our industry needs us to reduce greenhouse gases because that's what the requirement is to meet our international markets. That's clear. So it has tremendous benefits because to reduce greenhouse gases means that we also reduce air pollution. They go hand in hand. It means reducing particulate matter. It means removing some pretty nasty substances that we release into the air, and it only benefits everybody. It's a win-win all around the province.

But the bill doesn't even set out that objective. It says that we're going to monitor, but there's really nothing in the way of objectives, how we're going to be effective, and what we're going to do with that monitoring, how we're going to use that.

Coming back full circle, I would have preferred that the bill that came forward was much stronger, that it had some real independence, that an agency would have some boundaries on what it was supposed to do, how it was supposed to do it, and how we would as a Legislature make sure that it adhered to the policies that this government had set. It doesn't do any of those things.

So I stand and oppose this, and I ask my colleagues to oppose it. I would ask this government to take it back to the drawing board. They can make this a good piece of legislation, but it does need to be strengthened.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 31, the so-called Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. As evidenced by the large number of proposed amendments and lengthy debate at each stage of the proceedings, there are quite a few problems with this bill as drafted. It's clear from the amendments and comments coming from members on this side of the House that we all recognize the importance of the objectives of this bill. We are all, however, concerned that this bill as drafted will not achieve its objectives and may actually impede continued progress on building an effective monitoring agency to protect our environment and adequately report to the public.

A total of 18 amendments were made to attempt to solve some of the problems with this bill, but the Tories voted each one down, refusing to accept the input of opposition parties to help ensure this bill actually serves its stated purposes. Mr. Speaker, how can we trust this Tory government to offer more than PR and spin on environmental protection when this flimsy bill is all they can offer and all they're willing to accept in terms of environmental monitoring?

For example, our caucus put forward amendments setting precise requirements for the timely reporting of data to the public. As the bill stands now, this is left entirely to the discretion of the agency and the minister. This would have been a small change to the bill that would have resulted in a great increase in the public's access to this important information. The public now can't be confident that they're getting the full story when they actually need to hear it. Environmental monitoring information is useless if it comes too late.

We've just recently seen that it took this Tory government five days to inform people of 1 billion litres of toxic goo moving down the Athabasca River after spilling from the Obed coal mine last week. Obviously, without legislated standards there is nothing inducing the government to get this kind of crucial information to the public. They still don't give us straight answers when New Democrats call on them in this House to be honest about the situation and to adequately and in a timely way report it to the public as a whole.

We also tried to suggest legislative guidelines for appointments to the board instead of allowing the minister to appoint friends and political supporters.

Across sources, governments, and communities it is commonly agreed that the voices of indigenous people and their traditional knowledge are critical components of an effective environmental protection regime. Even the reports the government supposedly used to develop this agency called for indigenous representation, yet the bill as drafted contains no guarantees for indigenous participation on the board or at any part of this agency's process.

Similarly, the bill provides no safeguards for the appointment of scientists to either the board or the science advisory panel. How can we be sure that we're getting the appropriate range of scientific expertise and that it is adequately represented? We know from the past that this PC government likes to appoint other Tories to monitor and report to Tories. Who is protecting the public interest in this scheme, Mr. Speaker? Without guidelines in the legislation about who can be appointed to the board or the science advisory panel, this agency must be another in the long line of this history of well-connected people helping out their friends while ordinary Albertans pay the costs for their inadequacies.

We've tried to remove stipulations that would let the Lieutenant Governor in Council impose whatever restrictions he or she wants on the powers, duties, and functions of the agency, but the PCs didn't want to fetter in any way their ability to control this agency and to compel the agency into producing politically favourable reports. So much for independence and arm's-length relationships. The Tories wouldn't even consider changing the reviewing requirements of the agency so that it is reported publicly to the Legislative Assembly and put on the record. Instead, it will all remain secretive in cabinet, and ordinary Albertans will never get to know how this agency is performing or whether it is performing at all.

Other members presented amendments that would have helped to prevent conflicts of interest and to ensure the employees and directors of the agency would be subject to the same standards as all other employees who work to serve the interests of Albertans. We supported these amendments as they were all aimed at improving this empty bill.

We weren't even able to touch on the funding issues for this agency since we cannot propose amendments related to Crown funds. However, the funding mechanisms or lack thereof are just as problematic as all of the rest of the bill. There is no commitment to adequate or stable funding. How can the agency carry out its business and actually achieve any of its objectives if it can't be sure of funding from day to day? Surely, as we've seen in the last few days and in the last budget of this government, the question of stable, reliable, and predictable funding is something that this government cannot get a handle on. It cannot meet those tests or those commitments. If all we have are murky funding promises for the future from the government and some plans to include contributions from the industry elites, how independent can this agency be in its work?

While our caucus is at the forefront of fighting for better and more transparent environmental monitoring and protection, we cannot support this bill as it is currently drafted. It is frustrating that the bill is so problematic and light on details. We cannot support it since we as New Democrats consistently advocate for meaningful and real environmental protection on behalf of and for the benefit of Albertans and future generations of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in third reading, and it's actually my first time to get to speak to the bill. Yet I've followed it pretty closely in Hansard and have understood from previous speakers that there have been lots of constructive criticism of this bill and many different changes and additions – I believe there were 18 amendments that were put forth – that actually gave this bill some meaning, some teeth to it, some parameters from which to work, some real ability to be an independent voice, to stand up and let the public know about the real state of Alberta's environment and what we need to do to make things better not only for today in moving our product and getting the social licence to be able to engage in our oil and gas economy but also to protect future generations from some of the effects of what we are currently engaging in in this province.

The bill is called Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, and like many things the title is a lot better than the bill. As my cousin David Vanrobaeys from Lethbridge often says in situations like this, "There are a whole lot of feathers and not a lot of chicken" here with this bill, Mr. Speaker. It's evident that this is a recognition that Alberta has a problem. The problem is that no one takes credibly anything we do on the environmental front. We've had a long history of paying lip service to our environmental responsibilities, with no real action or no real firm direction as to what our goals as a province are, what our responsibilities are, not only to the citizens of today but the citizens of tomorrow.

And you can see that has long been the case. I can remember some of the ludicrous speeches I used to hear from members opposite, many of them who are not here anymore, who used to actually proclaim in those speeches that the tar sands were just naturally seeping into the Athabasca River and that no problems at all would be emerging as a result because it had been doing that for centuries. I remember those speeches being made by more than one cabinet member. Sure enough, then a battle ensues and scientists get involved and the evidence becomes clear that, yes, our oil sands development is having impacts on our water quality and content. That has been going on here in this province for far too long, that type of rhetoric and that type of ignoring what we are truly doing to our environment here.

This bill, I believe, is essentially just lipstick on the proverbial pig. It just simply does not move the meter or move credibility for this province in that direction. This has no substance to it, no ability to me to really do much of the work that it is supposed to be doing, which is to bring together a group of individuals to analyze the science and the latest environmental abilities that are out there to credibly assess what we are currently doing to our environment. This bill in no shape or form seeks to address some of those ongoing problems that continue to happen.

I was one of the people who was looking forward to us turning the page on that day when we were looking to implement solutions that would actually take science seriously, would take our responsibilities to both the citizens of today and the citizens of tomorrow seriously. That doesn't seem to be happening. You can see by the funding mechanisms in place that who knows whether this organization is going to be around a couple of budget cycles down. Given that there are no firm commitments on funding mechanisms in place, I don't think we can be certain of that. Whether this is just merely another PR exercise on behalf of the government is a fair question to ask because of the funding mechanisms that are in place.

You look at some other things that are on the board. It's supposed to be a scientific board, yet there's no stipulation to actually have a person or people with a background in science sit on this board. That seems to me a gross failing of this. It gives no guidelines as to who or what the content of the board will be. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood pointed out, are these just going to be political hacks who are set to go on this board and have a nice lunch and feed pabulum to the masses as to what is happening out there? That to me is unconscionable. We are at a real crisis stage in terms of our industry and what we are going to do to continue to have the social licence to operate.

You see organizations throughout the world already asking whether they want to accept our product. You see that in the European community. You see that in many states throughout North America who have said categorically: we have no interest in dealing with bitumen from the oil sands. That's a problem. If this government thinks it's going to get easier over the course of the next 50 years to sell our product, to engage in the activities of doing business, well, I think they should think twice about that assessment. They should get busy on some real environmental legislation that would say that we're not only monitoring things, that we're not only looking at implementing stuff 20 years from now, we're doing things now.

I believe the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre pointed out some of the things that we could be doing. There's a war on carbon throughout the world. We have no indications whether we're going to move to a carbon tax in this province – in fact, no discussion of it whatsoever – when it seems like that's a best practice emerging in forward-thinking organizations. We see no ability to get a handle on our coal usage in this province. I'll be one of the people who full well admits that continued expansion of the oil sands is probably a necessity to us right now. But that means you're going to have to do whatever is necessary on other fronts to show we are taking the war on carbon seriously. That would mean seriously taking a look at coal and coal-fired plants and whether we can put them out of commission much sooner than we are. That's where the low-hanging fruit is. It's not in other places.

To be honest, I don't see that this bill does that much other than appoint some people to possibly evaluate and develop some plans that maybe will help us monitor what is happening in our environment. Really, it begs the question: hasn't this already been happening? If it hasn't, that's a shocking abrogation of duty so far. Yet if it hasn't been happening, are we going to give this panel some parameters from which to do anything? I don't see it evident from the bill that this committee or this panel will be able to deliver results that are sellable to the world community in any credible fashion. That to me is a problem. The government of the day should recognize that it's going to increasingly become a problem for not only them but our entire Alberta society if we don't start taking our environmental responsibility seriously and get busy on a whole bunch of files instead of just adding lipstick to the proverbial pig.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, people have discussed this bill. I, too, will urge people to vote against it as it doesn't seem to move the meter or pass the smell test on what actually good environmental monitoring would be for a whole host of reasons, many of which speakers have already discussed.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

9:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Oh, sorry, hon. member; 29(2)(a) is available before you speak should someone wish to question the previous speaker. None?

Then I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to get up to speak to this bill in third reading although I will be joining my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in expressing my disappointment about this bill.

I think there was an opportunity for this government. As a result of decades of inaction and mismanagement and misleading the public on environmental degradation that's going on across the province under their watch, there was an opportunity, once that finally became part of the public debate and was finally out there, for them to, as they say, change the channel not just from a public relations point of view but from a substantive point of view in terms of how they engaged in the act of stewarding our environment not only today but for generations in the future.

Unfortunately, this act doesn't get us there. This act, unfortunately, really is more of a public relations opportunity and less of a legislative guarantee that anything of significance is going to be achieved. You need to understand, Mr. Speaker, that – you know, I appreciate that these folks like to do everything with enabling legislation. As I said before, “thou shalt pass laws” eventually is going to be the only piece of legislation that comes in here, and then we'll never return. The fact of the matter is that because the trust has been so fundamentally breached between this government and the people of Alberta when it comes to protecting the environment, it's not enough to just bring in a piece of legislation that says: we're going to do whatever we want, and in the course of doing that we may actually turn our attention to protecting the environment. It's not enough to bring a piece of legislation like that into the House. There needs to be more detail.

Now, when she introduced the legislation, the minister made quite a big deal out of suggesting that Dr. Schindler, who, as I commented in second reading, was really the trigger for this monitoring agency, had endorsed this bill. In fact, what he said was that he was cautiously optimistic, and he said cautious optimism was subject to at least two principles. One was genuine independence, and two was genuine inclusion of a role for indigenous people. I would go further to look to previous statements that he had made that it was also subject to a genuine reliance on scientific study and scientific, evidence-based decision-making.

Unfortunately, that's not what we got in this piece of legislation. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has already pointed out the recent example we've had just in the last week. The single largest coal tailings containment breach ever in the history of this country just occurred last week. We have a 60-kilometre glob of goo floating down the Athabasca River right now, and we have a minister who gets up in the House and tells us: “Oh, don't worry. It's perfectly healthy. It's just fine.”

I'm sure many people, or some people, anyway, in this House would have read the comments in the newspaper today where an expert, an aquatics professor at the University of Alberta, said: anyone who thinks a spill of that kind could possibly leave the water into which it spilled healthy and safe (a) doesn't know what they're talking about or (b) is intentionally misleading the people they're talking to when they say it. That's what our environmental minister said just this week, so that's what we're still dealing with, Mr. Speaker. You can understand why we would have some difficulty trusting that she's going to do this all above board in a way that's actually going to get scientific information to the people of Alberta.

Indeed, for the last week we've been saying: “You know what? Release the raw data. Release the data from the testing that you've been doing. You've been claiming that, you know, arsenic and benzene and all these other sort of explosive chemicals which exist in coal silt are perfectly safe for human consumption. So how about releasing the raw data of the testing so we can test that against internationally recognized levels of what's safe for human consumption and the environment?” Interestingly, she'll make grand, vague assurances, but she will not release the raw data.

The point of this agency under this piece of legislation is to take those decisions away from the environment minister and put them into an independent body so that we don't have to deal with the political gamesmanship that we have been forced to observe over the course of the last seven days in this province. Unfortunately, we've got, instead, in front of us a piece of legislation that ensures that this agency will remain under the thumb of the same environment minister who is refusing to release this raw data.

How does that happen? Well, there is no independence under this piece of legislation because the minister retains control over the appointment of who sits on the panel, retains control of any review of how this panel, the agency, or its legislation functions and whether or not it reaches its performance measures, retains the ability to limit the authority and the actions of the agency through regulation, retains the ability to make a decision about the type of information that will be released publicly, and retains the ability to make a decision about the timing of when that information is publicly released.

Now, given the political context within which this agency is occurring and given the record of this government on playing politics with the health and safety of our air, land, and water in this province over the last two or three decades, you can imagine that we are profoundly disappointed in this legislation and have no faith that it will achieve any of the so-called claims that this government has made. We just can't support it for that reason.

Now, as other people have also noted, one of the other key components of this legislation was that it was supposed to include a stipulated role for scientists. Well, we have provision for a science advisory panel but no obligation that anybody who sits on that panel actually be a scientist or, conversely, that they be scientists with an expertise in environmental monitoring. Instead, we could have scientists with an expertise in converting petroleum products to marketable products. Well, that's great, but you know what? That's not going to help us figure out what kind of information we need to collect and how or when we should collect it.

Mr. Mason: Or an insurance salesman.

Ms Notley: That's assuming that they actually put a scientist on the science advisory panel because, in fact, the legislation clearly lays out that they could just put – well, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood says, “an insurance salesman.” We could put an insurance salesman.

Mr. Mason: Or a dry cleaner.

Ms Notley: Or a dry cleaner.

Mr. Denis: Lawyers.

Ms Notley: What was that other possibility there?

Mr. Denis: Lawyers.

Ms Notley: Lawyers. Yes. Well, the Solicitor General points out that we could end up with just lawyers on the science advisory panel. I'm pleased to understand that his view of the legislation mirrors mine in that he fully understands that there is no obligation to put scientists on the science advisory panel. I appreciate that endorsement of my interpretation, Mr. Solicitor General. So that's another problem with it.

The other problem that we outlined is that the panel itself needs to be representative of the key stakeholders in this area. We outlined a number of people who should legislatively be compelled to be appointed to this panel. The reason for that, again, is because this government just has – well, frankly, it's not a bad record. It is a laughable record, the kind of record that you would expect if you were watching a skit on Saturday Night Live or maybe The Daily Show or something. It's the kind of record which is truly the subject of comedic routines, that you would establish an agency that is responsible for protecting the environment when it comes to industrial activity related to energy production and that the people in charge of that were formerly the chief lobbyists for the energy industry, with absolutely no claim to having any environmental expertise of any type. Yet these folks think that's an appropriate person to put in charge of that agency. You know, it's utterly ridiculous.

With that record, it's hardly surprising that we would have been looking for a legislative guarantee that the same kind of ridiculous decisions would not be made with the content of this particular panel. But, of course, they steadfastly rejected our attempts to put some guarantees into this, which is why, then, I think we can be forgiven, as can any Albertan who is concerned about protection of the environment in this province, for our conclusion that this really is just more smoke and mirrors and a public-relations opportunity to put in the Premier's back pocket for the next time she travels down to Washington hoping that somebody has a bit of time to have coffee with her.

She can pull it out and say: "Hey, here's our legislation. We're doing environmental monitoring. Don't read it. Don't look at it very closely. Don't look at our record on this. No, no, no." But, hey, we've got another piece of paper, and if you read that and the other 14 forests' worth of press releases that we've put out congratulating ourselves on our environmental record as we've single-handedly and steadfastly worked towards degrading it, then you might actually think that we are a jurisdiction you can trust to produce our marketable energy product in a way that is environmentally responsible.

The problem is that it is all just a big house of cards. When you look at this legislation the way it is written and you pair it with the reprehensible record that this government has on environmental protection, we reach the same conclusion. Then these folks have the gall, the temerity to complain about people simply recounting the facts. "Oh, you're anti-Alberta, you're anti-Canadian if you actually tell anybody the truth or the facts about our record on this."

Well, you know what? I think that rather than trying to hide the truth and the facts and to manipulate and spin the record, instead what this government should do is move toward putting in genuine safeguards, genuine, robust, meaningful, accountable processes that will work toward protecting our environment. This legislation does not amount to that, and because it does not amount to that, we simply cannot support it. We can all agree that we need to work on these things when it comes to putting out the press release.

Really, the question becomes: can we agree to work on it when it comes to rolling up our sleeves and making the hard decisions? I will say to you that when it comes to rolling up their sleeves and making the hard decisions on behalf of all Albertans and on behalf of the public interest and on behalf of the interests of our children and our grandchildren in protecting our air and our land and our water, we do not see over on that side any evidence of the political will existing to do that work. It's just about paper. Until this legislation changes to be about more than that, we can't support it. It is truly disappointing but, unfortunately, not entirely surprising.

That is all I have to say on this bill, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I would like to ask my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona if she believes that the government has introduced very weak environmental monitoring legislation at least in part because they're too cozy with the oil industry.

Ms Notley: Just watch and see what happens if I say: no, I don't believe that to be the case. [interjections]

I think that there's no question. I have no doubt that this legislation was crafted in consultation with the oil industry. I, in fact, suspect that they wrote it. I have no doubt that the current head of CAPP will probably be appointed to chair this board because, frankly, that's the record. [interjections] They laugh over there, but that's what they did with the Alberta Energy Regulator, which, notwithstanding its name, is the primary environmental protection tool in this province. If you think it's funny when I suggest that you're going to put the current head of CAPP in charge of this agency, then maybe you should ask yourselves why it is that you put the former head of CAPP in charge of the environmental protection agency.

In fact, we know that the relationship is very close, and we know that from documents around their lobbying, and we know that from the actual funding connection between the oil and gas industry and the governing party and from the degree to which they take their instructions from that particular sector of the economy. There's, you know, a money-in, money-out kind of thing. The single biggest source of this governing party's current fundraising is donations from the oil and gas industry. It's not from individual Albertans anymore because those folks have kind of thrown their hands up in despair.

The relationship is far too close, and the objectivity which Albertans need and require in order to trust that somebody is keeping an eye out for their overarching public interest in protecting our environment – there is no trust. There is no regime in place that would lead Albertans to believe that they can trust it. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we're going to see that change until the government changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We've made pretty good progress tonight. I suggest that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:47 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 7, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O, Holy Creator, reaffirm and kindle in our hearts and minds honesty, purity, wisdom, and goodwill toward others that peace may prevail among all nations now and forever. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests, and we'll start with school groups. Please be as brief as you can that we may get them all in.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of Alberta Energy staff from the division of oil sands and energy operations, very important operations for us within Alberta. I'm pleased to welcome them to the Legislative Building today as they participate in a public service orientation tour. With that, I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Aspen House seniors' lodge and Heritage Place seniors' lodge from Morinville, Alberta. They are here with their program co-ordinator, Mary Benson, and recreation aides Patricia McLelland and Catherine Benson. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and absolute delight to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some of the most passionate, some of the most dedicated, and some of the most zealous students to ever set foot in our fine province. From the mountains to the prairies I challenge all members to find brighter, more intelligent students than those 21 minds that grace our gallery here today. These students are the future. These students are the leaders. These students are the hope. These students are the potential. Quite simply, these students are the students from George P. Nicholson school.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I will do the first one on behalf of my hon. colleague the leader of the third party. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Jasper Place high school ELL class. Now, they're sitting in the members' gallery, and they're accompanied by Mrs. Kerry Harvey, who is their instructor. My dad taught pipe trades at Jasper Place school when I was a kid, and I spent an awful lot of time stealing sugar cubes out of the cafeteria and playing around in the welding booths, so I'm very pleased to see people from Jasper Place here with us today. Please rise and let us give you the warm welcome that we usually do.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker. You will be familiar, of course, with my great pride in the NorQuest College downtown campus in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. They are very good about bringing visitors to watch us here in the gallery. If I might be so bold as to ask the 12 visitors along with Mrs. Carol Spence and Ms Brenda Chwyl to please rise and accept our warm welcome to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school or educational groups?

Seeing none, let us move on with other guests. Calgary-Fish Creek, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I'd like to take the time to introduce to you and through you a very special family who has touched my life. Visiting us today is the Sadownyk family from St. Albert. You might remember hearing about three-year-old Aleena this summer as she sought funding for treatment of a very rare enzyme disorder. Along with Aleena we have her very special, special parents, Laura and Dane, and her brothers, Nathan and Julian. This family has literally stolen the hearts of me, the caucus, and, for that matter, all Albertans. I'm going to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, followed by the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's booming economy has led to significant demands for many Alberta products, and one such product is cement. In fact, in my constituency of beautiful Calgary-Acadia we are home to one of the many cement plants that help build Alberta. I have with me in the House today three solid leaders in the cement industry. They are: Michael McSweeney, president and CEO of the Cement Association of Canada; Justin Arnott, the Cement Association of Canada; and Jonathan Moser, director of environmental and public affairs from Lafarge Canada. I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young man that you heard from a little earlier today at the very well-attended and moving Remembrance Day ceremony that we had in the rotunda. Mr. Evan Whitfield, of the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency, is a recent graduate of Marwayne high school. He's a first-year student at Lakeland College, and he's also a product of the 4-H public speaking program at the Tulabi Lake 4-H club. Evan presented his very moving poem, Canadian Soldiers, at the ceremony today. The reason I know all of this about Evan is because Evan's aunt Pat worked side by side with me in my veterinary hospital for nearly 20 years. I've known this young man, or of him, pretty much his entire life. I'm extremely proud of him, and I would ask that Evan, who is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, along with his parents, Pete and Cheryl, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone who is probably the most significant influence in my life. She's actually a constituent of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. I think it's important to note that she is not related at all to the Member for Little Bow. She's an accomplished musician. She is my mentor, my teacher, my disciplinarian, provider of comfort. She's my biggest supporter, and I'm her biggest fan. She is my mother. She is seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that you rise and give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you. I have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you Rachelle Rebus. I had the great pleasure of serving on council with Rachelle's mother, Renée Rebus. Rachelle is a graduate of the University of Alberta with a major in political science and a minor in economics. She has a keen interest in politics as a whole, and I'm pleased to say that she is quite likely going to join my team as my new constituency assistant in the next couple of weeks. She is also seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly eight representatives from the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex, here today in celebration of the 40th anniversary of this established and purpose-built institution. The complex serves as a well-known landmark in our capital city, and it is home for a number of long-standing Ukrainian organizations dedicated to the preservation of the many aspects of Ukrainian heritage.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names and to remain standing: Mr. Ivan N.M. Fedyna, president, board of directors, Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex; Mr. Ihor Krysz, president, League of Ukrainian Canadians, Edmonton branch; Mr. Yuri S. Broda, president, Ukrainian Youth Association, CYM, Edmonton branch; Mr. Harry Prockiw, founding member, past president, Ukrainian Youth Association, CYM, Edmonton branch; Mr. Peter Dackiw, founding member, president, Ukrainian Seniors' Club; Mrs. Natalka Talanchuk, founding member, past president, League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch; Mrs. Irene Loszuk, founding member, executive member, League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch; and Mrs. Motria Dackiw, founding member, past member, League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch. I would now ask that the Assembly provide them with the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Bitamo. [Translation] Welcome. [As submitted]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by St. Albert.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and to this Assembly my guests from the Edmonton branch of the National Association of Federal Retirees. Just like many seniors today, my guests are very concerned about the direction of this government on seniors' issues: lack of affordable housing, long-term care spaces, pension reform, and seniors' drug coverage. I would ask my guests to please rise as I call their names and together receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly. I have Ross Gillespie, Dave Riffel, Gwen Rutherford, Brian Emdin, Lillian June, Clay Kolstad, Mahir Mansi, Doreen Morton, William Williams, Lorne Berg, Dave McConkey, Larry Sakaluk, and Doris Koshman. If everyone could give them a warm ovation, please.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, it's great to see people from St. Albert in the gallery, and I'm thrilled to be able to introduce to you and through you another long-time resident of the constituency of St. Albert, Mr. Larry Matychuk. For the past seven years Larry Matychuk has been the business manager and financial secretary of the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters local 488. Larry began his career as a journeyman plumber having tickets in gas and steam fitting as well. He's been an active member of local 488 for over 40 years; despite his charming good looks you'd never guess. Having recently celebrated 100 years, the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters local 488 is Alberta's largest construction union local with over 10,000 members. In fact, local 488 is one year older than the Legislature Building and local 488 was involved in the construction of this fabulous building all that time ago. I want to thank Larry and all the hard-working folks involved in local 488 for their efforts in building Alberta and their commitment for training future generations that, too, will be committed to building Alberta. I now ask that Mr. Matychuk rise – he's in the members' gallery – and receive the warm traditional welcome of my colleagues in the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, your guests have not yet arrived.

Let's go to Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and great honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the classiest man that I know, my good friend Captain Craig Paterson. Craig has a BA in sociology, BSc in psychology, BA in history, LLB in law, MA in strategic studies from the Royal Military College in Kingston and is a captain in the 41 Service Battalion. Captain Paterson and I share an affinity for history, and I'd like to thank him for compiling the reference material that I used yesterday in my member's statement. Captain Paterson, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly individuals who work tirelessly to encourage a love of reading among children and their families. Steacy Collyer is the executive director with Calgary Reads, an organization that delivers an early literacy initiative to help change the lives of struggling grades 1 and 2 readers and their families. Joining Steacy today is her daughter Kate for her first visit to the Legislature.

I would also like to introduce Jonna Grad, the executive director of the Centre for Family Literacy. From the colourful cow bus that travels Alberta to bookmobile-type programs here in Edmonton, Jonna and her team work with Alberta families to achieve everything they imagine: improved education, jobs, and health. These ladies with their volunteers and clients are another example of what makes Alberta great. I would like them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lesley Bannister.

Lesley was a municipal intern in the beautiful town of Didsbury, but after the last election I was able to convince her to move from Didsbury to Canmore, where she is now my constituency assistant. It wasn't a tough decision, actually, for me; for her, maybe. Lesley does a wonderful job of representing the government in the constituency, and she always does so extremely professionally, proficiently, and always with a smile on her face. She's a great asset. I'd ask Lesley to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier, followed by the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of fine university students from Campus Alberta schools. These fine young men and women are members of the Council of Alberta University Students, otherwise known as CAUS, a group that I will be gladly meeting with this afternoon and from time to time on an ongoing basis. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names. Today in the Legislature are Mr. Conner Brown, Mr. Adam Woods, Mr. Sean Glydon, Mr. Petros Kusmu, Miss Shuna Talbot, and the executive director of CAUS, Ms Beverly Eastham. I would like to thank them for the work that they do on behalf of all university students in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour for me today to rise and introduce somebody that helps me work seven days a week, lots of evenings, and meets with my constituents whenever they need, whether it be in their homes or in our office: my constituency assistant, who has now left me to come to Edmonton. He's also celebrating his 25th birthday. In my tradition in northeast Calgary we like to cause a person a little bit of heck on their birthday, so, Jasjeet, birthday bumps from all 87 Members of this Legislative Assembly.

Members' Statements

Remembrance Day

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, next Monday at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month millions of men, women, and children will pause for a minute or two to remember those who have fallen in war in service of their country, only a minute or two from our all too busy lives to think about the ultimate sacrifice made by so many to serve our country and to preserve our freedom and way of life. The red poppies, which we wear for a couple of weeks each year, remind us of the poem In Flanders Fields by Canadian soldier John McCrae, who spoke of the poppies which blow "between the crosses, row on row." The poem speaks of a region in Belgium where many Canadians died in World War I.

But Flanders is only one of the dozens of regions around the world where young Canadians who died in the flower of their youth lie in soil far from their loved ones and their home and native land. I urge all hon. members and all Albertans to visit these war graves in Europe and Asia and Africa when they travel abroad. Take time to read the names on the headstones, take time to read the names of the war dead at cenotaphs and memorials in the cities, towns, and villages across our country, and take just one minute to read those names on the memorial plaques in the lobby of this Legislature. Take time to reflect on those names, to remember that these were human beings like us, who had families and loved ones and dreams, who died far too young, and who never had the chance to live the free and fruitful lives which we have enjoyed. Take time to remember them.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Management Employees Pension Plan

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we discovered that the government behind closed doors has voted to increase the amount taxpayers will contribute to the management employees pension plan. Alberta taxpayers will now be on the hook for annual pension contributions equal to almost 22 per cent of management salaries. That means that for just one deputy minister taxpayers will pay about $60,000 a year toward their pension. This is after the Finance minister announced a plan to dramatically cut pension benefits for workers on the front lines. Doesn't the Premier care that this kind of hypocrisy is demoralizing our front-line staff?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition didn't do her homework once again. First, let's be clear. Benefits have not increased. Contribution rate increases to the management employees pension plan were recommended by their board, which is required by law to ensure the plan is funded enough to fulfill its legal obligations. Contribution rates will increase proportionately for both employees and employers. In fact, contribution rates have increased for all public-sector pension plans, which is why this government is taking action to ensure the sustainability of these plans going forward into the future.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government doesn't seem to understand the importance of consistency. These changes mean that for a senior employee the taxpayer is paying $60,000 a year each and every year towards their pension. That's enough to hire a nurse or a social worker or a first-year teacher. Albertans are confused. Why is the minister continuing to lavishly reward managers while tightening up on workers who actually serve Albertans every day on the front lines?

Mr. Horner: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate. It's not Albertans that seem to be confused; it's the opposition. This is a management pension plan that we are actually going to be closing down after we do our changes in 2016. That's not to say that the plan is not right for its time. It was right for its time, but when this plan was created, there were three contributors for every one pensioner. Today it's almost equal. None of the plans are sustainable in their current format over the long term. That's why we're making the changes, not just for the management employees pension plan but for all of the plans, so that those pensions will be there when they need them most.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat. These changes mean that a senior manager will have taxpayers paying $60,000 a year towards their pension. That is more than the average Albertan makes in a year. I can't help but notice that at a time when Albertans are feeling the sting of the government's front-line service cuts, they've managed to find an extra $15 million to stuff into the pensions of their senior bureaucrats. Where is the money coming from?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, this is a little rich coming from the leader who tried to get an $8,000-a-year raise for her favourite MLA not too long ago.

Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. Benefits have not increased for these members over the benefits that were promised to them before. In fact, the early retirement provisions for this pension plan are going to be removed. That doesn't mean that they can't retire early. They can, but they will have the actuarial cost of that early retirement applied to them. Any of the members of this plan that would hear this hon. member talk about the fact that they're getting some sort of new benefit after the discussions that we've had would recognize that this hon. member has no clue about how a pension works.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 5 of this year the Premier said, and I quote: we have no more money. Isn't it amazing how fast money just appears when there's a leadership vote to survive? Yesterday out of the blue – or should I say: out of the red? – the Premier managed to cough up about 50 million additional dollars for the postsecondary sector. That is just a third of what they lost in the last budget, and it's much less than they were originally promised before the last budget. Curious timing, considering the fate of her political future will be voted on in the next two weeks. It must be a coincidence. To the Premier: if this isn't vote buying, what is it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is the commitment that we made as a government to our partners in postsecondary education, whether they're students in the gallery today or chairmen of boards of governors or presidents of Campus Alberta. We explained that with a $6 billion drop in revenue we needed to make some tough choices, and our commitment to a knowledge-based economy in the future was that at that first opportunity where we could change that, we would. That's what the Deputy Premier did, and we're glad to be able to do it.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know this Premier isn't above raiding the public purse to win a vote. We all remember her hundred-million-dollar, last-ditch inducement to the teachers' union during her leadership race. Some might argue that that was the deciding factor in her victory, convincing enough union members to buy a membership to put her over the top. No doubt it's a scenario she hopes to repeat on November 22. Again to the Premier: why is it that parents and students and professors have to wait for a threat to her political future before she acts?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, I am really pleased that the Leader of the Opposition brought up the fact that we made a commitment as a government to fund $107 million in education. We kept that promise, and it mattered for students. As we move forward, the dialogue that we had with students, with presidents, with chairmen of boards of governors about what we needed to do to continue to invest in research and innovation in a knowledge-based economy was exactly the reason that we made the commitment that we did. We're proud of it, and we're going to keep that commitment every day.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans aren't fooled with these crass vote-buying schemes. It doesn't take a lawyer to read between the lines on this. First, she promised postsecondary schools the moon, then she broke her promise, and now, in a desperate attempt to salvage support for her leadership, she's trying to patch things up with taxpayer handouts. Doesn't this Premier care about the poor impression all of this leaves with everyday Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that member can be as cynical as she wants, but Albertans are not, and she takes them for fools if she thinks that their votes can be bought. The fact is that my office had made a commitment to all chairs on July 3 that we would address this issue as soon as we practically could, and we did. Promise made, promise delivered. If she thinks this is about leadership, I should let her know, by the way, that it is two weeks to convention, and over 800 attendees have already registered.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your third main set of questions.

Mr. Anderson: Wow. It's almost like you've got senior bureaucrats in your government going to your function. It's amazing how that works.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your leader has the floor, actually.

Please proceed.

Emergency Management Planning

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Premier a very simple question about the absence of Alberta's emergency plan. Rather than answering this simple question, the Premier instead wanted to talk about her government's supposed success. Perhaps my question was a little too nuanced for the Premier to answer, so let me be direct. When will the government release the Alberta emergency plan?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, there is an Alberta emergency plan, which was put into effect, as evidenced in Slave Lake. It was put into effect, as evidenced this summer, with the extreme flooding event that we had. It worked so well in conjunction with the local authorities and their local emergency plans that we have managed this disaster that we had this summer comparably better than anybody else in the world, and we get praise endlessly for it. That's the success of our plan.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'll table the documents from the minister's own website that say that the plan is currently being updated, with an expected release in late 2012. The least he could do is update his own Internet website if he's not going to release the plan.

A direct question demands a direct answer. It's about protecting our families and communities, not about the government giving itself a pat on the back. The Alberta emergency plan was supposed to be released a year ago. Again to the Premier: when will the government release the Alberta emergency plan?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition is giving herself a pat on the back to suggest that anything that she says is nuanced.

However, I don't know if it missed the hon. member's attention this summer, but we actually had a natural disaster, the worst natural disaster in Canadian history. It would be naive to think that any emergency management plan that we had in place did not have to be updated and improved based on the experiences that we had this summer. That work is being done. We have a strong group of volunteers and public servants that do that work, and we will ensure that there is a plan in place. For her to suggest for a moment that there isn't today is fearmongering and deceitful.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this Premier wasn't up to her knees in water sandbagging at her local hospital, this Premier wasn't going door to door in her neighbourhood rescuing pets, and this Premier did not have to talk to parents wondering why they were loaded up on school buses after a local emergency had been called into effect. This is my riding, these are my constituents, and this answer doesn't cut it. Albertans demand answers. To the Premier: answer the question. When will the government release the Alberta emergency plan?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that was a disgusting display. [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Ms Redford: There are people across southern Alberta . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, I hesitate to interrupt, but we just have to cool things down a little bit here. Everybody take a long, deep breath. It's Thursday. I understand that. These are emotional issues. I understand that. Let's avoid any personal attacks in the questions and the answers, please.

Hon. Premier, please continue.

Ms Redford: There are people across southern Alberta that were impacted by this flood, and for anyone to stand in this House and think that they are more entitled to be indignant because there are people that are hurting I think is completely inappropriate, Mr. Speaker. We as a government were committed this summer to ensuring that the response that was in place helped all Albertans across southern Alberta no matter where they lived, and that's what we're committed to.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order was noted at 2:01 in response to the second question from Highwood.

School Construction and Modernization

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, it is increasingly clear that the PC election platform of 2012 was a sham of epic proportions. One of the promises given by the Premier was that her government would build an additional 50 new schools and renovate 70 more over the next four years. The funny thing is that 19 months into her mandate the work hasn't even begun on most of them. To the Premier: are you ready to admit there is no way – you'll have 50 new schools and 70 modernizations completed, I repeat completed, not announced, not reannounced, before the 2016 election?

Ms Redford: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has only announced 28 new schools and two modernizations. It takes at least three years to build a new school and just as long to renovate one. Madam Premier, with the deepest of respect, why have you wasted 19 months and not moved heaven and earth to make sure these schools are being built or modernized in the communities where they're needed? Simply put, your answer doesn't ring true.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think many Albertans in many communities are very happy that this is our Premier right now following through on her commitment to announce and build 50 new schools and modernize 70 others. There are approximately 100 school projects that either just recently completed or are under way and announced and, in addition to that, the 30 that we announced in the spring. There are more to come, and there will be more announcements coming just before this calendar year is up.

Mr. Hehr: Well, then I'll try this question to the Minister of Education. Maybe he'll be more forthright. Are you saying here today that you will have 50 new schools and 70 modernizations, the ones that the Premier promised in the 2012 document, completed by 2016?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, if I were to predict, I think we're going to have more schools than that announced and finished within this term. [interjections] They don't want to listen to the answer.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. minister, hon. members, there's a long-standing custom at our family tables, as in our communities, as in this Legislature, to not interrupt others when they are speaking, either asking a question or trying to deliver one. A good, solid question has been asked. We're anticipating a good, solid answer.

Mr. Minister, would you care to provide it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we've got the largest capital plan in education under way in this province's history. There's no question that the bitumen bubble, some of the financial challenges, the incredible demands on capital planning over the last four months because of the flood have thrown us a few wrinkles, but, like I said, there are approximately a hundred projects either just completed, under way, or announced, and there are approximately 90 more to be announced within the next six to eight months. So stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if we're elected, we'll make lots of announcements, too.

Senate Reform

Mr. Mason: Yesterday the government of Saskatchewan introduced a motion to abolish the Senate of Canada, as well repealing legislation that allowed the election of Senate nominees. The Official Opposition, the NDP in Saskatchewan, naturally supported this since we have long called for the abolition of the Senate. Albertans, like other Canadians, have been disgusted by the expense scandal in the unelected and unaccountable Senate. To the Premier: will she follow the lead of Brad Wall and the Saskatchewan Legislature and introduce a motion in this Assembly calling for the abolition of the Senate?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is proud of its record on Senate reform. We were the first jurisdiction in Canada to have legislation that would demand a triple-E Senate – equal, elected, and effective – and if we had that today, we would have a way to deal with this absolutely terrible behaviour that some Senators have taken on behalf of the public trust that they have. There is right now a process that the Prime Minister has started that involves a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. We have intervened on that to stand by our position that the Senate as it stands today is not acceptable. Albertans don't think it is, we don't trust it, and we want a change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that there's no consensus around Senate reform, and given the amending formula of the Constitution of Canada, the kinds of changes the Premier and her estranged cousins in the Wildrose Party are supporting are not going to happen. By sticking to the Reform Party policy of 30 years ago, this Premier will only ensure that the Senate will continue in its present form. Why is this Premier supporting a position that ensures the continuation of this unelected, unaccountable, and corrupt Senate?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously has a very short memory, and the reality of this is that we have provided leadership in Alberta. In fact, today the only Senators that are elected and accountable to the province of Alberta, to the country of Canada come from Alberta. They've been appointed there. We're going to work at going to the future as opposed to throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's clear that Alberta's two conservative parties are out of touch with Albertans on the Senate corruption scandal, and while two conservative parties is a good idea, Canada does not need two Parliaments. One is enough. Why won't the Premier take a principled stand against patronage, corruption, duplication, and waste, stand up for the people of this province, and call for the abolition of the Senate?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, of federations like Canada, there are only three in the world that do not have a second House. In Canada our second House, elected, a second House that would be effective, can adequately and substantially represent provincial and regional interests, so getting this right, doing the reform, is critically important going forward. We don't have a system that would serve Canadians and Albertans with a single House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the first five question spots, reserved for leaders, where preambles are allowed to supplementaries, have expired.

Let's move on, then, with little or no preambles hereafter to supplementaries, starting with Edmonton-Manning.

Trade with India

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government talks a lot about the importance of increasing trade with China, but no one should forget the opportunities in India. Alberta's balance of trade with India is far below its potential. We are talking about a country with a middle class of 250 million people and the third-largest economy in the world by purchasing power. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Does the government have a plan to address this situation and increase our trade with India?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member. I agree that India has wonderful potential in the context of opportunities for Alberta. In fact, that's why under our renewed international strategy we've put India front and centre in that strategy. We announced that we're going to be expanding our international network, and – no surprise – we're going to have an Alberta office in India. That's job one for this government, accessing new markets.

Mr. Sandhu: My first supplemental to the same minister: what are the sectors and tangible areas where Alberta industry and Alberta products could meet growing demands in India, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Dallas: Well, actually, we've got a specific region strategy there, Mr. Speaker, so we're focused in India in particular on oil and gas, on investment attraction. We've got agricultural products like wheat and canola, we've got partnership opportunities in terms of software and programming, and we've also got plenty of opportunities in education and training.

Mr. Sandhu: My third and final question, to the Minister of Energy: given India's growing demands for energy, when can we expect to see more energy exported from Alberta to India?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we know that India is one of those countries that imports about 80 per cent of the energy that it needs and, as a result, is an ideal market for Alberta crude production and bitumen in the future. In fact, what we've done, working through the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, is help ensure that the TransCanada Energy East pipeline takes place. We've made commitments of bitumen to that. These are big commitments on behalf of the people of Alberta that help ensure the job gets done. The east coast of Canada is the closest to get to India, and that is one of our future markets. We'll continue to work with India.

Management Employees Pension Plan (continued)

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the hypocrisy and inconsistency of this ancient and stumbling PC government know no bounds. Yesterday we found out that the cabinet just approved a 14 per cent pension raise for senior managers in government. Meanwhile this same government is undertaking to reduce the pension benefits for the average front-line workers and first responders, who can least afford it. To the Finance minister: can you please explain for me why on earth in a time of deficit and a time of debt, in a time of service cuts and cuts to front-line workers' pensions you would turn around and give government managers a 15 per cent pension increase?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to go a little slower. I did mention this to his leader a little earlier, and maybe this will sink in. First of all, to be clear, benefits have not increased. We are taking money out of their paycheques so that they can have the benefits that are currently there in the plan. Contribution rate increases to the management employees pension plan were recommended by their board and are required by law to ensure the plan is funded enough to fulfill its legal obligations. The fact that the contribution rates are rising for employees and employers to an unacceptable rate – we agree – is exactly the reason we're making the changes to the pension plan that we are. I look forward to their support.

Mr. Anderson: Minister, can you please tell me again? In a time of debt, deficit, service cuts, cuts to front-line pensions, and so forth how can you justify an additional cost to government of $15 million into the senior government managers' pension plan? That's about $60,000 a year total that some of these folks are making. Are you starting to understand why Albertans have lost confidence in your ability to ever get us out of debt, to ever get our finances back on track?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think what I'm starting to hear is that the hon. member refuses to understand how a pension plan works. That's unfortunate, because the information that he is putting out there and the insinuation he is putting out there are false. That's unfortunate, especially coming from a Finance critic, who should understand how this works. When you raise contribution rates, you take money from the employee's cheque. The benefits did not increase. Therefore, there is no raise to those individuals. Does it cost the pension plan contributors more? Yes. That's the problem. That's what we're trying to fix with the pension reforms we have. This is a bit frustrating.

Mr. Anderson: You know, given that the first thing this government did after the last election was give themselves an 8 per cent pay raise through a massive increase to their MLA RSP allowance and given that some might take notice that this senior management pay raise surprisingly comes just a couple of weeks before the Premier's leadership review and given, Mr. Speaker, that we all know that most pension plans have a 50-50 contribution, this plan that they're advocating has a two-thirds government, one-third contributor ratio. It is out of line with the private sector. It is out of line, period. You need to fix it. Quit wasting taxpayer money, sir.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there was a lot of very inaccurate information in there, which is not surprising coming from this hon. member or the Wildrose Alliance Party, who like to throw a lot of inaccurate information out there and then simply say: oh, well, I guess we were wrong. When you use people like the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and their six members to do your research for you, it's not surprising that you're going to get this kind of inaccurate information in the House. I will say it again. This is not a raise to the management employee pension program. This is a raise to their contributions to it. They're not happy about this. They're a little ticked at me right now for what I'm doing to their plan. [interjections] I'm sure the hon. member will support me in my endeavours when he actually figures out . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, the noise level seems to be creeping up again a little bit. Please keep conversations out of here, or take them out there if you like, and please be reminded to speak to and through the chair. It's been my observation that when you speak directly across the bow to each other, that's what gives rise to some of the flurries in here. So let's avoid those.

Calgary-Currie, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Flood Recovery Funding for First Nations

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Sadly, Siksika First Nation was devastated by the June floods. Yesterday the minister signed an MOU with the chief to rebuild the Nation. This is a federal responsibility. To the minister: why are provincial tax dollars going to fund recovery efforts that are not in provincial jurisdiction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. We all know that this was an unprecedented disaster, and our government is showing true leadership by doing what's right and by treating First Nations not only as Albertans but, more importantly, as people. I met with the federal minister several times after the disaster hit, and he's been very supportive of our actions. His department and mine are continuing to work together on this file. I can tell you that our Premier has stated that we're going to do what's right. We're going to get Siksika people back in their homes as quickly as we can.

Ms Cusanelli: To the same minister: what do you intend to say to those who believe that Siksika First Nation is getting special treatment?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that Siksika First Nation is getting special treatment. Again, I believe that Siksika First Nation are being treated as people, and they're getting the same treatment that we would show to any community in this province after the flood hit. Anybody that's been on First Nations reserves knows that homes are far apart. They don't have the capacity or the resources that we do in some of our larger communities. This MOU is a partnership with the Nation that we will work with the First Nations to help them and support them as we work together to make sure this community recovers.

Ms Cusanelli: Again to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: how is this MOU going to help people on the reserve besides providing housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've also allocated $10 million for the First Nations training to employment program. What we've done within our MOU that we signed with Siksika – and we're working with Morley – is that we're going to provide opportunities for First Nation contractors to be involved in the rebuilding of their homes. With the $10 million we're actually going to train youth, provide them with apprenticeships, whether it be plumbing, electrical, building roofs, whatever, so that they can actually be part of the rebuilding of their homes and also be able to find gainful employment after we're finished with the recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I'd be remiss if I didn't thank the Minister of Human Services for the work that his department has done in working with us on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The Premier's vote-buying scheme to woo back support in postsecondary is very transparent. Frankly, it's too little, and it's too late. This Premier and her minister swung the axe at the sector in the March budget, and schools have been adjusting their budgets ever since. This was a $50 million rebate to a $150 million cut. To the minister: how does the Premier's last-minute vote-buying scheme help the hundreds of students already turned away from Alberta postsecondary schools because of your short-sighted decisions?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this is really, really rich coming from that party, that doesn't even have advanced education in their shadow budget. It's really rich coming from an opposition that has been and is on the record during estimates of this last budget advocating for deeper cuts into advanced education. If this member would actually bother to show up at my office, sit down one day, and discuss the budget and what is happening with Campus Alberta, he wouldn't be asking questions like these in the House.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I might have to wander over and try some of that $11,000 furniture out for myself.

The domino effect of the March cuts goes on. How does the Premier's last-minute vote-buying scheme remedy the 30 fewer nurses Medicine Hat College will train this year, the 300 per cent increase in mandatory fees that University of Lethbridge students are paying, or the 20 arts programs at the University of Alberta that have been axed?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, if this member would ever bother to at least send a letter or a memo, I would respond and let him know that on July 3 of this year I had a conversation with all chairs of all postsecondary institutions advising them that when the first opportunity arises, we will do what we can in year to alleviate some of the enrolment pressures that have occurred this year. This is a commitment from July 3. The first opportunity that arose, we did exactly what we promised. Why? Because it is our number one priority.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Hon. members, when I asked you to please keep your preambles little or nonexistent whatsoever, I should have clarified that brief retorts such as we just heard ahead of a supplemental are also a form of supplementary.* So, please, let's just get to the questions with no interruptions. Let's get to the answers with no interruptions. Let's just try something different here. Let's see how this works.

Mr. Anderson: Point of clarification.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a point of order? I'll hear your point of clarification later, please. Let's go on with the supplementary.

Mr. McAllister: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think date in question here is actually November 22.

Considering how obvious it is that the $50 million rebate will not fix the problem for the original cuts that they created, how are Alberta taxpayers supposed to believe this is anything but another half-baked attempt at saving the minister's hide and his boss's job?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the date in question is July 3. If this member, again, paid attention to the portfolio that he's supposed to shadow, he would have known that. That's when the government made a commitment to postsecondary. We know that our schools had to make very difficult decisions because this government had to make very difficult decisions last March, and we know that this opposition wouldn't want us to have a deficit budget. We did the prudent, fiscally responsible thing, and we did trim some budgets. When the first opportunity for reinvestment arose, we took advantage of it, and we have reinvested.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Grant Program Discontinuations

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. For reasons I will never understand, in the last budget the grant-matching community spirit program and the summer temporary employment program, or STEP, were both eliminated. It was an uppercut followed by a kidney punch to the not-for-profit societies and organizations in Alberta. To the Minister of Culture – or not. How about the Deputy Premier, then? Given that together these programs were under $23 million, what benefit was gained by the government in cutting this .006 per cent of the budget? Was it worth it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, the simple answer would be: $23 million. But the lengthy answer is that those were not easy decisions, as I responded to the other member. The fact is that we were staring at a $6 billion gap in revenue, and the fact is that the STEP program, as valuable as it was to students and not-for-profit entities, at a time when we actually have full employment in this province and 4.3 per cent unemployment, was a program that was considered for elimination at that point in time because we knew that students would not find it difficult to find summer jobs in a job market like this.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the Deputy Premier. Now, I know that this government didn't consult their own backbenchers before they cut STEP or community spirit or they wouldn't have done it, so whose brilliant idea was this?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how their caucus works, although one can draw conclusions just by watching them, but this caucus works in unison. As a matter of fact, any decisions of such import as the elimination of a very important program are not only discussed in cabinet but are discussed with the entire caucus. So, yes, our caucus members are consulted, and we also consult our constituents.

Ms Blakeman: I doubt that.

Mr. Speaker, given that the community spirit was the only nonrestricted grant available for government, how does the government foresee these organizations moving forward with only strings-attached allocated funding? How do they pay for developing talent, retaining staff, maintaining infrastructure, building new infrastructure?

Mr. Lukaszuk: This member brings up a very valid point, that the STEP program was an important program, and all of the other programs were important programs. If they weren't, they wouldn't have been in our budget to begin with. But in a time of financial restraint, unfortunately, the difference between being an opposition member, who can advocate for everything any time or all the time and never be held accountable, is that government has to make difficult decisions. When an opportunity arises, and if we can reinvest in some of those programs, we definitely would consider doing it, but we have to do the right thing at the right time. They, unfortunately, never have to face that test.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

School Board Finances

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In her broken-promises budget the Premier chose not to invest in Alberta's students. She promised a 2 per cent increase but failed to deliver. Students are paying the price with outrageous class sizes and are being robbed of the essential support staff. Now this PC government has forced school boards to drain $90 million from reserve funds, contrary to the Auditor General's advice. To the Minister of Education: can you tell the House how many school districts will run deficits this year because of your refusal to invest in our students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this government is investing in students, and through this Premier we're investing in communities and families. We're building this province through the school projects that we talked about briefly. What this member doesn't point out with respect to our school boards is the financial health of our school boards. I know the Auditor General pointed out that the accumulated operating reserves have decreased by $90 million over the last five years, since 2007. What he didn't say is that between 2005 and 2007 those same reserves went up by $200 million.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that at least 41 school boards, or two-thirds of all districts, are being forced by this PC government to run deficits this year and given that this will drain another $63 million from our schools and given that Calgary Catholic has already told the minister that using savings to fund operations is not sustainable, will the minister stop the spin and admit that he is forcing boards into the red to make up for the Premier's broken promises to students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's comments are simply not factual. The health of Alberta's school boards in terms of their reserves is significant. As a matter of fact, the total reserves across the province are about $600 million. We have about $600 million sitting in the bank accounts of school boards across the province, and we're looking at borrowing money to build schools. Those school boards were warned by previous ministers, as far back as Minister Liepert in about 2006, that they needed to stop accumulating so much reserve. If the financial health of this province in terms of school boards was as dire as this member says, those school reserves would not have built up by about a quarter of a billion dollars in the last six years.

Mr. Bilous: Start delivering stable, predictable funding, and they won't need that cushion.

Mr. Speaker, given that the minister's assertion in the House that $300 million was added to education funding has been contradicted by his own spokesperson, by the budget documents, and by everyone that knows how to count and given that the minister has contradicted the Auditor General by forcing the boards to use their reserve funds to stop the bleeding, why is the minister raiding school boards to cover up this PC government's broken-promises budget?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the school boards in Alberta are among the best funded on the entire continent. The reserves have been built up over the last five or six years. As I've said, the allegations that the member makes are not accurate in terms of the increase to the budget. I didn't say it is $300 million; I said it's going to be $300 million. We made a commitment when we did the budget that we would be funding additional enrolment. Every student that walks into the classroom this year that was in the classroom last year will get the same funding that they got last year, and those incremental enrolments are going to add more money to the system. We'll know those numbers shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by St. Albert.

Children and Youth in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know the passion that we all share for our kids in care. They often come from backgrounds of tragedy or maltreatment, and that's why I hope the Minister of Human Services is taking a close look at the Child and Youth Advocate report, that sheds some light on some troubling trends under this government. Over the past five years the number of children under the age of 10 living at staffed facilities remains unchanged. These kids will face inherent barriers to their own development living at these facilities. Can the minister tell us why we are not seeing these numbers go down across the province?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I've not had the time personally to review the Child and Youth Advocate's report. I'd be glad to take that question under advisement. I do know that the overall number of children in care has decreased, and the minister is working very hard on that. But I'm going to take that question under advisement.

Mr. Wilson: I was referring to staff facilities, associate minister.

Considering that the Child and Youth Advocate makes it clear in the report that the government is contravening its own legislation for how our young children are being placed, can the minister explain why the government is not acting in line with its own rules and regulations?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that the member is asking about staff facilities. That's one component of care that we provide for children.

As I said, I'll take these questions under advisement for the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Wilson: Very effective day at question period, Mr. Speaker.

Given that youth are coming into care with heightened mental health challenges and are facing extensive wait times for mental health services due to extremely limited programming, what is this ministry going to do to make sure that our children who require this essential service receive the help and care that they so desperately require?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, our government takes mental health and addiction services for children and youth very seriously. We have currently $9.2 million in grants to key government agencies and not-for-profit groups to support mental health, to provide additional support, in fact, following the floods in June. We work very closely with the ministries of Human Services and Education to offer a large number of mental health programs, including enhanced 24-hour health care workers in emergency departments and mental health crisis intervention services for children and youth. I could go on with the list of partners, the multiple and very significant partners we have in this endeavour, and we'll be continuing to expand those efforts in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent developments have illustrated the dangers of transporting energy resources by rail. In light of major and in some cases deadly accidents involving the transportation of oil by rail, we need to ensure that our energy gets to market using the safest and most efficient means possible. My question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. What efforts are being made to ensure that our energy will access new and existing markets in a way that is most efficient and least harmful to the population?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we all know that rail is a very important method to get products to market, both energy and other products. Of course, the largest challenge in front of us and the greatest opportunity for Alberta is to ensure that we build pipelines: pipelines that go east, pipelines that go south, pipelines that go west. Where can I start? It's in all directions that we can possibly send oil to markets, to get it to tidewater. These pipelines are safe, they're reliable, they move huge volumes of oil, and this will be a big help to the province of Alberta to help ensure that we get world price for our products, every barrel.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, minister.

To the Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: if we're building these pipelines, what measures are we taking to ensure that Alberta has a skilled labour force available to build and maintain this potential pipeline infrastructure?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually, today is a good day to ask that question for two reasons. One, we will have the chairs of all postsecondary institutions signing off on mandate letters, which clearly will speak to the fact that we need to develop the workforce in this province and the skill sets that will be required to build these pipelines. I recall that you introduced someone in the gallery who is also pivotal and very much relevant to the building trades and the construction that needs to happen in this province. The development of the skills and the development of the workforce has to be one of our priorities to make sure that we have a safe way of moving oil and other products to seaports.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

My second supplemental question is to the hon. Minister of Finance. What could Alberta's potential revenues be if pipelines to the east, west, and Gulf coast were to exist today? In other words, if Alberta's energy differential were to disappear due to the construction of pipelines to the east, west, and south coasts, how different would Alberta's revenue picture look?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the revenue that Alberta generates is based on the price that producers receive here, and our royalty is based on that. Everyone in this House will remember that the differential that we had in the summer and fall of last year moving forward was above $40 a barrel. When you consider a 2-million-barrels-per-day production, that adds up pretty quickly. I should say that over the first half of this year the differential did narrow in a bit, and we're seeing some benefit from that, but this morning that differential was $40 off the WTI price, $50 off the Brent price. The math could even be done by the hon. members opposite. It's easy to understand that we're losing a substantial amount of revenue from the royalty.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Orphan Well Fund Levy

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government through the licensee liability rating program has increased the amount of secure deposits needed for oil and gas operators to put into the orphan well fund. While the intentions of the LLR program are good, the drastic increase in the required deposit is threatening to put many of the 400 junior producers out of business. Industry experts are saying that many won't survive these punishing fees. My question is: does the minister realize that his ill-consulted program is going to suck the lifeblood out of junior oil and gas companies, affecting the economy, royalties, and jobs?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, that's a fairly dramatic overstatement of reality. I would say that the LLR program undertaken by the Alberta Energy Regulator is an important element of ensuring in the long term that wells are appropriately abandoned, that they are appropriately dealt with, and that companies meet their obligations to the citizens of Alberta. Now, there are many factors that are affecting the economic health of the industry today, and the LLR is far from the most important one affecting them.

Mr. Hale: Talk to the 400 companies that are going to go broke.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the industry experts are saying that the new rules are depressing the market for oil and gas assets and given that some of the companies have already gone into receivership because of these rules, when can we expect concrete measures to be taken that will address the flaws in this licensee liability program?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, I've been very alive to the concern that has been raised by many of these small producers. My colleagues the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity as well as the Deputy Premier just in the last couple of weeks when I, in fact, wasn't available, met with – we have been working with industry to help ensure that we have a very pragmatic and practical response to the challenges that they face. Many companies are facing a very difficult time. The primary factor that is affecting their economic health is the fact that prices are too low. We need access to markets to get our products out of Alberta, both natural gas and oil.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that two of those companies that met with the Deputy Premier in the last couple of weeks contacted me this morning – it doesn't look like they're getting much help – and that many of these companies are going broke now and given that in many cases the companies have been issued an unreasonably short period of time to issue these payments to the Alberta Energy Regulator, will the minister admit that this heavy-handed, top-gun approach is not working and commit to working with these companies one on one to ensure that they don't go broke?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is picking up a consistent theme, one which I have heard and which my colleagues have heard, and that is that this is one more challenge for many small producers. We have to keep our eye on the ball. We have to protect Albertans in the long haul in addition to having a strong economy today. We're listening to individual companies. We're working with them. The Alberta Energy Regulator is working with industry to try and ensure that these companies are dealt with fairly and appropriately and that we also keep an eye on the long-term health of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Land Titles Registry

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has discussed privatizing the land titles registry as part of a results-based budgeting review of 800 programs. Many of my constituents have been against this idea. They don't understand how it will impact them in the long run or how it may or may not make the registry more efficient. My question is for the Minister of Service Alberta. I appreciate the results-based budgeting process. Is there a larger issue here that's driving the potential privatization of our registry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The broader issue is quite simple. The fact is that when government is going to make significant investments in redoing IT systems or redoing systems, period, the prudent thing to do is to ask tough questions and see if there are better ways of doing things. The prudent thing to do is to see if there are other models that are perhaps adding more service value for the citizens of Alberta. We enjoy the lowest taxes in North America, and the way to do that is to make sure that we are offering innovative, smart services to make sure Albertans have the best services possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that land titles registries have been privatized in the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, what are the advantages and the disadvantages from an Alberta perspective to potentially privatizing our registry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the member should note that Saskatchewan and British Columbia also have privatized, if you want to call it that, systems. In fact, we're the only ones in western Canada currently that have the type of system we have today. Alberta is a world leader when it comes to the land titles system. Some may call it the gold standard. We intend on making sure that we continue to have this standard of accuracy, of protection of land titles, of control over costs as well as ensuring delivery standards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, I think we do have the gold standard when it comes to registry.

Again to the same minister: how can you assure us that the privacy of Albertans will be protected if the registry were to be privatized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The way that we ensure that privacy is protected is that government is always the custodian of the information, maintains ownership of all the information, protects all the information, assures all the information, guarantees service standards, and controls costs. We have the gold standard today, but we want to be the gold standard tomorrow, so we need to look at places like Australia, where everything is done electronically and even banks offer the transfer of funds directly through electronic format so that the consumer at the end of the day benefits.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go on with the next order of business – that concludes question period – could I have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's go with Calgary-Shaw, please.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an incredibly special and proud moment for me. It's truly a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of the most important people in my life, my beautiful wife, Sally; and my son, Jude. I can honestly say that I am here because of Sally. Not only was she my campaign manager, but as all of us MLAs know, without the support of a loving spouse at home, it makes this job very difficult, and I can say without a doubt that she is truly amazing in that sense. The reason I wanted to pursue politics is because of my son. I wanted to make sure that this province is just as fine a place for him to live, grow up, work, play, and raise a family as it is for me, so I'm here for him and for my family. I've got to say that he loves being in this building, and I thank you all so much for the opportunity to share it with you. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 20 seconds from now we will proceed with the next item of business from the Clerk.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm advised that Calgary-Bufferalo was up next for a member's statement. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in his place, perhaps.

Ms Blakeman: Sure. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to deliver this private member's statement on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Bufferalo.

School Construction and Modernization

Ms Blakeman: In the 2012 Tory election platform promises were given by this government to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more. Now, let me be clear here. This is not projects. It's not portables. It's not extra windows or replacing a few doors. It's entire schools. The trouble is that instead of getting busy fulfilling this promise, the government sat on its hands and didn't use its muscle to build these schools. It is common knowledge that even if we complete these 50 schools and 70 modernization projects, we will still be significantly behind the curve on being able to house the ever-growing number of youngsters who need to be educated in this great province.

By 2020 we will have an additional 119,000 kids in our school system. Right now we already have children crammed into every nook and cranny of the schools. They're spilling into libraries, gymnasiums, and even staff rooms. The government could be addressing this problem by undertaking traditional building methods and traditional financing methods.

With deficit financing government can get busy building and renovating these schools that our children need. This traditional method is more financially viable than looking for P3 financing to build these schools. Here's how. The cost of capital P3 financing is higher than conventional bond insurance by the province. Governments can borrow money more cheaply than P3 debt financing.

The second negative aspect of P3 financing and the real reason why this government finds it so attractive is that they disguise the financial condition of the province. The debt and equity servicing obligations associated with P3 finances are accounted for differently. The liabilities of P3-funded schools do not immediately appear on the government's balance sheet. Accordingly, the cost of P3-financed schools is simply spread out over a three-year period and a great way to hide debt.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's a long-standing tradition where we . . . [interjection] Hon. Member for Airdrie, I have the floor at the moment, please. Hon. Member for St. Albert, I have the floor. Thank you. Hon. members here on the government side, during a private member's statement you've been reminded before to please not interrupt, and the same goes for members on this side in the opposition. It's just a common courtesy to let people state their particular views, and that's the long-standing tradition. I wish we could abide by it more reverently.

Let me go to Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex 40th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it is a tremendous honour and privilege to rise today to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex, a known landmark in the heart of the Edmonton-Decore constituency.

We are reminded that buildings and structures built in the past provide a footnote to our histories, for our forefathers laid down the foundation, they built for the future, and we have been the beneficiaries of their gifts to the community.

In that spirit, to the legacy of the many founding members who were immigrants and some who even lived through the Holodomor, the famine genocide of Ukraine, 1932-33, the promise of the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex was realized through their vision, firm determination, and strength to respond.

The vital ingredients of this complex include providing a domivka, which means home, for the preservation and development of Ukrainian heritage, culture, language, history, and music activities central to the people and government institutions.

It is a place where you will find long-standing, successful, and generational organizations such as the Ukrainian Youth Association of Canada, CYM, Edmonton branch; the Verkhovyna Ukrainian Song and Dance Ensemble; the League of Ukrainian Canadians, Edmonton branch; and the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch.

From ambitious beginnings and with a confident eye on the future the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex has hosted with great pride innumerable local, national, and international visitors, dignitaries, community concerts, speakers, and banquets.

When we recall the opening of the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex on November 13, 1973, by the distinguished company of the late Premier Peter Lougheed and many others, without question it remains a vital and integral part of Ukrainian community life in Edmonton.

I would like to commend the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex board and others from the past, present, and into the future for their unwavering commitment to better the lives of Ukrainians. I salute your efforts, and with admiration I thank you for adding immeasurably to our city, province, and country. Congratulations. God bless.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Calgary Reads

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today 1 in 4 young readers are behind their peers in literacy and learning skills by the end of grade 1. Readers who are not on track by the third grade face many challenges as they struggle to catch up.

Calgary Reads is an early literacy initiative that uses trained volunteer tutors to work one-on-one with struggling readers from kindergarten to grade 2. Calgary Reads is taking real steps to change the lives of children who experience literacy difficulties and through its programs promotes the importance of language as a building block to lifelong learning.

Through early reading children can develop their own imaginations. It is here where they also begin the process of telling the stories that will eventually shape their own lives, the lives of their families, and the hearts of their communities.

This is why I am humbled today by this opportunity to bring awareness to Calgary Reads and to their vital and thoughtful community work. So far, Mr. Speaker, Calgary Reads has donated more than a thousand children's books to over 80 schools, and they have close to 1,200 team members, who have collectively worked around 16,000 volunteer hours. Along with the patronage of our Premier Calgary Reads has established partnerships with over 50 different community and business organizations.

Calgary Reads is selflessly making sure that our children succeed. This is why I ask my colleagues today to take their Calgary Reads pledge card and read along: I pledge to read every day that I eat, to read alone, to read aloud, to read always, and to share the joy of reading with a child.

Dr. Seuss once wrote, "Today is gone. Today was fun. Tomorrow is another one," and so with this spirit I applaud Calgary Reads for encouraging the imaginations that will shape the communities of tomorrow, and for enriching the lives of our children and building a brighter Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Aleena Sadownyk

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The story of little Aleena Sadownyk, from St. Albert, is truly an extraordinary one. In April she was diagnosed with MPS6, a rare enzyme deficiency disease that occurs in newborn babies. With the disease left untreated, Aleena would be vulnerable to life-threatening complications. Though a cure does not exist, a treatment does. The treatment has successfully treated seven other Canadian children in neighbouring provinces.

For months the Sadownyk family attempted to raise little Aleena's case with the government but were met with barrier after barrier. They talked to the Alberta rare disease funding program but were denied and waited desperately to hear from the short-term exceptional drug therapy program for news. Every day without treatment meant another day of anxiety and uncertainty.

But with the help of the Isaac Foundation and the leadership of Andrew McFadyen all Albertans began to hear and take up Aleena's case. And, Mr. Speaker, they would not take no for an answer. After mounting public pressure Alberta Health finally made the decision that should have been made months earlier, and they approved her funding.

It's a reminder that we owe it to all Albertans to make sure that their health care system is there for them when rare diseases strike and extremely expensive treatments are their only hope. We can, we must do better.

I'd like to update you on how little Aleena is doing after her first treatments. She's eating better. She has energy now. One afternoon while Dad was running some errands, they got into a conversation. He was trying to explain to her what energy was and why she didn't need to rest as often. A little while later Aleena said: Dad, I feel like I can dance now. In a broken voice her dad told her that she can dance, and he looks forward to doing it together.

It's a reminder for us to take a moment to celebrate life. To Aleena: dance on, little one. Dance on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Fort McMurray Air Service

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and congratulate the Fort McMurray Airport for being granted official status as a port of entry into Canada. The status was established as of October 7, 2013, by the Canada Border Services Agency. This is great news for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and a huge step forward for the Fort McMurray Airport as it enters into a new era of air travel in the region.

This announcement means that residents can access more direct services into the U.S. such as the daily nonstop flights into Denver and Mexico that are already under way. It also means that YMM can look at other destinations internationally for nonstop service.

The Wood Buffalo region is experiencing unprecedented growth, and the rising numbers mean a sharp increase in the need for services and infrastructure in the region. The growth is also translated into YMM becoming the fastest growing airport in Canada. It is now the country's 15th busiest airport. It recorded its busiest year in 2012, seeing over 957,000 passengers. In 2013 the airport expects to serve 1.2 million passengers. An expansion is currently under way for the new terminal, set to open in June of 2014.

The achievement of the port designation makes it easier for YMM to woo airline carriers. It connects our bitumen reserves to the rest of the world. This summer in anticipation of the great announcement United Express launched a daily scheduled service to Denver. As well, Sunwing has launched flights direct to Mexico. This will foster opportunities for business growth in industries like energy and tourism. For residents all over northern Alberta it is now possible to fly from home, eliminating the need to drive to Edmonton to secure great flight deals. It means that we are open for business to the world.

I'd like to congratulate the team at the Fort McMurray Airport Authority, led by CEO Scott Clements, for their hard work, guaranteeing quality service to thousands of passengers. This bold, forward-thinking collaboration will elevate the quality of life for residents in the region.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. deputy House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. I have the requisite copies for the Standing Order 15(2) point of privilege, and I will distribute that to the pages.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 33, Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013.

The amendments include prohibiting the furnishing of tobacco products to minors, prohibiting the smoking of tobacco-like products for water pipes in public, prohibiting smoking in cars with children present, legislating a minimum number of products per package for certain tobacco products, and consolidating existing tobacco legislation. These amendments, Mr. Speaker, will protect youth, will improve the health of Albertans, and will make Alberta a leader in tobacco control. Every Albertan, especially our youth, should be able to enjoy a life free of preventable tobacco-related disease and death.

It is indeed an honour for me to move first reading of Bill 33. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 38, Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill makes minor amendments to update several pieces of legislation, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that Albertans continue to be well served. Making these amendments and modernizations will also help ensure that Alberta's legislation is consistent and clear. This bill includes amendments to the Alberta Personal Property Bill of Rights Act, the Civil Enforcement Act, the Court of Appeal Act, the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Dower Act, the Family Law Act, the Fatal Accidents Act, the Judicature Act, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, the Police Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Recording of Evidence Act, and lastly, the Special Areas Act.

Mr. Speaker, many of the proposed amendments are required to ensure that each piece of legislation is accurate and up to date. While some of the amendments may simply catch up legislation that was already in practice, other amendments are proposed to increase efficiency.

I'll pass the requisite number of bills to the Clerk. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Deputy Government House Leader's eye has caught my attention. Given that it's 3 o'clock, did you wish to ask for something at this point?

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive rule 7(7).

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent is being requested so that we might complete the Routine under the standing order cited.

3:00                      Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: I believe the hon. associate minister for persons with disabilities has a tabling or two or three. Okay. Please proceed.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I rise, and it's an honour to rise. You will realize from my comments yesterday on Bill 41 that the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities is an organization that I hold very near and dear to my heart. I work closely with them and, with their expanded and rejuvenated mandate, will do so even more closely in the coming year. I'm very pleased to rise today to table the requisite number of copies of their annual report.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the hon. Minister of Health, I'm pleased to rise today and table the requisite number of copies of the annual report of the College of Physicians & Surgeons. The report helps to highlight the great work the college is doing to enhance the health and well-being of Albertans across our province, and for this, on behalf of the hon. minister, I extend the Legislature's sincerest thanks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to table the required number of copies of the second annual results-based budgeting report to Albertans. This is a report on progress that we've made. The report lists key findings and recommendations that came out of the review of over 150 programs and services in cycle 1.

Earlier this year we announced that the process would be accelerated to complete all three cycles in less than three years. Many of the recommendations in this report have begun to be implemented, including decisions made in Budget 2013. Others will require further approval by government and will be reflected in Budget 2014 and beyond. Cycle 2 reviews are under way and nearing completion by the end of this year. Cycle 3 will begin in February 2014, with final reports due in November of 2014. Once all three cycles are complete, every one of the government's programs and services will have been examined to find deficiencies, identify areas of improvement, and ensure that we are delivering results. Then we'll do it all over again, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite copies of the page where the Alberta emergency plan ought to be, with the key points of what that plan ought to include and the note that "the plan is currently being updated with an expected release in late 2012." Anyone who is interested in receiving this will have to go to the tabling because – I'll compliment the minister; it only took two days of questioning for his staff to finally update the website – it's no longer available on the website, but it will be available through the library.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, did you have a third tabling? No? Thank you.

Let us go on to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of two documents, the first being the annual report of the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation, and that annual report was submitted October 15, 2013.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the 2012 annual report of Travel Alberta, and it's dated October 28, 2013. We just learned, actually today, that Travel Alberta has been named one of the top 50 small and medium-sized employers in Canada by Profit Guide magazine.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder – did you have a tabling as well? – followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll do the tabling in the Member for Edmonton-Calder's stead, with your approval.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Today I'm tabling a poster promoting a tribute concert for the late James Nishima, a veteran concert promoter and DJ from Lethbridge, who passed away this August. Better known by his stage name, DJ Booda, James was a trailblazer in southern Alberta's music scene. Through his tenacity he brought renowned hip hop and rock acts like Snoop Dogg and Ice Cube to Lethbridge, putting his town on the international urban music map. In recognition of his contribution to Alberta's music culture I'm tabling this promotional poster for a benefit show for James's family to be held on November 8.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of a document, dated November 6, which is the tweet from a reporter with respect to the injection of $50 million into the advanced education budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have seven tablings today. The first one is the reference material that was compiled by Captain Craig Paterson on the Battle of Ortona.

The next six are e-mails that I received in my office in regard to the conditions of the highways in central Alberta just after the recent snowfall and how the maintenance on the highways was not done during that snowfall.

The first is from Ms Gail Estell about highway 12 between Lacombe and Stettler.

The next one is from Vicky Peterson on highways 50 and 12 and around the Alix area.

The next one came to my website from Brenda Snopek on the recent snowfall on highway 12 around Lacombe.

The next one is from Mr. Ken Oliphant on highways 12 and 2A between Lacombe and Red Deer.

The next one is from Lea Redekopp on highway 12 between Clive and Lacombe.

The last one is an update from Vicky Peterson on the bad highway conditions as they persisted beyond Sunday and Monday.

I would hope that the Minister of Transportation reads these tablings and takes action with the company that was contracted to do the maintenance.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? No.

Permit me to do two tablings quickly, Mr. Clerk. The first tabling is with respect to a report I've just received. It is pursuant to section 63(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, section 95(1) of the Health Information Act, and section 44(1) of the Personal Information Protection Act. In tabling these items with the Assembly, I have the requisite number of copies here of the annual report of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta for the period April 1, 2012, through March 31, 2013.

I have one additional tabling, and that is for early consideration. In that respect, I have a letter I wish to table with you dated November 5, 2013, from the Member for Calgary-Currie requesting that Bill 206 be given early consideration to proceed directly to third reading when it passes Committee of the Whole.

Hon. members, I note that this bill has not yet been reported out of Committee of the Whole, and there are still 68 minutes remaining for that consideration. If this bill does complete consideration successfully at Committee of the Whole on Monday, November 18, it is the chair's view that in order for this bill to proceed to third reading, I would suggest that unanimous consent of the House be required so as to not unduly prejudice other members in the progress of their private members' bills. I may have more to say on this come Monday, November 18, but let that stand as an advisory for the moment.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you have a tabling?

Ms Blakeman: I do, sir. I apologize. I couldn't catch your eye previously. I have two tablings. The first is a tabling with information back to me in response to my request of the Alberta Wilderness Association around their comments on Bill 31, to establish AEMERA, and I with permission table this.

Secondly, an additional report from the fabulous Edmonton-Centre constituency office, directed towards you, Mr. Speaker, and the House. This is a report on form letters that I've received from individuals who are concerned with cuts to the universities. They are from Michael Chevalier, Jim Franks, Robin Willey, and Bernardo Avila Pires. They have a number of concerns with the cuts to postsecondary education in the 2013 budget.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health, responses to written questions 14, 15, 26, and 27, asked for by Dr. Swann on March 18, 2013.

Written Question 14: "As of March 31, 2012, what proportion of continuing care beds were provided by Alberta Health Services, not-for-profit agencies, and for-profit agencies respectively?"

Written Question 15: "How many community treatment orders were issued under section 9.1 of the Mental Health Act between January 1, 2010, and March 31, 2012?"

Written Question 26: "For each of the fiscal years 2009-2010 to 2011-2012, what was the average health care funding per resident per day for long-term care, and what was the average health care funding per resident per day for designated supportive living for 2011-2012?"

Written Question 27: "As of March 31, 2010, March 31, 2011, and March 31, 2012, what were the total number of acute-care hospital beds in Alberta that were unoccupied due to limited availability of operational funding?"

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Drysdale, Minister of Infrastructure, return to order of the Assembly MR 4, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 18, 2013, copies of all communications between Alberta school boards and the Ministry of Infrastructure regarding complaints concerning P3 school design.

On behalf of hon. Mr. Johnson, Minister of Education, school jurisdictions' audited financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2012, sections 1, 2, and 3.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have one point of order, one point of clarification, and a point of privilege. We'll deal with them in that order.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). What occurred in this question period is that in response to a question from the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Premier herself used the word "deceitful" in describing the Leader of the Official Opposition. I won't belabour the exchange. It was a very passionate exchange, but of course in this Chamber, despite passions arising and very spirited debates, one has to maintain control of the language one uses, particularly, I believe, as the Premier of this province. You're held to a higher standard.

I'd like to refer the Speaker to page 144 of Beauchesne's, sixth edition, paragraph 489. This states which words have been ruled to constitute unparliamentary language. In there, at the bottom of the page, you will see the word "deceive," and that's from the Debates, March 22, 1977. If you follow along there, the word "deceived" is also included as unparliamentary language. If one looks up the definition of deceitful, it says: given to cheating or deceiving, deliberately misleading, deceptive, and the synonym is dishonest. Those statements also have been ruled to be unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker.

This is the clearest of cases on a point of order. The language that the Premier used is specifically outlined in here. Now, I know that there's often wiggle room if one looks at the way the person said it or how it was espoused. This was not the case. She deliberately said this. She did not take it back in her statement whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to suggest that in this instance, particularly with the Premier, the leader of our province, she has to be held to a high standard or, at least, the basic standard of a Member of this Legislative Assembly. I'm going to suggest that because of that, because of the clear precedent in this case, this is a no-brainer. This is not a close call. There should be no clarification. There should be an absolute apology and withdrawal of that remark. I'm going to suggest that this is a litmus statement. If this is not a point of order that requires a member to withdraw a statement, I'm going to suggest that there should never be a point of order in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. I always enjoy it when members find the courage to challenge the Speaker, but I always caution: do it at your own peril.

Mr. Speaker, what the Premier was referring to was the Leader of the Official Opposition's conduct outside of this House and her interaction with constituents and stakeholders and her practice, not just on one occasion, that she engages in actually quite frequently, of providing them with information that is not exactly reflective of what is happening or what the government is doing or what the government's intentions are and leading them to a conclusion which would definitely not be a correct one.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier did not make any comments about the statements of the Leader of the Official Opposition here in the Chamber, but she clearly was saying that when that member goes outside and deals with Albertans, she provides them with information so selective, so misleading that they end up drawing conclusions that are not reflective of what actually is happening in government or in the province, particularly in matters of, literally, life and death, as we're dealing with the flood and the remedies after the flood, restoring Albertans' lives to order.

What I will do, Mr. Speaker, because I know this member is working hard to earn his additional $8,000, is withdraw on behalf of our Premier the word "deceitful" and replace it with "misleading."

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me cut this off here, please. I think we understand the intention that is being sought here.

Let me just take you back in the history of the proceedings today. It's best we have them. We did have a fairly testy exchange between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Premier, and it did get personal, unfortunately, from both perspectives, in my view. Let me read you what occurred. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition stood at approximately 2:01 p.m. this afternoon and said:

Mr. Speaker, this Premier wasn't up to her knees in water sandbagging at her local hospital, this Premier wasn't going door to door in her neighbourhood rescuing pets, and this Premier did not have to talk to parents wondering why they were loaded up on school buses after a local emergency had been called into effect. This is my riding, these are my constituents, and this answer doesn't cut it. Albertans demand answers. To the Premier: answer the question. When will the government release the Alberta emergency plan?

At that point the Premier rose and said, "Mr. Speaker, that was a disgusting display." The Member for Airdrie then rose and said, "Point of order." The Premier started to go on and say, "There are people across southern Alberta..." Then I rose and interrupted the Premier and indicated that we should avoid any personal attacks in the questions and answers, please, and that I hesitated to interrupt and so on.

In that particular exchange at the time that the point of order was raised, the word "deceit" does not appear in the Blues. However, I do believe that I heard the word "deceit" or "deceiving" or "deceitful" or something rooted in that word used either earlier or shortly thereafter, and I want to make a comment on that point if you'll indulge me for a moment.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is quite correct in having cited Beauchesne's, sixth edition, 489, where the word "deceive" and derivatives thereto are listed as having been ruled unparliamentary. However, if you flip over to Beauchesne's 490, the next page, it says that the word "deceive" has been ruled parliamentary. So it depends on tone, timbre, context, and so on, and I will review those Blues. However, suffice it to say that sufficient clarification has been made in that respect.

I want to comment, finally, on what it is that gives rise to these matters taking up so much of our time, frankly, ever since our 28th Legislature started, back in May or June of last year. I will cite for you, again, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009. It's one of my favourite books, truly, because it lays out very clearly items such as the one before us. If you need a copy of this, please talk to your caucuses, get a copy, and refresh your memory on things like unparliamentary language, which is the subject of the point of order, as referenced on page 618. It says:

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden. Personal attacks, insults and obscenities are not in order.

It goes on, and I won't read all of it for you because I have done that for your pleasure on a few occasions before. But what it does do is that it sets up our own standing orders, Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), for example, wherein we say:

- (23) A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .
  - (h) makes allegations against another Member;
  - (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
  - (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

The point of the exercise here, ladies and gentlemen, good, honest members, is that any time and every time you get personal in this House, you're going to have that kind of a reaction from someone. Whether it's from the government side to the opposition side or the opposition side to the government members' side, you're going to get it every time, which is why I have risen on numerous occasions to ask you to please elevate your debate, elevate your questions, elevate your answers to the highest level of decorum possible. Do not focus on personalities. Do not focus on persons per se. Focus on policy. Focus on issues. Focus on services. Focus on programs. That is what holding the government to account is all about. Hon. members on the government side, in responding, in retorting, try to observe the same respect in return.

I'll tell you what happens in this House, hon. members, every time. You get as good as you give and vice versa. If you're going to continue with this vein of personal shots one way and the other, I suspect you're going to continue to hear more from me in that respect, to the point where I'm not sure what we will accomplish at the end of the day on any given day. So please be reminded.

That's the clarification on that particular point. We've heard from both sides. We know what's intended. I hope you will take to heart the words I've just read to you again and again.

Point of Order Clarification

The Speaker: Let us move on to a point of clarification. Before we hear what the matter is, I want to clarify something on my own, which might help. At approximately 2:21 p.m. this afternoon I stood again, and I said, "Hon. members, when I asked you to please keep your preambles little or nonexistent whatsoever, I should've clarified that brief retorts such as we just heard ahead of a supplementary are also a form of supplementary," and I meant to say, "are also a form of preamble."* That was the clarification I wished to make. Then I go on and say: please, no questions; no interjections. Even as I was speaking those words, I confess that I was being interjected upon and lost my train of thought momentarily. I'll do what I can to try and maintain that train of thought better when we come back in a week and a half.

Thank you.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you had a point of clarification as well.

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really do appreciate the withdrawal that the Deputy Premier put forward.

With respect to the clarification, the clarification is on preambles. I know that there is precedent in Beauchesne's that talks about the fact that supplemental questions often require no preambles, but I would suggest that if you look at other jurisdictions in this country, other provinces in Canada, preambles are often used. That quick retort is used. We have a time limit. It's 35 seconds. You know, we'd like to know whether the quick retort is allowed. It's seemingly allowed in other jurisdictions, all but Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, does anyone from this side wish to entertain this as well?

Let me just make the clarification since it was addressed to me. It's a very good question. In fact, I discussed this matter with our table officers this morning, prior to coming in here. I've been doing my review, as I do every night, of how proceedings went, both in the afternoon and the evening. I always make notes. This won't make a lot of sense to you, but, as you can see, I do make notes of everything that you do, that you say, the interruptions you make, the comments I make, and then I review them at night. On many occasions I watch the full nine yards, as it were, on the replayed televised aspect.

I've noted a lot of things over the time. The local guideline that we have – it's not so much a rule, but it's a guideline – amongst the Government House Leader and deputy House leaders and the opposition House leaders and their deputies is to allow 35 seconds for a question, be it a main question or be it the two supplemental questions. Equally so, it's the guideline that ministers responding on behalf of the Crown have 35 seconds as well. But it also says very clearly that supplemental questions should not be preceded with a preamble. I mentioned these words, "should not," last year. I'll bet I mentioned them five, six, seven, eight, 10 times because "should not" is one of those grey areas.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you make a very valid point, and I'm going to throw it back to the people who created the guideline to see if we can just tighten that up somehow so that it's more clearly enunciated and at the same time take a look at the 35-second rule. Today we left at least five or six members at the altar who had questions they would have liked to ask. If we could tighten up the questions and the answers, we could allow more members to get up. It's just pure mathematical sense.

Now, with respect to preambles I have two comments to make here. First of all, I did say very clearly on several occasions that after the first five question spots we ought not engage in any preambles to supplementaries so that more people could get up. That would be adhering to the rule of "should not." I'm perfectly willing to give the leeway, as I have done, to the first five question spots because there is a little cut and thrust that has to go on here, and sometimes opposition leaders wish to take that liberty, and frankly I would like to see that continued. I could just as easily short-circuit that as well, which I would like not to do.

With respect to retorts, this is the discussion I had with table officers this morning because I watched, I looked, and I recorded. I heard a retort from Chestermere-Rocky View today to his first supplementary, something to do with furniture. I heard retorts today from the Member for Calgary-Shaw in both his first and second ones. I'm sure I heard some over here as well from some of the government members, but typically government members don't do that kind of retorting because they're answering questions, at least the members of the Crown are. Nonetheless, the rules apply equally to all of you.

I bear no malice towards the names of constituent representatives that I just mentioned, but we do need to clarify whether or not we're going to allow these retorts. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is quite right. Different jurisdictions have different ways of doing this. You should also know that different jurisdictions don't have a 50-minute question period at all. Some have just several minutes of questions. That's all. They don't go on for nearly an hour, like we do. So there are things to weigh out on both sides of the equation. Nonetheless, the retorts: I would really appreciate it if you would please consider them to be a form of preamble and not use them. They just take up time, and then inevitably it baits someone into something. I understand the game. I fully understand the game in this House. There are games that sometimes get played, unfortunately, on both sides.

If we could just remember those points of admonition, I would really be grateful to you, and I'll bet you would be much better in your feelings as well.

Let us move on, then, to the point of privilege.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's some fascinating reading you have at night.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Saskiw: Last week I stood in this Chamber on a point of privilege, which can be found on page 2528 of the Alberta Hansard from October 29, 2013. Today I stand on a similar point of privilege, where I submit that the government has acted in contempt of parliament and therefore has prevented me and my colleagues of the Legislative Assembly from properly doing our jobs.

Yesterday morning select reporters were given paper copies of a government of Alberta press release that detailed a cabinet decision to increase funding to postsecondary institutions by $50 million. However, this press release was not publicly released. This matter deals with the physical production of a document, in this case a press release, whereas the matter on October 29 of this year dealt with the production of a sign in the PC Party blue and orange colours.

The Wildrose caucus automatically receives government announcements and press releases. However, no information or any press releases have been provided to the public or to members of the Legislature on the aforementioned topic. Once again, select members of the press and select members of the Legislature, i.e. PC caucus members, were given access to a government-published document. Therefore, the government paid for a resource about matters which will have to be voted on in this Legislature when the government brings forward supplementary estimates.

In other words, this matter is exceptionally important as it deals with the public purse. We have a long-standing parliamentary tradition that matters such as these are completed in supplementary estimates. Members of the opposition parties still do not have any information about the new allocation of funds that some select reporters were told about and which Members of the Legislative Assembly only found out about during Oral Question Period. I did table a document here today, which I subsequently found through Twitter.

I'm making the argument that there's a prima facie case of contempt, to which I refer to O'Brien and Bosc, page 85, footnote 124, as precedent.

At about 2:15 p.m. during Oral Question Period the chief government whip, who is not a member of cabinet of the government of Alberta and, therefore, considered a backbencher, delivered a prepared softball question to the Deputy Premier about the seemingly secretive new $50 million allocation of funds to postsecondary institutions. There was also a tweet with a picture of the press release that was distributed. This press release is currently not on a website and has not been publicly distributed, to my knowledge. The government obviously provided information to PC caucus members about this Treasury-approved $50 million allocation even though all members of the Legislature need to have this information to be informed on the issue for both debates and votes on appropriations.

Preventing some members of the Legislature from having access to details of a cabinet decision that will need to be voted on in this Assembly by all members yet providing those details to some members of the press gallery challenges both the authority and dignity of this Legislature and its members, to paraphrase page 85 of O'Brien.

Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there is no precedent for what I'm bringing up today. My argument is quite simple. If the government makes spending decisions and then makes a public announcement or sends out a press release or makes a ministerial statement, we as the opposition are okay with that because in those circumstances members of the Assembly would have the information needed to carry on their duties. Where we argue that the government has challenged the authority and dignity of this Legislature is where they selectively give information to journalists yet refuse to publish that information publicly and, therefore, deliberately keep members of this Legislature in the dark on matters that will need to be debated both inside and outside the Legislature and voted on in appropriations to supply votes. It has been 24 hours since the story broke on the issue and over 24 hours since the softball question was raised on the issue, yet no information has been communicated to this Legislature nor to the public.

Let's be clear. This is not a PC Party release; this is not a PC caucus release. It's a government of Alberta release. This information belongs to Albertans and to Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Again, there is no specific, direct precedent on this topic, to my knowledge. This is the first of its kind to happen in Canada in terms of selectively choosing certain media to release government of Alberta press releases. As such, I look to you, Mr. Speaker, in your wisdom to make history and set parliamentary precedent on this topic.

Thank you for the opportunity to present on this point of privilege.

The Speaker: Hon. House leader for the Liberal opposition, do you wish to go next? I spotted you. Then we'll hear from the New Democrat caucus, and then we'll hear from the government.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I will rise to support the point of privilege that has been brought forward by my colleague in the Wildrose caucus. I think we are moving into new territory for you, Mr. Speaker, for all of us, in fact. What I have witnessed here over the last several months is – I'm unsure if it's an act of commission or an act of omission, but it is definitely a co-ordinated, incremental implementation of a strategy to keep opposition members in the dark, to provide information to other members of this House, to members of the media, to select stakeholders but to not provide that information to, specifically, opposition members in this House.

It's meant to leave opposition members in the dark, at a disadvantage. As we go into a media scrum, we have no idea that this has been announced, that people are aware of this but not us. It leaves us at a disadvantage, and I would argue that our privilege has been breached dealing with media, with stakeholders, with constituency calls, even in question period, Mr. Speaker.

I acknowledge that there is a difference between information that is circulated inside of caucuses for caucus deliberation and decision. This is not that kind of information, and this particular instance is a very good example of what we have arrived at. Now, this was an announcement of additional money, important additional money that went into this budget, reinstating almost a third of the money that was taken away from universities. That has been a very large conversation, the subject of many questions, members' statements, and debate in this House, so it's obviously an important subject. In that context, Mr. Speaker, to withhold specifically from members of the opposition the information that $50 million had been added back into that is a breach of our privilege.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I looked hard to find something that could guide us in this. Of course, we have the usual citations around attacking the rights and powers and immunities of the House and anything that impedes or obstructs a member or an officer in the discharge of their duties. That, of course, is on page 82 of the House of Commons booklet. I looked to see if there was a specific exclusion as a contempt under those that are listed on page 83, and I can't find one.

The closest we get is "deliberately altering, suppressing, concealing or destroying a paper required to be produced for the House." Well, it wasn't a paper, but it was information, clearly. It could have been a paper that the government is required to bring, and most governments generally would bring that information forward earlier rather than later – it's not been the habit of this government – and that is a supplementary supply budget, in which that information of the additional money added back in would have been public information, would have been given to all members of the House at the same time when that bill was tabled. That has not been done.

On page 111, Mr. Speaker, it references in the second paragraph down that "It is impossible to codify all incidents which might be interpreted as matters of obstruction" – and I'm particularly underlining that word for you – "interference, molestation or intimidation and as such constitute prima facie cases of privilege." Then it goes on to talk about damaging the member's reputation, which is certainly a possible outcome of what we've seen in that our constituents may think us not as good a representative because we weren't aware of that information and may have made mistakes in representing or asking a question that would make us appear foolish in the eyes of our constituents.

Again, I will point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the situation has changed here. It has been an incremental co-ordinated program by the government's Public Affairs Bureau and their parliamentary secretaries, which are partisan and designed for producing a partisan spin on government activities. Now, instead of information coming to us as has been the long tradition, where media releases were sent to us, faxed to us, or e-mailed to us at the same time as they were made available to the media, to stakeholders, and to the public, that is no longer happening. We have had official faxes from the director in charge of this sort of thing telling us that opposition would no longer be receiving government press releases, us specifically. They would be sent to the media. They could be sent to stakeholders. They would not be sent to members of the opposition.

Now we have a situation where in order to get information that is readily available to others in this House, we now require opposition caucuses to engage in additional activity to find out the information, to search for the information. We have to go on Twitter. Well, that's not very good, actually, because do we know that that's an official Twitter? Do we know that it's real information?

Earlier this week or last week, Quill the dog had a Twitter account that was commenting on the jacket that I was wearing. Well, the member who owns the dog was very quick to point out that she had not authorized that. She was not the person speaking about it. A very quick and clear example of how someone else can put together a Twitter account and be proclaiming to speak for them. How do I know, when I read the Deputy Premier's Twitter, that it's really him giving me this information? I can't rely on it being him. I can't rely on the information being accurate, Mr. Speaker.

We used to be able to walk over and take it from the door. Maybe we have to do that now. But this is also not being released on websites. This particular bit of information was not on websites. Otherwise, we are now being required to take additional activity in searching through 26 websites of ministries to find information that is readily available to caucus members. That's additional activity that is taking away from the time that members of the opposition have to perform their duties. As the Speaker well knows, there are only so many minutes in a day.

So I would argue that there is a prima facie case of privilege that has been directed by this government by their direction to their staff in the Public Affairs Bureau and their parliamentary secretaries to deliberately, by commission or omission, withhold information from members of the opposition. That I believe, whether it's written in this particular House of Commons book or not. I will note, Mr. Speaker, that it also notes in here that we cannot – I think I read that part – codify all that is possible to be that. Sometimes we move into new territory, and I have never seen anything like this, nor have I heard of it from any other Assembly in the country, where the government is deliberately, consciously, strategically implementing a course of action that withholds public information and information necessary to do a good job as a member, deliberately withholding that information from members of a select group of people in here, and that group of people is the members of the opposition.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on behalf of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the arguments that have been put forward by the Wildrose and Liberal representatives. This is also something that we have been speaking about in our New Democrat caucus over the last 24 hours as well. It led into what we believe is, first of all, a fairly good, I think, point of privilege and a prima facie case that has been brought forward. Also, just leading into that, I think we've seen a pattern of behaviour exhibited by the PC government in regard to information that is necessary for this Legislature to conduct its business in a reasonable manner, for the media to use to conduct their business, and for the public to be able to digest and understand what is going on here in the Legislature, too.

I say that specifically because we were quite surprised. The first moment that I sort of heard about this thing was when the Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about it in a question about the $50 million. Then we started to make inquiries about this to media. Some people did get information, and then some people didn't get information as well. This started to pull the string of this particular incident. We certainly did see evidence of this information on Twitter – people took photographs of this information – yet it wasn't being published through the regular channels. In order for us to argue logically and reasonably on this particular issue and on postsecondary education in general, we need to know this information. We were intending to do a certain set of questions on this, and we had to turn the ship right here, right in the middle of the thing because we didn't have that information.

I think all opposition colleagues, you know, are subscribing to a government service as well that is supposed to provide us with copies of all government press releases, but we're not getting all of the information from there. There were nine releases yesterday, but only five of them were e-mailed to opposition members, right? So there's this omission, that we find disturbing and troubling. As I said, this is part of a pattern of behaviour which has included the government cutting off the opposition from media releases as well. We've been managing to find them by hook or by crook, somehow, but that shouldn't necessarily be the way that things are done.

I don't want to see this omission of information escalate, Mr. Speaker, any further than what we've seen here today. I think that the hon. member from the Wildrose was quite right to try to pursue this as a point of privilege, and if you do look in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice book, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, on page 111, obstruction is a fairly wide open thing, right? You can't necessarily codify all individual ways by which we can be obstructed from doing our job, so we should be able to add to that through precedent, I would venture to say, and we have an interesting opportunity to do that here today not just for this individual case of information not being presented to us but, as I say, to perhaps put a stop to a pattern of behaviour which is not giving us the information for us to do our job properly.

I mean, this doesn't seem fair. It certainly isn't reasonable. Certainly, the Alberta New Democrat government would not do this, you can be sure. Vaguely and instinctually, I think it's unparliamentary as well. We'll leave the actual decision for you, of course, sir, but I think that we have something here that we should put forward as opposition. It's reasonable, and I think it's in the interest of good governance and the smooth functioning of democracy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, as a comment I have to tell you that it is unfortunate that members of the opposition, particularly the Wildrose, would have students and universities wait for supplementary estimates to happen in the Alberta Legislature for us to address some of the pressing financial issues stemming from increased enrolment. I'm sure that's not what our students would want. I'm sure that's not what Albertans would want.

Let's deal with the facts over here. Mr. Speaker, you said earlier that we often have issues in the House relative to decorum because some of the comments that are made are personal, and I would agree with you on that. But I would also strongly suggest to you that there is one more reason, and that is that it is abundantly obvious that a number of members of this House simply have not taken the time to learn what the rules of the House are and to learn what the role of this Chamber is vis-à-vis the role of the government and how those two interplay and what the tradition of the British parliamentary system is. I now hear that you're spending a great deal of time reading in the evening. Perhaps you can assign us homework for the week of the constituency break to brush up on the British parliamentary system and what the role of the legislative branch vis-à-vis the executive branch is.

Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why there is no precedent in Beauchesne's or our standing orders or, frankly, any other British parliamentary guideline, and the reason is because no parliamentarian worth his salt would ever rise in the House and raise a point of order or privilege on this matter. There is no abomination of parliamentary procedure or government procedure in what has happened with the release of the $50 million for postsecondary institutions. As a matter of fact, you know, because you are a well-seasoned parliamentarian, that this is quite routine, and it happens in governments throughout the Commonwealth on a daily basis.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, number one, that these expenditures are not approved by cabinet. They are approved by the Treasury Board, and that is a very distinct difference that the member of the Wildrose Alliance opposition should know. Government does not vote, and minutes of cabinet would be supportive of that. But what he should also know is that there will be supplementary estimates coming up before this legislative Chamber – and that is the role of the legislative Chamber – where the executive branch, being the government, will be asking the Legislature for some additional funds for unexpected expenditures that would have occurred from the time of the budget to the time of supplementary estimates.

Mr. Speaker, I find it also very interesting that the member of the Liberal opposition from Edmonton-Centre would find it so surprising, because she is also a well-seasoned parliamentarian. She and I sat in this Chamber on a number of occasions when government has acted without supplementary debate in the House and approved additional funding to individual ministries; for example, in the case of SARS, when the medical condition broke out, pine beetle devastation, forest fires, hail damage, and most recently the floods in Fort McMurray and in southern Alberta.

As a matter of fact, this government right now, predominantly through the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, is providing relief in a financial form in a variety of ways, yet we haven't dealt with the supplementary estimates on those expenditures. We will sometime in the future. I imagine, much like in the case of the $50 million for this expenditure, members of the opposition would not want us to wait and sit in session and have a supplementary estimates debate, vote on those issues, and then provide relief in flood cases or others.

Well, in this case, Mr. Speaker, we did identify increased enrolment, like we often have in the Ministry of Health when usage increases because of an outbreak of a medical condition or whatnot, and government – government – in its executive role makes the decisions on internal reallocations of funds, addressing pressures that are unanticipated that arise, and releases dollars accordingly.

There is no precedent – obviously, there is no precedent – because this happens all the time, and that is exactly how the system is supposed to work. You would not want to have flood victims or forest fires or universities waiting until there is a scheduled session, which now may not happen for another few weeks or months perhaps – it could happen in the spring – for government to be able to make important day-to-day decisions.

Now, also, I find it very interesting, Mr. Speaker, that these members would lead you to believe that they are so hard-pressed and have no access to information. Well, that may be the case if they don't do the work that Albertans pay them to do. Frankly, particularly with the Wildrose Alliance, we have critics assigned, shadow ministers, who are supposed to follow everything that the minister does and all decisions that the minister makes.

It has become abundantly clear today to you, Mr. Speaker, in the line of questioning from my critic, that that obviously is not happening. But if the critic was to do his or her work, they would know that there was no press release on this particular matter. As a matter of fact, an information sheet was posted on the ministry's website. If that member was to do what taxpayers of Alberta pay him to do and showed up at his office first thing in the morning, turned on his or her computer, and looked at the website of the ministry that they are supposed to shadow, guess what would appear? An additional $50 million will ensure more student success, with a breakdown of how much additional money every school will be getting, on the website of the ministry, on the ministry's official Twitter account.

It was not provided to some privileged reporters because, frankly, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, reporters now have to do the job that they should be doing. They looked at our website, they found it, and they reported it, and so they should have. This theory of conspiracy simply doesn't quite add up.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that there was a time and place when there was a big wooden cabinet on the press office's door, and every morning someone from the ministry would physically put paper press releases and fact sheets into that door. I'm not sure if that shelf still exists on the second floor of the Legislature. However, unfortunately, I have to inform the opposition that time has moved on. Time has moved on. We no longer print first thing in the morning sheets of paper and don't actually put them into doors, but we post things on our websites. Every ministry in this government has an official website. If the shadow critic takes the time and looks at the website, they will have just the same information that every private member of government caucus has available to them.

Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that these members are well funded. As a matter of fact, their research and their offices are funded better on a per-member basis than government members. Do your work, check the websites, and you will get that information. But, for God's sake, do not try to stop release of money that is badly needed right now in our postsecondary institutions.

Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're dealing with a point of privilege here. If you would just hold your point of order unless it's something really pressing, I would give you another opportunity to speak.

Are there any others? If there are, they would have to be extremely brief. We've used about half an hour so far. Seeing none, all right. Well, an interesting scenario, as always. We started at 3:27, and I note that now it's nearly 3:57, so it's been a good exchange.

Let me begin by saying that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills did meet the technical requirements subject to Standing Order 15(2), wherein he delivered to my office a copy of a letter, dated today, surrounding his wish to bring forward a point of privilege under Standing Order 15(2). The stamp from my office indicates that the letter was received in my office at 10:57 a.m. It reads as follows in the second paragraph:

I believe that as a result of the as yet unprovided information on $50 million apparently allocated by Cabinet to post-secondary institutions that was shared with select media but still has not been shared with the general public or this House, the government deliberately prevented the Members of the Legislative Assembly from fulfilling their duty and as such breached the rights of the Members of the Legislative Assembly and thereby committed a contempt.

The letter has a little preamble to it in advance and a closing statement.

Nonetheless, I did listen very carefully to what the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills mentioned in his point of privilege surrounding a press release having been issued and that, in his opinion, it wasn't issued in a way that he thought served the public interest much less the interests of the members of this Assembly in an equal-weighted way. He went on to make other comments in that respect.

I want to make a comment in general. We all know that governments across the greater Commonwealth will make announcements. They will make policy statements, they will make program decisions and other announcements like that, and they will also make funding announcements such as the one we heard today, and they are well within their right to do that. That's what governments are elected to do. They can do it any time they wish provided that some of our conventions, rules, and authorities are observed.

We've had points of privilege in that regard, and I've already ruled on those. They tend to surround themselves with respect to bills that are on notice or perhaps haven't even been put on notice but where information has been leaked out in advance about a bill that the government is intending to bring forward and so on. We've covered that rather thoroughly, so I won't deal with that.

But the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is also quite correct that there is no immediate precedent that one can turn to regarding announcements within the context that he provided, nor is there any great precedent with respect to, in his words, "select" members of the media having been provided information. I'll get to the Deputy Premier's comments about how that was handled in a moment. However, governments are at liberty to share their information in whatever way they wish. Opposition caucus members are also at liberty to do the same. You can provide information in any way you wish, again provided it's done within the rules and conventions that we are all expected to abide by in this House.

Now, the House leader for the Liberals indicated that, in her view, she felt there was some deliberate attempt to keep opposition members in the dark, words to that effect, or at a disadvantage. That, too, is part of how the ebb and flow of government works throughout the greater Commonwealth. I've read a lot about how other governments conduct themselves, and I've been to numerous conferences and conventions now where we've discussed these very issues. There might be a feeling of disadvantage or of being kept in the dark by a government, but that's not necessarily a form of contempt. It is a modus operandi that a government might wish to use for whatever purposes it has in mind.

Governments are elected to govern. It's that simple. Those who do not form government have an equally important but very different role to play. Opposition members, you know that when you form an opposition in whatever number you might be, your job is to critique the government, hold its feet to the fire, as it were, on various decisions that they make, and you may comment from time to time on how they make them. But the roles that you have are to be respected on both sides.

Yes, I see a need for greater co-operation somewhere. I referenced that in a previous ruling on privilege, where I would hope that when a bill is decided and determined by the government and is put on notice by the government, there will be a sharing of information, a briefing, as it were – it could be technical; it could be otherwise – with the lead opposition critic. That, too, is a long-standing circumstance, and I would hope that it is happening, hon. members. If it isn't, then, clearly, you must form a way of communicating to see that it does happen where it is desirable for it to happen.

The way you perform the roles, though, is an important thing here to remember as well. In that respect whether stuff was on the website or not on the website, I'll comment on in a moment according to what one member said versus what another member said. But there must be some greater understanding that ought to be sought between government ministers and opposition critics. I think you all would agree with that. There will come a time when government ministers will need the co-operation, perhaps even the advice, of other members, be they from their own party or from other parties. That is a good spirit that also has a long-standing tradition in our parliamentary democracy.

Member for Edmonton-Calder, you went on to talk about select media as well and information that was on Twitter and something along that line and indicated that you may not be getting all the information you would like, and you feel you're being cut off and so on. Well, there's an easy remedy to that. I think you go as opposition critics to the government ministers and ask them to put you on their list for information seeking. Hopefully, they will abide. I can't command them to abide by that. I don't have a rule in that respect to turn to. But there would be a sense of fair play, hon. government ministers of the Crown, to do that. I would recommend that you consider how you might do that if one caucus feels they are being shortchanged in that respect. I don't think it's anyone's intention on either side of the House to purposely cut people out of the loop when they have just as much right to be here as the next person.

Let me turn to comments by the hon. Deputy Premier. You made a very valid comment when you said that members ought to know what the rules are. Yes, that is very true. You are all viewed as professionals in here. All of you. I don't know of any profession where anyone would go into it and not know the rules or the guidelines, albeit in our case we might have far more than perhaps other professions depending on which ones you might be comparing. But no one would go into professional hockey or professional golf, for example, or into a professional industry without knowing the very basic, basic rules. They would've done some homework in that respect. Our learning sometimes is on the spot and after the fact; nonetheless, it's learning just the same. I have provided numerous comments about issues that I wish you would all learn more about.

The Deputy Premier commented on his budgets and the process and supplementary estimates, cited floods and other disasters and medical outbreaks, and how governments will allocate and reallocate or, as is often the case, reprofile funding within their ministries. Perhaps they will find shortages in one area and overages in others, and they will transfer monies between different programs. That, too, is an important and integral part of how governments work. If you've not been in government ever, I wouldn't expect you to know that, but I would expect you to have seen it in action and in process.

Let me give you a case in point. We had one of the worst disasters in Alberta's history. I don't know how that got communicated verbatim, but I would imagine that the government simply made an announcement. Here is money that's needed for purpose X, purpose Y, and purpose Z, and everybody was grateful for it. At least that's the paper trail I have in my office to prove it. A similar thing could be applied here.

Information according to the Deputy Premier regarding the issue at hand was posted on a certain website and also on the ministry's "something" account, clear account or something along that line. A Twitter account. I didn't quite hear that. There were some interjections there. As such, in his view it was reported on only by those media who picked it up and chose to report on it. When anyone makes an announcement, whether it's government or opposition, we can't possibly imagine which media are going to pick it up and fly with it and call us for an interview or not. Some may choose to ignore it. Some may choose to report on it another day. We have no control over any of that, nor should we.

I want to take the Deputy Premier at his word that this information was posted in the manner he said, and I want to take the opposition critics at their word that they felt that they didn't get the information on a timely basis. I think the Deputy Premier has now clarified that a new system is in place, and maybe that's the big lesson here today. There is no big brown door down on the second floor or wherever it used to be where ministerial announcements or funding announcements or whatever used to get posted. They do it in a different way. Everyone is searching for that paperless world. In fact, I've had members in my office just in the last little while talking about how they wish there was less paper, not more: let's find it and print off what we want. So we'll take you all at your words in that regard.

As such, I personally don't think, given all the clarifications that have just been given, that there is a point of privilege here to be found. But I do find that there is always a purpose to these points of privilege when they're raised. They result in some greater clarity about process, about function, about role, could be about decorum. It could be about any of those things. At the end of the day it's mostly about co-operation. It's mostly about respect and understanding that we each have a role to play in here. We may not like how some of it gets played, but we have to respect each other's role in playing out their particular roles in that regard.

That will close that matter for today, with a request for what I've just said to please be pursued more aggressively by all members.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 34

Building New Petroleum Markets Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Energy today I rise to move second reading of the Building New Petroleum Markets Act.

Mr. Speaker, opening new markets for our energy products has been a focus of this government. Just as we're aware of our need to access markets, in the same way we must seek markets for our in-kind royalties so that we can get top dollar. That's the impetus behind this legislative change. These amendments will support APMC's increased strategic mandate to execute bitumen royalty in kind, or BRIK, and related policy goals, including enhancing market access and increasing value-added activity.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker, on second reading. I'd move that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 37

Statutes Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to move second reading of Bill 37, the Statutes Repeal Act.

Bill 37 repeals 24 pieces of or provisions in obsolete or unnecessary legislation and establishes a mechanism for the automatic review and possible repeal of five-year-old unproclaimed legislation. The review and repeal mechanism this bill creates serves to promote the health of our legislative system by removing legislation still unproclaimed for five years or longer. Routinely reviewing and eliminating legislation sitting unproclaimed will ensure that Albertans have a clear understanding of the laws they are subject to.

It's important to note that this automatic process includes safeguards to prevent the repeal of legislation if warranted. These safeguards include an initial transition period, providing ministries time to review legislation set to be repealed and make a case for not repealing it if necessary. A clause is also included to provide our Legislature the opportunity to stop a potential repeal by adopting a resolution that the act or provision in question not be repealed. A review and repeal process, including these safeguards, will serve to strengthen our existing democratic processes. It draws legislators' attention to laws sitting unproclaimed and forces us to assess whether they should be repealed or proclaimed.

Several ministries have identified obsolete or unnecessary unproclaimed legislation for repeal in this bill. Those ministries are: Treasury Board and Finance, Agriculture and Rural Development, Health, Aboriginal Relations, Municipal Affairs, Human Services, Service Alberta, and Justice and Solicitor General. There are a variety of reasons for repeal of these pieces of legislation. Some legislation is no longer of any use to Albertans in the present day or is redundant. Each piece of legislation proposed for repeal has been subject to strenuous review, ensuring that Albertans will not suffer any discontinuation of required protections or a loss of enjoyed benefits. Mr. Speaker, each ministry with legislation set to be repealed by this bill has provided their reasoning for doing so, and I'm sure that will come out in the debates.

In the interest of time I'm going to skip to my concluding comments.

Mr. Speaker, both the repeal of obsolete and unnecessary legislation and the institution of an automatic review and repeal process for five-year-old unproclaimed legislation are integral to the effectiveness of our legislative system. These changes will give Albertans a clearer understanding of the legislation governing them by reducing red tape and helping to eliminate legislative confusion and duplication. We owe it to Albertans to take these steps to maintain the body of legislation governing them and ensure that all of the provincial laws on the books make sense.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move that we adjourn debate on Bill 37.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 39 Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 39, Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act.

It has been nearly a decade since our government made major reforms to Alberta's auto insurance system, and in that time it has served Albertans well. We've heard from motorists, insurance companies, health care professionals, and others working in the system that our auto insurance system runs smoothly and continues to uphold the principles on which it was built.

Affordability for Albertans, accessibility to timely and appropriate care after being injured in a collision, and fairness in the system: these are some of the principles that we strive for. While it has been functioning very well, we are always looking for ways to improve on the way we deliver services to Albertans. To that end, my ministry is reviewing four major components of our auto insurance industry. This fall we will address two of these components.

The first is the diagnostic treatment and protocols regulation which will be updated through the normal regulatory process through cabinet. Based on the evidence provided to us by a clinical working group made up of medical doctors, chiropractors, and physical therapists, we will be modernizing some of the clinical definitions listed under the regulation. This includes, for example, adopting an improved definition of "spine," and clarifying whiplash associated disorder injuries to include cervical and lumbar regions of the body, among others.

The second regulation we are updating this fall is the automobile insurance premiums regulation. The changes we've proposed to this regulation will require some changes to the Insurance Act. Bill 39, Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act, outlines the changes necessary to the Insurance Act to carry out these changes.

So what changes are we proposing? Well, Mr. Speaker, to understand the changes we have proposed, we first need to understand a few things about our current automobile insurance system. The vast majority of Albertans, about 80 per cent, carry both basic mandatory auto insurance and additional coverage such as collision and comprehensive. Currently we have a process in place which allows the arm's-length Automobile Insurance Rate Board to regulate the mandatory portion of auto insurance rates. This causes a great deal of confusion for Albertans as most people are not aware that their auto insurance premiums are made up of both the mandatory rate, which is regulated, and the additional rate, which is not.

We've heard from Albertans that they want increased oversight on this rate-setting process. A survey of Albertans conducted by the Automobile Insurance Rate Board's consumer representative found that 74 per cent of people thought it was important for the government to regulate premiums for the additional coverage. This is consistent with what we as government have heard as well.

Albertans have spoken, and we've listened. The changes we make to the Insurance Act will give the Automobile Insurance Rate Board the responsibility to regulate not only basic rates but also additional auto insurance rates. This will provide the additional oversight that Albertans have asked for.

We are also moving away from the current practice of holding an annual industry-wide adjustment process. Instead, insurance companies will be able to directly apply for their adjustments to their insurance premiums on a company-by-company basis. This allows the system to be more responsive. Currently the industry-wide adjustment process sets the basic rate in a one-size-fits-all scenario. By moving to this file-and-approve system, companies will be able to apply on an as-needed basis for any rate changes. This will increase the competitiveness of the auto insurance system in Alberta and may mean more choice for consumers.

While reviewing our auto insurance system, we found other ways in which we can strengthen the Insurance Act to better protect consumers. We are toughening up the language to ensure that not only provincial and extraprovincial companies meet basic capital requirements but also federally authorized companies, ensuring solvency. We are making sure that the regulator of insurance companies knows the particulars of compliance undertakings issued in other provinces, thus increasing awareness of insurer conduct. We're making changes to ensure that once life insurance or accident and sickness insurance proceeds are paid to a creditor, the remaining proceeds may then be payable also to a person jointly liable for the debt. We're replacing book value with market value, taking into account the actual value of companies in regulating their solvency rather than book value, which often does not represent the value today of a company.

These are, Mr. Speaker, just a few of the changes we're making to ensure a stronger and more robust auto insurance system in Alberta. Having worked closely with the clinical working group, insurance companies, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board, and many others over the past two years, we are confident that the changes we are making strike the right balance between consumer rights and fairness in our system.

Alain Thibault, the CEO of the Canadian Association of Direct Relationship Insurers, says, and I quote: our members support changes to the Insurance Act that will benefit consumers and insurers through increased competition and choice in the marketplace. End of quote.

Bill Adams, vice-president, western and Pacific region, Insurance Bureau of Canada, had this to say:

We support government's commitment to a stable auto insurance system for Alberta drivers. Bill 39 modernizes the insurance rate filing system, creates a more competitive marketplace and enhances consumer protection.

Our friends in the medical professions also support these changes. Dr. Larry Ohlhauser, senior medical adviser to the superintendent of insurance and co-chair of the clinical review working group, said:

Our committee is very pleased to see the government making changes based on our recommendations for improvements to the system. The changes we've proposed will allow medical professionals to spend less time on bureaucracy and more time tending to the needs of Albertans injured in collisions.

In conclusion, Bill 39 will truly do as its name suggests, Mr. Speaker. It will enhance consumer protection in auto insurance while at the same time enhance the efficiency of the system and provide more clarity to health care professionals working in the system. I recommend and ask all members of the Legislature to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 39.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 31

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

[Adjourned debate November 6: Mr. Denis]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I see you on your feet. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to speak in third reading to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. Now, as the Speaker well knows, the debate in third reading is meant to be on the anticipated effect of the bill. I've gone through all of the many amendments that were proposed, none of which were accepted, in my memory. Nope, not a one. That tells me that one of the effects of the bill is that the government has no desire or interest in working with people around this bill. It's pretty much dictatorial, and that's the end of it, pretty much what I've come to expect. Nonetheless, I live in hope. So I went through the bill again and said: okay; well, if it goes as it was written, what can we anticipate happening?

I think one of the really clear reactions that I'm already seeing is a further embedding of the lack of credibility that the government has. You know, there was lots of time and money that was spent on this, and many people and organizations in Alberta and outside of Alberta say: why was the time and money spent on this and not spent on reducing greenhouse gases or conserving water, two equally valid and important things?

The government makes the argument: well, it has to monitor. Okay. That's not actually what this agency is going to do. It's going to monitor the monitors. Okay? Not the same activity at all, but we will hope that that will give us some sort of information. Unfortunately, the government was not willing to consider any timelines as part of this, so we have no expectations at all – and the minister was not willing to consider any – for when a number of the bits of information that are in the act would be done.

For example, we have the reporting of the annual report, one presumes, at a frequency determined by the agency in consultation with the minister. Well, that could be every five years. It could be every 10 years. It could be every 20 years. There's no willingness on the part of the government to entertain any kind of a regular schedule in reporting any of this information. They backed away from that totally, weren't interested in doing that at all.

The other place we saw it was in sections like section 3(1)(b): "to ensure the data and . . . information are available and reported to the public in an open and transparent manner." Again, no timelines. Well, great. Open and transparent? When? It could be never, and they would still be adhering to the letter of the legislation. So, again, total non co-operation from the government.

We also have 3(2)(c): "report on the status and trends related to the condition." Nothing. Not a word about timelines: not annually, not quarterly, nothing, not on a month. "Make environmental monitoring data and related evaluations and assessments publicly available": absolutely no timelines.

Essentially, they don't have to do it. It's in the legislation, but without timelines on this there's nothing to hold them to it. They could publish this once every 20 years. I don't think that's very useful for a monitoring agency, but that is the leeway that the government has given itself. When it does that kind of thing, Mr. Speaker, it usually does it because it needs it, so I'm expecting no reports at all.

We also have a board of directors that does not stipulate inclusion of people but does talk about exclusion of people. They were unwilling to accept a recommendation, several of them, actually, for amendments that would include aboriginal communities, that would include landowners, that would include NGO environment groups. No, no, no: that was the answer there. Okay. Well, who is going to be on this agency? Well, the minister promises that she'll have a criterion and that it'll be good and vigorous and muscular and all those things. Yeah? No, I don't think so because nothing in the legislation holds her or her successors to that. If she changes her mind, if her successors change their minds – and, believe me, I've seen that happen – there's nothing to hold them to it. Kind of empty promises on that one, too.

They do make sure that they exclude anyone who's ever had the status of a bankrupt in Canada. Really interesting. Now, why would you choose that? It really targets a specific socioeconomic group. So you were a bankrupt. So what? Lots of people were and are leading upstanding lives nowadays. Why that in particular? No explanation. We don't know. They just don't like people that were bankrupts, I guess, which is a pretty interesting exclusion of a particular sector of the population.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, there's a timeline that we can put in the legislation: anyone who in the immediately preceding five years has been convicted of an indictable offence. Proof positive that they can put a deadline in the legislation. They just don't want to put one in there for anything they're going to do.

As I move along and look at what other effects we can be looking at, we've also got this strange stuff about borrowing money. The agency will be able to borrow money – very odd – and they can acquire real property. Again, no explanation for why. Then you get into this really interesting one about subsidiaries in section 17. Huh? What's that about? They can borrow money, they can have a credit card, they can have real property, and they can have subsidiaries. No explanation for that, Mr. Speaker. Very interesting what we could be doing here and how much money we could be giving to well-regarded friends.

Of course, I got quite a bit of media on my "seven ballerinas and an engineer," but this was, to me, one of the biggest disappointments in this legislation. There was an absolute refusal to put in the legislation that people that are appointed to the science advisory panel would be required to have some environmental science background. None of it, not one word, references that. So I shall go on assuming that seven ballerinas and an engineer can indeed be appointed and probably will be appointed to this board, which, of course, is not a slight in any way to ballerinas or engineers, both of which are very honoured professions. I know they will do their work well, and they will try and accomplish whatever they're doing on the science advisory council well. My best wishes to the ballerinas and the engineer because there won't be any scientists on the board.

Again, we have the minister promising: well, no, no, no; I'll make sure that these are good scientists. Uh-huh. There's nothing in the legislation; they wouldn't even consider it.

Also, the indemnification section was never explained, and I find that very strange because it's more than you would usually see in the legislation.

Finally, the conflict-of-interest section. This government has got to come to terms with this. Saying to an agency, "You go off there and just write yourself whatever conflict-of-interest legislation you want there, dear" is just not going to do it. Of course, people write legislation that enables them to do whatever the heck they wanted to do in the first place. Do we trust these people that have now been given $50 million of industry money? According to what the minister and the minister's staff told me, they were also going to transfer the money that is listed in the budget as environmental monitoring money, which in this particular fiscal year is $51,272,000. So we have a budget of over a hundred million dollars annually being given to people that can write their own conflict of interest with no limitations or expectations whatsoever. Well, we know what can happen there.

I had brought forward an amendment that asked that there would be a prohibition against lobbying for anything that would enrich someone's personal interest or private interest, including family members, that there be an expectation of disclosure, and that there be an expectation of a cooling-off period. Nope. They say: no, no, no. Okey-dokey. Well, obviously, maybe the government is not quite as interested in this legislation as I thought maybe they would be. I thought they'd take it seriously. Clearly, they're not going to.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'm sure everybody was very much enjoying your comments.

However, it is 4:30 p.m., and therefore pursuant to standing orders 3(5) and 4(2) the Assembly shall stand adjourned until Monday, November 18, 2013.

Enjoy your time catching up on your work in your constituencies, and we'll see you here in 10 or 11 days' time.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, November 18, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to November 07, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 18, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. And please remain standing after the prayer. Almighty God, help us to understand, help us to prioritize, and help us to be ever available to the constituents who have elected us to be here on their behalf today and every day. Amen.

Please remain standing.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

October 15, 1927, to October 14, 2013

The Speaker: Dr. Bob Elliott served as the Member for Grande Prairie for three terms, from 1982 to 1993. Dr. Elliott was a distinguished agronomist who during his scientific career developed a new variety of fescue and two new varieties of clover. He was elected to the Beaverlodge Town Council and served from 1967 to 1979, the last eight of those years as mayor.

During his service as a member in this Assembly Dr. Elliott served on many legislative committees, including as chair of the Select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and as deputy chair of the Select Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

Unfortunately, members of Dr. Elliott's family were not able to be with us today, but they are all in our thoughts and prayers as we pay this special tribute to Dr. Charles Robert Elliott.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to recall and reflect on Dr. Elliott as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon him. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of O Canada. We're grateful to have with us again Colleen Vogel, a member of our Legislative Assembly staff, who will lead us in our national anthem.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Ms Vogel. Thank you, hon. members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier. The first of our school groups.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to welcome 52 fine students from St. Charles school from Edmonton-Castle Downs. They're accompanied by teachers and adult supervisors: Mrs. Samantha Davidson, Mr. Hoang Tran, Mr.

John Trosko, Mrs. Maureen Ferra, and Mrs. Leanna McMurdo. These are fine students who are now learning about the democratic process and, in particular, about our provincial government. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly a group of incredible students from McKernan elementary school. I spoke with these really bright young children today, and they talked about how they debated a very interesting bill about subsidizing pets for pet therapy. They are joined by their teacher, Mr. Jason Ludwar, and parent helpers Mr. Doug Klein and Mr. Tim Mastel-Marr. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that all guests please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly – and also I want to add that I took a challenge posed by my friend Edmonton-South West, who last week introduced his students, and I have the most fantastic students, the most incredible students – the students of Edmonton-Mill Woods, my elementary school. There are 37 members of the school visiting today, and they're accompanied by their teacher, Allison Sylvester. Now I will ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Let us go on with other special guests. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you some very important members of the Filipino community who are here for the funding announcement this afternoon by the government of Alberta for a typhoon which hit the Philippines and affected the lives of millions and millions of people overseas and right here at home. Joining us today is Edmonton Philippine Honorary Consul General Esmeralda Agbulos; Virgilio Agbulos; Mandy Servito, president, Council of Edmonton Filipino Associations; Thomas Ancheta; Dave Fabiosa; Edward Lacerna; and Eloisa Lau. I'd ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly education stakeholders and staff here today who participated in the bullying prevention and healthy relationships webcast and luncheon hosted by our Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety. I'd ask these individuals to please rise as I say their names and to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly at the end with all of them standing: Dr. Fern Snart, dean of the Faculty of Education at the University of Alberta; Dr. Kris Wells and Dr. André Grace from the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services at the University of Alberta; Dr. Marni Pearce and David Rust from the Society for Safe and Caring Schools and Communities in Alberta – Marni also works in my department on these initiatives – Joan Carr, superintendent of Edmonton Catholic, here as an executive member of the College of Alberta School Superintendents; Dean Sarnecki, executive director of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association; Patty Dittrick and Mary Lynne Campbell from the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta; Dr. Marilyn Huber and Ann MacKay-Drobot, both from Alberta Ed; and Shane Scott and Breanne Fulawka, active alumni from Speak Out and members of my student advisory council.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some visitors that we have representing concerns and interests of off-highway vehicle owners. First of all, from the Canadian Off-Highway Vehicle Distributors Council – and I'd ask these folks, that are seated in the members' gallery, to rise as I give their names – Bob Ramsay, president of the Canadian council; Luc Fournier, who is the director of policy and government relations; and Oksana Buhel, who is the manager of rider federations and partner relations. From the Alberta Off-Highway Vehicle Association I have the president, Brent Hodgson; the vice-president, Aaron Bauer; and the treasurer, Garry Salekin. Also joining these fine folks, we have someone who is no stranger to the Assembly, Mr. David Coutts. I'd like to have everyone join me in the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of the Edmonton Filipino Seventh-day Adventist church: Benjamin Barboza, head elder; Ephraim Baragona, associate elder; and Pastor Ron Yabut. I attended a vigil for the victims of Typhoon Haiyan this weekend at Pastor Yabut's church. This typhoon has caused thousands of deaths and utter devastation. I appreciate the government's commitment to donate up to half a million dollars, and I ask every member of the Assembly to consider contributing to this as well as every Albertan. They can visit www.adra.ca or www.redcross.ca to donate. I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: You have a second introduction, hon. member?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two individuals from Dogs with Wings, which is located in the hard-working constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark, President Toby Ramsden and Executive Director John Wheelwright. Dogs with Wings is a locally owned and operated dog assistance society in Alberta which since 1996 has been providing highly trained assistance dogs to Albertans. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, last but not least, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special person in the audience. It's my niece Fiona Sherman. She asked me to attend and join her class at McKernan to talk about politics. Out of the nine grandchildren in our family she's our pride and joy. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to give the tradition warm welcome to Fiona.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, it truly takes a community to prevent bullying. As we launch national Bullying Awareness Week today, I'm pleased to rise to introduce a number of dedicated community partners who are doing tremendous work to eliminate bullying and to promote healthy, respectful relationships in our province. One of those individuals is Mackenzie Murphy, a junior high student from Airdrie. Mackenzie is an inspiration to all Alberta children and youth. After being tormented online and at school for many years, she worked with her mayor and city council to create a new antibullying bylaw and a community awareness campaign in partnership with Airdrie's PEACE Committee. She continues to share her story and create awareness so that other youths will not have to go through the pain she experienced.

Mackenzie is joined by members of the Prevention of Bullying Youth Committee, including Steven Bizuns, Karly Johnson-Renman, and Willow Van Wolde. These youth leaders work closely with our government to advise on public education awareness materials and to promote healthy and respectful relationships in their communities. We're also honoured as well to have a number of community leaders here who specialize in bullying prevention from the South East Edmonton Seniors Association – if you could stand – the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services, and The Support Network, that operates our bullying helpline. I would like to ask all our guests to receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually have two introductions. It's an absolute pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my constituency manager, Monica Rosevear. Monica is a hard-working, organized, and talented individual who would certainly be considered an asset to all my constituents. And, as many members here may attest, it takes a very special person to work for me. I would ask her now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's also my pleasure to rise today to introduce two constituents of mine who have travelled to the Legislature today all the way from the town of Bentley. Chris Wiese is an unfortunate victim of the Out-of-Country Health Services Committee. Despite having followed all the procedures and meeting all the requirements, Chris has been denied for her back surgery. She joins us today to raise awareness of the need to review this broken system. I would also like to introduce Chris's husband, Cam. I'd ask you both to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Filipino community in Edmonton. They are Letty Tria, the president of the Filipino Nurses Association in Alberta; Ellen Lardizabal, the president-elect of the Filipino Nurses Association; Lulu Bernal, a representative of the Filipino-Canadian Political Action Group; Jun Aller, the vice-president of the Filipino Radio Enthusiast of Edmonton; and Beth Aperocho, the vice-president of the Filipino Retirees' Association in Alberta. They came here today to encourage the government to do its part and provide provincial relief support to those in the Philippines who have been affected by Typhoon Haiyan, and I'm pleased to say that in that endeavour they have been successful. I would now ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I understand that your guests have not yet arrived. Edmonton-Riverview, did you have another intro?

Mr. Young: Yes, I do.

The Speaker: Please proceed quickly.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my Edmonton-Riverview constituency staff: Colleen Martin and Cindy Landreville. These ladies work incredibly hard in my constituency, and I'm so proud to have them as part of my team. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety, you have one more intro?

Ms Jansen: I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be remiss if I didn't welcome and give a warm shout-out to our ADM of Human Services responsible for helping put together all of the initiatives for National Bullying Awareness Week. Susan Taylor is our ADM responsible for family violence, domestic supports. She's here with her staff. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Philippines Disaster Relief

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 7 one of the most intense storms ever documented, Typhoon Haiyan, made landfall in the Philippines. This typhoon caused incredible amounts of damage to the infrastructure, hearts, and minds of the people of the Philippines and to their loved ones abroad, with about 2.5 million people requiring food aid, 4 million people being displaced, and over 9 million people affected.

The stories of resilience and recovery less than two weeks later are a testament to the strength of the Filipino people and their ability to bounce back in the face of incredible adversity. But the road to recovery is just beginning. Beyond the initial devastation of the typhoon itself, there are many dangers and struggles that still lie ahead of us. Lack of food, shelter, and aid along with the risk of disease are still very real threats to the people there and more support is needed.

Alberta is home to over a hundred thousand people of Filipino descent, and Tagalog is the most spoken foreign language in Edmonton and second most spoken language in Calgary. This means our connection to the Filipino community is strong. Filipinos are active in our communities and provide us with a portion of the multicultural diversity that makes our province and our country strong and proud.

In times of difficulty we often look to our extended community to help us strengthen our resolve, offer support, and overcome even the most insurmountable of odds. On this note, I am very proud to announce that the government of Alberta is committed to provide assistance to the Philippines relief and recovery efforts by matching Albertans' donations to the Canadian Red Cross for up to half a million dollars. This fantastic news is greatly needed. I would like to also encourage all my colleagues here at the Legislature to offer their support to their Filipino communities during this time of need.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Health System Administration

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the health system is in chaos. On late Friday night, after everyone had gone home for the weekend, Alberta Health Services announced that it had turfed their interim CEO and replaced him with two co-CEOs while they start a search for a permanent CEO. While Albertans continue to worry about long waiting times and crowded emergency rooms, the government is worried about shuffling the deck chairs. To the Premier: when is her government going to provide some real stability in the leadership of Alberta Health Services?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening, over the weekend, and this morning Alberta Health Services did what it always does, and that is to put patients first and to provide health care for Albertans. We will continue to strive with our Health minister to put in place the best systems possible to allow front-line workers to do that work. This is part of the process, it's good progress, and we're going to continue to take those steps.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter how many CEOs, co-CEOs, interim CEOs, and interim co-CEOs this government appoints. It doesn't change the fact that the government's approach to public health is wrong. Instead of focusing on cutting wait times and putting patients first, the government seems more focused on finding new people to take the fall for this Health minister's incompetence. To the Premier: when will she admit that the Alberta Health Services monopoly is just plain bad policy?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I was at the Glenrose hospital today making an announcement that matters to Albertans. [interjections] It was the proclamation of the Alberta Health Act, which ensured, as we have always promised, that this government was committed to a public health care system. I'm disappointed to hear the Leader of the Opposition suggest that there might be other ways to provide health care in this province, but we don't believe that.

Ms Smith: Yes. Other than a top-down AHS monopoly that seems to have a revolving door on CEOs.

It's increasingly clear to Albertans that there is chaos at the very top of this government. While the Premier may be more concerned about her leadership review on Friday, Albertans are more concerned about the future of their public health system. When will this Premier realize that the only shuffle at the top of the health system that will fix the problem for good is a shuffle out of the Health minister?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. the Premier said, I think Albertans will be heartened to know that unlike other individuals or caucuses represented in this Legislature, this is one government that's willing to stand up for public health care in Canada. To put that in a law and to back it with a charter and a series of advocates that are going to support Albertans in seeking the care that they need and support them in helping to make decisions for parents and for other family members who require care: that's responsible leadership, and that's what this Premier is delivering. [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have a number of young people here watching you, hoping to see an example of what it means to not interrupt others and be polite, so let's show them the highest possible accordance of that if we could.

Second main set of questions. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

School Construction and Modernization

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is chaos and confusion at the top of Education also. The government's been saying that it will build 50 new schools and do 70 modernizations before the next election, but the Education minister is now claiming that there are 100 school projects that are already completed, under way, or recently announced and that there will be 90 more that will be announced sometime within the next six to eight months. The Education minister says that there are a total of 190 projects; the Premier says 50 new schools and 70 modernizations. So which is it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, something that the hon. member won't be familiar with is the fact that in government you continue to make change and you continue to have progress. This government has been committed to infrastructure in Education for many years, and we are seeing the success of that now. We are continuing to see schools that are being built and being opened for communities across this province because that's what we committed to. We continue to be committed to an additional 50 and 70 renovations. That's what we promised, and that's what we'll do.

Ms Smith: I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that with all the announcements and reannouncements and double counting, I think we're all beginning to lose track. Will the minister table the list of 100 projects that he claims are completed, under way, or recently announced so we can get to the bottom of all of this?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, those lists are already tabled. Many of them are online. The schools that are announced and are under way are pretty easy to find. Ask any of the communities that have the shovels in the ground and the bulldozers beside the school site project. I think this hon. member will be heartened to know that by the end of this term I think we'll be able to look back and say that between the projects that were completed or announced during this term we're going to be in the neighbourhood of 200 schools, well above the 50, 70. So stay tuned. We still have two years in the term left to go. I think that the one great thing we know is that we elected the right Premier, who is going to invest in those schools.

Ms Smith: Well, that'll be quite a feat, Mr. Speaker. We know that the Education minister is already having a hard time finding construction firms willing to build these schools as P3s. Our major construction firms are all busy, and our medium-sized ones lack the capacity to bid on P3s. We also know that under normal circumstances it takes the better part of three years to build a school. So how much of a premium are Albertans going to pay to build all of these schools in record time, or are we just on track for yet another broken promise?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the member is asking us to build more schools or to build less schools. They came out last year and said that 30 per cent of the schools we're building right now we shouldn't be building. I'd love to see that list. They're not able to show us that list. I can tell you from my previous position as well as all the work that the government has done on P3s that we're trying to get as many schools on the ground as affordably as possible for the taxpayer and in the shortest time possible to accommodate these growth pressures that we've got in the province, and we'd sure appreciate some support on that effort.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, for your third main set of questions.

Bitumen Price Differential

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, all of this points to budget chaos that goes right to the top. I will remind you that last year I was warning about revenue forecasting problems almost every day and every day the Premier would deny it. Then in December the Premier discovered for the very first time that there is a differential in what we sell our bitumen for and the price of international markets and her government did a wholesale rewrite of the budget. The differential today is $36.60. That's within pennies of where it was when she invented the bitumen bubble. Is this Premier planning to do anything in response to this?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans understand that we want to get a premium price for our product. That's why I went to Washington last week. One of the three commitments that we made to Albertans was to make sure that we continue to open new markets. Working with Premiers across this country last week, on Friday with Ontario, Quebec, and New Brunswick, working with British Columbia, and being down in Washington last Tuesday: we're making good progress. This government is committed to opening markets to ensure that we get the best possible price, and that's what we'll continue to do.

Ms Smith: Well, in the meantime, while we're waiting for those pipelines to get built, we've got a little spending problem. Since the bitumen spread is up, government royalty revenues are likely to be down. The interesting thing, though, is that this government has found lots of money for new spending: $50 million for postsecondary, $85 million for Mount Royal's library, $15 million to top-up senior managers' pension plans, and it would appear 190, 200 new school projects. To the Premier: since the spread is up and revenues are down, how is her government going to pay for all of this?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd have to ask the hon. member all of the things that she listed. I'm assuming she doesn't want us to do those things now, I guess.

Mr. Speaker, the question was around the bitumen differential being at $36. I'm sure the hon. member knows that we don't budget on a day-by-day basis. We budget on the annualized number. The annualized number is something underneath our current budget number of $27, so in fact things are not looking as bad as the hon. member might think. There is a reason why 140,000 people moved to our province last year. It's because this is where you should be.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the bitumen spread always goes up and down. Usually the spread is low in the summer, and Alberta takes in higher royalties. Then the bitumen spread goes higher in the winter, and royalty revenues go down. Albertans are wondering what we should expect this December when the Premier once again discovers this problem. Will she continue to cut front-line nurses, teachers, and support staff, or will she just simply go into more debt?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's a moment of revelation. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has realized that bitumen prices go up and they go down, and they go up on a day-to-day basis. [interjections] This is something that we have been talking about for some time. It's why we do an annualized number in our budget. Within the next few weeks we will be coming back to the hon. members and talking about what our first half of the year was, and I'll be very pleased to present to this House and to all Albertans what that number is.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, I don't know who started the cheering and the chanting, if it was this side or that side. But whoever it was that started it, I'd be very grateful if you also ended it. You're just being disrespectful to each other because nobody can hear this stuff on television or on radio. Let's at least be respectful of one another, starting with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They say that it's lonely at the top, but in the case of AHS, it's busy, too. A summary of the past three years. CEO Stephen Duckett was replaced by Dr. Eagle, who was recently replaced by Duncan Campbell, who has now been replaced by two new co-CEOs. These new co-CEOs report to AHS administrator John Cowell, who replaced new deputy minister Janet Davidson, who back in June replaced chairman Stephen Lockwood and the entire board of directors. To the Premier. That's a lot of people getting hired and fired. Have you ever considered that maybe your real problem is that fellow over there, your minister?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I find that absolutely amazing coming from the hon. member who stood in this House time and time again and lectured us on how we needed to make changes at the top of Alberta Health Services. As I said before, we are committed to ensuring that front-line staff and patients in the health care system get the best possible services. There is no doubt that we continue to make improvements. We will continue to do that, and we're really pleased to know that the hon. member thinks that this is a helpful step.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I have lectured this government time and again, as has every other health care provider, on how to fix health care. As you can see, there are many bodies under the bus, and now the minister has only two people left to throw under the bus, the AHS administrator and the deputy minister. Interestingly, both have produced reports on AHS governance, two very different reports. Dr. John Cowell says: let the system stabilize before making any changes. Janet Davidson's report says: no; make more changes now. To the minister: to help us book easily the correct odds on who will be thrown under the bus next, can you please tell us whose recommendations you plan to follow, your AHS administrator's or your deputy administrator's?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we plan to do and what we will continue to do is to put patients first and put front-line health care staff first in this health care system. If the hon. member wants to interest himself in reports and recite chronology, that's entirely up to him. But as he well knows, this government took a very direct stand early in our mandate that we were going to provide more direct oversight over health care in this province. We hired an official administrator who has become, thankfully, the deputy minister, who pointed out to us quite rightly that the organizational structure there was not aligned with front-line staff and needed to do a better job of supporting them. Thank goodness the leadership is in place now to make this happen.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this minister's idea of putting patients first is putting them into overcapacity beds, where after a surgery they wait for six days on the emergency gurney with broken ankles and wait more than seven days to get them fixed. The bottom line is this. The cost and chaos in AHS has left our health care system in disarray. We constantly hear reports of people waiting far too long for care that they need.

Speaking of waiting, Mr. Speaker, AHS's first quarterly report, our wait times report, is now 78 days late. While the next quarterly report is due in 13 days, this quarterly report is a quarter late. How bad can it be, Minister? Will you please tell us? Will we get this before the Premier's leadership review or after?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, all you have to do to figure out how bad it can be is to look at a Member of this Legislative Assembly who is a physician, who would constantly stand up and undermine the work of front-line health care workers and undermine the performance of a system that is the envy of every province in this country. We have made a commitment as a government to exercise oversight to maximize all of the opportunities so they are available to us through a single delivery system. We are leading in areas like access to bone and joint surgery in the province. We are leading and holding our own against the national average in many others despite 140,000 people coming here last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, another day, another Alberta Health Services CEO fired. The constant political interference – restructuring, changing titles, changing positions, firing boards, hiring executives and then firing executives – has turned the management of AHS into a farce. You just can't trust this PC government with our public health care system. Since its creation five and a half years ago this government has been unable to provide stable governance for our health care system. To the Premier: why not?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, déjà vu. I tell you that we stand in this House and we listen to the opposition tell us that we need to make changes at the top of Alberta Health Services. We are doing that. We are ensuring that as we move forward, we are continuing to put patients first to ensure that front-line workers have the best possible circumstances to work in. We will continue to do that. We are committed to ensuring that that happens, and I am very pleased that this minister is in charge of that department to do it.

Mr. Mason: I hate to inform the Premier that when we ask for changes at the top, we meant her.

Just two weeks ago, after the NDP raised the alarm about the privatization of lab services in the Edmonton region, then CEO

Duncan Campbell announced that they were pausing to consult with health care professionals. The decision was immediately countermanded by good old Mr. Interference, the Minister of Health. To the Minister of Health: will he admit that Duncan Campbell was turfed because he wanted to consult with doctors before privatizing a key piece of our health care system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we are in an interim period between one permanent CEO and the next permanent CEO of Alberta Health Services. I trust Dr. Cowell, the official administrator, to make the best use of all of the talent on the executive team to ensure that during the interim period we continue to be focused on the things that matter most to Albertans. The hon. member is well aware of all of these facts. The hon. member is also aware that this government has asked Alberta Health Services to do a better job of consulting with employees and stakeholders and others prior to making major decisions. They are doing that. They've been doing it for some time now. We're very pleased to see it, and we expect to see more.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government has been in an interim period ever since Dr. Duckett learned that cookies were not on the menu.

Back in February of 2012 the Health Quality Council said that "massive reorganization at the system level and within Alberta Health Services has further blurred lines of authority and accountability." They recommended that "no further major restructuring in the system be done without a clear plan, rationale and consultation," yet this government has continued its compulsive meddling and habitual tinkering. Every day this government's incompetence saps the morale of front-line health care workers. When will this Premier admit that her government is simply incapable of running our health care system?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, diatribes like that are what undermine the confidence and morale of front-line health care workers.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that we are operating through an interim period now. These are management day-to-day decisions. I believe they are not of concern to my constituents. If the hon. member wants to believe that they're a concern to his, he's welcome to focus on that as he sees fit during question period. But make no mistake. The envy of Canada with respect to funding for health care and with respect to the opportunity of a single delivery system is this province. That just went up a whole lot more today with the proclamation of the Alberta Health Act.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. That concludes the spots reserved for leaders, where preambles are permitted. I would ask you to now please curtail your preambles, and let's start with Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Red Deer-North.

Seniors' Advocate

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government announced a seniors' advocate, which is quite interesting since the government has promised a seniors' advocate since the Premier's leadership race. As well, my own private member's bill, Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, is set to be debated in the Legislature today, which would have created an independent seniors' advocate. Now, maybe this announcement is a huge coincidence, but one has to wonder about the timing. To the Associate Minister of Seniors:

was today's announcement an attempt to avoid debate on Bill 208 today, or was it to boost the Premier's image for the leadership review this weekend?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't realize that question period was a time to debate and talk about private bills, but if this member wants to talk about this – you know, we should be shooting off the fireworks any time that we can increase advocacy on behalf of our seniors population. It's a great thing. It's a great time in Alberta today. When we had this act proclaimed this morning, I had many, many issues across the province that were brought to me by seniors and their families that will have an office to turn to. This is a great opportunity.

Mrs. Towle: I look forward to the other side taking the opportunity to support Bill 208, making the advocate independent. Given that those who advocate for seniors already shuffle from one place to another to another to another within the Health ministry, can the Associate Minister of Seniors explain to Albertans why the government is not interested in creating an independent seniors' advocate?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, you know, I've had the opportunity, unlike this member, to deal with previous ombudsmen. The Ombudsman doesn't ask if you're 64 and a half or 65 and a half. He's an independent officer of this Assembly. You know that. Everybody knows that. There's no need to create another duplicate office, an independent office, for Albertans to go to. It exists in the Ombudsman's office right today. This is a new opportunity for seniors to help navigate through the difficult system of our health system right now. We all have had members that we've helped out over the years. How about those that don't have a family member?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very interesting comment, especially given that the Human Services minister created an independent Child and Youth Advocate because children in care need a voice independent of government. Can the Associate Minister of Seniors explain why our most vulnerable seniors don't deserve the same protection as children in care?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, what I'm interested in and what my colleagues are interested in on the government side is to increase the advocacy on behalf of the seniors of this province and to help them navigate their way through difficult issues with the health system. At times those exist, you know, whether you have a family member helping out or not. We need this office to be created as soon as possible. Like the member said, it was one of my mandated issues. Promise made, promise kept, delivered.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's be reminded that Bill 208 will come up here in the Assembly, perhaps this afternoon – who knows? – and there'll be lots of time to debate it.

Also, be reminded that we'd appreciate no preambles to your supplementaries. Let's see how Red Deer-North demonstrates that for us.

The hon. member.

Health Act Proclamation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to see that the Alberta Health Act was proclaimed today and will come into force on January 1, 2014. This will allow the government to establish a health charter, which sets out its commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Health. What does the proclamation of the Alberta Health Act mean for Alberta patients and for their families?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it means a number of things. It means, first of all, that they can rest assured that regardless of what they might hear elsewhere, their government is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act and to supporting and helping to thrive a public health care system. The citizens can also be assured that they will have the protection of a health charter, which will be going out for consultation in January, and, as my hon. colleague has said, they will have available to them the services of advocates in the areas of mental health, health care generally, and particularly for seniors to assist in supporting people as they make decisions and become full partners in their own health care.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: how will Albertans be able to provide input on the health charter and the office of the Alberta health advocate?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the consultation process that led to the Alberta Health Act was an 18-month process. As someone who was leading that process, I can tell you we heard consistently that people want to be regularly consulted before changes to legislation and regulation. In the case of the Alberta Health Act the health advocate regulation, which will form the basis for the health advocate's role, will be presented for consultation in January, as will the draft health charter that appeared in the report in 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: what will the office of the Alberta health advocate be responsible for?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of functions that are critically important. First of all, the health advocate will have responsibility for monitoring compliance with the health charter, and that will include making sure that the roles of professional bodies in the health care system and other stakeholders that have similar documents are in alignment with the law of the province under the Alberta Health Act. The health advocate will also assist in referring people to appropriate bodies within the system that can deal with concerns and will assist greatly in public education about health and laying the groundwork for a healthier future generation of Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, and thank you, hon. Member for Red Deer-North. Well demonstrated. Let's keep it going.

Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Talking about competency, as we speak, nearly a billion litres of toxic waste water are traveling down the Athabasca River from the Obed mine disaster, and the minister of environment is on record telling Albertans that it poses no risk to the environment or people. I know this government wouldn't intentionally mislead Albertans, so what rationale does this ministry rely upon to claim that a hundred-kilometre slick of contaminated water is safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to take that question on behalf of my colleague. We hope to have preliminary results later this week so that we can all see with a sense of objectivity exactly what the facts are in this case. I would note that no drinking water was put at risk through the course of this incident, which none of us would have wanted to see in the first place, and all drinking water access points were closed off before they were put at risk at all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about credibility. Given that both the national pollution release inventory and Environment Canada have confirmed the toxic waste leak from the Obed mine contains harmful levels of arsenic, cadmium, lead, mercury, and other known cancer-causing agents, will this minister admit this catastrophic spill, in fact, poses an extraordinary risk to both the environment and human health?

Mr. Hughes: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to await the facts before I try and hang somebody. Of course, as soon as the facts are available, I know that our colleague will make those facts available so that everybody can have an objective conversation about what's happened here, what the risks are, and how this sort of thing could be prevented in the future.

Mr. Anglin: They must be top secret facts, secret facts.

Given that this minister said that there are no public health concerns with the water concerning what is now known to be the largest toxic waste spill of its kind in Canadian history, I have to wonder: is this minister competent enough to protect Alberta's environment?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the minister of environment is highly competent and is serving Albertans very well at this moment in Poland and around the world. As I mentioned earlier, we hope to have the preliminary results from the work that's being done so that we can look at the facts and assess the facts instead of pure conjecture, that the hon. member is currently throwing out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, received royal assent. Now, although the passing of Bill 207 to develop a provincial agency is a positive step in the right direction, questions remain regarding the implementation of this agency. My question to the Minister of Health: now that Bill 207 has passed, when will your ministry establish the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answers to these questions are well known. We talked about the implementation plan both in the course of debating the hon. member's bill – we thank him for sponsoring that originally as a private member's bill – and subsequently. We will have the agency established in 2014. Our immediate priority will be on the establishment of registries where Albertans can easily register their intent to donate organs and tissue.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Minister. Given that 74 patients died last year while waiting for an organ transplant – that is one every five days – and given that there are over 550 patients on the Alberta organ donation list waiting for a transplant, I see that we need to get this implemented as soon as possible. When in 2014 will this be established?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, of course, as a member of our caucus and as a colleague I have talked at length with the hon. member about the implementation process. As I said, we will be proceeding initially, and by spring we will have an online registry in place where people can register their intent to donate organs and tissue. As well, this spring people will be able to register their intent when they renew their driver's licence or personal identification card. The work to establish the provincial agency will also begin right away. We expect that to take a little longer to complete but certainly not beyond the end of next year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: All right. Well, my third question, then, is to the Minister of Service Alberta. I think that the hon. Minister of Health already answered this question, but I need to know, hon. minister, when the registry will be set up. It is a responsibility of your department. When will the registry be set up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to congratulate the member for this very noble cause, and I want to thank all members for supporting it. The instructions to my department are very clear: get this done quickly. We want to save lives, we want to make meaningful change for everyday Albertans, so we expect results as soon as possible, and our department is working to make that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Municipal Governance

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has backpedaled on big-city charters and the unique needs of metro areas. He's sounding something like exactly what the MGA is today. Along with this, he's refusing to reconsider redistribution of the industrial property taxes to formally share this wealth with populated areas. Remember, 83 per cent of Albertans live in urban areas, receiving only 6 per cent of this revenue. To the minister: why does this minister continue to set up rural areas as winners and cities and towns as losers to fair distribution of industrial taxes and big-city charters?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't backtracked on anything. We have continued to go forward with the charter issue, and I have spoken with both mayors, who are reviewing it right now, and I hope that we have some good announcements to make in the few weeks ahead.

When it comes to taxation, I have pointed out time and time again that taxation assessment is a third of the MGA, and there will be some vigorous discussions around it. But you don't rob Peter to pay Paul. There isn't a municipal jurisdiction, whether it's rural or urban or north or south, which isn't having challenges meeting the exceptional growth this province has. We have to continue to work together, not compete for the same resource but figure out how we're all going to do this together for the sake of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, can the minister provide hard copies of the so-called agreements he referenced between MDs or counties, agreements with municipalities to share the industrial property tax revenue? All I can find are gifts and informal agreements, which can be withdrawn at any point that the MD or county becomes displeased with the urban area.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are countless agreements where municipalities have come together and either share a cost or share the revenue that they've got. If she would get out of the city and go travel around the province and actually talk to some of the municipalities, they might volunteer some of those agreements to her.

Ms Blakeman: I'm more interested in serving the two-thirds of the population that live in urban areas.

My final question to the minister: what is the point of a regional or growth management board if membership is voluntary? How do they have any credibility or any reliability?

Mr. Griffiths: Here you go, Mr. Speaker. This is exactly proof positive of why they don't have one single member in rural Alberta, because they only consider the cities important. We consider every single municipality in this province, from the far north to the far south, critical to helping make sure that the prosperity of this province carries on in the years and generations to come.

Child and Youth Advocate Report on Youth Suicide

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, no support to adjust to the profound changes associated with moving to Canada from his violent homeland, regular isolation from his ethnic community, six different caseworkers and 10 different homes in four years: this is what 13-year-old Kamil had to look forward to when he was put into this government's care, and this is the history the children's advocate found after Kamil hung himself at the age of 17. To the Minister of Human Services. The points at which the system failed Kamil are too frequent to count. How can Albertans believe our system under this government is capable of protecting our province's most vulnerable children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the death of any child is tragic. The death of a child in care, in particular one who has come to this country for a sense of purpose and promise, is very, very tragic, and we have to take that with us as we try and move forward to build a system that is there for every child regardless of their background, regardless of where they came from. Every child in Alberta deserves the opportunity to be successful.

The good news, Mr. Speaker, is that we're moving very strongly in that direction. The Premier, when she brought together the Department of Human Services, created a foundation for that holistic sharing, that the Child and Youth Advocate talked about in his report, that's necessary for us to be able to serve these children.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that, ironically, this government is patting itself on the back today for creating more positions like the mental health advocate and given that under that advocate's watch Human Services failed repeatedly to ensure that basic recommended mental health prescriptions were provided to Kamil or that Kamil received addictions treatment or that Kamil received treatment for the PTSD he suffered from, will the minister admit that his government is failing so profoundly on the issue of providing mental health services to our most vulnerable Albertans that 10 mental health advocates couldn't fix the mess they've made?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the most profound statement that the Child and Youth Advocate made in his report was that what we needed to do is to work together collaboratively to share information appropriately. In fact, that's what this Premier determined more than two years ago in putting together the Department of Human Services, just basically mandating this minister to come forward with legislation both from the Child and Youth Advocate Act, which created the independent office of the Child and Youth Advocate, and the Children First Act to mandate the sharing of information in appropriate ways precisely for this particular circumstance.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that the children's advocate has likened this minister's department to an emergency room lurching from crisis to crisis while failing to provide the consistent, forward-looking support that is needed to help these young people grow, why won't the minister commit today to providing the resources necessary to guarantee the improved service delivery the advocate recommends instead of insisting that his plan to divest responsibility to care for vulnerable children won't create more tragedies – more tragedies – like Kamil's?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we're doing precisely what the Child and Youth Advocate has recommended, and we started doing that some two years ago, when the Ministry of Human Services was put together. But we actually started prior to that with respect to information-sharing processes, with respect to making sure that professionals, whether they're health professionals, whether they're mental health workers, whether they're teachers, whether they're social workers, whether they're police, work together and share information in the best interests of the child so that children can get precisely the help that they need, so that their issues can be identified on a timely basis and resources can be applied to ensure that those children get the help that they need. We're doing that under this Premier's leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Calgary Ring Road Completion

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To listen to the Transportation minister's excitement on the completion of the southeast portion of the Calgary ring road in September was contagious. We're right on schedule, and we're anticipating opening right on time, he said. But now the deadline of October 1 has come and gone, and commuters are still stuck on incomplete interchanges and reduced lanes and speeds on Stoney Trail. To add to the confusion, the minister's press secretary said that he wouldn't even speculate on when the delays would end and the road would finally open. To the minister: when are we going to see an end to the chaos and confusion?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what the member is asking is when we're going to see the end of the construction or at least to the point where we'll open the road. That's a fair question. In fact, we continue to work closely with the contractor. We know that when we're done, Albertans are going to get a very good piece of infrastructure. We know that we've saved millions of dollars through the P3 process, which this member's party disavows. They don't want that good value for Albertans. We continue to spend money on good projects for building Alberta. The road will be open very soon, and we will make an announcement.

Mr. Wilson: Well, given that this minister has all but disappeared on this file recently and given that the residents around Stoney Trail have lived with construction for over three years and congestion for far longer, when is the minister going to show some leadership and give us a definitive date when this road is going to open?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has it wrong. They've actually put up with construction for four years. He's not even close, but I've come to be accustomed to that. The fact is that I've been very active on this file, been working closely with the contractor. Albertans are benefiting by in the neighbourhood of $70,000 a day. When we can get the infrastructure complete, into the public's hands, where their safety is protected, where traffic will be able to flow, it'll happen, and it won't be too soon for me or for any Albertans.

Mr. Wilson: A record to be proud of, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the fines in this P3 contract are about $70,000 a day, or equivalent to roughly $3 million at this point, can the minister outline what benefits taxpayers will receive in return for your ministry's failure to deliver on the deadline?

Mr. McIver: Actually, Mr. Speaker, again, unfortunately, the member has it wrong. Our government has delivered on a major project. We're delivering on completing the ring road in Calgary. We're going to make traffic better. We actually signed a contract on behalf of taxpayers that protects their financial interests. When the road opens, it will be convenient, and it'll make life better for them. It's a few days late. There's no doubt about that. It's a construction project. This is quite normal. All in the fullness of time, and it won't be long.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Airdrie.

Emergency Medical Services for Bonnyville-Cold Lake

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been continuous concerns raised over ambulance dispatch times, and my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake is no exception to this. Cold Lake community ambulance service is now dispatched through Edmonton. The Cold Lake Ambulance Society is worried. These changes have drawn ambulance resources and services away from the Cold Lake area and transferred them to Edmonton. To the Minister of Health: can the minister offer assurances to the residents of my constituency that the current dispatch system in Edmonton will not negatively affect the availability of ambulance service in Bonnyville-Cold Lake?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I think that Cold Lake made a very wise decision when they decided to consolidate dispatch services with Edmonton. I can tell you that since August there were actually only nine calls that Cold Lake ambulance responded to in Edmonton. Of course, when we consider the importance of central dispatch, it's with the belief that it would be inappropriate for an ambulance to drive by an emergency because it's not in their home community. This is the reason why we've moved to consolidate dispatch services in Alberta. These concepts and these processes were backed by a quality-based review by the Health Quality Council, and they're benefiting Cold Lake residents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. My first supplemental is again to the Minister of Health. What is being done to acknowledge and address the concerns of fatigue that staff at the Bonnyville-Cold Lake ambulance societies have raised since this new dispatch system has been implemented?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, although it's not related to the issue of central dispatch, I know that Alberta Health Services' EMS staff are working at all times to identify ways that they can better support EMS workers that provide those services. I can tell you that the calls per month in Cold Lake have remained relatively stable since Cold Lake consolidated dispatch with Edmonton. Fatigue management, as I've said, is top of mind for AHS, and they continue to work to develop fatigue management plans for all shift workers, including EMS, to ensure their well-being.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, I would like to ask the same minister to clarify the ambulance dispatch billing and payment processes as many of the calls the Bonnyville-Cold Lake ambulances make in Edmonton are unable to be properly billed back to each respective ambulance society.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would agree, as would any member of this House, I'm sure, that it would be inappropriate for any patient to receive two invoices for a single EMS event. I'm not aware that this is an issue in Cold Lake. We're happy to look into it if the hon. member wishes. It is something that has been taken into consideration, and thanks to the support from Cold Lake for the orderly transition of dispatch, I'm sure it is not going to be an issue in the future.

Thank you.

Securities Fraud

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in the spring I questioned the Finance minister regarding several exempt market security schemes that have defrauded over 25,000 Albertans of roughly $2.2 billion. The Alberta Securities Commission has charged one of the alleged scammers in this matter, but sadly, although the ASC can levy fines, it does not have the mandate to recover and return money from these scams to the defrauded investors. To the minister: will you alter the law so that the ASC is given broader powers to recover funds from schemes like this and then to return those funds to their rightful owners?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's actually a good question, and I'm impressed with the hon. member putting the question out there. It took a couple of years, but we got there.

The chairman of the Alberta Securities Commission and I have spoken about this issue. As the hon. member has mentioned, there have been some fines levied. Unfortunately, in many of these cases there may not be anything to go and get because a lot of the stuff has dissipated out into the nether lands of people spending the money. However, I do agree, and the ministers that are responsible for securities regulation across Canada and I are sitting down and talking about further regulation. In fact, we have some amendments coming.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: I'm still in shock from getting an answer from the minister after two years. Very good.

Minister, given that in many of these exempt market schemes Albertans have invested money for a specific project only to see their money used instead to fund everything from lavish executive benefits to random properties in Central America and that in most cases the fraudsters have gotten away with it, would you be willing to appoint an MLA working group – and I'd be willing to volunteer if you'd like that – to review the current exempt market rules and regulations so that we can better protect Alberta investors from these all-too-common frauds and scams?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that was a request to come back, or whether it was just . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: He's looking for extra pay. That's what he's looking for.

Mr. Horner: Or perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it's a request for extra pay.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, the ministers responsible for securities regulation will be meeting again in December. It was my intention to bring this up in one of those conversations. Again, as I'm sure the hon. member would be aware, we do want to harmonize our securities regulation across Canada so that these, for lack of a better word, shysters who may be crossing the boundaries of the law in other jurisdictions don't simply just move from one jurisdiction to another. So we are going to be working on that.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given the Alberta Investors Protection group represents 25,000 Alberta investors on this issue and has several proposals to help protect Albertans from being victimized by exempt market scams in the future and given the minister clearly offered to meet with this group during his response to my question back on May 9, this spring, in this House – yet apparently his office forgot about that and turned down the request during the summer recess – Minister, will you instruct your office to set a time with the Investors Protection group on this matter as soon as possible? I know it must have been an oversight. Would you be willing to meet with these folks?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the timing didn't work during the summer months. Obviously, we had a few other things that we were working on as a government given the flood, and I am a member of that task force. I have no issues meeting the group, but as I've said, until we have a meeting of all of the provinces – and I have their information, and one of the things that we'll be taking to the ministers' meeting in December is that information. But there are also other ways that we may be able to mitigate this sort of thing in the future. However, overregulation is also something that we want to be careful to avoid.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Seniors' Issues

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents have family members who live in long-term care facilities. They have concerns regarding the well-being of their parents across the province in regard to a variety of issues such as general safety and the quality of food being served. My question is to the Associate Minister of Seniors. What is being done to ensure that the quality of food in those facilities is being kept to a high standard?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's important in our continuing care facilities that food not only taste good but that it's nutritional and it provides variety and it is suited to the cultural and ethnic community. That's why we have what's called a provincial core menu program. It ensures consistent quality and standards in our food. That doesn't say that in our continuing care homes that staff aren't continually, you know, adjusting the menus and working with resident councils to make sure that the best possible food is offered in those homes.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister: given that elder abuse continues to be a sad reality for some seniors across the province, can you provide an update on what is being done to combat elder abuse in our province?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the issues that bothers me when I get calls. It's unfortunate that there are bottom-feeders out there that prey upon vulnerable people. You know, about 10 per cent of the seniors in the province have been hit with financial abuse, and that's why we've worked so hard within the department to have a train the trainers program. I think we've worked with over 500 care providers to make sure that they know what's available. But I want to tell everybody in the Assembly that if there's something like this going on that comes to your office, call the police.

Mr. Xiao: Again, to the same minister: given that a number of my constituents have issues regarding the accessibility of long-term care facilities for their parents, what is your office doing to ensure that spaces are available when they are needed?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that we have in the province is the increased capacity. You know, every 15 minutes someone turns 65 in this province, so 470,000 seniors today, and in about 20 to 25 years we're going to have double that population. This government recognizes the need to continue to build more seniors' homes. This is why we've announced another thousand in construction this year, and that's why we've opened a thousand new units in facilities across this province.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for question period. Just a couple of quick points I'd like to mention. First of all, there were a number of side conversations today. Obviously, you've all missed each other this last week, but sometimes they get a little overbearing. Nobody minds a little bit of private whispering, but keep it to a whisper. I can almost make out some of the conversations over on this side of the House, for example, so let's keep them down.

Number two, when you're using notes to speak, whether it's in question period or elsewhere, please don't put them between your speaking apparatus and the microphone because it muffles it, and people don't get good, clear sound as a result.

Number three, I want to compliment Red Deer-North. Well demonstrated. No preamble whatsoever to her supplementary questions.

Number four, clearly, you haven't missed me as much as I've missed you because I set a new record today: only five notes from you to the Speaker. That has never happened in this Assembly ever. Only five notes from members to the Speaker. So thank you for that. It made my concentration a little better.

In a moment here I will continue with Members' Statements, starting with Cypress-Medicine Hat in 20 seconds.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us begin then, please, with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to release A Better Way to Build Alberta, a report following a seven-day, 7,000-kilometre, province-wide tour to consult with Albertans about infrastructure. This document comes as a result of talking with hundreds of Albertans about their infrastructure priorities and how infrastructure decisions are made.

From industry stakeholders to city and town planners to municipal leaders and local residents in coffee shops, Albertans know there is a better way to build Alberta than the way it is being done now. When this government begins or completes a project, they hold a press conference, stage a photo op, install billboards, or even reannounce the same thing several times. Meanwhile, critical infrastructure priorities remain unaddressed and are not on a three-year plan or have been yanked off the list with no explanation given. The result is confusion and frustration. Albertans want to know when their priorities will be completed. They want to get the politics out of infrastructure decisions.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I'm proud to release A Better Way to Build Alberta. This document offers 10 common-sense solutions to accomplish what Albertans want to see when it comes to infrastructure decisions. Albertans want the government to plan for the future, and this includes conducting cost-benefit analyses so economic priorities are addressed. Currently Alberta spends 80 per cent more per capita than Ontario and western provinces on infrastructure. The Wildrose debt-free capital plan proposes to bring this down to 15 per cent more than the average, which would be a significant improvement for long-term sustainability. Albertans want to see an infrastructure priority list based on objective criteria so they know when their priorities will be completed.

I would like to take this opportunity to offer a heartfelt thank you to all the people I met while touring the province. With the help and support of so many great people I have great optimism for the future of our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Sherwood Park.

National Bullying Awareness Week

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize November 17 to 23 as National Bullying Awareness Week. This is a time that brings communities together to stand up against bullying and to encourage kindness, respect, and inclusion in our province. I commend all members of this Assembly who are wearing the bully-free wristbands today as a display of unity and leadership in preventing bullying.

As a number of activities and events are taking place across Alberta in honour of this week, this morning Albertans joined the hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety and special guest panelists in an interactive, live webcast. They learned more about how to stop bullying and promote healthy, respectful relationships in communities, schools, and workplaces. Bullying is a societal issue with terrible consequences. Far too many lives have been affected by it. It hurts our friends, our colleagues, and our families. Eliminating bullying will not be an easy task. No one person, group, or government can do it alone. It will take all Albertans becoming informed, getting involved, and taking responsibility.

I encourage Albertans to visit bullyfreealberta.ca and b-free.ca to learn how to make a difference in their community. If you or someone you know is being bullied, please call Alberta's toll-free bullying helpline at 1.888.456.2323. You can get assistance 24 hours a day and in more than 170 different languages. Together let's create a province where bullying is not tolerated in any circumstance. Let's ensure that all Albertans are safe, respected, and included in our schools and communities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Community Development

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the pleasure of reconnecting with many of my former colleagues in municipal government from across this province at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties fall convention. Today I would like to extend a special tribute to the men and women from all walks of life who put their names forward to serve their communities. As everyone in this Chamber knows, it takes courage to stand before your communities and neighbours to run for public office, to develop consensus on how to make your communities better, build roads, attract development, create jobs, provide recreation opportunities, and make your communities a fine place to live, work, and raise a family.

Communities don't just happen. People settle in an area for a reason. They find employment or invest in a business. They build or buy a home. They get together with others in their community to plan for the services and facilities and how to fund them. New infrastructure such as highways and overpasses, new facilities such as community centres or transit terminals, and new commercial and residential growth depend on the vision and consensus-building skills of elected officials. It may take years for an infrastructure project to make its way up the list of priorities from all over the province, survive financial scrutiny, be budgeted for, designed, and built. Major facilities such as community centres or transit may be subjected to years of public consultation and reassessment until a majority of council is convinced to build them and has the confidence to allocate the funding.

Further, attracting industry requires visionary councils to put in place the services, zoning, and other factors important to industrial success. Facilities such as libraries, schools, museums, recreation facilities, roads, and bridges are built on decisions of elected officials.

So for all these reasons, I salute all of those who stand forward, who make the plans and create the conditions for their communities to not only survive but to thrive. Together we must continue to build Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

2:50 Pacific NorthWest Economic Region

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Alberta hosted meetings with some of our closest trading partners. With GDP in the trillions and more than 10 million people this group shares our challenges and recognizes collective opportunities. Whom am I talking about? The Pacific NorthWest Economic Region, or PNWER, our province's partners in the American states of Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington and the western Canadian jurisdictions of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, the Northwest Territories, and Yukon. We share some common challenges in this region, including how to get landlocked commodities to tidewater and growing markets: potash from Saskatchewan, wind power and coal from Montana, bitumen from Alberta, and, of course, natural gas from western Canada.

This past week PNWER met in Banff, where I had the privilege of co-chairing a panel on market access. We brought together legislators from across North America and connected them to industry leaders to face these challenges together. We had frank, open discussions on the realities of all of our experiences getting commodities to markets. We shared best practices and identified opportunities for collaboration.

This wasn't just an academic exercise; PNWER is about action. We had framed these issues in July, progressed them last week, and now we've agreed to move forward, talking about how complex decision-making and regulatory processes can be improved in the region. We're committed to talking openly about how we access transportation and port facilities across jurisdictions and across commodities. PNWER members are uniquely positioned to access growing markets.

We may not be assuming the same physical risks taken by Lewis and Clark, Yellowhead, and David Thompson when they opened up new frontiers centuries ago, but the pioneering spirit may well be quite the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Transgender Community Victims of Violence

Mr. Hehr: November 20 is the day of remembrance for transgendered individuals, where we remember the victims of hate-based violence and suicides brought on by discrimination. Despite much progress this group of people still remain largely misunderstood, isolated, and vulnerable. Imagine waking up and having to decide whether to express yourself, risking harassment and often violence, or hiding who you are. Think of your faith, your family, your language, or other qualities that are central to you, which you cannot change. Imagine having to hide these qualities or risk assault. This is the reality faced by our transgendered community.

These are individuals who are born as one gender and whose brain functions in a way that tells them that they are another gender, and they want to express who they are. It seems so simple, yet statistics on what this community goes through are astounding. Egale Canada found that 49 per cent of trans students reported being sexually harassed; 25 per cent reported being physically assaulted. Another shocking statistic: 43 per cent of trans individuals have attempted suicide.

There is a solution. The key to tolerance is understanding, and the key to understanding is education. We need to make things better today for our transgendered community and our larger LGBTQ community. One way to do this is to follow the lead of other jurisdictions, making mandatory gay-straight alliances in our schools where students desire their establishment. The evidence is clear that when these are established, students feel safer and bullying is reduced. Further, the government must do more than simply march in pride parades. It must get rid of section 11 in Bill 44, which, in my view, is a slap in the face to our LGBTQ community.

On Wednesday let us stop and remember those that we have lost, but then for the next 364 days we must work to protect and support this community. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item of business, might we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hearing no opposition, the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from Lloydminster who have braved the roads to come here today. Bonita Brick is the chair of the Lloydminster action on youth tobacco reduction. She's here from the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster, so no doubt we know who she'll be cheering for this coming Sunday. [interjections] Sorry, Calgary fans, but you got your butts kicked.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'm also very pleased today to introduce Jianna Marin. Jianna is a grade 12 Lloydminster comprehensive high school student. Jianna has been working very hard for the last couple of years as the chair of the Lloyd Flavour . . . Gone campaign and has a particular interest in Bill 206 because it was largely the actions of her and her committee, bringing this to the attention of the Associate Minister of Wellness and myself, that brought Bill 206 to fruition and, we hope, to a successful conclusion today. In addition, Jianna was a participant in the MLA for a Day program and certainly enjoyed that. On Thursday she along with Lloyd Flavour . . . Gone will be awarded one of the Barb Tarbox awards for tobacco reduction in Alberta.

I'd like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy House Leader, Minister of Justice, you were signalling that you might want to seek unanimous consent under SO 7(7) to proceed beyond 3 o'clock. Did you wish to ask that?

Mr. Denis: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that you've taken the words right out of my mouth. I would so move.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, given the day's events did you still wish to proceed with your notice?

Mr. Eggen: Well, considering how we managed to get some funding for the Philippines relief – I think we were certainly concerned about this, and we did not appreciate the sort of long delay. A lot of the Filipino community members from all across the province were . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, do I take it, then, that you wish not to proceed with giving notice at this time? It's just a simple yes or no.

Mr. Eggen: Well, considering all of those things, yes, Mr. Speaker, we will withdraw. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of written responses to questions raised during the March 20, 2013, main estimates debate for Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I would like to table five copies of the report of the office of the Chief Electoral Officer titled 2012 Annual Report of the Chief Electoral Officer. The report will be distributed to all members today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of Syncrude Canada's aboriginal review for 2013 entitled Pathways. Syncrude is proud to say that over 9 per cent of their employment base is aboriginal. They have also been nationally recognized and awarded for many years as a leader in aboriginal employment. Syncrude strongly believes that community involvement and diversity are strong reasons for their successes over the years. They work closely with aboriginal business owners within the Wood Buffalo community to identify further opportunities. It's my pleasure to share copies of this report with the Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I understand you have four tablings.

Mr. Anglin: Three tablings.

The Speaker: Three? Please proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table three years of Environment Canada's national pollution release inventory system of the contaminants in the Obed coal mine.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is Egale's final report on homophobia, biphobia, and transphobia in Canadian schools. It goes through the issue in great detail and actually recommends gay-straight alliances in all our schools.

The next is Trans Pulse, which goes through some of the statistics of the horrible nature of discrimination that our transgendered population faces.

The last is a letter from Kristen Read from Calgary, outlining the challenges facing people with developmental disabilities in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table 100 handwritten letters my office received expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education that are happening in Alberta. A feeling of confusion, frustration, and hopelessness is reflected in over 1,000 letters my office has received from concerned staff and students at the University of Alberta. These letters call on this PC government to reverse their harmful cuts to postsecondary education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

I have a tabling. Pursuant to section 28(1) of the Ombudsman Act I would like to table with the Assembly the requisite number of copies of the annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for Alberta for the period from April 1, 2012, through to March 31, 2013.

Thank you.

Hon. members, we don't have any points of order, which is wonderful. Thank you for that.

Speaker's Ruling Private Members' Public Bills

The Speaker: We're going to proceed onward with Orders of the Day, but before we do that, I would like to make a brief comment, if I might, hon. members. During Tabling Returns and Reports on our last sitting day, which I believe was around November 7 if memory serves me correctly, right before the constituency week break, I tabled in the House a letter from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, in which she requested that her Bill 206 proceed directly to third reading today, once it has completed consideration in Committee of the Whole. As I noted on that day, this request is actually hypothetical at this point since there are still 68 minutes remaining for consideration of Bill 206 at the committee stage.

I also noted that in my view as your chair I have a concern about this matter. I indicated that "in order for this bill to proceed to third reading [today], I would suggest that unanimous consent of the House be required so as to not unduly prejudice other members in the progress of their private members' bills." Your chair fully acknowledges that there have been a number of occasions when private members' bills have proceeded from Committee of the Whole to third reading on the same day. In some instances there were requests from the bill's sponsor for early consideration. In other cases unanimous consent of the House was requested, and in fact it was received.

Hon. members, I have taken some considerable time to review the precedents of this Assembly as well as rulings of previous Speakers on this topic. Suffice it to say that the matter of requesting early consideration has been an issue that both I as your current Speaker and my immediate predecessor have repeatedly requested House leaders' attention to and review of with respect to procedural policy. The specific question to the House leaders would be for them to please review whether or not they can put in place a procedural policy that is equitable for all matters should the issue of early consideration for a private member's bill arise again.

I would like to cite from a November 27, 2001, ruling from Speaker Kowalski, at page 1285 of Hansard, where he commented on a similar situation where a request for early consideration of a bill at third reading was submitted before the bill had actually reached that stage.

Taken to the extreme, this practice could jeopardize the legitimacy of the draw by considering one member's bill early by virtue of one request, thereby prejudicing other members.

Your chair is concerned that these requests may unfairly delay the ability of other members to bring forward their bills for consideration by the Assembly, and in this case, this would have the result of Bill 206 taking precedence over other bills for two consecutive weeks. In the absence of any House leaders' agreement or understanding on this subject, it is my view that requests for early consideration of a private member's bill should not be submitted until the bill has actually reached the stage for which early consideration is being sought.

Now, this has not been referenced before, so I am referencing it for you from my point of view for the first time. For instance, a request for early consideration at the committee stage should not be made until the bill in question has actually passed second reading because we cannot foretell what the House may do at any given stage of any particular bill, much less whether there would be amendments and the like to be considered. If we were to follow something more rigid, shall we say, this would avoid scenarios such as what we have before us today with the request for Bill 206.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize that my ruling on this today does not mean that Bill 206 is prohibited from proceeding to third reading this afternoon. That will be up to you to decide. Rather, it simply means that consent of the House is required for this to occur. That's what I mean by it being up to you. In the chair's view this process will be much more fair for all private members and will leave any decision about early consideration for third reading up to the Assembly itself. That being said, I would anticipate that the Member for Calgary-Currie may wish to exercise her right to ask for early consideration when the appropriate time comes up – that would be after the Committee of the Whole stage, assuming there is success at that stage, of course – or someone else on her behalf. Thereafter, perhaps we could ask the House leaders to do as I've requested earlier in my comment.

Thank you very much for your attention to that.

Orders of the Day Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

3:10

Bill 206
Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products)
Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: I understand that we are on amendment A1 and we also have 68 minutes left in Committee of the Whole. This amendment to Bill 206 was made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and I think you all have a copy with you.

Are there any comments, questions, or other amendments offered on this bill?

Mrs. Forsyth: Madam Chair, I'm pleased to stand up and speak to Bill 206. I wonder if you could just read into the record the amendment, as I don't have a copy of it in front of me, before I speak.

The Deputy Chair: I can read into the record the amendment.

- A The title of the Bill is amended by striking out "2012" and substituting "2013".
- B Section 2 is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - 2 The following is added after section 7.3:
Sale of flavoured tobacco products prohibited
  - 7.4(1) In this section, "flavoured tobacco product" means a tobacco product that
    - (a) has a characterizing flavour,
    - (b) is represented as being flavoured, or
    - (c) is designated under the regulations as a flavoured tobacco product.
  - (2) No person shall sell or offer for sale a flavoured tobacco product.
- C Section 4 is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - 4 Section 9(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (d):
    - (d.1) designating a tobacco product as a flavoured tobacco product;
    - (d.2) respecting the exemption of a flavoured tobacco product from the prohibition in section 7.4(2).

Are there any comments, questions to this amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand up and speak in support, actually, of Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012. I have spoken in this House before, from the time when I was minister of children's services, about the importance of protecting our youth in regard to tobacco. When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark brought his bill forward in regard to smoking in cars, I also supported that bill. I am wanting to tell the member that I will be supporting it, and I know that I'm going to be speaking in response to the amendment. There were just some questions, and I'm hoping that she can answer them as we go through the bill.

I guess one of the things that is bothering me are some of the things that she is incorporating in the regulations as far as the tobacco flavours, et cetera. I would like to get some answers from her on how that regulation is going to be enforced and what exactly is going to go into the regulations.

The other thing that I wanted to talk to her about is under her preamble when she talks about: "Whereas other jurisdictions have recognized the need to restrict the sale of certain tobacco products that are designed to attract young persons." And it goes on about the consumption: "Whereas there is a need in Alberta to curb consumption of tobacco products among youth by restricting the sale of flavoured tobacco." I have not heard anything on the floor while I've been listening in regard to what she's talking about when she says "certain tobacco products," so I'm hoping that at some time during debate in Committee of the Whole – I believe you said that we have about 68 minutes left – she will rise and speak to that.

My last comment, and it alludes to what the Speaker said about the unanimous consent that I imagine the hon. member is going to be asking for after the debate of the committee. The comment that I want to make there is that if this bill is so important to the government, why don't they take the bill and put it into a government bill, similar to what they did for the organ donation bill from the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, where they've taken a private member's bill and had it turned immediately into a government bill in a very short period of time?

I hearken back to when I was a new member in this House, and I had brought forward my private member's bill, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. One week it was a private member's bill, and then a couple of weeks after, it became a number one government bill. I know that the government can do this, so I guess, for me, it's wondering exactly why the government isn't taking this private member's bill and putting it into a government bill.

If the member could answer these questions. I certainly would love to give her my full support on this particular private member's bill but would like a couple of answers.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

We have an additional speaker, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: I'd like to put forward a subamendment to amendment A1, please.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We have a subamendment. We'll pause for a moment while the copies of the amendment are passed out to the Assembly.

Hon. member, I think that we can proceed. This will be known as SA2.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. The purpose of this amendment – well, I'll just go through the technicality of it. It's simply striking out the word "or" and substituting the word "and." I'd be interested in hearing what the mover of this piece of legislation has to say in this regard. A bill of this kind should not indiscriminately capture products. The use of the word "and" rather than "or" would require the government to look at each individual product on the market and determine whether each has a characterizing flavour that causes the product to have a significant use among youth before taking it off the market.

We, obviously, want to see in this province a reduction in the use of tobacco products by youth, but in this instance I feel this particular amendment is still overreaching. There should be a requirement before taking a product off the market that, you know, responsible adults have the ability to use and consume. Before taking it off the market, there should be a determination on whether or not that particular product has a characterizing flavour that would cause the product to have a significant use among youth.

For example, the government may want to ban cherry small cigars but not cherry pipe tobacco. In those circumstances there may not be empirical evidence that shows that cherry pipe tobacco is used by youth. In fact, it may be used by adults who can responsibly use that product. What this amendment would do would be to ensure that the government would make that analysis before taking the product off the market.

Bill 206 as currently drafted does not allow for this discrimination between products. Passing this proposed amendment will help to prevent the unintended consequences of large numbers of products that adult consumers choose being taken off the market and entering the underground, contraband market. In this province adults have the ability to use and consume products responsibly.

We understand that the mover of this bill intends to reduce the amount of tobacco use among youth, particularly combined with Bill 33, which is in second reading right now. But I feel that this amendment will make the government look on a case-by-case basis, when you look at a product, to ensure that that characterizing flavour is in fact causing youth to consume that product. If it's not, then it shouldn't be taken off the market if that's the aim of this piece of legislation. I'd be interested in hearing whether or not the member opposite would be interested in accepting this amendment to change the word "or" to "and" and have the three-part test in that subamendment section.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members interested in speaking to subamendment SA2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd also like to stand and add my support to this amendment. I think it is appropriate. It adds expansion. It's more inclusive than the other statement, and if there's anything we can do to reduce the use of flavoured and substitutes for tobacco in any of its forms, anything we can do to reduce the uptake of tobacco by children or adults, I think we should be doing it. I think this is a positive step forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to subamendment SA2? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Sometimes we criticize the government for putting forward a piece of legislation or amendments without having enough time to review them. I understand that making a change like this needs a little bit of time. I'm not sure whether or not the hon. Justice minister may be considering accepting this recommendation or reviewing the legislation to see if there's a possibility that this specific amendment could be passed, but obviously, when we put forward amendments like this, it'd be nice to see the government's position on the record of why they would support an amendment or not support an amendment. I think that's done in most Legislatures. We'd hope that these members, obviously, know their legislation inside out and so would have a reason to not accept an amendment or perhaps a reason to accept it.

Madam Chair, again, what this amendment does is ensure that the government requires on an individual product basis that that characterizing flavour must in fact influence the youth to consume harmful tobacco products. Again, I give the example of cherry small cigars. There's probably evidence that the youth disproportionately use that type of product, and in that circumstance the test would be met, that the characterizing flavour, in that case cherry, would cause the product to have a significant use among youth. However, for cherry pipe tobacco there's a possibility that adults are the ones that are using pipes. I've read some studies where, you know, we don't often see 14-year-olds using pipes. I'm not saying that it doesn't happen, but I don't think it would in that case be a significant use. That characterizing flavour wouldn't cause a significant use among the youth.

In these circumstances, Madam Chair, I believe that this amendment strengthens the legislation with respect to not inhibiting individual liberty or personal freedom while at the same time going to the intended consequences, which is reduced consumption of tobacco products among youth. If a characterizing flavour, as it's defined in the legislation, does not in fact impact youth, then responsible adults should have the ability to consume those legal products. Of course, if it does influence the youth, then the minister, when they look at the different tobacco products, can then at that point make that determination. This is an amendment that would actually require the government to look at empirical evidence when determining which product to take off the market.

Madam Chair, I just ask again. This is a change of one word in a subamendment section in what has been heralded as a very important piece of legislation. If it's an important piece of legislation and an important subsection, it would be nice to hear from the government on why they would be accepting it or not accepting it. It would be nice to see what the government's position is on this particular amendment. Of course, this is a subamendment to the hon. member's amendment, and we had hoped to see what their position is.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Chair. With respect, to the member, we're just having some difficulty – and I've consulted with two different attorneys here – and we're trying to find exactly where it is that you're referring to. Is there an issue with the draft of the subamendment? I'm not sure.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah. What would this amendment do? You had made an amendment that had a three-part test, one where (a) there has to be a characterizing flavour, and then if you look at the third part of the test, it required that the product actually have a significant impact among youth. What this does is just require each and every level, (a), (b), and (c), to be met before a product is taken off the market. Right now it's either (a) or (b) or (c). This amendment would require all three aspects of that test to be met before taking the product off the market.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak, make comments, or ask questions on SA2? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of this amendment, and I do so to give the hon. member an opportunity to do a little work here because we really would like an answer. It is a very simple amendment, striking out "or" and substituting "and," making this test apply to all three parts, as the member has said. Basically, all we're asking for here is: what is the significant difference by making this requirement and the changes that this amendment actually brings forward, in effect? By doing so, it's an interesting amendment to improve the bill.

What I would like to hear from particularly are the two counsels that have provided their legal advice, and hopefully they would tell this honourable Assembly the points of that legal advice and exactly how this is going to apply and why this amendment either should or should not come forward and be approved.

With that, I will hopefully hear from the two legal counsels that provided that fantastic advice for the hon. member. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Health on subamendment SA2.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward the amendment, and in general the support of members, I think, on all sides of the House for the intent of Bill 206 is appreciated.

With respect to the subamendment that's proposed, I would not be able to support the subamendment, Madam Chair, for the simple reason that the premise of the entire bill is based on an overwhelming body of evidence that all flavoured tobacco, in fact, functions as a gateway for youth to, sadly, in many cases become lifelong smokers. So the bill and the particular amendment that this subamendment would clarify is designed, first of all, to recognize that evidence, to provide a ban on the sale of flavoured tobacco overall, and then within regulation to provide the ability for specific products to be exempt.

What I would say, recognizing the spirit in which the subamendment is put forward, is that the bill as it is originally proposed provides a means that if for some reason there was evidence that was identified with respect to some specific flavoured tobacco product that it did not have necessarily the same effect on a scientific or an evidentiary basis in attracting someone to become a lifelong smoker, there is certainly ability within the bill as it is proposed to exempt specific products which fall under the general label of flavoured tobacco.

Madam Chair, you know, again, to the main point for which I believe most people on my side of the House would not be able to concur with the subamendment is that it would provide a loophole that we're currently trying to close, and that loophole is the ability for manufacturers to market products in very new and innovative ways on a recurring basis. We're presuming that they would attempt to continue to do that. They are in a business. They are in a legitimate business. They're certainly allowed to market their product as they see fit, and we would expect them to continue to try to entice consumers, particularly young consumers, to buy these products.

As I say, the overwhelming evidence is that flavoured tobacco in general is a major factor in attracting children and youth to begin smoking. That's the premise of the bill, and to accept this subamendment would be to support something that's inconsistent with the premise as set out.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. That was a very thorough answer. Perhaps he should be their legal counsel instead of the other two.

Just with respect to the subamendment – and I understand where the hon. member is coming from. He is quite right that under the existing legislation Bill 206 would provide the minister the ability to exempt a product by regulation in a kind of reverse onus scenario. I guess that on the basic premise, though, that a characterizing flavour automatically leads to increased use of tobacco products by youth, I'm not sure whether the empirical evidence does in fact demonstrate that, and I gave a couple of examples. One of the other aspects is whether that is, in fact, the intent of the legislation. My understanding is that menthol is not currently prohibited under Bill 206.

Again, I feel that we should err on the side of personal liberty and freedom, and if there is no evidence that a particular product is aimed at youth, then it should not be taken off the market. Responsible adults should be able to consume tobacco products that have characterizing flavours. If we go too far down this line, where do we stop? Do we ban flavoured alcohol because flavoured alcohol is targeted towards youth? Do we ban coloured firearms because they're targeted towards youth? Do we ban, you know, high-sugar pop because we feel that's impacting youth in a bad way? We have to in this province ensure that responsible adults can responsibly use products and not have government overreach on those types of products.

I'm sure I understand what the government's position is here, and it looks like I know how this is going to go. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to comment on subamendment SA2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment A1-SA2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to amendment A1 as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Are there any other comments or questions on amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Now we're back to Bill 206 in Committee of the Whole. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 206 in Committee of the Whole here. I think, first of all, a bill such as this one is long overdue, and it will be supported by myself and the NDP caucus in an effort to place more restrictions on flavoured tobacco products but especially to discourage young people from using these types of products.

I think, you know, what we would like to see is not only the bill as it's currently written but even stricter legislation or bans on some of these products, which are specifically designed by tobacco companies to target young people. We see that in the form of not only the products themselves but also the packaging and the marketing that goes with it. Unfortunately, this bill as it's currently written doesn't address how these tobacco companies are targeting youth and trying to get them to use their products and getting them addicted. One of the ways they do that, Madam Chair, is by the sale of individual flavoured tobacco products. Obviously, as opposed to having to purchase a package, they're much cheaper; therefore, it's much easier for young people to get their hands on these individual products, which is of grave concern to us.

Madam Chair, obviously, restricting the sale of flavoured cigarette products to youth is a very good decision and a step in the right direction. But, again, on some of the issues like the packaging and the targeting, which I would consider are some of the underlying issues, this bill doesn't go far enough to protect our vulnerable youth from tobacco companies' profit-driven strategies. Something that should be noted is that menthol is used by about a third of young smokers, but it may not be regulated in this bill, therefore again not going far enough to protect our youth and young people.

I just want to make mention, Madam Chair, that it's worth noting that nine provinces currently have legislation to curb tobacco sales to minors, and Alberta is the only remaining province without such legislation. You know, in some ways, I guess, it's nice to see that the government of Alberta is finally catching up to the rest of Canada. What's interesting to note is that British Columbia has actually achieved a merchant compliance rate of about 94 per cent through comprehensive provincial regulation of tobacco sales to minors, again going to show that there is absolutely a role for the government to play in curbing the use and discouraging young people from using flavoured tobacco products.

Madam Chair, we do and we will support this legislation. As I've said, this is a step in the right direction. I do wonder and ask the question: if this bill is of such importance to the government, why haven't they taken this bill from the private member and taken it on as a government bill to send that strong message that this is a priority for the government?

As I've said, Madam Chair, I wish that this bill would have gone a little bit further. There are still some questions that we have, but it's definitely a step in the right direction and a necessity that Alberta is finally catching up to our sister and brother provinces in the country.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any more members who wish to comment on Bill 206? The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to again thank the last speaker for his support of this bill. I will attempt to answer a couple of the questions that have been raised by members opposite thus far in the debate in Committee of the Whole. The first question was raised, I believe, by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, about the enforcement mechanisms that will be available should this bill be passed. I'm pleased to report that this bill, if passed, would have the same enforcement provisions as the Tobacco Reduction Act currently in force in Alberta. Under that act, within the Provincial Offences Procedure Act to which that bill refers, any peace officer in Alberta is automatically an inspector for the purposes of the Tobacco Reduction Act. In other words, for anyone who under the Tobacco Reduction Act is identified as an inspector for purposes of enforcement, those enforcement provisions will also apply to this bill should it be passed by the House.

In addition to that, Madam Chair, the Department of Health would have the ability to make use of inspectors appointed or designated by the minister under the tobacco reduction regulation to enforce the legislation, and that's specifically section 6 of the regulation. These inspectors, in fact, do not have to be peace officers as identified under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act which I referred to earlier. As an example, inspectors in other areas such as the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission could potentially serve as inspectors for the purposes of this legislation. Equally, the government would be free to arrive at arrangements with municipalities, perhaps through bylaw enforcement officers who could also function as inspectors for the purposes of this act.

These opportunities, Madam Chair, are not restricted to the provisions under this particular bill. These provisions, in fact, as I said, currently exist under the Tobacco Reduction Act and can be applied to any provision under that act, whether we're talking about the use of flavoured tobacco among youth, whether we're talking about children in vehicles where smoking is occurring, and so on. There is quite a wide range of options that are available and, actually, many points in the community generally where inspectors can be aware, can be vigilant, and can in fact enforce the legislation.

The second question that I wanted to respond to was posed by two members opposite, and that is: why was this particular bill not adopted as part of Bill 33, which has currently received first reading in the House, which is a bill that contains broader provisions, additional provisions to protect children and youth against tobacco use and the use of tobacco-like products? The reason for that is procedural, Madam Chair. I'll leave it to other more learned members to quote specific sections, but I can tell you from my own research that it would not be in order in the House to have a bill, albeit a private member's bill, on the Order Paper at the same time as another bill with the same substantive content. For that reason, we were not in a position to discuss with the various sponsors of this bill the opportunity to include it as part of a government bill.

Bill 207, to which some of the other members referred, was in quite a separate situation. There was no other bill, government or otherwise, on the Order Paper that contained substantive content similar to that which was provided in Bill 207, so there was a very good opportunity both procedurally and otherwise for the government to adopt Bill 207 as a government bill. We're only limited to doing that in this case because of the procedural rules in the Legislative Assembly.

I'll just conclude by pointing out, though, and I think it's very gratifying to observe, that this is the second situation in the same few months where we have had recognition of very, very good, very high-quality pieces of legislation put forward by private members that have been noted to be well supported on all sides of the House and in the opinion of many members to be worthy of being, in fact, government legislation. So I am pleased about that. But in this particular case, the rules don't allow us to do that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the minister getting up and answering some of the questions that I and a couple of other colleagues brought up. Under the Tobacco Reduction Act he talks about the enforcement provisions that apply, so can he please tell me how many charges were made under that act in regard to smoking and things that were done illegally, charges under the Tobacco Reduction Act? Now, I know that under the Canada Health Act, I think, or under the Criminal Code there was some confusion on why the government is bringing forward this government bill, which we refer to as Bill 33.

He also mentioned that under the tobacco reduction regulations it doesn't necessarily have to be a peace officer. It could be a bylaw enforcement or an Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission agent. I guess, for me, I'm wondering if they're going to be hiring more people under the AGLC because from the knowledge that I've gathered, the officers are busy trying to attack organized crime, money laundering, all that sort of stuff, that obviously has a much higher priority when we see some of that going on within the casinos, things where they've been trying to attack organized crime and some of the gang activity and money laundering.

The last thing I want to ask is about the procedural rules that he talked about in regard to taking a private member's bill, which is the hon. member's bill, and putting it into a government bill. I believe we have a private member's bill, Bill 206, and we have a government bill, which is Bill 33, and there are some procedural rules. So when the government was putting Bill 33 together, the government bill, why didn't they incorporate what was in the private member's bill into the government bill so we could talk about one major piece of legislation?

As I explained earlier, I am going to be supporting Bill 206. I'm just trying to understand why we're spending an incredible amount of time on a private member's bill, debating Bill 206, when what was in Bill 33 and what the member is bringing forward under her private member's bill could have been incorporated into a government bill, and we could proceed on private members' day with other private members' bills.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you. To the hon. member's point, at the risk of spending an inordinate period of time on discussing matters other than the bill at hand, I'll say two things. One is that I don't know offhand, Madam Chair, the number of charges that have occurred under the Tobacco Reduction Act. I'm talking here about legislation that is already proclaimed and enforced and has various provisions, including the prohibition on smoking in public places, among other things. Certainly, I can try to get that information.

We start from the position that, in fact, most people want to obey the law. My understanding is that both this bill and Bill 33, which is currently before the House, are the result of an update of the tobacco reduction strategy, that the government released last year, but also a result from long-standing leadership from many advocates in the community, including some municipalities who prior to provincial legislation enforced bans on smoking in public places through municipal law. So this is very much a situation, Madam Chair, where we are recognizing the fact that Albertans are looking for this sort of leadership through legislation. They are a hundred per cent behind this government, in particular our efforts to reduce smoking among children and youth, including the smoking of tobacco-like products. We are doing our best in all legislation to reflect the will of the people in bringing our legislative framework up to date.

As to the matter of, you know, the consolidation or nonconsolidation of Bill 206 and Bill 33 all I can say to the hon. member is that Bill 206 has been on the Order Paper for some time in this House, including preceding the current session. It was originally sponsored by a private member who is today the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Other sponsors of this bill on this side of the House are known to other members. But the bill has been on the Order Paper for some time. So, Madam Chair, the advice to us from counsel, under the rules of procedure that we observe here in the Legislative Assembly, is that we are not permitted to have before the Assembly two bills which contain the same substantive content.

I should think, by the number of people that are standing in support of this both on the government side and the other side, that should in no way suggest to anyone, Madam Chair, that there is nothing but very, very strong support for the provisions of Bill 206. Assuming it is passed by the Legislative Assembly, it will form a very integral role in our legislative framework to deal with the use of tobacco and tobacco-like products in the province, and I think Albertans will be very well served by that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a great pleasure for me to speak on this bill, that I originally introduced into first reading last December. I'd just like to make a couple of comments that I think are very important. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek made some commentary with regard to the length of time that is being spent on this bill and that we could have perhaps saved time had it been incorporated into the main government legislation. I'm hoping that I'm misinterpreting her comments. I certainly hope that she's not suggesting that somehow we are wasting time by debating private members' legislation in this House. I think that Bill 206 has as much right to be discussed as any other private members' legislation, and as a result I'm pleased to be able to stand up and advocate on its behalf even though I'm no longer the sponsor of the bill.

I do want to give hon. members, though, a little bit of the history of this bill because I do think it's germane not just to our discussion as to how this bill came to be but also to address something that I think is important to all of us, and that is involving youth in the parliamentary and democratic process. Indeed, this bill came about as a result of a group of young people in Lloydminster, high school students, who got together and said that on behalf of their colleagues and on behalf of their peers they wanted government to take action and, in fact, to protect the youth of our province against the pervasive activities and marketing of tobacco companies.

It seems that each time a new regulation is introduced that restricts the tobacco industry, the tobacco industry comes up with new ways to go around or to avoid those regulations in order to put tobacco products in the hands of young people. I think that we can all agree that having increased tobacco usage by young people is something that we all want to avoid. This particular group, the Lloyd Flavour . . . Gone group, began a very effective postcard campaign in our community of Lloydminster – and it's a campaign that has spread province-wide – in which thousands and thousands of postcards have been signed by young people urging the Members of this Legislative Assembly to take action to protect Alberta's youth, and that is exactly what Bill 206 is intended to do.

I'll give you some examples of some of the sorts of things that go on. You know, until I became more familiar with this, I really had no idea just how pervasive and how damaging it is. As an example, flavoured tobacco products are in fact used as a gateway and as a lever to get tobacco into the hands and into the usage of our young people in many ways. One of the areas that I was very concerned to hear about is that it has actually, in fact, become a culture within the culture of midget hockey. Now, I'm also the minister responsible for recreation, so clearly I'm very interested in young people being involved in sporting activities. When I heard that in the city of Lloydminster the usage of what is called spit tobacco or chewing tobacco by 15-, 16-, and 17-year-olds who play midget hockey is over 50 per cent – over 50 per cent of the young folks that play midget hockey are users of chewing tobacco.

During the course of this particular campaign one of the people working on the campaign left a shoebox in the dressing room of the midget hockey team and said: when you're done your can of chewing tobacco, put it in this shoebox. Within one week 42 cans were collected, and of those 42 cans some 39 of them were flavoured tobacco. So you get an idea of just how pervasive this problem is. You get an idea that flavoured tobacco is very much the hook that is being placed, the bait that is being placed to lure our young people into tobacco usage and, in fact, then results in increased usage of tobacco as we move forward.

Madam Chair, I was very, very pleased to be able to choose this topic as the first private member's bill that I introduced in this House because to me it married two things that are very important to me. One is preventative health care, and working in the veterinary profession as I did throughout my career, I will tell you – and I've said this to my colleagues before, including the Minister of Health – that veterinarians have it all over doctors in terms of understanding about preventative health care. We'll work on bringing the medical profession forward to catch up to us, but they've got a big gap to make up.

I'm very interested in preventative health care as it applies to all areas, but to be truthful, the one single thing that we could do in society to improve our overall health care outcomes is to reduce tobacco usage. That is by far the single measure that would save money and improve our overall health system and improve overall results.

The second area that I'm very interested in, Madam Chair, is involving young people in the democratic process. When I was approached by this very active group, a group that will be recognized as having the best antitobacco-use initiative in the entire province and be awarded one of the Barb Tarbox awards on Thursday at a luncheon, you know, I was compelled to act, with the co-operation of my colleague the Associate Minister of Wellness. We worked together on the drafting of this bill.

I'm very proud of this piece of legislation. I'd certainly like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-South East, now the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for High River, and also the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who have taken up the sponsorship of this bill. Indeed, I'd like to think that we could have 87 sponsors of this bill because, truly, Madam Chair, I believe that we are all in favour of reducing tobacco usage amongst our youth and, in fact, are prepared to get behind the movement that was started in Lloydminster – and I'm very proud of that – to ban flavoured tobacco in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to get up and ask a couple of questions, as is the custom during this reading of the bill. I guess the first issue that I wanted to ask about was in regard to specific products that are being considered for a ban. I mean, I'm just not that familiar with tobacco products for sale in general, so I just wanted to have a sense and perhaps the public would like to have a sense of what products are actually going to be taken off the shelves after we pass this piece of legislation.

I just wanted to ask the question as well, in the spirit of better health for youth, as to why we don't spend more time and effort in having more specific punishments for those vendors who are selling tobacco illegally. You know, perhaps having licences revoked or a higher penalty would help to reduce tobacco sales to young people.

Section 3 of this bill makes the selling or offering of flavoured tobacco products banned under the regulations, subject to a penalty of not more than $10,000 for the first offence and not more than $100,000 for the second offence and subsequent offences. I'm just curious to know why the author of this part of the bill didn't include more stringent penalties for offering or selling to minors specifically.

Section 4 talks about prohibiting certain flavouring agents, candy- and fruit-flavoured agents. Everyone knows that they are deliberately targeting children or young people to buy these cigarettes with alternative packaging and so forth.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

However, you know, menthol cigarettes loom large in youth tobacco use, Mr. Chair. It seems that 1 in 25 adults who are smokers use menthol cigarettes, but 25 per cent of youth smokers are using menthol cigarettes. I know that menthol cigarettes serve a number of purposes to make smoking more palatable. They reduce the harshness of tobacco, and they act as a bronchodilator – is that what you call it? – which facilitates deeper absorption of the nicotine and deeper inhalation as well. I'm just wondering: why don't we go after menthol additives to cigarettes? It's my understanding that they, in fact, put menthol in lots of regular cigarettes, too, in a smaller dosage or to a smaller degree, thus making the negative effects even worse from deeper inhalation, reducing the harshness of tobacco, and with greater absorption of nicotine.

Again, my central issue around this bill is that I wished and hoped that we did include menthol into the whole package, and I'm wondering how come we didn't. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just in response to this member's questions – and I thank you very much for those questions – I'd like to address first off the idea about the actual product lines that will be targeted, shall we say. In this case here, as is outlined in the amendment, we see in section 7.4(1) that it is a flavoured tobacco – so it is outlined essentially in the amendment itself – that

- (a) has a characterizing flavour,
- (b) is represented as being flavoured, or
- (c) is designated under the regulations as a flavoured tobacco product.

As I've said many times before, once regulations are developed for the bill itself, this is where we're going to get into the specifics of products themselves. Menthol, for example, is one topic of great interest that, you know, has been the rise of much debate and interesting conversation. While we are not including it in the actual bill itself, we are also not excluding it. I want that point to be made very clear.

I think that once we see the regulations unfold, this is going to give us an opportunity for consultation and an appropriate level of debate that will address where we do sit. I think it has been mentioned that this is legislation that is taking things a step further than other pieces of legislation across the country. I think we can be very proud to be the carriers of and championing this issue, especially where it's concerning flavoured tobacco, which will inhibit people who are selling tobacco products from being able to include the flavoured piece, which we know is pretty much the gateway to opening up the issue of tobacco use amongst youth.

With respect to addressing the actual enforcement or sanctions with respect to the sale to minors, my answer to that would be that we'll have a more fulsome discussion of this when we look at Bill 33, which is going to more so encompass enforcement. It's going to address, I think, more in-depth and adeptly the notion of enforcement on sale to minors.

Once again, just to reiterate, Bill 206 itself is specifically targeted – and I think that’s what makes it such a powerful bill – at the notion of flavoured tobacco products, which, again, really classifies it as a bill where the intent very clearly is directed at protecting youth in our province.

Once again, thank you for the question.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’ve listened to a lot of the arguments, and the idea of reducing the use of tobacco, particularly with the young but with everyone, is actually a good thing for our health system. It’s probably a very good thing for the public at large. Now, I’ve never been a smoker, and I don’t understand some of the arguments that have been made. I question the statistics on flavouring, and I don’t know how they bear out. I’ve not seen that.

What I’m more interested in – hopefully, one of the members can comment on this – is that other provinces have instituted it. What are the results? Has it worked? That’s really the key. Do we know that it works? One of the things that happens is that with our best intentions we can create laws, but if it doesn’t really make the impact that we intended to make, then this debate that’s happening here today is not worth anything. The whole goal is to reduce the use of tobacco.

I understand that people have taste buds and that they go to whatever flavours they go to, but I’ve never known the level of flavouring and its implications on our youth, on whether or not they use tobacco. What I do know: there are a lot of sociological studies out there that say that young people trying to emulate adults have been influenced and have used tobacco as a result of that. I also know that there have been studies on movies that influence young people and on the introduction of cigarettes as far as the mature or the very cool aspect to entice, and that’s been subject to debate in the whole industry.

I do have concerns, and the concerns are: where do we go, and where do we stop? What we’re not addressing in the bill and we’re not going to address in the next bill is the real concern, which is the carcinogens, the tar, the nicotine, the addictive nature. We won’t touch that. I think it’s probably not universal, but if we were to make tobacco illegal altogether, we would only create a nice black market.

So how do we get our young to stop using tobacco? If the member has any data to point me to – in these other provinces do they have any reliable data to point to that says, “When we introduced this type of legislation, here is what we’ve seen, this is what has happened, and this is how effective or ineffective it has been”? I haven’t seen that. I’m hoping that somebody could provide that. In the end, I get concerned between doing what is best and then also doing what is more of a nanny-state type of legislation that will not have any effect whatsoever.

I question the whole idea of flavouring. Someone brought up the issue of flavouring alcohol. I would argue, without any data in front of me, that you could probably make a fairly substantive argument that alcohol has just as much of a health implication on our health system as does tobacco, but certainly in the case of domestic violence I would argue that alcohol probably has a far bigger implication and that we’d be a heck of a lot better off if we reduced the consumption of alcohol. But I don’t know how many young people are influenced by the flavour of alcohol any more than I know about how many are really influenced by the flavour of tobacco.

The question that I’m posing to any member is: of the provinces that have already implemented this legislation, is there any statistical data to back it up, to say that this is the reduction we’ve seen as a result of passing legislation that has removed flavouring? Does it exist? If it does, could you please point me to it, and I will definitely support this bill.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’d just offer a little bit of information to your questions. When we look across Canada, one thing, as I said before, we note is that some of the legislation has not allowed for other provinces to be successful in preventing the use of flavoured tobacco products because companies have found loopholes in order to get through. There’s a lot of comparison, which I find interesting, between the use of flavoured tobacco and flavoured alcohol. When you really come down to it, I mean, with the comparison of liquor and tobacco regulations we’re talking about apples and oranges.

An Hon. Member: Apple and orange flavouring.

Ms Cusanelli: Apple and orange flavouring.

I’m not sure why we continue to use this as a level of debate. When you come right down to, you know, “How do we control liquor here in Alberta?” there’s a very big difference, and we have made many, many steps for a long, long time in terms of making sure that we keep that product out of the hands of young people. In my view, we are really at the embryonic stage of being able to adopt legislation that is going to prevent tobacco from getting into the hands of youth.

To me, if we look at the liquor control act, we have an establishment control over retail sales, prohibiting it to minors. Retailers have to post mandatory signage. There’s an authority that oversees the licensing. There are retailers that have to obtain a licence. There are retail sales staff that have to be 18 years of age in order to sell the product. They have to complete mandatory training to authorize them to have a licence. The list goes on. We have all of these particular particularities with respect to legislation in our liquor control act, yet with tobacco, again, we are at the beginning stages of ensuring that our kids do not fall prey to these products.

When we look at the facts behind making sure that we prohibit the sale of tobacco products to our youth, we know – and, again, I’m going to use the words “gateway product” – that flavoured tobacco is a gateway product so that our kids have a way to, you know, mask the flavour. We know that it’s dangerous for us to be giving them something that’s very tempting because at this stage in the game they are curious. They want to try new things. The statistics are showing that 46,000 Alberta youth are using tobacco products. That’s 23 per cent of our youth. Now, more than half of them are using flavoured tobacco products. I guess the question, to me, isn’t so much: how has legislation across the country worked? By those very data results and statistics we can see that something very serious needs to be done and soon.

To me, when I look at the idea of offering something that’s very tempting to kids and that can be sold, is far more readily available than a liquor bottle of flavoured vodka per se, you know, we haven’t done enough. Bill 206 is taking this to those very beginning stages where we really do need to head in terms of tobacco legislation. We think about the costs just in Alberta alone, $1.8 billion. Now, those are statistics from 2002, which is a while back. You can only imagine. Hopefully, the things that we have put in place legislationwise, educationwise have made an impact. We know that it has decreased the levels of children who are smoking, which is great, but that $1.8 billion in 2002 is essentially the cost to Alberta that is more than alcohol and illicit drug use combined. That number, we can see, is a very big problem to our province.

Madam Chair, I guess I would conclude my response to the hon. member with that and once again just say, you know, that this isn't a bill about restricting people's rights. This is a bill about adults in this province taking the responsibility, our fiduciary duty to our kids, to ensure that we do not some things that are possible but everything that is possible in order to keep a product away. Probably 50 per cent of them or more will fall prey to some kind of a health problem as a result of using the product, that has directions on how to use it. That's completely absurd. So why do we continue in this day and age to think that we ought to be looking at my own personal right as an adult to smoke a menthol cigarette versus making sure that it does not fall in the hands of my daughter so that later on she falls prey to lung cancer or any other form of cancer, that I would never want to see my daughter fall prey to?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to respond again to this important bill, Bill 206, Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, in committee. The average daily smoker loses about 15 years of life. If we don't do everything possible to reduce uptake, especially in children, where roughly a quarter of provincial smokers start, we are failing. That means restricting access, restricting sales, restricting marketing promotion, signage, and access to school kids.

A number of things have happened federally as well as provincially that have, I guess, dropped the rates of smoking in this country from about 27 per cent 10 years ago to about 17 per cent now, a little higher in Alberta for some reason. I can't quote any statistics about flavourings, but I think it's very clear on the surface of it that flavourings are what human beings respond to regardless of what food or beverage or, in this case, tobacco is being discussed. Anything we can do, as has been discussed, to reduce that is essential.

I'm again a bit troubled that we're not talking specifically about menthol because that is probably the most prominent and highly recognized enhancer of tobacco. We should be including that very specifically and not fudging, I think, on that specific issue. I'd certainly like to hear why we're not ensuring that flavourings include menthol very specifically.

Given the number of tobacco lobbyists that have visited this government – and it's surprising that the government would allow 12 or 14 highly paid lobbyists to lobby their interests. It's really surprising that the government would allow this kind of lobbying when they're also suing the tobacco industry for $10 billion. There's a contradiction here. Twelve lobbyists have come to this government and had access to government members to talk about, probably menthol being one of them . . .

Mr. McAllister: Who gets to sue them?

Dr. Swann: This government gets to sue them. They seem to have a strong interest in recouping health costs, productivity losses, and damages done by the tobacco industry, and at the same time they're allowing 12 big people in Alberta – Hal Danchilla, one of them, is now lobbying on behalf of big tobacco.

Mr. McAllister: Who's the law firm?

Dr. Swann: I wish I knew who the law firm was, but there's a contradiction here.

Indeed, I expect that menthol will be one of the most highly contentious issues in the regulations that are now coming out. It could have been dispelled by simply adding menthol and other flavourings into this bill, but I think that's partly the influence of the lobbyists.

I would like to ask anyone in relation to the water pipe issue – and apparently about 35 per cent of young people have tried water pipes, which is another form of tobacco and is just as damaging as any other tobacco; even though it's filtered through water, the damaging chemicals are the same – how that would be enforced. How would we assess tobacco pipes and the extent to which they have tobacco or tobacco-like products and flavourings? How would we enforce that? That's an area that isn't clear to me. Perhaps it's something that could be discussed later.

The key issue here is that we are making progress. We are still among the highest of youth smokers in Alberta. We need to do everything we can. Taxation is a big thing, and I think we should be reconsidering increasing the tax on tobacco. That's a big one for all smokers, the cost of tobacco.

Certainly, I'm going to be watching very carefully to see that menthol is one of those flavourings. As has been mentioned, about 25 per cent of young people get hooked on tobacco with menthol, so that's a critical one that we need to be looking at. How will we test water pipes in terms of tobacco content and fining those who are actually using tobacco and tobacco flavourings in water pipes? I'd be interested to know what the technology is there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to address three points that the hon. member has made. The first one, with respect to menthol, once again, to get it on the record, is that there is no hidden agenda to not include menthol in the actual bill. The idea behind it: as you probably know, hon. member, when we create the regulations behind any bill, quite often it is viewed as the teeth of the bill. My personal belief on including menthol in the bill is that if we include it in the bill, we don't have that same flexibility that we might otherwise have if we include it in our regulations. So that's our stance on that.

With respect to some information related to where we stand datawise in our province, I would have to agree with the hon. member. I don't have the numbers directly in front of me, but one of the pieces of data that I saw that I found most alarming had to do with the use of menthol cigarettes here in Alberta. Looking comparatively at this particular study of children who have used tobacco products but also used menthol products here in Alberta, we are leading the country. In this particular study 60 per cent of our girls are smoking menthol cigarettes. I don't want to skew results, but, I mean, in the study itself, in my view, the actual data itself was based on a large enough population to make it credible data to use. If we have the leading number of children who are smoking menthol cigarettes, that is something that we need to look at; that is something that we need to debate. In my view, including it in the regulations and opening it up to consultation is going to give it far more leverage and far more coverage at large within the public to make a decision that will be at the forefront, a stronger stance than any other province has taken.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The time for debate on Bill 206 in Committee of the Whole has expired, so we will move to the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the remaining clauses of Bill 206 were agreed to]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:23 p.m.]

[The remaining clauses of Bill 206 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. House leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 206.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 206. I wish to table copies of the amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would ask that we proceed to third reading for Bill 206.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, are you requesting unanimous consent to move directly to third reading?

Ms Fenske: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 208 Seniors' Advocate Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It truly is a pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 208. It's been an honour as a first-time MLA to work as the Wildrose Seniors critic. I have one of the best jobs in Alberta. Every day I get to meet with seniors and their families about what matters most to them.

We have truly amazing seniors in this province. I don't think there is a group of people in all of Canada who have given so much back to their communities. Seniors are charitable, they volunteer, and they sacrifice. They do all of this because they care deeply about the future of this province. That's why I believe it's important for us to ensure that the seniors who built this province and our country be treated with the respect and the dignity that they deserve.

Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act: it's an independent advocate, and it reports directly to the Legislature. This will mean that seniors no longer have to feel like they don't have a voice.

The office of the seniors' advocate must be independent for all the same reasons that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate was made independent. Madam Speaker, when Bill 25 was introduced in this Legislature almost exactly two years ago, establishing the Child and Youth Advocate as independent, the Minister of Human Services said: "With this legislation the advocate's reports and recommendations and advice will not go through the ministry but will go directly to the Legislature, providing an open and transparent process and involving Albertans." Two years later is it not still important to provide Albertans with openness and transparency? If the government felt it was so important to the function of the Child and Youth Advocate, does that same argument not hold true today for Alberta's seniors?

Seniors in care can often be vulnerable, without a voice and in need of someone to speak up for them. In a lot of ways they're no different from the children represented by an independent Child and Youth Advocate. Seniors deserve this independent voice. The government's proposal is simply not good enough. By reporting to the Minister of Health and not to the Legislature, the seniors' advocate will simply serve at the will of the government of the day.

The current government announced today a seniors' advocate. It said that this role would include - requesting inspections, investigations, and quality and safety assessments related to care provided in seniors' facilities as laid out in Alberta law.

Unfortunately, the health facilities review, which was recently cancelled by this current government, did just that already, and they could do those inspections unannounced. It also said that the seniors' advocate role would refer concerns and complaints to the appropriate channels.

This is what our front-line staff and workers and caregivers and advocates do already.

- providing information and referrals to seniors, their families, and caregivers regarding government-funded seniors' health, continuing care, and social support programs and services.

This is already the role of the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Seniors.

- providing public education on the rights, interests, and needs of seniors.

That should be the role of every single Albertan, Madam Speaker.

The advocate may have the best of intentions, but if he or she is not empowered with independence from the government, it's inevitable that their critiques of policy will run up against the politics of the ministry. How can the advocate make honest and public assessments of seniors' policy and the quality of their care when the person responsible for the system is also their boss? We have seen time after time after time within this ministry and within Alberta Health Services that doctors, front-line staff, caregivers, and family members are scared to come forward. The bullying and intimidation of our front-line staff and doctors has been made all too clear by Alberta Health Services. It just doesn't make sense, Madam Speaker, and that's why after many years this government moved to make the Child and Youth Advocate independent.

I'd like to go back to that day, November 22, 2011, when the hon. Minister of Human Services spoke very passionately about why the Child and Youth Advocate needed to be independent. He went on to say:

Many people in Alberta are unaware of the important role and function of the advocate to ensure that the rights, interests, and viewpoints of children and youth in the child intervention system are heard. Some may question why there's a need for an advocate or why an independent advocate is [so] necessary. Understanding the role of the advocate in individual and systemic advocacy is therefore an important part of understanding this legislation.

He went on to say:

[The Child and Youth Advocate] will now have the ability to make recommendations to the Legislature and to the people of Alberta as a whole through the Legislature about the services it provides to children and youth in the child intervention and the youth criminal justice systems. The advocate's reports from investigations into serious injuries and deaths will also be made public. Albertans can then be confident that the advocate is doing his job in identifying concerns in the child intervention and youth criminal justice systems, beholden to no one but the children.

One can only ask the inevitable question here. Do seniors in care not deserve the exact same dignity, respect, and protection as children in care?

A key part of the Child and Youth Advocate legislation provides the advocate with authority to investigate critical incidents involving children and youth in the child intervention and youth criminal justice systems. Right now, when a child in care is seriously injured or dies, the ministry conducts internal reviews to identify where enhancements can be made. With this act there will now be two additional mechanisms by which incidents can be investigated by the advocate and by the Council for Quality Assurance. The purposes of these serious review processes are not to duplicate or interfere with any police investigations or court proceedings but to identify where improvements can be made in a timely manner, to identify how we can do a better job for vulnerable children. Again, Madam Speaker, do seniors in care not deserve the exact same protection as our children in care? One can easily come to a solution here. If you made the seniors' advocate independent, they would be afforded all of the opportunities of our children in care.

The advocate will have a significant role as both a member of the council for quality assurance and in his capacity and authority to investigate serious incidents involving children and youth served by his office. In carrying out these investigations from a systemic perspective the advocate will have the powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act, meaning he can compel information [under] his investigation.

Madam Speaker, these are all the same qualities of the Seniors' Advocate Act today, Bill 208. Bill 208 was modelled after the Child and Youth Advocate so that seniors in care were afforded the exact same protections as children in care. Many seniors in care are clearly not able to voice their own concerns and may have Alzheimer's, dementia, and are not able to speak up for themselves. They may be experiencing elder abuse in one form or another. They may have family members who are overburdened and overloaded by the responsibility of taking care of them. An independent advocate ensures that our seniors in care get the same protection as our children.

Prior to Bill 25 there was very little that was ever made public about children who, tragically, died while in government care. I understand that some of this was due to privacy concerns, and I also understand that that is the very same concern for many of our seniors in care. But, Madam Speaker, if we as legislators aren't privy to what's happening in the system, how can we work together toward improving the system?

We all saw in this House just today that while the government announced a new advocate, an employee of the minister, the independent Child and Youth Advocate released a heartbreaking but very important report into the death of a teen in care. Within that report there were very specific criticisms of the current system, and it identified where the government must make improvements.

Madam Speaker, having the Health minister have more employees under his ministry is not going to give seniors a stronger voice. If we really want to do something for seniors in care in this province, this government would immediately make the seniors' advocate independent and model it after the very successful Child and Youth Advocate, which is independent. I'll go on to talk about what the Child and Youth Advocate went on to say in his report.

In Stronger Voice for Kids in Care: "These are children at risk," the Minister of Human Services said in an interview. "People want to know there's a children's advocate who is beholden to no one but the children."

I think that is probably one of the most important statements that we hold in this Legislature, very, very powerful, and I applaud the Minister of Human Services for identifying that the Child and Youth Advocate's role is to stand up for children in care in this province, the one group of people under the age of 18 who do not have a voice. I would go on to suggest that the same government could hold seniors to the same level of care and respect and offer them the same protection and offer them the opportunity for their advocate to be beholden to no one but seniors in care.

Opposition parties have long made the argument for an independent seniors' advocate. I'm certainly not the first one in this House to make this argument. There have been many before me, including members on the other side of the House. This government's own members have advocated for an independent seniors' advocate. I urge the government to support Bill 208.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the member for bringing Bill 208 to the floor for discussion, well intended but, in my opinion, a duplication of current government initiatives. I want to read out a few things. We just happened to get – it was pretty good timing – the Alberta Ombudsman annual report. At page 15:

The Alberta Ombudsman has the authority to investigate decisions, actions and recommendations made by a jurisdictional authority. Individuals who have concerns or complaints about the fairness of administrative actions by the Alberta government departments, agencies, boards, commissions, designated professional organizations and the patient concerns resolution process of Alberta Health Services may bring these matters to the Ombudsman. Contact may be made by a phone call to the office, through a letter, through the online complaint form [on the] website or in person.

It also goes on to state on page 18:

Most recommendations for resolution result in an action that directly impacts the complainant. Other recommendations correct a systemic issue that affects more than one person and improves the process or system within a department or agency.

There's lots of great information in that pamphlet that came out to us today. Page 45 tells us about issues that come to the Ombudsman, about dentists, medical lab technologists, hearing aid practitioners, denturists, optometrists, social workers, licensed practical nurses, dental technologists, registered nurses, psychologists, occupational therapists, dental hygienists, chiropractors, physicians and surgeons. There's nothing magical that happens when you're 67 versus 64. You still have the legislative body to go to to address your concerns.

When I was working as the chair of the Seniors Advisory Council and doing work on the Demographic Planning Commission for you, Madam Chair, it was made very clear to me by many Albertans that for something like Bill 208, that's nearly identical to the Child and Youth Advocate Act, there are some differences. Seniors are not necessarily in inherently vulnerable positions by virtue of age alone. That was told to me very clearly by many seniors, who may view the advocate's proposed authority in Bill 208 as infringing on their rights and independence.

We all know that issues that come to our offices regarding health and seniors are complex. We all know, you know, that if we want to deal with the seniors' property tax deferral programs or Alberta seniors' benefit programs or seniors' optical programs or the special-needs programs, just to name a few, our support centre works very, very well guiding seniors and their families through those issues. But we do know that when, especially, an adult in one of our acute-care facilities is ready to move into a seniors home, who doesn't have the support that you and I give for our family members, they are often stuck, and they need that person, that body to call that's an expert within the system, to navigate through the health system and to make sure that they get the services that they need.

We also have a group led by the Calgary MLA . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Calgary-Bow

Mr. VanderBurg: . . . Calgary-Bow – thank you for your help – with the seniors' council that do a lot of work in the province. This announcement this morning doesn't mean that the work that this valuable group of individuals provides – they still report their findings and observations through the ministry and will continue to do this meaningful work.

Like I said, the seniors' support centre continues to field hundreds of calls from seniors each and every day – hundreds of calls – about common issues that we all deal with in our MLA offices, but we all get bogged down when it comes to navigating through the health system, especially when seniors don't have that support. That's what I was so excited about with this morning's announcement. I think that with that announcement we're going to see a better way for Albertans, seniors, and their family members to navigate through the system, to be able to say: "You know, I'm in an acute-care facility now. I had my care plan developed. I live in Whitecourt, but I want to go to Innisfail. My family members are there. How do I get there?" That's when you need someone within the department that's close to the people that are making those decisions to help you navigate through that system.

I don't think that a legislative body is going to help that person, not like someone that we're proposing within the department now. I think the opportunity right now is to let the Health Act – it's proclaimed. We have the opportunity now to create these advocate positions, and let's work with that body. I think it's a great opportunity for Albertans. I've heard from many, many people across the province that this is a mechanism that they've asked for and they're looking forward to having.

With that, Madam Speaker, I do not support this bill and ask my colleagues not to support this bill. It's a duplication of existing services. The dollars that it would cost to operate another independent officer I'd like to have on front-line staff.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a couple of words in regard to this concept of an independent seniors' advocate. You know, Madam Speaker, quite frankly, we could have made something like this happen this morning, when the government announced advocates for seniors and mental health and for health in general, but by not making them independent, this fundamentally undermines the capacity of these officers to actually do the advocacy work that is necessary.

Let me just bring up a couple of scenarios that I thought of this morning, when I was hearing about this government's intentions in terms of the nonindependent advocates. First and foremost, if it's being administered through the ministry, then it makes it much more difficult for health professionals to work freely and openly with such an advocate. I don't have to go far to describe the very tense atmosphere that is existing between this government and so many different health professionals around the province.

I'll give you an excellent example, which is in the lab services area, where a number of pathologists expressed their concerns about a $3 billion privatization of lab services in the Edmonton area, really probably for most of the whole province. A number of health professionals, including medical PhDs and workers in the labs and the pathologists as well, got together to express something, and they met absolutely a poisonous and very dangerous circumstance hit back at them for them speaking out in the interest of all Albertans. If you don't have the independence of an advocate, be it for seniors or for health in general, then that position is fundamentally undermined.

The second example that I have is the mental health advocate that we had here in the province. Again, it was very ineffective. It was not functioning well, and we ended up with quite a spotty record around that advocacy office. In fact, I think that person was removed from the office here just recently.

The independent advocate that this hon. member is bringing forward, I think, is just absolutely necessary. I have worked very closely with quite a number of seniors' organizations right from Medicine Hat to Fort McMurray, and this has boiled up as the number one issue, what we could do here in the Legislature to create an independent office as a seniors' advocate. Considering all of the issues around home care that have come up, the issues around a seniors' pharmaceutical strategy, around assisted living and long-term care, positions in hospitals – the list goes on and on, Madam Speaker – I really do want to speak to support this particular private initiative, and I think that the Alberta New Democrats would stand to make this happen. If we can't make it happen here today and now, we will bring it up again and again until we see this actually happening.

We know, for example, as well that there's been a province-wide tour on behalf of seniors in care, and they've been bringing up this issue considerably as well. The insufficient staffing . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Out-of-province Health Care Coverage

515. Mr. Anglin moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a working group to review whether decisions made by the Alberta health care insurance plan and the Out-of-country Health Services Committee are ensuring that there is adequate coverage for Albertans for their legitimate out-of-province health care.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to make this motion. It's an interesting motion, and I wanted it named after a constituent of mine who brought it to my attention, whom I introduced today, Chris Wiese. Chris is the example that I'm going to use for why I'm bringing this motion forward. Chris Wiese is an example, I think, that many members in this House have very similar examples of. She had to go outside the province to receive health care for a severe back injury, and she was denied reimbursement from our out-of-country health care insurance.

The premise of the motion is just to review, to make sure that it's doing what we said it's supposed to do. Let me give you an example. Chris Wiese needed back surgery, and it was very specialized back surgery. Two other people in Alberta had the exact same back surgery, went to the exact same clinic that Chris Wiese did. One was Wendy Finlay* back in 1999. Another was Melanie* – I can't pronounce her last name – and she was from Cochrane, of all places, and she was funded in 2009. A decade apart we recognized that these surgeries were necessary. We've recognized and we now have a history where these people were reimbursed for this very unique surgery.

Chris Wiese comes forward, and she does everything that she's supposed to do. She has to go to this committee to seek reimbursement for this specialized surgery. She's living in pain, and she gets denied. Now, the reason that she got denied made no sense to her. Basically they said: you should have this done in Alberta. Now, Chris Wiese goes to the AMA, she goes to the College of Physicians & Surgeons, and she does this with the aid of her family doctor. The AMA and the College of Physicians & Surgeons say, "We don't know of any doctor that does this surgery in Alberta," which makes sense because we already know of two Albertans who have had to go to this clinic to get the same surgery done.

Now, getting back to the reasons why we need to review this – and that's all we're asking, to review it for legitimate reasons, that we're not denying people for legitimate reasons. Chris Wiese was denied, and one of the reasons she was denied is that they said: you need to go to an orthopaedic surgeon in Alberta. Well, Chris submitted a list. She went to Dr. Duffy, an orthopaedic surgeon, in 2010. She went to Dr. Weiss*, an orthopaedic surgeon, in 2010. She went to Dr. Storey in February 2011. In 2011 she also went to Dr. Powell, another orthopaedic surgeon. She also went to six other doctors in doing her research. Every doctor said the same thing: we don't do that surgery here in Alberta.

Now, Chris went to the same clinic two other Albertans had gone to, had the surgery done, paid the money out of her own pocket, and she's much better off for it. She's in no pain anymore. She has approached the review board and went through their process, and their argument is illogical. They're telling her that she should go have it done in this province. She has asked this board: what doctor does this in this province? They told her – and this is the part that's frustrating – that because of privacy information we can't tell you which doctor does this type of surgery. That doesn't make sense. That's not even logical.

Here is a person who has done everything she's supposed to do. On top of that, she approaches the minister's office and she writes the minister, and the minister's office actually responded to her. Thank you very much, minister's office. What's shocking about it is that when she contacted the minister's office today, they said that they have no record of her interaction with the minister's office. How can that be? How can that be?

What we want and all that we want is to make sure that we're doing what we said that we were going to do. We're not asking for anything more. We're asking for legitimate cases that do qualify to be properly reimbursed, to be properly approved. That's all this motion is asking for. In order to get there, what we're asking this government to do is to strike this working group and review this to make sure that these types of cases, cases that many of you, many of my fellow colleagues here, have experienced in your own constituencies. What we want to make sure is that the government rules and the government regulations are followed so people who are entitled to have these costs reimbursed get that reimbursement as is given to them by these regulations, these rules under our system.

We're not asking for any changes. We're not asking for any special favours. What we're asking for is for this minister, for this government to review this process with a working group and make sure that it is actually properly running the way it's supposed to. We have far too many cases now that have popped up that have, quite honestly, served as an embarrassment. These are huge cases that have directly affected the health and well-being of people who are entitled to have their costs reimbursed, who have sought this medical care to relieve their pain and suffering. That's all they've done.

That's all that Chris Wiese has done. She needed this back surgery, which is a highly specialized back surgery that could not be performed in this province. The doctor she went to said: "We do not perform that type of surgery. That is highly specialized." Yet she runs into this bureaucratic circle that says, "You have to have it done in this province." She goes to the doctors, and they say, "But we don't do it in this province." She goes back to the appeals process. They say, "Well, you should have it done in this province." It's a "Who's on first?" but the problem is that it's not a joke. It is the suffering of an individual who is doing the best they can to follow the processes that this government set up, and they're faced with the illogical argument.

Her last go-round she was told: well, take it to your MLA. That should never happen in this process. It should go right to the committee. It should fit in the rules that the committee has set up, and as long as it fits in the parameters that this government has set in place, then it should be approved. But you cannot put in place a set of parameters and then just lock people into this vicious circle of a bureaucratic maze that just sends them around and around and around with no solution. That's wrong, and that's unjust.

Bringing this motion forward, what I am hoping for is two things; one, that this government actually does it, that it strikes a working group to look into this matter and that this working group will report back to the minister. If changes need to be made, we make those changes. I will tell you that there will be some examples given by my own caucus members where we can document individual cases where people are being denied their reimbursement, and it's a just reimbursement.

Again, I want to make a specific point of this. We're not asking for anything, I'm not asking for anything that is not a legitimate reimbursement issue. We're not going outside any existing parameters. What we're saying is that the people who are qualified – and we have an example right here – for that reimbursement are being denied for illogical reasons that do not make sense. Now, in Chris's case what is very fortunate is that she kept all her documentation, she kept all her letters, and she kept all the responses. Actually, one of her doctors went to her defence with the review panel.

I'll give you one last example. One of the members mentioned it. I think the Associate Minister of Seniors did it earlier, talked about the Ombudsman's office. [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I thank the hon. member for bringing forward the motion. I don't think that there are any of us, perhaps, as Members of the Legislative Assembly who have not encountered questions about the Out-of-country Health Services Committee, questions about what is covered and is not covered under the Alberta health care insurance plan, and specifically constituents who have an interest in how those decisions were made.

I'm going to make a number of comments, Madam Chair, in response to the motion that's been presented, and I'm sure the debate will be very interesting this afternoon. I, first of all, of course, would want to express my empathy for the hon. member's constituent, who was present in the House earlier this afternoon and may still be here. I don't know. Although he's given an account and shared some personal information regarding his constituent, I'm sure that he will appreciate the fact that under the Health Information Act I cannot discuss the details of an individual's health information or journey through the system.

So in response to his speech I will not be able to sort of follow through the journey of his constituent other than to say, Madam Speaker, that certainly both my department and my office have been in touch with this constituent. We've also been in touch with other Albertans who have contacted us regarding the processes of both the Out-of-country Health Services Committee and the appeal panel. Quite often, you know, we begin with a discussion, talking about the intent of the program, how it's constructed, and, most importantly, the basis upon which these decisions are made, which is a process that is independent, and that is the first and foremost thing that I think needs to be understood, that this process is set up to be independent of government.

The minister, under the regulations that exist for both the committee and the appeal panel, does not have the authority to intervene in those decisions. There are some very good reasons for that, Madam Speaker, and I would hope that members on all sides of the House wouldn't have too much difficulty thinking about why the application of clinical evidence and the exercise of clinical judgment by doctors and others with clinical knowledge would be an appropriate way to make decisions about exceptions within our health care system rather than to have politicians make those decisions. I don't know whether or not, as part of bringing this motion forward – I can't really tell so far from the debate – the hon. member is suggesting that somehow it should be something other than an independent process led by clinical professionals and based in evidence. I can't simply tell that. Perhaps we'll know that by the end of the hour.

Madam Speaker, the motion proposes the establishment of a working group to examine decisions made by the Alberta health care insurance plan and the Out-of-country Health Services Committee and appeal panel. The motion would encourage the creation of a working group that ensures all Albertans receive adequate health care coverage, from which they benefit already.

I want to begin with just, I guess, some basics, Madam Speaker, about the process for determination of what is covered under the Alberta health care insurance plan and, when Albertans need access to those services outside of Alberta, what arrangements are in place to make those decisions and, as I said earlier, the basis on which those decisions are made.

First of all, I think it's worth noting, Madam Speaker, that the Alberta health care insurance plan provides Albertans with outstanding health coverage, by most measures that I've read the broadest coverage of anywhere in Canada. In fact, if you look to the Canada Health Act, the only services that are insured under the Canada Health Act are physician and hospital services and some very specific dental services that have to deal with reconstructive surgery. Most provinces in the country – I would say all provinces in the country – are certainly today providing health care services, funding health services that go far beyond that. When we look at Alberta, we can take tremendous pride in the fact that we have some of the broadest seniors' coverage in the country, both through our seniors' health care plan and through other programs that we provide. We certainly provide tremendous access to diagnostic and laboratory services outside of hospitals. Again, these are services that are noninsured under the Canada Health Act.

Drug coverage beyond the seniors' plan is also very extensive, both in terms of the number of drugs that are covered in this province and the pace at which we keep up with new technology, and wherever possible, where the evidence supports it, we make those new drugs available to Albertans. But we do so on the basis of evidence, Madam Speaker. We do not do so on the basis of advocacy, well intentioned as it may be, on the part of members, whether they're part of the government caucus or not.

We take great pride in the coverage that we provide under our health care insurance plan. As the hon. member has talked about, we also have a process for determining eligibility for this coverage when Albertans require it outside of Alberta. Within Canada we have reciprocity agreements in place with most other jurisdictions that allow us to pay for health care services that would normally be insured in Alberta when they're provided in another province. For the most part, that procedure and those relationships are working well on behalf of our citizens.

But, Madam Speaker, when it comes to the question of out-of-country services, that is certainly a different matter. For both the committee and the appeal panel the members are appointed by the Minister of Health in consultation with cabinet. They operate under regulations that require them to consider applications that are brought forward by physicians on behalf of patients, and they require them to determine things such as the availability of the same service within Alberta. The hon. member has referred to those criteria. They also allow the committee considerable scope in determining the urgency surrounding the situation, and they have a very difficult job in weighing all of that evidence. They are also permitted to review current literature with respect to a particular application that is at hand, to look at clinical evidence that exists, perhaps new evidence, and to have that weigh as a factor in their determination of eligibility.

Madam Speaker, the role of the government and the role of the Minister of Health end at the point when the members of the committee and the appeal panel are appointed, and that is for some very sound reasons that I talked about earlier.

Members across the aisle call on us on a regular basis for independent advocates and processes, yet with this motion it would seem to suggest, at least on behalf of the proponent, that they believe it is in order for Members of the Legislative Assembly or government to interfere with these arm's-length processes. Madam Speaker, I'm sure that we've all had experiences where we have talked to constituents or to others who have been through this process very successfully. I didn't have an opportunity to look up the statistics today, but there are millions of dollars in care that are provided through this process outside Canada for applications that are successful that go through this process.

As you would expect in any process that's evidence-based and led by clinical professionals, there are situations where both the committee and the appeal panel are unable to support the application. I have had the opportunity myself to talk to people that have been in this circumstance, including my own constituents, Madam Speaker, and I have read the reasons and the rationale that are presented by both the committee and the appeal panel. I believe that we have a very good record of supporting, where the evidence supports it, access to needed services outside the country.

But, Madam Speaker, this is not part of the Alberta health care insurance plan. This is not part of the regular process of funding insured services in our province. There I have a fundamental divide with the hon. member because the issue here is to understand the intent of the program and the way that it's administered.

I am unable to support the motion for these reasons, Madam Speaker. I think the independence in this case and the focus on evidence are paramount. I look forward to listening to the balance of the debate, but I would encourage my colleagues in the House not to support this motion to open a door that we may not in fact wish to open.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I find the hon. Health minister's comments a little . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Disturbing.

Mr. Hale: Disturbing, yes.

He mentioned urgency. As I continue on with my speech here, I'll talk about some clients that have contacted my office. I have advocated on their behalf because they went through all the channels to try to get some help from the minister's office and haven't gotten anywhere.

Clinical evidence. I'll talk about clinical evidence in here. He mentioned what is covered. One of the gentlemen from my constituency had to go to Vancouver to get three discs replaced in his neck. They said that the discs aren't covered. They were, like, $3,000 a disc. They classified them as hardware. I don't know why they would classify discs as hardware. You know, they did pay for the anesthesiologist and a few things. I've had numerous people come through my office looking for some help. The gentleman with the three discs, Russel Coyne, suffered for years with 30 per cent compression in his spinal cord, with loss of function and some feeling in his left arm. He said that it was going to be a two-year wait before he could get help here. An Alberta orthopaedic specialist advised him that if it was not taken care of soon, he would be teetering on full paralysis and that this needed to be addressed urgently.

The hon. Health minister just mentioned urgency. Well, he couldn't wait two years to get the discs replaced in his neck. He is a young man with a young family. He had to make a living. He couldn't make a living lying on the couch being afraid that he was going to become paralyzed. He had to go to Vancouver and paid I think it was $27,000. He didn't have $27,000 lying around that he could, you know, throw into health care, but he had to get it done. He went through the whole process. You know how much he got back? Fifteen hundred dollars out of $27,000. That, to me, doesn't seem like the system is working very well.

This needs to be looked at, and I think that's what the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is saying, that this isn't working, what is happening now. We need something to come forward to figure out what needs to be changed. I'm not saying that the Health minister has to look at each one and advocate on behalf of each one, but it's under the Health minister's control, you know, this arm of AHS. If he's hearing enough complaints, maybe he needs to have a look at it, and things need to be changed.

Another gentleman, Jessie Kett. He's 21 years old, works on the rigs, has a bad shoulder. Surgical wait time: two years, they told him. Another young guy. He doesn't want to be a burden on society and have to go on EI or some government subsidies. He wants to go to work. He wants to work, but he can't. He's had to take a month off work because his shoulder is too bad. He needs to get it fixed now. I don't know his financial situation. I don't know if he can afford to go out of province to get it fixed, but that's an option he's going to have to look at if he's going to have to wait here for two years. You know, he talked to the group in B.C. about doing it. They said: "Yeah, we can get you in right away, next week. Come on. We'll get you surgery." He talked to the Alberta health care insurance plan. He was denied coverage. They can't do it. Now he has to either pay out of his own pocket or wait his two years.

Another gentleman I've brought up here in the House before, Grant Ellefson, needed discs replaced in his neck. Same thing: he couldn't work, was facing the possibility of paralysis if he continued on. He paid over $20,000. You know what he got back? Two thousand dollars. Something isn't quite working right.

Another gentleman, Brett Bain, contacted me. He needed back surgery. He was told he would have to wait 18 to 24 months. You know, he's looking at other options for what to do. He told me he's taking 10 pills a day. Ten pills to try to keep functioning. Is that the quality of life that we would like to have? Would the hon. Minister of Health like to have that quality of life, where he has to live on painkillers just so he can function because he has to wait 18 to 24 months, when he can go out of province and get it right away?

I could go on and on with more examples, but, you know, these programs need to be reviewed. Something needs to be done to help these people. They're trying. They're going through the system; the system is not working. They're not getting the coverage that they need. It's something that concerns all Albertans, and I urge the members of this Assembly to take a good look at this and think back to how many people have contacted your office. I'm sure there are many that have been contacted with examples of how this isn't working. You know, it's time to step up to the plate and do something about it and help all of these Albertans that can't get the help that they need right now in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for High River.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, when we talk about this and when I hear about reviewing the legitimacy of a process that's already in place, that is making the accusation already that perhaps there are some backdoor dealings or that perhaps, with what we've done in Alberta, particularly these people who are on these committees are not forthright and not genuine Albertans. That is seemingly the way it comes across, and more often than not we seem to get that tone from this particular party.

You know, I work in health care, and I've seen the changes over time, and what I can tell you is that there is a plan in place for this government to create many options around collaborative practice. That's really what it is. Seeking outside health services, whether it be in Europe or the United States, doesn't solve the problem with wait times. What we need are physicians, surgeons, nurses, paramedics, nurse practitioners, and physicians' assistants working right here in Alberta to come up with an Alberta solution.

It's highly complex. It's not simply just about that profession itself. It's their governing bodies. It's the unions that represent them. It's the contracts that get put in place. We reference, actually, how those wait times are growing. Particularly when you think about a hundred thousand Albertans coming to this province year after year and the countries that they come from. We need to continue to work on a collaborative practice model, and we've seen that. The minister has put together, along with the Premier, family care clinics, where you see multiple groups come together not only when we get to the stage of surgery but to look at it and come up with good ideas around preventative medicine. That's really where you solve the problem.

The Associate Minister of Wellness, with initiatives for grade-school children, advocates not only in that specific thing. You think about Human Services around mental health and getting out in front of that with our grade-school children. What I can tell you as we move forward: with the idea of an independent body to already look at a committee on out-of-country services, to me, you're saying that it's not working but that it actually works for those who have the means. It doesn't solve the problem for those people who don't have the means.

Madam Speaker, what I'll say is this. Health care is highly complex. I've studied many of the systems, whether it's the United Kingdom, Australia. Some people would say that it works in Germany, and they are facing the same potential problems that we have here. What we need to do is continue to work hard. I believe that the Minister of Health is doing the honourable thing by working around a collaborative practice model, family care clinics, working with different agencies, the professional bodies that govern these different practitioners to make sure that we actually get to an Alberta solution for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise with interest to speak on this motion. I find it a little bit problematic whenever we talk about out-of-country care, because I certainly don't want to undermine the primacy of always building and diversifying and strengthening our publicly delivered health care system here in the province of Alberta. If we are looking across the border too much, then we have the potential to undermine the capacity to serve our population here in this country. Certainly, there are circumstances where people have to go across the border to get some very specialized care, and I think that the hon. member who is sponsoring this motion has brought up an individual case here this afternoon which is clearly in that area.

I just really want to stress our caution, my caution specifically, on how we make those decisions, who makes those decisions, and how the compensation is arrived at because, of course, the best people who could be making choices about the requirements of a patient to receive out-of-country care are obviously the health professionals that are trained to do so. If we undermine or compromise their capacity to deliver best practices based on scientific and medical data, then again, I don't want to be a part of that, quite frankly.

You know, we need to make strong decisions to ensure the long-term strength of our health care system here within the borders of our jurisdiction of the province of Alberta. It goes right to the heart, Madam Speaker, of ensuring that everyone in this province has a chance to flourish and to get the health care that they need regardless of what they have in their pocket. So if there's a reasonable treatment that exists, then presumably with the large growth of our population here in the province of Alberta plus the fact that we do in fact serve much of the other northern territories in British Columbia and Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories and Nunavut — people come here as a magnet for procedures. If there is something out there, we should consider providing it here in the province of Alberta.

Roy Romanow, who was the Premier of Saskatchewan and did a health care report back in 2002, said: "Canadians consider equal and timely access to medically necessary health care services on the basis of need as a right of citizenship, not a privilege of status or wealth.” So while people do choose to pay for services in the United States or in other places around the world, we have to be very careful that we’re not subsidizing that choice based on income, the wealth of these people making these choices, but rather on the needs.

So there are some areas where I do have concerns about this motion specifically and out-of-country care specifically as well. It does make sense in some circumstances, but we can’t use it to cement over the cracks that are caused by the underfunding and the underdelivery of public health care here in our province, right? One of these cracks is becoming very clear. I’m talking about overcapacity, the crisis of overcapacity protocol. This protocol was developed as a short-term fix for emergency wait times, and rather than developing a long-term solution for wait times – right? – the government has leaned excessively on this sort of protocol. This sort of short-term thinking has been adopted too much in our own provincial health system. Certainly, it creates instability, and it’s understandable that this type of long-term vision is not occurring here when we need it most, right?

It’s very important to make out-of-country assessments and to make those measurements in a very, very specific sort of way. It’s very important that we do that in a fair and timely way. But out-of-country care cannot replace a long-term focused investment in reducing wait times and advancing research to build the health care that Albertans deserve and that this government does not provide on a consistent basis, all when we need it most, right? A long-term stable vision for health care in this province is something that Alberta New Democrats have consistently advocated for, and it’s something that we are very well known for right across this province. We will continue to wear that label proudly.

It’s very important that we do not feed into using out-of-country care as a wedge. We’ve seen people using the long wait-lists as an argument that we should pay for people to get that out-of-country care because our public system here doesn’t provide for those people in a timely way. Well, certainly, we can mitigate against that circumstance, Madam Speaker, by ensuring that we make long-term investment, that we have the capacity here in the province of Alberta, and that we’re not just looking south or to Asia or to Mexico to get the essential health care that individuals need.

This motion certainly brings up a lot of important points that I think are worth debating and talking about, but certainly my skepticism and instinct tell me that it’s important for us to allow best practices of a medical – perhaps strengthening the committee that makes decisions for out-of-country care but not building a separate, second bureaucratic layer that might interfere with timely access to the care that people need.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you. I appreciate the closing comments made by the good Member for Edmonton-Calder relative to the building of a bureaucracy. At the start here I’d like to mention to you, Madam Speaker, that I’ve been very confused about this motion ever since I first read it. Coming from a member of the opposition that purports to want to reduce government, here we have a motion that seemingly wants to increase government bureaucracy. It’s very confusing. I appreciate that member bringing that up. In fact, we listen to that all the time in budget deliberations and in other ways, in questions in the House.

You know, I personally am involved in results-based budgeting, where we are working hard to find areas to reduce government and succeeding. Madam Speaker, I’m so confused about why this member would bring this motion forward in the wording that we’re presented with here. I wonder if there isn’t an ulterior motive here relative to the public-private situation with health care in our province.

I am pleased to join the debate. As we discuss the merits of the motion, we would do well to keep in mind how we got to where we are today and the value that our current system has to offer for our province’s out-of-country health services. Madam Speaker, I think that it’s dangerous when individuals try to create methods that find answers that they’re not finding in the current system. That’s not the way to deal with things, and I think that is part of what this is all about.

In 2009 the Alberta Ombudsman released a special report on out-of-country health services. The report is titled Prescription for Fairness, and it’s a detailed assessment of the out-of-country services available to Albertans. The report suggests ways to improve government responses to the ongoing needs of Albertans with respect to out-of-country health services. All of the recommendations were accepted and are being implemented and being moved forward.

I’d like to discuss the report and its recommendations, with the hope that it may be helpful to us in terms of lending greater credence to the arguments that we’ve already heard; namely, that there is much value in an arm’s-length agency’s ability to determine its own policies and best practices, and we do not need another overlay on top of that. This report will also help demonstrate that the formation of a working group, as is proposed in Motion 515, to review the decisions of the Alberta health care insurance plan and Out-of-country Health Services Committee is unnecessary and potentially, in fact, damaging to the purpose and the proper functioning of those two previously mentioned bodies.

The 2009 Alberta Ombudsman report, for the benefit of those who may not know about it, was the result of an independent investigation pursuant to section 12(2) of the Ombudsman Act. The report examined whether current practices met the needs of Albertans in assessing health care that’s either not available in Canada or is not available within a reasonable time frame. The report sought to understand and remedy some of the following issues. I’ve listed them here. Madam Speaker, I apologize for the length of this. There are six of them:

- how Albertans are informed of the availability of funding for out of country health services,
- how they find out about the availability,
  - how medical practitioners are informed about the requirements and availability of the program
  - how out of country claims are reviewed . . .
- the actual claims process,
  - how decisions are made by the [Out-of-country Health Services] Committee and [of course, a key part] the Appeal Panel
  - how wait times factor into the decision making process
- and
  - how decisions are conveyed [and communicated] to Albertans.

5:40

Madam Speaker, the subsequent recommendations presented in Prescription for Fairness were designed to improve the administrative process related to the communication, review, and decision-making regarding applications for funding out-of-country health services. All of the recommendations, I reiterate, were accepted and are moving forward.

This tells us that the current programs we have in place are responsive and adaptive in their approaches and that they are, first and foremost, aligned with the changing health care needs of Albertans. This raises an important question, and the answer should tell us that the creation of a working group to review the decisions made by those already adaptable and well-functioning arm's-length agencies is, in fact, redundant, potentially ineffective, and would be a strain on the limited resources that we have. Quite frankly, every time we're in this Chamber we hear about the complaining that goes on relative to that, but all of a sudden we're going to add to that burden.

Madam Speaker, examples of the recommendations made in this report and their adoption as policy are sound indications that the right steps are already being taken to improve upon what's already in place. For instance, with respect to applications for funding the report asked that all requests "be submitted by a physician or dentist on behalf of a resident," and that "applications include written reports of consultations with specialists, and the Out-of-Country Health Services Regulation be amended to reflect this requirement." It also discusses ways to improve management of the Out-of-country Health Services Committee, with particular reference on how hearings are conducted, how to address responses to applicants, and what materials to include.

It also makes recommendations on enhanced public communications and on the content of decision letters. Specifically, it asks that the applicants receive in clear detail the findings of fact, "how the Committee weighed the evidence before it and how it applied the [specific] legislative criteria." Madam Speaker, a gold standard of availability of information for Albertans.

It also recommends that applicants receive a list of physicians or health centres in Canada that the Committee determined are available to perform the service requested, [that the committee] provide evidence that the service is available in a reasonable time frame, and document [the applicant's] available appeal rights.

These are just a few examples of the recommendations in the report that are currently being implemented and practised by the agencies involved in out-of-country health services. These recommendations help ensure that the applicant receives a full accounting of the evidence considered, the decision made, and the expertise available to them. While some may be still denied funding, sadly, at least they are able to understand why, and they are given greater access to the choices available to them regarding out-of-country health services.

Motion 515 seeks to interfere with this ongoing process. As such, I cannot support its purpose. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Fort and Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and support Motion 515, where the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has said:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a working group to review whether decisions made by the Alberta health care insurance plan and the Out-of-country Health Services Committee are ensuring that there is adequate coverage for Albertans for their legitimate out-of-province health care.

Earlier, the Minister of Health suggested that we didn't want political interference in the system. I don't believe that this motion actually is suggesting that at all. I think this motion is suggesting that every once in a while you need to have a quality assurance factor, and that quality assurance sometimes can come from outside of the realm of the people who are currently looking at it. There is always room to improve, no matter what the system is. This motion just says that we would create a working committee to complement the out-of-country committee that already exists and ensure that Albertans are getting the best value for their dollar. I mean, this is exactly what our role is, and there should be no reason that we should be scared of that role.

Also, the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for High River made the suggestion that we were questioning our front-line services and suggesting that there was something untoward about the committees that are already doing the work. He also suggested that we were suggesting there are backroom deals. Well, Madam Speaker, we're not suggesting that on the part of Alberta Health Services.

However, there are backroom deals. Michele Lahey, Alberta Health Services executive, didn't have to go to the out-of-province fund when she required services at the Mayo Clinic. She was lucky enough just to bill those services directly back to Alberta Health Services, something no other Albertan is allowed to do. So she was able to bypass the whole system. She worked for Alberta Health Services, so she clearly would have known the process for out-of-province health care approvals, yet she was able to sort of skirt the whole system, just go around it. If we want to talk about backroom deals, there are backroom deals. Let's talk about what the out-of-country committee is supposed to review and not review because, clearly, Ms Lahey's expenses certainly shouldn't have been reimbursed by Alberta Health Services and, ultimately, the taxpayer. It probably should have gone to the out-of-country committee, where, unfortunately, her $7,000-plus bill was likely to get paid about 50 bucks.

The second part of that is that the associate minister went on to talk about how he is a paramedic and he works in the health care system and that this doesn't alleviate wait times. No, it absolutely doesn't, but there's a fundamental problem with wait times right now. We have fantastic front-line staff. We have physicians right now who are appealing to the government for more OR time. We have a young man in Red Deer who has waited in excess of seven days with two shattered ankles, and he can't get surgery time. Is seven days really a realistic time for this young man to be sitting in an acute-care bed, which costs the system a fortune, while he waits for an available OR time, while he sits on pain medication? These are all costs to the system. Yet perhaps he might have been able to have surgery on those shattered ankles much sooner by accessing the out-of-province health fund. This is fundamentally why this fund needs to be reviewed.

Perhaps there are people who are already in the system who could have their pain and their suffering alleviated by sending them through the out-of-province health fund. We've heard many examples today, and there are a few more. Shane Womboldt from Fort McMurray needed cancer treatment, couldn't get it in the province of Alberta, applied to the out-of-province fund, and was told he didn't meet the criteria. And he was dying of a brain tumor.

In my own riding is Brooke Aubusson. The Health minister has received several letters from us, has received several pleas from us to review her case. He keeps referring her to the out-of-province health fund. Well, that's great, except that the out-of-province health fund keeps telling her: well, you don't qualify because you're not actually getting the treatment; what you're asking for is different and doesn't meet the criteria. The minister is referring this four-year-old girl that's going to die of a rare genetic disease to the out-of-province health fund, and then the out-of-province health fund is just kicking her back and saying: sorry; you don't meet the criteria. One hand doesn't know what the other hand is doing. There's that.

Then we have Flory and Bob Wilkins from my own riding. Mrs. Wilkins is a 70-year-old senior. She curls. She's very, very active. She takes great care of herself. She needed shoulder surgery. She was told by her surgeon that it would be a three-year wait. That is after receiving the referral to the specialist. From the specialist she would have a three-year wait. That exceeded the benchmark wait times that are set out by CIHI, that this government claims that they can meet 40 per cent of the time. So she was going to sit with a damaged shoulder that was getting more and more damaged every single day. At the one-year mark of the wait time she went back to the same surgeon, and the surgeon now told her that her other shoulder, because she had been over compensating, had now degenerated to a position where it needed to have surgery on it as well. She took matters into her own hands and basically said: I'm an active senior; I want to remain active. She went to the Cambie clinic in B.C., had private surgery on her one shoulder and was able to save her second shoulder but at a cost of $17,000.

These are taxpayer dollars that are leaving our province, going to another province to get the care that isn't available in Alberta in reasonable wait times. To the Associate Minister of Wellness: surely you can agree that there is a direct cost to Albertans and to taxpayers when they actually do more damage while they're waiting for care between doctors' appointments, specialists' appointments, medications, lost work time, and lost family time. This has a direct cost to taxpayers in Alberta. That's a fact.

The sooner we can get these people back to work; the sooner we can get them back to health. We all save money. This is preventative medicine. You can reduce wait times by utilizing the out-of-province health fund and actually creating a wait time guarantee that says that the minute that you start to exceed the provincial benchmarks, which this government can't meet but 40 per cent of the time, then you can reduce the wait times. That's what a Wildrose wait time guarantee does. This committee has the ability to look at that solution and say: how can it work best for Albertans? That's a fundamental improvement on how we're doing business today.

Now, to go even further, just the same as the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks said, when Mrs. Wilkins brought back her bill and submitted it to the out-of-province health committee, she got less than $1,500 back, and she was given the same excuses the hon. member spoke about before. She was told that the implements that they had to put into her shoulder to make her viable again were all hardware. That's it. So the bulk of her actual claim was completely denied. She got $1,500 back from the out-of-province health fund.

Now, there has to be some room to review what this health fund does, what the criteria are that it uses, and what it's actually covering. There's nothing wrong with us as legislators actually working together to find common solutions that work for all Albertans. That is fundamentally the problem. We understand that no system is perfect. There's no question that no system is perfect, but every system is absolutely, one hundred per cent open to improvement.

It might do some good for the other side of the House to understand that opposition parties represent Albertans. I'm not sure if you know that. I understand that you always think we're wrong and you always think that we're doing the one-off, but the reality of it is that 440,000-plus Albertans didn't vote for your party. They voted for other parties, including all three of the opposition parties. So every day you assume that everything we propose in this House, everything that we stand here and fight for every single day is somehow a slag on the government, and you don't appreciate that sometimes by working together, three heads – four heads in this case, with all four parties – certainly can be better than one know-it-all. That's a fact.

It's our job in here to do what's best for Albertans. People every day are sitting at home and not getting the treatment that they need. They're not getting the care that they need in acceptable wait times. Three years for shoulder surgery and a week for shattered ankles is unacceptable by any means. Front-line workers are begging this government to pay attention. Families and caregivers and the people who are suffering are begging this government to pay attention. Here is a great opportunity for the government to stand up and do the right thing and include all Albertans in the consultation process through their elected officials.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to close debate on Motion 515.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's disappointing, some of the arguments presented by the government members. There's no conspiracy here. Nobody levelled a conspiracy. [interjections] I understand why the member may not understand, why he's confused. He's too busy heckling to even hear what the argument might be. It's sad, the fact that somebody's suffering would be thrown out to this type of partisan bickering, that has no bearing on the subject at hand.

Now, what I presented was cogent evidence in the form of one singular example, an example that can be followed up from riding to riding to riding. These are not examples that we're challenging so much the criteria of the decisions. What we're showing is that people who actually fit the criteria as written in the rules and regs are being denied and not just denied in a timely fashion but over a length of time that is absolutely inexcusable.

I want to put out a couple of things. One is that even the Ombudsman could not actually effectively help this person and is still saying that it's reviewing it, and it's been now over two and a half years. That does not even have to be. So what we're asking here is not to review every decision. That's not what I'm asking. And I'm not asking to increase bureaucracy. I don't even know where that member gets that from at all. What it says is that we have a process in place, we have rules in place, and what we want to do is ensure that those are being followed. That's it. Call it an audit. I call it a review. I cannot believe any argument that you would not want to review a process, because if you tell me that that's true, then why the heck do we have all of these review committees that are constantly being appointed by this government?

To stay consistent, what we're asking here is for the government to appoint a working panel, a working group, to make sure that the decisions that are being made by this agency do follow this government's policy and are following it to the letter of the rules and what this government has set it up for.

Now, I will tell you this. The evidence I presented is cogent in the form of: we know that over a 13-year period this surgery has been done for three Albertans. Two Albertans have been covered, and the third one has not. Now, does it make sense that the hon.

member over here says that we should do it in Alberta? Well, I'll let Alberta Health Services make that determination. They should do it on a cost basis. Should Alberta's medical community do every procedure known to man? I'm not so sure that's necessary. There are these rare circumstances. In this case I would suggest that this is a rare circumstance. The cost for this person is roughly, I think, $15,000. I'm going to table the whole document tomorrow.

The fact of the matter remains: should we bring in surgeons, create a whole department to do a surgery that may be done three times in 13 years? Probably not likely. So I would suggest to the hon. member that there are lots of procedures that we may want to farm out until the necessity comes that we do them here. But we're talking about relieving the pain and suffering of individual Albertans, however rare it may be. That, to me, is the underlying principle, the underlying reason we have this process, that we do compensate or we do fund for out-of-province care when it meets the needs of our own medical system. That seems logical.

It also seems that if we manage it correctly – and I'll make the presumption that we'll manage it correctly – that we'll keep our costs down. It only makes sense. But we do fund out-of-province care, out-of-country care. We have done it according to the rules, but now we have evidence that the rules aren't necessarily being followed. That's not a conspiracy theory. In this case, with this one example, it's fact. I know these other members can find circumstances when they look at these individual cases that they realize: "Wait a minute. This one should qualify. Why did you get denied?" If there's not a logical answer, then we need to figure out: is the system working? In this case what this lady was being denied for was false. She qualified.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 18, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Colleagues, I'm very, very pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. Thank you for your support.

As an MLA I see this bill as supporting the quality of life of my constituents. Hopefully, you feel the same. As Associate Minister of Wellness I see this bill as protecting the health of all Albertans and a healthy future, especially, of our young people. Now, as a member of this government and as a proud Albertan I can tell you that I see this bill as reinforcing Alberta's position on tobacco reduction amongst our Canadian fellow jurisdictions.

Madam Speaker, I believe that all members of this Legislature do indeed share those feelings of commitment, and there's good reason for that. Tobacco, sadly, is responsible for close to 3,000 Albertan deaths every year, and in Canada smoking is responsible for almost a third of all cancer deaths and more than 85 per cent of lung cancers. But we also see the suffering behind the data. We see families robbed of parents and grandparents. We visit community centres and care homes in our constituencies. We see people who are struggling, people with portable oxygen supplies just doing what they can to catch their breath. We see young people in our neighbourhoods lighting up, and we think of the future that could be theirs.

Protecting Albertans from the harms of tobacco is why we have our new 10-year tobacco reduction strategy, which we launched just 12 months ago. A major focus of that strategy is preventing and reducing tobacco use among children and protecting them from the harmful effects of tobacco and second-hand smoke. It also aims to give newborns a better start in life by reducing tobacco use amongst pregnant women, thereby reducing the number of low birth weight babies.

Now, the tobacco reduction strategy acts on a combination of prevention initiatives, public awareness, education, and cessation supports. Stronger tobacco reduction legislation is part of that picture, and Bill 33 makes that happen in a number of ways, in fact five, to be exact.

Number one, it specifically prohibits selling or otherwise providing young people with tobacco products. We do have federal legislation but nothing here in Alberta. In fact, Alberta is the only province and one of only two jurisdictions in our country that does not have legislation to prohibit the sale of tobacco products to minors.

Number two, it increases package sizes and the number of units of certain products in a package to make them less affordable for our youth.

Number three, it bans the use of water pipes where tobacco smoking is prohibited. This is important because it protects Albertans from second-hand smoke that may be just as harmful as tobacco. Additionally, tobaccolike products may potentially be a gateway to tobacco use.

I certainly realize that this may have an impact on businesses whose policy on water pipes helps to attract customers, but I believe they'll be very interested to know that businesses have a transition period of about a year and a half to prepare for the change. We're delaying proclamation of the water-pipe legislation for six months after the bill is passed, and it will be another 12 months before the ban comes into force. Madam Speaker, we know from experience that when smoking was first banned in public establishments, most people and businesses were able to adapt, and we do expect the same flexibility again. Some municipalities already ban the use of water pipes, and this section of Bill 33 creates an equal playing field across Alberta.

Point number four, banning smoking in vehicles with children present. Now, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act did receive royal assent back in March of 2012 but is not yet proclaimed. Bill 33 would bring the provisions of this legislation under the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act.

Finally, Bill 33 also would bring the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act into the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, and this will create a single, unified piece of legislation that supports a comprehensive approach to protecting young Albertans from tobacco.

Madam Speaker, we pass laws to protect the public good. Bill 33 will strengthen public protection from the health risks of tobacco and tobaccolike substances. We are very fortunate in Alberta that strong legislation will support a comprehensive, long-term commitment to tobacco reduction, and it is a testament to our commitment to Albertans and to their future. Hopefully, when the young generation of today is in this House representing their constituents, the fight against tobacco may be one they have read about and not one they still have yet to address.

With that hope in mind I offer my support for Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act. I strongly encourage all members of this Assembly from all sides of the House to do the same. With that, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 33.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 38

Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and move second reading of Bill 38, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2.

Bill 38 amends several pieces of legislation, which I'll list as follows: the Alberta Personal Property Bill of Rights, the Civil Enforcement Act, the Court of Appeal Act, the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Dower Act, the Family Law Act, the Fatal Accidents Act, the Judicature Act, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, the Police Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Recording of Evidence Act, and the Special Areas Act.

I will now provide some details about the proposed amendments. The proposed change to the Alberta Personal Property Bill of Rights would exempt the recently proclaimed International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act from this act, consistent with existing policy. If the Crown enforces security in aircraft under this international convention, it is a normal commercial transaction. It's not meant to be covered by the Alberta Personal Property Bill of Rights. The bill of rights does not apply to taxes, penalties, or normal commercial transactions as may be carried out by the Crown. Current exemptions include the Personal Property Security Act and the Civil Enforcement Act.

Bill 38 would also make changes to the registered education savings plan contributions to ensure savings invested from postsecondary education and training are available to the child that they were intended for in the first place. Currently case law indicates that an RESP is not to be held in trust for a child, so it is still counted among a parent's net assets. Resultingly, Madam Speaker, if a parent has creditors seeking to obtain his or her assets to repay a debt, an RESP intended for a child's post-secondary education and training, which may have accumulated over several years, can be lost. Making this amendment would ensure that funds intended for a child's education and training will be protected to allow that a child can afford a better education and a better future.

Amendments are also being proposed to the Dower Act. Spouses who wish to waive their rights pursuant to the Dower Act must sign a consent form and make an acknowledgement that they understand the implications of this waiver. This acknowledgement must be made "before a person authorized to take proof of the execution of instruments under the Land Titles Act," who then completes a certificate of acknowledgement. The proposed amendments will require all certificates of acknowledgement of the Dower Act to be completed by a lawyer.

Now, Madam Speaker, this is a significant change because before you could simply go to a lay notary public or lay commissioner and have the document notarized. I wanted to thank the former Attorney General, the minister of agriculture, today for his contribution to this change, as this will protect spouses in Alberta by ensuring that they receive independent legal advice and fully understand the consequences of the surrender of dower rights prior to making a formal waiver.

Bill 38 also amends the Family Law Act. This bill provides clarity around the rights and obligations of a person who is declared not to be the parent of a child. An example of when this situation may arise is when a person has acted or has been treated as the parent of a child. Parentage then becomes an issue, and then that person is subsequently declared by the court not to be the child's parent. Bill 38 will make it clear that the declaration does not affect any rights and duties that have been exercised or any interest in property that has been distributed before the declaration was made unless the court so otherwise orders.

Bereavement damages under the Fatal Accidents Act were also increased by a regulation earlier this year. Currently this act refers to the previous amounts, and the new amounts are in the regulation. Bill 38, Madam Speaker, moves the new amounts from the regulation to avoid confusion.

The amendment to the Judicature Act will also provide for appeals relating to an application for an order declaring a person a vexatious litigant. There was quite a bit of press this year on what exactly a vexatious litigant is. It's an order given in the jurisdiction of the court for restricting an individual's ability because they have abused processes in the past. This will fill a legislative gap by providing parties to a vexatious litigant proceedings before a judge of the Provincial Court with the same right of appeal as to parties of similar proceedings before a Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench or the Court of Appeal. Basically, in a sentence, Madam Speaker, under this change to the Judicature

Act everybody gets treated the same, regardless of whether they go to the Court of Queen's Bench or the Provincial Court of Alberta.

The amendment to the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act will expedite payments of compensation to claimants injured in what's called a hit-and-run accident. I've been a victim of one of those before. This will be done at the discretion of the administrator when the claim is less than $25,000, and this also reduces court costs.

Bill 38 also amends the Police Act to provide the Lieutenant Governor in Council with the authority to grant a serving senior police officer the designation of a commissioned officer. This would apply to those with the rank of inspector, superintendent, deputy chief of police, or chief of police.

The amendment to the Recording of Evidence Act removes obsolete references and corrects terminology to reflect changes in the management of transcript services in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, Bill 38 also amends the Special Areas Act to change the membership of the Special Areas Board from three members to four. This will allow for representation from each special area throughout the province. Currently board representation includes the government-appointed chair of the Special Areas Board and elected representatives from two of the three special areas on a rotational basis. There was also one special area not having board representation for a four-year period due to the 2012 amendment to the Local Authorities Election Act that has extended council terms from three to four years, effective October 21, 2013.

Bill 38 also includes amendments to three pieces of legislation affecting the courts, proposing that the Court of Appeal Act and the Court of Queen's Bench Act be changed to reflect the current complement of judges. The Provincial Court Act will also be amended under this bill to allow the Provincial Court to use electronic documents in proceedings, a significant step forward for the efficiency of our courts. Amendments also are proposed to provide the Lieutenant Governor in Council with the authority to make regulations specifying requirements and standards for electronic documents and electronic signatures, again a significant step forward to the modernization and the efficiency of our courts in this province.

Madam Speaker, the amendments to these pieces of legislation will help ensure that they're up to date and reflect changes in our province. In a rapidly growing province, over 4 million people today, it is especially important to make these changes so that our legislation is consistent and clear and can be understood by everyone in this province. Albertans expect and deserve clarity and consistency. With these amendments we'll help achieve that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I see many people signing Christmas cards, I will join them, and I will now move to adjourn debate on Bill 38.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 32

Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act

[Adjourned debate October 30: Mr. McIver]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm asking for support for second reading of the bill. As I expressed in my opening remarks, the bill essentially is intended to grant authority to municipalities to set the times when reduced speed limits take place in playground zones and also to grant the government the authority to designate lane usage on Alberta highways. This is a right that municipalities across this province have had for a long time. Of course, we are going to give ourselves the right to do that now.

Beyond that, Madam Speaker, the bill deals with a number of administrative and housekeeping amendments, some meant to match Criminal Code changes by the federal government and some to strengthen or clarify Alberta's current legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise, too, to talk about Bill 32. I support many, many of the things that are in this bill. I especially like the government's efforts to reduce red tape and to make things a bit more effective and a bit more efficient.

One of the elements of the bill is where the registrar has the authority now to suspend a licence instead of automatically having to cancel it. This will reduce some red tape in case it's just something that a person has to attend to and can bring back in two or three days, not making them go through the whole process of having to fill out the forms. In today's world and in our competitive economy it's important to have these things.

I also like the idea of what the hon. minister just said about municipalities having the authority to set playground hours and playground zones as they do with school zones now. My party and I have always been great believers in local grassroots decision-making, and this goes a step towards that as well.

There is an element in the bill where policemen don't have to necessarily seize vehicles either. It's important if they're two or three hours away from, say, a metropolitan centre or some site of access to a tow truck. They have access to look at other alternative measures to enforce the law but make it more cost-effective and timely for them to carry out their important work. Again, we're always believers in our front-line workers having the best opportunity to do that as possible.

There are three or four elements of the bill that are of a little bit of concern to me and our caucus, and we've discussed it. Hopefully, we'll have the opportunity in Committee of the Whole to talk about possible amendments to this. One of the elements of the bill that looks like it could have a great effect to streamline is that this will give the minister the authority to close highways that have not and do not have a surveyed road plan. It seems a waste of taxpayers' money if a road is not being used to have to go out and get an expensive survey to do it, then to ultimately close it. But I think we have to spend some time at Committee of the Whole discussing, to make sure that the road is not being used, to make sure that adequate notice is being served to adjacent landowners, to landowners, and to county residents who may be in need of using that road. Again, at Committee of the Whole I hope this is something we can talk about at some length.

High-occupancy vehicle lanes or lane-usage designations. Many, many pros to this: environmentally, speed, government being able to set direction. There has also been some controversy about: do our highways have the adequate space for it? In some parts of America an extra lane designated for this use only seems to work best. There's some concern about the communication process and the process of making sure we have adequate room for buses and cars to, you know, adequately use the high-occupancy vehicle lanes.

Tonight at our sustainable resource development committee we heard Edmonton Transit and Calgary Transit say that potentially high-occupancy vehicle lanes are great to promote the use of alternate fuels. Potentially this is something that in Committee of the Whole we can thrash out a bit, and we can earn our pay and make this legislation as good for all Albertans as we can.

An element to the bill that I think we are going to have to talk about and spend some time on in Committee of the Whole is that in the old law before a peace officer had the authority to stop someone, he had to have reasonable and probable grounds. Under this new law, Bill 32, the traffic amendment act, he only has to have reasonable grounds. In our due diligence, checking this with the legal community and people that practise in this area, reasonable and probable is a higher duty on the policeman than just reasonable is.

Our party has always been a great believer in civil rights. Our party has always been a great believer in protecting roads and protecting Albertans as well. There's a balance there, and there's a balance that, again, at Committee of the Whole I would like to hear some of the experienced minds in the Legislature have an opportunity to discuss. At this point in time I'm believing that this should go back to reasonable and probable grounds, but we can talk about that more in Committee of the Whole.

So, once again, Madam Speaker, in principle I approve of this bill, and I compliment the minister on his work. I look forward to Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 32? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, like this bill in general. I think it's got an awful lot going for it and will certainly have my support.

I have reservations about some of the things that my hon. friend from Cypress-Medicine Hat mentioned, particularly with regard to the HOV lane. I just can't see how that's going to work given the existing highways that we have. There may be a time and a place for it. Maybe we've arrived at it. If so, I think that means an investment in infrastructure, and I hope that we would have the studies done to determine the volume of traffic and the impact that this might have. If we're simply reducing the number of lanes available to the majority of the vehicles, that's going to create bottlenecks and choke points.

Where I've seen this – and I've travelled extensively in the U.S. in particular. We see this all over the place, but it's always in locations where you've got more than three lanes going in each direction. A fourth lane, then, is designated as an HOV lane. In some cases it's on highways that have five and six lanes going in each direction.

That's the reservation that I would have in giving this my wholehearted support, but I hope that we can, being reasonable people, discuss this and see just where it would work and how it would work and then make an informed decision. Perhaps those studies have already been done, but I've haven't seen them yet. I would like to know that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's always neat to get an opportunity to get here and speak in the Legislature to various bills and how they're going to impact people both today and tomorrow. It's the same enjoyment I take in adding a comment to every bill, and I understand the honour and privilege it is for all of us in this House to get to take part in this debate to discuss the issues of the day.

This is Bill 32, Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act. It has a lot of interesting aspects to it. In my view, some of it is positive; some of it I have questions on. Of course, we'll be adding amendments to try to, hopefully, make this bill a little bit better, a little bit stronger, and in some places pick up the legislation and move it forward in a positive fashion.

This bill seeks to do a great, great many things. It allows the minister to close unsurveyed highway lands and return the land to the Crown or to the municipality where the land is located. It allows the province to control highway lanes, investigate HOV, bus lanes, and lane reversal as municipalities do; allows police to immobilize a vehicle instead of seizing and removing it, allows the registrar to suspend a permit instead of just cancelling it, allows persons to appeal permit suspensions to the Transportation Safety Board. It allows the designation of military police as peace officers; updates the wording by removing "1987" from the Motor Vehicle Transportation Act, 1987, and by removing "and probable" from the term "reasonable and probable grounds"; clarifies and updates references to the Criminal Code; adds the roadside breathalyzer as a device to determine the presence of alcohol in the blood; and allows municipalities to regulate playground zones and determine the times in effect.

Now, given that this is the first time that I've had an opportunity to speak to this bill and, in fact, to go through it in any fashion – I was just able to tonight. In the main there are lots of reasonable pronouncements being put forward. In fact, I think that it is an excellent move, allowing municipalities to regulate playground zones. They are the level of government closest to their people and understand the traffic patterns that occur in any neighbourhoods and the forms and fashions that people drive in their neighbourhoods better than we do here at the Legislature. This is an excellent move and idea. The time has come, and I believe city councils and municipal councils are fully equipped to be able to make those decisions better than we are here.

I think it's a good move to allow the registrar to be able to suspend a permit instead of just cancelling it. This seems to be a logical move that allows for people to use a little bit of flexibility in our system of governance around driving motor vehicles that may lead to people being more productive and lead to a more seamless transition when infractions arise. Updating some of the language and references to a roadside breathalyzer simply updates the act to reference the current technologies at play and allows for greater clarity in what our laws of the land state that is allowed to happen on our highway systems.

Just allowing police to immobilize a vehicle instead of seizing and removing it: that sounds like a very reasonable solution, allowing our police officers to have the flexibility and the assessment tools to be able to assess any situation and do what's best in the interest of time and best in the interests of public safety. It seems to be a positive move as well.

Some areas I do have concern about. I'm not certain how these HOV lanes and bus lanes and the like are going to be reversed and traversed and in what form and fashion this is going to take place. I would hope and I probably believe that the minister has given this a decent assessment and understands areas of the province that this is suited to be held in and where it would be unsuitable. I assume he's going to take it on a case-by-case basis and look where this can be feasible and safe and the like. Nevertheless, some questions emerge as to whether, in fact, we're adding an additional safety hazard to the road, whether Alberta highways are set up to allow for this to happen at the current time or whether additional infrastructure inputs are needed and can be put in to see us go to HOV lanes or carpool lanes and the like.

There's no doubt that other jurisdictions around the world have gone to this form of moving traffic as it tends to allow for people to make better decisions on their travel and allows for more environmental forms of travel. Under the concept of this, I would definitely be supportive, but I'd have to be certain that we're not compromising safety of the roads and ensure that Alberta roads are in fact set up for the changes. I'm certain the minister in Committee of the Whole will enlighten us further as to where and what situations he has in mind for these changes.

I will have to look at this further, but I would like to take a closer look at the moving of the words "reasonable and probable grounds" to "reasonable grounds." I'm not certain, but I tend to believe that reasonable and probable grounds are stronger words and a stronger precedent that police officers must be held to when encroaching on civil liberties, when being able to pull a car and driver over across on the side of the road and what his search and seizure powers that emanate from the act flow from, from those terms. When you go down to reasonable grounds, it seems to me on its face to lose some of that value. Maybe the minister in Committee of the Whole can discuss whether other jurisdictions have gone to this wording, what the legal implications are, if any, and what the repercussions are for people on a civil liberties front.

So if we take a look at that, you know . . . [interjections] I hear some banter going on, so I'm assuming it's going to be explained to me at some point in time. The cavalry is coming, Madam Speaker, in regard to an explanation. That's what I'm led to believe, so I'm looking forward to that explanation as to why my spider sense should be at ease and not tingling like it is.

Again, some of these questions can be answered in committee. I'm certain the minister will enlighten me as to why these changes are being pursued, but on the whole some of these look like very positive moves for road safety, and I'm looking forward to a discussion of them.

If you look at the intricacies of the Alberta road system, we have highways, byways, and roads going everywhere in this province. In fact, what concerns me is that we often spend I think it's roughly $4 billion a year on building new roads and maintaining our existing roads. One of the interesting things is that under our current framework for building roads the dedicated cash that we raise through this only raises a billion dollars, and that's gasoline tax. So if we look at things as they are, if we look at what is actually going into subsidizing roads, if we're raising one billion dollars to pay for roads and we spend $4 billion a year on building and maintaining roads, it seems to me to be quite a gap, and obviously that gap is covered by our royalty system and our bringing in wealth from the result of our nonrenewable resources. It seems like much of that wealth goes back into the building of roads.

I believe, honestly, the Minister of Finance held a recent economic summit, part 2, or something . . .

Mr. Mason: It was more like a little hill.

Mr. Hehr: . . . a little hill, where he actually discussed new ways to build roads and pay for roads. As you are aware, I believe we have to take a much more conservative approach to governing this province in terms of our finances and developing a system where we actually pay for what we use in terms of income tax and/or other arrangements. We simply cannot go down the path of spending all this oil wealth in one generation like we have for the last 25 years.

It's simply, in my view, short-sighted public policy that doesn't allow us either predictable or sustainable funding, nor does it, frankly, manage even to keep the lights and heat on. I see right now that we're headed to a situation where our financial picture, because of our overreliance on fossil fuel revenues and our utter refusal to pay for what we use through income taxes or other mechanisms, simply has led to shortfalls in social infrastructure and physical infrastructure and any ability to plan for the future and any ability to save for a day when either the oil and gas run out, which is probably not for a long while, or, more importantly, the world could move on.

In my view, that's a much more likely scenario and one that the members of this House – I don't think anyone could put a firm date on it. In fact, I've been suggesting, and, hey, I could be totally wrong on this, that we may have 50 years left where we have a strong and viable oil and gas industry, that has no doubt made my life easier, my parents' lives easier, and has allowed us to do a lot of reasonable things here in Alberta. But I think it's up to all of us in the House to take the precautionary principle and plan to be ready for that day when it does come about that maybe it's not as present in our lives as it is now. So I point that out.

What started that rant was the fact that we spend $4 billion a year on roads and only raise approximately $1 billion in derived revenue to go to the building of those roads. Nevertheless, returning to the bill, it looks like it has some reasonable, logical pronouncements in it that may go a long way to enhancing safety on Alberta roads, and hopefully the minister will enlighten me when he gets up and speaks again, to alleviate some of the concerns I have, and we'll go from there.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who are interested in making comments to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo or asking questions?

Seeing none, we'll move to the next speaker. Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 32? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Very good, Madam Speaker. I know you struggle with the name of my constituency, but I appreciate the great effort that you're putting into learning it. Thank you.

I would like to speak briefly to this piece of legislation. I wanted to say that as Alberta grows, it's having increasing trouble or problems, congestion, particularly in and around Fort McMurray. One of my all-time favourites is the Deerfoot at rush hour, but other centres are increasingly showing more and more congestion. The QE II, which is probably a road many of us could drive in our sleep – we don't usually do that – is also plagued by congestion.

Just three weeks ago in Lethbridge the NDP held its convention, and we adjourned, actually, a bit early because of the storm that had settled in on the province north of Calgary. Some of us delayed our departure until the next day. I just wanted to put this on the record. I sent the minister a note about this already. The road was fine until just north of Red Deer. Even though the snow had stopped for hours – it was six, eight hours – there was a thick crust of very rutted ice on the highway that did cause a number of accidents. I saw one semi that went into an overpass just near Lacombe, and it slowed the traffic down. It was very dangerous. Many vehicles were in the ditch. The rest of the highway was clear, but this section for about 40 or 50 kilometres was a mess.

I took note of the company that was responsible for the road maintenance, and I kept an eye out for their vehicles. Their snowplows were pathetic. They were basically dump trucks with a blade on the front. There were only two of them that I could see, and they were doing shoulders and exit ramps while this traffic was all careening and trying to stay in the lane and going at about 50 or 60 kilometres an hour. What they needed was heavier equipment. In this case I think probably graders might have been what was required.

I was very surprised that the road was in that condition considering the length of time since it had stopped snowing. This, in my view, has to do with lack of appropriate controls when we contract our road maintenance. Of course, we in the NDP would prefer not to contract the road maintenance, but I believe that even if you're going to contract most of the road maintenance, there needs to be some component of additional support from the province in terms of heavier equipment or at least stricter controls and requirements placed on the contracting parties.

The other thing that I want to sort of get off my chest about this, Madam Speaker, is the congestion on the QE II. I've been driving that road for many, many years. It used to be quite a pleasant drive, not too bad, unless you were on a Sunday night on a long weekend, and then you got what you deserved, I guess. It has become very heavily congested, and the system that the province has tried to get drivers to use, which is to drive in the right lane and pass in the left lane, which was working pretty well, is breaking down because both lanes are full of traffic. It really reduces the efficiency of the road.

I notice as well that there are lots of trucks passing other trucks or passing slower vehicles, which creates a real block on traffic. It often takes them 10 or 15 minutes to pass another truck because the differential in speed is very small. I think it's time that the ministry did some studies, and maybe the minister can respond to this because I'm sure they've done some studies about whether or not it's time to add an additional truck lane on the QE II and to have a designated truck lane as a way of reducing congestion on that highway.

I know there are a lot of people that are very anxious for high-speed rail, but I think that that is some time off, Madam Speaker, and until the government can resolve the bitumen bubble, which seems to be the cause of every problem, or otherwise just get better at financial management in the province, I think that it is going to be some time before that can be resolved.

So, having talked a little bit about that, I think this bill, which permits the minister to close highways and bridges that are unsurveyed and removes the authority of urban and rural municipalities to control their own highways or bridges if the minister desires – the concern, I think, that we have, and this may have been addressed by the minister because he was indirectly quoted . . . [interjections] That is a quote in a news article, Mr. Minister, without quotations. The minister said that roads are good as opposed to the minister said, "Roads are good." That is something that I don't think the minister would disagree with.

Maybe he could clarify the plans for bus lanes. Surely, as the article implied, the minister does not mean that we would be driving buses, putting bus lanes where shoulders are now. I think that was a concern. I know that the Minister of Justice wants to have less congested roads as well for his blue vans. [interjections] I think it's an inside joke. Nobody else got it.

So, Madam Speaker, reducing congestion on roads and improving safety is good for all Albertans, as is permitting municipalities to tailor an approach to school zone needs.

I might just throw this in, Madam Speaker. This is the bill that the minister announced with his billboard before it was introduced in the House, so he must have great confidence in the discernment of his caucus colleagues in terms of their support for this bill.

I have some other questions, and one is the high-occupancy vehicle lanes. Where are they going to be put? Are they going to be put on 63? And so on. I could go through more. I have more comments about the specifics of the bill, Madam Speaker, but given that this is second reading, I just wanted to indicate that with a few concerns yet to be addressed, this looks like a good bill to us, and we would be prepared to support it at this time.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any comments or questions to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: I'd just like to make the comment that I will verify the hon. member's statement that the roads on the night in question, in particular following Red Deer up towards Edmonton, seemed to be in a state of disrepair, and there appeared to be a lack of attention and a great deal of danger out there on the road that evening. In fact, I have even more so noticed in that time that that apparent stretch of the road, the Red Deer to Leduc part of the road, is consistently, on an ongoing basis, not quite as well maintained as south of Red Deer. I'm not sure what parameters are in play. Maybe the weather is slightly different there.

I guess that on that fact I'm glad that the hon. member actually wrote the minister in this regard. I thought about it, but sometimes I think about it and don't always get to it. I'm glad you did. I would just like to confirm that that is happening. I was wondering: does the hon. member think it's due to a lack of capacity in having government services available in that regard, like, not having our own ability to clean the roads and service the roads in that capacity or maybe not close enough to detail to our contractor? Can you shed any light on why you think that may be happening?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, hon. member and Madam Speaker. In my view this is a result of the contracting out of roadway maintenance in the province of Alberta. We believe that a significant capacity in-house is required in order to make sure that our major roads are cleaned promptly and satisfactorily after a major snowfall weather event. There's a real history, as you mention, of problems in this section of road. I remember, going back 10 or 12 years, that there was a major problem with this road that one of the columnists of the day, I think Neil Waugh formerly of the Edmonton Sun, wrote about rather extensively.

We think it's very difficult to ensure proper roadway maintenance with external contracts, and the contractors will always try to manage the contract in a way that minimizes their costs. In this particular case it was my observation that they had insufficient and inadequate equipment to properly deal with a thick layer of ice that was on the highway at that time.

The Acting Speaker: On 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, would like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood a question. In question period I guess two weeks ago now I drew to light that one of the road contractors had been fined I think it was 200 times in the last three or four years over not performing. Our Member for Calgary-Shaw today mentioned that on 22X, the ring road, that 70 some-thousand-dollar fine per day is now in the $3 million vicinity, and the answer appeared to be no end in sight to that. It made me think of when we've talked about P3s in this House and the government's claim that for 30 years they can hold these companies accountable for maintenance and debt financing and these kinds of things. I'm wondering about your thoughts on whether you think that this government can hold the P3 companies accountable for 30 years when it comes to maintenance.

Mr. Mason: Well, hon. member, that's a really good question, and I've often wondered that myself. You know, the government is going to be here in 30 years, but we don't know which companies are going to be here. You know, further, we can't find out all the details of the contract because it's considered a business's confidential information, and it's not even subject to the freedom of information legislation that we do have. So I think that, yes, that's a very, very serious concern.

We don't support P3s. In a number of instances the government has had to take back these contracts because the company that got the contract finds they're unable to perform. They can't make money on the terms of the agreement. It doesn't make sense to us to proceed in that way. What we would do is ensure that there are sufficient assets and skilled staff within the Department of Transportation in order to take good care of our roads.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 32 in second reading? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like many of my other colleagues here said, this bill has the potential to possibly do some very good things in the form of efficiencies. I think that where we're at, if I particularly heard some of my colleagues correctly, is that this bill also has the potential to get unanimous consent across this Assembly, provided that there's some clarity on some of the concerns that will be brought forward in Committee of the Whole. I think that there will be some amendments brought forward; I've heard talk of that.

But I do have questions concerning language and, in particular, reasonable and probable, reasonable cause and probable cause. I'm open to some of the legal minds in this Assembly to explain, but as I understand it, it is not the same definition. It is actually uniquely different in terms of law enforcement and how that applies to what the minister is proposing in this bill.

To optimize existing highway infrastructure, that's hard not to support. That is something that I think is easy to support. So I would like to see that happen. But I will tell you, having some experience on the roads throughout North America that have HOV lanes, high-occupancy vehicle lanes, the critical factor that I think is important when we implement these is: do they get used properly? I'm not getting at the violators. Do we end up with empty lanes and a bigger tie-up because people are not adapting? It is a problem that some cities have experienced; it's a problem that other cities have not. Again, it all goes back to efficiency.

In the process of debating this bill and looking to get as many MLAs to support this bill, I was wondering if the minister could answer that concern at some point on how this government will evaluate it once it's implemented. Will there be an ongoing evaluation process to really look at the efficiencies if an HOV lane is created, say, for the Deerfoot? It is something that you want to do, but you want to get the most efficiency out of it. Just doing something doesn't necessarily mean you're always efficient. It always has to be re-evaluated over time. Of course, as most people know, there are generally times when HOV lanes are opened back up to single drivers, and that is generally posted. I think most jurisdictions have implemented that. I found that to be more efficient than just the HOV lanes that are solely restricted.

Again, it is the number of questions that I think some of my colleagues have on this side of the House, in my caucus. All in all, I think that the idea of bringing this bill forward and creating more efficiencies is something that generally anybody can support.

I'd like to ask the minister if he possibly could at some point in the process answer the question dealing particularly with military police. Will their jurisdiction then be increased? How would that be perceived in the public, particularly near those military bases? How would that authority be used? I'm not necessarily opposed to that because it actually provides more efficiency, but I also know that there is this overlap in agreement in law enforcement, any law enforcement, when they have to cross into another law-enforcement jurisdiction. I just would like clarity on how that crossover on law enforcement will take place and what the public can expect by having the military police allowed to enforce this new act.

These are some of what I think are basic concerns. They're not overly troubling. It would be nice to have some clarification. I would hope that this government would be open to any amendments that come forward, providing the amendments provide clarity and consistency within the act. I don't think that's an unreasonable request to come from this side of the House. I think it would be reasonable to presume that the minister would love nothing more than to have a full consensus to support this bill and to get on with the business.

With that, Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I look forward to the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a) for comments and questions. The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just by way of comment and, hopefully, some clarification that's been requested along the way two or three times now on the issue of reasonable and probable grounds versus reasonable grounds, my information here is that there was a Supreme Court case in 1993, entitled Barron versus Canada, in which the court ruled that reasonable and probable grounds and reasonable grounds are equivalent. I shall endeavour to have that looked up and tabled in the House as soon as I can, but I think that might be the clarification that several hon. members here have asked about.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We still have four minutes left under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have some spics that I have to cool off by speaking. Thank you for the resource. I will look it up, too. Providing that it is consistent with your understanding, I don't see where there would be a problem. Again, there are enough legal minds in here, and if there is any inconsistency, I hope we can correct that.

Again, on the face value of first reading this bill, to support a bill that would make us more efficient and help the traffic flow, particularly in our major urban areas, to create a better safety system for our commuters, that is something that, I think, once convinced, I will definitely support. I think my colleagues will. I think that all we need is to make sure that the language is suitable, and then this minister could probably have a consensus right across the floor. I think that would be a very good thing to show that we can have nonpartisan work and nonpartisan support for a bill. I would like to see that happen, and I look forward to the debate.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: We still have a few minutes left under 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who wish to comment or ask questions of the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre?

Seeing none, we'll go back to the bill. Are there any other members who would like to speak in second reading on Bill 32?

The hon. minister to close.

Mr. McIver: Closed.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 32 read a second time]

Bill 37 Statutes Repeal Act

[Adjourned debate November 7: Mr. Olson]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, because someone did speak on your behalf, if you speak again, you will be closing debate, and I see that we have other speakers, so we'll have to wait for you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm sure we can make this quick, Madam Speaker. Regarding Bill 37, Statutes Repeal Act, it's obviously a piece of legislation that has our province catching up with the rest of Canada and implementing a formal process to review unproclaimed legislation, and we have a lot of unproclaimed legislation.

One of the pieces of legislation that I still cannot figure out why this government has not proclaimed – every time we have a discussion on unproclaimed legislation I keep bringing it up – is the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. We need you to implement that and proclaim it. That is absolutely an important piece of legislation. We've been saying it for years. Proclaim it. It's important. There's no reason for it not to be proclaimed. That was the first Wildrose private member's bill, actually, that ever passed in this Legislature, from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. It's a very good piece of legislation, not because of that fact but because it is a serious issue. I hope that in the spirit of making a formal process to streamline and review unproclaimed legislation, they will use that new-found spirit to proclaim important pieces of legislation such as the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. There really is no reason whatsoever not to get going on that.

There are many laws on the books in Alberta that we need to go through, of course, on an ongoing basis to clean up legislation, repeal old and outdated laws, and so forth. One of the things that our caucus, the Wildrose caucus, has proposed and something that former Premier Ralph Klein had on and off throughout his tenure here as Premier was essentially a dumb rules committee. I think that we need to have another dumb rules committee.

What the dumb rules committee would do – and I don't know if that's exactly what it was called, but that's kind of what it was known as in the public – was to look at rules and regulations that were outdated or unnecessary or old and not needed but also look at rules and regulations that were impeding economic growth, probably not on purpose, probably unintentionally. They would look for those things, and the public and ministers and private members and so forth could come to that committee and say: look, this is a real problem, and it's really quite unnecessary, so perhaps you could get rid of it. There was, I believe – well, I don't know. I thought Mr. Ty Lund was in charge of it for a while, but I could be wrong. Whoever it was, I think it's a great idea, and I think that the government should think about bringing it back.

I could think of some of these health regulations, for example, where during the floods we had restaurants that were opening up, essentially, street kitchens. These were high-profile restaurants, restaurants that have a very long, good track record for food safety. They opened up street kitchens to feed volunteers during the flood, and AHS came and shut them down, citing various different regulations for food safety and so forth. You know, obviously you need food safety regulations, but again that's something that maybe could be looked at and said: "Look, you know what? There's obviously a regulation here that is hampering relief efforts when they're needed and just good Samaritanism, if that's a word, out there." Maybe that's something that we could look at.

I've talked to many senior Albertans, particularly senior women, just salt of the earth people, who run different fundraisers. You know, there are 10 or 15 of them that will get together, and they'll bake pies and all kinds of food, like a bake sale, to raise money. These folks have had problems in the past because they're not using, for example, stainless steel kitchens all the time to cook their pies and so forth. They've had problems with AHS, again, coming in and shutting them down or making them upgrade their community kitchen, which they don't have the money to do. Nobody has died or even gotten sick in the past off of these things in those cases. Like, it's just overboard, and it's silly. You want to make sure that you have these regulations, but there are times when you need to review those regulations and say: "You know what? Maybe this is going a little bit too far."

Again, in this spirit of, obviously, looking at unproclaimed legislation to hopefully proclaim it a little faster and also just cleaning up old, outdated, and stupid regulations that hamper volunteerism or economic growth or whatever, I think that the government should look at, perhaps, bringing a stupid rules committee back and letting them do some good work because there are a lot of stupid rules out there.

Of course, fewer laws mean, generally speaking, smaller government. Not only that, but if you have fewer dumb rules and fewer silly regulations that are outdated and unnecessary to enforce, that also means that enforcement personnel, whether it be in the environmental enforcement area or the law enforcement area or health safety and so forth, can go out and enforce things that do matter, that actually will improve public safety or food safety and what have you. It allows you to make sure that you can have those civil servants doing the things that will actually help Albertans rather than focusing time and effort on shutting down local bake sales and so forth or keeping volunteers from having a nice hot meal while they're cleaning up floods or other community problems and so forth.

The Wildrose will introduce two amendments to Bill 37, and I will get into more detail about those, obviously, in Committee of the Whole. I hope that the minister will speak with us, speak with our Justice critic, his counterpart here, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, on it. The first is an idea to reduce the period from every five years to every three years for reviewing this unproclaimed legislation and outdated laws and so forth.

The second is to ensure that every bill that is being repealed under this formal process will be voted on through individual motions, ensuring that a fulsome debate is permitted and that the government can't use this process to sneak through – not that they would ever be a sneaky government. We know that they would never try to ram something through like Bill 28, for example, without proper consultation and so forth. But we don't want them to use this process to sneak through and repeal different legislation that is not housekeeping in nature or something that, perhaps, isn't outdated and old, that needs to be left alone, and so forth. We think that it's very important that each individual law, et cetera, is voted on separately. We don't mind having it all at once, but let's try to have specific votes on each of them. It shouldn't take too long. I mean, there are a lot of dumb rules, but hopefully over time the amounts of votes could decrease and we could have, you know, fewer bad rules to throw out.

That's it for my view on Bill 37, and I look forward to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We'll move on to the next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. Well, this is an interesting bill. It repeals a whole bunch of sections of a whole bunch of bills. It's interesting to get a look at this, to take a step back and look at the big picture. You find that there's an enormous amount of legislation in this province that has never been put into effect, never proclaimed, and generally was either unnecessary, wrong, or unconstitutional. That surprised me.

Well, it didn't surprise me that much. But it surprised me a bit to see it all here in aggregate, to see this collection of legislation that this government at the time told the Assembly was necessary and essential and we had to have it. Opposition often put forward amendments to take some of the stuff out, but it had to go in, according to the government, and in it went, and now we're taking it all out. It's not bad that we're taking it out, but it just strikes me as a bit dumb to put it in in the first place, Madam Speaker. I think that it really illustrates a problem, a lack of foresight on the part of the PC government.

I mean, there are some bigger examples that I want to get to. Maybe Airdrie can remind me of the numbers. [interjections] Bill 50. There was 36 and 24 and 19. I remember Bill 19 – I remember it well – where I was single-handedly taking on this attack on private property because the Wildrose wasn't even here. Here I was, the NDP standing up for property owners in the province. Of course, the government realized later on – well, I mean they basically almost got skinned alive in rural Alberta – that they had to change it and that there was a better way to do it, so many of the amendments we had put forward were actually incorporated in some of the bills which I will refer to as retreat bills, when they back down.

That's a separate example. But, you know, how many hours do we spend debating this legislation? How many hours and how much money does the government spend having lawyers draft this legislation?

Mr. Denis: Got to keep the lawyers in business.

Mr. Mason: I know that the hon. Justice minister wants to keep the lawyers in business, as he just said, but perhaps we could do it more productively. That, I think, is kind of the point here.

There's nothing wrong with getting rid of most of this stuff, but I suppose we'd like to ask the government to explain why, when they promised a tax credit for tradespeople on their tools, it's never been proclaimed. We passed something in the Landlord's Rights on Bankruptcy Act, a section that is ultra vires provincial jurisdiction. Why did we do that? Why did the government keep bringing forward these bills, ignoring opposition amendments, passing the bills, only to turn around and repeal them en masse up to 20 years later? I'd like to ask the hon. Justice minister if he's confident that we've got it right this time. Have we actually fixed all the legislation that needs to be fixed, or are we going to have to go back and do it again?

Madam Speaker, I did want to make one positive reference to this legislation, and that is sections 2 to 5, that generate a report on not-enforced legislation and automatically repeal legislation that isn't dealt with by the end of the year. You know, I often wonder why it is in our system that once the Legislature has passed a piece of legislation, the government still has the authority not to put it in place. This is a very undemocratic aspect of our parliamentary system, in my opinion. Once the Legislature passes something as a law, it should be the law, and the government should have the responsibility to enforce it. But they've got this thing where they can have it both ways. They can pass legislation, but they don't have to put it into force. We see that time and time again, sometimes for political convenience.

A long time ago they passed a Health Act that set up a charter of rights and people that were supposed to go around and help people navigate the system. Instead of making the system more navigable for everybody, they set up an office that can perhaps help a few thousand people at best in a year out of the hundreds and hundreds of thousands of people that are involved in the health care system. Only a very badly designed, complex, Byzantine health care system would require a special office to help people navigate it. That should be the role of the nurse practitioner or your family physician, Madam Speaker, quite frankly.

Anyway, I'm a little off track. The point that I wanted to make is that the government did not proclaim that legislation and attempted today, with much fanfare, to proclaim a piece of legislation passed a long time ago by this House as a political stunt to try and show Tory delegates that the Premier was doing a good job for something that's coming up next weekend. That's how the government plays with legislation.

When we pass a law in this place, Madam Speaker, it should be a law that's needed, and it should be a law that's well thought out, well drafted, and well debated. It should become the law, and it shouldn't just become a political plaything for the government, that they can hold it back if they don't want to put it in place. They can pass a piece of legislation for show, that they have no intention of ever using, and then not proclaim it, or they can pass something and then sit on it until they want to get a second announcement out of it just at a critical time politically for them. These things are an abuse of the legislative process and ought not be allowed.

I think the government has much to be accountable for with respect to its legislative agenda and its lack of planning and foresight, and I think it would be far better to simply pass good legislation in the first place than bring forward statutes repeal acts.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just have a comment and then a question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. One of the acts that actually is repealed here is the Masters and Servants Act. It may seem somewhat of an absurd title in 2013. But my point is, just contrary to this member's comments, that we can't just look at things always as hindsight being 20/20. You have to look at it in the context of that particular time. Perhaps a hundred years ago, when the Masters and Servants Act was relevant, it was something that was very important. Clearly, it's an act that is obsolete, is not even used. We believe in governing less in certain areas, and obviously we have a bill like this that will institute a process to ensure that we do govern less.

I wanted to just beseech the member. Earlier he had made a comment about me driving a blue van. I actually do not drive a blue van. They're rather expensive, and it's kind of costly to have one on a minister's salary. This act does not mention any blue vans, Madam Speaker, and I'm wondering if this member could comment, actually, on whether or not he thinks that there should be reference to blue vans in this legislation.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I'm shocked to my core. The minister does not realize that my comment with respect to blue vans was to do with a previous act, and he's therefore completely out of order.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was wondering if the hon. member could answer a question for me after he gets finished with his speech on the bill. Who makes the decision on whether it gets proclaimed or doesn't get proclaimed, and what is the process for making that decision once a bill passes the third reading and has left this House? Clearly, there must be a democratic process in place that says that we're going to proclaim this bill versus not proclaim a bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, hon. member. Well, after full public, open debate by a Legislature, representing all of the people of Alberta, the bill then passes to third reading, and then it goes and sits in limbo. I don't think that's a correct political term, but it sits there until the cabinet decides to proclaim it. The cabinet, meeting secretly and, of course, only representing the government and one party, makes a decision on whether or not what the Legislature has democratically decided is good enough or not.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, would like to address a question to the hon. member regarding the Wheat Board Money Trust Act. I find it interesting that the member did not address the disbursement of those funds. I was wondering if he could explain to me his logic and reasoning there. There are some sums of money that have been in that fund since 1920. I was wondering if he could expound on that.

Mr. Mason: Actually, Madam Speaker, I would be unable to do that at this time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any more questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any more speakers on Bill 37, Statutes Repeal Act? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to speak to Bill 37, Statutes Repeal Act. I must say that I actually enjoyed the comments of both the Member for Airdrie and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in regard to this bill. It spurred some thoughts of my own, and I will endeavour to try and put them on the record in some reasonable fashion forthwith.

If you look at this bill, it does seem to encompass a whole host of repeals and revisions and amendments that are no longer going to be needed or necessary in this province. I guess we can look at it as: that's a positive. It's the government doing its due diligence, looking at whether or not legislation on the books is serving its purpose at this time. It goes about a relative process that eliminates stuff that is not necessary. I guess the government has to be applauded for doing that from time to time and trying to streamline legislation to make sure there's a method to the madness or some rhyme to the reason and the like.

As both members pointed out, often, from this side of the House anyway, it doesn't appear that that's necessarily the case when the abundance of legislation gets thrown onto the floor of this Assembly, seemingly gets passed, and then, we learn, goes into limbo. I think that was actually a very effective place. I'm not sure if limbo actually exists anymore. In fact, I think the Catholic Church has moved away from having limbo as an actual method in its doctrine. I learned this from my father, actually. Growing up, limbo was a concept and a construct, but I believe that it is no longer in church doctrine, and they've been enlightened on that front. Nevertheless, in the context of legislation I believe that was a proper term.

I'm looking at this and the like, and some thoughts came to my mind on how at times we try to put fences around rules or legislation that is in place that, to use a term, tries to tie the hands of future governments. That inevitably leads to us making a political announcement and a big much-ado-about-an-announcement that legislation is coming into place that serves a political purpose, but it actually serves to tie the hands of future governments and doesn't allow them to react in the manner that they need to.

In fact, I don't like it when governments do that, and I've seen it from time to time here in Alberta. I guess the most cogent example of that would be when around 2005 this government made the law that we shall never go into debt again. Essentially, it was the government of the day in full froth and bravado saying that this was going to be a rule to guide us for all time.

We put that into legislation, and in my view it was short-sighted and done for a political purpose. It was political messaging. When we do legislation on that front, that serves a political purpose and not necessarily a legislative purpose, that leads to problems later on. The problem again came up this year, when we needed to take an act regarding our fiscal framework, that actually allowed us to see things in a reasonable and clear fashion, and it had to be changed because of a political rule that got put into place, that thou shalt not go into debt ever again. The government of the day found itself in a spot that, because of a fiscal structure that, in my view, is unsustainable and unable to allow for government planning, allowed them to go back and rewrite the rule that said, "Now we can go back into debt again," and that's how we have the new I believe it's called the Fiscal Management Act.

I see that as part of the trouble here when we write legislation. It tends to be for a political purpose, not a legislative purpose, and allows the government of the day to then go out and do their messaging. I guess another example of that that recently happened was in this legislative session on Bill 28, when the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs put forward his amendment to the MGA that was going to allow him to have capacity to go in and solve problems that were happening on regional planning boards.

I said at the time that I understood full well the reasons why the minister was going about this and that it actually had a valid purpose to it. The trouble was that he tried to do the legislation not in an open and transparent fashion but merely by tinkering with existing legislation, trying to make it appear as though he was only dealing with the Edmonton capital region when, in essence, he was looking at being able to do this throughout the province of Alberta instead of putting in a proposed bill that would have outlined in a reasonable and fulsome fashion the reasons why the minister was changing the process, some various fences around what he was trying to do, some definitions and some ability for regional planning organizations to have an ability to try to come to a consensus and try to solve their own problems before the minister would intervene.

We saw in that instance a government that tried to do governing by stealth – that was what I would like to say – where they were trying to achieve a purpose in a closed-door manner. It wasn't open and transparent. Not that I didn't understand the minister's reasons for doing it – I understood that – but if he was going to do the legislation, he had to make it more open, more transparent, set out the reasons why the minister was moving forward on Bill 28 and the necessity of having the minister play a role to break some deadlocked regional planning mechanisms like the Calgary Regional Partnership and the Edmonton capital region.

A lot of times I see a lot of this stuff needing to be repealed and reworked because we're trying to do things with a political purpose, not really with a legislative purpose. I think that if the government of the day would keep that in mind and try to introduce legislation that has reason and common sense to it and stop with the political theatrics and trying to do legislation by stealth or the like, it would serve this province in a much more reasonable fashion and allow them to govern in a much better fashion, and people would be appreciative of that fact.

This is an interesting act where we see that pivoting a little bit, Madam Speaker. I, too, have seen legislation in my time in this House that gets passed, and then we never see it come in to be the law of the land. We never see the final stamp of approval put on that act. I, too, would be remiss in the fact that I think that legislation, if it has gone through the process of us debating it, of us working hard to make it better, and if the government of the day believes that it was worth bringing to the floor of this House and worth being passed, it should be assented to relatively quickly. Otherwise, why waste our time? Why go through the act in itself and the like? I would agree with the hon. members who spoke before me in that oftentimes we are just using these as political documents that we can wave around, announce, reintroduce, gerrymander, and save for a later date when it would serve a political purpose, not actually bettering the lives of the citizens of Alberta.

We should always remember that when we do our legislation. We should keep that in mind, and whether we're serving our political ends or are actually bettering the Alberta people's lives, we should try and adopt the second of those two principles.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or ask questions of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo?

Seeing none, I would ask: are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 37 in second reading? The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General under 29(2)(a) or to close debate?

Mr. Denis: Actually, neither, Madam Speaker. I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 37.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 31

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

[Debate adjourned November 7: Ms Blakeman speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who would like to speak in third reading to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Is there anyone else that can go first? Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you've already spoken to this bill in third reading.

Mr. Mason: I have?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, sir.

Mr. Mason: I can't believe that. Okay. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know that I surely have not spoken to this bill in third reading. I did, however, talk about it and feel it's important on a number of fronts. Certainly, it's important to measure what we're doing, and as I understand it, this strangely named bill is all about measuring. I do believe that unless things are measured and monitored, they can't be improved. It's important for that measurement to be as objective as possible, and I think the bill intends that it be objective. Nevertheless, there remain the powers in the minister and the cabinet to appoint, and in fact that seems to be the intent.

So I think that on the face of it, recognizing that we are an exporting province and we wish to be able to export to customers around the world, some of whom are in jurisdictions that are very concerned about the environment, are looking to us to give them the reassurance that we are developing and bringing our resources to market in an environmentally sustainable way, that we're friendly towards the environment, that's an important perception. We know that perception is reality, so we have to do it in a way that is, in fact, real and genuine and not just showy, not just in a way that some might suspect as pretense.

We have good laws in our province. I think that if those laws were enforced, we wouldn't be having some of the issues that we are having with the perception of our province, that are allowing some to use it as an excuse to perhaps badmouth the industries, particularly the resource industries, and I think that's a shame.

Many people who have served in this Legislature have helped develop some of these laws, and I think they developed them in good faith and voted to support them in good faith. I know that we on this side of the House have been supportive in the sense of proposing amendments that we have thought would help in fact do some of the things that the names of the bills might lead one to believe was their intended purpose, but we've learned to our chagrin and dismay that that hasn't always been the case.

I think it's important that we get this bill right and that it does what our customers want it to do and what the people of Alberta want it to do and, I truly believe, what the industry itself wants to do. But I think it begins with, again, enforcing the laws that we have now as opposed to simply proposing new ways to do the old things. New can be good, but just because you can do something, doesn't mean you should.

I hope that this bill will achieve its stated purpose, but I think the methodology is still a little suspect. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or ask questions of the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner? Is this under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes. I would like to ask the member: he had made some comment in regard to the formation of a new science board that's reported in this bill, and I was wondering if he could comment a little more on his concerns.

Mr. Bikman: Well, again, we've talked about this, of course, and we're assured that there will be some requirements, some sort of screening that suggests that the background of these people will actually be in science and in the science regarding specifically the areas where they're going to be evaluating what the measurements and what the data mean. We've also mentioned that we think this data needs to be available to all the stakeholders, those who may be, in fact, guilty of not being as attentive to things as they need be, but there need to be specific qualifications laid out in the bill to make it a good bill and to enhance the perception of it being a good bill.

It isn't enough just to say that we've got an act that's going to protect the environment. If it's really all about measuring it, we want to make sure that measuring is done properly and that the data that those measurements produce are converted to information in an appropriate way. The actual data themselves, objectively evaluated by customers and potential customers that are looking to see if we are doing our job: our own citizens, in fact, can verify that by seeing the source data and seeing what parts of that data were actually used to produce the information that's being released and what parts were ignored and why they were ignored. If it was redundancy, well that's one thing, but if it was because it wasn't in support of the conclusion we wanted to reach, then that's prejudicial, and I think it will be detrimental and contrary to the intent of the act.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There are two and a half minutes left on 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who wish to comment or question the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner?

Seeing none, are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 31 in third reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief as I've spoken to this bill twice.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. We've been told that you have spoken in third reading to this bill.

Mr. Hehr: I will stand down. Already sitting, though.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, sir.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate November 6: Mr. Oberle]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 41, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013. You know, I'm sure, as the hon. associate minister said in second reading earlier, this is mainly just a housekeeping bill. There's not a lot of meat to this. It is nice to see that the government is extending this beyond its original mandate. I believe that if we've learned anything in the last eight months in this province, it is that individuals and those families and service provider networks, self-advocates, and a lot of people are very passionate about our services for those in the PDD system, and this bill does go to strengthen the council's role.

But I do have a couple of observations that I've noticed in here, and a lot of it just seems like platitude and fluff if I'm being honest. I'll give some examples as to why I say that because it's not just me trying to oppose this. I will absolutely be supporting this, but it just seems odd to me that we would be adding clauses in here. Section 3(1) presently reads that the council may

- (a) advise, report to and make recommendations to the Government on matters relating to the opportunity for full and equal participation of persons with disabilities in the life of the Province . . .
- (d) identify and review current and emerging issues and policies at all levels of government affecting and concerning the status of persons with disabilities.

But we're going to add something in that says:

- (g) advise the Government regarding the alignment between policies and strategies affecting persons with disabilities and the principles of the United Nations Convention.

I understand the UN convention. I don't understand why we need to basically state the exact same thing again. Perhaps the minister may be open to just changing some of these to condense this a little bit.

Another example, Madam Speaker, of something along the same lines is that if we look at presently section 3(1)(f), it says:

- (f) make referrals and recommendations to and consult and collaborate with all levels of government, government agencies, volunteer associations, businesses, universities and other persons on matters affecting and concerning the status of persons with disabilities.

Now we're going to add in:

- (i) advise the Government on reviews and development of policies, programs and initiatives and their implementation with respect to the effect on services to persons with disabilities.

I just don't understand what it is that we're actually achieving by adding this in. It just sounds like we're repeating ourselves somewhat. It just may be, I guess, justifying the paper that this bill is written on, but it doesn't really seem to add a whole lot to it.

One thing – and I don't know if the minister is able to comment on this as I speak to it. There is a quick question that perhaps he could address when he closes debate if he is going to close debate today. It may be a little bit difficult to get the attention of said minister, but I will speak away. They are amending section 4 to insist that the Council must include persons with disabilities or individuals who have involvement and experience with disability issues.

I absolutely agree. A big step forward. This is a winner. I think that it's kind of a shame that we've had this act in place for as long as we have without that being mandated in this act, but I think, you know, for whatever reason better late than never. What I would like to see and perhaps . . . [interjection] A quick second. It wasn't meant to be, I suppose.

I'm wondering if the minister would comment on whether or not there would be room to implement . . .

Mr. Oberle: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order has been called.

The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, the subject matter of that hon. member's speech should be confined to his thoughts on the bill. Whether or not I'm listening is hardly for the debate on the bill. As you may notice, I am in fact listening, but I do also choose the right to completely ignore him. I would ask him to confine his remarks to the bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie on the point of order.

Mr. Anderson: I don't know what citation he's using on that, but I think that the member was obviously commenting on the bill, wanting the minister to be interested and listening. He obviously cares very much about the opinion of the minister. It's clear the minister doesn't care very much for the opinion of the member in return, from his own comments.

Obviously, there's no point of order here. I'm sure the member will continue to comment on the bill, and whether the minister is listening or not, as the minister says, is completely up to him. He has every right not to listen or to listen as he wishes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I think that we have established that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw should speak on the bill.

Mr. Wilson: Acknowledged, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Now everyone is listening.

Mr. Wilson: Clearly.

Debate Continued

Mr. Wilson: I guess that regardless of whether or not I'll get a response, I'll just say what I was going to say, which was that I was wondering if it would be, I guess, appropriate to also include individuals who are part of the service provider network in this province that are dealing with the delivery of services to persons with developmental disabilities and whether or not that is something that the minister may consider adding in as a mandated section of this act because we do have it mandated that not more than 15 members will be on this council and that no more than two of them will be Members of the Legislative Assembly. I just believe that with that latitude perhaps we should consider including those who are, you know, dealing every day with individuals and clients in this system. That was basically the thrust of what I was hoping the minister may comment on as he closes debate.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will gladly sit down. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to this bill in second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's truly a privilege to speak to Bill 41, Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013. To be fair to the government, I am very happy that they do have a Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. In fact, it's been in place since 1988. These amendments, at least at first blush, without going into the act in full fashion as of yet, at least on appearances try to integrate some of the goals and aspirations of the disabled community in a more expansive role in line with what the government's policy of the day is into the various facets of people with disabilities in Alberta, both the successes and the struggles that they're having, and having their voice at the table to hopefully advise government on not only existing policy but future policy and the direction of what is going to happen with government policy as it respects the wide range of people with disabilities in this province.

If we look at this on a broader scale, I think estimates are that anywhere from – I'm pulling numbers out of the sky right now – 10 per cent, possibly more, of the Alberta population has a disability at this present time. In fact, you know, if all of us hope to get to be age 75 or over, which I think most of us in this House wish to do, 50 per cent of the population over 75 has some form of disability. With those being the numbers, I think it's pretty important for us to not only consider, hopefully, in an altruistic fashion what happens to people who are living with disabilities in Alberta but also for selfish and pragmatic reasons to be concerned about the plight of people with disabilities because if we live to be 75 or older, most likely 1 out of 2 of us will have a disability. That's just some information that I hope we as legislators in this House remember. Oftentimes we may not think of ourselves as having a disability or ever going to have a disability, but statistics being what they are, well, it's in the cards for 50 per cent of us, so that's something to be cognizant of.

Something I wonder about is how much the government is listening to the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Even in the last year we've seen numerous times when I think the disabled community has been at odds with government policy. We saw that in the dramatic changes to the persons with developmental disabilities funding that occurred as a result of the introduction of the budget. I wonder if there was a consultative role with the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities when that endeavour went down the pike. You know, I just wonder about the massive changes to home care that essentially gutted a lot of not-for-profit home-care systems that had been put in place over the course of time in Alberta, that were serving a disabled population and allowed them to live their lives in a robust and personally rewarding manner. All of sudden those contracts were taken from them and given to large for-profit corporations that may or may not have their best interests at heart.

I wonder what role the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities had in advising the government down that path. Maybe the minister could comment somewhat on how he engaged this group prior to the Ministry of Health going down that path. I know many of my fellow Albertans with disabilities have had their lives impacted by that change and not in a positive fashion. I'm just wondering whether there was any consultation on that.

I'll also note that there was talk about this at least a year ago. You know, many people on welfare in this province either have a disability or some form of mental disability, a large portion of them. The fact is that Alberta has the lowest welfare payments by far of any of the provinces in this great nation. I wonder whether the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities has had any consultative program or process with the government on that front.

I will applaud the government for having a status of persons with disabilities act. In fact, numerous people who serve in that capacity I believe do their level best to bring information to the government. I question how much the government actually listens to them and is concerned about the plight of people with disabilities and, in fact, if the last year is to be judged, whether persons with disabilities have been adversely affected disproportionately more than other groups in our society in light of the recent budget woes that have come down the pike.

Often I'm left at a loss for words, Madam Speaker, that we don't ask a little bit more of our wealthy citizens and, instead, take it out on our citizens who have the least or have the most difficulties or have the most struggles. It appears to me that that happened in abundance over the course of the last year with the implementation of what happened in the last election instead of asking those with the most in society to maybe share the pain of what is transpiring currently in Alberta.

On that note, hopefully the government can think about its actions over the course. But I should ask them why they chose to take it out largely – well, not largely but on some people with disabilities, some groups who can be seen to not have maybe as strong a voice, who maybe don't vote in as great a mass as other citizens and the like, why they made a conscious choice to go down that path instead of asking others to do a little bit more and maybe impact their lives even slightly to allow a group of people who are struggling to do a little bit better.

Anyway, those are my comments, Madam Speaker. I look forward to looking at the act more closely and commenting on it in committee and at third reading of this bill.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or question the Member for Calgary-Buffalo?

Seeing none, are there any members who wish to comment on Bill 41, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013, in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Excellent. Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 41, which amends the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Act. Overall the bill will broaden the council's existing role, and it will also increase the sunset clause, which has previously been extended through order in council to seven years. It will now include explicit mention of the UN convention on the rights of persons with disabilities and provisions permitting the council to "provide input," "advise the Government," and "support . . . the relationship between the Government” and service providers. It also adds an excellent provision requiring that the 15-member council include persons with disabilities or individuals who have been involved with disability issues, and that’s a very positive thing.

So in general, Madam Speaker, we’re supportive of the bill, particularly section 3, that requires that persons with disabilities or individuals who have had involvement and experience with those issues be included. But we can’t help but think that this is a public relations exercise primarily designed to mend fences with a significant group in our society that has just received a thorough beating from this government. It has created through its actions in the last budget distrust through its budget cuts and broken promises from the spring. So hoping to repair this, perhaps, this breakdown in trust with the disability community, the government is strengthening the Premier’s Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

There are a couple of problematic issues, Madam Speaker, as far as we’re concerned. First of all, in proposed clause (g) of section 3(1) there’s a mention of the UN convention on the rights of persons with disabilities, but there’s no requirement for the government to ensure alignment between Alberta’s policies and the UN convention. The clause says that the council can advise. The government needs to make a clear commitment to aligning with the UN convention on the rights of persons with disabilities and taking that advice that it may receive from the council and turning it into action.

Beyond that, Madam Speaker, the public deserves to know where we are failing to live up to international standards, which is really my second point. We believe that it’s vital that the board’s annual report include recommendations on where the government is missing the mark. That would bring the public into the conversation about how government can improve the lives of persons with disabilities in a very direct way and improve accountability. The board has had success with providing recommendations in the past. In 2002 the Alberta disability strategy compiled by the council put forward 168 separate recommendations. The role of providing recommendations is found directly in the council’s mandate.

Madam Speaker, it’s troubling that none of the past three reports have contained recommendations to the government on how to improve the lives of persons with disabilities. We’d like to see this council empowered to provide recommendations in the public forum, where others can then hold the government accountable to make sure that changes are made.

Public recommendations are important because this government has consistently shown that they need to be pushed into providing the supports Albertans need and that they will cut services if they are not constantly reminded and pressured on how crucial these supports are to vulnerable Albertans. We saw this spring, when the PC government announced $42 million in cuts to people with developmental disabilities, that we can’t trust this government on their own to do the right thing. Again, with this government closing the Michener Centre, a care facility for persons with developmental disabilities, we’ve seen another attack on disabled Albertans.

We believe that in the public interest we will put forward amendments that the board provide public recommendations on how the government can contribute to improving the lives of Albertans with disabilities. One thing that the bill clearly lacks, Madam Speaker, is an explicit mention about making recommendations in their annual report. It might be arguable that recommendations are part of the council’s larger role, but we think that it should be included in the legislation.

Madam Speaker, there are some things missing from the bill, in our view. Generally, expanding the role of the council is a good thing. Making mention of the UN convention is a good thing, but of course the bill stops short of making a real commitment to implementing the United Nations declaration on the rights of persons with disabilities, and we think that it needs to do that. We need to make sure that the council is engaging the public in these issues with concrete recommendations made in the public forum that allow a more public discussion of the issues facing persons with disabilities and the solutions that might be found with the assistance of the government.

With those changes it would be an outstanding piece of legislation, Madam Speaker, and one that we would be very happy to support.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or question the hon. member?

Seeing none, I would ask if there are any members who would like to speak to Bill 41, the Premier’s Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013, in second reading.

Seeing none, I’ll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a second time]

Bill 43

Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate November 6: Mr. Campbell]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We have made a good amount of progress tonight, and I wanted to thank the opposition members for their co-operation. Being that I’m such a great guy, I would like to move that this House is adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Tuesday, November 19.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, we need to adjourn debate on the bill first.

Mr. Denis: I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Denis: I would make two motions: first, that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood give me a ride home in his blue van and, secondly, that this House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:36 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 19, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, as we stand and reflect on those whom we serve, let us be attentive to their circumstances, respectful of their views, and ever understanding of their needs as we fulfill our duties on their behalf. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Dennis Anderson. Mr. Anderson is the newest board member of the Mental Health Commission of Canada. I would like to extend my sincerest congratulations to him. I know Dennis, and I know many people in the Chamber know him as well. He has been a long-standing leader and advocate for mental health in Alberta for many, many years. His experience certainly attests to this as he was the founding chair of the Alberta Alliance on Mental Illness and Mental Health and the founding chair of the Lieutenant Governor's Circle on Mental Health and Addiction. Mr. Anderson is seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask that he now receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Do we have Edmonton-Riverview with school groups here?

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly students from Crestwood elementary junior high school. They are joined today by their teachers Trina Ludwig and Joanne Ozuke and parents Ian Murray, Adriana Boffa, and Tracey Boileau. I'd like to ask the students and helpers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some wonderful students from Mills Haven school in Sherwood Park. I'm pleased that they were able to plow through the snow to be with us and hope that they enjoy their time here today. With them they have Mrs. Sigrid Brodeur, Miss Breanne Kent, Miss Sheena Lesser, Mrs. Cathie Pompu, and Mrs. Andrea Altenweg. If they could please rise, I would ask for everyone to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

Seeing none, let us proceed with other guests. The Minister of Education, followed by the leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly one very special teacher. Last night I attended the Alberta School Boards Association gala and had the distinct pleasure of helping the outgoing president, Jacquie Hansen, present the Edwin Parr teaching award to some of Alberta's outstanding first-year teachers. Today with us in the gallery we have Miss Jackie Benning, a teacher who just started her career at Clairmont community school. I was fortunate to sit with Jackie last night. She's here with her father, Rick. She is an impressive teacher and one of the great reasons Alberta's education system is so fantastic. I'd ask her and her father, Rick, to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions if that is okay. First of all, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly his guest, Claire Edwards. This spring Claire retired as a legislative page. Today she is in her second year of political science at the University of Alberta and happily working as a constituency assistant in the riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. With a particular interest in social justice and public policy Claire is involved with Amnesty International, the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights, and the city of Edmonton Youth Council. She is also a founder of Student Voice Alberta. I would now ask Claire to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'm also very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly several other guests who are here from the University of Alberta. Travis Dueck, Andrea Chidley, Carly Baker, and Bashir Mohamed are all undergraduate students currently studying political science with Dr. Linda Trimble. As political science students they have a keen interest in the legislative process, so I am very pleased to have them here as my guests today, where they will be able to observe the Legislature at work first-hand. I would now ask all of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce Roxane Bitar and Donna Graham from the Canadian Diabetes Association. Roxane and Donna are here today in acknowledgement of World Diabetes Day, which was recognized back on November 14 during our constituency week.

Today in Alberta more than one-quarter of a million courageous Albertans live with diabetes. By ensuring that diabetics have supports to manage their illness, we can help enhance their quality of life. I know that our guests Roxane and Donna are tremendous advocates for the cause, and I would ask that they now rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly seven representatives from Edmonton Catholic schools here in recognition of the 125th anniversary of Catholic education.

In August 1888 Edmonton's devout Catholic parents applied to organize a separate school district for their children. Three months later, Mr. Speaker, following the arrival from France of three sisters from the Faithful Companions of Jesus, a convent and Edmonton's first Catholic school, St. Joachim, was opened.

As a former school board trustee with Edmonton Catholic schools I extend my heartfelt congratulations and special blessings to my guests, who are seated in the members' gallery. I would now ask them to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names: Mrs. Cindy Olsen, chair, board of trustees; Mrs. Laura Thibert, vice-chair, board of trustees; Mrs. Joan Carr, superintendent; Mr. Boris Radyo, assistant superintendent, educational planning; Sister Patricia Halpin, representative from the Faithful Companions of Jesus, the congregation of sisters who were the first teachers in Edmonton Catholic schools; Mrs. Marie Whelan, principal of Monsignor Fee Otterson elementary-junior high school; and Mr. Hugh MacDonald, principal of St. Joseph high school.

I would now ask that the Assembly please join me in providing the traditional warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special family from Two Hills. The Dyck family is a hard-working family, raising their own animals and produce. They are also a home-schooling family, teaching all five of their children since kindergarten. Their oldest, Chester, is attending postsecondary school so is unable to visit today. They've told me that they cherish the choice to home-school their children, something the Wildrose will always fight for. The kids can pursue activities such as 4-H, photography, and carpentry, all while keeping up with their studies. Dave, Sharon, Caleb, Courtney, Cody, and Clayton, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and my honour to introduce to our Assembly five hard-working employees of the Ministry of Enterprise and Advanced Education, watching us right here at work as well. With us today are Ms Sonja Nash, Miss Melissa Wong, Mrs. Kalpana Mulpuri, Miss Carrie Ali, and Mr. Jim Poniewozik. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to the members of this Assembly two people from my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. The first is Rotary club member Les Dunford, who is a tireless volunteer in our community and does so much. The second one is an inbound youth exchange student from near Cologne, Germany, who is going to be spending until July with us in the constituency. Her name is Jana Keune. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees local 54, representing about 7,000 workers in the health care sector. Tonya Malo, Courtney Malo, Lyn Morrison, Samia Mansi, and Alex Tkalcic work in lab services as AHS employees. They are here today because they are extremely concerned about this PC government's plan to privatize lab services in Edmonton. Sitting with them as well is the executive director of Friends of Medicare, Sandra Azocar, along with her placement student, Andrew Hoffman. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members a group of dedicated advocates on seniors' issues. They've travelled through the snowy and icy roads to be here to demonstrate their concerns with some of the government's changes coming forth affecting seniors. Sitting in the public gallery are Kerry Modin, Carol Bears, Bill Bears, Margaret Saunter, Mary Pelech, and Ruth Maria Adria. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to introduce to this Assembly a powerful advocate for our kids and indeed a principal at one of my all-time favourite schools in Edmonton-South West – I was there again last night – Monsignor Fee Otterson school, my friend, a very dear soul, and educational mentor of mine, wearing my pin, Mrs. Marie Whelan.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Small-business Engagement

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the big economic impact of small business. Small businesses are a vital part of Alberta's economy. They comprise 95 per cent of all businesses in the province, account for a third of private-sector jobs, and generate over 27 per cent of Alberta's GDP. This government understands that there are unique challenges for small businesses in our province. There are also opportunities. In a recent report on tax regimes the Canadian Federation of Independent Business ranked Alberta as the number one province for small business.

While a competitive tax environment is important, there are other things that government can do to create a positive business climate for small businesses and entrepreneurs to succeed. We've already taken action on regulatory burdens by putting mandatory expiry dates on regulations and by developing a website where companies can provide input on the regulations that will affect them. There are also areas where we need to get out of the way so that business can thrive.

This government is creating a small-business strategy to focus our work, and we recognize that we cannot develop a strategy for success alone. I'm pleased to be leading engagement sessions with small-business owners and entrepreneurs in eight communities across the province. Yesterday we held our first round-table in Lloydminster, and I was encouraged by the dialogue and the input that we received. Our next round-table will be tomorrow in Edmonton, and all other sessions will take place over the upcoming weeks, wrapping up on December 6 in Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray.

There is also an opportunity for online feedback to complement these in-person sessions. We're asking entrepreneurs and small-business owners to visit shape.alberta.ca to learn more about the community meetings and to make their voices heard. What we hear from this engagement will help shape Alberta's new strategy for small-business success. I encourage all members in this House to share this information with their constituents.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Government Spending

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Alberta a lot of people are wondering what's happened to their government. As people work hard every day to make ends meet, they have a government draining its savings and piling up the debt. Albertans wonder why the growing list of managers in the bureaucracy get fancy new offices and bloated severance packages while front-line services and the most vulnerable continue to take a hit. They wonder why their kids are getting stuffed into classrooms, why the number of long-term care beds continues to shrink, and why the Michener Centre is closing.

Now, imagine Albertans' dismay to see the PC-branded political billboards popping up across Alberta on the eve of the Premier's leadership review. These billboards, splashed in PC orange and blue, broadcast the Premier's name across the province to the cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars. What is the point? Where is the value? They do make a good backdrop for a photo op, I suppose. Even more maddening, many of these signs are for projects completed years ago, Mr. Speaker. This shameless advertising comes free of charge for the Premier and the PC Party, but somebody has to pay the bill. You know who? Taxpayers pay the bill.

Surely we can find better ways to spend our money. How about cutting wasteful spending, shrinking ballooning class sizes, getting seniors into long-term care, or just about anything but plastering the landscape with campaign signs for the Premier? This Premier and her staff are now more interested in bringing in cheap Ontario politics learned at the heels of Liberal Premier Dalton McGuinty than respecting taxpayers. Now, you might think these signs are effective, but they really are a giant reminder of wasteful spending.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the Alberta way. It is certainly not building Alberta. It is billing Alberta, and at this, this government is a master.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Farmfair International

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share with you the success of Alberta's ongoing market access efforts. Alberta is an agricultural leader, and we've worked very hard with our federal counterparts to ensure existing markets remain open and new ones are explored. Farmfair International was held in Edmonton last week. This annual agricultural event welcomed 90,000 visitors from both near and far. Farmfair is a one-stop marketplace for producers and industry, showcasing genetics, livestock, and the latest equipment.

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development was in Kazakhstan this spring to meet with government officials and industry members who want to purchase Alberta's products and services. I'm proud to say that Alberta was host to five Kazakhstani visitors, ministry of agriculture staff, and industry buyers. In fact, Farmfair International also welcomed buyers from Mexico, Australia, the United Kingdom, the United States, and Russia. When we talk about building Alberta, this is a prime example of what we mean.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for your first main set of questions.

Building Alberta Plan Advertising

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have seen the signs and have opened their eyes to this government's focus on using tax dollars to promote their political party. The Building Alberta advertising campaign uses orange and blue PC branded signs prominently featuring the Premier's name, and these signs are now literally littering the countryside. Can the Premier tell us what the full cost of this sign campaign is, and will PC Alberta be issuing the government a tax receipt for all that free advertising?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, you well know that if the Leader of the Opposition was to focus on facts, she would clearly soon realize that the colours that are used by the government of Alberta on a variety of signage and other materials that are informative to Albertans use Alberta government designated colours, that are exactly depicted on those particular signs.

But, Mr. Speaker, one thing for sure is that we will not be apologizing for building seniors' homes for seniors, schools for students, hospitals for patients, and highways for Albertans who want to travel safely.

Ms Smith: Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. Premier Klein never put up signs in PC colours with his name on them. Neither did Premier Stelmach, and neither did Premier Lougheed. Ontario Liberal Premier Dalton McGuinty, however, was a big fan of self-promotion through party-branded signs which featured his name. Isn't the Premier rather embarrassed that her sign campaign is just a little bit too self-promoting?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, two for two. Wrong again. The previous Premiers in Alberta have indeed put up signs when construction happens, and as she indicated herself, other Premiers throughout the country do the same. Why? Because we are proud of the fact that we are building the infrastructure that Albertans have elected us to build. However, if they choose to put up signs of the schools they wouldn't be building and the hospitals they wouldn't be building, as their capital plan clearly indicates, knock yourself out.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we can't help but note that on some of the signs the Premier's name is listed in full, some including her professional designation, being a member of the Queen's Counsel. Others include her honorific. In fact, the sign campaign appears to be more about branding her than about informing Albertans of government projects. Will the Premier at least be straight up with Albertans? Change the signs from saying "Building Alberta" to "building up the Premier in advance of her leadership campaign."

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the signs obviously worked. They caught her attention. She actually checks them out personally, reads them carefully, and verifies for accuracy. The accuracy is that our Premier happens to be a very well-educated woman, and she's very proud of her credentials. If that Leader of the Opposition wants to put her credentials or lack thereof, she may do that on her signs as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: The fact is that a lot of these signs are five years old, announcing projects that Premier Stelmach implemented.

Mr. Speaker, the colours of fall are orange and red, but here in Alberta the colours of fall are orange and blue. The Premier may claim that her government is focused on building Alberta, but the real focus appears to be on building signs. Does the Premier really believe that this is the best use of tax dollars, especially given the government's recent decision to cut across the board for nurses, colleges and universities, and long-term care?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding when a new K to 6 school was erected some two, three years ago under the previous Premier, actually a large number of my constituents were happy to come to the unveiling of the sign and the groundbreaking. Why? Because Albertans want schools, Albertans want hospitals, and Albertans want roads. They're simply not happy with the fact that this government is delivering on the promise it has made, to build Alberta and provide Albertans with the infrastructure that they deserve.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there are more than 40 Building Alberta signs on highway 2 between Edmonton and Calgary, and, yes, we have counted them. To everyday Albertans that might seem just a little bit excessive, considering that these signs cost many thousands of dollars each. Didn't the Premier sign off on this sign deal? If not her, then who?

Mr. Lukaszuk: There will be, Mr. Speaker, many, many, many more. Do you know why? Because we will be building more schools, and we will be building more hospitals, and we will be building new roads and twinning highways and paving roads. We will even be putting up signs in that hon. member's riding because we are building all of Alberta.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government clearly misses the point. Albertans are rightly concerned about the Alberta government's decision to flat-out promote the PC Party and its leader under the guise of promoting government infrastructure projects. Can the Premier tell us: did she approve of this sign campaign before it was launched?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I would strongly suggest that as the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition her time and taxpayer dollars invested in her would be much better spent actually building a capital plan that doesn't cut construction by $5 billion. Instead of counting signs and proofreading them for accuracy, she should be supporting this government because even constituents in her riding want new schools, new roads, new hospitals, and other infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the government doesn't want to be mocked, they shouldn't do silly things, then, should they?

Michener Centre Closure

Ms Smith: On a more serious note, the Premier is going to be in Red Deer on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, and she has been invited to visit the Michener Centre while she's there. This is a wonderful care facility serving the needs of severely disabled Albertans. It has won eight different Premier's awards of excellence since 1999, repeatedly honoured by Premiers Klein and Stelmach but not by our current Premier. Will the Premier at least visit Michener Centre this weekend to understand the important and unique work that they do?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, I was doing a little reading on the weekend, and I came across a report commissioned in another province talking about ways they could improve their services for disabled persons. One of the quotes in that was that they were talking about the number of public funds spent on institutional models, a model that universally has been proven to produce less-than-quality outcomes for persons with disabilities and a model that has been unequivocally rejected by persons with disabilities. We're moving forward. I think you guys should, too.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the residents, their families and guardians, the staff, all three opposition parties, Red Deer city council, indeed the entire community of Red Deer have come out against the Michener closure. The closure explicitly breaks promises made by the PC government that the residents of Michener could live out their days there. It is not too late for the Premier to tell her minister to take a step back and stop this callous and short-sighted move. Will the Premier give residents and families some good news this weekend and reverse the decision to close the centre?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it's not without a great deal of thought and compassion, actually, that we take the decision. I note last night in debates on the bill that would amend the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities that that opposition party and that opposition party were concerned about: were we going to incorporate anything on the UN charter on the status of persons with disabilities? I wonder if either of those parties are aware that one of the conditions in that charter requires that disabled persons can live in the community, not in institutions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly why the Premier needs to visit Michener Centre this weekend. The associate minister for persons with developmental disabilities has been unable or unwilling to answer many of the questions of the families and front-line workers. Those who want to keep Michener open suspect the real reason it is closing is because the government wants to sell the very valuable land that it's sitting on. To the Premier: is this the real reason why Michener residents are going to be losing their homes?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I truly want to thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for that question because it allows me to state unequivocally that that is absolutely not the reason. There is a raft of evidence around the world, best practices in Canada and elsewhere, that says that supported community living gives better outcomes. That's why we want to close the Michener Centre.

Environmental Protection and Reporting

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the aftermath of the billion-litre coal slurry spilling into the Athabasca River, we received two conflicting messages. The environment minister said that everything was fine. There are no public health concerns with the water, she said. However, Dr. James Talbot, the province's chief medical officer, reported alarmingly high levels of mercury and cancer-causing compounds in the river. His advice was: don't draw water as the plume was going by, and don't drink the water. To the Health minister: in a situation like this, should we believe the environment minister or the chief medical officer of health, who works for you?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that my hon. colleague will want to supplement this as well. If the hon. member is suggesting that the chief medical officer of the province told people not to drink the water out of the river or out of other sources of untreated water, he is absolutely correct. That is exactly the same advice that he would give to anyone in southern Alberta who was in a community affected by the flood or, in fact, anywhere in the province. There has never been a question about the quality of drinking water in any of the areas that have been affected by the slurry. The hon. member knows that. To suggest something to the contrary is a disservice and is, quite frankly, fearmongering.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative government's inaction on the environment is hurting our credibility. It is hurting our economy. I guess we'll just say that the environment minister may have misspoken. Unfortunately, this isn't the only time she's done so. In fact, in the House on October 30 she said: "We have reduced greenhouse gas emissions. About 40 million tonnes of greenhouse gases have been reduced since 2007 levels." Well, this is pure nonsense. The data doesn't support it. To the environment minister: why do you insist on pretending that the massive increase in greenhouse gas emissions is actually a decrease?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to answer both questions. First and foremost, the information we gave with regard to the water quality was correct. The first thing that I said to you on the first day this question was asked in the House was that we were there on the scene right away; we notified municipalities so that no drinking water would be used or withdrawn from this. That's exactly what Dr. Talbot has said as well, and if you look at news releases that'll be out here very shortly, you will see Dr. Talbot also quoted in that and clarifying misinformation that was reported on him.

With regard to the greenhouse gases, Mr. Speaker, as I said on the day that question came forward, we have seen a 26 per cent reduction of intensity per barrel. This hon. member should probably listen to the answers.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the minister should actually listen to our partners in the United States and our European partners and our neighbours who want us to take real action on the environment.

On the first day of this session the Premier acknowledged that Alberta faces reputational challenges when it comes to the province's poor environmental record, something that just provides one more target for the opponents of our oil sands and our pipelines to get our product to market. It seems that the minister's black-and-white comment about greenhouse gases, parroted by the Premier in the U.S., is the sort of thing that hurts our reputation. To the minister: why do you insist on hurting our credibility and our industry by not taking real, meaningful action on the environment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad to answer this question. I just got back from Poland at about 3 o'clock this morning, and I've got to tell you that I spoke on a couple of panels and spent a few days talking with many different people. I've got to tell you what the message there is. People are really impressed with what Alberta is doing on the technology side. Nobody else is having the per-barrel emission reduction that we are. The work that we are doing is being recognized internationally. They know and everyone knows that part of it is renewables, but more importantly carbon capture and storage and technologies like that will be the key that will help unleash the technologies that we need and actually reduce emissions. We were recognized for that, not only by the panel members but also by other NGOs like Zero from Norway.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Medical Laboratory Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On October 29 the NDP released a letter from a group of pathologists expressing very serious concerns about the proposed privatization of medical lab services in the Edmonton area, including concerns about quality and timeliness and the transfer of a key public medical service to the private sector. According to this report to stakeholders, debated just November 13, AHS's response, apparently, is to give vague assurances of consultation and to set up some committees. My question is to the Minister of Health. Why is this government ignoring the very real concerns that have been expressed by your own expert medical professionals?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we've explored this issue at length in the Legislature. I'm glad to see that the hon. member is seeing the evidence of the consultation that is under way between Alberta Health Services and its various employees. This issue will not be determined by opinions held about ideology with respect to private and public delivery. This issue will be determined on a measurement of quality and providing state-of-the-art lab services for the citizens of Edmonton and northern Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this last statement from the minister is simply not true. The government has predetermined that this will be a privatization, and there is clearly no intention on the part of government to even consider developing this facility within the public sector. So great is their concern, that all 90 pathologists as well as medical doctors and researchers have formed an organization to fight this privatization. They remain opposed to this high-speed, forced privatization and the impact it will have on their patients. They've written a second letter to the minister. Will the minister please tell the House what his response to these pathologists is?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the pathologists are one of many stakeholder groups within the health care system that have been consulted on a regular basis for quite some time now about this change. Again, the change arises from the fact that a very important contract that provides for a lab facility in Edmonton today will expire in 2017. The hon. member does a disservice to front-line workers in the health system by suggesting that they would be guided by anything other than what is in the best interests of their patients. This is a major decision. We'll carry on the course that we are on, and we'll continue to consult with people.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, well, it's rather tiresome to keep hearing from the minister that when we ask legitimate questions about his policy, we're attacking front-line health care professionals. It's tiresome, Mr. Minister, and you ought to stop it.

There's a huge public interest that's been identified by these pathologists about this privatization, a privatization the scale of which would make Ralph Klein blush. We know that there's going to be significant impact to patient safety. Minister, your own professionals are telling you this. They deserve to be answered in public. Will you provide a detailed response to these concerns as the Minister of Health and make it public, and if not, why not?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, what is tiresome also is being asked and answering the same questions over and over again. What I will tell you is what I've said consistently, that quality of patient care and quality of service and access to the best possible level of lab services for the residents of Edmonton and northern Alberta will guide this decision. As with public providers and not-for-profit providers, private providers in this province will continue to be held to the same quality standards.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

That's the first five questions gone now, where preambles to supplementaries are permitted. Let's move on now with no preambles or very little if any at all, beginning with Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Health Services Financial Administration

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few months this government and the Minister of Health have been desperately trying to convince Albertans that change and improvement are coming for our health care system, yet earlier this month the official administrator of AHS, Dr. John Cowell, quietly announced that the former chair of the Audit and Finance Committee was reinstated into that role only four months after he was supposedly fired from the board for refusing to cut executive bonuses. That doesn't sound like change to me. Can the Health minister please explain why a fired board member has quietly been rehired to oversee the finances of AHS?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of very important functions that the official administrator must provide for with respect to Alberta Health Services. One of those is the appointment of an Audit and Finance Committee. The committees in place at Alberta Health Services include people from many different walks of life and with many different areas of expertise. The chair of this particular committee is well known as a leader in the community of audit and finance, has considerable experience in the public sector and health care, and he is very well qualified to take this role.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that the same individual chaired the Audit and Finance Committee this past spring when the Auditor General slammed AHS for its $100 million in expense claims and little to no reporting went out to the board, is the Minister of Health a little worried that putting the same guy back in charge of that committee could turn out to be a rather expensive move?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, given the way the hon. member asked the last question, my question to her is: would she not agree that the most qualified individuals in a specific field should be appointed to serve in areas where the public interest is paramount? Alberta Health Services is an organization that administers over $12 billion in taxpayer funds in this province. As I've said, this particular chair of the Audit and Finance Committee and the other members of the committee are qualified in their own right both to provide advice to Alberta Health Services and to provide scrutiny around the management of financial affairs in the organization. We will continue to appoint the most qualified individuals to serve in these functions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oh, he's qualified all right: doesn't listen to the minister, is slammed by the Auditor General.

Given that during his time at Capital health Allaudin Merali was allowed to bill taxpayers for repairs to his Mercedes, fine dining, and butlers and given that the chair of the Capital health Audit and Finance Committee was guess who, can the minister see that there might just be a little problem?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is appalling is the fact that this hon. member – I can interpret it no other way – would attempt to taint the reputation of an individual that is serving Alberta in a position in which he is eminently qualified to serve. As I've said before, the Audit and Finance Committee is a very important part of the operation of Alberta Health Services. I think taxpayers expect and deserve that kind of scrutiny over the financial affairs, and I congratulate all the members of the committee on the excellent work that they are doing with AHS and with the Auditor General of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Bullying Prevention

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems like every day we hear another tragic story about someone being repeatedly picked on at school, humiliated online, or bullied in their community. Bullying is becoming an increasingly serious issue in our society. This week is Bullying Awareness Week, and as a parent it often feels like my hands are tied when it comes to my ability to protect my girls. To the hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety: is it not time we stopped talking about preventing bullying and do something to stop it before it even begins?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question. He's a good dad. He cares about his children, as do all Alberta parents. The member is right. Bullying is a serious issue. It affects all ages, demographics, everyone in our community. Our government has been doing a lot in the last number of years to help prevent that. We're working closely with all sorts of different educators, parents, children, employers, seniors to address bullying issues and help promote good, healthy relationships. An important part of our work is public education, and that's what we're doing right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And this associate minister is a wonderful mom.

I know she's new, and that was a good answer, but let's try this. Other communities, provinces, and even the federal government are creating legislation to address bullying and cyberbullying. When will this hon. minister ensure Alberta follows suit?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, we're looking closely at what other provinces are doing in terms of legislation and whether it's effective. That's a really important question for us. We have existing laws that cover assault and that cover harassment. As well, Alberta's new Education Act contains some of the most proactive and effective antibullying legislation in the country. But we simply cannot legislate bullying away. It is not going to work. No one person, group, or law is going to eliminate bullying. We have to work on promoting respectful relationships.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are many types of bullying, from bullying of a co-worker, cyberbullying online, to being bullied in a dating relationship, what, if anything, is being done to address this issue before it escalates, specifically when it occurs in dating relationships? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dating violence is a significant issue. In fact, it's even more prevalent right now than family violence. We are working hard to address this particular issue, dating violence. In fact, we funded a great pilot project at Mount Royal University in Calgary to address dating violence. It is a peer support program, and it helps students understand what healthy relationships are. [interjections] We want to use this model in other communities and right across the country.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: It just never ceases to amaze me how we can get on to a very serious question about a very serious matter in this House, yet all the side conversations start up and the jokes start flying back and forth and interjections start flying. It just amazes me, hon. members. I'm sure it must affect you all as well.

Let us go on.

Ethics Commissioner Decisions

Mr. Saskiw: Despite the Member for Edmonton-Manning violating the Conflicts of Interest Act six times, he got off scot-free. The reason: because acting in good faith, according to the Ethics Commissioner, means only coming clean once you've been caught. Well, it seems the Real Estate Council of Alberta disagreed with the Ethics Commissioner and sanctioned the member for failing to disclose debts. Assuming November 22 goes as planned, will the Justice minister make sure our next Ethics Commissioner is more interested in upholding the law instead of keeping members of the PC family safe from ethical oversight?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is not my role to protect the sanctity of this Chamber and officers of this Chamber. I suggest that you may have something to say on that.

Speaker's Ruling Allegations against a Member Decision of the Ethics Commissioner

The Speaker: I was contemplating what to say, in fact, when you had already stood, so I let you go ahead.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I think you're treading on a very fine line here of what can be construed by some, at least, as a personal attack on an honoured member of this Assembly but also an honourable servant of the Assembly. So I would ask you to please rephrase your question, make it something about government policy, take out the personal stuff, and maybe it'll be a better question.

Let's try your first supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: I hope this next question suits you, Mr. Speaker.

Considering that every single PC MLA voted against very reasonable measures to beef up the conflicts-of-interest legislation to keep MLAs in line and put an end to the PC culture of corruption, doesn't this government care that it is obvious that they are putting their own interests ahead of the interests of Albertans?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: I know we'll have a point of order if I don't say something.

Hon. member, I gave you an opportunity to rephrase some of it. I see you did some of it. Then just when you get going with what sounds like it's leading to something good and substantive possibly, you throw in a word like "corruption," and then this side of the House erupts. The next thing there's going to be reaction to the eruption, and then we have a little bit of chaos setting in here. Please, for your last one, for the last time check your words right now. I'm going to give you a few seconds to do that.

Now, does somebody from the government side wish to reply?

If not, let us move on, then, to your third and final question.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the conflicts-of-interest legislation, that doesn't remotely pass the smell test, an Ethics Commissioner who refuses to hold MLAs accountable for clearly violating established rules of conduct and who won't release his already completed investigation so the Premier's political skin could be saved . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please. Please, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Point of clarification.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'll get to you in a moment. Please be seated. I'll get to you in a moment. [interjections] I will get to you in a moment. I'm not getting into a debate with you. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decision of the Ethics Commissioner

The Speaker: Hon. members, my recollection is that the Ethics Commissioner did a thorough investigation over several months, came to a conclusion, and gave a report. Some people may not like the report, but it is there. It's been substantiated. Others may indeed like the report. We don't know. But the point here is that nowhere in this Assembly should there be any allowance for besmirching an individual who has done his or her job in service to this Assembly and, in turn, in service to the public of Alberta.

You have a point of clarification, hon. member, which I'll hear at the end after question period.

Let us move on to Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Hilliard's Bay Provincial Park Road

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most roads to parks in this province are paved, but the road to Hilliard's Bay provincial park is not. In fact, in the summer with a lot of traffic the road to Hilliard's Bay becomes dusty, so much so that it represents a major safety hazard. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Can you please tell my constituents what funding is available to have this road paved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will say to the hon. member through you that I have talked to the municipality there, and one of the things we've discussed is that it is indeed a municipal road that's being asked about here. To answer the question, we have several funding methods available: the municipal sustainability grant, the basic municipal transportation grant, and the gas tax grant. The municipality, I think, is well aware that all of those are available and at their disposal. On that note, we will carry on and hope that they can find a solution.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, even though we do have all these possible grants available, we used to have the resource road program, which we used to access for such roads. However, that's gone now. To the minister. You are so concerned about partnering all the time, and you do such a great job in most cases. However, I want to know: what are you going to do to make sure that we can get the people who are involved in this road together to see what possibilities exist?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I will say that the hon. member is quite diligent and determined on this particular file.

Let me say that I'll commit to the hon. member that I'll be happy to meet with her and the municipality in question about the road that they're concerned with. I'm always happy to work with them. If I heard in there, as I think I might have, some criticism on behalf of the municipality about wanting the resource road program back, well noted. We will of course take that into consideration as we formulate the next budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you.

LGBTQ Student Supports

Mr. Hehr: As the minister is aware, students who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgendered, and queer are often targeted and bullied in schools. What many proactive jurisdictions have done to combat this plague is allow gay-straight alliances in schools, where kids can band together to support one another. To the Minister of Education. We must do everything we can to ensure that the lives of children growing up LGBTQ are as free from discrimination and bullying as possible. Will you enact legislation that makes mandatory the creation of gay-straight alliances in all schools where children want them?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question, especially during Bullying Awareness Week, and I want to commend our Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety for all the work that she's doing on this. These clubs in particular can do a lot of great work in the schools that they are put together in. We leave the decisions on which clubs will be set up in each school up to the local school board and up to those local schools. We encourage them to look at that, and this is one great option that can attack the bullying question. One of the things we're doing as a ministry is that we will have some fact sheets on the topic that the member brought up on our website very soon for schools.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the problem with that answer is that by not legislating this, it means that many students in schools around this province will not have the ability to form their own gay-straight alliance. Simply put, adults get their knickers in a knot over this issue, when kids understand what needs to be done. Accordingly, will the minister commit to eradicating this by making this legislation mandatory so that kids can get the support they need in all schools in this province?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we agree that we want all kids to get the support they need, and the gay-straight alliance clubs do a great job of that in the communities and the schools that choose to put those together. We completely support those clubs. I think it's a great idea. But we don't impose them; we don't legislate them just like we don't legislate every other potential action that can combat bullying and make kids feel safe. We empower local school boards to do that. That's where the empowerment needs to rest.

Mr. Hehr: To the Minister of Justice: given that students who are LGBTQ cannot express themselves in school because the topic of human sexuality is prohibited unless parental consent is given in advance, will this government do more than simply march in pride parades and repeal section 11.1 of the Alberta Human Rights Act, which, in my view, is a slap in the face to our LGBTQ community?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member is mixing up issues here. It's absolutely not correct that those topics are prohibited in schools for discussion. That's absolutely not true, and he knows that. It's the sensitive issues that may come up in terms of instruction on religion or sexuality that parents have the ability to opt out of. They always have had in Alberta, and that's enshrined in the legislation. But that's not a change from practice, and the member is not completely accurate in what he is telling Albertans with respect to that question.

Teaching Excellence Task Force

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this Education minister's teaching task force was appointed in secret, is operating in secret, and was established without input from the very professionals he claims it is there to support. Meanwhile his government is increasing class sizes, removing resources from the classroom, and cutting teachers. Will the minister admit that his task force is not about promoting excellence; instead, it's about setting up teachers to take the fall for this government's cuts to education?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where to start there. We could start with the budget. The budget actually went up by $200 million. I know he wasn't a math teacher, but I'm still not sure how that equates to a cut to the Education budget when you increase it by $200 million to $300 million.

On the second fact, Mr. Speaker, teaching quality is incredibly important. The profession recognizes that. The profession supports that. Many teachers on the ground asked us to have a discussion about: do they have enough time to prepare, do they have enough resources, and do they have enough support? That's a part of what this task force is about.

Mr. Bilous: Eleven thousand new students.

Mr. Speaker, given that parents, teachers, school boards, and students have been saying that the number of kids in the classroom and the composition of the classroom directly impacts the quality of education and given that this PC government refuses to acknowledge these concerns, will the minister admit that his task force experiment is not about promoting excellence in teaching but about passing the buck?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think this member would like us to believe that there's one silver bullet to solve every issue in education, and that's class size. That's simply not the case. As a matter of fact, this government has put more money into the class size initiative. That piece of the budget has grown to about $375 million.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'll spell it out for the minister. Given that this minister's task force fails to address kids learning in closets, teachers teaching in photocopy rooms, the complete lack of supports for students with special needs, and young teachers being driven away from the profession and given that this task force is not designed to support teachers – it's designed to pitch them into the fire – will the minister admit that this task force is nothing more than a teacher witch hunt?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this task force is a task force on teaching excellence. It's not a task force on a witch hunt. You know, this member would like us to believe that it's either/or: either we go after and talk about teaching excellence or we make class sizes smaller. We can do both. They're both important.

I just came back from Istanbul with CMEC and a meeting of the OECD ministers. The recent research – and this member knows it – is that the most important factor in the success of our kids, number one, is not the class size. Up at the top is quality of teaching. Class size is important, but it's not as important as the diversity in the class, the inclusion in the classroom, the supports we're giving the teacher, and how great that teacher is that's standing in front of our kids. We're interested in that as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Carstairs Elementary School

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Carstairs elementary school is facing a crisis. The school was originally designed to serve children from kindergarten to grade 4, but due to unprecedented growth grade 4 was shuffled over to the local high school, and next year the grade 3 kids may very well join them. This means that seven-year-old children will be walking across a busy railroad and a major highway to attend a school they shouldn't be in in the first place. To the Minister of Education. When the safety of children is at stake, we have to step up. What are you going to do about this?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, you couldn't script it better than that. As important as the issue that this member is raising is – and I am sure that the Minister of Education or Infrastructure will have an answer to it – this is falling on the heels when the Leader of the Opposition and other members were just saying that this government should not be building any more schools, should not be twinning highways and building hospitals and not be putting up signs to reflect that. At least in one question period can they please be consistent?

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills at 2:29 p.m.

Let's move on with the first supplementary.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That wasn't my question.

Given that the K to 4 school could continue to serve all of these students if the local school board had the funds to purchase an attached library owned by the town and given that this government recently gave over $5 million to a school board in the Premier's riding for a temporary classroom and a fully equipped temporary gymnasium, is the minister prepared to make this small investment to ensure the safety and the education of our kids?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this highlights a problem we have not just in Carstairs but right across the entire province. There are some incredible growth pressures, and it's very difficult on this side of the House to try and profile which schools and which projects we're going to fund when we get constant criticism that we're funding too many schools. The only question we get out on the ground is: where do they stand for the sod-turning? I would ask this member: if we're going to put money into this school, which I would readily do if it's high enough on the radar screen and competes with the other projects around the province, would he accept that project for his constituency if it was borrowed money or a P3?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowe: We would find a way to do it without borrowing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the town of Carstairs is . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members from the Wildrose, your own member has the floor.

Let's keep it down on the government side as well, please.

Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, please proceed.

Mr. Rowe: Given that the town of Carstairs is close to reaching a classroom crisis, is the Minister of Education willing to sit down with the local school board and me to hopefully resolve some of these issues and tell us where it is on the priority list?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to meet with that school board any time. We've travelled the province extensively. We just had the Alberta School Boards Association MLA breakfast this morning that I spoke at. I saw all of the trustees there, and I saw them again last night at the awards ceremony, where one of our guests got an award. These are things we're looking at across the province that are incredibly important to us. I think that's why Albertans elected the right Premier, a Premier who is building Alberta and investing in these communities and investing in these schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Little Bow.

Small Claims Court Decision Enforcement

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents recently won a small claims court judgment against a company. Since the ruling the company has disregarded the judgment by refusing to pay the money owed, and due to privacy legislation my constituent cannot obtain information about the defendant. He's feeling frustrated by the judgment continuing to be ignored and has said that our legislation has no teeth in it. I am concerned that this might not be a unique case. My question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. What options are available for enforcing a small claims court judgment if the defendant refuses to pay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a variety of items available when someone obtains a judgment, and it's called a judgment creditor. You can garnish somebody's wages. You can have assets seized. You can bring them in and have what's called an examination in aid of enforcement. You can hire a civil enforcement agency and have a garnishee against their bank account. A certificate of judgment is good in this province for 10 years. It can be enforced throughout Alberta. It can be reciprocally enforced throughout other provinces in Canada and even in some cases, where there are international treaties, in other countries.

Mr. Cao: To the same hon. minister: what options are available for enforcing a small claims court judgment if a defendant refuses to pay?

Mr. Denis: It's the same items that I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker. I think what may be of particular interest to this member or his constituent who has the judgment that has not been satisfied is actually bringing them in for what's called an examination in aid of enforcement. This is under our Civil Enforcement Act, also under the Alberta Rules of Court, which were amended several years ago.

I recognize that there's always room to improve, Mr. Speaker, and we have what's called a garnishee process project, that my department is looking into, on how to actually improve the rights of judgment creditors as this member indicates.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: what are you going to do about a law that allows ignoring small claims court judgments? Should you put stronger teeth into enforcement of the court's judgments?

Mr. Denis: As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this is something that we're looking at. Often the Minister of Infrastructure talks about his website. Not to be outdone, I'd like you to go look at mine. It's albertacourts.ab.ca. You can get some information on how to collect on a judgment. I want to thank the Associate Minister of AT and T for reminding me of that. In case you didn't hear it, it's albertacourts.ab.ca.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Rural Access to Physicians

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The community of Vulcan has a doctor shortage, forcing our current rural doctors to almost work double the time of other health care professionals across the province. I've spoken to many constituents who feel that the Alberta government and AHS don't take rural health care needs seriously. To the Minister of Health: when can I tell my constituents that they'll have timely access to a doctor in our community, and what is he doing to alleviate the stress of the local hard-working physicians in communities like Vulcan?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government has invested extensively, as have previous governments, in supporting recruitment and retention of doctors in rural communities. I can tell the hon. member that the number of physicians working in rural areas has increased by 10 per cent in the last four years alone. We invest in things such as the Rural Physician Action Plan, a $10 million program this year; the remote and northern program, which is a $52 million program; and a physician locum services program of about $4 million this year, which provides for doctors coming in from other areas. It is a challenge, particularly with respect to retention. In some of the ensuing questions I'll be happy to talk about what else we're doing.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for all those answers on the programs that are available. But given that the doctor shortage has created a situation in my riding where there are currently 11 straight days, starting on December 30, where Vulcan can't even book enough physicians and that starting December 27 the community doesn't even have a doctor to cover for the emergency room, what is your ministry going to do to ensure my constituents have access to an emergency room doctor over Christmas?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, one of the programs that I just mentioned, the physician locum services program, is designed to do just that. What I'd suggest to the hon. member is that we also need to realize that physicians working in teams with other health professionals have the ability to extend the services of the physician to a greater number of citizens. We recently initiated, for example, a physician assistant program in Alberta. Nurse practitioners, pharmacists, and others are working across the province, including in rural Alberta, to support physicians and spread their services further.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given all of that, I guess, what am I going to do to reassure the people of Little Bow that there are going to be doctors in the emergency rooms over Christmas?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as we do in many communities across the province, we will continue to work with local communities to make interim arrangements for coverage in situations such as the hon. member describes. I'm sure he would agree that we are certainly not in a position to force doctors to work where they do not wish to work or, in some cases, where they're in small numbers, to cover beyond hours that they are willing and able to cover. The answer to this question lies not in pouring more money into doctor recruitment and retention. The answer is in primary health care reform, in embracing the power of family care clinics and primary care networks to spread the services of physicians among a greater number.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Disaster Recovery and Mitigation

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the flood event in June my constituency office has been dealing with people desperately trying to manoeuvre their way through the disaster recovery program. Residences and businesses alike are frustrated with slow response times, conflicting information, and delayed payment schedules which hamper recovery efforts. To the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta: what is the minister doing to address the concerns of my constituents around funding response and accurate information?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question. I think since the flood happened in June, we've taken a number of steps to make it easier and more timely for flood victims to get access to the disaster recovery program. We've reduced the amount of documentation required for the initial payment. We've also cut a step out of the verification process that we deemed to be redundant, which should get cheques into people's hands a lot faster. We've also created a mobile office here recently that will rotate through the town of Canmore and the Bow Valley area, through Bragg Creek, and through Turner Valley and the foothills. Make no mistake. We will be here to make sure that each flood victim gets what they're entitled to under the disaster recovery program.

Mr. Casey: Given the history of the delivery of the DRP what can your office do to ensure that those delivering the DRP work co-operatively with claimants to access funding and do not act as a barrier to the timely delivery of funds?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's another good question. We need to remember that the DRP is a joint program between the provinces and the federal government. It's not an insurance program. It's there for returning essential property back to the basic function. I know that might be frustrating for those that were impacted by the flood, but the program does provide a basic level of support for all Canadians that experience a disaster that is uninsurable. It is available fairly right across this province and across the country while protecting taxpayers' interests.

Mr. Casey: To the same minister: what is your ministry doing to ensure that mitigation efforts on rivers and mountain creeks will be completed in time since spring is a short eight months off?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, that's a very timely question by the hon. member, and I thank him for bringing it forward. I was just out on Friday with municipal officials from the town of Canmore as well as in Bragg Creek. They've got a number of plans that we've already invested money into, $6.2 million along Cougar Creek, which will help put in place some short-term mitigation. They are working on some longer term mitigation ideas as well, and that will come through the flood recovery task force. Again, $1.1 million in Bragg Creek. We're working with these communities through the Department of ESRD with a number of contracted engineers to provide those solutions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for question period.

There was a point of clarification that the hon. Member for Airdrie wished. I would like to hear that now.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification under 13(2), which says that "the Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." As an elected member and as the Official Opposition House Leader I would like to be able to actually ask the question that I'm seeking clarification on without being cut off.

The clarification that I'm seeking from you is this. What precedent in what country of the Commonwealth does not allow Her Majesty's opposition to be able to question decisions of government-appointed officers, which can be and often are corrupt? What precedent is there for a Speaker, frankly, dominating and wasting time of this Assembly with constant lectures and, frankly, self-righteous interruptions that are costing us question after question in this Assembly?

You are showing gross favouritism, sir. You are interfering with this House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a seat.

Hon. member, I've been in this House a lot longer than you have, and I've listened to a lot. If you want me to name you and ask you to leave, don't think you're going to mess around with me in that respect because I'm prepared to accommodate a wish like that. [interjections]

Hon. member, did you notice that I didn't interrupt you when you were speaking? Do you think it's appropriate for you to be interrupting the Speaker when he's trying to . . . [interjections] Why are you speaking right now, then, hon. member? I'm not here to have a debate with you.

Mr. Anderson: Because you're asking me a question.

The Speaker: I will answer your question this way. It is always up to the Speaker to do his or her best to make sure that law and order and civility prevail. [interjections] Chestermere-Rocky View, if I hear one more peep out of you, then you will also be on that special invitation list. The same goes for anybody on the government side who's provoking members on the opposition side.

Can we not have some civility and decorum here just for a few minutes? This is a very serious question that Airdrie has asked. He is almost in contempt, in my view. I'm going to take this very seriously, and I'm going to have a close look as to what you just said, hon. member. Please, if there's one more interruption while I'm trying to say something serious in response to your question, I will name you, and you will leave this Assembly. Let that be very clear, please.

As I was saying before I was interrupted again and again and again, I want to make it very clear that one of the first roles of any Speaker in any Commonwealth country, most of whom I have now met with in one way or another over the past year and a half, is to ensure law and order and abidance of rules, adherence to guidelines and principles at the highest level in this House. The overarching principle is: at any time that a Speaker thinks something is being said or done in the Assembly that might cause disorder, disruption, or other forms of disobedience, it is his or her duty to stand up and do something about it. I have let a lot of things go over the time. I have tried to be fair to both sides, government and opposition. I would even say that I have been more than tolerant on more than one occasion with many of you in this House.

But when I have specifically asked you not once, not twice, but three or four or five times to please avoid personal attacks of one member on another, to please not use language that is likely to cause disruption and disorder, when I've asked you these kinds of questions and many, many more and you persist in doing it, what do you think I should do? Just ask yourself that common-sense question before you start making any greater issue out of something that you know very well is already a serious matter in this House. I fully realize the sensitivities of the questions being asked, but there comes a point and there comes a time where I have to draw the line. You may disagree with my interjections, but every one of them is founded. I don't stand up to hear myself speak, hon. members. I stand up to make sure others are heard in this Assembly because each one of you before me is equal, and you all have a right to speak and be heard. You have a right to the respect of other members.

On another matter, I have also a duty, when it comes to the issue of members who are not present in this House, to protect their character and their reputation. That is also in our rules, and we could point to several examples where many Speakers have stopped and interjected to ensure that people who are not here to defend themselves are not besmirched or maligned or otherwise brought into some disrepute by some comments by members. Let that stand not only as a clarification but a warning. Let that stand as a warning to you, all of you.

Now, I wanted to commend the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for doing something unique today. She forwent her second supplemental, and it's something other members should take a look at. When a minister has stood up and answered the question in the first two questions, forgo the third one. Well done, Lesser Slave Lake, on that point.

In 20 seconds we will continue on with Members' Statements, starting with Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Iron Horse Trail

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Iron Horse Trail is part of the Trans Canada Trail and offers 300 kilometres of trail ranging from boreal forest to parkland to farmland. Wildlife, scenery, historic buildings, and farmsteads will give trail users a glimpse of the rich tapestry that is northeastern Alberta. Riders on the trail can expect to see bears, moose, deer, coyotes, badgers, and other wildlife as they ride along the trail.

The Iron Horse Trail boasts 18 trestles, with the largest spanning the Beaver River near Cold Lake. The trestle, an engineering marvel, towers 60 metres above the valley floor and is 450 metres in length. In June of 2012 a devastating fire occurred on the northeast end of the Beaver River trestle. The fire burned through the upper decking and support beams, causing the trestle to be closed. Upon inspection by engineering firms we learned that the damage was extensive and that the trestle was in danger of collapsing.

The estimate for the Beaver River trestle rehabilitation is $1.5 million. Mr. Speaker, the community has rallied and is actively raising funds to save this treasure. Online fundraising platforms enable groups to work through social media to reach all trail supporters throughout Alberta and the western provinces. Recently a $150,000 save the Beaver River trestle project submission was approved by the Aviva community fund contest. To win the contest, we need your votes. To vote is simple. Visit the website www.avivacommunityfund.org, register and vote, and vote every day. Please help us save our Beaver River trestle.

Thank you.

Patrick Thomas Kennedy

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, where would this province be without the people who make it great? Where would this province be without the visionaries, without the entrepreneurs, without those willing to take a risk? Alberta has a long history of great people, and it's my honour to tell you about one of Red Deer's very own great visionaries and entrepreneurs.

Thirty years ago Patrick Thomas Kennedy had a great idea about a farm equipment and services exposition in Red Deer. He was a visionary who planted the seed of an idea that was embraced by the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce and the Westerner. Knowing that agriculture was one of the top three economic drivers in Alberta, he believed that he could build a show that would be second to none in the province, and he called that show Agri-Trade. In fact, after 30 years of growth and development Agri-Trade has become the largest farm implement exposition in western Canada, and some have even said that it is the biggest in all of Canada.

Pat Kennedy, the chamber of commerce, and the Westerner have hosted Agri-Trade for the last 30 years in November through rain and snow and sleet. I even remember one year when we had to walk through newly fallen snow up to our knees to see the fascinating farm equipment parked outside. Agri-Trade may have even broken attendance records that year as people from all over Alberta and the northwestern United States came to see what was new in farm machinery.

Pat Kennedy and Agri-Trade have brought significant economic benefits to our region through its exhibitors, attendees, and support staff. I know that the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce and the Westerner along with myself and the hon. minister from Red Deer-South wish Pat the very best in the future as he retires and moves on to greener pastures although there is no greener pasture than Agri-Trade. The contributions of Pat Kennedy to Red Deer, central Alberta, and to this province cannot be underestimated. Please join me in thanking Patrick Thomas Kennedy for his invaluable contributions to the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Energy Company Licensee Liability Rating Program

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the formation of the Alberta Energy Regulator and the retirement of the ERCB, junior producers have faced unreasonable expectations with regard to the regulation of the licensee liability rating program. The ERCB did not enforce these regulations, but now the Energy Regulator is slamming the current owners of these wells. In the words of one of the stakeholders I have spoken with: it seems they are trying to cover up for the lack of enforcement over the past decades. The result is that hundreds of junior producers will be pushed into bankruptcy courtesy of the heavy-handed, ill-thought-out regulations and the mismanagement of the PC government.

Mr. Speaker, you would have hoped that the PCs had learned their lesson from the 2008 royalty disaster, but I guess not. The PC government has so far failed to act to ensure that our junior producers get a fair shake. While the Minister of Energy said that he would look at this matter, action needs to take place now. As you wait, junior producers are being expected to pay millions in penalties. The licensee liability program is spiralling out of control.

The program looks at assets compared to liabilities. With the low price of gas uneconomical wells are shut in. Once a well is shut in, it's classified as a liability. Companies are given a short period of time in which they have to pay penalties, some over a million dollars. If the company is unable to pay, they become classified as noncompliant and, as such, are unable to raise any capital because wells are shut in. They can't get any money from the banks, and they can't afford to abandon the wells.

Mr. Speaker, these companies are not trying to shirk their responsibilities, but it seems unfair to enforce these regulations suddenly without consultation or consideration of the devastating economic impact. The forced abandonment of these wells will significantly reduce municipal tax revenue as well as provincial royalties. The Energy Regulator must come back to the table and work on enforcement actions that are appropriate and will not drive junior producers out of production. The stakes are too high for the minister to sit by and watch our juniors forced out of business.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee I'm pleased to complete the mandate of this committee by presenting the required copies of the committee's final report, which contains recommendations regarding the Conflicts of Interest Act.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my fellow committee members from both sides of the House for the hard work, the time, and the effort taken for a good part of last year in reviewing all the recommendations. I would also like to acknowledge the support and expertise provided throughout the process by staff from the Assembly office, by the office of the Ethics Commissioner, and by the office of Alberta Justice and Solicitor General. Thank you, all.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on its 2012 activities. Additional copies of the report have also been provided for all members of this Assembly.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to advise the Assembly that I intend to propose the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly receive the final report of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee as tabled."

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of documents signed by 185 people who ask that Michener Centre in Red Deer be kept open for vulnerable Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark or someone on behalf of? Perhaps at a later time.

Let us move on to Edmonton-Centre, then.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today, two from constituents that are writing with their concern about the government of Alberta's cuts to postsecondary education and noting the staff layoffs and program closures and things like that. They're asking that in the next year's budget the government please think about the long-term implications. That's from Kyle Nuttall and Anand Pye.

The third is a very good letter, very thoughtful, from Don Ryane – I hope I'm pronouncing that correctly – who is writing with his concerns about the conversation on water management and pointing out his disappointment with how it was handled, the questions on the survey, and that he really doesn't feel that there was a range of options presented. He's very concerned that there be that before any changes to the legislation are made. A particularly good letter, a thoughtful letter on that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling two documents which I referenced today during question period. The first is an Alberta Health Services document dated November 12, 2013, entitled Edmonton Zone Lab Request for Proposal – Report to Stakeholders. This outlines the government's intention to proceed with privatization of lab services in the Edmonton region.

The second, a companion document, is a presentation that was provided to health care professionals in the medical lab area which includes timelines on the privatization process and indicates that at no time was a public delivery model considered with respect to this proposal.

Mr. Speaker, those are two documents that I'm happy to put forward and put on the record given the fact that we've been unable to get real clarity in question period with respect to this matter.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today a hundred more of the handwritten letters my office has received expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education that are happening in Alberta. These letters call on the government to reverse all of their harmful cuts to postsecondary education, and they convey a feeling of confusion, frustration, and hopelessness. I've received over a thousand letters in my office, and I certainly will continue to table them as we go. Here are the appropriate number of copies of 100, and I do hope that the minister will take the time to read the 100 heartfelt notes that are included in today's tabling.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling five copies of a letter from a constituent, Cody Palmer. He is concerned with regard to Bill 33. He's worried that the regulations might include a ban on electronic cigarettes, which he uses to help stop smoking. It's a coping mechanism that he uses for that, and he wants to make sure that the government knows that a lot of people use these as a coping mechanism for cessation of smoking and to be careful in the regulations, that they don't ban those products.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is now 3 p.m., so I have to go to points of order. There is no motion for unanimous consent to conclude the Routine, so we have to move on to the next item, and that is points of order.

I believe we have one here from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. You rose at about 2:29 on a point of order. Did you wish to express it now? Your citation, please?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). During question period the Deputy Premier stated with respect to the Leader of the Official Opposition that she would not build any more schools. This is, obviously, absolutely untrue and given the fact that the Deputy Premier was here in this Assembly, I would state that that was an intentional, deliberate lie attempting to create disorder in the Assembly. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that it be withdrawn. I would normally cite precedent in this Assembly but – and I'll choose my words carefully – given the precedent that we've seen, I don't expect there to be a requirement that the statement be withdrawn. Actually, in fact, I will simply just withdraw my point of order.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That point of order is withdrawn and so noted.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Let us move on, then. I believe we have a Standing Order 42 to be heard.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, just as you're getting your notes together, I'd like to make a couple of comments here first. Before putting this question forward as to whether there's going to be unanimous consent or not for the hon. member's request, I'm going to listen very carefully to her statement of urgency, but then I do have a few comments that I want to make.

Proceed with your point.

Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee Final Report

Ms Notley:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly receive the final report of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee as tabled.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few moments ago the chair of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee tabled the committee's final report. Now as a member of the committee I'm asking this Assembly for consent to proceed with this motion, which will in essence allow this Assembly to formally receive the report that has been tabled by the chair. The point of that, then, is to ensure that this report would be the subject of debate in this whole Assembly.

Now, Standing Order 42(1) reads as follows: "A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39." Of course, it's that unanimous consent that I am seeking today from my colleagues in this Assembly.

So allow me to make a few comments regarding the urgent and pressing necessity of this motion and this debate. Beauchesne's, paragraph 390, states:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the . . . opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

Beauchesne's, paragraph 387, also states that "there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate."

Now, I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that this motion meets these criteria, and it relates to a matter that is top of mind for many Albertans today. As we all know – anyone who reads Twitter, watches The Daily Show, watches the news at all – public attention is focused on the integrity of political representatives across this country. The ethics of politicians are dominating the headlines in a way that should concern all of us. These concerns are not just about scandals in Ottawa or Toronto. There are also legitimate concerns right here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I need to just remind you to speak to the urgency of this, not the matter itself.

Ms Notley: I'm certainly not going to debate the report. I'm simply speaking to the urgency. Thank you.

Now, as you know, the Premier is still under investigation by the office of the Ethics Commissioner, an investigation that started many months ago. We have another member of the government caucus who was found to have breached this act six times, but in that case the Ethics Commissioner did not recommend any sanction against that member. That report from the outgoing commissioner was already tabled in the Assembly, but I should note that in spite of section 29 of the Conflicts of Interest Act, which states, "The Legislative Assembly may accept or reject the findings of the Ethics Commissioner," there was no actual mechanism to do so, Mr. Speaker, which goes, again, to the issue of urgency as defined under the section of Beauchesne that I quoted. This is just one of the reasons that Albertans are questioning whether our ethics laws mean anything at all.

Now, the select special committee studied the Conflicts of Interest Act throughout the summer. We received many submissions and heard testimony from numerous experts. But when it came to actually changing the legislation so that Albertans could have confidence in our conflicts law, profound disagreement emerged on the committee. Interestingly, I and other members of the opposition proposed many amendments to strengthen the law, and those amendments were defeated by the government majority on the committee. Government members have their hands on the levers of power in this province. Unfortunately, at the committee level they seemed unwilling to make the changes that the act desperately needs to prohibit and reduce opportunities for conflicts of interest to arise.

I believe that this disagreement requires the full attention of the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and it is only through this standing order that I can raise this for debate. The recommendations contained in the report as well as those contained in my minority report and the minority report submitted by the members for Calgary-Shaw, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and Edmonton-Centre all deserve full debate in the Assembly this afternoon. They simply cannot be put on a shelf to gather dust, and lip service is not enough. We need a full debate in this House this afternoon, and it can only happen through this motion. In my view we must debate these issues that are included in the report.

As things stand right now, Mr. Speaker, we have a piece of legislation that includes a classic prohibition on conflict of interest, that which would prohibit the ability of a member of this House to use his office to promote his private interest, and as a result of the legislation as it stands now and a recent decision made by the commissioner, that classic, foundational piece of our legislation is for all intents and purposes in this province meaningless. This is a critical situation. It requires fulsome debate in this House in order to ensure the confidence of all Albertans in the work that all of us here do every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, under Standing Order 42 only one speaker is allowed, and that is the mover of the motion. We have heard from that hon. member, and as I indicated just while I gave her a few seconds to get her notes together before she spoke, I too would like to add a couple of comments at this time.

First of all, Standing Order 42 clearly reads, "A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39." Similarly, let me draw your attention quickly to Standing Order 18. "Motions that are debatable include every motion . . . for the receipt of a report or concurrence in a report, or both, that has been tabled in the Assembly, except a report from the Committee of Supply or Committee of the Whole." And it goes on.

Hon. members, where we're at here now is that in a moment I'm going to ask you for your agreement for unanimous consent or not for this motion and, in turn, the debate to proceed. However, before doing that, I want to just say that the member's motion references that the Assembly "receive the final report of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee," and it is quite conceivable, although it may not be too familiar to some of you, that this kind of motion is rare in its appearance. If one examines the aforementioned Standing Order 18(1)(b), you will see where this hon. member is coming from in part.

Without being repetitive or tautological about this, I want to just state that it seems clear that it would be somewhat pointless to refer to a motion to receive as debatable if such a motion was not in order. The chair does note that an issue about whether committee reports had to be subject to a motion was addressed by Speaker Amerongen in this Assembly on November 16, 1972. It was pointed out at Hansard pages 75-61, 75-62 by Mr. Hyndman that motions to receive or to receive and concur in a report were in order. There did not have to be a motion, however.

In the very short time that we had to research this, a couple of hours, it appears that the motions relating to committee reports have usually been motions to, quote, receive and concur, unquote. However, the option to separate these motions is left open by the wording of the standing order. It is my understanding that the standing order was expanded in 1974 to include a reference to "receipt" as well as the existing "concurrence." In 1983, apparently, an "and/or" formulation was changed to simply "or," so the disjunctive alone exists, which means either motion could be moved, either one.

In terms of precedent I do note that there was a motion to receive reports by the Ethics Commissioner moved on April 3, 1996, which was the subject of a Speaker's ruling on that same day at page 1051 of Hansard. Accordingly, if unanimous consent to proceed were to be granted by the Assembly, the motion would be in order.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 34

Building New Petroleum Markets Act

[Adjourned debate November 7: Mr. Olson]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and talk about Bill 34, the Building New Petroleum Markets Act, in second reading. I'm hoping that the hon. Energy minister can enlighten me on some of the questions I have with this bill. I did have the opportunity to meet with him, and we did a bit of a bill briefing.

Basically, it was pointed out to me that it is more of a house-keeping bill to change the number of directors on this commission from three to seven. I don't see that as a problem. As of right now the bitumen royalties in kind that they're taking, you know, on the new Energy East pipeline – the government has committed to supplying a hundred thousand barrels a day for 20 years. I do understand how we have to increase this commission that looks after these markets because there is going to be more and more bitumen that they're handling on behalf of Albertans.

I'm a little bit concerned with the picking of the new directors. In our conversations it was mentioned that, you know, they want to find someone that has vast experience in marketing. I'm sure the Energy minister will do his utmost to find the best people. Hopefully, they do a wide search because they are handling the resources of Albertans and whoever they pick to be on this commission is going to have a huge duty to work in the best interests of all Albertans.

As I was looking through the bill and reading it, there were a couple of issues that kind of struck me. It mentions, under section 9.1, records and accounts, "The Commission shall prepare and retain records and accounts in accordance with the regulations as required by the Minister." As we look a little bit further, it says, "Sections 10 and 11 are repealed." Well, section 11 says:

The Commission shall annually, after the end of its fiscal year, prepare a general report summarizing its transactions and affairs during its last fiscal year and showing the revenues and expenditures during that period, an audited balance sheet and any other information required by the regulations.

In this new bill we're striking that. I'm hoping that possibly under another piece of legislation these records and the reports will be made public. So if the hon. Energy minister could clarify where these reports will be coming through, what other act, if there is such. If there isn't, why aren't these reports going to be made public as this commission is going to be handling, you know, the dollars coming in from the BRIK program?

Another question I had was about repealing section 10. Section 10 says that "the Auditor General is the auditor of the Commission.” You’re striking that, so who’s going to audit the commission? Now, in a bit of the research I’ve done, it seems that under Bill 12 that we went through, the Fiscal Management Act – is that where the audit is going to come through? We need clarification on that because we need to know if the auditor is going to be able to do a complete, full audit on this commission. If not, who’s going to do it? If nobody is going to do it, that’s going to be a huge issue with this commission. They need to be held responsible for looking after our dollars.

Another issue that I came across was the FOIP. It says that “the regulations made under this section prevail despite the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act for a period of 5 years following the end of the year to which the record or other information relates.” Why are we making anything that happens in this commission unFOIPable for five years? To me that doesn’t seem very open and transparent. You know, what are they doing that they have to hide for five years? Why can’t we see what happened last year? Why can’t we FOIP it and find out what the contracts were? If they are working in the best interest of Albertans, then Albertans need to know, and we need to be able to see that information, not wait five years.

One good thing that I did see in here, that brings back a lot of memories from debating Bill 2, the hours and hours and hours that we debated Bill 2, is under section 15. It talks about the public interest: “deal with the Crown’s royalty share of the hydrocarbon substance in a manner that is, in the Commission’s opinion, in the public interest of Alberta.” How many hours did we debate that public interest was not in Bill 2, and . . .

Mr. Mason: Shazam.

Mr. Hale: . . . shazam. It’s in here. It’s kept in here. That’s great. Thank you.

We see that it’s in the public interest, which is great. I mean, that’s what this commission is doing. It’s taking the bitumen royalty in kind, and the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission is working in the best interest of Albertans.

Another section is added here after clause (b) of section 15: “engage in other hydrocarbon-related activities in a manner that is, in the Commission’s opinion, in the public interest of Alberta.” More public interest, which is good.

Now, when I read this, I’m hoping that it’s going to relate, possibly, to the LNG pipelines that we’re seeing built. This will allow the commission not just to look after the BRIK program but to look after the LNG and the new pipelines that are coming. I’d like clarification on that also to see if that’s what’s meant by this statement, that this commission can look after the LNG projects that currently are under way. So if the hon. Energy minister could answer some of these questions.

Dealing with the Auditor General, will the Auditor General be able to audit this commission? Explain why for some unknown reason it’s unFOIPable for five years. You know, why are they making the public or us wait for five years to find out information?

There was another one that I was a little skeptical of in here. After section 12 under investment it talks about how:

- (3) The Commission may, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council,
  - (a) directly or indirectly purchase shares.

Now, to me that says that the government is not just getting in the business of looking after taking bitumen, you know, under the BRIK program and royalties in kind, but now they’re going to be buying shares. What companies are they going to buy shares in? Is this an example of picking winners and losers? We spoke quite a bit against that. The government shouldn’t be able to pick winners and losers. So when they say that they’re going to purchase shares, to me that raises a bit of a red flag that they’re going to be able to make side deals with companies and say: “Okay. Well, you know what? We’ll help you out. We’re not going to give you any funding here and there, but we’re going to buy shares in your company. We’re going to make sure that your company is strong through buying shares.” To me that doesn’t seem quite right. So I’d also like the hon. Energy minister to explain this purchasing shares portion of this bill. The government needs to get out of the business of picking winners and losers, and this just seems like another good example.

I’m hoping that the Energy minister can answer some of these questions for me and, you know, ensure that these records and the annual report that is going to be prepared are not only made public in this Legislature but also made public to all Albertans as this commission is handling their royalty dollars from the oil and gas reserves of Albertans. That’s their job.

In closing, in order for me to stand up and vote in favour of this bill, there are some very important questions that I hope the Energy minister will answer. I look forward to hearing some comments from the other members on the government side and our side. I know there’s been some talk in the offices about different viewpoints. You know, how much should the government be getting involved? How much risk should the government be taking? When we see the BRIK program, there is some risk involved. When they’re committing 100 million barrels a day over 20 years – and I believe the figure was about $5 billion – are they sure that that $5 billion is going to be more than they would have gotten if they would have taken the royalties as they ship it down the pipelines?

There are some other issues with these contracts that they’re going to be signing with these pipeline companies. Hopefully, it never happens, but if there is a pipeline break, is the Alberta government going to be on the hook for part of the cost of cleanup with these pipeline companies shipping the government’s bitumen? That’s a question that I’d also like answered at some point in time.

You know, I would hope that they would make these contracts available. I understand that there are some issues with giving out too much information on business deals. Not everybody puts their whole business on the table. But as you’re working for Albertans and you’re handling Albertans’ money, Albertans have a right to know what’s going on and how their royalties are being handled.

I look forward to the conversation as we continue on Bill 34. I strongly urge the Energy minister to, and I hope that he will, stand up and clarify some of my questions so that we can continue on in this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is not yet available, so we’ll move on to the next speaker, after whom 29(2)(a) will be available.

Edmonton-Centre, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak in second reading to Bill 34, the Building New Petroleum Markets Act. Now, I’ll admit that I don’t think our smaller staff had the time to prepare notes, or maybe I didn’t get them, so I did what I always do, which is read the bill.

Mr. Hale: That’s good. That’s a start.

Ms Blakeman: I know. It’s just such an unusual practice in this House.

You know, it's got a lot of cool stuff that happens. I have a couple of observations and then a few questions for the sponsoring minister. By the way, I appreciate the presence of the minister in the House when this bill is being debated. That doesn't happen usually, so I do want to note in particular his presence and, from what I can see, his fairly open ears. No earplugs that I see yet, so a good sign.

This reminds me a lot of a proposal that was made in the mid-2000s by Kevin Taft. He called it the western tiger, and at the time it was met with howls of derision from my hon. colleagues opposite. But, in effect, what he was saying – and that was then, and this is now, so there's a slight difference in what's going on – was that, you know, we're doing really well. We've got all kinds of production. Price per barrel is very high. The BRIK program was coming into existence or was on its way into existence or something. Dr. Taft's suggestion was: why don't we look to share the opportunity, share the wealth rather than saying that, okay, we're going to allow 10 upgraders to be built just east of the city? I think that's what it was at the time.

We in the Liberal caucus at that time had profound concerns about the cumulative effects of having that much upgrader development happening in a fairly small area. The Dodds-Round Hill open coal mine was also happening in the same area, so that's a lot to put on one community. We felt that there was cause for concern over cumulative effects.

The proposal that he had was: well, share it. You know, we can figure out how much interest and support there is for one or two or three or four upgraders here, and beyond that, we should be encouraging and working with our neighbours – Saskatchewan, Manitoba, however far you wanted to go – to also work on building upgraders where the bitumen or the oil products that they were talking about at any given time could be dealt with. And, oh my God. That was just crazy-making.

I'm really reminded of that now that I look at this because, in effect, this is what it's setting up. I know that back then Dr. Taft was talking about sharing the wealth, and this government now is talking about how we need to find other ways to export our product. With the ongoing concerns we have about the Keystone pipeline – and I'm not sure what's happening today with the pipeline to the west coast – this is suggesting that we could be shipping bitumen in kind, the BRIK program, to other places in Canada that could be doing the upgrading. So same kind of idea, slightly different execution.

What's the song? What a Difference a Day Makes. Well, what is that now, six, seven, eight years? What a difference eight years makes. Here it is back with the government of Alberta's stamp right on the front there. God bless their little cotton socks.

There's one other observation I wanted to make. My colleague who is the critic for this bill in our caucus has often commented that getting rid of the Alberta Energy Company was one of the – I'm trying to think of a nice way to put this, Mr. Speaker – least clever things that this government had done because it took away our opportunity to be able to deliver our product and, frankly, to muscle where we needed to muscle in order to get our product out of the ground and through the process and shipped to other places. It strikes my colleague and me that, boy, we've spent a lot of time to come back to the same place. I do see this as an admission from the government that there are 25 years of whoops, uh-oh involved in this that we do come back to essentially the same place and say: okay; well, this is what we're going to need to do. A bit frustrating to think that we could have been doing this a long time ago and had the benefit of this for a substantial period of time. Those were the two observations that I wanted to make.

Now, a couple of concerns that I had with the bill that I'm sure he will be able to explain. First of all, I notice that they go into quite a bit of – well, no, actually, it's not quite large; it's just very specific. The obligations of the directors are spelled out here. Responsibility. It's in section 7 of the bill, amending section 6 of the original act. Responsibility of directors and officers: "shall act honestly." Well, yes. Thank you for putting that in the act because we don't always do that, and then we're in trouble. Somebody acts dishonestly and we have no way of calling that out and saying: you were supposed to do something, and you breached the act. All right. "Act honestly and in good faith and with a view to the best interests of the Commission." Okay.

Then it goes on to part (b), "shall exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonable and prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances." I'm trying to catch the eye of my lawyer friends over there. I think that is a fairly consistent legal term that turns up fairly often.

Mr. Denis: What's that? Sorry; I wasn't getting that.

Ms Blakeman: That this is a fairly consistent legal phrase that's used. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please, let's go through the chair here. We'll all benefit from it that way.

Hon. member, perhaps if you just repeat the phrase, then at an appropriate time under 29(2)(a) the minister could answer.

Ms Blakeman: I hear you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just a little puzzled that my friends opposite would be so interested in denying all of that hard work in law school, but okay. Fine.

So I can hear the legalese running through that. My concern is that nowhere in here does it actually set up or indicate that this commission would fall under the conflicts of interest regulations and the Conflicts of Interest Act that we have, which is a perfect example of what opposition members kept trying to bring to the front of the recent review of the Conflicts of Interest Act, in that there are a number of paid and volunteer or stipend-paid chairs of boards, agencies, and commissions and board members and executive staff who should be included under the Conflicts of Interest Act and who are not. I believe that this is another example. I'd like to know if this commission is covered by and would be involved in any of the important features of the Conflicts of Interest Act; that is, the chair, the board members, or the executive staff would be required to file a disclosure form, they would be required to adhere to a cooling-off period, and they would be obligated to follow through on the major clauses of that act. I'd like that question answered.

I am really disappointed to see yet again – and I think this is going to be piece of legislation, or statute, number 39, that is opting itself out of or declaring paramountcy over or rather that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act does not apply to this commission and what it is doing for a period of five years. I'm presuming there that it's trying to protect information that's going forth to cabinet, but I think the real concern here is that, once again, we are diluting our freedom of information act overall because we keep piecemealing it. It was intended – and the clause in the front of that act says: this applies to everything. Little by little this government keeps going: "Well, not this. Hmm, not that. No, not this piece of legislation. Not this section in this statute either." We are diluting, weakening the overall effectiveness of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act by doing this.

We were specifically warned against that by the outgoing commissioner, who went on at length about the situation that we had found ourselves in with the government repeatedly doing this. I will repeat his concerns because this potentially is a lot of money for Alberta. It's potentially got a huge possible conflict of interest involved in it, in that the people that are likely to be appointed to this board will move in a circle where many others are involved in the same sort of business. They will have a very wide application of what they're doing here, and they are going to be playing with a whole whack of money. The whole whack of money belongs to Albertans and the resource belongs to Albertans. What we're being told here is that Albertans don't get to find out what this commission is doing, thinking of doing, or has done for a period of five years.

Mr. Hale: Open and transparent.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yes. One of my colleagues on this side of the House is pointing out that it's not open and transparent. That's true.

But it's also creepy and weird because if there's nothing wrong here, then it should be accountable and it should be open. So if it's not and it's being specifically excluded from the application of the FOIP Act . . .

An Hon. Member: It's creepy and weird.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Creepy and weird. Cue the creepy, you know, haunted house music.

What are they worried about here? What's being hidden? What are they anticipating that the public will want to know that they won't want to tell them? That is exactly when you need freedom of information legislation to be there for you. It's not there for members of the government; it's there for the people of Alberta. That's what's wrong with putting clauses like this in a bill. It is starting out to be sneaky and creepy around providing information to the people of Alberta. That's what's wrong with that whole clause. Tell me why. Explain to me why the minister feels he needs to be sneaky and creepy about the information that's coming out, about the plans and other information for this Building New Petroleum Markets Act.

Those were the questions that I would like to have – oh, shoot. No. There were a couple more, but I'm going to run out of time. Oh, the indemnification clause is humongous. It starts on page 3, and it goes almost on to page 5. Almost. It's more than a page of who's not going to be held responsible here. I'm thinking: what is the problem? What, again, are you anticipating that you have to – “the Commission may in writing indemnify,” and then it starts on that list that goes over a page and a half, “a present or former director or officer of the Commission.”

3:40

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. I'm just wondering if the hon. member could explain a little bit more about the indemnification and what kind of concerns her about that. I know we've seen that in other legislation coming through this year. There were some amendments put forward from our party dealing with the criminal activity and stuff in another bill. I'd like to just see, when she reads this, what her opinions are.

Ms Blakeman: I'll tell you, hon. member. What I'm seeing here is, again, the anticipation of something really bad happening in that they go through such a list and detail so many different individuals or positions: a present or former director or officer of the commission, an individual who is acting at the commission's request as a director or an officer or in a similar capacity of another entity, an employee or a former employee, the heirs and legal representatives of people that have just been referenced. So they're casting forward a long way into the future. Then they go into what they're trying to indemnify them from: costs, charges, expenses, any amount paid to settle an action or satisfy a judgment. They go on and on and on.

So they're expecting to be taken to court. Why? Why are you doing this if you're expecting to be taken to court on it? Or is it because this is just involving such a monumental amount of money that they're expecting that somebody else is going to try to get some of that money, and they're going to try to get it by taking them to court? Okay. Well, that's a different problem entirely and, I would argue, should be taken care of in a different way.

It goes right down – no liability whatsoever is likely. What we used to have is one little clause that said: the minister and the staff cannot be sued or taken to court if they're doing their job. That's it. Now we have a page and a half of indemnification of not only current employees but past employees. I reference the timekeeper, the little hourglass that the character Hermione in the Harry Potter series had, where she could turn time back and go back and then kind of double-time everything, do everything twice as fast in the same period of time. It's that thought of going back and changing that past, which I've now seen this government do a couple of times, that I find very curious.

Now, it may well be the influence of a number of people that have law degrees on the other side, although for some reason they don't want to admit to them today, but that's a different problem. It is very interesting to me why the government feels it needs to go to that length to indemnify members of the commission, staff, former staff, directors, and whatever that other phrase was, “heirs and legal representatives.” You know, I'm just a plain old gal from downtown, but that strikes me as having a lot of other things rolled into it. I'm just very curious about why they feel they need to go to that much trouble to indemnify that many people.

So thank you for asking me the question because I think it's worth asking, and I'm very interested in what the minister has to say by way of an answer about that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)? Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Do I see you wanting to be on the list?

Before we go there, can I ask for unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: I have Calgary-Glenmore and Calgary-Currie. Who would like to go first? Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues. I rise today to introduce Sheila Taylor. Sheila is the Calgary public school board trustee for wards 11 and 13. We share constituents. Sheila is in Edmonton today to attend the Alberta School Boards Association meetings. Sheila serves as the chair of the Calgary public school board. I'd ask Sheila to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature as we thank you for your public service.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Apparently, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you have ceded your position in the speaking order so that the leader of the New Democratic opposition could go next. That is correct? Okay. Thank you.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 34

Building New Petroleum Markets Act

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I appreciate his courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, is an interesting piece of legislation. I had a briefing with the minister a week and a half ago. It was all very congenial, and because we didn't actually have any paper in the briefing – we didn't really see what was in the act – I said: is there anything that is going to set off alarm bells in the world of the NDP?

Ms Blakeman: And what did he say?

Mr. Mason: That he had a hard time getting inside the minds of New Democrats. [interjections] And it's mutual, of course, Mr. Speaker.

He also, you know, indicated that it was fairly innocuous. Well, I've read through the bill, and it's like a 12-alarm fire as far as I'm concerned. Bells are going off all over the place.

There are a few good things in the act, and I'll just deal very summarily with those. There are some changes that will result in greater corporate oversight in structure and a more detailed, clearly defined management plan for the commission. Directors are now subject to disclosure requirements for the related contracts and transactions. That's good, and that's it.

Mr. Speaker, we support more upgrading of our resources here in Alberta in order to get the most value for the assets that belong to us and to share the wealth of this province amongst all of its citizens. However, what this bill actually provides for is more of what we've come to expect from this secretive and biased government: special rule-making for their industry friends at the expense of ordinary Albertans along with short-term solutions and mismanagement that mean we're losing out on huge amounts of the wealth that is owned by all of us together.

Instead of spending more time and money creating more plum patronage appointments for the Tories' friends by propping up inadequate programs like the BRIK, why don't we develop a fair, sustainable, and efficient royalty system to stimulate and sustain prosperity for all Albertans? Mr. Speaker, as Peter Lougheed said: it's time to start acting like owners.

I want to deal a little bit with the royalty structure. Still more research on building markets is here, but there's no real work being done to get the upgraders that we need here. There's no work to develop strategies to build capacity and jobs here in Alberta. This is, pure and simple, just marketing bitumen and marketing the raw materials of our province and not about creating long-term employment and industrial development in our province.

Mr. Speaker, in 2012-13 the government planned to collect only 10 per cent of expected petroleum revenues, which is well below the 35 per cent target set by Peter Lougheed. This cost Albertans $22.3 billion in just that one year. Programs like BRIK and the commission are Band-Aids and sideshows when what we really need are leadership and policies that get us fair prices for our resources and a long-term strategy to develop this business for the benefit of all Albertans.

The BRIK program, for example, only involves 70,000 barrels per day of raw bitumen, which is a very small proportion of the over 1.7 million barrels produced each day. The North West upgrader has a similarly small capacity relative to the amount of hydrocarbon production in the province. Together, this is hardly enough to create real movement towards more upgrading in Alberta and creating more and better jobs and deriving value from our resources.

Now, even at the very low standard of 70,000 barrels a day the Tories are already envisioning companies being unable to meet this obligation, and this explains why they had to build convoluted and secretive structures and powers in this bill to help prop up this failing program and their friends in the wealthy oil companies. For example, the May 2013 report of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future already showed that the government and producers are forecast to have insufficient bitumen volume to meet their obligations, meaning that they will have to purchase bitumen from other private sources just to make up the shortfall.

Mr. Speaker, we need to take a look at the price differential today. Albertans continue to be denied full value for their resources. By building on the BRIK program even further, the Tories are just providing corporate welfare for the companies involved in the commission, which includes Chinese-owned Nexen. Why are we paying wealthy and foreign companies to market our resources at bottom-of-the-barrel prices? How much commission are we paying to these companies to do this marketing?

BRIK still does not provide stable or predictable royalty revenues for the province because the amount of bitumen the government will receive is still dependent on the base royalty rates, which are dependent on oil industry production, the price of oil, and market forces in general. This means that the government is taking on risk and remains unable to adequately predict or plan for the budgeting and financial management in the future.

There are some specific concerns, Mr. Speaker: the repeal of section 10 of the PMA via section 10 of Bill 34. Previously the Auditor General was the auditor of the commission as per the legislation. This bill removes the Auditor General as the auditor, and there are no legislative requirements for who will be appointed as auditor, how they will be appointed, when they will be appointed, or what their term of service as auditor will be. In fact, there are no requirements in the legislation at all for the appointing of an auditor for the auditing of the commission's financial or operational records.

This is a Crown corporation, Mr. Speaker. How can the Auditor General not be the auditor of this commission? Even if we accept that the Auditor General for some fantastic reason cannot or should not be the auditor of the commission, how can we allow a Crown corporation that manages the royalty and resource wealth owned by all Albertans to have no legislative auditing requirements whatsoever?

Mr. Speaker, this is another example in a long list of secretive agencies and decision-making bodies set up by this government. We can't trust them to manage our resources if they won't even allow the Auditor General or any other auditor to review their records. No other corporation, public or private, would operate without clear requirements for the timeline and processes of appointing an auditor. This leaves the auditing of the commission entirely to the discretion of the minister, including the discretion to not audit the commission at all. Knowing the history of secretive and biased decision-making by this government, we cannot trust the minister to appropriately exercise this discretion in the interests of all Albertans, the true owners of the resource.

Mr. Speaker, section 10 of Bill 34 repeals section 11 of the Petroleum Marketing Act, removes the requirement of the commission to file an annual report, and there are now no reporting obligations anywhere in the Petroleum Marketing Act. Again and again we see murky and secretive reporting obligations and the Tories trying to keep us all in the dark.

The commission is a Crown corporation managing billions of dollars' worth of resource wealth owned by all Albertans. Albertans deserve to know how they are conducting their business and how they are making decisions on behalf of all of us. In order to be adequately informed, we need to have clear legislative guidelines about the frequency and adequacy of the reporting of operational information to the public. How will information on operations, revenues, and expenditures be reported to the public? How could all Albertans, as owners of the resources and the rightful recipients of the royalties managed by the commission, be informed about how their resources are being collected, used, and managed, and how can they be included in some of these decisions if they are not adequately informed?

Mr. Speaker, this bill transfers so many powers to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that it makes for less democratic oversight. We all know that the cabinet meets in secret. Its deliberations are private and do not get disclosed publicly. This is yet another example of this government making it harder for ordinary Albertans to get the information they need to see on how decisions are made. In the section concerning the commission's borrowing powers, this is done with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council instead of the minister and is no longer limited by the provision "for the purpose of meeting its obligations as they become due." The commission can now also guarantee the obligations of any person with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

There are some financial implications, Mr. Speaker, as well. Section 12 adds a provision allowing the commission to be a participant under section 40 of the Financial Administration Act and directly or indirectly purchase shares, make or acquire loans of money, and enter into joint ventures or partnerships in a transaction involving the payment of money. These are broad new authorities, broad new powers, and I think it is incumbent on the government to provide information to the Assembly with respect to its plans, policies, and overall philosophy with respect to acquiring shares, making loans, entering into joint ventures and partnerships. All of those things, while they should not be entirely prohibited, in our view, are very, very serious, have landed the government in the past in a great deal of difficulty, and need to be carefully defined and properly constrained. Adequate oversight and scrutiny need to be provided, in particular, in our view, by retaining the Auditor General in his overall position of having oversight of this corporation.

We believe that there are also some questions about information that can be provided to the commission. Section 9 adds proposed subsections which govern the information that must be provided to the commission. The exact implications are hard to ascertain at this point because it is largely an enabling section allowing the cabinet to make regulations respecting the keeping and furnishing of information to the commission. There are no guidelines in the bill about who will need to furnish information, what sort of information might need to be required, the form in which it would be furnished, or whether and by what standards the commission would need to hold that information confidentially as the penalties for any contravention of one of these are yet to be determined. That's left up to regulations.

Mr. Speaker, all of these things are left to the whim of the cabinet, not in a democratic, open process in the Legislature but in secretive and closed-door cabinet meetings.

Mr. Speaker, if I can summarize the position with respect to this, we believe that the marketing of more bitumen, which is underlying this bill, is not the answer for the future of the province. It's not an adequate response to the demands that the public receive full value for the resources, that we add value in the development of our resources and create long-term prosperity for the province. Right now many, many jobs, thousands of jobs, tens of thousands of jobs, are being created primarily in the construction of extraction in the oil sands as well as transmission facilities, pipelines and so on. More construction jobs would be created if some of these pipelines were built, but when the building is finished, when the industry decides that Alberta is at capacity and no further construction of projects is undertaken, then we are going to be in a very difficult position.

What we need to do now, Mr. Speaker – and this is most important – is focus on long-term jobs, and those are found in the areas of upgrading and refining primarily, not in the extraction of raw resources. Those create relatively few jobs, lots of construction jobs, but they're temporary jobs.

If we're going to ensure the long-term sustainability and prosperity of this province, we need to do better than this act. It's not just about marketing more bitumen. It's about adding value here in the province of Alberta and making sure that future generations share in our prosperity. That is why we will be opposing this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, could we then proceed with Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre? Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have many of the same concerns some of the other members have already laid out for the hon. minister, and hopefully he can address some of those concerns. This whole idea of the BRIK program that we have implemented now: I believe we've signed a contract although that contract is not available publicly, so we don't know the details. What we do know is that what's happened here is that the public is taking on the risk for marketing the products of the program, and the premise is that we're going to get better value for it.

Now, I for one think – and many of my colleagues would agree – that if there were assurances or if there was the opportunity to get better value, then this would pass unanimously. We would probably agree, and then the public would get a better deal. But given the bill that's before us and given the information that's available to us, we don't have that answer. We don't have that ability to make an assessment of what the outcome of this program, of this act will be because all we know is this. The contract that was signed I think it was some three to six months ago: the party that signed it with the government was smiling ear to ear.

When I saw that picture in the paper, what I was thinking of, particularly on the announcement: from the perspective of the upgrader, they were no longer taking market risk. What they were getting was the bitumen in kind, and they were going to get paid a processing fee for accepting the raw material, and this government through this agency is now going to market the products that are produced. That's where we're supposedly going to gain our value. It appears that we've now taken on market risk. So where is the benefit for the public? As in any business deal the more risk you take on, the larger the profit or opportunity for profit there should be. We have no way to measure the level of risk that the public is taking here. We have no way to measure how this is all going to pan out once it's put into action.

The reason I say that we have no way to measure this is that when we look at even how the auditing process is going to take place, it's not going to be available to us. We don't have access to it now; we're not going to have access to that information once this bill passes. That's not in the public interest, in my view. What we need is some transparency here. More importantly, we need accountability.

This is a government that prides itself on its results-based budgeting. Then why wouldn't we look at a corporate entity like this and say, "Okay; we're also going to do some results-based measurement, and here's how we're going to do it," lay it out, or make it a requirement in legislation that the regulations stipulate how the results are going to be measured and tracked so that this House and the public get a sense of whether or not it is working in their best interests. There's nothing there to give us that confidence that this is going to work.

Now, the good thing is that we live in a world where even though there may be a lot of environmental protests against hydrocarbon production, it is a product that does sell quite readily, but it doesn't sell without its own risk. There are certain risks, depending on where you're going to be. Now, what I'm concerned about is the lack of accountability and the ability to have these natural components in the system to prevent any kind of fraud, to prevent any kind of misuse of authority or misuse of the position dealing with what is the obligation and responsibility of this entity.

I'm not making any allegations here, but what I want to point out is that if you look at some of the great disasters in the corporate private sector, whether it's Enron, WorldCom, Tyco, AIG, Lehman, every one of these executives, right before they went to jail, said that they were acting in good faith, that they were doing the right thing for their stockholders. Probably in their minds they were doing that, but they didn't convince the court of that, and they couldn't convince their own stockholders of that.

We're dealing with a situation here where there are really no boundaries that are set to give some sort of checks and balances to what we're setting up here. The public doesn't get to see this, and this Assembly doesn't get to see it. It's more or less left up to what's in the agreement that this ministry has signed, which we're not privy to. That is something that we don't get to see the details of. It's a trust-me bill, and I have to tell you that there are some smart people out there that can manipulate the trust-me bills of government to their own advantage. As any law enforcement officer would tell you, we lock our car doors at the shopping mall, and that does not necessarily prevent auto theft, but it keeps honest people honest, and it's a good practice to get into.

When we look at a piece of legislation, what should be in this legislation to make the most of this BRIK program is to have those checks and balances, to have an audit system and a reporting system so this Assembly could at least see how this is operating. Is it doing what we said it was going to do, and is it doing what we want it to do? Whether you'd want to call it results-based or outcome measurements – it doesn't matter what we refer to – there needs to be a set of guidelines here and reporting mechanisms so that we as an Assembly know that this program is doing what it's supposed to do, that the public is actually getting more value. If the public is not getting more value for its resource, then what's the point? What's the point? That's where we're at with this bill.

I chuckle because this came up in the last debate dealing with the indemnification clause except that this one is actually quite a bit longer, which is coincidental or ironic, yet it still indemnifies criminal activity. I remember the debate and the hon. member saying that it would never indemnify any actual criminal conviction. What I did notice after that last debate – and I did go out and do some checking – is that a lot of nongovernment organizations, nonprofit organizations, and private institutions, private companies have an indemnification clause that does not have any mention of the words "criminal" or "criminal activity." But ours does.

If the hon. members across the way, the government members, are correct when they say that it would never indemnify a criminal, then we go back to the same argument. Then why have it in there if it's not necessary? I tell you that the perception in the public is that that's ugly. We would never indemnify criminal activity.

It's kind of comical the way these lawyers wrote this – and I don't know what lawyer ever wrote this – but we're using it time and time again. We indemnify criminal activity that was done in good faith. I'm sure there are a lot of criminals out there that felt that they committed their crime in good faith, but the fact is that I don't know if a court would recognize that. That's a perception issue. I will not argue the legalities of that; I'll let these members do that. But the perception of criminal activity in good faith has never gotten by any court that I know of, and I doubt I'll see that. Hopefully, I'll never see that.

So we have an issue dealing with a few things here. What I would like to see is this program work for the public. The way this is set up, it will not allow me, the opposition, or the public to see it. We won't have any way to verify it. That's a problem, and I think that this government needs to figure out how it wants to address that because then it becomes: whatever we say must be true because there's no one else to refute that, to contradict it, or to do any checking to actually verify that that's what's taking place. What this legislation should do is just lay out how that process will work. It doesn't have to detail the process, but it should lay it out in regulation that this commission, this board must do certain things. It must set out in regulation how the public will be able to verify this.

If the program doesn't work for us, is there a way out of the contract? I mean, how long are we going to be locked into this? This is important. We're going to have the ability to enter into partnerships, buy stocks in other companies. One can only presume that there are going to be other agreements. It's a logical presumption. We don't know what those commitments will be or how we will be locked into those commitments because we don't know what kind of checks and balances even exist. This here is what I see as a potential – there's no guarantee, but there is a potential – for this to go not in the direction that this government intends it to go. This has the potential to be abused without the proper checks and balances. With that missing, we invite a greater degree of that potential to happen.

Hopefully, there will be some amendments brought forward that we'll get to debate. I am still hopeful that this government would be open to those amendments, that they would be willing to review each one on its own merits and improve this bill, show the public how we're going to have that accountability, how we're going to have the transparency, and how we're going to measure the outcome. That's the most important point. We need to be able to measure consistently and match apples to apples to see: are we getting more value for the product than we would have under the old system of just royalty on the raw material? That's so important. If we're not getting that, then we've got to make some changes.

With that, hopefully, the hon. minister will have some kind of response, but I look forward to Committee of the Whole, when some of the amendments come forward and we have a longer debate on this matter.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Does anybody wish to take advantage of it?

Seeing no one, I don't have anyone else on my speaking list, but I see, Edmonton-Strathcona, that you have risen. Let's give you the floor, then.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, is a rather substantive and fulsome bill, which, like the Member for Edmonton-Centre, we are struggling to get a good handle on because, of course, we've not been given a great deal of time and, of course, our briefing didn't actually include any of the details of the bill or any of the substance of the bill.

Ms Blakeman: Didn't they say that it's all good and to vote for it?

Ms Notley: I think they just said: yeah, don't worry about it; it's a bill about changing the Petroleum Marketing Act, and it's all good. You know, as with all things in this House these days, sort of the traditions around full disclosure and thorough briefings are very much going by the wayside.

Obviously, this bill deals with the way in which we do a number of things, including working on and managing Alberta's BRIK policy. The BRIK policy is the itsy-bitsy, teeny-weeny, little baby step that this government has taken in the direction of bringing back to Albertans just the smallest, slightest fraction of the value of our resources rather than selling them as quickly as possible, as environmentally irresponsibly as possible, at the lowest price possible, and generally ensuring that Albertans are as much victims of the industry as they are beneficiaries of it. Certainly, that's something that this government has pursued very aggressively over the last 15 years or so, as we have discussed many times in the past, which contradicts the policy objectives that were laid out even by this government's predecessor, Premier Peter Lougheed.

Anyway, this is a set of changes that will do a number of things to impact on how the petroleum marketing board functions. So we see a number of changes to the act. There is, I guess, one change that we do believe we can support, and it does appear as though we will see greater corporate oversight and a more clearly defined structure with respect to how the commission functions. That is obviously something that we could support.

However, as has been mentioned by other speakers, there are also elements of this bill which are problematic. One thing that, of course, has been discussed by many is the whole issue of removing the role of the Auditor General to audit or to review the records of the commission. There's been no good explanation for why it is that the government thinks that this is a good idea. I really don't see any explanation in what they've put forward. Of course, the Auditor General is one of those few safeguards that we have in this province to every now and then shed even the slightest amount of light onto what these folks are doing behind closed doors. Heaven knows, there is a lot that they are doing behind closed doors.

So it is concerning and it should be concerning to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, that we are removing the role of the Auditor General with respect to the commission and providing no clear specifics as to what or who will replace the Auditor General in that respect.

Otherwise, apart from the general view of this government that all that can be done secretly should be done that way just as a matter of course and as a rule of thumb, if it is possible to draw a curtain around it . . .

Ms Blakeman: A general rule.

Ms Notley: A general rule. It's a general rule. Right. Of course. A general rule: if it is possible to draw a curtain around what the government is doing, they will do it. Certainly, when it comes to their friends in the oil and gas industry, that curtain becomes increasingly used. There's no clear indication why we would do that.

As well, the bill purports to remove the requirement of the commission to file an annual report. So then, if you look through the act, there appear to be no reporting obligations remaining in the act. You know, I think they can all get around the table and talk to each other and report to each other and report to their friends in the industry and go for dinner and cocktails and maybe sell fundraising tickets to said dinners and cocktails and in those situations report to each other about what they're doing and who's making what and who's doing what. Maybe that's the plan. But it does not appear as though there is an obligation anymore for an annual report to be filed, which is really quite stunning, because, you know, fully private corporations have standards that require that.

Why it is that we would create a quasi Crown corporation that gets to do everything in secret and forgo the most basic of transparency requirements is beyond me except, of course, that it's being done by this government, which, to review, has as probably one of its two or three fundamental objectives keeping the people of this province in the dark. So there we go. The annual report requirement is no longer there.

We also see an interesting change where the minister is no longer the key decision-maker. Now it appears to be cabinet that is making these decisions. I suppose that's a slightly bigger group of people behind, well, frankly, a thicker, even harder to see through kind of door. But at least there is a bigger number of people, I presume, making these decisions so that everybody in the club, or the family, as they've been referred to in the past, can be fully aware of what's going on. Certainly, it will continue to be the case that those outside of the family will not know.

Section 15 of the PMA is being amended in order to allow the commission to "engage in other hydrocarbon-related activities in a manner that is, in the Commission's opinion, in the public interest of Alberta." It's interesting that they did actually put in the concept of public interest, knowing, for instance, that the Alberta Energy Regulator so clearly has had that particular objective removed from its mandate. I suppose we still see this here although, of course, it's in the opinion of the commission, so we have no idea who would sit on that commission or which friends of whom or which shareholders of what or which lobbyists for groups will be sitting on that commission, all that kind of stuff. We don't really know what that additional activity will involve or, in fact, how it is that the public interest will be defined or by whom. It would be helpful to get a clear sense from the minister what exactly the other hydrocarbon-related activities are that are being contemplated through the addition of this section into the legislation.

Another thing that causes some concern to me is that the legislation amends the type of information that needs to be provided to the commission. Now, I'm assuming in some cases that's business-sensitive information, but I'm not entirely sure what exactly it will look like when all is said and done because, of course, it just allows for the authority for that to be established. It doesn't actually outline what that would be.

Then, of course, it also goes further to just doubly ensure that we exempt any of the information that might be collected through the commission from disclosure under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. It's quite interesting, really, when you look at where this government uses that piece of legislation. They really ought to just get rid of the whole freedom of information part of the act. People call it FOIP, but I think we should just call it the PPA, the protection of privacy act, because, really, that's all we do anymore.

We certainly do not make . . . [interjection] The Member for Edmonton-Centre says: no, they don't. It's true. They're not terribly concerned about protecting the privacy of individual health records, for instance, that kind of thing. They want to make sure that that can be disclosed all over the yingyang. But they are very good at protecting the privacy of government activity and government work. Certainly, they are not at all interested in sharing the freedom of that information, and we see that over and over and over again. That, nonetheless, is something that you would see as a result of, again, this proposed act exempting the information that is collected through the act from the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, again, the primary objective of this government being to keep as much secret as they possibly can.

Again, as I said, having gotten limited briefing on this, we are still working on what the ultimate outcomes could be with respect to this. However, there is no question that there are a number of very, very important issues at play here that are very, very important to Albertans. What is most important to Albertans, of course, is transparently ensuring the best maximization of our resources to the best interests of all Albertans and ensuring that we develop this resource effectively. Therefore, we need to know that there is more opportunity.

As a result, I'll be making a motion that we amend Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, by deleting all the words after "that" and that we substitute the following: "Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2."

I have copies of this amendment to distribute, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the leader of the New Democratic opposition has already spoken, so it would not be in order for you to move the amendment on his behalf, but if you wish to move that amendment on your own behalf, I believe that would be in order, would it not?

Ms Notley: Okay. Sure.

The Speaker: We would need to see it. It would have to be from you, hon. member. We'd have to see how it's phrased and worded and so on. We'll give you a moment to do that.

Did you complete your comments?

Ms Notley: We'll get photocopies of that now.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. members, an amendment has been proposed. I'd like to see a copy of it, and I'm sure our Parliamentary Counsel would as well. Let us take a moment to have a look.

Hon. member, we're just reviewing this, and we'll be back here with a ruling in just a moment, but did you sign it yourself?

Ms Notley: I changed the name.

The Speaker: Perhaps we could get you to sign it. Could we have a page deliver this, please?

Hon. members, we don't have the required number of photocopies available at this moment. However, let me just read you the amendment, and if you are in agreement, then we can proceed with the debate on the amendment. Is that acceptable to all members here?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Okay. The notice of amendment, which is now ruled in order, reads that the motion for second reading of Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Basically, what it is is a referral amendment.

That being said, we'll now recognize some speakers. You'll each have 15 minutes, and 29(2)(a) can and will be available after each speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, this is a good idea. Sorry; I think it's a good idea. I'm not sure that my hon. colleagues opposite would think that. I had not expected the number and force of the objections to what's being considered here. I thought it was just me, but clearly that's not the case. This is very important for Albertans.

For those of us that have been out from underneath this dome – and I got to talk to lots of people because I worked for a candidate in the municipal elections, so I've been out door-knocking quite a bit – boy, it's interesting to see the level of understanding that at least the people I spoke to have come to. I still hear from a lot of people that think the royalty rate should be higher. I still hear from a lot of people in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, by far the majority, that are very concerned with the lack of vigorous environmental protection and the constant eroding of that environmental protection. I heard a lot from people that expressed concern about the management of our resources, conventional oil, the Fort McMurray area, the oil sands, the gas fields, fracking, and water. Of course, poor old coal is just, well, on its way out. We have so much of it but won't be using much of it going forward, at least not to burn.

It's really been impressed upon me, and it's a great refresher to be able to understand that people do get it. They may not be aware of how much this government has moved towards these – I used to call them shell bills, which makes them sound kind of pretty, you know, like those big conch shells, but actually they're more like an empty box. You know, the media come up and say, "So what do you think about the new bill, blah, blah, blah?" and you go: "Well, it's like an empty box. You look in it; there's nothing there."

It's just box." It depends on what the government is going to put into the box that is going to make that a valuable program or not.

Increasingly, we don't know what they're going to put in the box. The media don't know, the opposition doesn't know, and I would venture to say that a number of the government's own caucus don't know what's going in that box. Increasingly, we don't ever get to see what's in that box, or we don't get to see what's in that box for an extended period of time. That is not responsible on our parts as legislators.

I expect to come in here, and I expect that I will have read the bill, that I will have talked to some stakeholders, that I will have an understanding of what's going on, and that I will get up and talk to it in a way that is beneficial to my constituents and to all Albertans. I take that responsibility to both of those groups seriously.

I can't say that what I'm seeing in this bill – and I had missed the stuff about the Auditor General. What's happened here is that the section that you used to see – here we go again, used to see – in these bills would say that, you know, there has to be an annual report presented and budget presented to the minister, and then it all gets audited after the fact. That's now gone. They're pulling it out of the bill. It was there; they're pulling it out. So there's a question about who audits this and who sees the audit.

You know, it's one thing for me to say: well, let's hope that it all goes well, and it all turns out marvelously, and a ton of money is made for Albertans, and we have used our resources responsibly and invested for the future and all of those other good things. But how do I go back and face my constituents if this thing tanks big time and through this program we waste resources and don't save any for future generations or we make choices that pollute or cause health problems for people? How do I go back to my constituents and say: yes, I was responsible, and I looked in that empty box that's called the – I've already gone on to another act. Sorry. It's something about marketing.

Mr. Hughes: Building New Petroleum Markets Act.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Building New Petroleum Markets Act.

I look in that box, and it's still empty. There's no audit in there. There's no monitoring or evaluation function in there to be able to judge it by. There's no audit that allows me to look at it. At this point I don't even know if the Auditor General, depending on who is in the position, is more or less willing to take on value-for-money audits, but I find value-for-money audits very useful because they're a way of having an expert in money look at something very carefully and look at what the objectives of the program are and other crucial elements around it and say: did this program get value for Albertans' money? It makes it a lot easier for us to understand. We've had some very good ones done.

For example, we had the long-term care ones done. We had the BSE one done. With all that money that went out there, did we help individual farmers, which was the intent of that program? Answer: no. Most of the money went to two – I don't know what you'd call them.

An Hon. Member: Feedlots.

Ms Blakeman: Feedlots. Thank you.

The program was set up to award the money based on the number of cows that were standing in your yard on a given day. Well, who had the most cows standing there? The feedlots. There weren't that many cows standing around in individual farmers' fields. Who really got the advantage of that program? Not the individual farmers, that we all say that we want to support, not those hearty types like the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who, you know, ran her own farm with her family. That's not who got helped. It wasn't those individual people; it was honking big corporations. You know, I'd like to feel sorry for them, but do they need my sympathy? No. They don't need my sympathy. They don't need my help. They have the government's help, so they certainly don't need mine. But in all seriousness, they were hardly clutching their tattered clothing about them, standing on the windy prairie with their tears freezing on their cheeks. They were in pretty good shape.

Those kinds of audits help all of us to understand the intricacies of this. Did we do this program wisely? It's a much bigger look at it than: "Did you account for the money? Where? Did you spend it? Did you write it down?" That's very troubling, that I can't even tell you, looking at that as to – Oh, the amendment. I can't even tell you, looking at it, if that's possible, and that's why we need this particular act to be referred to a committee, so that we can take a larger look at it.

You know, I know the committee that's chaired by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, the policy field committee for resources. It's called something else now. They've done some work on hydro, in-stream hydro, and they've done some work on natural gas, selling, marketing natural gas. They get speakers in. Like a Senate committee, they do the hard work, slogging it out in those committee rooms, trying to get a good sense of what's going on.

I think that's what we need to do with this bill so that all of us could go back to our constituents and say: "Yes. We did well by you. We made sure that this was the best legislation that it could be, that it looked after your assets, that it saved for the future, that it had responsible checks and balances in it, that anyone was able to look at the evaluation of the program and understand the evaluation and be able to have a reasonable opinion based on that evaluation." I don't see any of that. So we do need to take this somewhere else and have a look at it.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I don't think the members opposite mean to be – I think most of them genuinely come to work and think they're doing a good job. They look across at the opposition, and they think: "Oh, they're just wasting time. They don't have a place in democracy." You get into a headspace. I mean, Premier Klein used to talk about dome disease, and you do get into a headspace where you're surrounded by people that are telling you what they think you want to hear. There have certainly been examples of staff members doing things that they shouldn't have done because they thought that that's what the minister wanted them to do. The minister never said that, but everybody in that office knew that that's what the minister would be very happy to have happen.

I'm very reluctant to say – I'm sure this happens to some people, that they have nefarious reasons, that they are attempting to achieve something that they wouldn't want to have discussed on the front page of the Journal or the Sun. But I think that for the most part people on the other side believe they're doing a good job, but I have to say that your reference points are just not wide enough and not – you know, you're so 1950s. You are so working your way back there. If I threw you in the pool, you'd turn around and go for that shallow end that says 1950s instead of swimming in the other direction and going for something that says new millennium, participation of the taxpayers and the citizens in an open decision-making process.

Everybody goes: blah, blah, blah; we want younger people involved in the process. Well, you know what? This is absolutely anti-involvement of younger people. They want to know what's going on. They want to be involved in that. They want to see that evaluation. They want to think about it themselves. These are not stupid people. We, up until recently, had a very good postsecondary education system that was pretty accessible to a lot of people. These people that I work with took advantage of that. They are smart people, and they are interested in being involved. They don't want to stand out there and be told something through a news release. They want to be able to go online and read it themselves and make their own decision.

The increasing direction that this government takes, swimming towards the shallow end of the 1950s, just makes them feel totally distanced from government. That's where you get all of that, "Well, we don't know who you are and how you're making decisions and what you're all about, and we're not going to engage with you. We're not going to be involved in that particular project." Well, the Speaker is waving the amendment at me again. But that's the point of all this, Mr. Speaker, that what we've had up until now is not satisfying, and to progress further at this point through second reading is not appropriate given the immensity of this, the impact – oh, don't use "impact" as a verb; sorry about that – the anticipated influence that this could have on the future wealth, you know, future postsecondary education, the cost of everything. We – my generation and my parents' generation and the generation that came after me – have been very poor stewards of the wealth that we have in Alberta. We love to spend it; we weren't so good about understanding how to save it. The fact that this government has to pass a bill to tell themselves to save money gives me the willies. I mean, honestly? You don't just naturally do that as a government? No. They have to pass a bill to make themselves be fiscally responsible. I thought that was in the job description, but I guess I missed it.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available should anyone wish to pursue that. The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Yes. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre: I would like to ask her if she would like to complete that last thought.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Do you mean about the participation of the next generation?

Mr. Mason: Yeah, and its impact.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, not as a verb. Don't use "impact" as a verb. Or "interface." That's the one that's really bad: we're going to interface.

I think that is something that many of us don't understand. The longer you have a government in place, the more comfortable it gets and the more people on the government side come to believe that that's the way it's always been and that's the way it should be. You know, having to answer people is just a little time consuming and troublesome, and they ask such stupid questions sometimes. Why don't they get it and all of that kind of thing? Well, sometimes despite their best attempts the media, the opposition, and the public don't get it because there's nothing there to get. There is no information for us to understand or to put into context. Back to the empty box. Look in the bottom, and it's an empty box. So what? It's a box. It's not going to do anything. It's just a box, and until you fill that box with something useful, we don't have anything to judge you by.

Sorry. That's kind of mid-thought, but I'm hoping that that will satisfy the member. That's the best I can do on that one. I think we're just not being responsible, and we just don't get what the public are expecting us to do, expecting us to include them in the discussion and bring them along in that discussion. Continuing to make things less accessible, less detailed, with less of it in there is running counter to what the expectations of the public are. I think we see the reflection of that in the number of people who vote. At some point government will not have credibility because so few people, such a low percentage of the population, have in fact put them in government that they're not credible. I think that's where we're headed.

I think we should put this motion into place, run it through a committee, and maybe we can make a small difference and make this bill a bit better. I don't think we're going to change the world by sending it to committee and making it a little bit better, but we could make enough of a difference that I think it's worth while doing it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, let's go to the next speaker, then. To the amendment, please. Confine your comments to the amendment. The leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak to this excellent amendment, that I would have made had I been able to, but thank you very much to my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona.

This is a very important piece of legislation. It's very important. It deals with the marketing of our bitumen. Under the BRIK program it deals with the marketing of conventional crude oil that is taken in lieu of royalties. It deals with billions and billions of dollars of our assets, so it deserves quite a bit of scrutiny.

One of my big concerns after having a look at the bill was that it would just go through without getting appropriate scrutiny in the assumption that it's all about oil and gas and that only the government can understand that sort of stuff and that the opposition should stick to health care and education.

Well, that's not our view, Mr. Speaker. We think that this is one of the most fundamental issues that the Legislature can deal with; that is, how we handle the royalties in kind that we receive. Given that the government's strategy under BRIK is to take bitumen in kind, I think that it deserves close attention.

Now, in my comments on the bill itself I've dealt with a number of things – royalties, the importance of value-added, and so on – but I'd like to talk about one thing that I think really needs to be scrutinized here. I also think that the government side should consider whether or not they want more scrutiny on this point, and that is the elimination of the requirement for an audit or, specifically, for the Auditor General to have oversight of the operations of that commission as well as the removal of the requirement that it file an annual report.

I think these are two very, very serious pieces that need to be addressed, and here's why. This is from Alberta Energy's own website describing the commission. It says:

The Commission is the provincial Crown corporation responsible for selling the conventional crude that the Alberta government receives in lieu of cash royalties. Created by the 1974 Petroleum Marketing Act, the APMC also develops the prices used in royalty calculations.

In 2012, the APMC's mandate was expanded to include helping to develop new energy markets and transportation infrastructure and managing Alberta's Bitumen Royalty In Kind (BRIK) policy . . .

APMC continues to be responsible for selling the nearly 70,000 barrels per day of conventional oil that the province receives as its royalty share. To do this, the APMC works with almost 5,000 oil batteries and 180 pipelines, collecting 17 per cent of Alberta's conventional oil production.

The website goes on:

Effective June 1, 2013;

- Shell Trading Canada manages and markets approximately 40% of the volume
- Nexen Marketing . . .

Remember Nexen, recently sold to the Chinese national oil corporation?

. . . manages and markets approximately 50% of the volume on behalf of the APMC and

- APMC continues to market approximately 10% of the volume directly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here we have a body that helps set our royalties and therefore has a direct impact on a huge revenue source in the province of Alberta, a critical one – let's not forget the impact of the so-called bitumen bubble on the last budget – that markets large volumes of conventional oil and bitumen. It's a publicly owned corporation, yet the Auditor General will no longer have jurisdiction. In fact, there's no requirement for audit of any kind. Now, I'm assuming that there will be some auditing. Perhaps that audit will only go to the board and perhaps a copy to the minister, but the public will never see it.

What can possibly go wrong, Mr. Speaker, with a body that is responsible for determining our royalty prices, responsible for marketing tens of millions, hundreds of millions, billions of dollars' worth of oil products that we receive in lieu of cash royalties from oil companies? It doesn't have to be audited, and it no longer has to file an annual report. Not only that, but it turns over its functions for marketing to Shell and Nexen. Oh, I think we should keep an eye on those guys. I think we should be auditing what they do and make sure we're not getting less than we're entitled to. I had a ruder way I was going to describe that.

The auditing function and the Auditor General play a key role here and should play and continue to play a key role in ensuring that the business of this corporation is done in the public interest and that we're not being cheated and that we are getting good information when we make royalty decisions. With this bill that may no longer be possible.

Mr. Speaker, on those points alone I think that we should refer it to the standing committee, and I further think that it would be great if this bill could be subject to public input. Now, we haven't really mastered that in this Legislature since I've been here. Edmonton city council, if I can refer to another order of government, and, I know, other city and town councils make better use of their committees in terms of canvassing public opinion and allowing the public to speak and have input on decisions that are important to them.

Let's not forget that every Albertan has a share in these natural resources, and how they're marketed, the price we receive for them, is of concern to every Albertan, not just the oil companies. I know that the government likes to listen to the oil companies, but they have also failed to grasp Peter's principle – and I mean Peter Lougheed – that we must think and act like owners. We're not doing that. I think that this particular piece of legislation would benefit and the public would benefit by an opportunity to have their say. I think that that's a very important piece.

Now, we've talked as well about value-added and the failure to put in real policies that allow for that to take place in a much more comprehensive and systematic way and also about the failure of the government to collect royalties that are commensurate with the value of the resources. Right now the government's target is to get about 10 per cent of the value of these resources. The target Peter Lougheed set was 35 per cent, and he hit that target, but this is not the case in this government.

Perhaps a more robust, independent marketing board with more powers will be able to accomplish great things, and I do not challenge that possibility at all. That could potentially be an exciting possibility and an excellent direction for us to go in if it can make deals and so on, but it's fraught with difficulties. It's fraught with challenges. If it's going to be able to borrow, if it's going to be able to do joint ventures, if it's going to make partnerships and get directly involved in the oil and gas business, there are risks. We're not opposed to that in our party on the basis of principle. We're not opposed to it in principle, but we do recognize that there are substantial risks. I think those risks should also be canvassed by the committee, and I think that would be prudent and something that we should consider.

Mr. Speaker, that's really the gist of my comments, my reasons for wanting to have this matter referred to the committee. I am not opposed to building new petroleum markets nor to creating a structure that has the capacity to do that, even to the extent of participating on behalf of the people of Alberta in private business ventures. Nothing against that in principle, but the risks of that need to be carefully studied, and I certainly am not prepared to support going in that direction without adequate public scrutiny and oversight, which can be brought into place by having the Auditor General responsible, as is currently the case, and making sure that annual reports are provided to this Legislature and to the public. If those things are in place, I think we have adequate safeguards, and we can proceed with the bill, but otherwise I'm afraid it's going to be very, very difficult for us to support.

That concludes my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for your attention.

5:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone who wishes to take up 29(2)(a)?

I see no one, so let's move to the next speaker to the amendment, please. That will be Rimbeey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this amendment and for good reason: the resource committee does good work. I think what's really important in putting this to the committee, unless the hon. minister can give me some indication of why it must be passed right now, what urgency would be affecting the bill that it would have to stay here and be passed within a matter of a week or two weeks or whatever it takes, is that this would give the committee time to get input, but most importantly the committee would have time to take a look at the whole issue around oversight and accountability.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This government has claimed multiple times its ability to be transparent, that it's accountable, that it has a gold standard, but in reality when you read this bill, it's full of holes in the sense that it has less accountability and it's less transparent. The thing that we need to have confidence in most is that what we're doing with the BRIK program has some sort of measurable outcome, some sort of accountability that we can look at as the public and say that it is doing exactly what this government wants it to do. That is key.

Right now the bill doesn't lay that out. It does not stipulate that even under regulations this is how it's going to be accountable and transparent, this is how we're going to measure the outcome. That's really important. The bill itself doesn't have to do that in the sense of saying exactly how it's going to be done, but it can stipulate that it must be done by regulation, and it doesn't quite make that clear.

What this bill does open itself up to is a number of significant issues dealing with how this will be managed and the fact that we will not be able to see – now, I understand why we don't have access to the current contracts that have been signed, but what we do see from this side of the House, what the public sees, is that the public is taking on the risk. The guarantee that the processor is getting – and when I say processor, I'm talking about the upgrader and the refinery – in income flow has removed certain market risks for that one agent involved in this contract. So we're back to square one, where the public needs to have the confidence that we're going to implement this program, we're going to have this type of measured outcome, and this is how we're going to verify that outcome, and this is the information that's going to be reported to the public because in the end this is the public's resource.

By putting it to the committee, we have an opportunity now to get input from a number of different stakeholders on how this should be done, and I see this as an aid to getting this bill passed, where people could possibly support it. With that, I think this amendment should be adopted, should be passed, and that the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship should undertake testimony or input from various stakeholders so that we can make subtle changes or even some significant changes to this bill that will assure the public that this is going to work in their best interest.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I ask my fellow colleagues to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I guess, I'm really pleased to see that this bill has garnered so much attention because this is a bill that's very important to all residents of the province of Alberta. It's interesting. We heard two members, the hon. leader of the fourth party and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, that both spoke about the public interest with a lot of interest there. I would say that this is a matter that is very much in the public interest; that is, accessing new markets, getting our product to market. This is important to a hundred per cent of Albertans, not just the two-thirds that live in the urban centres.

I've spent probably the last 10 years of my life marketing product and marketing the oil sands and trying to sell the benefits of bitumen to other parts of the country, North America, and other parts of the world. I'm a little confused when we start looking into bills and looking into what may or may not be perceived in this bill.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In fact, I did have a couple of questions earlier that were asked and answered very well by the minister, where I thought that there were perhaps some holes to open up some problems in the future. But, really, what this is is a piece of housekeeping. It's not an enabling piece of legislation. We already have legislation in place where the BRIK program is being utilized. The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission is already managing the BRIK program on our behalf.

What this bill does, I think, if we look a little bit deeper into the bill, Mr. Speaker, is that it refers back to the Petroleum Marketing Act from 2000, where we were allowing only three members to the commission or the corporation, that were appointed by the minister. In fact, all this is doing is allowing the minister to raise the number of members to seven. It is also improving the relationship and defining the relationship between the APMC and the minister. I would suggest that any definition of an effective government is one that creates an environment that's conducive to doing business and improving the benefits for all Albertans and all constituents. For us to take this and refer it back or hoist it and send it back to a committee is going to delay the process significantly.

Mr. Speaker, right now the oil sands in Wood Buffalo, or the Athabasca oil sands, are currently producing upwards of about 2 million barrels per day. We're at total capacity as to how we're going to get that product to market. BRIK is one of those enablers that is going to allow us to get the product to refineries, hence the partnership with BRIK and the North West upgrader. The projects that are going on right now with the XL pipeline and the eastern route and future routes to the west and to Asia are so, so important for us to hit the goals that we're trying to achieve and some of the projections we have as a province. It's integral to the future of this province as we have much more opportunity on our plate, and we're not going to reach our energy potential if we do not allow this to go through. I think any delays like that will only further have a negative impact on our energy potential.

Mr. Speaker, I can't support this amendment as it sits and will be voting against it. I would encourage my other colleagues to vote the same way. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone?

Okay. Are there any other speakers to the amendment?

I see no other speakers. Are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 34 lost]

The Speaker: We are back to the main discussion on second reading of Bill 34. Are there any other speakers to Bill 34?

I see none. The hon. Minister of Energy to close debate.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I very much appreciate the wide-ranging opinions of colleagues on this topic. There are a couple of matters of fact which I think would help inform the debate around this matter. I'd like to just try to address a couple of them in the couple of minutes that I have.

One is with respect to the question of the Auditor General. What all members will be aware of is that the Auditor General Act actually specifies that the Auditor General is the auditor for all agencies, boards, and commissions of the government of Alberta, so it would be redundant to include it in this legislation. This is simply cleaning up legislation that originally was introduced in 1974. So the Auditor General has a clear role. It is legislated. Certainly, in my experience dealing with the Auditor General, I think that the Auditor General is an important agent on behalf of the people of Alberta to ensure that there is good transparency and accountability in Crown corporations. So that's an important one.

There was a question raised as well about an annual report, suggesting that simply because it's not in the legislation, it's not required. That, again, Mr. Speaker, is not accurate. The requirement for an annual report is already in the Fiscal Management Act of Alberta, and over and above that, of course, any board that is performing its fiduciary duties is actually going to be requiring an annual report addressing that quite directly.

There were questions about FOIP. Why is information unFOIPable for up to five years? This is essentially a commercial entity working on behalf of the interests of the government of Alberta, so there are commercial aspects to pretty much all of the activities of this corporation. That means that it is information that is very commercially sensitive, so that would be the underlying reason. You know, just as an aside, Mr. Speaker, that FOIP exemption already exists under the Mines and Minerals Act for similar information to the Crown and under the Natural Gas Marketing Act for similar information to the APMC. So this is not something that is new. This brings this act into line with other energy acts as well.

A question was asked whether or not the commission can look at projects outside of traditional oil, for example LNG. The APMC has the ability to look at all hydrocarbons, but today we only collect royalties in kind on conventional oil and on bitumen. The government, of course, could provide that direction at any given time as well because this is an agent of the government of Alberta that we're talking about here.

The APMC has been acting commercially on behalf of the government since it was set up by Premier Lougheed in the 1970s. The leader of the fourth party made reference, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that there are two companies today that are agents on behalf of the APMC on behalf of the people of Alberta. Prior to a year ago there was one company that was the agent, and that was actually Nexen. We went through a competitive process and determined that it would be in our interest collectively to have two agents. The APMC still markets some 10 per cent of the royalties that are received in kind in order to ensure that they are fully aware of market conditions and are in the game and acting.

So those are some of the high points, Mr. Speaker. What I would say is that this body, the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, is actually an important agent acting on behalf of the province of Alberta and the people of Alberta. It is a vehicle that has really important strategic opportunities. It serves an important strategic purpose on behalf of Albertans. It helps ensure that we get value for our product. It helps ensure that we can use our strategic capacity if we need to; for example, the commitment that we made as the government of Alberta through the APMC to commit a hundred thousand barrels a day to the Energy East pipeline, to make sure that we actually get our product to the marketplace. These are important initiatives. They are strategically of great value to Albertans because when we get our product to tidewater, when we get access to tidewater, we get global prices, and then we move away from being dependent upon this circumstance we're in today, where we're dependent upon the price only within the North American continent. So this is an important diversification of our marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other aspects to this legislation. It's an important piece of legislation. This is updating it to ensure that it meets current standards in terms of the working relationship between the government and the commission. It's important to update the governance model. It's important to be able to add people from outside of government, who can then bring to the public interest the experience that they have from other walks of life, so that we get the best folks we can find and the best brains we can find to work on behalf of the Alberta interest.

There are many other aspects to this that I'm sure we'll get into, but I just wanted to put a couple of those points on the record, Mr. Speaker, so that we can focus on the real substance of the legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is not available.

Ms Blakeman: I understand that.

The Speaker: If you're seeking a point of order or something – is that why you're rising?

Ms Blakeman: Well, under Beauchesne 482 I'm allowed to ask the member if he would entertain a question, and I would do that now, ask the member if he would allow a question from me.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. Under Beauchesne 482?

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

If a Member desires to ask a question during debate, the consent of the Member who is speaking must first be obtained. If the latter ignores the request, the former cannot insist.

The Speaker: I don't know if that really applies, hon. member, when the member in this instance has risen to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: It doesn't say whether they are opening or closing. It just says, "If a Member desires to ask a question." I can ask, and if he denies it, that's it. Otherwise, I have to wait for another opportunity.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I don't have Beauchesne 482 in front of me, but let me just seek the advice of Parliamentary Counsel briefly and see if they have a precedent on this, and then I'll come back to you with a ruling in just a moment, okay?

Hon. member, Parliamentary Counsel has advised me in this regard to say that the opportunity for questions has come and gone. The minister did rise to close debate, so I regret that I won't be able to receive your question at this time.

So we have now closed debate.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, are you rising on a citation as well?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I am.

The Speaker: Is it a point of order? What is it? Clarification?

Point of Order Items Previously Decided

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23 a member will be called to order if he, under (f), "debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded." With regard to this the minister referenced the Auditor General Act, previously debated, of course, in the Assembly and passed, and indicated that the Auditor General would be automatically the auditor for this Crown corporation. But under section 11(b) of the Auditor General Act it says: "may with the approval of the Select Standing Committee be appointed by a Crown-controlled organization or any other organization or body as the auditor of that Crown-controlled organization or other organization or body."

So it is entirely optional, Mr. Speaker, and is not automatic by any means. It should be in the legislation. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, did I hear you correctly? I was straining a bit to hear. Is it 23(f)? Is that your citation?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Standing Order 23 says:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

- (f) debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded.

Is that where you're coming from, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?

Mr. Mason: It is.

The Speaker: It's a point of order. Does somebody on the government side wish to comment on this before we decide how to move on?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I would actually have to respectfully assert to you and this Chamber that there's no point of order here. My learned counsel, the Minister of Energy, had mentioned a particular item, but he was not debating that particular item, so I don't think that that falls under the purview of 23(f) of the Standing Orders.

The Speaker: Well, that would be my view as well. I was listening to what was being said at that particular time, so I don't find there to be a point of order. However, perhaps the leader of the ND opposition merely wanted to state his position on this and get it on the record, so it is now there.

Thank you for that, both members who've just spoken.

Let us now move on with the vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

Bill 43

Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate November 18: Mr. Denis]

The Speaker: We have some speakers here. I believe, hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, that on Bill 43 you have 19 minutes left.

Mr. Denis: I believe I've already concluded my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Do we have other speakers, then, to Bill 43? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that I get a chance as a member of the Official Opposition and the critic for Enterprise to speak to a bill, but this afternoon is the opportunity, and I'm pleased to be here to do that.

My initial reaction to the bill was to not support it mainly because my constituents have sent me here to reduce redundancy and red tape. They told me to fight for no debt, for balanced budgets, to champion smaller government. They wanted me here because they know that, in their opinion, the current government is out of touch with what they think is the real world. That was my default response because I feel the same way about those issues. But I think that some good debate and, hopefully, some positive amendments will help win my support for it, because I'm inclined to now that I've read some of the reports that have been issued by this little group of very successful people, obviously very educated with a lot of experience. I think it's good for the government to have available to it people of this calibre, who are prepared to, in essence, give of their time to work on projects that the government thinks are important. Hopefully, they are also open to influence from the Legislature itself.

My concern was with regard to redundancy. Is this little group doing things that are already being done in various ministries? Nevertheless, I think that theoretically the arm's-length approach has some merit, and I think that we should look at it on that basis. I think that we probably are getting some value for the taxpayer on money that's being spent on the reports that they have researched and produced, but I think we need to find a way to measure and verify that. You know, what I always say is: if you don't measure it, you can't manage it. I suppose the corollary of that is: if you can't measure it, you probably shouldn't be doing it.

I have some questions, and I hope that through debate and discussion we can have a fair exchange and an honest exchange because these are legitimate questions. Does the authority have a clear mandate? To whom do they report their stewardship? How are they held accountable for their, admittedly, relatively small budget? If they are providing sound suggestions and recommendations, are they being followed? If so, how and where? I'd like some examples. I think we all would. If they're giving good advice and it's not being followed, do we know whose feet are being held to the fire? As the Official Opposition we'd be glad to do that.

I'm hoping that we can develop an amendment around this concept of measuring the usefulness and worth of the various reports produced from time to time by the AEDA. To what use are they being put, and what is the real value? I think there's potential. In reading the reports, I see some things in there that have merit. I think I even sense that the government in certain ministries is attempting to act on some of them, but it's not clear, and I'd like that cleared up. I think that, perhaps, we all would if we're serious about looking at these kinds of things.

One of the amendments I'll be proposing will address the effectiveness of the authority by changing the sunset clause to ensure that any continuation of the enabling act comes before the House instead of being made behind cabinet's closed doors. Lively, intelligent, positive debate, as I'm sure we will have on this, is in the interests of democracy and good government. I think that as elected representatives we and our successors have a duty to our constituents to be open and transparent in reality, not just saying that. As well, by having a vigorous debate in the House, we can ensure that our constituents and the relevant stakeholders are engaged in the process and tell us how they think the authority is performing. It's important that all people affected or impacted by this remain involved in the democratic process. I'm confident that the other side of the House agrees with this.

Another amendment that I'll bring forward at the appropriate time shortens the length of time that someone can serve on the board of the Alberta Economic Development Authority. One way to ensure that new ideas and fresh focus and perspective are available to us is to ensure that we get new faces on the board from time to time so that we get these new ideas and new input. Shortening the length of time from 10 to seven years helps do just that while not losing the benefits that come from institutional knowledge and experience.

As I said at the beginning, although I didn't intend to support the bill, I am interested in the debate that we'll have, and I look forward to positive changes so that I can in fact support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not a large bill and doesn't seem to be earth-shattering although I'll admit that I haven't spent as much time on it as I would like. It strikes me that what is happening here is that several different committees have reached – it's like those nesting dolls, you know, where you finally get those little babushka dolls down to something that's the size of a pea. What we had here was an executive that was part of the council, and the executive and the council formed a board, but it had a wider application, if I could put it that way. It strikes me that it's been quite narrowed now. So it's actually narrowing the membership of this.

Who am I talking to? The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Bill 43, Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act: is that where we are? Okay. Thank you very much.

My question is: what was the thinking behind this narrowing of the number of people that are on this board? This is now bringing it to the Premier, the minister, and up to 12 others, and they are the authority. So there won't be any more executives, there won't be any council, and there won't be any board. They're all turning into one thing, which is a pattern with this particular government. They seem uncomfortable dealing with things that have offshoots to them or are multilayered. They seem to like everything to be very small, with only one person to talk to or one agency, a smaller board in this case, which might well be a good thing.

5:30

You know, as the other member said, reducing red tape, particularly for small and medium-sized businesses, is an excellent thing for government to be doing. There was a red tape commission that you guys had all set up for a while there. Whatever happened to that? Did it report, which would help me in trying to do this debate? Probably not.

Mr. Mason: It got mired in regulation.

Ms Blakeman: It got dumped in the regulation?

Mr. Mason: It got mired in the regulation.

Ms Blakeman: Oh. It got mired in regulation. Great. Yes. I'm not surprised.

That is the direction that government should be going in to be reasonable and not burdening people, but the point of this is to – it looks like it's supposed to be streamlining the organization. I'm just a little uneasy because this government has so often moved to make things less complex, but in fact those entities are complex. In making them very flat or with only person to report, then we actually have a number of things that are hidden or not responsive.

Given that the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education is the sponsoring member, I look forward to hearing his answer on that. You know, this is supposed to be an advisory body to the Premier and the cabinet, and now it is the Premier and an extra person and up to 12 other people. [interjection] Yeah. So that seems a bit odd, that they're giving advice to themselves, but this government has done stranger things.

It looks like it's trying to redo the mandate, and I know you've got all those billboards out there and all those signs about . . .

Mr. Mason: How great they are.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I'm sorry. The slogan is escaping me, so I have to say that it can't be that successful. There was another one about freedom to succeed and something to dream. [interjections] Okay. I'm getting a lot of help from my colleagues. I'm sensing it's towards the end of the afternoon.

But it's not clear to me why the number of people that are available to give advice in this particular area has been reduced and seems to be made even more so that they're taking advice from themselves. Evidently, according to the briefing that we received, this will now take on the function of the Alberta Competitiveness Council. Honest to goodness, you guys, you know, if you could just do the work sometimes and quit creating another bloody committee, we could probably get more done here. Okay.

This is now trying to get rid of the Alberta Economic Development Authority and its provision of business perspectives and independent research and is now turning itself into the Alberta Competitiveness Council, or it is going to subsume it, and it's going to provide benchmarking information on Alberta's economic performance. Okay. So it's more of a measurement body and less of an advisory body. Wonderful. Then what kind of information is the public going to get on the performance, and are we going to get to see these metrics that they seem to be very keen on? It looks like it's basically administrative, but it still looks to me like it's controlled by the Premier. I'm wondering why they think narrowing the amount of expertise they're able to pull on in this particular example is a good idea.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll look for the next speaker. No other speakers?

I'll ask the minister to close debate. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we close debate on Bill 43.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a second time]

Bill 35

Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate November 5: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board, you have already spoken, so when you rise again, you will close debate.

I look for the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to speak.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise here today to speak to Bill 35, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013. This act makes a number of changes to the Financial Administration Act which will legislate changes in administrative practices and close possible legal loopholes. Whereas this bill makes no significant policy changes, these administrative changes would not be required if this province and this PC government had not passed the flawed Bill 12 in the spring and was not planning on borrowing significant amounts of money for infrastructure projects.

There are some aspects of this bill which allow the government of Alberta to issue all securities electronically. It clarifies some aspects of the Financial Administration Act which are unclear, and it is modernizing Alberta's borrowing legislation, that is driven by the massive amounts of capital that this government will borrow over the next coming years.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is being required by this Finance minister because of the new PC slogan, which is: debt is hope. I've been talking to constituents over the last several days during the constituency break, and I can tell you that they're not amused by that new slogan by this Finance minister. It's funny if you look at the comments that this Premier had prior to the election. I think her phrase was that debt is the end of many dreams or something like that. All of a sudden, after the election the saying is: debt is hope. When you put those two phrases together and you show those to Albertans, as I have in my constituency, they come to the conclusion that that's a broken promise. When you continually break promises like that, no one is going to believe what you say.

Obviously, this government has plunged Alberta back into debt. In a few short years they've almost completely vaporized our sustainability fund and are planning on incurring billions upon billions in debt. That's not surprising when your whole mantra right now in the PC Party is: debt is hope. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is a marked deviation from prior policies of the PC Party.

I recall that when I was vice-president of policy for the PC Party, there was absolutely no one that I spoke to in the constituencies that would have heralded the phrase "debt is hope." Debt is hope. I just don't think they would. This is a very big departure from I think what used to be some small "c" conservative principles that belonged in the PC Party but all of a sudden, under the leadership of this particular Premier, have changed. Obviously, that's probably going to be an issue on Friday. I think, Mr. Speaker, this bill in particular, in light of what the Finance minister has been doing in terms of incurring debt after debt, is perhaps needed to fuel that debt-is-hope concept.

Mr. Speaker, we need to look at needs versus wants. There may be a situation where the PC government wants brand new offices, but they may not need them. You can continue along those various examples and expenditures that have been made, and you'll see that there are a lot of wants that this government has looked at and not a lot of the needs. Of course, it's always a question of priorities, but we've seen again and again irresponsible spending, which results in a requirement for this government, apparently, to incur a lot of debt. Debt is, some people say, intergenerational theft. Debt is not hope, Mr. Speaker.

This bill does fix many of the technical issues that have plagued some stakeholders over time, but I think the main thrust of this bill, at least from what we can see here, is to give them more mechanisms to borrow, create the most creative ways to borrow money and incur debt. I think that as a Legislature here today we should not be pushing the mantra that debt is hope to anyone in this province, particularly young people, that debt is hope and you should go out and incur a bunch of debt.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, we have a fundamental difference in principles and values. On one hand, we believe in balanced budgets. On the other hand, on the other side of the House apparently the new mantra is: debt is hope.

We look forward to potentially putting forward amendments on this piece of legislation in Committee of the Whole, and I look forward to hearing that discussion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I gather that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills believes that the government's slogan is: debt is hope. Would that be a fair statement?

I think that we need to distinguish how we deal with some of these questions because in many cases they are a difference in philosophy. But this government has gone back and forth in the time that I've been here. When I was first elected, the Klein government introduced legislation making it illegal for the government to run deficits or to borrow money, and I think that these are the good old days that the Wildrose still yearns for. In fact, it was illegal. I remember at one time there was a sudden drop in the price of oil or gas or something, and all of a sudden they were cutting programs, you know, for aboriginal kids because they suddenly didn't have enough money. If they actually went into a deficit, then the Provincial Treasurer would have gone to jail.

There's a real habit of each successive government – of course, then that was changed when Ed Stelmach was the Premier. It was no longer a criminal offence to go into debt. Then under this government, of course, they have begun to borrow money for capital expenditures, something that, actually, if you look across the country and particularly at the municipal order of government, is the norm for capital expenditures. A piece of infrastructure might have a life of 40 years, and by spreading those costs over 40 years, all the users of whatever generation make a contribution towards it. It's not something that we have a particular problem with although we are very much opposed as a matter of policy to running operational deficits and borrowing money for our own ongoing costs.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we do have a big problem in this province. While there's a certain amount of very obvious wasteful and unnecessary spending by this government and lack of controls over certain agencies and bodies like maybe the University of Calgary administration, there is a bigger problem. It arose out of the time, again, when Mr. Klein was the Premier and Stockwell Day was the Provincial Treasurer. You may recall that period. The price of natural gas was very high, and the royalties the province received as a result of that were very high as well. In fact, they peaked at about $8 billion a year just in natural gas royalty revenue. During that period the government looked like financial geniuses. They couldn't walk down the corridors without hundred dollar bills falling out of their pockets, you know. They'd deliberately lowball the price in the budget, and then they'd come through with these huge, unanticipated – unanticipated in quotation marks – surpluses.

Ms Blakeman: Little air quotes: unanticipated.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Little air quotes around unanticipated.

You know, they'd be very, very proud of themselves for what they had done by putting the natural gas in the ground in the first place. It was great foresight on the part of the PC government to do that. It was an interesting time.

So Stockwell Day comes along, and he's got this brainwave – it was going around in U.S. conservative circles; you know, these kinds of Republican ideas that conservatives just sort of sometimes reach out and grab – and the idea was a flat tax. The idea was: we'll get rid of the progressive income tax so that the tax rate is the same regardless of income. Then the next thing they did, to make that palatable, is that they also increased the personal exemption, so they were actually taking some low-income people off the tax rolls completely. We thought that part was good, but the flat tax gave a massive tax reduction for the very richest people in this province.

We've actually run some numbers on this. I don't have them exactly before me. But if you make a million dollars a year, your taxes are thousands and thousands of dollars less in Alberta than they would be in, say, B.C. or Ontario. If you're a middle-income earner and you earn, say, $70,000 a year, your taxes are hundreds of dollars higher than they are in B.C. or Ontario. So what the flat tax did was two things. It transferred more of the tax burden onto the middle class, and it cut government revenues by billions of dollars. But it didn't matter because we had those high natural gas prices, Mr. Speaker. Those royalties were rolling in, and the government just knew that it would last forever, so they cut taxes for rich people.

Well, then Stockwell Day went off on his Jet Ski to Ottawa, and we got a new Provincial Treasurer. Steve West replaced Stockwell Day – oh, boy – and he had another brainwave. I was just newly elected, and I went to an Edmonton Chambers of Commerce luncheon where old Steve was talking about what he was going to do. One of the things he was going to do with all of this royalty revenue was to cut corporate taxes, and he gleefully announced that to a very appreciative business crowd.

So the government has followed through on Steve West's vision – again, in air quotes – and has worked over a number of years to reduce the corporate tax rate from 16 per cent to now about 10 per cent. That also cost us billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, but we had those natural gas royalties. They just knew it was going to keep coming forever, and there was just so much of it that they decided that this was a good thing. Never mind that the U.S. corporate tax rate is 30 per cent and that what U.S. corporations operating in Alberta don't pay to us, they have to pay the difference to the American government. When we lower our corporate income tax on American companies, we just increase the amount that they pay to the American government. So the American government really appreciates our move in this direction.

Then something terrible happened, Mr. Speaker. They found more natural gas – they found lots more – and the price started to go down, and our royalties went down. All of a sudden, since we walked away from these billions of dollars of tax revenue, it turns out that the natural gas royalty revenue was not permanent. The same thing subsequently happened to oil although the prices have been a little more stable, but there's lots more oil that they've found in the United States. It's going to be a net exporter before very long.

So now we're in a jam. I have heard different Finance ministers – in fact, I had in budget estimates another Provincial Treasurer who's no longer with us, Ted Morton, and I actually got Ted Morton to admit in the committee that we had a revenue problem. Of course, he also thought we had a spending problem. He actually did, and it's in Hansard.

Mr. Denis: Table it.

Mr. Mason: It's already a document of the Legislature. It's already there.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, subsequently other Provincial Treasurers, including another in that stellar cast of characters, Ron Liepert, and Morton as well, have said that we have a revenue problem.

Fast-forward to the first economic summit. Not the second one in Edmonton because that was hardly a summit; it was just like a low elevation. The one in Calgary was pretty good. They lined up all of these guys on this panel to tell us that we needed a sales tax.

One after another they talked about a sales tax and how much better it is than raising taxes on rich people and corporations. Then the Premier started to talk about a sales tax, and the opposition kept building and building and building. It took her about two weeks before she said what every other Premier has said before her: we're not going to have any tax increases.

We're still now in the same old situation. We spend 30 per cent . . . [interjections] I know that Tories are happy. I can hear them thumping over there. I know they're happy with the situation. About 30 per cent of our program expenditures comes from nonrenewable, highly volatile royalty revenue. We are spending our children's and their children's inheritance. That money should not be spent on our needs today. It should be put away for all generations in the future. We should be paying for our own needs out of our own resources, which means that the government has to look at some sort of revenue.

What I would like to suggest is that they revisit the decisions of Stockwell Day and Steve West and restore those tax cuts so that we don't have to lay off teachers and nurses every time the price of oil goes down. I think we can do better than that, Mr. Speaker. I think Albertans deserve better than that. I think it can be done. The problem is that Finance ministers wait until after they're not the Finance minister anymore to talk about this problem. When they're actually sitting in that chair, they just zip their lips and don't say anything about it, and then the Premier stands up and says, "No new tax increases," and the Finance minister just looks at his shoes.

Mr. Speaker, we should solve this problem. Maybe after next weekend the Premier will find the courage to actually tackle this problem. I know the Wildrose will go nuts, but just think of all of those other Albertans that are getting their health care cut, that are getting their education cut. You know, there are seniors that aren't getting the care that they need. People with disabilities have had their programs cut. I think we'll say, you know: well done.

That's something that we've been talking about for a long time. We need to get our financial house in order, and we need to find the financial capacity to pay for the programs that Albertans want and expect. That means having Finance ministers and Premiers who will stand up and say: we don't have enough reliable tax revenue to pay for the programs that Albertans expect, and we have to do something about it. Then we can start putting away the royalty revenue from gas and oil, which is very volatile, into savings for future generations. That's the NDP plan. That's the way we will approach it. We want to have balanced budgets, pay for our own services that we require from a fair and competitive tax regime, and save the royalty money for future generations because it belongs to all generations, not just ours.

Mr. Speaker, if the government would do that, then they could bring forward a new act that we could call the sensible financial administration act or some other suitable title that would be approved by the Public Affairs Bureau. I do think that the kind of up and down, back and forth, debt, no debt, deficit, no deficit, taxes up and down that's been followed by this government in terms of their legislation has not served us well.

We need to have the courage to say that fair taxes and competitive taxes are something that Alberta needs in order to maintain the services, that we want to be sustainable in order to allow us to save for the future. That's something the government has yet to do. I want to indicate to them that if they go in that direction, then I'm sure they'll have our support. They may have the support of some other parties. I don't think they're going to have the support of all of the parties, Mr. Speaker. I would recommend that course of action.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wants to ask the member a question.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that we only have couple of minutes left before 6, but I had to speak to this because, quite frankly – I'm looking at the actual title of the bill. It's called the Financial Administration Amendment Act, which in itself is to do with the administration. I don't see anything in this bill here referring to taxes or debt or anything else. I would suggest that we need to actually read the bill a little bit further.

This is about bringing efficiencies to our bureaucracy. In fact, I think that by my standing here I'm going to be accused of not agreeing with this side of the House on everything. I commend the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance for bringing this forward. This is housekeeping. It's just keeping up with the times. After all, we're now in a digital age, and just because we govern in a traditional parliamentary sense, it doesn't mean that we can't bring our business practices out of the Dark Ages. I can remember when we first started using the fax machine, and that was considered a legal document. We had a lot of controversy and debate over that. This is just bringing us up to the times. In fact, we don't even use fax machines that much anymore because we all rely on computers and cellphones.

In our business environment today electronic signatures, forms, and certificates are considered to be a true representation of a business's or person's intention to be contracted. To enable these signatures and other identifying information as valid and binding on the Crown is important. It's good to see that the hard-copy, original signature is not always a requirement. It slows down the ability to transact, and at a time when there are so many projects requiring funding, we need to speed up this process.

I also agree that the minister is ensuring that those provincial corporations over which he does not have direct borrowing control must receive direction and conditions from the minister's office prior to entering into the agreements. That's important. It limits the possibility that these corporations may enter into agreements which may not be to the betterment of all of Alberta and further put the government of Alberta at risk.

In giving all of that, I just want to thank the minister for bringing forward this important piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

It is now 6 o'clock, and the House will stand adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

Hon. member, you may continue to speak after we return if you so decide.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6:00 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 19, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Bill 35

Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

[Debate adjourned November 19: Mr. Allen speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to ask my colleagues to support this bill, but I will say, in contrast to what the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was stating prior to the break, that this isn't just a housekeeping bill. This is a correction bill. It would be housekeeping if the previous bill had been in force, say, for at least a fiscal year or maybe even a couple of years. What this bill is actually doing is correcting the mistakes that probably shouldn't have been made in the first place. Although I agree with it coming forward to close loopholes and to make some changes, the fact is that had we taken the proper amount of time and constructed the first bill properly, we certainly wouldn't be here today. Again, it's an argument of why we should not hastily craft and push through this Assembly a piece of legislation.

This bill, particularly, would close possible legal loopholes, which is something that is positive, and it's interesting listening to the arguments that were made prior talking about taxes and revenue, a little history lesson going way back, I think, to the late '80s of this Assembly, if not definitely the late '90s. What is a shame is what we're doing in the sense of borrowing. As you know, our party would not be very welcome to increasing taxes, and I suspect the party across the way is very hesitant to raise taxes, but it is still . . .

An Hon. Member: You never know.

Mr. Anglin: Well, all you have to do is get up and say so, and we'll have to hold you to account.

What we look at and what we focus on is the spending, and there's nothing wrong with looking to control waste and to reduce spending, particularly where we can get a bigger bang for the dollar and more efficiencies. To this government's credit they brought a couple of bills forward just recently talking about being efficient, and that is something that we would definitely support, but there needs to be accountability and transparency to be efficient. How do you measure that? How do you track it? These are the questions that were brought before the House earlier that we wanted to support, legislation where we can track the spending, where we can see the outcome and arrive at a conclusion that we're getting a big bang for the dollars spent. Although this is the Financial Administration Amendment Act, the fact is that it's all about financial administration. Not to get into the debate of the previous two speakers talking about increasing in taxes, we would be more focused on making sure that the spending was more efficient and that there was less waste and that there was a better value for every dollar spent, and I think that's something that all members of this House could support.

With that in mind, I'm going to ask, certainly, on this bill that we support it in the end. I'm not sure if anyone's bringing any amendments forward. I would evaluate that on its own merit if one came forward, and if it makes sense, I would support it, and if it didn't, I would go with this bill. I'd ask my fellow colleagues here in my own caucus to give this bill consideration, support the bill, and get on with the business of holding this government accountable to spending efficiencies, which is what I think we do best.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll look for the next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 35, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, in second reading here. It's interesting that the government is looking at opening up a bill that this government just amended a few months ago under the Financial Administration Act. Clearly, the message to us and to Albertans is that they didn't get it right the first time, and they're hoping for another kick at the can. Now, clearly, we can see that the government is making up rules and legislation on the fly. They're poorly drafting bills, they're rushing them through, as we saw in our previous sitting, in our spring sitting, with extremely late nights, and they have no plan, very little strategy or clear picture on what they're trying to do and how to get there. So they're having to go back to fix previous mistakes.

The challenge with that, Mr. Speaker, is that at the same time that this government is trying to clean up their own blunders and make amendments to their poor drafting of bills, Albertans are unable to get a real, genuine, and valid sense of the financial health of the province. They're the ones that are bearing the cost of this legislative incompetence of the government. So a question that comes to mind is: how do we know that this financial management is being accurately reported to all Albertans when guidelines, rules, and legislation continue to change? It's challenging to keep up with.

A number of issues were raised this spring, Mr. Speaker, when Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, was brought in. If you recall, it was debated at great lengths. This amendment bill brings those issues back to the forefront, so I'd just like to touch on some of the concerns that we share.

One of the major issues with the act is that, again, it still does not provide for real, genuine savings, despite the government's claims. We've heard from Albertans throughout the province that this is something very important to them. You look at families in the province that will budget and make savings accordingly to plan for the future, and here we have a bill being reopened, yet there is still uncertainty around that.

As well, Mr. Speaker, given that it permits the government to scoop money out of the capital fund when they run a deficit by reporting only operational expenses, it simply just leaves this PC government with the power to hide the real problem and dollars rather than fix the real financial issues, issues that have been at the core for the Alberta NDP, which are addressing our extremely low royalty rates, the Klein-era tax cuts, and a clear lack of long-term planning.

So with a proper focus on getting Alberta's fair share and saving more appropriately, there would have been no need to make such a bizarre change in financial accounting because there would be no embarrassing details to hide, which really does beg the question that when this government continues to change the way they present information, especially when we're looking at financial information, many Albertans begin to question and wonder: why the change, and what is the government trying to hide?

Mr. Speaker, the reality is that a lack of real, genuine savings means that this government has had to shuffle money around every time the price of oil doesn't meet our expectations. It's extremely difficult to plan properly when this government doesn't know what dollars are coming in and how to manage them. Money getting shuffled around, as we've seen even in the last few months, has very real consequences for our province and for Albertans in our province. We've seen this in this session, as the province made massive cuts – $147 million, for example – to postsecondary education. Now, changes to the enrolment, changes to staff, programs, services have had a real impact on people's lives.

Then, at the turn of a hat, suddenly the financial picture changed, and they were able to put some money, again, only a third, back, although you might think they put it all back and then some, the way they were patting themselves and each other on the back. Unfortunately, while nobody in our postsecondary system is going to say no to getting some of the money back, these types of changes, where there's a massive cut one day and some money put back the next, again, have a serious impact on the lives of people.

I encourage my colleagues on the other side of the House to ask themselves: if they were a top researcher, would they take a teaching position in the province of Alberta if they wouldn't know if they have their job from one week to the next because they don't know if the dollars are there or not? If they were students, would they want to study in Alberta when they don't know if supports are going to get knocked out from under them one day to the next? It creates real uncertainty, and that's something that shouldn't be and doesn't have to be.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that with proper planning and, again, a genuine conversation on our revenue in this province, these types of decisions and cuts and really playing with the lives of Albertans, you know, with the stroke of a pen or looking at the fluctuations in our world prices for a lot of Alberta's resources – that's asking too much from people in the sense that if there was a stronger long-term plan and there was adequate planning and resources and revenue, then these types of decisions wouldn't have to be made at the drop of a hat, again, having such a negative impact on so many lives of people in the province.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we support this act very cautiously, but we do support it for the reason that it does fix some of the technical mistakes that this PC government made when they originally changed the rules in the spring. I just want to end on the note that it leaves that bad financial management taste in the mouths of a lot of folks. This is what Albertans were complaining about, how this PC government is managing our financial resources. Again, this bill just illustrates very clearly that they couldn't get it right the first time, and again they're still scrambling to try to make changes. Like I said, it sends a message to Albertans as far as the competency of this government in managing Alberta's resources. So it's with a cautious . . .

An Hon. Member: With a heavy heart.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you for that. Yeah. Not necessarily a heavy heart, but with some hesitation I do support this bill. I think it's very important for the government to realize the message that this is conveying to Albertans and that there are still issues at the heart of the matter that have not been resolved or addressed, like I had mentioned, the fact that we have a revenue issue and the government's refusal to look at ensuring that programs and services have a stable budget so that Albertan families can plan for the future. That is something that I strongly recommend to the government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, Bill 35, makes a lot of changes to the Financial Administration Act that will legislate changes in administrative practices and close possible legal loopholes. While this bill makes no significant policy changes, these administrative changes would not have been required if the province had not passed its flawed Bill 12 in the spring. It would also not be required, necessarily, if the province was not planning on borrowing significant amounts, billions of dollars, in fact, for infrastructure projects.

So although I will support this bill for administrative purposes, to make it easier for the government to do some things like allowing it to issue securities electronically and clarify some aspects under the Financial Administration Act that are unclear and so forth, I think it is very important in second reading here to have a discussion about – let's put it this way – what Bill 12 did and what Bill 35 as kind of an appendage to Bill 12 or a clarification of Bill 12 in certain spots does and about this government's extreme left-hand turn that it has taken with regard to our finances.

The Premier and her government warned Albertans, of course, that Budget 2013 would be historic. Indeed, it was, but it was historic for all the wrong reasons, Mr. Speaker. The back-in-debt budget, as it is now known, was shocking. The provincial government racked up its sixth consecutive deficit, with a real cash deficit if you include the infrastructure cost of $5.5 billion. This government has also plunged our province back into debt. This year the provincial government plans on borrowing almost $4 billion in debt. That number may go up; it may go down. I don't know exactly how the flood is going to be accounted for on the balance sheet with the feds putting in money and so forth, but as of Budget 2013 let's assume that the flood is evened out by the amount of money that is given by the federal government. It's $4 billion in debt, and it essentially will double the provincial debt in one year from roughly $4 billion to roughly $8 billion.

What's more alarming is that this government plans to quadruple our debt to $17 billion by 2016. In five short years this government has almost entirely vaporized our once $17 billion rainy-day sustainability fund, and the heritage fund is worth less now, when adjusted for inflation, than it was when first established in 1976. It is literally the most incompetent squandering of wealth in this province's and possibly this nation's history. [interjection] The minister of office upgrades over there is laughing because he knows that he's contributing to this debt with his profligate spending and irresponsibility, and it's that attitude that has us in the mess that we're in.

Unlike the Premier, who didn't spend very much time in Alberta during the 1990s and early 2000s but now spends a lot of time disparaging those years of proud fiscal prudence and prosperity, I remember the Alberta advantage very well. Growing up in Alberta, in fact, at that time, Mr. Speaker, was great. The schools that I attended in the so-called Dark Ages, that the Premier alludes to, were actually quite excellent. In fact, I received almost a year of free credits at a top U.S. college just because I happened to be an Alberta grad, for no other reason than that. [interjections] Holy, man. Are you okay with the hon. member, the minister of advanced education, yapping and snarling and . . .

Mr. Anglin: Sounds like an angry Muppet.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. He does sound like an angry Muppet, doesn't he?

The Deputy Speaker: You've got the floor, hon. member, and I'm listening, so carry on.

Mr. Anderson: The economy was strong at that time and still is today, and it was creating jobs. Businesses were flourishing, and home values were appreciating. As a province we had a collective purpose. The majority of us, although, of course, I'm sure that the minister of advanced education and others weren't in this boat, were united in a goal to pay off our $23 billion provincial debt and build a job-creating machine through low taxes and job-friendly policies that we proudly called at that time the Alberta advantage. The Alberta advantage was not a derogatory term, as the Premier sees it. It was something that we were very proud of and, I feel, should still be proud of.

In fact, it is not an exaggeration to say that the entire direction of our nation was profoundly altered for the better by a relatively small but principled and feisty province during that time. But as the Premier often says, that was then and this is now. In 2008 our province had almost no debt and $17 billion in the rainy-day sustainability fund. By election 2016 we will have a $17 billion debt and virtually no rainy-day sustainability fund.

We in the Wildrose have proposed a financial recovery plan to get the provincial budget back on track and to ensure the long-term sustainability of core social programs. Our two-year plan would eliminate the operating deficit immediately in 2013 and eliminate the entire cash deficit by 2014. It would prevent any new taxes or tax increases from being introduced without a provincial referendum, and it will implement a Wildrose balanced budget and savings act once the budget is brought back into balance and would restrict future spending increases to inflation plus population growth indefinitely and save some of our resource revenues for future generations.

The Premier contends that anyone who doesn't agree with her decision to go back into debt is an extremist, yet right before the 2012 election she stated: Alberta does not have a debt, and we will not incur debt; that is fundamental to what Albertans are proud of, and we are committed to making sure that continues. That's what she said before the election, but now, Mr. Speaker, after the election, debt is hope according to this Premier.

The ugly truth is that this Premier's views on structural debt have been discredited by the lessons of the ongoing world debt crisis. It is she and her party that are taking us back a generation. It is she and her party that have proven to be fiscally extreme. I find it a wonderment and absolutely amazing to tout this massive accumulation of debt. The Finance minister and the Premier will often say: we've met with the banks, and the banks and the experts in the banks tell us that borrowing money is good, that we should borrow as much as we possibly can. Really? The banks are asking you to borrow lots of money? This is shocking, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely shocking. I mean, with that kind of thinking it's definitely going to be the case that we are going to not just be $17 billion in debt but many more billions of dollars in debt in the future.

Obviously, banks and construction companies and folks like that want us to borrow and spend as much as we possibly can. Clearly, they do. We need to make sure that we balance the requests of society and of our people with what we have. We need to live within our means. We cannot put building what we must have or what's being asked for time and time again on the backs of our kids. We can build what we need, Mr. Speaker. We can build what we need with $4 billion a year, which is 15 per cent more than the average of the four largest provinces.

Mr. Horner: I thought it was $5 billion.

Mr. Anderson: Fifteen per cent more. It's $4 billion, and then it goes up over 10 years to $5 billion with the rate of inflation and population growth, Minister. I'm glad you've read the document. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has the floor, please. Thank you.

Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, we must not, Mr. Speaker, mortgage our children's future because we are unable to prioritize today. Four billion dollars a year for infrastructure is a reasonable amount. Yes, it means that a couple of projects will have to be put on hold for a year or two or maybe even three, but the great thing is that under a Wildrose government we will put up an infrastructure priority list.

Mr. Dorward: Free money.

Mr. Anderson: Free money, he says.

We will put up an infrastructure priority list that will be completely transparent, will be objective in nature, and every community will see every single request for infrastructure that has been made by the school boards, by communities, and so forth. They will be put in order. Everyone will see it, and then they'll know that when money is spent on infrastructure, that $4 billion, it will go to the top projects. Those projects will be moved off the list into the being-built or built column, and everything else will move up. The city of Edmonton has such a list. The city of Calgary has such a list.

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Infrastructure has such a list.

Mr. Anderson: No, the Minister of Infrastructure does not have that list, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner: It's on his website.

Mr. Denis: Just check the website.

Mr. Anderson: Just check the website. That's right. Just check the website.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, I know I get under their skin, and it's a pleasure that I have in life, but it is because what I'm speaking is true, and it bothers the heck out of them.

But you know what? The great thing, Mr. Speaker, is that we have a democracy in this province, and the false claims that were made and the false promises that were made prior to this past election I believe will be dealt with at the next election by the people of Alberta. They know full well what's on the line this time. They know they've been manipulated, they know they've been told fairy tales by this Premier and this government, and they know that their government will have run up by then $17 billion in debt, and that is unacceptable to them. They have put up and been patient with a lot, but they will not put up with and be patient with this government mortgaging our kids' future for their political gain and then allowing their incompetence to create the economic and financial havoc that it has on our balance sheet.

We're looking forward to that, but in the meantime we'll continue to remind this government of their obligation to keep their promises, just like the Premier said before the election: Alberta does not have a debt, and we will not incur debt. We will not incur debt, she said. How can this government justify what they're doing right now when they have the Premier on record saying that right before an election? It's a lack of credibility that this government has, Mr. Speaker, and it's because of mistruths and misdirection like that.

The government should be ashamed, and they should be ashamed that instead of saying that they're going to do everything in their power to get out of debt as quickly as possible and put out a plan and say, "We're going to build infrastructure, but we're going to decrease our debt over time and pay it back over time, and this is how we're going to do it," they attack the opposition, who is simply committed to the principles that were firmly established by Premier Klein in previous governments to live within our means. If they won't live within their means, a Wildrose government will, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board to close debate.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not exactly sure where to start. We had the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills talking about that somehow the Progressive Conservative mantra is now debt is hope. They've taken two words and matched them together and decided that this is what will resonate as rhetoric with Albertans, again somewhat of the misdirection that they're known for, and that's okay. They can do that. I think Albertans see through that. Of the 12, 13 open houses I had around the province when we were talking about, you know, the way that we were going to build Alberta and build the infrastructure that we need, Albertans understand that we need to use all of the means necessary to us.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills talked about operational deficits and capital deficits and cash deficits. You know what? I'm going to leave what he talked about because his colleague from Airdrie just filled the void. I have to maybe jump around a little bit here because I'm going to try to answer a few of them.

The Wildrose Alliance is trying to convince Albertans that they have a $50 billion, 10-year capital plan that they will pay for with something other than what we are doing. They refuse to tell Albertans how they would pay for that. They simply say: we'd do it a different way. Okay. So let's look at the ways that they won't do it, Mr. Speaker. Well, they won't use P3s, started by Premier Klein because it was of value to Albertans, which has saved Albertans close to $2.2 billion. But they won't use that. Okay. So they won't use that one.

They won't use capital financing because that's debt like you'd have on your house or your car or businesses would have on their warehouse. In the history's lowest interest rates we've ever had, when your savings and the Alberta heritage savings trust fund are earning almost double what interest rates are, they won't use that. They would rather take cash and plow it into – well, no, they won't do that either, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Airdrie is on record as saying that it's terrible that we blew through $17 billion of net financial assets and didn't get anything for it. Well, Mr. Speaker, we got assets for it. We built capital with it.

So if he won't use P3s and he won't use capital and he won't use cash, how is he going to pay for $50 billion worth of capital over the 10 years? He's not telling Albertans. He's not being very open and transparent about that, and I'm a little concerned that perhaps they're talking about raising taxes in that land over there.

Mr. Speaker, we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood suggesting that this Finance minister will talk about raising taxes when he leaves this chair. I have talked about taxes. I have talked about the fact that Albertans were very loud and clear with us: live within your means first, before you start talking about digging into our pocket.

We are going to do that, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we have had a zero per cent increase in our operating expenditures this year. That's the first time that's happened in a long time. Far below population and inflation, which is what the Wildrose Alliance suggests to Albertans they would do, which, again, is interesting because that would actually raise the budget from where it is today if we were to go to population plus inflation. I guess they're not telling Albertans all of that. So we've had the smallest increase in operating expenditures in memory.

He talks about the real cash deficit. Here's another piece that the hon. Member for Airdrie talks about a lot: change in net financial assets; we've blown through $17 billion; somehow we didn't get anything for it. Mr. Speaker, $5 billion of that $17 billion was the unfunded liability growth in pensions. We're doing something about it. I haven't heard what they're going to do about it. And $7 billion or $8 billion of that is the assets that I spoke about earlier that we put in the ground. Those are schools, hospitals, and roads that we built with that sustainability fund.

So he talks about incompetence. Probably, I would suggest, the incompetence is not understanding what a financial statement is or good financial management, Mr. Speaker. The incompetence is coming from that side, not our side.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview – love it. We won't tell Albertans what the health, financially, of the province is. In October 2013 the Auditor General released a report. I would encourage the hon. member to perhaps read some of it. On page 6, the sixth paragraph down – this is the Auditor General's report I'm quoting from, Mr. Speaker:

The fact that none of our auditor's reports on financial statements contained a reservation of opinion means that Albertans can be sure they are receiving high quality information from the government on the province's actual financial performance.

I would suggest to you that that's telling Albertans exactly what it is.

The other piece, Mr. Speaker, is when he says that the health of the province's finances must be in terrible disarray because we changed to this new system, this bizarre system. Generally accepted accounting principles have never been referred to as bizarre. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce and the accountants' association . . .

If the hon. member could remind me of the actual – what is it? The chartered accountants of Alberta?

Mr. Dorward: The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta.

Mr. Horner: . . . the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta have endorsed what we're doing, Mr. Speaker, and from the letters that I've received, in fact, we have had a lot of comments and kudos about the fact that we've separated the operating from the savings and the capital plan so that Albertans have an understanding of what we're actually talking about when we talk about operating, savings, and capital.

Mr. Speaker, this province has the strongest financial position of any jurisdiction in North America, bar none. That is borne out not by us but by the credit-rating agencies that rate all of those jurisdictions in North America. Triple A, and they would give us another one if they could. There is nothing wrong with the finances in this province.

When we talk about debt, the hon. members in the opposition, as I've already said, won't tell Albertans how they would pay for the capital. In fact, they're trying to hide it because $5 billion taken out of our operating expenditures today when we had a zero per cent increase would mean a $5 billion cut in core services, yet the hon. member talks about increasing core services, restoring them.

Mr. Denis: Which way is up?

Mr. Horner: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. There's no way to understand which way these hon. members are trying to lead Albertans or mislead Albertans. I'm not exactly sure which way it's going.

Mr. Speaker, he talks about an infrastructure list that the Wildrose Alliance would provide, you know, the capital plan. Well, I find it very interesting. Today their leader was talking about the signs that we're putting out there and how they're party colours and all that stuff, taxpayer funded. Well, I have a copy of their A Better Way to Build Alberta plan for capital. Note the colours. Those would be Wildrose Alliance colours. Note the big Wildrose Official Opposition on the front. This is a fabulous picture book. There are no dollar numbers in here, but it's a fabulous picture book. Somebody in here is maybe running for leadership; I'm not sure. There's a fabulous picture book in here.

Again, there is no list of priority assets in this thing. In fact, there's no list of assets in it at all. There's no list of construction. There's no list of priorities. There's no list of dollars. There's no explanation. [interjections] I hear a lot, but I don't see anything.

Mr. Speaker, just in closing, all of this over a piece of legislation that really is about ensuring that we can move dollars from one year to the next, that we can do things that bring our issuance of bonds and securities into the 21st century, that we can actually be more efficient with Alberta taxpayers' dollars. The opposition, while saying they're going to support it because they understand from the briefings we've given them that this is needed, that this is something we should do, take the opportunity to spew a whole raft of things that would just simply make Albertans think they must live in the worst place in the world. Yet everybody else is coming here because, we believe, we're the best place in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. At this point in the evening I'd like to ask for unanimous consent so we could move to one-minute bells for any divisions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 30

Building Families and Communities Act

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Great. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity. It feels good to get back into some committee work here. Let's talk about some amendments to some legislation. I'm not going to spend a whole lot of time with a lead-up as to what the purpose or the intent of these amendments is. I have shared them all with the minister, so I'm sure that his responses will be equally quick as to whether or not these will be accepted.

An Hon. Member: Did he get back to you?

Mr. Wilson: Unfortunately, I have not heard his thoughts on them, but I am quite excited to, so without further ado I will table the first amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: We'll just pause for a moment, hon. member, and have that circulated. If the pages could bring the original. Hon. members, this will be amendment A1.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The intent of this amendment is quite simple. It is to ensure that the members of the council, whichever region they are being asked to serve in within the province, live or reside in the region that they are going to be asked to serve. If members could refer back to legislation and the sections that are being repealed from the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act, you'll find that this actually is right in there as what used to be subsection (3), "Each member of a Community Board must be a resident in the region for which the Community Board is established." So, quite simply, the intent of this amendment is to ensure that the individuals who are serving on these councils, which have great potential to add value to the work that the Human Services department is doing, are actually residing in the area in which they are operating to ensure that local decision-making is happening and is consistent with, I guess, the mandate and what the suggested mandate of this council is.

So, with that, I'd be happy to hear any response that the minister may have or any of my other colleagues.

The Chair: Thank you.

Speaking to amendment A1, the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start by thanking the hon. member for the courtesy of providing me with copies of the proposed amendments. I believe it was yesterday afternoon, and I did have a chance to look at them as I promised I would. I want to be sure that he understands that I very much appreciate that because I'm always interested in ideas that can make bills and legislation in this House better, and I look forward to that. I would have to say and just let him know up front that, unfortunately, having looked at them, I'm not going to be able to recommend acceptance of any of the amendments tonight, and I'll be happy to provide rationales.

This one is one that I was tempted to say yes to because it is absolutely the intention of the regional councils that they come from the region. That is exactly what regional councils should do, reflect the nature of the region, reflect the demographics of the region. So every intention is to have members of the councils come from the regions. In fact, the hon. member has been good enough to create a parallel structure in the amendment that says “the desirability.” So it’s clear that it’s not a must; it’s desirable.

I would have actually no real problem with this particular amendment. I haven’t had an opportunity to get agreement from caucus or explain it to them, but I wouldn’t have any problem with this particular amendment, Mr. Chairman, because it is the intention that the members of the council would come from the regions that the council represents, and it would be the intention that the process of selecting them would involve applications from people within that region. The fact that he’s included the same structure, the desirability, means that if for some reason there was an exceptional reason why you’d want to bring somebody else in, you still could.

It’s a fairly friendly amendment. I would just say that I haven’t had the opportunity to consult with our caucus members, but I have no problem with the amendment.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Yes. Thank you very much. I would just like to perhaps ask, if I may, a question for clarification on this particular amendment. Should there not be an individual or member that would be appointed from the region or if there wasn’t enough of a pool of people available, what then? Maybe the minister or the person that is providing us with the amendment could provide some insight to that because there may be a time, Mr. Chairman, that somebody may not be available from a region, so the appointment may have to come from outside. Is there flexibility to allow for that, or would there be a different situation? Just a question.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, did you care to respond?

Mr. Wilson: Sure, Mr. Chairman. I believe that, as the minister alluded to, the way the amendment is worded, it would allow for that exception if that were the case. It suggests that it’s desired that the individuals who serve on the councils are from the region in which they are asked to serve, but it in no way says that they absolutely must be. As all of us as elected officials I’m sure are aware, boundaries can change. It allows the ministry to change the regional makeup or where those boundaries lie without it necessarily meaning that they have to find a whole new board just because they’ve decided to change the region in which it serves. I believe that the intent is true, that it just suggests that if you are to serve on the Calgary region, that you should live within Calgary or the northwest region or wherever these regions are. At this point they’re not mandated or even listed in the bill, where the regions are going to be.

I hope that may appease your question. I’m wondering if the minister could even clarify because I had a little bit of confusion as to the way he started his response to this amendment and the way it ended. I was getting mixed messages, so perhaps some clarification if he could.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you Mr. Chair. Certainly, the message I intended to convey was that I wasn’t going to be able to accept any of the amendments, but I should have ended it by saying: with the exception of this one. This one I don’t have any problem with because it is the intention. It doesn’t need to be legislated, but it is the intention that those councils come from the region. The way that it’s worded it reads “the desirability of,” so you could appoint somebody from outside the region if that was desirable for expertise reasons or whatever.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I had that same mixed message. As far as I’m concerned, if the hon. member is going to accept this amendment – I stood to support it – then I would take it right to a vote. We can call the question on it and vote.

The Chair: I’ll call the question, then.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, hon. minister and hon. colleagues, for entertaining that and for incorporating it into the bill.

I will table another amendment if I may, please.

The Chair: We’ll have that circulated, hon. member.

For the record, hon. members, this will be amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, please proceed.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We talked in second reading about, and many of the other members in this House also alluded to, you know, the desirability and the mandating of having a co-chair who is aboriginal on each of these councils and that the co-chairs, aboriginal and nonaboriginal or whatever it is that the other co-chair is, have meetings. Now, the intent of this amendment is simply to increase the frequency of the meetings beyond once per year. I would be happy, if the minister would be so inclined, rather than to vote this through as an entire one block amendment, if we could perhaps go line by line to get an understanding of where they stand on each of the three suggestions here.

Again, my struggle with the intent of a piece of legislation like this is that if you’re going to have these councils and you’re going to present these councils to the Alberta public as a strong voice and a strong conduit of information between what’s happening on the ground level in communities and what’s got to happen through the ministry and the direction the minister should take, it just seems a little bit odd to me that it would only be mandated that the co-chairs and the aboriginal co-chairs meet together as a group once per year. It just seems like it’s a bit of a wasted opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

So the intent of this is simply to increase the frequency of those meetings to semiannually, or twice per year. I believe that my goal, as it were, if we were to look at which of these were most important to me, would be section B, which relates specifically to section 5, by amending it so that particularly the aboriginal co-chairs are meeting as a group more often, exactly twice per year. I think, as we can all accept, the situations that we find our aboriginal peoples in, their overrepresentation in a lot of the social impacts in this province could suggest that this could be needed and/or be a positive step forward.

With that, I believe I've stated the case as to why I believe that this amendment should be accepted. Again, I look forward to engaging with the minister further.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, I appreciate the concept behind the amendment. Obviously, we want these councils to be effective, and to be effective, the councils not only have to meet in their own regions, but they also have to come together to compare across the province what's happening and to meet with the minister.

The bill as it's framed suggests at least annually, and I think one should be cautious about requiring or mandating more frequent meetings than that. They can have more frequent meetings than that, but if you start to pile them up and you say that the co-chairs of the council shall meet semiannually – that means three times a year, because biannually would be twice a year, so semiannually would be interpreted as three times a year – and then the aboriginal co-chairs would have to meet another three times a year, and then the minister and the co-chairs shall meet together annually, and the ministers and the co-chairs of all councils shall meet, that adds up to a lot of meetings outside the regions.

So rather than try and nitpick how many meetings they're going to have, I think we should be comfortable with the assurance that the act mandates, requires the co-chairs of the councils to meet together once a year, and the aboriginal co-chairs to have another meeting at least once a year, and each of those, either at the same time or in a different meeting, to meet with the minister at least once a year. That's a minimum, and it's appropriate to legislate in the bill the minimum amount of meetings. But to start requiring by law a multiple cascading of meetings makes life for everybody involved extremely complicated, and I wouldn't recommend it.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess this is why I opened by suggesting that perhaps we deal with each of these individually. You know, when you look at the way that the bill is currently written, section 4(2) says, "The Minister and all the co-chairs of all Councils shall meet together annually." It does not say at least annually. It does say at least annually in section 4(1). Similarly, in section 5(2) it says only annually. It does not say at least annually.

In my understanding of the way in which this is worded, semiannually would be two times per year. Parliamentary Counsel advised us that biannually would actually mean every second year. Again, the intent is just to simply make this, as opposed to only meeting annually – and, hey, if it were to say at least once annually, I'd be perfectly fine with that. But, again, that's not the way that the bill currently reads, which is why the amendment was suggested.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I listened to the hon. minister, and what I'm concerned about is – I can understand not wanting to force unnecessary meetings, but what I'm trying to understand here, which would sort of form my opinion for either supporting or not supporting the amendment, is the importance of the actual councils and the importance of the co-chairs. As it's written, it talks about the opportunities and challenges throughout all regions. To me, as I understand the wording of opportunities and challenges, these could be significant to the communities and these could be significant to the well-being of even individuals. What I'm concerned about is that if we don't pass this amendment and it's only a requirement that they meet once a year, could that have the potential to put an unnecessary lag before an important opportunity or challenge is addressed? That is how I view this.

Again, I understand both arguments, but what I'm more concerned about is to make sure that there isn't a long delay when there is something that is recognized and somebody is waiting to bring this forward. Could that happen under the way the bill is actually written now? That's kind of the question I have.

When meetings are normally called, the idea is that these issues and concerns are generally brought forth at every meeting. If I understand the minister correctly, there will be two meetings a year, but two different parties would be meeting once a year. These challenges and opportunities seem significant to me, to the point that I'm not sure that it's a burden to say: meet twice a year. If it is a burden, I'd just like to know why.

I think the whole intent here is to make sure that we have this consistency. So, as I look at it, having that extra meeting a year doesn't seem to be an imposition or a burden upon the council members. If it is, then I would like that explained so I understand it better, and maybe the other members here would. I think the whole key here is to make sure that if there are challenges that come forward, they are addressed in a timely fashion so that everyone else can benefit from this.

I'd be happy to hear from the minister on that very question.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I think it's important for us to reflect on what the primary role and function of the councils will be, and that is to engage their communities and discuss the social issues and the social impact on their communities. That means that we're asking volunteers to play a very dynamic role in their community. They will be meeting in that context, I would assume, with the school boards in their area, to have joint meetings there.

In Edmonton, for example, or the capital region area here we have a group that now meets together called the Joint Action for Children Committee. It's the school boards, the social agencies, and others. It's a great organization. They come together once a year to make sure they're all on the same agenda.

I would see community engagement councils performing a similar function in their regions. So they would meet with the school boards, they would meet with the health advisory councils, they would meet with the FCSS organizations, and they would initiate discussions in the community on issues of social importance to those communities. They would engage in the community. That's a fairly significant and active role that we're asking them to play.

I don't want to mandate in an act how many meetings they have on a provincial basis with the co-chairs. We want to make sure that they meet at least annually. We want to mandate and indicate that the minister will meet with them annually, and that happens now, I can advise, with the CFSAs, for example, and we'd want to continue that. There's no good reason why they couldn't have more meetings if they wanted to. But the focus of the engagement council is engagement of the community and the act of bringing together those voices and those discussions in the community.

I'm very conscious, having been on a number of volunteer boards, of how much of your life that can actually take. It's a balancing act, and rather than mandate that they have to meet that many times – and I would clarify that it should be clear in the act that the co-chairs of councils meet together. That's all the co-chairs. That's the aboriginal co-chairs and the other co-chairs. Then there's a second annual meeting with the aboriginal co-chairs, which we're doing because we specifically want to highlight and understand that there is a particular focus that needs to be placed with respect to aboriginal communities. So that's already two meetings, and I really do not want to detract from the activity and the engagement in the local area.

Now, if the council co-chairs said that we needed to have another meeting, I can tell you that this minister would be very interested in having that extra meeting. I can't speak for all ministers; there will be other ministers in this portfolio. But I can say that that's something that we've always – I don't think I've missed a meeting that I've been asked to come to with the CFSAs, for example, as they've met. They've been actively engaged in the social policy framework discussion, and we've participated there.

We want to make sure that they're effective, that they have the ability to carry out their mandate, and that they play that active functioning role talking with all of the groups in their community that they need to talk with so that they can be well informed for a discussion to inform government policy, for example, and so that they can also work with the municipal governments in their area because there needs to be co-ordination in that area.

These are councils which will have a fairly broad mandate. Everything under Human Services will fall within their mandate, and that means there are lots of people to talk to. So to say that they have to come and talk to the minister, to me, two times a year as co-chairs and another two for the aboriginal co-chairs in addition to that, and perhaps some more, I don't think is prudent. If it wants to happen, it can happen, and I'd be very favourable to that. But I would like to see them get up and running and make those contacts in their community in their first couple of years at least, really embed themselves in the community, really become part of the social discussion in the community, and then we can see how often we have to meet to make sure that that input and that engagement is effectively contributing to overall policy and to the assurance role that they will have in terms of whether government policy and activity is actually hitting the ground in those communities.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, I must begin by saying that this is a bit of an awkward point for me to begin this discussion, having not been able to be here for the discussion in second reading and having assumed that the rather broad range of amendments that we'll be discussing tonight would have been discussed over more than one evening commencing at 8 in the evening. I'm now having to sort of start my discussion with sort of the overarching view of this bill, and of course, we're speaking to the amendment, so I can't. I have to speak to this amendment and sort of dive right in without giving a bit of context to why I have some significant difficulties with this bill.

In short, one of the problems that exists with this bill, to me, on first reading and second reading and, indeed, having listened to the discussion by the minister is that these councils are really not going to be terribly effective. They don't meet the needs of the people who work very hard within this community, who are looking for genuine opportunity for consultation. Really, they're extended sort of communications tools for the government. They should really be run almost out of the Public Affairs Bureau. In fact, because of their structure, they're not in a position to really effect significant change; they're simply in a position to talk.

I know this minister loves to go around and talk with people about things, but when you're dealing with the critical, critical issues that are all lumped together under this Human Services ministry, a ministry which is basically overseeing that which is awkward and something that we'd rather limit the opportunity for people to talk about in the province, and you lump them all together and say that this council is going to be our way to engage with Albertans on issues of how we serve adults with pervasive developmental disability, how we serve children who are at risk, how we serve families who are at risk, how we deal with children's mental health, how we deal with poverty, how we deal with immigrant challenges for new Canadians in communities, how we deal with hunger problems in regions across – I mean the issues are gargantuan. Yet it's all wrapped up together under this Human Services ministry, and then these little cheerleading teams are going to set out into the community to talk and talk and engage and talk.

Well, you know, Mr. Chairman, I have been an activist my whole life. I've been an antipoverty activist my whole life, and I can tell you, speaking from that perspective, that going to meeting after meeting after meeting after meeting, listening to people talk around and around and around in circles with the same problems coming up year after year after year with nobody making any changes and the same mistakes being made over and over again: my desire to engage in that particular forum becomes extremely limited. The fact of the matter is that the way this minister is structuring this, that's exactly what's going to happen with his little cheerleading advisory teams.

To get back to the amendment that we're dealing with right now, that is particularly evident in this minister's response to this quite reasonable request by the Member for Calgary-Shaw to suggest that the minister might want to meet with these councils more than once a year. Given the significantly important stuff that they would be talking to people about and given the significant nature of these issues and the life-changing impact of these issues and the many, many, many different matters that now fall within his ministry's jurisdiction, the idea that they could meet once a year and give any kind of meaningful respect to the opinions of the activists and the advocates and the self-advocates and the community members within each community who actually in good faith choose to participate in this dog-and-pony show is just silliness. It can't happen. It won't be meaningful.

They have virtually no staff. They are volunteers. It's simply going to be an opportunity for people to sit in a room and talk and maybe an opportunity for these folks to promote the government's so-called record on it. That's all it's going to be. If you want these to be meaningful, then the fact of the matter is that the minister has to commit to meeting with these people more regularly.

There is no better example of how necessary this is than the train wreck of governance that we saw this spring when this government decided to take $45 million away from the PDD budget. It was clear that there had been with these other boards that existed – and quite honestly I'm quite okay with that part of this bill in terms of what it does with the PDD boards. But the fact of the matter is that there was a much greater level of consultation going on there, yet it was a disaster when the government proposed to make a whole series of changes. Quite honestly, what I am hearing from people within that community, even though the draconian funding cuts have been taken off the table for the time being, is that they want an opportunity for meaningful consultation and opportunities for collaboration in at least that sector, the PDD sector.

They will not get that meaningful collaboration and that meaningful engagement through the structure that is described in here. Under no circumstances will that happen. You would need to have working groups of key decision-makers within the government working with key stakeholders that the community has identified and have those people meeting weekly for probably at least the next six months in order to navigate their way through the debacle, the governance debacle, that this PC government created this spring with their top-down changes, or attempts at changes, to the PDD system.

So if you use that as a case study, Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely no way on the planet that this structure could accommodate that kind of change or the need for consultation that that kind of change generated. Under no circumstances could it. And under no circumstances could that be managed by the minister meeting with them once a year. I mean, that's just utterly ridiculous. There's just a complete disconnect from the level of engagement that the community is looking for on one hand and the level of engagement that is guaranteed through the mechanism described in this legislation on the other. There is no way this consultation structure can be anything other than an opportunity for a few hand-picked people to go out into a community and hand out government press releases, and that's pretty much it.

If they are only meeting once a year, then what's going to happen is that they'll come back and say, "Well, this is what these people thought about your press release, and this is what other people thought about your press release," and that's going to be about it. If it comes to rolling up your sleeves and actually sitting down to figure out how we can deal with some of these incredibly heart-wrenching challenges that exist in different communities across the province, there's utterly no way it can be done through the structure that this minister is proposing in this bill.

So I think there are a lot of changes that need to be made in this bill if the objectives that the minister says he wants to achieve are to be achieved. I think the amendment that was put forward by the Member for Calgary-Shaw is one very small example of the changes that need to be made in this bill. I think that, in fact, they probably just need to completely re-evaluate what they mean by consultation, what they mean by collaboration, and how it is they intend to engage in a transparent and predictable and reliable process of engaging with all those partners that they claim they want to collaborate with through their social policy framework.

If collaboration means that a hand-picked group of people get to meet with the minister once a year, well, that's not collaboration. If collaboration means that a bunch of other folks meet with the minister behind closed doors as a form of crisis management, well, that's hardly surprising, but then all that really is is a bunch of people meeting with the minister behind closed doors as a form of crisis management, with other members of community not knowing that it's going on and people being played against each other and all that kind of stuff that actually goes on in the community right now, quite frankly.

This act is about taking power away from the CFSAs, some of which had a great deal of staff and authority, and away from the PDD boards, which also had a great deal of staff and authority and probably too many resources, and centralizing it in the ministry. As a rule that's not necessarily a bad thing in order to ensure that services are more integrated and there's more co-ordination and that gaps are filled, so I have no problem with that model. However, if what we're talking about is providing a genuine opportunity for the community to engage with the ministry after all that authority has been centralized, well, then you need to provide for a genuine opportunity for the community to engage, and this bill doesn't do it.

I suspect that the minister has heard from people within the community because I certainly have heard from people within the community that this is a million miles away from what they anticipated when they talked with the minister about ongoing consultation and ongoing engagement with the work that they do and working collectively with the government on that.

I would support this amendment because at the very least it allows for the possibility of there being more than one meeting a year with the minister. I think that's an incredibly modest and polite step forward, but it's better than where we're at now.

With that in mind, I would urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It won't be my habit to respond to everything immediately, but I think there are some very important statements that need to be responded to there. If this hon. member thinks that by creating these boards, that will be the only avenue of public consultation on any issue in the Human Services area, she's sadly misinformed. I certainly didn't inform her of that, so I'm not sure how she's been misinforming herself.

The reality is that, for example, there's an associate minister responsible for persons with disabilities, and that minister has had two tele town halls with families. I participated in one of those with him. I know that there has been a newsletter established directly for families and that there's a website available directly for families. The level of engagement with families of persons with developmental disabilities has gone up rather substantially since the concept of dissolving the boards and bringing the service delivery into consolidated regions was brought forward.

The hon. member and families can be assured that with respect to persons with developmental disabilities and their families, there's no expectation that their only line of communication with government would be through a regional council. The community engagement council is to engage on broader public policy issues and to keep the discussion going that was so very effectively started on the social policy framework and continued in Together We Raise Tomorrow and to understand that there needs to be an ownership of social issues in the community and it needs to be that engagement.

But I can assure the hon. member that when it comes to discussion on issues of service delivery, issues of policy importance within a specific field, that is not the only engagement process there is, and that's not the only communication. If she wants any evidence of that, all she has to do is look at the last six months – the last two years I'd say, but the last six months specifically – about the level of engagement. The associate minister has been on tour in the province twice, into communities, meeting personally with families in large and small groups. No one has been excluded. There have been meetings on the issues.

The Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety has already engaged with and had meetings with people involved directly in those areas. I have had and continue to have meetings with stakeholder groups and others directly involved in those areas. There is a lot of work that's being done in this area, and that work will not stop because an engagement council has been created.

But the engagement councils are a necessary form of ensuring that when we take away the board governance model of the

CFSAs and the PDDs, we don't lose the community governance aspect of engagement of community, informing government policy in that methodology, and the assurance that needs to happen with independent people in the community saying: "This is what's happening. This is how you're missing the mark in our community with the program delivery that you've got, and these are the holes that need to be filled."

So there is a need for both aspects of it, but we're not going to achieve that aspect of community engagement by forcing these councils to meet incessantly, either with themselves or with the minister. They should be allowed to set their pattern, their structure, what works in their community, how they will engage their community. But that will not be the full sum of engagement for any particular organization, group, or individual who is involved with any aspect of Human Services. I can tell you that we have a Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. I have an Occupational Health and Safety Council. I have a labour board, which provides some policy input from time to time. There's the Workers' Compensation Board, which provides policy input in areas. There are a lot of other ways of providing input to the minister and the ministry on social programs.

What this is going to do is to ensure that there is a community governance model which brings all of those voices, all of those active people – and Albertans are great volunteers, great participants in their community, particularly on the social agenda – together in a comprehensive way so that there's a comprehensive and co-ordinated voice from regions to participate in that discussion, not to be the exclusive owners of that discussion.

Ms Notley: I certainly appreciate the minister's input in this and taking the time to get up and respond although it does really sound like: well, on one hand, this bill is supergreat because it's going to accomplish all these objectives, but on the other hand, if you're worried that it's not really structured to accomplish all these objectives, we're also going to accomplish them in other ways, too. Then the question becomes, "Well, then, why the bill?" which, of course, relates to, really, "Why the bill?" and relates to the previous comments of the minister. [interjection] Absolutely. I'm fully aware of the consultation that occurred over the summer and into the early fall with primarily the associate minister and stakeholders in the disability community.

Dr. Swann: Crisis management is what I would call it.

Ms Notley: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View refers to it not as consultation but as crisis management, and he actually nailed it in that respect because it wasn't like the associate minister was out there meeting with families every day, touring the province before they decided to cut $45 million to implement an assessment program that families had been promised would not be used to cut funding from their loved ones. No. This started after the fact because the outcry was so impassioned and so outraged at what it was that the government had done.

The fact of the matter is that this structure will not prevent the same mistake from happening again. The fact of the matter is that this structure does not accommodate the level of discussion that needs to go on, particularly in the face of this minister's – I can't remember if it's the framework or the moving forward or the antipoverty or whatever it is we like to call his discussion forums on any given communications day, where it talks about moving away from the provider of services to being the facilitator of services and working as a team with community members, including, you know, Safeway, to provide support to people who are struggling with poverty issues in the province. When you start taking things apart like that and creating a patchwork collaborative model where everybody is in charge but no one is in charge, then meetings become even more critical.

Now, I'm not saying that these councils are those meetings. Clearly, they're not, and clearly that's not what the government intended. But I will say that the need for discussion and collaboration will increase. Just to be clear, there's nowhere in the legislation that requires the level of meeting that the associate minister engaged in this summer. It was the community and advocates for that community that necessitated that level of consultation after the government embarked upon a strategy which displayed a profound absence of consultation and awareness of what was going on in the community and how things worked. As I said, there's nothing in the way this structure exists now that would change and ensure that that didn't happen all over again because there's not enough opportunity for discussion through this mechanism for it not to all happen all over again.

Now, if this is not adequate for the level of consultation that is required to do the job well, fine. That's certainly one reasonable interpretation that one could apply to what the minister just said. The idea of people working in communities to get to know each other and to talk and to work through these things when nobody has any resources and nobody has any authority is naive. Those meetings will stop if it's just for people to sit around the room and feel good about themselves. These meetings occur and matter if people have decision-making authority or if they have resources. They stop very quickly if it's just about people sitting in a room singing Kumbaya over and over again year after year. That's really all this, unfortunately, allows for.

The other thing I was just going to point out is that, yes, the associate minister did do a lot of meetings and has a lot of ongoing relationships now being established with families. I don't see the level of regularity or structure having been established with the service providers as of yet, and that is a problem. One wonders what that is about and why there's not a similar level of co-ordination with those folks because in the absence of that you actually create a whole different sort of level of dysfunction.

It's great to have people go out there and pass out the minister's press releases, you know, every now and then, but I think he's going to find that these become as ineffective as many of their other councils. The minister mentioned the council on disabilities. We know that they at one point made a grand series of recommendations, about 10 years ago, almost all of which have been ignored and never to be replicated. Since then they just create little annual reports, which describe the meetings they have with people, which of course doesn't exactly amount to a particularly effective use of anybody's time.

I'm afraid that that's what we're really going to do here and that this really is more about looking like we're talking to the community and listening to the community than it really is about ensuring a structure and a mechanism to actually talk to and listen to the community. If it was about the latter, I am struggling to understand why the minister would be reluctant to allow the possibility of more than one meeting a year by the minister by accepting the amendment, which would just say: at least once a year. That's what the member was proposing, simply adding at least once a year rather than once a year. Yet that has been rejected because meeting more than once a year would be far too onerous.

My other suggestion would be, of course, rather than having people with disabilities, senior support issues, child mental health issues, hunger issues, unemployment issues, poverty issues, labour issues, immigrant education issues all in one gargantuan ministry, perhaps the Premier ought to demonstrate enough respect for the importance of all the issues that are covered within that ministry to provide for more than one minister. Then the ministers would have time to meet with all the people they need to. That's just another idea, to actually have a minister, not an associate minister, who is responsible for these things.

Anyway, the fact of the matter is that at this point there is no way this structure will accommodate the level of communication that's needed to actually work with the community members, that these folks intend to download a good deal of the – I don't want to call it poverty prevention – community support work that is under the authority of this superministry. It's unfortunate that we're not looking at the very small change that was proposed just a short time ago, that is being deliberated on right now.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is absolutely right. Absolutely right. This bill does not envision or codify the communication structure that is necessary – and I would add right – that has to go on. This bill does not do that. Considering that that's not the intended purpose of these councils, I would say that there's no reason why it should encompass all of those communications needs.

Now, I've held a couple of portfolios. My learned colleague and boss, I suppose, has held a lot more than me. I don't recall any specific piece of legislation that codified how many times I should consult with the stakeholders that were affected by my department, nor would I consider that a worthwhile piece of legislation. The fact of the matter is that if you're going to do your job, you have to talk to people. I certainly have endeavoured to do that in the corner of Human Services that I'm responsible for, and I know the minister has. The other associate minister has as well. I think everybody does that.

Now, Mr. Chair, that is absolutely not the intended role of these councils, and that's why that's not covered in this bill. She's right. It's not covered in this bill, nor should it be. While we're moving to strengthen regional engagement, a regional governance capacity-building and quality-assurance piece through these councils, at the same time my role as associate minister or the other associate minister of Human Services or the minister has other duties and other consultations to do, and we'll do them.

The fact of the matter is that you could argue that the fact that we had operational boards and actually still do until this legislation is passed and enacted actually probably hindered our consultations with families directly, our relationship with them. I think we've done a tremendous amount to heal that relationship, and I use that word kind of deliberately. I think we're done a tremendous amount. We post all kinds of information on the website that's designed specifically for families. We do a newsletter directly to families. I did the provincial tour. We've done teleconferences. I'm actually in the middle of a tour right at the moment. To me, to execute my job, that's what I have to keep doing. That fact that we're bringing the operations into the government strengthens my ability or some future minister's not only ability but responsibility to do that.

You just simply can't do the job without talking to stakeholders, particularly in this case with vulnerable stakeholders. When you make moves, you affect lives. I don't for a second downplay the gravity of this situation. I just merely point out that that is not the intended role, nor given our experience with regional boards would I argue that that would be an effective role for those boards. I don't think it would lead to success. That's one of the reasons we're internalizing it. The other is – and I can certainly speak with some authority on the PDD side – that I have yet to meet anybody out in the community that thinks it's a bad idea to dissolve the PDD boards. The families are frustrated with the relationship with the boards. They want a relationship with the department, with the minister. I've endeavoured to give that to them, and, again, that's complete and separate from this bill.

So you're right. It doesn't enshrine that need to consult. It can't, and that's not the intended role of these committees.

Ms Notley: Well, again, I appreciate the associate minister getting up to discuss this as well. Again, to reaffirm what he's already stated, I do think that there's pretty much probably consensus across the board on the impact of this bill on the PDD boards. I think we all agree that the outcome as a result of this bill is a good one and that the PDD boards as they previously existed don't exist anymore and that the government is engaging more directly.

9:00

The concern I have is, well, first of all, going to the objective of the bill. It's interesting that we say that this isn't the objective of the bill, yet in the preamble of the bill, whereas – well, I don't want to read the whole thing, but really if one were to read the preamble, you would think that that was exactly the objective of this bill, to achieve all these grand things that the ministers now both have acknowledged cannot be achieved in terms of collaboration, communication, and consultation structures through the councils which exist in the bill. So it's interesting because if you read your whereases, one would actually expect then to see a rather involved structure flow from those to set up the kind of consultations and collaborations that would avoid – and we're using this as a case study, it seems – the occurrences of the last six months in PDD.

That's why I'm confused, because the bill purports at the whereases to do more than what it now appears both ministers are suggesting that it will do. That being said, though, I'm wondering if the minister can respond. He once again, similarly to the senior minister, talked about all the engagement with families, and that's good. It's never bad. It's always good to talk to families, and if you didn't know before, you know now that there is no more ardent a group of advocates than the families who are caring for their permanently disabled children, whether they be adults or not.

But we have a system where the front-line services are currently being delivered by a number, a huge range of service providers across the province, so my question is: what's happening there? Because obviously there have been some broken trusts and some bad relationships established with a number of different service providers across the province as a result of the conflicting messages that came out over the course of the three or four months after the budget was introduced.

I have heard from some of those, from a number of them – I mean, just so you know, I'm in contact with a broad range of those service providers – that they are interested in setting up a much more sort of crystallized, reliable structure for consultation and problem solving and dealing with some of the issues that the minister himself has raised in the past. For instance the whole issue: is IQ cut-off the right way to go or not? Are there people currently not eligible for services who should be eligible? Are we providing services in the most effective way possible? How do we deal with that growing number of people who are not currently eligible but we suspect ought to be eligible?

All those kinds of good questions which have been raised in the course of this discussion need to also be discussed with the front-line providers. What are the structures? What is the work that's going to be done to work with them? Again, if you look at the preamble of this bill, one anticipates that this is the mechanism through which that work would be done, and it's just a bit confusing that we've got a statutory instrument here. I mean, you know, I love statutory instruments. I love when we get to come into the Legislature and actually talk about legislation and then have something to point to over time. So I'm happy that we're doing this, but it's interesting that we have a statutory document in order to create a relatively small group of councils that have a relatively limited and infrequent role in this large endeavour we're engaging in, but we don't have a statutory document that outlines some of the more necessary mechanisms that need to be in place to actually get the job done, which are more complex than these little councils.

So my question to the minister is: what's going on, and what can we anticipate in terms of a regularized, predicable, transparent structure for problem solving with the front-line service providers that this government has developed a relationship with and reliance upon over the course of the last, you know, four decades of providing services to adults with developmental disabilities?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, the hon. member argues that she actually agrees with the bill. I think I should clarify that because they have the most backwards way of agreeing with something. I've got to tell you that.

Might I point out that in the preamble it says, "whereas all Albertans share the opportunity and responsibility to contribute to and benefit from Alberta's prosperity and quality of life." Well, by that statement, Mr. Chair, I think we should enshrine the royalty regime, the tax regime, and everything else in this bill if that's how that hon. member would fashion legislation. It states some higher order of principles of the fact that we believe Albertans have a right to participate, to belong, to contribute, to be engaged, and the part of that that's being addressed by this bill is the engagement councils. It doesn't say anything about the other engagement processes that are happening.

The hon. member mentioned another one, the relationship with service providers. Again, I would agree. Absolutely I would agree that there is a responsibility. I wouldn't agree with the member that the relationship with the service providers is at some broken level of trust because of – I forget the wording – four months after the budget. I don't agree on the cause.

However, I will agree that we had a less than desirable relationship with service providers, and I'm very happy to inform this hon. member that all through this spring I also engaged with service providers, including tele town halls, and the tour that I'm doing right now also engages service providers. I consider them to be valuable partners in this exercise.

That being said, there's another reason that the boards shouldn't be between us and the people that we have a relationship with. So we're setting these boards into a different role, one, actually, I might add, that they designed after years and years of experience. This report came up from the bottom, not us dictating how these new boards should be fashioned. The recommendations in this bill were passed to us by the CFSAs and the PDD boards working together about what a new role for them might look like.

We need to have a relationship with families and service providers, and we're putting ourselves directly in that role. This is a different role, one that the boards agree with, one that's going to be a very positive addition to the scene, and I urge all hon. members to support the bill, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, I just did want to quote one other clause in the preamble, which, you know, silly me, I took somewhat seriously and expected to see something that might be linked to it. "Whereas a co-ordinated approach to the delivery of social-based programs and services provides clarity among all partners on expected outcomes, roles and accountabilities," one might expect to see some legislative outline for how that might be occurring. That's what I was looking for from the minister because I think we've all agreed now that the councils will not be linked to that particular whereas. They may be linked to the "engagement of communities" whereas, but they're not particularly linked to the co-ordinated approach to the delivery of the programs and all that kind of stuff.

Mr. Oberle: No. It's linked to the dissolution of these boards.

Ms Notley: I'm not looking for boards. It doesn't need to be boards. What we need to know is how it's going to work because right now we have very precious little legislation about how this is going to work.

Now, we are going to get into that in more detail with our other amendments, but I just want to say that I still think the minister should allow for the opportunity to meet with these councils more than once a year. Just to be clear, nobody was proposing that we mandate more than two godawful meetings. I think the idea was that we structure it so that it's at least once as opposed to just once.

I'm getting nods from Calgary-Shaw that there was willingness to discuss that.

Mr. Oberle: It already says engagements.

Ms Notley: Not for all of them. It doesn't for all of them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I won't be lengthy. I just wanted to make a friendly amendment to the amendment to suggest that with the credibility and the shall I say strained relationship with these communities the government has an opportunity to build an extra indicator of wanting to build a more confident and structured relationship with these communities. My friendly amendment would be that you would be willing to meet at a minimum annually or more often as needed. That would simply send a message that you are not rigidly going to hold to an annual meeting. You are simply saying that at a minimum you would meet annually and that your doors are open and you are willing to meet more often as necessary. I wonder if the Member for Calgary-Shaw would accept that as a friendly amendment, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. member, it would have to be in the form of a subamendment. No, we can't just do a friendly amendment on the fly like that.

Dr. Swann: Okay. Let's call it a subamendment, then.

The Chair: Well, it would have to be prepared ahead of time and reviewed by Parliamentary Counsel, hon. member, but I realize good intent.

Are there others, or should I call the question on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Again, in the spirit of trying to strengthen the bill and offer a stronger message to the community, I have an amendment here that I'll circulate.

The Chair: If you'd have that circulated, we'll just pause for a moment, hon. member.

Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chair. Well, one of the strong messages that we've heard from a number of organizations, families, and persons with disabilities themselves is the need to feel that they have an influence and that they are actually being heard, their voices are actually being heard. This amendment to Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act, reads that the act be amended in section 2 by adding the following after subsection (3):

- (3.1) The membership of a council must include at least one member who has involvement and experience with
  - (a) developmental disabilities, and
  - (b) child, youth and family services.

This might be interpreted as too prescriptive, but frankly, Mr. Chair, what the community is looking for is a serious indication that their interests, their experience, their concerns are being addressed and honestly and effectively being communicated, and no one outside of individuals with these kinds of lived experiences can adequately communicate these. So it's an attempt, I guess, again, to add to the credibility of this bill, to the sincerity that is being perceived by the community in this bill, and it's a serious attempt to ensure that the voices and the experiences of families, individuals, and caregivers are being reflected in these boards.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my honour to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. One would think that this condition or this proposal would have been included in the bill. Now, one thing that I've learned in my short period as a member is to never take anything for granted, and don't take the government at its word, or you will be disappointed quite regularly. This amendment ensures that there is representation from families in the PDD community or a representative who has experience and involvement in child, youth, and family services.

I think this is very, very crucial. Far too often, again, in my experience, this government will pass legislation that imposes changes on people or groups of people but then doesn't have any representation from the very community that they are imposing change on. Lord knows that there are many examples within the aboriginal community of bills that are passed that affect them where they don't have a voice or a seat at the table.

I think this amendment not only sends a message to communities or to families with, you know, family members or friends with developmental disabilities, but this also ensures that we have a voice and that experience at the table, which I think is very, very important, Mr. Chair.

You know, I would consider this almost as a friendly amendment. This is just clarifying one of the seats at the table of this council but, again, ensures that at least one voice is coming directly from life experience. I mean, they're coming from working in this field or having a family member with developmental disabilities. I need to outline, Mr. Chair, that they're going to bring a wealth of experience and knowledge to this because they've had to navigate through a system for however many years accessing supports or knowing where to go to find information. I think the minister may be quite surprised or find it quite useful to have at least one member on the council having this kind of background experience.

I will urge all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

Mr. Oberle: Just a friendly word of advice, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, which would be that if you want to couch something and call it a friendly amendment and rely upon the co-operation of government to understand your point of view, then it's generally a bad idea to start off that argument by saying: in my experience the government can't be trusted, and nobody should believe a word they say. Generally, you know, that sort of makes people get their backs up a little bit. Then they can't understand: why on earth would I want to (a) listen to you and (b) co-operate with you? Then you start to talk about: in my experience. Relative to, for example, the hon. Minister of Human Services or the minister responsible for the Treasury Board, in front of me, that hon. member's experience amounts to approximately a week and a half.

You know, if you want to have a spirit of co-operation and generate some debate and co-operation here, then treat people with respect, which is what the rules of order of this House were designed to do. They're not designed to use words to insult people.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to try to employ my skills with sensitivity training as I speak to this. [interjections] Come on, now. I'm working on it. I'm working on it.

Mr. Chair, with the greatest respect, I would actually ask the hon. member: is this too prescriptive? Now, we are looking at volunteers, in all seriousness. There's no question about it. Anyone who's been involved with volunteers – and I think most everyone here probably has at one time or another. The hon. minister talked about it earlier and the many boards that he volunteered to be part of. As everyone knows, if you get a volunteer once, you can overwork that volunteer very easily. But here we are trying to put in a requirement, when we look to get these volunteers, that at least one volunteer would have this type of experience.

Now, we don't set out in the amendment or there's nothing laid out in the amendment that says at what level that experience is. The way I interpret this is that what the hon. member is looking for is someone who has involvement and experience with – and it lists it out – developmental disabilities, with child, youth, and family services. To me, I think that gives the government a little bit of flexibility, but it also gives a little guidance when trying to put this committee or these committee members together.

I suppose the question I have is: would this limit you in actually finding volunteers, or is there enough of a pool of volunteers out there that you could reasonably say that you could easily find one member with some experience? That would be the overriding question here. You don't want to limit it so that you're turning away volunteers. Clearly, if you have the opportunity to get quality volunteers, particularly one quality volunteer on each of these councils, you would have a better ability to do much better work.

Again, the question for the minister is: would this language be too prescriptive, or can it be interpreted in a broader context, as

I've just described, which is that the minister himself decides what that level of experience is, what that level of involvement is to help pick or to assign the volunteers to this council? I'd be really curious about that. I suppose it's how you interpret it. Clearly, if it's interpreted in a very narrow, prescriptive way, it might be too restrictive, but if it's a broader interpretation – and maybe the hon. member who submitted it could reply – I could get a better understanding of how this would actually be implemented if it were accepted.

With that, thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

For the record, hon. members, we are debating amendment A3.

I recognize the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Well, I'm actually pleased for the intervention from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre because I think that he's hit the nub of this. I appreciate that often in legislation government wants to build frameworks because that's what legislation actually does, and then within those frameworks you create the actual operating processes that happen. The opposition tends to want to be very prescriptive because this is where they get to debate the issues, and they like to have it itemized.

The hon. member has actually hit on the nub of a question. As you're putting together – and I have now a considerable amount of experience in trying to put together groups, committees, operating boards, advisory boards, and all sorts. You go out and try, as we do, as the act mandates – actually, I always forget the name of the act, the agencies and councils act. You have a competency-based process. You go out and invite applications. You go out and encourage people to put their name forward. Oftentimes you actually have to go out and recruit, particularly if you're looking for a chair for a particular committee. You want somebody who is actually going to be able to make it work and be able to devote the time.

It's a combination of things that go into actually putting together a good board or committee, and then you have to look at the balance of talents that you need to have. In the case of a regional board like this you have to look at the geographic balance so that communities are appropriately represented or at least have somebody on them. You have to look at the demographic balance. It's a real art form, actually. So rather than being prescriptive – you know, that's why the act is phrased the way it is – about “the desirability of achieving a diversity of qualifications, backgrounds and experience among members of the Council” and “the desirability of achieving a reflection of the demographic make-up of the region,” that speaks to precisely what we're talking about.

In a council of this type there are two main mandates. One is the community engagement, and one is the assurance role. You have to have talented people who are actually good at doing that, and then you have to balance it with the regional makeup and the demographic makeup. Then, of course, you have to actually have people who are interested in the topic, people who are actually going to invest their passion and their time, and that means that you are going to get people who actually are the people you're talking about: people who are engaged with developmental disabilities or with persons with developmental disabilities, people who are engaged with the child, family, and youth enhancement area but also people in other aspects of social issues.

When you get prescriptive, you often end up narrowing the talent pool, if you will, the people who are prepared to step forward to contribute, to a point where you don't really have the ability to put together the type of council which may be as effective as you could have. While I think the objective is laudable – these councils should have people who are intimately familiar with developmental disability issues. If they're not a person with a developmental disability, then somebody who is perhaps a family member or has involvement and experience, yes, and they should have people who are involved with child, youth, and family services.

I can tell you that in a number of the consultations that we've had over the last couple of years in Human Services and previously, when I was Minister of Education, some of the most powerful input and advice came from lived experience. Bringing together street youth in Calgary to talk about education and what might have made a difference for them and what the barriers to success were: that was some of the most powerful input.

Now, I can tell you as well that the group of street youth that came together to provide that input were not going to be participants on any council we put together. They would participate when you asked them, when you engaged with them, when you made it an express opportunity for them to come and be participants, and I can say that about a number of other groups. I've met with a group of mothers who had intimate involvement with the child welfare system. In fact, in the whole group that came together all of them had children who had been apprehended and were wards of the government, and all of them had had intimate involvement with the child welfare system when they were youth and lived in as many as eight and I think in one person's case 12 foster homes as they were growing up.

The input and advice that they provided was absolutely powerful and invaluable. Their learned experience: just amazing. But, again, none of them were actually willing to be on a board or an agency. That wasn't where they were in their life.

I appreciate the idea that you should have the experience of people who have involvement and experience in these areas on the board, and I think you try to seek them out. You certainly try, when you're putting together boards like this, to get the best mix of people to bring both the capacities to engage the community and the capacities to understand whether you're hitting the ground with the programs, absolutely, and having lived experience on those boards would be something that would be a very valuable contribution.

Most important is that those boards could in fact engage subcommittees in specific areas and involve a broader group of people in their discussions and their processes. Certainly, they must be able to reach out and engage with those people who don't normally come in. That's a very important part of any engagement process. All of that comes together to make an effective engagement council and an effective what I would call a community governance model.

But being prescriptive at the front about how many people and how many meetings and all of the qualifications that go into selecting each of the members makes it difficult, in my opinion, to create the right kind of board for each region. Each region, in my view, will be different, actually, in terms of the makeup of the council. It might be different even in terms of the numbers. You might have to have a larger council to engage a broader group or to engage all the people that are available to provide their talent in one area and a smaller one in another area. The demographics, the makeup of our communities, while they have very similar issues across the province, they also have very distinct differences across communities. The makeup of a council like that is an extremely important and a quite difficult task, and one of the most difficult in this very active society that we have today is finding the people who are prepared to devote their time, passion, and energy to making this type of a council.

Particularly when you're on the leading edge of actually establishing and creating it, the first two years, I think, of really setting up community engagement councils are going to require a particular type of committed individual to make sure that they set up something that will have legs and will live on. Simply passing the act isn't going to mandate that. It's not going to create that. It will be created by the initiation process of member selection, of leadership selection, of working with them on mandates and understanding what the roles and expectations are in creating the relationships. That's all a very important part of this, and that's why while I understand the nature of the amendment and why it would be brought forward, I'd ask that you not actually be too prescriptive in setting up and doing this because of exactly the issues you raised.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you, minister, for your comments. I would like you to take one more consideration of it in the same context that you would ask for a board in the automotive industry to be made up of people who understand automotives, in the same way that you would want effective membership on a health advisory board, that you'd want to have health professionals involved, in the same context that in terms of advising on a daycare operation, you'd want to have women with children.

This is an opportunity to say to this community: we recognize your unique expertise in this, and we are going to insist that your voices be at the table and that your voices be heard, subject to being able to find somebody that is able and willing. It is simply sending a message that I think would add to your credibility, to the sincerity of this bill, and, in fact, to the effectiveness of this whole process.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. A few comments. I almost did a point of order when the associate minister was up speaking with reference to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, but I decided I would simply wait until I had a chance to engage. On that issue with respect to the experience that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview brings into this Assembly, let me begin by saying that he may look half the associate minister's age, but that is simply the benefit of good genes. It is in no way indicative of...

An Hon. Member: Where does he buy them?

Ms Notley: Want to go shopping at the same place, do you?

Anyway, the fact of the matter is that it has nothing to do with age. It has everything to do with experience, and the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview actually comes into this House with a remarkable level of experience, that I would challenge anyone over there to match when it comes to these particular issues. He's worked with children and youth at risk; he has volunteered with groups that work with adults with developmental disabilities; he's taught high-risk youth professionally; he's worked at the EYOC. I'll get to the amendment, but I need to respond to the suggestions and the points that were made by the minister without anyone suggesting that he maybe ought not to make them. I think that's kind of not well thought out, when one questions the level of experience that that member brings into this House because, quite frankly, members on the opposite side could benefit a great deal from his life experience and so, too, could these councils.

Now, on the issue of the councils themselves the associate minister also suggested that it was somehow inappropriate and that his feelings were hurt for the member to say that some Albertans don't completely trust this government when it comes to appointing representative people to boards and agencies. I would just say that, you know, we don't really have to go very far, Mr. Chair, to look at, oh, let's see, Alberta's premier environmental protection agency, headed by the former head of CAPP. This has to do with whether or not we should be providing directions with respect to who would be on these councils, and therefore it is relevant.

The fact of the matter is that when I tell people from outside of the province that our primary environmental protection agency is headed by the former head of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, they are gobsmacked that such an incredible breach of good governance would occur. When I tell them that the chief operating officer of that organization just had his record characterized by a Queen's Bench judge, that went unchallenged by this government, as having overseen an unprecedented level of bias against environmental advocates who were opposed to industry in the department of environment, people are shocked.

The fact of the matter is that this government has a record which does not engender trust, and the associate minister – this is one of the things that comes with being part of a 45-year-old government that gets to administer $40 billion a year. Sometimes people say they don't trust you. And you know what? You're just going to have to deal with that because that's your record.

Moving on to the issue of whether the amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View ought to be supported, we would support it. As has been stated, these councils are a replacement for both the CFSAs and also the PDD boards, and I have heard from many people in the PDD community in particular that they are quite concerned about their issues and concerns being overwhelmed by the quantity and quality of other very serious issues that are addressed through the former CFSA boards.

The minister talked about appointing boards with a demographic representation. Well, the fact of the matter is that demographically people who are disabled or have involvement with the disability community are not a large section of the population. Their needs are acute, and they must be respected, but demographically they are not as significant a portion of the population as, say, other demographic groups would be. So if demographics are what you're looking at, if the ability to engage community – i.e., have you worked for the Public Affairs Bureau in the last five years – are the criteria, well, then people in the PDD community are concerned that that voice will be lost.

Now, the fact of the matter, as I'm sure both the minister and the associate minister are aware, is that the previous community boards did have some members that were appointed by nomination from members of the PDD community. All we're suggesting is that there should be room for one representative person on these councils. Simply appointing people that the minister in his discretion and in the course of a 25-minute long explanation thinks will work well with the community because they're successful at engagement, I think is sort of the summary of what he said, isn't good enough, and it doesn't allay the concerns of those marginalized groups who happen to also be small in number. Let's remember that both the CFSAs and the PDD boards dealt with very marginalized groups.

So while, you know – yes, the minister is quite right. If they could, they would pass a law that says: the minister shall make laws in consultation with the Lieutenant Governor, and that would be the end of the Legislative Assembly meetings until the next election. Conversely, the opposition would like to probably prescribe exactly what the minister wears to work every morning. There is a balance to be achieved. What we're recommending and what we are suggesting on behalf of all marginalized groups who are impacted by the work of the council is that there should be a guarantee of some representation on that council for those groups. This is hardly revolutionary.

I think it's a reasonable amendment to accept, and I'm quite surprised that the minister is being so insistent that he needs to maintain the discretion to not have at least one member from these marginalized groups on the councils. I wish that they would reconsider, because I certainly will be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be brief. I just did want to throw my general support behind this, the intent of this amendment, anyway. As much as I respect the hon. minister's comments around the prescriptive nature of this, I think that my colleagues in both the Liberal and NDP caucuses have hit the nail on the head. What we're doing with this bill is dismantling PDD boards, CFSA authorities, and I think that this is an eminently reasonable suggestion, that our boards should have at least one of these individuals listed on them. I don't think it's an unreasonable request in terms of making sure that these are well-rounded councils that will be able to achieve the stated goals that we see in the preamble of the bill. I would just suggest that I will be supporting this amendment, and I would encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Bill 30, as we've already discussed to some extent this evening, is named the Building Families and Communities Act, and we've spent a bit of time already speaking about what the preamble suggests that the act is trying to do. Of course, the name of the act is Building Families and Communities. The act deals with the PDD legislation, and it talks about "a co-ordinated approach to the delivery of social-based programs and services [that] provides clarity among all partners on expected outcomes, roles and accountabilities."

Now, Mr. Chair, I'm just trying to remember when we first heard about all of this. I think it was actually back in – sorry; I'm just checking for dates here – 2009 when we first heard about the tragic, tragic passing of Betty Anne Gagnon. Recently, when it came to the sentencing of the offenders who were convicted as a result of this tragic set of circumstances, new documents came out which talked about the system that was in place and some of the decisions that were made and the way in which these so-called community partners came together or, in fact, did not come together to protect Betty Anne from an incredibly tragic passing.

It was as a result of that evidence that came forward that I asked our staff to take a shot at drafting an amendment, which I am about to propose. In essence, the amendment is one – I said before that you can have a situation where everybody is involved but no one is responsible. This minister particularly likes to talk about everybody collaborating and working collectively and collaborating on particular objectives, but the Betty Anne Gagnon case is a clear example of where everyone is involved, but no one is responsible.

So I have an amendment that would deal with that, Mr. Chair, and I'd like to distribute it at this time.

The Chair: Hon. member, this will be amendment A4. If you would have the pages distribute that, we'll pause for a brief moment, and then I'll come back to you. Thank you.

Proceed, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Now, in our offices we've been working on ways to bring about and to craft this amendment, and I do want to offer my thanks to our always hard-working research staff for putting this together because this was not a small task. Basically, I said to them: you know, what I would like to see us be able to do is to find a way to amend this legislation so that we can impose a duty of care on the government, which has now brought to itself all of the responsibilities that were previously delegated to the PDD boards, and to impose on that government a duty of care so that we don't have the situation where everybody is involved but no one is responsible.

The way in which this amendment goes about doing that is by amending section 8(5) by renumbering the proposed section 1.2 as section 1.2(1) and adding a reference to being able to establish developmental disability through the regulations by restating that "the director must develop a plan in consultation with the adult, the adult's family or guardian, or existing service provider" so that the disabled adult is clearly and statutorily included in the plan development process and by then adding section 1.3(1).

I mean, I will say that it may be possible that some drafters could come up with a better approach to this than we did. We put a lot of work into it, but I'm not saying that it's the best approach. What we essentially did was that we went to the family enhancement and child protection act and amended the duty-of-care language that is found there. It basically lays out the situation that if the director, who is named under the act, receives information in the form of a report or any other allegation that an adult is at risk or is endangered or is neglected or in need of care, it imposes on the director an obligation to take action.

Now, Mr. Chair, there is nothing that the tragic, tragic case of Betty Anne Gagnon does better, I suppose, than demonstrate the need for this government to accept ultimate responsibility for ensuring the basic health, safety, and well-being of those Albertans who are not able to assure that themselves. When it comes to adults in this province who are unable to care for themselves for reasons as identified in the draft that we're proposing, there is a potpourri of mechanisms in place. They may be able to rely on their family, they may be subject to the public guardian, or they may, as in the case of Betty Anne Gagnon, simply fall through the cracks.

Now, I suspect most people here remember the details of what happened to Betty Anne, but suffice it to say that she had been subjected to months and months of cruelty and neglect before she finally died as a result of that cruelty and neglect. What is particularly compelling for the discussion that we're having right now are the documents that were disclosed at the sentencing hearing of Michael and Denise Scriven. One of the documents states that on September 23 there's a note by the PDD worker. I guess I should back it up a little bit. In February of '09 the developmental disability worker received phone messages from Betty Anne's sister saying "that she is no longer able to care for Betty Anne & needs her out by March ... She states she has been caring for [her] for 3½ years w/out support & can't do it any longer." She says "that she is very stressed" and unable to care for her.

Similar calls are made to the PDD worker about a week or two later where "Denise states she is in a state of emergency & not able to care for Betty Anne anymore. She would like to see her move into a group home ... [She's] desperate for supports & firm on her March 31 deadline." There are so many here. It states "Betty Anne cannot cook" and requires 24-hour support and that she has no approved funding or supports at this time.

So this is something that staff with the government are aware of and is reflected in their documents. They're aware of these facts, yet nothing changes. Then there are two or three calls from family and, ultimately, from the caregivers themselves saying that they can't take it and that they are worried about their safety, and I believe there's a threat of suicide in there. Throughout all of this the PDD worker takes notes, makes an attempt to find a place, is unsuccessful at finding a place, then loses contact with the family, then closes the file.

Now, Mr. Chair, if this file were brought into this Assembly after a three-year-old baby had been found in the circumstances that Betty Anne had been found in, people would have been fired, ministers would have resigned, and I'd like to hope governments would have changed. The fact of the matter is that if that history had been brought into this Assembly, all of us, I think – I do believe all of us – would have been devastated. How can that happen?

The fact of the matter is that Betty Anne ultimately had very few other resources at her disposal, and her situation was not terribly distinguishable from – well, I shouldn't say from a three-year-old. I think it was about maybe a six- or a seven-year-old. The government knew she was in distress, they knew she didn't get the support she was needing, they knew she was in danger, and nothing happened and nothing was done.

This proposal that we are putting forward would clarify that. The minister can talk about collaborating and sharing responsibilities with people in the community, and all that kind of stuff all he wants, but there must be a final place where statutory responsibility for the health and well-being of Albertans who cannot care for themselves finally rests. That does not exist in legislation anywhere. It's our view that this is a change that has to be made and that is long, long overdue in this province.

The amendment would state that if the director receives information that an adult with a developmental disability is endangered or neglected and is in need of care, the director must investigate unless the information is unfounded or malicious or provided without reasonable grounds. It defines endangerment as when the adult has been or is at risk of physical abuse, emotional abuse, sexual abuse or that the guardian of the adult has subjected the adult to cruelty, unusual punishment, or unusual treatment or that the guardian of the adult is unable or unwilling to provide the adult with the necessities of life.

Subsection (3) states that if the director's investigation finds that "the adult is endangered or neglected and in need of care, the director must take whatever action . . . appropriate, including the provision of services and supports, to ensure the safety and personal dignity of the adult."

The most appalling aspect of Betty Anne's case is that the department was aware that her family was no longer able to cope. They also knew that she required 24-hour support but was not receiving those funds or supports. This is one of the most appalling parts of this whole story. Then we find the department losing touch with the sister, and nobody driving out to check on the sister, and the police not being called to check and see how Betty Anne was doing.

This is not, ultimately, a failure on the part of government staff. This is a failure on the part of the legislation and the responsibility that exists in legislation at this time because the fact of the matter is that right now there is no clear set of authorities, there's no clear responsibility in legislation, so ultimately everyone is involved and no one is responsible. That's the legislative framework that exists right now in this province.

In response to the situation PDD sent an explanation to CBC news, and they said: oh, well, PDD can arrange an inspection of a family home if someone thinks there's something wrong. But the fact of the matter is that that only actually occurs where someone is living with paid workers. There's an opportunity and an ability to inspect where someone lives with paid workers. There is no similar opportunity or ability to inspect where someone is living with family.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Chair, that in fact the government is moving more and more to family-managed care arrangements. The limited safeguards that exist now like the Protection for Persons in Care Act don't apply to those situations, so where someone is worried about the well-being of an adult with a developmental disability who's in a group home, the PPIC mechanism can be triggered, but it can't be triggered where someone is living with their family.

This is, I know, a very meaty amendment and proposal for change, but this is the opportunity to bring it forward. I mean, I know that there's a judicial review or a fatality inquiry, I believe, still to come on this matter, but I think that the documents that have been disclosed through the criminal process are adequate to highlight that we have a systemic problem in this province right now. Rather than wait for another tragedy to occur, we are currently in the process of making major changes to our PDD legislation, so now would be the time to seriously consider injecting this duty of care into the legislation in order to ensure that we don't have a repeat of this tragedy. Right now there is nothing in legislation that can prevent it in the future.

I'm hoping members of this Assembly will join me in voting for a change that will change that and ensure it doesn't happen again. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? Speaking to the amendment, the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to speak briefly to this proposed amendment. I appreciate the spirit in which the hon. member brought it forward. I am constrained somewhat in engaging in debate in the manner that she has simply because I don't believe the appeal period has actually expired yet on that particular case. But I would say this. This bill, Bill 30, is not actually intended to be a substantive review and amendment of the PDD act. It really is about dissolution of the board and the necessary amendments to the PDD act to change the board governance model, with one additional exception, and that is taking the opportunity to do a bit better alignment of the appeal processes.

While there might be some suggestion that there needs to be or could be or should be an in-depth review of the PDD act itself, I wouldn't want to do that piecemeal, and I certainly wouldn't want to do that on an ad hoc basis. I think that would be something that one really ought to engage – the hon. member in a previous suggestion talked about the need for direct engagement and involvement of the people involved and their families, and that is something that should be done. A review of the PDD act, and it might be an appropriate thing to do, should actually be done after some fairly intensive consultation with the people involved.

So I would be reluctant, first of all, just having seen this at the moment and not being able to review how it fits into the act and how it might impact. That's why I often say to members opposite – and I appreciate that they're reluctant sometimes to share amendments because often it's difficult to discern between those amendments that may be just sort of political in nature and those that might actually be intended to enhance the quality of a bill. But I do say in good faith always that if you share the amendment ahead of time, I can review it with people. And sometimes I mean to get permission of caucus, but most of the time what I'm talking about is to say: how does this fit into the structure of the bill, and how does it work with the bill? Amendments can cause problems. I have had experience with that, where you haven't had a chance to actually take a look at how they fit into the bill.

You know, I appreciate the sentiment of the member in bringing this forward. I think that I can give her some assurance that there has been a significant review of the matter and the tragic circumstances that she's raising and the learnings from that with respect to operations. I think, as always, there's a lot more behind the story in terms of all the things that happened than might be encompassed in one agreed statement of facts. But I'd say to the hon. member that I'd be happy to take a look at this amendment not in the context of this bill because that's not what this bill is for but in the context of whether we should be talking about a more thorough review of the PDD act and perhaps whether it needs some modernizations and some learnings. Certainly, when that happens, I would be happy to have input from the hon. member.

I would also say that I think the meat of this amendment is something which I can say is practice in terms of when calls come in. While I can't recommend accepting this amendment in the context of this bill, I think it's certainly something that we can look at as we go forward, to say: how do we inform and improve practice, and what of that needs to be embodied in legislation? That's something that we would certainly want to look at going forward.

The Chair: Are there others?

Ms Notley: Well, as I say, I do appreciate the fact that it is a somewhat meaty amendment that we're putting forward. As the minister is fully aware, we have a small staff and we've been scrambling to write amendments on all the bills that have been brought forward. I believe this one only got final approval a couple of days ago. Those time constraints are the kinds of things that lead to amendments being brought forward without enough consultation.

That being said, it's not really about that. It's about the principle that we're trying to inject here. It's about the issue of – and I'm going to say it again. The minister is going to hear it from me a lot, a lot, a lot over the next, well, probably the next few years. His social policy framework talks about government being less of a funder and a regulator and more of a partner and convenor. That's the phrase that I love to pull out of the social policy framework. This case is the perfect example where if we're all partners and convenors, then the cracks just grow wider and more and more people fall through them, and Betty Anne is one of those people.

You know, we did engage in a very detailed review of the trustee and guardianship act. I think it was in 2008 or 2009. I was on the committee that did that. One of the things that we failed to do at that time was to impose a positive obligation on anybody where there was an issue of safety with somebody who's not equipped, for reasons that are described in this amendment, to preserve their own safety and their own health.

Now, the minister said that that's not what the purpose of this bill is, and it is interesting because I do have another amendment coming forward, but this bill is more than just setting up the councils and eliminating the PDD boards and changing the appeal process. We're also repealing sections of the act which identify the minister's role to provide strategic direction, set standards for services, co-ordinate the provision of services, ensure reasonable access, promote the inclusion of adults with developmental disabilities, establish policies to ensure consistency of services, and allocate funding and resources. Those are all pieces that are no longer going to be in the act because of this so-called . . .

Mr. Hancock: Because they're not needed anymore. It defines the role of the minister and the role of the board.

Ms Notley: Well, the minister says that it's not needed for there to be any statutory obligation for him to ensure reasonable access, promote the inclusion of adults, establish policies, allocate funding and resources.

As one who's done the ever-so-rare judicial review application, back in the day when I actually practised law, I do know that in order to actually compel the government to do a thing, to bring a writ of mandamus against the government if they fail to do something, one needs a piece of legislation that actually puts a positive duty on the government. I appreciate that the government would like all pieces of legislation to be enabling so that they could fulfill their duties entirely on a discretionary basis. However, that's not what we believe, and I don't think that's what most Albertans would believe.

I think most Albertans would like to see the government say: "You know, you're right. We have to take responsibility for these most vulnerable citizens in our society who are represented by the tragic case of Betty Anne Gagnon." We need to act better, and it can't be discretionary, and it can't be a question of internal bureaucratic practices. There needs to be a statutory obligation on us as the recipients of the collective decision to ensure that our most vulnerable citizens are always going to be cared for. That's why this section is required.

So I would argue that the act is not quite as cosmetic in these other areas as the minister would suggest and that, instead of backing away from the minister's positive obligations to do things like allocate resources and provide reasonable access, what we should be doing is embracing the minister's obligation to protect people like Betty Anne now and in the future.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really want to say thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing this amendment forward. It's timely. It's accurate in what it is intending to do. And I think that under the circumstances, considering that there is a piece of legislation in front of us that is dealing with the PDD system and the way in which it operates and that there will be a director put in place to oversee and this director will be in contractual obligations with clients and service providers across this province, that it is eminently reasonable to include a list of actions that that director needs to be accountable for and, ultimately, the government needs to be accountable for.

Just as a response to the minister's comments about how he understands the intent and sees that there would be value in having something along this line if they were ever to open up the PDD act, you know, I think that this is a perfect time to include something like this. If the hon. minister feels that he needs to have his caucus approval and/or discuss this with his caucus, I would suggest that we adjourn debate on Bill 30 right now and he take the opportunity to have that discussion with his caucus.

At the end of the day this is incredibly important. We've already seen and witnessed in this province what the results can be without something like this in place. I understand the precedents of the House, and I know that we're not supposed to necessarily talk about the case, but the reality is that we have a situation that we need to deal with. I think that what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the NDP caucus has come up with here deals with it. As she suggested, it may not be the perfect wording, but perhaps the minister can take this away and find a way to incorporate this into the act because, quite frankly, I think everyone in this House and everyone in this province doesn't want to see another tragedy like we did. If we're not doing everything in our power to ensure that we do not, then I believe that we're failing Albertans.

I would with that conclude my comments on this. Again, well done, member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment and to highlight some of the points that my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona made. I think we have an opportunity here that would be quite tragic, in all senses of the word, if we passed it up. This amendment, you know, has a very sobering and quite tragic example of Betty Anne Gagnon. I think that this amendment is crucial and that the opportunity that lies before us is one where we shouldn't pass it up. I do respectfully disagree with the minister that this bill doesn't open up the PDD act. I think that, again, we have an opportunity.

I think that this amendment has two very important parts to it or it amends section 8(5) to accomplish two very important things. First of all, it indicates that a plan to provide services to an adult with a developmental disability must be developed in consultation with the adult, his or her family, their guardian, or existing service provider, which is one of the ways that we can ensure that there will be a plan in place, that there will be an adequate plan in place, an acceptable plan in place but also that the caregiver or adult or their family have provisions and a voice in ensuring that their loved one is properly taken care of.

The second very important part to this is establishing that duty of care. You know, I do really want to impress upon all members of the Assembly that this definition of duty of care that I'll go through shortly was derived from the duty of care to children requiring intervention services, and that is in legislation in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. The definition of duty of care is based on that, on existing legislation. It was not something that was just drafted in the flash of a moment, and I think it's something that is very crucial.

I'll speak again about the tragedy that befell Betty Anne Gagnon, which should not have ever happened. It's quite shocking when one learns the details of how there were numerous attempts or cries for help, which were largely ignored, again, not by the front-line government workers but by the fact that there is and was no policy to ensure that it didn't happen and that there was adequate follow-up.

Again, with the current definition or how it's defined in this amendment, it basically states, Mr. Chair: "If the director receives information . . . that an adult with a developmental disability may be endangered or neglected and is in need of care, the director must investigate." There is a clause there: unless the information is unfounded or malicious or provided without reasonable grounds. That might calm some of the concerns that members may have that the director will have to act, you know, if grounds are provided that seem quite unreasonable. But it does ensure that there is action.

As well, in this amendment, Mr. Chair, there is a definition of endangerment or neglect because, again, we ought to be very careful in this Chamber when we're passing bills to provide definitions of terms that may be interpreted in several different ways. In this amendment endangerment or neglect is defined as: the adult has been or is at risk of physical abuse, emotional abuse, or sexual abuse; the guardian of the adult has subjected the adult to cruelty, unusual treatment, or unusual punishment; and the guardian of the adult is unable or unwilling to provide the adult with the necessities of life.

Further to that, Mr. Chair, subsection (3) states that if the director's investigation finds "that the adult is endangered or neglected and in need of care, the director must take whatever action . . . appropriate, including [providing] services and supports, to ensure the safety and personal dignity of the adult." This provides a very, very important fail-safe mechanism. I want to reiterate, Mr. Chair, that we've already had a major tragedy in this province because there wasn't this type of legislation in place to ensure that that wouldn't happen, and I believe it's our duty as legislators to do everything within our means to ensure that a tragedy like what happened to Betty Anne Gagnon does not repeat itself. Again, I urge the minister to reconsider his position in accepting this amendment on the grounds that we have an opportunity before us right now to amend the current bill as it sits to include this.

When I go through the story, it's quite appalling how this happened, and I think it's of utmost importance that we do what we can to ensure that this doesn't happen again. You know, the most appalling aspect of this tragic case is that the department was aware that her family was no longer able to cope with a family member who required 24-hour support but was also not receiving approved funds or supports from the department, but nothing was done to ensure that she received the care and supports that she needed in order to sustain life and to continue.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, there are documents dating back to February 11, 2009, that show that the department was made aware that her caregiver was no longer able to continue providing care and would need a new arrangement. Again, from February 11 till March 31 the information was repeated on numerous dates. In fact, on February 18, 2009, the department was made aware that Betty Anne, who the department knew required 24-hour support, was being left alone for hours, unfortunately, when her sister had to work and couldn't take care of her.

The Chair: Hon. member, if I may, just a little bit of caution. I think the minister mentioned earlier that there may still be some appeal. This matter is still at some stage before the courts. I'd just caution you, maybe, on some of your detail. If you would speak in general terms, I think it probably would be wise.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Sure. Okay. Point taken, Mr. Chair.

As we move forward with the calendar and look at the events and how they transpired, my point is that the flags were raised, and the alarm bells were going off. There were numerous opportunities for the department to take action. They were aware of what was going on, yet because there isn't a plan in place or through legislation requiring action, she fell through the cracks. Again, I do want to note that this was not a failure or an oversight on behalf of the government staff. I'm not laying blame in any way, shape, or form to those front-line service providers.

The issue here goes back to the heart of this amendment, which is putting duty-of-care requirements into this bill. I think that's the point that I really want to drive home today, Mr. Chair, that again we have an opportunity. This is an amendment that – well, for lack of better words coming to my mind at the moment, I mean, it's very, very crucial. It's very necessary. It puts in place safeguards for future situations so that they do not repeat themselves as in this case. I think, you know, especially when we look at the fact that duty of care already exists in other legislation, it is clearly defined. The definition that we've put forward is based on existing legislation.

We have an opportunity to improve this bill and, again, to send a message to families and those affected with developmental disabilities that the tragic case of Betty Anne Gagnon will not repeat itself in the future. I urge all members of this Assembly to strongly consider and support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Mr. Chair, I'd just point out that the purpose of the act that we're debating is to establish these engagement boards. The purpose of the particular clause that we're trying to amend right at the moment is to remove that role from the boards back to the government under the care of a director.

Now, insofar as restructuring those engagement boards, I'm pretty confident that – we've held consultations out there. We talked about it in every public meeting we had, as a matter of fact. The members opposite pointed out numerous times in the last few discussions that consultation is pretty well key. This amendment would have us modify the PDD act beyond the establishment of the councils. It actually modifies how the disability services system functions. While I don't for a second negate the intention here, I am really reluctant to agree or recommend to this House that we do that without having consulted on what the new act should look like. The members opposite will know because we talked pretty freely about what our intentions are: seamless, you know, birth-to-death delivery of services based on need rather than diagnosis, all of things that we talked about. Obviously, it requires a much more well-thought-out approach to renewing the act and other associated acts than by way of an amendment here in these short hours. For example, in this case the duty of care doesn't fall just to the director. What about the disability worker?

I think this is a much bigger issue, and the renewal of this act, which I don't for a second deny has to be done – I don't think this is the time or the place to do it. So I'm not in favour of this amendment, and I would recommend the same to the House, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others speaking to the amendment?

Ms. Notley: Well, I would just simply say that ultimately the duty of care, as with children, should rest with the director. The last thing that I would want to see is a fractured duty of care, split up between a nonprofit provider over here and a for-profit provider over there and a family member over there. Ultimately there needs to be one place with the duty of care. That is the critical part of this, Mr. Chair, because otherwise we end up with a situation where everybody is involved and no one is responsible. That points to an issue that the minister here is aware that I had with respect to his changes to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, that we were diluting the duty of care there.

In my view, there needs to ultimately be one place. There can be delegation, but that delegation needs to be done very clearly under the terms of statutory authority. You can't simply put the duty of care in a whole bunch of different people, particularly when you have as fractured a system as we currently have in place for the provision of care for adults with developmental disabilities in Alberta. That's why it's imposed on the director. That is very intentional and very thoughtful, and we think that's the way to go.

As for the issue of consultation, it's true, you know, that it's the kind of thing that could potentially benefit from consultation, but something that this government has often done and has often used in the past is: we can pass the act now, and we can consult before we proclaim it; we can consult on the regulations, and we can consult on the process of implementation. Indeed, there's a long list of acts that never were proclaimed because consultation ended up showing that that wasn't the way to go.

Now, I'm not suggesting that would be the case here because this is a very narrow thing. This was not the subject of the consultations over the summer because that was about a very different topic. People were very, very worried about the impending significant loss of funds for their loved ones, so they were not talking about this issue. That does not make this issue less important. I think that if you were to go into a room of people, whether they be members of the PDD community, service providers, self-advocates, families, or interested citizens, and run them through what happened with Betty Anne and say, "Did you know that we actually have no statutory regime for anyone being responsible ultimately for the well-being of Betty Anne or someone like her?" they would be shocked, and they would think it was a good idea to move forward on establishing such a provision.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll speak briefly on this recommended amendment. Having heard the discussions back and forth, I guess it's very clear to me that this duty of care – and one could also call it, I suppose, a responsibility to report, followed by action – is very clearly stated in terms of children and child abuse issues. There's no question, whether this has been explicitly raised as a feature of this act or in any other context of consultation with people who are vulnerable, that there is no one who would not accept this as a standard and important and vital part of any bill that purports to provide service, care, and assistance to people with disabilities.

At the very least, whether or not it fits into section 8(5) in this bill or not, I think it prudent and very astute if this government were to at least adopt the statement that if the director receives information in any form on abuse or neglect, the director must investigate an act. It's that simple. Even a preamble or incorporating it into the early aspects of this bill would send a very strong message to the community that this government takes it seriously.

Again, it's a question of sincerity. It's a question of credibility. If this government wants to build credibility and a real connection, meaningful engagement with the very community that it says it wants to serve with this bill, this is an opportunity to simply at least put in a statement. The review of the act is going to be how long? One, two years or more? This is an opportunity, I think, to at least put in a statement, including that important reframing of family and community care, that this government takes it seriously, that it recognizes that there's an absence of this duty of care and requirement to report, and that by identifying it early, even if not fleshing it out, there is a clear communication that this is a responsibility that they take, that it's delegated, and that the government can be held accountable for it. The director can be held accountable for this. It sends a very strong message, I think, to this most vulnerable community, that has a difficult time being heard, a difficult time feeling seriously engaged and responded to. This would send a very good message, I think, that would add to the government's ability to engage and to work in a progressive way with this community with this new act.

That's all I need to say, Mr. Chair. I think this is something that could enhance the bill, could enhance credibility, could enhance the relationship with this very community and in a very simple statement recognize a gap in existing legislation.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A4.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're now back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment that I would like to table.

The Chair: Please circulate that and just pause for a brief moment.

This will be amendment A5, hon. members.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is an amendment that I kind of like to call the put-your-money-where-your-mouth-is amendment. As we went through the spring and we had a number of sessions that the hon. associate minister led around the province, one of the things that I heard him say on numerous occasions was how – and maybe this isn't the right word; I will be paraphrasing somewhat – offensive it was that the current legislation and the current act within the regulations defined intellectual capacity at a certain number, I believe at 70 IQ, and that therefore individuals who are tested as higher than 70 IQ did not qualify for supports under the PDD system.

He repeated this over and over at pretty much every meeting that we went to, which is why I found it rather strange, when this bill was tabled, that again here in the regulations under section 23 it suggests that the minister may make regulations “describing the limitations in intellectual capacity.” I'm really just, I guess, looking for clarification as to why the ministry feels like it is necessary to have the verbiage in the bill that suggests that they can still do that after months and months of listening to the minister decree their own legislation and the regulations' ability to define what the limitations in intellectual capacity can be.

This amendment simply takes out the option or the opportunity for the act to in regulation define intellectual capacity. With that, I'd be happy to hear the minister's response.

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. Mr. Chair, I think there's a rather simple explanation here. I don't think I ever said that we were going to remove the words “intellectual capacity.” What I said was that the IQ of 70 was an unfair barrier to service, and I would like to remove that although I also said that the first thing I've got to do is align the system so that services are allocated based on need. The member will know that we've done a lot of work in that regard.

I'm not prepared right now to say whether those words should appear in an act or not. The words "intellectual capacity" don't define the barrier; the number 70 does at the moment. I'm not prepared to because I haven't even talked to any medical experts on this. In effect, you're asking me to completely eliminate the definition of disabled from the act. I think my problem with the amendment and I think my explanation of the question he asked is that I haven't done any consulting on renewing the act, and the purpose of the legislation before us here is to establish engagement councils, not to renew the PDD act. I am not prepared to do that. I haven't consulted anybody, medical experts or families or caregivers or anybody else, and I think this is absolutely the wrong time to start talking about redoing the act, changing definitions. I just cannot proceed without having done those consultations.

I stand by what I said this spring, and I will move in that direction, absolutely, but it's got to be done in a reasoned and thoughtful manner, backed up by consultations and budgets, I might add. This is not the time to renew that act.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Sure. Perhaps you can help me understand, Minister, how removing that changes the definition of someone living with a disability. All that this would revise regulation sub (a) to say is that the minister may make regulations "describing adaptive skills for the purposes of the definition of developmental disability." You're still able to define what you believe to be or what is medically defined as adaptive skills for developmental disability. It just removes, I guess, my interpretation of the language of putting an actual number on what intellectual capacity is. I guess this may be a situation where we agree to disagree, but it seems a little odd that this would be something that you would be opposed to at this point.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I would give to the member again the same explanation as I gave before. This bill has essentially the purpose of disestablishing PDD boards and CFSA boards and bringing the service operation directly into government but continuing to do that on a regional basis and then creating a community governance model. We have not proposed in this bill to make any substantive changes to the PDD act.

When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, for example, says, "Yes, you're deleting the role of the minister," the act very clearly defines the role of the minister and the role of the board. It needs to be because when you have a board governance model and you've given the board certain authorities, you have to then indicate what authorities the board has and what authorities the minister has. When you don't have a board, all of those authorities are the authorities of the minister, so you don't need that definition. That's not a substantive amendment to the act. That's the disentanglement of the board governance model, and that's precisely what this does.

The regulation piece that's there, section 15, which is repealing section 23 and replacing it, essentially is a rewrite of the regulations, again, to take out all of the board governance pieces to it but not change anything substantive in the rest.

I think the associate minister has explained quite clearly that there are lots of things that we would like to do relative to the understanding of need and how you serve need and how you define that need. One of those things is the IQ requirement of 70, which the associate minister has spoken of a lot. Now, there are many other pieces of intellectual capacity, but that's not the point. The point is that we have not proposed to or purported to do any substantive amendments to the PDD act.

The sole purpose of this act is the disentanglement, the disestablishment of the PDD boards. What we're doing in this act is rewriting those portions of the act which are needed to take out the board governance model and institute the operational model in government and then set up the regional councils. We are not making any substantive amendments to the PDD act, with the one exception that I mentioned, and that is a tweak to the appeal process to make it fairer and more aligned with the existing appeal process in the CFSA area by allowing for administrative appeal and mediation and arbitration processes and those things, which are enhancements, I would admit, to the appeal process. But that's merely an alignment with what we have already.

I would ask members to honour the purpose of the act, which, again, is not an opening of the PDD act to deal with things which have not been discussed with the community, which have not been raised in terms of going out and saying: we're amending the PDD act. What we have discussed quite thoroughly is setting up regional engagement councils and disestablishing the CFSA and PDD boards as operating authorities. That's what this act purports to do, and that's what we should be focusing on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Just briefly, I mean, I really need to engage in this point because this is becoming a common refrain. I have to say that I simply disagree with the minister in terms of how he is characterizing this. The fact of the matter is that the PDD boards were the primary purveyor of services to people with developmental disabilities in the province. In the course of eliminating those boards, the government has redefined and/or failed to define its role in the absence of these PDD boards. It's not simply: we've removed the boards, and everything else is the same.

The fact of the matter is that what it could have said before was, "The boards will do this, and everything the boards don't do is the government's responsibility," but it didn't. Before it said, "The government shall do A, B, C, D, E," and now it no longer says anything about what the government shall do. So that is substantive, and it is substantive in the absence of all those things that the government no longer is compelling itself to do like ensure access to programs, provide funding and resources, co-ordinate services, all those things. There was a positive obligation before; there is not anymore.

To suggest, "Oh, that's simply coincidental to the elimination of the PDD boards" is not accurate from a legal standpoint, and I believe the minister knows that. There is a difference in terms of how the legislation is written now, and the minister knows that. It is substantive, and it does go beyond simply the creation of their little public relations councils. So we have a right to raise amendments that speak to the work that the government needs to do and did do through the PDD boards. To suggest that that's not appropriate in this setting is in itself not appropriate.

In speaking to this particular amendment, I will say that I think there are a number of different ways to define and measure intellectual capacity, so I'm not necessarily in support of this amendment. I understand that the purpose of the amendment is to challenge the government and the minister on his apparent conflicting statements over the spring and summer around eliminating the IQ cut-off on one hand and theoretically expanding access on the other while actually reducing services to that smaller group that are actually currently covered as a result of the smaller configuration of people who are eligible using the IQ definition.

We all agree that the IQ definition is not helpful. It wasn't helpful when the government lowered the IQ rate two or three years ago, thereby restricting the number of people who were eligible for PDD services. That was unwise. Using IQ as a means of excluding people from eligibility for PDD services is unwise because there are a number of people out there with IQs above 70 who are in desperate need of PDD services because they don't otherwise have the intellectual capacity and/or the adaptive skills to function without support. So addressing that issue is a good, important issue.

Yet I think, really, where the member is going is: as much as the minister kept saying that, he was saying that at the same time he was purporting to take $45 million out of the system, when anyone who knows anything about the system knows that to fix that problem, what needs to happen is that there needs to be more resources put into the system, not fewer. There was that contradiction that those of us who were following the issue for several months observed month after month after month, and it created a great deal of frustration and inconsistency on the part of what we were hearing from the government. I think, really, in many ways that's what this member is going after with this motion, and I certainly respect the sentiment in that regard.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to perhaps conclude my points on this, I think that what we're witnessing tonight is that there is a clear need to open up that PDD act. You know, considering the fact that the government is transitioning the whole way in which services are being delivered, the fact that a minister has probably been more engaged right now at this point in time in Alberta than we've seen in quite some time, specific to the PDD community, I think the time is now.

I would just challenge the Human Services minister and the associate minister for persons with developmental disabilities to consider opening that act at their earliest possible convenience. The consultations must be clearly under way and a certain understanding that the minister must have of the shortcomings of the system, areas that need to be changed. We've identified at least a couple of amendments right now that would strengthen this system, and I just believe that it should be incumbent upon this government to at the earliest possible opportunity open that act back up. Let's take a good look at it.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this amendment, and I won't be repetitive. You've heard all the arguments. It is something that I would hope that the minister would take into consideration and act upon. I think it's reasonable to presume that everyone in this House wants to do what's best for these Albertans that are special needs and need our attention and assistance for a better quality of life. I think with that intention and much of what's been said, particularly if this government is willing to act upon that, we can improve upon what we have already today.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and refer an amendment to Bill 30, Building Families and Communities Act.

The Chair: If you'd have that distributed, send the original to the table, please. Hon. member, this will be amendment A6.

Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This amendment to the Building Families and Communities Act would amend section 6 by adding the following after subsection (3):

- (4) The Minister shall receive all reports, advice and information from a Council in good faith and act on any recommendations as soon as practicable.
- (5) If, after receiving a report, advice or information from a Council where a recommendation is made or implied, and more than one year elapses without the Minister acting on that recommendation, the Minister must provide an explanation to the Council in writing.
- (6) A copy of any written explanation made pursuant to subsection (5) must be laid before the Legislative Assembly by the Minister if it is then sitting, or if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

The purpose of this, clearly, Mr. Chair, is simply to provide extra assurance, encouragement, and accountability for the efforts of these councils, that they not only be heard and seen but that they be seen to be heard and seen, that there is a response, that there is a requirement to respond both back to the council and, in the case of subsection (6), to the Legislature. It's, again, a measure of accountability. It's a measure of assurance to the community, a community that lacks a voice, that lacks a sense that they are influencing this government, an assurance that there will be results from the efforts they make to communicate to this government. I think they're pretty self-evident. They're not onerous. They're simply what one would expect from a respectful relationship between government and a service provider and individuals who are vulnerable and needing to know very clearly that they are heard and respected and responded to.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, speaking to amendment A6.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. Again, I think, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has stated, that the purpose of this is really to ensure that there is a correspondence, that there is a response from the minister. This provides a voice for the council, that there is an ongoing dialogue that the minister will – and I think it's important to note in this amendment that the minister will respond “in good faith and act on any recommendations as soon as practicable,” giving the minister that leeway, not restricting him to action within a certain time frame per se but making sure that any advice or information or reports that are made from a council do get a response and get an explanation in writing so there is a record there. I mean, for the most part I think that this amendment just ensures communication on both sides and that the work the board is doing does not go unrecognized or does not fall by the wayside but that there is a process for them to hear a response back from the minister.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise also in support of this amendment. It's consistent with the reports and advice under section 6, and what it purports to do is to give some sort of direction or finality to what's going to happen when a report is actually delivered. "On a date . . . set by the Minister, the co-chairs of each Council shall submit to the Minister an annual report." The minister has control over that. "The Minister may, at any time, request from any Council a report or [any] information", which is a good thing, so there's some continuity. What this does here is then provide direction on what happens to those reports once they are filed. Basically, the minister shall receive the reports "in good faith and act on any recommendations as soon as practicable." That only makes sense. That's logical.

So that gives direction, and then in section (5) it talks about where the recommendations made are implied and more than one year elapses without the minister acting because this is important. You have a recommendation, and if there is no action taken on the recommendation within a year, somebody needs an explanation why. Was it a bad recommendation? Did circumstances change? It gives consistency so the minister now must return information back with an explanation to the council in writing, explaining why there was no action taken on a report.

There may be legitimate reasons, or there may have been an error that needs to be corrected, so there's some sort of continuity here to make sure that the action is a two-way street. Then, of course, the Legislature has the ability to get involved with the copy of any written explanation pursuant to subsection (5).

I don't want to belabour this point of the prescriptive versus permissive, but I don't see where this is too prescriptive on the minister or the minister's office. If it is, I would like an explanation why because what it does is just say that the minister is going to be able to do these things with the council to get information, and what this does is follow through and say: okay; once the information is received, this is how it should be handled. It provides some clarity on what the process will be. In a way it's an agreement between the council and the ministry, very much so.

These volunteers, who are going to be putting in the effort, will see some sort of closure or some sort of action taken as a result of their recommendations that they made. There's no guarantee that their recommendations are going to be put into force, but at least you'll have an explanation why. They'll know that the work that they put in was validated in one form or another.

That's not to say that the minister doesn't intend to do that. This just puts it into the legislation. I'm anxious to hear how the minister feels about this and what their objections would be to adding this into this section.

With that, thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Simply put, in discussions with my critics in earlier stages before the bill was brought to the House, there was actually a very good suggestion made by the hon. member who brought forward this amendment, and that suggestion was that the report should be publicly laid before the Legislature.

I think you can see in 6(3) that I adopted his suggestion and put it into the bill. It hadn't been contemplated to put that in specifically because we don't intend to be that prescriptive relative to these things, but the idea was to have an open place where people could actually see the work of those committees. So I thought that was a very good suggestion, and I put it in the bill.

Obviously, as a matter of practice when a report comes, there's a response to report. If the Child and Youth Advocate files a report – and I now have a couple of them – I have to deal with the recommendations that are made there. I have to respond to those recommendations, and we do that. But we don't do that because there's a requirement to file in House. There's no legislative need to do that. There's just a sort of moral obligation to do that. If we don't do that, the House will hold us accountable for it. I've had on occasion in the past people say: what's happened to those recommendations? So this amendment takes it a step too far in terms of the prescriptive nature of it.

The reality is that the bill requires those reports to be placed before the House, and they will be, but there's no need to put into the record of the House every step of what happens on those things. That's not something that we need to clutter the Legislature Library with. That's something which, once the report is tabled, members of the opposition can raise questions on if they feel like they haven't been raised. They can hold us to account in the House on it. That's what the House does, hold the government to account for its actions. But we don't need to be prescriptive about it. We don't need to legislate what the minister should do on any given day about every given thing. That would require volumes of legislation, and Albertans, quite frankly, don't want to read that much legislation.

Ms Notley: Well, I would suggest that it's really that this government doesn't want to be accountable for that much legislation. I think Albertans are perfectly happy with legislated standards to which their elected officials could be held. I think we're just going to have to agree to disagree on what it is that Albertans want. I think we all know these guys want the one, the omnibus bill – thou shalt make legislation – and that would be it. I'm pretty sure that that's where they're going.

But I support this amendment, and I rise to support this amendment. I think it's a thoughtful amendment. It's interesting that the minister talked about the children's advocate report because as one who's been the critic of that area since I was elected in 2008, I really have been interested to note the frequency with which the children's advocate repeats recommendations over and over. There really isn't a clear response from the government about what they're doing with respect to those particular recommendations. You often do see those recommendations over and over and over again.

An Hon. Member: Like the Auditor.

Ms Notley: Well, I leave it to the Auditor General because at least with the Auditor General there is a more formalized process for establishing whether progress has been made or not made or that kind of thing. I find that helpful, and I think most Albertans find that kind of information helpful.

I want to go back to what it is that these committees are theoretically achieving apart from, you know, ending poverty as we know it and eliminating world hunger. They are going off into the communities to do all of this engagement and to get everyone engaged in discussions about social policy, and they're going off to do that with, as I've said before, no resources and no authority. So there's going to be some question as to the degree to which they're going to really be able to get the meaningful players in the community out to something. I actually think that if those councils were able to say to folks in the community, "Listen; let's talk, and the things that we talk about that there's an adequate consensus around will make their way into our report, and it will compel the government to give us some response, for us to know that they've turned their mind to it and they've heard what you've said," that would be a tool for these engagement councils to get people to show up to their meetings and to engage because they would know that there was a direct line of accountability.

The minister refers to: oh, well, we don't need another, you know, report collecting dust in the Legislature Library. Well, I'm afraid that the annual report that is currently constructed will do just that. It will collect dust. It will say that we met with these people; we met with those people. Here are some glossy pictures. We're building Alberta. I'm sure that somewhere building Alberta will find its way into that report. Call me crazy. Yet that's all there will be in it whereas if there was a legislated requirement for the minister to make a formal response, you might actually find people thinking: hey, this might actually be a bit of a tool that we can use in our advocacy efforts, and maybe it is worth while engaging.

I actually think that it would support the work that the minister suggests that these councils are supposed to be doing and it would support the work that the minister suggests is the primary purpose of this bill but that by steadfastly refusing to commit to responding to the recommendations that come from these councils, I think that he, unfortunately, ends up putting a highlighter over the very concerns that we've raised about the likely effectiveness of these councils and the likely role of these councils and the likely outcomes of the work that they engage in because, really – really – if there's no connection back to the people who have the resources and the people who make the decisions, people are going to disengage from the engagement process really superquickly.

As the minister himself has pointed out, we're all busy people, and activists know that when they're trying to do something as important as fight poverty, they've got to use their resources wisely. Sitting around rooms getting their pictures taken for fluffy reports that nobody responds to is not a wise use of their time. I think that the motion put forward by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View would bring about a substantial improvement in the efficacy and salience of these councils and that in the absence of that so, too, is their efficacy and their salience.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I agree with the minister. We don't want to be so prescriptive that we want to detail every step of the way what the minister should be doing, and I don't read that into this amendment. What I read into this amendment is that it details what should happen with the report. It tracks the report that is filed, that the minister himself gets to ask for any other time according to this section 6. So I view this and the interpretation of this amendment as not so much directing the actions of the minister but directing the steps of what happens to the report.

I'm trying to look at this from the view of somebody who has volunteered, put in a lot of effort, and there's no reason to not presume that this minister is going to do exactly as he says he would do. But as we all know, ministers change, governments change. Well, we want government to change in another two years, but the fact is the individual itself. So it gives direction to the office. It gives direction to the office, whoever is in the chair. What the amendment does is give the consistency to the reports from beginning to end, how the reports are required or asked for and what is done with the reports.

That's how I look at this. I don't look at this as detailing the very actions of the ministers themselves or everything a minister should be doing, but it does connect the dots of how you track a report and what actions are taken on the report. It's not really that prescriptive. I mean, it gives an entire year to act on a report. It gives a tremendous amount of flexibility. What it asks for is that if there is no action on a report, there be some sort of closure for the volunteers or the issue itself, why the report was not acted upon. That's how I would view it. I wouldn't view it as prescriptive as, say, the minister would. I would ask the hon. member to maybe take another look at this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others speaking to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've lost my notes. Okay. Just a second. On this bill I do have another proposed amendment, which I will take the opportunity to distribute while at the same time looking for the notes that I have on it.

The Chair: We can have those distributed, please. That will be A7, hon. member. If you'd just pause for a brief moment.

Is the amendment on its way, hon. member?

Ms Notley: It is. I apologize.

The Chair: Please proceed, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This motion is to amend Bill 30 in section 8 by striking out subsection (7) and substituting the following:

(7) Section 9(1) is amended by repealing clauses (g), (h), (j) and (k).

(7.1) Section 9(2) is amended by striking out "a Community Board" and substituting "any other organization".

(7.2) Sections 9.1, 11, 13 and 14 are repealed.

As currently written, the bill repeals sections 9, 9.1, 11, 13, and 14 of the act. What we're proposing to do here, as we've already kind of touched on in previous discussions this evening, of course, is to facilitate the elimination of the PDD boards, which we all talked about earlier as being something that we agree with, but to not do the additional things that this legislation is doing, which is to stop talking about the positive obligations which exist for the minister. As things stand right now, section 9 states that the role of the minister is to provide strategic direction, set standards for service, work to co-ordinate provision of services, ensure reasonable access, promote the inclusion of adults with developmental disabilities in community life, establish policies, ensure consistency of services, and allocate funding and resources.

It also eliminates section 9(2), which states that the minister may provide or arrange for the provision of services in any region. So those are the things that are being eliminated.

Now, the minister has already stated that, oh, well, this is being eliminated because the reason those obligations were laid out was to distinguish the role of a minister from the role of the PDD boards. The problem, in my reading anyway, is that the way the act is now constructed, we just go silent on everything. I know that's what the minister likes. I know that what this government likes is that they just want to have everything enabling. It's like the minister shall do whatever occurs to him to be a good thing when he wakes up in the morning. But the rest of Albertans want to know that there is a positive obligation there, particularly given the debacle that we observed this spring and over the summer with respect to the government venturing into some major changes in the provision of PDD services. We need to know that there is clarity. This comes down to – you're quite right, and the minister is quite right – in large part a discussion about the value of enabling legislation versus prescriptive legislation.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chair, that the opposition and, frankly, the people of the province are going to continue to lobby for greater and greater prescriptiveness in the legislation as the level of trust between this government and the citizens of this province decreases. We know that the level of trust between this government and the citizens of this province is on the decrease. You need only look at the latest public domain poll to know that that is the case. We also know that in this particular sector that level of trust has been seriously, seriously compromised, notwithstanding the subsequent efforts of the ministers to re-establish that.

As I said before, I think this is part and parcel of sort of the larger objective that the minister has laid out in some of his, you know, first drafts of the social policy framework and, in particular, that piece which I mentioned before and will mention again and again because it sends off so many incredible warning lights for me and others who have worked as advocates in this sector in the past: this notion that the government believes that the government's role as a funder and a regulator should decrease and that we should see more work of the government as a partner and a convener. Again, that is the kind of stuff that creates the patchwork systems that ensure duplication of services in some cases and an absence of service in others and a profound lack of co-ordination in most cases. That's the kind of thing that Albertans don't want to see.

Our attempt, then, is to continue the object of the act around eliminating the boards – absolutely still there with you, completely onside – but at the same time maintain some definition and some description around what the minister does.

As I mentioned before, back a long time ago when I did do a little bit of administrative law, there would often be people that would come to us and would say: "The government is not doing this. How can we make them do this?" There was this principle that, you know, if there's a piece of legislation that says that the government should do something, it's actually possible for the citizens of a province, if they can afford the incredibly expensive lawyers, to go into the courts within a year or two of making the application to ask the government to actually do what its legislation says that it should do or says that it will do. One of the ways the government avoids those situations, apart from, of course, allowing lawyers to become prohibitively expensive so that the average person can't actually access our courts anymore or allowing our courts to become so bogged down that they have to wait for years and years to get in there – but another thing the government can do to stop these kinds of applications, of course, is to write legislation that says that the government shall do whatever it thinks is best in their discretion at any given time, depending on the seasons, the phases of the moon, or that kind of stuff. So we're trying to avoid that.

It's not just an old complaint; it's actually what I would suggest is good governance, is a feature of a strong sense of accountability. Ultimately, as much as the government likes to think, Mr.

Chair, that it is accountable through the consultation things that they set up and through their public relations campaigns and their press conferences with strategically selected participants, as much as they like to think that's what accountability is, the fact of the matter is that we have this thing in Alberta, this parliamentary system that's as old as the province and, in fact, several hundred years older than that, and it's here because over many years – I'm going back to the associate minister's concern about our lack of experience – generally speaking, everyone has concluded in this jurisdiction that this is the absolute best means of ensuring accountability. So why it is that the government wants to delink its accountability measures from probably the most effective institution in our nation for ensuring accountability – I don't know – unless it's the fear of same?

I would suggest that good legislators and those who are interested in promoting good public policy, who are interested in restoring, if possible, the trust between them and the citizens of the province and, also, actually moving forward on previously made promises around transparency and accountability would embrace the opportunity to establish strong linkages between their legislation and their proposed actions in a way that can give Albertans a strong sense of confidence that their government really is accountable and that there really are measures in place to keep them that way.

That is why we are making this amendment, supporting the elimination of the boards but wanting to maintain and retain some fairly general principles with respect to the work that the minister ought to engage in and be willing to hold himself accountable for.

Thank you.

The Chair: Speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief. I think the intent here is clear. We want to enhance the credibility of this bill among the people who are most deeply affected. We want to see a clear statement of deliverables, accountability. One could say that that's too prescriptive, but without some clarity around the role of the minister, the councils, and those involved in the decision-making as well as providing advice, there needs to be substantive, clear deliverables and accountabilities. That's in the government's best interest to build any sense of confidence with the stakeholders, and it's clearly to the benefit of those most vulnerable, who are supposed to benefit from this, that they be clear about what they can expect and who they can hold accountable and in what timeline they should be able to require this government to provide that information or that change or the existing service that's supposed to be there.

So I think it would behoove the government to look at this seriously and incorporate a means of providing greater clarity around the roles and responsibilities of deliverables, and I hope all in the Legislature will examine this and see it for the enhancement that it will provide to the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief with my comments here. Again, I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's important, especially when we're talking about responsibilities and powers that the minister has and, in this case, the role of the minister within this act, that it is spelled out. I think that, unfortunately, with the bill as it's currently written, repealing several sections of the act is really throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

You know, section 9 I think is very important in defining the role of the minister. We're talking about setting standards for services, providing strategic direction, working to co-ordinate the provision of services, ensuring that there is reasonable access. Again, you know, to hammer on a point that we raised earlier this evening, to promote the inclusion of adults with developmental disabilities in community life I think is important in addition to a consistency of services and allocating funding and resources.

I think it's a little far reaching that the bill as it's currently written has removed reference to the role of the minister in this act. I mean, that's something that is causing more and more alarm, I think, at least within the Alberta NDP but, I would also argue, also with the other opposition parties, the mandate and the powers that the ministers are ascribing themselves through bills. We see this as a recurring theme, where instead of limiting their powers and responsibilities, in fact, they're getting more and more broad, and all we're given is the assurances that: well, regulation will hammer out the details.

Again, the concern which I've raised on numerous occasions in this House, Mr. Chair, is that there may be a minister that's currently holding that position who doesn't abuse their powers or their role and responsibility as minister, but as soon as legislation comes to pass where they're given either broad, sweeping powers or there aren't checks and balances on the minister and their decisions, then the challenge or the concern is that future members who occupy that chair may not be either as levelled or controlled in their decision-making and may abuse their position.

You know, I think the unfortunate part in removing these sections is that it did explicitly lay out some of the roles of the minister, which makes it clear not only for legislators here in the House but, you know, for folks who are going to be affected and who are affected by this piece of legislation to know exactly the role of the minister is. Whether we're talking about supports, access, standards, that is now questionable as far as whose role it is. Again, where does the accountability lie?

In closing, Mr. Chair, I think this amendment clearly defines what the minister is and isn't doing, and I think it's quite important not only for this bill but for much legislation that we've seen and that I suspect we'll continue to see come through the House.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

11:30

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

I'll call the question on amendment A7.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will table another amendment, please.

The Chair: We will refer to this one as amendment A8, hon. member.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. The intent of this amendment is to prevent what I would like to call the AHS effect, where we have a ballooning bureaucracy that started out with some well-intentioned ideas. This amendment is very straightforward.

Currently in the bill it suggests that "the Minister may designate one or more employees involved in the delivery of social-based programs and services under the administration of the Minister to liaise with the Councils." The phrase that worries me a little bit in here is "one or more employees." So the intent of this amendment is to simply limit the number of employees that the ministry can hire in order to liaise to not more than the actual number of councils that are developed. I can't imagine why a single, full-time employee couldn't handle one liaising with a council.

That basically sums up the intent of the amendment, and I'd be happy to hear the minister's thoughts on that.

Mr. Hancock: Once again, Mr. Chair, the perils of trying to accommodate advice from opposition critics. This, again, is an amendment that was made in the drafting of the bill after I consulted with the opposition. I think this one was actually that member's contribution – but it might have been Calgary-Mountain View's contribution – saying that, you know: "Are these boards going to have any direct relationship to the operations in their region, to have feedback? If they're going to play an assurance role, will there be direct liaison?" I went and took that and said: "That was a very good piece of advice. Yes, we contemplated they would. We'll build that into the act." So we built it into the act, and now he's coming back and saying: but not too many.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think, again, this is getting really overly prescriptive. You know, if you do that, then you have to start going through silly interpretations that we sometimes get, like: what if the liaison goes on holidays and there's a replacement liaison; does that breach the act? I mean, is the work such that you maybe need to have two people from time to time?

The concept here in the act is a clear one, and it came as a suggestion from – I don't remember which of my critics made it when we were briefing on the bill.

Mr. Horner: You have many.

Mr. Hancock: Yeah. One of my many critics.

The suggestion, you know, was one that we fully intended, that these community engagement councils will operate within their regions. But in order to do their assurance role, they do have to be able to liaise to understand exactly what's going on. That's a communication role. The amendment to limit it actually could be an inhibiting amendment. I understand the individual's purpose. We all want to be fiscally prudent, and I can assure the hon. member that I do not have a surplusage of resources in the department to overstaff unnecessary spots.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of my colleague on this bill, to help the minister conserve his resources so that he would not have to assign any more than one person. It's not an overwhelming restrictive prohibition or prescriptive statement. What it's designed to do, just exactly as the hon. member has said, is to sort of limit, as one might say, the influence.

You know, the thing is that the word "liaise" is an interesting word in itself because it doesn't prevent anyone else from making contact, but the actual definition of being the liaison or to liaise with the council is – when you look at it on a purely pragmatic basis, it should never really take more than one anyways or at any one time. It's interesting because it doesn't make an assignment that it has to be one designated person, who is identified. It's just no more than one at any given time. The designation can change from employee to employee.

So I don't see the overprescriptiveness, but I do see the intent of keeping the bureaucracy down. I understand where that comes from.

With that, I support my colleague's amendment, and I would hope that the minister would reconsider. Thanks.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, being a big government kind of person, I actually have to speak against this amendment. I think governments can be good. I know it's hard to imagine because I'm faced with one that I don't really think is, but the fact of the matter is that in principle government can be very good.

In fact, you know, if these councils were really to achieve the objects that the minister purports that they will be able to achieve, to consult with all these organizations, which have a lot of work to do and a lot of opinions to offer and a broad, broad range of issues to address, and then actually compile them in a way to get the attention of the minister so that there was any sort of meaningful feedback into the decision-making process – and all these folks are volunteers – I've got to think that they're going to need a bit of staff support to do their jobs even somewhat well.

In some regions – let's face it – the regions are huge, and the people that they would be consulting with are huge. To analyze and render useful a lot of the advice they receive would be a huge job, not to mention sort of just giving them advice on what the current status of things is so that they don't recommend reinventing the wheel every year because nobody told them that that particular wheel had been invented nine or 10 times before and was, you know, currently living in the Legislature Library on a dusty shelf. I mean, who knows exactly? You know these are the kinds of things that the staff working with these folks would do. So if we're going to assume that there's going to be any kind of feedback, you have to give them the benefit of the doubt.

Now, if those staff end up being communications folks from the Public Affairs Bureau who end every sentence with "and that's why we're building Alberta," then I absolutely agree that there will be too many staff there, but I have no doubt that if that ends up being the situation, we will find plenty of opportunities to limit that particular role.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A8.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the main bill. Question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

11:40

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 30.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 30. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 37 Statutes Repeal Act

[Debate adjourned November 18]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The only thing that I wanted to add to this particular bill that I didn't mention the other day is that several years ago the Member for Calgary-Klein and the Minister of Municipal Affairs – we had talked about some of the things we wanted to achieve in the government in the time we were here. One of the things we had talked about was a reduction in general red tape for individuals and for people who do business here, and this bill is certainly a step forward in the fact that it creates a mechanism to reduce red tape. It also removes many different pieces of legislation. The exact number does evade me at this late hour, but in particular I know that we're removing the Masters and Servants Act. I'm not sure how the Member for Calgary-Shaw feels about that.

With that, I will take my seat.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a second time]

Bill 38 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2

[Adjourned debate November 18: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I don't have any further comments on this particular bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General has moved – are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. My apologies, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Who would have thought that I might have wanted to speak to what is effectively an omnibus bill amending 13 acts at, oh, a quarter to midnight on Tuesday? Strange, strange decision on my part.

Okay. The Attorney General is proposing Bill 38, which amends 13 acts across a wide variety of topic areas. Most of them are fairly simple changes. You know, in the past we had sort of a practice for miscellaneous statutes amendment and things like that where there would be negotiation with members of the Assembly or the House leaders in order to move that act quickly through the process so we didn't have to spend a lot of time debating it, but the government didn't get consent for this as was typically the history. They just decided to cobble together changes to 13 acts and introduce them all together without getting our consent. Of course, as a responsible legislator I need to weigh in on the many changes that the Attorney General is attempting to make this evening.

Here's what I believe is the case, because it's not exactly a skinny act. They want to increase the number of judges at the Court of Appeal and Queen's Bench. That, of course, is a good thing, I believe, based on the comments I made previously about how long it takes to get into court in certain cases.

They're looking to provide more protection for spouses under the Dower Act and to provide protection for children's RSPs in the Civil Enforcement Act.

They want to bring some interest rate adjustment to grief damages awards in fatal accidents into legislation from regulation, which is an interesting one. It's rare that we see this government try to move something from regulation into legislation, so I'd certainly be interested in what generated that particular move.

They want to exempt aircraft, rail, and space equipment from the Alberta Personal Property Bill of Rights to align with the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act. Creditors can now go after these products, so it makes it easier for them to lend to investors like Air Canada for the purchase of aircraft. Yeah, I'm not quite sure what the object there is.

They want to ensure that making a finding that someone is not a parent does not impact rights or property already divided unless the court orders otherwise. I imagine there would be cases where you would have subsequent tests done where parenthood might be at issue. I'd be very interested to hear what kinds of consultations went into that particular change because I imagine it's not without its own contentious elements.

It allows parties in a vexatious litigant case the right of appeal. Again, I need a bit more information about what that is attempting to achieve.

It allows administrators to enter into a settlement agreement for hit-and-run injury claims where damages are less than $25,000 and they are to be paid out of the general revenue fund.

Here's one that I am somewhat concerned about, shifting language from "court reporter" to "transcriber" under the Recording of Evidence Act. It includes a transitional provision to current court reporters. I am somewhat concerned about that and what impact that has on the role of court reporters and how that work is being done in our courts and how the quality of the work that those people are doing is being maintained and protected in the best interests of our justice system. It does seem that we have been reducing our reliance on court reporters over a period of time. Again, this would require the Minister of Justice to give us a rationale for this change and what it is that's being achieved through this transition.

The other thing that is somewhat worrisome for us is a change in the shift towards using more electronic documents in the courts. While that sort of sounds great for purposes of modernization, it does leave open all the questions and the answers in terms of detail around the security and the integrity and the chain of custody and all those kinds of information about the document. So we would need the minister to provide us with a bit more information about how he anticipates that particular authority unfolding.

The amendment to the Police Act is an attempt to allow the minister to appoint commissioned officers. It may conflict with an existing definition of commission in the act. Commission under the act refers to a police commission, but the inserted section uses commission in reference to the title given to an officer under the section. We're not quite sure how that is supposed to work.

We generally support these issues, but we need some reassurances around the security and the integrity of electronic document use within the courts. It seems like we've got a lot of stuff going into an omnibus amendment bill.

I need to know more information about what the transition from court reporter to transcriber will mean for people currently employed in the judicial system doing that work.

Going into the issue of electronic documentation can be a problem because it engages the privacy of very personal data and the reliability of things we use to convict people or find people at fault, so we need to be sure that the rules around that are appropriate. We need to be clear that we have prohibitions and protections in place to ensure that electronic documents are not tampered with in some way, allowing those false documents to wrongly convict somebody. We need to know what protections are in place there.

We also need to know about private details around sexual assaults, for instance, and whether those can be protected. We seem to see nothing but breaches of electronic document security these days. With our paper documents we've had decades or more to build up policy on security protocols and to develop well-trained staff, and this bill doesn't guarantee that those same protections that we've come to expect with physical documents will be extended to the use of electronic documents in the court system.

The e-file page for the Alberta Provincial Court Charter challenge states in bright red on the actual website, "As with all technology, this system may occasionally falter." We need to see a more open process in that regard rather than leaving things solely up to the regulations that will determine the answer in the future.

I do want to say again that we need to have strong efforts made to reduce the load on our courts, and this may assist in that, but we just need to know that there is a measured and well-researched implementation plan in place because we don't quite have that yet.

Anyway, those are my preliminary observations about this bill. Again, I remain quite concerned about the number of pieces of legislation that are being amended through this. We've got, as I say, the Alberta Personal Property Bill of Rights, the Civil Enforcement Act, the Court of Appeal Act, the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Dower Act, the Family Law Act, the Fatal Accidents Act, the Judicature Act, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, the Police Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Recording of Evidence Act, and the Special Areas Act. That is a great deal of legislation that's being changed in one fell swoop, and I would suggest that it needn't have come to us in this format.

Mr. Speaker, that and the electronic records and the court reporters are my three primary concerns going forward with this piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate?

Mr. Denis: I would move second reading of Bill 38.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have done a very good amount of work on some very good bills, and I would, then, move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow so we can come back and do some more.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:55 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 20, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Holy Creator, please look upon us as servants who are doing their best to advance issues that we know are important to Albertans and to others. Help us and guide us to arrive at conclusions that benefit all whom we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us proceed with the introduction of school groups first today if we might, beginning with Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Neerlandia public Christian school. They are really looking forward to the new school that will be built in their community as part of our building Alberta plan. We have joining them their teacher Mr. Jim Bosma. We have parents Geraldine Wierenga, Doreen Klumph, Mistie Renfert, Anna Fehr, and Heidi Wegner. Would you please rise, and my colleagues will give you the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my great pleasure to rise and introduce not just one but three classes of grade 6 students, that are among not just the best but are the best in all of Alberta, from the River Valley School in Sundre. Accompanying these students – there's a real specialty here – I have three teachers: Mrs. Walker, Ms. Tarnoczi, and Ms. Cheung. Michele Langmead is a parent, and the rest of the parents are Lisa Heath, Don Johnson, Brandy Robertson, Erynn Drake, Vicki Menzies, Carmen Newsham, Lesa Koop, Ken Burrell, Tracy Duff, and Aaron Main. The last parent, who was here 60 years ago as a sixth grade student, is Dennis Leask. I'd ask them all to rise today and enjoy the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us proceed with other guests, beginning with the Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly an outstanding individual who embodies the spirit of building community and volunteerism, Ms. Jann Beeston, who is the executive director of Volunteer Alberta. Jann's passion is nonprofit and volunteer sector development. She brings to her role at Volunteer Alberta 25 years of experience from Campus Alberta. Her knowledge in innovative program development, technology-enhanced program delivery combined with her leadership at both the board governance and operational levels are what makes her ideal to build capacity in our communities. I want to thank you for joining us today, Jann, and for all the excellent work you do to help us build Alberta each and every day. I'd ask that my colleagues show Jann the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have some special visitors who are in the gallery, and I was asked to wait so that they could be introduced by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations; however, he is tied up in traffic and will not be here right now. So I'm going to afford that belated honour to the hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, with apologies to our guests and visitors for not being able to do it a little bit earlier.

The hon. minister.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms. Liu Yongfeng, consul general of the People's Republic of China in Calgary. Also with her today is Mr. Wang Xuhong, consul, and Mr. Deng Xuguang, vice-consul, both of the People's Republic of China in Calgary. Consul General Lui Yongfeng has worked tirelessly to advance Alberta's strong relationship with China. Since her arrival in Alberta three years ago, Chinese investments have grown from $100 million to $40 billion. This is due to the positive relationship between the Alberta government and the Chinese consulate in Calgary. As our government focuses on building Alberta, we welcome investments that help to get our resources to market and build an even better quality of life for Albertans.

Our government looks forward to continuing our close relations with Ms. Liu Yongfeng's successor. I would also like to personally wish her well in her next endeavour. Our esteemed guests are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would now like to ask the consul general and her delegation to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms. Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Paul and Laurel Cashman, who are the parents of our current head page, Helen Cashman. Paul and Laurel are being introduced for the first time and are joining us here today in the Speaker's gallery to observe Helen in this, her fourth year as page in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Helen has held the position of page, Speaker's page, and now head page. I'm also happy to report that Laurel and Paul are constituents of mine in Edmonton-Strathcona. I'd like to personally take this opportunity to congratulate them on the tremendous success and contribution that their daughter Helen has enjoyed. I would ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and congratulations from members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my friend Miss Katie Penstone and her parents, Tim and Susan Penstone. Today they're here to talk with a number of members of the Assembly about an important issue, idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis. Katie, as she's affectionately called, is also a passionate volunteer in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. If I could please ask them to rise and ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On a related note, I have some more special guests to introduce, and it's indeed an honour to introduce them. They are a number of individuals from the Canadian Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation who are here in recognition of Alberta's first Idiopathic Pulmonary Fibrosis Awareness Day. I had the wonderful opportunity this morning to meet with a number of the foundation's representatives. I'm very pleased that they've taken the time to join us right here in the Legislature. The Canadian Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation is a not-for-profit charitable organization which aims to raise funds to finance research to better understand and treat and find a cure for pulmonary fibrosis, to raise public awareness about this fatal disease, and to offer support for those who are affected by pulmonary fibrosis. At this time I would ask the many guests we are enjoying the company of here today to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Canada's heroes. Seated in the gallery are members of the Jasper Place Legion and ladies auxiliary branch 255, located in Edmonton-Meadowlark, good, honest men and women who put themselves into harm's way without a second thought so that we may enjoy our freedoms today. They are Basil McKay, Ron Evans, Bill Cormier, Sharon Gullberg, Dennis Gullberg, Don Clark, Tom Houghton, Margaret Donlevy, Anne Dunseath, Marjorie Beach, Sheldon Monson, and Jim Magnan.

Mr. Speaker, no other job carries with it the real, daily risk of death or certain physical or emotional injury. On Remembrance Day we commemorate their fallen comrades and the sacrifices that they have made, but simply because Remembrance Day has passed does not change our obligation to them. For the men and women of our armed forces we have a duty to support them, equip them when we send them to fight on our behalf. When they return, or not, we have a sacred covenant to care for them and their families each and every day. It is because of their sacrifices that we live in the best province in the best country in the world. May God bless our superheroes. I would ask all members of the Assembly to rise and give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton might not be in the Grey Cup, but Edmonton will be at the Grey Cup. I would like to introduce Mr. Matthew Machado, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar. He hopes to be introduced in the Saskatchewan Legislature as well. Matt, would you please stand as I read the motto of section O – colours divided, Grey Cup united – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Opposition Parties' Role

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we have arrived at a critical crossroads in this Legislature. As you know and as Albertans are aware, this Legislature exists as a check on executive power. Legislation must first be debated and passed here before it is declared law, and the government must daily defend itself and the actions of others whom they have appointed to the duly elected opposition in order to ensure transparency and accountability.

It is the Speaker's job to ensure the integrity of these functions, and I think the Speaker would agree that it is not the Speaker's job to stifle them. We have a job to do, Mr. Speaker, and it's an important one. Just as the government is elected to lead, we have been elected to hold them to account.

Far too often when we attempt to do our jobs in this Legislature, we are unable to ask the government the questions that need to be asked. We understand that these questions are often uncomfortable. They often deal with scandal, impropriety, and personal misconduct, but they simply must be asked. If the fact that hard questions cause government members to become disordered becomes an excuse to prevent hard questions, then the fundamental purpose of question period is lost.

Parliamentary privilege has for centuries allowed elected members the latitude to hold government and those it has appointed to account on the widest range of issues. Shutting down questions because they make the government uncomfortable, angry, or unruly is not within our tradition. Ruling questions out of order because they deal with party finances, the conduct of government members, or the actions of individuals appointed by government-dominated committees is also not within our parliamentary tradition. From the Pacific scandal to the sponsorship scandal to the source of Mike Duffy's expense repayments, these topics have always been ruled in order during question period, and so they should be.

Such matters must also be scrutinized in this House, Mr. Speaker, and we will scrutinize them no matter what the consequences.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister of environment finally got around to issuing an environmental protection order after a billion litres of coal slurry from a tailings pond of toxic sludge containing arsenic, mercury, and lead poisoned the Athabasca River. This catastrophe took place three weeks ago. It is the biggest environmental disaster of its kind in the history of this country. On what planet is it reasonable to wait three weeks to tell the company that it has to clean up? On what planet is it reasonable to wait 19 days to tell the public that 40 times the recommended levels of arsenic have been found in the water? Yet, the minister's focus all along has been to downplay the long-term damage and the danger that it has created to Albertans.

In scale, Mr. Speaker, this disaster is 25 times bigger than the Exxon Valdez spill. The impact on the Athabasca River will affect generations of wildlife for decades and decades or more to come. Even the order they've now reluctantly made fails to address the impacts on communities further downriver. This toxic sludge will end up in the Northwest Territories, meaning that over a thousand kilometres of one of Alberta's most important rivers will be affected.

In a manner that is reminiscent of an episode of The Simpsons, towns like Athabasca, Fort McMurray, and Fort Chip are being told to simply turn off their intake while the hundred-kilometre plume of poison floats by their communities. But this approach, Mr. Speaker, ignores the fact that as this plume floats by, poisonous toxins are deposited in and along the river, toxins that will impact water quality for years to come.

The Mackenzie River basin, one of Canada's most important ecological resources in the country, cannot turn off its water intake. The minister of environment for the Northwest Territories says that he wasn't informed until five days after the spill. He says that, quote, in my recollection this is the first of this type of catastrophic failure. End quote. Yet the Alberta government's response is: the plume will be fine, and everything will be safe. Really, Mr. Speaker? Really?

Aboriginal Peoples of Alberta

Ms Calahasen: [Remarks in Cree] Astum. Ka we taminatnowow, nehiyow, achimowin. [Translation] Come. Let me tell you a story of the original people of this land. [As submitted]

Come. Let me tell you a story about people who lived on this land long before Alberta became a province. They had distinct languages, complex social and economic systems, and made and enforced laws they all lived by. Indigenous history is etched into the Alberta landscape going back 11,000 years and 500 generations, from rock carvings in Writing-on-Stone in the southern part of the province to hunting sites in the Athabasca lowlands.

Today Alberta is home to more than 220,000 descendants from First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people, the third-largest aboriginal population in Canada. Although aboriginal presence predates both Alberta and Canada, not all Albertans and Canadians are familiar with the rich histories and cultures of aboriginal peoples or with our present-day contributions and aspirations. So today, when I attended the official launch of Aboriginal Peoples of Alberta: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow, I was proud to be an aboriginal descendant of those long-ago people like the special guests today.

This new publication, created by the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations, provides a starting point for moving towards a greater understanding of my communities from the past to now. The publication is a basic introduction to aboriginal people in our province, sharing information from First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities, significant cultural and historical dates, and contemporary aboriginal views. It is a resource created to open a dialogue to provide opportunities for aboriginal and nonaboriginal people to work together in building Alberta. This publication reflects a commitment by our Premier and the Minister of Aboriginal Relations to create a better understanding of aboriginal Albertans by all Canadians and Albertans of our contributions to this great land called Alberta. An electronic version is available on the Aboriginal Relations website. I encourage all Albertans to read it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Right from the Start Mental Health Program

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mental health capacity building in schools initiative is led by Alberta Health Services in collaboration with Alberta Education and funded through grants from Alberta Health. The purpose of the initiative is to establish projects that provide the staffing and support required to implement an integrated, school-based community mental health promotion, prevention, and early intervention program. The projects are locally planned, co-ordinated, and implemented through partnerships with Alberta Health Services, school jurisdictions, parents, community agencies, and other regional service providers.

Mr. Speaker, there are currently 37 projects in 53 communities in 143 schools across the province of Alberta. Right from the start is one of these 37 initiatives and is a program developed in the Bow valley. Right from the start programming is delivered through the Banff elementary school, Elizabeth Rummel elementary school in Canmore, and the Lawrence Grassi middle school in Canmore.

Last year 691 students were supported through daily and ongoing universal mental health programming. In addition, 131 students received targeted support services. As well, 69 families received individual supports through the program. This represents only a small sample of the benefits this program has delivered to our community.

Mr. Speaker, right from the start began services in our schools in September 2007; however, the funding for this and, in fact, all 37 projects is scheduled to end in June 2014. I cannot overstate the importance of this program to our communities, and I would hope that we are able to continue funding these valuable programs in the 2014-15 budget and beyond.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

The Speaker: Mr. Clerk, kindly hold the clock if you would, please, and do not start it for question period. I have a few comments I have to make at this time.

Statement by the Speaker

Respecting Officers of the Legislature Challenging the Chair

The Speaker: Hon. members, as all of you are likely aware, a very unique if not somewhat unprecedented occurrence took place in this Assembly yesterday at approximately 2:41 p.m. The Member for Airdrie made very direct and, in my view, offensive comments that constitute very inappropriate comments and language about officers who serve Assemblies such as ours. He also, in my view, made inappropriate and very offensive comments that constitute challenging the chair of this Assembly.

At the conclusion of his statements I indicated that his comments were indeed very serious, possibly hinging on contempt, and that I was going to have a closer look at his words, obviously, by reviewing Hansard to get it verbatim and also watching the televised replay of his statements.

Now, here is what happened. At approximately 2:41 p.m. the hon. Member for Airdrie rose yesterday to seek a point of clarification from your Speaker. Among other things, he read from some prepared notes and stated the following:

What precedent in what country of the Commonwealth does not allow Her Majesty's opposition to be able to question decisions of government-appointed officers, which can be and often are corrupt?

For the benefit of all let me first note that Airdrie's comments were stated in relation to the Ethics Commissioner and to questions which arose from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills about an Ethics Commissioner ruling of recent past.

The Ethics Commissioner is an officer of this Legislative Assembly. Let me also clarify that as with any officer of this Assembly the Ethics Commissioner is not a government-appointed officer, nor is the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Child and Youth Advocate, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and the Ombudsman. They are all chosen by committees of this Assembly, typically all-party committees.

Second, I want to state in the most definitive and emphatic terms that none of our chosen officers are corrupt, nor do I believe that others are who work and serve in other Commonwealth countries. That reference by Airdrie I find totally inappropriate.

Now, the Member for Airdrie then went on to say the following:

What precedent is there for a Speaker, frankly, dominating and wasting time of this Assembly with constant lectures and, frankly, self-righteous interruptions that are costing us question after question in this Assembly?

He then basically accused your Speaker of “showing gross favouritism” and concluded his remarks by stating that your Speaker is “interfering with this House.” Those comments by the hon. Member for Airdrie can be found at page 2909 of yesterday’s Hansard and are a direct affront to this Speaker. They are also inaccurate and inappropriate.

Using such language in this Assembly is, obviously, personally insulting, but it also shows a lack of respect for this institution, for its heritage, for its traditions, all of which you took an oath to uphold. Authorities across the Commonwealth in this respect are quite clear. Erskine May, 24th edition, for example, states at page 61:

Reflections upon the character or actions of the Speaker may be punished as breaches of privilege. . . . His action cannot be criticised incidentally in debate or upon any form of proceeding except a substantive motion.

The rationale for this rule is found, in turn, in Beauchesne, sixth edition, at paragraph 167 on pages 48 and 49, which reads as follows:

The essential ingredient of the speakership is found in the status of the Speaker as a servant of the House. The Presiding Officer, while but a servant of the House, is entitled on all occasions to be treated with the greatest attention and respect by the individual Members because the office embodies the power, dignity, and honour of the House itself.

It is clear, hon. members, that language of the type used by the Member for Airdrie yesterday could be a contempt of the Assembly and could indeed give rise to a question of privilege. The language itself and the manner in which the words were delivered was certainly unparliamentary.

The chair wonders what would occur if such language was used in another one of our institutions such as the courts, for example. As a lawyer the Member for Airdrie is undoubtedly well aware of the consequences of such language in the courts, which could easily be interpreted as contempt of the court. The Assembly in which we all serve, in which all of you serve, is deserving of equal respect and dignity, I would hope, and part of my job is to do my level best to ensure it is so.

That having been said, I want to extend to the hon. Member for Airdrie an opportunity to apologize for the comments he made yesterday and to withdraw those comments.

Mr. Anderson: Hon. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw and apologize for those comments.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That concludes that matter, and we can proceed onward. I may have some comments to issue later about other comments that were made subsequent.

Let us proceed on with the day, Mr. Clerk.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us recognize the official Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition.

Oral Question Period Practices

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a series of questions on improving accountability and increasing the value of question period. When she was running to be the leader of her party, the Premier promised to be transformational and do things differently in this Legislature. For a variety of reasons this session has seen the opposition getting to ask fewer questions of the executive than ever before, and I don’t think this is what the Premier had in mind. Under the former Speaker one day we got to ask as high as 22 questions. Will the Premier ask her House leader to sit down with us on the opposition and work on ways to get more questions asked in question period?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it wouldn’t even be necessary for her to do that. I’m always available to meet with the House leaders and talk about how we can improve the operations of the House. Sometimes we don’t agree, but we can always engage in good discussion, and I’m happy at any time that we can engage in improving our parliamentary performance.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker is sometimes compared to a referee, standing between the teams to make sure that the rules are being followed. However, in hockey the game clock stops when the referee blows the whistle and becomes a focal point while he makes his calls, as the Speaker did today. Would the Premier agree to endorse a change to the standing rules so that the clock would stop when the Speaker speaks so that we could actually have a true and full 50 minutes of question period every day?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition will know that this House enjoys the longest question period in Canada, I believe, with a wonderful opportunity to have I think it’s the first six questions every day reserved for the leaders of the opposition parties: three for the Official Opposition party and then each of the leaders of the other parties. That, I think, is also unique in the Canadian parliamentary tradition. I think that the hon. member, rather than trying to negotiate standing orders in the House, would be best to refer to her own House leader to say: bring those issues to the table, and let’s have a discussion.

Ms Smith: There are many precedents in Legislatures with scandals involving expenses and the actions of government appointees, Mr. Speaker, from the Pacific scandal to the sponsorship scandal to the source of Mike Duffy’s expense repayments, even former Privacy Commissioner George Radwanski’s expenses, and these topics have always been in order. Would the Premier endorse changes to the standing rules to clarify that questions like these will be in order? Or do they rather enjoy hiding behind the Speaker’s protection?

Mr. Hancock: I would say that that borders on insulting the Speaker, but it doesn’t; actually it does insult the Speaker.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that the opposition has the opportunity under parliamentary rules to raise all appropriate questions. They do not have the opportunity to misuse the officers of this Legislature by bringing criticisms of officers who have done their job thoroughly and completely just because they do not like the result. They also have to follow all of the provisions of judicial fairness, quasi-judicial fairness, of not asking about things that are before the courts.

The Speaker: Thank you.

They should also not reflect on the Speaker. They must deal with government policy.

Government House leaders and opposition House leaders, I've invited you on many occasions to do something about our rules.

The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Building Alberta Plan Advertising

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a series of questions about the PC Alberta billboard campaign – I'm sorry; the government's Building Alberta advertising campaign – to which we received no real answer. I'd like to give the Premier an opportunity to respond again today. Does the Premier really believe that the PC orange-and-blue, Dalton McGuinty Liberal-inspired, partisan sign campaign really is the best use of Alberta taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have been very clear yesterday that the colour palette that's being used for not only signs on highways but for all government publications, including websites and other manufactured products, is in accordance with what the government of Alberta approved colours are. If the member doesn't like that, that's unfortunate.

But I have to tell you that Albertans want to know what's being built: what schools are being built, what hospitals are being built, what highways are being built, and how much they cost. We're simply sharing that with them, and – guess what? – they want more of it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we take no issue with the government informing Albertans of what they're doing. In fact, we'd be thrilled if they shared more information with the opposition. We'd love it if they'd start sending us all of their press releases again. However, there is a difference between notifying the public of a government infrastructure project and using tax dollars to put up orange-and-blue, PC-branded signs featuring the Premier's name, credentials, and honorific. To the Premier: what was the cost of this multiplatform promotional campaign, and was it driven by the Premier, out of her office?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. Leader of the Opposition not to allow Albertans to believe that there is anything PC about it. As a matter of fact, there is no political signage; the colours are government of Alberta colours. Check any product produced by the government of Alberta, and you will find the same colours. I know for a fact that Albertans want to know what is being built, if the highway is being twinned, what school is being built, and what's coming around the corner in their neighbourhood. That is normal procedure. All construction companies do that. That's how you inform Albertans.

Ms Smith: It seems clear that the Deputy Premier believes that there is nothing wrong with the government advertising campaign, that could have been pulled directly from the same design book as the PC Party election campaign ads. Given their unwavering support for this campaign, Albertans have the right to know: how much will this advertising campaign cost Albertans, and was this policy change driven by the Premier and her office?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this member would for once be proud of Alberta and the infrastructure that we're building for Albertans because it is so badly needed. Second of all, she throws around names of Premiers from other provinces, but I have to tell you that Albertans would be remiss not noticing federal signs on highways and construction projects, which I imagine she would be very much approving of. It's normal. Every government does it. Our federal government does it. Albertans and Canadians want to know what's being built.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood and Leader of the Official Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: What's not normal is having the Premier's name plastered all over them. The Prime Minister doesn't do that at the federal level.

Flood Hazard Caveats on Land Titles

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Premier some specific questions on flood policy that are particularly timely since many Albertans have 10 days left before they have to make very significant and life-changing decisions. This government has expressed complete confidence in its 21-year-old flood maps except in the cases of Drumheller and Fort McMurray and Redwood Meadows. To the Premier: why are these outdated maps the only drivers of caveat decisions for every other community in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. As the member knows, we use the flood maps simply to protect people's home and protect people's property. The policy is in place simply for that, to protect Albertans. It's been there to protect our resources in Fort McMurray and in Drumheller. It's simply too costly to remove those towns completely. In other areas it's giving people an indication of where they want to build their lives. Ultimately it's to protect lives.

Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that answer.

Like Drumheller and Fort McMurray and Redwood Meadows, as he knows, the community of Beachwood in High River is protected by a berm. A government appeal board confirmed in its decisions that this berm was sufficient to protect Beachwood in a typical 1-in-100-floods event. Indeed, of all the flooded areas in High River it was among the least impacted. The residents want to save Beachwood. The High River town council wants to save Beachwood. Will the minister commit to giving Beachwood the same exemption as Drumheller and Fort McMurray and Redwood Meadows?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, as you know, tragically, we lost three lives at the height of the flood in High River. Beachwood clearly lies in the floodway, and a berm does not change where the floodway is. In fact, if we look at all the evidence, the floodway will likely expand. I can't guarantee to the people in Beachwood, nor can the hon. member, that the river won't come crashing through there, costing the lives of their children and their loved ones. I will stand here. I will protect Albertans based on a good public policy for High River and everywhere else in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear, then. When Wildrose forms the government after the next election, we will remove the flood caveats on any properties that are no longer in a floodway as a result of community mitigation projects. However, by then it may be too late for Beachwood. Improving the berm around Beachwood will cost less than a million dollars. Buying out Beachwood will cost more than $30 million. Will the minister do the right thing, the prudent thing, the fiscally responsible thing and give an exemption to save this community?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we had a very good clue in the last question that the member asked. This is not about politics. This is not about forming the next government. This is not about making policies in this House about saving or not saving people's lives or people's communities for political gain or forming the next government. This is about making sound decisions based on science by people who have much more understanding of what's being done than that particular member. Let's not forget that we're saving people's lives and properties and not trying to win the next government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and leader of the Liberal opposition.

Family Care Clinics

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike many successful leaders who underpromise and overdeliver, this Premier overpromises and underdelivers. During the election last year she promised 140 family care clinics, but only three have been opened. To the Premier. Your term is nearly 50 per cent over, but you're only 2.14 per cent done. Why so little progress?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity today to be in Red Deer doing something very exciting, and that was opening the Central Alberta regional cancer treatment centre with our Minister of Health and had the opportunity to actually talk – and I'm sure he'll elucidate – on the commitment, the work that's being done in communities across the province right now to ensure that family care clinics will be up and running as per our commitment. At the end of the day, by the time that we get to the next election, we want to keep our commitment to ensuring that families have access to health care, that they do it through family care clinics, that we're working with communities, and it's going well.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, maybe this is just a misunderstanding. I'm reading the Premier's platform. What she actually promised was "up to 140" family care clinics. Up to: there's a little bit of wiggle room here. So let's see. Three FCCs have opened, another 24 have been announced, and up to 140 were promised. Here's my question, Premier. In your mind, does "up to 140" actually mean three, 27, or 140?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear that we want to work with communities to get these done, and we're working with 24 communities right now that are going to have family care clinics very soon. They look different across the province because communities want them to look different. We are very hopeful that we are going to be able to achieve the 140 target. That's certainly where we want to go. If that's where communities want to go, we're going to be able to do it.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you one thing this Premier is really good at. It's making announcements. It doesn't take a medical degree to know that you can't provide medical care inside an announcement. You actually need a fully staffed clinic. Announcements won't cut it, Premier. Signs in PC colours won't cut it on vacant lots. What we need, and I hate to be repetitive, are fully staffed clinics. Premier, how many FCCs will you guarantee will be built, opened, fully staffed, and providing care to Albertans by that 2016 election? Not announcements.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I absolutely agree with the hon. member, and that's exactly what we did in Red Deer today. We opened the Central Alberta regional cancer centre, which is going to be able to provide services and radiation to people throughout the province. You have to make sure, of course, that these are staffed. We are committed to working with communities, and as I've said, if we have communities that are ready to open in 140 locations, they will be open.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Halloween, October 31, the largest environmental catastrophe in Alberta's history occurred. A billion litres of toxic chemicals emptied into the Athabasca River. The impact of this is devastating for the watershed from Hinton to the Arctic Ocean. Nineteen – 19 – days later this environment minister finally got around to issuing an environmental protection order. To the minister. This is negligence of the most serious kind. Why on earth didn't you act sooner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said several times in this House, we acted on day 1, as soon as this incident happened. Our investigators were on the scene right away, making sure, first and foremost, that communities were notified. Yesterday we put an environmental protection order in place to make sure that there would be one more tool that would ensure that the work would be completed efficiently and set the timelines for going forward. Our directors and our investigators were working with the companies throughout this process.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This minister made no public announcement of this catastrophe. The entire contents of this toxic tailings pit emptied into one of the longest and most important rivers in Alberta, and all the minister did was quietly call municipalities along the river and ask them to turn off their water systems. Clearly, the minister was hoping that no one would notice, but now, 19 days later, we know that enormous and perhaps permanent damage has been done to the Athabasca watershed. To the minister of environment: how do you account for this extreme negligence on your part?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps he should talk to the member sitting next to him because she said it was five days later when we notified Albertans. Quite frankly, it was the very day that we made sure Albertans were notified. We put it on our bulletin. We contacted communities and made sure that people were aware that needed to make sure. We have worked with communities on this. In fact, I'd like to give you a quote from Dr. Jim Talbot, the chief medical officer of health. He has said: "I am confident that at no time was there a risk to the public's drinking water. As chief medical officer my primary concern is that proper procedures are followed and that the water the public is drinking is safe." This is exactly what we have done from day one.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason that the water is safe is because they're no longer drawing it from the Athabasca River. If they did, it would not be safe. This toxic blob isn't just going to merrily float downstream and into the Arctic Ocean. It contains large amounts of lead, arsenic, cadmium, and mercury, all extremely toxic. These chemicals will be deposited along the course of the Athabasca River and will poison the environment from here to Inuvik for a generation. The minister didn't take action and tried to keep it quiet. What does she have to say for herself?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did not try to keep this quiet. Immediately, as soon as we found out about this, we were on scene, and we made sure that it was public on our bulletin and made sure the public knew about this. Since day 1 we have been taking samples. We continue to take samples. We make those samples public. We are very concerned about this, and we've been very proactive to make sure that all of this has been taken care of. We were on top of this right from day 1. It is very important for us to make sure that the public has access to the information and data that we released yesterday.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. Clerk, stop the clock just for a moment, please.

I want to pick up on something that the Official Opposition leader mentioned earlier, and that is how we can get to more questions. Here's one good example of how we can do that. There should not be any preamble to supplementaries, and I've indicated this numerous, numerous times in this House, so let's try that. The clock is stopped, and we'll get more members up. Just remember that one question is allowed 35 seconds. One answer is allowed another 35 seconds. In other words, a set of questions is allowed up to three minutes and 30 seconds, and it's a miracle to get past 15 members, but let's do our best.

Start the clock, and let us go, now without preambles to supplementaries, starting with Edmonton-Manning, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Highway Safety

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation. It's no secret that Alberta is booming. As people and industry flood into our province, our roads become a very important part of our daily business, but this growth puts a combination of pressures on our highway system, especially our major highways like QE II and highway 63. As more and more heavy haulers use our roads to transport goods and materials, we see more traffic and, unfortunately, more tragic accidents. My first question to the Minister of Transportation . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt, but you're well over the time allotted.

Mr. Minister, do you have enough information there to try and answer the question?

Mr. McIver: I'll do the best I can.

The Speaker: Yes, please.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member was asking about heavy hauling. We certainly are aware. We have been doing a lot of work on this. He mentioned highway 63, and I can tell you that part of the reason why we are keeping the Premier's promise of twinning highway 63 is to make sure that there is more capacity for those heavy loads.

Further, Mr. Speaker, highway 36 is a heavy haul route from the U.S. up the east side of Alberta. We certainly have considerable work to do there, and we'll continue.

Mr. Sandhu: To the minister: can you commit today to increase safety for Albertans by designating separate lanes on our major highways for all the commercial trucks and transportation?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question was about designating lanes for heavy hauls. Currently that's something we'll be able to consider only if the Legislature approves Bill 32, that's before us. If that happens, we will consider each highway in the province, look at where designating lanes is a benefit to Albertans both for their safety and their overall mobility, and only in those instances where there's a net benefit will we consider that. But we most certainly will not do it on every highway because it's not appropriate on every highway.

Mr. Sandhu: To the same minister: will you also commit to working with the Solicitor General for zero tolerance on posted speed limits to ensure that heavy-footed drivers are aware that there's no leeway over this limit?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll work with the Solicitor General on that, but the fact is that police officers have some leeway in when they write a ticket and when they don't, based on the information that they get. I'm not sure we want to take that away. It's certainly something that I'll continue to talk to the Solicitor General about. Both he and I are interested in keeping Albertans safe when they travel on Alberta's highways, and there is a certain amount of judgment involved in that. If the hon. member has certain circumstances he wants to discuss, we'd be happy to do that, keeping in mind mobility, but Albertans' safety comes first.

Ethics Commissioner Selection Process

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, the long-standing member from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre publicly stated and provided compelling reasons that she is "extremely uneasy about having [her] intimate personal details disclosed to an individual who is not neutral," and that she felt helpless and frightened with the product of a fundamentally flawed Ethics Commissioner selection process. Will the Premier commit here today to change the selection process for an Ethics Commissioner to an all-party committee with equal representation to ensure that that person is objectively neutral instead of risking having someone with close connections with one personal, political party?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it is a fundamentally offensive proposition to suggest that once a person is appointed to an office such as an officer of the Legislature or for that matter a judge of the courts, they would retain any of their political attributes that they had prior to their appointment. These officers, whether they're judges or officers of the Legislature, take on a role of neutrality when they take their oath of office, and it is fundamentally offensive to suggest otherwise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in this Legislature we're not allowed to reference party donations from independent officers of the Assembly, will the Premier do the right thing and ensure that our next Ethics Commissioner has not been involved in any partisan political activity?

Mr. Hancock: Continuing with the offensiveness, Mr. Speaker.

It is an all-party committee of the House who gets to ask the questions to interview the applicants. In fact, we're anticipating a report from the special select committee with respect to the Chief Electoral Officer this afternoon. [interjections] That's the parliamentary process.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there are a few things I can do other than to stand and bring to your attention that disorder of that sort, eruptions of that sort are not characteristic of a well-tuned and fine-functioning Assembly. So, please, let's curtail these comments.

Hon. Government House Leader, I think you have about 15 seconds left.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fundamental operation of any parliamentary democracy indicates that a government gets elected, but the House selects all-party committees, and the fact that the majority party has the majority members on that committee does not lead to the disrespect of the officers selected by that committee.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to tone it down a bit.

Given that the Premier is surely concerned about the results of November 22 – her advisers are even lowering the bar to saying that 50 per cent plus one is a success – and given that the Ethics Commissioner's office has publicly stated that his report on the investigation of the Premier awarding a billion dollar tobacco litigation contract is complete, can the Premier confirm that no one from her office, from the Public Affairs Bureau, or any of her ministers or their staff has made any request to delay the report from being released prior to her leadership review? Be very careful with your answers, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know from previous rulings and previous rules that we're all pledged to abide by that asking questions about a matter that is under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner is out of order. Please . . . [interjections] Excuse me. I have the floor at the moment. Please, if you're going to pursue questions of that nature, rephrase them in such a way so as to not violate that rule.

Would somebody from the government side care to comment?
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Saskiw: Very carefully.

Mr. Hancock: I would be very careful to say, Mr. Speaker, that I find all of the questions that have been raised in this area very offensive. The independent officer of the Legislature who performs the role of Ethics Commissioner takes an oath of office.

Mr. Saskiw: Talk about the Premier.

Mr. Hancock: He has fulfilled his office with integrity, and this House should respect . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Talk about the Premier.

Mr. Hancock: If there are any questions about the operation of that office, they are rightly called before a legislative committee . . .

Mr. Saskiw: The Premier.

Mr. Hancock: . . . and it is totally inappropriate to besmirch his reputation here.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Saying that I besmirched his reputation is a complete lie.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you stood on a point of order, I assume in relation to the last answer by the Government House Leader, at 2:24. It has been noted.

We will move on, hopefully with a restoration of civility and decorum. Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

AISH Applications

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents who have become disabled have brought to my attention that it takes up to eight months for them to receive their first AISH cheque. My first question is for the hon. Minister of Human Services. What is the current projected wait time for Albertans who have become disabled to first receive their AISH funding?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have had a very significant increase in the number of applications for AISH over the past year or so since the AISH payment went up to $400. We are working very hard to bring that application period down. We're being successful in doing that to a certain extent, but we have got a long way to go yet to get it within an acceptable range. One of the things that I think is really important, though, is to understand the way in which the process works, that once a person's application is in and complete, whenever the decision is made, the AISH payments will revert to the date of the application.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what measures are in place to help the government speed up these wait times?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've made accommodations to our system so that, actually, wherever you put your application in, you're in a queue right across the province so that we can deal with people fairly across the province from whichever location. We've managed to reduce the wait time by almost four weeks, so there's good progress there. We are bringing people on and have brought people on to assist in increasing the number of people who are processing the applications. But the most effective tool that we have is in fact a consolidated information system, so that anywhere in the province you apply, your application will go to the next available adjudicator.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the meantime what, if any, assistance is available to these individuals as they wait for their AISH funding?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we should be clear that most of the people if not all of the people who are applying for AISH certainly qualify for income support under one of our other programs. Barriers to full employment would probably be the normal one. Now, that doesn't have a range quite as high as the AISH payments, so it's clear why people would be moving to make an application to go on AISH. But, again, as I said, as soon as they have a complete application in, their AISH qualification dates from the date of their complete application, not from the date of the decision. Most of them are on other forms of income support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Health Services Financial Administration

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the minister about the reappointment of the chair of the Alberta Health Services Audit and Finance Committee. The minister said that he was the most qualified individual to serve this organization. Minister, how many people were interviewed for this position?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had checked her facts, she would realize that the Audit and Finance Committee as well as any other committees under Alberta Health Services are appointed by the official administrator. It was entirely within the official administrator's purview to select the people that were most qualified to fulfill this function. He regularly involves that committee in meetings with the Auditor General to review the financial affairs of AHS.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: All right. Mr. Speaker, let me ask this, then. Minister, how many people did he interview?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the answer to that question. It is entirely within the purview of Alberta Health Services, a commission of this government that has powers delegated under legislation and under its own bylaws to appoint committees. I would hope the hon. member would agree that it's a very good idea to have an Audit and Finance Committee overseeing a budget of over $12 billion, but I guess we'll find out.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, there are four million people in this province. How many people were interviewed for the job?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the appointments, as I said, were made by the official administrator of Alberta Health Services. It is within his sole discretion to appoint those in the same way that – I can't . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: On the one hand you're asking the Speaker not to interrupt, and on the other hand you keep interrupting, which prompts the Speaker to stand up and restore decorum. Hon. members, please. You may not like what's being said, but you have to listen to it. They may not like what's being asked, but they have to listen to it. So let's show some respect both ways.

Please continue, hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: The question is absurd in the extreme. Alberta Health Services has the power to appoint . . . [interjections] Do you want me to sit down, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Finish off, please.

Mr. Horne: . . . has the authority to appoint those committees, as do many other agencies, boards, and commissions that operate under statutes in this province. The question could be asked more appropriately at Public Accounts, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill (continued)

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of the environment seems to be seriously suggesting that a leakage of gunk containing chemicals and minerals that are really bad for humans, habitat, fish, and animals is mostly okay. To the minister: why is it that when it is the impact on human health, public health, it's all good, but when it comes to the impact on environmental health, silence?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, there certainly isn't silence. We've been on this file right from day one, making sure first and foremost that human health is protected and that humans are notified, as I've said, about the drinking water – we're taking samples each and every day, and we continue to do that – and making sure that of the habitats, the fish, the wildlife we're taking samples as well.

As I said a week ago in the House, Mr. Speaker, at that time we had only seen one dead fish. We continue to monitor the situation. We will continue to do this into the spring as well. We take human health very seriously, and we take the environment of the habitat and the fish and wildlife very seriously.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Well, you can tell the public not to drink the water. It's a bit harder for other species.

So back to the same minister. What is the minister's acceptable level of risk when it comes to coal toxins sludging their way along a river? Okay, as long as folks don't drink it directly from the plume? Is it okay as long as not too many fish die? What is your acceptable level of risk here?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's just ridiculous. We have been concerned about this situation from day 1. The highest concentration of contaminants have occurred with regard to where the plant creek enters the Athabasca River, but as a result of the sediment settling, the plume flows downstream and the concentration is decreasing. We're glad about that, but we are working with the company, the very reason why yesterday we put an environmental protection order in place. We are concerned about this, and we're taking action on this, as we have from day 1.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. In other jurisdictions, any other jurisdiction, a company that released that much crap into a waterway would be immediately charged, but not in Alberta. In Alberta we're going to educate. So, Minister, can you not educate them with a fine maybe or a public whipping or possibly with charges? How long is this going to go on before you make this company pay, and who's going to pay for the cleanup?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To answer her last question first, the company obviously pays for the cleanup. We make sure that we have an investigation, as I also said in the House on the first day. The investigation must be held. We make sure that the companies are held responsible, and we have acted on that right away. We have the environmental protection order. We put that in yesterday, but we have been working with them all the way because they will be held responsible. We are very concerned about this, and as I've said over and over and will continue to say: we are taking action, we'll continue to take action, and the company will be held responsible once the investigation is complete.

Homelessness in Winter

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, extreme cold temperatures forecasted this winter mean that homeless Albertans are at risk. Emergency shelters are full, and in some places people are already being turned away. Yet this PC government continues to underfund emergency shelters. To the Minister of Human Services: what is he going to do today to ensure that no Albertan freezes to death this winter because they have no home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the hon. member has afforded me the opportunity to indicate to all Albertans that we take homelessness very seriously. We've put a lot of time and effort with our community partners into the plan to end homelessness, but we also fund, rather considerably, the shelters that are there for those who are homeless at the moment. There is a winter emergency response plan which each community puts in place through their community-based organizations. We fund those emergency response plans. We have added additional beds across the province in various places where those plans indicated they were needed, and we are going to continue to closely monitor that situation and fund where necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not enough, Mr. Minister. Given that Calgary's Kerby Centre, which houses homeless seniors, turns away 21 to 35 people per month and given that the Kerby Centre had to beg for private donations just to keep its existing beds open, will this minister stand up and take responsibility for turning our most vulnerable citizens into the snow to fend for themselves?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, no one wants anyone to be alone in the snow, homeless or anything of that nature whatsoever, so what we do and what I will take responsibility for is the co-ordinated network that we work with in each community with community-based organizations, funding them so that there is a group of shelters in most of the larger centres that could deal with the homeless population to make sure there is a bed for everyone. We want to ensure that there is a bed for everyone when it is needed. But it's not on a one shelter by one shelter basis. It's a co-ordinated effort, as it needs to be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds are turned away.

Given that in Red Deer the People's Place emergency shelter also had to send people back into the cold and given that there is a very real possibility Albertans are going to freeze to death this winter due to this government's neglect, what does the minister have to say to Albertans who have to sleep outside in the bitter cold?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that no Albertan has to sleep outside in the bitter cold, that there is a place for every Albertan who needs a place. Our emergency shelters work very hard to make sure that that happens, and we work very hard to co-ordinate with them so that the number of beds that are anticipated as needed are in place when they are needed. I can tell you that in Red Deer the Community Housing Advisory Board, the local CBO, has increased bed capacity at People's Place, operated by the Safe Harbour Society, by 12 spaces for a total of 35 funded spaces with a licensed capacity of 46 as their winter emergency response in 2013-2014. If they anticipate that they need more, we will talk with them about it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-East.

Road Construction Priorities

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was with relief that Calgary residents learned the government has fast-tracked a modification to Deerfoot Trail with widening at Southland Drive. Clearly, this was a local, even a provincial priority considering the intense amounts of traffic on the Deerfoot every day. Yet this priority wasn't on Alberta Transportation's three-year plan. The minister is always trumpeting about the accuracy of his list posted on the website, but every Albertan can see that this very important project wasn't even listed. When will the Minister of Transportation admit that his list is meaningless and his decisions are purely political?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it highly entertaining that the hon. member would criticize this particular project when the Member for Calgary-Shaw actually sent out a document to his constituents claiming he had to take credit for it. You should talk to your hon. member down there. You guys should get your stories straight. In fact, the fact is that this is a project that was important to support the southeast part of the ring road. It was an important link. We're proud of the work we're doing, and it will be open very soon.

Mr. Wilson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Calgary-Shaw, you've risen on a point of order, presumably in response to the Minister of Transportation's comments just now at 2:38 p.m., and it has been noted.

Let's go on with the first supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Love the project, not the process.

Given that this project wasn't on the three-year plan and given that it was a clear priority to anyone who has travelled on the congested Deerfoot, will the minister stand up and admit that this government plays politics with Albertans when it comes to their important infrastructure?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, as I've tried to educate this hon. member, we put our projects on the website. Every year we create a new three-year project list. We publish it publicly so Albertans can see. I'd be interested in seeing the list of what this member wouldn't build in their party with all the cuts they would make to what we're doing. [interjections] Our government works very hard. We're building the things that Albertans want, unlike that party. Under this Premier we're building Alberta. We're putting infrastructure in place that's important. That party would never do it. We are serving Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, your own member has the floor. Let's not try and outshout anyone here.

Please, your second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would have a clear, prioritized public infrastructure list for all Albertans.

Given that this clear priority has been fast-tracked just days before the Premier's leadership review, will the government commit to taking politics out of infrastructure decisions and implement a public prioritized project list so Albertans don't have to wait for another leadership review to get their projects? [interjections]

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member continues to embarrass himself. In the first question he said: why isn't the project done? Then later on he said: the project is done in time for a political event. It can't be both. The hon. member hasn't got any of his facts straight. He hasn't got his own story straight. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, we continue to do the right things for Albertans. We will. Nothing's stopping them from making a big list of the things they wouldn't build. We, on the other hand, make a list of the things we are going to build.

The Speaker: I don't know what's giving rise to so much joviality in here today, but it's interruptive enough.

Let's go on to Calgary-East, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

2:40 Calgary Southeast Ring Road Contract

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southeast ring road was supposed to be open to commuters on October 1. It's now 51 days past that date. It is my understanding that the contractor has been levied a fine of $70,000 per day. Now it has come to my attention that trade workers are not being paid for work completed by subcontractors and those that have asked to be compensated have been fired. To the Minister of Transportation: why is the southeast ring road suffering such a long delay?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's good to see somebody that's got most of his facts straight. However, the cost to the contractor for being late isn't actually a fine. It's a contractual arrangement within the contract that they will get that much less revenue by being late. Really, the contractor hasn't got the work done on time. It's as simple as that. They had four years to do it. They didn't complete it. But to protect Albertans, there is that contractual arrangement where Albertans gain by $70,000 a day. That's not the worst arrangement in the world. Some might say that it's pretty good.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us how he will ensure that the penalty will be collected?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, you know what? The member has been diligent on this because he cares about the mobility of Albertans. I will say that it's not a matter of collecting the penalty. It's a matter of deducting it from future payments. There's no collection process, in a strict sense, to do. That, of course, is part of the government's plan to make sure that people we contract with to build things for Albertans are motivated to get it done. Even under those circumstances we're finding out this time that that's not enough to get it done on time, but I can assure you that it's going to get it done faster than it would be done without that motivation.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, this question is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure. What is being done to ensure that trade workers are being protected for the work that they have done?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, the southeast Stoney Trail is a project covered under the Public Works Act, administered by my department. The Public Works Act allows that any person who does not receive proper payment, regardless of their level in the contracting chain, can make a claim. The statement of Public Works Act claim is available on the Infrastructure website.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Southern Alberta School Capacity Issues

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Magrath K to 12 school needs to be modernized. This growing community projects an increasing student population. Built in 1952, the existing school has been expanded and cobbled half a dozen times and has six utility rooms to prove it. Because courtyard space was used for one expansion, half the elementary classes have no natural light. Can the Minister of Education please inform the parents, teachers, and the Westwind school division if this number one division priority will be addressed in his December announcement?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the shorter answer is that we'll have to stay tuned and wait for the December announcements, but the longer answer is that this member is experiencing in his constituency what many of us are experiencing in our constituencies. I think he's probably in agreement that we elected the right Premier, who's agreed to deal with those things and invest in those communities and build those schools and modernize the schools that need to be modernized.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, the theatre that is question period.

Given that Raymond elementary is at 130 per cent utilization, with 50 kindergarten children in one common space, and given that if the parent link centre area onsite was made available for instructional use, this overcrowding would be alleviated, could the Minister of Human Services advise what efforts can or are being made to secure a different location for the parent link program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, that's a very important question. Of course, parent link centres do such wonderful work in communities to assist parents with early childhood development, understanding early childhood development and empowering them to ensure that children get a good start. I understand that the school division has given notice to the parent link centre to move out of the school. Negotiations are happening to find a new spot for them. That's happening with the parent link centre, the FCSS, and the local school board, and we're very confident that we'll be able to find a place to keep this very important community facility operating.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Raymond elementary and Magrath K to 12 are two local priorities where residents are uncertain about when their concerns will be addressed, would the Minister of Infrastructure be willing to post a public prioritized project list so my constituents and all Albertans can know when important projects such as these will be met?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times in this House before, our capital plan is our priority list. It's published on our website. I think maybe the members across have trouble with computers, so maybe I'll push the print button and hand deliver them the list of our priority stuff.

There's lots of growth pressure in this province, Mr. Speaker, on infrastructure. I work with my colleagues, and if it's number 1 on that school boards priority list, then by the sounds of the utilization rates, stay tuned for upcoming announcements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Little Bow.

Regional Cancer Centres

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Premier opened a new cancer centre in Red Deer. With more and more people moving into our province each year, this is great news for Alberta. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health. Forty-seven million dollars on a cancer facility sounds impressive, but that's a lot of money. Is it really going to make a difference?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a lot of money, and it's going to make a huge difference in the lives of up to 15,000 Albertans a year. The Red Deer cancer centre is an integral part of the cancer corridor that Alberta has been building over the last several years. As I said, 15,000 patients will now be able to receive radiation therapy close to home in Red Deer and central Alberta. This is a life-changing initiative for patients with cancer.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister: what about the rest of the province? How does this facility fit into the provincial cancer strategy that was released back in April?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, one of the cornerstones of the cancer plan is to provide increasing numbers of Albertans who are living with cancer access to chemotherapy and radiation close to home as opposed to them having to travel long distances. Red Deer joins Lethbridge's Jack Ady centre and services in Edmonton and Calgary and eventually, within a couple of years now, a similar centre in Grande Prairie to provide for the Alberta cancer corridor. As I said, this is going to be life changing for the 1 in 5 Albertans that will develop cancer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure: since Red Deer and area residents have been waiting so long for this facility, will the Central Alberta cancer centre be able to handle the area's population growth now and into the future?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that this facility, which came in on budget, provides almost four times the clinical space of the existing facility in Red Deer. What's more, the building is designed to accommodate future growth in the community. A third radiation vault was shelled in for future expansion. Plus, the building was designed and built so we can add floors onto the roof in the future. This new cancer centre is a prime example of our building Alberta plan in action, and I'm proud to be part of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Rural Ambulance Dispatch Service

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few months rural Albertans, more specifically those around Lethbridge and southern Alberta, have been witnessing the PCs' failed ambulance dispatch vision. Last week the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta told a local paper in Lethbridge that AHS executives were determined to seize control of the fully consolidated rural ambulance dispatch despite the town council, mayors, and Reeves of the area all warning this government that removing local dispatch could have potentially dangerous consequences. To the minister of southeast Alberta reconstruction and recovery: have you come to terms with the fact that central . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we have to proceed with the answer now. The time for your question has expired.

Did the minister get enough out of that to answer a question?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have some history with rural ambulance service, and what I can tell is that the history of the rural ambulance service goes a long way back. What we're seeing are great improvements to enhance patient care. In many of these communities, particularly outlying rural areas in southern Alberta, they have never experienced advanced cardiac life support, and that's what they're going to get. We're going to be able to track these ambulances, get them to the communities and the emergencies that they need to be at. It's a good system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that so far the Health minister has refused to meet with the local members of the Lethbridge town council on this issue and given that this issue has negatively affected the regions across southern Alberta, will the minister of recovery please commit to sitting down with his minister, municipal leaders, and the Health minister to find a solution that will work for all rural Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is incorrect. I have in fact met with and talked to members of the former Lethbridge council. I will be meeting members of the new Lethbridge city council later this week. As we have with other communities around the province, we've worked very hard with local municipalities, the vast majority of whom have chosen to consolidate their dispatch services with Alberta Health Services because they know it will help to improve patient care.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that back in August, when the mayors and Reeves had sent out an invitation for you to please come to the meeting about rural dispatch, and given that you didn't show up at the meeting — people around there were concerned about what was going on — and given that there was a letter from 17 different municipal leaders sent to you about the rural dispatch problem in southern Alberta for ambulances, I guess I'm concerned. Next time, when you have the meeting, if you'd please let everybody know what the outcome of it was.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I've met with many officials from municipalities around the province. The letter to which the hon. member refers: 12 of the 17 mayors who signed that letter already have consolidated dispatch services with AHS.

More to the point, Mr. Speaker, I will say – and I'll be meeting with more municipalities later this week – that we do understand that in some specific municipalities there are issues, not with the policy of making EMS part of health care but with perhaps some refinements and adjustments that might be necessary from their perspective to provide the level of care that they wish to their citizens. We'll continue to work with them to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we were able to get to 16 different members today, which is very good. One of the primary reasons, of course, is because we had a number of people who really shortened or eliminated their preambles to supplementaries. I want to comment on and commend Edmonton-Manning, Calgary-Bow, and Calgary-East for doing a good job in that respect. As well, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills took an attempt at one there to shorten his preamble, as did Calgary-Fish Creek, as did Bonnyville-Cold Lake. So a number of people are catching on. This is how it should function. Thank you.

In 20 seconds from now we will continue on with private members making their statements, starting with Calgary-Hawwood.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As we do that – I'm sure you meant for everybody to leave while we're talking about this – in anticipation of the clock and the various things that have happened, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to continue after 3 o'clock with the Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I heard no objection, so we will continue until the Routine is completed. Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawwood, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

International Investment

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Globalization and the global economy have certainly become the new reality of today, which is why our government has undertaken new initiatives to open new markets and attract international investment in Alberta. Because of such initiatives our province is increasing its financial and global profile. Low taxes, a stable economy, and a transparent government make Alberta one of the best places to do business.

Alberta has also developed strong ties with many countries in the world. For instance, the Alberta-Hokkaido relations celebration, which occurred yesterday, honoured the long-lasting relations between Alberta and Japan for the last 41 years. Now Japan is one of Canada's primary Asian sources of foreign investment along with China.

That's not all, Mr. Speaker. Here are a few more facts to support the statement. Alberta led the nation in economic growth, with a 3.4 per cent growth rate for the last 20 years. Alberta exported $93 billion in commodities to 192 countries in 2011, which represents an 18 per cent increase from the year before. Alberta offers a 10 per cent refundable provincial tax credit for scientific research and experimental development. Finally, Alberta is being recognized as one of the most competitive business tax environments in North America, with no provincial sales tax, no provincial capital tax, no payroll tax, no machinery or equipment tax.

Thanks to our government's continuous focus on building Alberta, opening new markets and welcoming international investment is one of the three key pillars of that plan, which I'm very proud of. Albertans continue to be well served by this government with the building Alberta plan, which sustains our prosperity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well timed, sir.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Emergency Medical Services in Southern Alberta

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After two years of negotiations Alberta Health Services finally signed a deal with the Wheatland and Adjacent Districts Emergency Medical Services Association. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank WADEMSEA for their hard work in Wheatland county. I am pleased that after months of uncertainty residents will continue to receive the top-notch local ambulance services they have come to expect for the past 25 years.

In recent months it appeared that the province was trying to cut the legs out of our local ambulance service as part of their policy of centralizing ambulance services. The PC government tried to cut back the local service by half a million dollars. The result would have been devastating for WADEMSEA. Thankfully, WADEMSEA persevered.

Securing adequate funding for ambulance services shouldn't be such a struggle. It is beyond me why Alberta Health Services under the direction of the PC government tried to bully the local ambulance provider into accepting these unfavourable terms when the service itself would have been at stake.

I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize the outspoken advocacy of Wheatland county reeve Glenn Koester as well as WADEMSEA co-ordinator Rob Witty, board member Darcy Burke, and the whole WADEMSEA board for their role in speaking out for the residents of Wheatland county. It was an honour to stand beside and work with this board to achieve this positive outcome.

Residents of Wheatland county are certainly safer due to their persistent and determined advocacy efforts. This is a great example for other communities to look to for positive results coming from working together.

Centralizing ambulance services has been a disaster, and that's a lesson the PC government is refusing to learn. It's a reminder for all communities fighting against this government to not give up. Stand together, and make a positive difference. On this occasion it's a telling reminder to Albertans that Alberta Health Services is running out of control. It's heavy-handed approach of holding the residents of Wheatland county hostage with a half-million-dollar cut in funding for their ambulance service is completely unacceptable. Thankfully, due to their advocacy a potential disaster has been averted.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: I show the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee I'm pleased to table the committee's report recommending the appointment of Mr. Glen L. Resler as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta. I have the requisite number of copies for tabling, and copies of the report are being distributed to all members of the Assembly today.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege this afternoon to give notice of two motions that we would intend to bring before the House at the appropriate time. The first:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee and recommend that Glen Resler be appointed as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta, effective December 9, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, I also have the privilege of bringing forward a second motion.

Be it resolved that

- (1) Hon. David Alward, the Premier of the province of New Brunswick, be invited to the floor of this Chamber on Thursday, November 28, 2013, immediately following Prayers, to address the Legislative Assembly;
  - (2) This address be called for immediately after the Hon. Mr. Alward is introduced under Introduction of Visitors; and
  - (3) The ordinary business of the Assembly resume upon the conclusion of the address;
- and be it further resolved that Premier Alward's address become part of the permanent records of the Assembly.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Sherwood Park, you have a bill to introduce?

Bill 44 Notaries and Commissioners Act

Ms Olesen: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 44, the Notaries and Commissioners Act.

This bill makes amendments and updates two pieces of legislation to ensure Albertans can continue to be well served. Making these amendments will also help ensure Alberta's legislation is consistent and clear.

The bill includes amendments to the Notaries Public Act and the Commissioners for Oaths Act. The major amendments to this legislation are the consolidation of these two acts into one, modernization of the language to provide greater clarity, and changes to the maximum fines so they are in line with other acts.

The legislation would also make a provision to allow for a code of conduct in the regulations. This code would formalize and clearly define appropriate behaviour for appointees.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 44, the Notaries and Commissioners Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

3:00

Bill 209 Severance and Bonus Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Anderson: It's my pleasure to rise and introduce first reading of Bill 209, the Severance and Bonus Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

I think we can all agree that this bill is a timely one given the reports Albertans have seen of multiple instances of government and health executives and senior managers receiving lavish perks, that everyday Albertans could only dream about, even when they have chosen to leave their positions or have been fired for misdeeds.

Bill 209 will ensure the following bonus and severance limits on all non-unionized employees of government. Alberta Health Services, the Workers' Compensation Board, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, and the board of the Alberta Energy Regulator will follow these specific points: that no new severance packages shall ever exceed $100,000 in value unless the individual has worked for more than five years in the same position, in which case the severance shall not exceed $200,000; that no employee may collect two government severances within a five-year period; that no annual bonus or performance pay may be more than 15 per cent of an employee's income in a given year; that all bonuses over $2,000 must be based entirely on objective performance criteria outlined in advance by each ministry; and that all bonuses and severances must be made accessible upon public request under FOIP legislation.

I look forward to the debate on this bill and to the support from colleagues in this House who want to ensure that the government's system of severance and bonuses is fair and reasonable and respectful of taxpayers.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with the requisite number of copies of Supreme Court ruling 416, also known as Baron versus Canada, that I referenced during second reading of Bill 32, Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act. The ruling found that the terms "reasonable and probable grounds" and "reasonable grounds" are equivalent. I hope this helps all members as we continue debate on this important piece of legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of section 3 of the Tobacco Use in Canada report for 2013 by the Propel Centre for Population Health Impact at the University of Waterloo. This report emphasizes that even though we have made great strides in Alberta to reduce the number of youth introduced to and involved in smoking, there is still much to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder – I understand you have two tablings – followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Today I'm tabling another hundred copies of a letter campaign that's being sent to Minister Horne and Dr. John Cowell, which my office has been copied on, letters expressing the important concerns about the planned privatization of laboratory services in the Edmonton region.

I also have the appropriate number of copies of a postcard campaign that is calling on this PC government to include appropriate human rights protections in the new Education Act. The postcard reads: "Last fall, the government refused the New Democrat Opposition's calls to include the Alberta Human Rights Code or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in their new Education Act." I have the appropriate copies of this, including our caucus members' feet and legs, which is very interesting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter from Chris Wiese. I have the appropriate number of copies here. This letter is in regard to the out-of-country health care funding. Unfortunately for Chris, she had to receive a very rare surgery dealing with her back, that only two other Albertans have had done in the last 13 years. That surgery is not performed here in Alberta, which has been confirmed by surgeons. Unfortunately, she's caught in a maze of bureaucracy where she was never funded, and the minister's office said that they had no knowledge of the case and then subsequently quoted from the letter, unfortunately.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to table a letter, with the requisite copies, dated October 25 from a constituent of mine, Kathleen. She's a young home-schooling mom, and she states that her tune until the day she dies will be that "parental choice, parental choice and parental choice in education and all areas of life, should be guarded and cherished at all costs."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Johnson, Minister of Education, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the Government Accountability Act the annual report update 2012-2013.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will now proceed with two points of order, the first of which I believe was raised by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Citation, and proceed.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and it's with respect to a comment made by the Government House Leader which was in response to a question that I had put forward. He indicated that through my question I was besmirching the reputation of an independent officer of this Assembly. In essence, the Government House Leader is alleging that I committed a contempt in this Legislature. You will know, as you stated in a decision earlier this afternoon, that committing a contempt is exceptionally serious, and that's what this member has alleged that I have done.

If you review Hansard, my question was in regard to any potential actions by the Premier, her office, the Public Affairs Bureau, ministers and their staff, but never once did I say in my question or imply in any way whatsoever that the Ethics Commissioner had delayed the public reporting of his decision. It was all in reference to the Premier. So the member's comment that I besmirched the reputation of the Ethics Commissioner is completely unfounded.

Mr. Speaker, besmirching the reputation of an independent officer is considered a contempt, and equally so it is, I would suggest, a contempt or, at least in this case, a point of order in terms of 23(h), (i), and (j) that you cannot allege that a member of this Assembly has in fact committed a contempt. This Government House Leader has been in this Assembly for a long, long, long time, and he should know that alleging that a member in this Assembly has committed a contempt should be done more appropriately through the normal procedures. Give notice that a contempt has been committed in this Legislature, but do not state it here in this forum. Obviously, making a statement, unfounded, that a member has committed a contempt in this Legislature would clearly violate 23(h), (i), and (j).

Obviously, my suggested remedy is that his comment be withdrawn and that he apologize. I would suggest, given your ruling less than an hour ago, that anything less than that would be inconsistent with the ruling that you provided one hour ago.

Mr. Speaker, in no way whatsoever did I besmirch the character of an independent officer. This member knows that. No clarification is required because the question was very clear in all circumstances. So I ask that the Government House Leader withdraw the comment.

Thank you.

3:10

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you wish to chime in briefly?

Mr. Eggen: Very briefly, yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Why don't you proceed, then? Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I support this member's point of order here. Looking at 23(h), (i), and (j), certainly it was clear that this member was asking if the Premier could confirm that no one from her office, from the Public Affairs Bureau, or any ministers from her staff had made any requests to this officer. Certainly, that is what he was aiming at.

I think that we have to be really careful to not throw around this word, "contempt" and the implications of it without the proper gravity it deserves. I know that things were heated here, but I don't want for this member to throw fuel on the fire by using the word "contempt" in any way besides the very grave circumstances in which it's framed within our standing orders and within parliamentary procedures.

So that's certainly the way I heard it, quite literally. I have the question here, and that seems reasonable. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it seems to me that the hon. member doth protest too much. He spent a considerable amount of time in his questions in the last few days casting aspersions on an officer of the Legislature. In my response, which perhaps was a little bit overly enthusiastic, I was drawing attention to the fact that it is quite contemptible to actually cast aspersions on an officer of the Legislature. In fact, when officers of the Legislature are appointed, as when judges are appointed, they take an oath of office. They move from whatever relationships they may have had in the past into a relationship of neutrality.

As the hon. member has indicated, I do have considerable experience as both a member of this Legislature and as a member of the bar, and in my experience it is on exceedingly rare occasions – and there are ways to deal with those rare occasions – where officers of the court, where judges, where officers of the Legislature stray outside those oaths of office. They take their oaths of office seriously, they do their jobs diligently, and when one wants to question their credibility or their integrity, one ought to do it very carefully and in appropriate ways.

We have privilege in this House to have freedom of speech and to have a wide latitude in what we say, but as it says in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 98, such a privilege confers grave responsibilities on those who are protected by it. By that I mean specifically the Hon. Members of this place. The consequences of its abuse can be terrible. Innocent people could be slandered with no redress available to them. Reputations could be destroyed on the basis of false rumour. All Hon. Members are conscious of the care they must exercise in availing themselves of their absolute privilege of freedom of speech. That is why there are long-standing practices and traditions observed in this House to counter the potential for abuse.

It goes on to say in another paragraph that paramount to our political and parliamentary systems is the principle of freedom of speech.

And then it goes on to say:

However when debate in the House centres on sensitive issues, as it often does, I would expect that members would always bear in mind the possible effects of their statements and hence be prudent in their tone and choice of words.

Mr. Speaker, it is my submission that the tone and choice of words in the three questions that were raised by that member were, in fact, contemptible. I did not raise a question of contempt of the House. I don't think I even used the word "contempt" in my response. I think I used a word that the . . .

An Hon. Member: Besmirched.

Mr. Hancock: Besmirched, yes. I think another word was – I forget the word. It started with an F, as I recall, but it wasn't a bad word. But I did not use the word "contempt" because I did not want anyone to confuse contempt and contemptible, which would be an appropriate word.

The hon. member who raised this point of order is a member of the Law Society, I believe, or at least was for a short time. He ought to know that when we select officers of the Legislature and appoint them, that, yes, the process is done by a legislative committee that is an all-party committee and that, yes, the majority of that all-party committee are members of the government's side. That's the nature of the parliamentary tradition. That's the nature of our rules and orders.

But when the selection is made and when the appointment is made, you have an officer of the Legislature who is every bit bound to do his duty or her duty in the same way we as members are bound to do our duty: with due diligence and with respect to the office and with integrity. In my experience, Mr. Speaker, they do it. In my experience, when you appoint a judge, people can always say: well, that judge was appointed by a Conservative government or by a Progressive Conservative government or by a Liberal government. Once they're appointed, it matters not. They owe their duty to the court. Once a legislative officer is appointed, they owe their duty to the Legislature, and they owe no duty to their previous friends of any nature. In fact, they have a duty to separate themselves from any conflict. That is the experience we've had from all of our officers of this Legislature in my long experience in this House, Mr. Speaker.

I would suggest to the hon. member that he doth protest too much. He was raising questions, and he can say: well, I didn't ask directly about whether the officer of the Legislature is delaying his report because of interference. No, he didn't ask that directly, but it was the sum and substance of his question, Mr. Speaker, and it was entirely wrong.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members who have participated in this point of order.

Let me review what happened here based on the Blues that are available to me at this point. At approximately 2:21 p.m. the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills rose and said: "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to tone it down a bit." He went on to say:

Given that the Premier is surely concerned about the results of November 22, her advisers are even lowering the bar to saying that 50 per cent plus one is a success and given that the Ethics Commissioner's office has publicly stated that his report on the investigation of the Premier awarding a billion dollar tobacco litigation contract is complete, can the Premier confirm that no one from her office, from the Public Affairs Bureau, or any of her ministers or their staff has made any request to delay the report from being released prior to her leadership review? Be very careful with your answers, sir.

It was at that point, you may recall, that I rose, and I said the following:

Hon. members, you know from previous rulings and previous rules that we're all pledged to abide by that asking questions about a matter that is under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner is out of order. Please . . .

Then there were interjections of various kinds, and I went on to say:

Excuse me. I have the floor at the moment. Please, if you're going to pursue questions of that nature, rephrase them in such a way so as to not violate that rule.

Would somebody from the government side care to comment?

Then I recognized the hon. Government House Leader, at which point we had an interjection from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, who said, "Very carefully," at which point the Government House Leader then started to say:

I would be very careful to say, Mr. Speaker, that I find all of the questions that have been raised in this area very offensive. The independent officer of the Legislature who performs the role of Ethics Commissioner takes an oath of office, at which point the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was heard interjecting, and it's in Hansard. "Talk about the Premier" is what he said.

Then it went back to the Government House Leader, who tried to continue by saying:

He has fulfilled his office with integrity, and this House should respect . . .

At that point Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was audible enough that Hansard picked up his comment, "Talk about the Premier," at which point the Government House Leader kept going and said:

If there are any questions about the operation of that office, they are rightly called before a legislative committee . . .

Then he was interrupted by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, who is on record as saying, “The Premier,” at which point the Government House Leader then tried to carry on:

. . . and it is totally inappropriate to besmirch his reputation here.

That’s what the Government House Leader said. At that point the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills rose on a point of order. Did I skip the part about “besmirch?” I think I mentioned it. Sorry; I’ve got two pages that I’m wrestling with here. In any event, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills then stood and said:

Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Saying that I besmirched his reputation is a complete lie.

And that is in Hansard as well.

Now, there are many issues at play here, and I’ll try to be as brief as I can. I think I have mentioned this at least three or four, maybe five, six, or more times, that it’s not only what gets said in the House but also how it gets said and the context within which it can be said and, in turn, the context within which it is interpreted.

But what I want to zoom in on here is what I had just said, after the first question with its preamble was posed by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. You all know from previous rulings and previous points of order that it is inappropriate to reference a report that we know is forthcoming, an investigation that we know is under way by any officer of the Legislature that holds the position of the Ethics Commissioner, or for that matter it could apply elsewhere.

The point here is that if you’re going to go down such a path, you have to be aware of what the consequences will be. You can be guaranteed that I have to rise; it’s my job to rise. I can’t ignore rules. I have to stand and defend the rules. Otherwise, what chaos would we have here? I find it very unusual, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, that you would pursue that line of questioning when I know that you know better.

By the same token, Hansard will show that in the middle of question period something that we frequently see during Committee of the Whole occurred. We had an active exchange between a member of the front bench in government, that being the Minister of Human Services, and the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, as I just illustrated. It went like a ping-pong ball, back and forth. It’s very difficult for the Speaker at that point to maintain the law and order that is required.

Number two, it’s also questionable who provoked whom in this circumstance. Some people could argue, “Well, it was comments made during the question.” Others could say, “No, it was the answer that was attempted by the minister.” “Well, no, it was this person.” “It was that person.” Then the finger pointing starts, and then the verbal jousting starts, and we get absolutely nowhere with it other than to say that the tenor of the question as it was phrased and asked, I think, is inappropriate. But, by the same token, so too was the Government House Leader’s response when he said that he may have been overly enthusiastic in his comments just a moment ago. And he may well have been. But you can appreciate, given what I just mentioned, what provoked that comment.

I want to repeat what I said earlier, before question period started, that I believe our officers who serve this Legislature are unelected individuals, not like yourselves; are of the highest calibre available to us all as members; and that they serve us as impartially and as appropriately as they can and they must. So we’d better be very, very careful about any casting of aspersions on such officers. Hopefully, there won’t be any in the future either deliberately, directly, or indirectly, whichever way.

I would hope that we can also abide by the rule that members who are not elected and not sitting in this Assembly have no way of defending themselves, and they don’t have the immunity that all of us in this Assembly have. They are helpless in that respect, and I have admonished on numerous occasions some people in this House for that point as well.

Finally, I’m going to conclude that both members here, including the Member for Edmonton-Calder on behalf of the ND opposition, have made their points. They’ve clarified their points. Speaking specifically to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and to the Minister of Human Services, this is a case where, for better or for worse, in whole or in part, you’re both right. It reminds me of an old Certs commercial, “You’re both right,” because there have been some leeways given and taken in this instance.

Nonetheless, the record will show that both members had a chance to clarify their positions on it. Hopefully, we won’t have that repeated going forward.

That closes that point of order, and we can move on now to Calgary-Shaw. You also had a point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under citation 23(h), “makes allegations against another Member,” and (i), “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.” I am rising, as you know, on the Minister of Transportation’s response to the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat’s first question in question period today, in which the Minister of Transportation was asked:

It was with relief that Calgary residents learned the government has fast-tracked a modification to Deerfoot Trail with widening at Southland Drive. Clearly, this was a local, even a provincial priority considering the intense amounts of traffic on the Deerfoot every day. Yet this priority wasn’t on Alberta Transportation’s three-year plan. The minister is always trumpeting about the accuracy of his list posted on the website, but every Albertan can see that this very important project wasn’t even listed,

“this project” referring to widening at Southland Drive along Deerfoot Trail.

Now, the minister stated in his response some sort of accusation – a completely baseless accusation, I would add, Mr. Speaker – that I had somehow taken some sort of credit for this upgrade along Deerfoot Trail at Southland Drive. This was clearly not a provoked response from the minister, and I would assure you that this is not an occasion where we should refer to Beauchesne’s 494, where we have to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident, because his statement, sir, is categorically false.

I would simply ask the minister to immediately table any documentation that he has where I have discussed or mentioned, much less taken credit for anything that is done to Deerfoot Trail, either at Southland Drive or anywhere else for that matter, because this does not exist. It is absolutely categorically false that I did that, Mr. Speaker, and I ask that he withdraw these fabricated statements and apologize.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I assume your last sentence was directed to the Minister of Transportation, not the chair?

Mr. Wilson: That’s correct.

The Speaker: Thank you for clarifying that. It's been an interesting day.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to assume that what the hon. member quoted out of the Blues or whatever he's got is correct. On that basis I will relay to you my recollection of a document or a postcard that the member sent out actually taking credit for a construction project at Macleod Trail and 22X. Having said that, if I did hear incorrectly about the work that we're about to do at Southland Drive and Macleod Trail, if that is indeed what was said, then I do withdraw those remarks, and I do apologize because I didn't hear correctly, and the hon. member is right to call me to task on that. I have no trouble being corrected.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Deputy Premier, you wish to chime in on this?

Mr. Lukaszuk: No. I have a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is it relative to this point of order?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Not to this point of order.

The Speaker: Okay. Can we just hang on, then, for a moment?

Is there anyone else? I'll be very brief, hon. members. The comments that Calgary-Shaw made, which pretty much verbatim rephrased the question asked by Cypress-Medicine Hat, I will not go on with other than to say that he left out one sentence which Hansard has. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat concluded his preamble with the following question: "When will the Minister of Transportation admit that his list is meaningless and his decisions are purely political?" I would assume that that's what got the minister going a little bit, and the minister did in fact say:

Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it highly entertaining that the hon. member would criticize this particular project when the Member for Calgary-Shaw actually sent out a document to his constituents claiming he had to take credit for it.

And then he went on with:

You . . . should get your stories straight and things of that nature.

Hon. minister, if there was a misunderstanding or a misspeak from you, we will accept your withdrawing of the comments that you made in reference to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and, Calgary-Shaw, I would hope you would accept that. I see a nod of the head, indicating a yes from Calgary-Shaw, so that will conclude that matter, and we'll leave it there.

Thank you for the accommodation there, hon. minister and hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Deputy Premier, you had a point of clarification?

Point of Clarification

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will inform you of a couple of new developments, and perhaps you will have an opportunity to ponder on it over the weekend and then provide . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, are you rising under 13(2)?

Mr. Lukaszuk: No.

The Speaker: Clarification?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes. Sorry; 13(2). Yes. Sorry about that.

The Speaker: Okay. We need the citation.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as you recall, earlier today, before question period, you rose and you made some comments that were very clearly directed at the Member for Airdrie at length, to which – appropriately so, I would imagine – the Member for Airdrie stood up and apologized, and you said that that is the end of the matter. As you recall, in your comments what he apologized for is waging allusions and allegations that the Speaker of this Assembly is biased.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that it's been brought to my attention by my staff that, perhaps while you were speaking, at 2:08 exactly the Member for Airdrie from the Chamber . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. That's not true.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, just hang on.

Can we just get to what it is that you want clarified? Hon. member, would you conclude by saying what it is that you want clarification on?

Mr. Lukaszuk: At 2:08 the Member for Airdrie on his official Twitter account said, "For the record – the Speaker of the #ableg is very biased & I did not call anyone corrupt – check the Hansard."

Following that, Mr. Speaker, the same Member for Airdrie sent a message to me saying, "Like you w/Seniors Tom, Gene often uses his position to bully people helpless to defend themselves. I'm sincere in saying that."

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not sure what it is exactly that you're referring to, but I'm going to have a look at it, and perhaps I'll make a further comment later.

Now, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you had a point of clarification?

Mr. Saskiw: A point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order on a point of clarification?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes.

The Speaker: Well, I haven't encountered this before, but let me hear briefly what your point of order is.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The Deputy Premier here today made an allegation towards one of our members that he had in fact communicated through Twitter while he was in the Chamber. That is categorically untrue, so I'd ask that the Deputy Premier withdraw that statement. It was done outside the Assembly. There is absolutely no authority within this Legislature to try and limit the free speech of our members outside this Assembly, and I would like you to withdraw it, sir.

Mr. Lukaszuk: The member is correct. As a matter of fact, he perhaps misses the point. The point is not where the Member for Airdrie was, and if he wasn't in the Chamber, I take that back. He may have left.

Mr. Speaker, what I was trying to get at is this. In an apology in the Chamber – and it's a time-honoured tradition – it is the Chamber that has to decide whether the apology was sincere and to accept the apology of the member. What I'm telling you is that at a time that is very close in proximity to his apology, he recounts exactly what he said in the Chamber. As a matter of fact, he not only calls you very biased, but now he calls you a bully that bullies helpless people. I would suggest to you that even though you put an end to the point of privilege, obviously the apology was not sincere when the member within minutes publishes to the whole wide world what his true intentions and true feelings are.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to take this under advisement and make a comment on it as soon as I've concluded my review of the matter. That will stand where it stands for the time being.

Let us go to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 33

Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate November 18: Mr. Rodney]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 33, Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act. As the Health critic for the Wildrose I'm optimistic that this government will take concrete actions to reduce tobacco use in Alberta and, I have to emphasize, especially amongst our youth.

I'd like to talk a bit about the things that I like in the bill. Then I'm going to talk about the things that I'm quite concerned about in the bill. I'm going to be asking the Member for Calgary-Lougheed some questions. Hopefully, during this debate he'll be able to clarify some of the things that I know our caucus is very concerned about.

I'd like to say, first of all, that I like the fact that the bill, if and when it's proclaimed, will ban smoking in vehicles with children present. Now, some of you might be thinking: wait; all bills passed by the Legislature become law. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that's not exactly true. We've passed many private members' bills that have been put forward by many members in this Assembly, and they still have not become law.

I hearken back to the private member's bill from Edmonton-Meadowlark. I believe it was in 2012 that it was passed, and it's been sitting there. It was specific about supporting the ban on smoking in vehicles with children present. We are actually lagging in the country on this. Even cities and towns in Alberta were ahead of this government on this. Every province except us and Quebec has an explicit ban on smoking in vehicles with children present. So to me, the question to the government is: if they are so intent on banning smoking in vehicles, why did they not pass the private member's bill from Edmonton-Meadowlark when it passed in this Legislature?

I also support the ticketing of those who sell or give tobacco to minors. Again, we're in last place in the country on this one. I know it's better late than never, but we were the last province to ban giving tobacco to minors in this country. There were loopholes; I understand that. You could give them tobacco or even sell to them in private while the rest of the country said that this practice is wrong. We can see the results of these loopholes in our youth smoking rates. While a $500 ticket sounds like a lot for an offence, I think it's a good thing. What is the cost to the public for someone that smokes and gets sick? Twenty times that? A hundred times? A thousand times? It's something that I think about.

I want to talk for a minute about the bill itself. I have to say that when you're flipping between Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, and then we have to go back to the Tobacco Reduction Act, and then we have to go to I think it's Bill 206, that the Member for Calgary-Currie has brought forward, it's a lot of flipping.

I just want to talk a bit about Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act. The title is repealed, and the following is substituted, and we're now going to call it the tobacco and smoking reduction act. My question to the associate minister is: if you're going to reduce smoking and legislate where you can and cannot smoke, how are you going to deal with those addicted, and what smoking cessations are you going to be providing? You are on the right path, but you have many people that smoke, and I can't find anywhere in the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act that you're dealing with anything to do with helping people with smoking cessation.

I also would like to ask you – we know addictions and mental health is a huge issue, and I have to say that from the people that I talk to in the field of addictions and mental health, the government has done a terrible, terrible job on addressing that. What addiction counsellors dealing with smoking have you consulted with, and what have they told you to deal with in your bill, and how are you going to be dealing with it?

Another concern I have is about mandating the minimum amount of products per package. I find this interesting, where you're trying to go with this, and maybe the minister can stand up and explain to me the rationale behind this. I know that you're going to be telling me that it's going to stop the youth or, for that matter, adults from buying one cigar or any of that. I find that interesting as someone who, I guess, used to like the occasional cigar. I know that's a terrible thing to admit in this Legislature, but it's just one of those things. We all have maybe what we could call some skeletons in our closet. Mine was one of those skeletons. There was nothing better than a cigar and a glass of wine, and I know that there are people here that have cigars and a glass of Scotch or whatever it is. I could truck off to the store in my weaker moments of life and buy that one cigar, and now you're stopping me. If I decided to do that again, I'm now going to be buying six cigars or 12 cigars or 15 cigars. I'm not sure if you're aware, Minister, but they freeze very well, and they don't get – is it stale or outdated?

Mr. Wilson: Stale.

Mrs. Forsyth: So I'm trying to understand the rationale behind that. I think you're going to find that a huge problem. I know that this is aimed at kids, and I know that it's aimed at some of the flavoured tobacco. I have to tell you, Minister – and I know that you have young children, and they're soon going to get into that crazy teen age, and I honestly hope that you never have to face this. Kids like to pool their money, so there's no problem pooling their money, and all of a sudden they've got a package of six or eight or 12 cigars. You know, I'm very, very concerned about that in the legislation, who you consulted with on that, what rationale you had about picking that. I know you talk about dealing with it in regulations. I think that's something that has to be put on the table.

3:40

Two other comments. I can tell you that we're hearing about it, and it's considering the impact of the bill on our cultural communities. I need to know – and I need you to get up and speak to this – if you have consulted with our aboriginal community as far as smudging and some of the things that they do. [interjections] I need you to get that on the record, if you would, please, for the aboriginal community.

Also, about the hookah bars, if you consulted with them. I can tell you that the ones that we've talked to are very angry about it, have had no consultations whatsoever. In fact, after I've finished speaking, I'm going to one of the hookah bars that are in this city to find out about the consultation. You've clearly indicated that there are approximately 30 of them. If you could please tell me one that you've consulted with and talked to about the impact there.

Despite some of these wrinkles I do believe that this bill has good intentions, and it's fighting the ongoing public health challenges that are involved with tobacco use. I think, Minister, if you're very, very serious about the impact of tobacco – we met with a group today, which you introduced, in fact, in the Legislature, that I had the privilege of meeting with also, about a new drug that they're going to be lobbying for in regard to putting it in our drug act. I know that my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is going to further ask you about some of those things.

We have the ability to speak once in second reading. We're going to be listening very intently to the debate. We would like the government, on the record, to speak up about the consultation process in regard to the aboriginal community, the consultation process in regard to the hookah bars, the consultation in regard to who you've spoken to, what addictions counsellors. I know that there is a very well-respected doctor in Edmonton that's written a book on addictions and smoking. He has not been consulted.

What you're going to be doing to provide Albertans with some cessation products: are you going to include that under the Health Act? There are so many different ones. There's the patch; there's hypnosis. I know you have a huge website on calling in regard to smoking, but really that's just kind of a reach out. So if you'd be prepared to answer some of those questions, I'll be pleased to continue the debate on the bill, and I will tell you that we will be bringing amendments forward to make this bill even stronger.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is not yet available.

Let us proceed with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great interest in speaking to Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act. I think that this is a progressive bill, that we are certainly considering supporting here as Alberta New Democrats. We know that there's lots of unfinished business. There's always a tension there between the people who seek to sell tobacco products and to get new customers and new markets for tobacco and the public interest, which is what we should be representing here, both people's physical health and, I would suggest, financial health and other factors as well. So I think that we are in agreement here in this Chamber that we have missed the mark, and we need to address the issue of youth smoking. So we're very pleased to see that this legislation is coming forward as a way to reduce the rate of new people in this province picking up the habit of smoking and to shy kids away from lifelong addictions.

We do recognize, though, Mr. Speaker, that we're still seeing a 10 to 13 per cent smoking rate amongst teenagers in Alberta, and we'd like to see that reduced, right? It's very crucial that we attack this at a very young age. Really, it's at that junior high stage, I think, when people start to smoke. I think it's important to look at this from a geographic standpoint as well and from a socio-economic standpoint, too, because, of course, we see certain hot spots where smoking is still being picked up at a much higher rate than 13 per cent, more like 30 or 40 per cent. Amongst certain income groups as well we see a very much higher new smoking rate amongst children.

In 2009 a Health Canada survey testing retailers selling tobacco found out as well that we had a very poor record amongst retailers in regard to selling tobacco. This has been a big problem here in this province for a long time because it's been sort of under federal jurisdiction, yet it seems as though the feds have pulled back from that monitoring aspect, so there's been a vacuum, I think. While we might have laws about selling tobacco products to young people, if you don't enforce the laws, then, of course, they're not worth the paper they're written on. I think that this is a part of what we need to look at here as well, not just tightening up these rules but, in fact, speaking to the spirit of the title of the bill, which is tobacco reduction, in the widest way. So not just making laws about access to tobacco but actually enforcing and exploring a number of different avenues by which to do that.

At this point Alberta as well is the only province, as far as I know, that does not have provincial legislation to curb youth access, so I think this is very important. Youth can't possess tobacco under current laws, but there doesn't seem to be much available to stop the people who provide them with tobacco. I think we really need to tighten that up, and this is a good step forward in this regard.

Then another aspect of this bill: it's just worth noting that together with the province of Quebec we're the last two provinces that don't have legislation against smoking in vehicles where children are present as well. Some municipalities have picked up the slack on this. Certainly, we do require this law to be in keeping with, I think, the scientific understanding of the negative effects of second-hand tobacco and also to be in line with a standard of what's expected here in a modern, industrialized society.

I think a concern we have as Alberta New Democrats is about the resources that would be devoted to the enforcement of this legislation. You know, really, how many officers are we going to have checking on sales? Of course, you can't really have a lot of new people picking up the tobacco habit without the market being there for them to buy the cigarettes, right?

We don't have a very large black market for contraband cigarettes in this province at this point, so we're lucky that way, but we need to mitigate against the possibility that that might occur in the future, when we finally raise the taxes to where they should be on tobacco products. You know, that sometimes does result in potential black market situations, which youth can access even easier than buying tobacco from a retailer.

Again, further to enforcement, we need to know when officers will instigate more thorough investigations. Will we test retailers and people working at retail places about selling to minors? Obviously, this is really key to whether the legislation will work or not.

As well, we've been thinking and reflecting on this whole hookah café situation and concerns around the fact that, well, you know, youth are more attracted to this kind of thing and may still be able to purchase tobacco-like products, which the government has labelled – and I think I would concur – as, in fact, gateway tobacco products, and then still smoke them out of a retail place or a café. We do understand as well the workplace hazard concerns around second-hand smoke, even with the hookah pipes, and that should take priority. I'm still curious to know as well, as the previous member just mentioned, what sort of consultation has taken place in regard to this. That is more out of curiosity, because while I don't think I have any hookah cafés in my constituency, I do see them popping up around the city and around the province as well, and we do know that there are different communities that enjoy the hookah as part of a cultural habit.

As well, I'm just wanting to know if the government is going to be taking any steps to curb youth access in regard to tobaccolike products outside of just simply restricting the location in which they can be smoked.

In sum, then, Mr. Speaker, we are happy to see this legislation coming forward, and it does largely have our support as a necessary piece in the puzzle to reduce youth smoking and so forth. Certainly, I think we might have some amendments, especially around, I think, the treatment of smokers and to be able to give them an opportunity to quit and so forth, but otherwise I think we do have some widespread general support for Bill 33.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Does anyone wish to take advantage of that opportunity?

Seeing none, let us move on, then, to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In rising, I won't be repetitive of what my fellow colleagues have already said, but there are some concerns that I have about the bill. I first want to state that any attempt to reduce the amount of smokers has to be taken in good faith. I mean, if we can reduce the number of people smoking and the number of people who are subjected to second-hand smoke, it's always a good thing. As we talked about with the other bill earlier, you know, to keep children from taking up tobacco use is also something that is admirable.

But I have some really serious concerns, particularly when it comes to First Nations, dealing with issues of smudges and ceremonies and how this bill is going to affect off-reserve ceremonies dealing with tobacco products and tobaccolike products. This is significant because now we're not talking in terms of a social use as much as a ceremonial and very much a religious type of issue. In my view, there needs to be that exemption just out of respect for another culture. That is absolutely significant, and it's a big concern.

I have more than one reserve in my riding and some very active band members in not just the local economy but in the provincial economy. What I'm looking for is to make sure that their rights are protected. Granted, we know that they come under federal jurisdiction, but whenever a law unintentionally – and I'm going to say this right now, that it appears to be unintentional – infringes upon their ceremonial rights, their rights, then we need to take a look at it and make sure that with whatever measures we have to take to correct it to protect that interest, we do the best that we can.

Beyond that, I look forward to some of the amendments that will be brought forward to hopefully strengthen the bill. I think that there are a good number of people in this Assembly who support the idea of reducing the amount of tobacco use and doing what we can. There are people who have concerns about the whole nanny-state kind of mentality, and maybe we can put in some measures that would relieve that concern. Again, to try to get as much bipartisan support for any bill I think is always a good step. Hopefully, the hon. minister will be open to some of the amendments, even to amendments the minister could bring himself to address these concerns, to make sure that the bill does what we want it to do and does not necessarily infringe upon anyone's rights.

With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. Government House Leader, you have a question or a comment?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to state to the hon. member and his colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek in the words of one of my law professors, who used to come in and say, "Read the act; read the bloody act," that section 2 of the Tobacco Reduction Act says:

2(1) Nothing in this Act affects the rights of aboriginal people respecting traditional aboriginal spiritual or cultural practices or ceremonies.

(2) Subject to section 4, this Act does not apply to a building, structure or vehicle, or a part of a building or structure, that is used as a private residence.

So in the act itself, the act that's being amended – so it doesn't need to be repeated in the amending act – there is a specific exclusion for the very things that the hon. member was concerned about, traditional Alberta spiritual or cultural practice. I do apologize for my opening part of that; I couldn't resist it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that was an act. I thought that was, as the minister might have said earlier, sort of exaggerated – I can't remember his quotes from earlier in the day – passionately expressing his opinion.

I would say that the question is legitimate in the sense that, yes, I'm reading the act. When I see the act and I see a contradiction and it's not clear to me, all I ask is to clear it up. I don't need the drama, but I'll read the act, and once my questions are answered, then I get to make that decision. But I will ask the question always to make sure that it is clear and it's absolutely clear, without any misinterpretation whatsoever.

I think the hon. member will realize, not that it happens regularly, that every now and then there's something that gets passed in the House that was not intended to infringe upon anybody or anything, and what we wanted to do was just make sure and have it clarified. If it's demonstrated with passion, I'll take the demonstration along with the answer to make sure that it's done. I do have real concerns always – always – whenever I look at what affects the people of my constituency, and those concerns are important to me. I did bring that forward, and if that is the correct answer – and I will go through the act, as the member suggested, and read the act.

I will throw one thing out in defence of all the opposition. The timeliness to get to read the act is something that we sometimes do struggle with and not necessarily any individual piece. When they come one after another, one after another, and you're trying to make sure that you read every act and catch every detail, there are times we miss one detail. It is possible, and that's why we rise and ask the minister to clarify. We make sure that what we read is exactly what we understand, and if there is a mistake, we correct that.

In defence of all the members of the opposition, we go through the acts as much as possible. We do rely upon our other members to do their research, and if we see things in an act that might contradict or particularly the interpretation, the way something is written, we would bring that question to the floor of this Assembly to ask the minister who is drafting or sponsoring this act to make sure that these concerns are addressed. Sometimes that is actually the most efficient way to deal with the issue, to go right to the minister and say: can you assure us that this is where it's at?

We really don't need the drama, but we'll accept the drama as long as the answer is correct, and I'll take both. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We have one minute left. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. I would apologize for the drama. I was just having a little fun on the answer, but it is clear in the act. Section 2 of the Tobacco Reduction Act makes it clear that the rights of aboriginal people respecting "traditional aboriginal spiritual or cultural practices or ceremonies" are excluded from the impact of the Tobacco Reduction Act, and that is not affected by the amendment in this House today.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. We'll accept that as emphasis to illustrate the point on this particular occasion.

Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Anglin: I respect that, but what I just want to say is that a lot of times when we get these amendment acts, we don't have the original act in front of us. We have to go research that as fast as possible. But I will accept that answer, and I chuckle. He didn't remind me of any professor in college, but I did have a second grade teacher who had that kind of discipline, and I do remember her quite well.

4:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak to Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. We as the Alberta Liberals are also supportive of this act. I'm glad that finally we're doing something to keep tobacco products out of the hands of young children because, as you know, you can walk around schools or department stores and there are lots of kids there walking around smoking cigarettes and, you know, all the other tobacco products.

The bill will restrict the use of tobaccolike products, defined, subject to the regulations, as a product, other than a tobacco product, composed in whole or in part of

- (i) plants or plant products, or any other extract of them, or
- (ii) other substances prescribed by regulation.

A similar means banned the smoking of tobacco in public places. That is a very good idea, Mr. Speaker.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This bill also incorporates the aspects of the federal Tobacco Act, banning the sale of tobacco to minors. That was long overdue, and finally we're getting something done. I think we've been taking baby steps in restricting the use of tobacco in Alberta, but I think this will go a long ways on access to tobacco products by minors.

This bill will also enable the minister to regulate the minimum number of units of tobacco products allowed to be sold at a time. I do have a concern with that, Mr. Speaker. I have even seen adults buying, like in India. People will go to the store, and they will only be buying one cigarette or two cigarettes. So I also have a concern with this. How will this help to curtail the sale of tobacco products to kids? As the member before pointed out, kids can pool money, and they can, you know, buy maybe a pack of cigarettes and then go and divvy it up among themselves. I don't know how we will be able to enforce this part of the law.

This bill will also cover the ban on smoking in vehicles with children. However, it will not remove vehicles used as a private residence, an exclusion that was included in the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012. We had Bill 203, I believe, that was a private member's bill from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. That bill was passed unanimously by this House, and it just sat there. It never got proclaimed. Now I think that bill is dead. That bill should have been proclaimed into law, and now we could have taken a step further to improve on that bill.

The Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act is also being incorporated into the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. That act prohibits the purchasing of tobacco by minors, and it was supported by a $100 ticket. You know, that $100 ticket: I think we should be spending more money on the education part, too.

Maybe fines are a good deterrent, but I'll give you an example. I was talking to this young student. She got a parking ticket for 30 bucks or 40 bucks, and I said: what are you going to do? She said that she's going to go before the judge and say: "You know, I can't pay. What are they going to do?" So we can hand out all these fines to kids, but how are we going to get them to pay those fines? Are we going to put them in jail? What are we going to do? I also have a concern about that. This kid told me outright: "What are they going to do to me? I'm just going to go before the judge and say that, you know, I've got no money. I can't pay. I'm a student." So I've got a concern about that ticket, too.

This bill is also going to enhance the protection for nonsmokers and the effective enforcement of existing tobacco legislation. Both of these points are in the bill. As the federal government has lessened the enforcement of the Tobacco Act of Canada, to fill the gap, the province is enabling that enforcement through provincial law. That's a good thing.

The province has deemed it time to again limit the availability of youth to access tobacco and tobaccolike products. This is being done through this bill and also Bill 203.

By requiring a minimum number of – you know, I addressed that before. I have a concern there that I reiterate again.

Also, talking about the hookahs, according to Dr. Barry Finegan there is a widespread misconception that these so-called "herbal" products are somehow a healthy alternative to tobacco. Many people assume because they are flavoured and filtered through water, and do not contain nicotine, that they must be harmless. But this is not the case. The results of our study suggest that herbal tobacco-free waterpipe products, used over the long term, has the potential to produce cancer, cardiovascular and lung disease – just like cigarettes. And for those who already have heart or lung disease, even just one waterpipe session could be dangerous.

So no matter how we smoke, whether through water or a cigarette or, you know, what they call electronic cigarettes now, no matter how we consume them, they are going to be dangerous to one's health.

With this bill, you know, if you could somehow enforce it with the youth so that they will not become the addicts of tomorrow, this will save us lots of money on health care costs and on our productivity. When people go for a smoke on the job – I used to work in the mines, and I used to work other places. People used to go out to have their cigarette, and that was time lost to productivity. So I think education and enforcement should go hand in hand. I hope the government will look at those two and see how we can enforce it and spend more money on education so we can educate the kids and more people that smoking is dangerous for our health.

With that, Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting this bill, but those are the concerns that I have raised. I hope the minister responsible will keep those in mind and address those issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak with the highest regard and approval of this particular piece of legislation. I also rise today to speak to this bill with approval as a smoker. I started when I was 13, and I am absolutely aware, like everyone else that started early, that there's peer pressure, supposed prestige. That's what drives a young person to smoke.

In 2011 over 15 per cent of kids in Canada between grade 6 and grade 9 had tried smoking. This piece of legislation is, in my mind, crucial to the healthy development of our children. Bill 33 amends the Tobacco Reduction Act, that was originally passed in 2005. We can be proud that in Alberta the current smoking in ages between 15 and 19 is the lowest in the country, at 8.3 per cent, as a result of that. Clearly, as was demonstrated today in the copies that I tabled of the Tobacco Use in Canada report, there's still much that can be done.

In 2011 more than half of all current smokers aged 15 to 18 said that on the whole they usually have someone else buy their cigarettes for them. Others said that they bought their cigarettes from a store despite being under age. Of those that said that they had bought cigarettes, three-quarters had been asked for ID or had previously been refused sales.

I think we all have a little snicker when we see that picture in a convenience store that says: if you don't look like George, you can't buy cigarettes. It's a picture of a senior citizen. That's a snicker, but the unfortunate fact is that we need to have those there in order to protect our youth.

So this is good news. I believe this legislation will strengthen the enforcement, make it apply to people that buy cigarettes for you, and strong fines for stores and anyone caught giving tobacco products to minors will hopefully help to stop adults from providing tobacco to youth and children.

The younger the people are when they begin using tobacco, the more likely they are to use it when they're older. More importantly, people who start using tobacco when they are younger are more likely to have trouble quitting than those starting later in life, and I can say that first-hand as someone who's in the middle of a cessation period for probably the 10th time in my lifetime of smoking. This means that if we can keep kids tobacco free until age 18, most would probably never start using it.

As well, the addiction is just as strong for young people as it is for adults. Most teen smokers say that they would like to quit, and many have tried to do so without success. Those who try to quit smoking suffer the same withdrawal symptoms as adults. Mr. Speaker, in several different attempts to quit, I've been told by cessation experts that it is almost harder to quit than heroin as an addiction.

I'm glad that this piece of legislation encompasses all types of tobacco products. Spit, smokeless tobacco, or chewing tobacco are all big problems. Research has clearly shown that teens who use these products are even more likely to become smokers than non-users. Some companies even promote using spit or smokeless tobacco as a way to help quit smoking. This is exceedingly dangerous, and there's no proof that these tobacco products help smokers quit smoking.

As a smoker I've tried many times to quit. I'm hopeful that I'll be successful with this current attempt. I urge everyone to support this bill. Our youth are our future. We as parents, legislators, and adults should do everything we can to keep them safe, strong, and healthy. This bill will give us more assurance that our children are introduced to tobacco use less and will use less easily. It will give us stronger tools against those who promote its use.

I'm asking all to approve this bill and move it very quickly to royal assent. Anything we can do to promote a better quality of life for our young Albertans is our moral obligation and, in fact, our duty.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Wellness to close debate – oh, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Sorry. I thought you had me on the list. My apologies, Mr. Speaker.

I'm rising and am pleased to support this bill, Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. I do have a couple of questions for the associate minister, and perhaps he could come back and answer us in Committee of the Whole or third reading or whenever.

As a parent of a 21-year-old who started smoking when she was 16 and as a person who has never smoked myself, it was incredibly disappointing to me personally how easy it was for her to walk into almost any grocery store or corner store. Quite honestly, even though the sign said, "You must be 25" or "We ID under 25," she was able to obtain cigarettes even in a small little hometown, whether it be Innisfail or Red Deer or Edmonton. She had no problem getting access to cigarettes. She was, quite frankly, never asked for ID.

I've had very frank discussions with her about smoking. Our family is acutely aware of the dangers of smoking. My father had throat cancer due to cigarette smoke specifically, and he now breathes through a hole in his throat. It has impacted his life. He got cancer at 52 from smoking. It essentially ended his work life, and ever since then he just never sort of recovered from that diagnosis of cancer. I had hoped that that example would have been enough for my current 21-year-old. Unfortunately, as parents we try our best. We do certain things, but we're not always that successful. My 21-year-old today still smokes, albeit she tries to smoke less.

I share the hon. member's discussion about trying to quit smoking. My mom has tried. My mom and my daughter continue to smoke even though my dad breathes through a hole in his throat. I know it is a lifelong battle for them. It's not an easy thing to do. My mom started smoking at the age of 11. Same thing, had older siblings who smoked, thought it was cool, got hooked. You know, after 40 years of smoking, that's quite a big habit to break. She has often tried, and she has often said that it was one of the hardest things she has ever had to do, including her own two bouts of cancer. She has found quitting smoking harder to do than battling two bouts of cancer. Neither of those were caused by smoking, interestingly enough.

So I applaud the minister trying to do anything we possibly can that reduces the ability of those that have access to cigarettes that shouldn't, and I also am very happy to see that the provisions for the penalties on the person who provides the smokes do appear to be higher. My own personal opinion is that I think they could be a lot higher. I think the biggest deterrent for those who sell tobacco to underage people or don't check for ID is a monetary fine, so I would love to see if the associate minister could reconsider that and perhaps make it stronger.

The question that I do have, though, is that in some conversations that I've had with some people who used to be providers of tobacco through legal means and people who smoke cigarettes currently, they've indicated to me – and I honestly don't know if this is true or not – that people under the age of 18, while they may not be able to buy cigarettes, can work in a corner store and actually sell the product. I have to wonder if that's actually accurate. I don't know, so I'm asking the minister if that is accurate. If that is true, I'm wondering if a provision could be put into this act to say that not only can an underage person not buy cigarettes, but in no way, shape, or form should they ever be working in a grocery store or wherever that sells tobacco. They should never be the person who actually has to sell the cigarettes as well. That's a pretty big issue for me, and I think if we could have that clarity, that would be fantastic.

The other thing that I ask about is the enforcement because right now it really isn't that difficult for underage children to get cigarettes. You know, my 21-year-old is 21 now, but she had friends at the time that she was underage who had no problem getting cigarettes. That wasn't that long ago, and I don't know that much has changed. So I just wonder about that.

I'm happy that the hon. Minister of Human Services clarified the position for aboriginal people. I think that that's fantastic. I appreciate that the original tobacco act made sure that they had their protection, so I think that's fantastic.

The other thing that I would just add is that tobacco sales seem to be so different from alcohol regulation. Tobacco sales are not regulated, but alcohol is. On tobacco sales there is no licensing, but on alcohol there is. So one would just wonder if the minister has had the opportunity to think about that because there seems to be quite a differential between selling, again, an alcohol product that is legal and has detrimental impacts on our health as well. Alcoholism is a severe disease that affects many, many, many people.

Liquor merchants must have a liquor licence for retail, and that's approximately 700 bucks a year. They have to hire staff that are 18 and over. They have to have mandatory training for all staff members, provided by the AGLC. The clerks must refuse to sell to anyone under the age of 18. The clerks must request photo ID for anyone who appears under the age of 25. The stores must post signs and posters supplied by the AGLC. Stores that fail to comply with that can have their licence to sell suspended or revoked.

So that might be a huge avenue for the minister to make this bill a lot stronger. If he created a licensing avenue for those that sell tobacco, then you have something that you can actually pull back from them if they break the enforcement of the rules. It seems to be a very logical and easy thing to do. The AGLC is already doing it for liquor, and liquor and cigarettes I don't think are really that much different. I mean, they're both a legal product that we worry about being sold to underage people, that have detrimental health effects, and that cost the health system, quite frankly, a lot of money.

4:20

Liquor cannot be sold to anyone who appears to be intoxicated, and servers of alcohol are required to take the ProServe course. They can be fined if they don't have the ProServe licence. There might be the opportunity to even go further with the people who sell tobacco to ensure that those who sell it understand that if they break the rules, they are able to enforce it.

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission only enforces the Tobacco Tax Act, which pertains to contraband tobacco. Alberta does not require a tobacco licence. The city of Edmonton does – that's interesting – and they charge $428 a year. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw mentioned, Calgary also charges for a tobacco licence. They charge $153 for the first licence and $117 for a renewal. They at least have the ability, the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, to actually have some repercussions if you break the rules or if you do any of those things. So that would be, I think, an added bonus to this act if the associate minister was willing to make it stronger.

I totally agree that Bill 33 does require the tobacco retailers to ID someone that appears to be under 25. I think that's a fantastic first step; I a hundred per cent do. A lot of stores have that. Most of the 7-Elevens say: we ID under 30. They all have that already. The problem is that, look, lots of times it's just not happening, and no one is enforcing it. If there are no repercussions to you and no enforcement, you just sort of get sloppy with actually having to do it.

It also does say that Bill 33 will absolutely post signage that says: it's illegal to sell tobacco to minors. No question. But as we all know, the posted speed limit on highway 2 is 110. Many people don't go 110. The only way to slow people down is through enforcement. We invest in enforcement because we know that traffic collisions are a huge cost to the system and also very dangerous.

If there's not enough enforcement in this bill or not enough ways for us to actually have an impact on those who are breaking the rules, such as pulling their licensing, then we come into a problem of: yeah, great; you can say that you don't sell to under-25s, and you can say that you have to post it, but if nobody is doing that, it sort of defeats the purpose of everything that we're trying to achieve. I do think that the government is actually taking a very strong voice here and trying to achieve quite a bit.

The other thing that I like is that Bill 33 also allows the government to prescribe training of employees by retailers in the regulations. I think that that's fantastic because the more people we educate, even through the training system, the more you might be able to spread the message in a much different way on the detriments of smoking, the cost to the health care system, and the impact on your family as you go through that process.

Now, I'm very fortunate. I think I tried to smoke twice. It was terrible. I never really had that urge. I'm pretty lucky that way. But my brother smoked, my father smoked, my mom smoked. I grew up in that home in the '80s where you walked in and there was kind of like that funky blue haze, you know. [interjection] Yeah. We all remember that.

I also remember that in the '80s you could go to businesses, and at the front reception they smoked. That has sort of gone by the wayside, thankfully. Most bars, restaurants, all of that: we don't have to deal with that anymore. So I think we're on the path to educating people.

I think the Associate Minister of Wellness could really make the bill a lot stronger if he considered taking a look at what is done with liquor licensing and applying it to tobacco licensing and also ensuring that the enforcement of it is actually able to be done.

Then, if at all possible, if the associate minister can just clarify if people under the age of 18 are actually allowed to work in a grocery store and are actually allowed to run the smokes through the machine. I don't think they should be allowed to do that if they can't buy them. If you could do that, I'll leave that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, is there another speaker?

Then I will recognize the hon. associate minister to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would sincerely like to thank all members for their participation and specifically the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, not only for her comments today but also to salute her good work over the years in health and justice and beyond, and additionally the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for his efforts in the health and wellness of Albertans in general but specifically in this case.

Thank you, too, to the members from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre as well as Calgary-McCall and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I certainly do appreciate all of your questions and all of your support. I do believe this is something that does run across party lines. To the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: I thank you for your support and also for sharing your personal story. This is political, it's personal, but it's also professional as well, and you spanned all of those in your remarks.

To the hon. Minister of Human Services: I would like to express my deepest gratitude, not only for addressing the question on First Nation ceremonies being exempted, which was really quite clear, entertaining, and educational, but for his leadership in this regard over the years and across a number of ministries. This is a long, interesting, difficult fight, and it's going to take all of us to get through this.

Mr. Speaker, to be clear, since we are debating Bill 33 and not Bill 206, the private member's bill, I will not be addressing items in that bill, which deals with flavoured tobacco products. I just wanted to make that distinction.

With respect to the questions on smoking cessation, as the members are aware, we launched our 10-year tobacco reduction strategy at this time last year, and it includes specific actions regarding cessation products. The steps that outline specifics, Mr. Speaker, are outlined there, so I won't take the time of the House to outline them here. I'm just going to invite hon. members to review the document.

Now, there was a question regarding the buying and freezing of tobacco. I understand that might be a concern, but that simply is beyond anyone's control, and we really do not expect that to be a widespread issue at all.

There is a fair question, a good question with respect to: who have you talked to? Who are the stakeholders that you've met with? It's a long list, Mr. Speaker, but I think it's worth mentioning. By the way, this is part of the list. There's a longer list, but most folks will recognize Action on Smoking and Health, Alberta Education, Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, Alberta Health, Alberta Health Services, Alberta Human Services, Alberta Justice and Solicitor General, Alberta Medical Association, Pharmacists Association of Alberta, the Alberta Policy Coalition for Chronic Disease Prevention, Alberta Public Health Association, Alberta Treasury Board and Finance, Canadian Cancer Society Alberta-Northwest Territories division, College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta, Health Canada, Heart and Stroke Foundation, the Lung Association of Alberta and Northwest Territories, and the University of Alberta School of Public Health, amongst others.

With respect to the question on fines one of the most important pieces of this bill is in fact the inclusion of provisions to fine someone for the furnishing of tobacco sales to a minor because this is indeed the first line of defence against a minor acquiring a tobacco product. I believe that addresses that question.

With respect to enforcement this legislation will give employees of the AGLC as well as peace officers the right to issue fines for contraventions.

One other component of the legislation worth mentioning at this point in time would require some products to have a minimum number of tobacco products per package in an effort to make it less affordable for younger Albertans, and it's quite obvious that we have full agreement that that is the major thrust behind this bill.

I would like to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, with just a few points that I trust are worthy of having the House and Albertans ponder them. Every Albertan – and I think we can all agree – especially our youth, should be able to enjoy a life free of preventable, tobacco-related disease and death. With this legislation we're looking at preventing children and youth from using these products and protecting them also, obviously, from the harmful effects of second-hand smoke.

These actions will strengthen tobacco control in Alberta and protect the health of our young people. If and, I trust, when passed, this legislation will fulfill our commitment to Albertans' health, to sustainable health care, and to continue moving towards our commitments which we outlined in the tobacco reduction strategy from just a year ago.

We know that a major tool in the fight against tobacco use is legislation. Tobacco use is the leading cause of preventable disease and death in this country, and here in Alberta in the neighbourhood of 3,000 people die every year as a result of tobacco use. In Canada smoking causes approximately 30 per cent of cancer deaths and more than 85 per cent of lung cancers. Bill 33 will do a great amount with respect to dealing with this so that we can have Albertans who are happy, healthy, and out of the hospital a lot more than they are.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a second time]

Bill 39 Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act

[Adjourned debate November 7: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 39, the Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act. In Alberta the basic rate of auto insurance is regulated by the Alberta Automobile Insurance Rate Board. This basic rate only covers third-party liability and accident benefits. Coverage for collision, comprehensive insurance, and endorsements that extend coverage such as loss of use of vehicles are only monitored by the Automobile Insurance Rate Board, not regulated. It has been argued that since owning auto insurance is required by law, the government should step in and regulate the basic policy for affordability.

In 2003 the government of the day introduced changes to the Insurance Act which, in effect, enabled the Automobile Insurance Rate Board to regulate basic insurance coverage in the province of Alberta. This was done because consumer premiums were increasing dramatically due to escalating claims costs here in the province.

Mr. Speaker, we know that overregulation is never good for any industry. It creates red tape, it bogs down businesses, and it hurts our province. The oversight of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board, however, was an important initiative in Alberta's history because it showed how regulation could be meaningful when well planned and effective, thanks to the extensive lobby efforts from both industry and consumers alike here in the province. While overly cumbersome regulation is never good, effective regulation like Bill 39 can actually better enhance consumer protection and increase the competitiveness within the insurance industry if handled right.

Bill 39 is important because it allows for firm-by-firm consideration of premium rate changes instead of using a pan-industry approach. It is worth noting that Alberta had been the only insurance market in Canada with a pan-industry adjustment rate. What this means is that individual insurance companies have traditionally not been able to set rates based on increases and decreases that satisfy their respective consumers and stakeholders. Insurance firms have had to adopt increases and decreases based on what an industry as a whole has been approved for by the AIRB.

For example, if one company needs to levy a 3 per cent increase in premiums to continue operation and another needs to increase a levy of 7 per cent and yet another had asked for a decrease of 1 per cent, the AIRB would look at the industry as a whole and set a rate for all companies, say, like in the last few years, a standard 5 per cent increase. Even if you were with a company that desired to have a 1 per cent decrease in rates, in the end all consumers would end up having to pay 5 per cent more for basic coverages.

With the changes in Bill 39, rather than seeing a 5 per cent increase for all three of those companies, each company would then have to prove why it needed the increase or why it could take a decrease in premiums to the AIRB, creating more competition amongst insurance companies here in the province. I'm happy to see an amendment to the Insurance Act in Bill 39 that will allow insurance companies to file on that firm-by-firm basis, and I believe this is what Alberta consumers want in the insurance industry here in the province.

Bill 39 also makes changes to the legislation regarding reciprocal insurance exchanges, or RIE. The definition of a reciprocal insurance exchange is a group of subscribers exchanging reciprocal contracts of indemnity for interinsurance with each other through a principal attorney. This class of insurer will now be faced with the same laws that govern investing by insurance corporations headquartered in the province of Alberta and will face formulas for determining required reserve holdings and guaranteed funds.

Another amendment allows the minister to demand any information for analytical or policy-making purposes from an RIE. I believe this will allow for better policy and legislation going forward, putting all these companies on a level playing field.

Something I did find interesting in Bill 39 is the removal of cabinet's authority to dictate dispute resolution. One question that I do have on this piece of legislation is: where will the dispute resolution process for premiums be set, and who will look after them? Will it be regulated by the AIRB, the Alberta Insurance Council, or will it be in the sole purview of the superintendent of insurance? If the minister could stand and speak to this concern, I would be grateful.

Today I am in support of this bill because it introduces more competition into Alberta's insurance industry. Competition breeds innovation. Innovation breeds better products and better prices for consumers. I must commend the hard work of the AIRB and the superintendent of insurance along with the government employees and industry stakeholders who came together from the private sector to propose this good piece of legislation. I believe it can be very successful here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to get up and say a few words about Bill 39, Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act. I do see mostly positive developments out of this particular bill. It seems to be moving to a file-and-approve kind of system for premium adjustments, which, to my understanding, means that an insurance company will now have to apply for adjustments to their rates on an as-needed basis as opposed to the old system, where the Automobile Insurance Rate Board would make industry-wide adjustments.

Mr. Speaker, since 80 per cent of Albertans already carry additional auto insurance coverage, regulating these rates in the same way as basic coverage I believe will help Albertans to afford and also understand their insurance rates when they receive them in the mail. Particularly since so many Albertans depend on their vehicles, of course, in all manner of ways in our lives, we want to make sure that insurance rates are fair and affordable here in the province of Alberta, both of which objectives, I would suggest, we've had problems with here in the past.

It's very important that we address additional coverage because, really, that additional coverage, besides third-party insurance, is really necessary and actually essential. Then another part of this, too, is to ensure a fair, transparent system by which we set the rates and premiums that works for the consumer, not necessarily just being dictated by the insurance companies.

The Alberta New Democrats have been at the forefront of moving towards more regulation and oversight of insurance rates to protect the public from this kind of free rein that has resulted in, I think, really exorbitant rates in the past, and compared to other jurisdictions as well, we've had problems here. Back in 2003 the Conservatives introduced what was called then, I think, Bill 53 after years of calls to reform insurance regulation. The Alberta New Democrats pointed out that Albertans paid some of the highest insurance rates in Canada at that time, and they were then still rising further at shocking rates. The Conservatives tried to address this by freezing rates, and then the insurance companies locked themselves into a 57 per cent increase.

We have to mitigate, Mr. Speaker, against these kinds of roller-coaster effects, and it's important, you know, ultimately for us to move towards a public insurance system here in the province of Alberta.

Some of the problems associated with Bill 53 do persist. We've drawn attention here to the fact that the board reviews rates, essentially behind closed doors, and we just find out later what's going on, with no opportunity for the public, for consumer advocates to challenge rate increases.

As we see with Bill 39, the government is repealing the complaint procedure provisions and leaving a bare-bones regulation as the only means by which Albertans could address these issues. It's quite a serious issue, really, too. You have all of the bills and expenses you have for living here in the province, and auto insurance would rank very high amongst those overall expenditures between rents or mortgages and car payments and utilities. Insurance for vehicles can be one of those fourth- or fifth-highest single-ticket items that people need to purchase here in the province.

While rates for basic coverage have dropped since the legislation was adopted in 2004, rates on additional coverage have increased, by our measurements, by 41 per cent during that time period, meaning that rates are still increasing for the majority, the vast majority, 80 per cent, of Albertans, who carry both kinds of coverage, both third-party and collision and so forth. If one type of coverage is regulated and the other one is not, insurance companies can still raise the rates on the additional coverage to meet the profit margins that they wish to while regular Albertans continue to see no real change to what they get out of the deal.

We do support legislation that will bring the rates on additional coverage into the same regulatory framework to give people some clarity and, I would suggest, relief as well as knowing where their money is going. We also do support a greater degree of flexibility so that the rates can be responsive and reflective of the needs of the public. However, some legislative safeguards I think still need to be in place, Mr. Speaker. Other provinces, for example, use company-specific premium adjustments. Some of them have higher rates than Alberta; some of them have lower.

We are concerned most specifically, though, that many of the details about the move to company-specific premium adjustments are being left out of this bill. Many insurance providers, for example, are small companies who need clear and stable guidelines to be able to effectively manage their business and plan for the future. Also, how do we know, really, that we can rely on the board's calculations or the information being provided to them when there are no standards in this legislation on these matters? Right? If all Albertans who drive a vehicle depend on the board to set the rates that will apply to their insurance, it seems logical, then, as an extension, that they should deserve to know exactly how those rates are decided and that the information being used to decide them is accurate and fair and providing the best coverage.

I guess the other question I have, you know, is: what are the factors that will go into making these decisions? What are the details on how this change will in fact be accomplished? How will the premium adjustment accounting and review procedure differ from what's being used under the current industry-wide model? Then, finally, what oversight of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will the government or the minister have if the system is not responsive or reflective for Albertans and/or insurance companies?

It's as though we're building through evolution what you can actually achieve by having a provincial insurance system available across the province, right? We're slowly catching up to build those regulations into third-party coverage and now collision and other additional coverage. We need the transparency and oversight that can dictate the rate changes and justify logically the rate changes. You know, I would suggest that a much more reasonable way to move further is to just provide a province-wide insurance scheme, as they do have in places such as British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Quebec has a very interesting no-fault system that has considerably lower rates than Alberta does and so forth.

I would suggest that the grounds available for dispute resolution here in Alberta with the complaint resolution regulation are not as comprehensive in this section of the Insurance Act, which the government is trying to repeal. The previous section envisioned the public somehow being able to access the complaint procedure for determinations of fault and the availability of insurance and several other factors. So can we be assured, Mr. Speaker, by this minister that the grounds will be included and will be included in these regulations? I'm wondering as well: why aren't there arbitration procedures that are built into this legislation as well?

There are interesting developments here with this particular Bill 39. As I said, we certainly are encouraged by the choice to move after additional coverage and to regulate that, but there are some details that I have just pointed out here and will continue to do so as we move through the various readings of Bill 39.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to speak in support of Bill 39, Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act. At the outset we are supporting Bill 39 as this bill is to amend the Alberta Insurance Act, and the changes affect three different areas of insurance: reciprocal insurance exchange, auto insurance premiums, and the New Home Buyer Protection Act.

[Mr. Amery in the chair]

The reciprocal insurance exchange, if this proposed legislation is passed, will strengthen solvency requirements for insurance companies and improve general market conduct. In addition, it will be an offence to purchase unlicensed insurance in the province, and that is well and good.

Auto insurance premiums. If this bill is passed, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will regulate both mandatory and optional auto insurance premiums. The auto insurance industry will move to a file and approval system, where each insurer will need to apply for premium adjustments on an as-needed basis instead of an annual industry-wide rate adjustment. That is good as well.

The New Home Buyer Protection Act. If this bill is passed, all warranty providers will operate within the same set of rules, and all warranties will be held to the same standard.

You know, when we do a sectional analysis, Mr. Speaker, section 14 is the hallmark of this bill, and this section of the bill changes section 602 of the act rather substantially by allowing the regulation of premiums for both basic coverage and additional coverage for automobile insurance. Currently section 602 of the act enables the Automobile Insurance Rate Board to adjust basic coverage premiums once a year industry-wide. The proposed changes put the onus on industry by moving the province to a file and approval system, in which each insurer will need to apply for premium adjustments for both basic coverage and additional coverage on an as-needed basis at any point in the calendar year. So premium adjustments could go up or down depending on the needs of the company.

Section 15 of the bill repeals section 603 of the act, which eliminates the regulation respecting discounts and surcharges charged on premiums for basic coverage.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I have a question there, Mr. Speaker. Should this bill pass in the Legislature, would the insurer still be permitted to charge surcharges on premiums for basic coverage and additional coverage? If the answer is yes, does repealing this section in effect allow the insurer to charge exorbitant surcharges on premiums, or would this be regulated somewhere else in the Insurance Act?

4:50

Also, in section 28 the bill amends the New Home Buyer Protection Act by repealing section 29 of this act and substituting it with substantially revised wording pertaining to regulations of home warranty insurance contracts. The current wording passed third reading in November 2012 and was given royal assent in December 2012. The new proposed wording of section 29 of the New Home Buyer Protection Act ensures that all warranty providers operate within the same set of rules and that all warranties be subject to the same standards. However, this bill seeks to lessen the cabinet's ability to make regulations concerning warranties. Here's a comparison, Mr. Speaker. The proposed wording is:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) prescribing policy conditions that must be included . . .

And the current wording is:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) prescribing mandatory conditions that must be contained in a home warranty insurance contract.

You know, there's the comparison of both of them. Does the new legislation's proposed wording for section 29 of the New Home Buyers Protection Act effectively lessen the Lieutenant Governor in Council's ability to make regulations? I have concerns there about section 28.

As Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada that doesn't regulate both basic and additional automobile insurance premiums, Mr. Speaker, this will bring Alberta up to speed with other provinces. As auto insurance in Alberta is available through private insurance companies, there's no government auto insurance plan in Alberta. Currently there are about 70 companies operating across the province in the auto insurance market. All vehicles registered in Alberta are required to carry a minimum of $200,000 coverage for public liability and property damage.

The primary role of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board is to regulate premium levels for basic coverage, third-party liability, and accident benefits; to monitor additional coverage, collision and comprehensive; and to approve the rate plans of new insurers that want to sell auto insurance in the province. Each year the board reviews and sets the allowable percentage change for premium levels for basic coverage under the individual insurance rating programs. That percentage change also applies to the grid rating program.

The board also reviews the notices by insurers for offset adjustments, which permits insurers to adjust one or more rating variables under their rating programs for basic coverage by up to plus 10 per cent provided the overall effect on their books for business revenue is neutral. Although since the creation of the board mandatory premiums have decreased by 30 per cent – that's what the government claims – according to the Edmonton Journal the premiums for basic coverage have gone up by 5 per cent.

Anyway, overall this bill, you know, looks pretty good. With this bill, as I said before, Alberta will be up to speed with other provinces.

Those are the questions I had, and I hope the minister can answer those concerns. With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. We can support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you for your comments. I certainly concur that this is a step in the right direction. I guess one thing that occurred to me when I sat down before – and I just wanted to ask you about it – is that considering that we compel by law individuals to purchase automobile insurance to operate an automobile here in the province of Alberta, then, I think, is it not our responsibility to make sure that we provide a very regulated and reasonable product that people can access and get that insurance from? Ultimately, I would suggest offering a province-wide insurance scheme that could answer the requirements of that law in the most economical sort of way possible. What do you think about that?

Mr. Kang: Well, you know, we have proposed government auto insurance before. We have been pushing for that. But if we can't get the best of both worlds, we have to live with what we have, so one step at a time. I agree with you that we have to make the insurance affordable for people so that they are not driving without insurance and causing accidents and causing bodily injuries and killing people out on the roads. That will again come back to the taxpayers and haunt them because we will have to have some kind of coverage through some kind of levy to cover those costs. So I think it would be a good idea to have government insurance coverage.

Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker.

Then I'll recognize someone to close debate.

Okay. Then I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a second time]

Bill 40 Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act

[Adjourned debate November 5: Mr. Quadri]

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker to the bill is the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often, but there are times when we get to rise to support a bill, and I rise to, and hopefully members on this side of the House, the opposition, will support this bill.

This bill is necessary to bring our legislation in line with federal legislation. Some would call it a housekeeping bill, but it's actually more than that. It also brings us in line with international jurisdictions dealing with international investments. Bill 40 helps Alberta synchronize with federal legislation related to international investment disputes. The act will give power to the International Center for Settlement of Investment Disputes, which is based in Washington, DC. This center was established in 1966 and has authority in 157 countries.

I note that this convention has actually been in place for over 40 years. Canada signed the convention on December 15, 2006. I had not realized it wasn't ratified until I saw this bill. The convention with the World Bank was ratified on November 1, 2013. The World Bank has notified all its convention signatories of Canada's ratification pursuant to article 75 of the convention. The convention will come into force in Canada on December 1 of this year in accordance with article 68(2) of the ICSID convention.

Now, the convention is a facility of the World Bank. Its purpose is to provide facilities for conciliation and arbitration for investment disputes. It is not the authority; it is a mechanism. In accordance with provisions of the convention between contracting states these disputes are now subject to the rules and regulations of the contracting parties or other nationals of all contracting states. British Columbia, Newfoundland, Nunavut, Ontario, Saskatchewan have already adopted similar legislation. Several of Canada's trading partners such as the United States, the United Kingdom, Japan, China, Germany, France, and Chile have already ratified the convention. However, some of our trading partners such as Brazil, India, and Mexico are not yet signatories.

The convention does not conduct the arbitration itself but offers institutional procedural support on arbitration and conciliation commissions, tribunals, and other committees to conduct such matters. It is basically an international treaty, but it is the mechanism for resolving the disputes. It's not like the WTO; it's not like NAFTA in that treaty sense. The convention itself will use different types of international treaties to help settle these disputes.

Now, the arbitration or conciliation proceedings will be conducted in accordance with the convention rules and regulations or any other additional rules under any other treaty, and they will be processed in accordance with the convention. The legal dispute has to exist between one of the parties to the convention or one of the member states or a national of another contracting state. It must also be a dispute of a legal nature that directly relates to an international investment under one of the treaties.

One of the significant aspects of this convention will be the ability to streamline investment disputes and remove the necessity of having to access local courts. Now, it will not eliminate that, but it can remove the necessity to go to the local courts. That's a tremendous advantage to, say, some very complicated international contractual agreements. Our province, with our industries, probably has more than most other provinces in Canada mainly because of our oil and gas sector, our resource sector. It has the potential to be both expedient and efficient in helping to settle international investment disputes, and it can do it in a timely manner. Now, there are no guarantees, but it does allow our industries and even our government, when it contracts internationally, to have a mechanism with the convention members to settle these disputes should they arise.

In the 40 years since the convention has been in existence, it has served other jurisdictions very well, and there are no viable reasons why it shouldn't serve Albertans well also. So, Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask that the members of my caucus support this bill. I understand that there will be some amendments possibly offered by some of the other parties. I will take those amendments on their merits and look at them and see if they apply, and if I'm going to support them, then I will make that recommendation, possibly, to my caucus to support them.

What I want to close with is that when this bill was first introduced, there was some confusion, I think, particularly, based around some of the treaties, whether this was based on the World Trade Organization or was something comparable to NAFTA. It's not. Those are treaties dealing with international trade. All this convention does and what it brings to Alberta, particularly, and to all of Canada is that when a dispute arises and it's a legal dispute, it gives one more mechanism to help resolve that dispute.

We tend to think of agreements being very simple, in the nature of: I agree to do one item, and someone agrees with that, and we sign a contract. Unfortunately, agreements today, particularly international agreements, are never simple. They can usually be extremely complex. Having agreements amongst the signatories of this convention sets a framework of how to resolve disputes, and I can't think of anything that works better in the business community than when two parties engage in a contract, and they have the ability, should something be misinterpreted or should something go astray, a mechanism to solve this.

I would ask my fellow caucus members here in the Wildrose in particular to support this, and I will wait and see what amendments are being brought forward by the other members of the opposition.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make a few comments on Bill 40, Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act. I've just become recently sort of brought up to speed on this bill, and I believe that it's a continuation of the federal government ratifying the convention of the settlement of investment disputes from November 1 of this year. Canada originally signed onto this back in 2006. This, to my understanding, provides Alberta's assent to adopting the convention on the settlement of investment disputes.

I think that, as well, the federal government's position on the application of this bill has changed. Initially the federal government brought out their legislation in 2007, and the position was that each province needed to pass implementing legislation, but now the federal government has changed this position and said that they will bring this into force by the end of the year regardless. So either some legal opinions have changed, or they're hoping that it'll give the passing of the bills at a provincial level such as here today a little more juice to be done.

My understanding of this convention is that it limits the ability of host states or jurisdictions such as here to invoke immunity in the face of lawsuits instigated by foreign investors and provides the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes, otherwise the I-C-S-I-D, which, unfortunately, I think, has been given the name ICSID, as a dispute resolution body. Perhaps more importantly, it seems to exclude the possibility – correct me if I'm wrong – of domestic court appeal when an arbitration award has been made against a jurisdiction. Ultimately it allows a foreign investor to go through an arbitration process, get a judgment, and then enforce that judgment in the host state, say, for example, here in Alberta, without the host state being able to do more than just argue their case before that arbitration body.

There are currently other investment arbitration bodies that Canada and Alberta are subject to – right? – that are similar in form. It seems as though this convention has been widely implemented, over 149 countries to date. However, these arbitration methods have also been criticized by a number of jurisdictions and by individuals both here in Canada as well as in a number of South American countries to the point where I believe three of them have withdrawn from ICSID.

We do understand that there's a desire for security and consistency for international businesses, that this bill is aiming to somehow assist, but, respectfully, the province of Alberta, in our minds, has to come first, and really there are serious questions about whether this is the best deal for either this government or for the people of Alberta as well.

So we have these concerns. I'll put them forward, and I would like everyone to consider them most judiciously. First, I would like to focus on the centre itself and then, second, in relation to the broader implications of this bill here to the province of Alberta.

First, the arbitration centre that's being brought in by this bill, the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes, ICSID, has, I think, some significant issues in and of itself. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about the quality of the arbitrators that might be brought in to make decisions on behalf of all of us here in Alberta. One particular arbitrator in this centre is a gentleman known as Francisco Orrego Vicuña. Mr. Orrego Vicuña was the ambassador for Chile for quite a number of years under the Pinochet dictatorship. He is currently an arbitrator, and his presence under ICSID's arbitrating board has caused, as I said, at least three countries in South America to withdraw from this treaty.

Before signing this bill, I think that we need to take careful pause to think whether it's appropriate for Señor Orrego Vicuña to be deciding whether Alberta legislates in its own interests when something has gone wrong, right? Of course, we have serious reservations – and I'm sure all of you do, too, now that you know about this – that one of the key, important members of the Pinochet dictatorship in Chile is making decisions here in the province of Alberta. You know, I think that it causes us to pause, certainly.

We're talking about, Mr. Speaker, potentially many billions of dollars that could be arbitrated using this new ICSID policy, and we've come to find out as well that ICSID does not have a process or a mechanism by which they release claim value. This is according to article 48.5 of this convention. So I don't really feel comfortable locking us into an agreement until we get a full picture of where we're going with this. The examples that we have seen, that we've managed to find that have come out of ICSID decisions we know are very significant and can involve up to billions of dollars. We need to know how we can be able to review those decisions in our own court, right? If we're signing over the power to review those decisions to ICSID, a branch of, I guess, the World Bank, then I think it's very important for us to pause for a sober second thought on this issue.

That's the first problem that I wanted to bring up, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'd be happy to be educated further on this.

The second one is talking about my concern about future free trade agreements. In this bill we're being asked to accept a method of dealing with international disputes, international investment disputes in this case, but the arbitration method is also directly relied upon in our free trade agreement. So we can't look at this, I don't think, in isolation. For example, a recent foreign investment promotion and protection agreement, which is known as FIPA – sometimes you say these acronyms phonetically, and they make peculiar sounds – our agreement with China, uses the centre as one option for an arbitration forum or will once this bill is passed.

The Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations has told us that they are very encouraged by the federal government to pass this bill, and we can only assume that the push from the federal Harper government to sign with this centre, which has been around since the 1960s, Mr. Speaker, after all – and Canada has held out on ratifying until now. I mean, that alone gives me pause to consider this at least twice. It's based on the recent signing of the new free trade agreements that have been made between China and Europe. So our trade partners want this as an arbitration forum, and it seems as though the Alberta government is willing to oblige since they brought this forward. I don't know. I presume they're going to vote for it.

As far as I and, I think, many other people as I lay out this case are concerned, we want strong relationships with our trade partners, of course, but we also simply want to be able to protect our natural resources and ensure long-term prosperity of the province through our own laws, not to hand over that power to a foreign jurisdiction. Under our recent free trade agreement with China, say, for example, if the government does something that a Chinese oil company doesn't agree with necessarily, we would be potentially taken to arbitration, and that arbitration would be dealt with with the rules of our free trade agreement so that it would go to this ICSID centre, which would mean that it was not appealable in Canadian courts yet enforceable through our system. So a foreign company, in my view, then would be able to take over assets without our power to review it in court. The sum of this is a loss of sovereignty, and I think that we need to take a serious second look at this, right? There is a clear alternative available here – right? – not just the other arbitration centres but allowing the province to work with companies and decide what works for them, right? We're not suggesting that we limit choice for business or corporations here. We just want to make sure that the province doesn't get locked into what could be ultimately a very bad deal.

For those reasons I am putting out some very serious concerns about this bill, about the potential undermining of our sovereignty to make decisions here in the province of Alberta, our legal system to do so as well, and putting those decisions and potentially a lot of money into the hands of an international arbitration court.

I hope that this might help edify some members and provoke some interesting reflection and serious debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise in support of Bill 40, Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to support the implementation of the convention on the settlement of investment disputes between states and the nationals of other states. The Harper government announced on November 1, 2013, that it had formally ratified the convention, and Alberta is implementing legislation complementing the Canadian ratification.

On March 30, 2007, the federal Minister of Foreign Affairs introduced in the House of Commons Bill C-53, an act to implement the convention on the settlements of investment disputes between states and the nationals of other states. The ICSID convention, which provides the mechanism to settle international investment disputes, came into effect on October 14, 1966. As of today it has been ratified by over 150 countries, and Canada became a signatory to the convention on December 15, 2006.

The ICSID convention established the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes. As it is located in Washington, DC, the ICSID has close links to the World Bank, and it proposes to provide facilities for conciliation and arbitration of investment disputes in accordance with the provisions of the convention between contracting states – that is, states that are parties to the convention – and nationals of other contracting states. Pursuant to article 25 of the convention the jurisdiction of ICSID extends to any legal disputes arising directly out of an investment between a contracting state and a national of another contracting state with the written consent of the parties to the dispute. In other words, the convention provides for a mechanism under which ICSID member countries and foreign investors in those countries can settle disputes relating to the investments made by such investors.

As we have become a global village, Mr. Speaker, and we are trading with other countries and we are pushing for pipelines and all that and we will be exporting a lot more to India and China, we need some kind of mechanism to settle those disputes. I think that passing this legislation will help Alberta businesses to settle their disputes in a quicker way.

One of the important features of the convention is that it provides for recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards issued by ICSID tribunals. Awards issued by the ICSID tribunals are binding on states that are parties to the convention, and such states must enforce the pecuniary obligations imposed by the ICSID tribunals if they were contained in the final judgment of their domestic courts. I think it will save time and money for all parties involved.

The increase in cross-border investment arising from globalization has also led to an increase in the number and complexity of investment disputes between foreign investors and host governments. Foreign investors generally prefer to use a well-recognized international dispute mechanism as opposed to domestic legal systems, and ratification of the ICSID convention by Canada will enable Canadian investors in other ICSID member countries to take advantage of its dispute settlement process on fulfillment of certain conditions. Similarly, foreign investors in Canada can also take advantage of the ICSID mechanisms.

When we do the sectional analysis, Mr. Speaker, section 11 gives cabinet the power to make regulations in regard to determining

- (a) the terms and conditions under which the Crown in right of Alberta may enter into an agreement recording consent to arbitration proceedings under the [ICSID] Convention;
- (b) exempting any person or [group] from the application of an enactment or any of its [legal requirements], on the conditions specified in the regulations, to permit them to act in a professional capacity in an arbitration or conciliation proceeding.

The question arises here of what those exemptions would be and who would be entitled to those exemptions. That's the only question I have on this Bill 40.

There's another additional point to consider, and this comes from a lawyer, Paul Drager, who advises that we should also be pushing for ratification of the Hague convention abolishing the requirement of legalization for foreign public documents, 1961. Mr. Drager says that this would be a very practical measure which would allow companies and individuals to stop having to pay exorbitant fees for the legalization and the authentication of their corporate, personal, and banking documents. This would be a really practical measure to assist companies getting involved in international activities as well as individuals with international connections such as inheritance, divorce, and adoption issues. This point should also be considered in the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker.

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods if he'd like to close debate.

Mr. Quadri: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 35 Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill?
Are you ready for the question on the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 35 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 37 Statutes Repeal Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do have an amendment here today to Bill 37 with the requisite copies.

The Chair: If you could circulate that, hon. member, we'll come back to you in just a minute.

Hon. members, this being the first amendment, this will be amendment A1.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Of course, during second reading we expressed support for the overall intent of the legislation in the Statutes Repeal Act. In this party we believe that if a law is unnecessary or redundant, it should be in fact repealed.

What this amendment does, however, is that if a piece of legislation is going to be repealed, it would be put forward in the Legislature with a nondebatable motion. So if a piece of legislation hasn't been proclaimed, in this instance for five years, and is going to be struck by this legislation automatically, there would still be a requirement, a sober second thought, for members to look at that piece of legislation and at least have a vote on it here in the Legislature. It would be nondebatable. It wouldn't be a significant amount of time in terms of this Legislature, but it would give people a little bit of a pause. Before you get rid of legislation, let's have it come before the Assembly, have a quick vote on it, and determine whether or not the will of the Legislature is, in fact, to repeal that legislation.

I think this is in line with the intent of the bill. The intent is to repeal a piece of legislation that has not been proclaimed for five years. This is just one little step to make sure that we do our due diligence and have the legislation come before the Legislature one last time and have a nondebatable motion come before the floor.

I hope that the other side would consider this, what I consider a reasonable amendment. That's it for my side, Mr. Chair.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. I'm interested in what the minister will say as far as the efficiency of this amendment. It appears to be fairly straightforward. What it's intending to do is to be, I think, a little bit more efficient on its amendment of section 3, bringing clarity and, I guess, closure to the various bills that have not received assent.

With that, I would support this amendment, and I ask my fellow caucus members to support this amendment and see what we can do to tighten the bill up a little bit better and make it more efficient. If the minister has something to add to that, I'd be interested to hear why this would not be an acceptable amendment.

Thank you very much.

5:30

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just to conclude on this, what this amendment does is that it states:

Every Act and provision that is listed in a report under section 2 is repealed on December 31 of the year . . .

That's the report outlining bills that have not been proclaimed for five years. This just requires that that report be put before the Legislative Assembly . . . adopting a resolution that the Act or provision be repealed provided that

(a) separate resolutions are adopted for each statute.

So if there is a particular statute that's going to be repealed in the report, it would just be a yes/no, nondebatable motion that we would put forward here in the Legislature just to do that final bit of due diligence.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a second amendment.

The Chair: If you would circulate that one, please. Send the original to the table with another copy.

This will be amendment A2, hon. members.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The current act as presented has a five-year period in which bills that have not been proclaimed are put forward in a report, and, once they're put in that report, are automatically repealed according to the legislation.

In this province we have the biggest amount of laws, I think, probably in the entire country. If you look under canlii.org or the Alberta Queen's Printer and you look at all the statutes and all the regulations in this province, it's quite astounding.

We, of course, believe that if a law is unnecessary or redundant, then it should be repealed. This amendment simply changes it from five years for a bill that hasn't been proclaimed to a three-year period. If the Minister of Justice is genuine in saying that he wants fewer laws and that we're going to cut red tape and regulations, then he should be in support of this amendment, Mr. Chair. If there is no support for this amendment, it's clear that the intent of this legislation is not, in fact, to reduce the overall legislative burden in this province but, rather, just a mere gimmick.

Mr. Chair, I would suggest that this is a very reasonable amendment. It's changing it from five years to three years and would in fact be in line with what the minister has said is the intent of this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others to speak to this amendment? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be very brief. I think it's very necessary to indicate that just stylizing something as a gimmick doesn't make it so. In fact, there is some rationale behind the five-year period. When the Legislature takes the time and trouble to pass a bill or an amendment to a section, one shouldn't discard it easily. Sometimes it does take some time to deal with an amendment that needs more work, and that happens.

We had, for example, an amendment – I think it was to the Matrimonial Property Act – that was passed at one time. It became clear that there was a considerable disagreement with the practising bar – maybe it was the wills and estates act – very strong disagreement within the practising bar, and it was sort of a 50-50 proposition, so that particular section lay unproclaimed while we worked with the bar to determine whether there could be a workout for that particular provision.

There are not very many, but there are a few situations where you could take a look at a provision to say that there's a rationale to still keep it around while you're working out whether that might be needed or not. Three years seems like a long time, but it's not that long. The rationale to go to five years also has another important aspect to it, and that is that governments in this province are elected for five-year terms. But typically it's a four-year term, and I think now by legislation it's every four years. So it essentially takes it into another government, if you will, for that rational, sober, second-thought piece. On those two bases five years actually makes sense.

Certainly, all of us want to clean up the ledger. All of us want to simplify the laws. All of that rationale is all good, but there is actually a common-sense reason why you would go for five years as opposed to three.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I listened to the hon. minister, and what I don't quite understand or what is not clear is the importance of carrying this over into another government. I can accept the idea that you may want more time to consider. I would defer to the government to say that we need that extra two years. There's got to be a more valid reason why the extra two years would be important. When I look at the amendment, tightening this up from five years to three years, listening to the hon. minister, unless there's something else that I'm missing, I'm not sure why the extra two years is a critical portion.

Let me explain where I'm coming from, and maybe the minister can comment on it. The idea is to be more efficient. We pass laws. We work here to pass amendments and work on legislation, and it is yet to be proclaimed. So the delay of dealing with the issue is significant in many ways, but I'm not so convinced yet that three years is too short of a period. There may be a point in time – I suppose there could be examples, but I haven't heard of a particular example. But I'm looking at it on a broad-based level, which is everything that would be considered. I suppose that where I'm looking at this amendment from is that I want the government to act sooner, and maybe that's too much to ask at the moment – I don't mean that as insulting or disrespectful – in dealing with these very issues.

What I was looking at is that you wouldn't want to carry this over into the next government. The government of the day, the government of this term would want to take care of the things that it is doing. Now, given that some of this would carry over anyway had it been passed, say, within the last year of a term, that doesn't change that matter one bit.

Maybe the minister can elaborate and explain or dumb it down a little bit from the teacher to the student level that I could understand. I'd be happy to have that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I promise I won't yell at the hon. member again.

Mr. Wilson: Don't make promises you can't keep.

Mr. Hancock: Right. I'll add "today" or "this afternoon."

What I'd want to say, Mr. Chairman, is that when the Legislature takes the time and trouble to pass legislation, one should treat it respectfully, and there are times when you're going through the process of implementing bills that it can take a period of time. You can sometimes pass a bill and take a considerable period of time before you proclaim it to consult with respect to regulations, for example, and that can take a while. We passed the Education Act last year, and decidedly there's a process that was part of the process to take some time to work out the regulations that would go with it, with a whole new act. That can be an extensive process. It could be a year; it could be two years before some portions of that act are ready for proclamation. I'm not just picking on that act. It could be any act.

One of the things that we do as legislators – and it's not the most exciting piece of the work – is the evergreening of legislation. So when you bring in a bill – and the wills and estates act might be a perfect example of that – that's the sum of several years of departmental work, consulting with stakeholders, et cetera. You bring in the bill and you pass the bill, but you don't necessarily proclaim the bill or all of it for some considerable period of time. Three years is just a little too tight on that piece.

There's also the aspect that if you decide to leave something before you actually let it fall off the table, as this bill is now proposing, it behooves you to leave it long enough so that it might actually be part of the subject of the next review even of an act. One can nitpick whether three years or four years or five years is necessary, but the rationale that I would put for the five-year piece is, essentially, that it does take time for some bills, not for every bill. Sometimes an amendment gets passed and it sits there, but other times you bring something forward before you've actually done the full consultation. I'll use an example. There was an amendment to the law society act a number of years ago to allow provincial court judges to do admissions to the bar. It's not something that everybody's really interested in, but I can tell you that the Court of Queen's Bench was really interested in it, and they didn't like it.

We passed the section, but we didn't proclaim it for a period of time, and, in fact, what we did was put in place a protocol with respect to how the provincial court or the Court of Queen's Bench would co-operate with respect to admissions to the bar where a law student wanted to be admitted by a provincial court judge because it was more appropriate for them in their community or for whatever reason. That protocol was put in place for a period of time. Then the section was proclaimed later, when, in the minister of the day's opinion, the protocol wasn't working in the way that was effective. There was no particularly good way to resolve the difference of opinion, so we proclaimed it. Now, that might have been a couple of years after the thing was passed, two or three years. It was still actually a legitimate piece of legislation waiting for its time.

Three years is a little short, five years is – in the fullness of time if it hasn't been passed in five years, you ought to really consider whether you needed it or not.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the minister clarifying. I want to make one last argument, or pitch, using the very same argument that the minister provided. I don't intend to pick on the Minister of Education, but I think that is a perfect example. We do pass legislation here like the education bill, which has gone through a considerable process. It's a large bill that a good segment of society is waiting on. In other words, all the school boards are highly anticipating this bill. Now, this is not something government cannot anticipate. They know this. They know this when they bring a bill forward. They know this probably before they draft the bill, when they start their consultation.

The case of the education bill I think is a good example. I think some of the members even on the government side know this from meeting with some of the school boards this week. There's a lot of conversation about legislation, a lot of conversation about things coming forward for the school boards, so they're anticipating this. By shortening the time frame – I hesitate to say it – it will bring pressure upon the government to get that work done faster. I'm not so sure that's a bad thing. Again, I don't want to handcuff the government and say that it's so fast that you're going to do a poor job. But what I'm going to argue is that the government knows it's coming. The government gets to start its clock when it wants to. It is the master of its own destiny.

By setting that time limit – it is a time limit, in my view, that the government can reach and can compel itself to obtain. Again, we're back to the three to five years. I'm not going to disagree with the hon. minister, but I do want to use that example. Beyond the education bill clearly we have another bill coming forward which is going to be the rewrite of the MGA. I would suggest that that's going to be just as complicated or more complicated than what we did with the education bill. That education bill started before I was elected, and I watched that procedure and that process long before I was elected. It was significant.

But it doesn't change the fact that the stakeholders, the people who are most affected by that legislation, are anticipating that. They want that done. They want the regulations drafted, and they want it completed. They want it to be put into force. We're dealing with the differences between the three and five years, but I'm not suggesting we overburden the government. What I'm suggesting is that if we tighten that time frame, the stakeholders will see something that they've been anticipating and waiting for sooner, in some cases.

I'm sure this government with its qualifications and its resources could probably make that time frame. I'm pretty sure. Maybe I'm wrong, and if someone really wants to step up and explain exactly why I would be wrong, that's fine, but I'm sure they don't hesitate when they have the opportunity. I think the education bill is a perfect example, with all the stakeholders anticipating this, waiting for it to come to completion. There will be other bills just like that that affect other stakeholders on other subject matter.

So, again, what we're looking at here is trying to eliminate that limbo time and get some action on the part of the government to bring this into force and get on with the business that Albertans want this government to get on with.

With that, thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[The clauses of Bill 37 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 38 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This bill is primarily a housekeeping bill, which amends a variety of different statutes. We typically see this each session, where you kind of have a bill that has omnibus revisions to a variety of acts. When you go through the different acts that are going to be amended and the different provisions that will be altered, most of them are clarifying either a piece of legislation that has a bit of uncertainty, with the to and fro from court decisions that may throw some uncertainty into the scenario, or just the language itself is unclear or maybe just out of date and hasn't been reflected on or brought up to date in a long period of time.

Bill 38, the Statutes Amendment Act: overall, I'm very supportive of the bill in terms of the amendments that they're making. There are some substantive amendments with respect to the status that is bestowed upon certain police officers in Alberta that would put our province, it's my understanding, in line with other provinces across the entire country, and in my reading of the legislation this bill itself doesn't actually bestow extra powers or whatnot on the police officers that are in this bill. It's primarily on a ceremonial basis.

Mr. Chair, with respect to this statute there is one rather substantive change, and that's dealing with whether or not a Commissioner for Oaths versus a public notary can sign a document which we see in almost every single real estate deal, which is the relinquishing of dower rights. Right now if you want to relinquish dower rights, you can do that with a Commissioner for Oaths. That's obviously cheaper and less expensive, but dower rights are a significant right that someone has to relinquish in a real estate deal.

What this amendment does is require that a public notary do it, typically, obviously, a lawyer. Of course, that would help out the lawyers in this province with their bills if they're required to notarize the relinquishing of dower rights, and I suppose that that's a good thing. In all frankness, I do support this amendment. Commissioners for Oaths may not have the requisite legal training to provide that individual with proper legal advice on what the results are if you do relinquish your dower rights.

These bills are coming across fairly quickly. I haven't spoken with the Law Society of Alberta on this particular amendment, but I would give a very strong guess that they would be in support of ensuring that Albertans don't on a whim give away their rights and property without getting proper, qualified legal advice. As such, given the, I would say, common-sense amendment that's being put forward, I would support that amendment as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 38 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report bills 35, 37, and 38.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 35, Bill 37, and Bill 38. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: In light of the hour, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 20, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 34 Building New Petroleum Markets Act

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. Thank you, sir. I rise today to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 34, the Building New Petroleum Markets Act. I would at this time like to present an amendment. I have the required number of copies.

The Chair: Hon. member, this is the first amendment, so this will be – you guessed it – A1. If you would send me the original, please.

Mr. Hale: The original is on the top.

The Chair: Perfect. Thank you very much. Just pause for a moment, and we'll get those circulated.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The amendment that I am proposing I will read into the record. I would appreciate it if everybody would listen, and maybe . . .

The Chair: I'm sure they will in a minute, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: I'm hoping that they will support this amendment.

The Chair: I think they're waiting for you to start with bated breath, sir.

Mr. Hale: Okay. Thank you, sir. The amendment reads that Mr. Hale is to move that Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, be amended by striking out section 10 and substituting the following:

Section 11 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) The Minister shall table the general report prepared pursuant to subsection (1) in the Legislative Assembly if it is sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days of the commencement of the next sitting.

So the first portion of this amendment is striking out section 10. It basically deals with – it currently reads in the legislation that we have now that the Auditor General is the auditor of the commission. After I gave my second reading speech, the hon. Energy minister did make the statement that the Auditor General, being the auditor of this commission, is looked after under the Auditor General Act, but there is some confusion with that. The confusion is that under section 11 of the Auditor General Act it says:

The Auditor General

- (a) is the auditor of every ministry, department, regulated fund and Provincial agency, and
- (b) may with the approval of the Select Standing Committee be appointed by a Crown-controlled organization or any other organization or body as the auditor of that Crown-controlled organization or other organization.

The question is: is this new commission a provincial agency or a Crown-controlled organization? If it is a Crown-controlled organization, then it must be approved through a select standing committee in order to have the Auditor audit this commission. If it's a provincial agency, well, then the Auditor is required to audit it. Looking through the different regulations that we have and the Fiscal Management Act, it is not clear under the Petroleum Marketing Act that this new commission that they're forming with the seven board members is actually a provincial agency or a Crown-controlled organization. There is some confusion there, so in order to delete that confusion, I would like to strike out section 10. Then there will be no confusion as to who the auditor is. It will be the Auditor General. He will have power to audit this commission.

In the existing legislation on page 4 under section 8, the commission as a Crown agent, it says that "the Commission is for all purposes an agent of the Crown in right of Alberta and its powers may be exercised only as an agent of the Crown." It does not say anything about being a provincial agency. It's an agent of the Crown, so it looks to me like it's contained within both the provincial agency and a Crown-controlled organization, so I'm open to any suggestions if anybody would like to debate me on that, if they can be one hundred per cent certain that it is classified as a provincial agency. As the legislation tells us, it's with uncertainty that they make these statements. That's the reason why I would like to see the Auditor General be written into this act as the auditor.

Now, the second portion of my amendment. Section 11(1) currently reads:

The Commission shall annually, after the end of its fiscal year, prepare a general report summarizing its transactions and affairs during its last fiscal year and showing the revenues and expenditures during that period, an audited balance sheet and any other information required by the regulations.

To me, that's pretty open and transparent.

Again, in my second reading speech, the hon. minister came back and said that the annual report is looked after through the Fiscal Management Act, but when you look at the Fiscal Management Act, it doesn't quite cover it as well as the existing legislation does. It says, "The governing body of an accountable organization must prepare and give to the Minister responsible for the accountable organization a business plan and annual report for each fiscal year, in the form, at a time and containing the information" – so all it says is that it must give a business plan and annual report, which is significantly less than what the current legislation reads when it mentions a report summarizing its transactions during the last fiscal year showing the revenue and expenditures during that period and an audited balance sheet. That's specific. That tells you exactly what you're going to get from the minister regarding this commission.

Just to say that it's in the fiscal act: well, I don't think Albertans and I know I sure don't want to just see a general statement. That's not why we're here. We're here to ensure that this commission looks after the best interests of Albertans and Alberta. The only way to do that is if we can go through a full audit of their expenditures, what exactly they're doing with Albertans' resources, and there's nothing in the current legislation saying that it must be presented to the Legislature. That's why I put in section 11(2) that "the Minister shall table the general report prepared pursuant to subsection (1)." That's saying that all this information is in the Legislative Assembly if it's sitting, or, if it's not sitting, 15 days after we start to sit. I don't think that's too much to ask. You know, I'm pretty sure that everybody in this Assembly would like to see the financial report of how they're spending the money, how they're making the money so we can hold them accountable.

They are an arm of this Legislature. They are looking after resources on behalf of Albertans. They are taking the bitumen in kind and doing with it, you know, the best they see fit, which is great. They're trying to make the most money they can for Albertans, which is good for all of Alberta. But there needs to be accountability, and the only way there's accountability is if the Auditor can have a look at the books and if a full scope of his review is made available to the members of this Assembly.

I urge the government members to accept this amendment, and I'd be happy to debate with them why we should try to be more open and transparent than what is proposed in this current legislation coming forward under Bill 34. I look forward to hearing from some other colleagues and colleagues across the floor.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this amendment. I think this is one of these amendments where we need a minister to probably explain how this agency is going to be transparent because with sections 10 and 11 repealed, what we're looking for here is this report or some sort of transparency. Now, this has been the big issue, I think, with one of the provisions of the bill, that all the opposition parties picked up on, that we have eliminated the FOIP requirement, I think, for the first five years or the first four years, something like that. The big key here is: is this agency doing what this government wants it to do?

Now, it's easy enough for the government to say yes and try to let it be at that, but that's not the issue. The issue is that this is the public's resource, and there needs to be some reporting mechanism back to the public so that they know that the program is working and they know that the program is continuing to work. What we have is a program that says that we're going to take bitumen in kind. It was presented to the public that this is going to increase the revenue versus taking the initial royalty on the raw material. Now, that's logical in many ways, but we do not have access to the contractual agreement, so we don't have the ability to track it that way. The only way we have to track it as a Legislative Assembly or as any average Albertan is to wait until a report is tabled, and that provision right now is being removed. What we're asking in this amendment is to reinstate that.

Maybe the minister can point to another mechanism that we're not aware of where there is disclosure in a timely fashion so the public knows. That's the key. This is a government now that has set itself up to say that it's going to be transparent, that it's going to be accountable. I can't think of anything more important than this revenue stream that we've created, to make sure that it is both transparent and accountable.

The big question that the public will always have with regard to this is: are we making more money than had we just taken the initial royalties on the raw material? That will always be the question, and we have to measure ourselves against that because if at some point it does not turn out that way – and that is a risk that we're taking. There is an embedded risk that the public is taking on, but the benefit from that risk is that we would take a higher revenue stream. What we're looking for is the consistent reporting to make sure that this policy, this program is doing what we want it to do and is getting the results.

One of the things that I had posed earlier in second reading was that there needs to be some measurement, some outcome-based measurement that we can measure one year after another year after another so we can track this so the public has a sense. Anyone in the public, particularly any accountant that has the desire to track these types of programs, can match apples to apples and have a clear understanding what the government set out to do, have a clear understanding of what the government is doing, and have a clear understanding of the results. There doesn't have to be a whole lot of guesswork on the part of anybody willing to put the time in to research this matter and understand whether or not this program is working.

So right now what we're seeing is – and the minister can get up and correct me if I'm wrong – less transparency offered as a result of this amendment, not more transparency. We're seeing less accountability, not more accountability. That's fundamentally wrong. That's going in the wrong direction from where this government has told the public that it wants to go. Unless the minister can explain why they shouldn't prepare a report and why they can't wait until we are sitting if we're not sitting and then submit it within 15 days – I would like to know the reason. Is it that burdensome?

I can tell you most corporations file their quarterly returns, and they report to the respective exchanges that they trade their stocks on so investors can follow that process. In this case all Albertans have an investment in this. This seems only logical, that we would have the ability as a public to track it. I don't think that's an unnecessary or overly burdensome request on this government to ask that, to say: "Show us what's happening, and let us track it. Is it doing what it's supposed to do?"

I ask all of my colleagues to support it. I ask the members across the floor to support it, and if they won't support it, I would ask them to explain why. Where is the reporting mechanism? Where is the transparency with this if we don't accept this? That's the key. It's not just a one-off. What we need is consistent reporting. That, in my view, needs to be legislated. It needs to be a requirement. That's the key.

With that, I hope the members will support this or at least provide the assurances in the form of a guarantee by pointing to another part of the legislative scheme that says: here's where these reports are going to be issued, and they're going to disclose the information that is relevant to the process here of the policy the government undertook and the results of how to measure that policy.

So, again, Mr. Chair, I would encourage the minister to hopefully answer that question, and we can get on with the business. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak about our responsibilities to the owners of these resources. They aren't ours as the government or the Legislature or the agency that's going to manage them; they are the people of Alberta's. We have a stewardship obligation to report to them.

The Tom Monson quote that I've used several times, it seems appropriate when we get into discussions like this. I wish to quote it again. It goes something like: "When performance is measured, performance improves. When performance is measured and reported, the rate of [improvement] accelerates.”

I think that it's incumbent upon us to recognize this stewardship obligation and, like good stewards, report to our bosses because they're the people that employ us, and it's their money that we're spending or investing or that we are deferring royalty on and placing in the BRIK program. I think that's probably a very good program and has a good opportunity to do some of the things that we all want to see, create some upgrading within our province that provides more long-term jobs. The people are entitled to know how well that's working. If we know that we have to report on a regular basis, then I think we'll have more of a sense of accountability to them and be more committed to doing the best job that we can.

I certainly support this amendment, and I think it's vital to the process of discharging our stewardship in a responsible manner. I hope that each of you will consider seriously the things that we've said about this and consider the needs and the rights, if you will, of the people that have hired us to come here.

Thank you.

7:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in support of my colleague's amendment here to Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act. When I read this amendment, I think this is a good amendment. I'm looking at what is currently being struck of this act. What's being struck of this act reads:

10 The Auditor General is the auditor of the Commission.

11(1) The Commission shall annually, after the end of its fiscal year, prepare a general report summarizing its transactions and affairs during its last fiscal year and showing the revenues and expenditures during that period, an audited balance sheet and any other information required by the regulations.

I don't understand why we need to get rid of this. You do say that there's something that might cover this off in another act over here, but that act can be changed. It can be changed very quickly by a government of about 60 members, with probably a little consternation from the opposition over here trying to stop you from taking more transparency and accountability out of our acts.

Why don't we do what the Premier promised? I mean, we're willing to help you on this. We want to see your government be accountable and transparent.

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Fox: I hear “agreed” coming from the other side of the aisle over here, so does that mean that you're going to vote that way and that you're going to support this amendment? I hope you support this amendment because I do want to see some more accountability and transparency coming from this government. This government promised it. So here we are; we're going to help this government. We've put forward this very good amendment to help bring some transparency back in, to make sure that the Auditor General does have the ability to show the revenues and expenditures over a one-year period of this commission. I don't see any reason why we shouldn't allow the Auditor General to do that and why we shouldn't expressly state it in this piece of legislation.

If you change that other piece of legislation, and it has been changed – there were two acts that were completely wiped out by Bill 12, which is what you guys are referring to, where it actually was covered off here. You know, what was taken out of that bill means that Albertans may not receive information in a reasonable, recognizable, and responsive format, which is the format that we get from the Auditor General. We've got to keep this stuff in the legislation. If you want to be able to prove to Albertans that you truly are accountable and you truly are transparent, let them know what you're doing with their resource, with their royalties. Let them know through the Auditor General that you are managing it properly, that you have managed it properly, and that you would continue to manage it properly. You do that through regular reports back to the Legislature, back to the citizens of Alberta.

You also prove that to them by stating categorically in another piece of legislation that you are committed to that. It really doesn't hurt to have a little bit of redundancy in the system. If you do come back and change the Fiscal Management Act later on, you might not even be thinking about how it's going to affect the reporting of the Auditor General on this petroleum commission. It just astounds me.

Anyway, I hope that you do in fact support this amendment, which will help you in your goal of making your government more accountable and more transparent. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Yeah. Mr. Chair, I believe that section 11 is redundant in the sense that the Auditor General Act reads in section 11 that the Auditor General “(a) is the auditor of every ministry, department, regulated fund and Provincial agency.” I don't pretend to be an expert on that, but I do believe that this falls under the categorization of a provincial agency, which means that the Auditor is the Auditor already without having that section in there.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm not sure if the member heard my opening remarks, but that is the question. That is the issue. If you would read further in (b), it says that the Auditor General may with the approval of the Select Standing Committee be appointed by a Crown-controlled organization or any other organization or body as the auditor of that Crown-controlled organization or other organization.

So it's not clear whether this commission – there's nothing in the current legislation or this new bill that says that it is classified as a provincial agency.

Now, that's the question I have. I would really hope that someone can clarify this because the lines are very blurred. In order to have a full audit by the Auditor General – it doesn't just go back to the Fiscal Management Act. It doesn't state it in the Auditor General Act, and they're taking it out of the current legislation. That's why I would like to see it stay in the legislation. Then we know for sure it's looked after.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, I guess three points. First of all, the hon. member indicated the Minister of Energy did come to him after second reading and indicated to him that the reason why this was not needed in this act is because it's covered in the Auditor General Act, so I think he can take from that that somebody has actually done their homework on this. We don't take auditors out of the act just for no reason at all. When they do draft acts, they do try to draft them in parallel structure and remove surplusage. The reason that the reference to the Auditor General in this act is being removed is because under another section of the act, as you read out, hon. member, clearly says that this is an agency of the Crown, so it's a provincial agency.

Now, the distinction that the hon. member is making – and the answer is in his question – is that when you refer to a Crown-controlled corporation, there can be Crown-controlled corporations that are not agencies of the Crown. That's why the act specifically says whether it's an agent of the Crown or not. You'll see in a number of acts a section which says specifically, as it does in the Petroleum Marketing Act, that it's an agent of the Crown. So if it's an agent of the Crown, it's a Crown agency. It can be a Crown-controlled corporation without being a Crown agency. The act will make that distinction. In this case it's a Crown agency. It comes under the Auditor General Act as the Minister of Energy informed the hon. member.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. But the one thing that's not redundant is the filing of the report.

I thank the hon. minister for addressing the issue about the Auditor General, and the question was answered. I'll give the minister credit and not the deputy whip . . .

Mr. Khan: He answered your question, Joe.

Mr. Anglin: I know. I'm going to give the minister credit for it because he answered the question. But what it doesn't answer is: when do these reports come forward? What was being struck out was . . . [interjection] Ssh. Be quiet. I'm speaking. "The Commission shall annually, after the end of the fiscal year, prepare a general report." That was being struck out. What we're asking to do is have a report filed.

Again, it comes back to the whole issue of transparency. It is important that we have an auditor. There's no question about that. Every organization has to have that. What good is the audit if we don't get to see it or if we see something that is not consistent with what probably a normal corporation is given? Basically, what is being struck out here is a report summarizing its transactions and affairs for its last fiscal year, and what the amendment does is ask that a general report be prepared pursuant to subsection (1).

What we want to get here is some transparency and some accountability. We're back to the one question, the most overriding question, that hasn't been answered. The public needs confidence to follow this from point A to point B. Is this program, this policy, doing what this government intended it to do? How do we measure it? The only way to measure it is to have these consistent reports so we can track it. I don't know of any other way. If the hon. minister wants to explain another way the public can track this so they can have the confidence that (a) the policy is doing exactly what this government intends it to do and that it is producing outcomes that are measurable – that's the key.

What this is about is that we made a deal that we would take the raw material and trade it in kind for an opportunity for more revenue. That's a very simple formula. I'm sure the actual contract is quite complex. But for the public to track this, they just want to know: what were the royalties we were going to get? What did we really get as a result of the policy? Is it working? The performance-based outcome will tell the public whether or not it's working. This amendment is attempting to address that very simple question.

Now, if the hon. member wants to explain how else that will be addressed, I'm open to it. Show us in legislation where it is. Then I'm sure the member would probably withdraw the amendment. But we can't find it. We can't find it in there. There needs to be accountability. There needs to be some sort of tracking mechanism.

This government prides itself on being performance based. I've heard it time and time again. Here's a great place to apply it. Let the public measure the performance. Let the public know that they made a better deal here, that you made a better deal on the public's behalf. But if we can't track it, no matter what this government says, it can't be proven. It can't be reliable to the public because they can't see the proof. The proof is in the reporting, the proof is in the transparency, and the proof is in the accountability.

Again, I thank the minister for answering the first part of the question, but the larger question is the tracking of this. Is it doing what it's supposed to do? What is the performance, and how do we measure that performance? That's key.

Again, back to the minister: I hope you can address that, and we'll see where this amendment goes.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and then back to you.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief and just follow up on the point made by the last speaker. We raised this issue last night in second reading, and the minister responded. He responded on both of these issues, the issue of the Auditor General and the issue of the annual report.

Now, with the issue of the Auditor General it's been helpful, the clarification that we've just received. Of course, what happened at the time was that he said: oh, it's in the Auditor General Act. We looked at the Auditor General Act, and we were trying to figure out whether this agency would fall within the discretionary group of organizations or within the obligatory group of organizations with respect to the role of the Auditor General. Now the Government House Leader has explained that definitively they are within the obligatory group of organizations, so that's fine.

However, last night the Minister of Energy responded as well to our concerns about the absence or the removal of the annual reporting obligations. Really, his response was simply: well, any good corporate board would do that. That was the response. That was the answer that we got at the time on how we could be guaranteed that there would be an annual report, but frankly I think people here, for the reasons that have already been outlined, are looking for more. We want to know, you know, for sure when that report is filed, where it's filed, and what's going to be in it.

Given the importance of the work that this organization would do, it's unfortunate that we see it removed from legislation. As the last speaker stated, if there are other places where you find the legislative requirement for that annual report, great, but that was not the answer that the minister gave last night. The answer that the minister gave last night was simply that any good corporate board would as a matter of course prepare an annual report. Quite frankly, I just don't think that's good enough.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, in the last 10 seconds I went on to the Alberta Energy website and found the financial statements for the Department of Energy, and embedded in those financial statements is the annual report of the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission. That's where it is. That's where it will be, I presume. You know, you've got a marketing commission that's an agency of the Crown. It has an obligation to get its financial statements audited, and it can't have financial statements audited unless it's got financial statements. Financial statements are reported annually with the Alberta Energy report, and the Auditor General, when he audits a financial statement of a Crown corporation, releases them. That's not a secret process.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills, I'll go to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, and then I'll come back to you, sir.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you to the hon. House leader for trying to clarify that, but in his point he said that he brought it up on the website. Well, that's from the old act. This new act takes that provision out. The new act is taking out what this commission needs to have in its report for its fiscal year:

Prepare a general report summarizing its transactions and affairs during its last fiscal year and showing the revenues and expenditures during that period, an audited balance sheet and any other information required by the regulations.

Good. That's in there. That's what we want to see. So why are we taking it out of this legislation? You take it out of this legislation, so next year the financial report that they'll have on the Energy minister's website doesn't have to have this in there because this has been taken out.

But it says what they will have. This is under the Fiscal Management Act. It says, "The governing body of an accountable organization must prepare and give to the Minister responsible for the accountable organization a business plan and annual report for each fiscal year." That's it. It does not say anything about what needs to be in that. I know they'll say: well, any good company will put this, this, and this in it. But it's not in legislation. The old bill had it in legislation. It had exactly what needed to be reported, which he just referenced that he brought up on the website. That's great, but why take it out? Why take it out and then just rely on the Fiscal Management Act, which has very, very minute recommendations that need to be put in this report?

You know, that's what we're getting at, that you're taking the information away from Albertans. You're taking away the right for Albertans and for the rest of us to go in and see exactly what is in this financial report. It does not say anything about where it has to be made public. It doesn't. It just says that it has to be presented to the minister.

That's why, you know, I put forward this amendment, to ensure that the proper information is there after the auditor does the audit, which has been clarified. Now we know that the auditor will audit it fully as a provincial agency, so that's great. But what's in that report? When is it going to be tabled? Who's going to be able to see it? That's very, very important. Trying to maybe keep it from people when you're dealing with the province's resources and, you know, the royalties and the money that comes off Albertans' resources – we should be making every effort possible to clarify how much money is going in and out. That will enable us to determine if this corporation is actually doing the job that's required of them.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much. I think we're getting closer to an answer. I hope we get to an answer.

The hon. minister is correct. It is on the website, but what we see in the amending act is that the requirement by legislation is being removed. Now, granted, it may still be put there by regulation, but we have no guarantee by legislation that they would make that by regulation.

Now, the act could be amended to say that the minister or the commission or somebody would ensure that regulations will stipulate the reporting period and the auditing period and all that, but it doesn't do that. What we have in front of us here is an amending act that is going to remove the provision that has a legislative mandate for the filing of that annual report. Now, I presume that's the annual report the minister found on the Internet. It's only logical that they would post the annual report that's required by legislation. It's the income statement and the balance sheet.

That's logical, but what's missing is that there's not going to be the legislative mandate anymore. Will it still be there? I don't know. I suspect it would be. It seems logical. I think you run into huge problems if you don't create these reports because you won't know what you're doing, and anyone who understands business knows that. But it's going to be removed from legislation. What this amendment wants to do is put it back into legislation, and we get back to the very basic premise.

I'm going to make a different argument to try to convince the hon. members. I know they're not egotistical, but they like to tell the public how smart they really are. I can't think of a better way to show the public how smart you are than to show the success of the program in the form of balance sheets and financial statements that would be required by legislation. Anybody in the public, any reasonable person, any reasonable accountant that so desires to follow this program, this policy of this government can look at the value of the bitumen and at how much a per-barrel royalty they would have gotten and how it compares to the income that we get as a result of this BRIK program.

Then this government could stand up and take credit, and I'll be the first one to give you credit if you can prove this showing the facts and figures. Now, I'd rather you don't do it one time; I'd rather you do it annually. I'd rather there be consistent reporting annually. That's all we're asking for here. This is a Crown corporation, this is an agent of the Crown, and it will have the ability to contract on behalf of the Crown, but what we need is protection in legislation that is either going to stipulate the reporting or at least, at a minimum, stipulate to this agency that by regulation they will set up the reporting mechanism, that it would be a requirement.

I think that would be consistent with a whole lot of legislation that has been passed in this House before. There's nothing wrong with how you want to stipulate this, but I see no reason to remove it from the legislation the way it is, none at all. But if there's a reason for that, then so be it. Let us know the reason.

It's a very basic principle that we cannot leave behind: is the policy working the way this government wants it to? The only way to figure that out, the only way to consistently see that, is by tracking it on financial statements that are reported on a consistent basis using the same methodology so that we're comparing apples to apples and there's no confusion.

Clearly, I don't understand why the commission's mandate to annually report its fiscal position is being removed. I don't understand why this government would be shy about reinstating that. It doesn't make sense to me. Again, on the premise of X amount of barrels of bitumen going in, what would the royalty have been, and what is the outcome based on that as far as the amount of revenue we received?

Now, the royalty scheme is actually complicated. It does change, depending on the capitalization, the company, when they started, under what agreement they were working. There are different royalty schemes. When we look at the amount of bitumen coming in, if that's not identified, then we can't track it in the sense of: would we have made more money off a royalty scheme versus the BRIK program?

Again, I believe that when I looked at the website, I could calculate the amount of raw material, but I cannot calculate what the royalties would have been on that because I don't know where it came from, what program it came through on its royalty scheme, or where it is in the royalty scheme. There's no way to track that, and that should be trackable. We should be able to know that. We should be able to measure that this is what we would have made had we just taken a straight royalty and that this is what we did make on the final product and then match it up. Is the policy good? Is the program good? Is the public benefiting?

Again, on my initial argument, what better way to show how smart this government is when it divulges this information so the public can look for itself without anyone on the other side saying: look at us. You can have the shining star of success that says: it worked, and here's the proof.

With that, Mr. Chair, I welcome the members' comments. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to propose another amendment to the bill.

The Chair: If you would circulate that, please, hon. member.
Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will for the record read this amendment to Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act.

The Chair: For the record, hon. member, this will be amendment A2.

Mr. Hale: The amendment reads: "Mr. Hale to move that Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, be amended in section 9 by striking out the proposed section 9.2(4)."

Now, 9.2(4) in the proposed Bill 34, under information to the commission, reads:

- (4) With respect to any record or other information obtained by the Commission under this Act that is used for
  - (a) determining or verifying royalty liability or collecting or forecasting royalty, or
  - (b) determining, prescribing or verifying an amount, factor or other component that is used to calculate royalty, the regulations made under this section prevail despite the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act for a period of 5 years following the end of the year to which the record or other information relates.

My amendment proposes to strike this subsection (4).

Speaking in second reading of this bill, it was mentioned that as a commercial entity there's a commercial aspect to this corporation that has very sensitive parts. Well, I don't disagree with that at all. There is information that shouldn't be shared publicly, dealing with the markets, because it would give the power to that commission to maybe, possibly, change those markets. If we're going to be putting all of our eggs in one basket and everybody knows that, then everybody's eggs are going to end up in that basket, and then the eggs are worth nothing. You know, it's a little bit of farmer logic: you don't put all of your eggs in one basket. It's just like playing poker. You keep your cards close; you don't lay them all out there. I do agree with that.

It talks about some very important information that they are trying to keep secret, and that's the royalty collection. Why shouldn't Albertans, who own that royalty, who own the resources – it's their money. Why should it be hidden from them for five years? Verifying the royalty liability is the same thing. Why hide that for five years?

Forecasting royalties. In the budget estimates the Finance minister talked about going to all these banks and getting all of this information so that they can do their budget forecasting based on energy prices. Why shouldn't everybody else, you know, the other parties in this House and the other ministries, be able to plan? Why shouldn't they be able to see the proposed royalties and know how many barrels of oil and how many barrels of bitumen we're going to be shipping? We already know that there have been a hundred thousand barrels of bitumen a day committed to the east-west pipeline when it gets built. So they're calculating the royalties. How are we supposed to hold them to account to show that they are actually getting value for our royalties on behalf of Albertans if we can't find out how they calculated the royalties for five years? It doesn't make much sense.

When you look in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, sections 24 and 25 in there deal with a lot of this. They are professionals that run the FOIP office. Believe me; we've put in a lot of FOIPs. You don't know how hard it is to get information out of them. Something that is this important, that they don't want the commission to divulge to the rest of the world, believe me, it will be tough to get out of them. There's no need to put a provision in for five years because you can't get it from them anyway. Why hide everything for five years? Information that is important, that needs to be held close to this commission's chest, can be held. It does not have to be put out there. The FOIP legislation, under sections 24 and 25, already has provisions in there that will not allow this type of information to be put out there, you know.

But there is other information that should be allowed to come out if that information is requested. The contracts for the board members: if that information is held for five years, how are we supposed to know what they're getting paid until five years later? You know, governments change in five years. The people in these seats change in less than five years. In less than five years we're going to have an election. Five years ago there were many different people sitting in here, so to hold it for that long is ridiculous, really. The information that needs to be held will be held through the FOIP legislation. The government boasts that we have the best FOIP legislation in the world. Well, if it's so good, why do we have to enhance it by five years to cover important information?

So that's the skinny on this amendment. I hope that, you know, we can hear from some of the members on the other side as to why they think we need to hide all this information for five years and why maybe the FOIP legislation won't do it. I will sit down and eagerly await the debate forthcoming.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's come to my attention that in the members' gallery we have two wonderful ladies who are visiting us tonight and watching the proceedings. Barb Sturdy has been a stalwart in Alberta politics for the last – well, I won't say how many years, but let's just say that she and I go back a long way on the political trails. With her is Pam Cholak. Many, many years after I was president of the young Conservatives, I think she was president of the young Conservatives, and she's been active in Progressive Conservative politics for many years. Both of them have done wonders for involving young people and Alberta citizens in the political process in our party. I'd like to ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Chair: Thank you.

Building New Petroleum Markets Act

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment. I find it, frankly, a little shocking that you have a major entity where every single bit of information from it is going to be kept secret for a period of five years. I go along with the arguments of my colleague here. Of course, there are certain types of information that perhaps shouldn't be made available to the public, but clearly not every single piece of information that is within this entity should be kept secret.

I'm wondering if the Minister of AT and T believes that this bill is consistent with his gold standard approach and whether it meets his gold standard approach to keep all information secret for an entire period of five years. Of course, if there is commercially sensitive information, yeah, maybe that shouldn't be made public, you know. But if every single piece of information within this entity is going to be kept secret for five years and this Premier is going to campaign on being open and transparent yet this piece of legislation right here keeps information secret for five years, this is the type of hypocrisy that I think over time is going to erode the credibility of this current Premier. You can't say that you're going to be open and transparent and then put forward a bill that is completely secretive and keeps every single piece of information within the entity secret for five years.

Mr. Chair, I don't think this meets the gold-standard approach of the Minister of AT and T, and I don't think it meets, frankly, any type of test. It doesn't meet the smell test.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If this is the gold standard, it's time to short gold. I can tell you that right now.

This is terrible because what we have going on here is that we are beginning to remove the transparency and accountability, at least to the legislative mandate. That's what this amending act is doing. It is no longer making it a requirement by legislation that the commission shall annually report. It talks about the balance sheet and the financial statement. It may or may not do it by regulation – we don't know – but even if it is doing it by regulation, what this section that we're looking to strike out is purporting to do is to keep whatever regulations are keeping track of some financial information from any freedom of information request for at least five years.

You know, there's a standing joke that when the Wildrose becomes government, the lights are going to blink and possibly go out. [interjections] Now, the reason for that is that all the paper shredders will turn on at once. But there's nothing we can do about that. The good news for the Wildrose and for the Alberta public is that there are not enough paper shredders in the province to do the things that they need to do. With more and more information that they're going to keep secret, I don't know how they're going to destroy it all at once. The fact is that keeping more and more information secret – if you made it public, you wouldn't need paper shredders when you get voted out.

An Hon. Member: Speak up.

Mr. Anglin: Well, I had to. They were all yelling at me. I have to hear myself.

The Chair: Through the chair.

Mr. Anglin: I'm not sure who's chairing this, you or them, but I'm going to believe it's you. I'll talk to you. That's okay.

The Chair: Just talk to me.

Mr. Anglin: But in all seriousness, what's the reason for keeping this information secret?

As I mentioned earlier, even on the last amendment, this is a very simple process. The public wants to know, and I think the public has a right to know: what was the bitumen worth in royalty before it got processed? What did the public give up? This shouldn't be top-secret information. This should be something that should be reported. Regardless of what this commission determines or verifies as the royalty liability or forecasts in royalty, we should have an understanding of what that royalty revenue would have been had we just taken the straight royalty revenue. What is the income? What is the revenue source from the BRIK program? Is it more than what we would have gotten using the present value of money and the future value of money, depending on the length of time the first part of the process meets the second part of the process?

This is the point of accountability. This is the public's resource. The public has a right to know. This government has a responsibility, a fiduciary responsibility, to disclose. This is this government's program. This government has created this program, this policy, has promised the public – and it has sold it so – that this would increase revenue because it's a good deal. You've all heard it; some of you have said it. The issue here is: now prove it, verify it, and allow the public to see it. What the public won't be able to see if the information is kept from them is that they will not be able to calculate it.

8:30

Now, in the spirit of the accounting gods if you decide to do it of your own goodwill, all well and good, but I don't understand why you would remove the legislative mandate to require it. I don't see the logic in that. All private corporations, particularly those that sell stock publicly, are required by rules and regulations to construct and file financial statements so investors can see, and this should be no different. This should be no different than that in the sense that the investors here are the public. This is their resource. They are investing in this, that they're going to get a better revenue stream by buying into this program, and they should have a right to see that it's doing exactly as this government has stated it would do, without disclosing any proprietary information but just looking at financial statements.

I'm happy to withdraw all those statements if the minister could show me where in legislation this is going to be required and how this is going to be done consistently. What we're seeing here is the withdrawal or the removal of a requirement to report and then the ability to use FOIP to track what I will call the beginning stages of what the royalty scheme would have been. Really, what this section (4) is consistent with is verifying, determining, and forecasting what the royalties would have been.

We have a situation here where we're just going to protect it for five years, and I don't see the value of hiding that for five years. What am I going to learn 5.1 years down the road that is so secret that I can't know, say, annually? Starting from today I should see an annual report and see four annual reports before I get to that fifth year. I don't understand. Even if it's a loss, it doesn't mean you change the program. What it does mean is that I can track it from year 1, year 2, year 3, year 4, year 5, and we should be able to track it in that case. Lots of companies show a loss or a downturn in one year versus another.

We're not looking for the proprietary information. We're looking for accountability. I think the minister is going to get up, and I want to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member just answered his own question over and over and over again, and that is that, in fact, what he is looking for is proprietary information. The Petroleum Marketing Commission gets information from individual operators just as the regulatory authority for energy has the same type of provision, where they get proprietary information from the companies that are in the business, and in order to make the system work, they have to be prepared to keep that information.

They have to get that information so they can do their operation, but they have to keep the information subject to commercial proprietary – the commercial operation requires that each of these companies be able to operate without releasing their information publicly. So there's a balance here, and the balance is that you need to have an ability to get the information to make sure that you're getting your share of the royalties, that you have access to all of the production information, all of that proprietary information of the company. Obviously, you're not going to publish that.

The audited financial statements, which we've already dealt with in the previous amendment – you keep coming back to that piece and the reporting piece – that's already been dealt with. There are reports. There are the financial reports. There's the auditing of the reports. All of that is done. But in terms of the internal operations, where the Petroleum Marketing Commission deals with individual producers with respect to their production and what the public of Alberta's share of that is in terms of its bitumen royalty in kind, for example, that can verge on proprietary commercial information, and you would not, I think, want on behalf of Albertans to interfere with our ability to actually have that commercial operation work effectively.

It has oversight. It has appropriate oversight. It has audit. It has financial reporting. But in terms of the commercial information which we are by legislation requiring people to give, we also, then, give them the assurance that we won't hand it out on the street. I think that's a perfectly valid assurance to give and five years is a perfectly valid period of time to give it for.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, Mr. Government House Leader, for trying to clarify that. But it doesn't address the current FOIP legislation that we have now. If it's so proprietary, why wouldn't the legislation that we have now look after it? Why does it say five years? Why doesn't it just say, you know: corresponding to the FOIP legislation that we currently have, proprietary information will not be made public? I mean, we know that that stuff doesn't need to be made public.

An Hon. Member: Apparently not.

Mr. Hale: Yeah, we do.

But why do you have to have it in here? If the FOIP legislation is so good, why do you have to add it in here? You're taking out the Auditor General because you said that, you know, it's already looked after under other legislation. You're taking out what has to be reported in the old legislation because it's covered under other legislation. Well, this is covered under other legislation, which is the FOIP legislation, so why do you have to put this in? If you could speak to that, I'd appreciate it.

The Chair: I'd like to recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. I expect all of you to show your gratitude for me giving you a break from the hon. member that sits next to me. Contributions are gratefully received.

I appreciated the comments of the hon. Government House Leader. It cleared up in my mind part of the reason why some of this does in fact need to be kept private, and the very things that he mentioned do need to be. It's like the 29 herbs and spices or the secret recipe. There are things that people are trusting the government to keep private, and that ought to be, and they ought to know that they can trust that to happen.

I think the other issue that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks just mentioned, that I know my friend next door here is eager to re-engage the foe on, that kind of information needs to be public. Who here would make an investment if the salesman, broker, or pitchman said: all of your reports on how your investment is doing will be five years out of date. That's each report. If it's secret for five years, then we're going to get one report in six years, and then in the seventh year we'll get the report from the second year of the process if I'm reading that correct. If I'm wrong, please let me know.

We're not asking for the patented secrets, but on behalf of the investors – in other words, the citizens who put their trust in this government and all of us – we are saying that we need to let them know how, for example, the BRIK project is doing. Has it been a good idea? Is it giving us more over time? You've got to trust the people to be able to recognize that not all investments are going to skyrocket. There are going to be ups and downs. But we as citizens and the citizens we represent as legislators, MLAs, have a right, I believe, to expect to get regular reports on how projects like BRIK, for example, the upgrader, are doing so we can compare and contrast, and then we'll draw our own conclusions.

As I read the information that's being proposed in Bill 34 to be deleted, it makes — I'm not naturally a cynical person or suspicious. In fact, I can be fairly easily conned because I trust people to be as honest as I am.

Mr. Khan: A play on words?

Mr. Bikman: Yeah, a little bit.

The idea is that if this was a great idea, if we had a lot of confidence in BRIK, for example, then we'd want people to see how bright we were and how well we're doing as stewards of the asset that they own. They've elected us to represent and to help keep you the government transparent, as you'd like us to believe that you are and that you apparently say you want to be. Taking this out, I think, doesn't remove from you the ability to keep private and confidential those things you promised, the sources that would put them at a disadvantage if they became public. But I do think they have a right to know how other aspects of the investment are doing.

8:40

I think that's the point that we're arguing from or that we're trying to convey. If somehow we're off base seriously, I think we'd all like to know that and save us all some time. I hope you understand where we're coming from with this. We think we're doing it because we believe that it's in the best interests of Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, or did you want to respond, hon. minister? Maybe we'll have the minister's response.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, just briefly, Mr. Chair. I'm suffering from some confusion here because the hon. member has actually made again the argument that needs to be made, and that is that under subsection (4), which the amendment attempts to remove, it specifically says:

(4) With respect to any record or other information obtained by the Commission under this Act that is used for

(a) determining or verifying royalty liability or collecting or forecasting royalty.

That would be the commercial information of the producing company. That would be the information that they have around their production, obviously, because that's what you need if you're determining royalty liability.

(b) determining, prescribing or verifying an amount, factor or other component that is used to calculate royalty.

That language is so precise as to specifically point you to the commercial information. That is not the section under the Auditor General Act which allows for auditing financials. It's not the requirements under the Financial Administration Act and other acts which keep Crown agencies honest and reporting the information. It's not about aggregate information. It's about any record or other information obtained by the commission under the act, obtained by the commission from, obviously, the producing companies, that's used for the determining or verifying of royalties. That's precisely commercial information. That's the proprietary information of those companies that they're using in their day-to-day operations that they probably don't want their competitors to know.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We're not disputing that that information needs to be kept.

An Hon. Member: Yes, you are.

Mr. Hale: Well, no.

The Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Hale: You're taking redundancy out of the old bill, you say, through scrapping sections 10 and 11. But if you read the FOIP legislation, the FOIP act, under section 25(1) it says:

25(1) The head of a public body may refuse to disclose information to an applicant if the disclosure could reasonably be expected to harm the economic interest of a public body or the Government of Alberta or the ability of the Government to manage the economy, including the following information:

- (a) trade secrets of a public body or the Government of Alberta;
- (b) financial, commercial, scientific, technical or other information in which a public body or the Government of Alberta has a proprietary interest or a right of use and that has, or is reasonably likely to have, monetary value.

And it goes on and on and on. So that's great. You're taking this other stuff out that's covered under other acts, so why are you putting this in if it's covered under this act?

Mr. Hancock: Here's the explanation for that. Under the Auditor General Act there's a very clear delineation of where the Auditor General's authority is and what the Auditor General gets to do, and that's mandated. Under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act there is the opportunity for interpretation, and the freedom of information and protection of privacy commissioner does interpretation all the time.

Now, when you're dealing with significant commercial assets, the players do not want to put themselves at the risk of somebody adjudicating as to whether their information should be released or shouldn't be released. They want some assurance. They need that assurance for their shareholders. They need that assurance for their investors. There are some places where you need a definitive statement up front in the act to say: "We will collect your information from you. We'll mandate that you have to give it to us, but we will protect it in your commercial interest." So there are two different actual tests in there.

We know about the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the interpretations that happen and some of the unintended consequences that have happened under that act with respect to the sharing or the not sharing of information. That is not a structure, a process that actually lends itself to good commercial operation. If I were a major commercial corporation with investors, I would have a significant risk factor built in to having to release my information if I was looking for the protection of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the potential adjudication of a privacy officer who might have entirely different views or interests with respect to what they believe the interpretation ought to be.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Nuts. Totally nuts. Let's take a look. The whole auditing thing is a different issue, okay? Let's deal with that separately. That's not the amendment in front of us. That's a different issue, and it's being removed under section 10. Where 10 and 11 are being repealed, we were trying to get that back in.

Let's talk about this proprietary information because this is something that I would disagree on with the hon. member. This is not proprietary in the sense that I'm getting any secret information. They're talking about forecasting the value of royalties. It's quite simple. I mean, this isn't a hard forecast, in many ways. What they need to know is the price of a barrel of oil, the price of a barrel of bitumen, and if they're going to be forecasting, over what time frame . . .

Mr. Hancock: There's nothing about forecasting.

Mr. Anglin: Nothing about forecasting in there? Son of a gun. It says, "Determining or verifying royalty liability or collecting or forecasting royalty." Forecasting means forecasting to me.

The fact is this. For any reasonable economist to do any kind of forecasting, they're going to look at the NYMEX, they're going to look at the International Petroleum Exchange, the ICE, and they're going to look at their market. This is no great secret in the world of economists. They have all these resources to try to project where the price of oil is going to be next week, where the price of oil is going to be in two months, in three months. We have the futures exchange, we have the spot market, and we have the forward market. However they come up with it is not so much the issue as is what value they're actually putting on that because that's how you want to measure the performance, based on: is this working or not working?

What's happening here is that you're saying we get this information after five years but we don't get this information between one and five years. That's what doesn't make sense to me. If it's such secretive information, why would you release it in the first place? I don't think it's that secret. I don't think it's that proprietary. What we want to know is an accounting value of what they're projecting.

It goes back to the very basic question: what is the value we're forgoing, which is the royalty, versus what is the value of the BRIK program for the revenue we're going to get? Is it more than what we would have gotten based on – and you've got a time frame in here – the present value and the future value of the money you may or may not have gotten. I mean, that's it.

Now, the average gas company out there that's drilling today, particularly under the old royalty scheme before it got sort of changed problematically, drillers would sit down with companies, and they could look at what they were planning on doing with a projection of what they thought the extraction of the resource find would have been, what the expectation was of the production level, and based on that, knowing the royalty scheme, they could figure out whether this was worth the risk or not worth the risk, based on their projections. They knew what royalties they would have to apply. They knew, basically, the cost of what they were going to do for drilling, and that's how a lot of these companies entered these agreements. Now, they took a risk – everyone knows that – because the resource that they're extracting, if the find was more production than they originally anticipated, all well and good. If it was less, it could be problematic.

Again, we're dealing with the same matter here. What is the value of the royalties that we're not taking in because it's bitumen in kind, the BRIK program? How do we measure that, if we believe in performance based, so we can track this?

Staying away from the whole audit situation right now, which I disagree with the minister on – yes, it's reported, and it is on the Internet, and it is on the website, but what's being removed from the legislation is the requirement for this commission to file it annually. It doesn't mean they're not going to. I'm not saying that. But the requirement by legislation is being removed.

8:50

What we're talking about right now is having access to information to even begin to make that determination of the royalty scheme. That should not, in my view, be hidden from the public, and this government sort of agrees with that because after five years they're not going to hide it anymore. I don't see where the secret is prior to that, prior to the five years. I don't see where it's proprietary. I see where it's of great value to the public to have knowledge of it, at least to the public that wants to track whether or not this program is working.

Now, the thing that gets me is this. If the problem is as good as this government claims it is, then it's easy. Prove it. Show it. Have confidence. Disclose it. Be accountable. Be transparent. Be everything that you said you want to be. [interjection] It's like joining the army.

An Hon. Member: The marines.

Mr. Anglin: Nay, nay, nay, that's not the marines, sir; that's the army. I assure you.

The explanation is going back and forth. I know we're getting nowhere with it, but it doesn't stop us from trying. I don't see the logic in the government's argument at the moment. I want to see the logic, but I don't. I don't see why we're removing the legislative requirement. I firmly believe that you'll still show financial statements; I'd be crazy not to. But I don't understand why the legislative requirement is being removed. I don't see where that's redundant.

As far as access to records and information for verifying royalty liability and forecasting, this is what you need to do. You can't just fudge figures. You can't rely on fudged figures, so you need to verify this stuff. If it's relied upon because some economists made a forecast, so be it, but most economists that make forecasts show you what the raw data is that they drew from and how they calculated their forecast. That's what gives their forecast validity. That's done every day in the business world. Exxon Mobil does it, Shell does that, BP does that, and they disclose that information. They say: this is what we think the value of the oil will be; we got it from this economist, based on this. It's not top secret stuff. So when we're dealing with the whole royalty scheme, that would be based on the royalty schemes of wherever this bitumen is coming from.

I just don't see where that would undermine the process. In a nutshell, I don't see where disclosing how this is done is going to undermine the program, how it's going to put it in jeopardy of not succeeding. If it were to do that, I would support keeping it secret, but I don't see where it does that. What I see is that we're withholding information from the public, and I don't see the value in that. I don't see the value in that at all.

In this case here if the program is so good, then show it. Prove it and enjoy the success of the proof. Why wouldn't you? Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd really like to narrow down this wide range in conversation. A couple of really good questions have been asked, and I think we've been trying to answer them, and I'll add some more information that will hopefully guide your understanding of our proposed legislation.

One is that companies rely on raw data from other companies when they do marketing like this. There is nothing more sensitive in the marketing business than that raw data. For an agency of this government that is acting on behalf of Albertans to put itself in this incredibly uncompetitive place where it was bound to publicly disclose sensitive and raw data, unlike its competitors, would compromise all Albertans and the ability of this agency to do its work in a way that was effective or competitive. In fact, this legislation is intended to be in the interests of Albertans.

The five-year question. Actually, I can respond to that question. I'm not that long out of the private sector. I negotiated these kinds of agreements on a daily basis. Five years is a standard term in the business for retaining this information confidentially. I very much agree with my colleague that to rely on FOIP in a determination by FOIP under FOIP legislation as to what the time frame was or what inputs were commercially sensitive is just not appropriate with the magnitude of this kind of competitiveness advantage that we are offering this agency through these provisions.

We absolutely will be accountable to Albertans for all sales, and that information will be disclosed. This agency is acting as a marketer on behalf of all Albertans. Why would we ever want to put them in a place where they're not competitive? These are commercially standard and reasonable terms, and I very much endorse them.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Dorward: We ain't going to listen.

Mr. Anglin: No. I know you're not going to listen, but somebody else will, hon. member.

Thank you very much for that input, but I'm not convinced yet of this secret proprietary information. I'm sorry, but I'm not. There are checks and balances for every private company; there's no question about it. It's called the profit margin. What's gone on here – and this is clear from our own program. When we created this program, the public took on a risk here. You know, the public had the ability to take the royalty on that bitumen as it's produced. That was the initial agreement before the BRIK program came along. Now we come in with a new policy that says that we're going to create this program. We're going to produce more. I mean, that's why this is coming forward, I believe, because we're going to be producing a lot more, and the value we're going to get for it is going to be more than what we would have gotten had we taken the straight royalty.

Now, we started out this discussion where this wasn't about forecasting, but now we know it's about forecasting. I look at this, and it's like: yes, we're competing, but how much of a competition is this going to be with this marketing arm? I don't know. I'm trying to figure this one out. I'm going to tell you something. Oil products are the most liquid market in the world. What comes out of refineries sells. I mean, it's one of our great – it's called the Alberta advantage. If I remember, that member over there doesn't like that word, but it's a great advantage. It's called oil, and it works quite well for this province, no matter which government thinks they can take credit for it. It works, and the fact is that those products do sell.

Yes, somebody is marketing those products, but the real risk is this. The real risk is the input and if the market drops off. As everyone knows, the market rises; the market falls. It does move. End of story. Companies have routinely taken losses, but we're taking market risk now. So the question is: who's overseeing this? This is: trust me. This is saying that we're not going to allow any access to this information for five years, and I just don't agree with that. I don't see where the great secret is here, dealing with the fact that we're not going to have access to the contracts. We didn't ask for access to the contracts. What we want to know is how they're coming up with the value. I don't think that that is a proprietary thing of such importance that it would put anyone at a disadvantage.

This is what I want to say about forecasting. The thing about forecasters is that they are extremely intelligent people. Most of them are, anyways. Most of the ones I've met are extremely intelligent. The other thing is that as a majority, they're always wrong. If they were right most of the time, they'd all be just trading the futures market and be extremely rich, and that's not the case. As much as they try to predict, it's all based on percentages, and that's really where you take the risk. The fact is that coming up with these projections is not some great secret. It is a market risk that companies take even when they negotiate very complex contracts. Most companies will hedge in one form or another. We understand that. We're not looking at the investments of the hedge. What we want to know is how they're coming up with the forecast. We want to have access to what that royalty liability is that we're undertaking. I think the public should have access to that.

Again, we have a contract right now that this government has signed with the upgrader for this BRIK, bitumen in kind. The public doesn't get to see that. We'd like to see that, but we don't get to see that. But we should be able to at least see how they're coming up with a value because that's ours. They're going to base it on something, and it should be tracked on however – you just can't pull these figures out of the air.

9:00

Dealing with this, I don't see where we're getting in to the contractual nature of any agreement. To me, this would be different than what the hon. member said. When you're sitting down with another company and you're drafting up a contract, that's one thing, but we're trying to track here what the public's is coming right out of the ground. We want to know what that value is, and we want to know what the royalties would have been. How did they come up with that? You don't want them fudging the figures.

Where is the balance on this? If this doesn't work for Albertans, where are the checks and balances? A private company goes out of business if those losses mount up. How long can this operate? We're paying a fee to have this stuff upgraded, and then we're marketing. If we just continue marketing at a loss, do we just continually lose? I mean, these are questions that we need to track and follow.

So, again, it would be proprietary, I think, in the private sector because the checks and balances are there, but in this situation right here I'm not sure we're competing with the private sector. I think this marketing agency has an advantage over the private sector, and it's significant. It would be interesting to see if there's ever a complaint coming forward from the private sector in dealing with it. They definitely, in my view, have an advantage. I'll tell you what. The guys that are running this, I think, you know, are probably pretty sharp guys, but they've got a pretty good gig. I bet you their money is good.

It's a good life, but we don't know what's going on inside because we don't have access to the information. What we want access to is the whole scheme: what is the value of what we would have gotten versus the value that we're getting? Without knowing what that royalty would have been, I mean, we can't even begin the calculation, and that's what I'm looking for out of this. So when I see "determining or verifying royalty liability [and] collecting . . . forecasting royalty," those are the figures I want to know because this government, technically, will be reporting the revenue income, and I want to be able to match that up to that. I think the public should have a right to match that up to that and not have to wait five years.

All you want to do – it's got to be reasonable. That's all. I mean, it has to be based on something. All companies have their own private forecasters. As I said earlier, they are very smart people, and they have some very complex modelling that they do, but in the end nobody is right on the market. A lot of people think they are right, but the market just does what the market does, and sometimes they're close; sometimes they're not.

I can tell you that on the futures market, particularly oil's, the experts are wrong more times than not. They always have been, and I'm sure it's not going to change. Many here remember when natural gas went above $10. It was never, ever going to drop below $8. I remember people saying that for two years: you'll never, ever see it below $8. Here we are. Technologies change.

So, with that, I'll continue this if the members would like to. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do have a final amendment that I would like to propose for this bill.

The Chair: If we'd have that circulated, please. That will be amendment A3.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to read this amendment into the record. It says: Mr. Hale to move that Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act, be amended as follows.

- A. Section 12 is struck out.
- B. Section 15(b) is amended by striking out the proposed clause (b.1).

Looking at this proposed Bill 34, under section 12 it talks about the commission buying shares. Now, it does say, you know, under the Financial Administration Act what shares are – and you can read that easy enough – under section 42. "The Commission may, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, (a) directly or indirectly purchase shares." So now we're going to have a commission working on behalf of Alberta, looking after Albertans' resources, purchasing shares in companies. This raised a huge red flag with myself because now we're going to allow this corporation to gamble with our money. It is buying shares. If it's such a sure thing, why doesn't every person in Alberta buy shares? Why not? If it's so good, why do people lose millions of dollars buying shares?

An Hon. Member: They're not good at it.

Mr. Hale: They're not good at it. That's right. It's unpredictable. You don't know what's going to happen. If these guys do know what's going to happen with the shares, maybe that's why they can't share this information for five years. If they can get that proprietary information, there are a few other things going south there.

The people on the other side laughed when I mentioned gambling with our money. Enron: you know, those people there were pretty sure, weren't they? How many of them lost millions and millions of dollars? You can make all the strange faces you want, but there's never a sure thing in buying shares. Why should this corporation, this commission, be allowed to buy shares with money that isn't theirs? That's totally wrong. Totally wrong.

Now, in the existing legislation under section 12, where this would follow, it talks about the Treasury Board and the Ministry of Finance and the Lieutenant Governor in Council and making sure that they pay their fees and any debt they incurred gets covered. You know, all that's good, the day-to-day business of this commission, working on behalf of the government and Albertans. That stuff I don't have a problem with.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may authorize the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to guarantee on behalf of the Crown in right of Alberta the repayment of any money borrowed by the Commission pursuant to subsection (3) and interest on that money.

If they lose a bunch of money on these shares, they're losing the money originally invested. Now they're going to get bailed out more by Alberta taxpayer dollars? Is that what's going to happen?

I look forward to hearing some comments. I see lots of heads shaking around here, but let's see what they have to say. There's no possible explanation for why this commission should be allowed to purchase shares with money that isn't theirs. There isn't. I mean, if they're going to buy GICs and bonds, you know, guaranteed investment certificates, that's not a bad thing – I know that the government talks about them all the time – but shares are different. Publicly traded shares are different than guaranteed. You know, I'd like to hear from the minister on this to see what explanation he can give for this.

Thank you.

9:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I stand to speak in favour of this amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. He makes a lot of important points here. Does the legislation, as it stands now, give the authority to this entity to borrow money to purchase shares, and subsequently what is the government's position on that? The member talked about, you know, public corporations purchasing shares with resulting losses.

I know that this government's new mantra is: debt is hope. That's now the cornerstone of the values and principles of the PC Party. That is their core value. When they go to bed, they say, "Well, debt is hope," and then they dream at night. So maybe that's why they decided to put this section in here. That's their new mantra. When you change your value system, you have to change legislation that fits it.

It would be interesting to see what the government's position is on this. I know that the hon. member has researched this amendment, has put forward many cogent arguments, and it's unfortunate that we haven't heard from the government on this and why they wouldn't consider accepting this.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, it talks about the shares in the Financial Administration Act, what they mean. In here under 42(2): “a member of the Executive Council shall not, on behalf of the Crown, directly or indirectly purchase shares, make a loan of money.” So it’s talking about – personally, any member can’t purchase shares, but this commission can now purchase shares. I just want to reiterate that entering that sort of market with taxpayers’, Albertans’, dollars, you know, royalty dollars made off the royalty revenues, is not very responsible.

Also, it allows the government to pick winners and losers if they have, you know, a partner or they see a company, maybe a government-friendly company, that’s having some problems: well, jeez, we can help you out; we’ll buy a bunch of your shares and put a bunch more value back in your company. They’re going to be helping out these companies. That’s another option. They’re getting in the business of keeping businesses alive. That shouldn’t be part of their mandate with Albertans’ dollars. That’s just too much risk – too much risk – for them to be taking on behalf of Albertans, especially when we don’t get to see how they’re coming up with these forecasts, that they’re investing Albertans’ money with. It’s a bad mix.

You know, there are lots of statements in this Petroleum Marketing Act that we have now that will ensure that this commission runs smoothly and pays its debts and makes its money and puts its money back into the general revenue. If it’s making that much money that it can go out and buy shares, why can’t it give that money back to the government? The government can say: oh, jeez, you know, we’re making so much money; let’s put it in the heritage savings trust fund for future generations. Why take the chance with the shares?

You know, under section 12(5) on page 5 of the current act it talks about:

The Commission shall, when requested to do so by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pay to the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance for deposit in the General Revenue Fund the net profit of the Commission for a fiscal year . . .

That’s good. Their job is to make money. So they need to be making that money and putting it in general revenue, and that’s how you can build some schools and hospitals and keep the heritage savings trust fund up so you don’t have to keep taking the interest made off it, you can put more money in, and all Albertans will benefit.

But, you know, let’s roll the dice and buy some shares with it and try to maybe double down and maybe get lucky. Maybe it’ll come out looking great, or maybe they’ll have to come back to the general revenue fund and the Finance minister to cover what they lost at the casino. There are some big dudes down in Vegas that look after that sort of thing, and we’re hoping that that sort of thing doesn’t happen here.

All jokes aside, it’s very important that this commission works in the best interest of all Albertans. You know, I mentioned yesterday in my comments that the public interest was kept in this bill, which is great. It was taken out of Bill 2, but it’s still in here, so that’s good. This commission is working in the best interest of Albertans, and I just don’t see how buying shares and gambling with their money is in the best interest. It should be put back into the government and into, as I said, the heritage savings trust fund for future generations to enjoy.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m happy to stand in support of this amendment by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. One of the things that I just want to mention here is that I agree with the fact that, you know, creating the ability for the commission to buy shares – from my understanding, we already have an investment firm with the government called AIMCo, and I think their primary job is to do this. If they see an opportunity to purchase shares in any company that they see fit on the market, that’s their job. That’s how they perform their duties. That’s what they’re tasked with. To mix and match this commission with dealing with their duties, that this act is rolling out, and to give them the ability to purchase shares I think is getting a little sketchy.

I think we’re starting to cross boundaries, and I don’t know if that’s in the best interest. I think they need to focus on what this act is all about, and I think it’s going to be a big job and a big challenge in the first place. I don’t think they have a role in actually reaching out and purchasing shares or doing any joint agreements with any companies. If they do see opportunities, they can take their profits from what they do and they can make recommendations to the individuals at AIMCo. They are the experts, and it’s their job to look into any business opportunities or investment opportunities out there. The fact that we’re trying to do two things with one group, I find that a little bit disconcerting. I think it’s, you know, maybe not in the best interest of trying to keep the goals and the ideals and the objectives straightforward with this act.

So, again, I think that we should be very cautious going down this path, and I do recommend that everybody consider this amendment, and hopefully we have a positive outcome.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’ll be brief. I just have a couple of concerns about allowing this agency, this marketing agency, to buy shares in another company. I think that my concern focuses on monitoring and controlling this. We’re getting confidential information, if I understood the minister who spoke on this a few moments ago. Are we using that confidential information in a way like insiders, to then acquire or trade in stock? Are we taking stock in lieu of some other form of revenue? Is that what this is about? I think we need a little bit more clarity on this. I can see why my hon. friend from Strathmore-Brooks has expressed these concerns, and I think they’re grave concerns.

I believe that another part of this issue will be those people who then are in a position of management or direction of this agency, who are making a decision to have the agency buy shares on behalf of the citizens of Alberta because they obviously must think that there’s an advantage. They’re betting that there will be with somebody else’s money, which is always a dangerous power to give to someone, spending other people’s money on other people. In addition, for those people who are the agents or who are the employees, will there be some provision to prevent them from trading and taking advantage of this secret proprietary inside information to trade on their own behalf? I think there’s a risk there, and I’m not sure how that’s going to be addressed. But if it is, I’d like to know about it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Mr. Hancock: There seems to be a desire to have a response to some of these comments, and while I wasn’t really tempted to do so, I'm more than happy to indicate that when you have a marketing agency that's charged with getting Albertans best value for their petroleum products, it behooves you to make sure that they have access to the full range of tools. Will they be accountable? Absolutely. They have to be accountable. Will they have to adhere to appropriate standards of conduct? Of course they have to adhere. I mean, the whole concept of insider trading, of people taking information that they access in their position and using it for their personal benefit, is at the root of codes of conduct and at the root of insider trading rules and all those sorts of issues.

I think we're stretching it here to try and find a problem where there isn't one. What we're actually doing is giving the Petroleum Marketing Commission the tools it needs in a modern marketing environment, with the nature of the bitumen and the petroleum markets that we have, to be able to have the flexibility to maximize Albertans' return.

Will there be oversight? Yes, there's oversight. Will there be audited financial statements? Yes, there are audited financial statements. Will there be reporting? Yes, there's reporting. Will they have to operate in a commercial field, where it requires them to keep certain information confidential because they got it as a result of the legislation but it's commercial proprietary information? Absolutely. Do they need all the tools that a marketing commission or marketing agency would need to have? Yes.

Are they going to go to Vegas with our dollars? No. Are they going to be gambling it away? No. Are they going to put our money in socks under the mattress? No.

They're going to be a modern operating agency with modern operating tools, with appropriate financial structures, appropriate reporting pieces, and with appropriate auditing and oversight. I don't know if I can say it any plainer than that, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the hon. minister getting up and speaking. I agree with some of his points, but with most of them I don't. You know, he said that they're trying to do the best that they can. We're just trying to stop a problem before it occurs. It is a problem. You've taken bitumen royalty in kind from North West upgrader. Next thing you're going to be buying shares in North West upgrader. Well, you might as well own the whole thing. You might as well build your own refinery if you're going to be taking bitumen in kind and you're going to be buying shares in these companies. You know, who's going to determine what companies to buy shares in? It's bad business. It's just bad business.

The Member for Medicine Hat said that you have AIMCo. You know, we've got the heritage savings trust fund. We've got other ways to invest Albertans' dollars that are made more public, with actual companies that do that rather than a commission that looks after oil royalties and revenue, investment in oil and gas companies.

It's going to lead to too many questions, so why not be open and honest and transparent and say, "Yep; we're making all this money, we're giving it to these people to invest, we're investing for our children's future, and we're investing for the infrastructure we need now." But, you know, picking winners and losers is going to happen because: "Geez, I have a company. Why aren't you investing in my company?" The next guy: "Well, I have an oil company. Why aren't you investing in my oil company? I need some help." So it opens up, you know, a whole new can of worms. I think the commission that's looking after these programs, the royalty money, Albertans' money, should not be investing it back into the market that they play.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, we'll call the question on amendment A3.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Question on the bill. Are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 34 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 43

Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As the Wildrose Official Opposition advocate for enterprise I rise to propose an amendment. I actually will have three amendments, but we'll do them one at a time. I want to make sure I do this right. I have the requisite number of copies, including the original.

The Chair: Sounds good, sir. If you'll just pause for a brief moment, we'll just get that moving. Hon. member, this will be referred to as A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed. Again, I would assume you're going to read it into the record just so we make sure that the one that's being circulated is the one that you're referring to. Please proceed.

9:30

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. This is notice of amendment to Bill 43, Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Bikman to move that Bill 43, Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013, be amended as follows:

- A. Section 3(c) is amended
  - (a) in the proposed subsection (2.1) by striking out "10" and substituting "7";
  - (b) in the proposed subsection (2.2) by striking out "10-year maximum" and substituting "7-year maximum".
- B. Section 6(b) is amended
  - (a) in the proposed subsection (1.1) by striking out "10" and substituting "7";
  - (b) in the proposed subsection (1.2) by striking out "10-year maximum" and substituting "7-year maximum".

The reason for this is because I believe it's necessary and in our best interests to have a change of players in this agency, and I think that this will allow or guarantee that people will have the continuity, that the expertise will remain there for two 3-year terms not to exceed seven years but that they'll still be available and that there will be new faces that will come along with new ideas, fresh ideas. It's in the best interest, I believe, of all Albertans and certainly of the government to be receiving information from knowledgeable, capable people who are there for up to seven years, no longer, so that we'll get fresh ideas and fresh perspectives and be able to take advantage of that.

I would hope that you will see the benefit of this. It's a fairly simple amendment, and I think that the reasons are sound. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to support the bill, one, because of the value that advice and consultation have, particularly of this nature and this importance. But I also rise to support this amendment because what it ensures is that we constantly look over a seven-year span to renew versus a 10-year span. Again, this is, I suppose, somewhat prescriptive, but I don't think that it's a burden on the government to look for new members in seven years versus 10. I just thought that the 10-year period was too long, so I agree with the hon. member that brings the amendment. The whole purpose is that as we move forward, this government should always be looking for fresh faces and new ideas, and this is one way to sort of tighten that up a little bit. I just don't see where it's too much of a problem from that seven to 10 years.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a lot of respect for the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who has brought forward this amendment, but I have to say that I think this is an amendment looking for a place to happen. We're talking about terms on a committee, and they're three-year terms. If the member is not able to serve appropriately, the term doesn't have to be renewed after three years. If you're finding that a board is tired and you need to refresh it, you can go out and not renew the terms of members whose terms are retiring.

On the other hand – and I have this experience, serving on the Student Finance Board, for example, and back then it wasn't legislated; it was just policy – if you've served your two terms and you're getting close to the middle of your second term or the end of your second term and then somebody says, "How would you like to be chair? You've got a lot of experience," then you have to say, "Well, you're not going to actually reappoint me because I've timed out."

You really do want to have the flexibility to keep the people who are bringing passion and excitement and continuing to make a contribution, but you don't abdicate your responsibility on every renewal to do a determination as to whether the person is contributing still, has something to offer, or, even if they are, if you need to actually bring in some new perspectives and refresh. So giving not too much latitude but some latitude for a board like this is quite important.

I have to end where I started. It seems like somebody was trying to come up with an amendment and thought that this one might be a good one. I don't see what we were trying to accomplish here with this particular amendment. Some of the others I can understand where they're coming from.

We talked yesterday under Bill 30 about the difficulty of recruiting and getting people who are prepared to put in time and effort and bring their expertise to the table, and when you've got somebody who is actually doing that and providing a leadership role and you want to continue to have them, you want to ask them to continue in a chair position or do something of that nature, a little flexibility is actually a good thing. One shouldn't take these things as being automatic in terms of renewal terms coming up and terms being renewed. We have to continue to do our due diligence always to say: are we maximizing the potential of this particular board by getting the best people we can to serve on those boards to serve Albertans?

The Chair: Are there other speakers?
The question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have another amendment to propose. I have the requisite number of copies.

The Chair: Hon. member, this will be amendment A2. You may speak to it. Thank you.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is an amendment to Bill 43. I move that Bill 43, Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by striking out section 7 and substituting the following:

- (7) This Act expires on March 31, 2020, unless it is continued for a further period by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

I think that it's important that for a sunset clause to be most effective, we have the Legislature determine whether or not the act should continue, not behind closed doors in the cabinet. That's the reason for the proposal. It gives us an opportunity together, collectively, not just the government, which I learned a year and a half ago isn't all of us or all of you but is 17 select people and the Premier. Well, I realize that has expanded recently, but you know what I mean. I think it's better if we have a chance to look at that and keep the sunset clause there in an effective manner.

So I submit that this is not an amendment looking for a bill to happen. It's a legitimate amendment. But I'll accept the initial criticism on the earlier point.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other speakers? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will just be short and brief. This member truly believes in sunset clauses, and that's why, when we were first reviewing this bill, he was adamant that this is one of the better ways to be more efficient. With that, I will support the hon. member's sunset clause.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I also rise to support this amendment because I think that it is of value to have the Legislature actually give some consideration to the record of this organization and to give some consideration to whether or not it's actually doing the job it purports to and whether or not it's doing it in a way that actually reflects the hopes and inspirations and goals of the majority of Albertans. I think that that's a valuable discussion for us to have because, quite frankly, I'm not convinced that the majority of Albertans are totally aware that, you know, we have this economic development authority consisting entirely of business folks who are sitting around the table advising the government on how to change our Education Act and how to deal with poverty and how to deal with the social policy framework and how to deal with sustainable economic development and how to deal with our education system. It's really a little bit overwhelming, Mr. Chair.

When I look at some of the significant policy decisions that this organization has had an opportunity to weigh in on – and I clearly see the linkage between their objectives and some of the worst policy decisions that this government has made over the course of the last few years – I have to say that I don't actually think that they reflect the majority view of most Albertans around how our economy should develop over time. Now, I'm sure that my view in that regard is currently a minority view in the Legislature. I am not convinced it is a minority view of most Albertans.

I was just looking at the list of people on the management board, and it reads like a who's who in the oil and gas industry. Then, very strangely, this organization has recommended that, you know, we back away from that idea of diversifying our economy and that instead we just look at ways to make more money for existing successful economic sectors that are in Alberta.

Well, you know, I'm not totally sure that all Albertans realize that this little group of business folks who are sitting around a table advising the Premier have actually said: "You know what? Let's not try to become a leader in some of these other areas that we're not already a leader in. The ship has sailed on renewable energy. So you know what? We're supergood at nonrenewable energy, so let's not work too hard on diversifying our economy into a sector that we don't already do well in."

You know, I'm just sitting here tonight and reading through the reports. I certainly haven't read them all, but I've read through four or five different reports that this organization has produced over the course of the last two or three years, and I have to say that it is concerning to me. I will say that I also don't think it reflects what the majority of Albertans want to see.

I remember when the Education Act changes were made a year or two ago, and I was quite offended to see that one of the objects of the education system in Alberta was to be amended to align with the needs of industry. So our kids in K to 12 are going into school with the stated objectives to ensure that their education aligns with what industry needs and aligns with what industry wants. You know, I don't really want my kids to go into school and follow a curriculum that someone sitting around the table with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers has told them ought to be in the curriculum.

I mean, there are some real interesting folks that are in this organization – and I'll get into that in a bit more detail with my upcoming amendment – but suffice it to say that it reads like the who's who of the Conservative Party in Alberta. There's not really anybody else there that doesn't actually reflect that demographic. But I'll get to that in a bit.

You know, when we talk about the economic development of this province, Mr. Chair, we don't just talk about the bottom line of the current businesses that are in place right now. We talk about the overarching economic future of the province and the degree to which that economy will contribute to and support the best interests and the hopes and the dreams of the citizens of the province. That doesn't necessarily mean that we then divert all of our resources into maintaining that the three dominant industries in Alberta right now continue for time immemorial.

I think we need to have a more open conversation around where it is that we're going and how it is that we've got this group of extremely powerful people sitting around a room, you know, defining and giving input to practically every major policy objective that this government embarks upon right now. We've had nothing but chaos in the postsecondary system, and reading the reports of Alberta Innovates and stuff, there's no question that I can see their fingerprints over many of the very poor decisions that have been made in the postsecondary system over the course of the last year or two.

All that being said, I know that the member who proposed this amendment wasn't actually doing it in order to support this particular set of concerns that I'm raising; however, what he is saying is that: "You know what? We ought to be taking a look at this organization every now and then and deciding as a Legislature whether it still reflects what it is that members of this Assembly, who've been elected by the citizens of the province, want to see."

With that in mind, I'm quite happy to support this amendment, and I hope others will, too.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill.

Mr. Bikman: My third and final amendment, looking for a bill to happen, the requisite copies.

The Chair: If you would just have that circulated, please, hon. member. That'll be amendment A3.

Proceed, hon. member, please.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Reading this in, then, Mr. Bikman to move that Bill 43, Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 4 by adding the following after clause (b):

(b.1) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) The Government must publicly respond within 3 months to reports, studies and recommendations published by the Authority under subsection (2)(d).

The reason for this is consistent with the theme that you'll hear from me almost any time that I get up to speak about transparency and accountability and responsibility.

I've read the reports that were available to me. I see some good things in them. I see some evidence that the government has acted on some of them. But I think that in order to verify and justify even this relatively minuscule budget compared to most of the money we see spent, it's still important that we show the public and particularly us who sit here as their representatives, representing the citizens of our great province, that these reports are in fact being used or that they're going to be intended to be used in this fashion or that fashion. It's just consistent with that principle that if you don't measure it, you can't manage it, that if you can't measure it, you probably shouldn't be doing it.

With that, I would ask you to give serious consideration, please, to the wisdom of this minimalist amendment in search of sanity on the other side.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the amendment? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment from the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. The amendment is not much different from an earlier amendment we discussed on another bill, which is to look for some continuity to the results of reports being filed. I don't see where this one is prescriptive. This amendment gives a tremendous amount of flexibility. It doesn't tell the government how to respond. What it says is that you should respond. It's a little bit like question period. We get to ask the questions; we don't necessarily get the answers or even have to have an answer. The idea is that it would result in an action based on a report that's filed. I think it's reasonable to ask for that. Even if the government responded and said, "Hey, we need six more months before we're going to take action," that would still be considered a response.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak a little bit more about AEDA and to talk a little bit about how we might want to change it in order to have it reflect certainly the concerns that I hear from my constituents about what they would like to see the future of this province look like.

You know, I'm just sitting here on their website, and I'm looking at the committees that AEDA has, and it's interesting. They have one called Energy and the Environment. Interestingly, there is nobody on that committee from the environmental advocacy community. Interestingly, even though their mandate is to ensure Alberta's energy resources and infrastructure are managed in an environmentally and economically sustainable way, what they're actually working on right now has absolutely no reference at all to the environment. There's no work being done on enhancing the environmental quality or the environmental standards around our primary industry, which is energy. There's no work being done on coal. There's talk about increasing pipelines, but there's no work being done on dealing with pipeline safety. There's nothing in there around mission strategies. There's none of that stuff, yet presumably all of those issues are issues for somebody who truly believes and understands that our economy, based on a nonrenewable energy foundation, can only move forward if we actually, genuinely establish a meaningful environmental regime within which it would work. There needs to be that understanding.

This group of high-powered business executives are working on developing recommendations around energy and the environment, and they're not working at all on this whole issue of what everyone is talking about these days, this idea of creating social licence. These guys are clearly decision-makers. Just to be clear, they are decision-makers. They're kind of like this government's A-team. These are probably the folks making 95 per cent of the decisions that come through this Assembly right now, yet they're not working on issues of the environment even though there's an Energy and the Environment Committee.

That's just an example of how I think it's very possible that this organization is losing sight of what the majority of Albertans would expect such an organization to deal with and, in fact, instead is just working on their very narrow interest.

Before I get into my amendment, it actually brings a question to mind. I don't know if there's anyone over on the other side who can answer this question for me. I'm really very interested because this organization has such a clear impact on government decision-making. It's good. It's transparent. It's all good. Well, it's relatively transparent.

The question is: are there any conflict-of-interest rules around the folks who sit on this board, and to what extent are they covered by lobbying legislation? I'm just curious. Of course, because they've been invited to sit on this board, I think they're probably exempted from all lobbying. I'm not sure, but I'm just looking to know. There are about 52 people, I believe, on the management board of this organization. A few of them are from postsecondary institutions. The remainder of them are from businesses almost exclusively associated with the oil and gas industry. I'm just curious: are there rules around conflict of interest? Are there standards that they need to adhere to? Are they prohibited from advancing policies that simply benefit their particular set of business interests? Is there a way to track that?

I mean, I think these are legitimate questions. When I look at the degree to which this group sits down to make a bunch of recommendations and then, lo and behold, their recommendations find their way into legislation six months later, I think Albertans kind of need to know. So that's my question.

I will introduce my amendment, and then perhaps in response to my amendment someone from over there could answer those questions for me because I think they're very, very important questions, that Albertans deserve to have answered. I will pass this amendment on.

The Chair: Sounds good, hon. member. That'll be amendment A4.

In the interests of time, you may want to start, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: In essence, what this proposal would do is that it would amend section 3(b) of Bill 43, and it would strike out subclause (ii)(c). "Up to 12 other members appointed by the Minister on the recommendation of the Executive Chair": that is what's currently in there. What we would suggest is that it would say:

- (c) up to 12 other members appointed by the Minister on the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly and comprised of at least
  - (i) one economist,
  - (ii) one representative from a non-profit environmental group,
  - (iii) one representative from organized labour, and
  - (iv) one representative from the Aboriginal community.

Yes, it is prescriptive. It's prescriptive, and you know what else it is? It's asking to be invited to the party. We're asking if other Albertans can be allowed into the family to see if they could perhaps be allowed into that discussion amongst this group of otherwise eminent – eminent – Conservatives who currently play a leadership role in this. Essentially, it's sort of like a super lobby group. That is what it is. It's like a legislatively endorsed lobby group which, because it's legislatively endorsed, I suspect is exempt from any of those lobby rules. That's what it's looking to do.

The other thing, of course, it asks to do is that it asks that it be appointed by the Legislative Assembly. Now, we heard in great detail today about how, when an all-party committee of the Legislative Assembly appoints people, it is entirely fair and entirely objective. I think we all know that that is a bit of a fiction. Nonetheless, the idea is that it is certainly more transparent, anyway, so members of the opposition at least have some insight into how this work is done.

The idea is that the Legislative Offices Committee or some select special committee of the Legislature would meet to come up with the other 12 members or at least approve, have final approval for, the other 12 members that are appointed to the Alberta Economic Development Authority, and heaven forbid that we would be looking at having a person there who is representative of environment or able to advocate on environmental issues, who is a representative of an environmental group or, goodness – here's a shocker – someone from organized labour.

You know, here we are talking about economic growth and creating jobs and all that kind of stuff. We've got 52 people on the management board of this organization and not one member from organized labour. Surprisingly – surprisingly – one of their first major recommendations was to increase the pool of temporary foreign workers so that the pressures on growing wages don't hurt employers. Therefore, you know, we can just ensure that we have a nice, healthy pool of low-paid workers who are still compelled to buy houses and groceries and bus tickets in our otherwise very robust economy.

Nonetheless, they came up with this strategy to ensure that we increase the pool of low-paid workers, and that's hardly surprising, but it is, again, not something that I think most Albertans would have necessarily been behind. Maybe if we'd had somebody who had the interests of, oh, the other 99 per cent at heart sitting at this table, we might have had somebody actually talk about: is this really the way we want to develop the economy going forward, bringing in a second-class bunch of citizens and paying them well below what we pay everybody else and not ensuring that they get to work with safety, with dignity, according to the rules and all that other kind of stuff? Does that seem like a reasonable thing? I don't think so. However, it's hardly surprising that this particular group would say: yeah, let's open the floodgates and bring in more temporary foreign workers.

The other group, of course, is the indigenous community. I will give them credit that AEDA did talk about the fact that we need to find ways to enhance the participation of indigenous Albertans in our economy. They do talk about it, but when I look at all of their sort of working committees and all of their recommendations, there's really no strategy developed. There's very little around that. So there's lip service, and then there's actually doing something about it.

Then, of course, as I've said before, we have this lovely energy and environment committee that has no environmental representatives on it and, strangely, has not one recommendation or is doing nothing to talk about the environment. The minister over there is looking at me like I just landed from another planet. I know he is. "What do you mean talk about environmental protection while we're trying to develop the economy? Are you nuts?" Well, some people actually think the two go hand in hand, but obviously not everybody over on that side does, and certainly not everybody at the Alberta Economic Development Authority does.

Just to review, though, some of the other PC stars who do play a role on the Alberta Economic Development Authority, well, you know, we've got Les LaRocque, employed with a company that donated $2,300 to the Premier's campaign and is also a former chairman from Merit Contractors Association, which, of course, has given more than $62,000 in donations to the PCs since 2004 and, of course, had a great deal to benefit from having a pro temporary foreign worker labour policy established here in Alberta. So that's interesting. Then we've got the vice-chair, a former PC candidate in Little Bow, so that's good. He's fairly earned his place on the board. Then my favourite, of course, is the chair, Barry Heck, who the Globe and Mail reported over a year ago as being the broker behind that fabulous and much-needed last-minute half a million dollars campaign contribution to the Progressive Conservatives right before the last election.

It really is sort of the top of the pops for those kinds of really important Tories that we like to find places for. Those are the people that are sort of in the most senior positions there. Then again, as I've said, going through the 52 people that are on the management board, I will acknowledge that there are two or three people from the post-secondary sector and one or two or three that we could characterize as from the municipalities. The remainder are all from business. There are no nonprofit people there, no community people, no environmental people, no indigenous people, no labour people, yet somehow we're going to develop an economy that works for all Albertans. I think not, not with the way this is currently constructed.

That, Mr. Chairman, is why I am recommending this proposal, that we actually try opening this high-powered group of businesspeople who get to have regular meetings with the Premier without being subject to the lobby legislation, I'm pretty sure, and potentially not being subject to the conflict-of-interest legislation. I can't tell because no one has answered on that issue. My suggestion is that we make that group a little bit more reflective of the Alberta that exists for the rest of us.

I hope members of this Assembly will consider supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other speakers to amendment A4?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. Other speakers?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 43 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 34 and Bill 43.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills and reports the following bills: Bill 34 and Bill 43. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Having heard the motion by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cannot believe I'm saying this, but I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:07 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray today and give thanks for the privilege that we have been given to serve in this Assembly and for the trust that our electors have put into our hands. Let us use that trust ever so wisely. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: I think we have some visitors. Hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, the floor is yours.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour and pleasure to rise and introduce visitors on behalf of the hon. Minister of Education who are here today seated in your gallery. They have come to us all the way from the Northwest Territories. I guess they've come south for warmer weather, apparently. Here today we have the hon. Jackson Lafferty. He's the Minister of Education, Culture and Employment as well as the Minister Responsible for the Worker's Safety and Compensation Commission. The Minister of Education will be meeting with Minister Lafferty later this afternoon, assuming he gets unstuck in traffic, as he is right now, to discuss a number of issues pertaining to their membership on the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada. Accompanying Minister Lafferty today are Assistant Deputy Minister Rita Mueller, executive assistant Morven MacPherson, and Dr. Marie Wilson from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. I would ask our visitors to rise and please accept the warm wishes of our Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we recognize National Bullying Awareness Week, I am pleased to introduce a courageous young teen from Innisfail: Aidan Remple. In August Aidan was viciously assaulted by a group of teens while longboarding in a park near his home. His head was cut open, and the beating gave him bruises all over his body. He could not play football for weeks because of these injuries. Aidan's teammates, coaches, and the Innisfail Minor Hockey Association all rallied around him. In September they hosted a special football tournament at McMahon Stadium in his honour. Every player and spectator wore an orange ribbon to show support for Aidan and to send a strong message against violence in their community. I want to acknowledge Aidan for his bravery and his resilience in coming here today. His story is a reminder to all Albertans of the terrible harm that violence and bullying cause. Aidan is accompanied in the members' gallery by his mother, Jennifer Remple. I'd ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us proceed to school groups, then, starting with Edmonton-South West, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Jeneroux: Now, Mr. Speaker, we've had introductions this past week of many wonderful school groups: one by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, another from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, and many others where they indicated that their students are the brightest students in our province. That may just be; however, let me introduce to you and to all members of this fine Assembly some of the smartest, some of the brightest, and definitely some of the best-dressed students these walls of the Legislature Chamber have ever seen. I challenge all members to find sharper and more gifted students than these 43 young, aspiring scholars that stand with purpose and poise in our gallery here today. These students are the future. These students are the leaders. These students are the hope. Quite simply, these students are from George P. Nicholson school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of Alberta's brightest and best and also, not to be outdone, extremely well-dressed – we're all very proud of them – students from Wye school in my constituency just east of Sherwood Park. There are two classes with us here today. They're accompanied by teachers Mrs. Tanya Jordan, Ms Naomi Houle, Mrs. Sue King and parent helpers Mrs. Brenda Lavoie, Mrs. Kristi Cooper, Mrs. Gillian Kirkland, and Mrs. Nicole Knott. They're seated in both the visitors' and members' galleries today. I have a very strong connection to Wye school. My son, Jack, went to Wye school a few years ago and is doing extremely well. I think we can anticipate, being the great, great school that it is, that all of these students that are with us here today have a very, very successful future in front of them. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some special representatives from careers in transition. This organization does amazing work to help Albertans prepare themselves to gain employment by providing individual-centred adult education, training, and career counselling services. They are seated up in the gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let's go on with guests, then, beginning with Red Deer-North, followed by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. However, one of my guests, just as the minister, is stuck in traffic, and maybe I could ask that we revert to introductions later.

My first two introductions. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly seven individuals who are here today to support their petition, which contains 15,744 signatures, requesting that the government keep Michener open. My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask each of them to rise as I call their name: Diane Esslinger, Michener family member; Jenna Baynes, Darrol Mason, and Russell Clark, all of whom work at the Michener centre; and Jason Heistad, executive secretary-treasurer of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Please join me in giving these individuals the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Please proceed with your other introduction.

Mrs. Jablonski: My second introduction on behalf of the Minister of Education is Mr. Kevin Pizzey, who is seated in the members' gallery. Kevin is a teacher at C.P. Blakely elementary school in Sylvan Lake and has taught for over two decades. Kevin is also the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association Chinooks Edge local. I would ask that he please rise so he can also receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: While we wait for other guests to arrive, let me go on to Edmonton–Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly seven representatives from Covenant Health here today in celebration of the 150th anniversary of Catholic health care in Alberta. Covenant Health's current Catholic health care ministry began in St. Albert and long before Alberta became a province. The Sisters of Charity, Grey Nuns, founded the province's first hospital, welcoming their first patient, an elderly man reported to be 100 years old. Catholic sisters met the health care needs of many of Alberta's early pioneer families, and they continue to help in the integrated health care system we enjoy today. I extend heartfelt congratulations and sincere gratitude to Covenant Health's professional leadership and service delivery in our great province.

My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names: Dr. John Brennan, Covenant Health board chair; Mr. Patrick Dumelie, Covenant Health president and CEO; Sister Marguerite Letourneau, co-ordinator, Grey Nuns of St. Albert; Sister Blandine Roussel-Galle, member, Grey Nuns of St. Albert; Mrs. Mary Pat Skene, Covenant Health board member; Mr. Dennis Grant, Covenant Health board member; and Mr. George Lucki, Covenant Health Edmonton community board member. I would now ask that the Assembly join yours truly to provide my guests with the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–South West, followed by Calgary–Mountain View.

National Housing Day

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to proudly recognize National Housing Day, being held tomorrow across Canada. This important day reminds all Canadians of the importance of ensuring that everybody has a warm and safe place to live. While Alberta may have some of the coldest weather in Canada, we're often recognized for leading the nation in initiatives to end homelessness. This government continues to make great strides in fulfilling our promise to end homelessness once and for all. Earlier this year our Premier appointed 33 members to the Interagency Council on Homelessness, or the IAC. The IAC brings together different levels of government, community organizations, and leaders to oversee a number of priorities.

One of these priorities includes the ongoing success of our 10-year plan to end homelessness through the housing first approach. To meet this specific priority, the council is currently leading the development of the integrated housing and supports framework. This framework will address the housing needs of Albertans through a complete and cohesive system of housing options and supports. In addition, the group is also developing a housing strategy to expand on the 10-year plan to meet current and future housing demands across Alberta. These are just a few examples of how the council has committed to ending this issue in Alberta. The IAC is serving as a great model for the rest of Canada on how government, community organizations, and leaders can collaborate together to reach a common goal.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the members of this Assembly to participate in some of the great housing and homeless support events taking place around Alberta on National Housing Day and in the coming months. To learn more about upcoming events, members can definitely contact my office or the office of the Minister of Human Services. To learn more about what is being done for the homeless population, Albertans can visit humanservices.alberta.ca/homelessness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary–Mountain View, followed by Bonnyville–Cold Lake.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health Quality Council's report on emergency medical services was nine months ago, and EMS services continue to be unacceptable to Albertans. The Liberal caucus has heard from a number of these critical care staff that nothing much has changed. Inadequate communications, equipment, and staffing contribute to a climate of stress, haste, and dissatisfaction in a system that used to be the envy of other provinces.

In life-threatening emergencies where seconds matter, EMS response times have not improved. Fifty per cent of the time in cities it is over 12 minutes. Rural areas have much less reliable responses, and this is part of the reason Lethbridge and Red Deer and other rural communities are upset about a dispatch system that is remote and takes their ambulances out of their control. Dispatch centres in Edmonton and Calgary create greater uncertainty in distant communities, fail to understand rural and regional conditions, and may not communicate to other first responders in a timely fashion. Formerly EMS and fire received simultaneous communications and could co-ordinate their efforts, avoiding mistakes, miscommunications, and delays.

Disabling injury rates among EMS staff are high, especially in Calgary, where the number of days lost is four times higher than any other zone. Inexplicably, this doubled over the past year according to WCB data.

The recent Parkland report on seniors' care called From Bad to Worse highlighted the inadequate staffing and attention our seniors face in many centres across the province. This results in more heavy lifting, more time demands on EMS for minor conditions, and unnecessary trips.

Inter-facility transfers continue to inappropriately consume EMS time and along with an average of one hour of waiting in the emergency room per case add to the psychological strain and rushing over distances to deal with genuine emergencies.

All this adds up to unacceptable quality and a demoralized EMS workforce, itself at risk physically and psychologically. As one EMS worker put it: how can unhealthy workers provide good care to sick and injured people?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Red Deer-North.

Affordable Housing in Cold Lake

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 23 of this year Habitat for Humanity was pleased to present keys to 22 Cold Lake families. With the increasing need for affordable housing in Cold Lake, the project was a timely endeavour. The development of this was a first of its kind for Habitat Edmonton, an apartment complex with 32 units. The development was named Spirit Arms by the neighbouring Holy Cross elementary school grade 1 students. In the booming economy it is difficult to find housing, but our government and the city of Cold Lake have been diligent in ensuring they are addressing the great need in the city of Cold Lake.

Work at the housing project, which was started by the Cold Lake Affordable Housing Society, came to a halt in September of 2009 after the company hired to oversee the project and build the modular apartment complex went into receivership. The city of Cold Lake and Habitat for Humanity partnered together to ensure that this important project was completed. This development is a great example of how our government helps to facilitate sustainable, affordable housing projects. Our government laid the groundwork so that Habitat for Humanity was able to collaborate with the community of Cold Lake and other partners to provide affordable home ownership opportunities to local residents.

The city of Cold Lake has been a strong supporter of Habitat for Humanity bringing the affordable home ownership model into the city. This project comes at a crucial time and will give a lot of families hope in a very challenging housing market. We welcome Habitat for Humanity to our constituency and these families to their new homes. I'm sure that this partnership will continue to grow and to benefit all of the Bonnyville-Cold Lake residents in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, for a variety of weather reasons, one of the members has some guests who just got here. She's asked for unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests, and I'm going to allow her 10 seconds if you grant her unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Would you go ahead, then, hon. member, 10 seconds for the introduction and then straight into your statement.

Mrs. Jablonski: I'll be as quick as I can, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members Grant Johnson. Grant is the son of the late Yvonne Johnson, a woman who was an extremely active member of the Red Deer community. I will be sharing Yvonne's story with you in a member's statement today, and I'm so glad that Grant could make it and be here in time to hear the member's statement in memory of his mother. I would ask that you join me in giving him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Very quickly, the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, please.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 17 staff from Alberta Energy's oil sands division. I'm pleased to welcome them to the Legislature as part of their participation and public service orientation. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

Yvonne Johnson

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, where would our communities be without highly motivated and inspirational people like Yvonne Johnson, who look after the rights of others and help to make our communities great places to live?

On October 23 of this year Red Deer lost one of its most committed, passionate, and dedicated citizens when Yvonne Johnson died. Yvonne was an entrepreneur who had owned and operated Yvonne's House of Fashion, later called The Wardrobe. Her fashion advice was sought after by many dignitaries, including the Hon. Helen Hunley, past Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

But it wasn't just fashion advice that was sought after; it was also political advice as Yvonne was a strong supporter of the Progressive Conservative Party provincially and federally. Five years before the PCs came to power in Alberta, Yvonne had been a powerful and respected member. It was not unusual to hear Yvonne say that she had recently had a conversation with the Prime Minister. Yvonne had many achievements, too numerous to list. She was a mover and a shaker who was the first female president of a PC constituency association. She was given achievement awards by Premier Getty and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

But most remarkable and extraordinary about Yvonne was that after she had suffered and recovered from a brain aneurysm in 1985 that left her disabled and in a wheelchair, Yvonne was just as strong and determined as ever. Yvonne became one of the strongest advocates for people with disabilities, pointing out to all elected officials the lack of accessibility in our communities. I will remember Yvonne for the persistent and determined work that she did in our community on behalf of all citizens, especially on behalf of people with disabilities. I will also remember that as she faced life's challenges with courage and dignity, I could depend on Yvonne for her wisdom and for the advice of a good friend.

Yvonne Johnson was born on December 19, 1937, in Calgary, and she died in Red Deer on October 23, 2013. She had two sons, Grant Donald Johnson and Kenneth Gordon Johnson. Grant is here today, and I would ask you to join me in acknowledging the many and great accomplishments of his mother, Yvonne Johnson.

Member's Apology

The Speaker: Mr. Clerk, just hold the clock, if you would, for a moment.

Hon. members, I've been asked by one member that he be granted a minute or so in order to make an apology and to withdraw and otherwise correct some comments he made in social media yesterday in which he publicly criticized your Speaker. The member in question in this regard is the hon. Member for Airdrie. He came to my office yesterday and apologized to me personally.

This is an extremely serious matter, hon. members, so when he asked if he could have a minute at the earliest opportunity to make his statement and apology in front of all members, I granted him his request. Accordingly, I would expect the deepest of respect and silence from all of you while he makes his statement.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the last two days have been quite heated, which happens from time to time in this House, but adults, of course, should talk out their differences in a civil and friendly manner.

I requested a meeting with you yesterday afternoon, which you granted, and we had a very constructive chat in your office. You listened very respectfully to the frustration of our caucus as it pertains to question period proceedings, and I thank you for that. I believe a better mutual understanding was reached.

In the spirit of moving forward, I'm going to apologize to you and withdraw any comments or tweets regarding you on these matters made in or outside this House. I look forward to high quality and fair question periods both today and in the future.

I do want to make clear in my comments, Mr. Speaker, that it is clear in our parliamentary tradition that statements made outside the House in the media or on Twitter are not commented on by the Speaker, nor should they be. Obviously, the rights of free speech must be respected, and I trust you agree. However, I am extending a hand of goodwill on this issue, and it is my sincere hope we can move on to what question period should be about, and that is holding this government to account.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Statement by the Speaker

Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Airdrie.

Hon. members, as the member referenced, a lot of unfortunate things have occurred over these past few days, and many inappropriate comments have been made both inside and outside this Chamber. You just heard evidence of that point.

I, too, want to take a few minutes to remind all of us that once you are elected to serve in this House and you take the oath to Her Majesty, you step into a whole new world, a world full of traditions, customs, and practices. You step into an institution that has been founded on practices, procedures, and principles that, in fact, go back centuries. Those traditions, those institutions and practices are rock solid. Hon. members, they are extremely serious.

They and the entire parliamentary system are in turn fortified by rules, rules which we often refer to as citations, and more specifically in our case we have our own standing orders. We should all know at least the very basic rules and standing orders, but if we don't, we should learn them as they are cited by our House leaders, such as the one who just spoke, for example, when they are raising or defending a point of order, or when your Speaker or your Deputy Speaker or your Chair of Committees is making a ruling or interjects to remind you of a particular rule. These rules are not rules that any single one of us may have made, but they are rules that must guide us to help preserve the institutions that I just spoke about and of which we are all part.

These rules can of course be changed. They can be amended. New ones can be brought in. So if you have an issue with one or more of our rules, there is a process in place that you can use to affect change. Similarly, if you have an issue with an act or a bill that is about to become an act, a law, as it were, there is a process in place to deal with that as well. Finally, if you have an issue with the Speaker or whoever is chairing, there is a process in place to accommodate that as well. I want to comment very briefly on that as I wrap up.

As occurred yesterday when the chair accepted yesterday's apology from the Member for Airdrie, the issue of criticizing the Speaker is really one of respect or disrespect for the institution. The role of the Speaker is something that is fundamental to our parliamentary system and our entire system of responsible government.

As members may be aware, 2015 will mark the 800th anniversary of the Magna Carta, which helped lay the foundation for our form of parliamentary government. As Philip Laundy says at page 11 in his 1984 book titled The Office of Speaker in the Parliaments of the Commonwealth, "The office of Speaker is almost as old as Parliament itself," as the first Speaker was designated in 1377. So there is history, hon. members. There is tradition for the respect that should be accorded to the Office of the Speaker. This is not about me. This is about the position.

The chair addressed the subject of criticizing the Speaker yesterday on pages 2965 to 2966 of Hansard, which is worth repeating briefly. The quotation from Beauchesne, sixth edition, at paragraph 167 on pages 48 to 49, states as follows:

The essential ingredient of the speakership is found in the status of the Speaker as a servant of the House. The Presiding Officer, while but a servant of the House, is entitled on all occasions to be treated with the greatest attention and respect by the individual Members because the office embodies the power, dignity, and honour of the House itself.

If someone wants to challenge the chair, the appropriate mechanism is to bring a substantive motion forward that can be debated in the Assembly. Your chair, as with any chair in our parliamentary system, will not put up with nor should members of the Assembly put up with collateral attacks that bring the Assembly and the institution into disrepute and demonstrate a profound disrespect for the Office of the Speaker and the institution. As House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, states at page 313, "The actions of the Speaker may not be criticized in debate or by any means except by way of a substantive motion."

For those wondering about the impact of social media on proceedings in the Assembly, the chair is pleased to confirm that traditions that go back as far as the 14th century can adapt and be applied to our circumstances involving social media today, social media such as Twitter, for example. The hon. Member for Airdrie referred to his tweets as being disrespectful or words to that effect.

I want to remind not only that member but all of us, all of you, that a similar situation to what we just are speaking about occurred in the Assembly of the Northwest Territories as recently as last month. There a member had apologized in the Assembly and then made comments in social media that conflicted with that apology. Speaker Jackie Jacobson from the Northwest Territories said this at page 3261 of the Northwest Territories Hansard on October 31, 2013:

However, I do need to strongly caution Members that statements made outside the House, whether on Facebook or in other media, can amount to a breach of privilege or even contempt of the House.

This is especially so when a Member's comments could be read as challenging a ruling of the Speaker. It's thin ice and I urge Members to stay off of it.

This is not to protect me personally. It is to keep dignity and order in the House, so that we can get our work done.

Speakers across Canada, all of whom I've met with and done an informal survey with, do their level best to be as impartial as we possibly can. We do not go to caucus meetings when session is on unless we are specifically invited to address an item such as might come up under Members' Services or such as might come up in the House and caucus is looking for some guidance or a dialogue with the Speaker. We do not go to political events when the House is in session. We do our best to invite members to come to our offices as opposed to us going to their offices, especially government. There are exceptions that occasionally occur, obviously, but those are some of the premises.

Similarly, with respect to a website that I have, mypcmla, during session I've asked it to be withdrawn so that I can continue the role of being as absolutely impartial as I can, Lord help me.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for your first main set of questions.

School Construction Contracts

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we believe Alberta can build what it needs without saddling our children with mountains of debt. This is the fundamental difference between our party and the party opposite, and there's no better illustration than the sole-source P3 deal to build 19 schools announced yesterday. This government likes P3s because it is a way to hide debt. However, any Albertan knows that when you only have one company bidding on a contract, you won't get the best price, you won't get the best product, and you won't likely get what you want on time and on budget. To the Infrastructure minister: will he give up on this P3 model?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government knows how important these schools are to families and communities across the province, and we want to get them completed as soon as possible. Since we started building with P3s, our government has saved Alberta taxpayers more than $245 million, and I won't apologize for saving taxpayers money.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, no one is bidding on these contracts, and the government's record on sole-source contracts is abysmal. Look no further than the untendered deal handed to Enzo Developments to build school portables in High River. As it turned out, Enzo had no factory to build them and no experience building them. High River's Catholic school division did not receive the portables at the beginning of the school year as promised, and some classes are still being taught in a community hall. Again to the Infrastructure minister. The sole-source contract announced yesterday for the 19 schools is exactly from the same playbook. How can he be sure it won't produce the exact same result?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, for one thing, we didn't announce a sole-source contract yesterday. We're going forward with the RFP. The proponent, the Build to Learn consortium, is working up an RFP to present to government next spring. We will have a price for a traditional build, and we'll go ahead and hire an independent auditor to follow this transparency and come up with the costs on a traditional build. If the proponent bid doesn't come in under that and show value for dollar, we won't award the contract.

Ms Smith: It's a single bidder, Mr. Speaker.

Earlier this week I was proud to stand with my Infrastructure critic, my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat, as he released A Better Way to Build Alberta, our recommendations for how we can build what we need to build without going into debt. Chief among the recommendations is one to end debt financing through P3s like the one announced yesterday and return to a design/bid/build model that keeps costs and scope in check. When will the Infrastructure minister realize that the best way to build what we need responsibly is through open tenders and competitive bids?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government's ways of financing the future of our children through building schools and financing them is plain and clear. We have our financing in our financial statement as to how we'll build them, unlike across the floor. They plan to finance their schools by cutting operational. You can't cut $5 billion out of operational without affecting the people of this province. They hollered when we cut $147 million out of postsecondary education. How are they going to cut $5 billion?

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would cut wasteful spending like the $375 million.

Michener Centre Closure

Ms Smith: I want to visit a project I asked about Tuesday. The Premier and her caucus are going to be in Red Deer tomorrow, and the Premier has been invited to visit Michener Centre, which has won eight different Premier's awards of excellence from two of the last three Premiers. The residents, their families and guardians, the staff, all three opposition parties, Red Deer city council, and the Red Deer community at large oppose the Michener closure. Will the Infrastructure minister take his Premier to visit Michener Centre this weekend to understand the important and unique work that they do?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have heard of the Michener Centre from lots of people and have been there as well, but closing the Michener Centre isn't an infrastructure question; it's operational. We've heard time and time again in the House from my colleagues as to why it is important to do things differently going into the future. One of my colleagues may want to supplement that.

Ms Smith: The associate minister for persons with developmental disabilities disregards the fact that this closure will break the promise made by the PC government that the residents at Michener should be allowed to live out their lives there. On Tuesday he suggested that closing Michener was what the United Nations wanted and that it was consistent with the opinions of experts and government policy. This question is to the Human Services minister. Is there a single person in charge of the care of Michener residents who thinks that moving them out of their home is a good thing and that it will improve the quality of their lives?

Mr. Oberle: The funny thing about getting evidence and doing studies and talking to people around the world and being fully involved in your portfolio and expecting your staff to do that is that every once in a while you learn a little bit about the science. When faced with best practices from around the world and science from around the world, what are we supposed to do but implement them, Mr. Speaker? I believe in my heart that we're making the right decision for the care of the people that are in the Michener Centre, and there will be better outcomes.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in this case the families and the staff are the experts.

The minister must know that the families and the staff at Michener will be protesting tomorrow outside of the convention, where the Premier will be giving one of the most important speeches of her life. I can imagine that protest won't make the delegates feel all warm and fuzzy, but doing the right thing for Michener families and Michener residents could make the Premier a hero. Will the Minister of Human Services do the right thing today and cancel the closure?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition paints this as if (a) it's a black-hearted decision and (b) one that was taken lightly, and I can assure this House that neither is true. I can also assure this House that I have talked to staff members and to family members and visited the Michener Centre and visited care homes outside the Michener Centre. I'll say it again. This decision was not taken lightly. I believe in my heart that it was taken in the best interest of the people who are the most vulnerable in that centre.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I can tell you that's not what the families think and it's not what the staff think.

Publication of Reports

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Services quarterly report on wait times is late. In fact, we're only a few days away from when the next quarterly report is scheduled to be released. This raises a question about why this important report hasn't been made public. I'm guessing the report will once again make it clear that we have unacceptably long wait times for health procedures. Is the government purposely delaying the release of this report until after the leadership review of the Premier?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated several times since the summer, my department and Alberta Health Services are working on a revised performance measurement framework for our health care system, one that compares Alberta easily and accurately to national benchmarks such as those that are produced by the Canadian Institute for Health Information. There is no requirement to release performance data quarterly. We certainly do intend to continue to do that in the future, and as soon as the new framework is ready, I will be prepared to answer questions on it in the House.

Ms Smith: What a trend, Mr. Speaker. The 2011-12 annual report from the Legislative Assembly Office is also late, and that delay is now holding up the release of the 2012-13 annual report. These reports will likely confirm the massive cost overruns and delays facing the Taj Mahal of government waste, the federal building rehabilitation project, which will provide ritzy new offices for MLAs. Again to the Infrastructure minister: is the government purposely delaying the release of this report until after the Premier's leadership review?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, it's even hard to follow that question. The things we do on this side of the House in government aren't always related to politics and leadership of the party. We run and govern this province on what's best for the people of Alberta. They seem to think everything is connected to the leadership review. Nonsense.

Ms Smith: All right, Mr. Speaker. Number three. Albertans are rightly concerned about the possible conflict of interest facing the Premier over her awarding of a government contract to a law firm with close ties to her. Unfortunately, despite the fact that the report is apparently complete, its release has been delayed. This means that we don't know if the Premier has been cleared by the Ethics Commissioner. Is the government purposely delaying the release of this report until after the Premier's leadership review?

The Speaker: Hon. members, to my knowledge I haven't seen anything that would suggest that the report is complete yet or not, so I'm at a disadvantage here somewhat. I haven't seen anything official one way or the other. Perhaps we'll have that looked into.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, Government House Leader, do you wish to comment?

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you might have gone on to suggest, a report from a legislative officer does not go to government. It goes to the Speaker, and the Speaker tables it when the Speaker has it. The legislative officer provides his report to the Speaker, and when he provides his report to the Speaker, that's when we can assume he's done.

The Speaker: That's exactly where I was going with this. So we'll review this matter and just see where it stands.

Meanwhile let us move on to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Emergency Medical Worker Health and Safety

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Workers' Compensation Board statistics indicate a serious problem of injuries and absenteeism among Alberta emergency medical services workers. I'll be tabling the document appropriately later. First responders continue to be frustrated, overtaxed, short-staffed, and coping with inadequate equipment, by their admission. The disabling injury rate and days lost in Alberta is increasing, especially in the Calgary region. To the Minister of Health. You have a paramedic in caucus, another running the emergency medical system. Why have emergency medical services disabling injury and WCB rates soared this past year?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite honestly, I haven't reviewed the report to which the hon. member refers. I'd be happy to review it and provide him with comment.

But I will say that he is correct. We do have the benefit of a number of people in our caucus who are very close to the emergency medical services system. They do provide me with very good advice about the pressures that EMS staff face in different parts of the province, owing to our rapid growth as we often refer to in answers during question period. Alberta Health Services is very much focused on supporting those workers through additional resources, through things such as fatigue management policies, and so on.

Dr. Swann: Well, that flies in the face of everything we're hearing from the field, Mr. Minister. Given the Alberta Liberals have heard from many concerned EMS workers who have told us that inadequate vehicles and equipment have resulted in a growing number of injuries, what is the minister doing about this? How and when does he plan to address EMS safety?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as the associate minister in Human Services responsible for the Workers' Compensation Board I need to clarify for this House that any injury on the job site is indeed concerning. We want everybody to go home safe and sound to their families every night. The hon. member visited the Millard Health centre recently and presented to them his understanding of the dangers of EMS and the high injury rates, and they pointed out to him that his information was in error and that, in fact, there are other professionals that have higher injury rates. Nonetheless, we are concerned about injuries in the workplace with any profession, and we'll look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these statistics are especially shocking in the Calgary zone, where, for example, the number of days lost is four times that of any other zone for EMS workers, what is going on in Calgary, and what are you doing about it?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just said, I've offered, the WCB has offered to have a sit-down with this member and discuss his data in an open format. He can table whatever he wants. I'll extend that offer again. But that's not consistent with what I understand the situation to be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This spring the government announced plans to evict 125 people who call Michener Centre home. The minister cited a number of questionable excuses for this callous decision, but most suspect it was all about saving money. The NDP now has documents showing that a month and a half after the decision was announced, this government hired an ad agency to fabricate a rationale for the closure. To the minister for PDD: if this was truly about protecting Alberta's most vulnerable, why did you need a public relations firm to create a rationale for the decision long after it was made?

Mr. Oberle: Well, we simply did no such thing, Mr. Speaker. We did retain an advertising or public relations firm afterwards because, very obviously, we had a communications job to do. What we did was have this firm codify what we were doing in planning for the transitioning of patients, nothing to do with the decision to close it. We were planning for the transition. They codified it. They put together a document, including a flow chart, which is posted on the website. It has been for months.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in an April e-mail to Calder Bateman the ADM for PDD says, quote: my request was for you to build a set of principles for AHS and PDD on transitioning from Michener to long-term care or supportive living. So instead of consulting with health care professionals, experts in the field, families, or communities, this PC government went to a public relations firm for their principles. How apt. To the minister: how can anyone believe that this is not a cynical PR move that has nothing to do with improving care for vulnerable Albertans and everything to do with spinning a heartless financial cut?

Mr. Oberle: I'll say it again, Mr. Speaker. The firm was hired to codify what we were already doing, to put it into a presentable and easily readable fashion so that it could be published on the Internet site so that families, loved ones, and staff members as well had ready access to this document so they could see the process.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, no amount of public relations can change the facts. This government is ejecting Albertans from a home they've lived in for decades and denying them the choice the UN convention demands. Closing Michener is a penny-pinching measure meant to offload the cost of caring for vulnerable Albertans to their families and to understaffed and underfunded community placements. Families, staff, and, most importantly, residents are all terrified about what this means for them. To the minister: will you do the right thing and keep Michener Centre open?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think I've always endeavoured to be pretty honest with this House on the reasons around decisions. Now, this House will know that I made the decision to close the Eric Cormack Centre in Edmonton the year before for the same reason. I note that that party, that has been an advocate for community living for as long as I've been in here, never had a word to say about that closure. Neither did that party. The issue is the same. People living in supportive community living arrangements have better outcomes bar none. The evidence is there.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the first five slots reserved for the leaders of the parties or their designates, where we allow preambles to supplementaries, has now expired.

We're going to move on, I hope with no preambles to supplementaries, starting with Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Highway 63 Services

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The gas station and restaurant that serviced commuters and travellers for many years at Mariana Lake on highway 63 shut down a few years ago. The province required them to relocate or shut down in order to accommodate the alignment of the twinning project, and they did compensate the business on its closure. Since that time there have been no fuel or services available for a 200-kilometre stretch on one of Alberta's busiest economic corridors. To the Minister of Transportation: have you given consideration to the recommendation in my report of June 29, 2012, to make land available for a commercial rest stop/service centre on this stretch?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To answer the question directly, we have given consideration to that. As I think I've said here in the House before, that is a very good report, and the hon. member makes a good point that for some Albertans a 200-kilometre stretch of highway is a long way to go without a gas stop or a comfort stop. Right now I have to say to the hon. member that our focus is on the twinning of highway 63, which is the promise that the Premier made and one that I've endeavoured to make sure we keep. As we get that on the way, I will consider what the hon. member is asking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that we have implemented a very much appreciated dedicated traffic enforcement initiative on highway 63 and RCMP and sheriffs are also in a situation where their only rest stop or opportunity for fuelling is at either end of the stretch, would you be prepared, if this was to move forward, to provide space for an office here for our enforcement personnel?

Mr. McIver: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member, I genuinely appreciate his enthusiasm, and I know that this is an issue close to his heart, that he's worked hard on. As I said before, our emphasis is on the twinning of highway 63, something we intend to get done. As we get further down the road on that, we will look for opportunities for comfort stops. I think it's a legitimate thing for the hon. member to ask for, and I'm sure that there are probably a lot of Albertans that would like to see it, but in the midst of a construction project sometimes you have to do things in stages. In my view, we're not at that stage today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll withdraw my second supplementary. It's in the same vein.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us go on to Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-Bow.

2:20 School Construction and Modernization

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last election the Premier made a fairly black-and-white promise to Alberta parents and students: 50 new schools, 70 renovated schools started and completed this term. Period. Well, we're nearly halfway through this term, and it seems like the government made a promise to families that it cannot keep. Surely, the government would never intentionally mislead parents and families during an election campaign. So I ask the Minister of Education with respect: how many of these 50 new projects and 70 renovated projects that his government promised this term are currently under construction?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, you know, the constant criticism we get from across the way on the amount of capital that we are building or aren't building is a little bit troubling. [interjections]

The Speaker: Please continue, hon. Minister of Education, or are you done?

Mr. J. Johnson: I'm done.

The Speaker: So we're going to have to have a discussion about heckling and how far you want this to go on.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll ask my colleagues to give the member a chance to answer this question because I think it's one we deserve an answer to.

We have done the research, and as near as we can tell, of the 28 new schools announced since the election, precisely zero are currently under construction. Nada. Zilch. Bagel. Given that it takes three years to build a school and given the clear promise that these projects would be started and completed by 2016, is this minister going to continue to ride on the coattails of the former Premier, or is he going to honour his government's commitments?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think it's pretty clear that we are honouring our commitments. Particularly when it comes to education, this Premier made a commitment for many things, including reinstating the $107 million in funding, which she did, getting an ATA deal, which she did, a number of other items, passing the Education Act, which we've done. We've got capital on the way.

Like I said earlier this week and like I said last week, there are currently either just finished or under way 70 projects. There are another 30 that we announced in the spring. There are a number more coming here, I believe, by the end of this calendar year if we can get the right ducks lined up, and there will be more coming this spring. I'm happy to be accountable for what we do, but it's really difficult to be accountable in 2013 for something we're doing in 2016.

Mr. McAllister: I will simplify. Given that during the election campaign this government promised 50 new schools and 70 renovations this term as a commitment by this government, can the Minister of Education tell us today how many of those projects are under way that his government promised?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, stay tuned. Ask me that question in 2016. We're going to have a number of schools built, and we're going to have more than 120 projects well under way or built by that time, during this term.

I hate to point out the obvious, but there are a number of projects where the ground was turned after the election that could have easily been cancelled if someone else had won the election and didn't want to take on P3 projects. So the question I'd have for the hon. member across the way who's asking for schools – I think 11 of their members now have asked for schools. Immediately after the front benches say, "Don't take on debt; don't do P3s; we're building too many schools," their members behind them stand up and ask for a school. Well, will they take those schools if they're P3s?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Flood Mitigation Projects

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The floods this past June were devastating for many of my constituents. While many are now rebuilding their lives and their homes, they want reassurance that our government is going to do everything we can to prevent this kind of devastation from happening again. Earlier today Premier Redford announced that several mitigation projects are moving forward, which is great news for Albertans. My questions are to the associate minister of recovery and reconstruction of southwest Alberta. How quickly are these projects going to be in place, and will they be ready for the next flood season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, these projects that the Premier announced today require significant engineering work. They're very large projects. Not only do they require significant engineering work; they also are going to require significant consultation with the public and significant environmental approvals. Because of that it's very unlikely that they will be in place for next spring. What we will do, though, is work with our municipalities to do what we can today and over the upcoming months leading up to the next flood season to make sure that communities are protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: do we know how much these projects will cost taxpayers?

Mr. Fawcett: Again, Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that until the consultation is done and the engineering is done on these projects, it would be very ridiculous to speculate on how much they are actually going to cost. What we are doing is going through that engineering process. We've hired two consulting engineering firms to do that work. We're going out and talking with municipalities. We're going to go through that process, including talking with landowners and with the proper environmental groups, and once those conversations are done, we'll be able to come up with a more accurate price tag.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. You did mention consultation. Will consultation include my constituents? Will they have an opportunity to have input on these projects?

Mr. Fawcett: I think it is very important that people have input on this project. One thing the Premier committed to is that we are going to work with our citizens and with our communities and the municipalities that are impacted. The one thing that we need to make sure that we do – the worst thing about doing nothing at all or doing it too fast is doing it wrong. We can't get this wrong. We can't this wrong for taxpayers; we can't get it wrong for communities. So we're going to do that due diligence, and we're going to listen to people and citizens in these communities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's be reminded not to use the personal first names or last names of members elected in this House.

Let's move on, then, to Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Foothills Hospital Kitchen Renovation

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve better from their health care system. Last spring we asked why the government had failed to address an urgent priority at the Foothills hospital, a kitchen renovation. The kitchen has received several public health citations, has failing, obsolete equipment, environmental issues, and has mould and asbestos that needs to be removed. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why after four years have you not fixed this urgent issue at the Foothills hospital? Is patient safety not a priority?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's the job of the Minister of Infrastructure to catch mice or anything like that. I realize there's a problem in this hospital, but Alberta Health Services is given a budget for maintenance and upkeep of the building. We've given them – if I say a number, I'll be misquoted, probably, but it's millions of dollars to upkeep their properties. In cases like this they're to be maintained by Alberta Health Services out of this budget.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's under your capital project, a FOIPed project that we have.

Given that Alberta Health Services' 2013 capital plan submission says that it is imperative that this kitchen be upgraded and in its current condition cannot support the increased demands that the Foothills new cancer centre will place on it, when are you going to make these urgent fixes to this kitchen after over four years?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, we're working on a big project there with the health thing, but as I told them before – I don't know if I have to repeat it – there is a budget to fix that, and it's under Health Services. I'm sure they'll look at their priorities and finish the projects that are the highest priority.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, it has been their priority since 2010. Please, minister, learn your portfolio.

Given that this government has given the thumbs-up on an $8 million in-office renovation for executives at the U of C and that you found the cash for the new roof garden for the MLA offices, how is it possible that a 50-year-old kitchen infested – infested – with mould and asbestos is not considered a higher priority by this government?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, again, the member is confused by what budget pays for what. This department has nothing to do with the offices at the U of C. Yes, we're fixing the roof of a hundred-year-old building. That is under the Infrastructure budget.

As I said, the maintenance and capital projects in Alberta Health Services: it's their purview to set their priorities. We give them a budget to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Registry Services

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the government began its results-based budget scheme, Alberta Liberals have heard numerous concerns from registry owners about the changes by the Ministry of Service Alberta. Current registry owners are worried that the government is planning to make them renew their licences and then submit requests for proposals in order to keep their licences in the future. To the Minister of Service Alberta: is this what the ministry is planning to do, and if so, when will the registry owners be informed of these changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the member finally asked me a question in the House, but I wish he had perhaps consulted with me beforehand to get some facts instead of innuendo. The fact remains that we have a strong system in this province. We're looking continuously for ways to make it better by looking at things like offering online services. Just recently we've introduced an RFP for new registry agents in Wabasca and Chestermere. At the end of the day, we're going to make sure that everyday Albertans, hard-working people get the services they need in an affordable manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when the government sold off the registry services in 1993, Albertans were told that it would "open up opportunities for small businesses" and today the government clearly wants a piece of the action, is the minister now trying to change the rules of the game while it is still being played?

Mr. Bhullar: If the member, Mr. Speaker, could provide me with a specific example of what he's asking right now, I'd be more than happy to answer a very specific question, but when they're asking pure political statements in this House and trying to solicit a real answer, it doesn't really make sense. The answer is that we have a strong system. We're going to continue that strong system and make it even better to make sure that Albertans have access to services in a way that works for them, whether it be online or in person. The fact is that we're going to keep prices low and we're going to keep the best services available for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister again. The registry owners are also worried about competing directly with the government when the new online portal is launched next year. Is it this government's intention to compete directly with the registries for online revenues?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, when the government is introducing a new service that could potentially become a new source of business for the private sector or the government, the government has a series of responsibilities to make sure that the taxpayers of the province are well compensated and taken care of. So if the member is asking me to turn over what could be a significant source of revenue for the government to a private industry just because that's the way he wants it, I think that's unfair to everyday Alberta taxpayers. We're introducing something new. Taxpayers deserve that we would ask tough questions and make sure that they're compensated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

University of Alberta Research Partnership

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Canadian Association of University Teachers released a damning report on academic freedom in our universities. This report noted that the U of A's $13 million Centre for Oil Sands Innovation specifically focuses on "areas of strategic interest to Imperial Oil." As recently as two weeks ago the minister claimed that he wanted to preserve the independence of our universities. To the minister of advanced education: how independent does he believe the university actually is if the focus of this centre is to further the private interests of Imperial Oil?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Alberta has strict policies with respect to intellectual property and independence. No industrial partner has the ability to block or to interfere with published research. The minister has stated on many occasions that academic freedom is a cornerstone of universities, and the principle is that it may be maintained in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that this report states that this research agreement was made behind closed doors and the majority of the funding, $9.8 million, came from the public purse and given that this agreement is absolutely silent on the issue of academic freedom, will the minister please tell us why this government is continuing this policy of corporate handouts without any independent academic oversight?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since being jointly established in 2005 by the University of Alberta and Imperial Oil, the Centre for Oil Sands Innovation has been recognized as a model for these types of agreements across Canada. That does not stop the independence of the universities. What it does is to allow for this kind of research to happen in an independent fashion.

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's very interesting, Mr. Speaker, because this agreement between the U of A, Imperial Oil, and the PC government specifically states that the university must "refrain from making any public announcement without the approval of the minister." How can this minister stand here and claim that she values academic freedom when this office is increasing its political control over any information released from our public universities?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government does appreciate academic independence, and we show that all the time. What we also show is that we work together and in collaboration and consultation with our partners, whether that be with universities, with municipalities, with industry. We are not going to ever apologize for working together and for working in a collaborative manner for the betterment of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year's Auditor General's report featured a number of timely recommendations. In particular, the Auditor General noted that a recommendation he made six years ago has been carelessly brushed off. This year he again recommends that the Department of Infrastructure improve the process to maintain Alberta's valuable hospitals, schools, and roads. In this day and age maintenance should be common sense. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when will you fix this?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where to start. For one thing, the Auditor General's report this year had no issues with Infrastructure. What's more, that's rich coming from this member when last spring in estimates his motion was to take $2 million out of the maintenance budget.

Mr. Barnes: Again, the Auditor General recommended that they put in a proper process to maintain the infrastructure. Given this and given that the Wildrose Party has repeatedly highlighted leaky school roofs, mould in hospital kitchens, seeping hospital structures, and compromised sewer systems, when will the Infrastructure minister do his job?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, Infrastructure gives a budget to Alberta Education, and they've given maintenance budgets to all the school boards. Maintenance is up to the local school boards, and they're given an IMR budget to maintain and look after their schools. That's not an Infrastructure budget.

Mr. Barnes: The Auditor General has identified this process as missing. Considering that ignoring the Auditor General's report has led to Alberta's schools, roads, and hospitals crumbling into disrepair, why, again, is the Infrastructure minister brushing off our Auditor General?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, just let me be clear on one thing first before he scares all the people of Alberta. There are no health or safety concerns in any schools in the province of Alberta, so don't be scaring the schools and the parents that these schools are not safe.

Oil and Gas Development on Grazing Lands

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development manages some 5 million acres of public lands for the people of Alberta, leasing them for agricultural purposes. Grazing leaseholders pay for grazing at a very reasonable rate, and at the same time they receive payments to compensate for loss of use and adverse effects from surface disturbance from oil and gas developments. While Saskatchewan and Manitoba limit those surface rights payments to Crown lessees, Alberta does not. My questions are for the Minister of ESRD. As the manager of public lands can the minister advise the House: how many oil and gas wells are there on Crown grazing lease lands?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. We certainly realize the need to have balance in all of Alberta to ensure responsible development while maintaining the need for agriculture as well. There are approximately 20,000 wells located on grazing leases throughout Alberta, and surface access to Alberta's mineral resources is essential in responsible development of the industry. Both the oil and gas industry and agriculture play important roles in Alberta, and we'll continue to work with both groups to find the right balance.

2:40

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise the House: what is the approximate surface area that's covered by surface rights leases on Crown grazing lands?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the member: thank you for the question. There are approximately 6,000 grazing leases on 5.2 million acres of land throughout Alberta. The Surface Rights Act specifies that leaseholders will be properly compensated for any land disturbances related to development on Crown land. ESRD issues surface access dispositions on land held under grazing leases with appropriate restrictions, including watershed protection, fish and wildlife habitat, carbon storage, and opportunities for recreation.

Dr. Brown: Would the minister consider changing her department's policies to ensure that surface rights payments are more equitably shared for the benefit of all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do not get involved in what the oil companies and the surface lease owners negotiate. That is up to them. We receive a certain amount of payment as a province for the lands, and like private property owners, surface-rights grazing lease owners make private agreements with the oil and gas companies. Those are not our dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Cross.

Strathmore Hospital Capital Funding

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Strathmore hospital has the second-busiest rural emergency room in the province. Since constructed, in 1985, the hospital has not been modified or expanded. The emergency room sees 31,000 to 33,000 patients every year. AHS's own capital plan says, and I quote: many of these facilities are functionally and physically obsolete, creating increased health and safety issues. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when are you going to fix this?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, here we go again asking for more. They want new hospitals. They want new schools. They want to cut the budget. They just keep asking for things.

Mr. Speaker, 1985 isn't that old of a building. There are lots of hospitals and schools way older than that. Whether they believe it or not – they don't seem to believe anything we say – Alberta Health Services is given a budget to maintain their facilities. They're given plenty of money a year from Infrastructure. It's up to Alberta Health to maintain their hospitals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the population of Strathmore has grown three to four times since it was built in 1985 and given that in 2006 the health region study recommended significant expansion to the emergency room, acute care, laboratory, and diagnostic imaging and given that since this report the hospital has not received any new capital funding to expand, when is the minister going to address this critical need?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are very well aware as a government of the growth in the Strathmore area. In fact, as I've discussed with people locally, Strathmore has become a regional centre for health care that's serving a large number of residents who are in the southern part of Calgary. There's been great progress in preparing for expansion for Strathmore for the future. A brand new continuing care facility recently opened on land adjacent to the hospital. Thirty residents who lived in the Strathmore hospital in long-term care are moving to that brand new facility, making room for future expansion. We're certainly on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to having some more conversations with this minister.

Given that AHS has also confirmed that the Strathmore hospital is number 2 on the Calgary zone's priority list, to the minister: how is it that a hospital of this size is an AHS priority but is nowhere to be found on the government's capital plan?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as my colleague just said, we work closely with Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services on their priorities. You know, it's number 2 in your area, so it's not number 1. There's a whole big province there with lots of demands, with high-growth areas. I'll guarantee you that there are areas growing just as fast or faster than that area, and we're trying to build Alberta as fast as we can with Infrastructure. These guys keep saying that we're building too fast, too much. Now they want us to build more. It's hard to understand what they're asking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by Medicine Hat.

Bingo Licensee Voucher Use

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over 35 years the Whitehorn Community Association has relied on its dedicated volunteers to work bingos to help offset the costs of community centres, and to thank the volunteers, they provided vouchers to help offset the high cost of child and youth programs. A recent audit by AGLC claims that gaming proceeds are not approved to be used for these vouchers. My questions today are to the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. Why are volunteers being penalized and no longer allowed to use bingo vouchers for child and youth programs that community associations can't provide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to agree with this member's appreciation of these volunteer boards. I know that this hon. member spends a lot of time supporting them and working in her communities. The use of vouchers to thank volunteers has been an acceptable practice for many, many years. Volunteers may receive credits. However, the credits are to be used to help offset the costs of the programs conducted by the licensed group that they are volunteering for. Given the concerns that have been raised by this group and by this hon. member, the AGLC is reviewing the policy to consider if there are some adjustments that should be made.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that community associations are very concerned – and I know they'll appreciate hearing your answer today, because they are watching this – about losing their volunteers and bingos due to the AGLC's interpretation of the policy, how will your ministry through this review help community associations cope with the overwhelming effects of the loss of their bingo revenues?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not necessarily a loss of the bingo revenues; it's the application of where those revenues are going. I think that in this particular case, due to the efforts of the hon. member and her doggedness to talk to the AGLC and to represent her members – I do know, from a conversation I had with the CEO over at AGLC, that a group is going to be allowed to use the proceeds in the manner in which they had anticipated, some $800, I believe. I believe that message has already been transmitted to them.

But having said that, Mr. Speaker, there is an area of grey here that we need to get clarity on. The AGLC is going to review that, and hopefully we can continue with this process.

Mrs. Fritz: To the same minister: given that our community associations on behalf of their volunteers are requesting that AGLC allow this long-standing practice of issuing the vouchers to continue, how is your ministry through this review going to ensure that this practice does continue?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the community associations, under the practice where they would use it for their own licensed gaming purposes, can continue and will continue, but because there was a difference in the way the application of this voucher was going to be used, in the interim what we're going to be doing is reviewing that practice while allowing the older practice to continue.

As part of 2012-2013, you know, Mr. Speaker, there were 15,000 charities in Alberta, that raised nearly $330 million. The charities are being served well. There's a lot of money being raised. We'll ensure that it happens well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Emergency Medical Services Response Times

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Minister of Health just doesn't care about Albertans and is putting patients at risk. For months now municipal officials, front-line EMS workers, and residents have been sounding the alarm over his ill-advised plan to centralize regional ambulance dispatch to our biggest cities. This plan is costing patients in communities like Medicine Hat crucial time and quality care when an emergency strikes. Will the minister listen to the growing numbers of dissenting voices and stop his one-size-fits-all approach to consolidated ambulance dispatch before it's too late?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the people I am listening to, as recently as this morning, are the mayor of Medicine Hat and council members and senior officials from Medicine Hat, who met with me to talk about their positive experiences in having become one of the first integrated EMS services in this province to consolidate operations with Alberta Health Services, and that occurred in July. We did talk about some of the challenges, including the response time issue, and, in fact, during the discussion noted that response times were measured differently under the previous system in Medicine Hat than they are today. So the hon. member might wish to check his facts before informing people that response times are inadequate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Interesting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the new mayor of Red Deer said that his minister's ill-advised plan looks good on paper but will have a real, life-and-death implication and given that six years ago Medicine Hat was the first tri-accredited dispatch in the world for police, fire, and EMS and given that forced consolidation has delayed response times by 50 per cent based upon your information on the website, why would anyone in any community want to accept this for their patients?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this morning I also met with the mayor of Medicine Hat and a number of members of council from that community, and we talked about some of the challenges that they see in consolidating their integrated system with a consolidated dispatch under AHS.

Mr. Speaker, the government is working very collaboratively, and in fact the city of Red Deer is ably represented by two MLAs in this House, who happen to be members of this caucus. We'll continue to work with local municipalities and make local adjustments as required to achieve the provincial vision for EMS.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs, from Lethbridge, is now publicly voicing concerns over this issue – well, at least he's doing this when he's home in Lethbridge and safe from the minister's wrath – is the minister even consulting with his own caucus, or is having ultimate power all you really care about?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might do well to check with his colleagues on this side of the House. The minister to whom the member refers was also present at a meeting this morning with the mayor and members of council from the city of Lethbridge. We continue to work collaboratively to preserve the best of integrated EMS delivery systems in this province, that were championed by places like Medicine Hat, Red Deer, and Lethbridge, and to hand in hand achieve provincial objectives.

Mr. Speaker, under no circumstances – and I at least hope the hon. member would agree with this – do we want a situation where an ambulance drives by a heart attack, a motor vehicle accident, or another emergency simply because that unit is not deemed to be owned by the community in which it's present.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for question period has now expired. There were no points of order. It's been a reasonably good day, with some good questions and some good answers. In total, 16 members were recognized today, asking and answering 96 questions and answers, so we're getting there. I want to thank the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for forgoing his second supplemental, which helped speed things along; Calgary-Bow and Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for doing a great job on tightening up their preambles to supplementals or not using any at all; Strathmore-Brooks and others, who did a good job tightening things up so more members could be recognized. Thank you for that.

Also, preserving as much civility and decorum meant fewer interjections by the Speaker, which is what we're all after. So it's been a good day. Let's see if we can keep it going, and in 25 seconds from now we'll commence with the continuation of Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Veteran Students' Remembrance

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I proudly rise in the House today to relay the story of some very special young people from the town of Veteran, located in my constituency. These young people worked diligently, tirelessly, and selflessly to convince Veterans Affairs in Ottawa to replace five medals belonging to 92-year-old World War II veteran Dave Pennington. Mr. Pennington served with the Loyal Edmonton Regiment of the 1st Canadian Infantry Division. When Paul Kavanagh with the Canadian War Museum heard their story, he asked the school to represent Alberta at this year's Remembrance Day ceremony at the National War Memorial in our nation's capital. These remarkable junior high students had to pay their own way to Ottawa, so they spent the summer earning extra cash so they could be in attendance for the ceremony.

The community embraced their mission and went out of their way to find odd jobs for these remarkable young people. On November 11 Alberta was proudly represented by the following students from Veteran: Emma Nelson, Jessica Sutherland, Clay Howe, Marissa Paley, Shelbie Pilling, Dylan Cartwright, Ashley Cooper, Emily Devereux, Nick Koturbash, Ashliegh Luttman, Micheal Saunders, Dalton Starosta, Kurt and Sarah Tkach, Steven Chapman, Travis Johnstone, and Hayden Schetzle.

Because of the efforts of these 17 students Mr. Pennington was able to wear his medals on Remembrance Day for the first time in two decades. I was honoured last April to be in attendance at the emotional ceremony that saw these students present Dave with his medals. In the words of World War II vet Dave Pennington, "They're great kids." We could not agree with you more, Mr. Pennington.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Registered Apprenticeship Program Scholarships

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize 275 exceptional students from across our province. I was honoured to take part in a celebration for these students in Edmonton last Friday. At the celebration each of these students was recognized for their commitment to the trades with a $1,000 scholarship.

Alberta's registered apprenticeship program scholarship was established in 2001 as a way to encourage students to continue their apprenticeship program after high school. Through the registered apprenticeship program, or RAP as it is known, high school students accumulate hours of on-the-job training as credit towards an apprenticeship program. At the same time they are working towards a diploma.

Currently RAP apprentices train at over 1,000 sites around the province under the guidance of some of the world's best journey-persons. Last year the RAP scholarship was expanded to include students in another important program. Through the career and technology studies program, or CTS, students can enrol in one of five pathways to apprenticeship: automotive service technician, carpenter, cook, hairstylist, and welder. In just over a decade $2.8 million has been awarded to RAP apprentices and CTS students.

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of speaking to many of these students and can say with confidence that they have bright futures. As a result, our province will have a brighter future. I wish all of them the best in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am presenting a petition with 15,744 signatures, that asks the Legislative Assembly to keep Michener Centre in Red Deer-North open. The total number of signatures for this petition presented to date is over 24,000 signatures.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, November 25, 2013, Written Question 44 will be accepted.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table the referred-to copies from the Workers' Compensation Board relating to injuries to EMS workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table on behalf of my colleague from Medicine Hat a document that he referred to in his question today about the response times for EMS in Medicine Hat.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, that seems to conclude our Routine for the day. We are right at the magic hour of 3 o'clock, so we should move onward.

3:00

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Address to House by Hon. David Alward

46. Mr. Campbell moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that
- (1) Hon. David Alward, Premier of the province of New Brunswick, be invited to the floor of this Chamber on Thursday, November 28, 2013, immediately following Prayers, to address the Legislative Assembly;
  - (2) This address be called for immediately after the hon. Mr. Alward is introduced under Introduction of Visitors; and
  - (3) The ordinary business of the Assembly resume upon the conclusion of the address;
- and be it further resolved that Premier Alward's address become part of the permanent records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion under SO 18(1)(a). Are there any other speakers?
Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 46 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Chief Electoral Officer Appointment

45. Mr. Campbell moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee and recommend that Glen Resler be appointed as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta, effective December 9, 2013.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

This is also a debatable motion under SO 18(1)(a). Are there any other speakers? The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand and speak in favour of this motion. As chair of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee I'm very pleased that the process ended with the successful, unanimous recommendation by the committee of Mr. Resler to serve as our next Chief Electoral Officer. I speak very much in favour of this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise here today to speak in favour of the government motion with respect to the appointment of the Chief Electoral Officer. I in fact had moved the motion to appoint Mr. Resler to that position. He does have a very formidable job ahead of him, so I think the December 9 date makes sense. Of course, we want to see an end to illegal donations and soliciting illegal donations and a complete repayment of any illegal donations that have been made in this province. He has a very tough job to do, and we hope that he gets to it as soon as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. Anyone? If not, are there any other speakers?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 45 carried unanimously]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 44 Notaries and Commissioners Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 44, the Notaries and Commissioners Act. Bill 44 amends two pieces of legislation, the Notaries Public Act and the Commissioners for Oaths Act. I would now like to provide some details about the proposed amendments.

The consolidation of acts. The Notaries Public Act and the Commissioners for Oaths Act will be consolidated to become the Notaries and Commissioners Act. Further, the language will be modernized and made easier to understand.

An increase in fines. Currently the act provides for fines of up to $100 for not complying with the detailed process for placing one's seal and/or signature on a document and up to $500 for an individual who contravenes the prohibitions as set out in these acts. The proposed fines are up to $1,000 and up to $5,000 respectively. These penalty amounts provide a more robust deterrent in the event of an activity that would amount to fraud, a repeat offender, or any other similar case. These new proposed fines would also be in line with our other acts.

A code of conduct. The proposed legislation includes a provision for a code of conduct. The proposed code of conduct would articulate appropriate behaviours for individuals in carrying out their duties; for example, conducting one's duties with dignity and integrity; treating all persons fairly, courteously, and with respect; providing services in a professional, ethical, and responsible manner; and complying with the terms and conditions of their appointment. Currently an information book is provided to individuals who are appointed, and although the information is helpful, a code of conduct will heighten awareness and reinforce the expected behaviours.

Regarding notary public powers, the amendments will also clarify powers for lay notaries. In order to protect Albertans and to ensure they fully understand the risks associated with any guarantees that they may enter into, the proposed changes will mean a lawyer will be the only individual who will be able to issue a certificate for a guarantee.

That is my information. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Sherwood Park has moved second reading of Bill 44. Are there any other speakers to it?

Were you intending to move and adjourn, hon. Member for Sherwood Park? You should say that if that's what your intention was, if that's the understanding you have with others.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 44.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 35

Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 35, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013.

The act is the backbone of the fiscal framework laying out clear rules and guidelines to ensure the government manages its finances in a responsible manner. With the passage of the Fiscal Management Act last spring, some of these rules became a little less clear; for example, which parts of supply votes can be carried forward to the next fiscal year. In addressing those issues, we also thought it was a good idea to make a few minor amendments to the act. The bill as written is not transformational by any stretch of the imagination, but it is necessary. To borrow some language from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, Bill 35 fixes a number of technical issues that need to be addressed. The key amendment proposed under Bill 35 is needed for the government to effectively manage appropriations for capital projects that span fiscal years.

As I said at second reading, the capital carry-over is a long-standing and valuable fiscal tool that enables efficient management of government capital projects. By eliminating the need to go back to the Legislature for approval to carry over funds that have already been voted in, the capital carry-over ensures approved projects are not further delayed by the processing of a ministry's funding approval. It doesn't matter if you're borrowing or paying cash for your capital projects; you want to have the ability to carry unused capital investment over to the next fiscal year to ensure you can keep the building process going.

Bill 35 makes it clear that Treasury Board retains this power to carry over capital investments in 2014-15 and future years. In addition, the bill also clarifies that capital grants to a third party like a university or a municipality cannot be carried forward. Only money for government-owned capital projects can be carried forward.

Other amendments in the bill are administrative and technical in nature, serving to provide clarity and help the government manage its day-to-day business. These include aligning references to the debt-servicing limit to correspond with the Fiscal Management Act, clarifying the government's authority to issue uncertified securities as part of its borrowing program, helping to bring government's issuing of securities into the 21st century, providing needed flexibility related to self-insurance coverage and services provided by the government's risk management fund so that we can do things like cover a senior official under department agreement rather than having the official sign a separate agreement, clarifying the restrictions on incorporating provincial corporations, permitting tailored government oversight of borrowing by provincial corporations by allowing them to directly negotiate loan terms where the minister considers it appropriate but subject to the minister's conditions.

As I said before, Alberta is one of the most fiscally responsible jurisdictions, and Bill 35 will not change that. In a broad sense the amended act simply helps government manage its capital and carry out its day-to-day business efficiently. The proposed amendments reflect and support the kind of sound fiscal management Albertans want and expect.

I therefore encourage all members of the Legislature to support third reading of Bill 35, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. I just wanted to make a couple of comments in regard to Bill 35 and changes to the statutes that were made last year. Very recently the government made changes on how its budget is presented and how financial information is reported to the public. On the 29th of April of this year the Fiscal Management Act replaced the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act. This legislation governs how the budget and financial statements are prepared.

Previously the government had to prepare a consolidated fiscal plan, including the total revenue and the total expenses by category, as well as a consolidated net revenue and expense claim. Now under the FMA the operating plan, capital plan, and savings plans are all separate.

3:10

The operational plan relates to day-to-day programs, the savings plan relates to the heritage savings and trust fund, and then the capital plan to the supporting infrastructure projects. The operational plan and the capital plan use different formats for reporting revenues and expenses and therefore surpluses and deficits, too. Due to this separation some infrastructure-related costs, especially capital grants to municipalities, which were previously expenses, have been removed from the calculations under the operational plan and are now included in the capital plan, which means they're not used to calculate the deficit. These capital grants are expenses under accounting standards, anybody's standards. They fund capital assets, but these capital assets are not owned by the province.

The Auditor General's July 2013 report found that by including them as part of the capital plan as opposed to expenses under operations, which is how they were reported prior to the budget in 2013, the government has in fact underreported their expenses, and therefore the deficit, by a factor of $1.524 billion. Since the government insists on changing reporting and accounting requirements to make this information even more murky and more confusing than ever before, how can we get a clear picture of the current state of finances, particularly the balance of government expenses to revenues, in order to be able to make priorities for expenses in the present and informed spending choices for the future?

Because capital expenses were moved off the operational plan, they are not part of the surplus deficit calculation in this budget. Operational revenue also excludes allocation for debt-servicing costs, which are very important in determining surplus or deficit. At the end of the day, the Auditor General concludes that the 2013-2014 budget has been prepared on the same – if it was prepared as it was from last year's budget, the calculated deficit for this year should have been $1.975 billion, which is $1.524 billion more than the current projected value. So I really say: how can we trust these numbers and this system of accounting to accurately and adequately report financial information with these sorts of deliberate changes?

Why shouldn't Albertans have access to transparent information about the management of public funds that are owned, after all, by all of us? To get a clear picture of the province's financial management situation, it's necessary to be able to compare budgeted financial results with the actual financial results. It's also very important to be able to compare results year by year. The Auditor General's July 2013 report confirms that the changes the Tories made to accounting standards essentially makes these kinds of comparisons impossible to make.

The government must use Canadian public-sector accounting standards to prepare its financial statements but not its budget. In order to be able to get accurate budget-to-actual results and year-to-year comparisons, financial statements and budgets need to have the same accounting standards. Since the government has separated out the operational plan from the capital plan and used different formats in calculating and reporting those results, Budget 2013 cannot be accurately compared to budgets from other years.

The Auditor General has made several recommendations over the years to bring some consistency to the accounting standards and to include more sources of revenue and expenses to get a clearer picture of the true financial situation and to try to make better decisions on the budget. Instead, this government makes changes to its accounting and reporting formats that only actually make it harder to get real financial information out to the public. It allows this PC government to continue to hide mismanagement of public funds from all Albertans, and I find that, Mr. Speaker, very offensive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I, too, would like to get on the record and speak about Bill 35 for a few minutes. It's funny. You spend some time in here in the evening, and it feels like many of the points that are made are covered over and over again. That said, you know, I'm not sure there's a bigger topic around dinner tables regarding the provincial government and what it's doing effectively, what it isn't doing effectively, than Alberta's finances. The notion that we want to create different ways to borrow money is concerning. I don't think Alberta families necessarily believe that going back into debt and then piling on more debt is wise.

Now, the Finance minister often says – and I'll caution what I'm about to say. I agree with him in principle on what he says when he says that it makes more sense to save money at a higher interest rate and make money than it does to put that money down on debt. The problem is – and that would make sense if you had two pools of cash the same size and it wasn't ballooning – that when we're talking about compiling billions of dollars in debt, I don't think it makes sense for the argument to be, "Well, we're saving a little over here" when, in fact, the deficit is growing by leaps and bounds over here.

We have these discussions in our homes as well, I'm sure. Should we be paying down the debt in our homes, or should we be investing where we're getting a good rate of return? It does make more sense – doesn't it? – to get a rate of return of 8 per cent than it does to put down money on something you're paying 2 and a half per cent on, but that's not the case when you have a giant, ballooning deficit. Eventually, if it is the case that we're going to wind up with $17 billion of debt by the end of this term, that is going to be an incredible amount of money that we're going to have to pay just in interest payments. Once you start that, it's impossible to stop. It's a trend that we've seen time and time again in governments around the world, and it hasn't been the Alberta way.

Now, I don't believe piling up debt is something that Albertans want to see, and I don't think that, sitting around with their families, they see it as wise because in families in Alberta we have to be appreciative of the difference between wants and needs. There is a giant difference between wants and needs. We can't have it all, and we can't have it all right now. Effectively, what I'm concerned this bill does is give the government more power to acquire, you know, more wants, in my view. Frankly, we have to be a little wiser about how we're investing.

Again, for the family reference, Mr. Speaker, you know full well that your kids would have you buy everything that they wanted, that you might want all the bells and whistles for yourself, but there are times when you have to say that the definition of happiness sometimes is being able to put off what you want now and realize that you can have it later. I think that in some ways we're closer than we realize here when we're discussing Alberta's finances, but we take the extreme sides of the argument on both sides of the equation. In reality, if we would just rein in some of that wasteful spending and stop piling up the debt, which this bill gives the government more ability to do, we would get even closer together.

With the surplus that was talked about during the provincial election campaign, I remember the province and certain officials saying that we'd be back in surplus within a few years. I remember debating at the time in my own riding with the candidate running, saying: you know, I can't recall a surplus in Alberta in the last four or five years, and now it's six deficits going on who knows how many, and it's not the belief that Albertans share about how we ought to be going forward. My concern is that it's a never-ending cycle, that by allowing us to borrow more, it becomes acceptable. We don't, frankly, in this energy resource province of Alberta, have to do this. I mean, $17 billion in debt by 2016? If you would have said that, you know, five, six, seven years ago in Alberta, people would have laughed you out of the building or wherever you said it; it would be impossible for Albertans to do that.

I also want to touch base on, again, something that a lot of people in here have made reference to, and that is what the Auditor General had to say about the accounting practices and the changes to the way the Alberta government puts forth its finances in relation to this bill. Even the best accountants in his office, as he said, were having trouble with the numbers and deciphering what the real deficit was. If that's the word coming back from the Auditor General, then we need to take that quite seriously.

You know, I sat in a meeting this morning – actually, time is rolling; I think it might have been yesterday morning – with the Auditor General, and he was talking about some of the things in advanced education and not having a road map and asking for results. Well, the road map here is clear on this bill and what it provides. It provides an ability, again, for Albertans to have to pick up the tab for a government that doesn't seem to know, doesn't seem to appreciate that there's a difference between wants and needs.

I also remember the day that the budget was released and how it was reported in the media. You know, you could change the channel and every different network would have a different number as to what the deficit was. Well, that should be a great example of the confusion that you're at. If the media can't get the number straight, then clearly there are different interpretations, which is what this has done. [interjection] I hear the heckling on the media. I wouldn't do it, guys. It's never wise to do it. Just respect them. They have a job to do.

Every network had a different interpretation of what the numbers were, and that shouldn't be the way. That has never been the way in Alberta. Here's your deficit; here's your surplus. But when you change the numbers, you provide that. Effectively, you fudge the numbers that are available, and that was a frustration.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the federal government has just announced that it's going to be in surplus within a year. What a great model for us to follow, the federal government in this country and how they're running their finances. We used to lead the way in Alberta. My concern is that this bill does anything but lead the way. My concern is that it provides, again, the ability for Alberta to accept this government's need to spend, and frankly I'm disappointed in it. You know, I wanted to make those points today respectfully to the other side. I don't believe it's been the Alberta way, and I'm troubled at the direction we're going with Alberta's finances. I believe it's what Alberta families are talking about around their tables.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as a point of clarification, do I have an opportunity to close debate on third reading?

The Speaker: Well, if there are no other speakers . . .

Mr. Horner: No. I'm not doing that now, because I do want to ask the hon. member a question.

The hon. member just made a comment about copying the federal government on their budgeting process and that they are the model we should follow. Did I hear that correctly, hon. member? That's the first question.

The second piece to that is: does he have an understanding of how much the federal government has to borrow every year – every year – to continue to balance their budget the way they do their accounting? That is how they balance their budget. Their operating potentially could be in surplus, but their revenue portion also includes borrowing. I was wondering if the hon. member was aware that that's how they do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I appreciate the question from the Finance minister opposite. I will not stand here and pretend to tell him that I am wiser in the ways of the finances of Alberta or the province than he is, and that's why he is in the role he is. But I would say that when the federal government announces that it's going back to surplus, that is a good-news story for Canada and one that we should be proud of.

When the Alberta government announces that it's going $17 billion into debt by 2016, that is a problem. That is the very thing that Albertans have an issue with, $17 billion in debt. What kind of interest will we be paying on that as Albertans? How many schools might we build with the interest from that debt? These are the things that Alberta families are talking about. These are the concerns of Albertans. This is what we ought to be focusing on.

You know, I think we can learn, frankly, from other governments that do things well. We can learn from Saskatchewan when it's making strides. We should be looking all across the country. But it's interesting to know that all we seem to do is . . . [interjections] It's interesting to see how I appear to be pushing some buttons on the other side. Here's the reason why it's happening. There are two points on . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we can't have seven conversations going on at once. This is 29(2)(a). It's a good chance to spark back and forth, but you've got to give each other a chance.

Please continue, Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I rise, I appreciate the question from the other side. I have appreciated the debate as we've been in here. [interjection] Really? I have appreciated as we've discussed Bill 35 and any bill.

You know, I find, frankly, that most times we take two points as far away as you can get, and we present those two sides. We'd all be wise to realize that somewhere in the middle is probably the solution to what we're talking about.

What I'm saying and saying to the Finance minister is: yes, we can learn from other governments, and we can learn from the steps they're taking, and if we're changing the way that we do things in Alberta, if we're changing how we put the numbers of our budget on a piece of paper to hide more debt, if we're confusing the Auditor General with that, if we're confusing the media with that, then we've got a problem. We're hoodwinking Alberta families. You can't hoodwink Albertans. They see what's going on.

This has become a province of debt, and that's not where we ought to go. So I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Finance minister come back to where they used to be in Alberta, the Alberta way, recognize the difference between wants and needs, like Alberta families have to, so that we can go forward and become the Alberta that we always were and even better. The Alberta advantage is what it's about. We don't need to change the character of Albertans. We do need to change the character of what we're doing with government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. One minute, 10 seconds.

Mr. Horner: You know what, Mr. Speaker? If anything of what he just said was true, I would agree with him. None of what he just said was true. In fact, when he talks about the federal government and balancing, the federal government borrows to cover operating deficits. The government of Alberta cannot and will not borrow to cover operating deficits, something that the opposition does not understand or simply doesn't want to admit to Albertans that they don't understand.

It's amazing to me that that hon. member can stand up there and say that we should be like the federal government and balance like the federal government. The debt the federal government has is not backed by assets for the most part, Mr. Speaker. All of the debt that we're talking about, which they talk about, is for the schools, the roads, the hospitals. We're being honest about how we're going to pay for them. Unfortunately, the Wildrose Alliance is not being honest about how they're going to pay for any of the infrastructure they've talked about. They won't tell Albertans how they're going to pay for it. They won't tell Albertans that they're going to cut $5 billion out of the operating budget, which is health care, education, postsecondary, persons with disabilities. They should be honest.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now expired.

Are there other speakers for third reading on Bill 35?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Calgary-Shaw, you were a bit late rising, but I saw you stand, so carry on.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address this. I do appreciate the dialogue back and forth. I believe that what we see in Bill 35 is a continuation of the departure of what the Alberta government has stood for for a very long time, which in this province has been to live debt free. This is a source of immense pride for many generations in this province. I think that what we're seeing is a complete abandonment of what used to be the principles of this government, which is also why what we've heard at this point is that in a leadership review that is coming up this weekend, 70 per cent is now, all of a sudden, a triumph because of some of the poor fiscal management that we've seen in this province.

There are countless examples of wasteful spending in this province, Mr. Speaker. I know the Finance minister likes to stand and say that we would cut all of this, that we don't have a list of what we wouldn't build. Well, the reality is that there are many things that we would not be doing in this province. We would not be spending $375 million upgrading the federal building. We would not be putting a rooftop garden on top of the federal building. We would not be spending billions of dollars on carbon capture and storage. There is a very long list. Corporate welfare would be out. We would no longer be picking winners and losers in this province. Severance packages would be brought in line with what Albertans accept as generally reasonable.

There are a number of things that we could be doing differently, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I think the saddest part of this for me is to sit here and listen to a party that at one point stood for the exact same principles around debt that we're standing for today.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down. Thank you.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The President of the Treasury Board, and then Edmonton-Calder, I believe.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's fabulous to me that they have learned how to try to save $375 million about 10 times already today. They keep referring to the fact that they can pay for $5 billion worth of infrastructure by not renovating the federal building. They say: well, we could find $5 billion worth of management reductions. You could fire every GOA employee in the government today and you'd save $3 billion. Of course, I don't expect them to know that, because they probably haven't read the budget. But $3 billion: that's the first year. What do they do the next year for their next $5 billion? They're not being honest with Albertans when they talk about that.

The other thing they said: many generations of being debt free. Mr. Speaker, in the '80s this province had a huge problem. We were paying for our groceries with our credit card. We paid that debt off. We are not paying for groceries with our credit card today and are not going to be doing it in the future. In fact, the financial management act makes it illegal for us to do so.

The hon. member's office should actually be a little more truthful with their constituents when they talk about the debt piece. The debt is the assets that we're building, just like you would do in your home, just like you would do in your business. It's unfortunate that many of them don't understand that business piece, and I appreciate that. I've been trying to educate them on it. Hopefully, one of these days soon they're going to get it.

He talks about poor fiscal management, yet we have the best financial situation of any jurisdiction in North America, possibly the western hemisphere, and I don't have to be the one to say that, Mr. Speaker. All of the credit rating agencies say that, the Chambers of Commerce say that, and, in fact, the federal government says that. To try to scare Albertans and put fear in Albertans that our financial situation is somehow terrible is simply reprehensible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Shaw. [interjection] Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, I've recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. I don't think there was a question there to you, but I'm going to comment on this in a moment about process.

Do we have any time left? We have three minutes left, so if you could be brief.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to clarify a couple of things. The hon. member is bringing up some very good points here. I wanted to ask if he realized that expenses under the operating budget according to this Finance minister: well, they moved those over to the capital plan. So, in fact, those are not government-owned assets, right? They are, in fact, expenses, right? They've simply done this voodoo economics sort of thing, moving one expense to another and then claiming it back as an asset, right? So I just wanted to know if you knew that, because I think most Albertans don't understand that either. But as we learn about it, we realize that this minister is doing nothing but voodoo economics, playing with the obvious thing he needs to do. That is to raise the revenues to pay for the essential services that we need in this province.

We have royalties that are forgone in the billions of dollars. We have corporate taxes that are forgone in the billions of dollars as well. I think it's a crime that this government has let that money slip through our fingers for so long that now, suddenly, in the middle of an economic growth period, a population growth period, we talk about cutting, and you talk about how there's some fake austerity thing going on. I find it insulting, and I think most Albertans do, too. They can see with their own two eyes that their community is growing. They can see that there's very high employment and that the economy is expanding. So why on earth should we be making cuts to essential services such as education and health care? Why?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, a question has now been posed to you, and I would invite you to answer.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. Before I address some of his comments and questions, I would like to address some of the issues that the Finance minister brought up, starting with how we're not being honest with Albertans. I think that it's quite – and I will use this word, and I'm well aware of the potential ramifications – hypocritical of the Finance minister to stand in this House and tell us that we're not being honest with Albertans. Find me one PC MLA who knocked on one door and said that this government, if re-elected, is going to go back into debt. There isn't one. There is not one of them. I would also like to say, Mr. Speaker, that . . .

Mr. Horner: I did. I did.

Mr. Wilson: You did?

Mr. Horner: I said that we'd borrow for capital, absolutely.

Mr. Wilson: Well, there you go. That's not what your Premier said.

About us talking about $375 million over and over, Mr. Speaker, it's oddly reminiscent of how we have school announcements. Nineteen schools were being announced in May. They were announced again yesterday, but they're the same schools. So maybe this is how they're going to build 120 schools.

Mr. McAllister: Not one shovel.

Mr. Wilson: Yeah. Not one shovel in the ground other than to put up a sign to make sure that people know that eventually there's going to be a school there. When that happens we're not quite sure yet.

I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. This is some voodoo economics. It's why the Auditor General did suggest that even some of his finest accountants did not have the ability to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has stood for a point of clarification, and I'm going to hear it in a moment, but I had already made a note about the mechanics of 29(2)(a). If it's something different – is it on that?

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, I think you've anticipated my question. I know it's not in the standing orders, but on 29(2)(a) I think the procedure is that it's been back and forth. Regardless of if the other member doesn't know that it's actually supposed to be a question and not just rants and raves, it still should be back and forth. Thank you.

The Speaker: I respect that, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Question-and-comment Period

The Speaker: I just wanted to clarify this and put it on the growing list of items for the House leaders to talk about, the physical mechanics of 29(2)(a). Here is my grinding point on this. Standing Order 29(2)(a), when it was designed – and I had a hand in that a few years back – was designed to encourage a little more back and forth between members, a member who had just spoken who might have had something that provoked another member to ask a question for clarification about something that was intended and so on. It wasn't intended to be a time – five minutes set aside, I should say – where one person stood up and consumed all five minutes, nor was it designed so that a member could continue their speech. You know, we've seen that, but there is no real physical evidence to support anything mechanical that way.

After the Minister of Finance stood up, the first member that was up was Edmonton-Calder, so I recognized him because 29(2)(a) simply says:

Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

In the case of the President of Treasury Board, I'm not sure that I picked up a definitive question. I could review Hansard and see. But I know that Edmonton-Calder did ask a specific question, and then Calgary-Shaw was up next.

I'll curtail the comments there but ask the Government House Leader to please meet with other House leaders of the opposition and iron out this little mechanical thing because 29(2)(a) in its real, solid purpose and spirit is a good thing for us to have in this House. It creates a little bit more liveliness, and you get answers right away to questions or comments, generally speaking.

Let us move on, then. Are there other speakers to Bill 35? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to be here today to rise and speak to Bill 35. Of course, what this bill is aimed at is fixing some of the legal issues, technical issues that have plagued certain aspects in different areas, but I think the main purpose, at least from the Finance minister's perspective, is to find more ways to borrow money. It's kind of funny that the Finance minister said that during the election– he had said: I always said that I was going to borrow money for capital. It's interesting. If you actually listen to what the Premier had said during the election, and I will quote, we are a party of fiscal discipline. We are not a party of deficit – oh? – it's entirely possible for us to continue to provide the quality of life that we as Albertans have without going into debt, and I am committed to that. It's really interesting, especially given what's happening tomorrow, that the Finance minister is being completely contrary to what his own Premier has said.

I'll also quote what the Premier said during the election: "We have all heard of the crises in Europe. Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the [end] of countless dreams." Debt has proven the end of countless dreams. Now, the new phrase is "debt is hope." Let's get that straight. Debt is the end of countless dreams. Now, after the election, it's: debt is hope. Completely contradictory, and this is something that we're very alarmed about. When you make such blatant contradictions and you break your promises, no one can believe what you are saying. No one can believe what the Premier says when she makes future promises because she's broken them.

This is fundamental, Mr. Speaker, to the differences in our party. Our party is a party of fiscal discipline. That used to be a principle within the PC Party. That's why a lot of us left the PC Party; we saw that the party had drifted in its values and principles. What was the biggest movement there was with the election of the current Premier. She just no longer represented the values of small "c" conservatives in this province. I think it's pretty self-evident that she's lost those individuals. In the last election, I believe, it was 34 per cent of them.

You know, a lot of us had many friends in the PC Party. It was a tough decision to leave there, but now with what we've seen and given the result under this Premier where the plan is to incur $17 billion in debt, many of us are glad about the decision we made and proud that we joined another party and another caucus, to ensure that we are the party that is going to balance the budgets. We're the party that's going to look at cost efficiencies to make sure that we respect taxpayer dollars.

It's interesting here, Mr. Speaker. In the Assembly we often see, you know, the NDP talking about raising royalties. We see the Liberals talk about raising taxes. Now the PC Party is talking about borrowing money and going into debt. We are the only party, the Wildrose, to advocate for balanced budgets and not going into debt.

If the hon. members wanted to have some other examples of how to save money, one would be, for example, the former CFO of Alberta Health Services, that I often refer to when I talk to my constituents and in town halls. Here's an individual that was able to expense $500,000 for fixing his Mercedes, for fancy dinners, for butler service. In this province under this government, this Premier, it's entirely legal – entirely legal – so he doesn't even have to pay it back. When you look at the contract, it's not only that; he got a million dollar severance plus $10,000 a month for 10 years. Talking to average Albertans, when they hear these types of numbers, it's just astonishing. Who writes these contracts? Well, Mr. Speaker, it's this government.

That's one area I hope the hon. Finance minister would look into and actually is, in fact, the subject matter of an upcoming private member's bill, to ensure that these types of severances just aren't out there. We saw the former chief of staff here: $130,000 for six months. Can you honestly go to your constituents and look them in the eye and say: yeah, people should get a month's severance for every month they worked? I don't think that's the case, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: That wasn't even reported. It could be more.

Mr. Saskiw: It could be more. We don't know yet because, of course, they're fighting the FOIP until after Friday.

Mr. Speaker, we also saw a reconfiguration of Alberta Health Services, where they got rid of five VPs. Guess what the severances were: $2.1 million for five VPs. You know, average Albertans look at that, and they just cannot – it's very difficult to understand how that type of money is just being dished out here, there, and everywhere. But we're starting to connect the dots. We'll connect the dots even more so after Friday.

So, Mr. Speaker, we hope that the hon. Finance minister would heed the advice of the Premier prior to the election, that debt is the end – sorry; debt has proven the death of countless dreams.

An Hon. Member: One more time.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah. I've got to try that again. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams, you know, versus debt is hope. Right? I think you guys should go back to this principle, but I don't think that this Premier, that she can do it. She has lasered in on where she wants to go: debt is hope; debt is infrastructure. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. Finance minister does not follow suit here. He knows better. He knows that's not the core of the PC caucus. I think that on this side we're going to keep pushing for balanced budgets and respectful spending. Please, please. I hope that the Finance minister does not burden future generations with even more debt; $17 billion is enough. Don't keep going and digging lower.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board. We'll see how that goes, and then we'll go to Calgary-Mountain View. This is 29(2)(a). My apologies.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although 29(2)(a) does say "and comments," I do have a question for the hon. member. It has to do with his colleague talking about the federal government's way of balancing. Knowing that he has a fairly good understanding of policy and, I'm assuming, a good understanding of the financial background of the federal government, would he be agreeable, then, that the province of Alberta use the same format and methodology to declare a balanced budget as the federal government will in 2015-16?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Finance minister knows that he's comparing apples to oranges. Here in Alberta we have had record revenue over the last five years. Record revenue.

Despite record revenue in this province, the highest it's ever been, deficit after deficit after deficit. The new word in this province is Deficit Doug. We have to stop that.

In this province our economy is hot. Come to my constituency. I'd like to invite the Finance minister to come to my constituency and see how great the economy is doing there. It's doing great. But despite the economy booming, despite record resource revenue, what is this government doing? It's plunging us back into debt. Albertans can't understand that. How on earth, when the revenues are the highest they've ever been, are you still running deficits? Why?

Mr. Speaker, we do applaud careful spending, and we do support getting back to balanced budgets. If that's the question that this Finance minister has asked – should we go back to balanced budgets? – my answer is yes. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a).

Let's keep the side conversations down and the chatter across the bow down.

You have been recognized. Please continue, Member.

Dr. Swann: Well, if this is 29(2)(a), I'll ask the hon. member to comment on his perception of why he thinks P3s are an inappropriate vehicle for building and how they can hide, in fact, the financial situation of the government at the long-term expense of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his question. It's interesting here with respect to P3s whether or not the Finance minister plans on reporting the debt that's incorporated into those agreements. I'm not one hundred per cent certain if the $17 billion of debt that they plan to incur includes the debt that's included in the P3s. I'd be very interested to see if the Finance minister knows the total amount of liability that exists under the P3s. Unfortunately, at this stage I'm not sure what the exact number is.

What we do know is that by 2016, I believe, before the flood even took place, there was a projected $17 billion of debt. How far this party has gone. All the work, all the hard work, all the sacrifice, all the pain that took place to get us out of debt, and then just within a few years this Premier is plunging us right back there. All those individuals that worked day and night to get us out of debt, and she's plunged us right back despite record resource revenues in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Horner: Well, I'm going to try one more time, Mr. Speaker. Is the hon. member suggesting that the federal government is lying when they say that they will be balanced in the format that they are going to balance?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, in this regard, for the hon. Finance minister to suggest that anyone is suggesting the federal government is lying is quite incredible here.

What we are saying, though, is that we support going back to balanced budgets just like other provinces have. If you look at Saskatchewan and you look at Newfoundland, they're already balancing their budgets and are even set to run surpluses. Instead, in this province we're going to have another deficit. I hope the Finance minister stops that trend because that name that he's getting out there in this province is going to catch hold if he runs deficit after deficit after deficit after deficit. The alliteration is just perfect.

You know, I'd suggest that he follow the idea and the principle of going back to balanced budgets and going back to surpluses instead of going back into debt. Maybe with a change of leadership that might happen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:50

Mr. Horner: Well, I'm going to try a different tack, then, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member talks about the balanced budget in the Saskatchewan government. They've announced 18 P3 schools, yet they're still going to be balanced. I'm curious. Does the hon. member believe that the federal government and the Saskatchewan government are not balancing their books?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I want to make two comments.

Please, Calgary-Mountain View, have a chair for a moment, if you would.

You know, the word "lying" is one of those words, depending on how it's delivered, that could give rise to disorder. So I would just ask in this case the President of Treasury Board to be careful about the usage of that because there's an inference there that somebody in the Ottawa government might be lying. There's an inference that this member who just spoke, from Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills, might be lying. You know, it's just not a good word. I'm sure that you know exactly what I mean, so let that admonishment stand.

The second comment is to revert briefly, if we could, to Introduction of Visitors. Does anybody object to that unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Visitors (reversion)

The Speaker: Calgary-Fort, you have a brief introduction?

Mr. Cao: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. members. I would like to introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly His Excellency Komgrit Varakamin, consul general of Thailand to Alberta. The consul general is bidding farewell and visiting our leadership in government here on his way to appointment as ambassador to Romania and Bulgaria in Europe. I wish for all of us to give him a great welcome and congratulations on his new appointment.

The Speaker: The hon. consul general is just walking in the door, and he has just been introduced. He is accompanied by another gentleman.

Mr. Cao: Also with the consul general ambassador appointee is our honorary consul general of Thailand, Dennis Anderson. You are familiar with Mr. Anderson in Edmonton here. Once again may I ask all of us to give a big applause to our ambassador-to-be.

The Speaker: Thank you and welcome. Mr. Anderson is, of course, a former member of this Assembly. So, Mr. Varakamin, you are in good hands.

Let us move on. Calgary-Mountain View.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 35

Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, not being a high finance guy, I don't have a lot to add to the debate around P3s. But I did get a really credible letter from a man who's been involved in corporate finance for 40 years. I thought his comments were so salient. I didn't get his permission to use his name, so I won't use his name, but I'll give you the fundamentals of why P3s are such a dangerous decision to make for government. He gives three reasons why we should not be going into major investments through P3s after 40 years of being involved in financial dealings in the city of Calgary.

In the first instance, he says, the cost of capital P3 financing is higher than conventional bond issuance by the government and likely considerably higher for two reasons. P3 financing in most instances includes an equity component which requires a much higher return than does debt, perhaps in a 10 per cent range compared to the 2 to 3 per cent range for the province of Alberta bond issuance. Additionally, the cost of the P3 debt financing will be higher than province of Alberta bonds by perhaps 1 to 2 per cent. Finally, the legal costs and bank advisory and placement fees will be considerably higher for a P3 financing, though the Crown seems to have done enough P3 deals that maybe it has a better template for those contractual agreements. Overall, if we make the reasonable assumption that the cost of capital for P3s is 2 per cent, very conservatively higher, which is likely the low side, the incremental cost of a billion dollar infrastructure project is $20 million per annum, or $600 million over a 30-year period.

The second important negative of P3 financing is that it disguises the financial condition of the province. We've heard about this repeatedly, the debt inequity servicing obligations associated with P3 financing, an obligation of the Crown no different in substance from the obligations arriving from a direct issuance of bonds, but because they are, from an accounting perspective, liabilities of the P3 entity, they do not appear on the Crown's balance sheets. So it becomes much less transparent for Albertans, notwithstanding the fact that we as a public don't even get to see the contractual agreement between P3s and what it's going to leave not only to our debt servicing but to future generations.

The argument in support of P3s is often made that the private sector is more efficient than the public sector. This does not hold up. With respect to project execution both P3 entities and the Crown must go to the same contractors to seek bids for engineering, procurement, and construction. These contractors are fully aware that the Crown is the ultimate obligor behind the P3, so why should it conduct itself more efficiently contracting to a P3 than contracting directly to the Crown? Depending on the structure of the contract, its returns of and on capital from the Crown there may even be an incentive for a P3 entity to be less rigorous in cost control than they would be for the Crown managing the contractor directly.

With respect to operations of the P3 a similar argument applies. For infrastructure with which the province does not have direct operational experience, it will have to contract with an external operator as well with requisite expertise to the extent it finances the infrastructure on its own balance sheet. In the case of a P3 either the P3 operates pursuant to a contract with the Crown, or it engages in its own external operators. Again, why should the same contractors be more efficient when the contractual relationship with the province is indirect, through a P3, than they would if the relationship was direct?

In summary, P3 financing is almost certainly materially more expensive and is certainly less transparent. There's been a lot of work done by regulators of financial institutions globally to increase transparency. What sense does it make for a province to be going in the opposite direction at high rates of speed? That's an important statement from somebody who has 40 years of experience in capitalizing and financing projects in Alberta, no particular political affiliation, just commenting as a citizen of Alberta and very concerned that this government doesn't seem to get the uncertainty and the true debt that these P3s actually represent in terms of not only our generation but next generations.

Quite apart from all of this, there is a political, I guess, perception and a political opportunism here that reflects an ability or a perceived ability for government to go for years mismanaging our finances and then dump that onto the private sector and these P3 contracts to make it look like we're really serving the needs of Alberta citizens, getting the short-term bang for our political buck, giving the impression to Albertans that we are delivering when, in fact, we are delivering debt and delivering liability to future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I appreciate the comments from the hon. member. I think he's trying to make a very rational and sound argument in front of the Legislature here. But I would like to ask him a question – he is a member that has long preached that we shouldn't think in ideological terms – on whether he thinks that we should actually do analysis on how we fund infrastructure projects. You know, that might be right. There are certain projects where P3s do not financially make sense. There might be certain times over the course of our history as a province, you know, interest rates and that sort of thing, where debt financing does make sense rather than using the cash assets that you might have available. There may be times where it makes perfect sense to pay the cash on hand to finance capital projects.

The point that I'm trying to make is that I'm wondering, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member doesn't agree that the government should get off the ideological, "No, you have to do it this certain way all the time," or whether the government should allow itself the financial mechanisms to go on a project-by-project basis to do the analysis as to what is the best financial tool for that particular project at that particular time to deliver that project for when it's needed at that time. I'm just wondering if that's not what the hon. member thinks would be a very appropriate approach by government.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, I guess a couple of things come to mind with respect to flexibility and financing. Number one is: does the particular government of the day have the trust of people that they're going to use responsible criteria for making these decisions, and are they actually going to examine each P3 in the context of the current financial situation? That seems to be lacking. I would argue, in this particular government, where we've had record incomes and we're now dealing with a deficit and a government that simply doesn't have any other choices, unfortunately, because they have mismanaged our finances and because they haven't brought in a fair taxation system, a fair return on our resources. We're left in a position where you don't actually have any choice, do you? P3s are really the only option you have. Bonds don't make sense at some level, so you're stuck.

That's part of the reason why I guess we have to default to a decision on P3s that will not only be nontransparent with respect to the individual contract – so we can't judge whether it was a useful decision or not – but it will be nontransparent in their financial statements because it won't be listed as debt, and it will be a potential and unpredictable, I would say, future liability for our children.

The Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I find this an interesting topic to pursue further in regard to Bill 35, and I have sort of a two-part question. First of all, the P3 model and the contracts that have been put out recently have been having a hard time finding people to actually pick up and bid on these contracts. It seems to me that if there is an advantage to P3s, you would have multiple bids, and you could pick something that is the most efficient for the public interest. If the market for picking up P3 contracts is not being assumed by different private contractors, then, you know, is it maybe not really working, at least during that market condition?

Further to that, the second part of my question. You know, certainly we need to look at things as to the most efficient way by which we can spend public monies, right? That's the bottom line, that I think we all agree on here. If you are entering into a P3 contractual arrangement and if that P3 contractor is not assuming significant risk, then I wonder if that's really the wisest choice to make. I learned that from the person who runs our AIMCo – right? – one of the largest portfolios that you'd see across this country. Dr. de Bever told us that. I took that to heart, certainly. He said, you know, that if we're not giving significant risk, if there's not significant risk being assumed by the P3 contractor, then what's the point of having that contract in the first place?

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for the questions. To the first one: I think it relates to our previous dialogue across the floor here. If there aren't sufficient . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interrupt, but the time for 29(2)(a) has concluded.

Let us move on, then, to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to actually support this bill. I haven't even consulted with the rest of my members, and I know they have a lot of concerns dealing with a number of issues, particularly around finance.

Now, the beauty of finance and the beauty of talking about budget and finances: nothing raises the temperature more in this Assembly than talking about money. It's probably true dealing with nonprofit organizations and voluntary organizations. It's a cultural icon of our day.

I do want to say that I'm not going to repeat all the differences that have been pointed out earlier, but one thing is absolutely sure. There are differences, and we are now showing that divide between the various parties on how we view managing finances.

Regardless of the debate here the real debate will take place in the public forum, when the public makes their determination, because they didn't get to do that in the last election. They didn't know this was coming down the road. This wasn't told to the public. [interjection] Now, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar can giggle, but it's just not true.

I think something that distinguishes us from the party in power right at the moment is a statement from Edmonton-Gold Bar that he made to me at a dinner function one night. He said that he wished he'd never heard of the Alberta advantage, and I think that is just iconic of what separates us as parties today.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Anglin: It was absolutely a shame – I would agree – because the Alberta advantage was one of these slogans that made a lot of Albertans extremely proud. I don't think there was a prouder moment dealing with finances than when Ralph Klein held up that sign that said: out of debt. I think all Albertans felt better when he held up that sign. Whether you agreed with it or not, it was a moment in our history dealing with finances.

I will tell you this on this amendment act. We would not have to have this amendment act had the government listened to us when we passed the first bill. Clearly, in dealing with the Financial Administration Amendment Act, we've been down this road, and we've gotten to debate it twice now within a year's time, and we're still dealing with the same thing.

I just want to point out a couple of very, very basic examples of what separates us. We talk about spending, and we talk about wasteful spending, and I'm going to share with this Assembly an instance of what I think is just extremely wasteful spending. Around the community of Bentley in my constituency the Minister of Transportation is building a bypass. Now the project is cancelled. Now, there's nothing wrong with prioritizing. We want this government to prioritize. We really do sincerely ask that this government prioritize for the basic management of finances. But what they did is that they spent $3 million, plus or minus – and I will stand corrected if the hon. member wants to throw out the exact figures – but we didn't cap that. What we did is that we bulldozed it all up, cancelled the project, spent $3 million, and then walked away from it. Now, when that project takes off again – and it's not on a priority list anywhere right now, so we don't know where it stands – they will have to start all over again to build the base of that road, and that's a shame. That's just wasteful spending. There's $3 million right there.

That's not the only example, but I'm just pointing out the one example that is just looking everybody in the community of Bentley right in the eye. What they've seen is the runoff going into the river, the Blindman River, which affects another department, the ministry of environment. We don't generally allow this type of thing. They see this mismanagement from the finance side to the environmental side, and this bill, this amendment bill, is all about the management of our finances.

We get to go out to the public and we get to discuss this going into the next election: "Is this debt, or is this not debt? Is this wise, or is this not wise?" I have to tell you that conservative Albertans know what debt is. We don't need to play the word games. We don't need to deal with this issue of debt is hope, as the Premier has maybe misstepped and mentioned, the correlation between hope and debt. I mean, these are things that resonate, but the reality is: how are we going to manage our finances wisely? How are we going to manage these finances prudently? What we're seeing here now is bill after bill to try to correct some of the things. Well, this amendment act is trying to correct what went wrong on the first bill that they passed. They missed some loopholes. It gives you an indication of how fast they put that through.

Now, I would argue that the reason there were some minor mistakes – and the ministry staff even said so. They called it housekeeping, and I agree. It does close some loopholes, and there are a couple of significant ones it does close, and that's good. The staff said that it's going to close some legal loopholes which have not yet become a problem, so that's thinking ahead a little bit. But what they did is that they did change the way we budgeted. They changed the format of the budget. That confused, as you heard earlier, a number of people, not just in the press but other accountants. So we had a divide.

4:10

You know, there's an old adage that the idea of accounting is the complication of the simple. The simple is the money in, the money out. Everything else in between in accounting can get very, very complicated, but it's real easy, even for the average person, to understand, particularly the small proprietor. They understand the very basics of it. Yes, it does get very complicated when you get into a large industry or you've been dealing with the government, but it never leaves the simplicity. It is about the revenue in and the money that's being spent. What do you get for that money? The value that you get for the money: that's the key.

What we see is that without a prioritization list it reflects poorly on the management of the finances. Now, the government may have one, but we just don't know it. We don't see it. We'd like to see it. We've asked for it numerous times, but we haven't seen it. We'd like to have accountability, but we see less and less accountability. This amendment act, although it closes some loopholes, doesn't really address any issues of accountability. They're not there.

We actually discussed this on another bill just last night, where we talked about having access to the financial reports. It was an interesting debate, but there's a constant debate now in this House on access to reports. Without any access to the correct information consistently, accountability breaks down, and it starts to reflect poorly. Whether it's reality or perception, it doesn't matter. It reflects poorly in the public.

We're passing a bill because, in my view, we rushed to judgment very quickly to change the way we were budgeting, to change the way we're going to manage the finances, which we did. Now we have a new budgeting system. Right or wrong, that's what we have, and that's what we're going to live by. We'll see how it pans out when we see the results, but already we're starting to see situations where we're not allowed to see results, and that's unfortunate.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of small issues that are indicative of what's happening here. That road example was one. I mean, this is about managing our finances. That's what this amending act is doing. The sign issue that we have raised for a number of days now in question period: we can't even get an answer on who authorized these signs. We've tried three days in a row, I think. We still can't get an answer as to who authorized the signs.

Mr. Dorward: Who authorized yours?

Mr. Anglin: We don't get that. We get a little heckling from Edmonton-Gold Bar, but we don't get an answer. We would rather just have the answer. But that's okay. Maybe someday he'll come over to our side when he would like to go back to the Alberta advantage.

Where we are today is the expense of these signs in relation to what is more important. Again, this goes to the management of finances. This speaks to the credibility of finances. Which is more important: putting up, you know, hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of signs or spending it on something more prudent? How we manage these finances is what all these series of acts were about, and now we're here today to correct probably the speed at which we went through the process early in the year. I can see no other explanation why. I understand we have to correct it, and we should.

I will support the bill, I will support the minister in correcting the bill, but I will not support this government in its interpretation of its new budgeting system or how it's currently managing the finances. I don't think Albertans want to go down that road. They say that Albertans do want to go down that road. That's fine, but we'll get to decide that in the next election. This time there won't be just one member on that side that said that they knocked on doors and said this although I'll take him at his word. Good enough. I know there are a lot of others that never did, and I can pretty much say that safely. But this time the public will know, and then we get to decide. So be it if that's what the public wants, but I don't think they will. That's why there are 17 of us on this side of the House today.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, hon. members.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers?

If not, let me recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board to close debate.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have five minutes for closing.

Edmonton-Calder was, I think, the first one up this afternoon, and he talked about the confusion with the budget, that we weren't showing the old way of calculating the deficit. As the Auditor General and I had a conversation at that time, the old way was basically the change in the net financial position of the province, which is found in the balance sheet on the consolidated financial statements. I think he mentioned – and I would have to check Hansard – that we're not doing consolidated financial statements anymore. That's not true, hon. member. We're required to do consolidated financial statements by the acts that we have in the House, and we have a consolidated financial statement that does show the change in net financial assets, which was the amount that the Auditor General talked about.

What we did, Mr. Speaker, was change the way we present the budget, which is the purview of the government, not the Auditor General. We changed the way we do the budget to better reflect the way you do it at your home, your business, and generally what other provinces are doing.

The hon. members opposite were talking about: well, you know, the federal government is going to balance their budget, and I guess they're not in debt. Well, they are in debt, Mr. Speaker. They're in debt for different reasons even than what we are. They're borrowing to cover operating deficits. We are not borrowing to cover operating deficits. I think the hon. members should be very clear about that when they are talking about it.

The other thing. During parts of the debate, Mr. Speaker, there was a lot made about the Auditor General's apparent confusion over financial statements, that there are some statements that he made to some media during the time we presented the budget. I think it's time that the hon. members kind of got up to date. I have in my hands the report of the Auditor General of Alberta for October 2013. I would encourage them to look at page 6, the financial statement auditing of the government of Alberta. I've read this into the Hansard before, but I'm going to do it again because perhaps some of the members opposite didn't hear it last time. On page 6:

The fact that none of our auditor's reports on financial statements contained a reservation of opinion means that Albertans can be sure they are receiving high quality information from the government on the province's actual financial performance.

That's what the Auditor General actually thinks in his report. To suggest otherwise, that the Auditor General has some confusion over our audited financial statements or that he has any reservations at all, would not be speaking the truth, Mr. Speaker.

The other piece that I would draw your attention to is that the Wildrose Alliance talks about the fact that this bill perhaps gives us more power, that we've got wasteful spending, and that we're going to borrow more. The debt ceiling that we instituted in the Fiscal Management Act is still the same debt ceiling. Bill 35 does nothing – does nothing – to encourage or discourage borrowing. What it does is actually provide better controls over that borrowing of provincial Crown corporations. It also provides a better and a more opportune time for us to be able to manage the notes and other instruments of finance that they do.

The Wildrose Alliance also talked about that they are the party of fiscal discipline. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they are the party of a money-in-the-mattress financial mentality, which is basically how they're doing their finances in terms of their budget. Well, I haven't seen their budget because every time I hear about how they would do things, I look. I try to find: where is their budget that shows their balance sheet, their cash flow, their revenues and the expenditures that they would have? I can't find it.

I do find some very glossy, nice documents like A Better Way to Build Alberta: Wildrose green, Wildrose propaganda paid for by the taxpayers, I surmise. I'm not sure. I'm sure that the hon. members opposite could tell me whether or not the taxpayers of Alberta paid for some very glossy pictures of some leadership candidates that perhaps are looking off into the distance in typical, you know, Alberta pictures. There are no financials in this document at all, Mr. Speaker. There is no way of financing the supposed infrastructure of which they have a list somewhere that they're not putting out anywhere. There's no list of assets or infrastructure that they're going to build in this supposed capital plan that they have.

Then they talk about $50 billion, that they wouldn't use Bill 35, that they wouldn't need it because they're not going to borrow money to build infrastructure. Oh, so they're not going to borrow money when interest rates are the lowest they've been in my lifetime. Most businesses, most jurisdictions are taking advantage of these low rates because the cost of not building is about 5 per cent per year, so you're actually ahead of the game from an inflationary perspective alone by doing this. The financial sense of this is recognized across the spectrum of financial advisers, across the spectrum of businesspeople. Unfortunately, if you have a money-in-the-mattress mentality about how you do your books, you're not going to appreciate that. So they're not going to borrow. I get that.

They're not going to use P3s either. P3s have saved this government and the taxpayers of Alberta over $2 billion on the projects that we have done. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View was talking about an individual that he got a letter from that says that we don't account for the appropriate liability. That's simply not true, Mr. Speaker. We do account for the liability. It's the risk that you transferred to the proponent that saves the taxpayer a lot of money. The other hon. member, I think Edmonton-Calder, talked about Dr. Leo de Bever and his ideas around P3s. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that he is a recognized expert in financial circles, and he knows of what he speaks, and he is a proponent of P3s.

Mr. Speaker, the other part of what they won't do, I guess, is that they won't use cash to build capital. They're criticizing us for using the sustainability account to build capital. Well, that's using cash. So if you won't use cash and you won't use P3s and you won't use the capital markets, I have no idea how they're going to wave a magic wand and build capital. Somebody has got to pay for it. It has to come out of the operating expenditures, probably, but that's cash.

Let's just assume that they'd take the cash approach that they're talking about doing: $5 billion a year. Mr. Speaker, so far in all of the comments – all of the comments – from the members opposite that they have made today, I've added up: the federal building, if we didn't do that; the severance packages, if we didn't do that; somebody mentioned the carbon capture and storage. Well, that's stretched out over a long period of time, and you can only use one year's worth, so that's about maybe a hundred million dollars. If you added all that up, it's about $750 million. Where are they going to get the other $4.3 billion every year out of the operating?

Mr. Saskiw: Probably from Lukaszuk's office.

Mr. Horner: They're probably going to take out – well, there's another $10,000, hon. member. If you keep at it, you might get to $800 million.

Even with that, Mr. Speaker, at $4 billion, somewhere down the line they are going to have to come clean with Albertans and tell them how they intend to pay for all this capital that they say they can do without using the markets, without using P3s, and, by the way, without using cash because that's the sustainability account approach. I'm curious about that.

When we talk about Bill 35, we talk about what we're doing to actually build Alberta and create the infrastructure that Albertans of today need and Albertans of tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, the last thing I want to leave my grandkids is not the infrastructure that we didn't build today. I don't want to leave them the opportunity that they can pay 10 times what it would cost us to build it today, and we need it today. The infrastructure deficit and the cost of that infrastructure deficit are widely recognized and well known. It's unfortunate that the members opposite don't get that.

I think Albertans are well served by the capital plan we have, they're well served by the operating plan we have, and – Mr. Speaker, they might want to listen to this – they're well served by the savings plan we have because contrary to what they go out there and talk . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Borrowing money to save. Great idea.

Mr. Horner: Actually, you know what? I do borrow money and save on my house because I have an RRSP, and I have savings, and I have a mortgage. I'm certain the hon. member opposite has the same thing because he's obviously an astute individual who would do that for his future and his children's future, too, I'm assuming, Mr. Speaker. If not, well, then we're back to the money-in-the-mattress mentality.

Mr. Speaker, it's pretty obvious that what we are doing is leading the nation in terms of our fiscal management and our fiscal operations and our fiscal reporting. We are proud of that fact and the triple-A, gold-plated credit rating that we hold in this province, gold standard, because that allows us to build Alberta, live within our means, and maintain the future for our province.

I encourage all hon. members to vote for the bill.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 35 read a third time]

Bill 37 Statutes Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation on behalf of:

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 37, the Statutes Repeal Act, a rather sweeping bill that ensures that we have a competitive regulatory framework that is easy for every person and business to understand.

The act will repeal a group of 24 provisions in legislation that are unnecessary and obsolete. In the interest of time I won't read them all. Perhaps more importantly, the bill creates an automatic process of review every five years whereby unproclaimed legislation is automatically reviewed and, if it is no longer needed, repealed.

Mr. Speaker, several years ago the members for Calgary-Acadia, Calgary-Klein, and Battle River-Wainwright talked about the need to reduce red tape. This legislation does just that. Many times people talk about reducing red tape for businesses and individuals. This bill turns that talk into action. This is just another reason you should do business in the province. The Statutes Repeal Act shows that Alberta is committed to actively maintaining its body of provincial laws, and I am confident this legislation will serve Albertans well.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to close debate and move third reading of Bill 37, the Statutes Repeal Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope you didn't mean that you wanted to close debate. You might want to adjourn debate, perhaps?

Mr. McIver: Correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Do you want to just say that?

Mr. McIver: Adjourn debate.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for that assistance.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: Deputy Government House Leader, did you wish to adjourn?

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I think we'll call it 4:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:28 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to November 21, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 25, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. First, let us be reminded of the adage that we make a living by what we earn, but we make a life by what we give. We are privileged to have so much to give in our lives. Let us be generous in how we share that with others. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, we're joined today by Ms Hana Marinkovic, who is going to lead us in the singing of O Canada. We want to welcome her. She is involved with the Edmonton Singing Christmas Tree in support of our local drive for Santas Anonymous and Edmonton's Food Bank. These organizations are very close to her heart. She's been in Canada since she was age six. We invite you now, Ms Marinkovic, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, Hana.

Please remain standing for a moment, hon. members. The chair has just been informed that a former member of this Assembly, the hon. Lou Hyndman, passed away. We will be doing a tribute and a memorial in his honour, with the traditional minute or two of silence, either tomorrow or Wednesday pending confirmation with the family of their wishes. Please know that your chair is aware of that, and we will take the necessary steps in accordance with our tradition very shortly.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very, very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you today a number of guests seated in your gallery who are representatives of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Alberta. They are here to mark a Canadian first, the signing of a partnership agreement between a provincial chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada and the provincial government as well.

Mr. Speaker, seated in your gallery, most familiar will be, of course, Mrs. Judy Gordon, former president, I believe, of the MS Society and, most importantly, a former member of this Assembly. Seated with her this afternoon: Mr. Neil Pierce from MS Alberta as well; Julie Kelndorfer, who is staff with the MS Society; I believe at least two other board members of the MS Society, Mr. Garry Wheeler and Mr. Kevin O'Neil; as well as Julia Nimilowich from the MS Society staff. I'd like to invite these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome and thanks from this House for their tremendous work to support Albertans with multiple sclerosis.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, you have some guests?

Ms Redford: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I'm rising today to introduce to you and through you a very good friend of mine, Steve Kwasny. Steve Kwasny started at the Legislature as part of our ministerial internship program in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, and this led Steve this summer to being involved with Minister Rick Fraser in flood recovery efforts in High River. Steve truly is a community leader from Red Deer, and prior to joining us at the Legislature, Steve was tremendously active in postsecondary student government as president of the Students' Association of Red Deer College and chair of the Alberta Students' Executive Council. As I said, he is originally from Red Deer, currently working part-time to finish his political science degree at the University of Alberta, and this weekend he was elected president of the PC Youth of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests here with us today to be introduced. Let's start with some school groups.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a wonderful group of 29 grade 6 students from Monsignor William Irwin school although I have to admit that I always have trouble saying that name because most of us knew him as Father Bill, the founder of Catholic Social Services in Edmonton. Monsignor William Irwin is located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students are their teachers Michael Leskow and Jaclyn Bedard along with parent helpers Dan Reid and Ken Saunders.

Mr. Speaker, I had a wonderful opportunity to spend some time with them this past Friday, and I want to let you and all members know they were impressive, they were motivated, and they were direct. They asked outstanding questions about the Chamber, the processes within the Chamber, the role of MLAs within the Chamber, the processes for building more schools, and what Campus Alberta is about. This is the class to watch. There are some up-and-coming politicians and successful business leaders in this class. They're seated in the members' gallery and in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a group of future leaders from the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Manning, 59 grade 6 students from the Edmonton Christian school. These students are among the brightest in Alberta. It was definitely my honour to meet them very early today. I also had the honour of meeting their teachers Ms Elaine Junk and Mr. Greg Gurnett as well as their parent helpers Lee-Ann Chin, Tracy Schiile, Jeff Stolte, Teresa Gammel, Val Verveda, Luz Maria Groot, Janice Zenari, and Stacey Bell. They are all seated in the public gallery. I'm so pleased to ask them to stand and receive the warmest welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: We have one last school group. Edmonton-Mill Woods, please.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you the most passionate, most enthusiastic, and most well-dressed students, 33 students from the Bisset elementary school, located in your wonderful consistency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. They are participating in School at the Legislature this week, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Mike Lastiwka. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would request them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two staff from the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia. They are seated in your gallery. They are Rob Sutherland, the director of Hansard in B.C., and Christine Fedoruk, the manager of reporting services. They are in Edmonton this week to attend a conference called Navigating the Digital Divide, and while they are here, they are visiting our Legislature to get a first-hand look at Alberta Hansard's transcript production processes. Plus, they're enjoying a bit of un-Victoria-like weather. I would ask Rob and Christine to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour and high distinction today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly retiring Deputy Commissioner Dale McGowan, commanding officer, RCMP K Division. Deputy Commissioner McGowan has been serving communities across our country for the last 35 years. He was born in Edmonton and returned to serve his home province in 2011. He brought his in-depth experience to the position of deputy commissioner, including work with northern aboriginal policing, serious major crime units, and homicide units. He has also served as the criminal operations officer and accredited emergency response team incident commander.

Deputy Commissioner McGowan has been recognized with many awards, including a commanding officer's commendation for investigative excellence, the RCMP long-service medals, and he is also a member of the Order of Merit of Police Forces.

Beyond policing, Deputy Commissioner McGowan has dedicated countless hours over the past 30 years to coaching many youth sports teams. His passion, Mr. Speaker, for the RCMP has been passed on to all three of his children, all of whom are members of the RCMP.

On behalf of all Albertans I want to thank you, Deputy Commissioner McGowan, for your commitment and your dedication to keeping our communities safe every day. I wish you the best in retirement. I'd ask that all members give Deputy Commissioner McGowan the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three special guests with the Edmonton Singing Christmas Tree, and they are seated in your gallery.

Carrie Doll is a board member of the Singing Christmas Tree Foundation, and Hana Marinkovic, who led us in O Canada, is my chief of staff and a member of the Singing Christmas Tree choir. I can assure the House that although we often sing from the same song sheet, listen to her singing, not mine.

I'll do the final introduction in a moment. Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton Singing Christmas Tree has an incredible legacy in this city. Many of us remember that it started as a local church production. It's now grown into a spectacular Broadway-style family show at the Jubilee, with five performances over four days, boasting collaborations with incredible local artists as well as international artists such as Mark Masri, the Canadian Tenors, and Ruben Studdard, to name a few.

Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton Singing Christmas Tree is not only an incredible Christmas show for the family, but through these shows the foundation has raised more than half a million dollars over the last four years for Edmonton's Santas Anonymous and Food Bank.

My final introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Mike Fersovitch, and he's also seated in your gallery. He is here in honour of his wife, Kristen Fersovitch. Kristen was a special performer with the tree for the last two years and is a major source of hope and inspiration for the Singing Christmas Tree and every Edmontonian who was touched by her powerful spirit. Kristen passed away this October, but her light will remain the brightest star in the tree for many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, for their dedication and commitment to supporting our local community and helping to make the holidays that much brighter for families, I'd like to ask Carrie, Hana, and Mike to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of fabulous men and women from the 50s group from the Candora Society. The Candora Society of Edmonton is a not-for-profit organization with a community development mandate to work with the residents of northeast Edmonton to create a positive environment for families to live and to grow and to collectively address issues of concern in our communities.

The 50s group started four years ago to keep their seniors together. This group meets every Thursday morning at 10 o'clock to play cards, make crafts, and take workshops, enjoying lots of laughs. Mr. Speaker, I've had the incredible privilege of visiting with this group on a couple of occasions in the last few years. Their goal this year is to fund raise to go on field trips, which brings them to our Assembly today.

I invite them to rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Lorette Spilchen, the director; Eveline Warren; Leona Lindberg; Maria Locker; Mary Yadowski; Andry Gurba; Wilhelmina Lund; Kathy Wowchuk; Todd Schnerch; Colleen Campbell, and Maureen Stokell. I'll invite my colleagues to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to everyone in this Assembly nine hard-working members of our Alberta public services' flood recovery task force team. Since the flooding began in June, members of the Alberta public service have been at the forefront of the recovery in impacted communities and offices across the province. Their efforts have helped thousands of Albertans move towards rebuilding their homes and bringing some sense of normalcy to their lives. They will continue to work compassionately and tirelessly behind the scenes to help flood victims move through the recovery and healing process in the years ahead.

These professionals are taking a short break from their day-to-day flood recovery efforts to tour the Legislature and see firsthand how their work is making a difference. I'm not sure if they're in the gallery yet, but I'd like to introduce them. I'd ask them to stand if they're here. They are Jacob Modayil, Teresa Ullyott, Shannon Cavalieri, Ramola Goguen, Rebecca Wade, Dana Gray, Cameron Gertzen, Sonya Witzman, and Carlyne Murphy. Please join me in giving these people a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I've just received a note that your guests will be here shortly. They've been held up.

Let's move on to the Minister of Culture, followed by St. Albert.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very honoured to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly members of the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose and their executive, an outstanding group of individuals who are part of the imperial court system of queens and kings across North America. If you would kindly rise in the members' gallery as I say your names: Michelle Pederson, treasurer; Kari Sorensen, president; Imperial Grand Duke XXXVIII Randy Quiver; Imperial Grand Duchess XXXVIII Myra Maines; Imperial Crown Princess XXXVIII Kelsey Breeze; His Most Imperial Sovereign Majesty Emperor XXVI, XXVIII, XXXVI, and XXXVIII and a half Rob BigOnion; His Most Imperial and Sovereign Majesty the 38th Elected Emperor of Edmonton and all of Northern Alberta the Triple-X Elizabethan Emperor of Classic Tunes, Show Tunes, and Looney Tunes Jeffylube XXXPress.

The mission of their court is to raise funds for charities and other organizations which either provide direct services to the GLBT community of Edmonton or those which work to promote an accepting attitude of gays and lesbians in the community as a whole. In their 38th year they've chosen to focus their fabulous fundraising on the John M. Kerr memorial scholarship for GLBT youth attending postsecondary schools, the Pride Centre of Edmonton, Camp fYrefly, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Alzheimer Society of Canada, and the GLBT community. On November 29, this weekend, Crowns for Kids will take place in Edmonton, where proceeds and toys collected are donated to Kids Kottage and Ronald McDonald House in time for Christmas. I would ask that my colleagues show you the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a very special family living in my constituency of St. Albert. Terry and Roma Kurtz and their sons Ben and Grant have proven to be inspirational to everyone they meet. Ben and Grant are young men living with autism, yet both live amazing lives pursuing their passion as artists. Ben is a talented photographer, and Grant is an amazing painter. With the love and encouragement of their parents these young men have flourished pursuing their respective interests and are gaining a following and a reputation as talented artists. It is, in fact, through their Autism Artistry gallery showing last spring that I first met this family and enjoyed their wonderful work, and their mother, Roma, has asked me to pass on a sample of their work in the form of gift cards to the Premier, which I will be honoured to do. Joining the family today are Ben and Grant's two caregivers, Ashley Bailer and Stacia McKinley. Also with them are Danielle Galloway and Shane Henton, two very dear friends. I'll ask Team Kurtz to now rise, and would you all join me in the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-South West if we hurry.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons received the Nobel peace prize earlier this year. I am so pleased to report to you that the King's University College in my area of Gold Bar had a significant role in the receiving of that prize. Today we have Dr. Melanie Humphreys, the president of King's University College, and two of the students, Joseph Zondervan and Miriam Mahaffy. Miriam's father, Peter Mahaffy, is unable to be with us. He is the other individual who worked closely on this project along with Brian Martin, also a professor, who is unable to be here. I would like Joseph, Miriam, and Dr. Melanie Humphreys to please stand up and receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West very briefly.

Mr. Jeneroux: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise to introduce to you 13 dynamic individuals who have come to our Chamber today. This group is from Alberta School of Business, executive education. As many of the members know, executive education is one of the four pillars of Alberta School of Business. As the school's professional development provider they serve all clients across all industries and in the public sector. Executive education works to build the province of Alberta in western Canada through the leadership of learning. This incredible group has taken the initiative and accepted my invite to come to today's proceedings. They are Associate Dean Carolyn Campbell, my dear friend Jenny Adams, Heather Christensen, Rhonda May, Courtney Schubert, Amy Fisher, Kate Wylie, Sabrina Loo, Heather Thomson, Krista Aune, Liezel Candava, Melissa Creech, Sarah Kowalevsky, and Tyler Waye. We can now refer to them as Tyler and the ladies, I guess, but I do ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Children in Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, today we've learned that the government has failed to accurately report the number of deaths of children in care since 1999. The tragedy of these children's deaths is heart-breaking. To learn in media reports that the number of deaths of children in care is actually three times higher than the government's previously reported figures is unacceptable. Will the minister commit today to a full public inquiry into their children in care policies to ensure that mistakes of this nature will not happen again?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the death of any child in Alberta is a tragedy, either in care or not in care. That's one of the reasons, when we formed government in 2013, that we took steps to ensure that the child welfare system is even stronger. You will know that we passed legislation in this House in 2012 to ensure that the child advocate was independent, an independent officer of this House, that the death of any child in care had to be reported, mandatory reporting to the child advocate, and it's why we passed the Children First legislation, so that caregivers of children in care and out of care could share information to keep kids safe.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'll ask questions about the advocate in a minute, but the media reports also raised concerns regarding the quality of care Alberta children receive when they are in the care of government. We know that the vast majority of Alberta's foster parents are caring, compassionate individuals who make substantial personal sacrifices. Will the minister commit to a public inquiry to ensure that foster parents are provided with the support that they need in order to effectively help Alberta's children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is fast to call for public inquiries. What she should recognize in this case is that it's not another inquiry we need. We've actually had the inquiries, and now we're implementing the results of those inquiries. The previous minister put in place a quality assurance council to review every incident of serious injury and death. The Child and Youth Advocate Act, passed in December of 2012, requires every death of a child in care or under the programs of our department to be referred to the Child and Youth Advocate. The medical examiner's office reviews the death of any child in care. There are a lot of things that have been put in place.

Ms Smith: If that were true, Mr. Speaker, we wouldn't just be finding out today that only one-third of the deaths had actually been reported.

Following the tragic deaths of children in care, subsequent fatality reviews have provided hundreds of recommendations on how these tragic deaths can be prevented. Instead of fighting requests for information from the opposition, from the media, from other groups, will the minister commit to a public inquiry to track the extent to which the recommendations of these fatality inquiries and special case reviews have actually been implemented?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would know that since 2012 we've actually publicly reported the death of any child in care. So every child since 2012 who has died in care, whether of natural causes, accidental, or otherwise, is fully reported. That's in place already. The quality assurance council has just sent me two recommendations, and one of them is to put in place a tracking system so that we can publicly track all of the recommendations that have come forward from fatality reviews and reports, and we are going to be doing that immediately.

Ms Smith: Here's a problem, Mr. Speaker. The government's independent Child and Youth Advocate has also expressed frustration at the government's failure to provide timely and accurate information. In his most recent report the advocate himself said that "our access to information is less timely than we hoped." Why is the government failing to provide full and timely information not only to Alberta's media but also to their own independent Child and Youth Advocate?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Child and Youth Advocate has full access to all information. He has some concerns sometimes about timeliness, but that has been worked out. There's been a process since the office was established. We've been setting up a process to ensure that he has access to the information he needs when he needs it and when he wants it, and that is actually happening as we speak. We've dealt with that concern that he's had, and we're making sure that all of that information is available to him. There are two values here that are really important. One is the privacy of the family and siblings and others, and the other is the value of reporting. We've covered this by having a quality assurance council, the Child and Youth Advocate, the medical examiner's office, and other methods.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's not what the advocate said in his report two weeks ago.

In addition to recommendations coming from the fatality inquiries, the government's independent Child and Youth Advocate has also put forward a number of important recommendations regarding the quality of care for children in care. However, the advocate himself is also concerned that these recommendations aren't being fully implemented by the government, saying that "the response to these recommendations has been limited." Why is the government failing to implement all of the recommendations of their own Child and Youth Advocate?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to be perfectly clear on, because the opposition doesn't seem to be able to get this straight, is that the Child and Youth Advocate is not our own officer. The Child and Youth Advocate is an officer of this Legislature and reports to the Legislature. We are mandated and legally obliged to co-operate fully with him and report all serious injuries and deaths and to co-operate to provide the information that he needs to make a full and complete inquiry. The quality assurance council is also mandated to do that, and between the two of them they can hold us to account with respect to anything that they feel might not be adequately reported. We've published all the numbers of every death of any child in care, and we have done so since 2012. What we need to do is to get on with continuing to improve the system.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that answer is not acceptable. The minister is not living up to the expectations for this advocate office. Albertans may be rightly asking why the government even bothers to have an independent Child and Youth Advocate if they're going to keep him in the dark and fail to follow through on his recommendations. However, given the reports today the need for this officer has never been more clear. To the minister: going forward, will he actually empower the Child and Youth Advocate by providing him all of the relevant information and by implementing all of the recommendations he gives to this government?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do provide to the Child and Youth Advocate and I will pledge to this Legislature that we will continue to provide to the Child and Youth Advocate all of the information that he needs to do his job. The Child and Youth Advocate has now tabled I think it's two reports or maybe three reports, and we are thoroughly reviewing those reports. We are very, very interested in those recommendations, and we are very, very interested in implementing those recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Michener Centre Closure

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, keeping with the issue of persons in care, last Thursday the Member for Red Deer-North finally let caring and compassion trump partisanship and quite rightly joined the fight to keep Michener Centre open. The Member for Red Deer-North knows the great work of the staff at Michener, what they do for these residents. She knows there is no effective plan to relocate these residents. She knows that closing Michener is wrong. Will the Premier listen to her Member for Red Deer-North and cancel the closing of Michener Centre?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, Michener Centre has been a very important part of the health care system in Alberta for many years, but that's the point. When the Michener Centre was opened many years ago, we as a community had an understanding, that was quite different than today, as to what community-based care looked like for people that were living with disabilities. Although there are some people that are certainly still requiring information and getting their transition plans in place, I have every confidence that the staff and the minister responsible for PDD are working with families to ensure that we provide better community-based support for people because that is how we actually work with people in 2013.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier should know that Michener Centre hasn't been institutional care for more than 40 years. Jody Kvern is just one long-term resident who has tried community living and found that it was a disaster for her. Jody's family is passionate about keeping Michener Centre open. To the Premier: why won't she visit Michener Centre to see for herself that this model of care that they provide is the very best care for these residents?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have visited the Michener Centre, and successive Premiers have visited the Michener Centre. Nobody is criticizing the care and compassion that's been exercised at the Michener Centre, nor would we ever. That's not the point. We know that we can do better. We know there are models of care that provide better outcomes. We're moving forward to implement them.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, many of the residents at Michener Centre are also under the guardianship of the government. In many cases their families surrendered guardianship to the government to secure their loved ones' care at this facility. These families were promised that their loved ones would be cared for at Michener Centre in Red Deer. They wouldn't have signed the guardianship documents otherwise. To the Premier: why is this government breaking their promises to these Alberta families?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the promise that we've made to the families of those individuals either under the care of the public guardian or other guardians – the promises we make are to the individuals, and that is to provide for the very best care we can, to strive to achieve the very best outcomes that we can, and that's what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Deaths and Injuries of Children in Care

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The moral test of a government is how it treats its weak and vulnerable, especially children in care. Today we learned heartbreaking stories about the shocking number of children who died while in government care. Annual government reports give the misleading indication that 56 children died in care between '99 and the present. After a four-year court battle waged by the Edmonton Journal and Calgary Herald, we now know the true number, 145. To the Premier: why is your government trying to cover up the deaths of 145 children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that is the furthest from the truth. The fact of the matter is that this government, under this Premier's leadership, immediately moved to set up the Human Services department, immediately moved to make the Child and Youth Advocate independent, and immediately moved to publish the numbers of all the children who died while in care. Now, the other number is also misleading. The reason it wasn't published before that was that the numbers that weren't published were of those children who died tragically of natural causes. So the numbers that were published were those that were not the children who died of natural causes. There was no attempt to hide, but this Premier has moved to make this completely open and transparent.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to that minister the fact of the matter is that there are mothers, grandmothers, and families waiting for answers about the deaths of their children in your care.

Mr. Speaker, if the number of deaths of children in care is this grossly underreported, then the number of children seriously injured while in government care is very likely underreported as well: sexually, physically, and emotionally injured. To the Minister of Human Services: since 1999 while in the care of your government how many children have been severely injured? Can you please answer that question?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, since I became Minister of Human Services – actually, prior to that the previous minister set up the quality assurance council. All incidents of serious injury or death are reported to the quality assurance council for investigation. Then we set up the Child and Youth Advocate as an independent officer of the Legislature, brought that legislation here. This Legislature agreed that the child and youth officer should be independent. All deaths and serious injuries are reported to the Child and Youth Advocate for investigation. As of the annual reports of 2012 we're reporting publicly the deaths of all children in care. There is nothing being hidden here. What's really unfortunate is if we make political hay out of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's quite clear the minister didn't hear the question. The question is: how many were severely injured?

It's also quite clear that this Conservative government has failed in its most basic duty to protect the weakest and most vulnerable amongst us, our children at risk. Only a fraction of these 145 deaths were deemed worthy of an investigation. In cases where reviews were completed, recommendations weren't even followed. We owe it to these children and their families, Minister. To the Premier. Your government's credibility is at risk. Can you please stand up and answer my question: will you call an independent judicial public inquiry into these deaths?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this member also is one who wants to use public money for public inquiries. This is an area that's very serious. This is an area that's very important, and that's the very reason why this Premier has made children a priority of this government. This Premier moved immediately to have a Child and Youth Advocate's office as an independent officer of the Legislature, who instructed that we publish the number of children's deaths. We are very open and transparent on it, while still maintaining the necessary privacy for the rest of the family. Don't forget that there are other children who are often involved.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to being accountable to Albertans about the safety of our most vulnerable children, this government has moved the goalpost so often that it took a four-year legal battle to start to get the picture. The long and the short of it is this. By playing around with reporting criteria, this PC government is hiding almost two-thirds of the deaths suffered by vulnerable children receiving protective services in Alberta. To the Premier. Even today you only report child deaths in care and not child deaths in protective services. How can Albertans possibly trust you?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this Progressive Conservative government, which started in October 2012, took as one of its first steps making a child advocate an independent officer of this Legislature, and we did that because I worked in the family justice system and I worked in child welfare and I am a concerned Albertan just as every other citizen is. We must protect our children, and by ensuring that we have an independent child advocate and that we have reporting requirements in place and that we take a look at every tragic situation, that is how we get the outcomes that we need, which are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that the 10 deaths of children in care last year generated not one investigation by the government's internal quality assurance council and so far only two by the children's advocate and given that this government appears to be combining a policy of underreporting child fatalities with the growing practice of underinvestigating them, does the Premier really believe that increasing secrecy and decreasing accountability can result in anything other than less safety and less security for Alberta's most vulnerable children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has just said is fundamentally inaccurate. Every serious injury and death of a child is reported to the quality assurance council, which was set up by my predecessor, the Member for Calgary-Cross. Every one. Every death and serious injury is reported to the Child and Youth Advocate. Those two bodies work to determine what is the most appropriate investigation that should be undertaken to determine whether or not there is something that needs to be learned from it or some corrective action is to be taken. That fundamentally happens. The medical examiner's office also has the death of every child in care reported to that office to determine whether an investigation should happen. So it's not one investigation; it's three.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, having a death reported to you is not the same as doing an investigation about how that death happened and how it can be stopped. The fact of the matter is that the children's advocate has done two reports so far. It's just not good enough. Will the Premier commit today to legislation that requires the children's advocate to prepare a public review of every death of every child receiving protective services in this province?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the reason why you have independent officers of the Legislature, the reason why we have a quality assurance council is to determine whether a review, an in-depth analysis and inquiry, is necessary. The same with the medical examiner's office: not every death in the province goes to a fatality review. The medical examiner's office reviews it, determines whether a recommendation should go to the board, and determines whether there is something that they do not know about that death. That's the way these circumstances are handled in this province. They look to see whether a further investigation is needed or warranted, and when it is needed or warranted, then they perform that review.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

From here on in let's curtail our preambles or eliminate them totally, starting with Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Hawthood.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deaths of children in care is a heartbreaking and sensitive topic. While we accept that some deaths were neither nefarious nor preventable, it is extremely disturbing to learn that the number of deaths reported by this government would appear to be only one-third of the actual number of children who died while in care, and the final number may end up being well above that. To the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: what steps will your ministry take to ensure that a reporting mistake of this nature will not be repeated by any ministry in the future?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as I've said at least three times already, we've reported annually since 2012 the death of any child in care, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, this PC government would have Albertans believe that they are not accountable for anything that happened prior to 2012. Like every other problem that this government has on its hands, it is a problem this government created. Why should Albertans trust this government to fix mistakes that they and they alone created?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would think that this hon. member would know and understand that while we should all aspire to be perfect, no one should claim to be perfect. Therefore, we should always be open to learn, and we are. The reporting that happened before that seems to be the subject of this controversy was not nefarious. It was just that they did not report deaths by natural causes. There were concerns raised about that, and people wanted more openness about all the deaths in care, so now we report all the deaths in care. It doesn't change the fact that a significant number of the deaths in care were deaths from natural causes.

Mr. Wilson: Well, given that according to media reports the government spent significant resources fighting the release of this information in the courts for the past four years and given that these are resources that could have been used to provide more support to foster parents and other groups who work with children in need, to the minister: why did your government fight tooth and nail to prevent the release of this information?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd tell the hon. member that if he wants to know and understand this better, I'd be happy to sit down with him and talk to him about it. But let me tell you this. With a very modest amount of research he could have determined that what was being a concern in that process with the court was what type of information should be released. What we do not release publicly are the names of the children involved, the identifying information, and those sorts of pieces. That is a very significant challenge in this process. We want to make sure that the public has all the information they need to know but that we do not invade the privacy of other children in the family and the family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Calgary Road Construction

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rapid population growth in Calgary has created traffic congestion, which is all too familiar to many Calgarians. I know the Minister of Transportation opened the southeast Stoney Trail in Calgary last Friday. My question to the same minister: aside from generating headline news and photo ops, do you actually observe any real improvement in traffic congestion for Calgary commuters, especially during rush hour?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for being such a strong advocate for Calgarians' mobility, but I will say that he's a little bit of a hard case because we just opened the road. I will tell him that early indications are that it is making a difference. I've had lots of tweets. I've seen media reports where people have said that it's saved them five, 10, 20, up to 30 minutes. That will be 30 minutes a day for a lot of people for the rest of their lives, so that's pretty major. I will say to the hon. member that he should stay in touch with me because as time goes on, we hope for even better results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we're still hearing Calgarians complaining about the traffic congestion, particularly on Deerfoot Trail, does the minister have any other plans to make things better there?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. member, I'll refer him to the website to look at our three-year plan, which is where we have what is approved. The fact is that we do hope to do more improvements to the Deerfoot Trail, and as we bring those forward, we hope to do that and at the same time talk to the city of Calgary about returning the Deerfoot Trail to the city. That was the original arrangement when the province took it away, to get the ring road open so that we have an alternative to the Deerfoot and then give it back to the city. As that goes on, we hope to get some improvements done and then complete what we started and put it back in the care and feeding of the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this same minister said himself that a ring road is better than the horseshoe that we currently have in Calgary, my question to the minister is: when is the southwest ring road going to be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Up until last week it was a boomerang road, not even a horseshoe road. But we're up to the boomerang, and we're hoping to have a ring road when we're finished. In fact, I intend to be in Calgary on Wednesday with the Premier, the Tsuu T'ina chief and council and sign an agreement for the southwest portion of the ring road. That will actually set in place a process where the federal government has to approve that. If all of that goes well, we'll be able to complete the ring road, just part of what this Premier and this government does: building Alberta.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, the largest toxic waste spill of its kind in Canadian history is happening as we speak. I'm referring to the Obed coal mine disaster, that has leaked a billion litres of toxic slurry containing mercury and other heavy metals into the Athabasca River. Last week this government was quoted as saying that the contaminated water will be diluted and safe once it reaches the Northwest Territories. Now, I'm not a chemist, so can the minister who said that we will rely on science please explain how a deadly toxic metal such as mercury is diluted in a river?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll repeat again: first and foremost, what we've said all along is that we made sure that communities had notification so they were not drawing the drinking water. They were making sure that the water was safe because their water facilities knew about that. We are making sure that every day we are taking samples. We're working with Health; we're working with experts to make sure. The health and safety of people and of the wildlife are very important for us, and we're doing that every day.

Mr. Anglin: Given that two federal agencies have now confirmed the toxic slurry from the mine contains harmful levels of arsenic, cadmium, lead, mercury, and other cancer-causing agents and given that we know that these toxins are settling on the riverbed and in river gravel – and we know that gravel doesn't renew itself – what's the plan for cleanup?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. What we're doing is making sure that as we're taking the samples, we're being aware. This will continue into the springtime as well with regard to the cleanup. What I'll guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, is that whatever costs are associated with the cleanup, those will be the responsibility of the companies and not the Alberta taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister initially refused to release the information on the contents of the spill and claimed that the spill posed no threat to human health and given that the minister said last week, "We had only seen one dead fish," would the minister like to correct herself and admit that this toxic waste is a threat to human health? Or can she tell us: did that dead fish have one head or two?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that I did not say that we would not release the information. We said that we would release the information, but we would make sure that we use the information as well for the investigation. All of that information we put out last week. We put out an environmental protection order. We have been doing everything since day one to make sure that the information is public, that that data is public. We will continue to do what's right for Albertans, for the health and safety of Albertans, and for the wildlife as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Energy Company Licensee Liability Rating Program

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Changes to the licensee liability rating program took place this year and are having a serious impact on the junior oil and gas companies that contribute so much to Alberta's economic success. These companies are concerned that the new requirements are unfair to them and are having a negative impact on their cash flow. To the Minister of Energy: what is the purpose of this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The licensee liability rating program, otherwise known in the industry as the LLR program, is one that is implemented by the Alberta Energy Regulator and ensures that companies have the assets necessary to deal with abandonment, remediation, and reclamation of their well sites. We'd all agree, I'm sure, that that is an important objective in terms of public policy: protecting Albertans, ensuring that those reclamation and abandonment costs are borne by the appropriate parties, those being the oil and gas companies. We want to make sure that Albertans are never on the hook for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the impact of these changes are happening at a time of very low natural gas prices, can you explain why these changes are being made?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been changes in the cost to industry of undertaking these commitments to reclaim orphan wells, abandoned facilities, and pipelines of defunct companies. As a result, those changes were made in order to update, to ensure that companies had the appropriate amount of assets to meet their obligations. As somebody who has worked in the private sector with small companies and started small companies, this is an important obligation that people understand when they go into business.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you. To the same minister: do you and the Department of Energy truly understand the impact of these changes?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, others may try to speak for me, but let me speak for me.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that as an entrepreneur in my private life, as somebody who worked in the oil and gas service sector for many years, I have a very strong sense of this. I have as of last week asked the chair and the CEO of the Alberta Energy Regulator to readdress this issue, see if there are ways that companies could meet these obligations through other means, and explore all possible options, working with the Explorers and Producers Association of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Emergency medical services continue to be overtaxed and unacceptable, especially outside Calgary and Edmonton, since Alberta Health took over our emergency system, with increased injury rates as well as delayed response times. To the minister: why did you break a system that was working, especially in rural Alberta?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked this question last week and was concerned about increased injury rates for EMT workers. I offered last week and I'll offer again: if he actually wants to sit down and review the statistics, I'd be more than happy to do so because our statistics don't line up with his.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since it showed a 50 per cent increase in Calgary's emergency medical services injury rates over last year, it's troubling that the minister doesn't know anything about those.

EMS workers have a much higher injury rate and absentee rate since this government took over emergency services. Why?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I don't know a lot about some of the reports that hon. member comes up with, but I do know what the actual statistics are, and I'd be more than happy to sit down and review them with him.

Dr. Swann: Well, I tabled those in the House, as you know, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that the minister hasn't had a chance to look at those.

Poor communications, delays, misdirection from 911 are especially common in rural Alberta. Will you reconsider this one-size-fits-all in rural Alberta and reconsider 911 and EMS?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said in answer to a question the other day, I've spent hours meeting with municipalities from across the province, including rural Alberta. I'll be tabling an article from a newspaper later today that quotes officials in Brooks and in other communities, saying that EMS services have improved since Alberta Health Services took over the leadership for EMS in their communities. Today a full 95 per cent of EMS calls are handled by our three provincial dispatch centres. It's working well. There's certainly room for improvement in many areas, and we're very focused on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Health Care Premiums

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for many years the NDP fought long and hard to remove the regressive and hurtful health care premiums forced on Alberta families. We were happy that our continued pressure paid off when in 2009 the premiums were cancelled. Yet at the Tory convention over the weekend a number of questionable decisions were made, including a motion to reimplement these taxes. This tax will undoubtedly cause further hardship for middle-class families who can't afford them. To the Finance minister: will you confirm today that you will not be forcing this regressive and unfair tax on Albertans once again?

Mr. Horner: We will not be introducing health care premiums, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Good. My job here is done, Mr. Speaker.

Continuing and Long-term Care Placements

Mrs. Towle: In June of this year the Minister of Health stated that the hundred-kilometre policy separating seniors in care from their communities was withdrawn immediately. Well, Mr. Speaker, not everyone got that memo. In July Faye Hallet, a Red Deer resident and the sole caregiver of her 90-year-old aunt, had to sign a document at Red Deer hospital stating that she'd be willing to travel a hundred kilometres for continuing care placement. This is forcing her aunt out of the community that she has known for the last 70 years. Minister, why are AHS staff telling Faye and many other Albertans that the divorce-by-nursing-home policy has not been rescinded and defying your directive?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hundred-kilometre policy that Alberta Health Services had in effect was clearly rescinded. I can't be expected to know the circumstances of the hon. member's constituent. If she'd care to forward those to my office, I'd be happy to look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe she's met with the minister from Red Deer-South and given him direction. I'm sure he's met with you about it.

Given that just last week an Innisfail resident was told that her 85-year-old mother with dementia, who's been on the wait-list for placement since March 25, would have to pack up and leave her community, friends, and family within 24 hours because of the first available bed policy – and that's what they told her – and given that everyone but the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Seniors can see that this policy is cruel, when will either minister live up to their word and end this policy immediately?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll say again: there is no policy in effect in Alberta today that requires anyone to accept a continuing care placement within a hundred-kilometre radius of his or her community. We've seen these sorts of generalizations before. I don't doubt the goodwill of the hon. member in raising the concerns of her constituents. Again, if she'd be happy to provide me with the specifics, I'd be happy to provide her with a response.

Mrs. Towle: I did that just last week. I sent it over to the Associate Minister of Seniors.

Given that this government's own membership does not believe you, given that this government's own membership passed a resolution this weekend at the PC AGM that said to end the cruel divorce-by-nursing-home policy, will this minister send out a directive today to all Alberta Health Services staff to tell them that there is no longer a hundred-kilometre rule in Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is an absolutely absurd line of questioning. The hon. member herself was one of the members in this House who raised the issue of the hundred-kilometre policy in the first place. The issue was dealt with some time ago. We have processes in place for constituents and for MLAs on their behalf to raise concerns and have questions answered. I'd suggest she avail herself of those and do her constituents a better service.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's also be reminded about questions in question period not dealing with internal party matters. Now, the questions – I listened carefully – were crafted to sort of dodge around it, but the preambles certainly were not.

Let us carry on. St. Albert, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

PDD Program Funding

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past spring the government announced changes to the persons with disabilities program, also known as PDD. Albertans from across the province, including those in my riding, were worried, scared, and uncertain, so much so that many of my constituents brought their concerns to the very steps of the Legislature just this past summer. Many in the PDD community remain concerned and uncertain about how future PDD programming may impact their quality of life. My question is to the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities. Given the evolution of the PDD program will self-directed funding for PDD individuals be affected?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can inform the hon. member. He's asking about self-directed funding. I believe he's talking about family-managed supports, family-managed services, and that is an option that many families choose. It allows them greater flexibility and more control over the delivery of care. This hon. member should be informed that each of the individuals in that system will be assessed and will go through the individualized process, but we've held their funding constant this year. There will be no changes to their funding.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Minister. I've heard the minister speak to the need for eliminating artificial barriers to funding for the PDD community. To the same minister: given that PDD funding to young individuals can appear to decrease once they turn 18, what exactly is the government doing to address this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of pieces to that, and I'd be pleased to speak to the hon. member offline about them. There are two pieces. One is that we have to remove the transition, the difficult transition, between children and adult services when a person turns 18. It's inefficient and unfair. We've also, through our results-based budgeting process, talked about the need for a lifespan approach to the delivery of care, and we're talking about that as well. We'll proceed, and I'm sure that the Edmonton Autism Society, for example, and others will be very pleased with the outcome.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Again to the same minister: given that funding for community access supports is critical funding that encourages community involvement and fosters the ability of the PDD families to pursue their passions and interests, Mr. Speaker, can the government assure us that community access supports will remain sufficient in light of the PDD funding transformations currently under way?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can inform the hon. member that we made no cuts at all in community access supports this year, and that is certainly our intention through the remainder of this year. We wanted to take an emphasis away from supports that are designed to protect and to shelter people towards supports that are designed to engage and empower people. As we make that transition, there will be a shift in funding, but I can tell this House, as I said before, that community access supports are an important part of the support feature, and if you need those supports, you will get them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Red Deer-North.

Construction Contracts

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose believes that we need more value from our infrastructure process. The drama that has plagued the Trans-Canada bridge repairs in Medicine Hat has tainted the recent announcement that it will be completed by next week. The provincial government failed to do its due diligence for the original contract, which resulted in two and a half years of delay for all Medicine Hatters. After a new contract was signed to complete this work, this government now isn't paying the bill, and a small contractor is owed a million dollars and has had to walk off the job. Why is this government not paying their bills?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the hon. member should know that we do pay our bills. If a contractor, typically, who is a subcontractor of somebody that has gotten paid doesn't, there is a process, actually, through the infrastructure legislation. I think that in this particular case of this contractor, if it is this contractor, if I'm correct in my assumption – and I'm sorry for assuming – I think they've been given that direction.

The fact is that I would recommend that the hon. member talk to those people in Medicine Hat. He's talking about a mess. I heard from a whole bunch of them this weekend. They're very happy with the way that project has gone.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the government has difficulty finding qualified contractors to complete infrastructure, doesn't this government see that not ensuring timely payments of the bills like the money owed to asphalt haulers on the two-month-delayed ring road will only make it harder for all Albertans to receive full value for their hard-earned tax dollars?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, sometimes I struggle with things to agree on with this hon. member, but I think we agree on one thing. When somebody does work, they should get paid for it. I believe he believes that, and I certainly do. That's why we have a process in place that when we pay a contractor and the money doesn't get to one of their subcontractors, they can go through the legislation and get that done. So we help them where we can. These are actually the problems that you have when you're building Alberta, and the hon. member might want to consider that. On the other hand, if he's not building Alberta, he won't have these problems.

Mr. Barnes: We just want to build it right, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this government regularly mismanages a selection of these contractors and that this results in the awarding of contracts to companies that don't have the capacity to complete the job or to pay their bills, when will this government increase the transparency and accountability in the infrastructure payment process and start to care that hard-working Albertans get full value for their taxes?

Mr. McIver: You know, Mr. Speaker, I tried to throw the hon. member a bone; it just doesn't work. In his first question he said that the project is going to be finished next week, and in the third question he said that the project is not going to get finished. The member doesn't seem to know whether he's coming or going.

I'll tell you what is going on, Mr. Speaker. That project will get opened soon; the government will pay their bills. We're building Alberta. People in Medicine Hat and across Alberta will enjoy the infrastructure that they need and deserve because under this Premier and this government we're building Alberta, and we're providing the infrastructure that is so desperately required. [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Airdrie and minister of environment, are you finished your conversation? Perhaps we can carry on.

Red Deer-North, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Red Deer Health Facilities

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Health announced the grand opening of the Central Alberta cancer centre in Red Deer, for which we are truly grateful. The Red Deer regional hospital, however, was built decades ago to handle 1,500 births per year, but with the growing population in central Alberta, over 400,000 people, there are now 2,700 births per year, almost double what the hospital was built to handle. There is a critical plan that calls for the development of two new operating rooms on the obstetrics floor. When can we expect the two new operating rooms on the obstetrics floor that were promised in Budget 2013?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. The obstetrical operating rooms for the Red Deer hospital were not, in fact, part of Budget 2013. She is certainly right that the growth in Red Deer is unprecedented elsewhere in the province, particularly in the area of additional births. Last week the Minister of Infrastructure and I were pleased to approve $9.6 million in funding for the project to go ahead. We expect it to be complete in 2016.

Mrs. Jablonski: That's great news, Minister. So that I don't sound too ungrateful, though, I'm going to ask: because of the growth that we're experiencing in central Alberta like other places in Alberta, when can we expect further expansion of the entire hospital?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member says, Red Deer is one of the fastest growing areas of the province, and the demand for health services is increasing proportionately. We have taken a number of steps. The member herself referred to the opening of the Central Alberta cancer centre in Red Deer last week. This is designed to avoid situations where people have to travel long distances to access radiation treatment. Another recent example of expansion was the addition of ICU beds to the hospital in late 2012, and as I've just said, the expansion of obstetrical services, a $9.6 million project, will be complete in two years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I don't sound too ungrateful when I say to you that other areas in the country that have populations that are smaller than the population of Red Deer, St. Catharines, Ontario, for example, have two hospitals. I'm wondering when central Alberta can expect a second hospital.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's very interesting is all I would say.

Population growth, of course, is not the only factor that determines whether additional hospitals are needed. We have put great emphasis in this government on primary health care, on ensuring that we're delivering services in the community as close to people as possible through primary care networks, through other initiatives. All of these factors as well as others are taken into account in long-term planning. The goal is to provide the person with the right service at the right time and by the right provider.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Flood Hazard Caveats on Land Titles

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deadline for disaster recovery applications is in five days, and Albertans want more critical information before making such life-altering decisions. Ever since this government decided it would attach caveats to the properties of Albertans who accept DRP funding, flood-impacted Albertans have lived in fear of reduced property values if they accept the DRP payment. To the associate minister for regional recovery. Please clarify: after accepting DRP assistance, how can someone with a property in a deemed floodway have the caveat placed on his or her title removed?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's right – and I appreciate the member giving me an opportunity to get the message out – that those that have not applied for the disaster recovery program should do so by the end of this month. Because they apply, it doesn't necessarily mean that they have to take the money. It's not until they take the money from the program, if they live in a floodway, that they then would have a caveat on their property. Until they take the money, they do not get that caveat. The deadline is just to signal their intent or the possibility that they would be eligible for that particular program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That wasn't quite the question.

Given that DRP assistance is intended to help, not hurt, can the minister explain how his government will protect Albertans from adverse treatment by banks and insurance companies and the like after they've had a caveat placed on their title?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, this government made a decision, a clear decision after the floods to try to get people that live in floodways, those that want to develop in floodways – we made a clear decision to not allow that moving forward. We want to provide people with the fair option of having that decision to move out of the floodway. As I've mentioned in this Assembly before, there are some very serious consequences both when it comes to future financial liability to taxpayers and public safety consequences for allowing development to continue in floodways, and that's the policy that this government decided to make.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering this deadline and that this government hasn't updated its flood maps and that it plans to implement flood mitigation measures as well, which will further alter the floodways, does the minister recognize that forcing Albertans to make this decision before updating the flood maps is wrong?

2:40

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that this member completely does not understand the use of flood maps and this particular policy. The flood maps are put in place. They're a planning tool that allows us to make these decisions as well as to do the mitigation that's required. Just because you have mitigation in place doesn't mean that you're no longer in the floodway. Sometimes those mitigation measures fail, and that puts those people in harm's way and leaves the government and the taxpayers with future financial liabilities. That's what we're trying to get away from.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-South West.

School Class Sizes

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week my Calgary-Varsity constituency office hosted a forum on K to 12 education for parent councils and principals from the 27 schools in our constituency. It was an invigorating session, with many good ideas explored, and there are a few in particular that I promised to pose to our Minister of Education. Some grade 12 students I spoke to were concerned about their class sizes, even anticipating classes of 50 students in their next term's calculus class. To the minister: when you say that research supports the view that class size doesn't matter, but students are genuinely concerned, what's your response to those concerns?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to commend the member for her engagement with her community and putting on this open house. We were happy to provide some staff there to help her. As I've said before in this House, class size does matter. That's why we track it, and that's one of the places in the budget where we actually increased funding last year to $248 million. It's not the only thing that we track, not the only important thing, and it's not the most important thing. Outside of the involvement of the parent the most important thing is the quality of the teacher, and we see a number of results, including the recent PIAAC results. Internationally we see countries like Japan or Korea with very high class sizes. Some of the largest bring in some of the best results.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: what changes in approaches to teaching do you envision to be able to make sure that learning can happen for every student in a classroom of 40 to 50 students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, another very good question by the member. One of the things that is guiding what we're doing in Education right now is kind of the blueprint that we have, which is the Inspiring Education report. There are a number of changes. Modernization is happening with regard to the system, but one of the main things we're doing right now is that we've got a task force out talking to Albertans about excellence in teaching. I think they're just completing their public consultation, and I'm very excited and very interested to see what that group is going to come back with. They're going to talk about the things that teachers need to be excellent, how class size contributes, and the diversity in the classroom, the time they need to prepare, and others.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Finally, is there a ceiling on class size for academic classes in elementary, junior high, and high school, a threshold after which the emotional ties to the educator are just no longer probable?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we do have guidelines for class sizes, that we track every year, and school boards report on that. It's an average across the jurisdiction. It's very difficult and virtually impossible to give hard caps on what class sizes should be because every class is different. The diversity in that classroom and the inclusion that we have now plays into that in terms of a number of things. So we leave those decisions up to the local school boards, the local administrators, and the local teachers to balance that mix of the class, the diversity, the excellence and the experience of the teacher. Thus, you just can't put a cap on any particular class in the province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

The time for question period has elapsed, and as you will note and already have observed – I've received notes from some of you – we today recognized 17 different members asking questions. Now, that is a very good number and a good target. If you do the math, where we allow by our rules 35 seconds for a question and 35 seconds for supplementals and the same for answers, you can't mathematically get to 17 very easily; that's for sure. But we did today, and I want to thank a few people for helping us do that because there are not many ways we can get that done but for short questions, short answers, not using your supplementary if the question has already been answered, and not breaking any rules, thus precluding the Speaker from having to rise and interject. [interjections] Such as the interjections that are going on right now. [interjections] Government members, please.

Calgary-Hawthorn did a very good job with a brief supplementary. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was also brief; the second one was a bit long but a good attempt on the first one. St. Albert was mercifully brief as well. Livingstone-MacLeod's first supplemental was short; the second one was not too bad. Calgary-Varsity also. The champion today had to be Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who forwent his second question and his third question. As a result, about 100 questions and answers were provided and given today. I think it was exactly 100.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue our Routine with the speeches by members under private Members' Statements.

Just before we go on with the private Members' Statements, Government House Leader, you have a request?

Mr. Hancock: While we await that commencing, given that we were so early in the Routine before we started question period, I'd ask for unanimous consent of the House to continue past 3 o'clock if that's required to complete Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has requested your unanimous consent to proceed beyond 3 o'clock in order to complete Routine should it become necessary.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us continue now with St. Albert, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Kurtz Family

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to extend a heartfelt thank you to the Kurtz family and their team of supporters for joining us earlier this afternoon. As I mentioned in my introductions, brothers Ben and Grant Kurtz are young men living with severe autism, yet despite many challenges both of them lead extraordinary lives. Ben's passion is photography, while Grant is an enthusiastic and talented painter. With the help of their parents and mentors both young men have been able to flourish and enjoy countless successes, including the completion of a fulfilling educational journey through the school system in St. Albert.

According to his family Ben has always loved switches and pressing buttons and was naturally drawn to the camera, thus igniting his love of photography. Ben's younger brother Grant had an affinity for crayons, scissors, and paint from an early age. With the aid of an assistant Grant paints on canvasses, using acrylic paint.

These talented young men have developed into passionate artists. In 2011 and just this last spring Ben and Grant displayed and sold their artwork at a public gallery and auction showing in St. Albert. Mr. Speaker, their Autism Artistry gallery shows are gaining a remarkable reputation in our community.

These two young men are shining examples of how individuals with disabilities can flourish if they, their families, and those around them receive the proper support from their caregivers, community, and the government. Through a self-directed funding model of PDD support Terry and Roma Kurtz have been able to provide for their children what we all want as parents, a fulfilling and engaging childhood within a part of a vibrant community and a successful transition for their children from childhood to young adulthood, engaged in a vocation in which their children have a passion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to personally thank Ben and Grant, their loving parents, Terry and Roma, and all those in our community who have supported the Kurtz family on their inspirational journey. I wish them continued success in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Deaths of Children in Care

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we learned of a very disturbing and heartbreaking trend in our child care system. According to official reports a total of 56 children have died while being cared for by the province between 1999 and present. However, a thorough media investigation published today confirms that the real number is almost triple that and likely more. That means that those deaths occurred shrouded in secrecy, their circumstances along with the lessons they should have taught us swept under the rug.

Let me be clear. This is not a partisan issue. We know that the vast majority of department staff and foster parents are caring, compassionate individuals who want the best for these children. The system that cares for these children is tasked with perhaps the greatest degree of public trust we have in our democracy. It is tasked with caring for children who, through no fault of their own, have been thrust into a life of pain, of anguish, and of personal struggle. Nonetheless, something has very clearly gone wrong in the system.

That's why we believe a public inquiry is in order. We must clear the air and answer the pressing questions this investigation poses to us. How many deaths have there actually been since 1999? What is the implementation status of recommendations from all fatality inquiries and special case reviews in that time? When and how should the death of a child in care be publicly reported? How should the government track and report deaths of children who have been removed from government care and returned to their parents? Why did the government spend four years blocking the release of this information, and was that in the public interest? What steps can be taken to immediately improve the quality of care for children in the child welfare system and foster care?

If we're going to reform the system, Mr. Speaker, we must dispense with the notion that the details of these incidents should be buried. In fact, the opposite is true. We must shine the light on these tragedies so we can learn from them, so the mistakes aren't repeated, and so our system stops failing the innocent lives that it's in place to protect.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

2:50 Eliminating Violence Against Women

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to encourage my colleagues and all Albertans to wear a white ribbon in recognition of the importance of eliminating violence against women. I was in law school when Canada enshrined gender equality in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I still recall the feeling of great joy, yet it has not been easy to achieve that aim.

Over the decades we have seen momentum for equality build and then wane here in Canada and around the world. During the Arab Spring I was excited to support citizen leaders, including Tawakkol Karman in Yemen, to help move gender equality forward, yet the turbulence of the Arab Spring appears to have slowed or even reversed this progress.

Here in Alberta we have stronger laws and institutions, yet even here we are not free of discrimination and violence against women. Aboriginal women are a particularly vulnerable population. The spousal homicide rate is eight times higher than that of non-aboriginal women, and an estimated 75 per cent of aboriginal girls are sexually abused. These statistics are numbing, but let them not be debilitating.

In this government I'm honoured to be working with Métis and First Nations women to create economic security councils. One way to improve the safety of women is to increase their control over their economic security. YWCA and many other agencies are reframing their role. Their role is not just to protect women in shelters but to help women thrive in the community.

There is a role for every one of us in eliminating violence against women. I invite you to wear the white ribbon, and I encourage you to get to know these women and girls, not as statistics but as people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Retail Market Review Committee

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many of us know, electricity prices can fluctuate from season to season depending on the severity of weather. For many Albertans on a tight budget this unpredictability can greatly affect one's quality of life. In order to respond to market volatility and protect Albertans, our government established the Retail Market Review Committee.

Recently the committee conducted an independent analysis of the electricity default rate with the intent to provide viable options to keep costs down. In January of this year the committee released its 391-page, in-depth report, entitled Power for the People, which detailed the concerns of industry experts and outlined several key recommendations.

In response to these recommendations an MLA implementation team, which I am privileged to chair, was created, with the hon. members for Banff-Cochrane, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Calgary-Foothills, Edmonton-South West, and Sherwood Park. Our team works in collaboration with consumers, industry officials, regulators, and stakeholders to ensure that we consult with Albertans in order to develop a plan to implement the committee's recommendations.

Our government recognizes the need to ensure Albertans are paying fair electricity prices by introducing regulations to promote greater transparency of energy prices. I'm privileged to be part of an initiative to better the lives of Albertans, and I'm grateful to be able to help foster more effective consumer oversight in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

King's University College Nobel Peace Prize Contribution

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have great post-secondary institutions in this province. Today I would like to highlight King's University College.

I rise today to speak about a team of outstanding individuals from King's University College, whose work contributed to the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, OPCW, which was awarded the Nobel peace prize earlier this year. Mr. Speaker, faculty members professors Peter Mahaffy and Brian Martin along with student researchers from King's Centre for Visualization in Science have made contributions to the OPCW over the last eight years. Professor Mahaffy began working with the OPCW in 2005 and at that time headed a chemistry education committee for a group that sets global standards for chemistry and works internationally to improve students' and the public's understanding of chemistry.

This committee and the OPCW partnered in a new effort to educate the public, helping people to understand the devastating effects of chemical weapons. Students Joseph Zondervan, Miriam Mahaffy, and others have been working on the Multiple Uses of Chemicals website. OPCW was in the process of publicizing this site when chemical weapons were used in Syria on August 21, 2013, Mr. Speaker, killing more than a thousand people outside of Damascus. Syria signed on to the chemicals weapons convention and opened up their stores to international disarmament experts. Awareness helped that happen, and King's was on the forefront of that.

These King's college colleagues are an excellent example of the impact that Alberta's postsecondary institutions have made worldwide. King's University College is not only helping to build Alberta but helping to build the world.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Reporting of Deaths of Children in Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children first, not politics. Shocking revelations today from diligent journalists of concealed child deaths in government care are most profoundly about public trust, and in this regard this government has profoundly failed.

What we see, unfortunately, is a government that says, “children first” but purposely misleads the media, the public, and the vulnerable families of children who trusted in their government to tell the truth and learn from them. As bad as the failure to learn from these critical lessons and pass it along to all staff in the department is, Albertans in care must surely be anxious, especially with the ongoing major reorganization and disruption among thousands of staff already coping with heavy workloads and high levels of stress and burnout.

Why was this government silent on causes and lessons from the deaths of 145 children in care? This is all the more egregious since most of these children under foster care are from First Nations communities. Not only does this raise questions about inadequate foster care and selection; it also questions the monitoring in these situations. It raises troubling questions about what this government does not want the public to know about its own internal functioning. Parental negligence is one thing; political and criminal negligence is another. Finally, it raises questions about a government that refuses to invest in prevention in the midst of growing numbers of poor families – 91,000 poor children in the last census – and of those with mental illness without adequate support.

To be true, there are thousands of daily successes and personal sacrifices among dedicated staff working under incredible difficulties in this department. We need to hear these stories also. But today, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the families, including foster parents of these dead and missing children: how can anyone trust a government that talks openness but hides the truth from both the staff and Albertans?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we continue with Routine, could we have your unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests? Does anyone object to giving that unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, briefly.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just need to add another name, that I missed when I gave an introduction of the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. I did miss the current empress, Dayzi Chayne, and I wanted to put that on the Hansard record.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to propose the following motion:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to immediately identify the actual number of deaths of children in care that have occurred since 1999, the implementation status of recommendations that have been made to prevent deaths in that time, the reasons for the secrecy surrounding this issue, and the steps that can be taken immediately to improve the protection of children currently in the care of the government.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona referred to a document received through FOIP that supposedly provided some justification for the closure of Michener after the fact. I rise today to table that document, which the hon. member did not table. It's quite clear that it says nothing about the closure of the Michener Centre, the decision to close the Michener Centre, but refers, in fact, to the very careful planning that must go into transitioning residents of Michener to other living arrangements, and it speaks volumes about the care and compassion that goes into that decision.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of documents with 117 signatures that are requesting the preservation and enhancement of the pheasant release program, that has been part of Alberta's hunting tradition, heritage, and culture for over 65 years. These documents were originally part of a petition with over 3,500 signatures; however, they did not meet the strict rules for submitting a petition, so I'm tabling them instead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table a hundred more of the handwritten letters my office has received expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education happening here in the province of Alberta. These letters call on the PC government to reverse their harmful cuts to postsecondary education.

As well, I have the appropriate number of copies of FOIP documents regarding negotiations between the PR firm Calder Bateman and the Assistant Deputy Minister of Human Services, Brenda Lee Doyle, on the development of principles.

I also have the appropriate number of copies of a letter written by a mother whose son is living in the Michener Centre. Jeannine Goodrich tried to find a group home for her son Dean, but after she got ill, no one except Michener would take him because he was too hard to handle. The Premier should do the right thing and reconsider the closing of Michener Centre.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a copy of the document entitled The Way Forward, Alberta's Multiple Sclerosis Partnership. This is the partnership between the government of Alberta, the Multiple Sclerosis Society, and other stakeholders designed to improve the experience and access to care for Albertans suffering with multiple sclerosis.

The second item, Mr. Speaker, is a news clipping from the Brooks & County Chronicle. Contrary to other claims that have been presented, this presents positive feedback from various municipal officials in southern Alberta regarding improvements in ground ambulance service delivery.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to provide five copies of a tabling of the Red Deer Advocate dated July 11, 2013, in which Faye Hallett tells her story about being the sole caregiver for her 95-year-old aunt and also says that the reason she's going to the media is because she's being forced to move her aunt over a hundred kilometres away by Alberta Health Services.

The second article that I'm tabling is again a Red Deer Advocate article, this one from October 2 of this year. This article is called Where are the Beds for Seniors? Again Faye Hallett advises that she has gone to her MLA, advises that she went to the Associate Minister of Seniors, and again is being deployed by Alberta Health Services under the first available bed policy to over a hundred kilometres away.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

20th Anniversary of Elected Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, just as we wind up our Routine, I want to take a moment to first of all recognize a very important milestone in the lives of four of our colleagues. This past summer that special milestone was reached by four members of this Assembly, all of whom are still sitting. June 15, 2013, marked the 20th anniversary of the election of these members. In alphabetical order they are the Member for Calgary-East, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the Member for Calgary-Cross, and the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, which would happen to be yours truly.

Eight hundred and twenty-nine members have been elected since 1905, and only 37 of those men and women to date have reached or surpassed the milestone of serving in six Legislatures, meaning they have won six elections each. That is 4.4 per cent of all those who have been elected MLAs in Alberta's history.

I am going to invite these members to come up and receive a special pin in honour of this recognition. In alphabetical order let me begin by calling forward the hon. Member for Calgary-East. Congratulations to you, sir.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Congratulations.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross just stepped out for a moment. I know we're not supposed to refer to absences, but in this case I will, and I'm going to ask her colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie to please come forward and accept this on her behalf. You weren't here in 1993 but your spirit may have been. Please congratulate her on our behalf.

Mine has been received in my office. Thank you very, very much.

Hon. members, in addition to the points I mentioned about speeding up question period, let me commend you that there were no points of order raised today. That also helped speed things up. Not that they shouldn't be raised – if they're due, go ahead and raise them – but it helps speed things up when they're not. You know what prompts them, so let's avoid prompting them.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Let us move on, then. I think we do have a Standing Order 30 that has to be heard, so I'm going to hear that in just a moment. Before we do, I want to remind everybody now, so that I don't have to remind you during your comments, that I would appreciate, if necessary, hearing from one member from each caucus on behalf of their caucus so that we can get to the matter of the day just in case the ruling goes in favour of the debate proceeding today. I won't know until I hear all the arguments. I'm prepared on both sides of this, depending on what gets said and how it gets said today.

My point here isn't so much about that as it is about ensuring that you talk about the urgency of the matter, why this debate needs to be proceeded with now, not why the issue is important. Every issue that comes up under an SO 30 is important. Very important. This one happens to be in that category as well. We're talking about the matter of urgency as it's defined for this Assembly.

That having been said, let us hear the point from the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to propose the motion under Standing Order 30. As required by 30(1), written notice was provided to the Speaker this morning well in advance of the sitting of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, today we learned of a heartbreaking trend in our children's services system impacting some of our most vulnerable. Media reports show that the number of children who have died while under the province's care has been dramatically under-reported for the last 15 years. In fact, it took four years in the courts for Albertans to find out that the number of children who have died in government care is three times what had been previously reported.

Mr. Speaker, the motion is as follows:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to immediately identify the actual number of deaths of children in care that have occurred since 1999, the implementation status of recommendations that have been made to prevent deaths in that time, the reasons for the secrecy surrounding this issue, and the steps that can be taken immediately to improve the protection of children currently in the care of the government.

This issue meets the conditions laid out in Standing Order 30(7); namely, this is the first such motion proposed for today; this motion refers to a single matter, in this case the secrecy and uncertainty surrounding the deaths of children in the care of the provincial government; this motion does not revive any discussion held during this session; there is no bill or motion related to this concern, nor is there one likely to be tabled.

Now, while it did come up in question period today, it was clear that this is not the right forum for an adequate debate of a complex and passionate issue like this one. This motion is not based on a question of privilege, and the discussion does not raise a question that according to the standing orders can only be debated on a motion on notice.

As you have reminded us, Mr. Speaker, as the mover of a request for an emergency debate the purpose of this initial speech is to address the question of whether this is a genuine emergency requiring immediate and urgent consideration. As allowed in the standing orders, I will provide a brief summary of the facts.

The Edmonton Journal and Calgary Herald both ran multiple stories today detailing the results of a four-year investigation attempting to determine simple but important facts like how many children have died in care since 1999, how they died, and whether any recommendations that came out of their deaths were followed. What they found was disturbing on multiple levels. For one, after four years of battling the department, they still don't have all the facts, and only when the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner ruled this summer that they must produce some files did the true picture start to emerge; namely, that the government only investigates some of the deaths, only makes public about one-third of them, doesn't track implementation of the recommendations, and is stubbornly secret about letting the public know about any of this.

This summary is not intended to overlook the need to address the urgency of this debate, and I'll be happy to speak in much more detail about the facts of this matter in the event this motion passes. The reason the brief summary is needed, though, is to make clear why shock waves are reverberating today not only through the children's services community across Alberta and those closely connected to the deaths of these children but also among everyday Albertans, who rightfully believe that one of government's most important tasks is to ensure the adequate care of those children whose families cannot care for them. Simply put, it is our moral obligation as legislators, as elected officials to ensure that deaths of children entrusted to our care are not swept under the rug. If we allow these deaths to mean nothing, if we allow this House to pretend or insist that the system is working despite mounting evidence to the contrary, it will be a heavy weight and a burden for us to carry, Mr. Speaker.

We need to understand why this government decided to hide this critical information from the public. According to reports the government spent four years fighting the release of this information in the courts. These are resources that could have, in fact, and should have been used to provide more support to our staff, to the foster parents, and other groups who work with children in need. Sadly, this government kept that door slammed shut. It is critical, given the amount of secrecy exposed today, for all Albertans to get a crystal clear picture about what motivated the decision to hide this information. Questions remain whether or not this government was simply papering over cracks in a broken system or if it was made in an effort to hide potentially harmful and politically damaging truths or incompetence.

Further, Albertans expect a certain degree of accountability when it comes to who made the decision not to make these deaths public. Were these decisions made by those politically accountable, or was information ever withheld from ministers by staff? If information was withheld from ministers, who did the withholding, why, and are they still in a position to continue to withhold important information?

We need to understand why this government is allowing recommendations that come out of fatality inquiries and reports and the Child and Youth Advocate's office to go unmonitored or at times completely ignored. We're talking about hundreds of recommendations, Mr. Speaker, where advocates and parents are left sitting idly by, wondering why the government has failed to take action. In fact, I'm sure it would shock most Albertans to know that much of this data is going untracked and that we have no system for studying trends among children who die in provincial care.

Given these circumstances it is clear that this matter is, according to Beauchesne's 389, "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." The matter of urgency should be unquestionable, Mr. Speaker. Surely all members of this House will agree that the almost 9,000 children in care today are impacted by what we do in here. There have been 89 children in this province's care that have died without public knowledge but, more importantly, without anybody asking the question why. We must work towards tearing down this culture of secrecy and ensure that this government takes immediate action to put forward reforms and improve the protection of children under our care.

We owe the children and the families impacted by these deaths this debate. We owe the social workers and enforcement officers on the job today this debate. We owe the foster families, the families who do great work every day and are intimately aware of the system's shortcomings, this debate. We owe the staff and officials in children's services this debate. We owe every single mother, father, grandfather, grandmother, aunt, uncle, brother, and sister of the 9,000 children that are in this province's care this debate. If we allow one more death to occur that could have been prevented, Mr. Speaker, shame on us. We owe all Albertans this debate. Make no mistake: Albertans deserve it.

It is our foremost responsibility and duty to ensure that these deaths, each one a tragedy unto its own, do not occur in vain. It is our duty as legislators and in the interest of Albertans for this Legislature to permit this debate immediately. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask you to rule in favour of this motion so that all members can raise their concerns on these tragic and heart-wrenching circumstances and ensure that this government either clears the air or starts doing a much better job at caring for the most vulnerable children in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Alberta Liberals I stand in the Assembly to support the hon. member's call for an emergency debate on this issue. Looking at the standing orders, the question is: is it an issue of public urgency? Under Standing Order 30(7) I believe it is an issue of public urgency premised on two facts. One, it's a breach of trust, a breach of trust of a government. The integrity of a government institution has been brought into question, and the credibility of our sitting government is at stake right now as we speak.

Number two, it's an issue of public safety. The safety of our children is at risk. I know as a front-line physician for more than 22 years, Mr. Speaker, that when the front-line heroes of health care, whether they're doctors or nurses or firefighters or police officers, see a child's life in danger, when a child has been injured, we always have to ask the question: is there child abuse involved? These children are being apprehended today when they meet the doctors and the front-line health professionals, and decisions are made to apprehend these children.

There has been enough evidence brought forward based upon the investigations done by the Calgary Herald and the Edmonton Journal that the government has not been forthright in protecting their children. Mr. Speaker, the government's job, the most basic, fundamental job of our government, is to protect its citizens, and the most vulnerable citizens are our children. Essentially, here we have a government that apprehends these children, and then many of these children end up dead and the government has not been forthright in providing information. In fact, they have fought – they have fought – to get the truth to the public. If they were forthright years ago, we would actually have saved the lives of countless children and implemented solutions.

Mr. Speaker, it took the office of the Privacy Commissioner, an officer of this Legislature, to order this government to release the death records because the office of the Privacy Commissioner felt it was an issue of public safety, that the public must know of this. Yet the government fought this tooth and nail until the last day.

I'm glad that we have a Child and Youth Advocate, that the Liberals fought for for years, an independent Child and Youth Advocate. The Child and Youth Advocate today says that the government is slow in sharing information. They still are not getting information as quickly as they'd like to and the amount of information they'd like from this government.

Mr. Speaker, there have been deaths of children in care, but we also don't know how many of these children that government was contacted to protect died at home. That number still isn't available. When we have front-line health providers identify a child at risk and we contact the government agency, we don't know how many of these children actually died when they were returned to their home.

You know, as an elected member it's heartbreaking to me to see this kind of thing. It is heartbreaking. If we can't protect children and if we can't be honest, why are we all even here today? The moral test of a government is how we protect those who are in the dawn of their life; those who walk in the shadows of their life, the weak and the vulnerable; and those who are in the twilight of their lives, the seniors. Mr. Speaker, can't we have an honest conversation on this to say, "Look, these are mistakes made in the past"? Some members are still currently here from that government making those decisions when these mistakes were made. Many of us knew. If we cannot have an honest conversation, how are we going to make sure that going forward the children today, right now, are being protected?

Mr. Speaker, it's for these two reasons that it is a matter of immediate public urgency. It's a public safety issue today. If our staff are not resourced enough in the ministry of children and youth services – I know these social workers. I know they're burnt out, I know their caseloads are too big, and I know that needs are too great because my colleagues and I are the ones who send many of these poor children into their care. If it's an issue of resourcing, then we need to get them the resources today.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many of the staff are barred from speaking publicly. They'll lose their jobs, and they fear breaking the law. I know that many of these parents are barred from speaking publicly about the children's deaths. If we're going to do one thing, let's send a message to Alberta that we're all prepared to work together. Let's not lay blame. Let's not lay blame. It's a complex issue, but let's get to the root of this matter. Let's make sure that there's no child that dies in care, and if a child dies in care, let's make sure that that never happens to any other child again.

On behalf of the Alberta Liberals I support this matter of public urgency because I feel that it's a matter of immediate public safety and a breach of trust of government. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise in support of this motion to proceed with this emergency debate. Briefly, the authorities that judge or assess the issue of urgency look to whether or not the need for the debate is urgent. They look at whether it's the first and only opportunity to debate, and I believe that this issue has been covered already by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, that there is no other opportunity in the near future for us to debate this issue.

As well, it is an issue of whether it constitutes a genuine emergency. In House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 695 it states, "Events which [had] taken place in the past . . . might precipitate a course of conduct which, if allowed to continue unchecked, would certainly classify itself as an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration." I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that that particular issue applies today.

Finally, Beauchesne's 390 states that the Speaker must also look at whether "the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately." I'm going to start with that, Mr. Speaker, because, as you know, many Albertans woke up this morning to open a newspaper to read headlines that said that three times as many children had died in care in the last little over a decade than we had been told by the government. I think that that in and of itself is the kind of issue that is going to create a huge level of public interest and public concern, that needs to be addressed on an immediate basis because it is a matter which, I do believe, is fundamentally important to all sides of the House. I believe all Albertans care very sincerely and deeply about the best interests of the most vulnerable children in our society. I think that the fact that we have this issue out there, that three times as many children died than was reported, is important.

Now, I understand, Mr. Speaker, to some extent how this happened. I mean, we do understand it was not entirely intentional, obviously, on the part of the government. Up until last year the government only reported on accidents and injuries requiring hospitalization or that caused death. That was all they reported on. Children receiving protective services, I believe, was actually the criteria. This year the criteria changed again so that we were just hearing about children who died of any cause. Great; we've expanded the group of kids that we're reporting on but only if they were in care, so we've reduced the pool of children that would be subject to that more expansive definition.

So we continue to be in a situation where we are not reporting all fatalities of children receiving protective services from this government, and that is fundamentally important. If you look at the statistics around what children have been dying of, you will see that the majority of them are not accidents or injuries, but rather they are diseases, they are illnesses, they are things like pneumonia, they are asphyxiation, they are malnutrition, and things like sleep arrangement. I identify those ones in particular, Mr. Speaker, because those issues can and often do arise not only from the natural medical condition of the child but also from the issue of neglect. This is what is fundamentally important.

We have a piece of legislation that all Albertans think is being enforced right now that prohibits children from being the victims of neglect in our province and imposes on this government, and through them everybody in this Assembly, really, the obligation to save children from neglect. But, Mr. Speaker, we can't do that if we don't know about how many children may have died or may be at risk of dying as a result of neglect. Up until last year that information was not being shared with Albertans. It couldn't be. It just couldn't be. We weren't reporting it. We weren't typically investigating it because we're not typically investigating most deaths as things stand now, so we weren't talking about the issue of neglect.

Now we're in a situation where we might well talk about the issue of neglect amongst children who are in care, but we're not talking about the issue of neglect or serious injury amongst children who receive protective services but remain in the custody of their family while receiving family enhancement services. That, too, Mr. Speaker, is a huge crack that far too many children in this province are falling through.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've been the critic for this area for four or five years, and I've known about the gaps in our reporting for that whole time. It was only today, though – this is where I come back to urgency – that I became aware of how significantly that gap results in profound underreporting of the danger that our most vulnerable children in this province are being subjected to. I had no idea that for every one that was reported, there were two more that weren't. I had no idea that the cracks in the system, the gaps in the reporting, had that many kids falling through. I honestly didn't realize that. But we do now, and we know it today. That is why this is a matter of urgency.

Mr. Speaker, ensuring that Alberta's children are safe is a three-part process. The first part of that process is in relation to knowing when children have died. It's a three-part process. The first is to know that a fatality occurred. The second is to investigate how that fatality occurred and to identify how to ensure that it does not occur again. The third thing is to follow up to see if those recommendations are actually being put in place. That's the three-part process.

What we've learned today is that as a result of the reporting processes used by this government, the people of Alberta and the members of this Assembly and many, many other advocates in the community are prohibited from even accessing that first step of that very, very important three-part process, which will keep our children safe. That is why this matter is so important, Mr. Speaker. We need to know how many children have been put at risk fatally so that we can begin the process of ensuring it doesn't happen again. If we don't know that, we can't do our job properly.

Now, the minister in question period also talked about the fact that there are other ways and other processes out there for how investigations can occur, but, Mr. Speaker, what I can glean from the situation is that while there may be reporting to the medical examiner's office and there may be reporting to the quality assurance council and there may be reporting to the children's advocate, the number of actual investigations around how these fatalities occurred is going down. It is actually decreasing.

The only ones we can know about, of course, are the ones that the children's advocate conducts. And that's great. The children's advocate has released two investigations. They've both been thorough, and they've included some good recommendations. But two investigations when 10 children last year died in care and another countless number died while receiving protective services even though not in care – two reports out of that many simply are not enough. When you consider the relationship that neglect may play and the role that neglect may play in otherwise seemingly innocuous fatalities, then we know we need to engage in a much more robust form of evaluation and analysis.

We know we need to do that if we really care about these issues and we really want to ensure that we reduce the number of fatalities, we reduce the number of injuries, we reduce the number of illnesses, we reduce the number of cases of pneumonia, we reduce the number of overdoses, we reduce the number of hypothermic deaths, all of those other things. If we want to reduce them, we have to know about them first, Mr. Speaker, and right now we don't. It is urgent because until we start hearing about those immediately, we can't start fixing the problem.

What we think we've heard is that the government itself is not even tracking this information. This is not necessarily a thing about intentional cover-ups on all these different levels. This is about the fact that in many, many cases when, for instance, a child receiving protective services has died from pneumonia, we're not looking into whether that child was ultimately the victim of neglect, and we are not looking into whether that child could have been saved by a different approach to supporting his or her family or that child. By not doing that, that child's brother or sister could be at risk today. Today, Mr. Speaker. That is why this is urgent.

That is why the people of Alberta expect this Assembly to take this issue this seriously, because this is fundamental to what we do in this Assembly. We care for those who are least able to care for themselves; you know, fire, police, taking care of those who cannot care for themselves. It is fundamental to what we do in this Assembly. So if we don't take this matter seriously and we don't treat the gaps which have been revealed basically this morning to most of us, if we don't take those matters seriously, then, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we are not taking the role of this Assembly seriously either.

It is important that we have an opportunity to discuss the gaps that exist throughout the system, to ensure that we can start taking care of the other children who are currently at risk right now, whom otherwise no one knows anything about because we don't have a systematic process in place to ensure that we are tracking their safety and their security going forward.

So that's why I rise in favour of this motion, and I hope that you will rule in favour of it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think there is any individual in this House who would not say that the issue of children in care and, in particular, the death of a child in care or of a child who is part of a family who is receiving services is not tragic. In fact, I would hope that each and every one of us as individuals here would think that the death of any child is tragic. The question of whether this should be an urgent debate is not a question about whether or not the issue is one of tragedy. These are tragic issues. When children are in care, it means that there has been neglect or abuse. It means that there has not been appropriate family care of that child. That in itself is tragic.

The question for today is whether we should adjourn the ordinary course of business of the House to debate this on an urgent and pressing necessity. I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, on the number of things that have been said about what will happen to children if we don't have the debate: none of those are actually accurate. What is very clear over the course of the last few years is how very seriously our Premier, this government, and this minister take the issue of children and, particularly, the issue of children in care.

The most salient reference from the standing orders and the precedent of the House that was referenced was that it is appropriate sometimes to have an urgent debate on matters in the past if they are allowed to continue unchecked. Well, let me say, Mr. Speaker, a number of things.

First of all, what has spurred this debate is an article in a newspaper. Now, I have the deepest respect for the work that the particular reporters are doing, and I think it happens to be very important work. The headline was very unfortunate. What is clear, though, even on the face of the article is that when they talked about 145 children dying in care over the last 14 years and that only a certain portion of them had been reported, the reason that the others were not reported was because they were considered to be natural deaths or deaths by accidents, which were not intentional. It was not self-harm, not done by a third party. In other words, somebody of authority who had the obligation to look at them looked at them and said: we understand how this death happened, and we need not take it any further. Tragedy has many elements, Mr. Speaker, and drawing those tragedies back doesn't make them any easier.

One of the challenges that I have as minister – actually, this relates to another piece about the release of information. A number of the speakers have spoken about how the reporters had to go to court for four years to get information out. Well, yes, they did, Mr. Speaker, because we do not necessarily release easily the private information of individuals who are in the child care system. First and foremost, the impact of the child welfare system is to make families stronger. We do not go out telling people: oh, your neighbour's child has been apprehended. When a child dies, there may be other people involved, not just the parents. Often the parents do want information released, but there may be other family members, including other siblings. So you can't just go out and release the information, saying that the public wants to know about this death. You have to look at all of those surrounding pieces.

However, going forward, Mr. Speaker, we have made some changes to the system that I think are very, very fundamental. They started when the Member for Calgary-Cross was the minister. There were two reports, actually, that were done, a report in 2010 – that one was the child intervention system review – then in 2011 the Calgary expert panel. Out of those reports a number of very significant changes have happened. One of those very significant changes was the establishment of an AVIRT team. That's the Alberta Vulnerable Infant Response Team. That is responding to the fact that a number of the deaths in care are of infants. The hon. leader of the Liberal Party was indicating that the first responders and emergency rooms play a role, and yes, they do. When that role happens, the AVIRT teams in Edmonton and Calgary actually come into play very immediately. Change has been made there.

Change has been made by establishing an officer of this Legislature, the Child and Youth Advocate. In the act that established the Child and Youth Advocate's office, which was passed in December of 2011 – and the Child and Youth Advocate came into play on April 1, 2012 – section 12 requires a duty to report when a child is seriously injured or dies while receiving a designated service. So with not just a child that's been apprehended but a child that receives a designated service, the public body responsible for the provision of the service shall report the incident to the advocate as soon as practicable.

Under section 13(1) of the act there's a right to information.

- 13(1) The Advocate is entitled to any information, including personal information and health information, that
- (a) is in the custody or under the control of a public body . . . and
  - (b) is necessary to enable the Advocate to exercise the Advocate's [duty].

And it goes on.

Section 14 of that act provides the Child and Youth Advocate, who is an officer of this Legislature, the powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act. So there are very strong authorities purposefully set up to allow the Child and Youth Advocate independence, both real and seeming to be independent status, with authority and with the ability to compel information in a number of different ways.

The matters that were raised in the newspaper report that have given rise to these concerns today from the members of the opposition with respect to the failure to report and not knowing and nothing being done: in fact, the reality is that the incidents of death that they're referring to actually were not reported – and it was actually well known that they were not being reported – because we did not report deaths by natural causes. Mr. Speaker, that has changed, too. Because of the issues that were raised way back then, as of April 2012 the death of any child in care is now being reported.

Now, the question about whether, if we don't have a debate, nothing will be done and children will reach a tragic end: let me be clear, Mr. Speaker, that first and foremost, any serious injury or death of any child under any protective program of this government must be reported to the Child and Youth Advocate.

Under the council on quality assurance, which was also, actually, legislatively established under that same bill, deaths are reported to the quality assurance council. Now, why both? Well, we can get into that at a later date, Mr. Speaker, but the point is that there are two independent – the council on quality assurance is made up of experts in their fields in this area to review and determine whether or not a further investigation needs to happen and what needs to be done from a systemic basis in the system. The Child and Youth Advocate has the powers of a commissioner and all of the authority he needs and all access to all of the expertise that he needs to determine whether a further investigation needs to happen.

The medical examiner also gets the information about the death of a child in care. Every death of a child in care is reported to the medical examiner, and he has an obligation to look at it from a medical basis and to then recommend to the Fatality Review Board whether or not there needs to be a further investigation. The fact that some of these deaths of children in care have not been further reviewed is not an indictment of the system. It, in fact, means that they have been looked at, and it's been determined by the experts in each of those areas that no further review is necessary.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona says that the number of investigations is going down. That, Member, is a good thing. It means that with all of these expert reviews fewer of the deaths in care are seen to be arising in such a nature of circumstance that needs further review. They're satisfied, upon the review that they've done, that they know how and why a child died.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, children do die in care, and that's tragic. Children die outside of care, and that's tragic. They die of natural causes, and that's horrible. We should be looking for ways, and we are looking always – I don't say "we" as a government. I mean everybody is looking for ways to reduce the issues of medical incidents that cause death. Sudden infant death syndrome is one of those things that still, I believe, people don't really understand very well.

There are lots of causes, and I don't disagree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who made some very eloquent statements about what needs to be looked at and what needs to be part of those. I actually think that she's added some very eloquent voice to the child protection discussion over the years that I've been around, and I think that there are an awful lot of things that she says that are really quite relevant to the discussion in terms of what we need to look at and what we need to go forward. One of the things is that you can't just take an incident and say: well, that was pneumonia, so we know that that doesn't need to be looked at. She's right, but we have the experts in the field who look at these things to determine: is something happening here that needs further investigation? They do that investigation.

The issue here before us today is not whether these are tragic circumstances – they are tragic circumstances – and it's not a question of whether every single person, not just in this Legislature but in this province, should take the care and the time to know and understand what is happening with some of the children in our society and how we could do a better job to reduce the abuse and the neglect of children in our society. Every one of us should be taking that on as a special project, absolutely. Family violence, drugs and alcohol, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, just families struggling to make ends meet: all of those are issues that we need to take care of in our society. Have we been talking about those? Yes, Mr. Speaker. This isn't the first time that this has been an issue that somebody could talk about.

We had the discussion last year over the social policy framework, identifying specifically this, and in that discussion people identified the care and protection of children as the number one priority of Albertans. Our Premier has made it the number one priority of our government in terms of the early childhood development, in terms of child protection, in establishing a ministry responsible for family and community safety. That's all about child abuse.

Should we all be engaged in this? Yes. Have we been engaged in this as a society and community? Well, 31,000 Albertans have participated in the social policy framework discussion. This year they're participating specifically in discussions around early childhood development, around a children's charter, around poverty reduction. So those are opportunities for not just people in this Legislature but all Albertans to be engaged in precisely the things that underlie the question of what needs to be done to strengthen a family. How do we assist families so that their children can have the opportunity for success? That has been one of the most significant discussions that we've actually been having right through. We brought in a Children First Act, which did, among a number of things, put forward a provision that said that we need to review every policy of government which relates to children to make sure that we're doing the right thing in the right way.

To suggest that we've never had a chance to discuss this is absurd. We have had those chances. Mr. Speaker, I believe that as long as I'm in this portfolio, those discussions will keep coming to the floor of this Legislature. We will have the children's charter coming back in the spring. We will have the poverty reduction strategy coming back. We will be talking about initiatives with respect to early childhood development. We are doing so many of the things that have been recommended in many of the reports they're talking about.

Now, there's an element that we need to discuss about not tracking. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say this. The quality assurance council has made a recommendation that there should be a formal method of tracking. But I would not want to besmirch the very good people – and I'm really pleased that most of the speakers today have talked about the people who work in the department and the front end of the system to care for kids. We have excellent people. We have so many wonderful things that happen on a day-to-day basis, arising out of tragedy, no doubt, but wonderful things that are happening when people are there to help families and to help children. Yes, we also have some tragedies. We need to learn from those tragedies. We need to care about what happens to those children. We need to know and understand that the children who come into care are among the most vulnerable. They come into care for a reason. They are the highest risk. They are the most vulnerable. Therefore, we need to take extra precautions and take extra care.

But none of that speaks to the question of urgency of debate today in the House. All of it speaks to the importance of the issue and the importance that all of us as members of this House and all of us as members of society and the community put the highest priority possible on the care of our children, on ensuring that our children get the best possible start, and on ensuring that when children are in unsafe conditions, we do something about it, we do something early, and, Mr. Speaker, that when things do go wrong – and they do – we learn from it. If we don't, that only compounds the tragedy.

We have in place a history of things that came through that report. Essentially, the nub of the report that was in the Journal today was about unreported deaths. Well, I think I can assure you that if you read the report that was in the Journal, you could see that the discrepancy in numbers between reported and unreported was the number of kids who died of natural causes. That's very clear.

Also, the rules about urgency deal with the question of looking at the past if there's been no change. Well, there's been a substantive change. There has been the Child and Youth Advocate, the quality review council, the AVIRT team, the reporting of all the numbers, the Children First Act, and it goes on. So there's not a good reason to abrogate the day's business today to debate the Edmonton Journal story, Mr. Speaker. There is a very good reason for all of us to take this issue seriously and look into the facts and apprise ourselves of what is actually happening and take every opportunity in the normal course of our business to make it our business on each and every day to put children first, make sure that children in this province are safe.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, Standing Order 30(2), in particular, provides that members “may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he . . . considers relevant to the question of urgency.” It is then the role of the chair to “rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.”

I want to begin with, again, just a little reminder of what urgency is, and I fully realize that I allowed a lot of leeway today with respect to that issue. But I will just remind you for future purposes, please. In my copy of Beauchesne, which is the sixth edition, page 113, citation 390 defines urgency this way as it pertains to whether or not the House should adjourn its normal business to deal with a matter of urgent and public importance.

“Urgency” within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means “urgency of debate”, when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

That is the definition of urgency insofar as proceedings in this House are concerned regarding a matter such as the one at hand and the SO 30 under which it was raised.

That having been said, hon. members, I want to note that the Member for Calgary-Shaw did make the application at the proper time, and he did provide at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office. In fact, his letter and a copy of the motion, in whatever order they were, arrived this morning at 9:50 in my office. His motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to immediately identify the actual number of deaths of children in care that have occurred since 1999, the implementation status of recommendations that have been made to prevent deaths in that time, the reasons for the secrecy surrounding this issue, and the steps that can be taken immediately to improve the protection of children currently in the care of the government.

Now, the relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject can be found at pages 689 and 696 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and also in Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387 and 390.

Now, I'm going to make a ruling in a moment. But while the chair will certainly address the urgency question and whether or not Standing Order 30 has been properly implemented here if a decision goes this way or that way, I want to just raise one other point for your future edification, so to speak, and that is: if you're bringing forward an issue under a Standing Order 30, please try your best to contain it and restrict it to one issue. I'm not chastising the member who raised this particular SO 30, so please don't misunderstand me. But there are at least three or four or five different issues contained in this one motion as phrased. Perhaps they would be better stated in written questions or a motion for a return or during question period or during some other form of debate. But in and of itself when you look at SO 30, you would see that there is a section in here that deals with the fact that an SO 30 should apply to one issue, hon. members. You can look it up for yourselves under SO 30. So please be reminded.

Secondly, also with respect to SO 30s it's not all that typical, in my recollection, that the language and the wording that sometimes gets used in SO 30s should be provocative in nature. That's another thing to please sort of keep in mind.

That having been said, hon. members, I did listen very attentively to all four speakers, one of whom represented each of their respective caucuses, as they spoke this afternoon to this matter. Obviously, it is an extremely serious matter when we're talking about children in care, and it's even more serious when we're talking about children who have perished, who have died. The gravity of the situation is certainly not lost on any of the speakers or on any of us in this House, including your Speaker, because the death of any child is without question a tragedy, and certainly the death of any child in care is no less tragic. Hon. members, I note the gravity of the matter.

I'm also noting that during question period today, believe it or not, 42 questions and answers were directed to this issue, 42 questions and answers, including nine questions in a row from the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition with nine answers, six more questions and answers during the exchange with the leader of the Liberal caucus, six more questions and answers directed from the NDP caucus by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and six more questions and answers developed by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, the author of this particular motion. I listened very carefully to the Premier answer questions, to the Minister of Human Services answer questions, to the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities answer all of these questions, and a lot of information was given out in the process because every death of every child in care is important.

I noted that these deaths are reported. I also noted that in some cases there might be privacy concerns, there might be infringements that the government doesn't want to violate. But I also noted the passion with which both the questions and the answers were delivered, a passion that underlines the gravity of the circumstance. We heard about deaths by natural causes. We heard allegations about reports being purposely held up or held back. We even heard the term "cover-up," which on this occasion I let go. I may not let it go on another occasion. But I understand how emotional this matter can be.

I also listened very carefully when the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition did her member's statement and through her delivery throughout probably the better part of 10 or 12 questions which require some form of answer from the government. Hopefully, they could be sought through a written question or a motion for a return.

I also then listened to the speeches that were just given. I heard seven or eight minutes from Calgary-Shaw, outlining his points and his allegations about some stubborn secrecy, about 89 deaths, about questions as to why these deaths occurred and what's being done to prevent them, and on he went.

I then listened to seven or eight minutes from the leader of the Liberal opposition, who talked about similar issues about public safety, the protection of our most vulnerable, references in the media, how many children in care died, when and where, and the questions went on.

I then listened carefully, again, to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who recapped some rules that would govern here pertaining to Beauchesne's and House of Commons Procedure and Practice and motions to adjourn the normal business, and I listened to her points about criteria and the need to change some criteria and questions about what's causing the deaths and any gaps that exist in the system.

I also listened to the Government House Leader when he commented that nothing adverse would ever happen to a child in care if an urgent debate does not occur today.

On that point I want to bring you back to SO 30, which states at 30(6) that "an emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." In other words, an emergency debate, if it were to proceed here, does not culminate in a decision or a specific action that is required by anyone arising out of that particular decision. I think you know that because a number of you have been here before when issues like this have arisen.

I also heard the Government House Leader talk about what might happen if circumstances were allowed to continue unchecked and what it is that he, in his opinion, has seen the government do to try to prevent any of these tragic deaths. We talked about and heard about elements of tragedy, the protection of privacy, the purpose of the act, the role of the advocate. You should know that the Child and Youth Advocate is indeed new to the position and has presented at least one investigative report already, if memory serves me, and I think I tabled that not long ago.

Finally, we heard about extra precautions and other steps that have already been taken, and the hon. Government House Leader went on for about 15 or 16 minutes. So suffice it to say that we've heard quite a lot about what the grievances are and what the support would be for the motion to go forward, and we've also heard some counterarguments regarding why it should not.

Now, one last thing I want to mention here is that there are a number of vehicles that can be used in this House to raise issues such as the one raised today. Question period is one, and you saw illustration of that today. Forty-two questions and answers were given. The subject is a serious one, and that's not lost on any of us, as I said earlier. You have Motions for Returns. You have other opportunities such as that which the Leader of the Opposition took today, and that was to use a private member's statement to make your points. You also have another opportunity likely coming up very shortly under Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act, which is coming up for third reading. So you have opportunities there to continue on with the debate, and I could go on. I could go on at some length.

Suffice it to say that at the end of the day I don't find that there is a reason for us to stop all of the debate on other important matters in this House, and that is not to say that the issue at hand is not important because it most certainly is. It most certainly is. I wouldn't be surprised if this issue comes up again and again and again over the next several days. However, in the Speaker's ruling, which will now stand, I do not find it necessary to compel the House into the decision to stop all other business from proceeding in spite of the fact that this is an extremely serious matter. We see a lot of action that is occurring, and I think we should all take some comfort in that.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written question, which had been accepted]

Alberta Film Classification Revenue

Q44. Mr. Pedersen:

What is the amount of revenue collected by Alberta Film Classification for the fiscal years April 1, 2010, to March 31, 2011; April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2012; and April 1, 2012, to March 31, 2013?

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 206

Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and move third reading of Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012.

I would like to thank all the hon. members who rose to speak during second reading and Committee of the Whole on what is an extremely important bill for Alberta's youth. My hon. colleagues have expressed some passionate views during these debates, and indeed I am moved by their unwavering commitment to improving Alberta's tobacco legislation. Our children's voice, Mr. Speaker, has been heard in this House.

Bill 206 is about the protection of youth from tobacco products that are marketed and crafted to attract youth to beginning a habit that we know has fatal consequences. We want our kids to have the greatest protection so they can enjoy prosperous, healthy lives. As studies have shown, leading healthy and fit lives can significantly reduce an individual's chances of developing disease. The goal behind Bill 206 is to help Alberta achieve the lowest underage smoking figures in the country by eliminating the attractiveness of smoking; namely, flavoured tobacco products, including flavoured cigarettes and flavoured cigarillos.

Many of our constituents have shared their stories either first-hand or through the story of a loved one. They've shared the damaging effects that have occurred from smoking; these include devastating diseases like lung, mouth, or pancreatic cancer. It is with sadness and much regret that we watch our loved ones when they suffer in pain only to lose them to a habit that they fell victim to, most of them, as young people. Members of this House know the devastating toll that this disease has had on the lives of smokers and their loved ones.

We all know that smoking is extremely addictive, and that is why we are here today discussing this bill. Bill 206 closes the gateway by which our young people have been able to enter after being enticed by the delicious and attractive tactics of flavoured tobacco. Groups such as the Canadian Cancer Society estimate that 30 per cent of all cancer deaths are related to smoking and over 85 per cent of lung cancer cases.

However, all is not lost. When we know better, we can do better. Yes, we know that menthol reduces irritation caused by tobacco smoke, making it easier for new users to smoke. Menthol also enhances nicotine absorption, increasing the risk of addiction. Yes, we know that the popularity of water pipe tobacco is rising with our youth. Of those users 74 per cent are using flavoured products. The addition of flavouring creates the false belief that water pipe use is less dangerous. In one session, however, a user can inhale the equivalent of one hundred cigarettes. Yes, we know that up to 69 per cent of Alberta youth using cigarillos and cigars are using flavoured varieties, more than any other province in Canada. And, yes, we know that 72 per cent of youth use chewing tobacco, and they are choosing flavoured varieties.

So I challenge us all to achieve something greater today. Why not try to eradicate the problem before it begins? This is what urged me to sponsor Bill 206, that something so preventable like smoking-related cancers could be targeted and eradicated by offering our children first-class protection. It has been a breath of fresh air to learn that youth are actually ahead of us on this. They want this legislation. They want protection from tobacco companies, and I am so proud to live in a province with youth, medical students, and many other young advocates of a future where youth tobacco use will not be encouraged by flavoured products.

It goes without saying that health-related costs associated with treatment of tobacco-related illness could benefit other programs in other areas. Alberta Health Services estimates that $4.4 billion is spent each year on health care for smoking-related illnesses in Canada. The societal and individual costs of the smoker far outweigh the money that is generated from tobacco sales.

Mr. Speaker, over 47,000 Canadians die annually from smoking. Of this total an estimated 3,400 have been our Albertans: our fathers, our mothers, brothers, sisters, our children. These deaths were all preventable, and they serve as a tragic and constant reminder of the negative effects of smoking.

If that isn't enough to sway everyone, AHS also highlights the power that nicotine addiction has on smokers as well as the difficulties those individuals have when trying to quit smoking. Surprisingly, 40 per cent of cancer patients who have had their voice box removed continue to smoke, knowing full well the toll that smoking takes on their bodies. Seventy-five per cent of smokers who quit will, unfortunately, begin six months later. This figure is shockingly high, and this government is addressing this with Bill 206 and Bill 33.

This government is doing the right thing in proposing Bill 206. If we can reduce or eradicate youth smoking, we can correct generations of smoking- and second-hand-smoke-related consequences. In terms of second-hand smoke Alberta Health Services notes that individuals are exposed to 4,000 chemicals, with approximately 50 of those being known to cause cancer. What is even more distressing is the fact that children who are exposed to second-hand smoke are likely to have middle-ear disease, coughing, asthma, bronchitis, and even pneumonia. An estimated 3,470 nonsmokers die each year from heart disease related to second-hand smoke, and about 347 die each year from lung cancer caused by second-hand smoke. Mr. Speaker, Albertans know this, and they know it's unacceptable. They believe that Bill 206 will close the door on these statistics and finally make them a thing of the past.

Mr. Speaker, the idea has been floated comparing this bill to liquor regulations. Well, that's simply irresponsible messaging to our kids. After all, tobacco is the only legal product that kills half of its long-term users when used as directed by manufacturers. To even try to turn the intent of this bill into a rights issue by comparing it to banning flavoured alcohol – and I've even heard, “What’s next? Banning flavoured condoms?” from supporters of another party – is weak at best.

It may be a simple life choice for adult nonsmokers who never fell prey to tobacco use to just quit, but as we know, the nicotine in tobacco products is highly addictive, making it extremely difficult for smokers to quit. We also have heard the various statistics regarding youth underage smoking. The younger a person begins smoking, the harder it is to quit. By reducing the temptation posed by flavoured tobacco products, we will reduce these figures. We can also help alleviate the socioeconomic costs associated with smoking-related illness and death, thereby reducing the country’s astonishingly high use of health resources and costs associated with smoking.

Mr. Speaker, we are the stewards of this amazing province, and if there is anything we as legislators can do to help all Albertans lead healthier, smoke-free lives, we must do so for the sake of our children and future generations. I believe Bill 206 will allow us to better prevent smoking addiction and, most importantly, protect our kids from the creative marketing techniques of the tobacco industry, and that is why I urge all hon. members to follow this debate and support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Banff-Cochrane. We have to interject here with others, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012. As many in the House are aware, I’ve spoken with concern about Bill 206. Bill 206 is not aimed at reducing youth access to tobacco. To say that the primary purpose of Bill 206 is the reduction of youth access to flavoured tobacco is simply not true. Bill 206 is a ban.

I do not consume tobacco. My spouse does not consume it either. We all know people close to us who have been tragically lost due to tobacco use and the effects of it. I personally think that the use of tobacco products is a poor decision because of the inherent health risks associated with its use. However, as an MLA it is not my job to allow my personal views on this issue to cloud my judgment and impair my ability to rationally think and reasonably examine proposed laws. Bill 206 clearly needs more work before it can be rationalized as a law that actually targets youth access to tobacco. I’m in favour of any law that actually is specifically targeted at youth access to tobacco such as Bill 33, but there are still gaping holes in Bill 206 that, if left unfilled, will have broad implications for responsible adult consumers of tobacco products.

Sometimes in politics we hear about the law of unintended consequences. I considered discussing Bill 206 in this light because of how I see the future unfolding for responsible adult consumers of tobacco products due to this legislation. But the law of unintended consequences does not apply, Mr. Speaker. It doesn’t apply because it is clear and self-evident that Bill 206 will eliminate the vast majority of flavoured tobacco products in Alberta for the responsible adult consumer. I’m not in favour of people using tobacco products, but I am in favour of personal responsibility. I’m in favour of the government staying the heck out of the way when someone’s personal decision has no demonstrable harm for others.

Currently in Alberta there is no minimum age for purchasing tobacco. Three provinces have passed flavoured-tobacco restriction laws, but none have been proclaimed; none are in force. The government thinks that it is bad for people to use tobacco products, and I agree with them on that, Mr. Speaker. Where we differ is that I also value personal responsibility and personal choice.

This government consistently provides an irrational and statist approach to every policy issue that it faces. They choose to chip away at the principles of liberty that every Canadian inherently possesses. They sneak this erosion under our noses because the vehicle they choose to use, this legislation, is purportedly aimed at protecting children. They state the claim that anyone opposed to their legislation is opposed to protecting children. I’m absolutely in favour of protecting children, but nothing in this legislation actually shows that it will reduce youth access to certain tobacco products. It is an outright ban, Mr. Speaker. I simply am opposed to using the guise of protecting children in order to erode Albertans’ fundamental rights to personal liberty.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the 29(2)(a) I’ve been asked about does not apply to private members’ business, only to government stuff.

Let’s go on to Banff-Cochrane, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m honoured to rise today to speak to Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act. It’s unfortunate that we have to come back to the House to debate something that has been debated many times before. In fact, the intention of previous legislation was to prevent the sale of flavoured tobacco products, but the industry found loopholes, so here we are again.

As we heard in committee debate, other provinces have had similar experiences with tobacco legislation. In 2008 Ontario passed legislation similar to ours here in Alberta, entitled An Act to amend the Smoke-Free Ontario Act with respect to cigarillos. Bill 124 passed an amendment restricting the sale of flavoured tobacco products.

It reads as follows:

No person shall sell or offer to sell a flavoured cigarillo, unless the flavoured cigarillo has been prescribed . . .

and

. . . no person shall sell or offer to sell a flavoured tobacco product that has been prescribed as prohibited.

This act was superseded by the federal Act to amend the Tobacco Act, or the Cracking Down on Tobacco Marketing Aimed at Youth Act. This act came into force in 2010, outlining three measures designed to reduce marketing towards children. These measures are:

No person shall sell cigarettes or cigarillos except in a package that contains at least twenty cigarettes or cigarillos . . .

No manufacturer or retailer shall sell [cigarettes or cigarillos that include] a flavouring agent other than sugar, tobacco, or tobacco extracts or reconstituted tobacco . . .

and

No manufacturer or retailer shall sell a cigar without a health warning label, regardless of the number of cigars being sold.

Unfortunately, these legislative measures have been circumvented by product innovation on the part of cigarillo manufacturers. What they did, in fact, was modify their flavoured cigarillo products such that they became classified as cigars and thus are not bound by such legislation. The amendment proposed here in Bill 206 to the Tobacco Reduction Act attempts to close this loophole that tobacco manufacturers have been exploiting.

Private members in other provinces as well have attempted to address these loopholes by revising legislation, but none of them have been successful. Bill 66, the Smoke-Free Ontario Amendment Act, was introduced in Ontario in 2012. Bill 66 banned flavoured tobacco, new tobacco products, and smokeless tobacco, but it only received first reading. The Tobacco Sales Amendment Act in British Columbia only received first reading as well, stating:

It is forbidden to sell, or to offer for sale, a tobacco product intended to be consumed in a manner other than smoking if that product contains flavouring intended to enhance the taste of the product.

As you can see, there have been varying attempts to restrict the sale of flavoured tobacco products across the country, but none of them have been able to take hold. I have hope that Alberta can do better and that we can do better.

Interestingly, Nova Scotia does not have any legislation concerning flavoured tobacco products, but they do have measures which reduce the accessibility of tobacco products to youth. Section 7 of Nova Scotia's Tobacco Access Act, made law in 1993 and amended in 1999 and 2006, states that cigarettes are not to be sold in packages of less than 20 and that there is to be no sale of unpackaged cigarettes. Increasing pack sizes and prohibiting the sale of individual units limits availability to youth, who are often unable to afford larger packs. Flavoured tobacco products are often viewed as luxury items and, as such, are marketed individually or in small, more affordable packages. Ontario has also placed restrictions on pack sizes, but these restrictions were only applicable to cigarillos and not other tobacco-related products.

Mr. Speaker, 90 per cent of adult smokers became addicted as youths, and the younger a child begins to smoke, the more likely the child is to become a regular smoker as an adult. Moreover, the age at which children first try cigarettes has been declining and now stands at just under 12 years old. By masking the regular tobacco flavour and scent, flavoured cigarettes make it even more appealing for a 12- or 13-year-old to take that initial puff and keep smoking until he or she becomes addicted.

This has far-reaching consequences, Mr. Speaker. We all know the devastating effects tobacco use has. This is particularly true with respect to the future health of our province's youth. Flavoured tobacco products are especially attractive to youth, and prohibiting their sales would remove the chance for these products to fall into their hands.

More proactive measures should be taken in order to safeguard our youth from these products to ensure we are doing what we can to nurture the health of our families and our communities. That's why it's important to protect our children from both exposure to unwanted tobacco use and the opportunity to become addicted at a young age.

Mr. Speaker, I do not take the health of children or of Albertans for granted. I'm grateful that we are able to discuss Bill 206 today, which asks us to be even more mindful of what we can do to improve the already exceptional quality of life here in Alberta. We owe it to all of our children to help make sure that they can lead healthy lives, unaffected by the negative, harmful, and long-lasting effects of smoking-related diseases.

As I am sure we can all remember from our own adolescent years, oftentimes we are unaware of the consequences of the choices we make. Back then, getting old seemed like something that could never happen to us, but as time goes on, we realize that our lives are lived on borrowed time and that our own health and the health of those we love is the most important possession that we can have.

Mr. Speaker, flavoured tobacco products are used by almost 170,000 Canadian high school students. As we have seen, other jurisdictions have attempted to deal with the issue of flavoured tobacco. Some progress has been made, and all of their intentions are good and in the right place, yet they have all fallen short of their desired task.

In Alberta we know that there's a responsibility we must assume to promote and protect the health of our young people by restricting their access to tobacco products in whatever form they take. This includes and must include, Mr. Speaker, flavoured tobacco products. That's why I applaud the awareness Bill 206 brings to this issue as well as its proactive stance, and I urge all of my colleagues to participate in the debate of this noble initiative.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, and I don't know if I see Calgary-Mountain View wanting on after that. Thank you.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand and speak at third reading of Bill 206. I have to say, hon. members, I was torn on this bill from the get-go.

A bit of a personal story about, you know, myself, my teen years. I was first introduced to cherry-flavoured chewing tobacco at a party – I was probably 14 years old at the time – and it was something that I took up and continued to do. I chewed winter-green; I chewed cherry. Eventually I graduated to Copenhagen and other such products that were, you know, not the flavoured stuff. But eventually from that, I figured out that it was easier to get a nicotine buzz from lighting a cigarette than it was from putting chewing tobacco in my mouth, so I started smoking, and I was a smoker for 15 years.

You know, I fully recognize the damage that tobacco use can have on individuals, and as the father of a three-year-old son I sincerely hope that he makes a different set of choices than I did when I was a teenager and isn't in a situation where I was after my early 30s, being addicted to nicotine for many, many years.

Now, that being said, I'm also equally passionate about the protection of personal freedoms. At this point in time, you know, I struggle when we as legislators talk about prohibition of any sort of product, especially when we're picking and choosing which of those products we're going to allow the sale of and which we're not. It was a genuinely difficult decision for me to make and one that, quite honestly and quite frankly, I wasn't entirely prepared to make myself.

The beauty of being in this caucus, Mr. Speaker, is that we have free votes. We can vote any way that we want. As I was torn and thinking about how I was going to vote on this issue, I reflected on the maiden speech that I made the first time I stood in this House, when I said that I am not here to represent my own personal views and that I'm not here to represent the views of my caucus or my party; I'm here to represent the views of those who elected me to be here. So I conducted a telephone poll in my riding over the weekend where I asked my constituents how they would like me to vote on their behalf on this particular bill. I outlined the pros, the cons, where we stand, knowing full well that Ipsos-Reid had done a poll that said that 67 per cent, or roughly two-thirds, of the population were in support of this bill. I was quite surprised to find that in my constituency of Calgary-Shaw I had almost the exact opposite. I only had one-third of those who were polled actually in favour of supporting this legislation, 60 per cent were against, and roughly 7 per cent were undecided.

Now, for the sake of all polls, that is a 4 and a half per cent margin of error 19 times out of 20. We've all heard those, but that still puts me in a pretty comfortable spot to stand here and say that as much as I understand the value of protecting our youth from tobacco, my constituents have asked me not to support this bill, and I will be following their wishes, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and that's all I have on the list for the moment.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand to speak to this important and, I think, progressive bill by members opposite to eliminate flavourings from tobacco.

I want to set the record straight. I was confused earlier on one of the amendments that was suggested by the Wildrose caucus. I want to be very clear that I do not support the decision that they seem to be making that eliminating flavourings from tobacco would eliminate choice by adults, who have the responsibility and the ability to make their own choices about tobacco. I do not support that notion.

This is a glaring attempt by tobacco manufacturers and tobacco promoters to push tobacco on our population and to get them addicted in childhood. Notwithstanding this member's – presumably, it was authentic – survey, a randomized one, at least one would expect in a population of 42,000 to have at least a thousand people that one would have to call to get that kind of a statistical certainty. I don't know. He didn't mention how many he actually surveyed, but I would wonder about the validity of the survey and ask that he table the numbers.

Mr. Wilson: It'll be on my website.

Dr. Swann: Okay. I'll go to the online website, as the member suggested, and have a look at that.

The question would be: what question was asked? I guess a lot depends on what question was asked. Given that we're losing 4,300 people a year in this province – and that's not even counting the number who die from heart disease and progressive vascular disease; these are very strictly tobacco-related deaths – I think it behooves us to look at the evidence. Notwithstanding that people have as adults free choice, we're talking about a population – and we have among the highest rate of child and youth uptake of tobacco in this province compared to other provinces.

We have a responsibility to get tobacco as out of the hands of young people as possible. They are unable to make the kind of decisions in the context of a lifetime perspective, unable to weigh the risks and the benefits, unable to detach social acceptability and attractiveness from a lot of these decisions. We have a responsibility to get this addictive product, which is being enhanced by flavourings, including menthol – and I'll come back to that one – out of tobacco products. If people want to smoke, they don't need to be given an added incentive to smoke on the basis of seductive flavourings, which primarily are targeted at getting kids started under the age of 16. There's no question in my mind that it is an important advance for this province to eliminate flavourings.

What I hope we might also talk a little bit about is when we're going to restrict children from selling tobacco products across the counter to other children. At the present time you can be a child in a retail store and sell tobacco. That makes it doubly difficult for them to recognize peers and block peers from buying. It does raise some other interesting questions about how we could further restrict it.

But the key message I wanted to give on this is that in light of the many tobacco lobbyists that have met with this government – and I believe probably a lot of this lobbying was on behalf of menthol cigarettes and, again, on the basis of the same argument that the Wildrose is making, that we cannot legitimately eliminate menthol just because adults are addicted to it as well – they are the ones that want, very strongly, to see it continued. We know that over 30 per cent of young people are using mentholated tobacco products, that it's also a flavouring, and that it's also adding to the addictive properties and our addiction rates of tobacco use in youth.

I hope that I'm going to see a very clear indication from this government that they are going to, even though they haven't named it, name menthol and mentholated products as included in this definition of flavourings because I'm sure they've had a tremendous amount of pressure from the tobacco industry to keep menthol in as some kind of a nonflavouring or whatever arguments the industry might make to keep mentholated products in tobacco. I hope we will see a genuine naming and restriction and elimination of menthol from tobacco. That is a critical piece, I think.

Whatever comes out of this bill – and I think a lot of it is going to be to the benefit of our young people and of smokers in the future, tobacco users in the future – menthol will be a very substantial contributor to ongoing addictions. We must eliminate menthol as we are any other flavourings.

Given those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support Bill 206. In 1966 I had my first and last smoke in back of the King Edward Park Community League, if I remember correctly. I'm thankful that there was no flavouring in that smoke because I may have liked it. I didn't like it, and I never did it again. I stand in support of all of the youth who have contacted me through various means and asked me to support this bill.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I support Bill 206. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to rise and speak to Bill 206, Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, in third reading. As I echoed in second reading of this bill, I and my caucus support the spirit and intention of this bill, acknowledging that we as legislators and the government of Alberta have a responsibility and a role to play in protecting our young people.

I'll speak to a few different things. There is one concern that I have with the bill. As was outlined by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, you know, menthol is used by about a third of young smokers. Again, it may not be regulated in this bill, but it may not even come through in the regulations. That's a serious concern that I have with the bill as it's currently written.

However, that being said, I think most of us acknowledge that tobacco has devastating effects on individuals' families and the health care system and Albertans as a whole. I think that this negative cycle will continue to repeat as long as we allow companies to deliberately target vulnerable and impressionable youth.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, there are 24 tobacco lobbyists registered in the province of Alberta. The PCs have even admitted in this House that they've met with them on this bill. Now, the lobbyists registry shows many meetings between the industry bigwigs and the government on this type of legislation. However, their advice or information is obviously not instrumental for the PCs to be able to understand and make decisions in this area because the government did not see the need to consult with these lobbyists before suing a large number of tobacco companies last year. Now, in suing the tobacco industry elite, the PCs have acknowledged and inherently do acknowledge that the tobacco industry deliberately designs products to be addictive and targets the vulnerable and those developing these addictions.

Now, what the Alberta NDP believes is that this government won't enact stricter legislation or even bans on certain products. In particular, Mr. Speaker, the government also reproaches the tobacco companies for "targeting youth and adolescents with these misrepresentations and deceptions knowing their particular vulnerabilities." In that lawsuit they also acknowledge that the tobacco industry has breached its duties to warn Albertans about the addictiveness of tobacco products. Now, why does this government expect the tobacco companies to do this when the PCs themselves won't demonstrate leadership in this area?

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta conducted a survey of political leaders, and the Premier herself answered yes to each of their recommendations. Now, she's openly supportive of combating youth smoking but does not follow through with action and legislation. So my concern is that the Premier and this government can't be trusted to have the courage to put in place the appropriate mechanisms to effectively protect youth and make progress for the health of all Albertans.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the concerning statistic is that Alberta has the most affordable cigarettes in the country when it comes to 15- to 24-year-olds. Unquestionably, you know, restricting the sale of flavoured cigarette products to youth is a good decision and a step in the right direction. It is my contention that it does not adequately address most of the underlying issues and won't necessarily go far enough to protect the vulnerable and youth from tobacco companies' profit-driven strategies and the fact that they very consciously focus on and target youth especially. Again: get them while they're young; get them hooked and addicted so that they're going to be a loyal customer for the duration of their lives.

The biggest concern or wish that I have – and I know that in Committee of the Whole there were amendments put forward to specifically outline and ban menthol and include that in the bill. Now, unfortunately, that amendment did not pass, but there is a great concern, you know, with the number of young people who start smoking or experimenting with flavoured tobacco products that start with menthol, and the statistic is actually quite alarming, Mr. Speaker.

Interestingly, nine provinces have legislation to curb tobacco sales to minors. Alberta is the only remaining province that is without such legislation. Now, again, what's interesting is that our neighbours in B.C. have achieved a merchant compliance rate of 94 per cent through comprehensive provincial regulation of tobacco sale to minors.

Mr. Speaker, I think this bill as it's currently written is a step in the right direction, but I'd like to see the bill go further. You know, there is a duty that this government and all of us as legislators have to Albertans to protect our most vulnerable, our youth, and to protect them from developing a dependency on extremely harmful products like tobacco. Again, my concern is that the bill only restricts the sale of flavouring agents as listed by regulations, and nowhere is menthol on that list.

Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill. Again, I wish it would take it one step further, but I think this is a good start. I think all of us are concerned to ensure that we are protecting the young people of this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I sense the mood of the House is to perhaps try and get on with the vote on this bill; however, I don't want to prevent those who may wish to speak from speaking. Are there any others who wish to speak to third reading of this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:40 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a third time]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Speaker Not Recognizing a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item of business, I do need to make a sincere apology to the Member for Calgary-Currie regarding what occurred just prior to the voice vote on her bill about 12, 13 minutes ago. As members here would know, I sensed that the mood of the House was to proceed to a vote, and in that respect I did ask if there were any other members who wished to speak.

Now, I had extended that to all members. However, the Member for Calgary-Currie: I didn't quite catch her signal. She had wished to make a closing speech, which she is entitled to do, and she has up to five minutes to do that. While I can't invite the member to make that speech now, I would invite that member to table her comments so that they would be part of the record and so that the members that were interested in hearing that speech might at least be able to read it.

Once again, Calgary-Currie, I do extend my deepest apologies for the little miscue between us and hope that you will accept that from the chair and that we can then move on.

Thank you, hon. members.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 208
Seniors' Advocate Act

[Debate adjourned November 18: Mr. Eggen speaking]

The Speaker: I have next on the speakers list Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It's an honour and privilege to get up and speak to Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act. I notice that we only have about five minutes to start this, so I'm just going to make a few comments. Then we'll continue speaking next week when we deal with this.

I just want to talk about last week, some of the Associate Minister of Seniors' comments when he was in debate about the independent advocate for seniors and how it isn't needed. I have to say that I couldn't disagree more with him. I think that in Alberta and Canada it's important for us to protect the vulnerable freely and openly. We have an independent advocate for children. We spent quite a lot of time talking about that today when we were asking for the Standing Order 30 on emergency debate.

We listened to the minister as he eloquently talked about the importance of having the children and youth services advocate and the important work that he does in regard to being independent. I listened very closely to what the minister was saying and how he eloquently went on about the importance of an independent advocate and what this government has done since 2012 on children's issues. Considering that we're dealing with some horrific things that were in the paper today, it is just amazing to me, quite frankly, that a minister of the Crown can stand up and talk about the Ombudsman's report and what the Ombudsman does and talk about all the things in his report and the need for an Ombudsman but directly criticize one of his own colleagues in regard to the importance of having somebody independent.

What is also striking, that I didn't hear from the opposition, is the fact that Justice Vertes' report – the government spent millions of dollars on it, talked about the recommendations that he recommended, which were many, which the government stood up and accepted – recommends is an independent health advocate. The government announced, I guess, a week and a half ago, when the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and I were at a press conference – they talked about setting up these advocates for health, seniors, and mental health but didn't touch at all on the health advocate being independent, which goes back to what I was talking about earlier. You can have all of the fatality inquiries in the world, and I've read many of them. Since the Calgary Herald and the Edmonton Journal were disputing some of the numbers that the government had – and it's enlightening to me. I've just pulled off maybe six or eight in my office. Recommendation upon recommendation on the public fatality inquiries aren't followed through with by the government, but they're quite accepting of making them independent.

I think, having sobering second thoughts in regard to why – my colleague, who is our Seniors critic, has done an incredible amount of work in our Seniors critic position and has been all over the province talking to seniors and engages with them all the time, quite frankly. She and I got together last night, and she makes me tired, to be honest with you, with the role that she's taken on as the Seniors critic. She's got so many things going. You know, I think it's important to understand that when we talk about the government and they talk about open, accountable, and transparent and how they're continually consulting with Albertans – well, if they are continuing to consult with Albertans, like they like to say, it's beyond my comprehension that they don't get the fact that there is a need for an independent seniors' advocate.

I've stood up in this Legislature before, having spent 17 years with the government and just about three years – my third-year birthday will be in January – being with the Wildrose, and I talked about the press conference and the government's unwillingness to listen to what people are telling them. I can tell you that I was honoured to be the Seniors critic before my colleague joined us. Seniors across this province need . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm so sorry to interrupt, but at 5 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 8(1) we are required under Motions Other than Government Motions to call that. Since there is no motion for adjournment on the debate of private members' business, which we've just heard one hon. member speak to, I am compelled to now move forward in our agenda.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Funding for School Playground Equipment

516. Mr. Jeneroux moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the feasibility of providing funding for preliminary work on school playgrounds such as drainage and for basic playground equipment such as a swing or a slide as part of the capital funding for any new school facilities that include grade levels from kindergarten to grade 6.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 516. Let me tell the Assembly a quick story. I have a picture in my office of 18 kids standing in a field at Monsignor Fee Otterson Catholic school. These kids, many of whom I have met personally, are holding up a sign saying: help us play. These kids have been making the most of their field and grass and dirt for over two years now, but I feel it's about time this Assembly helps these kids really play.

I'm proposing this motion here today because I believe in the inherent value that facilities like playgrounds provide to our children and to the communities which foster them. This motion is intended to address capital funding potential, with specific reference to the preliminary work done on playground infrastructure such as drainage and any construction related to groundwork preparation that accompanies new elementary schools. We are committed to investing in our families and communities, and this motion provides this government with another avenue to further illustrate this.

Mr. Speaker, our communities face numerous challenges as they work to build needed playground spaces. Let me begin by highlighting a few examples of elementary schools that are currently trying to either build or complete their playgrounds. Bessie Nichols school is a state-of-the-art school with some of the best teachers and passionate parents that exist in our province. However, they too are in their second year of having kids make use of an empty field instead of experiencing the benefits that come with constructive playgrounds. Even more, we are tapping out the parents and volunteers, who are reaching into every pocket possible to scrape together half a million dollars to help their kids play.

These are concrete, real cases, Mr. Speaker, of schools that are struggling to provide even the most basic playground infrastructure to their communities, their families, and their children. These difficult situations are not the result of a lack of effort or from a lack of commitment. The partnerships formed by various community leagues, parent councils, and municipal governments work hard to acquire these facilities for their schools. The long hours they devote to these initiatives are mainly volunteer hours, important hours of self-sacrifice made by mothers and fathers, by single parents, and by youth leaders. These are hours that could be spent with their loved ones or spent earning more income, engaging in a personal passion or a family pastime.

Mr. Speaker, these are long volunteer hours that come after a hard day at work, after the kids have been put to bed, and otherwise in spare time and on weekends. Instead, these mothers and fathers choose to work on behalf of their neighbours. Instead, these parents assume responsibility for improving their communities. Instead, these youth leaders feel obliged to enhance the educational opportunities of our children and recreational experiences of our families.

Motion 516 provides opportunity for different levels of government and organizations to work collaboratively to respond to community needs. This motion seeks to nudge these playground initiatives forward by increasing the funding avenues available to them. Exploring the feasibility of funding preliminary work on new playgrounds would literally help these initiatives off the ground by aiding them in groundwork preparation, by helping them drain excess water, by helping them fill holes in the ground, and by helping them with the principal landscaping. It would allow these parent councils to focus on the main challenge behind building playgrounds; namely, procuring, installing, and maintaining the equipment itself.

It is no secret how expensive adequate and safe playground equipment is, and our communities are bound by duty to make these playgrounds as safe as possible. The costs of modern playgrounds can range from $250,000 to $350,000. Some playgrounds even run as high as $500,000. These are figures that refer to equipment purchase and installation only, not to the other costs associated with ongoing inspection, maintenance, and liability insurance. These are staggering numbers for any school, Mr. Speaker, and for the respective community leagues and parent councils. These are costs that must be met through fundraising efforts, and the burden of most of these efforts rests on the shoulders of community volunteers despite the generous grants and support programs available to them through different levels of government.

Aside from the need for the school playgrounds, many current playgrounds are at the end of their life cycle and depend on parent groups to raise the needed funds to replace them. If the money is not raised, Mr. Speaker, there is a real possibility that these school boards will have to remove them, and in turn students would have to make do with a recess or weekend that does not include swinging, sliding, or climbing.

Since school boards do not fund playgrounds, parent groups apply for grants, cold-call corporations, and engage their neighbours for cash or in-kind donations. It's a difficult task without a doubt, and each setback they encounter I know personally is difficult to bear. But these parents and volunteers persevere, and they do this because they unite under a shared goal. A playground is just too important to lose. A playground is too important not to be built. Motion 516 asks us to recognize this and to consider another way that we may assist these communities in building places for our children and families.

Mr. Speaker, these kinds of outdoor community spaces are vital for families and children. The preliminary work that is required to make these new playgrounds possible is not just about cost; it's about an opportunity to continue our important work of building communities and creating lasting legacies for our children's schools. This motion supports healthy and active lifestyles and wants to make a tangible difference in our children's quality of life.

I ask all hon. members to take an interest in this debate and consider fully the advantages of supporting the initiative proposed by Motion 516. Please, hon. members, help our kids play. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View instead.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take that comparison any day. The Member for Calgary-Shaw is a good member to be compared to.

I thank the member across for bringing this motion forward. It's all about health in here today it seems, for our kids, and I can't think of a better discussion. I would like to say right up front that, you know, I'll have no problem supporting the premise that it's brought forward on, but it's important that we reiterate that the member said: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the feasibility of providing funding for preliminary work on school playgrounds such as drainage and for basic playground equipment such as a swing or a slide as part of the capital funding for any new school facilities that include grade levels from kindergarten to grade 6.

Mr. Speaker, not one of us in here, I think, would question the fact that our children ought to have a playground at their school, particularly at the elementary age, grades 1 through 6 or K through 6. We should do everything we can. I think the questions today are: how do we make that possible, how do we fund that, who contributes, and how much is the government's responsibility?

The motion is to explore the feasibility of providing the funding for infrastructure and basic equipment. In this respect we are simply examining the issue at this point is my understanding. This is a good thing. I would support that. But I would like to make a few points, Mr. Speaker. Again, the member bringing the motion forward made a few of them that I would like to add to and maybe even raise in our own way here.

The Alberta School Boards Association and the Alberta School Councils' Association have both called for basic funding of playground equipment, so it's good to see this motion forwarded for discussion in the Legislature and for consideration by the government. Those two groups do a great job representing our kids and our parents, and clearly it's on their radar, so I think it's good that the 87 of us have a chance to discuss the issue as well. While this isn't a stamp of approval from my standpoint, I would like to mention for those not aware that British Columbia has recently taken steps to fund playgrounds for schools from the time those schools are built. It is to support the principle that a healthy education system includes outdoor and active play for children.

Technology, we know, is a great thing, and many of us would probably admit to the fact that our kids can run our devices, our technology, a lot better than we can. At the same time parents and educators would probably all agree that sometimes their kids are spending a little bit too much time with their technology and a little bit too much time inside with electronics. Parents, decision-makers, governments, researchers all over this globe are looking at ways to encourage kids to get outside, to run around and use their imaginations. The Canadian physical activity guidelines recommend that children get at least 60 minutes of exercise per day. I wonder if we would all take a guess as to what percentage of kids actually get that. I wonder what we would all guess in this Assembly. You know, Mr. Speaker, 7 per cent of children and youth are getting that. Seven per cent.

Now, making sure that our school facilities help and encourage this number to rise is vital, obviously, for the physical and mental health of our kids. For that reason I think examining how we deliver facilities like playgrounds to families is very important. On the other hand, the need for school buildings in this province is severe. Money is a big issue right now in the province of Alberta. All we need to do is go back to the debate in here, the very robust debate that we had Thursday afternoon and in the previous couple of weeks on Alberta's finances. We need to know that the addition of playgrounds at this time does not result in more communities without schools. I'm very interested in looking more at it, getting a real sense of what will be involved, what the total costs would be, what the efficiencies are, and how we can eliminate redundancies, what can be found on the subject.

We did talk last week in question period about the promise to build 50 schools and renovate 70 schools this term. The last thing we want to see, Mr. Speaker, is money taken from that commitment and put into other areas. I think most of our educators would agree that they would rather see the money we have going towards schools that desperately need modulars, et cetera, et cetera. That's taking nothing away from the importance of playgrounds, but I do feel it's imperative that we raise that point and make sure that that money we've committed to putting kids in schools remains there because we have a backlog in many of our constituencies around this province.

I know that the provincial government already contributes substantially to playgrounds across Alberta. I believe we need more information, frankly, about the total contribution of the province to playgrounds through all grants and all channels so we can get a sense of what money may be saved. We may be able to save money here if basic playgrounds were built along with the schools or if the infrastructure for playgrounds like drainage, as the hon. member said when he brought forward this motion, was installed at the time that the school was built. If there are multiple ways that the province is directly and indirectly funding the same playground, then we need to look at how we can streamline that.

Of note on the subject of the playgrounds, I don't think it's just me that finds the cost of a playground has gone up astronomically somehow in the last while. There may be a legitimate reason for it – there may be somebody more qualified to speak to it than I am, and I'd be interested to hear it – but it sure seems like, you know, a quarter of a million dollars or a half a million dollars for playgrounds is getting way up there in the cost. I think we should look at ways without compromising safety one iota on how to bring that cost down, not putting our kids at risk by putting in structures that aren't safe and aren't passing safety standards. But I would hope that we would all agree that it sure does seem pricey to put up a playground at a school.

Fairness and equality are things that I have heard raised from different boards as I travel around and talk about this issue. We know that our communities, our neighbourhoods are not all the same. Some are, you know, very wealthy and have access to fundraising opportunities that other neighbourhoods do not. We wouldn't want to see anybody left behind by any new system that we put in place or anything that we came up with from a government standpoint to provide assistance, and at the same time I don't think we would want to punish any community for having the wherewithal to provide and be able to give their kids that advantage.

Now, through our education system the Education minister and previous Education ministers I know have worked hard to smooth out some of these inequities when it comes to educational resources. I think we need to have a discussion about whether playground equipment should be included under this principle as well, and if it is, something tells me that we have the ability to figure out how best that we might be able to do this going forward.

Having said all of this, there are some good things about the community involvement and the community-led projects that we have, and, boy, do we have engaged parents in this province. Again, travelling around as the Education advocate, Mr. Speaker, you see numerous examples of how parents are contributing in communities and how they're making a difference. These projects get community members working together toward a shared goal. There's something special, which likely doesn't happen as much as it used to. We want to make sure that we're still making room to incorporate exciting new ideas that people want to try in their own communities. Albertans benefit, I think, from the ideas of their neighbours, and when they have input in their communities, we are all better off on that front. Whether it's a bake sale, a community fair, or what have you, parents getting involved is always a good thing. A community getting involved is always a good thing. The hard work that fundraisers do in these communities saves municipal and provincial government funds, which can be directed elsewhere.

As a classic example, I had a hot date this last weekend. It was not with my wife. I'm going to confess to you right now, Mr. Speaker, yours truly, that it was with my seven-year-old daughter, Ally Grace. Friday night – and after a very long week in here I hope that we all had that time with our kids – we went out to the Langdon Field House and watched the movie Epic on the big screen for date night. It was a great time. You know, the popcorn was popping, and we had a treat that night, and I know Allie loved the Crush pop that she was able to enjoy and all the kids. There were tens of them around there; I don't know how many in total. The point of the story is that the event was a fundraiser for a school playground. It was the community getting together and bringing kids and families together and raising a little money while they were at it. I was happy to support it and to leave a couple of tips wherever I could, financially, of course, so that they might meet their goal.

I think Motion 516 is written in a such a way that all of these concerns will be considered, and I look forward to some of these questions being answered.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 516. I'd like to speak in favour of this motion and want to thank the member for Edmonton-South West for bringing forward the motion.

You know, I would advocate that this motion doesn't go far enough. I think it's important that the preliminary work for school playgrounds is included. As an educator myself, Mr. Speaker, I find it quite unfathomable how the government builds these structures and then says: "Okay, community. You fund raise for the playground." Now, I will acknowledge that the government of Alberta, through some of its grants, does help out schools and communities with affording playgrounds. The fact of the matter is that for a playground to be built today, it often costs over and above $250,000, which is a very heavy and hefty sum for communities to raise.

I know the hon. member from the other side had mentioned how busy families are and how they're pulled in different directions, and for a community to afford and to raise the sum of $200,000 to $300,000 is quite significant. Again, it's worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that that's all done by volunteer labour.

What I wanted to speak of to urge the government members to support this motion is the value of play and the significant impact that recreation and play have on our children. I think, you know, that when we look at wanting to encourage Albertans to be active and remain active, play is a very fundamental part of that. If schools do not have the facilities or the equipment to encourage that, first of all, then what message are we sending to our children, that we believe in building schools for our kids, but we don't believe in the importance of being active and participating in recreation?

I've often wondered and have had many constituents ask me, Mr. Speaker: why aren't playgrounds and sports fields and those types of facilities part of the government's proposals or part of the package when they erect new schools? You know, that's a very, very valid question. I know that for myself and my colleagues in the Alberta NDP caucus we believe strongly that these facilities should be part of a school facility and those costs covered by the government.

Now, I'd love to address, you know, where these dollars are going to come from because I'm sure the minister of Treasury Board and Finance is wondering with all of the schools being built: where do those dollars come from? Mr. Speaker, really, it's a three-pronged answer to this. I think, first and foremost, something that the Alberta NDP has been calling for for decades is a look at and an adjustment of our royalty regime within the province.

You know, the fact of the matter is that the royalty rates in this province are lower than any other jurisdiction in North America, unnecessarily low to the point where the people who are getting shortchanged are really Albertans. I can appreciate the fact that we need to have a competitive environment with our royalties to encourage industry; however, the incentives that were brought into the province back when Mr. Lougheed was Premier, in the '70s, do not necessarily need to be in place today. Giving large corporations handouts and corporate welfare is simply unnecessary. I do believe that it is possible to raise our royalties to a rate that is still competitive, still ahead of other jurisdictions, yet there is a buffer in there. Again, Albertans are the ones who are missing out on this. This would address and bring millions of dollars into the government coffers, which could help to afford to pay for playgrounds for new schools.

The second thing that should be addressed – and I'd almost like to reverse the order – is, again, looking at cleaning up some of the mismanagement and wasted dollars that this government has. I think, you know, prime examples are the layers of bureaucracy and overpaid upper-end managers when we look at AHS. I find it fascinating that when the minister did talk about eliminating the 99 manager positions, they weren't in fact eliminated; they were merely shuffled and placed under different titles. To my knowledge all 99 of those managers are still working for AHS, just under different titles and positions.

The third way, Mr. Speaker, is to look at addressing our corporate tax structure within this province. Again, there is room to move to where we would be competitive and on the same footing as our neighbours. Increasing our corporate tax rate even slightly would bring in a significant amount of revenue.

Actually, I have a fourth way to bring in more dollars to be able to afford playgrounds like this, Mr. Speaker, or at least the preliminary work on playgrounds, and that's for the Alberta government to really take a long, hard look at a progressive income tax structure for the province.

Now, I'm sure there are some members that would love to jump to their feet to say that the flat tax here in Alberta saves every Albertan dollars, but the fact of the matter is that, no, it does not. There have been countless studies done comparing a base salary of an Alberta household of, let's say, $100,000 to $120,000, and the amount of tax that is paid in this province versus a household in the province of British Columbia or Ontario, where there is a progressive income tax system, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that families in Alberta that earn up to $120,000 in a household actually pay more taxes than families in B.C. or Ontario. So a progressive income tax structure could be such that you are passing on more savings to middle-income families, to average Albertans, where, yes, your top earners of $250,000, $500,000, or over a million dollars a year are being taxed harder than families bringing in $50,000 to, like I said, $120,000. But that alone would bring more dollars into the government coffers, and at the same time, it would actually save many, many Alberta families on what they're actually currently paying.

You know, Mr. Speaker, time and time again my frustration has been that this government refuses to address those four issues that I've just outlined, from the mismanagement of current dollars – and, I mean, I haven't even gotten into the wasted $1.6 billion in carbon capture and storage, a technology that's not even proven yet. Their projected amount is $2 billion. We'll see if they end up spending the full $2 billion. But between cleaning up the mismanagement of dollars, addressing our corporate income tax, our personal income tax, and our royalty regime, there would be more than enough dollars in the government coffers to ensure that no school gets built without a playground, and I'm talking from A to Z.

We could also do things like pass savings on to Albertans. We could save in our heritage savings account. We could look at truly diversifying the economy. I'd love to get the government's ear to look at investing in solar – I find it shameful that the province of Alberta gets more sunlight hours than any other province, yet we're not doing more to invest in that energy – investing in our health care system and in our education system to ensure that we have enough schools, that our class sizes are reduced, and investing in the future of this province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the member's motion bringing this forward. I am in support of this. Like I said, I wish they would take it a step further, but for a first step I applaud the member and encourage all members to support this as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by St. Albert.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 516, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. His commitment to his daughters and all of our province's children is evident with this proposed motion as he strives to provide our youth with safe places to grow and be active. Motion 516 urges the government to explore the feasibility of providing funding for preliminary playground work at any new school facilities that instruct elementary students.

Mr. Speaker, we all know the challenge our province faced in regard to this summer's unprecedented floods. The resilience Albertans showed is what kept us strong and gave us all the ability to unite and rebuild. We can't afford to cut out the essential infrastructure projects our province needs like schools and roads. Our government has committed to keep building our province so that our youth can continue to enjoy the high quality of life they deserve. Motion 516 aligns with the government's commitment to establish healthy communities and reinforces our government's unwavering dedication to our youth, to our future. Protecting our children's well-being and fostering their education will help ensure that Alberta's future entrepreneurs, future thinkers, and future leaders develop in a province that will make their ambitions and dreams a reality.

Of course, all members of this House know that learning starts from the moment we're born and that we never stop learning. With the help of our loved ones we learn how to say our first words, how to walk. As we enter school, we learn how to become engaged social individuals. Nowhere is this more evident than on the playground, Mr. Speaker, where the imaginations of our young citizens are developed and fostered. The Public Health Agency of Canada, for instance, lists several benefits of encouraging our children to be active at a very young age. They include the opportunities for socializing, increased concentration, better academic scores, a strong heart and bones, healthier muscles, and improved self-esteem. Given the supporting evidence of encouraging our youth to become more active, Motion 516 could be seen as a component of our government's commitment to the well-being of our children.

Some of us might not be aware of the logistics that go into planning and developing and administering the building of playgrounds. There's a lot that goes on beforehand. Playgrounds are traditionally developed on municipal lands and in some cases fully funded, inspected, and maintained by that municipality. Typically the costs associated with building a playground from start to finish can average anywhere between $250,000 and $500,000. I know one of the hon. members across talked about the cost of playgrounds. They are expensive, but they're also a lot more elaborate than the playgrounds that some of us had to play on when we were kids, and I think that's a good thing.

Mr. Speaker, there's also ongoing maintenance and inspection costs for these playgrounds, to keep them operating and to keep them safe. Sometimes partnerships between community leagues, parent councils, and municipalities are required to offset these huge costs. The province is not always involved in the construction and upkeep of playgrounds. To put things in perspective, parent councils rely heavily on capital generated through fundraising. I think we've all seen some of our parent councils and what a great job they do of fundraising and getting matching grants and so on to build these playgrounds. We can only imagine how many bake sales and bottle drives and charity auctions it takes just to offset part of the cost that's involved.

Of course, the funding for community-based initiatives is also administered through the Alberta lottery fund. The grants are awarded to a number of construction projects besides playgrounds. We all know that these funds tend to run out and that not all the requests can be met.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 516 could help mobilize communities who may not have the resources to fund outdoor spaces for our kids. For instance, just having the ground dug up, filled in, and ready for this initial structure would mean a lot for a given project. When a playground is finally completed, think of all the benefits the space would have for its community's children. It's definitely something that we can all be proud of.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for this motion and commend him for allowing us to have a discussion on a very important initiative that affects the youngest of Albertans, and I would urge our members to support his motion. I think it's a step in the right direction to ensure that all of our kids have somewhere to play and enjoy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Motion 516 brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. I would like to commend this member for his ongoing dedication to building strong communities for Albertans, particularly for this province's young people. I know that this member has school-age children himself and takes this issue to heart. I, too, have children who are school-aged and growing up far too fast, and I've witnessed first-hand the value of their time spent in the schoolyard and the recreation value and social interaction value that my children have enjoyed first-hand in the blessed playgrounds that they enjoy at their schools.

This motion seeks to encourage investment in new school facilities and targets basic school recreational infrastructure for funding. Mr. Speaker, as many have mentioned before me, these costs are exorbitant. The school grounds, average school grounds, can cost anywhere from a quarter of a million to half a million dollars, and I share the wonder with a number of my colleagues in the House that this is truly a large expenditure. We see that these expenses quite often are borne by the community groups and the families and parents of school-age children who wish to develop or redevelop playgrounds for their schools and for their community.

Community league organizations and volunteer groups work tirelessly to raise these additional funds to ensure that their children and families have a safe environment to play. In addition to local funds raised, additional costs may be covered through government grants like our Alberta community initiatives program. Mr. Speaker, it's programs like these that exemplify this government's unwavering commitment to Alberta's communities, a steadfast commitment to building Alberta.

As we move forward with the debate on this topic, it's important to look at the best practices from other jurisdictions across Canada. In 2011 our neighbours to the west, in B.C., announced $4 billion in funding for playgrounds and upgrades for existing structures. The funding was available for constructing 44 new playgrounds and upgrading a hundred more. Prior to this announcement the B.C. government allocated funding to complete 83 new and replacement school playgrounds. As part of this initiative funding was committed to school capital and maintenance projects, which included school playgrounds throughout B.C.

In Saskatchewan – and congratulations to our friends in Saskatchewan for surely yesterday was one of their finest days in recent history – playgrounds are financed through the community initiatives fund, specifically through the community vitality program.

In Manitoba nonprofit community organizations can receive funding and planning assistance through the community places program. Projects that are eligible for funding through the program are ones that provide sustainable recreation and wellness benefits to communities. Playgrounds are an important part of this initiative. The community places program is a new and innovative initiative for the Manitoba government as of 2013. Announced in 2012, the program has approved over $104 million in grants to support upwards of 6,800 community construction projects across the province.

Mr. Speaker, as a part of Budget 2013 this government demonstrated its dedication to essential infrastructure like schools and roads. Just recently our Premier announced the building of 19 new schools for more than 13,000 students in nine Alberta communities, including my home constituency of St. Albert. These projects are part of a large commitment to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more here in Alberta. As we continue to build these schools, I look forward to witnessing the numerous playgrounds that will begin to blossom as part of fostering safe play spaces for our children and families to enjoy. Motion 516 could help spur local community organizations to begin fundraising to cover costs associated with playgrounds.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this very important motion forward and for his commitment to building Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this motion. I want to focus on some of the key provisions in the motion that allow me to do this. The motion talks about looking at the feasibility of providing funding. Now, for a first-grader, a second-grader, or a third-grader I don't know of anything more important in elementary school than recess, and that's really how they look at it. As was mentioned earlier by some of the other members of this House, education is more than just the classroom. It is about the health and well-being of these young people also. If they're in a good frame of mind, which is well nourished and exercised, they have the ability to learn better, easier. There are numerous studies that support that.

An Hon. Member: A lot of MLAs like recess, too.

Mr. Anglin: And MLAs like recesses, too. That's just been pointed out to me, Mr. Speaker.

The fundamental value of looking – because there is a problem in this province. Wealthy communities generally do not have as difficult a time raising funds for playgrounds. The poorer communities, while they may get a new school – and by the way, I don't know of any community that gets a school replaced in anything less than 30 years. Many are 40 years and 50 years. So dealing with an elementary school is not something that is routinely done. We are growing as a province, and we will build more schools as we grow as a province, but that's a condition of our economy, and that will happen. To go four or five years for some of these communities to try to raise funds for a playground is an injustice to those young people who need a playground at that level in the first, second, third grades, for them to have to be forced to wait.

What I like about this motion and the reason I'm going to support this motion and ask my colleagues to support it is that it talks about the feasibility. We're not asking the government to forgo building a school because playgrounds cost too much. If we really are open to the feasibility and get creative, there are all sorts of opportunities to save money and still get the job done. I truly believe that because there isn't a playground that I know of that doesn't get built without some sort of grant or matching grant that comes either from the lottery system or anywhere else that government can be creative, and that's the very point. There are all these possibilities that we can take that would make it feasible and even more feasible to actually save money in the long run. And I think we have the ability to do both.

For that, I will support this motion. I ask my colleagues to support this motion. I just want to state for the record that we're not looking to spend more money. What we're looking to do is be more efficient with the money that we have.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 516, the goal of which is to encourage the establishment of capital funding for basic playground infrastructure and equipment on the grounds that accompany new elementary schools. I'd like to thank and congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing forward this motion.

Mr. Speaker, playgrounds are an essential part of the elementary school experience, as we've heard from many members today. They give children the chance to socialize with their peers and develop lifelong friendships. The intent of the motion is to recognize the growing costs associated with building new playgrounds, which can cost anywhere from $250,000 to $500,000. It seeks to help alleviate some of the costs for a variety of groups and organizations, including parent councils and community leagues.

Mr. Speaker, one of our government's priorities is investing in families and communities. Our children need to thrive in all facets of their lives, and contributing funds to preliminary work on playgrounds is one way we can help them reach their full potential. Currently our government provides funding to nonprofit and school groups for playgrounds through a variety of grant programs such as those available through Alberta Culture, including the community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program.

The community facility enhancement program, or CFEP, was established to assist in fostering the unique characteristics of Alberta's communities. The intention of the program is to reinvest revenues generated from provincial lotteries in communities and to empower local citizens and community organizations to work together in responding to local needs.

Mr. Speaker, successful applicants are given up to $125,000 for construction, renovation, or redevelopment of community public use facilities, including playgrounds. In 2011-2012 over $4.5 million in CFEP grants were provided to 74 playground projects. The grants ranged from $1,597 to $250,000, and 47 of them were specifically for playgrounds at school sites.

The community initiatives program, or CIP, provides funds to enhance and enrich community initiatives throughout Alberta and is intended to reinvest revenues generated from provincial lotteries in our communities. Similarly to CFEP, the goal of CIP is to empower local citizens and community organizations to work together and respond to local needs.

There are several different types of grants available from the CIP that may be used for the development of school facilities, including playgrounds. The first type of grant, Mr. Speaker, is a project-based grant, which provides financial assistance of up to $75,000 for community organizations to purchase equipment within Alberta. Another type of grant is a community operating grant, which provides up to $75,000 for financial assistance to registered nonprofit organizations in Alberta to enhance the organization's ability to operate and deliver services to the community. Both of these grants are suitable for supporting the development of school facilities, including playgrounds.

Along with government grants funding for playgrounds is also available through a variety of nonprofit and community support initiatives. As one of Alberta's longest serving charities, the mission of the Children's Ability Fund is to provide funding to enhance the independence of persons with disabilities throughout northern Alberta by providing funding for specialized equipment. Providing grants to organizations such as the Children's Ability Fund illustrates our government's commitment to investing in all of Alberta's families and communities regardless of ability or disability.

However, Mr. Speaker, not all requests can be met through these initiatives, and as you can see, resources are limited and funding through these initiatives is not solely for playground structures. That being said, this past September a pilot project at the Michael Strembitsky school saw the government contribute $350,000 towards the $500,000 cost of a playground. The project at Michael Strembitsky school is an example of what can be achieved when different levels of government and organizations work collaboratively to respond to community needs. I have examples in my constituency where the parents at C.W. Sears and l'école Parc elementary partnered with community and industry and the province to build the so-needed playgrounds.

The establishment of capital funding for basic playground infrastructure as proposed by Motion 516 would aid community leagues, parent councils, and municipal governments in ensuring that children have a safe, fun place to play that can be used during and after school. Once again, I would like to thank and congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing forward this motion – this motion. Sorry.

An Hon. Member: This emotional motion.

Ms Fenske: It's emotional.

His commitment to educational causes, the safety of our communities, and the health of his and our children should not be overlooked.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it is an emotional subject, I must admit. Our kids' health, our kids' ability to express themselves physically and socially with others is a critical issue and a critical part of health as well as education.

I want to also congratulate the Member for Edmonton-South West on Motion 516, urging the government to explore the feasibility of providing funding for preliminary work on school playgrounds and basic playground equipment from kindergarten to grade 6. I'm a bit puzzled by why we would restrict it to those ages. I think it's a wonderful initiative that should cover all age groups and all schools, and I think the need for and the importance of physical activity doesn't lessen after the elementary years. In fact, perhaps it even grows larger as young people deal with more and more distractions, more and more of what one might call temptations that pull people into unhealthy habits and behaviours and social conditions. So I would encourage a friendly amendment to the motion to include all school ages, and the member can take that under advisement.

I'm curious to know just how far this is intended to go. It's clear to me that planning a school without a playground is a contradiction, shall I say. All school gatherings, focused as they are on academic and classroom-based learning, need to be enhanced, balanced, complemented by outdoor and physical activity. In my view, it should be a given in all schools that very serious attention be given to the outdoor aspects of children's education and activity, and I would hope that funding through the public purse would be available for this. This is a natural and an important element of all education systems, and I'm a bit surprised that it has to be identified very specifically and highlighted as a consistent part of any infrastructure planning for our children's education. Whether it's from preschool or through to grade 12, it's clearly a fundamental of a healthy and well-educated society.

I fully support the motion and, again, would encourage the member to look at expanding the scope of it. This is clearly an investment. One of the best investments we can make is in our children, and the physical and social dimensions of their education occur often outside the classroom.

I'm, like others, a bit puzzled by the lottery funds. They're making significant contributions, of course, to various extensions of our education system and community development through the community facility enhancement program and the community improvement projects that are identified. It's a reminder, I guess, that for many of us the allocation of these lottery funds is still a mystery and raises, I think, not a few questions in our constituencies about who gets it and who doesn't and what the criteria are for these lottery funds and whether we couldn't make it more public, more clear what the criteria for funding are, how some projects get funded and not others, again, to ensure transparency, to ensure accountability for public funds, and to ensure that decisions are not based on political connections and political benefit.

So I would encourage this government to look at their lottery funds as an important way to ensure that some of what they consider extra – and I don't consider playgrounds an extra in our school system, but if this government is going to provide lottery funds to community, school, and other projects, it's incumbent on them to show and make public the criteria for these funds and how the decisions are being made week to week.

Certainly, some of the volunteer organizations and nonprofit organizations are asking me the question: why was it that I didn't get funded and somebody else did? I have no way of answering that. It appears that some MLAs have more control over these funds than others. I again have no way of answering questions from groups, including school groups, that want to know about funding their playground, on how it was that decisions were made either to fund it or not to fund it. There's an opportunity to present more openness around the disbursement of these funds.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to support this motion. It's an important one for the long-term well-being of all of us. I think that for many parents, especially in the lower income areas – there has to be a priority that this motion and potentially a bill that might follow be applied for the districts that are less fortunate than others, to clearly make it a priority for those areas of the province, those communities that have the least financial ability to provide these extras through their parents, through fundraising or through personal donations.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. I very much support this motion.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any other members who wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West to close debate.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just quickly address the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View's friendly amendment. Reading the motion, specifically right at the end, it says: "as part of the capital funding for any new school facilities that include grade levels from kindergarten to grade 6." It doesn't necessarily restrict it to those grades. Those are the grades that, in my experience, spend most of the time on the playgrounds. We often build schools which are kindergarten to grade 9 as well. This would encompass those grades also.

With that being said, Mr. Speaker, Motion 516 asks us to consider the feasibility of providing funding for preliminary work on new playground infrastructure. In short, it would be another way to help our communities overcome the costs that are causing many delays in getting these playgrounds built, costs associated with initial playground servicing, landscaping, paving, labour, and materials.

As we know how important playgrounds are to communities and to our children, we also recognize the reality that resources are finite. Our community leagues, our volunteers, and our parent councils need help moving these initiatives forward. There is no shortage of effort from these groups. They show an unwavering sense of commitment and self-sacrifice for their schools, their families, and their communities. The question is not one of commitment, Mr. Speaker; it's one of funding availability. It's one that has practical consequences for our ideas about fairness and equity.

Because such large fundraising efforts are needed to build playgrounds, there is potential that some communities find themselves at a disadvantage. If they are not able to co-ordinate volunteers or raise funds for such a project, then their children and their families are also at a disadvantage. The ability to provide funding for preliminary work on playgrounds will help strengthen the determination of these communities and encourage them to see their hard efforts through to the end.

So as I conclude debate on Motion 516, I would like to remind all members that the intention here is focused on the future. It is about helping build something with longevity. It is about acknowledging and recognizing the importance that playgrounds have on our children's social development and in our families' lives. I applaud our government's efforts and our ongoing commitment to schools. This is yet another opportunity to build on this legacy. As Albertans we are proud of our strong economy and unshakeable belief that we can do anything we put our minds to. We know that through collaborating with our community partners, we can build stronger, more resilient, and sustainable communities for future generations to come.

I would again like to thank all hon. members who participated in the debate on Motion 516 and urge each of you to vote in favour of it so we can help our kids play.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 516 carried]

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, seeing that it's almost 6 o'clock, I would suggest that we adjourn until 7:30 tonight.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 25, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates. When supplementary estimates are tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that a new or amended fiscal plan be tabled. Accordingly, the 2013-14 supplementary estimates include an amended fiscal plan for 2013-14. The 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates will provide additional spending for eight government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize approximate increases of $624.7 million in operational funding and $139.6 million in capital funding for the government.

Government Motions

43. Mr. Horner moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board has moved Government Motion 43. I show this, under SO 18(1)(i), as being debatable.

The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I could just get a few details from the Treasury Board president on this. I'm sure we'll do this partly when we're actually in committee, but I'm assuming the largest portion of this is flood related.

Mr. Horner: All of it.

Mr. Anderson: All of it's flood related. I'm assuming this is flood related, so I look forward to the committee going through this. Obviously, we need to talk about these funds as they are necessary to deal with the flood damage in High River, Calgary, and southern Alberta generally. We look forward to the debate on that and would propose that we support this motion so that we can get to the work of going over it in more detail.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I just wanted to clarify that for each of these ministries the supplementary supply changes are to do with the flood recovery. Yeah? Okay.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker. That's good.

The Speaker: Are there others?

You're ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 43 carried]

44. Mr. Horner moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for three hours on Tuesday, November 26, 2013.

[Government Motion 44 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 33

Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased this evening to rise on behalf of the hon. Associate Minister of Wellness to speak to Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chair, earlier this afternoon this House, I think, took a very important step in our commitment to reduce tobacco use among children and youth when we approved third reading of Bill 206. Despite the fact that there may have been differences of opinion with respect to issues such as the role of government in achieving such an objective, I for one – and I think I'm joined by others – was very gratified to see the level of support on all sides of the House for an issue which is increasingly important in our society.

Similarly, with Bill 33 we've seen significant support for the intent of this bill on all sides of the House. Again, the intent of Bill 33 is to reduce the impact of tobacco or tobacco-like product use or second-hand smoke on our young people. As the Associate Minister of Wellness has expressed, we see this bill as protecting the health of all Albertans and a healthy future for our young people.

I will clarify again as we enter into the committee stage that the act respects the right of aboriginal peoples to use tobacco in its traditional spiritual and cultural role, and the act respects the private use of tobacco in a person's home, and it does so very, very clearly, Mr. Chair. Nothing in the bill affects these rights, so Albertans can be assured that they may continue to use tobacco as part of their cultural practice.

However, as a member of the government and as a proud Albertan I see the bill as essential to protecting the healthy future of our children and youth from the many harms of tobacco, tobacco-like products, and second-hand smoke. As I said earlier, I believe that the majority of members of this House share those feelings of commitment. A generation from now, Mr. Chair, we do not want to see tobacco still claiming 3,000 Alberta lives each year, as it does now. We don't want to see such high rates of lung cancer and cancer deaths due to tobacco use. We want our young people to be there for their families as parents, as grandparents, and as involved community members. We certainly don't want to see them face the fate that so many lifelong tobacco users face today. I'm sure this feeling is shared by many around the House. Every time I see a young person or a group of young people lighting up, I feel the need to do something more, Mr. Chair, and Bill 33 is that something more.

During second reading the issue of cessation support for tobacco users was raised. I'm pleased to remind the House that Alberta's 10-year tobacco reduction strategy provides for ways to expand comprehensive cessation initiatives. The tobacco reduction strategy acts on a combination of prevention initiatives, public awareness, education, and cessation supports. Stronger tobacco legislation is also a part of that picture, and Bill 33 helps to make that happen.

First, it specifically prohibits furnishing, which includes selling and giving of tobacco products to young people in public places. We have federal legislation in place, as we've noted, but we have nothing in Alberta. With Bill 33 Alberta joins other provinces with legislation to prohibit the sale of tobacco products to minors. The fines will be levied against adults who provide youth with tobacco, and we will enhance enforcement by adding to the existing powers that peace officers already have. I remind the House that Bill 33 does not prohibit tobacco sales to adults. That means that store employees who are under the age of 18 may sell tobacco products to adults. They may not, however, buy those products themselves or sell the products to other minors.

Secondly, Bill 33 establishes regulatory authority to mandate a minimum number of tobacco products in a given package to make the packages less affordable to children and youth.

Third, Bill 33 very importantly prohibits smoking tobacco-like products such as those used in water pipes in the same places where the smoking of tobacco is currently prohibited. Mr. Chair, we are mindful as a government that the practice of smoking some tobacco-like products has a cultural following in our society, and I'd remind the House that nothing in the bill affects the use of those products and related equipment in people's private homes. Bill 33 simply addresses the use of these products in public places and in the same places and under the same conditions where the smoking of tobacco is prohibited. This is important because it protects Albertans from second-hand smoke that is just as harmful as tobacco.

We realize, Mr. Chair, that these measures will have an impact on businesses whose policy on the use of water pipes and related products helps to attract customers. But as we said in earlier stages of the bill, proclamation of the legislation would be staggered to allow time, at least 12 to 18 months, for regulations to be developed and for businesses to adjust. This is the same as, if not greater than, the transition time that was offered to establishments when the prohibition of the smoking of tobacco in public places was introduced.

We know from experience that when smoking was first banned in public establishments, most people and businesses were able to successfully adapt, and we expect the same businesses will experience that same success again. Mr. Chair, as we've all also noted on all sides of the House, some municipalities already ban the smoking of water pipes in specified locations. Again, this part of Bill 33 creates an equal playing field across the province.

Fourth, Mr. Chair, banning smoking in vehicles with children present is another feature of this bill. The Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act received royal assent in March of 2012, but it has not yet been proclaimed. Bill 33 would bring all the provisions of this legislation under the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act.

Finally, Mr. Chair, Bill 33 would also bring the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act into the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, creating a single, unified piece of legislation that supports a comprehensive approach to protecting young Albertans from tobacco and speaks to the values of our province. We pass laws to protect the public good. Bill 33 will strengthen public protection from the health risks of tobacco, tobacco-like products, and second-hand smoke. It is a testament to our commitment to Albertans and their future.

With these ideas in mind I offer my support for Bill 33, and I look forward to the discussion from all sides of the House during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the minister for getting up and answering a couple of the questions that I had put on the floor, that I had wanted answered. I appreciate that he talked about cessation in regard to smoking, and I was aware of that in the act, but I had specifically asked him questions on how we have Albertans that can't afford to pay for some of them, and here we are.

I still haven't heard from the minister in his speaking notes in regard to the consultation process that they took in regard to this piece of legislation, when I specifically asked about what addiction specialists they had talked to, et cetera.

Mr. Chair, I respect and I appreciate the comments the minister made about respecting the rights of aboriginal people and cultural diversity.

I am going to be proposing an amendment that I would like to have passed out, please, and I'm going to read it into the record if I can.

The Chair: Maybe just a short pause, hon. member. We'll get that mostly distributed, and then I'll signal to you when you can pop up again. Thank you. I'll give you the thumbs-up.

For the record, hon. members, this will be A1.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I must teach you some sign language when you want to tell somebody to get up and speak, but I get the thumbs-up. I appreciate that.

I want to read in that I'm moving that Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in part A by adding the following after section 4. In 4.1 section 3 is renumbered as 3(1), and the following is added after subsection (1):

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a shisha or a hooka establishment, as defined in the regulations, that permitted the use of a tobacco-like product on or before November 14, 2013, but shall apply to any establishment when the ownership changes after that date.

In part B in section 19 the following is added after clause (a):

(a.1) For the purposes of section 3, designating what constitutes a shisha or hooka establishment.

Now, what I want to say on this particular amendment – and, again, I want to thank the minister for speaking. He talked and clarified about respecting the rights of aboriginal people and their cultural diversity. I guess what my amendment is addressing is the fact that shisha bars or hookah bars have got a very strong ethnic component to them. I think we have to respect the rights of ethnic people in this province, especially when they move to this province. Right now Bill 33 would ban shisha cafés from operating if it is passed. So the purpose of this amendment is to allow existing shisha cafés to continue to operate despite the ban on the smoking of tobacco-like products in public places. This grandfather clause as proposed would mean the exemption expires when the business is sold.

Now, the minister was talking about the 12 to 18 months for regulations and that businesses can adjust, and he referred to water pipes and things like that. I've had a great deal of calls from businesses, and I can appreciate why they're calling. When I talk about businesses from that aspect, it's gas stations and things like that that saw a decrease in their tobacco and are going to see a more substantial decrease in some of the things that are being proposed in Bill 33 along with Bill 206.

Where I'm struggling is with the fact that the shisha bar is a business, and it operates legally and should be allowed to continue to do so under certain circumstances. Retroactive law changes are unfair for those operating a currently legal business. Shisha cafés in Quebec were grandfathered in upon proclaiming its Tobacco Act, and there are about 30 locations in this province that were grandfathered. I have to say, Mr. Chair, that of the shisha bars or the hookah bars that we have talked to, none of them were consulted. I'd like to ask the minister, when they were putting this bill together, whom they consulted in regard to literally putting a business out of business.

I think the reason shisha is considered legal right now is because it's a nicotine-free product. I've read some of the articles about: you're puffing 200 times more, et cetera, and things like that. But the smoking of the shisha is a common cultural practice in the Middle Eastern and our African cultures among others.

I guess, Minister, I appreciate and value greatly that you've excluded the aboriginals when they're doing smudging and the exchanging of tobacco. That's something that's very spiritual with the aboriginal people.

I am hoping that the government would consider supporting this legislation. If not, I'd like to know why not. What this bill is saying is that we will allow shisha bars to continue, but if that business is sold, it goes out of business. It can't be sold to someone else. The people that we've talked to are very upset about this. I know that some people will think that it's part of a pastime for kids to go there and have conversations, but truly it's more on the cultural aspect of what I referred to: Middle Eastern culture, Africans, Muslims, all that partake in this from a cultural aspect. It's what's done.

If the minister or the government, for that matter, or the associate minister whose bill this is could explain to me whom they talked to from shisha bars or from that ethnic perspective, I would be more than willing to accept why the government is moving forward.

We are literally going to put these people out of business. The minister alluded to: businesses can adjust in 12 to 18 months. Well, you can't adjust if you're being closed down, and you certainly can't sell the business. This government has proudly talked in the past about attracting businesses and that we are for businesses and that we respect the rights of people and that we want them, so I would hope that the government would consider accepting this amendment.

I hope that the minister will explain, whether it's the associate minister of health and wellness or the Health minister, for that matter, whom they consulted with. Mr. Chair, I've got to tell you that we have talked to addiction specialists in regard to who was consulted from an addiction perspective, and there are some very well-respected doctors in this province and in fact in this city who have not been consulted on this bill whatsoever. I have talked to, as I said earlier, shisha or hookah bars. None of them were consulted. And the businesspeople – I've stood up in this Legislature and said that I'm going to support Bill 33 – have not been consulted in regard to the bill and, you know, how they are going to deal with some of this.

We're in committee, and I'm hoping that the minister will provide us with whom they consulted from the shisha or hookah bars, whom he consulted with in regard to addiction specialists in this province, and I'll look forward to the debate for the rest of the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for proposing the amendment that she has and for the obvious thought and consideration that has gone into drafting it.

Mr. Chair, I'll do my best to answer the questions. With respect to the specifics around consultation on the bill I may have to defer to the Associate Minister of Wellness to come back with that detail, but we'll certainly follow up with him on that point.

On the consultation issue generally, just to remind the Assembly, Mr. Chair, Bill 33 actually in law enables the commitments that were made under the updated tobacco reduction strategy, that was released about a year ago now. The hon. member and others may remember that there were extensive consultations, in fact well over a year's consultation, that led up to the release of that document. Many, many experts were involved, and there are many names in the tobacco reduction strategy that can be cited, both medical and other experts that actually collaborated and, in fact, worked hard to persuade the government not only to support and release the tobacco reduction strategy that we did but to back it up in legislation. Bill 33 is making good on that commitment, so to speak.

Specifically on amendment A1 and the proposal around exempting establishments that were in place on or before November 14, 2013, we would be unable to support the amendment for the simple reason that the decision is not specific to the issue of the fact that this is a cultural practice that is permitted in some restaurants and bars across the province. The basis for the decision – and I can tell the hon. member that we had a very long and very thorough debate about this within our caucus – is actually evidence around the harmful effects of second-hand smoke, including that that comes from tobacco-like products, on human health.

Mr. Chair, it's really no different than the tobacco reduction act of 2007, where the hon. minister of human resources, who was the minister of health and wellness at the time, brought forward legislation to prohibit the smoking of tobacco in public places, including restaurants and bars.

I will say to the House – and I will be pleased to table this at the appropriate time – that a very recent study, a study from October 2013, that was conducted by experts at the University of Alberta, a study, in fact, that was partially funded by Alberta Health Services, found:

“Herbal” shisha products tested contained toxic trace metals and PAHs levels equivalent to, or in excess of, that found in cigarettes. Their mainstream and sidestream smoke emissions contained carcinogens equivalent to, or in excess of, those of tobacco products. The content of the air in the waterpipe cafés tested was potentially hazardous. These data, in aggregate, suggest that smoking “herbal” shisha may well be dangerous to health.

As you can see, Mr. Chair, if we’re interested in making the decision based on evidence around the potential harmful effects, including exposure to carcinogens, of tobacco-like products like shisha, it is necessary in legislation to provide the same protection to the public around exposure to second-hand smoke from herbal and related products as it is to provide the public with protection from exposure to tobacco smoke that they receive second-hand. That is the basis for the provision in the bill.

I’ll note as well for the hon. member that in the spirit of her amendment there are provisions in the bill for exemptions to be granted under regulation to specific establishments. When the legislation around tobacco smoking in public places, including in restaurants and bars, was introduced, there was a considerable transition time that was allotted. It was a delayed proclamation of those sections of the act that allowed bar and restaurant owners to transition either through physical modification of their facilities or through a decision not to continue to offer that opportunity in their establishment and to replace it with other revenue-generating business activity. Mr. Chair, although it’s not part of the legislation, the commitment of the government is to offer at least the same if not more transition time for owners of establishments that currently allow the smoking of tobacco-like products, and we would estimate that time from proclamation of the whole bill to be anywhere from 12 to 18 months.

I will leave it to the Associate Minister of Wellness in further debate to talk a bit more about consultation, but I just wanted to make the point that while we appreciate the spirit of the amendment and the consideration that’s given to business owners and perhaps the relative importance of this activity in their establishment to their business – we thoroughly respect and appreciate that need – we have made a decision in this bill to put the protection of public health from exposure to second-hand smoke first. That was, as I said, not an easy decision and not an easy discussion within our caucus, but we do stand by that proposal, Mr. Chair.

For those reasons, with respect, we will not be able to support the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the minister standing up and responding to some of my questions. I’m well aware, from when we passed the Tobacco Reduction Act, of all of the conversations that went on then and all the exemptions that were given to bars and restaurants, and I understand and appreciate, Minister, that if you and I went to a bar as nonsmokers and were in a bar where there were people smoking, we didn’t have a choice then. We had to sit and put up with the smoke. People go to the shisha bars and they go to the hookah bars to smoke. That’s what they do for their pleasure. So you or I probably would not be one of those people that are going to partake or go to a shisha bar or a hookah bar for a cup of coffee because we know what we’re facing. The second-hand smoke that we face when we’re talking about bars and restaurants not having a choice: if we wanted to go for a beer and we wanted to go to the bar, we didn’t have a choice at that point in time.

I understand the establishments were given plenty of time under the regulation to make adjustments. You know, we’ve seen over time – as somebody having been here 20 years, I remember when you used to be able to smoke in the hospital. I remember that when I was having a baby, you could smoke, and then you had the baby, and you were smoking. I remember being on the plane when

I was in business in another world, and, you know, you were at the back of the plane or wherever it was, and you were all smoking and having a great time drinking the free liquor. You didn’t care even in a smaller place like that that the poor people in the front of the plane were probably going home smelling like a dirty ashtray. I mean, it’s no different than if you decide to go camping and you’re at a campfire. You know that when you go home, you’re going to smell like smoke.

Where I’m struggling, Minister – and, please, I’m on your side on this. I’m honestly on your side. It’s like going to church and you’re trying to convert people that are already in church. What I’m suggesting is that these people have specifically had these bars, and the government granted them and allowed these establishments and licensed these establishments to open up and have a shisha or a hookah bar. The second-hand smoke: the people that go there don’t go there just for a cup of coffee. They go there because they’re – I’ve never partaken in this. I have partaken in a lot of stuff, but I’ve never partaken in this. I was trying to be convinced, when we were talking to these people, to go to a shisha bar and partake in this. As a former, slash, struggling ex-smoker the last thing I need to do is get hooked on a shisha bar or a hookah bar and end up there smoking my brains out.

I guess for me it’s a culture that people from eastern – and, you know, the Muslims: I’m sure Calgary-East may be able to or want to comment. Muslim people partake as a culture. You made a comment. And I’m sorry; I’m struggling sometimes with these in regard to being evidence based or something, and I didn’t quite grasp the comment that you made in regard to making exemptions, I think. I guess maybe I’m hoping that if you’re looking at exemptions, you would look at exemptions.

I’ve read the report that you referred to from the university on carcinogens and things like that. I guess sometimes as an adult we make choices in life, and as an adult you can’t control what adults tend to either put in their mouth as far as eating or what they decide to do smoking. I can appreciate the fact that we want to try and help people as much as we can. This is not one of those mountains I’m going to die on. This is one of those mountains where I have to have the questions answered, and I appreciate you standing up and answering them to the best of your knowledge.

You said that you would talk to the associate minister in regard to consultation, but I’m just worried sick that we’re putting penance on 30 establishments in this province that have that, I guess, as you referred to when we spoke about aboriginals, cultural diversity, that ethnic component. When people move to this wonderful country that we call Canada and this wonderful province that we call Alberta and people are allowed the idea of freedom of choice – I’m struggling, Minister.

I honestly can’t pick apart your Bill 33 very much. I’ve stood up, and I’ve asked a few questions, and to the best of your knowledge you’ve responded. But this one is a struggle for me, and I don’t even partake in it. I think it’s our responsibility as elected members of this Assembly and it’s incumbent upon us to bring forward the concerns that we’ve heard from Albertans. I want to reiterate one more time that of all of the shisha bars and all of the hookah bars that we’ve talked to, no one, not one single person, was consulted in regard to this. In fact, they were quite taken aback, not even aware that this was part and parcel of your legislation. You know, I was here when we debated the Tobacco Reduction Act, and I’m struggling.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this amendment. I would ask the minister to take sort of a broader look at the wording of the amendment in the sense that, in my view, this is a culturally sensitive issue. Everything the minister said I believe is true, particularly on the health and the second-hand smoke and the studies that you quoted or presented. But the idea of setting out in regulations, constituting what the shisha or hookah establishment would be, gives the ministry flexibility to make determinations that maybe it's not a restaurant where there would be minors or that restricts it from having any minors.

There seems to be some flexibility in regulation in what the ministry would designate or constitute the establishment. I think the ministry in consultation with these groups, particularly the culturally sensitive groups, could probably find a reasonable common ground on how to set this out in regulation to do both, which is to protect the public per se on the second-hand smoke and many of these other issues and limit the damage but also respond respectfully to what is a cultural practice. I think that maybe not all places would fit the regulations, but certainly it would allow for some. It would give the ministry time to consult while we still pass this law and make sure that we respond fairly and justly to the cultural sensitivities of what we're dealing with.

I would hope the minister would give it a second thought and approve this amendment and allow it to pass. It gives the flexibility in regulation on how to manage it. We can get the best of both worlds on this, I truly believe, which is a reduction plus we can respond to the cultural sensitivities of these establishments.

With that, I thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Chair, if I may, and I'll be brief. You know, I thank the hon. member who just spoke for his comments as well. I think we have a meeting of the minds in terms of the need for sensitivity and consultation and discussion about doing something as groundbreaking as this would be in Alberta. This would truly be leading the country in limiting potentially harmful exposure to second-hand smoke from tobaccolike products.

I guess I would argue, at least with respect to the last speaker, that that objective or that possibility is actually covered in the bill under section 19(f), which allows in the regulation-making authority the ability to make regulations

- (g) respecting the exemption of a person or a class of persons from the application of all or any of the provisions of this Act or the regulations.

Further, it allows regulation-making authority

- (g.1) respecting the exemption of a place or a class of place from the application of all or any of the provisions of this Act or the regulations.

And then, finally, that authority is also extended

- (g.2) respecting the exemption of a tobacco product or tobacco-like product from the application of all or any of the provisions of this Act or the regulations.

Mr. Chair, I'd submit that, at least insofar as the comments of the last speaker, the intent of the subamendment is actually addressed by the bill in section 19(f), and it would certainly be the intention of the government in developing any such regulations to look at people or classes of people, to look at places or classes of places, and to look specifically at tobacco products or tobaccolike products. So that flexibility is already built into the bill. I think we can accomplish what the Official Opposition is pointing to as a very legitimate concern, but I think we have it here in the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Chair. The comment from the minister on the meeting of the minds: that would be a first with the Health minister and the Health critic and a meeting of minds, I'm quite sure. It would be no different than the fact that he and I would go to a shisha bar or a hookah bar just to try the product or, for that matter, go for a beer. That would really get tongues wagging. Before I leave this Legislature, I will make sure I have a beer with the Health minister because I'm sure we'd probably have some good conversation. I appreciate what the Health minister is doing.

8:10

Let me put this to you, Minister. I know you're very busy, and I'm not going to ask you out for a date or anything. But would you consider, because you've made some very good points under section 19(f), at least meeting with some of these people, explaining to them the legislation, and maybe trying to come to some sort of agreement or understand maybe some of their cultural sensitivity or some of the, you know, diversity that they're trying to bring forward to you? I, quite frankly, don't know if they would meet with you. I'm not second-guessing anybody. But I think it would go a long way if you or someone even from your department or, for that matter, the associate minister of health sat down with some of these people that own these shisha bars or these hookah bars and try to explain where you're going with this, that 12 to 18 months. There may be some ideas with regard to some of the exemptions that you spoke to.

I've said this before. I'm really, really troubled that the great province we live in – we've got the exemptions for cultural diversity for our aboriginal people. I really think that the people who own the shisha bars or the hookah bars, for that matter, deserve the same sort of respect from us in regard to their cultural diversity.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the minister for pointing that out. But the consistency – if you remember correctly, when the hon. House leader from the government spoke in relation to aboriginals, it was absolutely clear in the original act that aboriginals are exempt. I remember that because he stood up and said, "Read the law; read the law; read the law," which is all fine and good. It was absolutely clear. So based on the discussion here and the points that this minister made, clearly the provisions that you have outlined do allow for that flexibility. It also allows for that same flexibility for aboriginal tobacco use, but the original act was absolutely clear. It stated, you know, the exemption for aboriginal peoples.

Fast-forward to this debate right now on this amendment. The provisions that the minister cites are true and accurate, but by accepting this amendment, very similar to the exemption for aboriginals, what the ministry will be doing is acknowledging that the shisha and hookah establishments will be respected and there's still flexibility to determine by regulation how they will be defined. It's sort of, in my view, consistent with the way we treated First Nations. This is just recognizing the cultural groups that are affected by these establishments and sets it out. It would be consistent with the provisions that the minister originally cited, which allows for that flexibility, but it also will make the entire provisions from this act to the original act consistent, where it actually lists these aboriginal groups as far as First Nations, and in this case it would make reference to the cultural groups dealing with the shisha and hookah establishments. I don't see where it's redundant if you put this in. I see where it's complementary, and that's a little bit different.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Mrs. Forsyth: I apologize. I don't want to monopolize the conversation. I just want to ask the minister one more thing: if he's aware that the banning of shisha caf  s is being challenged in the court system in B.C. I know you were monitoring it. I'm wondering if you've thought of the consequences of that if they happen to win, if this legislation passes.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Chair, we are aware. I believe this is a bylaw, actually, that's being tested in court by the city of Vancouver. We are watching that case, obviously. All I can say is that we would evaluate the judgment when it's delivered, and we would take that into consideration in decisions surrounding the proclamation of this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I have the appropriate number of copies of a reasonable amendment that I would like to bring forward for Bill 33.

The Chair: Okay. If you just pause for a moment, we'll have that distributed, hon. member.

This will be A2, hon. member. You can proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Actually, I'm moving this on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. You can see that the amendment is talking about the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013, being amended in section 10 in the proposed section 7.5 as follows:

7.5(1) For the purposes of this section, a tobacco-like product refers only to a tobacco-like product sold for the purpose of being smoked.

And so forth.

Perhaps the hon. member from Lethbridge can check this out. It's quite good. The two hon. members from Lethbridge. I've got something for you here. Actually, maybe you're looking at the . . .

The Chair: Through the chair, hon. member. Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. I'm just trying to grab everyone's attention, right? It's the schoolteacher in me. It just comes out at night.

An Hon. Member: Do I get a detention?

Mr. Eggen: I give detentions. That's right.

If I can tear everybody away from watching the by-elections – I have the nerd by-election party going on here – the purpose of this amendment that I have for Bill 33, Mr. Chair, is simple. It's to prohibit the sale of tobaccolike products to minors. The way this legislation is currently written, these products could still be sold to minors. We consider many of these tobaccolike products to be potentially harmful on their own and also a potential gateway to other tobacco use. I think that's the idea of Bill 33 anyway, so following in the spirit of that original intention, that's why we brought this one forward. It's important, I think, as well, to note here that the recent ban on flavourings only applies to tobacco products, not tobaccolike products. So a vendor could sell a tobaccolike strawberry-flavoured hookah product to a youth with no penalty, for example, under this current Bill 33 as I read it. Maybe that's not the best thing we should be doing.

We want to avoid that possibility here, so we've written this amendment in a way that applies specifically to sales to a minor, not to adults but to a minor. There'd still be nothing to prohibit an adult from buying these products and consuming them on their own at home for their own reasons, but a minor could not make that same purchase. It otherwise imports the same structure, Mr. Chair, that we're implementing for preventing the sale of tobacco to minors, and the restricted definition for the section "a tobacco-like product sold for the purpose of being smoked," I think works around the broad definition of "tobacco-like" used elsewhere in the act.

It's a very reasonable amendment, Mr. Chair, and I encourage everyone to consider supporting it. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate, again, the consideration that the member brings, obviously, in an attempt to help strengthen the bill. I do appreciate that. I'm struggling a little bit with the rationale for the amendment. If I refer to the bill, there is a clear definition of "tobacco-like product" that appears in section 3(e):

- (j.1) "tobacco-like product" [is defined as], subject to the regulations, a product, other than a tobacco product, composed in whole or in part of
  - (i) plants or plant products, or any extract of them, or
  - (ii) other substances prescribed by regulation.

Notwithstanding that I'm not clear on the intent of the amendment, I guess my point would be that there is a clear definition and there is an opportunity in this provision to expand on that definition if at any time the clarity around what constitutes a tobaccolike product is in question. There is regulatory authority to extend that definition.

The other thing – and I'm certainly happy to hear more on the rationale from the hon. member. I guess, with respect, I'm wondering for what purpose other than being smoked would a tobaccolike product be sold. [interjection] In seriousness. I'm unclear on the intent.

Our position would be that any concern around the specificity around this and the ability to protect minors is actually covered in the definition, or if it's not covered, there's regulation-making authority to clarify it, to strengthen it. For that reason, I would not see us as adopting the amendment, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Eggen: Point taken, and I think the hon. Minister of Health certainly has the right idea. I think that we just wanted to make it explicit about the purchase of that because we see that we're always aiming at a moving target, Mr. Chair. The vendors, even tobacco vendors, can change their products with great fluidity, thus creating a product that can sort of skirt around the letter of the law, and perhaps the regulation is not quite there to meet the new thing.

I mean, we're not trying to create long, sort of Byzantine bits of legislation here, but at the same time I think that putting it explicitly in the law and not just relying on the potential for the regulation to meet the needs of that possibility is just why we did it, respectfully.

Hopefully, people will consider supporting it. Thanks.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. Are there any speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 33 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: That is carried.

Bill 32 Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As mentioned in second reading of this bill, there are many, many parts of it that I like and many, many parts of it that the Wildrose caucus likes. It seems to streamline a few things for business, to hopefully keep us competitive in a competitive world, it seems to make it more efficient for a lot of our peace officers, that we all know have a very, very tough job and a very, very dangerous job at times, and then there's just the opportunity to further enhance the safety of roads for all Albertans.

There were a couple of areas of concern, though, that we had that we just couldn't get past with what the government said to us at second reading of the bill and with some of the discussion. So to start with, I would like to propose an amendment.

The Chair: Okay. If you would have that circulated, please, hon. member. We'll just pause for a brief moment. For the record, hon. member, this will be amendment A1.

You may proceed.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairperson. What this amendment pertains to is that there's a portion of the bill that gives the government authority to close a road, and the definition of a road is fairly liberal. There are many, many things that fit into the definition of a road. It allows the government to close a road where a road plan has never been enacted. A road plan is just a survey, which could, of course, cost tens of thousands of dollars. It may make a lot of sense for a road that has never been surveyed, a road where a road plan has never been done by an Alberta legal survey or never been registered. It may make a lot of sense if this road is not being used, to be able to close it without incurring a whole bunch of costs for our taxpayers, when we can better use that money for front-line services or leave it with the taxpayers. But the concern, of course, becomes: how does the government truly know when a road is not being used? How do Albertan companies and Albertan citizens truly know when a road is going to be closed?

What this would do – and I'm just going to take a second and read it – the long and the short of it, is force some disclosure and some transparency on our government to notify people who potentially might be involved of the upcoming road closure. It will still be way, way less expensive than if we had to actually get a legal survey and advertise that and spend the cost of that, and it still may actually make it quicker for the government. Hopefully, it will offer the opportunity to make all Albertans informed of what's going on.

I move that Bill 32, Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act, be amended in section 1(3) in the proposed section 38.1 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) When the Minister closes the whole or any portion of a highway pursuant to subsection (2), the Minister must provide 90 days' notice

- (a) to adjacent landowners,
- (b) to any municipality impacted by the closure,
- (c) in any local newspaper published in the area where the highway is situated, and
- (d) on the public website of the Minister's department.

Again, I hope and think that this will provide adequate communication to people that may be using the road. It was a bit of a surprise to me to hear that there are some roads out there that don't have road plans in place. What types of roads are they? How busy are they? Are they travelled once a day, once every two weeks? Are they very, very busy? Again, this will force the openness and the transparency that Albertans need and Albertans deserve.

With that, I would hope that the government and all here tonight would support my amendment to help make this more of an open process.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The next speaker is the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

8:30

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this motion. This motion only sets out a pragmatic management provision which basically allows for the affected or, really, the adversely affected parties to be notified in a timely fashion. It gives them time to respond. It doesn't remove the minister's ability to close a road under any emergency situation. That comes under another act, and the minister has full control and full power to do that. Putting in a provision to give 90 days' notice to the adjacent landowners and the municipalities that are impacted allows for just sort of a continuity of being able to operate under the conditions that the minister is going to lay out. This is, in my view, sort of a little bit of protection for those individual landowners in those communities that are going to be affected by a road closure, and it allows, actually, in many cases for proper planning. It doesn't in any way detract or take away from the minister to act in an emergency situation. It's basically the best of both worlds.

Now, I could entertain an argument on whether the 90 days is too long or too short – I welcome that discussion – but we needed to pick some sort of number to allow for just normal planning for those affected people or communities that need to make adjustments as a result of a road closure. I would be interested in hearing the minister's response if they have any concerns about this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a brief comment. I appreciate where the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is coming from. I understand what you're trying to achieve here. But, quite frankly, when I read things like this in this kind of detail to be enacted and ingrained in legislation, I get a little bit nervous. Some of the wording in here, some of the requests such as item (c), to publish it in local newspapers in the area: that can be quite specific. It's not necessarily the most effective advertising tool in every community across the province.

From my perspective and from my experience when the province is doing any type of development or protection for highways, it takes a great deal longer than 90 days, and the province is already interacting, interfacing, and working with local stakeholders, municipalities, and landowners that are nearby. Something like this may be more appropriately placed in the regulations as opposed to the act itself. I would just be concerned that if things change down the road – and I know that on other parts of this bill that we're going to be debating later, I'll have a few comments as to how it can actually tie the hands of municipalities and other interested stakeholders by ingraining this type of detail in the legislation. It's much easier to change it in the regulations at a later date, where it becomes more effective for all involved.

For that reason, Mr. Chair, I can't support this particular amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to respectfully disagree with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. The MGA has many of these types of provisions already ingrained in it for advertising in newspapers: how it's to be advertised, when it needs to be advertised. So this isn't something that's new to legislation. This isn't all that prescriptive compared to some of the stuff that's in the MGA. So I would disagree.

To have in transportation just a requirement to notify a community or those who are adversely affected, that's the key. Imagine being a property owner and finding out that one of your access roads just arbitrarily got closed and you had no notification. This just makes sure that this doesn't get missed. All it's asking for is transparency and notification. It's not asking for anything more, and it's not hand-tying anyone. It's just saying that once the determination is made to close that road, those that would be adversely affected in most cases would at least have – they can't even overturn it, but at least they'd have an opportunity to make adjustments, to modify whatever habits they have or however they operate to work within what's going to happen in transportation. That's the key.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. I'll recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Chair. I rise again to talk about another part of the bill that concerned us in the Wildrose and concerned me, and it's got to do with the words "reasonable and probable" and the movement in this bill to strike out the word "probable." Of course, it pertains to the degree of reasoning, I guess, that the peace officer has to have to stop a person under the new act here, and there's just some concern that we have around it.

I would like to propose another amendment, please, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Just give us about 30 seconds, and then I'll recognize you again. For the record this will be amendment A2.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Chair. The current legislation speaks to authorities having reasonable and probable grounds. Bill 32 would eliminate the probable grounds. My amendment would keep the probable grounds. It is a higher legal test for reasonable and probable grounds than just reasonable. Therefore, this amendment is on the side of drivers. It's on the side of our civil liberties. It's on the side of our long-held tradition of police force and peace officers needing reasonable and probable grounds to stop someone and to enforce the law. Now, of course, we're very, very much in favour and I'm very, very much in favour of safety for our roads and the proper enforcement and very much in favour of the authority and the ability for police officers to be able to do their job.

There was mentioned during the second reading of the bill a case in front of the Supreme Court called Baron versus Canada, I believe. It was stated in there that the judges had argued that reasonable grounds and probable grounds were the same thing. Our staff has done a great amount of research on this to determine if that's true, and it appears to only be close to the truth. It seems like this verdict, this Supreme Court decision, is under appeal and has the chance, the possibility, of being challenged in a different way, where reasonable and probable should be put back in there. One of the lawyers that I talked to as well told me that there was the possibility of an error being where this case wouldn't directly apply to many other instances, where reasonable and probable would be higher grounds to protect our civil liberties and our civil rights.

Mr. Chair, I tend to err on the side of the driver facing an enforcement action. Certainly, drivers want the law on their side when they go up against the powers of the state. The state has the means and the power, you know, to greatly affect an individual's life, and we have to be very, very careful that we're all treated equally and treated fairly. It's very, very hard for a lot of individuals to fight back against that, especially in rural Alberta – I represent 60 by 80 miles of rural Alberta – where just the impact of being stopped, just the impact of a court decision can cost more than just the time and the effort involved but can cost the livelihood with moving commodities and livelihood with jobs that are involved.

I for one think that reasonable and probable grounds are still most likely a higher standard than just reasonable grounds. I think it's important for those of us that set the rules and laws that protect all 4 million Albertans' individual liberties and freedoms to err on the side of caution, not to err on the side of bigger government. Again, I'm very, very much in favour of the ability of police officers to do their job and for society to be protected, but that has to be balanced with our civil rights and our civil liberties. It's not absolutely clear that removing the word "probable" is the same as reasonable and probable. Reasonable and probable appears to be a higher test. If it's close and we're just removing the word "probable," maybe all we're doing is saving the government the cost of a few pieces of paper, which is not significant compared to somebody's civil liberties.

So with that, Mr. Chair, thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this amendment, but I'm going to outline a couple of points that were made by the minister in defending this provision. The minister said that reasonable meant the same thing as probable. That's not correct, and the court case did not say that. That's not what the court case said. The minister cited a court case, saying: they mean the same thing, so we're fine. Basically the court ruled that in the context of what reasonable was, particularly in the case that was before it, it imported a criterion of probability. Hence in that context the minister would be correct that reasonable was interpreted to include the criterion of probability. Hence it would make sense to say: okay; we can strike the word "probable." But the fact is that reasonable and probable do not mean the same thing. Reasonable is a degree of rationality; probable is a degree of the possibility. They have two different distinctions both in the English dictionary and in case law.

As a matter of fact, in the case that the hon. minister cited, the judge actually said in part of the written decision that the reasonable suspicion was enough that it implied a knowledge that was less than probable cause. Now, that's interesting because the court acknowledges that probable cause is a higher test than reasonable, but it still allowed for the reasonable test to be implied in the context under review. Basically what the court ruled was that it satisfied the more-than-probable test. Clearly, they're not the same thing. In the context that the court heard the case, it accepted the argument that the reasonable cause implied the probability; hence they allowed it to stand.

The key here is this. The question of reasonable versus probable has been before the courts probably more times than I know, and it will probably come back to the courts again. Clearly, in each context somebody will challenge it, and it might be another ruling that the courts would then again review. One of the points that was interesting in what the minister quoted: the litigants on both sides of this case argued from the same case law to make their points. It was an interesting argument, reading the factums, because they used the same case law to interpret a different point to make.

Why should the minister accept this amendment and leave probable cause in? I will tell you what it does. It's a level of insurance. The minister is not asking for anything less than probable cause, and he even stated so. In the minister's own comments, they mean the same thing, which we know is not true by the court decision. By leaving in the words "reasonable and probable," the minister covers both bases, and it covers both arguments made in this case. Should another case ever come back through the Supreme Court, even based on this act once it's passed, all of the bases are covered if we leave in the word "probable" because in the context of even how this law has been drafted, how this legislation has been drafted, the presumption of reasonable has to still meet or satisfy the probability test. So by not allowing that or by removing the word "probable," then it becomes subjective under different contexts.

Now, there was something else that came out of this case that was significant. The case dealt with search and seizure. There's a balance in our society for the individual's right to privacy and the state's right to a search warrant. One of the points that came up in this case was that there was a mandatory application of the law, that if the test of reasonable and probable was met, the judge shall issue a search warrant. The court took offence to that. The court cited that there are situations, circumstances that a judge has to allow, even though the test is met, that the search warrant would be unreasonable. That seems to be fairly true with a lot of basic constitutional law.

What we're playing with here are words. We're also taking into context the future of how this law will be applied. The most important thing – and I think the minister would agree – is that the last thing we would want to have happen is to have evidence thrown out that was good evidence because we failed to meet a probability test or that the test that we were applying for the search of a vehicle did not meet this example that even was laid out in the court case that the minister had cited.

Again, this amendment in very many words is not so much legalese as it is practical. It is common sense. The argument is that reasonable is the same as probable, which we know is not. The court even says so. It is not the same thing. But the reasonable test has to be implied or has to meet that probability test. So by just leaving the words "reasonable" and "probable" in, they're covered. Then we don't have to go back and revisit that. It's there, and no matter what happens, when the next question of reasonable versus probable ever comes before the Supreme Court, it is already covered in this legislation.

I would say that this is a very good amendment. Leave that test in, that is, reasonable and probable. Do not remove the word "probable" from the test, and all the bases will be covered.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. Other speakers?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 32 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, do you wish to move that maybe the committee rise and . . .

Mr. Campbell: Yeah. All that stuff. Rise and report.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has moved that the committee rise and report bills 32 and 33.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 33 and Bill 32. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

8:50

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered. That is carried.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister for reconstruction for southeastern Alberta.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and move third reading of Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act.

First, I would like to thank all the hon. members that have participated in the debate of this important piece of legislation. It is clear that the flooding in southern Alberta this summer affected and continues to affect many Albertans. This legislation is our response to all Albertans, a response that shows that we are moving forward, that we are enhancing our processes, and that we are helping protect life, property, and the environment from the effects of future floods.

Bill 27 will enable us to turn the page for a safer, stronger Alberta. This legislation puts in place a foundation that will be built upon as part of the continuous improvement of Alberta's safety system. Mr. Speaker, the measures that we are enacting will have an immediate impact and will be long lasting. During debate we have heard support for the heroic efforts that were put forth by responders, residents, and emergency management organizations. It is the hard work and dedication of all these people that we need to be thankful for because it is their determination that saw us through the emergency response and the beginning of recovery.

There are number of specific issues that came up during debate that I would like to address now. First, to discuss questions about flood mitigation, Mr. Speaker, by creating the clear authority to provide flood mitigation funding, we'll help both individuals and communities. We have committed to assisting property owners in flood fringe areas to implement flood mitigation measures. This helps to ensure that properties in areas that are known to be at risk of future flooding will be better prepared against future damage. This helps the property owner, provides a safer working environment for first responders who need to access a property, and encourages responsible development in flood fringes.

We've also provided the ability to assist municipalities with the implementation of flood mitigation measures on a larger scale as they seek to rebuild impacted infrastructure after flooding. Some may criticize that the mitigation funds for individuals are available only after flooding has occurred. My response to this is that it is fair use of taxpayers' funds. To provide this funding to all Albertans would not be a judicious use of funds. What we are providing is a balanced and reasoned approach that will encourage property owners to think to the future when they are rebuilding their properties after a flood.

We've heard questions of why we are not providing flood mitigation funding to property owners in floodway areas. Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is simple. There is no amount of mitigation that can occur in a floodway that can sufficiently reduce the risk to life, property, and the environment.

The definitions of floodway and flood fringe are part of the flood hazard area mapping performed by Environment and SRD. They are the experts in this area, and we have the utmost faith in and will rely on their expertise.

There have also been questions raised about the accuracy of the government's flood maps. ESRD's mapping program is built on continuous improvement, and they see every flooding event as an opportunity to review their processes and information. As a government we are committed to making decisions in the best interest of Albertans with the best information we have available. The current flood maps are the maps that we will use for applying caveats on land titles and for the relocation programs that we have offered to homeowners in floodways.

There have also been questions about why a specific definition of floodway is not included in the legislation. The reason for this is that it would not be appropriate to include the definition of flood hazard areas in this legislation when this is something within ESRD's purview. By using the definition provided by ESRD's flood mapping program, we ensure that we use the most accurate and current definition provided by our experts.

Another question that was raised was why the funding is only being made available to municipalities after a disaster. We're providing flood mitigation funding through the DRP after a flood has occurred as this allows us to leverage federal cost sharing for rebuilding efforts to the greatest extent possible. This is the most responsible use of taxpayer funds.

We have also heard questions about why the province did not access funding under a 2011 program offered by the federal government for flood mitigation when our neighbours to the east and west did. There are two reasons for this. First, when this program was announced in 2011, it only pertained to Saskatchewan, Quebec, and Manitoba. Secondly, when the program was expanded to all provinces and territories in 2012, the given deadline left only one and a half months for the interested provinces and territories to submit projects for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, we were very interested in this program and tasked staff at Municipal Affairs and ESRD to review potential projects in the province, including those being done at the community level. Our experts determined that none would have been eligible under the program's criteria. In fact, B.C. was the only province besides Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Quebec that was able to access this program after it was expanded.

The due diligence we did on this file reflects our broader commitment to mitigating flood damage. Since 2007 our government has invested more than $82 million in flood mitigation projects. Some of these projects in communities like Drumheller and Medicine Hat helped lessen the damage caused by June floods. The Alberta government is continuing to lead the push with our provincial partners and the federal government for a national mitigation strategy. Premier Redford raised this issue in 2012 with her colleagues across the country and again this summer.

In addition to this work, which started before the June flooding, the Flood Recovery Task Force is currently investigating the best avenues for proactive flood mitigation work to proceed. This work has contributed to a sevenfold approach to flood mitigation which includes overall watershed management that looks at flood and drought and ensures upstream solutions don't have negative impacts in downstream communities or vice versa; the best technology for river modelling, prediction, and warning systems; a review of all pertinent water management and development policies within risk areas; working with municipalities, the private sector, the public, and other stakeholders to gather and act on the best ideas that we can to advance flood mitigation in Alberta; enhancing the government's current approach to erosion control; supporting communities who are developing their own initiatives for flood mitigation; and, finally, Mr. Speaker, supporting individual homeowners so they can better protect their homes from future flood damage.

Caveats on land titles, Mr. Speaker. We're also moving forward with registering caveats to land titles of properties in floodways or flood fringe areas that have been rebuilt or repaired using disaster relief assistance. The caveats are a form of consumer protection that we are putting in place so that potential future buyers will know a number of things: firstly, if the house they are considering purchasing is located in a floodway or a flood fringe area, if the house was impacted by flooding and accepted disaster recovery program assistance as part of the rebuilding or recovery efforts, and their future eligibility for flood-related disaster relief assistance.

The caveats registered against the land titles of floodway properties will not be able to be removed if the property owner has accepted DRP assistance, Mr. Speaker. Questions have been raised regarding the inability of a property owner to remove a caveat if they are in a floodway. Again, this is necessary because there is no level of mitigation that can sufficiently reduce the risk to life and property in a floodway and the ongoing liability that floodway development represents to taxpayers. If a property in a floodway has been rebuilt or repaired using DRP funding in the floodway, the caveat will remain on land title. I will also note that all floodway property owners in flood-affected areas, not just those with flood damage, have been offered the option to sell their property to the government at a fair value so they can relocate to a less hazardous area.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, the government has identified 254 floodway properties in areas affected by the June disaster. Property owners that reside in a flood fringe will also have a caveat registered against their land titles if they accept disaster relief program assistance and have failed to provide documentation to show they have completed required mitigation measures in a timely fashion, but flood fringe property owners can have the caveat removed from their title by implementing flood mitigation measures. The mitigation measures are 100 per cent covered by the province. The intent of this is not to burden property owners, including the flood mitigation measures as part of their rebuilding efforts, which will mean that their property is better prepared for the next flood event.

We have also heard questions about why a DRP caveat will make a property ineligible for future flood-related disaster recovery program assistance. Doing this will maintain DRP alignment with the federal disaster financial assistance arrangements. If this measure was not taken, federal cost sharing for future events would be reduced. As well, it would be an inappropriate use of taxpayer funds to continually pay for recovery and rebuilding work for property where mitigation measures are not in place. This is especially true when the government is paying for the entire cost of mitigation.

We have heard questions regarding the application of caveats to land titles according to the current flood hazard mapping that we have. Some people have raised concerns about whether the current flood maps are up to date or whether they will incorporate the June 2013 flooding. Again, I want to emphasize that we will rely on the expertise of our colleagues in ESRD to define flood hazard areas and to map these areas.

Concerns have also been raised about the implications of the caveat process on real estate values and about the onus on real estate agents during the buying and selling process. This legislation addresses the current risks that are posed by developing in flood hazard areas, and the focus is on the safety and security of the property and residents in flood hazard areas. We cannot put property values ahead of public safety.

We have communicated with the Real Estate Council of Alberta and the Law Society of Alberta, two important groups involved in land transactions. These groups will perform the due diligence that is always expected any time a land transaction occurs, which should include consulting flood maps for areas known to be prone to flooding as well as a land title search. As well, the application of these policies can be flexible as shown by the examples of Drumheller and Fort McMurray, Mr. Speaker, where the unique developments in the communities have been taken into consideration.

The last amendment to the Emergency Management Act touches upon the initial length of time that a provincial state of emergency is in effect for. I can personally say that the decision to declare a provincial state of emergency is not one that we take lightly. This is borne out by the fact that this summer was the first time in the 60-plus years since this provision was created that the province has ever used this tool.

During the declaration responsibility for emergency operations was transferred from the town of High River to the province. At the end of the 14 days the province was satisfied that the situation was stabilized enough that responsibility for emergency operations could be transitioned back to the municipality. What we had proposed is to extend the initial length of declaration from 14 days to 28 days, Mr. Speaker. This will provide emergency officials with a flexible time frame during which they can work to restore public safety.

It will also allow emergency officials to focus on response operations and not on administrative matters. This amendment will not change the powers granted under a declaration of a state of emergency, which are outlined in detail in the Emergency Management Act. As well, this amendment will not change the fact that a resolution of the Legislative Assembly will be necessary to extend the state of emergency beyond 28 days. We need to maintain a balance between providing flexibility and accountability to the public.

Some concerns were also raised about previous reports about flood risk in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, no report could have prepared anyone for the scale of disaster the June flooding caused. Even the author of the Groeneveld report acknowledged himself that there was no way to prevent the devastation of the June 2013 floods. This is because the 2005 report used the one-in-100 years flood as its benchmark, a threshold which the June floods dramatically surpassed. I want to add that we had made significant progress on the recommendations in the report before it was released in 2012 and continue to make progress after releasing it.

Mr. Speaker, this act also includes four amendments to the MGA. These amendments will help us build a safer Alberta by enshrining policy decisions made during the government's response to the 2013 flood. They are practical, forward-looking measures that will support the largest recovery effort in Alberta's history, and they will help Alberta better respond to emergencies in the future.

The amendments to the MGA will help improve public safety in a number of ways. The first will permanently enact a provision created under a regulation earlier this year to temporarily exempt municipalities from requirements of the MGA when they are facing an emergency. We used this tool during the June floods so community leaders could focus on public safety instead of administrative encumbrances. It was an effective and practical way to support our partners.

The other three amendments to the MGA focus on floodway development. Allowing development in floodway areas, where flooding has deeper, faster, and more destructive water flow, poses a threat to the public, to property, and could be a liability to taxpayers. This is why the government is proposing to restrict new developments in floodways, to limit damage and risk to public safety posed by future floods.

While it is imperative that we restrict new development on floodways, we must also ensure this policy is fair and reasonable. To this end, we are proposing an amendment that will honour the investment and choices made by current owners of floodway properties. This amendment will permit owners of existing floodway properties to replace existing buildings with new buildings intended for the same use.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we need to account for the special circumstances of those municipalities with significant developments already in a floodway such as Fort McMurray and Drumheller. For these municipalities it would be impractical, absolutely impossible, and unnecessary to restrict floodway development. This proposed amendment gives this legislation a reasonable amount of flexibility for municipalities in these unique situations. These changes give our province stronger protection against future floods and will help ensure our families and communities are well protected.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, what this legislation will mean for individuals and communities is increased safety: safety for property owners that have implemented flood mitigation measures, safety for communities that will receive assistance with community-scale flood mitigation measures.

Support for this legislation will mean that Alberta as a whole on every level – individual, municipal, provincial, and federal – is better prepared for the next flooding event. We can't stop a future flood, Mr. Speaker, but we can make sure we're as prepared as possible. It's all part of our government's effort to build Alberta, to ensure a strong quality of life for all of us.

I would like to thank all members for their participation in the debate on this legislation. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for providing the time for me to speak on this important piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Hon. minister, just a reminder that we don't refer to the proper names of members of the Assembly. Earlier in your remarks I know that was a slip. I assume it was.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to speak to this important bill, Bill 27, that has touched every Albertan in some way and certainly affected our financial bottom line as we've all heard about repeatedly over the last few months since June 20. I was part of the full experience in Sunnyside, Calgary, and I'm still working through some of the issues relating to my home but, thankfully, not as devastated as many.

I guess, in making brief comments about this, this time I haven't had a chance to speak much to the issue, so I want to put a number of items on the table for the record. I know that along with others we have raised questions about the slowness of response to the 2006 recommendations of the Groeneveld commission. I don't want to belabour it. But, I mean, it has to be said that the warning signs were there: the questions about both upstream management and urban mitigation, very specifically High River, and, I think, serious questions about the mayor at the time and his decisions in, some would say, a conflict of interest, promoting development in the floodway over the five, six years since the 2005 flood. I don't know what's being done to investigate that, but it's surely something that needs thorough investigation. There were questions raised even back then about his conflict of interest and concerns about the building that was going on there and the increased risk and damage that resulted from that.

Three issues, I guess, quite apart from the failure to act on the Groeneveld report. The unwillingness to accept climate change in this caucus until very late and some of the responsibility to deal with both extreme rain and droughts that are predicted: it was only, I think, in about 2009, 2010 that the then minister of environment said that climate change is real, when the rest of the world had been recognizing that for a decade if not two decades.

The second issue had to do with deforesting in the eastern slopes and the continued development of our watershed, the most critical source of all the water and well-being in our communities east of the Rockies. Other jurisdictions have bought up their watershed. New York paid a billion dollars, I understand, to protect its watershed and ensure that in perpetuity there would be water for New York. Vancouver has bought its watershed and retained control over any development and banned all development in their watershed. We continue to develop our watershed as if it was just another resource to be developed: deforesting, excessive recreation in some areas that's damaging the water quality, even oil and gas development, Mr. Speaker. This is our lifeblood coming out of the Rockies, and we still haven't learned to protect it.

A third dimension I guess that has to be mentioned is the whole question, then, of examining what we're now looking at as infrastructure, diversions, storage, and means of responsibly handling excessive flows in the river systems coming out of the mountains. It's clear, I think, that this is going to happen again, and different watersheds may be hit differently. I think the biggest risk to Calgary has to be the Bow River. I'm not sure yet that we have looked at all of the potential scenarios. If the same combination of rain, heavy snowmelt, and lack of control over the decisions at the dams, which are still in the hands of a private company, TransAlta – and as I raised in public, there are some questions about ensuring that there's a clear authority and mandate by government to control flow, not a private enterprise organization that has some mixed interests in flow control. I want to be sure to put that on the record, that government should be controlling the flow on our dams upstream of Calgary and other communities, not a private enterprise like TransAlta.

I think we've put on the record in terms of an amendment the question of public insurance. Surely, that's something that we need to be doing, not just thinking about. We cannot expect the public purse to pay for everybody, especially some of the most expensive infrastructure, when everything else we do is protected by insurance. Why wouldn't we have a public insurance organization in the absence of private insurance companies, addressing residential, commercial, industrial operations that need to be protected from natural disasters, including flooding again? So I was disappointed, as many were, that this government refused to consider and implement an amendment around public insurance for flooding.

I've had a number of questions from individuals relating to the floodways and the flood fringes and the payouts in both the flood fringes and the floodways and the caveats that appear on these properties and the question of whether or not this can be modified given some of the changes that are being made both upstream by our engineering and waterworks people and downstream in terms of individual homes and urban and other rural settings. It's difficult to advise people who are, as I am, unclear about how much mitigation is needed. How much would be sufficient to remove a caveat on a flood fringe, for example? I think we need to go some distance in making sure that we handle that in a fair and clear, transparent way.

We have been pushing the government on some of those issues, and I think what many Albertans are experiencing today is that the immediate response to the flood was reasonable. We need to be much more proactive about monitoring and early warning systems in the future. It's not clear to us that either the federal or the provincial government is putting into place the sufficient infrastructure and manpower, particularly with the consistent reduction in funding to Alberta Environment and their monitoring systems over the last five years, and, not insignificant either, the federal monitoring and investigation of water and other environmental monitoring that has been cut on the federal side.

It strikes me that talk is one thing. Another is investing in these vital measures that would give not only early warning and communications but also the need, in light of what's happened, for better communications between the different response teams and the public. What comes to mind is my visit to Siksika, where individuals were in some cases not even notified that there was a flood. They were pulled out of their homes, with knee-deep water in their homes, without being aware of a flood warning or a call to evacuate.

Those, I think, Mr. Speaker, are the key messages I wanted to leave. There's no question that the decision this bill makes about ensuring no further building on floodways is an important one. I'm very glad to see that. I made that comment in 2012 at Public Accounts. There's no question that this definitely is long overdue. Again, I hope the government will make an early commitment to recognizing the need for alternate public insurance for this inevitable recurrence, either in the form of floods or in other disasters that aren't covered by private insurance.

I will be supporting this bill, and thank you for the honour of speaking.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I think that in a way this event and then subsequently this bill have gone a long way to define 2013 for all Albertans, really. The devastating consequences of this flood cannot be underestimated. Certainly, it's up to us here in the Legislature to not just act but to react to what's needed to help people recover from this event, both for businesses and individuals and their homes but also to try to mitigate the problem in the future.

I'm very concerned about this, Mr. Speaker, because I know that the likelihood of this sort of flooding is not just 1-in-1,000 odds but, I think, something that we could see more often as climate change takes hold, as more extreme weather takes hold, as we develop more of the landscape of this province. This is not untypical for development around the world, where as more people move in, we just see more paving of structures, we see more movement of water to be able to flow into larger concentrations, and we see more people moving onto floodways.

It's not a phenomenon that's unique to Alberta, but I think that this was a very sobering lesson for us to really try to turn around just how much we do develop on potential floodway land. We know that this bill certainly went a long way to try to make definitions about what a floodway is, but we were, I think, most concerned as Alberta New Democrats in being able to define what the red zones and the transition zones for floodways really are. Of course, there are many businesses on those places, and we've had to exclude whole sections of towns that already have established communities in clear floodway areas like in Fort McMurray and Drumheller.

But by excluding those areas, it doesn't preclude them from being potentially flooded once again, so we are going to have to spend money on this in the future, and certainly it's important to do so. I think that if we would have made pre-emptive plans and constructions earlier, then we could have saved a tremendous amount of money previous to this devastating flood here in June.

I think that we need to look to the experts and to study how we can reduce the possibility of further damage even as early as next spring, when we have the next round of snow and then melting. We still don't really have concrete information on how we would update flood maps. Moving ahead, we have moved ahead on plans for relief and repair, but if we're not making clear definitions and really focusing on those maps, then I would suggest that we are not doing a full service to the people in affected areas. As you establish those areas and you start to build around them, you can start to move and divert water in a more permanent way. The banks of rivers can be more permanently defined in potential problem areas, and that will make it easier for people to know which areas are safe and which are not.

I think that we have pulled together very well overall. I think this has been a bit of a cathartic experience for this province. I think that most Albertans recognize the value of making this investment that we have through supplementary supply and through Bill 27, too, so we're cautiously but constructively supporting this particular bill as New Democrats.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 34

Building New Petroleum Markets Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Energy and move third reading of Bill 34, the Building New Petroleum Markets Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Other speakers? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak on the third reading of Bill 34. We had some pretty good discussion and some questions answered during Committee of the Whole, which was enlightening, I guess, to say the least. I brought forward a few amendments to this bill, one dealing with the Auditor General, and the Government House Leader did stand up and say that the Auditor General is still the auditor of this commission under the Auditor General Act. We had some questions because we didn't know if it was a provincial agency. The wording wasn't quite specific in there, so that was bit of a concern, but he assured us that the Auditor General would be able to do a full audit on this commission.

You know, we understand that the expansion of the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, going from three board members to seven members, is probably a good thing for Albertans, seeing that the government has committed a hundred thousand plus barrels a day on the Energy East pipeline when that does get constructed. They will be handling a lot of product that is important to Albertans. Those are Albertans' resources, and that's their revenue that comes from it.

We understand that there's, you know, a need to ensure that the right people are on that board. In saying that the right people are on that, we hope that the new board members that they get to fulfill this obligation will be specialists in the field of this commission so that they can represent Albertans to the best of their ability. When the hon. Energy minister and I talked about it, he mentioned, you know, that it's going to be tough to find board members with this experience that aren't already employed in the energy industry. So it's going to be a search, and I hope that they search far and wide and get the best possible board members that they can.

One of the amendments that I put forward on this bill – and I'm a little disappointed it didn't get passed – was about the reporting procedures. Under Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, it talks about the ministry having to report. You know, they have to supply annual reports, but it doesn't exactly specify what's in that annual report, so it could be quite watered down. In the old legislation they'd mentioned:

After the end of its fiscal year, prepare a general report summarizing its transactions and affairs during its last fiscal year and showing the revenues and expenditures during that period, an audited balance sheet and any other information required by the regulations.

That's pretty specific, and that ensures that we're getting the information we need to check up on this commission and make sure that they're doing the job that needs to be done. It would have been nice to see that part of the old legislation still in this new bill. Rest assured, though, that we will do everything possible to find those answers and ensure that that information is in the annual reports that the commission brings in.

You know, most of the other sections in this bill were just changing wording, so it's pretty self-explanatory.

We want to make sure that this commission is working in the best interests of Albertans and, you know, our energy industries. There was another amendment that I put forward, dealing with the FOIP legislation. We weren't really sure why they would want to keep these things under wraps for five years. They did give some explanation, explaining that there were some very specific details with the contracts that they didn't want brought out.

The new commission is going to be looking after the forecasting of royalties when they prepare the budgets, how much oil and gas and bitumen and everything is involved in that industry, to come up with their budget estimates and income and expenses. You know, I don't believe that information necessarily needs to be held for five years. As I stated when we were debating the amendments, in the next five years the people in this Legislature will change. Five years ago there were different people here, and five years from now there are going to be different people here.

9:30
