Paki, a Hindu, carpet-rider, turban-twister. “We don’t like your kind here. Go back to where you came from.” Those were the words that hurt the most. They hurt. My parents came to this country to make a better place for their children. We grew up in a war zone, in what today we call the developing world, then a third-world country. Frankly, we actually felt safer in the war zone than we did in the town that I came to. I felt ashamed of who I was. I was ashamed of the colour of my skin. I was ashamed of the culture that I came from. I became a Christian in high school, and I went to a Baptist camp in Caroline, Alberta. The KKK were burning crosses in town. I came to this wonderful province. Some people wanted complete freedom, and they were burning crosses in town.

Mr. Speaker, this is about leadership. Premier Lougheed recognized that this country was changing and recognized that it’s the duty of the majority to protect the new minority, to build a just and fair society. In fact, Laurence Decore fought hard with Prime Minister Trudeau to make this a multicultural country, not just bilingual but multilingual, multicultural. A humble man from Vegreville, one of the greatest leaders this country has had. Premier Lougheed recognized it and put these protections in. Premier Klein recognized it and actually strengthened them even more.

What causes me concern are the two leaders here. Well, out of the four leaders here you’ve got two conservative parties here, and this is where we fundamentally differ. You’ve got the Premier right here, who is a human rights lawyer and issued a directive to her Justice minister – and her current Justice minister agrees with the directive – which is to review or repeal this section of the human rights legislation. This Premier actually put this into a letter to the former Justice minister instructing him to repeal section 3 or review it with intent. This government caucus will actually be divided on this issue, Mr. Speaker, but the real issue is: where does our Premier stand, and where does the next leader, the one looking to be the Premier, stand? The Premier and I differ on this fundamentally, and half of her caucus, or many members of her caucus, will disagree with their own leader on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, for those who come here from across the world, we want to protect freedoms, absolutely. This is why those people escaped. Whether you’re German or Ukrainian or Japanese or Chinese or Indian or African or South American or European or Polish, you come to escape, to protect these freedoms, and these freedoms come with responsibility, responsibility to not promote hatred or contempt. This section says: hey, don’t expose people or a class of people to hatred or contempt. Why would we remove this, dear members of the Assembly? Why would we remove a section that says, “don’t expose people to hatred or contempt”? Also, we must be allowed to walk freely along this country, yes. There’s violence and there’s hatred, yes, but we must be allowed to walk freely without being called bad names and horrible names that promote hatred and contempt.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the police chief are right. Most people here who get discriminated against, who get beaten up already don’t complain despite the protections that are already there. They already don’t. My dad always used to say: “Don’t say anything. This isn’t our country. This isn’t our country. Just lay low. Be quiet.” Mr. Speaker, I gave up my citizenship in the country of my origin, and I became a Canadian. I said: this is my country as much as it is anybody else’s country.

Mr. Speaker, you were there in caucus when I walked out of caucus when I was a member of government. You and the Deputy Speaker came out, and you dragged me back. Yeah, that rumour that one MLA walked out of that room: that was me. Mr. Speaker, you dragged me back in, and thank you, because we filibustered caucus for a month and we did not let it come to the floor of the Leg. But it is above the floor of the Leg. It is here. We need to talk about other things, other than this.

Mr. Speaker, you know, in Alberta the province used the notwithstanding clause to punish a teacher who had a certain sexual orientation. We’ve got to protect those – you can’t hurt people and treat them unfairly because they’re skinny or fat or tall or short or coloured or not coloured, men or women, their sexual orientation, their sexual preference. This is a debate we ought not to have, but now that it’s here, I urge every member of the Legislature to vote against this.

Dear members from the Wildrose, I can understand – I can understand – your feeling. Even the Justice minister: yes, we do want to protect these freedoms. But these aren’t cases where – we’re pretty free to say a lot of things in this country. We are. We’re pretty free to say a lot of stuff here, but for a handful of people who go above and beyond to make a point so other people can get physically or emotionally injured or hurt, you know, it doesn’t make sense. This isn’t a Liberal issue and it’s not a Conservative issue; it’s a human issue, Mr. Speaker.

I have so much more to say, but I’ll leave this really short. Every Member of this Legislative Assembly, please, I urge you to vote against this. In fact, I would say that all of those who aren’t coloured in this Assembly, who aren’t visibly different – you know what, I’m not even going to stand up and vote on this, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone else who isn’t a visible minority should be the ones standing up fighting for this. Everyone knows where I stand.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I’d like to thank the Liberal opposition leader for his stirring words, and I do have the highest respect for him and sorrow for what he experienced as a child growing up. There’s no excuse for that in our Alberta.

I only have literally two minutes, but I will say this: my adopted sister, Jián Ài, is from China. She’s Chinese-Canadian. Nothing makes my skin crawl more than racist comments and hurtful comments. I also grew up as part of not a visible minority but a religious minority group, and I can tell you that as many others have experienced deplorable, awful things said about their religion. It is a small minority, of course, thankfully, for where we live, but it is very hurtful. I remember, many times, tears shed in that regard. And I’m sure many people have that experience in here.

I don’t feel that’s what this amendment is for. This amendment does not change what hate speech is in the Criminal Code. It does not change our human rights legislation to do anything that would take away a person’s right to be employed, a person’s right to housing. All of those things that are rightfully protected under human rights legislation stay protected. All this does is make sure that if a religious leader or a media person or someone gets up and says something that might be controversial, maybe even something terrible that shouldn’t be said, the best thing we can do is not haul them in front of a judge, in front of an appointed noncriminal court; the best thing we can do is expose those individuals for the hate-mongers that they are in the public opinion.

That’s the way I think you deal with prejudicial speech, with discriminatory speech. You do not try to crush it; you expose it, and you hold those people accountable in the court of public opinion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We began at this a little late. I believe it was at 5:08. I would request unanimous consent of the House to continue debate past 6 until 6:08, till the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills can make his conclusion.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice has requested that the House go beyond the normal adjournment hour of 6 p.m., to allow sufficient time for this motion to be debated in its full extent, which is 55 minutes, following which five minutes would then be given to the mover to wrap up debate on the motion.

Is that your request, hon. Minister of Justice?

Mr. Denis: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Yes?

We have a point of clarification requested by Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Does it not go with five minutes remaining to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for closing of the debate regardless? I believe it does.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the point here is that I have a list of speakers here who still wish to speak, and if we hit 6:00, automatically we adjourn, as you know. But this is a request to allow another eight minutes of debate by whomever and then five more minutes at the end of that to allow Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to conclude debate.

Is that sufficiently clear, hon. members? Are you ready for the question?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: We will continue on until 6:08, and at that point I will recognize Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to close debate.

I now have the hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by Edmonton-Centre. Please keep the clock in mind, hon. members.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to speak to Motion 502, and I'll try to be succinct. I'd just like to go straight to raising two issues in particular in consideration of the proposed motion. First is the argument that the criminal justice system is the capable and appropriate mechanism for addressing issues of hate and human rights issues. I believe that the Alberta Human Rights Commission serves an important role that cannot be substituted by the criminal justice system at the current time.

I'd like to quote a paper issued by the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary. The Criminal Code, while legislating against hate crimes, "offers no recourse for hate incidents," or events, which can be clearly hateful but may "not meet the threshold of a criminal offence."

The Alberta Human Rights Commission, by allowing those who have been subjected to hate speech to have their grievances heard, therefore plays a social role in the community that's much different than a formal court system. It is remedial and offers an opportunity for those on the receiving end of hateful incidents to seek recourse and justice.

As the ECCC argues, "The removal of section 3 from the AHRA would serve as the mechanism to silence victims of discrimination and hate." As noted in reports such as the national action committee on access to justice, there are profound systemic and societal barriers to accessing the criminal justice system. The high cost of accessing the justice system is prohibitive. The nature of hate crimes themselves serve as a barrier to reporting. Calgary Police Service has stated that only 34 per cent of hate crimes are reported to police.

Hate speech uses fear and shame to victimize and intimidate individuals and communities who are already vulnerable. As an example, a graffiti message describing groups in derogatory ways and for them to go home is aimed at reinforcing an outsider status, that they don't belong. Many immigrants in ethnocultural communities already experience those emotions. As marginalized communities they may not feel empowered to voice concerns over these kinds of comments, let alone pursue costly legal actions. Relying exclusively on the criminal justice system necessarily means the exclusion of the same groups and communities who are most vulnerable to hate speech in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, the sense of rejection and exclusion that these types of statements seal on those of Canadian origin, especially the youth, create deep and long-lasting harm and negatively impact their sense of trust, belonging, and engagement with institutions and society as a whole. This is why quasi-judicial institutions like the Alberta Human Rights Commission, which is available and accessible to all Albertans, are so important.

As Albertans we all agree that the views expressed through hate speech are reprehensible, but some argue that the hurt feelings or offences that such speech causes should not lead to the curtailing of the individual right to freedom of speech for everybody else. Mr. Speaker, from the experience and lived experience of the impacted groups, the speech that exposes a person to discrimination, hatred, or contempt causes real harm.

When we discuss hate speech, we also need to understand and recognize that power is not equally shared in our society, that certain groups continue to have more power than others, that men continue to make more money than women, that people of colour are at greater risk of discrimination, that members of the LGBTQ communities are more likely to be victims of violence than straight people, and that people with disabilities face greater barriers to employment than those without disabilities. In the end, hate speech goes much farther than causing hurt feelings for an individual. Hate speech serves to further marginalize and silence groups who are already marginalized and leads to conditions where hatred and violence against minority groups are acceptable.

I'm not going to quote the Supreme Court decision in 2013, but I would like to end by saying that, Mr. Speaker, it is, at the very least, disconcerting if the members' argument is actually suggesting that people should be allowed to do the things that section 3(1)(b) prohibits.

I will not be supporting Motion 502, because section 3 of the Alberta Human Rights Act has built-in protection that prevents the section from being abused or overused or misused, and those protections and limitations also exist in very similar wording in four other Canadian jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by quoting from the ECC's position paper on this subject. Legislation like the AHRA and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms "set Canada apart from other countries. They remind us that social inclusion and a celebration of diversity is not an inevitability, rather it [is] something we need to strive towards – something we need to protect."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the request for unanimous consent, the explanation, the clarification took two minutes. That's not part of the debate. So the clock will stop at 6:10, and then we'll go to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to wrap up.

In the meantime, let's go to Edmonton-Centre, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is an important discussion, and I'm glad we're having it. I think it allows us to reaffirm those things that make us distinct as Canadians and distinct as Albertans, and that is our commitment to human rights. I've always believed that it is integral to us to protect the minorities from the tyranny of the majority, and while a piece of legislation or human rights code is really just a piece of paper – I mean, standing in a parking lot, if somebody is going to thump you, a paper is not going to help you very much except in that it's a concept, it's a legal shield, and it certainly gives everyone the opportunity and access to the legal tools that allow you to go to the commission and seek redress for what has happened. That is very important.

Now, I've read a number of different papers that have been written on this. This was a struggle for me. As a social activist the freedom of speech is very important. Why it's so important to me in this House is because I wouldn't have been able to push a number of the policy issues that are so important to me and a number of the freedoms of the groups that I represent, which are so important to me, if I didn't have freedom of speech, particularly in this House, where I've been able to stand up and, as you know, for many years talk about the people that I represent in Edmonton-Centre, seniors and members of the queer community and women. How many times have I represented and stood up for women's issues here in Alberta? That free speech has allowed me to do that.

Ultimately, to me, it's a harms test. I look at a harms test and say: "Okay. Your right to swing your fist around in your free expression ends at the end of my nose." In the same way, freedom of expression has to have a reasonable limit. In other words, it ends at the nose of protection of human rights and protection of those people that need it today. Now, we may well come back here in 50 years – and I'll be delighted if I'm able to come back in 50 years – and maybe we will have reached a point in our society where that's not needed, but that is not where we are today. Therefore, that prohibition against discrimination – in other words, that protection of the groups that are named in the human rights and in our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms – is integral to moving forward and creating the Alberta and the Canada that we all want. We want to welcome people here. We want people to feel that there is a protection and a welcome for them and that they can move forward in their lives. I want to see that in my city, in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, in my province, and in my country. So, clearly, I don't support the motion that has been brought forward.

Once again, I refer back to the people I represent. They are my bosses. No hard feelings, but the caucus is not my boss; the government is not my boss. Even the Speaker sometimes is not my boss. My bosses are the people that elected me, and I am here to represent them. I love the diversity of my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and I'm going to stand up for it because I think that what's being considered here is a great idea but is not the Edmonton, the Alberta, and the Canada that I want to see, and it is not acceptable now.

I thank you for the discussion, which allowed so many of us to put – you know, it's a head-and-heart argument, this one. For me, it's my heart, and I'm going with my heart in the protection of those people that I want to have around me as I move forward in life.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure I have next.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I stand up here knowing that no matter which way I go on this, I'm going to feel like I'm wrong, but it's my duty in here to say what's on my mind and to try to do the best thing for Albertans. Actually, I'm quite surprised to hear myself agreeing with people that I normally don't agree with on much: the Member for Airdrie, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and some of what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said.

I will say this. There are two principles that are very important here: the protection against discrimination of those that can be identified. Whether it's colour, race, religion, or sexual orientation, it's not acceptable. The other thing we need to remember is that every November 11 and every day of the year we ought to remember that those people fought for freedom of speech. Neither should be taken lightly.

I'm going to support this. I'm going to do it with some trepidation. I think it's the more right thing to do, but I have to tell you that this is not easy. I'm going to be quick because I think somebody else wants to say something, too.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, you had a spot on the list which was ceded to someone else. Then we have Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. It's getting a little bit confusing with all the notes coming and going, so I'm just going in the order as best I can.

Mr. Oberle: Okay. Very quickly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, that we have a right and a very important right of freedom to disagree, but we don't have a freedom to harm. Sometimes rights collide and clash, and we have to recognize that we're talking about a right to harm here, which I don't think we have. We know that speech harms. If it didn't, then this Legislature and Legislatures around the world have wasted a lot of time talking about bullying in the last little while. We know the harm that bullying can do. It causes suicides; it's awful.

My parents chose this country for a reason. My parents along with so many other immigrants left places where it was okay to discriminate, it was okay to single out, and it was okay to do harm. They chose Canada. Now, if Canada has been aggressive on human rights, maybe that's why, because so many of them came here escaping systems of persecution.

Mr. Speaker, this is a province where I want to raise my children and want them to raise their children. Just as I want that for my children, my grandchildren, I want this place to be open and welcoming and accepting of newcomers. Most of all, I want it to be home to them.

I'll stop my comments there.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you have about 30 seconds.

Mr. Bilous: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak. I'm opposed to this motion for a myriad of reasons, and I'm going to try to rattle off our guests that are here from around the province who are also opposed to this motion: the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary; Possibilities in Motion Foundation; Disabilities Action Hall; Men Action Network Calgary; Vietnamese youth group; the Women's Centre; the Women's Centre, Cambodian community; Chilean Canadian Community Association; Faculty of Social Work; HIV link; Our Nation on Mission Society; Edmonton Multicultural Coalition; Filipino Retirees' Association; the Aboriginal community; and many other organizations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I hesitate to rise and interrupt, but the time for the debate has elapsed.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you have five minutes as the sponsor of the motion to conclude debate.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would like to request unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Mr. Saskiw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to everyone today for all of their arguments. I'd like to thank the Minister of Justice, Airdrie, and the Minister of Infrastructure for their arguments in support of this motion, but I'd also like to very much thank the others who were opposed to it, who made very passionate speeches in advocacy for their argument.

In particular, I'd like to thank the leader of the Liberal opposition for being exceptionally passionate. What happened to you and your family is disgusting and appalling. Those, however, are examples of what I believe are hate crimes that should be covered by the Criminal Code, where there is real punishment and jail time that ensues if someone goes that far.

I'd like to address one of the last comments about harm. There are limits to free speech. If there is harm incurred, there are all sorts of laws in Canada that deal with that. There's libel and defamation. If it goes into the realm of being a hate crime, it's the Criminal Code. This motion has nothing to do with speech that causes harm. It's about free speech in Alberta, to have the right to offend another person without being prosecuted.

Of course, one also has to look at the opposite side, where if someone is accused of these provisions, they have no right to a lawyer. They have no right to even know their accuser. There are no rules of evidence that apply, and there are no costs that are applied if the person is found to be innocent, even if it's found that the claim was vexatious and frivolous.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen cases where individuals have been found innocent and have been exonerated but after years and years of going through the process and after hundreds, tens of thousands, and even up to a hundred thousand dollars in legal costs. I believe that those types of serious cases should be before the courts, that there should be the full judicial process, and that if those people are found guilty, they should be punished to the fullest extent of the law rather than going through this other process.

I believe it's for these reasons that the Premier, the Minister of Justice, as well as the Justice critic for the Liberal Party agree with my position. It's because we have a fundamental agreement that in a free, fair, and democratic society, you have the right to state your opinion and you have the right to say your belief without being prosecuted by a state-sanctioned commission.

Mr. Speaker, I would just close by saying that the federal government has repealed section 13 of the Canadian Human Rights Act. If we as a Legislature repeal section 3(1)(b) of the Alberta Human Rights Act, we would be the freest province in the freest country in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes debate on Motion 502, brought forward by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 502 lost.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 18, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. O Holy Creator, fill our hearts with your love, fill our minds with your wisdom, and watch over our actions with your caring eye and guiding hand. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Hon. Dr. Hedy Fry, who is seated in your gallery. She is accompanied by her assistant, Ryan Cotter, who is seated in the public gallery. Dr. Fry has been the Member of Parliament for Vancouver Centre since 1993, when she defeated incumbent Kim Campbell. She also served as the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development in Prime Minister Martin's government and is now the federal Liberal Health critic. She is here to remind us that it's time to recommit to the Canada health accord, which expires later this year. She has been a vocal, passionate advocate for the rights of women, LGBTQ minorities, and the victims of HIV and AIDS and will be speaking tonight at MacEwan University about sex, gender, and politics. I would ask Dr. Fry and Mr. Cotter to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a great friend of Alberta, the counties of Forty Mile and Cypress, and the town of Bow Island. In your Speaker's gallery is Alan Hyland, who very capably and diligently represented the constituents of Cypress and Cypress-Red Cliff, serving in this Legislature for 18 years, from 1975 to 1993. He then continued to serve as mayor of Bow Island and still is a town councillor. To this day Alan is extremely active in volunteer work, nonprofit fundraising, and advocating for the citizens of Cypress-Medicine Hat, from the 24-hour Wild Horse border crossing to the Alberta eastern trade corridor. Alan has also been a hundred per cent willing to share advice and information with me to help better represent constituents. He does this any time over breakfast at Bobby's restaurant in Bow Island. Alan Hyland, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature a very distinguished former member, my predecessor, and my mentor, Denis Ducharme, who is sitting in the members' gallery. I would ask him to rise and accept our warmest applause.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you the 30 sharpest and brightest students of Velma E. Baker school, located in your constituency, Edmonton-Mill Creek. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Lynn Peacock, and four parent helpers. Now I will ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 61 students from Afton elementary. They're accompanied by Mrs. Audrey Letourneau, Mr. Sean MacGregor, and Mr. Scott Slatter. Afton is an arts school, and the young students in Afton would be described as artistic, intelligent, energetic. "Awesome" is another word to describe them. In fact, they coined a new word, "fantabulous." It's a combination of fabulous and fantastic. They're amongst the best and brightest students in our province and our country. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a little secret, if you wouldn't mind keeping it. My favourite school is coming in at 2 o'clock, so if you could all just keep that secret, I'd really appreciate it. There are three classes from Victoria school that are joining us. I tell you, these students are cool, they're smart, they're artistic, they're very with it, hard working, and daring. If you would please welcome them to the Assembly. They'll be in at 2 o'clock, but I'm sure if you welcome them loudly enough, they'll hear it.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there other students or student groups?

If not, let us move on, then, to other guests, starting with St. Albert, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am so pleased to introduce to you and through you two outstanding women who are amazing advocates for families in my constituency of St. Albert. These ladies are known for their inspiring dedication in supporting and assisting parents and children at the Family Resource Centre, which has been providing preventative family social services in the city of St. Albert for over 30 years. These remarkable ladies are Mrs. Sandy Biener and Mrs. Kristi Rouse. They are sitting in the public gallery. I ask them now to rise and receive the warm acknowledgement of my colleagues in the House.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce some very dedicated professionals who are here in recognition of Nutrition Month. Joining us today are Laura Coleman, who is the former president of the Alberta Pharmacy Students' Association; Doug Cook, who is the executive director and registrar of the College of Dietitians; and Karen Boyd, regional director for Dietitians of Canada.

The College of Dietitians and Dietitians of Canada have set up information booths on the first floor of our Legislature in the rotunda today. They're providing invaluable information on nutrition and its importance in preventing chronic disease. There's so much more to say, but you can find it all on cookspiration.com, the exciting details. Meanwhile student pharmacists are pre-screening for preventable health ailments such as high blood pressure and diabetes. I just got checked, and I'd encourage all of my hon. colleagues, all visitors to the Legislature, everyone who works here, guests, and staff to visit our special guests here today for a wealth of wellness information.

I would now like to invite all of our guests to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you my guests Dale and Judy Swaré. Judy is a retired banker, Dale a retired teacher. Judy volunteers at five organizations in the community, and Dale has started a second career. Later today I will be tabling a letter that Dale and Judy sent to the Premier underlining the tragic mismanagement of health care in Alberta and how it directly affects the quality of life for people like Dale and Judy. I'd ask them now to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

University of Calgary

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the demand for postsecondary education in Calgary exceeds capacity. Calgary is the largest city in Alberta and the third-largest municipality in Canada. It's also the fastest growing metropolitan area in the country, expected to reach 1.5 million by 2019.

With a young population, demand for postsecondary education in Calgary is also on the rise. Demand at the University of Calgary is increasing as evidenced by the ratio of applicants to the offers of admission. The ratio is the highest of any other peer institution in the province. The University of Calgary received 2.85 applications for every undergraduate student accepted and 4.13 applications for every graduate student accepted in the fall of 2013. Alberta Innovation and Advanced Education estimates that by 2020 there will be a shortage of at least 4,147 spaces at the University of Calgary.

While the metropolitan population of Calgary is 1,214,000, 5 per cent more than metro Edmonton at 1.15 million, postsecondary enrolment in Calgary is 17 per cent less. Facility capacity, current and under construction, is only 69,765, and that is a difference of 17 per cent less than in Edmonton. The ratio of population per postsecondary space in Calgary is 20.3 to 1, and it's 16.6 to 1 in Edmonton, a difference of 18 per cent.

In order to address the urgent need for more student capacity, the University of Calgary submitted a proposal to expand undergraduate and graduate enrolment by a very modest 1,292 students over five years at an annual cost of $17.4 million. The proposal would result in increased enrolment in engineering, education, law, medicine, nursing, social work, business, and veterinary medicine and will help alleviate the unmet demand for higher education in Calgary and southern Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by St. Albert.

Member's Decision to Leave Political Party

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was just over four years ago that I made one of the most difficult decisions in my life, and I remember that day vividly, driving up from Calgary to Edmonton for a press conference to announce to my family, my friends, my colleagues, and Albertans that this government had lost its way. It had quit listening to Albertans. After 17 years of sitting on that side of the House, I was leaving the PC Party.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to rehash why I made that decision, but I do want members to know that I have been in the same boat that I know many of them across the aisle are in today. I did not leave the PC Party on a whim. I agonized over it for weeks, and I agonized over it for months. I knew I would be leaving behind a group of people that I had spent much of my life with, people whose families I knew dearly, friends who had gone to bat for me from the day I leapt into politics, colleagues that I stood shoulder to shoulder with during five election campaigns.

I knew that leaving the party wasn't just going to be difficult; I knew it was going to be hell. And for a while, Mr. Speaker, it was. I faced attacks on my character, my integrity, and, worst of all, on my family. Some of these things that were said about me still hurt to this day, but – you know what? – it got better. It got better once I realized that not only had I made the right decision for me, but it was also the right decision for those I was elected to represent.

If you're anything like me, the decision to run for office was not an easy one, but in the end we all took that leap. Now, here we are, sitting in this Chamber, many of you with another agonizing decision to make. Mr. Speaker, I can't tell these members what decision is right for them, but I can tell the ones who already know in their heart of hearts: yes, it is terrifying; no, it won't be easy, and yes, it may get nasty, but, members, it will get better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Family Resource Centre in St. Albert

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize an incredible organization from my constituency, the St. Albert Family Resource Centre. The St. Albert Family Resource Centre and its wonderful, hard-working staff have been providing preventative social services in the city of St. Albert for over 30 years. When the centre started in 1982, there were three individuals. Today the centre has grown to 14 staff and 16 facilitators, who provide a wide range of programs for the families and parents. Not only does the centre serve residents from St. Albert, but many families from northern Edmonton and from our surrounding rural communities also enjoy the great services that the resource centre provides.

To my knowledge, the family resource centre and parent link centres both provide very similar resources and support to families. However, our family resource centre does not receive the same amount of funding and promotion as the parent link centres, which belong to the provincial network. St. Albert Family Resource Centre is funded by Edmonton and area child and family services region 6, St. Albert family and community support services, and the United Way of the Alberta Capital Region. Other revenue is generated through membership fees, fees for service, fundraising, and donations. If the St. Albert Family Resource Centre were able to obtain parent link designation, the centre would be able to expand their programs and make their services more accessible to parents and families.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the St. Albert Family Resource Centre and all their staff for providing invaluable services to the St. Albert community as well as our surrounding communities. It's my sincere wish that the organization will be a part of the parent link centre network in the future as they continue to do amazing work for our families in St. Albert.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Government Policies

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This current crisis engulfing the PC government has its roots in the broken promises by this government from the last election. The PC promise to end child poverty disappeared entirely from the government's budgets, throne speeches, and talking points. The PC promise for stable and predictable funding for postsecondary education went out the window, with a catastrophic budget last year and a half-hearted attempt to make it up this year. The PC promise to protect vulnerable Albertans was utterly shattered two years in a row, with cuts to the seniors drug benefit, services to Albertans with disabilities, and cuts to income support programs.

Mr. Speaker, the PCs deliberately misled Albertans during the election about what kind of government they would be. Albertans had a vision for a better province in the last election, the kind of province where public services would receive stable, predictable funding and increases, the kind of province where action on crucial issues like child poverty wasn't just a cynical election promise but something that we all agreed we needed to take real action on.

Now with the province littered with broken PC promises, all we're talking about in this Legislature is government waste. Now, that suits the Wildrose opposition just fine, Mr. Speaker, because when it comes down to their vision for the province, it really isn't that much different from that of this PC government: same policies, same corporate backers, and the same kind of blatant attempts to mislead Albertans about where they really stand.

But, Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve better than either of these conservative parties. Albertans deserve a government that will actually keep its promises and that will definitely stand up for all Alberta families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Health and Wellness Framework

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's population is aging, and the associated health care costs pose a serious challenge to our health care system. Some people call this a social tsunami. However, this challenge is an anticipated one, one that gives us opportunities to respond with a new framework that fundamentally transforms how we approach health care.

Alberta is leading the nation in many ways, as we all know. We are the economic engine of the country. In 2012 we led the nation in employment, creating 87 per cent of the new jobs in the whole of Canada. We also led the nation in population growth, attracting talent from all over the world. We led the nation in quality of life, and we enjoy the highest quality of life index as it stands now.

We have every reason to lead the nation in developing a new health care framework in order to approach health care in a very different way. One possible solution is to take a wellness approach to sustain our public health care system. According to the wellness foundation the focus of wellness is evidence-based actions that have been shown to avoid or remove the root causes of health care problems. These include addressing numerous well-established risk factors, including physical inactivity, unhealthy eating, tobacco use, alcohol misuse, and preventing adverse childhood experiences and injury.

Mr. Speaker, March is Nutrition Month, and as we speak, our government is hosting nutritionists and student pharmacists with displays in our Legislature, downstairs.

Health care is a shared responsibility among individuals, communities, and governments. Mr. Speaker, we must work together to ensure Alberta's population remains as healthy as possible.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we proceed with the daily Routine and Oral Question Period, I would like to make a brief statement about the rotation for questions during Oral Question Period and also for Members' Statements. Revisions to the rotations are required due to changes in caucus membership pertaining to the Member for Calgary-Foothills and the Member for Calgary-Varsity, who are now independent members of this Assembly.

Adapting and applying past practices to this current arrangement of independents, the Member for Calgary-Foothills is entitled to question 6 on day 2 of the Oral Question Period rotation. The Member for Calgary-Varsity is entitled to question 6 on day 3 of the Oral Question Period rotation. For each of these sitting days in the rotation the remaining caucuses each move down one position for questions 7, 8, and 9. The PC caucus, which was at question 9, is moved to question 21, and subsequently the Wildrose question moves from question 21 down to question 22. The remainder of the rotation on days 2 and 3 does not change. This will give the Member for Calgary-Varsity, the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo one question every four days, which replicates the Oral Question Period rotation in the fall sitting of 2013, where each independent member was entitled to one question per week. Hon. members, please be advised that today is rotation day 1, so to speak, in terms of question period.

Now, with respect to the rotation for Members' Statements, this has also been modified to provide for one statement by each independent member every third week. Applying this principle, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is entitled to the first of these members' statements on Thursday, March 20. Calgary-Foothills will then be recognized on Thursday, April 10, and Calgary-Varsity will be recognized on Thursday, April 17.

Hon. members, you will find the revised Oral Question Period rotation on your desks, and I will be distributing shortly to each of your offices a revised projected sitting days calendar to reflect the changes in the Members' Statements rotation, which I just explained.

Now, just before we start the clock for Oral Question Period, please be reminded that you have a maximum of 35 seconds for each question and a maximum of 35 seconds for each answer. I will do my best once again to enforce these time limits as strictly as I can. Finally, be reminded that there are to be no preambles to supplementary questions after main question 5.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let me recognize the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for question 1.

Alberta Health Services Executive Compensation

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services has a new chief executive officer, Vickie Kaminski. She certainly has a difficult job ahead of her, and we wish her well. I'd like to start by giving the minister credit for one thing. We combed through Ms Kaminski's contract and found no evidence of the country-club clause that gave past health executives up to $15,000 a year in memberships to exclusive clubs. This is progress. Can the Health minister assure Albertans that no current AHS executive has this ridiculous entitlement?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows the answer to this question. I will start off by thanking her for her compliments with respect to Ms Kaminski. We're very much looking forward to her leading Alberta Health Services. As the hon. member also knows, I asked Dr. John Cowell, the official administrator of AHS, to undertake a comprehensive review of executive compensation. That review has been made public. In addition to prescribing set salary ranges, it eliminates bonuses . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is one aspect of Ms Kaminski's contract that we do find concerning. In the real world executives are normally given severance of one month's pay for every year of service, yet she'll be entitled to severance of one month's pay for every month of service to a maximum of one year. Now, we like the fact that there is a maximum, so thank you for taking our advice on that, Minister, but doesn't the Health minister see that taxpayers are annoyed at paying rich severance packages to Health executives who only last for a few months?

Mr. Horne: You know, Mr. Speaker, what I think Albertans will come to appreciate very quickly is that they will be thankful that it wasn't left to the Official Opposition to recruit a senior leader for Alberta Health Services in this province. If that were the case, we would not have someone of Ms Kaminski's calibre joining Alberta Health Services. This is the CEO of the fifth-largest employer in the country, the largest health care organization in Canada, certainly larger than in many developed countries. These are appropriate terms and conditions for this appointment.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand the minister had quite a time convincing somebody to take this job, so I guess we should count ourselves lucky that we got somebody in it.

Speaking of severance, though, even though Alberta Health Services has a new CEO, I want to ask about the former CEO Dr. Chris Eagle. He resigned from his post in October, but he said that he was going to stay on with AHS until this fall doing, quote, special projects. Now, I suspect this was just a way to mask the fact that he was being paid a $580,000 severance, but I could be wrong. Could the Health minister explain in detail the specific projects Dr. Eagle is working on and what . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the greatest challenge in recruiting senior-level health talent to this province is the hon. members opposite and their constant undermining of Alberta Health Services and also the front-line staff that deliver care in this province. The hon. member knows full well the terms and conditions surrounding Dr. Eagle's departure. He was a product of an earlier era that provided for much more generous severance packages than we see today with Ms Kaminski. He is involved in some high-level, senior projects within the organization, and he is working out that notice period, not being paid . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I'd love to know what those high-level projects are, Minister. We'll try again another day.

Mathematics Curriculum

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, parents across Alberta are demanding that this government end its failed experiment in new math and get back to basics. International and national assessments have our children's math scores dropping. The government's failure to teach our kids basic math has resulted in Alberta math scores continuing to head in the wrong direction. Meanwhile, the minister continues to ignore the outcry from parents. Why won't he just restore the practice of teaching basic math skills to elementary school children in Alberta?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, day after day we get the same question, and we give the same answer. The answer is that we will, and we are. It's not a matter of old rote memorization versus inquiry-based methods of teaching. When we're talking about curriculum, we're talking about the what, not the how. What they're saying is that they don't trust teachers. They don't trust teachers to decide which methods work best for which kid. When we talk about curriculum, we're talking about what we're teaching and the objectives of that education system, not necessarily the teaching methods.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that teachers are complaining, too. A recent Edmonton Journal blog quoted an analysis by a teacher and former principal in Edmonton's public school system. He says, "The City University of New York conducted a meta-analysis of 164 studies on discovery learning. [It] concluded that 'unassisted discovery does not benefit learners.'" The minister is ignoring top teachers who warn that this government is gambling children's futures on unproven theories. Will the minister restore the practice of teaching basic math skills to elementary school students in Alberta?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, once again, they can't take yes for an answer. I said that we will, and we are. But it's not one or the other; it's both. As any teacher in the classroom will tell you, they need the latitude, they need the flexibility to decide how to reach each kid. This isn't just about rote memorization. Maybe they'd like us to remove the smart boards and bring back blackboards. A year ago they didn't believe in climate change either, so maybe there's hope that they'll evolve on this as well.

Ms Smith: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. They aren't, and they don't. As noted in a Calgary Herald column today, government education propaganda states, "We're preparing (Alberta students) for a future we can't imagine, and giving them the tools to succeed in work that doesn't yet exist." Apparently, the minister believes that in the future Alberta students won't need math skills. The minister should just admit that his department's approach to teaching math has failed. Will he restore the practice of teaching basic math skills to elementary school students in Alberta?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, on one hand they want us to change the curriculum, but on the next hand they don't support curriculum changes. We've just said that we're in the middle of a curriculum redesign, and part of that redesign is to reinforce the fundamentals, numeracy and literacy, and have those woven through all pieces of the curriculum. Yesterday they questioned our support of the trades. Well, Inspiring Education is calling for dual crediting, where we're bringing trades in, and we've got dual crediting going on in postsecondaries, industry, NAIT, and the polytechnics. Guess who's on those advisory groups for the curriculum? It's the Building Trades of Alberta, it's NAIT, it's the employers, but they don't support . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Greenwood, your third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Our kids need to memorize the times tables, and that just ain't happening.

Disaster Recovery Program Administration

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, back to the disaster of the disaster recovery program. Here's a story of how LandLink is dealing with the minister's order to start closing files. Richard Murray of High River started repairing his home on September 23 after getting permission in writing from LandLink to do so. He followed every step required and kept LandLink in the loop throughout. He was told on November 23 that all of his paperwork was in order, so he waited for payment. On March 11 he got a phone call from LandLink. His claim has been denied in full without explanation. Is this how the minister intends to close all . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows flat out that that's an outrageous – outrageous – statement. There have been almost 4,700 payments to individuals, totalling $48 million, since this disaster recovery program started. You know, if there are individual cases, I encourage the hon. member to share them. We will put them into the system and make sure that they're reviewed. I encourage individuals who have a concern with the DRP file to go through the appeals process as well.

Ms Smith: What's outrageous is that this minister still hasn't fired LandLink.

Richard Murray's circumstances are not unique. All over southern Alberta homeowners victimized by the flood are being revictimized by LandLink. We're now getting multiple reports that if a homeowner challenges or appeals any part of the DRP process, all DRP payments are put on hold. If you think the DRP got one little thing wrong, you get no further money or anything until the dispute is resolved. That makes me think that LandLink is being paid commission on the money that they don't pay out. To the minister: is LandLink being paid to shortchange flood victims?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, that is actually a very irresponsible statement. You know, this government is committed to supporting Albertans in ways that no other province could ever afford to do. We will be there for Albertans. We'll deliver through the disaster recovery program, and we will ensure that Albertans are looked after. If there are concerns that individual Albertans have, there's a process by which it will be resolved. We're here to see it through for Albertans.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, if there was nothing to hide, he would table the contract, and I've been asking him to do that.

This government has called last spring's flood a $6 billion event, yet in the community where more homes were destroyed than in all the other communities combined, less than $23 million has actually flowed through to homeowners who were devastated by the flood. The people most hurt are seeing nothing, but there seems to be plenty of money for companies that manage to score sole-source contracts from the government. To the minister: how much has LandLink been paid so far as a result of the 2013 floods?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very happy to table that information in this House. My understanding is that the administrative cost of delivering the disaster recovery program is in the order of a magnitude of 11 per cent of payout. That actually compares very favourably to the insurance industry, which is an over 20 to 25 per cent cost for delivering the payout. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to make that information available, and we'll go right back the last 20 years of DRP payments and make that information available.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Flood Recovery Communications Contract

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of contracts, after the flood Alberta Liberals called for a special auditor to conduct real-time monitoring of flood recovery related expenses. The Premier refused, and now we know why. Our FOIP request revealed that Executive Council, the Premier's own ministry, gave a quarter million dollar contract for flood recovery communications advice to Navigator, a PR firm headed by a long-time PC campaign strategist, Randy Dawson. To the Premier: where is your judgment? Why did you use public money to reward such an obvious PC insider?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's not about reward; it's about communicating. It's about having Albertans understand what's happening at a time of very high stress for Albertans. Albertans want to know what's going on. When the floods were on, people needed to know what was happening, when it was going to happen, and how their issues and concerns were going to be taken care of. That requires people to come to the table immediately, to work hard, and that's what this government did.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, a quarter of a million dollars: that's a lot of money.

Mr. Speaker, you'll have to forgive Albertans for being skeptical given previous lapses in the Premier's judgment with Tobaccogate, Travelgate, and now this. The nature of this contract raises some very serious questions. Was there a competitive tendering process? What services were so unique that they could only be provided by this one PC-led PR firm? To the Premier. You have the highest priced Public Affairs Bureau in the country. Why was this contract necessary at all?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, when the flood happened, this government mobilized quickly and addressed the concerns of Albertans, moved immediately to help Albertans who were in need and to make sure Albertans who were under stress understood that the government was there and was going to work with them to deal with those issues. We mobilized immediately. We did what we needed to do to make sure that Albertans were well cared for during the most difficult time in their life.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it seems like they're addressing the concerns of a PC insider, not the very people who needed the help.

One of the very few obligations listed in this quarter million dollar contract was to provide logistical support for the half-day flood symposium. Interestingly, during Alberta's centennial the Public Affairs Bureau managed to do a fine job of co-ordinating the logistics for something as minor as Her Majesty the Queen's royal visit. To the Premier: if the PAB is good enough for royalty, why isn't it good enough for you and your government?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a classic case of people who think that they can govern by looking in the rear-view mirror and analyzing everything that happened in the context of what they think today. [interjections]

What happened in June of 2013 was that Albertans faced the most massive natural disaster that's happened in this province and perhaps in North America. This government responded; our Premier responded. Albertans knew, because we responded, that their issues would be taken care of, and they were taken care of. We recovered from this disaster better than any other place in North America. It was a big disaster, but Albertans knew that their government and their Premier was there.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Could we please cut out the interjections? They're really not necessary. They're coming from both sides, and that's enough.

Let's move on to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is transit operator appreciation day, and I know they get as much respect as electricians on the other side of the House.

Government Work Plan

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are interested in the Premier's work plan and what's in it. Does the work plan given to the Premier by her party include steps to reverse cuts to PDD programs, to poverty reduction or the seniors' benefit or to bring down the price of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that it's not necessarily appropriate or within the rules to talk about party politics in the House, but I can tell this hon. member that the plan that this government has, this party has, this Premier has, and this caucus has is to work hard for the next two years to ensure that we continue to have the opportunity to provide good government for Albertans each and every day.

Mr. Mason: Good luck with that, Deputy Premier.

Does the work plan involve keeping the Premier's election promise for affordable child care? Or how about the promise to eliminate child poverty in five years?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, while developing a platform is a very important role of the party and talking with party members about what should be in that platform is a very important role of the party, perhaps the hon. member would like to know that door-knocking in his constituency might also be a very important part of that plan. This government, this caucus, and particularly this party, because he's raising party business in the House, likes to plan to listen to Albertans, to work with Albertans, to address the issues of Albertans while we build the future of Alberta and work with Albertans to develop the kind of place where our children and our grandchildren can live and work and raise their families.

Mr. Mason: Well, good luck with that, Mr. Deputy Premier.

Does the Premier's work plan include measures to clean up the tailings ponds in the oil sands or to keep jobs here by refining more bitumen in Alberta? Or how about repealing bills 45 and 46? Albertans want to know.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member continues to want to talk about a so-called work plan from a party perspective, but let me talk about a government perspective. This is a government who builds Alberta. This is a government who builds forward, who looks for the opportunity to create the kind of place where Albertans can live and work and raise their families in Alberta, trade out into the world, a place where it's the best place in North America, perhaps in the world to live and to raise your family. That's the kind of Alberta we want, that's the kind of work plan we have, and that's how we're working going forward, focusing on the kind of place where people can have a quality of life and raise their family, get their education, and really pay back as the citizens of our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

2:10 Infrastructure Maintenance and Repair

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government loves to talk about the so-called building Alberta plan. What it doesn't speak to is the unacceptable job it is doing on maintaining Alberta; that is, ensuring the facilities that we already have don't fall into disrepair. A FOIP – I love those FOIPs – of Alberta Infrastructure shows over a dozen health facilities listed in poor condition. These are just a few that we know of right now. How can the Infrastructure minister ensure that a government busy putting up flashy Building Alberta signs isn't forgetting about the critical infrastructure that we need today?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? The fact is that we work with Alberta Health Services all the time, get their advice on which buildings need to be repaired. We work with the list they give us. They do the repairs. We monitor to make sure the money gets spent where it's supposed to. We'll continue to do that because that's how we actually keep things in good order. If the hon. member actually has examples of places that she genuinely feels are in bad repair, we'd of course be happy to hear about that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, I have them, Mr. Speaker. Lots of them.

Given that residents in Boyle are concerned about losing health services in their community after a four-year Alberta Health Services plan to repurpose this facility into a primary care clinic was shelved, can the Minister of Infrastructure ensure residents that they won't lose local services altogether by consolidating them all within 50 kilometres?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will know, responsible planning and delivery of health care services involves looking at all of the services in geographical areas across the province, ensuring that we're making the most of the equipment and the staffing and the facilities that we have available, and that means centralizing some services in appropriate areas within those geographical areas, which we call AHS zones. We'll continue to do that work. The residents of Boyle can be assured by this government that they'll continue to have access to all of the health care services they need just as their neighbours across the province do.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. Minister, let's try another one. Given that the Wainwright health centre, according to Alberta Health Services, has deteriorated to the extent that continued safe building operations cannot be taken for granted and given that the facility – now, listen to this one – is at risk of being shut down if further sewage system failures occur, why after at least four years of being on Alberta Health Services' priority plan has this government not taken any action?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Alberta has the highest number of hospitals per capita than any other province in this country bar none, 99 approved hospitals. We have proposed in Budget 2014 a capital budget of $2.6 billion covering 24 projects. The issue of infrastructure maintenance is an issue in every province in this country. We provide for that in our budget. We have more work than most provinces because of the number of hospitals that we're working with. The quality of care in this province is not in question and should never be in question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Livingstone-MacLeod.

Highway Maintenance and Rehabilitation

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A robust transportation system is vital for all Albertans, whether they need to get products to market, to get to and from work, to get their kids to school, whatever. Over the past number of years this government has invested billions in major capital projects like building the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads or twinning highway 63, but many Albertans worry about the condition of the highways and bridges that we already have. To the Minister of Transportation: what is this government doing to make sure that Alberta's existing highways infrastructure, especially secondary highways like 661 in my Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to this member for always advocating on behalf of rural Alberta. Budget 2014 is great news for Alberta's smaller roads and highways and bridges. Over the next three years we've allocated $735 million for highway rehabilitation. That's an increase of $284 million from Budget 2013. We'll be able to rehabilitate 2,500 kilometres of highways in Alberta over the next three years.

Ms Kubinec: To the same minister: how are these rehabilitation projects prioritized, and how can municipalities know that projects in their communities are on the list?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, my department has a very technical method of measuring highway condition based on pavement roughness. Once highway condition has been determined, it is placed on Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program. Where it falls in that program depends entirely on the condition of the pavement, and safety is the number one reason for looking at these conditions. Safety is always our number one consideration when determining projects in our three-year plan.

Ms Kubinec: To the same minister: is this renewed focus on maintenance and rehabilitation enough to clear the backlog of projects that has built up over the last several years?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has more than 28,000 kilometres of paved provincial roads. With a network this vast we'll never be done rehabilitating roads in this province. It's true that when times were tough over the last few years, we had to make some tough decisions with respect to rehabilitation and maintenance, but the extra $284 million dollars in this year's budget will go a long way to catching us up on that.

The Speaker: Livingstone-MacLeod, followed by Red Deer-North.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Cost

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Finance minister let the cat out of the bag when he said that the southwest ring road project will cost $5 billion. Calgary residents need this project, but they want it at the best possible price. Yet it's been reported that the $5 billion could produce three replica south Calgary hospitals. To the Minister of Transportation: if the 46-kilometre Stoney Trail east freeway cost $1.4 billion, why in the world is the 41-kilometre west and southwest ring road projected to cost a whopping $5 billion?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I thought I might take this first piece because I understand that the Calgary Herald is quoting a statement that I made at a chamber of commerce luncheon some couple of weeks ago. The $5 billion number was an estimate that we used during the discussions of the ring road that is going to be happening. As I mentioned in the speech to this House on the budget, this is an agreement that took 50 years in the making to work with the aboriginals and First Nations, to work with Calgary residents, to work with the municipalities. The hon. member knows that this is a very important project not only for Calgary but for southern Alberta, to move those through. We anticipate that it's going to be around . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the Minister of Finance already announced the cost of the project at $5 billion and given his government is considering a P3 to build and finance it, then how does the Minister of Transportation plan on getting the best possible value from bidders when he's already let it slip how much money is in the envelope?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this is quite hilarious. Last week they were trying to get me to commit to a number. Now that we have, they're saying that we shouldn't have, but in fact it was the minister of Treasury Board that came out with that number. That's the reason I didn't want to come out with that last week. The $5 billion is a rough number. Until we put it out for tender and have the bids come in, you can't have an exact number.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that it's four times the other one, you've got to wonder.

To the Transportation minister, then: given that this government said that it was considering a P3 to build this ring road project, if the government doesn't get any bidders, like what's happening to the schools, what's your plan B for this?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, there you go with speculation again. I'm quite confident we'll get lots of bidders on our P3 project on these ring roads. We've always done that. We've built pretty well all the ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary under P3s, and we've saved the taxpayers of Alberta over $2.5 billion building P3 roads.

Penalties for Drinking and Driving

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm outraged that a young man under the age of 18 can have a 24-hour suspension for drinking, two 30-day suspensions for driving while impaired, an impaired driving charge that is thrown out of court, and still be allowed to carry on drinking and driving until he finally kills a hard-working, responsible citizen of Red Deer. When a person continues to drink and drive and kills someone, this is not an accident; it is vehicular homicide. The bereaved family is then made to feel that the justice system is more concerned with the rights of the killer than it is with rights of the innocent victim and his family. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: how can a young man . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First off, I want to thank this member for her tireless advocacy on behalf of victims of drunk drivers. Thank you very much. It's very important to me as Justice minister that we always put our victims first, and that's why I'm also very happy that we've introduced legislation that prevents future victims. Now with new legislation if you have a graduated driver's licence, as did this gentleman, if there's any blood-alcohol level at all, there's an immediate 30-day suspension and an immediate seven-day vehicle seizure. I'm very proud of this government's record on this drunk-driving file.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm assuming this is not sub judice, then.

Mr. Denis: No.

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister, for clarifying.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. He did have a graduated driver's license.

How is it possible that a person in Calgary is killed by a man who's had three previous drunk-driving charges? Is there no way that we can stop these drunk drivers and get them off the road?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you say that this is not sub judice. It's sounding like it is, but proceed if it isn't.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As this member had mentioned, this is a Criminal Code issue, and I've advocated time and time again to the federal Justice minister, the Hon. Peter MacKay, at our meetings that there should be mandatory minimum sentencing for drunk drivers who cause death or serious bodily harm. I know this member supports that. It's time for the opposition, Wildrose, to join us in this particular fight.

Mrs. Jablonski: Same minister. Why are there no minimum sentences for someone who is driving and drunk and commits vehicular homicide? Why don't we have minimum sentences?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, that's a great question because I feel that there should be mandatory minimums for drunk drivers who actually kill someone or cause serious bodily harm to somebody. You know, a couple of years ago when we were at the doors talking about our strong record on this particular file, there were members opposite that kept on setting up beer coasters, these little beer coasters mocking victims of this particular issue. It's time that we stand up against drunk drivers.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Airdrie, your point of order has been noted at 2:22.

Let us move on to Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Legal Aid

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A publicly funded legal aid system is essential to our democracy. It ensures that even if you can't afford a private lawyer, you can be represented in court with assistance from legal aid except in Alberta. When I asked the minister a question last week, he seemed more intent on blaming the feds than in answering the question, so I'll try again. To the Minister of Justice: why is the Justice ministry funding legal aid so meagerly that people on assured income for the severely handicapped cannot qualify?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, legal aid is a very valued service, but it is an independent society, and it sets its own independent criteria. I say again that this government continues to fund legal aid. For the federal government it's time to step up. We fund over 80 per cent of legal aid in this province, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much. Does the Minister of Justice not see the connection between provincial government funding of this program and the cut-off criteria that legal aid has to apply?

Mr. Denis: I definitely agree with this member. There's a connection with the federal government's lack of funding of the legal aid program. We fund over 80 per cent, Mr. Speaker, and we're going to continue to fund this amount for vulnerable Albertans and for providing access to justice through legal aid.

Ms Blakeman: It appears he doesn't want his job, wants to give it to the feds.

Well, back to the same minister: could the minister please explain what mentally disabled recipients of the assured income for the severely handicapped should do if their AISH benefits cause them to make too much money to qualify for legal aid or a single mom working full-time on minimum wage who also makes too much money to get legal aid assistance? What would you recommend they do?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, the Legal Aid Society of Alberta sets its own criteria. We'll continue our funding of legal aid. We'll also continue our advocacy for the federal government to live up to its obligations.

Calgary School Infrastructure

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, many families move to mature neighbourhoods because of their access to local community schools, yet year after year this PC government refuses to fund routine maintenance and upkeep in our existing schools, turning simple fixes into major repairs. Today because of this government's neglect, Edmonton Catholic school board is forced to vote on the closure of four mature neighbourhood schools that they can't afford to repair. To the Minister of Education: why do you insist on punishing mature schools in mature neighbourhoods?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth with respect to what this member is saying. Edmonton Catholic is not voting on closing schools because of the disrepair of the schools; they're voting on amalgamating students into one location because they think it's potentially in the best interest of the students with respect to programming. That's what we're here for. We're here to deliver education, not to manage buildings. I don't disagree with the member in terms of that I wish we could give them more money to maintain their buildings. But the truth of the matter is that there are also large capital reserves across the province. At the end of the day we're interested in instruction and programs and opportunities, and sometimes that means operating a building has to come . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that creative programming like the sports program Edmonton Catholic brought in at St. Mark can attract parents to mature neighbourhood schools and given that St. Mark narrowly avoided closure last year but now enrolment has increased by 30 per cent, why doesn't the minister support schools boards, parents, and teachers who have creative solutions to avoid school closures?

Mr. J. Johnson: It's a great question, Mr. Speaker, and that's why I'm very happy that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought the parents and the school board in to meet with me some time ago to talk about this situation. I commend the school board for taking on this challenge, because it's a difficult decision. That's one of the reasons why under this Premier we stepped forward and provided money ahead of time for that school board so they could have certainty that when they go out and develop those programs and develop those creative opportunities and make those tough decisions, they know that this Premier and this government will stand behind them and that we'll provide the funding so they can deliver the best programs possible.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Still closing schools, Minister.

Given that the Calgary board of education's new capital plan asks for over $300 million in school modernizations alone and given that over 19 of those modernizations have been requested by the board for more than five years, will the minister commit to funding these modernizations before more Alberta schools are too costly for repair?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think this member agrees with me in that we elected the right Premier and that's why we've got such a strong investment in the schools and the infrastructure. We've never had such a big capital program for education, and that's due to one person, the person that was talking about it during the election. This is the only party that was talking about that during the election. She's to be commended because we delivered on it with 50 new schools and 70 modernizations, and we'll continue investing in that capital.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by St. Albert.

Postsecondary Noninstructional Student Fees

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year hundreds of millions of dollars in operating grants are given to postsecondary institutions, and taxpayers have an expectation that those funds are used to provide basic services to students. The reality is that mandatory noninstructional fees are being charged to students for such basics as safety or academic advising or hallways as a way to work around the tuition cap. To the Deputy Premier: how are taxpayers receiving value for their investment in postsecondary when the basics aren't even being covered?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that the hon. member's assumptions are actually wrong, first of all. We fund the postsecondary system in this province quite well compared to other jurisdictions, and we get good-quality education as a result of that. We also get a lot of student spaces as a result of that. Now, is there more demand? Always. Are there more things that can be done? Always. Are there different things that could be done? Always. So postsecondary institutions look to their finances – they have boards – to determine how they're going to finance the things that they want to do on their campuses to be the best that they can be.

Mr. Pedersen: Given that this PC government all too often uses fee hikes and service charges as an easy escape instead of working hard to reduce red tape and get spending under control and given that we are hearing that noninstructional fees are now being used to cover academic salaries, how can Albertans be confident that this minister is up to the job of making sure taxpayers are getting the best return on their investment in postsecondary education?

Mr. Hancock: Well, if the question is how Albertans can be sure that this minister is up to the job, they only have to look at this minister's record of 17 years in this House and seven different departments without much in the way of public profile in the newspapers. As I used to say during the leadership process that I ran in: the reason you don't hear about me is because I never screwed up anything. There may be another explanation that somebody else wants to give of how Albertans can be assured that this minister is competent to do his job, but I'm satisfied that I come to work every day and give my best in that particular effort on behalf of good relations.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Second supplemental.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Ontario is the only province with a higher cost for an undergraduate education, why hasn't the minister gone to greater efforts to rein in mandatory noninstructional fees and reduce the cost of obtaining a postsecondary education for Alberta students?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this is actually a very serious topic. Every Albertan needs to be able to advance their education when and where they want to do it, and we have to ensure that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education. Now, education is still the best investment that an Albertan can make, and we need more Albertans to be looking to invest in their education right across the spectrum, whether it's a PhD or whether it's a trade or whether it's technology. We need Albertans to be educated. We work every day with our postsecondary system to make sure that those spaces and places are available at an affordable price for Alberta students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Parenting Resources in St. Albert

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A major component of the building Alberta plan is to build strong families and communities. The development of parent link centres in Alberta shows that our government values and invests in families and children. However, the city of St. Albert remains one of the few Alberta cities without a parent link centre. To the Minister of Human Services: can you please explain why my community of St. Albert does not have a parent link centre?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be quite honest, I wish I could have parent link centres in every single jurisdiction in this province because they provide very, very valuable resources. We have recently announced some new parent link centres – I did that in January – and they're based on the early development index. On this index we look at a series of different things and essentially see the progress that children have made when they enter kindergarten. St. Albert is a jurisdiction where children are actually entering kindergarten with a very, very strong footing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that St. Albert and surrounding communities are not assigned to any specific parent link centres, how can your ministry ensure that families and children in St. Albert are able to receive the services and programs they need?

Mr. Bhullar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that the member is very, very passionate about the work of the St. Albert Family Resource Centre, and I know we have Sandy and Kristi from the centre here today. That's one example of some of the great resources that are available in the city of St. Albert. The member is a very strong advocate for his community, and I will ensure that we continue to work together to see how we can better the services.

Mr. Khan: I do appreciate the kind words about our fabulous St. Albert Family Resource Centre.

To the same minister: given that the St. Albert Family Resource Centre has been providing preventative social services in the city of St. Albert and providing for surrounding regions such as Edmonton and our rural communities for over 30 years, will the minister please designate the St. Albert Family Resource Centre as part of the parent link centre?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would welcome the member to spend some time and effort with myself, and we can see what additional services we can add on. Essentially, some of this evaluation comes down to, unfortunately, limits on financial resources. There are some communities that rank in the high 20s and 30s on the early development index whereas St. Albert ranks down towards 15. Now, that means that the community has got some good things going for it. We want to support that, so I'll work with the member to see how we can advance services in St. Albert.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Strathmore Search and Rescue River Access

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall my constituency received some very disappointing news. Alberta Transportation sent the Strathmore fire hall a letter informing them that the department would be closing the boat launch on the highway 24 bridge. Since my meeting with the former Minister of Transportation last November, the department has fenced off the property and installed cement barriers along the riverbank to prevent boats from launching. Now, the obvious concern is that there are no launch sites for emergency service to this section of the Bow River below the Carseland weir. Why has the current Transportation minister not ensured that at least search and rescue will have access to the boat launch area?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know all the details of this particular project – there are a lot of projects in Alberta Transportation – but I will do some research on it. I do understand that it was not a legal boat launch, and my department is working with them to find an alternative method that will better suit their needs.

Mr. Hale: I have pictures from 2006, when it was a boat launch. You did the work already.

To the same minister: in relation to safety concerns, given that there is currently no immediate access to the river south of the Carseland weir and, again, given that most of the Strathmore search and rescue missions are on this side and that the closest boat launch is 30 miles away on the Siksika reserve, why has this government failed to make river access a priority and now put people's lives at risk?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, he might have a picture of a boat launch, but it wasn't an approved boat launch, and it wasn't permanent.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're working with them to try and find a more suitable situation for them to do their operations, and I'll continue to do that. You know, to know everything in this House off the top – if he has more specifics, it would be nice if he sent me the specifics ahead of time.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did talk specifics with the previous minister, and I would have hoped that he would have put this on your table because it is public safety. It's public safety.

Given that Wyndham provincial park is adjacent to this site and has the capacity for a boat launch and that, obviously, the Transportation minister doesn't seem to be too worried about this, will the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation take the initiative and build a boat launch at Wyndham to ensure search and rescue have access to the water?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that question. Indeed, one of the things that, of course, was tragic about last summer's floods was the degree of devastation and damage that was caused throughout southern Alberta, not the least of which was to our parks system. One of the, perhaps, opportunities this gives us is the possibility of relooking at the various functions of the various facilities and infrastructure we have in that area, including our provincial park system. If a boat launch is something that perhaps could be incorporated to provide both recreational opportunities as well as emergency services, I think that, actually, that's a good idea, something we could take a look at, and we will investigate it during the course of the rebuild.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Public Service Pensions

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue to receive many calls from my constituents on the proposed changes to the pension plan. People in their mid-career are being hit hard by the changes. I refer especially to those who are within the age range of 30 to 45 years. They are under the impression that they are going to receive less from their pension than they had anticipated. My question is for the minister of Treasury Board and Finance. How many people are impacted by these changes, and what is the rationale behind making these changes?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No doubt there are thousands of members of the public sector that are impacted by these changes, but the case for the change is solid. People are collecting pensions longer. The ratio of people paying into the plan is almost equal to the number of people that are collecting, and in some plans it's actually the other way. That's simply not sustainable. Changes are needed to ensure that these pensions are there for those 30- and 40-year-olds who will retire when they hit their 60s.

Mr. Speaker, as trustee of these plans and as the Minister of Finance we have a fiduciary duty and a responsibility to protect that pension promise of a guaranteed percentage of their annual income for the rest of their lives.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Minister. During recent meetings my constituents are telling me that according to their actuaries these plans are viable and do not require the changes proposed. Mr. Minister, what is the problem?

The Speaker: Mr. Minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you go to an actuary, you give him your assumptions. You say: here are the assumptions that I want you to use when you do the analysis of this plan. Unfortunately, some of the actuarial analysis that I've seen would say that the assumption is that the number of contributors is going to grow by 2 per cent a year. For many of these plans that's not the case. In fact, in the PSP plan there are the same number of contributors in 2013 as there were in 1993, but the number of retirees has almost doubled.

The second thing they use is the mortality tables. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, some of the reports that I've seen use old mortality tables. In other words, people are living longer, and they . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: my constituents are also expressing concern that the imposition of a contribution cap will reduce their defined benefits in the future. Is that true?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are going to be moving to a joint sponsorship, which means that the employers and the employees, the people who pay, will be making the decisions as to how those benefits and changes will be made in the future.

I can tell you that the contribution rate cap was put in place to address concerns that were expressed by the plan members and the employers about the ever-increasing contribution rates, because the only place they could go was to take more money out of the pockets of the employees. Some of these plans cost more than 25 per cent of the salaries. Those are some of the highest rates in Canada. We want our employees to have a competitive salary. We want them to be able to take home pay so that they can do the things they want to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-South West.

2:40 Queen Elizabeth II Highway Overpass at Balzac

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents and visitors in my constituency are raising serious concerns about the state of the highway 566 and QE II interchange in Balzac. Development in that area has skyrocketed, and most people use this interchange to access the CrossIron Mills megamall. Alberta Transportation recognized the need to widen that overpass and placed it on a three-year capital plan in 2011, but then they took it off. To the Transportation minister: I know that priorities change – we understand that – but, Minister, the traffic concerns here are getting worse, not better. Why did you take it off the list?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, if people have specific questions about specific intersections or boat launches or kilometres of road, it would do better to send me the information ahead of time, and I'll work with the constituents to find it. Politicizing the thing in the House isn't the way to get something done.

Mr. Speaker, we have a list of road projects, we set priorities, and if this one was bumped off the list, obviously it doesn't meet the priorities stacked up against the rest of the requests in the province.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, again, the former minister was made aware of the file. He ought to be aware of it, too.

Given that there have been two engineering studies done on this overpass, one stating that with the development in Balzac and area the overpass won't handle existing traffic, much less traffic increases, and given that that was back in 2009 and traffic has increased 24 per cent on the 566 since, again to the minister: why aren't you listening to the engineers? Can't you see this is a huge safety issue?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, without knowing all of the details, it's hard to comment, but I don't think the citizens of Alberta should pay for a developer to improve access to his establishment that he's going to make money on. The municipality approves development permits and asks the developer to pay for the improvements needed to access his site.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about two provincial highways here.

Traffic often backs up, in fact, on the QE II, on the overpass, all the way to the highway. Now, given that traffic is coming to a screeching halt on a major highway and given that even the RCMP are raising concerns about this, will you commit to putting this project back on the priority list, where it belongs, in the interest of public safety before it's too late?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's up to the municipality. If a development has increased the amount of traffic in the area, it's up to the developer to improve the highway even if it is a provincial highway. That's a cost of doing business. The rest of the taxpayers of Alberta shouldn't upfront the cost of that business to make a profit.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That concludes Oral Question Period for today.

Could we have unanimous consent to please revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you some tremendous community advocates from Edmonton-Glenora whom I've known for many years. I want to thank them for all of their volunteer efforts. We solve many problems together at the Glenora Community League. I'd like to acknowledge Ken and Connie Marshall and thank them for coming to the House.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, in 30 seconds we will finish off private members' statements. I believe Lacombe-Ponoka is up. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Russian Intervention in Ukraine

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand in opposition to the Soviet-style Russian neoimperialism of Vladimir Putin and his annexation of Ukraine's Crimea region. I am proud that the Ukrainian flag now flies at the Alberta Legislature so that we can all show our solidarity with the freedom-loving Ukrainians. It is unfortunate that our government decided to inject partisan politics into such a serious affair by withholding invitations for opposition parties at the flag-raising ceremony, but I digress.

Events are unfolding quickly in eastern Europe. There are reports of a Ukrainian base being stormed by Russian troops while in Moldova Russian-backed politicians are moving ahead with a request to be incorporated into the Russian Federation. The Republic of Georgia still has two regions under Russian occupation as well, Mr. Speaker.

Russia cannot be allowed to bully liberal democracies any longer, and we stand united with our federal counterparts in condemning and sanctioning all those involved in this injustice. Only a handful of so-called countries have moved to recognize this sham of a Russian takeover of Ukraine, and they include the largest bastions of horror in our world: Syria, North Korea, and Venezuela. These are Vladimir Putin's friends. Now we learn that Russia is sanctioning eastern European countries like Lithuania for condemning this takeover of sovereign land.

But there is hope, and there is support for our beleaguered friends in Ukraine. After all, Alberta has one of the largest Ukrainian populations in the world. Ukrainians helped build Alberta into the home that we all love today. Last week on behalf of the Wildrose Official Opposition I attended a rally by the Canadian Ukrainian Congress, that raised over $100,000 for fallen heroes of the Euromaidan. They are already remembered as those who fell for democracy and died to rid Ukraine of tyranny.

So I say once again: Slava Ukraini.

[Translation] Glory to Ukraine. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Thank you. And the response would be Heroyam slava.

[Translation] Glory to the heroes. [As submitted]

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of.

New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The existing legislation protects Albertans buying a new home. Sometimes when new legislation is introduced, there are minor modifications needed, and that's what these amendments to the New Home Buyer Protection Act are about. The proposed amendments are the result of extensive stakeholder consultation while preparing the regulations in 2013. I look forward to speaking more about this legislation.

I'm proud to table Bill 6, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act. I move that the bill be read a first time.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: We have several. Let's be as brief as we can, please.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first tabling I'm doing on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to the Premier by Dale and Judy Swaré, two constituents of Edmonton-Calder. Judy has been waiting for back surgery for almost a year. In this four-page letter she outlines the tragic deterioration of our health care system under this PC government as she has experienced it firsthand. She says, "In one of the richest economies in the world, where universal health care is constitutionally enshrined, explain the shocking failure of your government to deliver the most basic of these services and tell us what you intend to do about it."

My second tabling. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards our office received, asking this PC government to restore consistent, reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. These postcards were collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the U of A and are clear evidence the government is not listening to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary system that is both accessible and affordable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, the leader of the Liberal opposition, three tablings. The first is the appropriate number of copies of the letter that he wrote to the Premier recommending a special auditor.

The second is the appropriate number of copies of the contract worth $240,000, which is a result of our FOIP. This is the contract between the government and Navigator for special communications advice during the floods.

The last is, in fact, Navigator's web printoff of what they were paid as a result of various contracts with the government of Alberta.

May I continue with my tablings, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I have three tablings, and they're all about the government's push to change the pension. The first is from Jason Woo, who is a younger engineer with the city of Edmonton. He points out that this scheme would add 10 years to his career and points out the number of well-educated professionals working for civic governments, that this really challenges their loyalty or the reason for them to stay working for the public sector.

The second is an e-mail from a constituent who feels that as a taxpayer we have made an agreement with the public employees and that on his behalf we the public do not approve of the proposed measures. He points out that the majority of the people who will suffer the effects of this change in pensions are women.

Finally, a letter from Rhonda van Heyst, who started working in '78 as a nurse. She worked on a part-time basis to raise her children and be an active volunteer, and the factor changes are going to very much affect her. Nursing is a hard job. It's going to be really hard on her to keep going for that period of time.

None of them are too happy with what the government's doing. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the required number of copies. I'm tabling these reports from the 2006 flood. I guess the comments of the Transportation minister were that they weren't official sites. I have photos here of repairs to McKinnon flats; Portage boat launch; Jensen's access, which is Legacy Island; more McKinnon flats; and highway 24 access, the one I mentioned in my question. These pictures were all taken by Alberta fish and wildlife, and there were inspections completed after the work was done to these sites. I'd just like to table those.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies that I would like to table of an e-mail that I received from Dr. Ian Armstrong. He references that the Canadian Psychological Association recently released an independent report by a group of internationally recognized health economists. The report, An Imperative for Change, states that "the delivery of mental health services . . . can be characterized as a silent crisis" and provides a business case and proposes models for improved access to psychological services that can be implemented in our province. He writes: "I urge you to affirm your commitment to our province's health and specifically to increasing access to psychologists by considering the following recommendations from the report." And they're in this e-mail.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that takes us to points of order. We had one point of order raised at 2:22 p.m. or thereabouts by Airdrie during a question and answer going on between I think it was Red Deer-North and the Justice minister.

Hon. opposition whip, are you looking after this?

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a while since I've done these. I rise according to 23(h), (i), and (j). During the debate the Justice minister had indicated – and it was quite inappropriate – that members of this Official Opposition, and I quote, mocked victims of crime. What an absurd statement. You know, drunk driving is so prevalent in our province, in the country. To say that somehow we mocked victims of crime clearly crosses the line.

Of course, the Wildrose has had positions in the past in regard to the .05 legislation. We've advocated that there's a limited amount of resources for enforcement and that that's why the police should be targeting those driving over the criminal legal limit. Otherwise, they're spending a lot of time on the .05s. Of course, we've advocated for five provincial checkstop teams to catch those drunk drivers throughout the year.

Mr. Speaker, this minister has done absolutely nothing on individuals who've been charged and convicted of drunk driving in regard to their driver's licence. He's done absolutely nothing on that, yet he's going to try and indicate in this Legislature that somehow this side is mocking victims of crime. You know, by blaming the federal Conservatives, he's taking on the role of the Trudeau Liberals. He should be doing his job instead and increasing the penalties for those who are charged and convicted of drinking and driving.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that he crossed the line by saying that individuals on this side mock victims of crime, and I request that those statements be retracted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the point of order. I wish that the hon. member would stick to the actual violation that they allege. Clearly, whether or not the minister, in that member's opinion, somehow emulates a federal Liberal politician has nothing to do with the point of order at hand.

Nonetheless, the minister was referring to the coaster campaign, a campaign by which the opposition stood in opposition to our drunk-driving legislation, Mr. Speaker. The campaign did not mock victims. The minister incorrectly chose those words, and through me unreservedly withdraws those words.

The Speaker: Thank you. I think that closes the matter because the statement has been withdrawn. It's in Hansard, and it's been clarified by both sides, so let us move on with the next item here.

Before we do, can I just remind you that the legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and this evening for consideration of main estimates, or the budget. This afternoon, for example, starting at 3:30 p.m., the legislative policy committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Environment and Sustainable Resource Development in committee room A, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Agriculture and Rural Development in committee room B at the same time.

This evening, starting at 7 p.m., the legislative policy committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates of Service Alberta in committee room A.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:57 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Almighty God and Holy Creator, help us to prioritize our duties that they might yield the maximum possible for our constituents. Help us be the voice for those who have none and depend upon us to speak for them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is quite the privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend of freedom and democracy and an ardent defender of free speech, the MP for Westlock-St. Paul, Mr. Brian Storseth. Despite his young age Brian has been a Member of Parliament since 2006 and currently serves on the important Environment and Sustainable Development Committee. He is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. Edmonton-Centre, followed by Airdrie and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I am so excited. I just want to ask you if you could keep a secret and if the rest of my colleagues could keep a secret. This is my favourite school here today. With us today in the members' gallery we have 44 students from John A. McDougall school in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and with them today are Ms Veronica Chong, Mr. Jesse Lalonde, and Ms Jill White, their teachers and aides. These students are inquisitive. They are so with it. They are hard working. They are diverse. Please help me welcome my favourite school.

The Speaker: As we wait for other guests to arrive, let us move to Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some wonderful students from the Spruce View school in my riding along with their teachers and group leaders and parent helpers. The students came here today to understand the process of what we do here in the Legislature. I'd like the students to rise along with their teachers Mr. Joseph Amundrud; Brittany Seifried, who's a student teacher with us today; Ryan Johannson; and parent helpers Jennifer Harty, Linda Passakka, and Jolinda Savage. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other students or student groups?

If not, let us move on to other guests, starting with the Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm absolutely delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members today Ms Vickie Kaminski, who will commence her role as the new chief executive officer of Alberta Health Services on June 2 of this year. Ms Kaminski is well known in the world of health services, both for her time as a front-line worker as a registered nurse all the way through to her role as a senior leader in various health care systems. Throughout her 35-year career she has focused on quality of patient care and implementing best practice. I'm very confident that she shares the views of this government, that support for front-line staff in our health care system is her number one job. I'd ask my fellow members to join me in welcoming Ms Vickie Kaminski and ask her to rise and receive our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Irene Gaudet, Brent Gibson, and Bev Hill. My guests are all members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees Legislative Committee. The Legislative Committee advises AUPE members on questions relating to the union's constitution. They are visiting the Legislature as guests of all three opposition parties to observe and learn more about parliamentary procedure. I would now ask Irene, Brent, and Bev to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two hard-working, passionate, and dedicated northern Albertans from Fort McMurray who are here today to demand action from their MLAs and from their government on a long-term care facility for their community. They have gathered a total of 6,100 names – and they'd like to mention that they are all of voting age – to advocate for a long-term care centre in the downtown. I'd ask that Joan Furber and Myrtle Dussault rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister – Services for Persons with Disabilities, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you two wonderful guests visiting us from Whitehorse, Yukon, Jean Kellogg and Don Black. They are here to observe the question period. They are parents of my EA, Erin Black. At this time I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of AUPE's Legislative Committee. They are Gil Laflamme, John Barnes, and Karl Clauss. The Legislative Committee advises AUPE members on questions relating to the union's constitution, and they are visiting the Legislature today to observe and learn more about parliamentary procedure. I'd like to thank all the AUPE members and let them know that the Alberta Liberals want to repeal Bill 45 and Bill 46 and stand up for pensioners, for AUPE, and the rest of the civil service. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly my guests Valerie McAdoo and Mélanie Edison. Both Valerie and Mélanie are here today because they are very strong supporters of funding for public health care, in particular funding for in vitro fertilization, a procedure that could be publicly funded and save millions of dollars, resulting in fewer birth complications, fewer premature babies, and fewer neo intensive stays. I would ask Valerie and Mélanie to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and introduce through you and to you to all members of this Assembly 37 outstanding students from my old school, George McDougall high school. They are accompanied today by their teacher Mrs. Tammy Hodgson as well as parent helpers Mrs. Thaidra Walsh and Mr. Tim Fernandes. I'd ask them now to please rise and receive the warmest welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three municipal officials from southern Alberta who are strong representatives for their community. I'd ask that they rise as I mention their names. First, I have Cameron Gardner, the reeve of the MD of Ranchland; Henry Van Hierden, councillor, MD of Willow Creek; and last but not least, Suzanne Oel, councillor for the MD of Foothills. These individuals have expressed to me the importance of our Alberta first responder radio communications system and that we are fully funding this program, and it will start going online this year. I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members three of my constituents here today from southern Alberta and Cardston-Taber-Warner. Steve Evanson is a neighbour of mine in Stirling, and Mitch Holst and Brian Gibson are from Taber. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to stand and introduce you to Mr. David Kettles, who is a director with the department. Also, it's my pleasure to introduce my good friend Michael Reeves, who is the CEO of Ports-to-Plains Alliance, which Alberta is a key component in, a group of 10 states from the United States and Alberta who work together to drive forward initiatives in that zone and that region. If they could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you eight people from my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat and Forty Mile county. First, I have Steve Wikkerink and his wife, Sonja. I have Gerald and Kathy Reimer, Chantel Timmons and her husband, Everett, and their two wonderful children, hockey player and 10-year-old Dacey and seven-year-old Keely. These people, of course, are rural Albertans who work very, very hard for rural Alberta. They were all instrumental in putting on the 100-year anniversary at Burdett last year, which the hon. Finance minister came down to enjoy. I would ask all eight to please rise and share in the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Bobby-Joe Rovensky and Hal Welke. Bobby-Joe and Hal are members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and sit on the Legislative Committee. Their main role is to advise AUPE members on issues relating to the union's constitution. Appropriately enough, as mentioned by the leader of the Liberal opposition, they are visiting the Legislature to observe and learn more about parliamentary procedure. Bobby-Joe and Hal are seated in the public gallery, and I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other introductions? Yes. We have the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Medicine Hat, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 18 members of the insurance brokers association of Alberta. We had a great conversation this morning regarding the flooding that happened last year in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the impact on insurance for my constituents. I know that they also met with other members here today. They are seated in the visitors' gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I say their names: Gord Enders, Steve Hambly, Patti Hunt, Scott Treasure, Julia Marshall, Scott Romans, Robyn Young, Gerry Baert, Mitch Holst, Jody Lohr, Gord Cowan, Catherine Cake, George Hodgson, Caleb Maksymchuk, Steve Evanson, Christina Rankin, Lorrie King, and Rikki McBride. I ask that everybody please give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Okay. We're actually going to go to Medicine Hat next, followed by the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special individual. Mr. Gord Cowan was my campaign manager in the 2012 provincial election, and he was previously introduced. I am very happy to say that I am here because of Gord's hard work, but if you're unhappy I'm here, talk to Gord. Gord, I'd ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the county of Grande Prairie, who I see just joined us. They've been here for the AAMD and C convention for the last few days, and I know they have meetings in the building this afternoon. I would ask them to stand: Reeve Leanne Beaupre; CAO Bill Rogan; Daryl Beeston, councillor; and Herb Pfau, superintendent, public works. I think that's all that's with you. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Long-term Care in Fort McMurray

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray is one of Canada's fastest growing cities. It is the economic driver of our province and home to one of the most robust workforces in the world. It literally gushes cash into the provincial coffers. However, the very individuals who helped build Fort McMurray continue to be neglected and ignored by this PC government. During the 2008 election then Premier Ed Stelmach made a promise: his government would build a much-needed long-term care centre downtown to care for its seniors.

It is now 2014, still no shovel in the ground. Seniors in need of long-term care are either forced from the community all the way to Edmonton or, for those that remain in Fort McMurray, they live on the third and the fourth floors of a hospital in acute-care beds that were never intended to be long-term care spaces.

Seniors and their families want the facility to be built downtown, in the heart of the very community that they built. The PCs, however, made a political decision, and they approved the facility to be built in a remote location, far removed from amenities, separating couples and separating families. In the 2012 election both Fort McMurray MLAs were clear – very clear – that if elected, they would fight to have the long-term care facility built downtown, not in Parsons Creek but downtown. However, since the election they can only seem to either stay silent or blame the federal government for provincial responsibilities.

It's time to stop blaming the federal government, it's time for this government to keep their promise to the community of Fort McMurray, and it's time for these elected MLAs to stand up for their community and their constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. A recent report shows that the PC legacy of chaos in our health care system is carrying over into mental health. We're paying $750 million a year with no systemic planning for these services. The GAP-MAP, authored by Dr. Cam Wild, makes several key conclusions, including that existing services do not provide sufficient care to meet the needs of Alberta adults, that the system is reactive and focused on acute care, and that there is no standardized way of referring to mental health services between Alberta Health Services zones, the government, and contracted agencies. The GAP-MAP illustrates how this government's failure to provide adequate, affordable public counselling services has forced Albertans into neglecting mental health care, something that costs us more in acute services in the long run.

When the Alberta New Democrats released our recommendations on how to properly invest the $1 billion increase in health transfer payments from the federal government, we called for an additional $100 million for treatment for mental health and addictions in this province. We believe that by strategically organizing our mental health and addictions treatments and funding qualified counsellors within the public system, we can start to ensure that Albertans have access to long-term care and treatment options for mental health that will improve the quality of life for all.

This PC government has shortchanged Alberta's health care system by $400 million in the 2014 budget and failed to invest in fixing the patchwork of services that currently make up our mental health services. Albertans who rely on these services deserve better, Mr. Speaker, than the mess that this PC government has created.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 Alberta's population exceeded the 4 million mark. This is not surprising given that people from all over the country – in fact, all over the world – are moving here because of our strong economy. Our province's economic growth has surpassed the rest of the country's for the last two years, and people look to our province as a model for fiscal and social responsibility.

In 10 years Alberta's population is expected to exceed 5 million people, and in order to prepare for this influx, our government has implemented a strong and realistic fiscal plan to ensure the province's continued success. This plan supports our vision for the infrastructure needs of our province today and tomorrow. Apart from delivering a $2.6 billion operational surplus this year, our capital plan over the next three years invests more than $19 billion for much-needed infrastructure projects. Day to day I hear from my constituents that they want schools, hospitals, and safe, well-maintained roads and highways. That is why our government has a capital plan that includes 155 school projects, seven postsecondary projects, 24 health facility projects, 258 kilometres of new and twinned roads, and the rehabilitation of 2,500 kilometres of our highways.

Mr. Speaker, our government has a rational and optimistic plan for the infrastructure needs of the province. We can't and we won't delay these projects. When our population reaches 5 million in 10 years, we will all be thankful that we invested in the future of Alberta today.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Just before we start the clock, hon. members, we have a unique situation today. The independent Member for Calgary-Varsity will be taking the sixth spot today instead of tomorrow. Tomorrow, should the Member for Calgary-Foothills be here, he would take that spot. That is an arrangement that I have approved due to extenuating circumstances. Since independent members are only allowed one question per week, that's the only way we could make our complicated and mathematical formula work, so I hope you will abide me in that regard.

You all know the 35-second rule for a question and the 35-second rule for an answer. I will give you five seconds of warning so that nobody feels offended that I cut them off. You all know the no preamble rule after the fifth spot. And could we please cease with the interjections? Yesterday 22 interjections were noted. I chose not to rise on any of them, but eight of them were given by one hon. member. Please, let's listen to each other's questions, let's listen to each other's answers, and we shall go from there.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Administration Costs

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the culture of entitlement in the PC cabinet is clear, but it extends far beyond that. We've learned that the number of Alberta Health Services managers and bureaucrats earning more than $100,000 a year has gone up 50 per cent in the last four years. Between 2009 and 2013 AHS hired or promoted an additional 1,231 non front-line staff with salaries over $100,000. That's nearly one bureaucrat every single day. To the Health minister: wouldn't these dollars be better spent on the front lines?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea where the hon. member may be getting her information from, and that's not the first time I would have had this question. What I can tell you is that Alberta Health Services, through an organizational review that was done last summer, has reduced the number of vice-presidents from 80 to 10, has flattened the organization by three management levels, and has rededicated the role of all managers in that organization to supporting front-line staff.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we got it through a freedom of information request.

Albertans are tired of watching the bloated health care bureaucracy get bigger while wait times for procedures and treatments get longer. Albertans continue to pay more and more to fund their health care system, and they continue to get worse and worse results. This is a prime example of why: more money for managers, less money for patients. To the Health minister: when is he going to get AHS under control?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member shows once again how little she understands the complexity of health care organizations and the fact that she has absolutely no appreciation that this is a 100,000-person organization, the fifth-largest employer in Canada, and the best health care system in Canada. Again, we never have the benefit of the information that she's using. But we know that many, many of these positions are directly involved in the support of front-line staff in managing patient care, large complex hospitals, and community programs.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what I do know about how much these health care managers are costing Alberta taxpayers: more than $120 million a year. Here's what that money could actually do. Patients would be able to get 5,000 insulin pumps or 1,000 hip and knee replacements or 200 long-term care beds and 170 full-time nurses. It's a matter of priorities: a larger payroll for bureaucrats or shorter wait times for patients. To the Health minister: which does he think Albertans would rather have?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans would like to have is members of this House who are not members of the government caucus stand up in support and defence and speak with pride about the work that they do each and every day to deliver health care to Albertans. This hon. member has in one fell swoop just demonized and invalidated the work of everyone in that organization that earns over $100,000. This is the height of irresponsibility, it reflects a lack of understanding that knows no bounds in any Legislative Assembly that I know of in this province, and it's blatantly false and irresponsible.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: We stand up for front-line workers every single day.

Probation Services for Aboriginal Youth

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government is taking in record revenues and taking on record amounts of debt, yet they still make the most callous budget cuts in places that hurt Albertans. Jodene McIsaac has worked for more than 20 years counselling high-risk native youth as a probation officer. Her work undoubtedly saves the justice system many times her salary, but her employer just found out that this uncaring government won't renew her contract. To the Justice minister: how does he justify this decision?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to advise this hon. member that there actually are no cuts in this particular area. I have every confidence in the individuals that work within our ministry that they will be able to provide the services needed to these individuals in a culturally sensitive manner.

Ms Smith: Native Albertans are massively overrepresented in the justice system. The program that Jodene McIsaac has worked on for over two decades is the only one that specifically targets native youth at risk. The Justice ministry says that Jodene's specialized clientele can be absorbed by other probation officers, who already have a huge number of clients. These young people could be helped, but they're falling through the cracks. Can the minister find $80,000 of waste somewhere else in his government to be able to restore this program?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the preamble to that member's question is unfortunately incorrect because my ministry also has its own youth probation officer in Edmonton who has a specialized aboriginal caseload, again, designed to provide the services that these at-risk people need but also in a financially appropriate manner with a view to taxpayers' interests as well.

Ms Smith: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker: $80,000 is a rounding error on the sum total of all the bad decisions this cabinet and this government make in a single week. This government employs communications people more than any other government of its size. Our ministries have deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers and chiefs of staff to chief assistant deputy ministers and executive advisers to assistant deputy ministers. How is it that this government can employ all of those advisers, but it can't find $80,000 to support a program that actually makes a difference and saves money?

Mr. Denis: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I as the minister responsible for this department have absolutely every confidence in the ministry's employees that they will be able to provide these types of services to the at-risk youth. These people are well trained, these people work hard, and these people are culturally sensitive to these particular aboriginal youths. I think that this member would appreciate that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: More misplaced priorities, Mr. Speaker.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Ms Smith: I've been criticizing the flood maps for quite some time. Let me tell you about Doug Kingsford of Calgary-Elbow. He's complained to his MLA and has gotten nowhere. His home had 13 feet of water in it: no buyout. His neighbour four houses away had 18 inches of water in his basement, and he was bought out. This example shows that the flood maps are clearly wrong, and the government has to know it. Will the minister stop making arbitrary decisions on buyouts based on maps that everyone knows are wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we work with the tools that we have in front of us. Clearly, we've learned a great deal from the floods of this past year. There's a lot of work going on to try and understand the learnings from these tremendous floods that we experienced throughout southern Alberta. But the flood maps are the flood maps that we're working with, which is the knowledge we had prior to the floods last spring. Those are the facts. That's how the program was designed in order to give Albertans a choice about how to move forward with their lives.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they should have redrawn the flood maps before they started the flood payout program, like we said.

Mr. Kingsford has also experienced the capriciousness of LandLink. Everything in his basement and main floor was destroyed. Most of those items are on the list of the things that DRP is supposed to pay out. LandLink visited his home, yet the money he has been sent doesn't match up with the money he was supposed to get. When he asks questions, he gets no answers. Is this how the minister thinks LandLink should be handling these files?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of work going on for a lot of people on behalf of a lot of people. As the hon. member has enquired earlier, we made a clear indication that we've created a transition agreement with LandLink in order to transition them out of this role over the next year. But the important thing is that we are working with every single Albertan who has filed a claim. We're making sure that they are eligible, to respect them, to ensure that they are looked after, and protecting the taxpayer.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, claimants want LandLink fired. Mr. Kingsford hasn't been given enough to fix his home. He is like so many other homeowners in High River, Exshaw, Canmore, Bragg Creek, Elbow Park, and elsewhere whose lives were turned upside down by the flood. The government has let them down. LandLink has victimized them. We hear talk of a $6 billion flood, but that money has not gone to the folks who have lost everything. Doesn't this government care that they have let so many Albertans down?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, that would be just a misstatement of the facts. In fact, the government of Alberta has provided nearly 5,000 DRP payments as of last week, 4,700 by the end of last week. I know they're going out the door quickly as we speak: over $48 million to individuals; in addition, millions and millions more to communities, to municipalities to ensure that we protect Albertans for the future as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Flood Recovery Communications Contract

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The closer I look at the lucrative, sole-sourced, untendered Navigator contract, the more concerned I get. Does the government completely lack judgment, or does it intentionally reward members of the PC family? Maybe it's both. A one-quarter-million-dollar contract for crisis communications allegedly began on July 18, 2013, but it wasn't even signed until October 28, just three days before it expired. To the Premier: the only crisis that existed when the contract was signed was your upcoming leadership race. Why did you waste a quarter of a million dollars of taxpayers' money?

Mr. Hughes: I believe the hon. member is referring to some contracts that were provided under a sole-sourced mechanism in the crisis of the flood of last summer. That includes Tervita, includes Navigator, includes Norex, and includes Stantec. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that when the minister responsible for this program, for responding on behalf of Albertans, reached out, he reached out for talented, class A organizations that could step up and support the province of Alberta to meet the needs of Albertans in a crisis, and they served them well.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the contracts represented by the Minister of Municipal Affairs were given by Executive Council. Navigator and its contract staff list is a who's who of Tory land. It's headed by a person the Premier calls a friend, managed by a guy who ran the last two PC election campaigns, includes an adviser to the current Premier and predecessor, and then there are the Minister of Health's former chief of staff and the then-minister of Municipal Affairs' PC leadership campaign adviser. To the Premier or the minister: is the real reason you didn't tender out this quarter-million-dollar contract because you wanted to keep it in the PC family?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the work by Navigator related to the floods included strategic communications advice, research on flood recovery, a communications strategy. Albertans were asking – in fact, the associate ministers were on the ground, and they clearly identified a strong need for clear communications to people who were in need, in crisis, responding to the flood. We responded with people we knew could deliver on behalf of Albertans, and they did that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, they delivered all right: a quarter of a million dollars of taxpayers' money to their buddies.

At first glance I thought Navigator's quarter-million-dollar contract was for three months' worth of work, and I thought that was pretty rich. But if you go by when it was actually signed to when it was allegedly completed, it works out to a quarter of a million dollars for three days of work. That's $83,333.33 per day. One of the contractual obligations was to file weekly activity reports. To the Minister: will you please table those reports today, or do you need some time to back out of those as well?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, this work was done in the middle of a very difficult circumstance in support of the Public Affairs Bureau. They provided advice to the Public Affairs Bureau. As we all recall, many, many very talented people within the government of Alberta were fully deployed throughout the flood-affected areas. They were out there working with Albertans, helping them to recover, and this enabled them to help ensure that Albertans were also well informed as a result.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Government Effectiveness

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want to know how the PC Party work plan will affect them and how it will affect the functioning of this government, yet the Premier has avoided the question. She's avoided it all week long. Since she's now taking direction from the PC executive, will she please tell Albertans what is in the work plan and how it will affect the work of the government?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and this government take our work very seriously on behalf of Albertans. We've said that we have a building Alberta plan, which invests in families and communities, ensures that government lives within its means, and opens new markets for Albertans. That's important work that we do every day. Our party supports that work. Our party worked very hard to get us elected so that we could do that work based on the values of Albertans. That's what Albertans responded to in the campaign, and that's what they're responding to now, good government from people who understand that this is all about the future of this province. We care about that future.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier really cared about her responsibilities, she'd show up for work.

This Premier was elected on a promise to end child poverty in five years, yet three of five budgets have gone by, and there has been no mention of that commitment. In fact, there are significant cuts to the poverty reduction programs in this budget. To the Premier: does your work plan include keeping your promise to end child poverty in Alberta?

Mr. Campbell: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this government and this Premier work every day to improve the quality of life for every Albertan, with a particular focus on supporting vulnerable Albertans to make sure that they get a good start, to make sure that there's an education system in place. Education in the long term is what will defeat the poverty cycle. The other supports that families need to be strong are also a very significant part of this government's job. This Premier showed up this morning to the AAMD and C and had two standing ovations from the AAMD and C because they appreciate the work that this Premier does and that this government does.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has made a point of order. I realize that I was not supposed to draw attention to the repeated absence of the Premier, so I will apologize.

This Premier promised full-day kindergarten in the last election. So far, Mr. Speaker, it's another broken promise. Alberta children deserve the best possible start on their education. I want to ask the Premier or whoever is speaking on her behalf: does your PC work plan involve keeping your promise to Alberta families for full-day kindergarten? Yes or no?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, while this hon. member plays the clown, our Premier goes out on behalf of Albertans every day: opening new markets, investing in families and communities, and making sure that we live within our means while we do it. The particular focus that this Premier has on vulnerable Albertans is not lost on Albertans. In fact, they've stepped up each and every day to work with this government. Not-for-profit organizations, volunteers, and others in our community have worked very hard for vulnerable Albertans to make sure that our kids get a good start. Our Minister of Education is doing that every day, this government is doing that every day, and our Premier is doing that every day.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that was really an uncalled-for statement. You might want to review it and make a comment about it later. I may invite you to do that.

Let's move on. Calgary-Varsity.

Alberta Future Fund

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Calgary-Varsity want assurance that this government is spending our money in a disciplined way. Many are encouraged by the fiscal discipline and logic reflected in the Minister of Finance's approach to the budget, but many were also startled by the government's Bill 1 and, in particular, the creation of a $2 billion Alberta future fund for such a vague purpose. To the Minister of Finance: why did you need a special fund earmarked for such a purpose?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 1 was debated here in the House. It was passed here in this Legislative Assembly. As part of Bill 1 the Alberta future fund is really reflecting the vision that previous Premiers have had, like Premier Lougheed when he talked about the heritage savings trust fund being something that would be used for transformational items in the province in the future, for Albertans of today and tomorrow. The idea is that any decision to spend funds from that fund has to be made here in this Legislature by way of a resolution. It has the added benefit of having that debate.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given the promise to consult with Albertans on how our heritage fund monies will be spent, how were Albertans consulted about this idea of creating a special $2 billion Alberta future fund?

Mr. Horner: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, it is a good question, and I'm glad the hon. member asked it. We had 12 open houses around the province this past year. We had numerous presentations . . .

An Hon. Member: Fortune-telling.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, hon. member.

We had numerous presentations made to us about how we should get the savings that we have to work for us, not just sit in an account to never be spent. The idea of Premier Lougheed – and I mentioned it in this House – when he set up the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, was that 20 per cent of the fund would actually be spent on assets and future endeavours.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Finally, again to the Finance minister: do you plan to come back to Albertans to talk about the specifics of how this $2 billion will be spent?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed I plan to come back to this House. If future members want to bring forward a resolution to release funds from this fund, that's exactly where it comes, into this Legislature. I welcome Albertans to provide us with ideas as to what they see as transformative ideas for the future, for the purposes of this fund. I welcome ideas coming from our municipalities. In fact, even the municipality the hon. member is from, I'm sure, has some ideas as to how they could help transform Alberta today and in the future. We were asked today, Mr. Speaker, about the long-term vision of our province at AAMD and C. This is part of that, setting a stage.

Long-term Care in Fort McMurray

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, this PC government has allowed the long-term care situation in Fort McMurray to deteriorate to a crisis stage. After promising to build the facility there in 2008, they are no closer to having one up and running than the day Premier Ed Stelmach first made that promise. This project has been bogged down by indecision, mismanagement, and petty politics. Health minister, when will your government stop the political rhetoric, keep your government's promise, and get this facility built downtown, where it's most wanted and needed?

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, I was recently in Fort McMurray, met with the local councillors and seniors groups about seniors' accommodations now and in the future. Even the community's current needs cannot be met with the downtown Willow Square site alone. This government is ready to move ahead now with the residents at Parsons Creek, but we've been unable to secure the necessary permits from the municipality to build there. The Minister of Infrastructure has been working with the federal government to secure the Willow Square land for some kind of a potential partnership, so the work goes on. We are very much aware of the needs, and we're ready to act now.

Mrs. Towle: Well, clearly, this member was not at the same meeting because even the mayor has come out and said that she'll actually give the land.

Given that this government talks about supporting local autonomy and given that the MD and the council of Fort McMurray and surrounding areas have unanimously passed a resolution to have the building put in the downtown location, why is this government continuing to ignore the autonomy of council, the community, and, most importantly, Mr. Speaker, everyday families?

Mr. McIver: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd like the Legislature to welcome the hon. member to the building Alberta plan. Thereafter, I would like to point out that the fact is that the government of Alberta already owns 25 per cent of that land; the federal government owns 75 per cent. So the municipality or the mayor has no ability to do that. In fact, I've been in contact with the federal government in support with the MLAs from Fort McMurray. I think we could have this land in our hand any day now because we've had what I would characterize as fairly productive conversations, and we'll go ahead, building Alberta.

Mrs. Towle: It's always so sad when the minister stands up and doesn't even understand the issue.

Given that Fort McMurray's two MLAs were elected on a firm commitment to fight tooth and nail to have the facility built downtown and not at Parsons Creek and given that since the election they've been utterly silent other than to blame the federal government for this debacle, to the Associate Minister for Accountability, Transparency, and Transformation: how transparent is it to abandon your key campaign promises in favour of saving your own political skin within your PC Party?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise and answer this question. This government is building Alberta, and part of that plan is to build a long-term care facility in Fort McMurray. [interjection] We have a wider vision. We support the municipal vision for a site downtown, and we also have a vision to have a long-term care centre in Parsons Creek. This government is going to deliver long-term care in Fort McMurray. [interjections]

The Speaker: Let me stop the clock for a moment, Mr. Clerk, please.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have so far counted 15 inappropriate interjections. I have your names, and I have your titles all listed down here. I would like for there to be no more.

Unfortunately, the people listening to this on the radio or watching it on television don't hear all the interjections here that our visitors hear. But when it gets to the point that I can't hear the question or the answer, then something is really wrong because those questions and those answers go through me. Even right now some of you are heckling, Airdrie for example. It's not necessary. I have ministers over here who are taking the bait from someone over there and vice versa. I would just like us to please have this be the only interjection I have to make today.

Let's start the clock and go on.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of attention given lately to the Minister of Education's efforts to redesign the provincial curriculum. Opponents are misleading parents and causing worry and uncertainty. Last night the opposition cold-called some of these parents to further spread misinformation. However, some Albertans who identified themselves as Wildrose supporters refuted the opposition's claim and confirmed that basic facts and skills are being taught. My question is to the Minister of Education. Who can we believe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Talk about backfiring, Mr. Speaker. Last night the opposition held a tele town hall and tried to further propagate their spin, and they were called out. Several of the parents and teachers that were out there spoke up against the opposition's rhetoric at their own tele town hall, like Wildrose supporter Laurie, who works in a school and said, quote, kids are taught basic math skills; or Carol, a math tutor, who said, and I quote, the basics are included; or Keith, who is a dad, who's impressed with the curriculum and said, quote, I was blown away with that type of learning. The opposition needs to stop disparaging our teachers and educators and students.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that with the curriculum redesign Alberta students will continue to learn fundamental skills?

Mr. J. Johnson: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. They already are, and they are expected to, and we'll even strengthen that through curriculum redesign. Our curriculum redesign will be cutting edge. It'll be comprehensive, dynamic, and rigorous. But there's no rush on this. We'll work to get it right, and we'll work with Albertans, but we reject the insulting allegations of the opposition. We need to empower our teachers. They're the pros. They know best. We can best leverage their expertise by making our curriculum continuously better so that we continue to individualize learning in our increasingly diverse classrooms.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, to the minister: given that I hear from teachers who are concerned about these attacks on Inspiring Education, what is your commitment to moving forward with its ideals and objectives?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, Inspiring Education is a result of unprecedented consultation with Albertans, everyone from parents to teachers to employers to school board superintendents to students. It's by Albertans. It's for Albertans. It's Albertans' vision for education. I want teachers and school boards out there to know that we're committed to it. We'll stand by them as they fight through the empty rhetoric. While the opposition may want to dismantle it, we'll stand up for it. This government is for Inspiring Education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Airdrie, you can – oh, you've switched spots?

Mr. McAllister: Yeah.

The Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View, go ahead.

Mr. McAllister: It seemed appropriate, Mr. Speaker.

Last night my leader and I hosted a telephone town hall with Albertans. [interjections] Thirty-five thousand people took part at some point last night. A teacher called in saying that in his school junior high teachers are questioning elementary teachers about why they are having to reteach the basics. The Education minister seems oblivious to what's going on. If all this is well, why are junior high teachers asking elementary teachers why they have to reteach the basics?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, one, I think, that we've acknowledged. Through the curriculum redesign we're going to re-emphasize the basics. It's not a matter of basics or inquiry-based learning; it's both. We want our kids to have the basics, but we want them to be able to apply those to problem solving. We need to listen to employers and look at global best practices as well as look at some of the petitions and the rhetoric coming out of the opposition. It's interesting that they would cut off the speakers in the call last night that didn't agree with their rhetoric.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, tens of thousands of Albertans would disagree with this gentleman.

Given that this same teacher also told us that elementary school teachers respond to the junior high teachers by saying that we, too, have to reteach the basics because the fundamentals aren't being properly taught, does the minister not see that there is a problem here that needs addressing, or will he continue to bury his head in the sand and ignore teachers and parents?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many questions we want to waste in the House, asking the same question over and over and over. This member asked on March 4 if I would "do the right thing and ensure, not provide an option but ensure, that the fundamentals of mathematics like times tables are taught in our schools," and I said: yes, I will. I've said: yes, I will. I said: yes, we will. We're doing a curriculum redesign, and we're going to make sure that the foundational pieces of literacy and numeracy are emphasized throughout all subjects. We said we will, but it's not one or the other.

It's interesting. Last night on the call with Dr. Tran-Davies, whom they tried to put in a box and say that all she's trying to purport is that we teach basics . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. McAllister: I do take exception to one point. Not one question on education is a waste of time in this House. [interjections]

The minister's spin is being exposed. Parents, teachers, experts are loud and clear on this issue. Does he realize that what he's saying contradicts what tens of thousands of Albertans say is actually happening in our schools every day, or has his government clearly lost touch with how regular, everyday Albertans feel?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think every one of the callers on that call last night was a regular, everyday Albertan, but they didn't want to hear from everyone. They cut off the ones that didn't agree with their rhetoric. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, I think it's shameful that this party would purport to Albertans that our system is on the skids, as this member has said, that our numbers, our test scores, have fallen by 30 per cent internationally, which of course we know is not true. It's a 2 and a half per cent decrease. [interjections] We have incredible school board trustees, incredible teachers, and an incredible curriculum. They're doing a heck of a good job. We have one of the best systems on the entire planet, but we can make it better.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Second reminder, hon. members. You know, there's little that I can do to help keep control in this Assembly if you're not able to control yourselves. So again I ask with the utmost respect: please, listen to the questions even if you don't like them; listen to the answers even if you don't like them. Let's try and make some progress here, as is expected of us.

Calgary-Buffalo, let's hear how you do, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Drilling in Urban Areas

Mr. Hehr: For close to two years we've been hearing from this government that they would be bringing forth an urban drilling policy. Today, unbelievably, we learn that the Minister of Energy is – get this – appointing a task force to review urban drilling. To the minister: why do you continue to shirk your responsibilities to the Alberta people by delaying? Why not just show some real-life leadership and produce this policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said the other day, it's important for me to be able to hear from Albertans. I have spoken with our two outstanding MLAs that represent the region. I've spoken with the mayor and will continue to speak to people in the Lethbridge region to find out some issues. It's also about education, making sure people already know what rules apply, what kind of setbacks apply. To go out and talk to people, which they have asked us to do, is responsible, and I'm doing what Albertans are asking.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, that answer was complete and utter bunk, and the minister knows it.

Your ministry has said for two years that they were going to produce a policy. Where is the policy, and when are you going to stop hiding behind these task forces and get on with the business of providing families and communities with certainty around urban drilling?

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is using the word "task force." What I've talked about is having round-tables, that we're going to bring people together at. We're going to bring in people in northern Alberta, in central Alberta, and in southern Alberta to make sure that people, first of all, understand the rules that we have in place. The safety of Albertans is first and foremost. We want to make sure that the evacuation plans are in place, whether you live in urban or rural Alberta. But, first and foremost, people want the education piece so they actually understand what the rules are that we have in place today.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I'm befuddled here, so I'll ask it again. Your ministry has been at this for two years. They've stated for two years they would develop an urban drilling policy. Are you guys unable to do this? Are you incompetent? What is the problem, that you cannot deliver an urban drilling policy despite all the rhetoric from that side?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have said from day one, since I've been the Minister of Energy, that we will develop an urban drilling policy, but we'll do it based on facts, do it based on education. Currently, depending the level of sour in these wells, they go from setbacks of either 100 metres to 1,500 metres. There is a lot of information that needs to be shown and given to Albertans first, and as I have said already, we will have an urban drilling policy, but we'll do it in consultation with urban and rural Albertans.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, those answers just aren't good enough.

The government promised a review of urban fracking and a set of rules in 2012, then they promised to review a set of rules in 2013, and then they promised a definitive set of rules for right about now. Instead, we're getting another review or, excuse me, a round-table. This record would be a parody of a government – it would be funny – if it didn't actually come from this government's refusal to represent the most obvious of public interests over those of oil and gas. To the minister: when will this government stand up for Albertans and tell industry, "No urban drilling"?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government stands up for Albertans every single day of the week in Alberta. It is important. The drilling in this province provides great economic development in this province, but we make sure that we take care of the environmental concerns and the safety concerns every time an application goes before the regulator. Those are the rules that they look at to make sure that there are safety issues there. All of those are part of the regulatory process, and that is what is looked at before any – any – application is approved in urban or rural Alberta.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that a poll in Lethbridge found that 76 per cent of residents want a ban on urban drilling and given that the mayor, the town council, and both school boards have all publicly stated the same and given that you just got a petition with 11,000 signatures on it asking for a ban, can the minister tell this Assembly just how many tens of thousands of regular Albertans it takes to earn the same influence as one phone call from your friends in the oil and gas industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said the other day to the House, there is no application even before the regulator. The discussion on urban drilling and the discussion on drilling in this province are important discussions regardless of where you live because safety issues, making sure we have the rules, all of those are very important to my people who live in rural Alberta, to all of the people in Alberta, whether you live in urban or rural Alberta. We are looking at all of this, but we're making sure that we're balancing this and making sure that we're having the time to go through this properly.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this minister has had more than enough time.

Now, given that this task force is, in fact, just another delay tactic by this government to serve their friends in oil and gas and given that the issue of fracking within a few hundred metres of homes and schools and playgrounds is a no-brainer to most Albertans and only requires more study if someone has lost all sense of their democratic obligation to the citizens they represent, why won't this minister stand up for regular Albertans and ban urban drilling now?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand up every day for Albertans, urban or rural Albertans. I have talked to other communities that are cities as well, that are urban municipalities, such as the city of Medicine Hat, other municipalities that are urban that actually like and appreciate having the development in their communities. It does not matter where we do development in this province as long as it is done safely and through a strong regulatory process. That's what's really important. What's important is that we're talking to Albertans, and that's exactly what I'm going to do at this round-table, listen to the people who count. Those people are the Albertans here in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Stony Plain.

Building Alberta Plan Advertising

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This out-of-touch PC government just can't learn from its mistakes. The budget for their partisan Building Alberta sign campaign has been increased to $1.9 million from $1.7 million last year. Our FOIP found another $200,000 spent by the Infrastructure minister. To the minister: I know your party is struggling to raise money, but do you really think taxpayers want to keep funding this PC Party advertising campaign instead of building Alberta, building the roads, schools, hospitals, and long-term . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the hon. member is sensitive about us telling Albertans what we would build that they wouldn't. I understand he's unhappy about that. In fact, when Albertans see those signs, they know a school is going to be there. I can tell you that in my municipality when they see a sign from the development saying "a school," they don't believe it. When they see a Building Alberta sign, they know a school is going to be there. It matters to them. When they're going down the highway and they see a sign, they want to know what's going on in the construction. It matters. It's good information for Albertans. They want that information. We'll continue to build Alberta and give the information.

Mr. Barnes: Wildrose would do the projects, we wouldn't burden the next generation, and we would not politicize the process.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government can't seem to find money for many needed projects like the Strathcona community hospital, the Misericordia, the 50 new schools it promised in 2012, the Fort McMurray hospital, and Fort McMurray long-term community care, does the minister think his new sign money could be better spent, or do you even care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact is that we're building the infrastructure that matters to Albertans. That side wouldn't burden Albertans with classrooms. They wouldn't burden Albertans with highways. They wouldn't burden Albertans with the hospitals that they need. We're actually building them. We're building in a responsible way that makes financial sense, and we're doing it on a schedule. They'd have people waiting until they're 16 to start grade 1 instead of six. We're building schools today, when they're needed.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Enough. You see what's happened? One side baits the other, then the other side, and then it gets out of control, and we can't hear each other.

Mrs. Forsyth: They don't answer the questions.

The Speaker: And I particularly don't like it, Calgary-Fish Creek, when you speak while I'm speaking. Show some respect for the chair regardless of who's in it.

Final supplemental. Now, let's listen carefully to the question – I'm sure it'll be a good one – and let's listen to the answer, which I hope will be equally good. Let's hear how it goes.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would build Alberta and balance the budget.

Mr. Barnes: Given that a hospital in Wainwright is currently facing closure due to a potential sewage backup because of this

PC government's neglect, will the minister recommit this money from these PC partisan signs to upgrading the Wainwright health centre and for once put the needs of Albertans ahead of the needs of the PC Party?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Albertans' needs are the only needs we consider every single day when we come into this House, and we decide what those needs are by listening to Albertans. I know there's partisan rhetoric that sounds good, but in fact the building Alberta plan is designed after listening to what Albertans want: the hospitals, the schools, the roads, the other infrastructure. That's what we've been doing. That's what we'll continue to do. I know the hon. member doesn't like to tell Albertans how much we're doing that they wouldn't do, but we're going to continue to do it because that's what Albertans sent us here to do, and that's what we're doing under this Premier. We're delivering on the building Alberta plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day we hear from the opposition and this government's critics about our rising debt. In my constituency people are asking: how can we go around touting our excellent financial situation and announce more infrastructure projects while we are borrowing to build these projects? To the minister of the Treasury Board and Finance: what am I supposed to tell my constituents about our growing debt in this province?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the borrowing plan that we have is strategic. It's responsible. We only borrow for the infrastructure that Albertans need today because we're building it today. The opposition has already talked about deferring the capital plan out into the out-years, but they don't tell Albertans which school they'd defer, which hospital from the list that the hon. member just rattled off they would defer. Borrowing to build now protects Albertans from construction cost increases each year, which are guaranteed to go up. With our population growing by almost 300 people a day, the people need these infrastructure projects today, not in the future. They'll have tangible assets. Ideological opposition to any . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will we address the repayment of debt if there are drastic changes in interest rates?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. It's true that our triple-A credit rating, that we have and hold dear, allows us to lock in the lowest possible rates, and right now interest rates are probably the lowest they've been in 50 years. The borrowing program isn't like a personal line of credit, that can be affected by fluctuating interest rates. We're selling bonds, many of them with 20- or five- or 10- or 30-year amortizations. The interest we pay on those bonds is locked in for their maturity, and we set aside money each year to match up that maturity.

I was going to say that the ideological opposition to any other form of finance besides cash is not good financial management, Mr. Speaker. It's fanaticism.

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure risks associated with borrowing for capital projects are mitigated?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, government has taken concrete, legislative steps to keep our debt well under control. We have limited borrowing, placed a cap on debt servicing . . .

Mr. Anderson: Please keep talking. Just keep talking.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, for God's sake, enough is enough.

Mr. Anderson: I'm so sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I know you are. I've heard your sincere apologies before, and I don't buy them anymore, so please. I'm not in a good mood with your behaviour today. I have communicated with your leader, I have communicated with the person on her left, and now I'm communicating with you.

Hon. President of Treasury Board, I'm sorry to ask you to do this, but could you start over so that we can hear this answer, because I certainly could not.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government has taken concrete, legislative steps to keep the debt well under control. We have limited borrowing by placing a cap on the debt-servicing costs. The interest paid on the debt cannot exceed 3 per cent of operational revenue. [interjection] The hon. member might want to listen to the answer because it is his critic portfolio.

That means that if the operational revenue drops or if interest rates increase, our borrowing limit will go down, which means we will have to clear off that debt. Again, we set money to the side right off the top, including the debt repayment.

The Speaker: Let's move on. Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

International and Intergovernmental Relations Ministry

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems that new positions and new titles have popped up within the highest offices of the International and Intergovernmental Relations ministry. Last week I was disappointed the minister could not confirm fair and open competitions on IIR jobs. I know that other ministries have deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, but it seems a new title has been borrowed from Alberta Energy. To the Associate Minister of IIR: can she please explain to the House why there's a minister, an associate minister, a deputy minister, assistant deputy ministers – plural – and now a chief assistant deputy minister?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We understand why we have a minister and a deputy minister. I was also appointed as associate minister, with a special focus on Asia, and to also chair the Asia Advisory Council as part of our government's plan to open new markets and enhance our presence in important markets. The international strategy is featured prominently in our building Alberta plan, and that's why we now have a chief assistant deputy minister for international.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, given that the Ministry of IIR has adopted the Alberta Health Services model of managers managing managers managing yet more managers, does the minister really think that appointing yet another manager, a new chief assistant deputy minister, is going to help with the image of entitlement and waste that permeates this government?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans know and appreciate is that this government works every day to open new markets, to create opportunities for business in Alberta to do business in the world. We are a province that trades out into the world, and that's an exceedingly important part of our economy, our community, and our quality of life. This government strives every day to have the people in place and the structure in place so that we can help Albertans sell their products out to the world, and we do not apologize for doing that.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government claims to have held the line on spending with this budget – yet the truth is that non flood spending rose by 7 per cent – and given that the full-time employee count for core government positions is rising by a thousand positions this fiscal year, is the creation of these new fancy titles in order to flaunt and hide ADMs across the public service? What has the government in mind when it talks about commitment to living within its means?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, what that hon. member would know if he had any experience in the real world at all would be that you organize your structure to do your business. [interjections] You don't hire people unless you need them. When you hire them, you put them in the right place, and you pay them the right amount to do the right job. We're trading out into the world, we're creating new markets, we're helping Alberta business do business in the world, and that is very important to Albertans' quality of life. We want to do that, we want to do it right, and we want to do it with the right people.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you have a point of order to raise, stand up and raise it. We don't need the finger pointing.

Let's go on. Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Medicine Hat.

Bonnyville-Cold Lake Infrastructure Funding

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not the first time I've gotten up and asked a question on the CRISP report. The CRISP is a high-level document that has no real substance or actual listed infrastructure for my Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. The CRISP report is supposed to be a long-term strategic plan for population growth and infrastructure needs in the Cold Lake oil sands area. To the Minister of Energy: what concrete actions for my area have taken place as a result of the CRISP report?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to say thank you to this hon. member for how she represents her constituents. She does an outstanding job making sure every day that everyone in cabinet understands how important her area is to this province, so I want to thank her for that.

Mr. Speaker, it is a high-level document, it is about long-term planning, and it is getting ahead of those issues, so the infrastructure, the transportation needs, all of the social needs of the community. We're working together with Municipal Affairs, with Transportation, and with Infrastructure to prioritize the needs for her area and for her communities.

Mrs. Leskiw: My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Transportation. The report identifies twinning and increased lane capacity for highways 28, 55, and 881 to the Bonnyville and Cold Lake areas. When can we expect to see progress on this critical infrastructure in my area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been out to this area in her constituency with the member and listened to her community members and her concerns, but I can assure you that my department gets many requests from all communities and municipalities across this province. The task is the balance, balancing the priorities. Balancing and looking at safety is always number one. Market access is also important in prioritizing these projects as well as the budget restrictions and the dollars we have available.

Mrs. Leskiw: That may be very good, but we are the second-largest oil sands in the province.

To the same minister. The minister of SRD has just recently identified Cold Lake as the regional water source of my constituency. When can we expect capital funding dollars for this project, that will provide safe drinking water to my entire area?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a potential Water for Life project, but, not unlike the roads, lots of municipalities have needs. They've applied to the Water for Life project, and they're important in all communities. The task that we have is a balance. We've got all these priorities. We've got to prioritize the list and build the ones for the money we have. We've got to look at the needs of the project. We've got to look at the costs and all other priorities. Unfortunately, this project will not be funded in the next budget, but we're always working with municipalities to meet their needs.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we only got through 15 main questions, a total of 90 questions and answers, as a result of too many interjections by you yourselves. Now, it doesn't matter to me whether we get 15 or 20 questions up. I'd like as many as possible, however, to get up. Today you didn't really help yourselves in that regard. Two days ago we had 108 questions and answers, 18 full sets. Let's aspire to something similar to that again tomorrow.

In 30 seconds from now we will resume with Members' Statements, and that would start with Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Red Deer-North.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a recent conversation with a retired general who still had school-aged children, he told me one of the biggest reasons that he chose to retire here in Alberta was because of our education system. He talked of having soldiers up for transfer who were nearly in tears because their children were not going to be educated here, in the best system in Canada.

We've heard much criticism in this House of late regarding our curriculum redesign. Everything needs to grow and change to survive, even scholastics and methods of how we do things. Through the vision of Inspiring Education, our government is committed to preparing students today for a successful future. Our commitment to excellence is why we're redesigning the curriculum to focus on literacy, numeracy, and 21st-century competencies such as critical thinking and problem solving.

We are developing a curriculum that uses the best of both basic skills such as arithmetic and reading and inquiry-based learning, which develops additional skills. Alberta is at the top because we have taken action and grown by investing in our youth and putting the success of children first. At the end of the day we must ask ourselves: are we preparing our children for their future or our past?

A recent article in the Calgary Herald, which I will table, by Jim Brandon and Dianne Gereluk outlined necessary points to be considered. In it they make mention of the need to go beyond the traditional ways of schooling that has focused on rote memory, repetition and worksheets . . . beyond simply teaching students to write to the test with little understanding of the application of these issues in other contexts.

Why wouldn't we want to push the boundaries and set our youth up to excel in every way? Evolution is a natural occurrence, and it happens everywhere. As a government we choose to change with the times and prepare our students for excellence.

Thank you.

Vision Assessments for Schoolchildren

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, if you removed your glasses, would you struggle to read the notes in front of you? Could you see a blackboard or a whiteboard 20 feet away? If everyone who wears glasses or contact lenses removed them, how good would their literacy be? How hard would they have to struggle to read the newspaper, an e-mail, a magazine, or a book? Imagine if you had to struggle every day without your glasses or contacts? Half of your daily energy would be spent trying to compensate for this. Imagine how difficult it would be if you didn't even know you had a problem with vision.

There are children in school who struggle every day with compensating for poor vision. These children depend on the adults in their lives to make the right decisions. If they had a broken bone or a high fever, their parents would rush them to emergency. But what if there is no raging fever or broken bone, no outward sign of a physical or visual problem? What would be the trigger to encourage a parent to have their child's eyes checked?

We are told to get an annual physical checkup every year for early detection of unseen dysfunction or disease. It is just as important to include a complete visual examination as part of an early prevention program. By sending children to school every day who have not had a complete visual checkup and who may have problems with eyesight, we set them up for failure. Visual impediments that have not been addressed can lead to frustrated children who fidget in their chairs, have behaviour problems, suffer with social problems, and struggle to get good grades.

Dr. Charles Boulet and Dr. Noella Piquette of the University of Lethbridge believe that it is a violation of a child's human rights to not address visual impediments that they may have. My private member's bill, Bill 203, Childhood Vision Assessment Act, requires that every child have a complete eye exam as part of grade 1 registration. This simple step would have profound results for the 25 per cent of children who suffer with visual impediments and don't even know it. Eighty per cent of learning requires good vision. By requiring visual testing as part of the routine to prepare a child for school, we provide them with a critical and powerful tool for success. Their success is our success. Bill 203 will make a profound difference in a child's life.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Government Policies

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta and the aggressive progressives: adapted from a Peggy Noonan column. The mischievous meddling of this out-of-touch PC government is hurting our province. There are few areas where they aren't making it worse. We're suffering from the politicization of too much of our lives. Government is growing in destructive not helpful ways. Fees and rules increase. Common sense says that we're losing a vital part of ourselves through deliberate decisions to move from local to central planning.

Ridiculous rules and regulations abound, from starting a business to feeding people driven from their homes by a threatening prairie fire. It's all part and parcel of the same malady. So is the erosion of the idea that religious scruples and beliefs have a high place that must culturally and politically be respected. On Twitter recently someone asked: can the government compel a Jewish baker to deliver a wedding cake on a Saturday; if not, why not? Why not indeed. Because the truly tolerant give each other a little space.

I think a lot of people right now feel like a guy in a car driving down a street that some bureaucrat just decided should be one way, the oncoming way. He's dodging the vehicles as they speed towards him, but soon there are too many. So he turns around and is going with the flow but not to a destination of his own choosing, and he can't find an exit until 2016.

That's how people feel about the demands and dictates of the burgeoning bureaucracy. Most voters believe they can make the best decisions for themselves, but the PCs disagree. Imagine that your wages have been frozen, that some co-workers have been laid off. You need a new school. One is announced but without a guaranteed start date, and no local contractors can bid on it.

People are overwhelmed by PC government ineptness. True conservatives feel exhausted from trying to fight back on so many fronts. But the progressives, too, are damaged. They look whipped and incoherent. If they win, they'll win year by year less of a province. We can't let that happen.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards our office has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards, collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, are clear evidence that the government is not listening to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary education system that is both accessible and affordable for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the associate minister.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the leader of the Liberal opposition I have several tablings connected with the question that he asked earlier today. The first is the results of a FOIP requesting correspondence between the office of the Premier and Jaime Watt, who is the executive chairman of Navigator.

The second is the website printout of Navigator Ltd. referencing their staff, which was also in the question, plus a particular biography from that same website on Mr. Watt and a number of other members of that Navigator team that were referenced in the leader's question.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to table the requisite number of copies of a letter between myself and Minister Jason Kenney, the federal MP, and it's dated March 18, 2014. The letter relates to the provincial efforts to purchase the land known as Willow Square in Fort McMurray, and it outlines that we have been very aggressively pursuing that land. In addition, there are two attached letters. One of the letters that's attached to it is a letter from hon. Minister Ric McIver, where he has indicated the province's desire to purchase the land known as Willow Square in Fort McMurray. The second attachment is a letter dated October 28, where I set out several solutions and indicate to Minister Kenney that the province is very eager to acquire that land so that we can fulfill the vision that seniors have had on that facility. I would propose to table that now.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the five requisite copies of the first page of a large petition that was presented to the government of Canada by some of my constituents who are asking for tougher laws and the implementation of new mandatory minimum sentencing for those persons convicted of impaired driving causing death. They're requesting that the Criminal Code of Canada be changed to define the offence of impaired driving causing death as vehicular manslaughter as well as five other recommendations aimed at toughening these laws. By tabling this today, I'm helping to draw attention to this very serious issue and indicating my support for their efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite copies of a bunch of documents encompassing 6,100 people who have signed a document indicating that they wish and urge the government of Alberta to not move forward to build the seniors' long-term care facility in Parsons Creek but, rather, to immediately consider building it in the downtown Fort McMurray area near the hospital on land currently owned or controlled by the province. I do have the requisite copies. All of these individuals are of voting age. I can tell you that this group is not going away – it's not going away – and the MLAs should start listening to them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, to my recollection, we have one formal point of order, which was raised at approximately 2:08 p.m. by the Government House Leader presumably with reference to some comments made by the leader of the ND opposition, which also prompted the Speaker to intervene.

Now, just before we go there, I want to read two citations myself. The first one comes from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009. On page 614, about the middle of the page, it reads the following:

Allusions to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber are unacceptable. Speakers have upheld this prohibition on the ground that “there are many places that Members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office”.

That applies to every single one of us, not just to members of cabinet and not just to opposition but to all of us.

Secondly, in Beauchesne’s Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, on page 141, subsection 481 reads as follows:

Besides the prohibitions contained in Standing Order 18, it has been sanctioned by usage that a Member, while speaking, must not . . .

(c) refer to the presence or absence of specific Members.

I don’t think that could be any clearer. We have referred to this before.

What I found unacceptable today, from my perspective – never mind what the points of order here are going to be right away, which are on this topic, I’m sure – is that in spite of having been cautioned, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood proceeded to dig yet a deeper hole in this respect. At that point I indicated that I would likely come back to him and offer him a chance, before we take up more valuable time, to comment and, perhaps, if he wishes, to withdraw those comments.

So let me start there. If there is someone who wishes to make that withdrawal on his behalf, I would be very happy to have it and hear it and the sincerity with which it comes, and then we’ll try and move on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your references. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood does apologize, but . . . [interjections] May I finish?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I’m judging this not only in the words being said but the tone, the manner, and the sincerity with which they are said. Regardless of whether you like what’s being said or not, I want to hear it.

Hon. member, you have the floor. Please continue.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, definitely, the member does apologize.

The only comment that I’ll make in addition to the apology is that we have repeatedly not received any notification of the absence or presence of a member, which we have for other ministers but have not in the case of the one member. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was feeling a little frustrated after daily preparing questions to be directed toward the member on the opposite side, intending or expecting that their presence would be here. I’m being very careful and not referring to the person at the moment. So the comment that I wanted to make was that repeatedly we’ve not been receiving any notification, where we normally do when there is going to be an absence from the front bench, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. I listened very carefully to that, and I see that there are some extenuating comments in that withdrawal, which I want to think about for a moment.

I want to recognize the Government House Leader. You had a point here that you wanted to raise in respect to the point I just raised.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the point you raised, I think it’s important to understand that any cabinet minister in question period can answer any question that’s being asked. The fact that, you know, they’re saying that somebody is not in the House to me doesn’t carry any weight because any minister on the front bench or in the back can answer a question at any given time, and we’re all prepared to answer those questions, especially as they relate to our own ministries.

Also, the Premier’s schedule is one that is scheduled for her. She’s a very important individual in this House, and she has very important work to do. There are times when she’s not going to be in the House. Sometimes it’s a case of an emergency that she has other business that has to be attended to. Again, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, we all can answer on behalf of the Premier in this House at any given time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I raise this not with respect to particularly the Premier, who is the subject of the debate at the moment, but with respect to any one of us, any single one of us, and it matters not to me whether it’s a government member, an opposition member, or an independent member. The fact is that we have these rules. Some of them are very old, tried-and-true rules, but they exist for a reason. They exist for the respect of the institution that we all pledged to serve, the institution that we took an oath to help serve, to uphold.

I would ask you again – this is not the first time – to please ensure that you know the rules. You’re in the game; make sure you know the rules. If you don’t, go back and read some of the comments that I’ve made because I’ve commented on many of them which are frequently referred to in this House. Let’s not have any more purposely broken rules.

In the meantime, hon. Government House Leader, you might want to address the comments that Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview made. I don’t know what arrangements you have about responding to requests for who’s available to take questions or not.

It’s very true that any member of the front bench or the bench that is occupied by associate ministers can answer any question at any time on behalf of anyone from cabinet. That is very true. So, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I’d ask you to keep that in mind as well. This knife cuts both ways.

That having been said, let me remind you that the legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and this evening for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Health in committee room A and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Treasury Board and Finance in committee room B. This evening Alberta’s Economic Future will consider the estimates of Infrastructure in committee room A.

I neglected to say that that point of order is now concluded, the one just referred to.

The House is adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:02 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the duties we inherit upon becoming elected members of an Assembly such as this are difficult to describe, and they impact each of us in very different and very personal if not unique ways. However, we are all very acutely aware of the strain and the stress that is put upon our families and our loved ones, who share what many would describe as the burden of public office. Bearing that in mind, let us pray for the well-being of our families, of our friends in addition to the well-being of all Albertans, who sent us here to be of service to them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Member for Lesser Slave Lake 25th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, on that note, today actually marks a very special anniversary which deserves special recognition in our Assembly. On March 20, 1989, that being 25 years ago, a particular member was elected to this Assembly for the first time. She has since been re-elected seven consecutive, successive elections. [Standing ovation] Hon. members, the thunder is well deserved, but it has been stolen from your Speaker.

She has been re-elected seven successive elections, and this is truly a remarkable achievement. Eight hundred and twenty-nine members have been elected to this Assembly since 1905, and only 15 of those members to date have served for 25 years or more. The member in question becomes the 16th in this line and the first woman ever to reach that milestone. [applause] My thunder is stolen twice in one day. Well deserved.

Now may I ask this hon. member to please come forward and receive a special token of thanks on behalf of all Albertans and especially colleagues in this Assembly for 25 outstanding years of service to the province of Alberta. For this we have a special commemorative pin, which I would like to place on your person in recognition of this milestone.

Ms Calahasen: Be careful where you pin that.

The Speaker: I don't think I have felt this nervous since my wedding day. There we are.

Hon. members, please join me in thanking the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Thank you, hon. members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, we know you have several guests, and I would invite you now to introduce them all to us, please.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, 25 years ago today a small group of family and friends truly believed that this trapper's daughter could bring a different perspective to this Legislature. Without a structured organization and without any money they pulled off a miracle. Today I am very proud to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some of my family and friends who played a major role in getting me elected. I ask that they rise as I call their names. Seated in your gallery are Ann Marie Auger from Slave Lake, Solomon Auger from Slave Lake, and Michael Auger originally from Slave Lake. Seated in the public gallery are Yvonne Anderson and Jim Robertson from Grouard and Sherry Anderson and Gil Giroux from Gift Lake. Seated in the members' gallery are some of my family: Helen Calahasen, Freda Dennison, Mena Calahasen, and Roland Calahasen. Unfortunately, my daughter is not in the country and couldn't be here, and my husband had to work because somebody has to bring in the money. I ask that all the members in this Assembly give my guests a very hearty welcome to this Legislature.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Congratulations, once again.

Respected members, it's with great pleasure that I introduce two very special young people who are seated as my guests in the Speaker's gallery. They are here with their family, friends, and representatives of Alberta Easter Seals. Those would be the Easter Seals stamps that greeted you as you entered. First, I want to introduce seven-year-old Portia Dugan, who is this year's Easter Seals ambassador. She is seated in the wheelchair there with her caregiver. She enjoys art, swimming, and especially riding her bike. Thank you, Portia, for coming.

Secondly, I'd like to introduce 13-year-old Jacob Dunn. Jacob is from northern Alberta and was the ambassador in 2013-14. He lives with a kidney disease that challenges his active life, but in spite of that he did a yeoman's job this past year as the Easter Seals ambassador. He received the Speaker's special merit award for outstanding service. Congratulations, and thank you to you, Jacob.

Portia's parents, Isabel Marangoni and Michael Dugan, are here along with grandmother Pierina Marangoni. Please rise. Jacob's mother, Jennifer Dunn, is here. Representing Alberta Easter Seals are Jodi Zabłudowski, the director of operations, and Darla Zuk, events manager, who do a tremendous job for Easter Seals, whose campaign started yesterday. Good luck to all of you, and thank you for what you're doing for thousands of Albertans.

Let us move on to the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from the Glen Avon school in St. Paul. They are spending the afternoon here today at the Legislature, and they are joined by their teachers, Mr. Shane Boyko, Mrs. Karen Kendel, Mrs. Linda O'Neill, and teaching aide Mrs. Rhonda Collins. I have been informed that Mrs. O'Neill's birthday is on Saturday, but I won't tell all Albertans which birthday it is. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups or youth to be introduced?

If not, let us move on, then, to the Associate Minister of Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise. I don't get to do this very often, have people here from my constituency in southern Alberta. I would like to introduce to you and through you to everybody here two ladies, Ms Sheila Rogers and Ms Karin Champion. Both of these ladies have been hard-working, active people in Lethbridge that have been involved in the No Drilling Lethbridge campaign and are here today as their petition with over 11,000 names will be tabled by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill a little later on. I'd like to ask both ladies to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you the wife of someone that many of the members here in the Assembly know, Lanny Westersund. His wife, Annie Graham, and her friend Dana Jans are with us today. Annie and Lanny are constituents of mine in Calgary-Klein, and I can honestly say that Annie is the best thing that's ever happened to Lanny. If they could rise and be given the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, that would be great.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members four guests. Mare Donly and Linda McFarlane are members of the Calgary Social Workers for Social Justice Committee, a subcommittee of the Alberta College of Social Workers, and are in Edmonton to present at the ACSW conference on Friday. Their interest in social justice issues keep them active in the areas of long-term care, affordable housing, and poverty reduction. With them are Joe Ceci and Mike Brown, also in Edmonton to present at the ACSW conference. Many of you will recognize Joe from his time serving as an alderman in the city of Calgary. Today they are representing Action To End Poverty in Alberta. I would ask Mare, Linda, Joe, and Mike to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ruth Adria, who is a retired nurse and a passionate advocate for seniors. I'd ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my outstanding staff from our Calgary office. Mr. Craig Watt is here to join us in question period. Craig, thanks for being here. Let's give him the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Stony Plain.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Shauna McHarg and Dennis Dupuis. Shauna and Dennis have been made victims of our embattled health care system. As advocates for their family members in care they've been punished for speaking up, banned from seeing their loved ones, when those loved ones need their support most.

They've asked for an opportunity to meet with the hon. Minister of Health. I have given him their names and e-mails, and I would ask him to give them a call to listen to their concerns. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: A second introduction, hon. member?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Marguerite Saunter. Marguerite has come here many times before. She would like to draw attention to the fact that we should be advocating for our seniors and they should not ban advocates from seeing the ones who have built this wonderful province and country. I would ask everyone to give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Medicine Hat.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the hard-working mayor, council, and CAO of Parkland county. Parts of their municipality are also represented by George VanderBurg and our colleague Doug Horner. As a progressive rural community Parkland county council takes an active role in providing the necessities and leisure activities for all families in the region while preserving the natural distinction of the essence of their community. I would like to ask the members of Parkland county to please rise as I call their names and recognize them in the House: His Worship Mayor Rod Shaigec, Councillor AnnLisa Jensen, Councillor Jackie McCuaig, Councillor Phyllis Kobasiuk, Councillor Tracey Melnyk, Councillor Darrell Hollands, and the CAO, Pat Vincent. I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're just reminded to not use first or last names of members who are elected in this Assembly.

Mr. Lemke: Yikes. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: Apology noted and accepted.

Let us move on. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you nine individuals in the social work program at Medicine Hat College. They are in Edmonton to take part in the Alberta College of Social Workers conference and wanted to visit the Legislature to better understand the policy-making that can affect their future careers. The individuals are Hannah Berger, Mark Codlin, Jamie-Lee Danielsen, Kristel Kirstein, Jennifer McBride, Aimee Sarsons, Sarah Schnell, Jason Thunberg, and instructor Richard Gregory. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Airdrie it gives me pleasure to introduce to you and through you 74 guests from George McDougall high school, the hon. member's alma mater, I would assume. Accompanying the students today are Mrs. Devon Sawby and parent helpers Mrs. Nicky Addo-Bond and Ms Lisa Brown. I would ask them to all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Alberta Economic Development Authority

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the important work of the Alberta Economic Development Authority, or AEDA. Established two decades ago, AEDA has been the go-to adviser to the Premier and cabinet on issues affecting Alberta's economy. AEDA has identified strategic solutions to a full range of economic challenges, including job creation, skills and education, productivity, and competitiveness as well as market access.

Last fall AEDA was improved when the Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act was passed. The new act restructures the governance of AEDA and integrates the work of the Alberta Competitiveness Council.

In January our Premier announced the newly appointed AEDA board. These newly appointed members are senior-level executives who are leaders in their community, Mr. Speaker, and the vast knowledge and expertise that they volunteer will serve our province very, very well. I want to personally thank the chair, Barry Heck, and his executive board.

This smaller and more focused 12-member board will sharpen its mandate and focus on the priorities of diversifying Alberta's economy and helping to expand our markets. The quality of life of Albertans depends on the decisions government makes now, and many of those decisions will indeed be strengthened with AEDA's advice.

With international expertise in the financial, energy, agriculture, and technological industries the new board will help this government ensure that it has the right tools to continue building a better Alberta. That's building Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

AEDA's annual report is being tabled in the Legislature today, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to go through it cover to cover.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and leader of the Liberal opposition.

Public Service

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to begin by thanking the Premier for her service to our great province. We all know public service isn't easy. It involves a lot of personal sacrifice, a lot of time away from family and friends, sometimes facing just a little bit of criticism. So once again, Premier, I would like to thank you for your service to this province. I wish you and your family the very best on behalf of the Alberta Liberals.

However, now that the Premier's leadership has come to an end, a new leadership is needed to stop the attack on workers' rights and public service pensions. As the governing party looks to put a fresh face on an old and tired government, Albertans are looking for leadership out of the legal and ethical quagmire of the past. The next administration needs to end the government's attacks on workers' rights and repeal Bill 45 and Bill 46 as a mandatory first step.

In recent months the government has launched a three-pronged attack on working Albertans, the very people that build this province. They passed Bill 45, which infringes on sections of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by making it illegal to even talk about illegal strikes, and Bill 46, that strips the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees of its collective bargaining rights, something that Premier Lougheed ensured.

The Progressive Conservative government is also moving quickly to drastically alter the pension benefits of public servants, without demonstrating convincingly the need for changes or consulting those affected workers beforehand. Public servants have spent their lives actually building Alberta, and those who currently keep Alberta running are being told that they're paid too much and should contribute more and retire later with less. It's fiscally and morally wrong.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals stand here in support of all public servants, the heroes that build this wonderful and great province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Just before we start the clock, please be reminded that 35 seconds is allowed for the question, 35 seconds is allowed for the answer, and no preambles after spot 5.

Let us begin. We can start the clock with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main question.

Government Effectiveness

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to join the Liberal leader in thanking the Premier for her service and thanking her family for the sacrifice. We do wish her well.

Mr. Speaker, for the third time in eight years the PCs will search for a new leader, and the business of governing our province will take a back seat to the internal politics of the PC Party. Albertans are frustrated that once again the instability and infighting that has seized the PC Party will result in priorities not being met and the people's business not getting done. To the Deputy Premier and soon-to-be interim Premier: can he assure Albertans that he'll be able to keep governing while his party sorts out yet another leadership crisis?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] This government was elected by the people of Alberta to fulfill an agenda, to set hope and prosperity for the future. We're doing just that. We'll continue to bring to this Legislature the legislation that's needed to do that. We'll pass the budget in this Legislature, or we'll ask this Legislature to pass the budget. We'll continue to govern responsibly for Albertans. [interjections] The leadership process is a separate process that happens out there, but we're here to provide good government to Albertans, and we're going to do that.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe the Deputy Premier should reconsider running for leadership with that kind of a response.

Albertans are starting to see that the problems with this 43-year-old dynasty run far too deep for one leader to change. The government across the aisle is once again in disarray, desperately trying to keep their grip on power by putting a new face on their party to mask the internal strife that has now taken down two Premiers in three years. To the interim Premier: what policy direction will this government follow while the PC Party once again tries to figure out what, if anything, it believes in?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this government and this party share values with Albertans, which means that we want to have an educated population who has the opportunity to trade out into the world, to have a quality of life that's better in Alberta than virtually anywhere else in North America, anywhere else in the world. It's the type of province that attracts 100,000 people a year, that grows because people want to be here. The type of government that this caucus and this government are going to provide is that kind of aspirational leadership for this province, so that people know that their children, their grandchildren can be educated here . . .

The Speaker: Time is up.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are looking for strong leadership from this provincial government, and they just aren't getting it. PCs always promise change and renewal when they get rid of their leader and then pick a new one, yet somehow we always end up right back here with the new leader gone and another leadership race under way. Each time the promises become more hollow. To the interim Premier: why doesn't he see that his party has lost the moral authority to govern this province?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right about one thing. After each election we end up right back here. We end up right back here, some of us, for 25 years. We end up right back here because we've had a tradition of providing good government for Albertans, we've had a tradition of understanding the values of Albertans, we've had a tradition of understanding the aspirations of Albertans, and we deliver the programs and the policies that Albertans want to grow forward. We're a government that knows about the past but lives for the future, and we do it together as a team. We do it together as a team. It's not one person. It's a whole group of people . . .

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, he's right about one thing. We think the whole group of them are to blame for the situation we're in today.

There is a budget before this Assembly that was tabled under a Premier who will be officially replaced on Sunday. This budget borrows billions, raids the heritage fund, and commits Alberta taxpayers to $820 million in interest payments alone by 2016. It's a bad budget, Mr. Speaker, and the Premier who brought it in will soon be gone. To the Finance minister, a simple question: was this her budget, or was it his budget?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it was our budget.

Ms Smith: That's what I thought, Mr. Speaker.

Budget 2014 is merely a continuation of the disastrous long-standing fiscal policy of this PC government: spend more than we have, borrow the difference, and raid the savings accounts to keep on spending beyond our means. It's an approach that hasn't worked anywhere else in the world, yet this PC government insists on taking us down the debt and deficit path. To the interim Premier: is he going to continue with these reckless, costly, and unsustainable debt policies?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know better than this hon. member what this budget brings for the prosperity of the people in this province. [interjections] Our Finance minister and President of Treasury Board has been travelling the province and talking to people about the budget, and there have been nothing but positive reactions. Members here have been over with AAMD and C this week and are hearing very positive reactions about the budget. It's a budget that paves the way forward for Albertans by creating the schools and the hospitals that we need for the future of this province, the programs that we need for the quality of life for citizens in this province. It about families and communities. It's about creating new markets. It's about building Alberta.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's about $21 billion worth of debt by 2016, and he knows it.

If there is a glimmer of hope in the latest PC leadership crisis, it's that maybe, just maybe, we will finally get a leader, with principle, vision, and the courage to reverse the dreadful fiscal policies of previous Premiers. Now, I have my doubts, Mr. Speaker, but like most Albertans, I'm an optimist, so here it goes. Does anybody on that side who plans to replace this Premier have what it takes to fix the fiscal mess in this province and bring our books back into balance?

Mr. Hancock: All of us, Mr. Speaker, separately and together. This party and this government have been blessed over the 17 years that I've been here with leaders of principle, vision, and purpose, and as our party . . . [interjections] I know we don't talk about party politics in here, but as people talk about the future vision of this province, as they go out and engage with Albertans, we'll come back to this House with another leader of principle, vision, and purpose. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, people at home can't hear all the interjections, but I surely can. When somebody asking a question or somebody giving an answer has to try and shout overtop of the din and the noise, I think we've gone a little too far. Could I ask you to please curb your enthusiasm for the rest of question period?

Let's see how we do on the third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that we are now on our third new leader in eight years, and that says it all.

Flood-related Buyouts in High River

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the problems in High River continue to be made worse by this government. One of our communities, Beachwood, has been declared in the floodway and must disappear, despite the fact that the town of High River and the developer completed provincially mandated dikes and berms after the 2005 flood. The risks of Beachwood were studied, and appropriate changes were made, all with the approval of this government, yet because of flawed maps which predate this community's construction, Beachwood will be wiped out. That will have a profound effect on High River. Why won't the minister see reason and save Beachwood?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know Beachwood well, I know High River well, and I know that what we're trying to do here is to ensure that all residents of High River are safe and are protected should there ever be another flood. This is an important step in that process. You cannot have communities that reside completely in a floodway where people are able to continue to live. It's not safe for people, it's not safe for the community, and frankly it's not safe for the rest of the community of High River.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's not what the government's own documents say. The government's document Appropriate Use of a Flood Hazard Study points out that flood hazard maps need to be updated after development. In this budget this government has earmarked funding for new flood maps. They know the 1992 maps are wrong. The town of High River knows the 1992 maps are wrong. The residents of Beachwood know the 1992 maps are wrong. Why does the Minister of Municipal Affairs continue to declare that Beachwood must go based on outdated 1992 maps?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I think I've already answered the question, in essence. I can tell you that knowing that community, knowing that river, knowing southern Albertans, people are ready to move on. People want closure, and they want to move on. This hon. member is doing them no justice by opening up questions like this.

Ms Smith: I'm standing up for my constituents because they asked me to.

This government continues to bully and intimidate the remaining residents of Beachwood by refusing to recognize the very mitigation work that this government approved. This government has failed to update its own flood study map and uses outdated 1992 maps to force these residents out. This is wrong, and it will be a waste of $30 million. Will the minister do the right thing, the compassionate thing, and the frugal thing and recognize that Beachwood is safe and let the residents stay in their homes?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I actually accept the advice of people who are technically competent on this topic. Those people who are technically competent on this subject do not recommend the course of action that this member is recommending. I listen to the experts, and we're moving forward to help the whole community of High River survive any possible future event. This is important to the whole community. It is an important initiative that is worth spending money on to support and keep people safe in the future in that community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Flood Recovery Communications Contracts

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am quite struck by the number of crossing lines involved with the contract for Navigator Ltd. to provide crisis management advice during the 2013 floods. Now, friendships and support are important in our lives, but politics, friendship, and special deals spending taxpayer money should stay far apart. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how did the government sole source a $250,000 contract, without an open competition, to a company filled with friends, Tory insiders, and supporters' money? Isn't sole-sourcing over $75,000 ...

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I believe I essentially answered this question yesterday. There were four sole-sourced contracts issued in the moment of the crisis that we all went through last summer. This was an unprecedented circumstance, and in that circumstance the government of Alberta, my predecessor and this government, made the choice to reach out to people who could help buttress the capacities of the government of Alberta. That was Tervita, that was Navigator, that was Norex, and that was Stantec. These were capacities that helped to ensure that Albertans were safe and looked after in the wake of the floods.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks. Back to the same minister: is it standard operating procedure for this government or this ministry to sign contracts like Navigator's three months after the work has begun?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, I can't speak to specific details with respect to when it was signed, but people were engaged. None of this, the floods last summer, was normal operating procedure for anybody in Alberta. The government responded to meet the needs of Albertans, to ensure that Albertans were safe, that they knew what was going on, that they had access to information, and that they could take steps to protect themselves.

Ms Blakeman: Now, Minister, that's why you have procedures, so that everything can be treated the same.

Back to the same minister: what was the plan? How was the government going to hold this particular company, Navigator, accountable for anything that went wrong, like a privacy breach or a missed deadline, or even hold them to the terms of the contract when the contract wasn't signed until three months later?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, this particular contractor enhanced the work of the Public Affairs Bureau. They provided support in terms of strategic communications advice and research on flood recovery as well as a communications strategy so that Albertans could have trust in the public institutions of this province at a time of great crisis. I can tell you, as Albertans know, that the government of Alberta responded in a very strong way to look after Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I may, I'd like to just take a second and express my gratitude to the Premier for her service to this province and to congratulate my old university roommate, who is going to become the 15th Premier of the province of Alberta, something that I know he's always aspired to.

Severance Payments to Premier's Office Staff

Mr. Mason: Now, Mr. Speaker, on with business. Mr. Deputy Premier, we learn today that a number of senior staff in the Premier's office were let go yesterday. Can he tell us exactly which people were let go and how much the severance is going to be?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't have a list of people in front of me, but I think it's understood at any time of transition that most people in a Premier's office are aligned specifically, hired by the Premier to serve that Premier. Anyone in that position normally would tender their resignation at that time or be let go at that time. It's a matter of process, and that will evolve in due course.

With respect to payments, the salaries of all of those people, because of the gold-standard sunshine law that we have, are available to the public, and those contracts are also available to the public.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've had a look at those contracts, and actually the total severance for the senior people in the Premier's office amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars, perhaps a million dollars or more. Will the Deputy Premier please tell the House what the total bill to the taxpayer is going to be?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that will all evolve in due course. I've had approximately three hours on – well, I'm not actually on the job yet. That starts Sunday, I guess. That will all evolve. There are, obviously, changes when there are transitions in leadership. It's sort of interesting that for most of the year these people have been hounding about too many people on staff and too many salaries on staff and all of those things, and now when there's a change, they want to complain about the cost of people leaving. The fact of the matter is that people come to the service of government, and they know that it's a volatile job. They know that it's a risky job, and they come out from whatever they're doing in the private sector to do it, and . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Deputy Premier is misstating the position. Of course we want the Premier's office to be shrunk down. We want to know how much it's going to cost to get rid of everybody. There are going to be new people put in place by this Deputy Premier, and then a few months later there will be a new Premier. Will he commit that the people that he's going to hire will have short-term contracts with minimal severance conditions?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would think that it would be very apparent to anybody that anybody who came to work specifically for me in a role that I take on as interim Premier would be coming for a very short-term period of time, and they would know that and understand that coming in, and they wouldn't have any expectations of it being longer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mathematics Curriculum

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. We have a problem in the education system in Alberta, and it needs to be addressed. You see, tens of thousands of Alberta parents and teachers say that kids are struggling in math right now because of the way Alberta Education insists that it be taught. Now, clearly, the Education minister isn't listening. I'd like to see if anybody else from government is. To the Deputy Premier: there has to be merit in what tens of thousands of Alberta teachers and parents are saying. Do you still insist on replacing the basic, fundamental teachings in mathematics and going to discovery- or inquiry-based learning, or will you listen?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the only person that isn't listening is the hon. member. The Minister of Education has over and over and over again stressed the fact that while we're doing curriculum reform, numeracy and literacy are absolutely fundamental and will continue to be a fundamental part of the curriculum going forward. There's a difference between curriculum and teaching styles. The hon. member should understand that. We have excellent teachers in this province. We have an excellent education system in this province. It's going to get even better. It's the best education system in the English-speaking world, and the recent PISA tests show that our students actually are good in their numeracy. They are good in their numeracy. It's the problem-solving skills where they had a problem.

Mr. McAllister: I would suggest that many of the math professors in this province disagree.

Given that a university professor called into our tele town hall the other night to tell us that the system is no longer quantifiable so it's difficult to tell if a student is passing or failing and given that the U of A's Ken Porteous has written to the minister saying that this discovery approach has no place at the junior elementary level and that Alberta Education is dumbing down the curriculum, again to the minister: do you support this full on push to inquiry-based discovery learning, or will you listen to Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member confuses instruction with curriculum. He shows and demonstrates that he doesn't have the knowledge of how a curriculum is developed going forward. I can tell this hon. member that a curriculum is developed by experts in the field, by teachers, who are in the classroom on a day-to-day basis working with our students in this province, achieving the results that students in this province have achieved over time to make Alberta one of the leading education systems in the world, a place where people come from around the world to see what we're doing and how we're doing it so they can emulate it. And this hon. member wants to destroy it.

Mr. McAllister: I would hate to have to take that to the doors.

Given that Mr. Porteous also said the following: I was a member on two different occasions of university committees which met with representatives from Alberta Education to provide input on proposed changes to high school mathematics curriculum, and this was a most frustrating exercise supposedly done under the banner of consultation, but at the end of the day Alberta Education accepted almost none of the suggestions and went ahead and did what they wanted to do anyway, the concern from teachers, parents, and experts has to be real. When will you listen?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should understand that the plural of anecdote is not data. The fact of the matter is that there will be differences of opinion and differences of viewpoints from experts all the time. That's a reality. But what we have is a group of people who consult well, who understand what they're doing. They're called teachers. They work on curriculum, and they develop the best curriculum possible for the students of Alberta. What we know and understand is that the curriculum currently is packed with an awful lot of specific items that students have to learn. What we know is that that has to be unpacked, but the people who are doing it are people who are actually experts in . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. Let's go on.

The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Kinship Care

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents has been trying to get her three-and-a-half-year-old granddaughter into her care. She already has adopted the other siblings. She is an approved adoption foster home, a loving grandmother willing and capable of providing for her grandchildren, yet she is not being considered. She has received nothing but the runaround in trying to get her granddaughter to be a part of the family. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. Why would the system do such an injustice to these children's lives by not keeping them together?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for the question. Obviously, the member is a strong and powerful advocate for her constituents, and I want to congratulate her on her anniversary.

The member makes a very valid point, Mr. Speaker. Something that I've been saying since I became the Minister of Human Services: my priority is children staying in kinship care, children staying where children are safe and loved. Hopefully, we can find that arrangement within a kinship type of situation. Obviously, I can't discuss the specifics of this particular file.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why, then, did the department tell the foster family that they could adopt the child when they were fully aware that the grandmother wanted her?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I can't discuss the specifics of a file, but what I can say is that there are objectives in the system to help children find permanency. However, as I've said – I've been very clear since day one – as a matter of policy direction the priority must be placing children with safe family members and those that are closest to the children. That's my priority, that's where I want the focus, and that's where we're shifting the system on a daily basis.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm really glad to hear that because the '60s scoop, years ago, was a terrible thing that has happened to aboriginal children. Mr. Minister, could you please indicate to those individuals in my constituency that the '60s scoop will no longer happen?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, what the member says is something that resonates with my heart and many other members' hearts. The fact is that we cannot continue the cycle, the cycle of unfortunate things that happened during residential schools. We have to support families and empower families and help children stay with families and strengthen families within their own home so that children don't have to be moved, Mr. Speaker. That's my goal. That's my priority. That's what we're working towards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The more things change, the more they stay the same. The Premier says one thing, a minister says another, both being far from what either of them had promised. In her resignation speech the Premier made a curious announcement about 80 family care clinics. It's curious because at the same time in budget estimates the Health minister alluded to announcing 24. Meanwhile both the Premier and the minister seemed to have forgotten that the promise was for 140. Minister, what's going on here?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, listening to the hon. member's question, it is perfectly true that the more things change, the more they stay the same. I can't think of a period in time when primary health care has been more thoroughly discussed in this Legislative Assembly. As the hon. member well knows, we began a process last year with 24 communities across Alberta that have been working diligently to plan family care clinics for their communities. As we've indicated, we have an announcement forthcoming about that group. We have very adequate resources in the budget that's been tabled to add more FCCs.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know this will come as a huge surprise, but there are more unfulfilled promises. Given that members across the aisle were all elected on a platform that included a promise to refund tuition for students qualifying in family or community medicine and given that it's been two years since this government was elected, why hasn't this promise been kept?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure exactly what the hon. member is referring to. I'm not sure that he knows either. What I will tell you is that we continue to work very closely with physicians across the province, working wherever possible to increase family doctors and geriatricians and others that provide very important community-based services. More and more of these physicians are telling us that they want to work in alternative payment models that are not tied to traditional fee-for-service approaches, and we'll continue to work with them to make that realization come true.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a surprise that the minister had not read his own platform, but I'm not done there.

Given that families were told that if they elect a PC government, they could expect a $500 per child per year tax credit related to the cost of sport and physical activity programs and that, yet again, this promise has still not been delivered, is there any remorse at all from anyone on the front bench for betraying Alberta families yet again?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it makes for great rhetoric, and it sounds good in the House for them, but the drama is not lost on Albertans watching this. We are still within our mandate, within our term. The hon. member might want to stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Livestock Industry Regulations

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Nothing exposes this government's lack of transparency and openness like its treatment of special friends. Now, elk and deer game farmers are pretty connected here in Alberta, and they've asked for a change in regs so special that no one else in North America will go there. Now, few things anger Albertans more than phony consultations, backroom deals, and a sense of entitlement, but that's exactly what the elk and deer game farmers have asked for. To the minister of agriculture: how is it transparent to make major policy changes on behalf of one special group and agree to deny stakeholder and public consultation?

Mr. Olson: The simple answer, Mr. Speaker, is that there has been extensive consultation. She should stay tuned.

Ms Blakeman: No, there hasn't on this particular change.

I'll go to the Minister of Environment and SRD. Now, why would this minister agree with a policy that could expose Alberta wildlife populations of elk and deer to chronic wasting disease or genetic contamination? I thought his mandate was to protect wildlife, not infect them.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not going to happen. We do a very good job of inspecting the elk farms across this province, and the fact that one or two do escape is not going to cause us any issues. We've had a very good discussion with Agriculture. We had a very good discussion with stakeholders. We've had a very good discussion with people within my ministry that are experts, and we're quite confident that the policy will do okay.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the minister of agriculture: is the minister denying that there has been agreement between himself and the minister of environment to finalize a domestic cervid industry regulation which would give owners of elk and deer game farms ownership in perpetuity?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this is a discussion that's been ongoing now for several years. There have obviously been discussions between my department and ESRD. There is no regulation on the table right now, but there certainly is discussion, and it's ongoing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a new day and a chance for this government to rethink their tired Conservative strategies that are dragging them down in the polls, below 19 per cent as far as I can see. Backing off on unnecessary attacks on workers' pensions, which independent analysis shows are well on their way to be fully funded, would be a great start. To the Finance minister: will you show Albertans that were tricked into voting for you in the last election that you're going to turn this around, stop dictating changes, and start negotiating for a fair deal?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting that the hon. member seems to forget that back in July of 2012 was the first time that we started talking to the pension boards about the sustainability and survivability of defined benefit programs. We talked to them then and said that over the period of 2012 to 2013 we wanted them to come forward with some proposals and some other ideas that we could use. We did that. At 2013's year-end in March we suggested that we would put some more things on the table. We did that and opened it up for consultation. In fact, the proposals that we now have on the table are different than the ones we presented because we listened . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that in 20 locations right across this province Albertans today rallied against this government's attack on pensions and given that this government could stop these changes even before they're introduced in the Legislature if they had the will to do so, will this Finance minister commit here today to Albertans to not introduce these sweeping changes to the pensions in this session? Or is it just business as usual here?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, what I will commit to do today is to ensure the survivability and sustainability of defined benefit programs for the benefit of those public-sector employees. The pension promise is about providing a percentage of your income for life. That's not a defined contribution. That's a defined benefit plan. It's a good plan, and we're making it sustainable.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, given that reducing the benefits of 300,000 public-service workers is a surefire way to inflame whole new generations of Albertans and given that this PC government is actually increasing pensions and severances to managers and other insiders at the very same time, will this government come back to the table to meet with the people who actually own these pensions in the first place and start negotiating and not dictating?

Mr. Horner: First of all, Mr. Speaker, his last comment around management pensions is absolutely false. He should check his facts. He should also check his facts about the benefits that are supposedly being reduced. In fact, for service up to 2015: no reduction. If you're on pension today: no reduction, no change. For service earned beyond the pension guarantee of the percentage of your salary for life: guaranteed. What we're talking about is giving the plan members and the plan payers the ability to manage it and keep it sustainable. We're protecting the defined benefit plan, not getting rid of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Associate Minister's Remarks

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over three decades I worked as a journeymen electrician and a master electrician. Those years were some of the best of my life, working with some of the most skilled and honourable people I've ever met, people who were dedicated to providing service to all Albertans, people who are actually building Alberta. Needless to say, the comments last week from the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety were more than upsetting. To the minister: will you apologize and retract the comments that have upset tradespeople, men and women, across the province?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, this antitrade narrative that I've seen unfolding all week is simply not true. I can tell you right now that my father came over from Holland as an 18-year-old with his carpentry ticket to start a new life. Last time I checked, that was a trade. Certainly, along with that, my mentor and fellow Dutchman, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, is a former welder, and last time I checked, he was still talking to me. Are you still talking to me?

Mr. VanderBurg: I am. Yeah.

Ms Jansen: I can tell you that that narrative is simply not true, but you're enjoying it, so fill your boots.

Mr. Rowe: Really, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously, we're not going to get an apology from the minister, but has she taken the time to personally apologize to the member in question?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I will never apologize for loyalty. I will also never apologize for my passion and my dedication to the people that I represent. I issued an apology last week on Twitter to anyone that I may have offended with those comments, but I heard from many people in the trades in my constituency over the last few days, and they completely understood the meaning of my comments. Mr. Speaker, this is irresponsible behaviour designed to whip up the population, and the tradespeople in my constituency know it.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you again for that non apology.

Given that after the associate minister made those comments, she claimed that she didn't mean to attack a group of people, just one individual, and given that her mandate is to find solutions to bullying, is it really appropriate for her to say that if someone feels they're being bullied, they should just pack up and go back to where they belong?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, the comments about bullying I find are interesting, and this, I think . . . [interjection] You should listen. This is a teachable moment.

When we use the term "bullying" . . . [interjections] That's right. When we use the term "bullying" . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to talk here, and I can't even hear myself.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. Tough question; presumably a solid answer if we'd hear the rest of it. Please, don't try and outshout each other.

Ms Jansen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, when you use the term "bullying" to describe what we do in the political arena, you are devaluing the term. There are many people watching today, many families who have contacted me, whose children are the victims of bullying, who say: shame on you for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Medicine Hat. [interjections] Second call for Calgary-Hawkwood. [interjections] This is the third time I've had to rise. We're losing time. Let's see if we can gain it.

Calgary-Hawkwood.

International Investment

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Globalization has led to a more interconnected world. We need to harness this opportunity by creating a welcoming and supportive environment to attract international investment to do business in Alberta and to bridge our product to the international market. My question is to the hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What program, if any, has your ministry done to reduce the red tape so that international visitors can do business in Alberta?

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for this very serious question. His interest and connection in this area is definitely an asset for our government. Our government has created one of the most attractive and competitive business environments in this country for new or expanding investors anywhere. Our ministry and our international offices actually work directly with interested investors to respond to questions, such as on regulations, to provide them with information and intelligence. Last year we provided connections to about 1,400.

Mr. Luan: To the minister of Treasury Board and Finance: what are the barriers preventing our government from selling bonds to emerging markets such as China?

Mr. Horner: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, there are no legal barriers that are preventing this. The province, in fact, has a global medium-term note program, which does allow it to sell debt in numerous international markets and currencies, including the Chinese market. The key issue comes down to the cost. Right now the cost of issuing Chinese currency, or renminbi, bonds denominated in that debt would be expensive relative to the Canadian currency or even the U.S. currency. So the goal is to borrow at the lowest possible cost at the appropriate maturity dates for the assets that we're building.

Mr. Luan: To the same minister: given that the government of B.C. has successfully sold their bond on the Chinese market, is there anything we can learn from their experience?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we did visit in Hong Kong with the group that did the sale for the B.C. bond issue. What's interesting to note on that issue is that British Columbia did not actually convert the currency to Canadian dollars and bring it back. They actually left it offshore, left it on deposit, if you will, for a brief period of time, earned the interest and paid the interest back on the debt currency, and they'll recover the funds after that. We have looked at doing that, but there's really no purpose to that other than the investment. We don't borrow to invest in bonds and securities. We borrow to invest in infrastructure for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Long-term Care Beds

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The demand for new seniors' care beds keeps growing, but this PC government continues to fall behind in not only the quantity of beds but also the level of care required. A new 80-bed care facility for Medicine Hat received a $6.4 million building grant in February 2012 with a promise that it would be completed in two years. That would be now, but construction has just started. Can the Minister of Health please tell Albertans how a government-approved project can be allowed to sit idle for two years, putting seniors' quality of life at stake?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may know from talking to municipal officials in Medicine Hat, the delay in this particular project was caused as a result of drainage issues on the site for the new seniors' care facility. It has taken a period of time for those issues to be resolved. I understand from information I received from the municipality that they have been resolved, and construction can commence.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years is a bit too long, though.

Given that there is an average of 15 seniors occupying acute-care beds in the Medicine Hat hospital because there is nowhere else for them to go and given that the cost of long-term care is approximately $60 a day versus acute care at over a thousand dollars a day, why does this government continue to waste valuable resources?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member should know, the affordable supportive living initiative program, under which this facility is funded, depends upon a successful partnership between the government of Alberta, which is contributing to capital, and the proponent of the project. I would be the first to agree that two years is too long to wait. However, in a very few number of cases due to circumstances beyond our control municipalities and proponents discover issues that they need to resolve at their level before construction can commence.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that two extra years of having 15 seniors a day in acute-care beds cost taxpayers upwards of $10 million and given the monumental difference in quality of life for seniors in long-term care versus an acute-care hospital bed, will the Infrastructure minister include financial penalties in future building contracts so those who fail to meet approved construction deadlines are held to account?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, a very interesting remark by the hon. member. In response to his question about fines and penalties, we actually do have provisions in the affordable supportive living initiative program that allow us to cancel projects that do not begin construction within the specified period of time. I'm assuming that on behalf of his constituents he would not want us to make that decision, but I'm sure they'd also be wondering whether, if the hon. member was in my position, any continuing care facility would be built at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

North-South Trade Corridor

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canamex highway is a project that this government put forward a number of years ago. It's a four-lane highway to connect Mexico through to Alaska. Alberta's part of the project was to be completed in 2007. Could the Minister of Transportation tell me when this project will be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. This project is important to my constituency as well. I'm pleased to tell you that the work on this vital north-south trade corridor is nearing completion, with work on 20 kilometres of highway 43 in the Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation, west of Valleyview, currently under way. After that we'll just have over 50 kilometres left west of Grande Prairie to the B.C. border. When completed, a total of $1 billion will have been invested in this important project and a thousand kilometres.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest areas that is of concern to me, of course, is Grande Prairie, which the hon. minister also shares with me. Their department has purchased the land, but they don't seem to be utilizing it. Could the minister tell me when they plan to utilize it and install the bypass around the city of Grande Prairie, which is part of this corridor?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, we plan to use this land around the city of Grande Prairie for the eventual construction of a bypass around the city called 43X. This project will allow industrial traffic travelling to other parts of the region to avoid moving through the city. This will save industry valuable time and help ease traffic congestion for residents of Grande Prairie. But these large-scale projects take time to plan and assemble the land for this important growth.

The Speaker: Hon. member, final sup.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister said, they do have the land assembled now, so could I get a commitment to have this placed on a three-year plan?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we hear in this House all the time, just about every community and municipality in this province has transportation projects that they'd like to see added to the three-year plan. Everybody has them. It's a balance. We have to take all these projects and balance them on priorities, needs. That's the job we're doing. We can't do them all at once, but every region considers their project the top priority.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Cypress-Medicine Hat taking action on highway 61 is just another broken PC promise that will keep getting neglected, no matter how many PC Premiers take their turn in the big chair. The narrow road, steep ditches, and pavement conditions have made this highway treacherous to drive. Will the next leader who walks through the revolving door finally put the needs of these constituents ahead of political motivations and commit to the past government promises made on highway 61?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I could just put replay on here because everybody asks the same question, whether it's members opposite or my own members. As I've said before, there are many requests. If we did every request there was in this House – the opposition knows we don't have the money.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, he can push replay because he's got a litany of broken promises.

Given that highway 61 needs attention to the point where locals are scared, school boards are worried about putting kids on the road, school buses are scared to be there and knowing that some students have to face daily bus rides of an hour and a half, will the government commit to promises made – promises made a decade ago – to improve the safety of this road?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I've said lots in this House. Safety is our number one priority. It's not appropriate for the members to scare the good citizens of Alberta. I guarantee you that there's no bridge or road in this province that isn't safe to drive on. If it was, we'd close it, and we don't plan on closing any roads or bridges.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, it is not appropriate to break your promises.

The local economy has already been badly damaged by PC decisions from the royalty review and the inaction on the sage grouse, not taking action is affecting oil, gas, and agriculture industries as these commodities have to move. Minister, when will this road finally be widened and improved?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess he wants me to hit rewind again. It'll be done when it makes the top of the priority list and fits within our budget for the year. Every project is a priority to each community, but there's only so much money, and it's a balance to make sure we have safety, market access, and budget all fit in there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Anthony Henday Drive Northeast Portion

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Construction of the northeast Anthony Henday began in the summer of 2012 with the expectation it would be finished in 2016. This project completes the long-awaited Edmonton ring road, connecting the capital region like never before. However, my constituents are concerned that the project will end up late and over budget. They're tired of getting tied up in traffic and wasting valuable time, and so am I, and we want some answers. To the Minister of Transportation. My constituents are impatient and want a definitive answer. Will the northeast Anthony Henday Drive be completed on time?

The Speaker: The hon. Transportation minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to this hon. member for the question. She's always working hard on behalf of her constituents. The Anthony Henday road is a great example of how this government is building Alberta for now and for the future. This investment will help support economic, population growth in the capital region for the next 25 years. I'm happy to report that the northeast leg of the Anthony Henday will be completed in 2016 on schedule.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same minister: can you stand in the House and guarantee that this project will not run over budget?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, the good thing about this project is that it's being delivered on our P3 model. The beauty of P3s is that they save both time and money, and with P3 projects we've never had one that hasn't been on budget yet because we sign the contract, and that's all the money they get. So I can assure this member that it won't cost us any more money.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that construction projects often disrupt traffic flow and cause lengthy travel delays, what is being done to ensure that my constituents can move freely into and out of Sherwood Park?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, with large-scale projects like this it's virtually impossible to guarantee that there will be no traffic disruptions, but while traffic may be impacted for a time, the constituents in Sherwood Park can look forward to less congestion with improved traffic flow when the project is completed. In the meantime, Alberta Transportation continues to work with the public – informing them with open houses, travellers' advisories, up-to-date construction info on the 511 Alberta website – so that people are able to plan their routes accordingly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, today: 17 main questions with answers for a total of 102. Good job to all of you. No points of order. The star of the day for no preambles to supplementary questions has to go to Sherwood Park, very brief, succinct. Let us all learn from her, following on the heels of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock a couple of days ago. And there were others, but I cite those two that stand out.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with the private members' statements, starting with Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Hon. members, while we wait for private members' statements, do we have unanimous consent to revert to introductions briefly?

The Speaker: Mr. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some excellent students and their professors from The King's University College here in Edmonton. Students are visiting the Legislature as part of their class in which they study politics, history, and economics. That class is called engaging the world: faith in public life. The King's University College is a great partner in our Campus Alberta system. With about 700 students from across Canada and 16 other countries King's offers undergraduate education through a Christian perspective. Postsecondary education plays a significant role in our building Alberta plan. It's important that students are included when we discuss the future direction of Campus Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce the following individuals, who are in the members' gallery, and ask them to stand when I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Tauffic Adams; Jacob Aldrich; Noah Bradley; Zachary DeJong; Reagen Henderson; Marie Page; Martin Vriend; Dr. Michael DeMoor, assistant professor of social philosophy; and Dr. Gerda Kits, assistant professor of economics. I'd like them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, let us continue with private members' statements.

The Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Northern Leaders' Summit

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the very successful northern leaders' summit held on March 14, 2014, in Athabasca. The northern leaders' summit brought together elected officials for a day of conversation, leading to the identification of priorities for the development of Alberta's north. I was pleased to share that day with municipal, First Nations, and Métis leaders from across Alberta's vast north. It's important to recognize the significant contribution of the many ministers of this government to this successful event. Northern elected officials were so pleased to have ministers sit down with them to hear the concerns of northerners and to see their willingness to work together to progress northern Alberta and indeed all of this great province.

We were delighted that the Premier was able to join us. The Premier sent a clear message that this government is committed to supporting development in northern Alberta and respecting the concerns of those who live next door to that development.

Mr. Speaker, this gathering of northern leaders was unprecedented. Issues were brought forward and priorities were identified through real and authentic conversation. Albertans know and understand that the rich resources in northern regions of this province are critical to our present and future prosperity. The northern leaders' summit was an important recognition of the role northern Alberta and its citizens play in Alberta's prosperity.

At the conclusion of the day a hundred per cent of the delegates voted to convene another northern leaders' summit in 2015, truly a ringing endorsement.

I want to thank the Minister of Aboriginal Relations and the MLA for Lesser Slave Lake, who chairs the Northern Alberta Development Council, for their leadership in bringing attention to Alberta's north.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Little Bow.

Trade with India

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise today to speak about the Premier's recent trade mission to India. Our Premier, with a group of Alberta's representatives, extended Alberta's trade to one of the world's largest markets. Alberta now has strong trade ties with two Indian provinces. Our government is strengthening our future with continued economic growth in new Asian markets. I was honoured to be part of the signing of the agreement and the opening of the New Delhi-Alberta office with the Premier and colleagues.

I recognize the value that India has in the global marketplace. Since the agreement was signed, my contacts in the government of Punjab are as eager to move forward as we are. We all agree that this memorandum of understanding will be a huge benefit for the two states of India, Punjab and Meghalaya, and our beautiful province.

Our government worked hard to promote trade with India. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased for the forward thinking of our government and this trade mission to diversify markets to the benefit of Alberta and Canada. The future economic growth that Alberta will experience will prove that this is an investment for all Albertans. We need to continue to move forward quickly to promote oil, gas, and agriculture to new Asian markets. Both India and Alberta will profit now and for a very long time to come.

God bless our province of Alberta, and God bless Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Bridges in Rural Areas

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to talk about rural Alberta. This government has its building Alberta plan. Well, this plan seems to have forgotten a little place called rural Alberta.

We have a lot of problems with their strategic infrastructure program, and one of the key parts to that is the building bridges file. All the bridges are run by the municipalities, and the bridge funding was cut last year. The AAMD and C has talked about how they need at least $75 million a year for the next 10 years to keep these bridges going. Today the hon. Minister of Transportation talked about the Canamex highway, with a billion dollars pumped into that. That's great, but if you cannot get your product to the main highways because a bridge is being banned or shut down, that basically renders this whole province useless for getting any of their products moved around. This province really needs to sit down and remember where the products come from and where they need to be moved from.

We talked about fearmongering there on the safety side when one of the members, I believe Cypress-Medicine Hat, brought up things. It is a problem. One of the bridges in Lethbridge county has been banned to five tonnes. Mr. Speaker, at five tonnes a fire truck cannot drive across there with a load on it. If it does and it falls through, who's at fault? This is a safety concern for my constituents and a lot of the constituents in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding due to irrigation there are over 750 bridge files. That's a lot of bridges, that basically account for about 12 per cent of the bridges in this province. If we do not figure out how to get the money back into this program, we're going to have a lot of people sitting here wondering how they're going to get around to get to see all the signs in this province about building Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I was sent here to represent the constituents of Little Bow and as a voice for rural Alberta. Right now I'm voicing that we need to get our bridges back up so people can get around this province and get trade back to where it should be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo had a spot and has ceded it, so we will move on.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have a petition with over 11,000 signatures collected through the campaign No Drilling Lethbridge from the citizens of Lethbridge and area who are very concerned about the possibility of urban drilling close to residential areas and schools in the city.

Thank you very much.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to rise to table five copies of the Alberta Economic Development Authority's annual activity report. AEDA has been one of the government's most dependable, enduring, and trusted partners for the past two decades. AEDA has identified strategic solutions to a range of economic challenges such as job creation, skills and education, productivity, competitiveness, market access.

The annual report is a great celebration of their work and contains information on some of the latest studies and reports commissioned by AEDA. The studies include water reuse, congestion management, opportunities in Alberta's innovation system, and the 2013 Report on Competitiveness. I would encourage all members to get a copy and read this report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or someone on behalf of, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 50 of the more than 4,000 postcards that our office received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to post-secondary education in Alberta.

I also have the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to the Finance minister, Doug Horner, by one of his constituents, Paulina Ross, lamenting the unnecessary meddling in the public-sector pension plans.

Finally, I have five copies of a document that we were distributing as Alberta New Democrats here today talking about pensions and problems with public pensions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you know that we are not to refer to the first or last names of people who are elected here. I know you know that. I see that you're sincerely sorry, so we'll move on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of an e-mail actually directed to the Health minister but copied to me. This is from a constituent, Nicholas Ternes, and he points out that the 2011 campaign Plenty of Syph, which was an STI testing campaign, resulted in a 17 per cent increase in public interest and patients seeking this but no additional staffing there, so people are being regularly turned away. His point is that now that we've got people understanding they need to get tested for STIs, it's not helping us if they go there and get turned away, that we'd likely create far more expensive consequences.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of an article I referenced yesterday in my member's statement. The article is from the March 14, 2014, Calgary Herald and is titled Brandon and Gereluk: Let's Strengthen Education through Evidence, Not Fads. It was written by Jim Brandon and Dianne Gereluk.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise today to table letters from constituents. I have the requisite copies. This is from John Emmons and Maria Farmer, who have the apparent failure of the Workers' Compensation Board to recognize their claims going forward. I wish to table that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

No rulings on points of order are required, so we can move on.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: I'd like to make a brief statement if I could for you regarding the MLA for a Day program. Fellow members, as you know, the Legislative Assembly is again hosting Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day on Monday, May 5, and Tuesday, May 6. This is a great opportunity for high school students from all over the province, from all of your constituencies, actually, and mine, to learn about what we do here, how we do it, and so on and to gain a better understanding of how our parliamentary democracy functions, meet other young people who are equally interested, and in general to promote good citizenship and participation. These students will even debate a resolution right here in the very Chamber in which we sit. I hope they will have a chance to meet all of you throughout the course of the program.

Please, can you let your high schools know that this program is fully supported by the Legislative Assembly Office, with the sponsorship of the Royal Canadian Legion, Alberta-Northwest Territories Command, and that means there is no cost to the students whatsoever. None. The LAO, visitor services, will take care of all of those arrangements, and the deadline for registration is March 31.

Of course, we're trying to generate again as much interest as we did last year, when we had a record number turnout. Information packages and registration forms have already been sent to you, but they are also available on the Assembly website at www.assembly.ab.ca. I'd be most obliged to all of you to support this program and encourage a student or two to submit their names from your area. Your personal involvement is extremely helpful, and it is most encouraging to help students participate from your constituency. Ultimately, we're all looking for the same thing, and that is success in connecting with our young people, encouraging them perhaps to even follow in our footsteps.

Thank you for whatever you can do to help promote this important program, MLA student for a day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 4

Estate Administration Act

[Adjourned debate March 13: Ms Kubinec]

Ms Kubinec: It is my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act.

The Speaker: I believe you already moved it, hon. member, or someone did. You have 12 minutes to finish your speech, though.

Ms Kubinec: Actually, you know, I'm just going to talk briefly about it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Sure.

Ms Kubinec: As a result of the roles and responsibilities of personal representatives it will be easier to understand, and beneficiaries can be more assured that the wishes of the deceased are being followed.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident this legislation will benefit Albertans. Several of the changes contained in the bill were motivated by recommendations from the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and both round-tables and online consultations were conducted with Alberta's estate practitioners.

With that, I would like to close debate.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have others who may still wish to speak here. Did you truly mean to conclude it?

Ms Kubinec: My apologies.

The Speaker: I don't think you did, because you were moving third reading far earlier.

Ms Kubinec: My apologies.

The Speaker: Are there others? Edmonton-Centre, you wish to join in the debate?

Ms Blakeman: I do. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: So can we ask Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock to just recant that last statement?

Ms Kubinec: I recant.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much to the sponsor of the bill. Again, I want to particularly recognize the people that were involved in the development of this new estate act, which is going to replace – excuse me while I double-check this. I think we're repealing two other bills as a result of this, the previous estates act and one other one. It's not going to come to me in a quick second here.

The other thing of interest in all of this is that a minor's interest, not a person with a shovel but a person under 18, has been, for the most part, removed from this act, but it's being dealt with somewhere else, and I think that's quite appropriate.

I do want to recognize the various legal minds that were involved in this. I think they have done an exceptional job in this, particularly given lawyers' proclivities to make the language more dense and harder to follow. They've done a very nice job working against their lawyerly instinct.

I also want to recognize the staff from the Department of Justice and Solicitor General because I know they had a big hand in this and have been chugging along with this legislation for some time. I really am quite pleased with this legislation, and I'm very glad to see it in place. Hopefully, I will not have to take advantage of the clear writing and instructions to laypeople in any quick timeline, but I'll be much happier working with this legislation than with what we had previously when that day and time comes for me to act as executor.

Once again, thank you to everyone that was involved with this. I've not had any negative feedback on the bill. My congratulations to everyone, and I am happy to support this bill in third reading.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? None.

Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, now should you wish to conclude debate, it is your opportunity to do so.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a real pleasure to have the ability to carry this bill through. I think it's important to Albertans.

With that, I would adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock has moved third reading of Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister of reconstruction.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014.

The existing legislation protects Albertans buying a new home. It raises the overall quality of construction and provides Albertans with the strongest new-home warranty protection in Canada. The home warranty legislation and supporting regulations came into effect February 1, 2014, and have been working very well.

Sometimes when new legislation is introduced, there are minor changes needed. That's what these amendments to the New Home Buyer Protection Act are about. The foundation principles in the act, including its warranty protection requirements, remain. The proposed amendments result from extensive stakeholder consultations while preparing the regulations in 2013. Certain sections in the act were identified as areas for clarification and technical changes in the way some provisions are implemented. Bill 6 proposes technical and clarifying amendments.

In addition, Bill 6 adopts several rules already in place in the regulations. While these regulations are working well, adopting them into the act provides a more permanent solution. It clarifies existing policies; for example, the 10-year period that a new home is subject to in the act is currently called the purchase period. In Alberta the date buyers sign papers to purchase a home can be long before warranty coverage begins. Bill 6 will rename the 10-year period to be the protection period. To clarify what it is about: how long a home is protected by the act.

It also clarifies the commencement of the protection period for condominium conversions of apartments built under an insurance exemption. If a conversion occurs during the apartment's protection period, each condominium unit's protection period is determined individually. Each protection period is deemed to have begun on the date of the unit's first rental occupancy.

Bill 6 also clarifies that administrative penalties may be issued on a per-home basis. It proposes that when an administrative penalty is appealed, the penalty recipient must pay it or post an irrevocable letter of credit similar to a cheque that can't be cancelled. The letter of credit will be returned in the event of a successful appeal but discourages filing an appeal just to delay payment.

One of Bill 6's technical amendments provides that the first day of occupancy starts the protection period for all homes. Currently where home purchases do not involve a land titles transfer, the day the owner moves in is the day the warranty starts if it has not started already. Builders rarely let owners move into new homes without buying them first. However, from time to time owners move into new homes before land titles registrations go through. Whenever this happens, the warranty coverage will begin on the day the owner moves in if warranty coverage has not been started already.

Bill 6 proposes a new provision called a rental use designation, part of a land titles based conditional home warranty insurance exemption for apartment buildings. A provision in the regulations allows apartment builders and owners to have apartments without home warranty insurance provided the building is owned by one person who does not sell units individually, convert the building into condominiums, or subdivide the building in separate titles. Mr. Speaker, this exemption is not available for condominium buildings.

Mr. Speaker, under Bill 6 exempt apartments must have a rental use designation registered on their land title. The caveat will warn potential buyers that the apartment building has no insurance. The land titles registration is similar to an existing provision in the act on restrictive covenants; however, Bill 6 provides more detail on how the land titles registration works, which is something stakeholders wanted to clarify. The bill's provisions describe how the caveat will be registered, maintained on title, and discharged. In particular, discharge of the caveat will be allowed only through application to the new-home buyer protection office. Where there are disputes under this exemption, the regulation-making powers under the act allow for grounds for appeal to the New Home Buyer Protection Board to be put in place.

Additionally, Bill 6 adopts some rules contained in the regulations to make them more permanent. Some amendments give the registrar of the new-home buyer protection office and the New Home Buyer Protection Board tools to handle a higher volume of work efficiently. Minor amendments to the appeals process also include allowing the board to make rules of procedure and making all appeals to the board due within 30 days.

Mr. Speaker, I would move second reading of Bill 6.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I assume you're moving it on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is that correct?

Mr. Weadick: That's correct, and I would like to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: So it is correct that you did move it on behalf of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and that you have moved to adjourn debate.

Hon. members, the motion for adjournment of debate on this particular bill is up.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. O gracious God, help us in our daily duties and guide us with Your wisdom. Remind us to not be judgmental of others, and help us to be understanding of those who may differ from us in cause and purpose. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem now and remain standing after it's over for an additional tribute.

Mr. Robert Clark, will you lead us, please?

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Mr. Jonathan Joseph Lord December 29, 1956, to March 26, 2014

The Speaker: Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. Today we honour and respect Mr. Jonathan Joseph Lord.

Mr. Jon Lord served this Assembly as the Member for Calgary-Currie for one term, from 2001 to 2004. Mr. Lord came from a background of enterprising action and spirit. He was an entrepreneur who carved out his future first through business and community and then as a two-term alderman for the city of Calgary from 1995 to 2001.

As a Member of this Legislative Assembly Mr. Lord served on numerous committees. In the House he was a vocal proponent of the disadvantaged, a promoter of energy efficiency, and a champion for small business. He laboured tirelessly on behalf of his constituents and his family, and he never stopped contributing to the betterment of his community. Many of us had the honour of serving with him. That means something very special to each of us.

In a moment of silent prayer let us bow our heads and remember Mr. Jon Lord as we may have known him. O Lord, grant unto him eternal rest, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude that we pay to members of the families who share the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome some very special members of the Lord family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. I will introduce them one at a time. Perhaps they could signal their presence to us with a hand wave, and then we can applaud and thank them all for having been part of Jon's life and, in turn, part of our history: Jon's partner, Sheryl Guillaume, of Calgary; Jon's youngest daughter, Jessica Eren, of Calgary; Jon's son-in-law Deniz Eren of Calgary; Jon's grandson Altan Eren of Calgary; Jon's sister Judy Brown of Edmonton; Jon's brother Dennis Brown of Edmonton; and Sheryl's daughter-in-law, Tanya Morey, of Calgary. Unfortunately, Jon's other daughters – Mandy, Michelle, and Katie – were not able to be with us here today, but our thoughts and prayers are also with them.

To the Lord family we say thank you, and now we pay our respects through our applause for Mr. Jon Lord. [applause]

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Welcome to the Premier

The Speaker: Hon. members, I beg your indulgence just before we go on with the introduction of visitors to make a brief statement. In this respect I would ask that you please hold any applause that you might wish to offer until I have concluded my comments.

I want to take a moment to officially welcome Alberta's 15th Premier, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. First elected to this Assembly in 1997, the hon. member has served as Minister of Federal and Intergovernmental Affairs, Minister of Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Affairs, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Minister of Advanced Education, Minister of Health and Wellness, Minister of Education, Minister of Human Services, and is currently serving as Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. He has also held the role of Government House Leader or Deputy Government House Leader in 16 out of the 17 years that he has served in this Assembly.

On behalf of all Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta I welcome the first Premier of Alberta to be born in the Northwest Territories. He is now Alberta's 15th Premier. Please join me in welcoming the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, Mr. Premier. [Standing ovation]

On that note, I'd ask the hon. Premier to make his first introduction.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for those kind remarks and to all of my colleagues in the House for the warmth that we will have for at least the next minute in this role.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of leaders from our First Nations and Métis communities that are with us here today. They're sitting in your gallery, and I'd ask that they stand as I read their names. From the Truth and Reconciliation Commission we have Commissioner Marie Wilson; Education Day co-ordinator Charlene Bearhead; president of the Métis Nation of Alberta Association, Audrey Poitras; and the Assembly of First Nations regional vice-chief, Cameron Alexis. In a few moments I'll be speaking about the Truth and Reconciliation Commission events that took place recently here in Edmonton. I'm grateful for our guests' attendance here today and, through them, for all the work that was done by the leadership of the commission and by the commissioners and by all those who acted on their behalf to ensure that we had the event that we had to really discuss an issue of prime importance to Albertans and Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask all members to join me in thanking these dedicated individuals and the individuals they represent for the countless hours of work that they do for our community and for our people. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the House. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Pisan Manawapat, who is the ambassador of Thailand. Welcome also to Mr. Narong Boonsatheanwong, minister-counsellor from the Royal Thai Embassy in Ottawa, and Mr. Yothin Tongpenyai, president of Thailand's petroleum exploration and production company in Canada. Our province is home to a very active community of more than 1,000 Albertans of Thai descent. Ambassador Manawapat's visit is a great opportunity for us to tell Alberta's story as well as explore new areas of co-operation in a variety of sectors. Our esteemed guests are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I'd now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the notes with me, but I believe I'm introducing a group from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, the careers-in-training program from NorQuest College, I think. Forgive me if I'm mumbling my way through your introduction. I know that you students always work really hard and have lots to bring forward. If you're with us in either gallery, please rise so that we may give you an appropriate welcome.

The Speaker: Your second introduction, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. It's very kind of you to allow me to do a second introduction. Again, I can't see him, but I am sure that Mickey Wilson is with us in one of the two galleries. I've known Mickey for a very long time. We have marched together and sang and danced together a little bit and stood watch and supported each other through a lot. I was at his wedding. He is now the executive director of the Pride Centre. He's here today to witness the passage – she said hopefully – of my colleague's Motion 503, which is to establish gay-straight alliances in schools if students so wish. Mickey, I hope you're with us now. There he is. Please rise and accept our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 35 bright young grade 6 students from my wife Janice's alma mater, Forest Heights elementary school, who are here today. These students will be attending School at the Legislature this week, and it's my hope that they gain a positive and constructive understanding of the Legislature. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Marion Fritz, and a volunteer from Kassel, Germany, Christin Noll. I would now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is 33 bright and energetic students from Delton elementary school. They are accompanied by Mr. Rodney Corkum and Mrs. Dao Haddad, their teachers. I would like to welcome them to the Assembly and ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The second introduction, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you two new members of our caucus staff. Sean Steels is a sessional communications officer. He attended the Grant MacEwan public relations program and most recently worked as a co-ordinator with the Works Art & Design Festival here in Edmonton.

Chris Fulmer has recently joined us as a sessional research assistant. Chris has a bachelor of arts in political science from the University of Alberta. He's contributed to numerous political campaigns and is very excited to be working on the front lines helping to keep the government accountable and working towards a better and more inclusive Alberta.

I would now like to ask Chris and Sean to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to everyone here in the Assembly 58 members of St. Edmund school. They are accompanied by Miss Dawn Miskew, Ms Christina Fielden, and Ms Karen Butt. St. Edmund school has the athletic program. I was just there recently, and I'm very pleased to have them here to receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, your guests will arrive later, so let us move on, then, to the Premier, who has an introduction.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of very dedicated and passionate student leaders. The Council of Alberta University Students now represents more than 100,000 students. CAUS recently added the student associations from Mount Royal University and from MacEwan University to its membership. For the next four days these leaders will be in the Legislature discussing key issues with a number of MLAs. This is their advocacy week. Within just a few minutes of meeting this group, you will realize that Alberta's future is incredibly bright thanks to the talented and dedicated young men and women who make up the organization.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you from the University of Alberta Adam Woods, Petros Kusmu, Navneet Khinda, and William Lau; from the University of Calgary Raphael Jacob, Jarett Henry, and Levi Nilson; from the University of Lethbridge Shuna Talbot and Sean Glydon; from Mount Royal University Missy Chareka and Mr. Erik Queenan; from MacEwan Cam McCoy, Ryan Roth, and Ray Khan; and, last but not least, the council's support staff, Beverly Eastham. These students have been advocating on behalf of students from the universities across this province. They do incredible work. Some of them are now retiring – their terms are up – and others are just coming into their terms. I'd ask the House to thank them for the work done, thank them for the work they will do, and give them the incredible warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Allison Sweeney and Dr. John Webb, who specialize in rural family medicine and genetic medicine, respectively. They are here today with the Professional Association of Resident Physicians of Alberta, or PARA, to advocate for increased vaccinations for all Albertans. Vaccination is one of the single most effective ways a person can protect their health, that of their family, their workplace, and their community. I would ask all members of the Assembly to please help PARA in accomplishing this important public health goal by resourcing public health and vaccination programs. I would ask Dr. Sweeney and Dr. Webb to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the clock suggests that we ought to be moving to question period, but I have a request from the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd request unanimous consent to waive 7(1.1) and delay Oral Question Period until the ministerial statement and all replies are concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has requested that we waive Standing Order 7(1.1) so that question period would begin after Ministerial Statements is completed. It's my understanding that the opposition members have been apprised of the ministerial statement that may be forthcoming, and so, too, have private or independent members.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: We have another eight or nine introductions. Do you wish to do those first, hon. members? We could finish those up? Okay. Well, let's finish those up, then, and please be quick so we can move on with Ministerial Statements.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my dear friend Mr. Kashmir Gill. Mr. Kashmir Gill is a professional engineer who works as the regional director of the National Research Council of Canada's industrial research assistance program. This program provides technical and business innovation services to mid-sized Canadian companies. Mr. Gill is a very active community volunteer in the community at large. One of his outstanding achievements is to raise money for projects like the Guru Nanak Dev healing garden centre at the University of Alberta hospital. I will ask Mr. Gill to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of persons who are here to support Bill 203 in second reading. They are Dr. Gordon Hensel, the registrar for the Alberta College of Optometrists; Bettylyn Baker, a teacher who is very concerned about children with visual impediments to learning; Diane Bergeron, who is the CNIB national director, government relations and advocacy; Lui Greco, who is with the CNIB – he's the Alberta-Northwest Territories director, government relations and advocacy – John McDonald from the CNIB, the Alberta-Northwest Territories executive director and regional vice-president; Megan Kompf, the CNIB Alberta-Northwest Territories regional manager; Julia Roy from the Alberta Society for the Visually Impaired; Marc Workman, CNIB national manager for consumer advocacy; and Jung-Suk Ryu, manager, communications, CNIB Alberta and Northwest Territories. They are seated in the members' gallery. They're all here to support Bill 203 and to hear second reading. I would ask them all to rise now to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Nicholas Burris. Nick is a resident of the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency and has a very keen interest in global politics. He has recently moved to Lacombe from Melbourne, Australia, looking to retrace his father's roots. Nick, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to, in fact, all members of this Assembly Dr. Kris Wells of the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services at the University of Alberta. Dr. Wells is a tremendous advocate for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgendered, and queer youth in this province and throughout the country. I'm proud to have him as my guest on the day we debate a motion and, hopefully, pass that motion designed to continue the good work of making things better for LGBTQ kids today. I would ask Kris to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is World Health Day, and April 6 to 12 is Dental Hygienist Week. In recognition of this, we have some very special guests from the college of dental hygienists and the Professional Association of Resident Physicians of Alberta. Dental hygienists play a crucial role in promoting preventative health measures and wellness, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank them sincerely for all of their hard work and dedication. Not everyone can do what they do.

PARA is here for the annual resident physicians in the Legislature day. Of course, they are continuing to build relationships with their elected representatives, as discussed, and also discussing many items of health policy. I had the opportunity to meet with all of the intelligent, enthusiastic members of PARA earlier today, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that with these physicians leading our health care system, I know our medical future is in great hands.

At this point I would like to ask not only Dr. Allison Sweeney, PARA vice-president of leadership and education, but also Ms Gerry Cool, past president of the College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta and the Alberta director for the Canadian Dental Hygienists Association, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you already did your introduction, or do you have a third introduction? You're done? Thank you.

Edmonton-Meadowlark, you're finished with your introductions, and, Edmonton-Centre, you've completed yours as well. Is that correct? It's just that I have you listed further here.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier and Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission National Event

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise today to recognize the Truth and Reconciliation Commission having held its seventh and final national event in the city of Edmonton from March 27 to 30. Four years ago the Truth and Reconciliation Commission held its first national event in the city of Winnipeg, the city with then the largest urban aboriginal population in the country. It was fitting that the final national event should take place here as Edmonton has the second-highest aboriginal population in the country and growing.

Indian residential schools operated in our country for 130 years, and approximately 150,000 children attended those schools. In Alberta there were 25 Indian residential schools, the most in any province or territory, and today there are 12,000 survivors in Alberta, the second-highest number in Canada. Over the four days of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission gathering over 400 residential school survivors related their experiences at those schools and the profound impact on the lives of themselves, their families, and their communities. Parental, family, and cultural breakdown led to profound emotional and spiritual consequences for generations of children.

Over the four days that I was able to attend, I was touched to hear the experiences of the survivors and am still in awe of the courage they displayed by sharing such personal experiences. It was heartwarming to be there with the record number of Albertans and western Canadians in attendance at the commission gathering. I was so pleased also to see so many community leaders attending. I commend Alberta ministers and MLAs who attended the national event, and I would specifically reference the Member for Lesser Slave Lake, who was an honorary listener during the event. We were all there to learn and to listen, to understand this part of our history better. I'd also like to thank Mayor Naheed Nenshi of Calgary and Mayor Don Iveson of Edmonton as well as the mayor of Wetaskiwin, Bill Elliot, for providing a declaration of a year of reconciliation. We look forward to working with them as to how that year of reconciliation can make a difference in our relationships and our results.

Part of the work of the commission, Mr. Speaker, is to help people understand the history of Indian residential schools and to engage Canadians in conversations and expressions of reconciliation about those schools and about the people who were affected. The history of Indian residential schools is not solely an aboriginal history. It is a shared history. It is our history.

It was a proud moment when the Minister of Aboriginal Relations announced to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission how Alberta will move forward through our expression of reconciliation. The Minister of Education is leading some bold work for the provincial kindergarten to grade 12 curriculum to include enhanced mandatory content for all Alberta students on the significance of residential schools and treaties. The government of Alberta commits to continuing work on professional development so that teachers learn about the history and legacy of the residential schools and First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples and are better prepared to meet the needs of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit children and youth.

The public national events for the Truth and Reconciliation Commission may have concluded, but the work, Mr. Speaker, continues. We have an opportunity to write a new chapter in our relationship with aboriginal people, a chapter with a richer and fuller understanding of their experiences and the contributions that aboriginal people make to our province. Indeed, the history of aboriginal people in Alberta is our history. It's an essential part of our history, and the future of aboriginal people in this province is our future. Alberta will continue to build its relationship with aboriginal people to ensure that First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people have every advantage to benefit from Alberta's tremendous economy and great quality of life. Aboriginal people in Alberta deserve to have the same socioeconomic status as all other Albertans, and we are committed to that happening.

The Speaker: Sorry; Edmonton-Centre?

Ms Blakeman: I was rising to ask for the unanimous consent of the members of the Assembly to allow the other opposition leaders and individual members to speak after the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a request has been put forward. It requires unanimous consent for the leaders of the third and fourth parties to offer their remarks on this subject right after the Official Opposition House Leader has spoken.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let us move on in the meantime with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for her remarks.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Premier, for your statement.

The final national Truth and Reconciliation Commission event in Edmonton saw 3,243 survivors registered, 402 statements gathered, and 30,120 live video streams broadcast to 36 countries over the course of four days. This paramount event helped to forge the path towards the integral process of healing and reconciliation for the victims of the residential school tragedy.

Throughout the weekend many survivors were given the opportunity to share their stories. I was particularly moved by the story of Theodore Fontaine of Winnipeg. Theodore entered residential school in 1948 and spent more than 12 years there. He would later write a book about his experiences. In his words, quote, this was the biggest mistake that Canada ever made; whatever you've heard is incredibly true and is just a fraction of what happened. Unquote. Theodore said that he endured mental, spiritual, and sexual abuse, having been raped repeatedly at a young age. He went through several phases of trauma, confrontation, and healing in his life. Just one month ago he began reliving the abuses. A terrifying nightmare left him lying paralyzed in bed. He said: I always think I'm on my way to reconciliation and a better way of life, but it stays with you.

He went on to share about how he reached out to one of the individuals who molested him in an attempt to bring closure, and the person claimed he didn't remember him. Theodore told him, quote: "I said, 'I'm sorry because for the last 60 years I've hated you and wanted to kill you.' Can you imagine saying that to another human being? That came from me, but it wasn't me speaking. It was the seven-, eight-, and nine-year-old boy getting out whatever was still bothering him after 60-some years."

Unquote. His abuser continued to deny that anything had happened, and Theodore resolved to confront him again at a later date. Within a month he had another face-to-face meeting with him, and at the end as they were wrapping up the meeting, his abuser said: by the way, Theodore, thank you very much for not mentioning my name in your book. Mr. Speaker, there are no words.

A recent study revealed that only 50 per cent of Canadians are aware of the residential school system. One of the long-term goals of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission is to ensure that mainstream society is educated on this part of Canada's history as it is a key component of the healing and reconciliation process.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission asserts and we embrace the belief that the truth of our common experiences will help set our spirits free and pave the way to reconciliation. It is my hope that devastating stories like Theodore's are not forgotten and will get us all one step closer to healing once and for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus I am very thankful and feel honoured to live on Treaty 6 lands.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to attend the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and hear the stories and feel the pain shared by those survivors. The government of Canada guaranteed in return for peace and control of the land to provide for basic needs and the rights of the First Nations people. Unfortunately, the implementation of the Indian Act meant ripping children from their families at a young age, denying them their language and cultural practices, and in many cases physically abusing them and emotionally and mentally abusing them in many of the residential schools across the country. Absent parenting predictably led to absent skills for parenting in subsequent generations and mental health issues and addictions and poverty for many of our First Nations brothers and sisters.

Mr. Speaker, I've spent the majority of my life on the front lines in an inner-city hospital seeing the First Nations of our country overrepresented in the homeless population, overrepresented in the prison system, overrepresented in the human suffering that exists today in our society. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission was absolutely essential to account for something that has been a horrendous black mark on our society as a civil society in Canada and right here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this is only the beginning. Healing only begins with this, but what we need to do is follow up healing with hope, with a major investment into education, into health care, into really dealing with the real issues of inequality and poverty that still exist today: affordable housing, potable water. We've seen the missing and murdered women, hundreds of them across the country. That has to be atoned for. We have seen the deaths of 741 children right here in Alberta, one child a week dying in government care, 70 per cent of them First Nations, Métis, or Inuit.

These problems, Mr. Speaker, still exist today in the Alberta that we live in. I call on all members of the Assembly along with our Alberta Liberal caucus to not only support the work of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission – and I thank the commission members and all those across the country and the federal leaders for being a part of this. But, my dear friends, we have so much more work to do. As the new Premier said, their problem is our problem, and the future of the First Nations community is our future. It's a shared humanity and a shared future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission was a critical step in moving towards healing, and the Alberta NDP was thankful to attend the final national event in Edmonton. This event was the culmination of several years of work that began with a historic apology on behalf of the people of Canada in the Parliament in 2008. I am proud of the important role that Jack Layton played in bringing that about.

The powerful testimonies of survivors that were shared over the four-day event here in Edmonton were just a glimpse of the damage that residential schools have caused to indigenous cultures and communities. We applaud the courageous women and men who shared their testimony at the event, and we hope that they are finding healing. But the healing does not end with the adjournment of the commission, Mr. Speaker. There's much more that we need to do.

Mr. Speaker, we've heard today that this government will be implementing an enhanced curriculum on residential schools. We sincerely hope that this is a promise that will be kept. While teaching this history is vital, we must do more to remove barriers for indigenous people. We need to open doors for greater opportunity for indigenous students, and we could start by keeping the promise made for aboriginal bursaries for postsecondary education. We could strengthen our consultation process so that indigenous people are true partners in future resource development. We need to do more to address the gross inequality in health and social spending that occurs on reserves and to expand resources dedicated to improving educational outcomes for indigenous children.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for action. Truth and reconciliation must be an ongoing process, and we urge this government to not close the book on this sad history but to continue to push for further healing, inclusiveness, and the removal of inequalities for all indigenous Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon members, I have received a written request to participate in the statements at this time from Calgary-Foothills as an independent member of the Assembly. If anyone is in objection to granting unanimous consent to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, would you please express your objection now?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues. I'd like to join my colleagues in the recognition of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission over the last month. This historic tragedy is one that we need to learn from and respect the incredible hardships that these people faced not only as a group but individually.

The truth and reconciliation approach is a form of restorative justice, aiming to heal the relationships between offenders, victims, and the community in which these tragedies took place. Those involved in truth and reconciliation commissions seek to uncover facts and distinguish truth from lies. The process allows for acknowledgement, public mourning, forgiveness, and healing.

It is important to remember that Alberta is comprised of many diverse groups, and the provincial kindergarten to grade 12 curriculum's recognition of the study of residential schools and treaties is a vital part of what makes our province so strong.

Having had the incredible honour of being the past Minister of Aboriginal Relations, I have heard first-hand how important the learning of the history and legacy of all of Alberta's First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples is to these groups. I am convinced that knowledge of past successes and failures will greatly increase our ongoing ability to recognize and honour the contributions by aboriginal peoples to all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have received two final written requests here for participation. Again, it requires unanimous consent. One is from the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, and the other is from the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I'll ask one question. If anyone objects to giving unanimous consent to these two individuals expressing their brief comments on this matter, would you please express so now?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the darkest moments of our history is the history that has affected many individuals like Theodore, like my father, like my mother, and like myself but also many nations, and its effect has been felt and will continue to be felt for many generations. As a result, we have experienced many ills in my community, ills that we've had to live with.

Mr. Speaker, I was a small girl, a tiny girl. When I was born, I weighed two pounds. When I went to school, I was the smallest girl, and I had to go to residential school. Being small is really not as much of an advantage as overweight people think it's an advantage. It was not an advantage. It was not a good time. The nuns were very cruel. They used to pick on me because I was so tiny. Many times I was hit by a ruler; it was always across the back. I do have scars from that. But I did get through it. It was no fun. I was probably the least of those that were affected by physical abuse. That physical abuse was no fun.

But I had a protector, and that protector was very good. The last time that the nun came to hit me, the protector got up and grabbed the ruler and broke it across her knee, and she said, "You'll never hit her again," and hit her in the face with her fist. I still don't condone any kind of physical activity against people. However, that day many of us children who were abused physically and in whatever way that we were abused were surrounding the girl who was hitting the nun, and we were yelling: kill her; kill her; kill her. That's no way for kids to react.

This is just one example, like the example of Theodore, of the stories that the commission has heard. Mine was not as bad as some of the others like my father's or my mother's. They experienced that physical and sexual behaviour, that I believe was so wrong to do to children. I don't care who you are. I don't care what colour you are. That kind of physical therapy, as they used to call it, didn't help us. It created a lot of problems in our community and in my community.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the commissioners and the work that they have done. I commend them for being so strong, for listening to our stories. They are our stories. As the onion was peeled from some of the people's soul, you got to the inner core of that individual. The only way that we can heal is by making sure that people know and understand the kinds of things we've gone through.

Thank you to the commissioners. Thank you to the government of Canada for establishing this commission. But I encourage them to also make sure they can release some of those files so that we can continue on our journey of healing.

What is it to reconcile? What are we reconciling? Are we reconciling the harm? Are we reconciling the fact that we have broken people? Are we reconciling the fact that we have so many things to do, that affect us today in the policy decisions we make? Whether it's in children's services with all the children or whether it's in the jails with all the people who are in there, what is it that we need to do?

It's just the beginning, Mr. Speaker. It's not the end. It is the beginning. And it's up to us as people who make policies to ensure that we continue to do that, to make sure that other children do not get harmed in this way. It is a dark time in our history, actually, and it's up to us to make sure that we get things done in the right way so that we can begin to see that people who need to be healed get healed.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to first of all thank the Premier for his comments today on the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. I'd also thank all of the other hon. members that have spoken to that, in particular my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for her very personal and touching comments. I'd also thank all the survivors who demonstrated a tremendous amount of courage in sharing their stories. I think it's important.

As well, I would like to acknowledge Willie Littlechild from the riding of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who was the only commission member from Alberta, and thank him for his work on the commission.

I commend the government on its commitment to enhancing the K to 12 educational curriculum to include more content about the tragedy of the residential schools and the treaties. It's so important that we continue to educate our teachers and students so that this tragedy is never repeated and never forgotten.

While I share the sentiments of many of my colleagues in this Chamber that this Truth and Reconciliation Commission's work has had a healing effect, there is still more work that must be done. It's important to acknowledge the horrors faced by the victims of residential schools, but we must not turn a blind eye to other victimized groups within this unique population. There are five First Nations and many Métis people in my region, and I've heard from many of them that more work still must be done. I'm pleased to hear that the Premier said that the work continues.

While this commission has been a step forward, I feel it's disconcerting that the federal government continues to reject the calls by aboriginal and Métis groups across the country for an independent public inquiry into the murders and disappearances of aboriginal women. Aboriginal women, Mr. Speaker, accounted for at least 8 per cent of homicide victims in Canada between 2004 and 2010 despite the fact that they only account for 4 per cent of the total female population. Further, aboriginal women are twice as likely to suffer domestic violence and much more likely than other women to be attacked by strangers. While I appreciate the work the government has done on this commission, I strongly urge our government to demand that the federal government hold a national inquiry into the murders and disappearances of these women. Having heard the heartbreaking stories during this commission, let us not turn a blind eye to further tragedies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, we have a young school group that has travelled a long way to be here today and has an equally long trip home, so I would ask that we allow a certain member to please introduce them briefly and revert to introductions. Does anybody object?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you're up.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you the grade 6 class of Bentley, Alberta, from my constituency, the best and the brightest. If I could ask them to please rise real quick and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it has been a very historic day today, with the tributes given to the truth and reconciliation process. To the committee members who are here, thank you for joining us and sitting in my Speaker's gallery. It's an honour to have you here.

However, that has also meant that we have extended ourselves beyond the normal time constraints, which was well worth it, I'm sure you would all agree. Nonetheless, I would ask for your unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7), that would allow us to continue the daily Routine until it is completed even if it means going beyond 3 p.m. Does anyone object to granting unanimous consent for that purpose?

The Speaker: Thank you, all.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Severance Payments to Premier's Office Staff

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the former Premier's resignation was another expensive day for Alberta taxpayers. Nine of her departing staffers raked in $1.3 million in severance and vacation payouts, including more than $400,000 for her chief of staff alone. But here's the uncomfortable truth. The Premier's senior staff are approved by cabinet through orders in council, which means every single cabinet minister had a hand in allowing these severance payouts to be dumped on Alberta taxpayers. To the Premier: why were these ridiculous contracts approved?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I believe appointments of senior staff come to cabinet. I don't necessarily believe that the contracts come to cabinet. Nonetheless, when one hires senior political staff, there are a number of pieces which need to be taken into account. First of all, there is no security whatsoever. Secondly, there is a six-month cooling-off period when they leave their office. So whether they're there for a month or for a year or for five years, there's a cooling-off period. Contracts of employment include a severance pay of one month per year up to six months in the normal course.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we've seen one year of severance for one year's worth of work, and that's excessive by anyone's standards.

That's not the only thing this cabinet approves. Through an order in council dated June 21, 2012, they increased the maximum salaries allowed for the Premier's senior staff. If that wasn't bad enough, the Premier's chief of staff was then hired at a salary $40,000 higher than the newly increased maximum. All of this happened with the full buy-in of the PC cabinet. Again to the Premier: when are he and his colleagues going to accept responsibility for this latest severance fiasco?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course it's our responsibility as government to be accountable for what's happened, and we take full responsibility for that. The fact of the matter is that those staff have now gone. There has been a change in leadership. There's been a change in process. The previous Premier apologized to the public for some of the mistakes that were made. I would apologize to the public for the mistakes that were made as well. But let's understand that the nature of these contracts is to bring in the best people you can to do work on behalf of Albertans. Sometimes that requires that you pay above scale, so you make that change. And severance is important because . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, by now it should be pretty obvious that the government can't just blame their former leader for all of their problems. Every cabinet minister is directly responsible for what seems like a never-ending parade of perks for political appointees, and they all sat around the table and approved them, not exactly a winning platform on which to launch a leadership campaign. Again to the Premier: is he going to do anything to clean up this mess, or is he just going to keep on defending?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the hon. member would want in terms of cleaning up the mess. In fact, the people that she's talking about are not working in the office any longer. I don't think that she's accurate in terms of saying that every member of cabinet was around making those decisions. Nonetheless, we accept responsibility for those decisions. I can assure you that going forward, we will adhere to the policy that's in place: one month's severance for each year worked, with a minimum of six months because there's a six-month cooling-off period. You're bringing good people in from the private sector to help government, to help Albertans. You want good people, and you need to pay them appropriately, and there needs to be fair severance.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. opposition leader.

Federal Building Redevelopment Plan

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's see if they'll take any responsibility for another scandal. The details surrounding the ex-

Premier's plans for an ultra swanky penthouse atop the federal building are deeply troubling, but more troubling are the conflicting stories that they're now telling. The Minister of Transportation, who was the Minister of Infrastructure at the time the project was being planned, told newspapers that the project was killed in November of 2012. But the new Infrastructure minister said that he killed the project in January of 2014. To either of the ministers, who now have had two weeks to try to get their stories straight: which one of you is telling the truth?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we're both telling the truth.

What's really interesting here is that the Leader of the Opposition seems very concerned about something that isn't happening. In fact, there's no residential component in that building now, and there won't be when it's opened. That's what we've told the public. That's final. That's the truth. We think that's in Albertans' best interests.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Infrastructure is clearly trying to launch his leadership campaign by bragging to the media that he personally killed the sky palace project in January, but this was after he spent weeks dodging media questions about the issue. He now says he issued orders cancelling the project, but this isn't mentioned in any of the internal e-mails that were released. To the minister: can he tell us exactly how and when he cancelled the sky palace project, and will he table evidence to back up his claims? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, you sat quietly and heard the question. Let's sit quietly and hear the answer, please.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually, I did the hon. member one better than to table evidence; I invited the media through to see it so they could see for themselves that there is no suite there. Done and done. The fact is that regardless of what the hon. member believes or is trying to cast aspersions on, there is no residence there. There won't be one built when it's opened. It's not happening.

The fact is that if the hon. member doesn't like change orders, perhaps she shouldn't have put one in just a couple of months ago after signing off last May on the very same building.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, at least the jobs minister is starting to get it. He told a Calgary newspaper that this PC government has lost the moral authority to govern, and on this side we couldn't agree more. I said the same thing just last month. This sky palace project was one of the worst displays of entitlement and arrogance that I have ever seen coming out of this government. To the Premier or any other member of cabinet: when all of this was going on, why didn't any of you have the integrity to just say no?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we act as a government, and I would say that it's not happening. That's proof right there that a decision was made to not do it. The only thing I might give the hon. member a little bit of credit for is that it was determined that it was a bad idea. We have a lot of ideas. Some are good; some are bad. This was a bad idea that was stopped, and the evidence is right there. In fact, again, I invited the media in the other day to have a look for themselves. I didn't hear any of them use "swanky" after they were done there in their reports after. That was a word that I didn't hear any of the media use. If I'm wrong, I'll be happy to be corrected, but I didn't hear that.

The Speaker: Third and final set of questions, hon. leader.

Progressive Conservative Party Trust Account

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of the absence of moral authority and some other bad ideas, Albertans were shocked to learn that in 1977 the PC Party created a mechanism to avoid political accountability and transparency. The TAPCAL trust is a secret slush fund which allows the PCs and only the PCs to have access to an account which has been illegal for everyone else since 1978. The PCs are brazenly doing things that other parties are prohibited from doing, and this government defends it. To the Premier: how did we end up with one law for the PC Party and another law for everybody else?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's craft questions in such a way that they don't violate the rules and the traditions and the conventions. [interjections] Excuse me. I'm not having a debate with you. I'm just saying: let's be careful in crafting our questions in such a way that they do not violate page 504 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, wherein it says that a question should not "concern internal party matters." So just be careful how you phrase your questions.

The hon. Premier to respond.

Progressive Conservative Party Trust Account

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that there wasn't one law for the governing party and one law for the others. What happened was that there was a transition from an old financing model to a new one under the election finances and contributions act, and the party that had money had to do something with that money and did it in a legal way. Any other party that had resources at the time would have been able to avail themselves of exactly the same law. The fact of the matter is that that has not been a secret fund. People have known about it. It's been reported on. Every time the annual report is filed, the indication is there. The interest has been paid out of the fund. It's not news this year. It wasn't news last year. It wasn't . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this secret PC slush fund negates over 30 years of improvements in donations transparency. Other than the PCs, no one knows who put the money in the trust. We don't know what, if any, favours they got in exchange. We have to take the PCs at their word that they haven't added any money to the trust since it isn't audited. What everyone else does know is that TAPCAL trust gives the PCs an unfair advantage which is illegal for all other parties. How is it that no one on the government side had the moral authority to speak out for equal treatment of all political parties for the last 30 years?

Mr. Hancock: It's not a secret fund, Mr. Speaker. It's been talked about every year when the annual reports are filed, to my knowledge. The interest in that fund has been paid out and has been reported every year. Every year. It's not news. It's not new. It's been there since the transition. [interjections] It was a transition fund from the old processes to the new processes. I think it was 1977 that that happened, so there have been no contributions to the fund. There's been nothing that's happened with that fund other than it pays some money on an annual basis, and it's reported on an annual basis under the current laws.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Please. Enough of the interjections and the loud yelling across the bow. I heard Edmonton-Centre chiming in. I heard Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and perhaps others. Pretty soon we're going to hear some government members responding, I'm sure. So before it gets out of hand, let's please return to some decorum here.

Let's move on with your final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as we've shown before, the PCs have made a common practice of soliciting and accepting illegal donations from prohibited corporations. We also learned they created a loophole in order to bypass donation limits, and now we discover that they have a trust account to ensure a permanent advantage over all other political parties. Will the Premier assure us that there are no other secret accounts, that the amounts and donors of this TAPCAL trust will be fully disclosed, and that he will give us a timeline for when it will be dissolved?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how I could disclose other secret accounts because if they're secret, I don't know about them. I can assure you that I don't know of any other accounts. However, I have asked the party leadership, the president of the party and the executive director of the party, to review with their executive the trust fund and what it would take to wind it up in the interest of total transparency. I believe that they will be addressing that. It is in their hands to do. I don't know the terms of the trust. I've never known the terms of the trust. But I have asked them to review it and determine what should happen going forward because we do not need to have this kind of a discussion every year when the financial report . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and Liberal leader.

Flood Recovery Communications Contracts

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Former PC Treasurer Mr. Dinning said that the next Premier needs to purge this government of its sense of entitlement. However, the current Premier said that any talk about a Tory culture of entitlement and corruption is absolute garbage. Well, Navigator's January 31 press release saying that they completed seven contracts from 2011 to 2013 worth more than a half-million dollars seems to support what Mr. Dinning said. Premier, if giving untendered contracts to the who's who of Tory land isn't entitlement or cronyism, then what the heck is?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we've had a number of conversations about the Navigator contract around the floods. It wasn't news even in March because, as the hon. member has indicated, Navigator themselves put out a news release in January talking about the contracts. The fact of the matter is that virtually all of the contracts in this government go through an RFP process, with appropriate competition, but there are some times, in unique circumstances or when you need a unique talent, when you can sole source a contract. That has nothing to do with whom you know; it has to do with what you can do.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the flood happened in June. The contract was signed October 28 to end October 31, for a quarter of a million dollars.

Continuing on the theme of the PC culture of entitlement, any government contract worth over $75,000 must be tendered out. Navigator's press release shows four different contracts with the Ministry of Health, each under that amount, totalling almost $220,000. It looks like a deliberate attempt to skirt the rules to benefit this Tory land PR firm, which also now employs a former chief of staff. To the Premier: is this the kind of thing you're going to let your current Health minister get away with?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member time after time after time has talked about a contract being signed in late September, October. What he would understand if he'd ever done any business in the world is that sometimes you have to get on with the job and do the paperwork later. That's exactly what happened in that contract. The flood relief work was absolutely necessary. It was absolutely to let Albertans know what was going on, and the government brought on the talent that they needed in order to do that. That's what happened. That was good business for Albertans. That was excellent work for Albertans, and it needed to be done.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, do the work and sign their contract later. Wow. You know, it almost seems like a special rule designed for something that the current executive director of the PC Party had done in the past.

When the Premier's immediate predecessor was Minister of Justice, Navigator received yet another contract, this one worth more than $107,000, which they completed in 2010. The former Premier condoned this PC culture of entitlement. The current Health minister condones the PC culture of entitlement. To the Premier: when will you put an end to this PC culture of entitlement?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, continually repeating a phrase does not make it accurate. What we do is hire the right people to do a job. [interjections] In the vast majority of circumstances those processes of contracting out go through an RFP process or a process that's a competitive process to hire. In some circumstances, because of the unique circumstances or the unique service being provided, there are sole-source contracts. It doesn't happen very often, but when it's done, it's done for a purpose. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: You know, there are just days when you just don't know how to even address you folks. [interjections] Some of you folks, pardon me.

I've noticed a little bit of a change today. I've actually noticed government members listening much more attentively and more respectfully, and some opposition members – some – are doing the same. For some it's a habit to do so. Yet for others: you continue to do these outbursts, which I know that television and radio don't capture, but we certainly do here. You all know what I'm talking about.

Please let this be the last time I have to remind you today. No more of these what I can only consider to be childish types of outbursts. Questions have been asked. They're very serious questions. Opposition is trying to hold the government accountable. Government is trying their best to answer back, but it's hard to do so over the loud shouting and yelling that is becoming characteristic of today's question period. So please let us remember that and move on, shall we?

I know we'll have a good demonstration right now from the hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm always nice to them on their first day and on their last day. Unfortunately, this is not his first day.

Government Policies

Mr. Mason: Albertans have been appalled by the litany of broken promises and stories of extravagance and entitlement. Hopes that this would end with the new leader appear to have been dashed given the statements by the new Premier. It appears that everything was fine all along, Mr. Speaker, and nothing really needs to change. My question is to the Premier. Will he take steps to eliminate the PC culture of entitlement, starting by admitting that it actually exists?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, for some 43 years people have been moving to this province because it's the best place to live, to work, and to raise your family. That's not by accident. Not by accident. Other places have resources; other places have opportunity. But Alberta is the place where people have a stable government that's worked in the best interest of Albertans for all that time. Have we made mistakes? Absolutely. Absolutely, we make mistakes, and we learn from those mistakes. We will continue to work on behalf of Albertans, and we will continue to make it the best place to live, to work, and to raise your family.

The Speaker: Well, that lasted a full 30 seconds. The hon. leader. First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. North Korea has a stable government, too.

Albertans had hoped that the culture of bullying and intimidation would come to an end with the departure of the last Premier. The prime examples of this, of course, were bills 45 and 46, which abolished the collective bargaining rights of provincial employees and infringe on their and our freedom of speech. To the Premier: will this government show Albertans that it wants to get rid of this culture of bullying and intimidation, that it gets it, and repeal bills 45 and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, other places in the world have certainly had long-serving governments, but they don't have the business and cultural environment that we have in this province. They don't have the quality of life that we have in this province. That's the reason why a hundred thousand people are moving to this province every year. Albertans want to have good government, and they get good government from this government. Yes, we make mistakes, and we will because we're human. We will apologize for those mistakes, and we will move on. This is the best place to live, work, and raise a family, and it's because of good government, that's been entrusted to this party by the people of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Well, I'll admit that this government is better than North Korea, Mr. Speaker, but whoop-de-do.

Albertans are hoping that this government's culture of broken promises will also change under a new leader. Ending child poverty, full-day kindergarten, and sustainable, predictable funding for education and health care are promises made by this party, this government, in the last election. Will the Premier undertake to ensure that these and other promises are kept, and if he will, how is he going to do it?

Mr. Hancock: Thirty-four seconds, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, absolutely, this government is going to continue to work very hard to deliver on the promises it made to Albertans. We are going to continue to invest in our families and our communities because they're the backbone of the province. It's what makes that quality of life, that every Albertan has the opportunity to be part of the advantages that we have in this province. It's something we have to work for because right now there are too many Albertans who don't get that chance. This government is committed to working with Albertans to make sure that every Albertan has the opportunity to participate in the advantages that we have here and the opportunities we have here through education, through all the other challenges that we have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

No more preambles to your supplementaries, please. Let's start with Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Airdrie.

Education Property Tax

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the year 2000 the government began a mitigation strategy on education property taxes for communities experiencing rapid increases in property values. When the province removed the mitigative measures last year, it meant a 40 per cent tax hike, averaging about $400 to $700 per home in Wood Buffalo, and the same increase is about to be imposed again this year on my constituents, hard-working families who already pay more for their housing than anyone else in Canada. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What can be done to help those long-term residents on fixed incomes or those who work in the service sector or those who otherwise . . .

The Speaker: The Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for asking that question of me today. You know, I think that in every community seniors and some others are going to be challenged with the cost of property taxes. That's one of the reasons we've brought in the property tax deferral program this year, to allow seniors specifically – but in those communities that we're talking about, in 2012 we decided to fund education differently, and we collect the tax in a different way. At that time we wanted to make it equal for everyone in the province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: as I've requested in the past and as this is a significant increase – the mitigation was done over 12 years – is it possible to have full market value assessments phased in over five years, respecting the hardship borne by people who already pay more for their housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What has happened is that we have phased it in over a two-year period as opposed to having it come in all at once because we did know that the increases in some communities would be substantial. This now puts every Albertan on a level playing field. Every home of an equal value will be taxed, education taxed, at exactly the same rate, and this will go to support a wonderful education system. This is the fairest way to collect it, and it will be used for education in our province.

Mr. Allen: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: as is done in other areas, is there any special consideration that could be made for qualifying residents in my constituency to avoid the possibility of constantly fluctuating increases for long-term and senior residents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of what's going to mitigate fluctuations is the fact that we now fund a set percentage of the education budget through this funding. So it isn't going to just rise and fall with property values, with growth in communities; it's going to only fund a percentage of the budget for education. That will be a known amount, it'll be very easy to manage, and in the long run it will create a very stable funding source for education but also a known quantity for the municipalities and the taxpayers.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, my question deals with the sky palace renovation. We know that there was a decision made by someone to build a PC alumni lounge, private PC elevator, and Premier's suite. We know that this renovation would have cost millions of tax dollars to design and complete, and we know that a construction company was directed to begin the build, which was later cancelled by someone although we don't know by whom given the evolving memories of the ministers involved. My question is simple. Which ministers or what governmental body, be it cabinet or Treasury Board, actually approved the initial appropriation of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the member is asking an important question. All of our things get approved by Treasury Board, but the fact is that it doesn't get approved in that detail about exactly where every piece of furniture is and exactly what's in there. Certainly, not all change orders come to Treasury Board. The fact is that the hon. member is infatuated with something that's not happening. I would agree with him on one thing – at least I think I would – that this was a bad idea. The bad idea is not happening, hon. member. You should be pleased.

Mr. Anderson: Given that last week the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, when questioned on whether the legal approval process was followed for the initial decision to fund sky palace, stated that the approval, quote, broke all the rules of protocol, unquote, and further, quote, if one really goes out of their way to break the rules, they will do so, but usually the system will catch them, unquote, Premier, if this cabinet minister says that the proper rules and protocols were not followed, was the decision to initially fund the sky palace, therefore, done illegally?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that you didn't rise to admonish the hon. member for asking for a legal opinion, which, of course, I can't give. But I would say this. The Minister of Infrastructure was absolutely right. Treasury Board approves funding. It approves funding on a global basis for a building project. It doesn't go back and approve every single change order, every finite item. The hon. minister that was referred to in the question will have to speak to what he was thinking about when he said that, but the fact of the matter is that you could not get any project done if you had to do approvals on that finite basis through Treasury Board or cabinet.

Mr. Anderson: We're talking about millions of taxpayer dollars, Premier. Come on.

Given that this same minister, the former Deputy Premier, stated, quote, that if there are individuals that acted in any way that exceeded the authority vested in them by their office, they should be dealt with appropriately, unquote; given, Premier, that your own cabinet minister is alleging that individuals in your government exceeded their authority in this matter; and given that this means that tax money was appropriated without going through the proper legal channels, will you call on the Auditor General or the RCMP, if necessary, to conduct an independent investigation into how this misuse of tax dollars . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't here then, but the hon. member might want to check his own records. What I wasn't here for is that when the building was first approved, he might have been sitting on Treasury Board. I just don't know. I wasn't here then.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. McIver: I wasn't here, so I'm just asking the question.

I don't believe that anything illegal was done. I believe that the processes were followed. When there are changes, there's a protocol where different members of the administration have different levels of authority. I believe that all the rules were followed, Mr. Speaker, and a bad idea didn't happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Education Initiatives

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always promising to hear that a new school is being announced. As this Assembly's representative for Edmonton-South West many of my constituents and I have a vested interest in school projects. Southwest Edmonton is home to a high percentage of families with children and is one of the fastest growing areas in the country. Therefore, schools are an essential component of the local community infrastructure. The announcements were great, Minister, but Albertans are interested in the actual schools themselves. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure, plain and simple: are these new schools going to be open by 2016?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking a question that I hear on a regular basis, and the answer is: we're working very hard to make that so. We're feeling more confident all the time. I could tell you that I've met with industry members as a group in Edmonton, in Calgary, and in Banff and had other individual meetings. We're getting a great deal of co-operation from industry. I can tell you that as every week goes by, people are getting more and more optimistic that what the hon. member is asking for is going to happen. It's not going to happen by accident. It's going to take a lot of work, but we're determined to do that work because building Alberta is what Albertans want. This is part of it, and we are going to do our level best to . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Education. Given that my constituents are especially interested to know whether we will still be announcing new schools in Edmonton-South West, are more schools coming, or are we calling it quits now that the 50-70 commitment has been met?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're still focused on delivering what Albertans demand and want us and expect us to focus on. I can tell you that since 2010 we've opened six schools in the west, to the southwest, and created about 5,000 spaces. Of course, you know, recently we announced seven other new schools and modernizations that combined are going to add about 6,400 spaces in that area. Obviously, there are capital plans being done at school boards all across the province, and we're anxious to receive those here this spring. We'll take those forward to Treasury Board, and we'll be advocating for more schools just like this member is.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education. New schools are one thing, Minister, but the curriculum is ultimately what counts for our children. Can you tell the Assembly: through this change are we sticking with the fundamentals or not, what changes are being applied, and who is being consulted?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I can assure parents is that their children are in a fantastic system, one of the best around the globe. As a matter of fact, one of the most recent studies that was released last week by the OECD, the PISA studies on the K to 12 systems across the globe, just confirmed that Alberta is tied for the fourth spot on the entire planet in terms of our education system. We have a great system. One of the reasons we have it is because we have ongoing continuous improvement. We want to include parents in those, but we don't want to overlook the best practices across the globe. We think parents and employers are asking for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Domestic Violence Offender Monitoring

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After cancelling ankle bracelets to track sex offenders and eliminating prosecution for some crimes, Albertans are sick of this Justice minister's liberal, soft-on-crime policies. They would even make Justin Trudeau blush. Last week he ended a GPS monitoring program to track criminals convicted of domestic abuse that are under court order to stay away from the victims. This project gave victims safety and security and helped them ensure that they wouldn't be victimized again. To the Justice minister: why on earth would you end this sensible project?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'm a little bit perplexed, actually, because I have already made the decision that we're going to be continuing this project for at least six months, at least until the report comes in in June, and then we can make a decision on what's best for these vulnerable women but also at the same time for the taxpayer. This decision was made much before this individual had made the question. I'm not sure why he's asking it.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that that is some interesting decision-making, here's one quote from a victim that has been impacted by your flip-flopping. This is a woman who was thrown down a set of stairs and threatened with a butcher knife that she would be killed. She said, and I quote: every day that's all I think about. Is he going to kill me today? It's a really, really scary feeling. Now no red flags will go up if he comes near my work. I'm scared to leave my office to go to my car because I don't know if he is going to come out there and hurt me. Unquote. Now, to the minister: why won't he put the victims of crime . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Justice puts victims of crime first today and every day. The women involved in those difficult situations have also been provided with a GPS locating beeper, again in the interests of the victim. It's time that this member stick to the facts. Alberta Justice supports victims first.

The Speaker: The hon. member, without preamble, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this project only costs $450,000, which is actually about the same amount as the severance for the former Premier's chief of staff, will the minister do the right thing for once, admit that you made a brutal mistake, and reinstate the program permanently?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there's been no mistake made here, and there are no apologies for standing up for victims of crime, particularly women in this situation. I believe we've done the right thing, and we will take a look at the report that comes out in June. I suggest that this member get his facts straight and keep an open mind.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order was noted at 2:58. We'll deal with it at the appropriate time.

LGBTQ Student Supports

Mr. Hehr: I appreciate that our new Premier wears a Children First pin. I also appreciate that when he tabled Alberta's Education Act, it stated that all schools in this province would be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act because he was putting children first. Sadly, the current Education minister did not write this into the act. To the Minister of Ed. Despite this, you have verbally stated that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act apply to all schools in this province. Can you confirm this for me today?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am no lawyer, but my understanding is that, of course, the Alberta Human Rights Act and Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms are overriding pieces of legislation and something that guides us in everything we do.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that these acts apply, I was shocked to learn that Heritage Christian Academy, a fully funded public school, makes students sign a pledge that states that they will not partake in homosexual behaviour and that if they do, they will be expelled. My question is: why does the minister continue to allow schools to castigate students on the basis of their sexual orientation, which is clearly against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the situation that the member is speaking of. Obviously, that's not something that we would condone in this House and on this side of the House.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's simply unbelievable that the minister is not aware of this.

Given that this example of the Heritage Christian Academy shows that there are schools and school boards in this province that without your government's leadership will continue to not support kids who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgendered, and queer in our school system, accordingly will you bring in legislation that makes mandatory gay-straight alliances in schools where kids want them?

The Speaker: Hon. member, we want to be careful about asking for any legal opinions or perhaps anticipating a motion or a bill of yours that might be coming up later, so please be careful.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to respond. We're going to have a chance to debate the motion in detail coming up in the afternoon, so I'm looking forward to that.

But, you know, the allegations the member makes about school boards and about schools across the province I think are quite disparaging. We've got fantastic people all over the province as teachers in the classrooms and administrators on school boards that have the responsibility and the autonomy to deal with these things. He may want us to take that away and operate all those schools out of here, but many of those people are in a better place than I to do that, and they do a tremendous job on it on a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, the entitlement of this government has grown so tall, it reaches the sky. Recently uncovered plans for an opulent residential penthouse include an express elevator that skips opposition floors, grooming quarters for a teenager, and a butler's pantry for continental breakfast service. To the Premier: which cabinet ministers knew about this project, and who turned a blind eye?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think that the project that that hon. member describes is a fiction of his imagination, and therefore nobody could have possibly known about it.

Mr. Bilous: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the former Minister of Infrastructure said that the penthouse was cancelled November 15, 2012, and given that documents clearly show continued planning of the penthouse past that date and given that the current Minister of Infrastructure said that it was he who cancelled the penthouse one year later, will the current Minister of Infrastructure set the record straight? Who's telling the truth: the former minister, the current minister, or neither?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, we're both telling the truth. The fact is that this isn't happening. I can't speak to what the former minister did, but this much I can tell you. If there was an order given, not everybody got the message. I can tell you that in the middle of January I had a conversation with my deputy, who was under the understanding it was to be done. I made it very clear at that point that it would not ever be done. Those are the facts of the matter. But it's also important to remember that this isn't happening. This is a bad idea that's not happening. Some might call that the process working.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd love to see those documents, Mr. Minister.

Given that the departure of the former Premier does nothing to fix the fact that this PC government has a cabinet that can't get its story straight and given that your inability to explain these contradictions goes to show that the entitlement problem runs rife through this whole government, can the Premier please explain how Albertans can trust a government that can't even answer a simple question and back it up with proof?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that none of his preamble was actually accurate, I'm not sure that there's an appropriate question to answer. But I can tell you this. This government works on behalf of Albertans every day. We care about the dollars that Albertans pay in taxes, and we will work hard to make sure that those dollars are used appropriately, and that's what these ministers did when they reviewed the project, discovered something that they believed was not in the best interests of Albertans, and cancelled it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Pembina Institute Funding

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently we learned the PC government is funding the Pembina Institute, an antipipeline group trying to block the Keystone, Northern Gateway, and Energy East pipeline deals from going through. To the Minister of Culture. Pembina funding is coming from your ministry. Does your ministry support these much-needed pipeline projects, and if so, then why fund a group that's actively trying to stop them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Culture funds many different organizations, including the ones that are nonprofits and support work that goes on in Alberta. The Pembina Institute has been funded in a number of different areas. The nonprofit sector is very, very important to the government of Alberta. We will continue to support projects that support Alberta and do great work.

Mr. Hale: They're trying to stop what's going to help Alberta.

Considering that this PC government has spent millions of taxpayer dollars on pipeline advertising and travel expenses and given that the Minister of Culture has previously funded two anti-oil documentaries and since she has now taken money away from community grants to give to anti-oil groups, does the minister understand that her decisions have put Keystone and other projects like it at risk, or does she not care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the ongoing discussions on the importance of the Keystone pipeline are very important to Alberta in terms of expanding our markets and selling our products.

With respect to how individual projects or themes are funded in the Department of Culture, it's not my job as minister to judge. We support the projects when they meet the requirements, and then they are funded accordingly.

Mr. Hale: Hmm. Not her job to look at that.

Given that we need and support all major pipelines to increase market access and given that numerous pipeline projects such as Keystone, Energy East, and Northern Gateway currently hang in the balance, will the Minister of Energy commit that no more taxpayer dollars will be taken away from communities in order to fund antipipeline groups who put our energy future at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. Part of the work that the Pembina Institute and others have done that has been funded by different departments in government is to look at some of the work with regard to CCS, an important part for us with reductions through our climate change strategy and our policies. Over 70 per cent of our reductions will be coming through CCS, so important when we look at different companies and different not-for-profits. When we look at the ones from Norway and different ones and the studies that have been done by a five-group consortium of ENGOs globally looking at CCS and at "How do we overcome that technology?" that's an important piece for us.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Avalanche Safety

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll start by expressing my condolences to the family and friends of Wade Galloway, a recently first-time elected member to our city council who was lost as the result of an avalanche. He was an exceptional member of the Lethbridge community, and this tragedy has resonated throughout our city. Therefore, the question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Can you explain what is being done to monitor snowpack conditions and warn of potential dangers and the necessary precautions that should be followed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd certainly like to echo the comments of the hon. member, not just for the family of Mr. Galloway but to the families and friends of others who have either lost lives or suffered injury in what has been a particularly tragic year this past winter.

Alberta Parks operates a series of remote monitoring stations throughout Kananaskis Country, throughout the backcountry, that gives us regular information on the condition of the snowpack. That information is then transmitted to the Canadian Avalanche

Centre, and that information is then used to inform the public as to the changing conditions of the snowpack in the backcountry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what kind of capacity does our government have to respond in the event of an avalanche, not by passing it on but as the government itself?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. In fact, Alberta Parks employs public safety officers in all of our parks, and they've been, unfortunately, rather busy this past winter. In fact, in many situations they are the first responders on site, and they often assist emergency personnel to attempt the rescue or the recovery of people who've been caught in avalanches. They've been, as I say, very busy, and they've worked co-operatively throughout that period of time to provide the necessary services to visitors to the backcountry, to Kananaskis Country in particular.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. It is along the same lines as the answer. How can the ministry help proactively to educate the general public, municipalities, and tourist operators about the dangers of avalanches?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. Certainly, education and public information are essential in order to provide the general public with as much information in their hands as possible so they can then access and use the backcountry as safely as possible. Again, through our co-operative work with the Canadian Avalanche Centre we provide information to the general public through regular avalanche bulletins and through traditional as well as social media up-to-date, real-time information as to the changing condition of the snowpack so that those venturing into the backcountry, into areas where avalanche danger could exist, can access that area as safely as humanly possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

3:10 Travel Alberta Executive Expenses

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a job posting came online at Tourism Alberta for a new associate deputy minister, just two days after the Wildrose questioned this PC minister for allowing a culture of entitlement to prevail in his department. This job posting replaces an associate deputy minister who attended a $2,000 dinner and, plus, had a $290 alcohol tab. Was the ADM fired for inappropriate behaviour?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, currently in our department we have a number of changes that are going on, and unfortunately we've lost a long-term associate deputy minister who has been with us for many years, and we're currently in the process of replacing that individual. I will tell you that that particular individual provided the public with outstanding service over a prolonged period in the public service, and the people of Alberta are very fortunate to have had his dedication working on a number of projects, not just in the Department of Tourism, Parks, and Recreation but elsewhere within the public service.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister said three weeks ago in this House that he was reviewing the expenses that he and his staff should have reviewed in the first place, when will the minister table his review and his actions in this House?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I stated a few weeks ago, I instructed Travel Alberta to undertake a complete and independent third-party review. I expect that review to be complete, to be thorough, to look into all instances of expense claims, and to determine whether, in fact, correct procedures were followed. That review is under way. Travel Alberta will have that review and will have to review that review, and then they will have a discussion with me with regard to their future actions and any remedial actions should that be proven necessary.

Mr. Strankman: Review a review: that's an interesting concept.

Given that it does not take much time to figure out what are inappropriate expenses – like $150 tuxedo rentals, $99 steaks, bucket-list restaurants, and a $90 bottle of Cabernet – and given that the Wildrose has done the minister's job in pointing out these inappropriate expenses, will this minister commit today to make that review public and curb this PC culture of entitlement?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I have committed to and will continue to commit to is that Travel Alberta will continue to do the outstanding work on behalf of Albertans in promoting Alberta as an outstanding tourism destination and that we will have the review in our hands in short course. But Travel Alberta needs to do the full discussion of the results of that review, and they will do that. It will happen in the due course of time. I'm not going to rush that review because I expect it to be done properly and in the full course of time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Little Bow.

Builders' Liens

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. The Builders' Lien Act lets a contractor put a lien on the property when the money has not been paid, but what's actually happening is that the homeowners are being held hostage in the dispute between a contractor and a subcontractor. Why does government allow this to happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member because he comes to my office regularly advocating for his constituents and some of the challenges that they have. We've discussed this before. It's important through this process that all parties, whether it's the homeowners, whether it's the builders, the contractors, the suppliers, have the ability to protect themselves when they're building a home and they're owed money. The Builders' Lien Act itself tries to balance protection between those parties, anybody who would have an interest and a claim in the party. Contractors have to follow up when they institute a lien. If they don't take court action, then the lien expires in 180 days.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Some of my constituents from Edmonton-Mill Woods are asking me: how does the Builders' Lien Act help protect homeowners?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the Builders' Lien Act protects homeowners in many different ways. First, the act allows homeowners to hold back a portion of the money owed so that they could set a lien in a case where there's a lien against the property. That's the first case. In the vast majority of cases, when a lien is issued against a property, it expires within 180 days if court action isn't taken, and then the homeowner can have it removed. They can also instigate a court action that says that action has to be taken within 30 days. If action isn't taken on a lien on a property, then that could be removed. Finally, Service Alberta also provides investigation services to make sure that false liens and violators are prosecuted.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: how can homeowners protect themselves from contractors who are trying to get some extra money from them by putting a lien on the property?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the most important way for homeowners to protect themselves is to have a contract signed. When they have a contract signed, which they can rely on then, it makes sure that costs cannot increase by more than 10 per cent, to a maximum of $100, on any contract that's issued on what the estimates are going to be. If anyone does, it would have to be with the agreement of the homeowner. And if anyone tries to do something like that, above and beyond what the legislation says, then we can investigate and issue a fine of up to $300,000 and two years in jail for anyone that would violate those liens. Homeowners are very well protected in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Airdrie, your point of order has been withdrawn at your request.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: We'll start with Calgary-Currie, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Emergency Housing for Women

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to once again announce that I will be spending the night at the YWCA's annual Keep a Roof over Their Heads event on May 1 this year. I speak today to encourage people to donate to this worthy cause or join me in seeing one night through the eyes of a homeless woman.

Imagine this. What would you choose if you had to decide between keeping a roof over your head or paying your heating bill?

Mr. Anderson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Cusanelli: What would you choose if you had to decide between keeping a roof over your head and warm winter clothing for your children? What would you choose if you had to pick between a roof over your head or walking on eggshells awaiting the next domestic altercation? If you would choose leaving for a better life, what necessary belongings would you fit in your purse or a small bag, knowing you have nowhere to keep these items completely safe? This is the reality for many women in Calgary and elsewhere, who even with a good job cannot find affordable housing.

The YWCA's winter emergency response program provides emergency overnight shelter for up to 50 women per evening throughout the winter months in Calgary. Women can self refer, and their urgent needs, from basic clothing to hygiene and first aid, are addressed. Many of these women are called the "hidden homeless" because you won't see them sleeping on the streets. It's not safe. Women at risk can become victims of violent crimes, including sexual assault. Many women will return to an abusive relationship, couch surf, sleep in their car, sleep in a church basement, or stay with family in an overcrowded house.

The YWCA will need to raise $4 million this year to keep a roof over the heads of these homeless women. For those who will donate, your funds will help the YWCA keep the lights on and the clients safe and warm. Your funds will provide immediate care kits for women upon their arrival, which includes food and toiletries. Your funds *support on-site counselling, referrals, and advocacy in an environment that promotes positive change. Make a difference by visiting www.ywcakeeperoof.com.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Regretfully, the time has passed on. I have no choice but to stop members when the two minutes are up, and we're trying to be more consistent in that way.

Also, I was asked to forgo the 30-second departure for washroom breaks rule to speed things up, so let's do that.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, were you serious about a point of order? We don't normally do points of order during private members' statements.

Mr. Anderson: No. It's after.

The Speaker: It was after? I heard you during.

Mr. Anderson: It was heard from him during the member's statement.

The Speaker: There either is a point of order on someone else or . . .

Mr. Anderson: There is a point of order.

The Speaker: Is there one?

Mr. Anderson: On Mr. McIver.

The Speaker: All right. It's been noted, and we'll look forward to hearing the arguments for it.

Cypress-Medicine Hat, you'll be next, followed by Red Deer-North.

Federal Building Redevelopment Plan

Mr. Barnes: A few years ago the government decided that their PC MLAs should have new office space and that those luxury offices should be built on the dime of the hard-working taxpayer. Fast-forward to now, and the project has grown and grown and grown. They're drowning Albertans in debt and interest payments, but office space is somehow still a priority for them. Mr. Speaker, when you take cost overruns, project add-ons, and incompetent oversight, and you put them all together, you get a renovation that now comes in at a staggering $400 million.

Sadly, this wasn't even the worst story to come out of the federal building. We just found out that the former Premier's executive assistant personally meddled with project plans and demanded that builders include a luxury suite for the Premier, a private elevator, and a PC MLA alumni lounge. Albertans wouldn't even dream of the day when they could plan their own multimillion-dollar living space or build themselves a rooftop garden for cocktail parties or host friends in a private theatre. But for this government approving a PC palace in the sky is just business as usual in the building Alberta plan.

The Minister of Infrastructure and the previous one have been talking out of both sides of their mouths. Before they were being loyal foot soldiers and proudly trumpeting the PC messaging. Now they're backtracking, and both are trying to claim credit for stopping the plans. It's time for them to step up, claim responsibility, and apologize to taxpayers for putting themselves first.

This is a testament to the size and power of government here in Alberta. The web of government scope and authority becomes larger and more tangled with each budget that passes, and projects like the sky palace will start going unnoticed as accountability and transparency continue to disappear. Mr. Speaker, the Infrastructure ministers, the former Premier, and the whole cabinet owe taxpayers an apology for the sky palace and the $400 million.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Red Deer College Athletic Achievements

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, Mr. Speaker, the city of Red Deer has always been very proud of Red Deer College and its academic and athletic accomplishments. This year Red Deer College made national history by winning Canadian Collegiate Athletic Association national titles in both men's and women's volleyball and a national team championship gold medal in women's curling. That is three national titles in one year. Red Deer College also received a national silver medal in men's basketball and seven Alberta college provincial championships.

Red Deer College also celebrates the fact that 97 student athletes achieved academic excellence with a GPA of 3.0. There are more than 175 student athletes who compete in seven sports on 15 teams. The Red Deer College Kings and Queens have demonstrated throughout this historic season their determination, skills, and leadership. Four of their coaches have been recognized for excellence provincially and nationally. Not only are they part of an athletic dynasty; they are also volunteers, coaches, and mentors in our community, giving back whenever possible.

To quote from Red Deer College president and CEO Joel Ward: "The unparalleled achievements of our student athletes this year serve as the exclamation point to our remarkable 50-year history. We have a lot to be proud of at RDC, and our student athletes shouted that message to the nation this year. We're excited to celebrate these accomplishments as we reflect on the storybook season where our student athletes, coaches, and trainers have exhibited the drive and dedication that has defined the spirit of our learners, our college, and our community for decades."

Please join me in congratulating Red Deer College and their student athletes who became a part of Canadian Collegiate Athletic Association history by winning three national titles this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Volunteers

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 6 to 12 is National Volunteer Week. It is a time to pay tribute to and reflect on the immense contributions that volunteers, our everyday heroes, are making in communities. Generous and compassionate volunteers deliver vital programs and services in all corners of Alberta, contributing an estimated $9.6 billion in revenue to our economy each year. Because of the efforts of volunteers, Albertans of all ages are able to develop their creative and athletic talents, expand the scope of their education, and be inspired to step forward themselves as volunteers.

Volunteers are in hospitals, libraries, and hockey rinks. They are helping to fight fires and deadly diseases. Seniors are supported by volunteers, and seniors are volunteers. Volunteers are providing support to families devastated by flood waters and other natural disasters. They are building Alberta communities for the future by helping preserve its past. Volunteers are our friends, our neighbours, our everyday heroes, and they touch the lives of every single Albertan.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is proud to support our volunteers with programs and direct funding and by recognizing their outstanding contributions with the annual stars of Alberta volunteer awards. Also, this year the government will be joining with Volunteer Alberta in the launch of Volunteerville, an online community where Albertans can share their own experiences as volunteers. I encourage all Albertans to visit this website at Volunteer Alberta.

In conclusion, on behalf of all the Legislature I'm especially proud to say thank you to the amazing Albertans that are building this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Earthquake in Chile

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to bring attention to a natural disaster which has directly impacted some of my constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods. As the people of Alberta know first-hand from last summer, nature can be a very devastating force. On Tuesday, April 1, an 8.2 magnitude earthquake struck off the coast of Chile. This earthquake was the largest in the region since the devastating 8.8 magnitude earthquake in 2010, which killed over 500 people.

Fortunately, the Chilean government took action after the 2010 earthquake and put in place measures such as earthquake-resistant buildings and the improved warning system to reduce the cost of human life. These measures were largely successful; however, sadly, seven people lost their lives in the earthquake. Nearly 928,000 people had to be evacuated, and more than 2,600 homes were seriously damaged.

Alberta is home to over 6,000 people of Chilean descent. My riding of Edmonton-Mill Woods has the highest Chilean population of any constituency in Alberta. They are very active in my constituency and help to ensure that Mill Woods remains a vibrant multicultural community. I would like to especially recognize a few members of the board of directors from the Chilean Canadian Cultural Society's Edmonton chapter who are sitting in the public gallery today. Joining us are Sandra Azocar, Lito Azocar, Boris Contreras, and Degalio Henriquez.

The Chilean people have shown the strength in their character and resolve in rebuilding from the previous earthquake, and I am sure this time will be no different. My thoughts and prayers are with the people of Chile as they go through this rebuilding effort, and my condolences go out to those families who have lost their loved ones in this tragedy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

LGBTQ Student Supports

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour and a privilege to talk today about my motion. Today, hon. members, we are faced with the choice between taking action to counter homophobic bullying in our schools or doing nothing, a choice between making things better today or paying lip service that things will get better someday. Today we can choose to make life better for kids by supporting Motion 503, which will mandate that gay-straight alliances be supported in all schools where kids want them.

Our education system is comprised of public, private, Catholic, and charter schools where children are subjected to horrific abuse simply because of who they are. The abuse faced by gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered students is not justifiable in any school, and something must be done. The research regarding solutions is clear. When students are permitted to form gay-straight alliances and create a safe space for themselves, bullying and suicide attempts are reduced. This is not limited to LGBT students but extends to all students.

Sadly, although no one can deny the problem of homophobic bullying, there appears not to be the will to do anything about it. Hiding behind excuses like school board autonomy or the notion that preventing discrimination somehow violates religious liberty, the government seems content to do nothing. Given that this government has accepted that gay-straight alliances reduce bullying, I cannot understand why they will not legislate that GSAs be made mandatory in schools where kids want them when they know that some school administrators or boards will not be proactive in implementing these clubs, despite their success rate, because of redundant arguments that have no place in today's Alberta.

Hon. members, this afternoon we have a choice. Our actions could directly make things better for kids forever in this province if only we have the courage to make things better today.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, I understand you have four or five.

Mrs. Jablonski: Five. That's correct.

The Speaker: Proceed, please.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I do have five items to table today, all of which I have quoted from in my speech for second reading of Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. The first document is entitled Visual Impediments to Learning. It's a document written by Dr. Noella Piquette and Dr. Charles Boulet. I have quoted from this document, in particular the statement that says that it violates the human rights of children not to maintain their eye health.

3:30

The second document is a letter from John McDonald, the executive director and regional vice-president of CNIB Alberta and Northwest Territories, that states that the CNIB is very supportive of the intent of Bill 203.

The third document is from the eye physicians and surgeons who support enhanced vision screening designed to capture and treat eye health problems in as many affected children as possible.

The fourth document is a letter from Dr. Gordon Hensel, the registrar for the Alberta College of Optometrists, that has provided suggested amendments to Bill 203 and clearly states that they support comprehensive eye examinations for all children on a regular basis by a doctor of optometry or an ophthalmologist.

The fifth tabling is from the Alberta Association of Optometrists, that congratulates me for introducing Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act, and it provides seven recommendations for amendments to make the bill stronger. Mr. Speaker, I will be implementing those seven recommendations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations – I understand you have two to present – followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Oberle: I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it's my honour to table the appropriate number of copies of the 2013 annual report of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. I want to thank the chair, Mr. Don Cunningham, and through him all the members of the appeal tribunal for the good work that they do on behalf of Albertans.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it is my very deep honour today to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of the Expression of Reconciliation for the Legacy of the Indian Residential School System that our Premier spoke about. In fact, our Premier tabled it in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, deposited it in the box for that purpose. It was an amazing weekend, with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission hearings. It was a life-changing experience. Now we can all hope that it actually changes lives going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice – I understand you have two presentations – followed by the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have two tablings. I'd first like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Law Enforcement Review Board's annual report for 2012. The Law Enforcement Review Board is part of our common-sense, conservative justice system. It is an independent body and is an appeal body for public complaints concerning police officer conduct. The board also hears appeals from police officers who have been the subject of discipline arising from a complaint and peace officers who have had their appointments cancelled. I'll pass five copies to the page.

As well, Mr. Speaker, today I'm tabling five copies of the victims' services status report for 2012-2013. Alberta Justice puts victims first. In 2012-2013 more than $17 million in financial benefits were provided to eligible victims of crime. Approximately $11.7 million in grant funding was provided to organizations that assist victims of crime. These programs provided services to more than 67,000 Albertans, 16 per cent of them aiding victims under the age of 18. More than 3,500 volunteer advocates, board members, and special-purpose volunteers contributed 214,092 volunteer hours in this year's cycle to support victims of crime in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder I'd like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards that our office has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards, collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, are clear evidence the government is, unfortunately, not listening to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary system that is both accessible and affordable for all.

Mr. Speaker, as evidence of the value of a good education let me just say now that I look forward to being able to vote in favour of Motion 503.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document that I referenced in question period from the Heritage Christian Academy that clearly states that students are to sign this to be part of the school. It states, "I will also refrain from a lifestyle of sexual immorality (pre-marital sex, homosexual behaviour, viewing of pornography, etc)," or else they will be expelled. I am tabling that with all five copies. They are a fully funded public school in this province.

I also have a research report out of the University of Victoria called School-Based Strategies to Reduce Suicidal Ideation, Suicide Attempts, and Discrimination Among Sexual Minority and Heterosexual Adolescents in Western Canada. The document clearly shows that the establishment of GSAs reduces stigma amongst LGBTQ students and leads to lower suicide rates, so it highlights the importance there.

Here's a copy of an e-mail sent by Rob Wells, co-chair of Southminster-Steinhauer United Church Affirming Committee, supporting Motion 503; an article from the Calgary Metro, which shows Calgary high schools and junior highs are in support of LGBT clubs.

One final document is a fabulous, actually, opinion editorial written in the Calgary Herald by Dr. Kristopher Wells, whom I introduced earlier, and really I urge all members of the Assembly to, hopefully, review it, hopefully, before voting in favour of Motion 503, because it really explains the issue in great detail.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Centre, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Three sets of tablings. The first is a copy of a board of directors meeting for Legal Aid Alberta, in which they note from a meeting with the Minister of Justice that they were asked to present options for reducing programs and spending for the 2014-15 fiscal year.

The second set of tablings is a form letter that a number of different people sent in to me. This particular letter is urging government to stop their attack on public-sector pensions. Copies of this were signed by Alexandra Hope, Mary Cornet, and Melissa McCarthy.

The final two are, again, a form letter noting that “it is impossible for me to reconcile the unilateral demand to reduce the benefits of my pension after Jan. 1, 2016, with the stated value of my work to the province.” These letters have been signed by Robin Charlesworth and Laurie Fisher.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a column from the Edmonton Journal titled Energy East Pipeline Plan Worse than Keystone, Pembina Institute Says. It’s some information that I referred to in my question today.

The second tabling is a news release from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation showing that in the last five years $88,381.68 was taken from the community spirit grant donation to pay to Pembina.

Thank you.

Point of Order Remarks Off the Record

The Speaker: Hon. members, we’re now at points of order. I believe, although it’s uncharacteristic and we don’t normally allow it, a point of order was raised during the delivery being given by Calgary-Currie, and the point of order request was delivered by Airdrie. I don’t know what it’s about, so if you could please elucidate and also give us your citation, we might hear it.

Mr. Anderson: Sure. It’s referring to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically regarding allegations made against another member or saying things that will disrupt or likely bring disorder to the House. During the member’s statement in question the Minister of Infrastructure reiterated a comment that he had made during question period but reiterated it over here again. He had made an accusation that I had some role in the approval of the federal building.

An Hon. Member: The sky palace.

Mr. Anderson: The sky palace or the federal building or both. Mr. Speaker, in point of fact, I was not on Treasury Board when that decision was made, and I’ve been a vocal opponent of the building, one of the reasons – certainly, I’ve said it many times. After I left the PC caucus, I cited it as a reason for leaving the PC caucus, one of many. I would ask that he withdraw that remark, that I was on Treasury Board when the decision was made. It’s factually incorrect.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, this is a very unusual situation. I heard none of it. Hansard hasn’t captured any of it. But if there’s any truth to it, could I ask somebody here, the Minister of Infrastructure?

Mr. McIver: There’s no truth to it.

The Speaker: Well, then, let’s hear the explanation. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think, as you said, Hansard doesn’t pick this up. I mean, this was banter back and forth between two members across the floor, which you’ve admonished us about in the past. The fact that they’re talking back and forth when the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie was giving her very important member’s statement: I think they both should get up and apologize, and I think we just get on with business.

The Speaker: Hon. members, both of you have had a chance to get something on the record that you wanted. It might be a point of clarification. I don’t know. But, in any case, it’s not a point of order, and we’re going to move on.

Statement by the Speaker

Speaking Time

The Speaker: Let me just ask you, now that you’re back after two weeks of working in your own constituencies, to please curtail things like chattering across the bow. It only leads to disruption and disorder, those kinds of interjections. They float both ways.

Secondly, I find it particularly impolite during a private member’s statement that people would be whispering, talking, or talking across the bow. I know how the bait-and-trap game works. I’ve seen it; I’ve been part of it. It’s not a nice thing to be trapped that way. So I would ask you to please stop that.

Thirdly, to those of you who’ve written to me asking about why some members were allowed to go longer than normal during the comments pertaining to the ministerial statement and the responses from the opposition as well as requests from a couple of private members, please know that there are guidelines that I will enunciate for you more clearly tomorrow in that respect. But there is a convention that says that normally a ministerial statement shouldn’t take more than about five minutes. It’s up to the discretion of the minister or in this case today of the Premier. Similarly, there is a certain discretion with regard to the opposition leader’s response. Typically an opposition leader has by convention approximately three minutes. I let both of them go over their time limits today because of conventions to that extent in the past.

Then we had the opposition Liberal leader speak, and then we had the opposition New Democrat leader speak, and then three private members spoke. One of them happened to be a victim of the issue being talked about. I hope you would show some respect for the chair when rulings like that have to be made to allow people to speak a little bit longer. That knife slices both ways, and I was fair to all.

However, when it comes to private members’ statements, you have a very specific rule that says, under section 7(4), “When Members’ Statements is called, up to 6 Members other than members of the Executive Council may make a statement, each statement to be no more than 2 minutes in duration.” I have reminded you before, and I’m going to remind some of you again. Know the rules because you’re going to be expected to abide by them. They apply as fairly as I can possibly implement them to all of you. I don’t pick favourites. When you walk through those doors, you’re all the same to the Speaker or whoever is in the chair. Some days are much more difficult than others, as you have seen and as you all know. I don’t appreciate comments coming to the contrary, indicating that somebody sitting in my position, be it me or someone else, is showing favouritism. That is not the case, hon. members. And if any of you want to come and discuss it with me further, I’d be happy to show you examples and to chat about it further. You have responsibilities; that includes knowing the rules. So, please, let’s try to abide more by them.

Now, one of the rules says that in order to revert to Introduction of Guests, we require unanimous consent.

The Speaker: So let us go to Red Deer-North for your introduction.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this House Dr. Charles Boulet, who is an optometrist and the co-author of the document that I tabled today entitled Visual Impediments to Learning – he's here to support Bill 203 – and also Mr. Brian Wik, the executive director of the Alberta Association of Optometrists. They're in the public gallery, and they're here to hear the debate in second reading on Bill 203, Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203 Childhood Vision Assessment Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I would like to acknowledge and welcome our guests, many of whom I have previously introduced and are seated in the galleries, to hear the second reading of Bill 203.

Vision is the most important perceptual element in the classroom but the first one we ignore. It costs us all but families most. Of the children who are affected, some will be at a point where minimal clinical help will make an important difference in how they perform and feel. By not correcting vision issues early, we are subjecting families to years of unnecessary assessments and interventions where often simple, comprehensive vision management is all that is required. This is not to mention the high costs to school boards and health, justice, and social services if vision problems go undetected.

Bill 203 would ensure that children of school age are prepared to learn by requiring a comprehensive vision assessment for grade 1 at the very latest. This will help reduce behavioural problems that affect children with vision impediments and impairments. Not only would it save children with visual challenges from anxiety and stress but likewise for teachers and families.

Bill 203 requires a proof of examination form. As a reminder, no legislation can impede access to education. Bill 203 has the opposite effect. It will enable successful access to education for all children, especially those with visual impediments. Ensuring that eye examinations are complete prior to reading age would enable educators and doctors to rule out early eyesight problems as impediments to learning or reading. Optometry and ophthalmology leaders in child vision care have both officially endorsed this bill with the understanding that some revisions of the text be considered to clarify and strengthen the bill. The Alberta Association of Optometrists, the College of Optometrists, the Eye Physicians and Surgeons Association of Alberta, and the Canadian Ophthalmological Society have all provided meaningful input with suggestions for near and long-term management of service and costs. Their letters were tabled today. Mr. Speaker, I have acknowledged their concerns, and I fully intend to implement their recommendations for amendments in Committee of the Whole.

I have heard numerous personal stories from adults who were amazed to find that many of their problems in school were created by poor eyesight and that a simple eye examination that they received in grade 4 or as an adult helped to solve many of their problems. They expressed sadness that the visual problem was not discovered sooner, and they were all enthusiastically supportive of Bill 203.

Thanks to the work of initiatives like the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program more children are getting their eyes examined; however, still more than 60 per cent of children in Alberta begin school without a comprehensive eye exam. Vision, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely critical to the success of our young students.

Legislators and educators in American jurisdictions have recognized that conditions such as amblyopia, that has no obvious structural causes and is the leading cause of monocular blindness, need to be detected at an early age. Throughout the U.S. 43 of 50 states have either state policy, codes, statutes, regulations, or local school board requirements regarding vision screening and tests.

Mr. Speaker, vision health has always been important to me. As a legislator in this Assembly I have raised the issues of screening for children during question period debate as well as with my previous private member's bill. I truly believe that children need to be able to read in order to succeed.

I'm very impressed with the work done by Dr. Charles Boulet and Dr. Noella Piquette of the University of Lethbridge. Their work highlighted the idea that if there is an error in or an impediment to sensory perception, higher cognitive function such as reading, memory, emotional awareness, and impulse control can be affected. In schools functional defects of the vision-related process impair reading and learning and as a result influence other behaviour.

Mr. Speaker, as part of my work in the preparation of Bill 203 I reached out to both the Alberta Association of Optometrists and the Alberta College of Optometrists. After introducing Bill 203 in this House, I have received ongoing and valuable feedback from both organizations. I very much appreciate the co-operation I have received from the AAO and the ACO throughout this process as both organizations stress the importance of early childhood vision assessments in order to ensure the health of children's eyes. If this bill successfully proceeds through second reading to Committee of the Whole debate, I will make amendments to the bill to address their concerns.

Here in Alberta we are fortunate enough to have vision examinations covered by Alberta Health for children until their 18th birthday. The Eye See . . . Eye Learn program is also funded through Alberta Health.

I quote from a letter from the Alberta Association of Optometrists that I tabled today.

The Alberta Association [of Optometrists] would like to congratulate you on introducing Private Members Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act, in the Alberta Legislature on March 13, 2014. We commend you for introducing a Bill that recognizes the importance of children receiving a comprehensive eye exam in this province.

There are seven items we would like to bring to your attention that would strengthen Bill 203.

Mr. Speaker, I fully intend to make these seven changes as requested by the Alberta Association of Optometrists, that are the same changes that the Alberta College of Optometrists has requested. I ask for the support of all members so that we can move this forward to make these changes and not disappoint any children that need our help.

I look forward to hearing the remainder of the debate on this topic. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 203.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now let's go to Calgary-Fish Creek, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak on Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I want to start off by thanking all of the people who've taken the time to call me and actually have meetings with me. The member has introduced some of the people up in the gallery from the CNIB, and I've had the pleasure of meeting them on another occasion. When we talked about the service dog legislation, then I talked to them about Bill 203.

I have to tell you that I'm struggling with Bill 203, Mr. Speaker, and I'm struggling with it for several reasons. The member sent a note across asking me if I would be supporting the bill, and I said that at this particular time I'm not sure. We've got a couple of speakers lined up, and the nice thing about sitting in this Legislature is democracy, and you have the opportunity to listen to the debate.

The member referred to the Alberta Association of Optometrists, and I met with them. She brought up the fact that they've asked for seven different amendments. I guess I am perplexed by the fact that – I know this member. I know how diligently – and she's been around this Legislature for a long time. This is the second attempt at this particular bill. She brought forward the Irlen bill last session. I guess I'm just struggling with the fact that she wouldn't reach out to these different associations and talk to them in regard to the bill and what they liked about the bill. She and I were together as PCs, and we both had the experience of winning on private members' bills and getting them through the Legislature. I think we can attribute that to the fact that we went through a great deal of consulting with people on the front line.

I had looked at her bill, and, you know, under the definitions and things, under (d), she talks about the visual assessment. I'm sure if she gets this through second reading, she's going to talk about the concern that the College of Optometrists has in regard to the term "visual assessments," when they want the bill talking about a comprehensive eye exam as per the Health Professions Act.

Under visual assessment she's also talking about how "every child entering grade 1 must undergo a visual assessment prior to the commencement of the school year." We all know in the Legislature the difference between must and may. "Must" is one of the strong words in this Legislature that I learned when I was on the side of the government on leg. review. It's one of the words that the Legislature doesn't take lightly because must means you must do it.

The next one goes, "a parent or guardian must provide to the school which his or her child attends a form signed by an optometrist or ophthalmologist indicating that the child has received a visual assessment." We've got must again. We've got the term "visual assessment." My question to the member is: what if they don't? What happens if they don't?

The third one is: "a visual assessment performed for the purposes of this section must not have occurred more than one year prior to the submission of the form under subsection (2)."

Then it goes on to (4), "when a student is enrolling in a school after grade 1 and has not previously attended a school in Alberta, a parent or guardian must comply with subsection (2) as if the student was entering grade 1." There we go with must, and it goes on.

What I found very interesting when I met with the College of Optometrists is this little brochure and a little package, actually, that goes out to every child in kindergarten. In this particular brochure is Fribbit, which I was told about by the College of Optometrists, that I introduced when I was the minister of children's services. Then they were kind enough to send a picture of Fribbit and me, which I don't know is so kind when it shows you aged from 10 years earlier. Anyhow, it talks about all of the things they recommend that can point to visual problems. It talks about the fact that eye exams are free, and it encourages parents at this particular – how well can your kindergartener see? It's kindergarten teacher program information, and it's quite successful. You know, I think when you see this all given out to – and it's a very, very nice package about how Fribbit goes to school and how children learn and how they see. There's a little cartoon that everybody can figure out about seeing.

I asked the College of Optometrists when my kids were in school – actually, my younger son was one of those children that ended up with eye surgeries and the patch on the eye and the big, thick glasses – and we talked about a lazy eye. They were kind enough at the time to say: there are lazy eyes, and then there are lazy eyes. You can have a child that was very prominent, like my little guy was with his eye turned in, but there are lazy eyes where you can't see anything. They even said that they have had children enter school that are blind and picked up at that particular time by a teacher, the old squinting at the board and things like that.

I guess the comments that are pressing to me are that we're at second reading of a bill, and we're talking about passing the intent of the bill. If we were to look at just passing the intent of the bill without talking about all of the amendments that are recommended by the College of Optometrists, and then – I didn't hear the member talk about the letters we've received from the department of ophthalmology and the huge concerns that they have on this particular bill. Then the Eye Physicians and Surgeons Association of Alberta: some of the things that they're very concerned about on this bill are some of the things that aren't answered in the intent of the second reading. While I support what the member is trying to do, and that's trying to make sure that every child in this province, in Alberta, has an eye examination – under the optometrists that's a comprehensive eye examination – why weren't we consulted previously so that we could have the intent of the bill done very factually?

The other thing I'm concerned about is cost. It's not costs related to care – and I've learned that, quite frankly, as the Health critic over the last four years – but the costs associated, the costs that we've found out. The uptake to have every child in this province will be an additional $2.4 million. Small peanuts. Honestly, small peanuts in a huge budget that health care has at a cost saving. The problem is that I just went through estimates. I'd like to know from the Health minister if he supports this bill and where in the budget this is going to come from.

I've had all sorts of calls on this particular bill in regard to visual assessments. What about learning disabilities, all of the things that can stop our children from learning? Again, I sent an e-mail to the member, and I asked her these particular questions. Has she got the support of the Minister of Education? Has she got the support of the Minister of Health? Even though we're talking about a very small uptake of about $2.4 million, I can tell you, as the Health critic – is the minister going to say: "Yes, it's a budgetary item. I'm going to get rid of 70 of the bureaucrats that are currently in Alberta Health Services that would add up to that $2.4 million so that we can make sure that every child in this province has a must?"

Member, I'd like to know what your reaction is from, actually, education. What has the Alberta School Boards Association said? Who's going to track these children? Who's going to take care of it? The Education critic may want to add to that. I haven't specifically talked to either the Calgary board of education or the separate board of education. You as the critic may be able to say what they've told us and that they've got a plan in place so that they can make sure of every child.

I guess the comments in regard to the ophthalmology department: how are you going to address that and, quite frankly, the Eye Physicians and Surgeons Association of Alberta? How are you going to address some of the things that the department of ophthalmology has said in their bill and some of their concerns that I think really need to be addressed? Can we in Committee of the Whole address all of these by putting – we were already talking about optometrists for seven amendments. Are we going to have a bill that's got 15 amendments? Do we even suggest, yet again, that we send this bill back to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities? We did that last year, were tied up for nine months on that bill.

I know the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and myself have written the new committee chair, yet again, asking: when are we going to get on to the priorities of the standing committee, which are mental health and addictions?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we're going to go to a member from the Liberal opposition, followed by a member of the ND opposition, followed by the Minister of Education, and then we'll alternate back and forth.

Let us go with Edmonton-Centre, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me and allowing me to speak in favour of Bill 203. This is a really interesting lesson for everybody here about trying to change the world by trying to change public policy. I mean, that's why I came to this Assembly, and I've been able to change the world by changing public policy, but frankly it isn't easy. You're not only trying to fight people from the outside that are inclined to be against something – and I'm not speaking specifically to this bill at this point – but often you're fighting your colleagues in the House, and that's a little bit of what I'm seeing here.

We have the Member for Red Deer-North who has been steadily advancing eye health for children. She's right. She has asked questions in question period, she was championing the Irlen syndrome bill previously, and now she has this bill. When you're trying to create a bill, Mr. Speaker, you're going: "Okay. Should I lay it all out there? Should I have the whole buffet in there, every little bit and piece possible and the pasta salad and the Greek salad and everything that anybody would want to see in here?" Then everybody has got a lot more to complain about and pick apart. Or do I just take the essence of it and say: "This is it; one little plate, that's what we're going to work with"? And if we agree on the principle of that, then we will move forward and make such adjustment as you really need to make to have the bill be successful.

I had a conversation with someone from the CNIB the other day and was just saying: "You know, there are so many people that have got a spoon in on this one. It's like writing a question by committee." Anyone on the opposition side and other people that are not in Executive Council will know what I'm talking about, when everybody has a brilliant idea about the phrase you should use in your question or who you should reference or blah, blah, blah. All you want to do is ask a straightforward question. You know, thanks for all the help, but I've just got to get this one done. I would say that what the Member for Red Deer-North has done with Bill 203 is to give us the one clear plate, not the whole buffet, saying that this is what we're trying to do.

Remember, folks, that the legislation itself is the what. It's the big idea. It's the concept. It's the principle. The nitty-gritty of, you know, what time does this happen or who gets to do it or what colour of socks they're supposed to be wearing when it happens or what happens if you don't do it right, that's the how. That's what regulations are supposed to be used for, not, I hasten to add, as this government tends to use them, as a catch-all in which they can do anything they want forevermore and never bring the legislation back here because they've given the minister permission to do whatever they want. That's not what I'm talking about.

So I like what the Member for Red Deer-North has done here. We've got a pretty straightforward preamble. Children are important, we want to make sure that they have an opportunity to learn, good vision is a big piece of that, assessment of a child's vision is an important step, so we would like to do the following. Pretty straightforward here.

A number of definitions, and you have to use definitions in a bill when you need everybody to understand what you're talking about, especially if it's a little different from what the common understanding of that word or phrase is. So you get a definition section in there, which we have.

Then you've got the core of the bill, which is that every child entering grade 1 must undergo a visual assessment prior to the commencement of the school year. A parent or guardian has to provide proof to the school that that has happened. It has to happen within one year. If a kid is enrolling in that school, moving into it, coming from home-schooling into a more structured kind of school facility, fine, they've got to have this done. Okay. That's pretty straightforward.

Here's a bit of the enforcement part. The registration for a kid coming into grade 1 is not complete until that form is put forward, and no optometrist or ophthalmologist shall levy a charge for completion of the form. Pretty straightforward stuff.

Then we get into that the minister may make regulations establishing the criteria, the standards, you know, who's supposed to do what and what colour socks they're all supposed to be wearing on a particular day. That's it, folks. A really straightforward bill.

Then I started to read the letters and the personal testaments that were coming in from people, and I went – well, sorry. I can't swear in here. So you can just imagine what I thought when I saw all of that because, you know, here is where everybody wants to get in: well, it would really be better if it was this kind of person that did it, not that kind of person that did it, and it would really be better if it took place over a period of time rather than immediately before. Everybody wants to get in on making it better. But, folks, we've got to get it past these people sitting in here first. And as much as we love and adore and cherish our health professionals giving us advice, they are not down here voting. Love ya all, but we need these people first to vote for this dang thing.

So we're trying to keep it simple, straightforward. Kids should have eye exams before they come into school. We can agree on that. That's a fairly straightforward principle, don't you think? I think that's a really good idea, not hard to implement. Good. Let's go ahead with that. That's the point of second reading debate, to debate the principle of it. If we can agree on that simple concept, let's vote for Bill 203, and then we can move forward on some other things. You know what? This bill is not here for the ophthalmologist or the optometrist or the dean of whatever. It is here for the children of the province. That is the bottom line of what we're trying to do here.

I appreciate everybody trying to make it a little bit better, but – I'm going to insult somebody here. [interjections] Yeah, I know. But there's a bit of a ka-ching that I can hear going on – I'm sure I'm not the only one that notices it – and that's the sound of the cash drawer going in and out. So I don't want any of you here to let that stop you from voting in favour of the principle of this bill in second reading, okay? We are just talking about visual eye exams, eye exams for kids, and if we can agree on that, we can work out the rest of the stuff. We really, really can. Don't let that other stuff that's all piling in here blow you off the central tenet of what we're trying to achieve.

Forgive me for kind of lecturing you on how we're all supposed to be doing this, but I am quite concerned. You know, in listening to my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek, she's raised exactly some of those points. She is talking about the buffet: well, you know, whose bill are we really approving here, Red Deer-North's or some professional association's version of the bill? Take a deep breath. Be one with the universe. We're just voting to have some eye exams for children. Let's just deal with that, and then we can deal with anything else that needs to come on. You can really get in there and pitch strikes and do amendments like crazy when we get to Committee of the Whole. That really is where we start to take the bill apart word by word, phrase by phrase, and where we can make amendments if we think that will make the bill better. Bottom line, folks: this bill is just to get these kids some eye exams.

I'll address some of the concerns that my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek has raised because I know some of the things – oh, the Fribbit package, which is a fabulous package. It really is very well thought out. You know, I can't say enough good things about it. Except that the kids that I represent, those high-risk kids, the chances of them actually managing to get that brochure home are zero to none. In some schools the teachers go around, and they stick the stuff in every kid's backpack when it's hanging on the wall. It's like a mailbox, you know. Well, a lot of my kids don't have backpacks, and the chances that they're going to get that backpack off the little rail and get it home: not happening.

Please just support the principle of this bill in second reading.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the opportunity to speak on childhood vision in general. I know that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has been doing a great deal of work on this. Thanks as well to the Member for Edmonton-Centre for perhaps putting this into perspective a little bit.

The concept of testing young children for eye problems or vision problems is an honourable one. While I have some specific issues around this bill, that have already been articulated by the members for Calgary-Fish Creek and Edmonton-Centre as well, the concept of testing for eye problems at a very young age is a most honourable one and something that's been long overdue, and

I certainly fully support it. When we go through the minutiae of this bill, I think it's important to always keep that goal in mind.

I was happy to hear as well that the Member for Red Deer-North has amendments that could help perhaps clarify some of the issues in this bill. I think that the Alberta New Democrats have endeavoured to look for a couple of amendments as well. I think my researchers are working on some as we speak. This bill, Mr. Speaker, addresses a very serious issue that affects children and families in Alberta, but there are a couple of fine tuning points that I think could help to make it better.

This Bill 203 would legislate that all parents would be responsible for having their children's eyes tested before they enter grade 1. The parents must provide to the school a form signed by an optometrist or an ophthalmologist. This practice places the onus on the parents rather than the school or health care system in the province. Now, I could stand corrected if I'm wrong on this, but this is the way I've been reading it. So I think an adjustment on that first point is in order, Mr. Speaker.

While the eye doctor is forbidden from charging parents for the completion of this form, which is good, I don't think it necessarily addresses the actual cost related to the eye exam itself. While Alberta health care provides coverage for one visit a year for children up to 19 years of age, it doesn't address the problem if a child needs a follow-up examination or if the child needs glasses. This is my issue here, Mr. Speaker. As it is with any health endeavour, we need to make sure that we are comprehensive when we do reach out to provide an essential medical service. Indeed, good vision at a young age is an essential medical issue to deal with. Of course, there is the identification of that potential eye problem and then the correction of that problem.

What we have now is a classic example of how an essential health care issue is a little bit public and a little bit private – right? – like a little bit country and a little bit rock 'n' roll. For those of you of a certain age, you know what I'm . . . [interjections] There you go.

While you might be able to get an exam for that eye problem, you still have to pay for the glasses and so forth. You know, there's widely variable pricing involved when it's not a comprehensive basic service that we can provide for children who require glasses but who might not be able to afford them, right? It's kind of like dentistry, where you walk across the road and get charged wildly different prices for the same essential dental procedure. We want to try to standardize these basic health services that people need, and I think children's glasses are one of them.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that instead of forcing parents to obtain a test and the form, I think that a public system should be empowered and funded to provide eye exams for all students going into grade 1. By giving that power to the school system, we would accomplish the same goals that this legislation attempts but doing it in a much more inclusive manner. Many parents, for example, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned, may not be getting the message or not getting the kids down to the optometrist, so we need to be able to accommodate for that and bring it into the school. Would parents be compensated in any way with this present bill if they needed to take time off from work? I don't know. I mean, there are just lots of issues we need to think about.

The ministry is able to set the conditions and the standards for visual assessment for children who transfer from a school outside of Alberta, where we could make this law into effect.

At the end of the day I'm totally behind the idea of testing vision for young schoolchildren. We know from the stories, when I was speaking to CNIB and so forth, that a lot of people identify these serious vision issues when they're in grade 2 or grade 3, and that's the time to find correction or even before then. I think that if we do force all children to have their eyes tested, then we can probably make sure that we're doing it at the place where the kids are going to school.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because there's the Eye See ... Eye Learn program. I was looking at this, and it's an excellent example of a current program that we have in kindergarten to obtain eye exams and, if needed, complimentary eyeglasses, too, all right? However, this program still requires that parents seek out and make an appointment with a participating optometrist in order to have access to the program. So I'm thinking, you know, that we can use some facsimile of this program and enshrine it in some law. I think it's quite good because it provides not only the exam in kindergarten but also a set of eyeglasses if necessary. This program could be an example of a very successful program that would benefit children by expanding it so that eye doctors are actually going to the schools and so forth. Providing free glasses to children levels the playing field for all kids and ensures that they're able to perform in school to their highest ability and also does not punish families who would otherwise not be able to afford those glasses.

I sort of see this as a facsimile of these vaccination programs that we currently have in our school systems, and we can use that as a model, perhaps, right? One day per year the professionals come in and test all the grade 1 students. It could be facilitated by AHS or maybe Alberta Ed or both, and then that way nobody gets left behind, and we cover everything.

In short, this bill is mandating that all children get an eye exam and provide written proof to the administration. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it's a noble cause, but I think that we must make sure that we are making it universal and make sure that when we actually find a problem, we are able to act on it. That way, in fact, we will get the full benefit of this consideration.

So I do support the concept of this bill. I will have a couple of amendments for it. It sounds like the mover of the bill has a couple of amendments, too, and perhaps out of that constructive democratic process we will come to the best possible solution.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today, especially in the traditional lands of area 6, to speak about Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, for whom I have great respect. She's been extremely passionate, as one of the members said, about continually improving the education system for students but, in particular, the whole advocacy on the vision assessment piece in bringing forward her previous bill, Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act. I know she's worked hard on this, and I want to commend her for her efforts.

Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act, proposes that a child have a comprehensive eye exam prior to enrolment in grade 1. As a parent of three school-age children I recognize the importance of early identification and intervention where a student's learning may be impacted by a health-related condition such as visual impairment. Notably, the Canadian Association of Optometrists recommends that children receive a complete eye exam between six and nine months of age, another between two and five years of age, and annually after beginning school. In Alberta I can tell you that children up to 18 years of age are eligible to receive regular eye examinations at no additional cost to families or guardians, and the Alberta Association of Optometrists recommends that children and youth in this age range have their vision checked regularly.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Education does not mandate any particular form of comprehensive vision assessment prior to grade 1, so this would be quite a change. However, we encourage all families to take advantage of the many programs that are offered for young children. Kindergarten students have the opportunity to take part in the Alberta Health-funded Eye See ... Eye Learn program. This program provides educational materials to support school staff in the identification of possible vision problems, information for parents about the importance of eye examinations, and free eyeglasses to children who require them. Teachers send annual information packages to parents in the early fall of each school year about this voluntary program. Participation requires parental consent, which I think is key. While this is not mandatory, during the '11-12 school year we can say that 44 per cent of five-year-olds completed the eye exam, which is a lot but, of course, not as many as we'd like. This collaborative partnership is one example of how Education and Health are working together to inform parental decisions through education and promotion.

Another collaboration between Education, Health, and the CNIB has provided travelling low-vision clinics across the province for the last five years. A multidisciplinary team that includes a pediatric ophthalmologist, a local community optometrist, an orientation and mobility specialist, two teachers of students who are visually impaired, and a CNIB children's worker travel to communities and provide a comprehensive medical and functional visual assessment. Comprehensive eye exams are also conducted by regulated eye health professionals, who can determine if any particular accommodation is required to maximize student participation in learning.

I'd like to note that Education and Health are also currently working together to develop the report recommended by the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. The committee recommended that by November 1, 2014, the ministry collaborate to prepare for public release a report outlining best practices to ensure the greatest quality of visual assessment in Alberta schools.

While I commend the member for her work on this issue, I must say that I'm not in favour of Bill 203. Parental choice in a child's education is one of the founding principles on which the Alberta education system is built. A law that could be perceived to restrict access to start grade 1 because of a parental choice is not what I deem to be in the best interests of the child. We have other valuable examinations and health procedures that we also do not mandate on parents, including vaccinations. I believe that increasing access to eye exams for youth, for children should be an objective of the early childhood development strategy being developed by Human Services. It should be policy. It should be strengthened. Access to it should be increased. But "Should it be law?" is the question. Vision, like hearing, is one of the big enablers for learning. I believe all parents want what is best for their children. But we have to be very careful if we don't want to overstep that parental right of choice and broadly legislate powers to overstep it.

I want to say clearly that I support the intent, I support the idea, but I don't support the bill fundamentally for two reasons. One, if you're going to pass a bill this sweeping on parental rights, I think you need to make sure you do lots of consultation, as you do with any bill. My understanding is that there hasn't been broad consultation with the Alberta School Boards Association, the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, the Public School Boards' Association, the College of Alberta School Superintendents, and even the Alberta School Councils' Association or Speak Out, the minister's Youth Secretariat. My understanding is that those groups have not been consulted on this bill and don't have a position on it. Obviously, if this House is going to pass legislation affecting all those groups and all those stakeholders, it's only appropriate that we have some consultation before we do that.

The other piece and the bottom line is that I don't believe legislating something this impactful on parental choice is the right approach when we have a lot of other avenues at our disposal, including strengthening some of our policies and procedures with respect to this.

Bottom line, Mr. Speaker: I commend the member for her hard work. I think this is a great policy item. I think it's a great initiative. I think it's very questionable legislation, and if we were going to pass it, it would need more work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Glenmore and a host of others thereafter, which, obviously, we may not get to, but we'll do our best.

Let's go, Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 203. I, too, want to commend the member for this important initiative to ensure that a process for every child in Alberta be guaranteed to assess one of the most important preventable issues that can face an individual in their whole lifetime; that is, the ability to see, to see clearly, to see at depth, to see at distance, and to see with both eyes together.

My only major concern about the bill is one that the minister has just raised, and that is that we're legislating something that is generally left to professional bodies and that is ensured to be the most efficient and simple and cost-effective approach to identifying what would be a massive number of children in our system and doing it in a way that is both identifying all cases where there is a problem and identifying where they should go after if anything is identified.

I have some questions about talking about a comprehensive eye exam versus a screening assessment, but we can sort those out in the next iteration. I think the principle here is that we ensure that all children have a screening procedure to identify problems with visual acuity, lack of binocular vision, lack of depth perception. Those would be kind of the three keys of any screening program. Public health services for the last 40 years have been doing visual screening at birth. They've been doing it during the well-child visits and at age 3 to 4 for the final vaccination program. They have up until recently been doing some of this visual screening, but they stopped doing it in the last few years. I'm still looking into why that would be. It's an important role, and it's an easy thing for public health nurses to do.

I think the problem is that the government has not funded adequately our public health system, and they are cutting out various things that are discretionary. In that context I think we should make it mandatory that public health nurses be required to do this at the three-year visit and at the preschool visit. They're seeing the children anyway. They are trained to do it. There's no question that it's an important public health early intervention method. At the foundation of it the public health nurses are the ones that have the first contact and the most important screening responsibility and then an important role to refer them to optometrists, ophthalmologists, pediatricians, family physicians, whatever is appropriate. Teachers, too, should be very much in the position to refer children with any identified visual problem to get an assessment.

My concern about a comprehensive visual examination is that that could include slit lamp examination. It could include gonioscopy, that assesses the pressure in the eye. It could include retinoscopy, which is an examination and photographing of the retina. It could include a range of things that could both take a tremendous amount of time and be an inefficient use of time if everything else in the first screening process has shown no problem. The key, of course, is visual clarity, visual acuity, where glasses might be needed. So at the very first instance binocular vision, eyes working together, and visual clarity would be the two essentials. Some of that is done with public health nurses at age three, but it needs to be mandatory. We need to make sure every child has it at birth and at three and at preschool.

In principle, I very much support this bill. I think it's part of what every good medical system provides. It's not providing it today. That is a problem. Just as we have heard about hearing testing and making it a universal program across the province, this should also be a mandatory screening process, with various professionals mandated to do various levels of screening and the actual examination as needed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I will tell you that I have a great deal of admiration for the mover of this bill, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, and her ongoing and very passionate support for literacy issues as well as child visual issues. You know, I think it's one of the strengths of the private members' business aspect of our Legislature that we have the opportunity for members to bring these things forward. I'd like to thank her for that.

Mr. Speaker, we've heard it said before – and I certainly agree – that Alberta is certainly a great place for children to grow and to learn and that our education system – in fact, we continually try to improve it. The Education minister just earlier today gave the results of some of the more recent OECD surveys that showed that we remain very high in rankings of the overall performance of our students. I think the other thing about our education system that makes it really world class is the choices that we offer for parents, and I've talked about this in this House before with regard to the multitude of choices that we have.

You know, one of the great indicators of success, Mr. Speaker, first of our education system and then later in the workforce, is a high level of literacy. In fact, as you know, literacy is one of the measurements that is used commonly to measure countries one against another in terms of their advancement on a social scale. Canada always ranks very high on those, and we can certainly be very proud of that, but Bill 203 speaks to a very real challenge that is facing students in the development of their reading skills, and that is ensuring that their visual perception is not just adequate but that there are no problems with their visual perception.

You know, to give context to Bill 203, I think that we have to look at the impact that literacy has not just on our children but at the impact that literacy has throughout society. The success of our upcoming generation indeed, Mr. Speaker, is in large part dependent on the overall level of literacy that our society achieves, and we should continue to attempt to have a standard of excellence. What happens or doesn't happen in our school system is certainly both important and foundational. Certainly, the primary purpose of our schools is to promote basic skills, and one of those skills, of course, has to be reading. But a school is a community, and it's a setting in which social and academic activities are highly connected. In the case of developing literacy and developing social skills, certainly good visual perception and accurate visual perception and, in fact, the detection of problems with visual perception at as early an age as possible are a critical part of that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, as I've spoken about before in the Legislature, I always find it interesting, and I try to make comparisons back to my background in veterinary medicine. Unfortunately, this is one area where I can't draw a lot of comparisons because, indeed, animals are not as dependent on their eyesight as humans are, especially dogs, cats more so. In any case, one thing I can draw a parallel to is early detection of any sort of difficulties, whether it's an animal or a human, with regard to their development and their ability to learn.

During the course of my practice I had the opportunity to deal with a couple of different situations. One was a case where we were dealing with a dog that was congenitally deaf and some of the challenges that you had with allowing that dog to properly learn. Any sort of sensory defect or any sort of sensory difficulty that a human being has is going to affect very much their ability.

I'm really glad to see that some representation from the CNIB is here. I see that a couple of them have brought their guide dogs, their service dogs. That always makes me smile. The service dogs were some of my favourite patients. They were always so well behaved, they were always so friendly, and they were always so well trained. Besides, they were usually bigger dogs, which is my preference anyway.

Mr. Speaker, it's widely recognized that there is a strong link between illiteracy and criminal activity in our society. While it may be reaching a little bit, I would suggest that any measure that is put in place to improve overall literacy within a society by identifying sensory difficulties is going to have a long-term, positive effect for society. I know that there have been some concerns expressed and there will be concerns expressed about the overall cost of the measures that are being contemplated within the course of this bill. In this particular case, once again, I believe that this is indeed a preventive measure and one that favours early detection of difficulties. That early detection is always something that pays off in the long run.

We will have some debate, and I understand that debate will hopefully continue during committee discussion on this, if it gets through second reading to Committee of the Whole, as to what exactly the right test is and what the right form of screening is for children. But rest assured that I think that anything we can do to encourage parents in the strongest terms possible to have their children tested – I guess I rely in this situation on the most basic thing of all, and that is the concern that parents have for their own children. I mean, that's a basic tenet of parenthood, that you want what's best for your kids. Clearly, if you want what's best for your children, you're going to have your child tested. I think that just naturally follows.

We know that children who do well and have good visual perception and are literate have a better chance at success in school. Sadly, we also know that the opposite is true, that illiteracy is sometimes a precursor to behaviour that leads to criminal activity and can lead in some cases to aggression, delinquency, absenteeism. While it's important that sometimes we see these trends and we ask ourselves, "Are we dealing with causation, or are we simply dealing with correlation?" I think any measure that advances the critical role of literacy and, overall, assists with the efficacy of learning in our schools is a positive one. I think Bill 203 addresses this.

I think Bill 203 certainly deserves full consideration and the opportunity to improve this piece of legislation at Committee of the Whole. If indeed at some point it is referred to a legislative policy committee, I don't think that would be a negative thing. I don't see why there would be any hesitancy to go ahead with that measure.

Ultimately, this piece of legislation is about our children, and therefore it's about their ability to succeed in school and, therefore, about our future. Mr. Speaker, it's certainly true – and the hon. Member for Red Deer-North is very happy to say this frequently – that you need to read to succeed. In order to be able to read, literacy is critical, and in order to be able to read well, you have to have a good level of visual perception.

One thing I will tell you is that I have a certain degree of personal experience with this because some 12 years ago I suffered bilateral retinal detachments in my eyes and needed to have retinal surgery done. I had a vitrectomy done on my right eye. I have a scleral buckle on my right eye, and that has somewhat changed my visual perception. After that was done, in order to perform delicate pieces of surgery, I required magnification and special lighting so that I could perform some of the surgeries that I did during the course of my practice. It still creates somewhat of a challenge for me when I read, however, especially when I read fine print. The words don't necessarily all line up because of wrinkles in my retina, and that does change my visual perception. So I know some of the frustration that children, especially, can face, especially if those visual difficulties are not well understood by those who are experiencing them.

You know, as someone who has even a small portion of some of the visual challenges that some of our children and people in general in society have, I think it's important that we put whatever measures in place that we can to identify these at as early an age as possible and certainly at an age where they're entering school so that it can be identified, properly diagnosed, and then a proper treatment prescribed by visual professionals.

Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Speaker, I am very, very pleased to support Bill 203. I think 203 should pass second reading, go through to committee, allow the advocate, the person moving this bill, the Member for Red Deer-North, who is such a passionate advocate on behalf of this issue, to make the amendments, and then allow us to work on behalf of the benefit of all children in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Towle: It's going to go to him. We're switching.

The Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View, you're able to go next? Okay. Let's go there.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you for indulging the change. I wish I would have sent you a note to alert you.

Thank you to every member that has spoken to this point. I am sitting here very much on the fence on this bill for several reasons. Thank you to the hon. member for bringing it forward. Boy, does it ever give us a lot to think about.

I guess I would start by a shout-out to the CNIB, just as the former member did, for being here today and for the advocacy that they do for those that need help. This one is really near and dear to me for a reason that I haven't shared with many people. I don't make a habit of it, but something just happened in the coffee room that I thought would enable me to put a different spin on this and maybe explain where I'm coming from on it.

When I was two, I had a bad vaccine shot and was legally blind for a period of about three weeks. There were three kids in my village that had this vaccine. My vision came back, but I have limited peripheral vision. Anyway, I'm a young guy wearing bifocals, but I'm grateful, so grateful, that I can see. I always celebrate the positives that I have and not the limitations. It's really all I've ever known. I went on to play a pretty decent level of hockey with limited peripheral vision, and although my dad thought I was suicidal for doing it, you do what you do when it's all you know.

To the Member for Calgary-North West: when I just ran into you and spilled your coffee, I didn't see you standing there; I'm sorry. And that may happen from time to time. If you see me trip over something, you'll know that I didn't catch it either.

But about the bill, after having said all of that, the issue of the education angle is where I'm struggling. I can't imagine, as a parent of a young child, showing up at school and not having the form to give to a teacher and having your kindergarten kid or your grade 1 child, I guess it was, turned away because he didn't have the form. To me, that doesn't sound like something we should ever do or an administrator put in a position of having to make that decision. I can't imagine the uncomfortable feeling at a school – and you know this would happen. There are so many parents – and maybe I'm one of those procrastinators – that might not get all their ducks in a row. Fortunately, my wife would take care of most of the important stuff. Mr. Speaker, I know you can probably relate. She would have that all handled, but I may not. If that was the case, I can't imagine a young child being turned away for not having that form. To put a school in that position, where they have to make that decision for several kids, would be something we never want to do in this province.

Fundamentally, I support this concept wholeheartedly. The doctor that just spoke raised several good points as to why it's important to have your vision tested at a young age. I think the concept here is to give kids the start they need and to leave nobody behind and to make sure they're ready to take on the world. We want to do all of those things. I'm not sure that this is the way that I would go about it, but maybe we'll address some of those questions going forward as we, you know, continue to talk about a better way to do it.

Just to conclude my own story there briefly, because I jumped around a bit, I think the condition was optical neuritis. The reason that the vision eventually came back, which I'm grateful for, was that the swelling of the optic nerve reduced. I have three kids of my own, and I can't imagine them seeing the world like I do, and I'd never want them to face the same challenges. If they were able to take an eye test early on and prevent that, I'd be thrilled, like any parent. Of course, we had our kids' eyes tested. I don't know if it's about half that do. Whatever the number is, it's not enough. It ought to be all of them.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But I don't think I'll support this bill in this sense, based on parental choice, based on the questions I have for the education system as to how it might be administered. Again, I just celebrate the fact that the discussion we had and are having is so respectful on every level. I take points from both sides and just wanted to stand and make a few of my own.

With that, I'll leave it there. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I want to thank the many individuals of Calgary-Glenmore who contacted me about this piece of legislation. I would also like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this forward as it has certainly led to very important discussion in the House so far.

The purpose of Bill 203 is to ensure that there is a process in place so that children undergo a complete eye examination prior to beginning grade 1. More than 25 per cent of school-aged children have vision problems that limit their potential in all aspects of academic success. Unfortunately, when children are beginning to learn how to read, they often cannot identify the problem. Ensuring that assessments are complete prior to reading age would enable educators and doctors to rule out early eyesight problems as possible impediments to learning or reading. Mr. Speaker, I do agree that testing for vision health is important because it can address various problems which adversely affect quality of life.

As a part of its mandate the Ministry of Health is committed to screening for early detection of health conditions. This, in turn, goes hand in hand with the ministry's goal of promoting healthy living. This government is dedicated to building a better Alberta by strengthening our health and education systems in order to support safe and strong communities.

Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Health has also adopted numerous screening approaches for vision health. In Alberta children up to 18 years of age are eligible to receive regular eye examinations at no additional cost to families, provided by Alberta health care. Early screening that works side by side with our school system could target children who have symptoms but have not yet been diagnosed. This could act as a supplement to screening mechanisms used by our government.

In addition to free eye exams, there are other measures in place that screen children who may have vision problems. We've heard quite a bit about the Alberta Association of Optometrists and their 50,000 brochures that are sent out across the province. These brochures reach out to the parents of young children, informing them of the options for vision health.

The Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, which is funded by Alberta Education, is also in place for kindergarten students across the province. This program targets young children at the beginning of their school years, and it provides free eyeglasses to children of kindergarten age who need them. What is great about this program is that it is done with the co-operation of the school system. With this initiative teachers send annual information packages home to parents at the beginning of the school year. The information is an effective way to target and reach as many school-aged children as possible. As it stands, 80 per cent of Alberta schoolchildren enter the learning environment without a comprehensive eye exam. This is concerning as vision problems are highlighted as one of the major limitations to a child's ability to succeed. The Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, that is already in place, allows children to be screened for many different vision abnormalities. Optometrists can then decide on a suitable medical treatment for the diagnosis.

In addition to the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, there is a framework in development for the screening of infants and preschool children. This framework has been put forward by the Ministry of Health along with Alberta Health Services, the Ministry of Human Services, and the Ministry of Education. Universal newborn hearing, preschool hearing, vision and developmental screening are all being considered as part of this potential framework. The framework may not only inform parents about the importance of visual assessment but also connect parents and children to the appropriate vision services. Instead of specifically testing for a single health condition, Bill 203 proposes a comprehensive screening program that may help with identification of many conditions that could be impeding a child's learning in the classroom environment.

Mr. Speaker, our government has in place numerous policies and is working towards developing a framework to address the health and well-being of all Alberta families. As outlined in our five-year health action plan, we made it our goal to ensure that Albertans will live longer and healthier lives. Keeping healthy, prescreening initiatives, and having regular eye exams are all essential to achieving a higher quality of life. According to research done on childhood vision screening in Canada, screening is an important public health strategy for disease prevention.

Mr. Speaker, we also know that enrolment in Alberta's schools is projected to grow by 3 per cent in the year 2014-2015. That means more than 18,000 more students will be entering our world-class education system. This also means that eye examinations will be on the minds of many parents as so many young Albertans begin school for the first time. That is why this government has allocated health funding to include optometric services. As part of Budget 2014 $805 million was added to assist community and other health services in enhancing the health of all Albertans. This includes vision and optometry services. Bill 203 will go a long way to complement the initiatives supported through this government's 2014 budget. It allows us in the Assembly to discuss the importance of early screening initiatives in working towards healthier lives and ensuring that our children are set up for academic success, to foster the growth of our young people, our communities, and our province.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Red Deer-North has explained, kids need to read in order to succeed. Our confident readers are confident learners, and confident learners become lifelong learners.

To close, I want to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for being an advocate for children's vision health and, my pet project, literacy. Bill 203 would stand to complement many of the existing initiatives in place and will benefit the lives of children across this province. That is why I'm supporting Bill 203 today, Mr. Speaker. I encourage my fellow members to do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. What?

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to speak to this bill, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: I would love to speak to this but, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that I already have.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. I was reading an old note. My apologies.

Then I will go to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by saying thank you to the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. Her passion for children and childhood vision has been long noted. From my two years here I know that the member has been extremely passionate with all of her hard work, before on Irlen syndrome and on this as well.

I also want to thank the CNIB and the other groups that have come here today to help us understand better exactly what they envision this bill would do for them and for young children in our school system. I appreciate their concerns and I appreciate their input into this bill because I think it's important to make sure that we get it right the first time.

I do have some concerns with the bill. I want to be very clear that I want to support the bill, but I have some concerns. Some of the concerns that I have personally are around the language. I very much believe in parental choice. I very much believe that the majority of our parents will do what's best for their children. And this service is already offered in Alberta. Free exams are offered to every child in Alberta right now, and I think that our teachers right now try very, very hard to ensure that we educate Albertans on what's available.

However, I understand that we as legislators and the government, for the people in the know, are not going far enough to educate Albertans that this service is available and is free to all children under the age of 19, regardless of income. Every single child under the age of 19 can get a free medical exam in Alberta. This does not cause any economic hardship on parents. Parents don't have to worry about going there and having to pay for it.

I do worry that in the language under visual assessments when you discuss the need, the requirement of that form to get into school, to actually enter into the school, you're putting a huge burden onto the school. More importantly, I do have concerns, like the Minister of Education, about restriction of access. Are we really going to tell our children and those parents that if they don't have that form, they can't come to the school? I see the hon. member shaking her head, saying: no, that that's not going to happen. Unfortunately, when legislation says that it must happen, then it must happen. Somebody will interpret it that way.

So I want to support this if we can work on that language so that you can bring it back and that language is softened so that we're able to get to where you want to go and where we need to be. But when you specifically state, "When a student is enrolling in school after grade 1 and has not previously attended a school in Alberta, a parent or guardian must comply with subsection (2) as if the student was entering grade 1," that means that at any age they enter the school system, they must comply with the same visual act. It says that "every child entering grade 1 must undergo a visual assessment prior to the commencement of the school year." This is the bill, but the bill eventually becomes legislation, which eventually becomes law, which means that the school boards will be required by law to ensure that that visual assessment has happened either at grade 1 or at any point that they enter into the school system if they've never been a student in the province of Alberta. That concerns me.

I have additional concerns that as we go forward, I think there needs to be more consultation done on the bill. I appreciate that you've started the consultation process, but I take very seriously the concerns that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has brought forward, where the ophthalmologists and the optometrists and the school boards don't feel like they can support this bill. One has to wonder. If they're not in support of this bill, what are the reasons, what are the barriers, and how can we work with them to make sure that we remove those barriers so that you have the best bill going forward and so that we can all come to the table together and support it together?

Additionally, I believe I heard the Minister of Education talk about how the standing committee was bringing back a report sometime in November, and I just wonder if we're putting the cart before the horse a little bit. I'd like to see what that report says, if I heard him correctly. If I didn't, I apologize, but I believe that's what he said. I'm just wondering what that report will state.

I think very much that this bill should move to the next stage to allow you, Member for Red Deer-North, to go back to the groups that have concerns with this bill. You did that very well with your Irlen syndrome bill. I think you're very passionate about it, and I can appreciate that. I think you want what's best for our children in Alberta, and I appreciate that, but I think we need to find a way to work with the ophthalmologists and the optometrists to find the connection between the groups that are supporting this and the groups that are not supporting this. Where is the disconnect between what the two need, especially when eye exams are already offered to every single child in Alberta free of cost? Plus eyeglasses.

My concern is that there's something that's a barrier there, and I wonder if it isn't around the "must" factor for the school boards as well when we start saying that they must do something. Then the law will require them to do something, but we don't do that for other things. We don't do it for vaccinations. We don't do it for other issues, yet we're all of a sudden saying: Okay; every single child that comes in has to have an eye exam.

At the same time I believe that as a parent this is my responsibility, totally understanding that not every single parent is able to or willing to or capable of making those choices, but I do think we need to give them every opportunity to do that. I'm just not so sure that we need to go to the mandatory stage. I think that parents do know what's best for their kids. I think that almost every single parent that has their child in school is doing that, and if they're not, the educators who are already there are fantastic. Our teachers, our educational assistants, our parent volunteers are already at the table, and if they identify that a child needs an exam, they're the first person to send the note home. They're the first person to make sure that that child has access. I have no doubt that – I know in my own community our parent volunteers will even, you know, bring the ophthalmologists right into the school to provide that service.

Is there a way, rather than making this mandatory, that we could work with government to actually offer more opportunities to bring the eye testing to the school versus making it mandatory that everyone go to do the eye test at the ophthalmologist's or at the optometrist's? Because it's already there.

I know you talked about how there really isn't going to be an additional cost to the government. Well, there kind of is because right now it's offered, but not everybody takes advantage. I'm a parent of a 12-year-old who does get her eye exam every year, but if my daughter isn't showing any signs of needing the eye exam and she's reading just fine and there's nothing to identify that and I choose to not take the government up on that offer to get her free eye exam, I shouldn't be saying – no school board should be able to say to me that my daughter cannot enter grade 1 because I made a parental choice because there were no identifying factors for her to get an eye exam. Now, that eye exam might be required in grade 3 or grade 6, and certainly we can do that because it's already offered. I'm not critical of that. I'm just saying that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time limit for the consideration of this item has concluded. You still have two minutes, should you choose to continue when we come back to this item again.

Mrs. Towle: Two minutes. Fantastic.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Inclusive School Board Policies

503. Mr. Hehr moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation, like Manitoba's and Ontario's, requiring all school boards to develop policies to support students who want to lead and establish gay-straight alliance activities and organizations, using any name that is consistent with the promotion of a positive school environment that is inclusive, welcoming, and respectful for all students regardless of sexuality, sexual orientation, or gender identity.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, hon. members, we are faced with the choice between taking action to counter homophobic bullying in our schools or to do nothing, a choice between making things better today or paying lip service to an issue that will not go away without our actions, by following up on trying to end this scourge that is facing our public, private, and charter schools throughout the system. I think that today we can choose to make life better for kids by supporting Motion 503.

That is the basis for why we are gathered here today, and I thank all the people who have come, joined us here in the public gallery to hear the debate and, hopefully, to see it passed and to move the chains of progress forward in this great province.

I think to describe the lay of the land as we currently have here in Alberta, I will take a couple of minutes to describe our school system. Right now in Alberta we have public schools, private schools, Catholic schools, charter schools, and francophone schools. Some of our private schools are largely religion based. So despite the nature of this bill, we have many institutions who have been long established in this province who are somewhat nervous about seeing gay-straight alliances made mandatory in their school system. That's the God's honest truth, Mr. Speaker. Adults are nervous about what this will mean for kids in our school system, what it will mean for what their institutions are allowing, what this will mean going forward.

I don't know why in this Legislature we're so concerned about what those adults, those school boards, those school systems may or may not think in regard to this issue. More importantly than that, Mr. Speaker, we have what's called in this country the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as the Alberta Human Rights Act. In those two acts – and the minister there confirmed it for me today – it's stated that in any act in this province, and that includes the Alberta Education Act, you are not allowed to discriminate against people on the basis of sexual orientation. Accordingly, because that is the law of the land, any bill that is instituted in this province – our concerns about what people think on sexual orientation in our school system really have no place, and here's why: because you're not allowed to discriminate against them in any form or fashion. That's a good thing.

So what we should concern ourselves with in this Legislature is whether or not gay-straight alliances are good for kids. That is the only issue that should be in front of us. As we stated before, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as the Alberta Human Rights Act make the opinions on sexual orientation of schools in this province who receive provincial government funding, regardless of what stripe they may be, nugatory. It does not matter one iota, so in fact we can look to the best interests of the kids.

The research in regard to gay-straight alliances cannot be more clear, sir. You have research from Egale and research just recently out of the University of Victoria which unequivocally shows that the formation of gay-straight alliances eliminates bullying not only for people who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgendered, or queer but also for people who are perceived to be lesbian, gay, bisexual, or queer. The research also shows that the bullying rates amongst these LGBTQ students is far greater than those suffered by – quote, unquote – your average Joe or Jane student. That is clear from the evidence that they have presented, and I think that anecdotally we can agree from our experiences in high school that this is in fact true. By not acting on this, we would be denying the research. Okay? The establishment of GSAs in schools not only lessens bullying for LGBTQ students; it also lessens bullying for everyone in the school. Here it is. It provides an inclusive environment, a win-win situation where everyone in the school can thrive and get along. Really, it's an idea whose time has come.

But here's what is holding GSAs back from happening. Simply put, there are some school boards and some administrators who are very nervous about this issue. Let's be clear; it's most likely in our religious private schools and some of our religious public schools, most likely the Catholic school system. This causes them some concern.

What we need to do here, like Ontario has done and like Manitoba has done, is recognize that unless a Legislature acts, unless we say that we make mandatory the establishment of GSAs in schools where kids want them, you will have some groups, whether they be principals, whether they be school boards or the like, who may get in the way of the establishment of the GSA. I brought up a pretty clear example here in question period today. The Heritage Christian Academy, which is a 100 per cent publicly funded school, made their kids actually sign a declaration stating that they will abstain from all things dealing with homosexuality. Clearly, what is the likelihood of a GSA being able to be established in that school? And this is a 100 per cent publicly funded school in this province.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, if we do not act on this, we are burying our heads in the sand and hoping things get better when we know, in fact, that we can make things better today for lesbian, gay, transgendered, bisexual, and queer students and stop the bullying behaviour that is occurring in our schools and make their lives better today and prevent the rise in suicide rates amongst them. If we don't do this, we're ignoring our responsibility to act on base science, reason, and common sense for all of our students in our school system.

I look forward to hearing people's debate on this issue. I encourage all members of this House to vote in favour of it. I believe you'll be on the right side of history on this. I believe that those who do vote against this will be looked at 10 years from now as having stood in the way of progress. My hope is that that will govern the way you look at this issue and the way you wish to assist kids in our system today.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize next the Minister of Education, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for bringing this forward and, before I even start, I think, a big thank you to everyone across the province, the teachers, the administrators, the volunteers that not only establish but work on the gay-straight alliances, which are fantastic groups, and all the other support groups, peer support groups, the clubs that are involved in our schools. They do a tremendous amount of good and often are more impactful than the formal education. I know that they were in my past life as well.

I want to say that it's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 503, which urges the government to introduce legislation that would require all school boards to develop policies to support students wanting to establish gay-straight alliances, activities, and organizations. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the truth is that we already have.

As Minister of Education I can tell you that the success of every Alberta student is our highest priority. Our government recognizes that student achievement and personal development become virtually impossible if students feel threatened, unwelcome, or are undergoing undue mental and emotional stress. This is why our government has worked so hard to ensure that every school in Alberta is inclusive of all students and welcoming of all diversity in all shapes, forms, sizes, and colours. This was the impetus behind the government's Education Act. This legislation will come into effect in 2015. It includes the expectation that every Alberta school will strive to establish a learning environment that is "welcoming, caring, respectful and safe [and inclusive]."

We're tremendously proud of this legislation as it contains some of Canada's most effective, most proactive, and toughest antibullying provisions anywhere in Canada. I'd like to take a brief moment to point out for the House some specific provisions within the act that will help foster acceptance and further increase the inclusiveness of our schools. Under board responsibilities already in the Education Act section 33, for instance, states:

- (1) A board, as a partner in education, has the responsibility to . . .
- (d) ensure that each student enrolled in a school operated by the board and each staff member employed by the board is provided with a welcoming, caring, respectful and safe learning environment that respects diversity and fosters a sense of belonging.

And tied to that, this seems to be exactly what the member is asking for:

- (2) A board shall establish, implement and maintain a policy respecting the board's obligation [under the above] to provide a welcoming, caring, respectful and safe learning environment that includes the establishment of a code of conduct for students that addresses bullying behaviour.

The intent of these provisions is powerful and highly effective in ensuring that all students, we hope, irrespective of their differences, are provided with a healthy and inclusive learning environment. I would argue that these elements do exactly what the motion requests, albeit more broadly – agreed – to ensure that no support groups, no areas, or no clubs are exempt.

I've said in this House before, Mr. Speaker, and we've said many times that we absolutely support gay-straight alliances. They do fantastic work in Alberta schools, and we would love to have more of them just like we'd like to have more of many of the support groups that do good work across the province. They can all be a very important way to promote healthy, respectful relationships and to prevent bullying.

However, I do believe that the member's approach to this issue in the motion in question is not the most appropriate way to go about combating bullying. Singling out a specific group of students in legislation, potentially at the expense of other students being forgotten, is troublesome. There are, like I said, many other highly effective groups like GSAs that promote acceptance, build bridges, and help fight bullying, but we can't possibly legislate for each and every one of these groups, Mr. Speaker, so instead we endeavour to create schools and learning environments that are accepting of all students and empowering for all students regardless of what their differences are.

With the student at the centre of every decision we make in education, it's crucial that school authorities and local school administrators have some autonomy, some flexibility, and a responsibility to make these decisions, so instead we set clear expectations of boards and schools to have appropriate policies in place, which is what we've done in the Education Act and seems to be what this member is asking for. We seek to empower the school boards and the schools to determine which clubs, supports, and resources are most appropriate and effective in meeting the needs of their students, their staff, and their school community in line with the resources that they have and the demand that they have. To support students interested in forming GSAs in their schools, Education recently developed two fact sheets, Gay-Straight Alliances in Schools and Starting a Gay-Straight Alliance in Your School: A Tip Sheet for Students. Those are online and among the resources available to schools and teachers and students.

Additionally, a ministry representative sits on the Alberta Teachers' Association's Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Subcommittee, and the ministry staff also provided input into the creation of the PRISM tool kit, which assists teachers with age-appropriate strategies for promoting respect for sexual and gender minorities.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we must make certain that we consult with stakeholders extensively. I know that the hon. member across the way agrees with me and likewise believes deeply in the need for consultation and takes regular delight in admonishing me for not taking enough time to consult when we do policies, when we do budget, when we do legislation. However, I think it's important to note that on this critical issue for some reason he opted not to engage with education stakeholders. This lack of consultation prevented these important decision-makers from being at the table and being able to be part of the role in development of this motion and the policy implications or legislative implications that would come with it. In fact, until they learned of it in the media, they were unaware that the motion existed at all.

Organizations representing education leadership like the Alberta School Boards Association; the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association; the Public School Boards' Association; the Alberta School Councils' Association, which is parents; my Speak Out group, which is the minister's youth advisory group; and the College of Alberta School Superintendents, just to name a few, weren't even notified of the member's motion. I have to question why a member holding such strong conviction on the need for broad consultation and engagement and embracing everyone would fail to do so entirely, on his own motion no less. We cannot legislate without consulting broadly with those who work on the front lines.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, decisions about starting a gay-straight alliance in any particular school are best made by the local school authority. They're empowered to do that. They're expected to do that. The standards for that have been heightened in the new Education Act, and they seem to align with exactly what the member is asking for and align with what some of the other provinces have done, which he has quoted. I wholeheartedly support his support for GSAs. I wholeheartedly support his intent in bringing this motion forward. I don't support the motion for the reasons that I've stated.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll next recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Might I start by acknowledging everybody that came today to listen in on this debate up in the gallery. Thank you. Thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this motion forward to the floor of this Assembly. It deals with an issue of critical importance, I believe, in our schools.

I also think there isn't a person in this Assembly today who believes that any form of bullying in our schools is in any way acceptable. Regardless of partisan stripe I am absolutely one hundred per cent confident in saying that each and every one of us believes that no student should be subjected to bullying for any reason whatsoever, be that race, religion, gender, social status, or sexual orientation. It is not acceptable. I've only been here two years, but it's probably one of the only issues that we unanimously agree on. I would suggest bullying is completely unacceptable and has no place in the classrooms or in this province, period.

Motion 503 calls for all school boards to develop policies to support students who want to establish gay-straight alliances. In effect, it means no school can overrule a student who wants to start one up. Now, while the motion's purpose is noble and while I personally believe the student-led efforts to oppose bullying of all kinds should be encouraged across the province, it represents an overreach of the Legislature. I believe the local school boards are best suited to deal with the bullying issue, and many of them are and should be applauded for the great work that they are doing on the GSAs that have started in this province.

Earlier on I said that I was one hundred per cent confident that each member of this Assembly opposes bullying on any grounds. For the same reasons I am just as confident that those we elect to sit on our school boards feel the exact same way. The same people who elect us, Mr. Speaker, elect them. They elect us to do a job on their behalf, to come to this Assembly and pass legislation. We try and ensure timely access to health care, education, and other important provincial services. They also elect school boards to do the job on their behalf, and a major part of that job is to provide a safe, caring, and inclusive learning environment for each and every student who walks through the halls of their schools.

In fact, the presidents of both the Alberta School Boards Association and the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association have made that point loud and clear and, I would like to say, very respectfully also. They have disagreed with the motion in how it was presented. They were not consulted on the motion at all, and they probably could have and should have had that opportunity from the local level to have brought their thoughts forward and their insight for they are in the most appropriate spot, I think, to see what's happening on the ground. It's their job to ensure that students are treated with respect by their peers and to deal with those accordingly when they are not. From my experience, it's a job that Alberta school boards and their elected trustees take extremely seriously and that they do quite well. It's one we should allow them to do without legislative micromanagement crafted by provincial politicians underneath this dome.

We must also recognize that not all schools are the same. We have public schools in densely populated and diverse urban areas.

We have public schools in remote rural areas. Some public schools, particularly in Edmonton, are faith based, having joined a public system that has been inclusive of them. We, of course, have many Catholic school boards, who take great pride and care in providing the opportunity for the faith of their students to be strengthened while receiving a world-class education. We have dozens of excellent independent schools, that provide a faith-based educational experience for Christians, for Muslims, for Sikhs, and for many, many more.

It would be highly inappropriate for us assembled in this Legislature to use our power to force schools, particularly faith-based schools, to sanction any organization that might teach or promote concepts that contradict their sincerely held religious beliefs. Doing so may be well meaning, but in effect it works to protect the rights of one group by disrespecting the closely held beliefs of another group. We must support school boards and teachers in their faith-based schools to find the best ways to combat bullying of LGBT students or any other students in a way that is also respectful of their beliefs and faiths. I believe that fundamentally, Mr. Speaker.

Now, because the problem we are trying to address here is bullying, bullying of all kinds, whether that be the bullying of LGBT students, visible minority students, students that struggle with obesity, students with special needs, religious students, all students – we're talking about every single student, Mr. Speaker – I'm absolutely certain that our schools, whether they are public, whether they are Catholic, independent or faith based, are committed to that goal. So rather than mandate and prescribe how to best accomplish this, let us instead set the clear expectation that every Alberta school must work to provide a bully-free educational experience, provide our schools and boards with supports and resources where needed, and then place our trust in our schools, in our teachers and school boards, as they continue their work to combat bullying of all kinds.

In closing, I just want to say how thankful I am to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for raising this issue. He has done an incredible job, I believe, raising awareness and bringing it to the public's attention. I have no doubt his efforts will reap rewards for many students. I know his passion with this issue will remain strong long after the debate on the motion that he has brought forward is over in here. While we might disagree on how to achieve it, I assure him and I assure all Albertans that the Wildrose strives for an education system that is welcoming, respectful, caring, and safe for all students. I look forward to continuing this discussion and working with the hon. member despite his nonstop heckling throughout my entire speech.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize next the Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of interest in speaking to Motion 503, perhaps an opportunity to help clarify how this fits into a larger picture of equality and social justice in our school systems across this province as we speak. In fact, as I reflected on the motion from Calgary-Buffalo, I realized that I myself was part of the Diversity, Equity and Human Rights Committee with the Alberta Teachers' Association, that started to formulate a detailed plan on how we can attack discrimination in all of its forms in our school systems through education, through training, and through exposure to diversity. The Diversity, Equity and Human Rights Committee came up with a comprehensive way, back in 2002, 2003, by which we can teach teachers and also students, forming clubs and so forth, about sexual equality and social justice as well.

I see the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's motion as a logical extension of this, not to exclude other forms of discrimination as we might encounter them but to be an important part of a four-point plan to attack inequality and social injustice directly in our schools right across the province. Of course, the motion that he has here, requiring all school boards to develop policies to support students who want to lead and establish gay-straight alliance activities and organizations, using any name that is consistent with the promotion of a positive school environment that is inclusive, welcoming, and respectful for all students regardless of sexuality, sexual orientation, or gender identity, fits in very well with the larger plan. Replace those words with another motion that might talk about cultural identity or religious identity or other cultural or perhaps visible minorities, and then you have part of a larger package that really does attack inequality and social injustice as it exists here in the province of Alberta. It's always attention. We cannot presume that we'll ever win this battle somehow with inequality or sexual inequality in our schools, but it's a good way to always remind ourselves along the way that we make education combined with legislation that attacks these inequalities head-on.

In 2006 the Alberta Teachers' Association published Gay-Straight Student Alliances in Alberta Schools: A Guide for Teachers. While this document is by no means governing legislation, it does discuss the responsibility of teachers to provide inclusive environments for students. This also provides some background to support knowledge for teachers on how to develop GSAs in their school. The guiding points: a series of consistent pieces of legislation that could assist students and teachers in developing gay-straight alliances if they wanted to establish one. There's a long-standing policy there that we can build on. Certainly, we just want to enshrine that policy as it can exist in all schools in the province.

While students and staff may want to start a gay-straight alliance in their school, an unexpected push-back may in fact come from school administrations working out of fear that parents will be complaining or protesting. Alternatively, some parents may feel that it is against their rights to have the child exposed to a gay-straight alliance on religious grounds. This combination of push-back or expected push-back is a problem that we need to overcome. That's why this motion is so important.

Mr. Speaker, from the fact that Bill 44 education aspects were passed as one of the bigger barriers for schools who actually want to start GSAs or undertake any activity to promote inclusion in their schools, if parents are given the legislative authority to put their kids out of discussions that deal with sexuality or gender expression, then schools are hesitant to pursue this. That's exactly the problem with Bill 44. So until we remove that part of Bill 44 that allows that sort of activity to take place, then that's the actual legislative barrier that this motion seeks to counteract. Again, I really admire the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this forward.

Bill 44 creates an environment where schools are confused as to what they can or cannot talk about. The need to opt out or to notify: those clauses also create unneeded layers of uncertainty. If a gay-straight alliance wants to hold any activity or meeting, it would have to inform all parents. This bill needs to be repealed, Mr. Speaker. Even as we pass legislation to mandate the creation of gay-straight alliances, the fact that Bill 44 is on the books makes an actual implementation of this motion very difficult.

Edmonton public school boards have already had similar types of policy in place for teachers, students, and schools to develop GSAs in their schools. As well, Edmonton public schools, I think, provides an excellent example to provide some model that we can use across the province.

Gay-straight alliances have demonstrated a history of success as advocates for the LGBTQ youth as well as proponents of school safety. We know that where there is the existence of GSAs, the problems with discrimination and violence are reduced. It's important that institutional support must be provided as well to students and educators who wish to establish and lead these groups. Support from above eases resistance from students, teachers, and the community and provides validation for those engaged in this important work.

Contemporary research demonstrates that discrimination of all kinds is rare within schools, as I said, that actively promote the appreciation of differences and a sense of community. The empowerment of oppressed groups means empowering everyone in the end, Mr. Speaker. We've seen examples of this in Ontario as well that have worked quite well. I can also speak from personal experience teaching in schools, Edmonton public schools such as Victoria school, where there was not just a GSA but an active attempt to educate all students and parents and teachers and support staff in regard to equality and social justice issues in regard to sexuality, which paid dividends far beyond anything that we could imagine.

This motion is very modest. Like I say, I gave you a bit of a historical context from whence it came, and in the interests of a larger pursuit of equality and social justice I believe that not only is the member's motion's heart in the right place, but the words and the action that surround it are, too. So, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support this motion. In the spirit of optimism and a sense of equality it's something we can be proud of moving to the future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll next recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety, followed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just trying to remind myself that it's 2014. I actually had a kind of really nice, happy, kind of weepy response that I was going to do in supporting Motion 503, and then some people spoke. So I'm not going to be quite so nice as I thought I was going to be. I really am struggling particularly with the Minister of Education's remarks that somehow the new inclusive Education Act is just as good as accepting a motion that actually would take action to allow gay-straight alliances. This particularly burns me when that act took out the mention of the Alberta Human Rights Act, which was in there before. So does the minister have credibility with me when he says that that act is going to be just as good and that's the act that took out the mention of the Alberta Human Rights Act? No. It doesn't carry a lot of weight with me.

You know, the second thing that should have happened there, when we were talking about inclusive education, was to make sure that this Assembly went and opened up the Human Rights Act and removed the odious section 11.1, in which parental rights were allowed to trump any discussion in a classroom of sexual orientation. So, on the one hand, that new human rights act actually recognizes sexual orientation under our protected grounds and at exactly the same time comes out with a monster big club and says: but you're not allowed to talk about that or refer to it in a classroom or people can remove their children or blah, blah, blah. A huge amount of misunderstanding and, frankly, homophobia flowed from that.

It's 2014. We actually are in a new century here, and I will not accept the Minister of Education standing up and saying that that act is going to be as good as what's being proposed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you know, that a code of conduct is somehow as good as a student-driven effort in which they devise actual action to move forward on this issue as compared to a bunch of talk, a bunch of words. We're trying to empower students that are going to come together and make their peers and themselves better equipped to deal with the world. But no. We're going to take a step back here and say: well, we're worried about parental rights. You have your parental rights. You've got everything you need from parental rights. You can remove your kids from the classroom right now, and that's what that bill gave to us. So you've got lots of parental rights if you're not comfortable with this.

What this motion is trying to do is actually give those kids some tools to move ahead. We want to make sure that all kids, all schools get to move ahead, that we don't end up with – what was it? – oh, yes, inequality. Somebody said that somehow we would have equality across the schools if we don't put this in. What you'll get if you don't put this in is inequality. You'll have some schools that will allow GSAs or support them and others that won't, and they don't want to be seen making that decision. They want somebody else to say to them: you do this; that's it.

Let me take a little sidebar here, a little, wee tangent. I don't know what it is that's just happened in this Assembly. Somehow with the two private member driven proposals that have come forward today, all of a sudden people have an expectation that we have massive departments and a lot of staff that are going to go out and consult with all these people, that we've got budgets to mail stuff out and launch websites and go and consult all these people, or that somehow the work of Bill 203 isn't worth it because she didn't consult everyone in the world twice or that this member – I mean, we share exactly four researchers. How do you expect us to go out and consult with all these different groups? That's just not a possibility on this side of the House. I'm sorry that you've never had that experience, and I cannot tell you how much I'm looking forward to you having that experience. Okay.

That's what was meant to happen here, that this would be an opportunity to actually support kids that want to get together. This is the mushy part. Now, I was very lucky to grow up as a drama kid. Drama kids tend to pull into their group a lot of other kids that feel like they're misfits or a little strange or weird, and often that strangeness or weirdness was a kid that was trying to work out their gender identity or their sexual orientation. So we felt very protective, and we were very strong groups that incorporated everybody. We didn't separate anybody out. We protected everybody and moved forward. So the idea of a gay-straight alliance is really home to me. It feels right because I had the advantage of that, not named that but essentially the same thing.

The other thing that really strikes me about this is the ISMSS and the development of Camp fYrefly, which is the camp for gay, lesbian, bisexual, trans kids, in which they get to go to camp and be gay, lesbian, bisexual, trans, queer, two-spirited kids. At the fundraising events that we had been to to raise money for this camp – to see grown men weeping because they didn't get that opportunity. There was no place for them to go where it was safe, where they could talk about those questions that they had or how they felt.

It's quite magical as grown-ups to be able to support something that younger people are trying to do to make their world a better place, and I think it's important that we support Motion 503 for exactly that reason. It is an opportunity for kids to be with their peers and to be normal, to be okay, to be included. That is normal. You know, folks, it is normal. We do have all kinds of kids. They come in all kinds of shapes and sizes, including different sexual orientations, different gender identities.

Mr. Hehr: And they go to religious schools.

Ms Blakeman: And some of them go to religious schools. Some of them go to private schools. Some of them are home-schooled. Some kids are in the public school system. If you're in the Edmonton public school system, you even get it better because their board actually passed a gay-positive, a queer-positive motion in the way they were going to deliver education. This is to make sure that all kids are going to get that benefit, not picking and choosing which schools are going to deliver it but making sure that that opportunity is there.

I really like the wording of the motion that says that if the kids identify that they want to have this gay-straight alliance, then the schools will help them do that. They don't have to run it. They don't have to be the boss. They just have to facilitate that this organization will come together for those kids. That's exactly the way it should be.

Ah, yes, here we have it. This is the Camp fYrefly special emblem, and some of you, I know, have been. Some of my colleagues on the other side have supported Camp fYrefly's efforts. Thank you very much for that. I know Kris Wells was here earlier. We've got a number of people in the gallery. Some pink shirts from the University of Alberta. Thank you. My fabulous constituent, Rob Wells. I know that Ben from the Pride Centre is here and a number of other people. Thank you very much for coming out for this. It's important that you see how democracy works and how it's a bit of a slugfest sometimes.

I do encourage people to support this. It's for the kids. You know, for all the parental rights and all of the inequalities in the ways schools are operated and what their mandates are, at no point should we ever be saying that you can discriminate against someone because of your religion. That is the antithesis of what we should be doing here. In particular, when we know that there are kids out there that need this special kind of support from their peers, we should not be denying it. We should be the leaders, here in the Legislative Assembly, that are making this possible and are making it possible across the board so that there are no exceptions in the schools and the school boards that are delivering this particular program for them.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 503, proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. This motion, as we all know, urges the government to support students who wish to establish gay-straight alliances in their schools. I am honoured to have LGBTQ issues in my mandate, the first time in this province's history, and I take that very seriously.

Specifically, Motion 503 calls for the introduction of legislation that would require school boards to implement policies that would provide those supports. Now, I understand that in general school boards need to have the autonomy to assess the needs of their school communities, and the prevailing opinion is that gay-straight alliances in a particular school are best decided by the local school authority and the school. But this is what I'm struggling with. There is an inherent disconnect between embracing the value and success of student-led GSAs and then saying: by the way, if a school board is uncomfortable with it, then it's not student-led at all. This is my problem with the arguments I'm hearing.

The key to the importance of this motion is that it supports students who want to establish gay-straight alliances in their schools. Now, why would students want to do that? They want to do that because (a) they have gay students in their schools, and I bet you every school in this province does, and (b) students want to encourage support and acceptance of LGBTQ issues. With respect, a board superintendent, even a teacher cannot assess the level of acceptance and even safety a student feels more than the students themselves. Students have to have the freedom to decide if a gay-straight alliance is needed in their school, and if they do, we need to ensure they have the right to establish them. It is the right thing to do.

So, yes, I wholeheartedly support Motion 503 and the efforts of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Gay-straight alliances are extremely important. They are an important component of any inclusive school environment that endeavours to reinforce positivity and inclusiveness in the process of learning. They promote understanding, and they cut down on bullying behaviour. Everyone agrees on that.

I am proud of our government's School Act, that calls for schools to be safe and inclusive spaces. I think that's wonderful. I believe that empathy and humane respect for one another are prerequisites for any meaningful education. This is why we have to continue to strengthen our commitment to fostering respect and diversity in all the schools in Alberta. It is impossible to learn in an environment in which one feels unsafe or belittled. This goes for every single student as well as for teachers, administrators, and even parents, for that matter.

Under section 45 of the School Act all school boards are expected to conduct themselves in compliance with this most basic, fundamental necessity for positive student learning. This takes into account the fundamental fact that a one-size-fits-all policy is neither a practical nor a realistic approach for conducting business or delivering education. Just as we rightly expect school boards to respect diversity in our students, we also have to respect our students' ability to decide if they need a gay-straight alliance. It cannot be student led if the board has the ability to veto it. This is not about taking power away from school boards; it's about giving power to students to make safer school environments.

Alberta is an incredibly diverse province, Mr. Speaker. That means that the diversity is not only in our landscapes; it's in each school board from Calgary to Edmonton to Lethbridge to Cold Lake. They all face their own unique circumstances. We know that all schools in the province may not want a gay-straight alliance, but that need isn't a board's to determine; it's a student's to determine. This is not a question of religious rights, and it's not a question of sexuality as much as it is a question of the right to free speech and free assembly.

Students are driving this issue forward. My concern about a school's or a school board's ability to opt out of allowing a gay-straight alliance is that in some conservative school cultures that gay-straight alliance might be vitally important, perhaps crucial, to an LGBTQ student's feeling of safety and inclusivity. It's important to remember that, first and foremost, all GSAs are grounded in issues of equal access and accommodation which are firmly established and protected in our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and all provincial and territorial rights statutes.

Importantly, the core function and mandate of school-based GSAs are related to meeting the significant health and safety needs of LGBTQ and allied students. GSAs in faith-based and other communities play a critical and important role in helping to build vibrant, welcoming, and faith-affirming classrooms in schools for LGBTQ students, teachers, and same-sex parented families.

I want to close with the words of Patrick Burke, the president of the You Can Play team to end homophobia in sports: 64 per cent of LGBTQ students say they feel unsafe in their own schools. Sixty-four per cent. A gay student is five times more likely to drop out of school. A gay student is three times more likely to attempt suicide than a heterosexual teenager. We have teenagers, children, who feel so worthless that they would rather tie a rope around a tree than face another day in school. Gay-straight alliances help LGBTQ students feel safer in schools. They reduce bullying. They promote acceptance. Making sure every LGBTQ student in this province has the opportunity to be part of one is the right thing to do in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we probably won't get to all of these speakers, but for the record I have the members for Calgary-Mountain View, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Calgary-West, and Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak in defence of the Alberta LGBTQ community and the youth community and to support Motion 503, put forward by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Growing up is tough. It can be tough growing up at the best of times, but it's also tougher when you're made to feel different. Many of us are from different walks of life, different cultures, different parts of the world. Many of us have experienced this. We heard these stories earlier in the Legislature on another motion.

Mr. Speaker, you know, bullying actually leads to assault. All evidence points that those kids who do the bullying end up later on in life with a higher chance of becoming criminals; those who get bullied have a higher chance of depression, anxiety, alienation, and, the ultimate, suicide. I've seen many effects as an inner-city trauma doctor on young people, who overdose and come to us. Many young people slit their wrists because they're made to feel that they don't belong.

When this happens to children, especially children in a school system – imagine going to school every day wondering if you're going to get beat up, how you're going to be treated, and no one is going to stand up for you. Sometimes in certain areas, heck, the teachers are part of the problem. If the administrators of a school system don't have the courage to allow children to feel safe, how are these children going to feel? These are democratically elected administrators of school systems.

Mr. Speaker, we all need to send a message as policy-makers – the buck stops with us in the Legislature – on the tone of respect and dignity and how we as a society should treat one another. That's what we're talking about here today, about how we speak daily about one another. Now, as you know, this country is founded on principles of freedom of speech, freedom of expression, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press, freedom to express who you are as an individual and to speak freely about it and not promote hate.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of stuff has been said, and I thank the hon. members in the PC caucus for showing support and making compassionate, very rational arguments to support this motion. On behalf of the Alberta Liberals, as the leader, I'm proud to stand here and support the LGBTQ community, support our children. It's about our kids, about making them feel safe and welcome and, really, about building a better, more inclusive Alberta, a more inclusive Canada. I believe it's time that we had the courage to say: hey, this is not the Alberta of yesterday; this is the Alberta of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, lastly, I'll say one thing. This province is growing. We've got people from all over the world and all over the country, from all walks of life, from all religions, from all sexual orientations. They're all Albertans like anybody else. It is the duty of the majority to protect the minority, and that's exactly what is an absolute, fundamental principle of democracy. There is a pollster who actually spoke, you know, and showed the polling of the country and the province. These are comments from a pollster from Ipsos-Reid. He said that there will be little room in Alberta for those who are homophobic or bigoted, that this is not who Albertans are; this is not who Canadians are.

I would encourage every member of this Assembly to support this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have 30 seconds if you'd like to participate.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, bullying in schools is not restricted to the LGBTQ community. In fact, I was bullied when I was in school, throughout school. Many would not know that I actually grew eight inches after high school. I was the shrimpiest, tiniest little kid in school. Also, in the work that I've done in the community and religious work, there are many people that get bullied because of their religious beliefs. So to single out a situation is not necessarily appropriate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate. I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate on Motion 503.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think many viewpoints were put forward here today, yet I stand by the statement that today in this Legislature we can choose to do nothing, or we can choose to do something that will make kids' lives better today. I could submit that this motion, which will allow the formation of gay-straight alliances in schools where kids want them established, is what will help move our society forward, will help our LGBTQ community not only to live with more pride, more dignity, but it will also reduce bullying that occurs in our schools for those students as well as for all students who attend that school.

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, the reason why we need to act today is exactly the reason that Kris Wells wrote about in the Calgary Herald. I'm going to quote from Dr. Wells's article right now.

This religious resistance is exactly the reason governments in both Manitoba and Ontario have legislated that all schools must support any student who wants to start a GSA and name it as such. Alberta [should] follow suit. The status quo is no longer acceptable. If we fail to act, we will do nothing more than allow discrimination to flourish and we will continue to build an apartheid system of education in our province where LGBTQ students are treated as second-class citizens in their own schools. This is not the kind of Alberta that I want to build.

I stand with Dr. Wells on this. I do not want to build that kind of Alberta either.

Simply put, without us legislating this here in this province – maybe we are only urging the government to do this in this motion – if we do not legislate this in this province because of religious reasons and many of those reasons which I think are no longer valid, school systems, school boards, and some administrators will not be willing to allow kids to establish a gay-straight alliance. It's particularly for that reason that we need to ask.

You saw the statistics brought up by the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety, who, in my view, gave the best speech on this issue here today. It was clear, it was cogent, and it hit all the right notes in terms of protecting children in our society. If you heard the statistics she brought up about the rate of children being bullied in our schools, how some of them do not even want to go to school because the bullying is so bad that it's leading them to commit suicide, that should be reason enough for every member who is here today to vote in favour of us moving forward on this issue. To not do it is simply to deny what is happening in our schools, to deny that there is a problem, to deny that things won't get better on their own, because they won't. They won't. We would simply be delaying this for another 15, 20 years.

I urge everyone in this Assembly to do the right thing, to do what I believe is not only good for our kids but good for our society.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to everyone for listening. Do the right thing.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 8, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members and all.

Let us pray, and let us be thankful for the great bounty that we enjoy in this wonderful province called Alberta, where our families can feel safe and secure, can live free from persecution and imposed strife, and can share in a global culture that is truly respectful of others. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Member's 12th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to Introduction of Guests, let me take a moment and remind you that today we have a member among us who is celebrating his 12th anniversary as an elected member of this Legislative Assembly. So please join me in thanking him for his service to this Assembly and to Albertans as I extend congratulations to the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with the Minister of Energy, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you an outstanding group of students and their teachers and parent helpers from the elementary school in the community of Calmar in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon. These 34 bright grade 6 students along with their teachers Ms Jeanette Wilson, Scott Olsen, Kathleen Sikliski and parent helpers Rebecca Eilander and Troy Mutch are here with us. Please, let's give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 66 of the very best and brightest grade 6 students that I've had the pleasure of meeting, from the wonderful school of St. Augustine. They are here with their teachers Sharon Hackett, Romeo Cruzat Mandanas, Ken Hackett, Laura Engler and parent helpers Melissa Ocampo, Brandon Bishop, Courtney Louis, Michelle Auclair, Nancy Giles, Gilda Soosay-Horvath, and Erin Fleck. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups or youth to be introduced?

If not, let us move on to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly representatives from the Turkic-Canadian community. Today the Turkic-Canadian community came to the Legislature to share their cultural heritage. Participating countries such as Turkey, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, Tajikistan, Azerbaijan, Bosnia-Herzegovina, and Uzbekistan put on a wonderful display of arts, crafts, and great food, including the famous Noah's pudding, all very typical of the grand Turkic tradition.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to introduce the following representatives that are seated today in your gallery. My apologies if I struggle with some of the pronunciation of these names: Cuneyt Zumrutpinar, the Anatolian Heritage Federation; Ibrahim Cin, the Intercultural Dialogue Institute, Edmonton; Orhan Benli, the Anatolian Heritage Federation; Nazgul Aitkulova from the Kyrgyzstan community; Malik Muradov from Turkmenistan; and Kenan Tuzlak from Bosnia-Herzegovina. There are also many other community representatives seated today in both galleries. I would now ask all our guests in the galleries to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this afternoon three guests of the Assembly who are seated in the members' gallery and are visiting us from Writing-on-Stone provincial park. I'd ask them to rise as I read their names: Aaron Domes, who is the head of visitors' services; Suzanne Lodermeier, who is the visitors' centre co-ordinator; and Juanita Tallman, who is an interpretive supervisor. This exceptional team was the driving force behind the First Nations interpretive internship program at Writing-on-Stone provincial park. This program provides visitors to the park with an authentic Blackfoot cultural experience and recently won the gold medal at the Institute of Public Administration of Canada public-sector leadership awards. They have risen, and I'd ask my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The leader of the loyal opposition, followed by Medicine Hat.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Mr. Troy Mutch, national president of the Canadian Volunteer Fire Services Association. Troy has been honoured with several awards, including the Queen Elizabeth Diamond Jubilee medal for his leadership and commitment in the Canadian fire services, and he is also one of Alberta's flood heroes. Troy helped bring Tide's loads of hope to High River, which enabled the residents to have clean clothes along with some sense of normalcy. But today he's here as a father, accompanying his son's class to learn about the Legislature. Troy, please stand and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students that are no strangers to many of us. We had a fantastic meeting for an hour and a half this morning with the Council of Alberta University Students, many of whom were introduced yesterday by the Premier. They are also looking forward to the estimates debate this afternoon on Innovation and Advanced Education. As I call their names, I would ask that they rise in recognition of their relentless advocacy and continued perseverance to make Alberta's postsecondary education system affordable and accessible and to ensure the highest quality of education for all Albertans. From the University of Alberta we have Adam Woods, Petros Kusmu, and Navneet Khinda. From the University of Calgary we have Raphael Jacob and Jarett Henry. From the University of Lethbridge we have Shuna Talbot, Sean Glydon, and Chris Hollingsworth. From Mount Royal University we have Sadiq Valliani, Missy Chareka, Erik Queenan, and Seija Roggeveen. The always cheerful executive director of CAUS, Beverly Eastham, joins us as well today. I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, I understand you have two introductions. Is that correct?

Ms Woo-Paw: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed. We'll then hear from Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a born-and-raised Edmontonian who is in this House for the very first time: Mr. Hubert Lau, executive vice-president of Viewtrak Technologies, an Edmonton-based company that's a global leader in livestock information technology solutions, that currently produces the number one pork-grading tool in China and will soon be the number one lamb-grading tool in the world. He is now standing, so I would like to ask my colleagues to give him the warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two guests who are helping to enhance and expand Alberta's business and trade ties with the world. I have Ms Sarah Tiet, VP of marketing and operations, and also Mr. Ven Côté, partner and senior adviser with AMCC. Now, Ms Tiet is originally from Asia, and Mr. Côté, originally from Quebec, actually was the recipient of the Ernst & Young entrepreneur of the year award for the prairie region as well as named among Alberta Venture's 50 most influential people in 2009. Alberta is most fortunate to have these energetic and dynamic businesspeople helping us to open new markets. I would like to ask my colleagues to give them the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Sandhu: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a good friend of mine for the last 20 years, a great supporter of mine, Yusuf Kharadi. He's a journeyman electrician, honest and hard working. He came today to share in the Turkish celebration. He's seated in the members' gallery. I will ask Yusuf to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Speaking Times

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday was a very historic day in this Assembly. Not only was it the first day for Alberta's new Premier, Alberta's 15th Premier, but it was also very noteworthy to hear his very important message delivered at a time called Ministerial Statements, as was it important to hear from other members when everyone spoke about the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Your chair knows of the deeply held emotions that are triggered by the subject of residential schools because I grew up very near to the Alexis reserve, and I saw some of what was talked about yesterday occurring.

The work of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission allows and empowers people to tell their stories. In keeping with that theme, yesterday there were some very emotional statements made in this Assembly. As Speaker I was proud to preside over an Assembly, over a Chamber, where, for example, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake was able to stand and tell her personal story involving residential schools. The speeches that were given by other members and by the Leader of the Official Opposition also spoke to many outside these walls who know that their stories have resonance with all of us.

As I mentioned yesterday, at page 351 of Alberta Hansard for April 7, 2014, there were some complaints by some members forwarded to me regarding the time that was given by me to members who asked to participate in responding to the ministerial statement. I indicated that I would provide some guidelines with respect to the speaking times for ministerial statements today, including responses to ministerial statements.

In reviewing the background and rulings on this subject over the years, I found the most succinct statement to actually be in a document that I sent to House leaders on January 23, 2014, entitled Proposed Changes to Assembly Procedures: Comments Prepared by Table Officers. To quote from that document, I said the following:

There is nothing in the Standing Orders that provides for the length of time that a Minister may take in delivering a Ministerial Statement. Likewise, there is nothing about the length of responses by the Official Opposition or any other opposition Member. The practice of allowing a Member of the Official Opposition a response of 3 minutes has been followed since the June 13, 1986 ruling by former Speaker David Carter. As there is nothing in that ruling or in the Standing Orders, a further practice has evolved of seeking unanimous consent of the Assembly to have a Member of any other opposition party respond for 3 minutes. In the interests of certainty, House Leaders may wish to consider amending the Standing Orders to either codify the existing practice or modify it.

Some members may recall a ruling I gave on May 14, 2013, at page 2391 of Alberta Hansard for that day, that dealt with the topic of ministerial statements, especially the length of them.

I also want to point out that one of the most important jobs of the Speaker, although not much is written about it, is to sense the mood of the Assembly and to apply the rules in light of those circumstances. That is what I did yesterday with respect to the speaking times that I allowed in responding to the ministerial statement.

In fact, the Premier spoke for exactly five minutes according to what I've been provided by way of timing. The Leader of the Official Opposition spoke for three minutes and 47 seconds, 47 seconds over the traditional allotted time but well worth it. Same with the Premier: bang on. The leader of the Liberal opposition spoke for three minutes and five seconds. The leader of the NDs spoke for one minute and 54 seconds. The Member for Calgary-Foothills spoke for a minute and 38 seconds. The Member for Lesser Slave Lake spoke for five minutes and 41 seconds. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo spoke for two minutes and 40 seconds. So I granted the appropriate amount of leeway, judging the mood of the House at the time. [some applause] Thank you.

Moving on to another subject, that being the subsequent order of business. Specifically, for those who are participating in Members' Statements, we have a different rule, which is why I enforced the speaking times found in Standing Order 7(4).

Unfortunately, I had to cut off two people at least because they ran over the time, more than two minutes. Members will know that these statements are part of the daily Routine and are not unique. Members know the rules on speaking times and also should know the anxiety caused when one member is seen to be allowed more time than another, which is in direct violation of the rules. I have no choice but to enforce those rules and to try and be as fair and as impartial in my rulings as possible when doing so.

I'm sorry to have taken up a couple of minutes of time from the Assembly on this point, but it was of great concern to me, as it was to some members who wrote to me, sought clarification, and, as I mentioned earlier, even complained. If there are any further questions on this or any other matter, I encourage you to please contact me privately if you wish. Many of you have been in, and we've spoken about numerous items over the past nearly two years. I would welcome you to come in again, and we can pursue the conversation even further.

Thank you for your kind attention and your adherence.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Rural Homelessness

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Homelessness anywhere is devastating, but today, colleagues, I want to specifically raise the issue of rural homelessness and encourage our government to ensure that the plight of the people outside of Edmonton and Calgary is also on the agenda. Little is known about rural homelessness, and unfortunately few resources are directed towards addressing this issue. Homelessness in rural Alberta directly contributes to the growing problem in larger centres. The youth emergency shelter society in Edmonton estimates that 40 per cent of their clients come from rural Alberta.

Homelessness in Alberta's rural and remote communities is far less visible than that in the larger cities. People cannot live on the street in a small rural community, and as the situation worsens due to a lack of services, these people often end up in larger centres. This creates a whole new set of problems that increase the likelihood of this individual becoming chronically homeless. This individual is removed from their family and their familiar surroundings and any possible support from their friends and family. They're generally not recognized as homeless until they've been in the city for at least six months and therefore cannot access the necessary supports and services. They become vulnerable to exploitation and the lure of criminal activity as they have no home, money, friends, or resources in the city.

In booming rural communities even the gainfully employed might be homeless as there are often limited housing options and those that are available may be prohibitively expensive. Assisting people to achieve stability in their own rural communities greatly increases their chances for personal success. Without a concerted effort to develop an evidence-based slate of solutions at the policy and program levels, our ability to respond to rural homelessness will be limited.

Let's not forget our often invisible rural homeless.

Government and Official Opposition Policies

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, the town of Sundre needs to dredge in strategic locations to prevent flood damage, but it's not happening. The community of Rocky Mountain House needs a new hospital and the need grows more acute every passing day, but it's not happening. This winter demand for natural gas has increased 10 per cent and over the five-year average has increased 13 per cent, yet the prices charged to consumers have increased 100 per cent. It makes no sense. Big industry continues to manipulate electricity prices, and when we ask questions, the minister gives completely unrelated answers.

We now have a new Premier and a new PC leadership race. What does this mean for Albertans? PC leadership contenders are ministers that can't or won't answer straight questions. They claim that an approval to build a sky palace didn't happen even though it did. Another claims that the worst environmental coal mine disaster in Canadian history is safe because mercury and lead might somehow magically dilute in water. They believe that borrowing is not debt and spending over and above revenue is not a deficit.

As the PC leadership candidates set out to repaint the Titanic, there's good news for Albertans. There is a government in waiting, a Wildrose government. [interjections] A Wildrose government will prioritize an infrastructure list so that communities can view their projects on a provincial priority basis. A Wildrose government will stop the price gouging in the utility markets and protect consumers. A Wildrose government will develop natural resources in a responsible manner while taking a zero-tolerance approach to irresponsible polluters. A Wildrose government will be responsible with our finances. We will care for our most vulnerable by investing in seniors' care, front-line workers, and front-line services. We will not tolerate discrimination on any level.

You see, Mr. Speaker, a Wildrose government will be responsible, honest, and caring. Thank you very much. [interjections] Albertans have an alternative. [interjections]

The Speaker: I hope that's not the signal of other things to come.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Before we start question period, please be reminded that you have 35 seconds maximum for the question and 35 seconds maximum for the answer and there are no preambles anticipated after question 5.

Let us start with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Consulting Contracts

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Wildrose uncovered yet more instances of taxpayer waste at Alberta Health Services. We found out that between April 2012 and September 2013 AHS handed out $250 million in outside consulting fees for things like fine arts consultation, public image surveys, executive coaching, and even government relations. It seems that AHS can't even get a meeting with the Health minister without hiring outside help. To the minister: wasn't Alberta Health Services created with the express purpose of eliminating this kind of bureaucratic waste?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member took the trouble, she would also have told you that the lion's share of that $250 million was spent on one-time costs that were directed at consolidating the former nine health regions. These areas include 13 systems related to IT. They include a human resources pay project that was directed at consolidating former payroll systems, reclassifying employee positions, and putting in place the foundation to run a 100,000 person organization, a $13 billion budget, and the largest health organization in this country.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. With all the high-priced executives, you'd assume that they had some of this talent internally and wouldn't have to contract it all out.

Last week we learned that Alberta lung cancer patients typically wait twice as long for surgery as opposed to lung cancer patients elsewhere in Canada. With this kind of waste in AHS, is it any wonder? Instead of dollars reaching the front lines to reduce wait times for patients, they're doled out to high-priced consultants to the tune of a quarter billion dollars in 18 months. To the minister: wouldn't $250 million be better spent treating patients rather than hiring consultants?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the type of uninformed generalization that the hon. member brings forward again and again. As I said, the lion's share of those dollars was related to one-time costs involving very specialized expertise, that brought together nine former health regions and consolidated them in one, achieving great administrative savings in the process. The other thing the hon. member ignores is that today the consulting services budget of Alberta Health Services, as of last December 31, is $48 million. Those one-time costs have been paid. These dollars are going down as a percentage of total expenditure, exactly the way . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the Health minister didn't hear that this was between 2012 and 2013. The consolidation happened six years ago.

Alberta Health Services has become the enduring symbol of this government's broken promises and wasteful spending. It was formed six years ago, as I mentioned, promising to streamline administration and focus spending on the front lines. The exact opposite has occurred. The bureaucracy has ballooned and so have the wait times. To the Health minister: will he immediately order a review of AHS consulting practices so that more dollars flow through to actually treat patients?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts is available to her or any member of this House at any time to ask those sorts of detailed questions. The fact of the matter is that today Alberta Health Services, by any definition, has the lowest administrative costs of any health delivery organization in the country. There is an Audit and Finance Committee that oversees audit activities within AHS. The Auditor General of Alberta or a member of his office regularly attends those meetings. There is tremendous oversight, and as I said, those one-time costs have been dealt with. Today's cost for the same services stands at $48 million.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleagues will have more questions for the Health minister later.

Government Communications Budget

Ms Smith: Last week we learned that the government directly employs 214 communications specialists who each earn more than $107,000 a year on average, for a total annual cost to taxpayers of $23 million. Almost every week we give examples of damaging spending cuts that impact real Albertans, cuts that could have been avoided if even some of this money for spin doctors was redirected to front-line services. To the Premier: is he sure that this $23 million spent on communications specialists is money well spent?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the hon. member is that we're always looking for ways to be more effective in terms of communication and more effective in terms of how we manage the public's resources. But I can also say to the hon. member that it is absolutely inappropriate to describe 214 communications people who help Albertans understand every day how they can get government services, how they can connect with government and get the information that they need – it's really interesting that the opposition has tweeted out that they have five communications officers to support 16 people, and we have 214 who support 27,000 people, who work for Albertans every day.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had a feeling that the Premier would defend this. After all, he oversaw Human Services with 25 communications staff, to say nothing of the 17 comms staff in Environment and the six comms staff in Tourism. By the way, those comms staff in Tourism make $122,000 a year on average. If these employees are such great value, then why does the government routinely spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in outside communications consultants across every department every year?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, on an annual basis we have, as I said, about 27,000 people, who work for Albertans, directly employed by government and many, many more who work in government services, boards, agencies, and commissions across the province. We have a budget of about $42 billion that we're in the process of discussing. Two hundred and fourteen people may be the right number; it may not be the right number. We're going through a results-based budgeting process, and we're looking at everything we're doing to make sure that we're doing the right thing for Albertans, we're doing it in the right way, and we're making the most efficient use and effective use of public resources.

The public wants to know what government is doing. They need to know the information, they need to know how to connect, and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Well, the Premier may not know whether it's the right number or the wrong number, but I can tell you that Albertans know that it is the wrong number.

Alberta Health employs an incredible 16 communications staff who are making $121,000 a year. Now, these 16 employees are over and above these scores of communications specialists who work for Alberta Health Services. Mr. Speaker, given that almost all communications are generated by Alberta Health Services, not the Health ministry, can the Health minister please explain what exactly these 16 people do?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know about the hon. member, but I happen to think that the people that oversee the expenditure of 45 per cent of the provincial budget have a pretty important role when it comes to explaining to Albertans how to access those programs and services.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is engaged in the usual tactic of trying to besmirch the reputation and devalue the work of public servants that work very hard both in AHS and my department and, in fact, all of government every day in order to make sure Albertans have the information they need to access health care. We stand by that, and Albertans stand by that.

The Speaker: Third main set of questions. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. If you missed it, the Health minister said that he actually doesn't know the answer to that question.

Ministers' Meetings with Industry

Ms Smith: The PC leadership race is under way, and the former Minister of Municipal Affairs has done the right thing and resigned from cabinet to pursue it. It is time to hear from his other ambitious colleagues. The Minister of Infrastructure must know that when he is meeting with construction companies who want to build hospitals and schools, it's unclear if he's doing that as the Minister of Infrastructure or as a PC leadership candidate fishing for donations to his campaign. Will the minister confirm today that he is not seeking the PC leadership, or will he resign from cabinet and stop using taxpayer dollars to campaign?

The Speaker: Well, let's hear from the Minister of Infrastructure. Again, a similar reminder to what I gave yesterday about dancing on the edge of issues that are an internal party position. [interjections] But let's hear from the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the hon. member is right about one thing. I have been meeting with members of industry, and in fact they've been pretty productive. On one hand, the opposition complains that they want the 50 new and 70 rehabilitated schools done on time – I'm working very hard with my colleagues here on this side of the House to make that happen – and then they turn around and complain about that happening. [interjections] We're building Alberta. We're having conversations with industry that are actually building those schools. We'll continue to do that. It's the right thing for Albertans. Everywhere I go, people say that they're very happy that we're working with industry. They want those schools. This government does. We're going to deliver.

The Speaker: Are you done? Calgary-Shaw, are you done?
Let us go on to the first supplemental, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Infrastructure isn't the only cabinet member who is in a potential conflict of interest. The Minister of Energy also hasn't ruled out running for the PC leadership. She must know that when she's meeting with executives from major energy companies, it's unclear if she's doing that as the Minister of Energy, ensuring responsible development of our resources, or as a Premier wannabe looking for corporate donations. [interjections] To the minister: will she confirm today that she's not seeking the PC leadership, or will she resign her position from cabinet and stop campaigning on taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Campbell: Point of order.

The Speaker: We have a point of order at 2:02, and now we have another one at 2:03, so we're just going to move on, hon. leader.

Let's go to Edmonton-Meadowlark for your first main set of questions. [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please have a seat, hon. Member for Airdrie, okay?

Mr. Anderson: I would like a point of clarification, and I would like it right now. [interjections]

The Speaker: I will give it to you later. Let us move on. [interjections]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a right to a point of clarification under our standing orders. I would like it first.

The Speaker: You do, and you will get your point of clarification a little later. Let's move on. Time is ticking, and you're wasting it as you speak. So please be seated, okay? [interjections] Please be seated.

Let us go on to Edmonton-Meadowlark, please.

Flood Recovery Communications Contracts

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Kudos to the Wildrose opposition for exposing a quarter billion dollars of wasteful contracts in AHS. We don't need PC spin doctors. The Liberals say that we need family doctors and nurses and real staff.

The gifting of contracts to Navigator, which the Premier said is due to their unique talents, is another prime example of how this PC government wastes taxpayer dollars. After the flood they had ample resources and talent to communicate with Albertans: a Minister of Municipal Affairs, three associate ministers, and 214 highly paid PAB staffers. To the Premier: what unique talents did this PC-insider firm possess that your PC government lacked?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, last June one of the most tragic environmental events in Alberta's history occurred. It was a massive flood that affected many, many thousands of Albertans and changed their lives. This government responded by bringing all hands on deck to ensure that we dealt with the issues that were raised, the concerns that people had, and the responses that they needed. That involved all the people we could muster within the government and those that we needed to hire to bring on in order to handle specific areas of interest and expertise. We do not apologize for responding to the needs of Albertans at a time of crisis in their lives.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the flood happened in June. Navigator's untendered quarter million dollar flood contract wasn't signed until October 28, and it expired on October 31. The only crisis that existed was the Premier's leadership review. The Premier says that this was good business for Albertans. I call it a PC porkfest. One of the very few and very basic tasks set out for Navigator was to submit weekly reports, that we asked the Premier to table two weeks ago, which he failed to do. To the Premier: do you even have these reports, and if so, will you table them today, or is this another Mar-Charlebois affair?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the very question demonstrates why this hon. member is not competent to run a government or anything else. The fact of the matter is – and he would know it if he had ever been in business. He would know that sometimes you have to get on with the job, and that's what this government did in June and July and August and September of last year to help Albertans overcome the most tragic time in their lives. [interjections] The paperwork came, but for him to suggest that the contract didn't start until the paperwork was done is to suggest that he doesn't know how business is done in this province by many, many people. [interjections] I once wrote a contract for a gas plant, and the plant was built . . .

The Speaker: Third and final question, hopefully without interruption.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this Premier was Health minister, a cabinet minister, and now Premier, and health care is still a mess. Yesterday the Premier said that I know nothing about business, that “sometimes you have to get on with the job and do the paperwork later.” But unlike the Premier I am a businessman, not a political lifer, and I can tell you that the PC government is doing business bass-ackwards. It’s no wonder that this government is broke, in debt, and cutting public services. In business you don’t start work without a contract. You don’t give the contract to the first guy that comes along. To the Premier: will you ask the Auditor General to investigate all untendered government contracts to ensure that Albertans are getting the best value for their money?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans deserve to know that that hon. member would stand around until all the paperwork was done before he lifted a finger to help people in need. This government will not do that. This government did not do that. This government rose to the occasion and helped Albertans in need.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Wasn’t that last set a joy, Mr. Speaker?

LGBTQ Student Supports

Mr. Mason: Last night the House voted down a motion that urged the government to introduce legislation requiring school boards to support gay-straight alliances as a means to combat bullying in school. While unanimous Wildrose opposition was predictable, twice as many PC MLAs opposed the motion as supported it: 22 to 11. Mr. Speaker, bullying should be stopped in all schools, not just some. Will the Premier agree to introduce legislation similar to Manitoba’s and Ontario’s in this session and make it a government bill?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the motion last night was a very important discussion to happen in this House, and I applaud the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing it forward. It epitomized one of the issues that we have all the time in this House, and that is competing values. While I think it’s extremely important that our children and youth be supported in having a safe, caring, and respectful environment in their schools, we also believe it’s very important that we have school boards who are tasked with the job under the School Act of making sure that that happens. Two competing values. Sometimes you have to resolve those values and find a way for that to happen.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. First sup.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is not a value to allow some school boards to permit bullying to take place. What if you’re a kid in a school where the school board decides to suppress gay-straight alliances and you get bullied as a result? How is that a value that this minister, this Premier, can defend?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it’s absolutely abundantly clear under the School Act and under the new Education Act that each school has to provide a safe, caring, and respectful environment for every child, and it’s the school board’s obligation to make sure that that happens. It is absolutely against the law for people to allow bullying or to promote bullying in our schools.

Mr. Mason: I seem to have united the right, Mr. Speaker.

The unanimous no vote by the Wildrose caucus shows that the lake of fire is still their resort of choice, but had the PC caucus voted differently, this important motion would have passed. Again to the Premier: will he introduce a government bill to support gay-straight alliances in any school where the students want one? Put your bills where your mouth is, Mr. Premier.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let’s be very, very clear. We support gay-straight alliances. They do fantastic work. [interjections] The question put to us last night was not: do you support GSAs? It was: do you want to legislate one in every school? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Education, would you like to complete your answer please?

Mr. J. Johnson: I don’t think I have anything further to add.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let’s move on, then. No more preambles now. Let’s go to Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite an annual management budget of over $400 million, AHS spends $460,000 every single day on additional consulting contracts. That’s 38 daily hip surgeries that could have been funded but weren’t, that’s 14 daily bypass surgeries, and that’s 42 daily knee replacements. Instead, the government chose to spend almost $30,000 on an AHS image and reputation strategy report. Well, Minister, I’m going to give you some free advice. If you want to improve the image and reputation of Alberta Health Services, fund surgery, not consultants. When are you going to start?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, just to be clear about the information that was obtained by the opposition, in an 18-month period Alberta Health Services spent $250 million on consulting services, the lion’s share of which were related to the establishment of AHS and the consolidation of systems in the nine former health regions. Today Alberta Health Services, as of December 31, is spending about $48 million on contracted services. Now, I would be the first to question the same contract that the hon. member just mentioned. As she knows, that contract was let by the former board, and the contract was subsequently cancelled.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I honestly do not know what to say. From ’12 to ’13, Minister, not six years ago. Given that AHS policy on consultant engagement lays out very specific terms and rules on how contracts are to be awarded, who they can be awarded to, and the tendering process that must be followed, can the minister assure this House that all $250 million worth of consulting contracts follow these rules and were above board in the eyes of Albertans? And I caution you, Minister, in how you answer this one.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the caution that is needed is to the hon. member and her colleagues about how they ask these questions because what they presented earlier today as a news release to now raise in this House as a question of adherence to established policies and procedures with respect to the awarding of contracts is a gross misuse of the information that was obtained under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This hon. member knows that there are appropriate places to go within the Legislative Assembly, and it's committees to ask these sorts of detailed questions. I challenge her to present those questions to the Public Accounts Committee, to have them answered in public . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: They don't answer the questions there either, Minister.

Given that last week we learned that outside of AHS this government already employs over 214 communications staff at an annual cost of $23 million, will the Minister of Health perhaps consider lending one of the 16 comms staff his ministry employs the next time AHS needs help spinning the government's bad news of the day?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what that question was intended to elicit, so I'll take the opportunity, as the hon. Premier did in answer to an earlier question, to remind the hon. member that those communications officers within the Public Affairs Bureau, that also work within our departments and within agencies like AHS, are there for the purpose of providing information to Albertans about how to access the programs and services that matter to them. If this hon. member doesn't think that those services provided during the flood in her constituency or in other times when Albertans were in need are worth while, then I challenge her to tell that to the members of the public service.

Road Ban Exemption for Grain Transportation

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, it is essential that Alberta farmers have efficient grain transport available to ensure that their products get to the buyers. The government announced an exemption on seasonal road bans for farmers hauling grain to elevators. To the Minister of Transportation. The road bans are in place for a reason. What kind of damage can be expected, and what is the plan for quick repairs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We all know that Alberta farmers have faced a series of challenges getting last year's crop to market, and we want to be able to help them to clear the backlog. It's still too early to know exactly what the impact of easing road ban restrictions for grain trucks will be, but my department is closely monitoring all routes and will use the results from the special permits and will repair any damages that occur. In addition, if a particular route is too susceptible to damage, we'll require alternative routes.

Ms Pastoor: To the same minister: what will the province's responsibility be towards the cost of this contemplated road damage, and are municipal roads involved?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, like I said, my department is monitoring these routes closely for damage, and we'll act quickly to make any necessary repairs. The cost of these repairs will come out of Alberta Transportation's highway and road maintenance budget, and it's important to note that we don't expect these costs to be significant.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. This will be to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Has it been established that by lifting this ban, it guarantees that all the grain to be moved actually will be moved?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there are very few guarantees in life, and I don't think I'd want to go so far as to guarantee that. But it is a really good piece of news, and I want to thank the Minister of Transportation for his role in this because it's very important that all parts of the system work together. We've been encouraging that kind of collaboration, and I think it was important that our government do our part. We've been lobbying hard the federal government for them to do their part, and they are reacting. We'll see how this all goes in terms of guarantees, but it's certainly going to help.

Government Spending

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we have government ministers flying around on government planes, using government money from the taxpayers to go to government announcements, using government-sponsored communications materials, going around and talking to stakeholders across the province on the taxpayer dime, and there are some people that are worried that doing so if they're also concurrently running a leadership race is a conflict of interest. I would like an answer to this question. Will the Minister of Infrastructure, who may be planning on running for leadership now resign and run his leadership . . .

Mr. Campbell: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you have a point of order. I assume it's on a similar vein to the questions that were asked earlier.

I believe the Minister of Infrastructure already clarified this matter once. I will allow one further clarification from the same minister, and that, I hope, will end it, okay? This is heading more and more into an internal party matter, which is what the leadership is all about. It's not about government business.

So answer the government part of that if you would, please, and proceed.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will assure Albertans that Albertans' work is going to get done. It's getting done now and will continue to get done. We've got 50 new schools to build, 70 to remodel. We're doing planning on a Calgary cancer hospital. We're looking at doing lots of other work. We're looking after 1,600 government buildings. That's the work that Albertans sent us here to do. I and all my colleagues are doing that work every day. The member may be distracted by other things, but I want Albertans to know that this government is actually focused on what's important to Albertans every day, and we're doing that work.

Mr. Anderson: I would note that the former Premier, who just stepped down, did the right thing and resigned. Maybe you shouldn't have stabbed her in the back.

Mr. Speaker, today we've learned that Alberta Health Services has handed out $250 million to high-brass consultants over the last 18 months. Included in that quarter of a billion dollars is $3.1 million for things like, quote, communications support, social media campaigns, image and reputation strategies, unquote. To the Minister of Health: why couldn't these things have been done by the dozens of people already employed by AHS?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I'm at a bit of a loss as to how this question follows on the previous question, but here we go. As I said earlier, the vast majority of the dollars spent were one-time expenses that were incurred to purchase very specific expertise that would allow the consolidation of IT systems, payroll systems, and other human resource systems within AHS. Those expenses are certainly reasonable given the scale of the consolidation that occurred, the fact that AHS is the fifth-largest employer in the country, and the fact that it is an organization that spends $13 billion of the $42 billion budget of this province.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that data also show that more than $600,000 was handed out for executive coaching, which is defined as, quote, stimulation of the client's self-discovery by posing powerful questions that take the form of thought experiments, unquote, Minister, can you explain why taxpayers are paying 600 grand to help high-priced health executives find themselves?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have a similar question about that contract. As the hon. member knows, a number of these contracts were overseen by a previous board at AHS. I don't know the answer to his specific question. What I do know, Mr. Speaker, is that we've taken the steps so that those sorts of contracts will not be seen again in the future. If he has detailed questions about specific contracts, I encourage him to raise them at the appropriate time in Public Accounts.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Caribou Conservation

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Within Whitecourt-Ste. Anne forest companies have raised issues regarding caribou population in my area. They are currently listed as threatened under the Canada Wildlife Act. Can the minister explain what action he's taking to protect caribou herds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the member for the question. This is a very important issue to that member; it's a very important issue in my riding of West Yellowhead. We believe that caribou conservation and human activities can occur on the same lands. We're working with stakeholders to create action and range plans to help sustain the caribou populations. So we have 15 range plans that will be developed by the end of 2015, which will protect our herds and also adhere to the federal legislation, so Little Smoky by early 2014, Cold Lake by 2014, northeast caribou range by 2014, and the northwest caribou range by the end of 2015.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the issue does not only impact Alberta, what's the federal government doing to support our provincial efforts right here at home?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I had the chance to talk to the federal minister about caribou and about some of the plans that our department is looking at to make sure that our herds are preserved. I can say to you that the federal government is entering into a captive breeding plan for both Jasper and Banff national parks. We're looking at that option, but I do think that we can partner with the federal government to make sure that we have a good program in place. I am concerned that we make sure that the SARA legislation is looked at and that we're resolving problems at home.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The aboriginal community, especially the community in my constituency, can help with this matter. Are they going to be involved in any way in any actions moving forward to help resolve this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again a very important question. I've had very good dialogue with the First Nations and Métis communities across the north, and I feel that there is a real place for First Nations people to be involved in the stewardship of these herds. In my own riding in Grande Cache we have what's called the caribou cowboy program in place, using young people and mentoring them with elders. The program has now been running for two years; it's been federally funded. We've seen great results as far as keeping animals off roadways and reducing poaching and also doing research through the Foothills Research Institute so that we can continue to do this valuable work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Legal Aid Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It is nonsensical to claim, as the minister does, that there is no relationship between the government of Alberta and the Legal Aid Society. The society is enacted by the government and receives the majority of its funding from this government. So to the Minister of Justice: when will the minister stop blaming his federal Conservative cousins for the state of Alberta's Legal Aid Society and get on with it? It's his file. Man up.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Justice department increased funding to Legal Aid last year and will do so again next year. Eighty-two per cent of all funding to Legal Aid comes from our government. This member needs to join with us in asking the federal government, which I personally do support, to give us more money for legal aid. Less than 18 per cent comes from the federal government. It's time for them to improve access to justice like we are doing as a government.

Ms Blakeman: It's not their file.

Back to the same minister: at what point does the minister consider things are serious enough that he will be moved to some action other than blaming the feds? Is it the incarceration of the poor, the mentally ill, and those people on the margins of society?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, last year we gave an injection of $7 million more to Legal Aid. Alberta Justice is committed to access to justice for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. So far all we've seen is this minister's agreement with the voluntary employee separation program for legal aid and a request from him to cut services. Meanwhile, he gets all-expense-paid trips to FPT meetings to complain about federal funding. When is the minister going to actually take responsibility for this, which is his file, and do something?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the last FPT meeting that we had was in Whitehorse in November. It was not a vacation, and it wasn't a sunny destination. All 10 provinces, the entire governments in Canada, passed a resolution asking the federal government to step up to the plate because legal aid is a joint responsibility between the provinces and the federal government. I sincerely appreciate this member's concern.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Attorney General's answers on this question simply are not good enough. Section 7 of the Charter protects life, liberty, and security of the person. The courts have made it clear that leaving someone without legal representation when they are at risk of incarceration and when the case is complex violates both sections 7 and 11 of the Charter. Now that Legal Aid has decided that not even those who receive AISH due to mental incapacity qualify for help, Alberta's rules on their face violate the Charter. To the Attorney General: why are you allowing your government's disinterest in equal access to justice to violate the life, the liberty . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe it's incumbent upon any of us to give a legal opinion in this Assembly, but I'll remind this member again that 82 per cent of the funding of legal aid comes from the province. That is $58.8 million. Alberta Justice believes in access to justice for all Albertans, and we are living up to our responsibilities.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday we read about a man who is autistic and receives AISH because it's been determined that he did not have the ability to hold down a job, any job, and given that any reasonable person would then conclude that such a person cannot represent themselves in the courts, why won't this Justice minister act to protect the life, the liberty, and the security of this and other disabled Albertans?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Justice has acted and will continue to act in the interests of all Albertans and access to justice. In 2005 our contribution to legal aid: $20.2 million. This year: $58.8 million, over 100 per cent increase. The numbers don't lie, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the number of people not getting help is growing.

To the Attorney General: given that he knows full well that provinces are constitutionally responsible for the administration of justice and that the negligence of his federal friends is simply not an excuse for his own government's intentional neglect, will the minister at least apologize to Albertans for his complete failure to protect the most fundamental and basic legal rights of an ever-growing number of vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I believe that could be a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j). [interjections]

Our intent is to support all Albertans, to support access to justice for all Albertans, and that is what we are doing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, did I hear you enunciate a point of order as well?

Mr. Denis: That was just in my response, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I could hardly hear it, so I'm just looking for clarification.

Mr. Denis: Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are we ready to move on?

Let us go on, then. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Pembina Institute Funding

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's energy sector is the economic engine of Alberta and Canada, and we need major pipeline projects to get our oil to market, which is why I was surprised to learn that this government is currently funding political groups that are working to stop the Keystone XL, Northern Gateway, and the Energy East pipelines from getting approved. To the Minister of Energy: should taxpayers be funding antipipeline groups like the Pembina Institute that want to put our energy future at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question, and part of the answer is that the funds that have been going to the Pembina Institute are to do research with regard to carbon capture and storage, also alternative renewable frameworks. Quite frankly, the energy companies also fund the Pembina Institute.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that, on one hand, this government was dealt a major blow last year when the courts ruled against its decision to ban the Pembina Institute from a public hearing and given that, on the other hand, the Pembina received over half a million dollars from various government departments, can the minister explain to taxpayers what is going on?

Mrs. McQueen: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. In this government, this Progressive Conservative government, we like to hear from voices all across the province and from everyone. We are open to hearing from the Pembina Institute with regard to carbon capture and storage, the alternative and renewable energy framework. [interjections] We're not going to apologize for getting input from many different places, whether it be the Calgary university, the University of Alberta, or the many different institutions that provide us with very good input into policy.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, taxpayers are asking and are confused. We see the government giving money to Pembina when they like what Pembina says on one issue and then trying to ban Pembina from hearings when they don't like what it says on another issue. Will the minister agree that this government has no business funding any activist organizations?

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, that particular member obviously has a problem with freedom of speech. [interjections] But let me say this. When we have different groups that can provide us with policy input from all spectrums, we look to that, and we're going to continue to do that. We're not going to apologize for that because we end up with better policies when we get to hear from a broad spectrum of Albertans.

The Speaker: Shall we continue with question period? Okay.
Let's go Edmonton-McClung, followed by Little Bow.

Public Service Pension Plans

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the Ministry of Finance and Treasury Board recently announced changes to four Alberta public-sector plans: the public service pension plan, PSPP; the management employees pension plan, MEPP; the local authorities pension plan, LAPP; and the special forces pension plan, SFPP. Many in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung are concerned with these changes. To the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board: how can this change possibly benefit Alberta's economic future and public-sector employees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The changes that have been announced reflect the government's commitment to preserve defined benefit plans and also to get them on a sustainable path so that they're able to keep the promises that have been made both to the current and the future plan holders. We're enacting a contribution rate cap as well to make sure that the plans are affordable both to the taxpayer and to the plan members. Some of these plans cost up to 25 per cent of salaries. That's among the highest rates in Canada. We're planning on giving plan managers better tools to manage their plan.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Alberta's public-sector pension plan is facing unfunded liabilities of $7.4 billion, what is your ministry's plan to solve this challenge?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, the current unfunded liabilities will be paid down over a period of 12 years. What the changes will do is reduce risk by targeting the cost-of-living increases so that they're paid out when the plans are financially able to do so and by reducing the early retirement subsidies to make the plans more affordable. The government is committed to living within its means, and the changes we're making mean that the public-sector pension plans will be doing exactly the same.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Xiao: Sure, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will your ministry reduce the risk of unfunded liabilities in the future?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, the changes will help reduce risk and make the plans affordable, as I mentioned, for plan members and for taxpayers. To ensure that the changes have a chance to take effect, we're going to have to put a moratorium on benefit improvements until 2021. This allows the plans to get back on track financially before handing over sponsorship of the plans to employers and labour groups. Those that bear the risks should have the responsibility for how they're governed, and it's why the plans will be jointly sponsored as early as 2016.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Bridge Maintenance and Repair

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March I raised very serious concerns about this government's downloading of bridge files, the cost of maintenance, to the municipalities. The minister confirmed his answer, and it was to "save some money." Some of these bridges are between 50 and 75 years old, and the cost of the repairs is well beyond the allotted MSI fund grants. To the Minister of Transportation: is poor fiscal management the reason this government is passing the buck when it comes to maintaining rural Alberta bridges?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, in tough times we have to make some tough choices over here, but I can assure the member that every rural municipality I've met with in the last four months asked me the same question. Yes, while we zero funded the STIP program in Budget 2013, we increased the basic transportation grant by $51 million. This money allows the municipalities to spend the money where they see their own priorities fitting.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are 172 bridges located in the MD of Taber, with a replacement value of about $100 million, and given that in 25 years an average of $2 million a year to replace the infrastructure will only cover half of it just for this one municipality, what is this government's plan to ensure that municipalities have the necessary funding in proper place to return to rural bridges in rural Alberta? Minister of Municipal Affairs, any thoughts on that?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we find municipalities extremely important partners in maintaining infrastructure, providing for growth in this province, and this year this government, through Municipal Affairs, will give a combined $1.24 billion in basic municipal transportation grants and MSI in support of that infrastructure, which can go to bridges, to roads, to other infrastructure that's absolutely necessary for continuing to grow our communities.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, they're just downloading the funds back to the municipalities. It's about as plain as it can be.

Who's going to deal with this? The new Premier, by chance? Anybody over there?

The Speaker: The Municipal Affairs minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to work with this group of people because I know everybody on this side of the floor and in these benches is committed to working with our municipalities. They're doing it each and every day. Whether that's helping to repair flood damage, to take care of erosion control so that we can protect infrastructure, or whether it's helping municipalities build brand new infrastructure, schools, and other things, every day we work with municipalities to make sure that we have strong communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Pharmaceutical Information Network

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To continue my inquiries into information and data management programs' costs and outcomes in this province such as the $83 million for API 3, the $372 million for AFFRCS, my attention turns to health. The Alberta pharmaceutical information network, e-prescribe, has been going on for 15 years, the implementation plagued by multiple contractors, performance quality and adoption issues. To the Minister of Health: when will this project be completed, delivering on the outcomes intended?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly not agree with the hon. member that the pharmaceutical information network is not a success. It is, in fact, one of the biggest success stories in our health care system. This series of projects began, in fact, in 2009, specifically the e-prescribe product, with the objective of converting from paper to electronic prescriptions for all Alberta pharmacists. Earlier versions of the PIN project began in 2007, notably the V3, and that project . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Young: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the project has had a sequence of versions or multiple time frame extensions, can the minister identify the financial impact and the project cost over time?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the PIN project began, as I said, a number of years ago with the goal of moving Alberta from paper to electronic prescriptions. In fact, today a number of initiatives within that project have been successfully completed and implemented across the province. The PIN project is working today with pharmacists on ways to further automate their practice, to connect them in their collaboration with physicians and other providers, working as part of a team. We would expect that this project will continue well into the future with other refinements that connect what goes on in a pharmacy with Alberta Netcare and with the activity . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final sup.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the primary outcome of this information technology project has been to improve cost efficiency and patient safety, how will these outcomes be measured to justify the significant albeit undisclosed expenditure?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. The PIN project and all of the other information technology projects that we undertake in Health are not focused on the issue of saving money. They are focused on improving patient outcomes, and most importantly they are focused on improving the experience of our constituents as they interact with the health care system. Medication data is vitally important both in dispensing medication in the pharmacy environment and in guiding the work of nurse practitioners and physicians and other health professionals that work together as part of a team. So the short answer to the hon. member's question is that we certainly will not be measuring this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-East.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Contract

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I asked the Minister of Transportation about the construction schedule of the southwest Calgary ring road, and I thank him for the clarifying letter he sent. Unfortunately, it appears that all the interchanges required to finish the south leg of the road along highway 22X are going to be packaged into a second and larger P3 project, and this will, I quote, provide the most value to Albertans. The sheer size of this massive P3 project will inevitably limit the number of vendors that could even compete for the job. Can the minister explain how limiting the number of proposals will translate into higher value for Albertans?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assume the question was about P3s. We do plan on separating that into two different projects and two different P3 projects because we've done all of our ring road projects so far on P3s. They have to show value for dollars, or we don't accept the contract. We've saved $2.5 billion using P3 contracts to build the ring roads.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that traffic counts justify action now rather than waiting for the completion of the land transfer agreement and given that smaller projects will attract a more competitive bidding process, providing much more value to taxpayers regardless of if it's another P3, will the minister agree to tender a separate request for proposal for only the south leg along highway 22X?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if I really follow that, but to do a project efficiently, it's better to do it in one project as little pieces along the way. Until we're assured of the land transfer, we wouldn't want to invest any dollars and then not have the deal go through.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What specific evidence does the minister have that suggests taxpayers will receive greater value by completing the final 26-kilometre stretch of this road, all the way from Glenmore Trail down to Macleod Trail in the south, as one project as opposed to two, and will he make the evidence public by tabling it here in this House?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's confusing. I just said that we would do it in two projects, so I'm not sure what he was saying there. We've had great success with P3 projects on the ring roads, and sometimes it's better not to have them too big at one time. That's why we split it into two different projects. One piece of that project is totally in the Tsuu T'ina Nation land, and the other piece is in land that we've already acquired title to, so we could start that project sooner, as soon as we are confident we received that land.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the time for question period has now elapsed. Could we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to one introduction?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it's an absolute honour today to rise and inform the House that we're joined in the members' gallery by a very passionate advocate for children with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, a member of my constituency from the town of High Level. Not only does she serve as a volunteer on the northwest fetal alcohol spectrum disorder network, but she has literally opened her home to care for hundreds of children, opened her heart as well for their care and actually adopted many, many children. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Mrs. Sonya Schmidt, who I believe is in the gallery up there. I would ask members to give her the warm welcome and the thanks of this province.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we will resume with Members' Statements, starting with Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Writing-on-Stone Park Internship Program

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "When do we get there? When do we get there?" That's what kids say when they are excited about getting to places they know they're going to love. That's what the Writing-on-Stone provincial park staff want of their innovative program in southern Alberta. So what's the big deal? Well, it connects visitors to a unique First Nations cultural experience.

Writing-on-Stone provincial park, also known as Áísínai'pi in Blackfoot – a direct translation meaning "it is pictured" – is an important place for First Nations people, who have visited the spiritually significant landscape for thousands of years. In the summer of 2013 two Blackfoot interns were hired at the park to share their culture and stories with visitors and interacted with more than 4,000 visitors over the summer.

The First Nations interpretation internship program recently won gold in the federal-provincial-territorial category at the Institute of Public Administration of Canada/Deloitte public-sector leadership awards in February, as the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation said, an award that recognizes organizations that have demonstrated outstanding leadership by taking bold steps to improve Canada through advancements in public policy and management.

Congratulations to the staff who joined us here today and were introduced by the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. I ask them all to stand again. Congratulations to Juanita Tallman, First Nations interpretation internship supervisor; Suzanne Lodermeier, visitor centre co-ordinator; and, of course, Aaron Domes, head of visitor services, on the success of this program. Thank you for your commitment to preserving our aboriginal cultural heritage and making Writing-on-Stone provincial park a place people can't wait to get to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Open Postsecondary Educational Resources

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to call attention to an announcement made this morning that will directly benefit Alberta postsecondary students. In the last several days and weeks many of us have heard from these students. The Alberta Students' Executive Council held its lobby week with government and opposition members last month, and this week the Council of Alberta University Students also met with many of us to discuss their concerns. That's why our government is pleased today to announce the open educational resources initiative, a new approach to examining educational materials available in our universities, colleges, and technical institutes.

Students have told us they are concerned with the cost of education, and we know that textbooks and other related materials are part of that. Mr. Speaker, this new initiative will bring together leading experts to examine electronic resources, including, potentially, open-source textbooks and e-textbooks, and how our government can work with the institutions to get them into our classrooms. Being able to access their textbooks electronically will mean lower costs for students. There's also the potential to include new teaching tools such as videos and other multimedia products.

Earlier this year student groups in Alberta came together to release Ignite: Ideas for Post-Secondary Education. In their report students called on the government to examine open educational resources, and I'm proud to say that our government is meeting their concerns. This process will be headed by a committee of experts which is already co-chaired by a senior academic leader from Olds College and an international expert professor from Athabasca University. Students and other experts will be added to this committee soon.

Mr. Speaker, our government believes in putting students first in Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Sonshine Emergency Shelter

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My statement today will make you uncomfortable, and it should. It's about some of the most vulnerable children and women in our province. I'm going to tell you about the children and mothers who reside at Sonshine Centre, a second-stage women's shelter in Calgary-Currie. The women and their children at Sonshine are there because they are at high risk of serious physical harm or fatality.

Domestic violence is the leading cause of homicide in Calgary, approximately 25 per cent. It costs our city $1.7 million to respond to a single homicide. Now consider this. Sonshine Centre's annual budget is $1.4 million. That $1.4 million provides a safe home to approximately 45 families who are at risk for fatality and serious injury. They can stay for up to a year and rebuild their lives. In this context, preventing a single case of domestic homicide has not only far-reaching financial implications, but more importantly the unlimited possibilities of mitigating the effects on our children will have a direct impact on social costs, high school dropout rates, teenage pregnancy, school failure, and psychological disorders.

Ninety-five per cent of Sonshine's families typically arrive from 21-day emergency shelters. It is important to know that emergency shelters are funded by our government whereas Sonshine is privately funded, like all but two second-stage shelters in Alberta. Unfortunately, this means that when a housing unit becomes available, up to 40 families will be on the list to occupy that one space.

Sonshine has recently developed a children's centre. It is Canada's first licensed and accredited child care centre that offers therapeutic programming and child development strategies and interventions that aim to end the intergenerational cycle of violence in families.

Sylvan Lake Kraft Hockeyville 2014 Award

Mrs. Towle: In 1972 Team Canada beat Russia with Henderson's history-making goal, and 1972 was also the year that Sylvan Lake opened its hockey arena, affectionately known as the Barn. Fast-forward 40 years, and on January 14, 2014, shortly after midnight the Barn's 40-year-old roof collapsed due to heavy snowfall.

News of the Sylvan Lake arena's roof collapse spread across Canada. Kevin Putnam, a Sylvan Lake resident living in Whitehorse, nominated Sylvan Lake for Kraft Hockeyville 2014. Lakers, local communities, and supporters rallied. The town of Bentley's mayor pledged support. The Innisfail Eagles, the town of Innisfail, and the Red Deer Rebels quickly joined in. Community leaders and volunteers took action. Mayor Sean McIntyre and our town council opened the schools and held voting rallies for everyone to support the arena. The community came together. The pride was clear.

On March 8 the top 16 were announced. E-mails of support came from all over Canada. The community grew louder and stronger. On March 22 300 Lakers attended the community centre reveal party, and during the Battle of Alberta hockey game Sylvan Lake was in the top two, with over 1.5 million votes. More votes came in from all over the world: Yukon, Ontario, even from Sylvan Lake residents wintering in Costa Rica, and, of course, Kevin and his crew from Whitehorse. April 5: anticipation, excitement, and the Boom Chucka Boys revved up the crowd as we waited for the announcement. Lakers held their breath. Then loud cheers and tears as Sylvan Lake, with over 5 million votes, became the first western Canada winner of Kraft Hockeyville. Mr. Speaker, this brought over a hundred thousand dollars to the community and a pretty cool hockey game to a small central Alberta town.

Tragedy brings communities together, tragedy can triumph, and Sylvan Lake is a clear example of that. I am proud to be an Albertan, but I'm even prouder to share this experience with my friends and neighbours in Sylvan Lake. On behalf of all Lakers, thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I have 50 more of the over 4,000 postcards our office has received to restore consistent and reliable funding for postsecondary education in Alberta. These were collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association of the University of Alberta. I have the copies here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a publication from the Stettler Independent from Mr. Will Verboven, commenting that Alberta is the only province in Canada that does not extend benefits to farm workers – that is, occupational health and safety and WCB – and on the commitment under Premier Redford to a mandatory extension of those benefits during her term.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table the requisite number of copies of the public responses I received via e-mail, Facebook, Twitter, and telephone in response to my request for information and input regarding Motion 504, which is coming up next week, in regard to increasing penalties and fines to deter excessive speeding and dangerous driving.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, I believe you have two tablings.

Mr. Webber: I do, Mr. Speaker, yes. The first is a collection of three articles regarding the horrific taping of a cat's and a dog's muzzles that happened in Calgary in January of this year. The one article, from the CBC, and the two from the Calgary Herald describe the disturbing details of this incredible cruelty. I would like to table the requisite number of copies.

As well, I am tabling five copies of the Alberta Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals' core values and core beliefs, in which they indicate that they will continue to push for improvements and ongoing review of the animal welfare legislation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure, followed by Little Bow.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the 2009-2012 capital plan and the 2010-2013 capital plan, both of which include the federal building.

I also table the requisite number of copies of the personal web page of the Member for Airdrie. He makes it clear on his page that he was on the Treasury Board during those years. [interjection]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite copies of an e-mail I received from Tom Filgas from Lethbridge just going on about how he's not happy about what goes on in the province. He thinks that we should have royalty rates of up to 25 per cent for the oil sands. I'm just passing that forward.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Little Bow – I'm so sorry. Hon. Member for Airdrie, please. [interjection] Hon. Member for Airdrie, please. That's enough. You're just chattering across the bow like there's no end to it. That's enough. If you have a point of order, stand and raise a point of order. Otherwise, zip it up, please.

Calgary – sorry. Little Bow, did you want to finish your tabling, please?

Mr. Donovan: Well, it looks like I'm going to take over Calgary sometime with "Little Bow" and "Calgary" all the time.

I'm just passing that on. I told him I'd table them last fall. I forgot, so I'm making sure I don't forget this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe we are now going to proceed with points of order. I think we have at least three, plus a clarification which I shall offer after the points of order.

Let's go with the first point of order, which I believe was the Government House Leader at 2:02 p.m. Your point of order and citation, please.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you don't mind, I wouldn't mind dealing with both of the points of order at the same time, at 2:02 and 2:03. They're both relevant as the same point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. member, there were actually three that you raised: one at 2:02, one at 2:03, and, I believe, one at 2:18. I think they were all similarly related. They were all more or less on the same topic.

Mr. Campbell: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I'll cite 23(h) and (i) in the standing orders. The Leader of the Official Opposition in her questioning to the Minister of Infrastructure, I believe, was quite deliberate in her attempts to make allegations against another member. I would suggest that the leader actually impugned the integrity of the minister in her questioning, and I would suggest that she also brought the Minister of Energy into her preambles, saying, you know, that the Minister of Energy was also using government business to put forward her bid for the leadership. I look at (h), and I also look at (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member."

I'd also look at Beauchesne 409(7) and (8) on page 121. "A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." Section (8) says, "A question that has previously been answered ought not to be asked again."

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition asked a question. She asked it a second time. You did not allow her to ask it a third time. Again, her motives, I think, were very clear on this. You have made it very clear in this House that – and you've given her, I think, very good leeway in the sense that the opposition has some leeway in asking the questions, but the questions should be about policy. There's no doubt that the questions and the statements from the Leader of the Official Opposition were not about policy. They were about the leadership race. Again, there are no policies within this House that dictate what cabinet ministers should do in running for the leadership race, but I can say that there are policies within cabinet, within the PC Party.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Official Opposition remove her remarks and apologize to the two ministers involved.

The Speaker: Is anybody responding?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most absurd points of order that has ever been raised in this House. [interjections] I know there are some prospective leadership candidates yelling on the other side. I note that.

This is the exact same line of questioning – the exact same line of questioning – that was put forward in 2011 regarding the leadership aspirations of several cabinet ministers that were out in the media saying that they were thinking of running for leader and so forth. At that time Speaker Kowalski did not breathe one word of exception, one word that it was inappropriate because, in fact, it is appropriate. It's entirely appropriate for several reasons.

First off, there were no allegations against the member. The question was very clear. I have the question in front of me. You will note it in the Blues as such:

The Minister of Infrastructure must know that when he is meeting with construction companies who want to build hospitals and schools, it [can be] unclear if he's doing [so] as the Minister of Infrastructure or as a PC leadership candidate fishing for donations to his campaign. Will the minister confirm today that he is not seeking the PC leadership, or will he resign from cabinet and stop [campaigning on taxpayer dollars]?

It's very clearly a question. It very clearly involves government policy and spending of monies and so forth and deals with a conflict of interest, which we deal with all the time in question period and talk about with regard to government officials, elected and unelected. In absolutely every House in the Westminster system that's how it's done. It's a regular course of business: the ethics of government, conflicts of interest, making sure that there aren't any, making sure that people are accountable if there are. That's our job. It's certainly the job of the Official Opposition leader, and it's our job as opposition.

The second question that he referred to was:

She must know . . .

Speaking of the Minister of Energy.

. . . that when she's meeting with executives from major energy companies, it's unclear if she is doing [so] as the Minister of Energy, ensuring [the] responsible development of our resources, or as a Premier wannabe looking for corporate donations [for her campaign] . . . Will [the minister] confirm today that she's not seeking the PC leadership, or will she resign . . . from cabinet [in order to] stop campaigning on taxpayer dollars?

Now, Mr. Speaker, again, just as with the first one, the Official Opposition leader is permitted under our rules to ask if a minister is in a conflict of interest. And in this case there are a lot of people out there that would say, just as they did in 2011, that there is a fine line that we're worried that cabinet ministers might cross by possibly using resources, obviously government resources, with their kilometres allowance and so forth, et cetera, et cetera, and their access and so forth, and possibly pass that grey zone and start campaigning while on government business. That is definitely a possibility.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that we need to make sure we understand that in this House we give specifically the Official Opposition leader but certainly all members a very clear right of free speech in order to ask questions of the government regarding their dealings. This is not an internal party matter. An internal party matter, of course, would deal with asking questions about the president of the PC Party or a fundraiser campaign that they did or something like that. Those are internal party matters.

As the House leader just said – and this is absolutely critical because he said it just now when he was arguing this point of order. He said that we have rules and policies governing this in the cabinet as well as the PC Party. He just said it in his arguments. So we have every right on this side to discuss whether those regulations are there, if they're being followed, and so forth, and if there's a conflict of interest. There is no point of order, and I don't see any reason why the Official Opposition leader should be withdrawing her remarks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to use the citations of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. I would like to start by referencing the criteria that are available to us on 503 and 504, which the Speaker has often referenced when cautioning us on questions that involve any kind of a political slant. I would offer that on 503 it talks about how a question should not address “any other presumed functions, such as party or regional political responsibilities,” and on 504 it talks about questions concerning “internal party matters, or party or election” – one presumes they’re party elections – “expenses.”

Now, that prohibition against discussing internal party business is matched, of course, by what we find on page 93, which are the protections around freedom of speech. So it’s always a balance between the freedom of speech that we enjoy in this House, but the balance of it is to not use it to abuse other members in the House.

We, particularly in the opposition, need the protection of freedom of speech so that we can ask the hard questions, sometimes the uncomfortable questions, and call the government members to account. There is nothing in the House of Commons procedures booklet – and I’ll reference 93 – that prohibits us from asking questions on conflict of interest, as my colleague from Airdrie mentioned. I will quote for you. “Though this is often criticized, the freedom to make allegations which the Member genuinely believes at the time to be true, or at least worthy of investigation, is fundamental.” Further, it says, “There would be no freedom of speech if everything had to be proven true before it were uttered.”

We are in a situation currently which I believe is also a difficulty that is caused for the trust of all of the members in this House. Now, whether any member is seen as deliberately or by omission or even perceived to be using the resources of the LAO or of the government, that puts a blight on all of us. The public doesn’t tend to interpret particular names. They just say that all politicians are doing this. So it matters to all of us that we are able to track this down and get to the bottom of it.

In fact, that’s pretty well understood. I’ll reference the LAO, that goes to great lengths to curb any MLA activity before and during an election to make sure that they’re not making use of any kind of government or LAO resources. Websites are shut down, financial books are taken away, that sort of thing. Clearly, the government understands that there can be a relationship between those two things.

What we are dealing with right now is a case of timing and personal choice, which is uncertain, and that is making it difficult for all of us in this House. The solution, in my humble opinion, is fairly simple. Take a week’s leave as a minister if you are considering this – make the consideration, come back, and do whatever you’re going to do – or resign your seat and go off and do what you’re going to do or state that you’re not going to run for it. But at this point, Mr. Speaker, we are in a period of questioning, with uncertain timing, and all of us want to make sure that no member is disparaged unfairly, nor do we want to see someone that is using those resources when they shouldn’t be.

So 504 and 503 are really restricting us from asking questions about internal party business. Is somebody running for a table officer position, or who’s going to be the president of the party? You know, that is none of the business of what we’re doing here. But it is very much the business of what we are doing here if we are seeing a situation that could be misconstrued or misunderstood or deliberately put out there that a member is using or abusing government or LAO resources for a particular party function.

I believe that if you look at 503 and 504 and you look at it in conjunction with 93, I would argue that the questions that were asked by the members of the Official Opposition were very much in order. It would help us all if the hon. members on the other side would make their declarations in favour of or make it clear they’re not going to do this because this uncertain timing is creating the grief that we are all experiencing here.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Government House Leader very briefly.

Mr. Campbell: I just want to clarify some comments. I sometimes don’t say the right thing as I’m saying it. It’s not a policy of cabinet that you step down as a minister; it’s been the policy of Premiers that have asked their cabinet ministers to step down if they are going to run. When I was here under Premier Stelmach, he made that request of cabinet, and I know that Minister Hancock has made the same request.

Mr. Speaker, we will expect all of our members on this side of the House, especially our cabinet ministers, to do the right thing if they decide to make that choice. I will make it quite clear that there is no race right now. Nobody has declared. Right now we’re in the process of doing government business, and probably the most important piece of government business is passing the budget.

The Speaker: Briefly, Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, briefly. Just in response, I appreciate the clarification. However, again he just referred to the policy of past Premiers and actually referred to Mr. Stelmach. Of course, we saw what happened with the former Premier, that just resigned. She actually followed that advice and did resign on the Premier’s request because she was pursuing it.

The Premier, of course, is the head of the governing party in our system, the head of the executive. It is very much in order to determine whether those policies protect against conflict of interest and indeed whether ministers are following those policies to protect against conflict of interest. Again, I do believe the House leader is proving that point in some ways more effectively than myself.

The Speaker: Is that it? Okay. Thank you.

I gather we’re dealing with all three points of order from the Government House Leader sort of in one here. I listened as attentively as I could, and I took notes as fast as I could to what you were all saying, and I have the benefit of the Blues. The Government House Leader rose three times today on a point of order and summed it all up under 23(h), (i), and possibly obliquely (j). In any event 23 (h) and (i). Let me just remind you of what Standing Order 23 says. Here’s what it says:

23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker’s opinion, that Member . . .

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

In fact, the Government House Leader rose at that point to call attention of the Speaker to a point of order. Three times. What gave rise to that on one occasion was the Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition directing a question to the Minister of Infrastructure in which she basically suggested he might be “fishing for donations to his campaign.” She then went on to possibly suggest that he “stop using taxpayer dollars to campaign.” In her supplemental she went on to say about the Minister of Infrastructure that he was possibly “in a potential conflict of interest.” Then she went on to say, “as a Premier wannabe looking for corporate donations,” which she directed again to the Minister of Infrastructure. Finally, in reference to the Minister of Infrastructure she suggested that he should “stop campaigning on taxpayer dollars.”

Now, that’s one, two, three, four – at least four. In fact, somewhere in here she also suggested that he is in “a potential conflict of interest.” So that’s what the Blues are telling us.

Now, this is actually a very serious matter, hon. members, because what we have here are allegations by one hon. member against another member, alleging some of the improprieties that I just enunciated. It should be remembered that in this House we have very specific rules about these kinds of statements not being stated because they do in fact tend to advance false or unavowed motives against another member. In fact, such allegations are often interpreted and, in this case, could easily be interpreted as besmirching the reputation of another member. You could also argue that such comments are disparaging to the personal character of another member. You could also conclude that it was somewhat of a personal attack on another member, and I could go on and on.

In short, you cannot make these kind of allegations in this House. If you have a serious allegation, hon. members, against another member, there are processes in place that you can avail yourself of. I won’t take up your time to review them all for you now. I’ve done it many times before. I would ask you and I would caution you to be very careful of the language you use in this House.

I’m well aware that we’re entering a very sensitive time in provincial politics, and that’s why we like to leave party matters outside the doors. But if you have something that suggests that there is some wrongdoing or, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre stated, that resources given to you by taxpayers through the LAO or through a cabinet ministry are possibly being used inappropriately, there are mechanisms to deal with that, and there are very harsh consequences if that in fact is proven to be the case. But to simply stand here and allege these things, I find offensive and I find inappropriate. I would therefore ask that the leader of the loyal opposition refrain from using that particular train of thought in her future questions, and I would caution all members to do likewise.

We’ve had sufficient clarification of this. If necessary I will pursue it further with the Leader of the Official Opposition, asking her to withdraw those comments and perhaps offer an apology if she so wishes as well – both, in my view, would be appropriate – or if someone on her behalf is prepared to do that now, I’d be prepared to receive it now.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Hmm. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, we have to think about whether civil disobedience is a good idea or not. If this were me, I certainly would not withdraw those comments, but seeing that it is from the leader – and I will protect her – I will on her behalf withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That would be the honourable thing to do because that then concludes the matter and allows us to move on to the next point.

Point of Clarification

The Speaker: The next point was raised by the hon. Member for Airdrie, and it was with respect to clarification that was sought when I had to intervene and stop a line of questioning which I felt was violating or perhaps about to violate – take your pick – one of the standing rules that we have in this House. In fact, it’s not only in this House; it’s throughout our Commonwealth parliamentary system.

So let me start by referring you to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, wherein a discussion, on page 502, with respect to question period says the following: “Furthermore, a question should not . . . create disorder . . . [should not] concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses.” It’s basically the same point that I raised yesterday when a similar line of questioning was being pursued.

There’s also a reference in Beauchesne’s Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, on page 122, section 17, where it says, “Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities.”

Now, during her questions today the hon. Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition said the following: “The PC leadership race is under way.” Then she went on. A little further on she says, “A PC leadership candidate [is] fishing for donations to his campaign.” Then she went on to say, “Will the minister confirm today that he is not seeking the PC leadership?” Then she went on to say, “The Minister of Energy also hasn’t ruled out running for the PC leadership.” And she went on to say about the Minister of Energy, “Will she confirm today that she’s not seeking the PC leadership?” So I count at least five references to an internal party matter, because de facto the race for a leader of the PC Party is an internal party matter. You must be a member of that party to participate in that process. Of course, it’s all about electioneering and campaigning and so on.

There’s a reason, hon. members, that you’ve heard me say before why questions about internal party matters are almost automatically ruled out of order. The reason why is because they always create disorder in the House. I’ve told you before, and I’ll tell you again. One of the first fundamentals that a Speaker must uphold to the best of his or her ability is order and control of the House. It’s absolutely fundamental. Yesterday I was very polite when I mentioned that this line of questioning ought be carefully studied so as to not violate the particular rules that I’ve just mentioned to you, and today we had numerous examples of it being violated. My clarification and my admonishment today to whomever is to not engage in questions that concern party matters. They will be ruled out of order every time. Please, let’s refrain from doing that, and I hope that will close the matter.

We will proceed with the legislative policy committee meetings this afternoon, starting at 3:30. It is with regard to Alberta’s Economic Future, where they will be considering the estimates for Innovation and Advanced Education in committee room A, and Resource Stewardship will consider Municipal Affairs in committee room B. At 7 tonight Families and Communities will consider the estimates of Education in committee room A. That is all in accordance with our rules.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:24 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray and give thanks to those brave men and women who have served in our military defending our rights and freedoms, and let us give thanks also to those who still serve today. Amen.

Hon. members, life, as we all know, is precious, and when it is lost, all of us are impacted. Therefore, on this day I would ask that all Members of our Alberta Legislative Assembly and all others present here with us today as well as those observing our proceedings in their homes join together as we reflect upon the lives of Canadian military personnel lost in service to their country. In a moment of silent thought and prayer let us remember them and be ever thankful to them all. May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may we as a nation be eternally grateful. God bless them all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

National Day of Remembrance of the Battle of Vimy Ridge

The Speaker: Hon. members, today, April 9, 2014, marks the 97th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. The Canadian victory at Vimy is considered a defining moment in our history, as we would all know. It was the first time all four divisions of the Canadian Corps attacked together. Accounts of incredible acts of sacrifice and bravery earned Canadians the respect of being a prepared, strong, vibrant, and unstoppable force. Those acts, however, also resulted in over 10,000 Canadians being killed or wounded. Later Brigadier General Arthur Edward Ross famously declared, "In those few minutes I witnessed the birth of a nation."

Hon. members, four former members of this Assembly are known to have fought at Vimy Ridge as follows. Lieutenant Joseph Emmet Stauffer of the 50th Battalion, Alberta regiment, was killed in action on April 10, 1917. He was the Member for Didsbury from 1909 until his death. He served this Assembly as Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees from 1913 to 1916.

Major James Robert Lowery of the 49th Battalion, Edmonton regiment, was severely wounded on April 9, 1917. He served this Assembly as the Member for Alexandra from 1913 to 1921.

Captain Joseph Tweed Shaw of the 46th Battalion, Saskatchewan battalion, was wounded at Vimy Ridge. He would return and subsequently serve this Assembly as the Member for Bow Valley from 1926 to 1930.

Lieutenant Hugh Cragg Farthing of the Canadian Army Service Corps was gassed shortly after the ridge was taken, and it took months for him to recover his health. When he did, he served this Assembly as the Member for Calgary from 1930 to 1935.

With our applause and our thanks let us remember their courage and their achievements. [applause]

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Continuing on my train of thought, hon. members, let me say the following. At Vimy Ridge all 48 battalions of the Canadian Corps rose as one for the first time in the first Great War. From Alberta the 10th, the 31st, the 49th, and the 50th battalions, Canadian Expeditionary Force, all joined battle, and many were killed and others wounded. Today these four units are perpetuated by the Calgary Highlanders, the South Alberta Light Horse, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, and the King's Own Calgary Regiment respectively. The Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, while not raised in Alberta, shares the battle honour of Vimy Ridge 1917.

On this special day in my gallery are the contemporary representatives of two well-known Alberta-based regiments who were at Vimy. They are Major Troy Steele, South Alberta Light Horse; Warrant Officer Kevin Heselton and Master Corporal Sean Sullivan, both of Princess. They are here on behalf of the many with whom they serve. Of note, all three have served in Afghanistan and elsewhere on operational tours overseas. The significance of this battle to our dominion is well known to members of this House and to all Albertans. I would now ask the guests I've just named to please rise and receive our sincere thanks. [Standing ovation]

The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ken and Iris Saunders, constituents in Edmonton-Whitemud, are fantastic contributors to our community. In fact, they epitomize contribution to community. Tragically, this last week Iris Saunders, who served as the executive director of EmployAbilities, an organization that serves people with disabilities, discusses barriers to employment, assists employers, and acts as a voice of community advocacy, passed away suddenly. She will be mourned by the entire EmployAbilities family and by the broader community. Both Ken and Iris contributed massively to our community. Iris had an indefatigable attitude. She was always there. She was always willing to contribute and always willing to serve.

In your gallery, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Iris's husband, Ken Saunders, and the Saunders' boys: Ken Jr., Darryl, and Dale. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House, with our thanks for their service. I can tell you that the boys have also followed in the footsteps of their parents and provide great service to our community. We owe an incredible debt of thanks to Iris and a continuing debt of thanks to the Saunders family.

The Speaker: Are there other visitors? The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. How serendipitous it is that today I have the special privilege to introduce guests on the very day that we pay tribute to those with courage whose lives were lost at Vimy. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Jean-Christophe Fleury, consul general of the republic of France. The consul general is accompanied by his spouse, Ms Hyunsun Shin. This is Mr. Fleury's first official visit to Alberta since taking up his post as consul general in Vancouver last October. Mr. Fleury has played and will continue to play a valuable role in strengthening the friendship between our jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and France have a long-standing trade, investment, and cultural relationship. Nearly 15 years ago we created the Francophone Secretariat to enhance ties with our Alberta francophone community, a community that consists of approximately 390,000 Albertans of French descent and over 81,000 francophones who reside in this province today. Together we will continue to work to build on our ties so that our jurisdictions can thrive today, tomorrow, and into the future. I would now ask Consul General Fleury to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly parents of two of our current pages. Firstly, the parents of Stephanie Nedoshytko, who are here to observe Stephanie in her role as a page during her last session here at the Legislature. Joining us today in your gallery is her father, Ihor Nedoshytko, and her mother, Mary Nedoshytko. Ihor is a retired teacher and spends his time playing in various local bands. Mary is a teacher at Holy Family Catholic school. They are both largely involved in the Ukrainian cultural community. I would ask them both to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction to you and through you to the members of the Assembly is the parents of Tierra Stokes. Joining us today in the Speaker's gallery is her father, Dave Stokes, and her mother, Brenda Stokes. Dave is a building contractor and an avid hockey player. Brenda is an instructor at NAIT, my alma mater. They are here to observe Tierra in her role as training-development page during her last session here at the Legislature. Tierra leaves us after three years as a page to attend Mount Allison this fall. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. It is with great privilege that I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the committed volunteers who have dedicated themselves to making Alberta a hate-free province. These volunteers are part of the Alberta Hate Crimes Committee, who have been working with the community, government, and police for over a decade to help educate Albertans about hate crimes and a potentially divisive impact on their communities. The goals of this committee are to educate and build communities that work together with coordinated and standardized policies and services to make every Albertan feel included in this great province.

I'd ask each one of them to please rise as I read their name: Chevi Rabbit, this year's Alberta hate crimes youth award winner – I had the privilege of meeting him last year – Laveia Schug, Chevi's mother; Adam Bautista, this year's Alberta hate crimes youth arts award winner; Roger Bautista, Adam's father; Mirande Alexandre; Nicholas Ameyaw; Ayesha Mian; Christine Rapp; Tatiana Wugalter; Sofia Yaqub; Stephen Camp; of course, Dr. Kristopher Wells; Edmonton police superintendent, Kevin Galvin; and Natasha Goudar, also from the Edmonton Police Service. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Your second introduction.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second introduction today is of two constituents from the beautiful constituency of Calgary-Acadia, Sue and Maureen Higgins, daughters of the late Sue Higgins known to many of us as a member of Calgary city council from '77 to '83 and '86 to 2001. The late Sue Higgins, who passed away on February 16, was also a constituent of mine who I knew. I remember many colourful conversations and the colourful greetings when I met her, knocking at her door in 2007. Leading her legacy, of course, in my constituency is Sue Higgins Arena as well as Sue Higgins dog park. Maureen works with AltaLink, and Sue works for Alberta Health Services. Both of these incredible ladies are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Highwood.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to welcome a school group from Calgary-Glenmore. I would ask the band members from the Calgary Girls' School to please stand. They are joined today by their teachers, Mr. Quan Le, Ms Judy Byrne, Ms Eva Erfle, Ms Jenelee Jones, and Ms Emily Coady. The school has students from across the city of Calgary, and it is a wonderful example of the choice in our education system. Welcome to the Legislature, ladies.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two members of Chinook local 29 of the Alberta Teachers' Association. This local represents approximately 400 teachers employed by Christ the Redeemer Catholic school division, working in schools in Canmore, Okotoks, High River, Drumheller, Strathmore, Brooks, and Oyen as well as the very popular centre for learning online, which services students across the province. Later this year Chinook local 29 will welcome teachers from Clear Water Academy as that school joins their school division. Today the two members representing Chinook local 29 are Joel Windsor, the local staff representative at Notre Dame Collegiate in High River; and Shauna Baillie, the local staff representative at Holy Spirit Academy in High River. Joel has assured me that he's not here wearing his second hat today, which is as a local organizer for the Alberta Party, but I always enjoy our discussions when we do talk about politics. I invite them to please stand and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Marilyn Koren and her daughter Jamie Sullivan. Delonna Sullivan, Jamie's daughter, was seized without an apprehension order and died in foster care six days later, after removal from her home. This Friday is the three-year anniversary of this sad tragedy. Jamie and Marilyn were successful in having the publication ban on saying Delonna's name lifted. In fact, they've been touring the country as advocates for all children in Canada. They're here to be the voice of Delonna and to encourage us to improve the lives of all Alberta children. I would ask Marilyn and Jamie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by West Yellowhead.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Casey McCarthy. Casey is heavily involved in the Self Advocacy Federation, the Special Olympics, and countless other organizations. Later this month she will be travelling to British Columbia to take part in an autism conference. She's also been invited to take part in the Miss British Columbia Pageant, where she will be the first candidate with autism in the competition's history. I would now like to ask Casey to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House today and introduce to you and through you a constituent and a good friend of mine from West Yellowhead. Seated in the members' gallery is JoAnn Race from Hinton. JoAnn loves politics and attends every regular and standing council meeting for the town of Hinton, and I know that she keeps the local council on their toes. JoAnn also spent 30 years teaching first aid in the coal mines of Hinton and also working for St. John. She's a dedicated wife and mother and a proud grandmother. She is a great supporter of mine, and she doesn't hesitate to tell me what she thinks. I'd ask JoAnn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Mill Woods, and that will be it.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Laura McDonald, a Hand Hills resident, mother, and housewife on her first visit to this Chamber. Laura is my Hanna constituency assistant. She is a great community-minded person. Laura was instrumental in the Hand Hills community's reception of a $50,000 cheque from the UFA's get and give program. Laura, would you please rise and stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you my guests from Ironworkers local 720. Leonard Raboud and George Papineau are both business representatives for local 720, while Coltren Starblanket and Shea Robillard are apprentices. On February 4 the two apprentices along with a larger group of workers were told that they were being replaced by Croatian temporary foreign workers and sent home that same day. Because of considerable public pressure their employer eventually promised to rehire the apprentices; however, to this day many have not been rehired, including Coltren. Coltren is a second-year apprentice still looking to get the hours necessary for his trade. I would now like my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, quickly.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I feel obligated to introduce her again because she's one of my constituents and my boss: Sofia Yaqub. She's a vibrant member of the community and in lots of women's and seniors' programs. So please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Alberta Health Services Consulting Contracts

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as we've shown over and over again, AHS is a complete shambles. Wait times have never been worse, and every day we learn about new examples of bureaucratic excess. Today we learned that an Alberta Health Services executive vice-president was restructured out of her job, handed almost a million dollars in executive pensions, and hired back the very next day on a sole-source consulting contract, making a quarter of a million dollars a year. Will the Premier admit that AHS is a complete failure?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I will admit and what every member on the government side of this House will admit is that there are a hundred thousand people in Alberta Health Services who are doing an excellent job every day delivering care to Albertans across this province.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the once again grandiose claims of the hon. Leader of the Opposition the fact of the matter is that from time to time organizations, including government, turn to people with specific and specialized expertise to do a job that cannot be done using internal resources. I don't know the details of this particular contract, but I know that's how . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to provide the Health minister the details. Pam Whitnack, former executive vice-president at AHS, collected almost $350,000 in executive coaching contracts in an 18-month period. That was after she got her $853,000 supplementary executive pension. Meanwhile dialysis patients in Athabasca, Red Deer, Brooks, and Lacombe can't get timely access to life-saving treatment. Can the Health minister explain why people who are waiting for necessary treatment have to be second place to executive coaching?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say about being someone who would be on the other side of this House is that it must be wonderful to speculate and to make grandiose claims and to be accountable for absolutely nothing. [interjections].

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the issue is oversight of financial administration within Alberta Health Services, and we have very strong processes that are in place within AHS. We have an Audit and Finance Committee that includes representation from the office of the Auditor General. [interjections] We have a strong internal audit function. We have the tools and the processes in place to be accountable.

The Speaker: Let's listen to the answers, please.

Let's have the question.

Ms Smith: You know who's responsible for absolutely nothing? This Health minister.

From April 2012 until October 2013 AHS spent over $600,000 on executive coaching for scores of vice-presidents, senior vice-presidents, executive vice-presidents, and executive directors. Meanwhile Alberta seniors were ripped away from their families, denied baths, and fed horrible food. To the Premier: will he admit that this Health minister is a failure, that AHS is a disaster, and will he do something, anything, to give Albertans some reason to believe that this disgusting mess can actually be fixed?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what I will say to Albertans is that we have probably the best Health minister we could have in this province, somebody who has a background in health policy, who understands the system and is working hard every day to make sure that system works even better for Albertans.

What I'll also say to Albertans is that I had the opportunity to be at Ronald McDonald House this morning and to talk with families, who were telling me how well the health system worked in their time of need, for their children. We have a health system that works every day for Albertans. These hon. members would suggest that the health system is broken and not working. The reality is that for the most part it works well every day, and we're going to be working hard to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: If that's the best you've got, Premier, that doesn't inspire confidence in Albertans.

Federal Building Redevelopment Plan

Ms Smith: A few days ago Albertans were treated to the spectacle of two cabinet ministers claiming to have killed the same bad project 14 months apart. Now, Albertans instinctively know that both stories can't be true, but we'll just have to accept that somehow the Premier's penthouse was a zombie that came back to life so that it could be killed twice. So let me start with an easy question to the minister who last killed the sky palace. It's been two weeks since we first found out about this very bad idea. Just how much taxpayer money was wasted on it?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the hon. member that in the same way that sometimes you have to remind the opposition more than once to behave and sometimes, in fairness, you have to remind the government more than once to behave in this House, the same thing actually can happen in a ministry, too. The fact is that we're both telling the truth. I can assure you that the hon. minister is telling the truth. I can assure you that the item was killed in January. They're very infatuated with something that didn't happen. [interjections] I think at some point Albertans would want them to be discussing something that did happen because that's actually in the public interest.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. First supplemental, preferably with no interruptions.

Ms Smith: Albertans want to know how an idea as bad as the Premier's sky palace could have gotten as far along as it did, and the minister didn't answer the question. The documents suggest that almost $200,000 was spent just on the design phases of this project, and no one wants to fess up about how this bad idea got as far as it did. To the Premier: if the Treasury Board isn't carefully watching projects, how do we know that someone else's executive assistant isn't making million-dollar changes to projects after they've already been approved?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure. Again, without interruption, please.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I took so long correcting the misinformation of the first question that I didn't actually get to the legitimate part, so I thank you for that part. I've asked my staff to give a number on how much was spent on the planning for what ultimately didn't happen. That's a legitimate question. Thank you for that. It's refreshing.

I can tell you what. This didn't happen. Albertans want to know that. That's part of the process. When we build projects, we kick around different ideas. [interjections] Some of the ideas we kick around don't work. We most often reject bad ideas. This is an example of the system working.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you object to something being said, stand up and raise a point of order. Otherwise, please, no more interjections, no more talking across the bow, all right? I've already had it, and we're only at the five-minute mark.

Hon. leader, you deserve another question.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Still didn't hear an answer in all of that. But the key document about this bad idea was a memo to Peter Watson, the current deputy minister of the cabinet. The memo details the penthouse, the government alumni lounge, and the special elevators to bypass all of the opposition floors. Peter Watson sets the agenda for cabinet, sets the agenda for Treasury Board, and he was fully briefed on this very bad idea. It seems impossible to believe that he didn't tell the cabinet. Why is it that no one in the cabinet had the integrity to do the right thing and say no to this very bad idea?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the member is talking about documents that are made public, and the fact is that change orders don't typically go to cabinet. In fact, you know, if you want to talk about accountability, perhaps the leader could ask the person sitting on her immediate right – I tabled the documents in this House yesterday showing that he was on Treasury Board at least one and possibly two years when this item was discussed – and ask him. The fact is that he would know that not all change orders of projects actually go to Treasury Board. This didn't happen, and that's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. A point of order is noted, by Airdrie, at approximately 2 o'clock, just now.

Let's go on. The hon. Member for Highwood and Leader of the Opposition for her third and final main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Funny how he got the change orders for our office space but not for the Premier's penthouse.

Ministers' Activities

Ms Smith: I'm going to ask some careful questions about potential conflicts of interest and seek reassurance for Albertans. The race to choose the next Premier is under way. Many Albertans are concerned that cabinet ministers may end up in apparent conflicts while they undertake their duties to pursue that job. For example, the Energy minister must know that her routine meetings with energy companies will look bad if these companies later donate to her campaign. Will the Energy minister confirm today that she is not in the race to become Premier, or will she resign to prevent the appearance of campaigning on taxpayer dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very interested that the leader seems to be so focused on leadership. What I'm focused on is getting our budget passed, the legislative session, and working on the important job that we're doing in Energy. For the last couple of weeks I've met with energy ministers across this country, making sure that we're getting market access across the nation. That is what I am focused on.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Human Services minister has also mused about becoming Premier. Yesterday he rushed out an announcement on changes to children in care even though this was days before the deadline that he'd given to the opposition and others to give him comments about that. The timing has a very unfortunate appearance. Will the Human Services minister confirm today that he is not in the race for Premier, or will he avoid the appearance of campaigning on taxpayer dollars and resign his position from cabinet?

Mr. Campbell: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a point of order by the Government House Leader at 2:02. I suspect it's going to be something to do with the internal party matters, the issue which we discussed on Monday, which we discussed again yesterday. So please be careful of your questions.

Let's have a short answer from the hon. minister and then see where the third one goes.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What has a very rather undignified appearance, if the member so wants to know, is that lake-of-fire party over there trying to zig one day, zag the other day. You can't be two things at the same time.

On this side of the House we're working, we're getting things done, and we're protecting everyday Albertans. [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: Point of order. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. Member for Airdrie. [interjections] Hon. Member for Airdrie. [interjections] Airdrie. Hon. Member for Airdrie, hon. Minister of Human Services, please look at me. This way. Okay? All right.

Hon. members, you can see why there is a specific rule, a citation, in fact, in two different parliamentary books that specifically forbids, discourages, and otherwise counsels members to not use question period to raise issues of an internal party nature. Part of the reason is because on many occasions, in fact most occasions, it results in what you've just seen so far, three points of order and then some bantering across the bow, the Human Services minister with the Member for Airdrie and then Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, louder than not, perhaps others, and I expect that there might be some on the government side.

Let's be reminded what these rules are. Otherwise, I'm going to have to intervene, and unfortunately the clock will be eaten up accordingly. The choice is yours. It's not my rule, hon. members. It's your rule.

Now let's go on with the final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education minister, that comment was directed at you, too.

That brings me to the Minister of Justice. He also indicated that he'd like to become Premier. He even tried to throw the Finance minister under the bus. [interjection]

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, it's hard to hear what the question is when you're persisting to talk during your own leader's question. Please. I've asked you kindly. I may not be so kind on another occasion. Let's give the floor to your leader. She's earned the right for this question, and we've all earned the right to hear it.

Hon. leader, would you please give us your question again?

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all saw how quickly the Justice minister reversed his cuts to the GPS monitoring program at least for the next six months, until the next Premier is chosen. Will the Justice minister confirm today that he is not in the race for Premier, or will he avoid the appearance of campaigning on taxpayer dollars and resign his position from cabinet?

Mr. Denis: I first rise on a point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I think this will be the last of them, so I invite you to offer a brief answer, and then let's move on.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. Access to justice, safe streets, safe communities, the government business, Mr. Speaker: that is my priority. It's time that we stopped talking about party matters in this manner in this House and stick to the business of the government.

I also have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, that is the fourth point of order.

Let us go on with Edmonton-Meadowlark, the leader of the Liberal opposition.

LGBTQ Student Supports

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Gay-straight alliances are student-led organizations that provide a safe environment for LGBTQ youth and their straight allies. On Monday this PC government had a chance to shed its shameful, homophobic legacy by supporting Motion 503. Instead, 22 PC members caused the defeat of the motion by voting against human rights and respect for LGBTQ youth. It seems like the bigger lake of fire is over there. The Premier said he would have voted for Motion 503, but he didn't. I was there, the only leader who voted for this, as did all the Liberal MLAs. To the Premier: why didn't you lead your caucus by example and ensure that the motion passed?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last time I checked, Monday afternoon is private members' business, and in private members' business the tradition of the House is to have private members debate private members' motions and vote as private members on those motions. Sometimes when a motion is totally egregious, against government policy, members are encouraged to consider government policy when they vote. But private members' business is private members' business, and members are encouraged to debate issues fully, sometimes with competing values, as this one was, and then come to a conclusion and vote.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that this particular issue was not important to this Premier.

Human rights are universal, not local and not up to the whim of some school board official or principal. What's required here is leadership. Alberta students support gay-straight alliances. The Alberta Teachers' Association supports them. The mayor of Edmonton supports them. But the Minister of Education himself stood up and voted against gay-straight alliances. Mr. Speaker, the credibility of a welcoming and inclusive province is at stake. To the Premier: it seems like you're leading the regressive conservatives. Will you show leadership by bringing in legislation this session and . . .

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think the comments that this member has made against our Premier are absolutely ridiculous and insulting. When you're trying to talk about being respectful and caring and welcoming and inclusionary and then make comments like that, you completely defeat the purpose of the spirit of this.

This government and myself and this Premier absolutely, one hundred per cent support GSAs. They're fantastic organizations. We put policies and resources in place to support students and to support schools that do that. This member doesn't trust schools, he doesn't trust teachers, he doesn't trust principals, he doesn't trust our school board trustees, who are duly elected . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Final supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the credibility of this very minister is at stake, who's charged with protecting Alberta's children in the schools. The evidence clearly shows that in schools that have had GSAs for three years or longer, discrimination, suicidal thoughts, and suicide attempts are less than half compared to other schools. We're talking about saving and improving the lives of children. The Premier wears a Children First pin. I have to think that this would be important to him. To the Premier: time to decide. Are you a placeholder Premier or a real Premier who puts children first by standing up to the homophobes in your caucus . . .

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely reprehensible for that hon. member to accuse members on this side or any side of the House of being homophobic. I would ask that hon. member to put his record up against mine in terms of putting children first. [interjections] There is no one in this House who has a better record for standing up for children than this hon. member and this Premier, who will use the office of Premier in an appropriate way to do appropriate things at appropriate times because Alberta is not standing still.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Repetition

The Speaker: Hon. members, sometimes comments like we've just heard from both sides can be interpreted as attacks on a person's character. They don't belong here. I was surprised there wasn't a point of order, and then suddenly Airdrie did rise on a point of order. That was noted at 2:09 p.m.

While I'm on my feet, could I just also please remind all members of our own Standing Order 23(c), that says:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

(c) persists in needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session.

So please be reminded of what has been decided and how our rules state it should be abided to.

Let us go on to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Fort Chipewyan Cancer Incidence

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While the government and the Wildrose debate waste and contracts and so on, there are some serious health issues that are being ignored. This government has ignored the warnings of scientific experts who have alerted us to the negative health and environmental effects downriver from Fort McMurray. Doctors have asked for a decade now for a full investigation into elevated cancer rates, yet the government has still not bothered to study the risk factors and how they're contributing to cancer rates. To the Premier: will this government commit to a full study of the links between substances released by industry into our environment and the cancer outbreaks in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member, I hope, is aware, the Alberta cancer registry does conduct very rigorous surveillance of the incidence of cancer across the province, including some very specialized local studies including Fort Chipewyan. As the hon. member knows, the results that were released a few weeks ago did show higher-than-expected rates of specific types of cancer – namely, lung cancer, cervical cancer, and bile duct cancer – in that community. But as the hon. member should also know, the chief medical officer of health has laid out a plan, which he is hoping to have the opportunity to discuss with the community, to address risk factors.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, those sorts of statistical analyses do not do anything for the people in Fort Chipewyan. It's their health that needs to be studied and the link between their health and pollution caused by industry farther upstream. So will the Health minister commit to a clear, comprehensive study of the link between emissions and pollution upstream of Fort Chipewyan and the clusters of cancers that have been found there?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I will agree with the hon. member in that it is their health; it is the health of the people that live in those communities that we are talking about here today. But where we will disagree – and I think the chief medical officer made it quite clear – is that there are a number of known risk factors for all three types of cancer that have been identified, that are in fact risk factors anywhere in Alberta: smoking as it relates to lung cancer; lack of access to the human papilloma virus vaccine in the case of cervical cancer; and a number of causes, including diabetes and other chronic diseases related to all three types of cancer. Mr. Speaker, the chief medical officer is committed to working with the community to address these risk factors and to discuss . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government has a long history of attempting to ignore and wish away impacts on our water, on our environment, and on human health as a result of oil sands development. There's a long, long record of that. You do it over and over again. The minister is doing it again. He's talking about lung cancer. He's talking about smoking. These are clusters particular to this area. People smoke all over the province, Mr. Minister, not just in Fort Chipewyan. What's your answer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, my answer is the same answer that was given by the chief medical officer when he released the results of this and talked about what we're going to do. I'm sure that neither the hon. member nor I would want us to think that we're presenting ourselves to Albertans as scientific experts. What we do know is that for all three types of cancer that we're discussing here, there are known risk factors that exist all over the province. Very thankfully, the results this year did not indicate any increase in the prevalence of childhood cancer. As the chief medical officer has said, he's more than willing to sit down and talk to the community about measures that can be taken.

The Speaker: Thank you.

From here on no more preambles to supplementals.

Let's go with Calgary-Foothills, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October last year Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, was passed. It was passed unanimously in this House, and it was granted royal assent immediately thereafter, but seven months later I have yet to hear of any development of the organ and tissue donation agency. My question is to the Minister of Health. What is the status of the implementation of this bill?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I'm pleased that the hon. member asked the question because later this month we will be unveiling the online registry for organ and tissue donation in Alberta, and at that time all Albertans will have the opportunity to easily and conveniently register their intent to donate. That information will be stored in a database, the organ and donor registry database, maintained by my ministry and made available in care settings across the province when situations arise where an organ or tissue might be made available.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Webber: Thank you. Hon. minister, that's fantastic news, and I appreciate all the work you've done on this and on the registry. But I do want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, given that the key element of the development of this bill is the actual agency, that the registry you just announced is a small portion of this agency. I guess my question is: where are we, Mr. Minister, with the agency?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that the key element is making it easy and convenient for Albertans to register their intent to donate organs and tissue, and that step, as I said, is being addressed this month. Later this spring we will see the same opportunity to register the intent to donate made available when people renew their drivers' licences and their personal identification cards. The agency that the hon. member refers to is in the process of being developed. This is the agency that will oversee both donation activities and transplantation activities in the province, co-ordinating public awareness and education, and we expect the beginnings of that agency to be in place later this year.

Mr. Webber: Fantastic news, Mr. Minister. Thank you very much for that.

Given the fact that there is an average of four people a week that are dying in hospital beds waiting for these organs, can the Minister of Health speed up the process at all with respect to the development of this agency because of the fact that so many people are on their deathbed?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are doing everything we can to accelerate the commitments. Again, the agency is going to serve a co-ordination role and an administrative and public education role within the province, but the immediate issue in Alberta is making it easier and more convenient for people to register their intent to donate. That is actually the key to increasing the rate of donation and increasing the number of opportunities that our doctors and nurses and other health professionals have to harvest organs and tissues that have been made available by their fellow Albertans. That is our immediate focus, and we'll of course be following through on all of the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among the $250 million in AHS contracts are $600,000 in executive coaching fees. Over half of these dollars went to a recently departed AHS VP. We have another document that shows that a sole-source contract worth a quarter of a million dollars was handed to this individual the day after she left the job with AHS. According to your policy sole sourcing shall only be permitted when there is a legitimate need, typically when an unforeseeable situation of urgency exists. Can the minister tell us how an executive coaching contract could ever be considered an urgent priority?

Mr. Horne: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the news release that was blurted out, so to speak, by the opposition shortly before question period, I'm not at all sure that the facts represented in that release are correct, so I have already been in contact with the official administrator of Alberta Health Services to determine that.

But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. There are actually rules and processes, including an internal audit function, that oversee the transactions that take place in AHS with respect to consultants and other procurement, just as there is in government. As minister I expect those to be followed. We presume that they are followed.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, first of all, they're FOIP documents, so let's just talk about your processes. Given that AHS policy states, "All sole sourced Consultant engagements valued at greater than $25,000 will periodically be reviewed by Senior Executive to evaluate compliance with this policy,” can the minister assure Albertans and table evidence that this policy was followed in that case?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we discussed this issue yesterday. It is very easy for any member of this House to stand up and to loosely connect facts, whether or not they were acquired through FOIP, and to attempt to lead or mislead, as the case may be, people to a conclusion that may or may not be correct. In this instance there are clear processes within Alberta Health Services, including an Audit and Finance Committee, that includes representation from the office of the Auditor General, that is charged with overseeing these sorts of transactions.

I cannot say with respect to the specific transaction exactly what oversight was exercised, but, Mr. Speaker, we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'll tell you that it's not me that's misleading the House, Mr. Speaker.

Given that AHS policy forbids consulting contracts for salaried employees and given that this individual received a contract the day after leaving AHS, how can Albertans believe that the $250,000 untendered executive coaching contract was anything but a deliberate attempt to reward a senior official with taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the hon. member has no regard for the reputation of the individual who received this contract or perhaps anyone else, and that wouldn't be surprising because this kind of negativity, cynicism, and personal attack is exactly what we've observed from across the aisle for the last two and a half years.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that we do take the rules and procedures that we have seriously. We set up oversight mechanisms, we hold people to account, including in this case the official administrator of Alberta Health Services, we presume compliance, and when there is not compliance, we take appropriate action.

Bighorn Sheep Harvest

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the bighorn sheep is an iconic Alberta symbol. Stakeholders have concerns over the serious decline in the quality and quantity of trophy bighorn rams available for harvest. The ESRD assessment indicates that harvest levels need to be adjusted to bring them in line with the management plan. My questions are all for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Will the minister consider longer waiting periods of at least five years after harvest or, better still, introduce a limit of one trophy bighorn harvest in a lifetime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the member for the question. As an avid hunter and outdoorsman I know he understands the importance of making sure that we have sustainable herds in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, hunting is a long-standing tradition in Alberta, and we are going to work with our department and discuss with stakeholders about different ways to reduce the number of bighorn sheep that are being harvested. Longer waiting periods and limits on harvesting of trophy rams are among some of those options that are being discussed, and we hope to have those new regs out for this fall.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise the House on what measures are being taken to actually increase the habitat for bighorn sheep in Alberta?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, thank you for the question. ESRD is working with Parks Canada and other stakeholders along the eastern slopes, and we're looking at prescribed burn areas in the mountain areas that will provide sheep habitat. These prescribed burns remove some of the forest cover that is encroaching on winter range, and it turns it back into useful winter range for bighorn sheep.

Not only do we do prescribed burns to help increase habitat, but they also support a program for managing mountain pine beetle. Also, Mr. Speaker, I'd say to you that along the eastern slopes and with the reclamation of the coal mines we have some of the largest bighorn sheep herds in North America. They're flourishing, and we're using them to export sheep to other parts of North America.

Dr. Brown: Finally, can the minister advise the House why we are continuing to capture and export bighorn sheep from the province when there is ostensibly a shortage?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would disagree with the member's comments that there is a shortage of bighorn sheep in the province. I mean, I would suggest that there are some concerns about trophy rams, and we will address that, but our population is very stable. We have had very good success, again, from the sheep herds at the Cardinal River and Gregg River mines. We have shipped sheep to Wyoming, to Montana. We just had a capture here – I believe it was in January – where we shipped ewes and young rams to North Dakota. We will continue to make sure that our herds are sustainable and make sure that they continue to be healthy.

Health Care Spending

Mrs. Towle: Red Deer's dialysis unit is now at capacity, and clients who require dialysis rely on it for their life. Dialysis is also a core service of Alberta Health Services. In Red Deer dialysis patients are travelling elsewhere two to three hours a day, three to four days a week to get life-saving treatment. Unfortunately, the Red Deer-South MLA and the Health minister don't think dialysis in Alberta is as big of a deal as a premierial sky palace. How does this government continue to prioritize rooftops and swanky sky palaces over life-saving dialysis treatment?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to tell the House that both the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and his colleague the MLA for Red Deer-North do an excellent job of representing their own constituents in a fair and objective way and do not present their constituents' concerns in the context of such ridiculous analogies as we've just heard.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the demand for dialysis is growing across the province. The incidence of renal failure and the incidence of renal cancer are increasing commensurate with the increase in other chronic diseases. Red Deer is one of the fastest growing areas of the province. We are looking at ways to expand . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Towle: It's unfortunate that the Member for Red Deer-South didn't speak up when you were talking about all of those extra expenses in the sky palace and explain the situation in Red Deer.

Given that this government decided in 2013 to spend $600,000 on fancy New Age, mind-altering courses for Alberta Health Services executives, how does the Health minister honestly tell Albertans that the priorities of this government are executive coaching, million-dollar severances, and soft landings instead of life-saving dialysis treatments?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it's exactly the sort of illogical and incomprehensible rhetoric that does a disservice to the very serious issues that we're dealing with in delivering health care in Alberta. The opportunity cost decisions in health care are at a level they have never been at before in Canada. We are dealing with the need to expand primary health care, we're dealing with higher incidences of cancer, we need to keep up with new technology and new drugs, and we need most urgently to deal with the challenges posed by the growing incidence of chronic disease like renal disease. Those are the levels of discussions that we have on this side of the House.

Mrs. Towle: It's interesting that the minister could foresee that all his executives needed extra coaching but couldn't foresee that Red Deer residents might need some dialysis.

Given that in 2012 – in 2012, Minister – Alberta Health Services spent $460,000 a day on these outside consultants, doesn't the Health minister know that he is fully responsible for the decisions made under his watch at Alberta Health Services that continue to prioritize executives before life-saving dialysis treatment for Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I know is that this government understands that the health care system is about people and their families and communities. It's not about cheap political rhetoric. It is not about demeaning, besmirching the reputations of people.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing I know is that we've cleaned up executive compensation in Alberta Health Services, we have cleaned up the issue around travel and expenditure, and we have reduced the number of vice-presidents in that organization from 80 to 10. I don't know of a leaner $13 billion organization in this country or in North America, and we're very proud of what's been achieved at Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Cancer Incidence and Treatment

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over 10 years cancer concerns have been identified in Fort Chip. In 2009 the Minister of Health along with the federal government committed to a multiyear longitudinal health study with over a million dollars. The cancer update last month by his department again confirmed the cluster of biliary tract cancers along with lung and cervical cancers in Fort Chip. Small wonder that their trust and the trust of our American neighbours in this government is being threatened. To the minister. The world is watching. Given the five years since the announcement of this health study what are the results? When will the residents of Fort Chip see any . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the residents of Fort Chipewyan know that this government takes their health and their health concerns extremely seriously. That is why since 2009 the chief medical officer of health of this province has overseen studies such as the Alberta cancer registry surveillance study, that reports each year on the incidence of cancer in that region and across the province. I would be the first to agree with the hon. member that the community needs to be involved in this discussion. That's exactly what we've been attempting to do for some time. In fact, the results of the study were released before we could arrange that meeting with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister has totally ignored the question of the million-dollar commitment to a health study for which we've seen no results. When are we going to see the cancer cluster investigated – that's been on the books for at least five years and recognized – in a separate investigation?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe the investigation that has been conducted is exactly what the hon. member is asking for. We have identified higher than expected rates of cancer in this community as compared to other parts of the province. We know exactly what types of cancer are involved. The chief medical officer of health has spoken very specifically to what the risk factors are for those types of cancer and how he is willing to work with the community to address those. Those are hard, focused efforts to improve the health and health outcomes of people in the community, and I know that the chief medical officer is anxious for the opportunity to talk with the community about that.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the New England Journal of Medicine in 2011 reported that Alberta has the lowest survival for lung cancer in the country. CIHI this year reported Alberta dead last in waiting times, three months for lung cancer surgery. That's three months of further growth and spread. Mr. Minister, what are you doing about this long wait-list for cancer?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned by the last Canadian Institute for Health Information report specifically as it relates to lung cancer. I've discussed the issue with Alberta Health Services. I understand that there are a number of factors involved. Is their performance good enough? Absolutely not. I know that AHS has put a lot of effort into addressing the preoperative assessment process and speeding that up by doing things in tandem as opposed to in a linear fashion. The bottleneck seems to be the number of people that are ready to be treated and need access and need to get that access to surgery quicker.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, on Monday in this House we debated a very serious motion, Motion 503, which allows students to form gay-straight alliances in their schools. These clubs are proven to reduce bullying, encourage understanding, and build truly inclusive school communities. Unfortunately, the Wildrose opposition and 22 members of the PC Party, including the Minister of Education, voted against the motion. To the Minister of Education: will you do the right thing and introduce legislation allowing students to form GSAs in their schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the legislation exists and the policies exist already for students to start up GSAs. Like I said before, we support them. The motion on Monday was not about allowing students to start up GSAs. It was about imposing legislation broadly across the province removing the right of school boards and trustees to set those policies and make those decisions. This member would like us to throw trustees and school boards under the bus. They're duly elected officials. If this is truly an issue, we can deal with it if that can be proven.

Speaker's Ruling Items Previously Decided

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's be reminded that Motion 503, as far as I know, has been decided by the House and our rule under Standing Order 23 says, "a Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . . raises matters that have been decided during the current session." So figure out another way to get your question asked is all I'm saying. Okay? [interjections] I don't need any coaching, Edmonton-Centre and Calgary-Buffalo. Truly, I don't.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, let's hear your first sup.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about future legislation.

Given that school boards should not be allowed to deprive students of the right to use a proven, effective tool to combat bullying in our schools and given that all minority rights need to be protected, will the minister recognize that the new Education Act does nothing to protect students' rights to form a GCA, and will he commit to taking action, and if not, why not?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, they're GSAs. I know that he just made a mistake, but they're GSAs. There are all kinds of really valuable and really productive groups, support groups, initiatives, antibullying initiatives, and programs that are out there. [interjections] School boards and trustees and principals and administrators in those local schools decide which groups, which clubs, which initiatives, which programs are going to work best in their school, with the issues that they have, [interjections] with the resources and the people that they have, and we think that that's the best place to leave this decision. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I wonder if we could proceed with your final supplemental. Did you ask it already?

Mr. Bilous: No; I have one more. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I thought you were wanting to address the House.

The Speaker: There was so much distraction here. You had Edmonton-Strathcona jumping in there, you had Edmonton-Centre jumping in there, and it was just hard to hear. But go ahead with your final sup.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the last comment, Mr. Minister, your own antibullying minister knows that it's not good enough and voted in favour of this motion.

Given that this PC government made a show of raising the pride flag to support LGBTQ rights in Russia and given that back in Alberta the rights of LGBTQ kids don't even extend to forming a club in order to stop bullying, back to the same minister: why will you raise the pride flag during the Olympics but won't raise the standard of protecting kids from bullying?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we take this very seriously, and we are raising the standards against bullying. There are all kinds of investments and resources to that end. I would point to the fact that we have a minister, who is doing a great job, of Family and Community Safety as more evidence of that. GSAs are fantastic. They do great work. But there are a lot of other groups that do great work, and every time we come across a group that does great work and that we think should be in all the schools, we don't legislate them into every school in the province. That was the question that was put to us on Monday, not whether we support GSAs. Of course we support GSAs. We just don't think the Legislature is the best place to make the decision on which . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Gas Prices

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently some Alberta consumers have been shocked with gas heating bills that have more than doubled. Demand increased this past winter, but what is troubling is the fact that the fuel price, natural gas, has doubled. Why are consumers getting gouged, and will this government investigate the market for price-gouging?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question, a question that many Albertans are asking as well. It really does relate to the markets. As well, when we look across the Alberta, Canadian, North American markets, the amount of cooling this year, with regard to that the gas prices are high up. It is a market-based system but one that we always keep a close eye on as well. It's important. We've seen this across North America, and we always work hard to make sure that we're paying close attention to this file.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Let's pay close attention.

Given this winter's demand for natural gas only increased 10 per cent over last year and given this winter's demand for gas only increased 13 per cent over the five-year average and given we started the winter with record-breaking natural gas reserves, 8 per cent more than the five-year average, why did the retail price for natural gas increase 100 per cent, and how is this justified?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I did say in my opening comments, this has been the coldest winter that we've experienced in a long time. The prices of natural gas in January, February, and March were due to this unusually cold winter, not just here in Alberta but throughout North America. When you have that happen, you have a low inventory. [interjections] When there's a low inventory, prices go up.

Mr. Anglin: A record-breaking inventory isn't a low inventory.

Given consumer gas heating bills are averaged over a 12-month period and given the 12-month average price of the wholesale market is $4.51 and given the five-year average price of wholesale natural gas is $4, can this government explain to hard-working Albertans why the average retail price has doubled and the average wholesale price only increased 13 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March of 2014 we saw the gas prices at $7.383. In February they were at $4.86. [interjections] The rates have actually already come down for April. Under Direct Energy in the north we see $5.18. In the south we see $4.26, and with AltaGas it's $6.38 per gigajoule. We see that this month. We saw a cold January, February, and March, and that's exactly why you saw the prices increase. They're now coming down. [interjection]

The Speaker: I don't know if the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre have finished their conversation.

Assuming they have, let us move on to Lesser Slave Lake.

Gift Lake School

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A sudden closure of the Northland school division's Gift Lake school resulted in a shutdown due to extensive black mould, displacing 757 students. These students have been forced to get their education at various locations as well as in many communities miles away. On a daily basis I hear my constituents voice their concerns over the scheduled December 2014 completion date of the new Gift Lake school. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that we are getting a beautiful school in Gift Lake and that it is being built slowly, in my view, and taking into consideration the mould issue, can your department somehow expedite the building process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for advocating. As you know, the health and safety of Albertan students and Albertan kids is of the highest importance. The hon. member is right in saying that we are struggling with the schedule for this particular school. Getting rid of the mould has been a struggle. Also, we're pulling together Northern Lakes College and two other organizations in a partnership to try to make sure we do this the best way that we can. I would say to the member that the people in Alberta Infrastructure are working very hard to get it done, but we're not finished.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First sup.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure my constituents will be very happy.

To the Minister of Education: given that modulars were promised to Gift Lake to ensure displaced students have an appropriate learning space, why is it taking so doggone long to do that?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I would echo my colleague's comments that this MLA has been an incredible advocate for her community. But I can say that there has been a great deal of work done to make sure that the site at the Gift Lake community centre is both properly prepared and ready to accommodate these students, and we anticipate that they'll be ready for occupancy in May. In the meantime there's been excellent collaboration, I understand, between Whitefish Lake First Nation band council and the Northland school division to accommodate the Gift Lake students and staff at the Atikameg school. So Gift Lake students and staff are now fully accommodated at the Atikameg school, and I'm assured that they have a good learning environment there until . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: given that we have often been accused of being slow in our efforts to enhance aboriginal education throughout Alberta, what are you doing to ensure First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students are getting the opportunity they deserve, given the fact that they have circumstances like this?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a great point. One of the things we focus on is equitable access to opportunities for all our kids across the province. I know the Minister of Aboriginal Relations has worked very hard on this as well. One of the things that's happening is that the MOU between the First Nations in Alberta and the provincial government and the federal government has been progressing quite nicely, and a number of initiatives have come out of that. With the Truth and Reconciliation Commission that was just hosted, the last conference here in Alberta, our Premier and our minister made comments there, commitments that all kindergarten to grade 12 students are going to learn curriculum about treaties and about residential schools. That is just the start of some of the many great . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we had five points of order in the space of about 10 or 12 minutes. Over the next few days I'll be approaching all four caucuses as well as independent members to chat about coming to your caucus for a brief chat with each of you should you wish. I hope you'll accept my invitation to come and speak with you, and I'll start that almost immediately. Thank you for watching out for that.

Statement by the Speaker

Order Paper Revisions

The Speaker: A small housekeeping item before we go on with other business. The Clerk will call other matters in a moment. I would like to point out a minor change that will be made to the Order Paper due to recent changes to Executive Council. Today's Order Paper shows the former Minister of Municipal Affairs by name as the sponsor of Bill 6. The Order Paper will be changed to simply indicate that the sponsor of this bill is the Minister of Municipal Affairs, period, which is how the bill has been printed. Hence, the sponsor of this bill will be the current member of Executive Council who has responsibility for this particular ministry.

In 30 seconds from now we will proceed further with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The issue at hand now is members' statements. I would just ask all of you to please be as respectful as possible when members are delivering private members' statements. They have the full right and honour to be heard and listened to carefully, and typically we do not entertain points of order during these private members' statements. Let's see how we can follow that and have it applied today.

Alberta Health Services Consulting Contracts

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, today we released even more documents highlighting the culture of bureaucratic waste at Alberta Health Services. Yesterday, of course, we revealed the big number, $250 million on outside consultants in an 18-month period ending September 2013. Today let me give you an example.

We found out that a senior executive whose final day of employment with AHS was August 31, 2011, received a juicy consulting contract worth $250,000 the very next day. The executive, Pam Whitnack, was an executive VP since the superboard was created. She served in her role until the end of May 2011, when her position was abolished through restructuring. She stayed on the payroll until the end of August 2011, at which point she started a private consulting company called Whitnack and Associates. She also collected over $800,000 in executive pension, Mr. Speaker. According to our research Whitnack and Associates has received almost $350,000 in consulting fees from AHS for, quote, executive coaching, unquote. Whether or not her $250,000 contract is included in these payments or if it's on top of that amount, we don't quite know.

Mr. Speaker, here's the bottom line. An AHS executive VP was restructured out of her AHS executive position, handed an almost million-dollar pension package, and hired back the very next day on a sole-source consulting contract worth a quarter of a million dollars. This entire sordid example is precisely what is wrong with Alberta Health Services.

We've got lung cancer patients waiting twice as long for treatment as everyone else in Canada; we've got dialysis patients who can't get service in their cities and towns. There isn't enough money for these priorities, but there always seems to be enough money for well-connected health consultants. Albertans are tired of seeing their precious health care dollars flushed away. AHS is a disaster, and something must be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Education System

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are real problems in Alberta's education system, but they're being obscured by the confused debate over curriculum being staged by the PCs and the Wildrose. Chronic underfunding, huge class sizes, and lack of support for special-needs students are the real educational issues facing Alberta families. [interjections]

There are serious concerns about curriculum as well, but they have to do with the PC government's rushed overhaul and the undue influence of the oil industry over what kids will be taught. The Wildrose, armed with their drive-by educational experts, have been spreading misinformation about where these problems come from, suggesting that Alberta is no longer teaching basic math skills and terrifying parents about the direction of Alberta's curriculum. It's the height of irresponsibility, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta's New Democrats believe that schools need to teach both basic and applied skills. Children need the foundational math skills and also need to know how to apply them in the real world. We want to produce citizens who can think critically. That's something that the Wildrose, with their fundamentalist approach, would fail to do. [interjections]

In order to do any of this effectively, our schools need the supports and the funding that they've been denied by this PC government. Neither the PCs' sudden industry-led changes to the curriculum nor the Wildrose's attempts to whip up anxiety about the curriculum for political gain will solve the problem in Alberta's schools.

A proper investment in learning and in teaching is the answer. We need to ensure that our children have the skills that they need to become fully functional citizens. That is the commitment of Alberta's NDP.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, I specifically asked if you could please be polite and refrain from chatting, refrain from making noises, and all that kind of thing during private members' statements. Now, I'm sorry, but I have to cite Calgary-Buffalo. You spoke during almost the whole time. I know you didn't mean to; you got caught up with Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and someone else. But I would just ask you, please. Private members' statements are a very special time for private members, and we ought hear what they have to say, at least they ought be afforded the full opportunity, the dignity, if you will, to state their statements without any interruptions.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you did a good job getting your points out and hammering away anyway. Thank you.

Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Edmonton Ski Club

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About 50 years ago my brother Ross Dorward and I were at the opening week of Marmot Basin, Jasper, Alberta, an international skiing destination. Happy birthday, Marmot Basin.

Back in Edmonton here I had been skiing at the Edmonton Ski Club since I was six years old. In fact, I as well was a ski jumper, pretty much attending the club every weekend and several evenings during the week.

Today the club is in good hands, with Mr. Ken Saunders as president, his board, the staff, and the many, many volunteers that make it all possible. This not-for-profit club has been serving the people of Edmonton for the last 100 years. Consider this, Mr. Speaker: this club can be the hub of WinterCity recreational activities in the Saskatchewan river valley. As you know, the club is situated at the heart of the largest urban green space in North America, in the constituency that I represent, Edmonton-Gold Bar. Edmontonians from all over the city jog, bike, walk, and ski in the vast network of trails.

Mr. Speaker, this winter at the club many Edmontonians who have never skied, many from foreign lands, partook in Servus Free Friday, which provided them an opportunity to ski or snowboard. The stories are many, and the pictures are pretty special. Soon the LRT line will snake across the river from downtown to a station at the Muttart Conservatory then climb Connors hill en route to Mill Woods.

Thank you, city of Edmonton, for establishing the WinterCity strategy entitled For the Love of Winter. My colleagues in the Edmonton regional caucus will do all we can to support that strategy and support great places like the Edmonton Ski Club.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Peter Lougheed Leadership Institute

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perched above the townsite of Banff on the side of buffalo mountain is one of Alberta's best kept secrets and iconic institutions, the Banff Centre. From its humble beginnings as the Banff school of fine arts in 1933, the Banff Centre has evolved into one of the world's largest incubators of new art and new ideas. The Banff Centre's mandate has been to make art and ideas accessible and to encourage us to think dynamically, dream big, tackle the tough questions, and, most importantly, to lead.

Last September the Banff Centre announced its intention to re-imagine its leadership programming as the Peter Lougheed Leadership Institute. In the Speech from the Throne our government committed to help fund the creation of the institute, working with the University of Alberta and the Banff Centre. The Peter Lougheed Leadership Institute is part of a collaboration between the Banff Centre and the University of Alberta called the Peter Lougheed leadership initiative.

The announcement to invest $70 million over 10 years in the Peter Lougheed leadership initiative was made on March 6. New programming will be created for leaders, creators, and entrepreneurs in the public, arts and culture, social, and corporate sectors. Pilot programs in these areas will begin this summer. The institute will also support public school creative education, initially working with the schools in Banff and using technology to reach children and teachers across the province and nation.

It is our hope, Mr. Speaker, that the support demonstrated by the government will encourage the private sector and federal government to step forward and support this innovative initiative. The Peter Lougheed Leadership Institute will be officially launched at the Banff Centre later this year, positioning Banff, Alberta, and Canada at the forefront of global innovation for the 21st century.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Sue Higgins

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to honour an individual who was and always will be loved by the citizens of Calgary. As we have heard, Calgary recently lost one of our most original political personalities with the passing of Sue Higgins. Known as a colourful, hard-working, straight-talking fiscal hawk, Sue Higgins served southeast Calgary on city council for 21 years.

There are countless stories of her cigarette smoking and her direct manner of speaking. Sue Higgins could be counted on to speak her mind clearly. Many will recall with affection when over 15 years ago there was a discussion to change the term "alderman" to "councillor." In true Sue Higgins fashion her reply was: I would rather be known as an alderbroad.

While serving on council, Sue Higgins would walk the talk to understand the challenges of our city. She was known to go through budgets with a fine-tooth comb, and when she had questions, you better have had the answers. There is even a story that she worked a shift on the back of a garbage truck.

Mr. Speaker, today we acknowledge the strong woman who, through her sacrifice and service to the city of Calgary, changed the face of what we know council to be today. Known as a champion of her communities, she was committed to the people through and through. Her love of hockey, especially the Flames, was infectious, and she knew what mattered most to the people and acted accordingly.

Sue had a great sense of humour. For her retirement party she had banknotes made up with her picture on it, and the message underneath: more tender than you think. Indeed, she was more tender than you might think. She lived her life seeking to serve and help those in need. One of her final acts of kindness and service was to ask that instead of flowers, donations be made to the Calgary HandiBus Association.

We thank the family of Sue Higgins for their support and pass on our condolences. Sue Higgins knew to her core that living a life of service was the only life worth living, an example for all of us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the profound honour of standing at the Canadian National Vimy Memorial on Vimy Ridge. I have looked up in awe at the white towers, standing oh so tall, cutting sharply into the French sky. I have run my fingers over the names of some of the 11,285 Canadian soldiers killed in France, including those lost in this historic three-day battle that alone claimed the lives of over 3,500 Canadians.

I have witnessed relatives finding the names of their grandfathers and great-grandfathers on the memorial and breaking down, personifying the grief portrayed in the statues that so beautifully adorn the monument, that will forever remind the world of Canada's achievement and of our sacrifice 96 years ago today.

I have seen with my own eyes the trenches, the ground still scarred from the shelling, the landmines, and the souls of those lost in this battle. I tried so hard to imagine how it must have felt in those trenches, looking up at the ridge from below, your friends falling to enemy fire all around you, and to find the resolve and perseverance to keep fighting.

As I overlooked the very ridge where it is said that Canada became a nation, I tried to imagine what those soldiers went through, how it could have felt to leave my family, my loved ones behind to fight for the notion of peace and fairness in a world far, far away. The fear, the adrenaline, the anger, the uncertainty, all on unfamiliar ground for most would have been too much, yet all of this was overcome by the Canadian soldiers fighting shoulder to shoulder for the first time, who prevailed against the odds to win this historic battle that was to become a turning point for the Allies in the First World War.

For all time, this day and the monument at Vimy Ridge will stand as a testament to everything this country stands for: courage, sacrifice, honour, justice, and peace.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've noted the time on the clock, and I caught the eye of the Deputy House Leader, presumably seeking unanimous consent. I'm not sure.

Mr. Denis: I would ask unanimous consent to waive rule 7(7).

The Speaker: You've heard the motion. Unanimous consent would be required so that we can go past three o'clock to finish a few items on Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Let us proceed, then, with Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, with your tabling.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table copies of the names of over 26,000 people who have signed a petition calling on this government to stop consulting with large companies like Syncrude, Cenovus, and Suncor on the redesign of our province's K to 12 curriculum. Kindergarten to grade 3 in particular is a very formative time in a child's education, and it's outrageous and appalling to have oil and gas companies involved in developing and writing curriculum for our kindergarten to grade 3 students.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Centre or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've brought copies of a press release by Rocky View Teachers expressing their disappointment in three of their MLAs – the one from Airdrie, the one from Chestermere-Rocky View, and the one from Banff-Cochrane – for voting against Motion 503 and the establishment of GSAs in all schools where kids want them. They are sending three kids to Camp fYrefly as sort of their protest to those MLAs. I have a copy of that press release here, and I offer it to the page at this time.

The Speaker: Thank you. Was there another tabling on behalf of an hon. colleague?

Mr. Hehr: No.

The Speaker: Let's move on to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter dated February 4, 2014, that I had sent to the federal Justice minister and Attorney General, Peter MacKay, requesting additional funding for legal aid but also requesting a formula that does not discriminate against provinces like Alberta, which has had an explosive population increase. The letter also talks about how in the last 11 years there has been no federal funding increase to legal aid while our funding has continued to go up.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have tablings?

Mr. Bikman: Yes, please.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Bikman: I have a number of tablings and the requisite copies. The first is from Thaine Olsen, a constituent of mine in Magrath, commenting on the valuable STEP program, that was cancelled last year, and the impact that that's having on the community. I've also heard from others in the same vein.

Also, I have a letter from Brian Fozzard, president of Crowfoot Courier, talking about the 28th anniversary of his own little small business and asking us to "celebrate the strength of small business in our communities, by acknowledging the many women and men who dedicate their lives to this most worthwhile institution." Of course, we know the role that small business plays in our communities.

I have a number of tablings from Perry Reese and Brant Reese, patrons of the Sage Creek Grazing Association, commenting on the alarming, powerful, nonelected lobby group with the power to overrule federal and provincial laws in our country. He points out that those who take advantage of grazing leases are good stewards of the land and do a tremendous job of caring for the land, perhaps better than just leaving it alone since there is nothing to graze on it, and he talks about the injustice that this represents and the serious impact that it will have on leaseholders like him as well as on little towns like Manyberries, Alberta, that rely on the oil activity in that area and that will now be shut down.

Finally, tablings from a number of residents in the town of Raymond concerned with the situation regarding the Raymond elementary school, particularly as it pertains to the kindergarten class. Among them I have Jenn Ehlert, Kathy Kawade, Lyndsi Coppieters, Mike and Amelia Quinton, and one that I didn't include was from Brittany Clark. I have the requisite number of copies there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are now at points of order. There were a number of points of order raised today. I've referred to them once, and we're now going to hear them.

We'll begin with point of order number 1, which was by the hon. Member for Airdrie. If you would care to proceed with point of order number 1, we'd be happy to hear it.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were three points of order. I can deal with two of them at once and the other one separately. I don't know if it's okay to proceed that way.

The Speaker: Yes, please.

Mr. Anderson: All right. The first point of order, Mr. Speaker, deals with Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly the two issues that arose. They were the same issue, just spoken by different members. The first was the reference by the Minister of Human Services, calling the folks over here the lake-of-fire party. The second was by the leader of the Liberal opposition, who, when questioning the Education minister, I believe, called members over there in the PC caucus homophobes.

I'm going to share with you something, Mr. Speaker. There are members of this caucus over here and others that have gay and lesbian family members, there are members of this caucus over here who have immediate family members and spouses who are visible minorities, there are also appreciated and cared-for employees at the highest levels of our party who are members of the LGBT community and others who are visible minorities, and all of us in this Assembly have dozens and even hundreds of close friends and acquaintances from both the LGBT community as well as visible minorities. So I think that some people can imagine the hurt and the pain that it causes certain members in this House and their family members and friends when they are referred to as bigots and homophobes.

To make it clear, the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that our caucus over here – and I don't think there are many caucuses in here, if any, that would disagree with us on this point – passed a motion unanimously at the last Wildrose AGM of almost a thousand people that were there that said that the Wildrose will defend the fundamental rights of freedoms of all persons, that this includes but is not limited to the right of freedom of belief, public expression, practice, and association, and that these rights and freedoms shall be protected regardless of race, religious belief, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income, family status, or sexual orientation of that person or classes of people.

We may in this House, Mr. Speaker, disagree on the best ways to protect these rights and these groups, and also we may disagree on the best ways of balancing competing rights, which can be very, very complicated, obviously, when you have the rights of one group that in some ways come up against the rights of others in our society from time to time. We sometimes disagree on that, on what laws to pass or what ideas will work in balancing those competing interests. But make no mistake; in my view, there are no homophobes in the PC Party that I've ever met, there are no racists in the Liberal Party that I've ever met, there are no religious bigots in the NDP that I'm aware of, and none of those terms could be applied to anybody in the Wildrose caucus either.

I had a debate this morning with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on CBC Radio on Motion 503. It was a very respectful debate. If anyone knows the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, of course, she argues her positions very well, very strongly, and with great passion. She did so this morning with complete integrity and was as forceful as any argument that I've heard on this issue, but she did so without degrading the other side of the argument. I think that that's an example of how we should debate these issues.

The reason I say that is because when we use comments that are meant to divide us in terms of people who hate and people who don't hate, when we use terms like "bigot" and "homophobe" to describe other people on another side of an issue, what happens is that, ironically, when we do that, we're promoting more intolerance. We promote hatred and division, especially outside of this Chamber, by people who watch this and get really upset and think that the person next to them should be looked on with suspicion and so forth.

I would just ask that as we go forward in this Assembly, all members of the House – my caucus, the government caucus, the Liberal and the ND caucuses – refrain from using words to describe each other like "bigots," "homophobes," "racists," those types of words that are so awful in what they mean if applied to another person that it really is just something that does not have a place in this House and that we debate these things strongly but that we do so respectfully.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Member for Airdrie for his comments. With respect to the Minister of Education's reference to that party as homophobes, I would like to withdraw that on his behalf.

The Speaker: No, hon. member. You may have misheard. I believe it was the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the leader of the Liberal opposition, who made a comment to that effect, not the Minister of Education.

Mr. Denis: If I may, Mr. Speaker, on the second item that I wanted to just mention on behalf of the Minister of Human Services, I think this can be dealt with, with respect, by way of a point of clarification. This goes back to a member of their party who had said, "You will suffer the rest of eternity in the lake of fire, hell," and that was a reference to people in the LGBTQ community.

I recognize that no member of the caucus has said that. The Member for Airdrie didn't make that representation. But, similarly, I think that that's what the Minister of Human Services was referring to, and I think that that can be dealt with by way of a point of clarification.

I thank you for your time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else? Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. Member for Airdrie for his impassioned speech. I take what he says at face value, and I applaud him for the sentiments that he shared with this honourable House.

At the same time, if I look at our 23(h), (i), and (j) – and I'll refer to them – it says:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Those are the tests for a point of order to find a Member in this House in violation of the rules that we have set to govern ourselves in this House.

I guess that to put some context around the question asked by the hon. leader of the Alberta Liberals, he was asking his questions around Motion 503, which essentially read: be it resolved that gay-straight alliances be mandatory in all schools in this province where kids wish their existence, to have them. The reason for this motion and this question was that in Alberta we currently have a system of education that has private schools – some of them are private religious schools – public schools; public separate schools, which are Catholic schools; charter schools; and some francophone schools.

In that makeup of those schools there are different thoughts around sexual orientation and different values and mores ascribed by adults that in some instances may not allow for the children of those schools to start a gay-straight alliance. Those are facts. We can see that there are 40 gay-straight alliances in public schools in this province whereas, to my knowledge, there are zero – zero – in our Catholic system. There are zero at our private religious institutions. I think that is where the GSA . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, before we get a 459 on relevance and everything else, just restrict yourself to the point of order if you would, please. Otherwise, some would suggest you might be continuing the debate. So just zoom in on the point of order, please.

Mr. Hehr: I have to give context. I believe the hon. Member for Airdrie gave some context around his reasons for his comments, and I'd ask for the same leeway.

Okay. Hence, the question that was asked. If we look at the history of this province and the many people who have been here a long time, we have not been – largely the government party has not always openly embraced the movement of progress in this province towards tolerance and understanding. I think that's a fair comment, and the record understands that. It started when we were the last province to recognize sexual orientation in 2008. We then brought in Bill 44 shortly thereafter, which . . .

Mr. Oberle: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We don't normally do points of order during points of order. Is this about relevance?

Mr. Oberle: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: State your point briefly.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j) and the use of language that is likely to incite behaviour in this House, I would ask that you bring that member to order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Airdrie just eloquently, as this hon. member pointed out, put some context around his response to the issue at debate right here, which is a point of order, to point out that the use of the term that we're talking about is absolutely unacceptable, and it was right for him to put some context around it. Now, if this hon. member wishes to put some context around why it is, in fact, acceptable to use that term, I'm going to object to that. I think it's incorrect. There is an absolutely ridiculous, unacceptable term on the floor. The member just needs to withdraw it. Withdraw it.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I suspected this might be going in that direction, which is why I cautioned you not two minutes ago, and I'm going to caution you again. We're not here to prolong the debate. Please. [interjection] Now, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, listen, please. I'm going to allow you a very brief moment to sum up your point. You've got one minute. Go ahead.

Mr. Hehr: Essentially, if we look at our rules – and you're right. I was going through the long history of events here in Alberta, and maybe I got carried away with that as I'm prone to do regarding a topic that I'm very passionate about, the promotion of human rights in this province. I apologize to members if they were sensitive towards me going through the history of that. Now I apologize to the hon. member.

Nevertheless, there was nothing directed at a member. According to the rules in this House, with nothing directed to a member – if some people felt the hon. member was calling an individual member a homophobe, well, that wasn't the case – I would stand by the fact that this is not a point of order at all.

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, do you wish to chime in here?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity. This Motion 503 . . .

The Speaker: We're not here to debate 503. We're on a point of order, and it happens to be exactly about comments that you made, so if you could just zoom in on that, please.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, on this motion, on this issue, I wish to withdraw the words "in your caucus," and I apologize to the members if I offended anybody here. I withdraw "in your caucus," and I apologize. As you know, we are very passionate about the things that we discuss in the Legislature, and the passion here is expressed for the children. The hon. Member for Airdrie: I saw how hurt he was. I was watching outside. That's why I came running back in to withdraw those words and apologize.

With the passion of this bill and this motion, imagine if children are being called these words and the effect on them. So I make no apologies for my passion, but I do apologize if I offended anybody here.

Thank you.

3:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, two points of order have been raised at the same time. The second one deals with the comments made by the leader of the Liberal opposition, so I'm going to deal with that one first. I want to briefly just review what occurred here, and I apologize for the time. I know that estimates start at 3:30 and we're up against the time clock, but some things have to be said when making these rulings, so here we go.

At approximately 2:08 the leader of the Liberal opposition, among other things, said, according to the Blues, to the Premier: "Are you a placeholder Premier or a real Premier who puts children first by standing up to the homophobes in your caucus . . ."

Now, we've heard some debates and arguments on both sides of all of this. I'll talk a little bit more about it during the second ruling. We've also heard an apology and a withdrawal of certain words from the lips of the Liberal opposition leader.

But, hon. member, I wonder if you would like to reconsider and just retract that entire statement. That would make things a lot clearer and not leave any grey area, and I'm sure it would put the issue behind us. We all understand passion, we all understand heat of the moment, we all have made slips and mistakes, and others who have yet to make them I'm sure will at some point during their career here. So could I ask you to please just rethink and perhaps apologize for and retract that entire sentence?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, if it will please the Assembly, I'll retract the sentence.

Thank you.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

The Speaker: Let us move on to the second issue. This dealt with a comment made by the Minister of Human Services. The preamble to what I'm about to say goes back to about 2:01 this afternoon when the Leader of the Official Opposition said, "Mr. Speaker, the Human Services minister has also mused about becoming Premier." Then she went on to talk about avoiding the appearance of campaigning on taxpayer dollars and asked him to resign his position from cabinet. I intervened and talked about that internal party matters ought not be raised here. Then the Minister of Human Services said: "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What has a very rather undignified appearance, if the member so wants to know, is that lake-of-fire party over there trying to zip one day, zag the other."

Now, that sort of falls into that category of intemperate language. I'm reminded of Erskine May, page 444, with respect to maintenance of order, House of Commons. Under the heading Allegations against Members it states the following. "Good temper and moderation are the characteristics of parliamentary language. Parliamentary language is never more desirable than when a Member is canvassing the opinions and conduct of his opponents in debate."

Now, strictly speaking, the Minister of Human Services did not direct his comment to one single individual. However, I think by inference there was an implication made here, and I don't think it's an appropriate one, and I hope we won't hear it again. By the same token, I'm hoping we won't hear any intemperate accusations or false avowing of motives by members of the opposition against the government side because that knife slices both ways. You can't ask me for a ruling in favour of one when you're not prepared to accept a ruling against you perhaps another day. Please bear this in mind. I've spoken about it many times.

I'll save the House some time by simply asking the hon. Minister of Human Services or someone on his behalf if they wish to apologize and withdraw that particular reference.

Mr. Denis: I will withdraw that reference on the Minister of Human Service's behalf.

The Speaker: Thank you. That concludes that matter.

Now, we have two more points of order at least. The Minister of Justice.

Point of Order

Questions about Political Party Activity

Imputing Motives

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If it would please this Chamber, I think we can deal with both of these items omnibus.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. The citation deals with 23(h), (i), (j), and (l), familiar to many in this House.

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

And finally:

- (l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

Now, I basically have two statements. With respect to when I had risen – I don't have the benefit of the Blues that you do, Mr. Speaker – the Leader of the Official Opposition had indicated that there somehow were cuts in my department to an electronic monitoring program. There were no cuts. There were no such cuts. This particular program was a four-year pilot project that concluded on March 31, 2014. Subsequently, after I had spoken to the members for Red Deer-South and Red Deer-North and also some of the affected people, I had decided to continue this beyond that particular time. But to say that there were actual cuts is simply incorrect, and I would ask that the Leader of the Official Opposition please apologize and withdraw that particular comment. Again, I can table a document that proves there are no cuts. It was a $450,000 program over that particular time, and then we decided to extend it past the expiry date. But to say that there were cuts in this particular area is simply false.

The second comment that I will make is on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader and the minister of environment with respect to the Leader of the Official Opposition's comments dealing with party matters. I will not beat a dead horse, Mr. Speaker, because you did rule on this yesterday, but I would say specifically that this again was a deliberate attempt to make allegations and impute motives upon many members of the government caucus. She suggested using government business to put forward bids for the PC leadership.

I quote again, from the citation Beauchesne's 409(7) on page 121.

- (7) A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.
- (8) A question that has previously been answered ought not to be asked again.

Your direction yesterday, that I won't quote, Mr. Speaker, is on page 384 of Hansard, but you clearly stated that there are to be no party items discussed in this particular House. So I would suggest that with respect to the Leader of the Official Opposition it is a blatant attempt to sidestep rules in this Assembly. You ruled upon this yesterday.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure that you are aware, I want to point you also to Beauchesne's 193, which talks about a member that continually offends the practices of the Assembly, and Beauchesne's 193 you will find on page 55. It refers to: "In such cases Members who have breached the rules and who have refused to restore themselves to the grace of the House will not be recognized by the Speaker."

Of course, Mr. Speaker, dealing with our standing orders, Standing Order 24 deals with naming a member, and I'll leave that with you as well.

Mr. Speaker, I think this can be simply resolved if the Leader of the Official Opposition herself would rise in this House, would apologize, withdraw the remarks, and indicate that she will abide by your previous ruling. I do think that it would be incumbent to hear from her directly to explain the intent of her actions because no one can do that but her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the ankle bracelet funding issue I think, clearly, that's a point of clarification. The facts that we had before us, obviously, were why we were asking the question. We're, I know, very happy to see that the Minister of Justice is supporting that program going forward. Of course, our job as opposition is to sometimes light a fire once in awhile on that stuff. I think that's just a set of facts with maybe two different interpretations and so forth.

The second one was in regard to questions dealing with the race to be the next PC Party leader and, therefore, Premier. We did try. I know today the communications staff in our caucus and our party leader looked over your comments from yesterday, and we have tried to come up with a way that we can ask the question appropriately. We took out – for example, we added in "perceived" conflicts of interest as opposed to making accusations of conflicts of interest. We talked about perhaps resigning to avoid the "perception" of possible conflicts of interest. Hopefully, that was an appropriate change, but if that's not appropriate, then by all means please instruct us further on that.

Then with regard to – we didn't refer to the PC Party leader, of course, at this point. It referred specifically to the Premier's office, the head of Executive Council.

So we've tried to reword these things. Obviously, sometimes when you ask us to reword things, it can be difficult to make that balance. I know that if the Official Opposition leader said anything that went against your ruling last time, she would be happy to withdraw and, upon further instruction on the matter, pursue it using a different angle.

The key here is that there is a desire on our side, Mr. Speaker, if you can instruct us on how to deal with it, to just want to make sure that we can ask the government side about perceived conflicts of interest if they're going to run for PC leader. If that's completely out of the scope, well, then it's completely out of the scope. You let us know, and we will cease asking about it. But if you feel it is within the scope, then please instruct us as to the best way to pursue that line of questioning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations briefly.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are actually two issues at play here, and I think they're both rather important. The first is whether a member of the bench or a member of this caucus intends to seek the leadership of the PC Party. You have admonished repeatedly and, I believe, correctly that that is not a matter for discussion on the floor of this House. That's party business. However – and I think the opposition is right in this – whether or not a member, any member of this front bench or caucus, is in a conflict-of-interest position is indeed a matter for discussion on the floor of this House.

However, one cannot accuse somebody of being in a conflict of interest short of being able to table evidence that indicates the same. You have admonished repeatedly in this House that one cannot attempt to achieve indirectly what one cannot achieve directly, and that is an absolute attempt – and the clearest it has been so far is today, when they actually linked it to the situation with the ankle bracelet, that the Minister of Justice faced. It fell just short of an outright accusation but clearly linked that decision and the subsequent moves made by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to a potential conflict of interest because he may or may not be contemplating something else. That is clearly attempting to achieve indirectly what one cannot achieve directly, Mr. Speaker.

So it's not a matter of clarification. It's a matter of, I think, correctly requesting that the member withdraw those remarks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, hon. members, on the first issue, and recognizing that estimates have already started, about cuts to a program or no cuts, I've skimmed through what I could of the Blues. I don't have all of the Blues, hon. members. Truly, in the end I think the Minister of Justice has got his clarification on the record saying one thing and the Member for Airdrie perhaps saying another in support of his leader. I see it more as a note of clarification, and I think we're going to just drop that issue there. Perhaps this will be pursued further tomorrow – I don't know – but let's end that one right there as a point of clarification.

With regard to the second point, which is to do with party matters being raised, this one gets into a little more of the cut and thrust of debate. I'm well aware of the ruling that I gave yesterday. I not only thought about it before I gave it, but I phrased it in such a way to be particularly pointed and, hopefully, in a way to be particularly constructive, if not helpful, to avoid the recurrence of it in the future. I did note today that the Leader of the Official Opposition basically went down a similar vein but eliminated the word "PC," which clearly makes it very, very political.

Now, it's a very difficult thing to sit in the chair and try and judge just spontaneously whether something is in order or out of order: did it cross the line or didn't it? In this case I allowed considerable leeway, but you saw where it went, and then I had to stand up nonetheless because suddenly three or four points of order were raised. When you are skating that close to the line, hon. members, especially, in this case, Wildrose members, you are really tempting your own fate.

Again, party matters, internal party matters, financing of campaigns, that type of political stuff just does not belong in this Assembly. If you want me to make that hard, fast rule and curtail the debate, then I'll have to consider doing that. It not only takes up valuable time – and that is not constructive to anybody – but it also leads to the avowing of motives against others, and you could construe some of those as personal attacks because there's innuendo involved here. There's innuendo involved. Just because someone is a minister and perhaps there are rumours by the media or by the press, unconfirmed ones, that he or she may be doing something political in terms of their future doesn't necessarily make it so.

I would like to think and I would like to know that members who have taken that separate, special oath to be cabinet ministers would never put themselves at risk of doing something inappropriate. I just don't think that that's the case, and I'll bet you the same can be said of opposition members. In this case, raised by the Wildrose, I'm sure that nobody would appreciate questions or answers or statements being made about how you might be misusing your LAO budget. It could be said. It could be said in the same derogatory-type way, as an innuendo, and I would have to jump in and defend you in that case, and I would.

So in this case I'm going to ask you to remember just exactly what the Minister of Aboriginal Relations said because I have written it down here myself. You cannot do indirectly what is forbidden to do directly. Going around and skirting around it has to stop, and it has to end. So I'm going to ask for that for the last time, that you be very careful how you word your questions.

I'm fully in support of freedom of speech to the maximum. I'm pledged, honour bound, and oath bound to allow you to speak and speak and speak, and I do that. I do it to my own detriment sometimes, because I get nasty notes from both sides of the House sometimes. It's the most unpopular job in this Assembly – and you know it – because you can't possibly do a good job unless everybody is equally mad at you. You know, we joke about it at the Speakers' conferences. Then you know. That's why we meet is to console each other.

Let us leave that as a point well clarified and, hopefully, not to be visited again in the near future.

That having been said, I believe we're going to adjourn here so that estimates can carry on.

Was there another point? I'm sorry. There's one more point of order. My apologies.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: I'll keep this very short. It's section 23(h), (i), and (j) I'm referring to, specifically with regard to allegations against a member. There was a comment by the Minister of Infrastructure that said that I was on Treasury Board when the decision was discussed to approve the Federal building. It was in that context. That is not true. It was never discussed in my tenure on Treasury Board. The decision predated that time. I've been an outspoken critic of that office as well as many others in that PC caucus at the time. The minister continues to claim that that's the case, that that was discussed while I was on Treasury Board, that somehow I had any input into that decision. I would ask that he table an agenda of a meeting or meeting minutes or anything that would show proof of that. Otherwise, I would just ask that he refrain from making this claim in the future because it's just not true.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I'm not going to scare you with my memory here, but the Member for Airdrie was sworn into Treasury Board on September 15, 2009, the same day I was sworn in as parliamentary assistant for Energy, and he remained on there until January 4, 2010, when he decided to change caucuses, which is his right.

Mr. Speaker, I was not on Treasury Board at that particular time, but the member was just referring to the fact that he was on Treasury Board. I don't know what was discussed in that meeting. I don't know if you can actually table a Treasury Board document before this Assembly. I suggest that you probably cannot. Moving forward, I would suggest that this is simply just a matter of clarification because the member was on Treasury Board during the dates that I had indicated.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll deal with this fairly quickly. Here's what was said in Hansard, according to the Blues. The Minister of Infrastructure rose after the Leader of the Official Opposition asked him a question about "the integrity to do the right thing and say no to this very bad idea," that being with reference to the alleged penthouse that may or may not have been on the books for consideration. The Minister of Infrastructure stood and said:

Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the member is talking about documents that are made public, and the fact is that change orders don't typically go to cabinet. In fact, you know, if you want to talk about accountability, perhaps the leader could ask the person sitting on her immediate right – I tabled the documents in this House yesterday showing that he was on Treasury Board at least one and possibly two years when this item was discussed – and ask him. The fact is that he would know that not all change orders of projects actually go to Treasury Board. This didn't happen . . .

And it goes on.

Now, I have no way of knowing what happened at a particular Treasury Board meeting. Public record would indicate who the members certainly were, but nowhere would we know what the discussion might have been. A tabling says that a certain member was on there, so I'll take that member at his word, but by the same token, who knows if anybody who was in Treasury Board or some other committee meeting happened to be at a particular meeting where a particular item was discussed? We have no way of knowing that.

I think we have to accept two different versions of this statement right now and call this matter to a close. Just be careful, again, about allegations that we make and in particular if they're tied to accusations. Be very careful.

I'll close just by reminding everyone that there are numerous citations that you can look at, and the one that I'll just bring to your attention quickly is in Erskine May on page 445, where it talks about "the imputation of false or unavowed motives" that "prompt interference." There are other examples there as well. So please let's not have that be repeated again. That concludes that point of order.

Now, pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) we stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow, noting that the two committee meetings are already under way for Families and Communities. Estimates for Human Services are going on in committee room A and will be going on for some time, and in committee room B it's Alberta's Economic Future, who are considering the estimates for Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Tonight at 7 Resource Stewardship will be considering the estimates of Energy in committee room A.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:42 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. As we reflect on our work in this Chamber for this week, let us be thankful for the opportunity given to us by our constituents to serve them. Pray that we always be reminded of the trust they have placed in us to represent them, regardless of the issues that arise in this Chamber or in our constituencies. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us begin with school groups, starting with Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly 13 bright, young students from Glenwood school. The town of Glenwood is a small but beautiful community located in the foothills near Waterton park in my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. These fine and eager students are also accompanied by their principal, Kelly Thomas; his lovely wife, Kathy; and vice-principal, D.J. Scott. I would ask that our guests from Glenwood please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 90 visitors that we have today from Ralph McCall school in Airdrie. They're seated in the gallery today. I'd like to introduce their teachers first – Ms Pamela Burke, Mr. Robert Saipe, Miss Katie Kraemer, Mr. Brian Jackson, and Ms Christine Tatomir – as well as their parent helpers, Ms Andrea Quick, Mrs. Linda Sefcik, Mrs. Penny Diechert, Mr. Cory Fries, Mr. Patrick Parker, and Mr. Aaron Vance Bird. If everyone could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let's move on to other introductions, starting with Edmonton-South West, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Jeneroux: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two strong advocates for youth engagement in Alberta. Both of my guests attended our second youth think tank held at Government House on March 15 and gave their input on how government, in particular the Youth Secretariat, can engage youth. My first guest is an alumni member of the Youth Advisory Panel, Amber Moos. She is an advocate for mentorship programs, after attending the National Mentoring Symposium in Banff, and is a student at Vanguard College. With her is my very good friend David Rust, the director of community partnerships for the Society for Safe and Caring Schools and Communities, with whom I've had the pleasure of having many great discussions on the future of youth in our province. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four people that are joining us in the gallery. I'm not sure which side quite yet, but these are all people who work at one of the seniors' residences in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre and specifically that is The Churchill, now called the Revera Churchill. These are all AUPE members, and if they are in the gallery, would they please rise. It's Rhonda Wolfe, Kevin Tirimba, Nothando Mkwanarzi, and Eyerusalem Girmay. Oh, there they are. And with them somewhere is my friend Trevor Zimmerman, I hope. They have risen. I would ask that we please acknowledge the very hard work of people that are working in seniors' care in Alberta today. These are members of AUPE, and they are doing a stellar job for us, working with our seniors and vulnerable adults. They are up for a contract dispute, so I hope that's going to go well for them. Please join me in welcoming them today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my guest, Sonam Sharma. Sonam is part of the making change project through the Indo-Canadian Women's Association, which seeks to orient Canadian girls of Middle Eastern and South Asian heritage toward leadership roles in Canada's civic, political, and community life. They've recently concluded a needs assessment that highlights the barriers that restrict girls' leadership potential, and one such need is to find a female mentor and a role model in their field of interest. Sonam has expressed an interest in provincial politics and has asked to shadow me for a few days to see what it's like. Hopefully, she'll choose politics anyway. I would now ask Sonam to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two wonderful people that are close friends from my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod who live in the historic town of Turner Valley, Bob and Joan Weder. Bob is an engineer who is receiving his 40-year pin from the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta, known as ASET, here in Edmonton this weekend. He was also my chief northern district campaign director in the 2012 election, and his efforts along with his wife Joan's were exemplary. Joan is a long-time friend who spent many years working in downtown Calgary and also is a key volunteer in the Okotoks Agricultural Society. Bob and Joan are here in Edmonton today to tour the Legislature and also observe question period. At this time I would invite Bob and Joan to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the president and staff of the Edmonton branch of the Memory Keepers Association of the 1994 genocide against the Tutsis of Rwanda. I would now ask that the individuals please stand as I call their names: Rubarake Seth Muhima, president of the Memory Keepers Association; Emmanuel Kaviziya, vice-president; Marie-Gracia Mujiraneza, adviser; Marie-Claudette Kantengwa, adviser; and Uwamwezi Speciose, adviser. I would now ask that they receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four elected student leaders: Petros Kusmu, Navneet Khinda, Sean Glydon, and Chris Hollingsworth. These individuals are leaders in the student community and represent the best and brightest that Alberta has to offer. In fact, we had a good chit-chat, and I suggested that they serve with us in the near future as Liberal MLAs. They have been meeting with many members of this Assembly in order to advocate on issues important to Alberta postsecondary students and all of society: more funding for mental health programs; a return of the STEP program, in fact a super-STEP program; regulation on mandatory noninstructional fees; plus a massive investment in postsecondary education, just to name a few. I would ask these four leaders to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you, in fact, to all members of this august Assembly Beverly Eastham, Missy Chareka, Adam Woods, Shuna Talbot, and William Lau. These students are representatives of CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students. CAUS is an advocacy group representing over 100,000 Alberta students. Their leadership is crucial for Alberta's postsecondary students to have their voices heard. I would ask Beverly, Missy, Adam, Shuna, and William to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us begin with Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Rwandan Genocide

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty years ago a dark moment in humanity's history occurred, an event that must never be forgotten: the Rwandan genocide. In 1994 innocent Rwandans with dreams and some with families, people just like you and me, were slaughtered, murdered solely for political motivations.

In 1994 Rwanda was composed of three ethnic groups: approximately 85 per cent Hutu, 14 per cent Tutsi, and 1 per cent Twa. The ruling elite, due to mounting social and political tensions coupled with the debilitated economic reality, employed the use of propaganda to malign the Tutsi minority and defer attention away from the country's problems. On April 6, 1994, the plane carrying Hutu President Juvénal Habyarimana, often described as a dictator, was shot down. This was blamed on the wrong people, Mr. Speaker. Hutu extremists used the assassination as an opportunity to promote their intolerant ideological beliefs, scapegoating the Tutsis as the main cause of Rwanda's problems, in fact. From April to mid-July 20 years ago over 800,000 men, women, and children, sometimes counted up to a million, were massacred. Approximately three-quarters of the Tutsi population were lost.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here today because I believe we have a moral duty and privilege to stand up for the rights of those who, for whatever reason, cannot. I speak to the entire Assembly when I say that we must emphasize the things that unite us as human beings rather than highlight the superficial differences between us. At the end of the day, we all want to be respected, we all desire and need to be loved, and there's nothing more human than that. Let us never forget those lives that were pointlessly sacrificed 20 years ago. If we learned lessons, they were not lost in vain.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, before I begin, let me say a few words about Jim Flaherty. Canada lost a great friend today. Minister Flaherty was as dedicated and patriotic a public servant as you will find anywhere. His leadership as Finance minister helped steer Canada through the worst economic crisis we've seen in decades to a surplus budget and a very bright future. Our thoughts and our deepest condolences are with Jim Flaherty's family.

Flood Recovery and Mitigation in High River

Ms Smith: Since being elected in 2012 I've done my best to inform Albertans about how this government spends, misspends taxpayer dollars. In my home community of High River we see yet another example. Using outdated and incorrect 1992 flood maps, this government has made one particular decision that makes no financial sense, and it is extremely upsetting to the residents of High River. The flawed flood maps situate the community of Beachwood in the floodway. Because of this the government has determined that all of the homes in Beachwood need to be bought out at an estimated cost to taxpayers of $30 million. This will result in the displacement of 30 families and the destruction of beautiful, perfectly sound homes.

You might ask: but what alternative is there? Well, let me tell you. Over the past few years the community of Beachwood and the town of High River have spent more than $2 million building a berm to protect the community from hundred-year flood levels. This berm made Beachwood one of the better protected communities in High River. The estimated cost to do the necessary repairs to the berm is $1 million. Now, a responsible government would examine the updated flood maps – and yes, Premier, they do exist – spend less than a million dollars mitigating the future loss, and redirect the estimated $29 million saved to rebuild the homes, businesses, and community infrastructure in the rest of High River.

The first item of business our newly elected town council addressed was to determine how they would protect Beachwood with the town's own infrastructure money. After months of meetings between the town and the province the province has moved forward with their irresponsible plan to demolish Beachwood. Mr. Speaker, it's not too late for the Premier to do the right thing and reverse the decision.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Project Brock

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Brock Ruether, a 16-year-old boy from Fairview in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, collapsed in May of 2012 during an after-school volleyball practice. Emergency services were immediately contacted, and lay rescuers were instructed to fetch the school's automated external defibrillator, or AED. Tragically, no one on the scene felt comfortable using this instrument. So when emergency medical services arrived 10 minutes later, the device lay on the ground next to Brock, still unused. Brock was transported to a nearby hospital but passed away. He may have been saved had someone used this device.

Since Brock's death the Ruether family has launched a vigorously advocated awareness campaign lovingly named Project Brock. Brock's mother, Kim Ruether, is making it her mission to educate the public on AEDs and their ease of use. She has also partnered with the Regional EMS Foundation. So far Project Brock has placed AEDs in many schools throughout Alberta. She hopes to expand AED installations to all schools but also sees a strong need for these devices in all work environments.

Kim Ruether is also a strong advocate for education and awareness as her son's case is proof that merely installing an AED is not enough. Project Brock encourages schools to create their own training programs for students and teachers, and Kim makes presentations and demonstrates how an AED is used.

The Ruether family has made good progress on their project. They've started with the schools in my constituency, the northwest, and will go on from there, concentrating on small rural schools. Project Brock is encouraging governments to ensure that AEDs are available in schools and public places. I wish to recognize the Ruether family today for devoting their time and energy towards a very worthy cause by encouraging everyone to place AEDs in all areas of public use.

Thank you.

Successful Teams

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, our thoughts and prayers are with Jim Flaherty and his family.

Successful teams are highly accountable organizations. They're not connected through blind loyalty; rather, they are bound by a commitment to a set of principles and a shared vision that every member of the team has a role in contributing towards. Successful nonprofit organizations like Rotary have their values in a four-way test to advance their humanitarian efforts of service above self. Values and visions are also fundamental to the success of the 50 top managed companies, one of those being Avison Young, who, for example, prominently list their values as pillars of their corporate culture.

The Golden Bears hockey team's values are detailed in Wooden's pyramid of success and the belief that it is amazing what can be accomplished when no one cares who gets the credit and that you consciously practise good habits or you will unconsciously develop bad ones. The vision of competing play by play, shift by shift, game by game, season by season leads to success. Even with new players and coaching changes there is a consistent set of values, vision, and a culture of success.

This year General Manager Stan Marple and Coach Ian Herbers led the Bears to win their 51st Canada West title and record 14th national championship. Other national champions at the University of Alberta include Bears volleyball and Pandas rugby. These are student athletes and role models of success in both academics and athletics. Along with the accomplishments at the University of Alberta in science, technology, health, arts, and business, the Bears and Pandas contribute to this great sense of pride *for the university, the city of Edmonton, and the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Daycare

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As both a resident and representative of a young and growing community in Edmonton-South West I share with many of my constituents a concern for issues regarding child care. Neighbourhoods such as Southbrook, MacEwan, the Hamptons, Windermere, and Ambleside are home to many new families with young children. Understandably, the question of how to care properly for young children while also maintaining a livable income is a constant concern. For many of these families it is a requirement that both parents have steady incomes. The costs of modern home ownership, rent, and feeding a family are considerable.

It is equally understandable that these parents are also concerned about how they can entrust their children to reliable daycare services as they work to earn a living. It makes sense to me that daycare services operated on location at a parent's place of work are the easiest and most desirable option. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this is what many parents in Edmonton-South West have been telling me. Since transportation to the nearest child care facility is often an issue, being able to take one's child to work to receive care would alleviate a major source of worry for many parents. It is important that we do what is best for our kids first and foremost, ensuring that they are in safe hands while their parents work to provide for them.

There are also economic advantages to ensuring that child care is convenient and accessible. The simple fact of the matter is that readily available and trustworthy child care means more Albertans in the workplace. I am sure that all of us can appreciate the clear economic benefits of this. An investment in child care is clearly an investment in Alberta's future in more ways than one. It is an investment in our children. It is an investment in our bottom line for the shorter term. There are great child care services and facilities available, but I believe that there's always more that can be done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. members, could I just say thank you for the decorum you showed by listening carefully to all the statements that were just given. That was well done on your part.

Regional Dialysis Service

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was in Athabasca on Tuesday night at a very well-attended town hall meeting. The number one issue I heard about was the complete absence of dialysis machines for patients with kidney problems. Patients in Athabasca have to travel several hours to Edmonton or Lac La Biche for dialysis several times a week. Some have even had to uproot their lives to move to and live permanently in Edmonton. This treatment is relatively cheap and is potentially life-saving. To the Health minister: why is Athabasca being ignored?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Athabasca is not being ignored. Contrary to the premise of the hon. member's question, actually, dialysis is a very complicated procedure. Renal failure and renal disease affect increasing numbers of Albertans across the province, and we use a variety of methods to deliver that care. In many cases we do not have sufficient volume to establish an in-patient dialysis unit at a hospital. We use mobile dialysis. We use home dialysis increasingly to meet those needs.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the cost of a dialysis machine is roughly $50,000. To put that into context, that's about one-fifth of what AHS spends on executive coaching every year. It's just another example of the bloated AHS bureaucracy sucking up taxpayer dollars that are badly needed on the front lines for patients. To the Health minister: isn't it more important for Athabasca patients to get the life-saving treatment they need in their community than for a handful of AHS executives to beef up their resumes?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Education does an excellent job of advocating for his own constituents. In addition to that, he actually takes the time to try to understand and communicate the issues regarding health care for constituents in his area.

Once again, the citizens of Athabasca and the citizens of this province do receive the life-saving services they need. The patients themselves are the best testament to that, the front-line staff are the best testament to that, and any attempt to politicize that discussion does a disservice to all.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has also been a tireless advocate, and he's done so for dialysis patients. As a result of his hard work and public pressure, Lac La Biche now has five dialysis machines serving patients in their community. My question is to the Education minister, who sits at the cabinet table and is also the MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. Is he going to learn a lesson in public advocacy from my colleague, or do the people of his constituency have to elect a Wildrose MLA in order to get an MLA to stand up for their interests?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm a little bit speechless at what to even say to that. I work incredibly hard for my constituents. I think that many of them would be the first testament to that as they point to the many things that we've even announced in the Athabasca region in the last couple of years, including the school that was just announced and the pipeline training facility at Boyle or the twinning of highway 63, which the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills tried to take a little bit of credit for but is, of course, because of the good work of this government. That's where the credit lies.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister needs to have another town hall meeting in Athabasca.

Progressive Conservative Party Trust Account

Ms Smith: Last week I asked the Premier about government policy that allows the PC Party to do things which no other political party can do. Albertans are obviously concerned by the double standard in legislation that has allowed the PCs to grandfather in the TAPCAL trust. They are concerned about what is being hidden in the trust. I want to repeat my question to the Premier. Will this government do the right thing and immediately introduce legislation to fully disclose and permanently dissolve the TAPCAL trust?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to take this opportunity to recognize the contribution that Jim Flaherty has made to this country. I had the opportunity to serve with him when I was Minister of Justice and he was Justice minister in Ontario. I had an opportunity to work with him directly. He made a huge contribution to Ontario and to the country as a whole.

With respect to the TAPCAL trust I've talked with the president of the PC Association of Alberta and asked them to review the terms of the trust in terms of how it could be wound down. It should be clear that that trust was set up in legislation with respect to the transition from an old form of finances to the new form of finances. Anybody could have done it at the time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has stated several times that the PCs only take out the interest from the trust as required by law. That does not appear to be the case, however. Media reports suggest that in 1992 the PC Party removed $513,000 from the trust. That couldn't have been just interest. The Premier has had over a week to get briefed on this matter. Can he tell us what legislation actually prevents the PCs from adding funds to the trust or removing more than just the interest from the trust?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act makes it clear that any money that's raised for political purposes has to be done under the context of that act. The hon. member probably has had enough time to study that act to understand that as well.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We still don't know what the rules are regarding this trust because they don't have to report on it.

Mr. Speaker, the government might suggest that the creation of special loopholes to give advantages to the PC Party is something that happened a long time ago, but in 2012 the Justice minister made changes to election laws which make it illegal for political parties to have foundations with more than $5,000 in them, except that the government once again exempted the PC Party from that law. To the Justice minister: why does the government continue to pass laws that treat his party one way and all the other parties differently?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we have a Chief Electoral Officer in this province that every party agreed to very recently. His name is Glen Resler. If she thinks that there's something improper that's been done, I encourage her – in fact, I insist – to contact Mr. Resler and make a comment, make a complaint. We are not in the business of policing individual political parties in this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Actually, it is the Justice minister's job to create election law reforms.

Flood Advisory and Warning System

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, flood season is upon us again. We have had flooding in downtown Peace River and the Carstairs and Strathmore areas as well. Albertans want to know that we will have quality and timely information from our flood forecasters. Critics of our forecasting system have contemptuously called it now casting, meaning that residents don't hear that it might flood until it actually is flooding. Can the Premier tell us what steps have been taken to improve the quality and timeliness of information Albertans will get about possible floods?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an important question. I know that all Albertans do want to know what's going on. I can say that we are measuring the snowpack on a regular basis. I can tell this Assembly that the snowpack is a little bit above average. We've put more monitoring systems in place along our river system so that we have better measurements as the water rises. We're also putting in early-warning systems for communities downstream so that when we have the flood advisory from our experts, we can make sure those communities are made aware. We also are investing right now in making sure that all of our emergency supplies and the information we need are being updated as we speak.

Ms Smith: The current flood advisory system is deeply flawed. It only has three levels: high stream flow advisories, flood watches, and flood warnings. However, a flood warning isn't actually a warning; it's a statement of the blatantly obvious. By the time you get to a flood warning stage, you are already under water. Is any work being done to improve the system used to describe flood threats so that they actually provide meaningful and timely warnings in advance of the water breaching the banks?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we do have the monitoring in place. Again, you know, we can't predict the weather, but we do have more monitoring put into our rivers. I say to you that we have measured the snowpack. At the present time we do have some flood warnings and some flood advisories out because we've had heavy snow in our flat areas and very warm temperatures, which has created some issues. But I can say that most flooding is because of intense rainfall in the eastern slopes of the Rockies. We will have monitoring in place and people in place to make sure that people get the early warnings they need.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, one of the issues during last year's flood was the lack of timely warnings to the residents of High River. We were very lucky that the flood struck mid-morning rather than in the middle of the night; otherwise, the death count would have been much, much higher. Last week High River unveiled its new alert system, which includes direct notification and public sirens.

But I wonder what's happening in other municipalities. What steps have been taken in other communities to make sure that a middle of the night flood doesn't become a tragedy?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, as I stated, we're monitoring our rivers, especially in the June period of time, when we're going to see most of our flooding because we'll have snowpack melt plus rainfall. We'll have early-warning systems in place all along the river systems, and we'll have people on 24-hour alert to make sure that people get the advance notice that they need. But, again, understand that in last year's flooding, in 2013, the fact that we had 214 millimetres of rainfall in 24 hours was unprecedented, and the ability to have any idea what impact that was going to have downstream – it was very hard to predict.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Alberta Liberals our heartfelt condolences and prayers for Mr. Flaherty and his family. Thanks to him for serving our great country.

Health Care Performance Indicators

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we've heard a lot about the quarter billion dollars wasted by AHS consultants, but we haven't seen the latest AHS quarterly performance reports because the Health minister refuses to release them. Well, the Alberta Liberals FOIPed them, and I have them right here in my hand. Here's what they show. Heart bypass surgery wait times: fail. Hip and knee surgery replacement wait times: fail. Physician-staff engagement: fail. Patients admitted from ER: fail. To the Minister of Health. The doctors, nurses, staff will give you free advice . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we changed the performance indicators that we use to report on the performance of the health system some time ago, and we changed them in order that we could accomplish two things: that we could report on indicators that were actually meaningful to Albertans and, secondly, that we could report on indicators that were directly comparable to other provinces and territories. If we take the issue of hip and knee replacements, for example, we know that today Alberta is exceeding the national average in wait times for hip and knee surgery. Does that mean we're satisfied with today's performance? Absolutely not. We can do better. But these statistics that the hon. member was presenting out of context . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader. First sup.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They changed them from world-class 90 percentiles to averages, which hide their failures, and they still won't publish them every quarter.

Mr. Speaker, consultants aren't the only thing AHS wasted a quarter billion dollars on. The number of people waiting in hospital for an alternate level of care, including long-term care, has increased from 436 to 535. That's about another quarter billion dollars wasted by providing the wrong care. Warnings that privatizing home care and long-term care and that cutbacks to community supports would have both a high human and dollar cost have been ignored for years by this PC government. To the Health minister: can't you see that your failed seniors' policy is not only wasting money, hurting people . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, what this hon. member can't see is that the answer to every problem in the health care system is not simply beefing up resources in an emergency department. In fact, despite the increasing growth in this province, 140,000 people last year, we have seen a decline in the wait times for placement into continuing care of 37 per cent between 2009-10 and 2012-13. I think we're doing exceedingly well, or I should say that the front-line staff are doing exceedingly well, at reducing the time people are waiting for critical services while running the health system that is growing the fastest . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the minister is right. The health care staff are doing a great job; just the government isn't. By the way, your own record shows you're failing.

A quarter billion dollars on consultants, a quarter billion dollars on hospitalizing people who don't need to be hospitalized, and we haven't even mentioned the cost of delays in care. The half billion dollars that we have discussed is pretty close to what's needed to build a new Misericordia hospital that would serve all of Edmonton and northern Alberta. The Misericordia should have been replaced years ago. Instead, this government is throwing good money after bad in the maintenance of an old hospital. To the Health minister: will you commit to building a new Misericordia hospital? If yes, when? If no . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that all Albertans continue to be impressed by the level of attention that the hon. member is drawing to one of many hospitals, in fact, 99 hospitals, across this province. We have invested over $19 million in critical infrastructure repairs at the Misericordia. As I have said to this House before, and I'll say it again, we are well into the planning process for a new hospital for the city of Edmonton and to serve the larger capital region. That process is not going to be determined by this House; it's going to be determined by experts. We will continue to increase capacity at unprecedented rates in this country.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Student Gay-straight Alliance Requests

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Education minister asked yesterday for proof that any students had ever been denied the right to set up a gay-straight alliance in their school. Today it's come to light that the minister was not only aware of at least one such case; he actually wrote a letter to the St. Albert school board supporting just such a decision. Mr. Minister, can you please explain this contradiction?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the situation he's talking about happened two years ago. I am not aware of another case in the last two years. My understanding with respect to that case is that it was handled at the local level, which is where, we would submit, these things should be handled. We had a student who was in that situation. He brought that forward. He wanted to set up a GSA. The school board, the local principal, the administration recognized that they had an issue, and my understanding is that they've dealt with that issue to the satisfaction of all concerned. That's my understanding of the situation, and I haven't heard anything to the contrary in the last two years.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I didn't know that there was a statute of limitations on the truth. The minister has suggested to us that because his involvement took place more than two years ago, the proof that he asked for was not – I mean, I'm flabbergasted that he would kind of use that excuse for not telling the House the facts, that there are cases where GSAs are prohibited by schools. He was aware of it, and he actually wrote a letter to support it. Why, Minister?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the letter I wrote said that I was in support of the local school board making decisions that are appropriate for the local school. My understanding is not that the GSA was refused but that they dealt with the issue to the satisfaction of all concerned. One of the issues was, to my understanding . . .

Mr. Hehr: Wow.

Mr. J. Johnson: . . . and this is what happens in many schools . . .

Mr. Hehr: Wow.

Mr. J. Johnson: . . . that kids come forward with the bullying issue. But there are other students in need that have bullying issues . . .

Mr. Hehr: Wow.

Mr. J. Johnson: . . . and there might be a bullying issue in the school, so they want to set up a support group for all students . . .

Mr. Hehr: Wow.

Mr. J. Johnson: . . . and not be exclusionary to others in just setting up a GSA. Those are decisions that should be made at the local level. That's what was supported in the letter.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, one more "wow," and you'll be wowing with me.

The hon. leader for the ND opposition. Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, wow. The minister told us that there was no proof that kids who wanted to set up a GSA had ever been stopped by a school or a school board, yet he knew that there was, and he didn't tell us that. Now he's using weasel words to try to get around the fact that he did not give us a statement in accordance with what he knew to be true. So what is the problem, Minister? Why can't you tell the truth?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking the truth. I, obviously, in 2012 was aware that there was a student that brought forward a request for a GSA. I'm not aware of any outstanding issues with students bringing forward requests for GSAs that have been turned down, that have not been resolved to the students' satisfaction. My understanding was that in that situation it was resolved to the student's satisfaction.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Kindly curtail your preambles from here on in.

Let's go with Calgary-Varsity, then Calgary-Fish Creek.

Carbon Emissions Reduction

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent UN report warning of growing risks to health, economies, and food sources from climate change has intensified the spotlight on carbon rules. My constituents in Calgary-Varsity pay attention to this issue, and they're asking good questions about Alberta's role in reducing emissions and protecting social licence. To the Minister of Environment and SRD. Many of my constituents, including employees in energy companies, want clarity and certainty on carbon rules. Do you plan to strengthen the specified gas emitters regulation, up for renewal on September 1?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that, you know, we do have very clear rules in the province of Alberta about greenhouse gas emissions. We are the only jurisdiction that has a carbon tax. We are the only jurisdiction that has a clean energy fund. We are right now in discussions with all of our stakeholders across the province about future funding moving forward. Our greenhouse gas emitters regulations expire September 1, and we want to see a seamless transition moving forward.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: what plans does your ministry have to reduce carbon emissions by further improving energy efficiency policies, including demand-side management? How will you be consulting Albertans on these often very personal choices, and what's your expected time frame for coming forward with these policies?

An Hon. Member: Forty years.

2:10

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, it won't be 40 years. It will be a lot quicker than that.

I can say to you that we are looking at a wide range of options for energy efficiency, both commercial and residential. I'll be meeting with the tech fund board next week to talk about programs being in place immediately. Again, we understand that, you know, the eyes of the world are on us. As we look at market access and want to get our product to market, we understand that we have to be good environmental stewards. We'll meet that challenge.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: My final question is to the Minister of Energy. Following our budget review last night and her indication that the alternative and renewable framework is going forward, which everyone is very excited about, I'd like some more information for my constituents about the process for engagement and how the public will be able to understand what's going on.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Certainly, I have a round-table that I've organized for next week to talk to our stakeholders that are very interested in the A and R framework. I want to hear from them first within our energy-only market, electricity market, how they may see, first and foremost, how A and R may come through. [interjections] Then after we have that engagement, we'll have further discussion with regard to Albertans on that. First and foremost, those that are very interested directly are stakeholders. I want to get feedback from them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'd prefer you listen to the questions and the answers. The noise level is rising up a bit. It's been not too bad. Let's bring it back down. If you must converse amongst yourselves, do so quietly or go outside the Chamber.

Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Sherwood Park.

Alberta Health Services Consulting Contracts

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we revealed that a quarter million dollar contract was awarded to an AHS executive the day after she retired. The contract wasn't tendered but simply handed to her, no questions asked. Records show that the company set up by this exec was established on August 4, 2011, while she was still an AHS employee. Of course, doing business with a current employee is a no-no, so AHS waited until the clock struck midnight on quitting day before giving her the contract. Has the minister taken the time to review this information? Does he share Albertans' concerns, and if so, what is he going to do to fix it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I don't share and what my colleagues don't share is conjecture and a rush to judgment about either the value of someone's work or the circumstances under which they acquire that work. We start from the position that there are rules in place and that those rules have been observed. I have inquired about this situation with the office of the official administrator, and I'm waiting to hear from him. But I want to be very, very clear: these hon. members have presented exactly no evidence to suggest that anything here is untoward.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, minister. Just read the FOIP.

Given that yesterday in response to our question AHS didn't deny the fact, they didn't apologize, and, in fact, they vigorously defended it because shockingly – shockingly – the contract was apparently awarded in full compliance with policy, does the minister agree that a policy that allows the gifting of a quarter of a million dollars to an executive who retired the day before is a pretty shoddy policy that needs to be revised?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I will say is, as I indicated, that I'm in some discussion now with the official administrator about this. What I did learn yesterday, that I think all members would be interested in, is that $200 million of that $250 million in consulting contracts was for IT systems, IT systems that consolidated the former health regions into one, that saved this organization $660 million in administrative savings over a similar period. I think that's a pretty good return on investment.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'll tell you what a good return on investment for your IT is. Wait till we bring forward the whistle-blower.

Given that reports say that the same former executive still has executive coaching contracts on the books, does the minister actually believe executive coaching is a priority for Albertans?

Mr. Horne: What I believe, Mr. Speaker, is that we have a responsibility as elected representatives not to use this Chamber to besmirch the reputation of any employee, whether they're a senior executive or front-line staff, and not to run roughshod with conjecture about policies and procedures that, obviously, the questioner doesn't understand. As I said, I've inquired with the official administrator about this particular contract. I will satisfy myself as minister that the appropriate rules have been followed in this case, and I thank the hon. member not to use this Chamber inappropriately for that purpose.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That's what points of order are for, if necessary.

Strathcona Community Hospital

Ms Olesen: Mr. Speaker, my constituents have been waiting many years for a hospital to serve the nearly 100,000 residents of Sherwood Park and Strathcona county. While it is good news that the new facility is finally ready to open, there are some concerns with whether this facility is actually a hospital and whether there will actually be an increase in services. To the Minister of Health: how can you call this a hospital given the fact that it will only provide limited emergency services and that residents of our community that need care for more than 24 hours will be taken to facilities in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'd certainly like to begin by thanking the hon. member and her colleague the hon. Associate Minister – Seniors for their advocacy. They have worked very hard to bring this project to completion.

This is a $130 million project that will see some of the most advanced care that's provided in our province. The facility is in fact an approved hospital or will be designated by myself as an approved hospital under the Hospitals Act. It includes many features, most notably a 24/7 emergency department supported by 27 beds, something the community identified as their highest priority.

Ms Olesen: To the same minister: what kinds of services are being provided at this facility, and how are they different from what we have now?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a growing number of places but relatively few places across the province that will offer the range of services that will be available at the Strathcona community hospital. In addition to the 24/7 emergency department, the hospital will feature a CT scanner, ultrasound, and X-ray services. There will be a number of outpatient specialty clinics that will eliminate the need for residents to come into Edmonton to receive those services. IV therapy, women's health, teen health, and seniors' health are among the other programs that will be offered.

Ms Olesen: Finally, to the same minister: my constituents are adamant about the importance of phase 2 of this hospital. Will there be a reconsideration of phase 2 of the hospital as Sherwood Park's population continues to grow?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member would understand that when we undertake studies for health facilities, we seek to build health facilities that will meet the needs of residents today and well into the future. We believe we have accomplished that with the Strathcona community hospital. We do have room on the site for future expansion if and when a need is determined for additional services to be made available. But I can't stress enough how much this model of care represents the state of the art in 2014 and takes us a long way from the traditional hospital model of the 1970s and '80s.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Traffic Court Reform Initiative

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know this Justice minister is considering some radical new changes to Alberta's traffic court system. Under a so-called New Age plan citizens accused of traffic offences will no longer have the right to appear before a court. Officers who issue tickets will no longer have to attend hearings, and no evidence would ever need to be called into question. Albertans from across the province are sounding the alarm against this minister's plan, saying that it's an attack on their basic, fundamental civil liberties and rights. To the minister: why are you so insistent on taking away the rights of Albertans?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, virtually nothing that that member said here is actually true. We've just embarked on a consultation, which ended March 31, asking people, asking traffic commissioners, lawyers, police officers, the public at large what their experience has been with traffic court. We're tabulating the responses, but there's only one thing that we've decided. You'll always have the right to fight a traffic ticket in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under the minister's proposed changes anyone challenging a traffic violation would appear before a government-appointed adjudicator, not a court, and any further appeals would be heard by an administrative tribunal, not an appeals court, how can the minister guarantee that this new process will treat Albertans with the same procedural fairness and equality that the courts would afford?

Mr. Denis: I'm not sure that this member heard my answer the first time. There have been no decisions made as to traffic court reform other than the fact that you will have the ability to fight a traffic court ticket in Alberta, period. We will look at some different changes, Mr. Speaker, but none of that has been decided, so this member can stop this fearmongering.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under the minister's proposed changes rules of evidence and procedure as well as a presumption of innocence and a right to face your accuser would no longer apply and given that experts from across the province resoundingly say that these changes will violate the basic rights and civil liberties of Albertans and encourage them to plead guilty, will the minister do the right thing, listen to Albertans, and reverse course on his outrageous plan today?

2:20

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the same question and again the same answer. There's nothing that's been decided other than the fact that Albertans will always have the right to fight a traffic court ticket. The one thing I'll let this member know is that since 2008 in this province with more and more people, who keep moving to this province because the government is so good, what has happened is that in some cases you've seen traffic court lead times increase more and more and more, about two and a half times in the city of Calgary alone. It's about access to justice. This member still practises law. Maybe he should know about that. [interjections]

The Speaker: At this time we'll move on, please. Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I know where all of the government's communications money is going. It's going to invent a new language in the Justice ministry under their proposed traffic court reform. The old guilty plea that used to go on your record along with demerit points will be called a discounted fine. A person who is not a judge or a JP is called an adjudicator, but they can't judge or adjudicate anything. A breach of natural justice is now called efficiency. To the Minister of Justice: why is the traffic reform written so that people believe they can still challenge a ticket in traffic court when, in fact . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't sure that this temperament was in the Wildrose caucus. It's quite interesting about that. Notwithstanding that, I'll say again, for the fourth time today, that the only thing that is not being considered is the right to fight a traffic ticket. Currently the system uses very few judges. They use justices of the peace and traffic court commissioners. I don't know if this member or other members have issue with that at all. Procedural fairness as well as the right to fight a traffic ticket in Alberta is not at issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that for the most part, the majority part, minor traffic offences are not in criminal courts – they are in the traffic court system – and given that courtrooms in Alberta sit empty for lack of judges, clerks, and prosecutors, why does the minister's consultation document indicate that his new model would free up criminal case courtrooms? [interjections]

Mr. Denis: I'll tell you why . . .

The Speaker: I wonder if we could just keep the noise level down, okay? I appreciate that there is a good question.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, come on.

The Speaker: Now, I don't care if you're offended or not, Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I know you don't. They're just clapping.

The Speaker: I'm trying to tell you that I just would like the noise level brought down. If not, then you'll have to forfeit a question.

Let's have an answer, please.

Mr. Denis: In one word, Mr. Speaker, because it will. Often traffic measures can be heard before a Provincial Court judge, particularly outside of Calgary and Edmonton because there simply isn't the volume there. On top of that, matters in traffic court that deal with Charter appeals or deal with criminal offences are already heard before a Provincial Court judge. On top of that, they still use the same buildings, the same security, the same court clerk staff. If this member would like a tour of the courthouse, I'd be happy to arrange that for her.

Ms Blakeman: No. I understand the difference between the two courts. That's okay.

Back to the same minister: what does the minister have up his sleeve next? We've already had property taken away, like an innocent grandma's condo, and sold on the basis of suspicion of illegal activity; people pleading guilty in order to get their licences restored and to get their car back in less than a year; and now a proposal to take away a person's day in court. Mr. Minister, what's next? [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: You know, what I find particularly offensive is when I've just asked for something to be done and then you purposefully ignore it and go up even higher over the top. Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, for example, you were the loudest. I'm sorry, but I find that highly offensive, and if it happens again, I'm going to have to deal with you. Okay?

Mr. Anderson: Point of clarification.

The Speaker: A point of clarification has been noted. Let's finish up. [interjection]

Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of clarification has been noted, all right? Sit down and zip it up. [interjection] Sit down and zip it up. I'm not having a debate with you.

Let's go on with the answer.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What's next is that we as a government will continue to build upon our record of access to justice but also procedural fairness and improving court times and looking after safe communities. Many of those things this member had already alluded to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Misericordia Community Hospital

Mr. Eggen: Thanks.

Some Hon. Members: Shh.

Mr. Eggen: Oh, no. I want a little bit of noise. Come on, you guys.

At the Misericordia hospital it's not just sewage leaks and faulty gas lines. On average twice a day staff are forced into crisis overcapacity management. Documents that Alberta New Democrats released today show that the Mis was running over capacity almost 600 times in the last 14 months. Almost every day this hospital is either out of space, understaffed, or both. To the Minister of Health: Edmontonians find this situation completely unacceptable. Why don't you do something about it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are and have been working with Covenant Health for some time to address the issues at the Misericordia. I can't count the number of times now that I've been asked and have answered these questions in the House. A $19.2 million commitment to critical infrastructure repair at the Misericordia is a major commitment, knowing, of course, that there is a limit to the remaining useful life of this facility. It is one of the oldest facilities in the province. It is also in one of the highest demand areas of the province. We will continue to invest the dollars that are necessary to keep things operational at the Misericordia.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that overcapacity means five patients in a room, overcapacity means that not all the essential equipment is available that patients need, and overcapacity means many more patients for the same amount of staff, can this minister then explain why, yet again, funding to start building a new Misericordia hospital is missing from this year's budget?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, one thing I want to make very clear – and I certainly acknowledge the infrastructure issues at the Misericordia, and I have thanked the staff in the past, and I will thank them again for their ability to cope with those particular challenges. But at no time has the quality of care that is delivered at the Misericordia hospital been in question. It is not in question today. It was not in question a year ago. It was not in question 10 years ago. We see demands at the Misericordia that we see at other major hospitals across the province. The short-term issues have been addressed by a $19 million commitment. The bigger issues of new hospital capacity for Edmonton . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, given that overcapacity is chronic at the Misericordia hospital and this government has put in no plan to build that capacity, can you really blame Edmontonians for suspecting that this PC government has no intention to build a new, west-end, full-service, active treatment hospital now or in the foreseeable future?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the plans that we have under way are the same plans that I've described in answers to previous questions. We are looking at infrastructure hospital needs for Edmonton and for the capital region today. The issues around infrastructure at the Misericordia are serious issues. They are short-term issues. The longer term planning is well under way, as I've said, for the Edmonton zone. We will be looking at opportunities across the capital region that we need to capitalize on. In the short term our commitment to the Misericordia stands.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Infrastructure Planning and Maintenance

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As of November the Good Shepherd elementary school in Edmonton was listed as having a good facility condition rating by Alberta Infrastructure, yet – yet – the roof was leaking and dangerous black mould was growing. This government's negligence resulted in students' learning being disrupted as they were forced to relocate. This comes on the heels of sewer backups at the Wainwright hospital and significant deficiencies at the Misericordia hospital in Edmonton. Will the minister of black mould and sewer backups tell Albertans why these are not government priorities? [interjections]

2:30

The Speaker: Really? Really, hon. member? How old are we? Do you want to rephrase that question in a proper way, or would you like me to just shut it down right now?

Mr. Barnes: Will the minister responsible for the black mould and the sewer backup please tell Albertans why this isn't important?

The Speaker: I assume there is some minister here who knows what he is talking about. Go ahead and answer, Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for pointing out in the course of his question the wide range of infrastructure that this government provides for the citizens of Alberta: many schools, many hospitals, and many other things. Part of that process is to get the most life out of those facilities that we can. The other part is to look after them. The hon. member does point out a legitimate problem at the Good Shepherd school. We are working on it. He is right to point out that it has caused some disruptions. The fact is that we're dealing with it, and we'll get the kids back in the classroom. It's an important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Talk is cheap. Given that this school was rated as good and given that by this government's own standards students were sentenced to attend a school infested with black mould for an unknown amount of time, will the minister explain why this government prioritized $250 million on PR consultants rather than providing a safe environment for our children and our students?

Mr. McIver: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member pointed out that we had the children out, so we did provide a safe environment. What we're sentencing Alberta children to are new classrooms, improved classrooms, classrooms that he and his party wouldn't be building if they were here. [interjections] We're building Alberta. We're putting the infrastructure in place because Alberta's kids matter. We have done that, and we'll continue to do that as part of building Alberta. The member should get onboard. His constituents might even appreciate the support for the schools that they need. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member, as soon as the rest your caucus silences a bit, why don't you proceed with your final statement.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, we would build and balance the budget.

Given that this government has not been a good shepherd to the students at Good Shepherd elementary or a good steward of Alberta's provincial infrastructure, when will this PC government eliminate the $817 million in deferred maintenance to the province's schools and the over $1 billion in deferred maintenance to our hospitals?

Mr. McIver: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, Albertans will want to know that our operating budget is fully balanced.

The hon. member talks about what they'd do, but their plan has a $4 billion hole in it that they cannot explain. Our government, meanwhile, continues to build new infrastructure and look after the old infrastructure. I can tell the hon. member and all Albertans that we will never be fully caught up on our infrastructure repairs because Alberta keeps growing. We keep building new things, and we keep going back and repairing the old ones. It's a process that won't end, and thank goodness we're here to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Land Annexation Process

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the city of Edmonton arbitrarily announced that it was planning to acquire some 38,000 acres of Leduc county, including the International Airport, by a hostile annexation bid. This move would gut the economic base of Leduc county and affect the bottom line of the city of Leduc. As well, it would stifle the future expansion of Nisku industrial park. It's all being done in the name of subsidizing Edmonton residential tax rates. My constituents are angry. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can Edmonton just wave its fingers and make this happen, and will you allow it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question. As the province continues to grow, we're seeing incredible growth pressures on all of our municipalities: our big cities, our mid-size cities, and other communities. As part of that, annexations are becoming more and more of a reality. No one can wave their fingers and create an annexation. It is an incredibly complex process that requires the discussion of all the parties, including the municipalities and the landowners, to come to agreement on how this can proceed.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: Mr. Minister, what can my constituents do to have their voices heard in order to express their utter displeasure and opposition to this tax grab by the city of Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time there has been no annexation application made by the city of Edmonton. Any municipality wanting to annex land needs to negotiate with the other municipality. They've got to consult the public. They've got to consult the landowners. Anyone objecting to any one of these can file an objection with the Municipal Government Board.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: Mr. Minister, what measures are you taking to bring some sanity to this process and to find a reasonable solution?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is actually a very long and complex procedure, and it does require the parties to work together. Nobody will be making a quick annexation of anything without properly negotiating and working with all of their neighbours to ensure that all of the municipalities are treated fairly through the process.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-East.

Life Skills Education and Training

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's rapidly growing economy is both a blessing and a challenge. For people who know how to work and want to, there are plenty of choices. For employers looking for help, there's a chronic shortage in some areas. They've told trade schools: you're doing a good job teaching apprentices how to perform trade tasks, but some lack life skills. Would the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour please tell us what's being done to help in this area?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal government and our provincial government are working very closely at making sure that the skill gap that exists in our country right now is narrowed as much as possible because it is our common number one priority that all jobs that are being made available in Canada should be made available to Canadians first. But in collaboration with the Ministry of Human Services there are a number of programs like Women Building Futures that we have in place, where we not only bring unemployed Albertans to employability but provide them with the wraparound services that allow them to stay employed and help them to deal with some of the life issues that they may be facing at this point in time.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that employers and their customers need associates who know how to show up for work on time, are reliable and trustworthy, are self-motivated, and have the capacity to learn, what is the Education minister doing to see that high school students have these characteristics by the time they graduate?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a great question. There are a number of things happening, including some of the great programs that are in our high schools in terms of the dual crediting programs we've just announced here this last year, where industry and K to 12 and postsecondary were blurring the lines between those: the RAP programs, the career and technology studies, and the career and life management skills program, which is high school. Really, it's about relevant learning to make sure that kids are prepared to enter into that global economy, which is one of the reasons that we actually want to talk to the global economy players as we develop our education system, which is another step we're taking.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that children need to learn to be accountable for the consequences of their choices, does the minister think a curriculum redesign could be modified to include ensuring that all graduates from high school have the life skills necessary to prepare them for postsecondary education and employment in the real world?

Mr. J. Johnson: I think that's a very good point, Mr. Speaker, and it's absolutely one of the things that Albertans have asked us to look at and one of the reasons that we want a broad perspective from Albertans as we do some of the curriculum and ongoing work. Let's be clear. This is not inviting big oil to come in and write curriculum but letting all Albertans and people from the business community and those leaders that see what kind of skills our kids need or might be lacking to succeed once they get out of our education system. We're taking that very seriously, and we're listening to those views of parents and others around Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Little Bow.

Home Care

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a constituent who has been trying to get home care for her sick husband, who is 92 years old. It took five days for her to speak with home care, and she was told it is a two-months-plus waiting time for an in-home assessment. Even when an emergency request was put in by an emergency room doctor, it took a week for someone to contact her. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health. How is this acceptable in this great province of ours?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I can't speak to the specific situation the hon. member has raised, I would certainly agree it is not acceptable. What I can tell him is that on average clients are seen for home-care referrals within two to five days, and of course when an immediate need is identified, the prospective client for home care is seen immediately. Often these assessments take place in the hospital prior to discharge. As the hon. member points out, it's very, very important that we also pay close attention to community referrals, that Alberta Health Services receives every day.

2:40

The Speaker: Thank you.
Hon. member, first sup.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to fix this obviously broken system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't necessarily agree that the system is broken. What I would tell the hon. member is that Alberta has increased home-care funding by 25 per cent since 2010. I would venture to say that that's among the highest increases you would find anywhere in Canada. I can also tell the hon. member that the number of home-care clients in 2012-13 was over 108,000 province-wide. This is a challenge that we face as a province that's growing rapidly, and we do need to work to improve the timeliness of care.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, if it's not broken, it's not working properly. So how can we expect the home-care service to be operating the way it is intended to and that those in need will be receiving the service that they desperately require?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely, the majority of patients across the province and all patients who need care urgently, including home care, are receiving that care. Obviously, in the case of this hon. member's constituent the timeliness of the service was lacking, and I'd be pleased to look into that one individual case for the hon. member. But it's important to note, as with other health care services, that home care is delivered on the basis of the urgency of the client's needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go on with private members' statements, could I just draw your attention to the MLA for a Day brochure that was put onto your desks? We are undersubscribed at the moment, the same as we were last year. Only 34 out of 87 constituencies are represented at the moment. I'm sorry, but the deadline is actually tomorrow, so if you could get something to us, we could maybe hold it till Monday or something along that line. Please do your best to publicize this program again. Thank you.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with Members' Statements, starting with Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, your member's statement.

AISH Wait Times

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are roughly 46,000 Albertans receiving AISH. In 2012 the province increased those benefits by $400 per month. This was especially helpful in my constituency. The cost of living in Fort McMurray far outstrips anywhere else in the province. However, I spoke to agencies and recipients in my area and was told that the length of time to qualify for AISH can be up to a year, depending on the worker assigned, and that even then they may be denied.

I was told about a single mom currently supporting her family on $400 child-support payments while she waits, and she applied months ago.

Many of you know my chief of staff, Nickola Walker. Nicky works hard supporting me and the Member for Calgary-Foothills. She sits on numerous boards and is generally just a busy body. You may also know that she and her partner, Patrick, have four beautiful children. As Nicky says: they keep us hopping. Well, what you might not know is that Nicky's mother, Virginia Hoffarth, from Monarch seemingly suffered a stroke in September. It was later determined that she developed late-onset MS. Virginia is no longer able to drive a school bus, which she did lovingly for many years. She cannot perform her previous job as a RITE operator at the Claesholm care centre, a position that she held for over a decade. She finds her illness has greatly decreased her ability to perform even simple functions.

So Virginia sought AISH funding. She didn't want to. She's a proud southern Albertan who doesn't believe in money for nothing. But the excessive length of time to qualify has left Nicky's family financially supporting her.

The Member for Little Bow has also tried to help. He visited them, wrote letters, and made many calls, but it seems nothing has helped. Virginia's AISH worker has said that they're five to six months behind. Virginia, luckily, has a family who is able to come out and help where they can.

But what about other Albertans who do not have that assistance? I worry that these most vulnerable Albertans are waiting such excessive periods to receive funding. While I applaud the decision to increase the payments to AISH recipients, what good is it if people can't actually get it?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, did you have a notice of motion you wanted to give today regarding written questions, perhaps motions for returns for next week?

Mr. Denis: Yes.

The Speaker: Do please proceed.

Mr. Denis: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, April 14, 2014, written questions 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 10, 11 as well as 15 up to and including Written Question 41 will be accepted. I further advise this House that written questions 3, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, and 14 will be dealt with.

Also, on Monday, April 14, 2014, motions for returns 2, 3, 7, and 8 will be accepted, and motions for returns 1, 4, 5, and 6 will be dealt with at that juncture.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of.

Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance I request leave to introduce Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed act will amend our personal and corporate income tax acts to accommodate technical and administrative changes that parallel federal government changes that have been a long time coming. The proposed legislation also implements a tax regime for qualifying environmental trusts to help facilitate the accumulation of funds for future reclamation of pipeline and oil sands sites. These are revenue-neutral changes and will encourage the creation of trusts here in Alberta, where the majority of pipeline and oil sands activities occur.

Proposed changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act will prevent unintended tax increases resulting from federal changes to the dividend tax credit system. Other amendments are for housekeeping purposes that preserve the integrity of our tax system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Bill 205

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Animal Protection (Prevention of Animal Distress and Neglect) Amendment Act, 2014.

Bill 205 would increase the fines and/or impose imprisonment on individuals perpetrating excessive abuse or neglect of animals. I've heard from many in my community as well as across Alberta that the horrible acts of animal owners such as those that occurred in Calgary in January of this year and the horrible loss of Quanto, the police dog, as well as many others do not carry a stiff enough penalty. I'm urging my colleagues to consider this bill. It sends a strong message that severe abuse and neglect will not be tolerated by Albertans. It is a moral and personal shameless audacity to see these horrible acts inflicted on the helpless and dependent animals that share our lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood 50 of over 4,000 postcards our office has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards, collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, are clear evidence the government is not listening to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary system that is both affordable and accessible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. On behalf of my colleague for Calgary-Buffalo I'd like to table copies of a media report around a young man who tried to start a gay-straight alliance at his high school but, in fact, was turned down. The high school said, "It's simply philosophically not who we are, or how we come to be as a community that is in solidarity with everybody's need at the same time." It also mentions that the Education minister said that he wasn't aware of the boy's attempt to start the GSA.

The second two tablings that I have are related, Mr. Speaker. The first is a copy of the second-quarter report AHS Performance Dashboard Q2 from Alberta Health Services. These, obviously, are available internally but haven't been released externally until now. The second is the appropriate number of copies of the AHS measurement dashboard from the third quarter, which actually was the 1st of March 2014, but we'll release it now, in mid-April.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we had one point of clarification requested by Airdrie. He has since withdrawn his need for that to be responded to. We also had a point of order by the Minister of Justice, and he, too, has asked that that be withdrawn. Other than that, I have no other points of order, so we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Weadick]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise as the Liberal opposition critic on Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014, and say happy things about it, which doesn't happen very often, so we should all celebrate. [some applause] Thank you very much.

You know, I was very keen about the new home warranty program when it first came out because I'd campaigned for it for a long time, five or six years. What we were finding was that with the normal warranty period that was granted to single-family homes but in my case to condominium buildings or to multifamily buildings, to townhouse sorts of accommodation, or even to multifamily rental buildings, the warranty would run out before the problems were discovered because the problems were often internal and pretty severe.

We are still finding condos that have discovered that their balconies or their windows were leaking and that the water is running internally through the sort of wooden skeleton of the complex, and it's rotting out floors and the coverings on the decks and the walkways. By the time you figure this all out, it's a mess, and the people are having to pay for an inspector to come out and go: yeah, it's a mess. Then you've got to have people come out and tell you how much money they think they're going to have to charge you in order to fix this.

Honestly, it was just to the point of absurdity. People had the single biggest purchase of their lives. They'd gone out and bought this condo. It's everything they had. They're maxed out, you know, doing their condo fees and their mortgage payment, and then they find out that there's going to have to be an additional assessment; in other words, an additional charge that they're going to have to pay because they are all going to have to come together as the owners of a building to help fix the building so they can keep living in it.

It'll be familiar to any of you that drive around in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre because those are the buildings that are sort of sheathed in these scaffoldings and the drop tarps while they tear all the balconies off or take all the windows out and put them all back in again. It is millions and millions of dollars. So the effect is that the assessment to those individuals was ranging from – I think the lowest one I ever heard was $8,000. I heard $30,000 a lot, and somebody got way up there to kind of $70,000 or $80,000. I can't imagine how you would manage to pay for that on top of your fees and your living expenses and your mortgage.

It was really important to me that we as leaders and legislators come up with a program that was going to be able to be used by groups like my condo owners that discovered the problems long after the one-year warranty. This New Home Buyer Protection Act really went a long way to satisfying that, and I was really happy to see it. Thank you very much.

There was a delay in putting it into place, which I dutifully groused about in trying to get the government to speed up on implementing it. I think it was a six-month delay in actually proclaiming the bill. But now it turns out that as they started to work through the regulations – for those of you following along at home, God bless you, but also remember that the act, the legislation, or the statute as it's called once it's been passed, is the bigger picture design of what's supposed to happen. The regulations are the nitty-gritty, the how of how it all happens.

Once they started to work through designing the regulations and hearing back from some of the people that were going to have to be implementing that, they started to discover that there were a few places that were just not really clear. For example, when does it start? "Well, when you've paid for it. No. Wait. When you move in. Well, wait. Not everybody gets to move in when they've paid for it, and not everybody has paid for it when they move in." That wasn't quite working, so they went: "You know what? We really do need a really firm, written-in-legislation deadline of when this program starts." Good. Okay. Fair enough.

Another thing that's in here is renaming it from I think a warranty period to a protection period. Okay. To a layperson like me that sounds like semantics. But "protection period": I got that. Okay. Fine. If that helps everybody, go for it.

Mr. Speaker, I have to tease just the tiniest little bit. As many times as I have said, "Don't take things out of the legislation and put it into regs," here we have them taking it out of regulations and putting it into legislation – so, tee-hee, sometimes it's a fun day – but, you know, done for a good reason. The sponsoring member, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, said in Hansard on page 330: "Adopts several rules already in place in the regulations. While these regulations are working well, adopting them into the act provides a more permanent solution." Aren't those lovely words? So there you go. It can be done. I'll be sure to remember that the next time you decide to move it from legislation into regs. Sorry. That's a little bit of a sidebar, but, you know, I have to poke fun when I can.

We talked about the protection period, when it commences.

Now, there is kind of an odd thing in here, and I'm not quite sure why. Maybe when we get into committee, the minister could explain where this came from. It starts talking about a very funny section about apartment buildings and how it won't apply to an apartment building as long as the apartment owner doesn't sell anything. I'm thinking: what does this have to do with the price of tea in China? If the sponsoring minister would be so kind as to – here it is: "Exempt apartments must have a rental use designation registered on their land title." It will say "that the apartment building has no insurance." Does that mean that they're going to be able to qualify under this warranty or not qualify under this warranty – I'm sorry – protection plan? I just don't understand why you've got apartment buildings in here. It was meant to be for people that owned things. The expansion to one person who owns an apartment building and then having exceptions about it is striking me as a bit out of step with the rest of what the act is about, which is single-family homeowners and multi-unit homeowners, condo owners in other words.

I'm sorry. While I'm at it, Mr. Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs, if I could just remind you all that we are still waiting for legislation on life leases. There was a point where the previous Member for Little Bow was bringing forward a private member's bill, and that's got to be three or four years ago now. If I could just remind you that we are still waiting for that. Life lease accommodation continues to be built. It is completely without legislation, and it is sort of sitting out there in a nether land, and it's becoming increasingly difficult for people around how they file their taxes, for example, and some pretty critical things like that.

Just so that you all know what I'm talking about, in the same way that condominiums sit halfway in between single-family homes and apartments in that you own it and you own that little piece of land but you own things in common with other people because you're living in a multi-unit building – so that sets condos sort of in between single-family homes and apartment buildings – life leases sit sort of on the other side of apartment buildings. People are putting money forward, significant money, hundreds of thousands of dollars, to bring down the cost for the builder of the complex so that they're not paying borrowing costs. The builder can build bigger, nicer units, a nicer place, for less money, and the people that have kind of advanced this money to them can move in, have a bigger, nicer place. When they die or move out, they get their initial investment, no interest, back. In the meantime they've paid a sort of maintenance fee as they go along.

Lots of those people get in there, and they think they're condo owners. They think they have control over the colour of the carpet in the hallways and whether there's going to be a food prep area or not, and they don't because they're not condo owners. They don't own the whole complex, but they've contributed towards it. So you see how this starts to get – so, please, please, I'll put in another plea that you work on developing some legislation around that, because it really has been a very long time. You can call me tangent girl.

Back to Bill 6. You know, I've gone through all of the different sections. It's being described as sort of minor administration and technical, which is actually a pretty good term for it. It is things like changing it to a protection period and identifying exactly when everything starts. There's rental use designation, which is the one I was questioning on. That's a new piece that's been added in. That's actually quite a big new piece. I talked about the start date for the warranty coverage. It's empowering the registrar to determine which buildings qualify as a new home under this, when a penalty can be appealed, and whether somebody has to pay it and then get it back and what the deal with that is.

So it's just a lot of little, small things that are needed to make this whole thing operate better. Since I was so darn keen on having it in the first place, there's nothing being done here that I disagree with. I really want this program to work. It's really important to my constituents in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre and, in fact, to everybody in Alberta who's buying a new home, whether it's a condo or single-family or semidetached. It's a lot – a lot – of money, your biggest expenditure in your life. For many people it could well be their primary home for most of their life. I mean, my dad is still living in the house that he built on my mother's design in 1955. He's still there. He will have lived in that house for the greatest part of his life, and I dearly hope that he dies in that house, which would just be really nice for him.

You know, considering that, I'm glad to see that work has continued on this bill and that people are paying attention to the minutiae, which I always appreciate. Good work. My thanks to the people in the department that worked on this. I really appreciate your effort, and I think you've done a nice job there.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I urge everyone to vote in favour of second reading of Bill 6.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and if there are others, please let me know. Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise also to support this bill in principle. I won't speak for the entire caucus, but I think the majority supported the bill when it originally came forward. The whole idea of having liability insurance is a good thing. I don't think anyone's arguing that. But there have been some injustices as a result of the rapid pace of passing the bill, and I'm hoping the minister can correct it on the amending bill. I'm going to point it out.

In this bill here, the amending bill, particularly on page 8, part 6, that is dealing with section 4, it's good to see those changes that are now really detailing that a residential builder should ensure that the building or the structure is free from what defects. That's a good thing.

But where the injustice comes for the homeowner-builder, the one that qualifies for the exemption – and I'll put it into context. I had a chance to talk to some contractors who are in agreement with the bill. They pay a $90 fee to register their properties. The contractor I spoke to pays roughly $1,200 per $500,000 home that he builds, and that's a rough figure. He thinks that's actually quite reasonable. That cost gets passed along in the sale of the home.

What I found out is that under the original bill section 5 just said that there will be a fee that will be set in regulation for the homeowner-builder, that will be exempt from the liability portion. Now, of course, we all know that if they sell that house before the 10 years are up, then they have to go get liability. So if they don't do that up front, they'll probably pay more for that liability four years, five years down the road if they want to sell. I still think that's a good idea. But where the real penalty is here is that if you are exempt, the fee to register your property for this registrar is set at $750. What does that give you if you're exempt? You're more than halfway there for the liability insurance in the first place. So in comparison to the contractor, who only pays $90 to register, there's a great disparity and unfairness.

Now, speaking for those homeowner-builders, which I have a lot of in the rural area, they do not plan on selling their home. They plan on living on their family property for the rest of their lives. Yet they're paying a fee considerably more than anyone else just to register their property. That seems so unfair.

So in principle the bill itself, the original bill, I thought was good. It's why I supported it. I think we rushed it through. I don't know if we did a thorough consultation. I did hear a lot of feedback from contractors that didn't know about it. I understand that. I know that when I saw the amending bill come forward, I talked to some contractors. They had no idea that the changes were coming. But here we are dealing with the same situation. We are amending a bill that came through quite quickly.

Mr. Speaker, we need to correct the disparities and make sure the playing field is fair. That amendment to cap or to set a standard fee for registration, in my view, should be universal. To have a contractor pay $90 to register properties but a homeowner pay $750 to register a piece of property seems unjust to me. I think we can balance that out. I think it's reasonable and fair that if everyone had to pay $90, that might be a little bit more palatable to the homeowner-builders.

Now where I stumbled upon this. Quite a reputable architect in my area, who I believe is building a home for his daughter, or it might be for himself, ran across this as they were subdividing property. It's the typical situation. His question was a question that I could not answer, which is: what does $750 get me? The truth be known, it's nothing other than that it registers the property, that costs somebody else $90.

I think if we could correct that – and there are places in this bill that an amendment could be brought forward to make sure the regulations are consistent. I notice there are a number of places, particularly in section 8 of the original bill, which is page 9 of this amending bill. We could direct the registrar fees to be a set fee, and then it's in legislation, or we could set it as equal. There are a number of ways the bill could be worded to make it fair. That's what we're looking for, just to make it fair.

Hopefully, the minister will take that under consideration, and we can have not just unanimous support for the bill but no questions remaining behind. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. Is there anyone wishing to take advantage of that?

I see no one, so let's go on to Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Bilous: All right. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to second reading of Bill 6, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014. At the onset I do need to mention that what's unfortunate about this amendment act is that we shouldn't have to be here right now debating this. Had the government accepted many of the amendments that were proposed by the Alberta NDP on strengthening the act last year, the first time that this came to the House, we wouldn't be in here debating something that, like I said, should have been included in the act at the onset. It is worth noting that this legislation was rushed last year. I know that we were debating a couple of the readings quite late into the evening.

The greater frustration is that most of what the bill is amending and proposing to do – again, you know, the Alberta NDP put forward several amendments last year, and the PC Party voted all of them down. It seems a little foolish that we're back here a year later. I guess they finally maybe reread our amendments or took a year to understand them. I'm not sure, Mr. Speaker.

You know, I want to say that at least now they are strengthening an act that actually was full of a few holes. I think it is important that the bill takes some positive steps towards addressing the issue of condo occupancy and common facilities in the buildings, which was an issue that we raised as well as the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Again, you know, a question that I would love to ask the minister is – I hope that he could answer; I appreciate that he wasn't the minister last year, when this act came through – why didn't we or could we not have addressed these issues last year, when the bill was initially tabled in the House, as we had tried to do?

This one amendment means that coverage will begin for condos only at the point when permission to occupy has been given and the first unit is occupied. The defining of common facilities, again, is a positive step in this bill. One of the major issues that comes with condo ownership, Mr. Speaker, is who's responsible for paying for things that are considered common facilities such as the building envelope or the load-bearing structures. These amendments allow for some clarity on those issues, which I think is positive.

Again, we were advocating – and we still are – for the length of coverage, increasing the time period of coverage. The greatest concern that the Alberta NDP raised when this bill first came to the floor last year was that the length of coverage included, in our opinion, is still not long enough to adequately protect our new home owners. Prior to the debate last year we had done some consultation with experts, who raised concerns about the two coverage periods, specifically the one-year coverage for defects and materials and labour and the five-year coverage for defects in the building envelope. Now, our position and what experts were telling us is that one year is very little time to determine if defects in material or labour are present, you know, sometimes taking into consideration that it takes homeowners several months to move into their new residence. Obviously, the clock is now playing against them.

Our proposal was to extend the minimum coverage for defects to at least two years, which, again, I don't think was asking too much. We're extending that coverage for an extra year, which gives new homeowners adequate time if there are defects in labour or materials. Now, this somewhat addresses the protection period's starting at an earlier date. Both time of purchase and time of occupancy could be included as the start date, which might give a little more elbow room for homeowners.

As well, as far as the consultation we did with experts on defects in the building envelope, they've stated to us, Mr. Speaker, that it could take as long as 10 years or even longer for defects in the building envelope to become apparent. So that's where our position came from, really, from industry saying to us, you know, that 10 years is an adequate coverage time.

I think that those two requests, or strengthening, are reasonable and, again, would mean that we don't need to come back to this bill a third time in another year from now when we learn that homeowners aren't getting adequate length of coverage from even these amendments.

At the moment, though, what we're proposing is that instead of having the option for homeowners to purchase additional coverage for the building envelope or other defects, which I'm sure the minister will talk about when we get into committee – again, our question is: why can't we just extend the mandatory coverage period instead? It is interesting. If we're giving homeowners the option of purchasing additional coverage or extension, does that mean that we already know that the minimum period that's being covered in this bill is not long enough? I mean, wouldn't it make sense, if the purpose of this is really to protect homeowners, to just extend the length of protection?

Even though the amendments in this bill clarify the protection period or the exemption for properties that will be exclusively rented, there are still some issues that may arise out of this, Mr. Speaker. Properties that are built with the sole purpose of renting can be exempt from obtaining insurance prior to building. Now, this may leave those who are renting in trouble should any problems arise with the building. Though they will have to pay out of pocket for repairs, they still run the risks of having rents raised in order to recoup the costs incurred by the building owner due to costly repairs.

Mr. Speaker, we still want this legislation, obviously, to do what it's advertised to do, which is to protect homeowners. Conversely, this legislation should not in any way be a protective mechanism for incompetent home builders or companies that serve to benefit greatly through this legislation as warranty providers. During the debate on the original bill, I mean, we were endorsing the spirit of the legislation, and we need to make sure that it's strong enough to protect the interest of consumers and that time periods stipulated are in accordance with expert recommendations. Again, our data is backed up through experts in the field and through consultations that we've had with builders. My hope for this bill is that it will in fact strengthen the existing bill, ensuring that homeowners have more protection.

What's interesting is that the minimum-level warranty coverage in Alberta is $265,000 on a new home. Now, while that number is slightly higher than what's covered in other jurisdictions, the average price of a home in Alberta in January of 2012 was $342,000, including land costs. I've just heard recently that, again, in the housing market in Edmonton, I believe, we're 4 per cent over what the highest rates were in 2007. If I'm not mistaken, the average value or price of a home is now over $400,000. You know, I guess, one thing that I would like to see in this bill – and, hopefully, the government is amicable to amendments when we get into committee – is bumping up that number again, especially in light of the fact that our housing values and costs are continuing to rise at an extremely rapid rate within our province here.

Let's see here. During the last round of debates on this bill we talked about the issue of ensuring that all buyers are protected and one of the problems that can arise from building inspections and the need for greater clarity in legislative power in this aspect. My colleague from Edmonton-Calder had talked about the fact that provincial inspectors were eliminated back in 1993, and that was a significant setback to the integrity of the building system. I think, you know, looking at addressing inspectors and inspections is another way to strengthen protection for homebuyers.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I just want to wrap up by saying that the Alberta NDP is going to be supporting these amendments, that strengthen the bill. However, it needs to be noted that this should have been done the first time through. We had amendments from the Alberta NDP and, I believe, from the other two opposition parties as well. Had the government slowed down the process of passing the legislation initially and looked at adopting the amendments, that actually were written in the best interests of homeowners, we wouldn't have to be here and wouldn't have to take the time to debate this bill and could be working on other pieces of legislation. I can say that I am disappointed that the government did not accept our recommendations last year. I hope that they're willing to consider some of the amendments that are going to be put forward, if any, from the opposition side in this reading of the bill. The point, obviously, is: let's get it done, let's get it done right, and then we can move on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available.

I see no one. I have one person left on the list, and that is Calgary-Shaw. Please proceed.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to second reading of Bill 6 and will echo some of the comments made by previous members. The manner in which this government seems to be passing legislation right now is just a little surprising. It's clear that proper consultations were not done on this bill. It's the only plausible reason why we would find ourselves back here less than two years after this had already been passed with an amendment act to it. It speaks to, I guess, just the fly-by-night legislative process that seems to be happening with this government currently. It's very unfortunate that you can't do your work on the front end, and here we are again, fixing something that should have just been done right the first time.

It's clear that the stakeholders who were going to be impacted by the original act, the original bill, just were not properly consulted, and I would hope that this government takes this bill, this amendment act, as a bit of a lesson. They can use this to remind themselves of why it's important to get that work done before bringing an incomplete bill to the House.

Overall, I mean, the amendment act is solid. It's sound. There are a couple of concerns that we do have, that we're hearing around the whole program itself. I will address those, and perhaps the minister could comment, respond, and/or take some action on some of these areas.

One of the issues that we're having is that the owner-builders are required to get a warranty even if they are the contractor who would be providing remedial services should the home require warranty-covered repairs. We are in support of the owner-builder clause as it is now. I know the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had some questions about the value-add for individuals, for owner-builders who are spending $750, but we also understand that the reason for that is to level the playing field and ensure that all builders out there are reputable and doing good work and have product that is going to be sound. The question remains around warranty for contract and the owner-builder who is going to be doing the fixing themselves and how that whole piece fits together.

The second issue is around the warranty coverage that is being offered to owner-builders. We're under the impression that there are about five companies that do offer warranty coverage in the province. We're hearing that there are only two that will actually offer owner-builder warranties and that some of the time that's actually only one. If you could just look into the competitive process around those warranties for some of our owner-builders. They are concerned that if it is just something that starts to become monopolized if everyone gets out of the game, then that's just not a healthy system.

The third problem is that we're hearing that staff are severely overworked in trying to provide the administration of this program. They're doing a great job, but the comments that we've heard back in some of our consultations are that their concerns weren't necessarily reaching the minister's office. Now, I know that we have a new minister on the file, so perhaps that will change, but their words were that they felt the minister is somewhat insulated about hearing some of the issues that they are having. Again, we're hoping that the new minister will ensure that that problem is taken care of.

The final issue is around the digital support for the program. It's suffering ongoing failure. We hear a number of stories of a number of residents across the province who are trying to access the system, and we have website crashes, insufficient materials online, and e-mail addresses that are nonresponsive or simply unavailable. It seems to be somewhat commonplace for this program. Again, I would just request that the minister consider and address some of these issues that the people who are trying to access the program and that are using the program are experiencing as we have heard here in the Official Opposition.

Overall, though, Mr. Speaker, the bill is good in principle. It would have been great to have a full and sufficient process for consultation prior to the initial bill being tabled rather than the sorely lacking process of passing legislation and experiencing crisis with implementation followed by an amending bill, but I will leave that as it is for now and move on.

I look forward to seeing this get past second reading, and we'll see how things go in committee. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there any other speakers?

If not, Minister of Municipal Affairs, would you like to close debate, then?

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be here to close debate on what I believe is a very important piece of legislation. Before I get started, I'd just like to take a moment to thank the Canadian Home Builders' Association, the insurance companies, the municipalities, and all of those others that came and worked with us and supported as we built the regulations to look at what some of the very, very specific issues are and helped us come up with some of the fixes. I'm very pleased to be here to say that some of these fixes should be in legislation, and they're going to be in legislation. That's why we're here today. I believe it's worth taking the time to be here today to do that. I'm proud to be here to do that.

I also want to thank the members for Edmonton-Centre – I think you had some great questions – Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and Calgary-Shaw. I will bring answers back to those questions at the start of Committee of the Whole and try to answer as many as I can. I look forward to the debate at that time.

With that, I would call the question on second reading.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that's the conclusion of business for today, and I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray that our actions today result in improvements tomorrow for those whom we are pledged to serve in this Assembly. Amen.

This being Monday, I would ask you to please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem as led by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Thank you, Mr. Clark. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a delegation of members and officials visiting Alberta from the state of Western Australia. The members are from the House of Assembly and from the state's second Chamber, known as the Legislative Council. They are only in Edmonton for a short time as they, unfortunately, have to leave tomorrow morning for Saskatchewan. They will then visit Victoria for meetings prior to returning to Australia. I'd like to welcome them to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, they're seated in your gallery, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: the Hon. Barry House, MLC, President of the Legislative Council; Ms Wendy Duncan, MLA, Deputy Speaker of the Legislative Assembly; Hon. Kate Doust, MLC, deputy leader of the opposition in the Legislative Council; Mr. Roger Cook, MLA, deputy leader of the opposition; Hon. Paul Brown, MLC; Dr. Graham Jacobs, MLA; Mr. Russell Bremner, executive manager, parliamentary services department; Mr. Nigel Pratt, Clerk of the Legislative Council; and Ms Kirsten Robinson, Deputy Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

It's indeed an honour having all of you here. It's my first time to welcome a colleague Speaker. Mr. House, thank you, sir.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of constituents who have travelled to Edmonton today from Elmworth, Alberta. I had the chance to visit with this group of bright students earlier today, and I'm glad that they're able to be here in the Legislature. This school is probably one of the schools closest to the Alberta-B.C. border in the province, so they've come a long ways today. The Grade 9 students from Elmworth school along with their teacher and helper, Mr. Christian Gee and Mr. Brian Grant, are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by the Minister of Education.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 33 visitors representing the School of Hope. They come to us from all over Alberta. Indeed, the School of Hope provides a very unique and interesting educational model in that these are all home-school families and home-school students. They come from all over the province, but the School of Hope's headquarters is in Vermilion, in my constituency. I'm also very proud that they're here because my own two sons are graduates of the School of Hope. They are seated, I believe, in the members' gallery, and I would invite them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly one of the best grade 6 teachers in the province of Alberta, Colleen Tremblay, and her grade 6 class from Guthrie school, which is located at Edmonton Garrison in my constituency, just on the north edge of the city here. I have spent a great deal of time at Guthrie with the Gators since being elected as MLA. I'd have to say that my favourite occasion was last month, on March 12, when we recognized and honoured the Canadian troops as our country's 12-year commitment to Afghanistan came to an end. Most of these students have parents who have served in Afghanistan – their strength and determination are truly inspiring – including one of the parents here today, Chris, who is in the air force, and his wife, Lorraine. I'd ask these students and staff to please rise along with the parent helpers so that they can receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It's my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of grade 6 students from the Kisipatnahk school in Maskwacis. The school is a Cree cultural school offering instruction in Maskwacis Cree language. They're here for a few days enjoying the School at the Legislature program. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Bridget Milligan and Mr. Jordan Roasting, and parent helper Elmira Moonias. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Your second introduction.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure that today I get to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my recently-announced fiancée, Rachael Bradford. Rachael has become a very special and important person in my life. She centres me and keeps me focused. She is there when I need someone to talk to and when I need someone to listen. More importantly, she is the person that I want to travel the road of life with. If you can't tell, this is the woman that I have fallen head over heels for. Rachael, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us proceed with other guests, starting with Leduc-Beaumont, followed by the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly the members of the education advisory committee. This provincial committee offers pedagogical expertise to the visitors' services office in their development of educational programming and represents elementary, junior and senior high, and postsecondary education across Alberta. With us today are Sandy Myshak from Edmonton public schools, Anne Marie Brose from Grant MacEwan University, Dr. Craig Harding from Calgary public schools, Corvin Uhrbach from Wolf Creek public schools in Ponoka, Constance Scarlett from the Alberta Museums Association, and Wally Diefenthaler, educational consultant.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to recognize Dr. Carla Peck from the University of Alberta's Faculty of Education and Brian St. Germain of the aboriginal family and school program in Red Deer, who could not be with us today.

My guests are seated in the public gallery – they've already risen – and I would ask that they receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very young constituent of mine who this morning walked into my office by himself and said that he wanted to meet his MLA and shared his points of view on a number of very topical and current issues. He tells me that he also engages his teacher and very often wins debates with the teacher. This is Jacob Manz, and Jacob is a student at the Lago Lindo elementary school. You will be seeing him over here one day, I imagine. He is accompanied by his grandmother Ms Penny Miller. Welcome to both of you.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of very special friends of mine. They represent various organizations, but most importantly they are here to support the member's statement I'm going to make about the second oil and gas symposium. As I mention my guests, I'd ask them to rise: Joanne Gui, president of the Chinese Professionals and Entrepreneurs Association of Calgary and also the chair of the second symposium; Nancy Bi, a member of the same organization; Mark Gerlitz, consultant and vice-chair of the committee; Mason Wei, general secretary of the Canada China Chamber of Commerce, which is cohosting the symposium; Edward Liu, principal of ECSSSEN school; Ray Pan, a third-year student at the U of A who also worked a summer internship for me last year. I would like to personally thank each one of them for their dedication and hard work, and I'd ask the House to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka if you have a third.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend Alberta celebrated the third annual Get Outdoors Weekend, or GO, which occurs every second weekend in April. It was an incredible success in great part due to our new GO ambassadors. I'm honoured to introduce four dedicated, humble, extraordinary gentlemen from the Edmonton Eskimos. I would ask that they rise as I call their names. Calvin McCarty is the longest serving active member of the club, kicking off his eighth season with the team as running back par excellence. He's very articulate. He's been named the Eskimos' top Canadian on two occasions and is the 2013 nominee for the Tom Pate award. That, of course, is for the CFL's most outstanding volunteer.

Jonathan Crompton. I was going to say number two, but he's definitely not number two, is he, Jonathan? He was an all-American in high school. He played at the University of Tennessee before being drafted into the NFL by the San Diego super-Chargers. Jonathan is an extremely outgoing young man. Check him out.

Ryan King was born and raised here in Edmonton. He played high school football in Sherwood Park at Bev Facey and is now a linebacker for the Eskimos. But, folks, with the way he throws and runs, I think he might be able to compete for the positions of the two other players as a matter of fact.

Joining the players today is the incomparable Nick Pelletier, community relations co-ordinator for the club, who helped arrange Thursday's game at Austin O'Brien high school.

I'd also like to thank Jon Cornish of the Calgary Stampeders – you may know that he's the CFL's reigning most outstanding Canadian, most outstanding player – who was instrumental in our GO activities in Calgary on Friday with both the seniors at Bethany and the students at Bishop Carroll.

Mr. Speaker, you know, this is a little bit difficult for me as a Stamps fan, but I now have four members of the green and gold to cheer for. They are seated behind me, and they have my back at least for today. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Calvin, Jonathan, Ryan, and Nick for their leadership in promoting active lifestyles and for their dedication to our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, two minutes each for members' statements. We should be able to get three in. Let's start with Calgary-Hawkwood and then go to Drumheller-Stettler.

Sino-Canadian Oil and Gas Symposium

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise again for my member's statement. I would like to inform the hon. members of this House that the second annual Sino-Canadian Oil and Gas Symposium is scheduled for Saturday, June 21, at the Red and White Club in Calgary.

Last year, working along with many organizations, including the Chinese Professionals and Entrepreneurs Association of Calgary, the Calgary Chinese Petroleum Club, and the Canada China Chamber of Commerce, we have piloted the very first symposium, and that symposium was a success. It drew over 500 attendees with keynote speeches from the Minister of Energy, the consul general of the People's Republic of China, industry leaders, and many, many of my colleagues in this House. As reported by Global News, this was a first-of-its-kind conference that brought together industry professionals, Chinese and Canadian investors, and many Alberta MLAs.

This year's symposium will focus on energy globalization and collaboration, which is particularly relevant to Alberta. Energy globalization is not a recent development. However, the surge of growing markets in emerging countries has definitely elevated this higher. Historically Canada was able to primarily focus on the U.S. market. Today that's no longer the reality. I believe the Sino-Canadian Oil and Gas Symposium provides an excellent forum to increase collaboration with emerging markets for our Canadian diversification.

Please join me and other representatives on June 21 at the Red and White Club in Calgary for the second annual Canadian oil and gas symposium.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Government Culture

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we resume this session, we do so with an air of uncertainty and instability on the government side of the House. The uncertainty and instability are due to the resignation of the Member for Calgary-Elbow as Premier. So what's next? Will this queue up the opportunists? Opportunists are those who choose to take advantage of any situation to achieve an end, usually with no regard for principles or consequences.

If regard had been given to these principles and consequences, those within the government caucus would have spoken up prior to the Premier's resignation. Those that will be seeking the Premier's position from within this government have some explaining to do. What transpired under their previous leader, whom they all willingly stood in this House and supported? This most certainly has been a group effort. The entire government caucus is party to the actions of their former leader, since silence, they say, is the voice of complicity. Disregard for principles and consequences stems from the short-sighted ambitions of those who seek only power.

It is my hope that the present culture of entitlement that thrives within this PC government is not carried on by the next Premier. The key ingredient to any government plagued by entitlement is cronyism, and cronyism is the first step towards corruption. The two elements work hand in hand and facilitate each other. Alberta has suffered from the effects of out-of-control cronyism, with special favours being the rule rather than the exception.

As we make our way through another session in this Legislature, let's not forget why we're here. It is the responsibility of every member of this House to act in the best interests of their constituents, and special favours are never in those best interests. In the end, when it comes to cronyism, if you aren't a part of the solution, you are part of the problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mental Health Services

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mental illness has long been an unspoken taboo in our society. Mental health problems have often been swept under the rug. These weren't problems that we were supposed to talk about or admit to even though we all know that ignoring a problem doesn't make it go away. The fact is that 1 in 5 Albertans will experience mental illness in their lifetime, and the other four will have a friend, relative, or colleague who will be affected. I am someone who wants to speak about the devastating effects of mental illness. Recently mental illness affected my own family, when we lost a beloved nephew to suicide.

Many people need help, and I am proud to say that the Alberta government is committed to providing this help through early intervention services, counselling, and treatment beds for those with the most serious needs. The Premier and the Minister of Health announced last week that Budget 2014 has provided $28 million in new funding, bringing Alberta Health's mental health budget to $48 million. This is in addition to the $600 million that Alberta Health Services spends on mental health. We recognize that we need to give mental health support to our children and our youth, so I am pleased to note that permanent funding for mental health programs is now being provided in more than 153 schools in 55 Alberta communities.

Budget 2014 renews and strengthens the Alberta government's commitment to programs and services for mental health promotion, illness prevention, early intervention, and treatment for people whose lives have been touched by mental illness or addiction. What this means is that kids and families across Alberta will continue to have access to a wide range of services and supports. I am proud to speak about this advocacy and continued investment in the mental health and wellness of our children, families, and communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, you're reminded that you have 35 seconds for the question and 35 seconds maximum for the answer.

Let's start the clock, and let's go with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Government Airplane Usage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as government flight manifests show, this government's practice of flying high on the taxpayer's dime is even more egregious than we were first led to believe. Apparently, the Premier, her daughter, and a staff entourage flew multiple times on the government planes, including a trip to Jasper on a government plane for a weekend vacation during the June floods. The purpose of the trip was listed as meetings with government officials. Could the Premier tell us which officials the previous Premier met with on this trip, and what, if any, government business was done?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think it's extremely inappropriate for the hon. member to characterize the trip as a vacation. She does not know that. That is not an appropriate assumption. The assumption has to be that people using government planes are using them for government business and for appropriate government business. Unless she has any evidence to the contrary, I would suggest she not describe a trip in that way.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's why I asked the question, so the Premier could clarify what government business was done. He declined to.

This government has assured us that there are rigorous guidelines in place to prevent these abuses of taxpayer dollars from happening. However, guidelines are only as good as the people who enforce them: in this case, the Minister of Finance and his government aircraft co-ordinator, who works right out of his office. To the Minister of Finance: if clear guidelines existed to prevent these abuses from happening, why did he choose not to enforce them?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Premier so aptly put it, there is no evidence that this was not for government business. I don't personally recall the actual details around the trip, but I can tell you that the Auditor General is going to review how government aircraft are handled in this province. He's going to look at the efficiency of those aircraft. We look forward to that report.

Ministers and the Premier are responsible for who goes on the plane, Mr. Speaker. We've had municipal officials, we've had MLAs, we've had guests of the ministers on those planes. The empty seat costs no more to the taxpayer.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, if there was government business, the obligation is on them to release it. I'm calling on them to release what government business happened in Jasper that weekend because it's now clear that this government just can't be trusted to responsibly own and operate a fleet of aircraft.

The government of British Columbia, with all of its remote locations, makes do without the luxury of a government fleet and uses commercial flights for the vast majority of their air travel, about 95 per cent. Alberta's fleet of government planes is clearly unnecessary and frequently abused. To the Premier: will he agree to sell the government fleet?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the comparator to B.C. is probably not as accurate as the hon. member would like it to be. The B.C. government does charter helicopters and other planes to get their members elsewhere in the province, at considerable expense. Saskatchewan actually owns a jet; so does Manitoba. Other provinces use their planes. The difference is that we are transparent about the manifests and when we use the planes. It's very difficult to do that in other jurisdictions. This is the gold standard.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: That's how we're able to see that it's frequently abused and not used responsibly.

Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister's department owns the fleet and makes the rules for their use. The person who books and controls the planes works out of the Finance minister's office, in room 423 of this building. The Finance minister had to know about the abuse, the deadheading, the duplicate flights, the use of the planes for vacations, and the travel back and forth to PC Party fundraisers. For the Finance minister to not know was either wilful negligence or incompetence. Minister, which is it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it is neither. The planes are used to get cabinet ministers, the Premier, and the Lieutenant Governor to various locations around this province because we want to talk to Albertans. We want to be in their communities, and they want us to be there as well. To characterize simply the fact that they know where we went as being abuse of the planes, frankly, is irresponsible, and the hon. member should know that.

Ms Smith: And also, apparently, children, nannies, and friends on the government planes.

Mr. Speaker, the antibullying minister missed an opportunity a few weeks ago to apologize to Albertans for her crass remarks about electricians. You should listen up, Minister, because this is also a teachable moment. Records show that she had her daughter fly on the government planes in violation of government policies. Will the antibullying minister apologize to Albertans for wasting taxpayer dollars, and will she pay the money back?

Ms Jansen: I thank you for the question. As I understand it, the flight policy implemented in 2010 indicates that passengers approved for government flights are at the discretion of the minister responsible. It didn't cost a dime extra for my daughter to travel on that flight. If it did, I would happily pay the money back.

Ms Smith: It's not what the policy was that the Auditor General described. He said that only spouses would be able to travel on government planes and only if they were attending events. It's interesting that the change of policy occurred, and no one knew about it.

It's quite clear that this government can't be trusted. They grasp at every entitlement and perk, they never care about the taxpayer, and they never consider that the money could be better spent helping vulnerable Albertans. It costs $7 million a year to maintain the government fleet. Other provinces have sold their fleets, and this government should follow suit. To the Premier: will he agree to sell the unnecessary and frequently . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the negativity of the questioning in the House today is indicative of what's been going on on that side for a while. The truth of the matter is that the Auditor General did review the policies in previous years and actually said that there was value in us having those planes to get to various places around our province. He did make a recommendation that it should be for spouses. If the hon. opposition had done their homework, they would realize that after that the government did come out with a policy where we said that the ministers will be responsible for the guests on the plane because it might not be the spouse. It might be the mayor of High River. It might be some MLA from the opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Third and final set of main questions, opposition leader.

Ms Smith: So they ignored the Auditor General's recommendation. Nice work.

Government Advertising

Ms Smith: All over Alberta you can't turn on a radio without hearing advertisements promoting this government's budget, which, by the way, hasn't passed yet, Mr. Speaker. You might want to look into that. Albertans are inundated with misleading and dubious statements about this government's building Alberta plan. I think my two previous questions clearly show that billing Alberta is the more appropriate phrase. To the Finance minister: just how much money is being wasted on advertising a budget that hasn't even passed yet?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only dubious and misleading comments that have been coming out are from the opposition around what this budget is all about. This budget is about building Alberta. It's about putting schools, roads, and hospitals where Albertans need them. It's about an economy that is double – double – the Canadian average in terms of its growth. It's about a place where three times the national average of the population is moving to this province. Why? Because it is a responsible government that is building the infrastructure those new Albertans want and need, because we're creating the jobs that Albertans are looking for. Those are the priorities of Albertans, not the questions that were dubious.

Ms Smith: This PC government seems to think that wasting taxpayer money is their right and their entitlement, and Albertans are tired of it. We already know about the $3 million that has been spent on Building Alberta signs all over the province, and we just learned that the government decided to waste 10,000 taxpayer dollars to buy Building Alberta promotional jackets for the Premier, government ministers, their staff, and others. Does the Premier think that hard-working taxpayers should be buying him and his well-paid colleagues jackets to promote the government's propaganda?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I didn't get a jacket. I'll have to look into that. Any time that people look into promotional items for a tour such as that, jackets and clothing are part of that process. In this particular case I don't know that I would agree that that money was well spent. In fact, if it was to be brought up to me, I probably wouldn't approve that as an expense now. [interjections] It's always easy to look at things in hindsight and say: is that the most appropriate way to spend money? It's much harder to do it at the time.

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'm struggling a bit to hear the questions and the answers, so if you'd please keep it down, I'd appreciate it.

Final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, any Albertan can log on to the web page of almost any government MLA and see them proudly wearing their taxpayer-paid-for Building Alberta promotional jackets. They'll also find an interesting assortment of defeated PC MLAs wearing them as well like Ray Danyluk and Luke Ouellette. The PC Party should pay this money back. Or does the Premier honestly think it's appropriate to use taxpayer money to buy jackets for failed PC candidates? Really? Really?

Mr. Hancock: If that was what was being done, it would be wrong, but that's not what was done. In fact, there are proud mayors and reeves around the province also wearing the jackets, as I understand it, proud participants of the tour wearing those jackets, as I understand it. There are some 200 of them. There are not that many failed PC candidates in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the leader of the ND opposition. [interjections] The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition. Second call.

Health Facilities Infrastructure

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deferred maintenance tab for Alberta's health facilities is close to $1 billion, yet the province is committing only $70 million to address this. The Misericordia hospital board wrote to the Minister of Health asking for $33 million to address critical maintenance issues. They got only $19 million. Our hospitals have suffered 20 years of neglect, during which the Premier was in cabinet, and he even served as Health minister. To the Premier: how did you allow this happen, and why are continuing to allow this to happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. You know, we work with Alberta Health Services on maintenance. We work with school boards. On government buildings we do that ourselves. It's always a value judgment because you can only spend each dollar once. The hon. member might want to write that piece down. When we spend each dollar once, we have to decide whether it's for something new or to fix something that's already there. It's always a tough decision. We make plans every year. We increase our budgets for maintenance every year. I would remind him also that 95 per cent of the schools, hospitals, and postsecondaries are in good or fair condition. We intend to keep them that way.

Dr. Sherman: It's quite clear that their value judgment is that where our children are sick and elderly are kept, they want to let those buildings get rundown.

The Minister of Health is stuck in bureaucratic planning cycles instead of planning construction cycles, which is what the Misericordia hospital needs, to get building. The Misericordia needs replacing, not $19 million worth of temporary repairs, barely enough to fix the plumbing, keep the lights on, and stop the roof from leaking let alone look after sick patients. To the Premier: are there plans to replace the Misericordia, and if so, where is it on the priority list?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we work, again, with Alberta Health Services. They worked with the Health ministry and with our ministry to deliver those new maintenance programs. Again, it's a matter of balance. It always has been and always will be. When the agencies identify something that needs to be fixed, it goes in the budget. The fact is that not unlike an Alberta family, you don't put in a new furnace every year; you plan on putting it in when the furnace fails. If you can squeeze 25 years out of it, you try to, and when it fails, you fix it. On the other hand, there are planned things that you do on a schedule. It's a combination.

Dr. Sherman: It's quite clear that there's no plan and there's no priority list. That's what I heard.

Like the rest of the province, west Edmonton is growing rapidly, and the Misericordia hospital staff and administrators continue to do a great job despite severe underfunding for front-line care and hospital maintenance and renovations. The Health minister said that this government is well into the planning process for a new hospital in the Capital health region. To the Premier. What the folks in the west end want to know is: will you build a new Misericordia hospital? If so, when, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member had been listening, he would have heard the Minister of Health respond to that question a number of times over the last couple of weeks. The hon. member raised in his first question that I've been here 17 years while it deteriorates. Well, it seems to me that he's been here for six years, and this is the first time he's raised the issue in the Legislature, so I'm wondering where his priorities have been.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Political Party Leadership Campaign Financing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, here we go again. Another day, another Tory leadership race. Under this government's legislation there is no maximum limit on how much an individual or a corporation can donate to a leadership candidate. To the Premier: will he amend the law to impose the same limits on leadership donations as presently exist for election campaigns, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you've said a number of times, internal party matters are matters for the parties. I do believe, though, that this province is one of the few jurisdictions in the country that actually has leadership rules in our Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. I think we're leading the country in openness and transparency with respect to how leadership races are financed.

The Speaker: The administration and enforcement falls within the Chief Electoral Officer's purview; however, amendments, if you wish any, are the purview of this House.

Carry on. First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much. The Premier talks out of both sides of his mouth. He says on the one hand, "Oh, this is an internal party matter," and then he says: "Oh, but guess what? We've legislated." But what you haven't legislated, Mr. Premier, are any limits on how much someone can donate. What's to stop someone like Daryl Katz making a $400,000 donation to some candidate that's going to support his hundred million dollar demand for his hockey palace? How are you going to stop that, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the fact that all donations have to be published above a certain amount, a fact that we've included in the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, I think, makes it clear to any candidate that's in a leadership race in any party that they had better be circumspect about how they do their finances because if they're not, it will affect their ability to have longevity in office.

The Speaker: Again, hon. member, the actual administration of the act and the enforcement of it, which is where I think you're going, are not the purview of the government. They're the purview of the Chief Electoral Officer. Amendments, if any, if that's how you wish to recraft your question, will be up to you.

Mr. Mason: I'm asking for amendments to legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we all know the PCs are the party of big money. It sure looks like the Premier wants to keep it that way. Big money buys big influence. My question is to the Premier. Why are you unwilling to legislate an end to the corrosive effect of big money on politics in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a challenge or an assumption that's really not warranted. There is absolutely no evidence that big money has anything to do with good governance in this province. In fact, this government over the years has enjoyed the support of Albertans from right across the spectrum and from right across the province. That, indeed, has been the success of this government over the years, that we truly represent all corners of the province and all people in the province. That's how you get success. It has nothing to do with how much money you have.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

No more preambles now. The first five main sets of questions have gone. Let's move on to Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Airdrie.

Missing and Murdered Aboriginal Women

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow I'll be taking part in a round-table for missing and murdered aboriginal women in Fort McMurray. The discussion has been put together in response to the decision by the federal government to not research the disproportionately high number of missing and murdered aboriginal women and girls in Canada. Aboriginal women are much more likely to be murdered by strangers, and the murderers of aboriginal women are much less likely to be convicted. The round-table in Fort McMurray will also include friends and family members of these women. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: are there currently any statistics for aboriginal women that may have been murdered or have gone missing in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Anyone wish to respond? The Minister of Aboriginal Relations, second call.

Mr. Oberle: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I missed the question entirely. I understand the member is interested in the conference that's taking place on missing and murdered aboriginal women. He'll know that our government has advocated with the federal government for an inquiry into the situation of missing and murdered aboriginal women in our country.

Mr. Allen: Well, I'm not sure if these are a moot point. To the same minister: does the provincial government have a position as far as the necessity to investigate? I will assume that's your answer, Minister.

Mr. Oberle: We do, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, we have already advocated with the federal government. We've joined fellow ministers and premiers across the country in doing so. The importance of moving forward and answering some of these questions was also discussed as part of the Truth and Reconciliation commission.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll forego my second supplemental.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has called the Wildrose everything from ignorant to deceptive in our criticism of his new budget accounting methods, which ignore capital spending when calculating the size of the provincial deficit. The problem is that Alberta's most respected former Finance minister, Jim Dinning, agrees with us, stating that Alberta must "return to the simple and clear accounting rules used to get our government back in the black," meaning that "we should be able to understand the government's books." Minister, is Jim Dinning also ignorant and deceptive in his critique of your budgeting methods?

2:10

Mr. Horner: No, Mr. Speaker. Only the Wildrose Alliance is doing that. Mr. Dinning was one of the 75 CEOs and executives that we actually interviewed back in 2012, I believe it was, when we talked about the idea of following the municipal governance that is within our province and across the country of separating operating from capital. In the notes – and I actually went back and referred to those notes of the meeting – Mr. Dinning agreed that that would be a good thing to do as did Mr. Lougheed at the time. As well, Mr. Speaker, I asked Mr. Dinning: did he think it was wise, if it made financial sense, to use the capital markets to amortize long-term assets over their useful life? He said yes.

Mr. Anderson: So I guess Mr. Dinning is now a liar, too. That's interesting.

Mr. Dinning went further. He decried this PC government's decision to borrow $21 billion by 2016, stating, "Albertans sacrificed a lot to have a debt-free future. We don't want that hard work put at risk." Minister, now that the former Premier is gone, will you commit to follow Mr. Dinning's sage advice, put a halt to debt financing, and do what any competent Finance minister would be able to do with $44 billion at his disposal, and that's build what Albertans need without plunging us and our kids back into debt?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the hon. members are not telling Albertans what they would defer. As to the Leader of the Opposition's comment about how they would balance the budget, they would defer the capital spending. So I would ask them: which school are they not going to build, which road are they not going to build, which hospital are they not going to build? How much damage to the economy are they going to do before they realize that it was the wrong thing to do? The chair of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce agrees with what we're doing. The University of Toronto's public policy agrees with what we're doing. Standard & Poor's agrees with it. I could go on and on.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister is doing a great job of auditioning for opposition. Well done.

Minister, given that virtually every former PC Finance minister – every one – from Mr. Dinning to Dr. Morton to Mr. Snelgrove to Dr. Oberg, all of them, have said that your new accounting methods are confusing, they are misguided, and that your decision to plunge our province deep into debt is equally wrong, Minister, will you please stop with the "everyone's lost but me" attitude, stop going into debt, and publish a budget that you don't need the Rosetta stone to understand?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that when I go around the province and I have town halls and public meetings and I describe what our income statement is and what our balance sheet is, Albertans understand, including the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, which believes that this budget is a balanced budget with a reasonable revenue forecast, reduction of growth in operating expenses, the redirection of some revenues into savings, and the use of strategic debt to invest in infrastructure. Standard & Poor's: "The province's financial management is very positive, in our view. Budget information is comprehensive and detailed." These are the people that are taking information from our documents and giving us our credit rating. I think they know what they're talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Edmonton's Elevate Report

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2012 Elevate report prepared by the city of Edmonton comments that the city and its citizens must work together to create strong and sustainable neighbourhoods and communities. The report defines mature neighbourhoods, and from Avonmore to Gold Bar all communities, all neighbourhoods in my constituency are mature. This report highlights the findings of the Community Sustainability Task Force and offers recommendations in order to mitigate the issues challenging these types of communities. To the Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs: is your department aware of this report and its findings?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to tell the member that, yes, I have seen the Elevate report, and it's extremely well done. The city of Edmonton brought stakeholders from across the community together to look at community sustainability, especially in older neighbourhoods that are well developed. But I can promise this, Member, that we will continue to work with the city of Edmonton and all our municipalities to ensure that they have the ability to meet local needs and create the infrastructure that they need into the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you. To the same minister: can you give me some feeling that the findings of the Elevate report will influence decisions that you're making in the future?

Mr. Weadick: Well, that's a really good question. Mr. Speaker, upon reading the report, I noticed that many of the issues that came up would be consistent with many municipalities across the province, whether they be large municipalities or small municipalities, and I believe that this report could create some of the issues that the city of Edmonton may want to bring forward as we talk about the MGA review, looking at what things may need to be changed to ensure we have sustainable municipalities into the future.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, one of the groups that's mentioned in the report is the school boards and schools. To the Minister of Education: do we take mature neighbourhood status into account when considering innovative ways to provide capital and fund the education of our youth in these mature areas?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend the member for being such a strong advocate for his community. I know he's been very involved in the open houses and the dialogues that Edmonton Catholic has had with respect to some of his schools in mature neighbourhoods. The shorter answer is that, yes, we do. But, really, we rely on the school boards – I mean, they're the locally, duly elected folks – to make those decisions. They put their capital plans together, and we decide which projects across the province to fund. But it's up to the school boards to decide, you know, what kinds of partnerships and the innovative solutions that the local community may have with respect to any particular project.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, hundreds of Alberta parents and their children stood in the cold this weekend rallying for changes to the math curriculum, and I proudly stood with them. A petition calling on the Minister of Education to reinstate the basics back into the curriculum has now reached 13,000. Parents want Alberta Education to provide teachers with a textbook or a math program that emphasizes the tried-and-true, tested methods of mathematics. They want their kids to focus on and to master standard algorithms, vertical addition and subtraction. Will the minister commit to making that the primary focus, and if so, how?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to emphasize once again that the basics were never gone. I think that if you're looking for evidence that there's a problem with numeracy in Alberta, you can just look across the aisle. To say that there were hundreds of people at that rally this weekend is a bit of a stretch, just like to say that our math scores have dropped 32 per cent, which is what the member said not too long ago, is a bit of a stretch because, actually, they dropped two and a half per cent over the last three years. The reality is that they don't want us to teach problem solving. They don't want us to teach 21st century skills. They just want us to teach basics. We think that we need to learn both.

Mr. McAllister: Those are the minister's words, and they are inaccurate, Mr. Speaker.

Given that yesterday the Deputy Minister of Education defended the new math philosophy, stating, "With all due respect, mathematicians and math profs [are] not the best advisors on math pedagogy" – now, I know there are some consultants here today, and that's good. You should be well rounded. But it is troubling. Minister, don't you find it troubling that you don't go to math experts for advice on mathematics?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we absolutely do go to math experts for advice, and we do go to experts on pedagogy. We go beyond that. We go right across the world to see what leading jurisdictions are doing, those that are performing better than us on international tests and are advancing their scores. We go to businesses and the business leaders across the country, and they're telling us that the basics are important but so is problem solving, so are the 21st century skills and the soft skills. These folks don't agree with that. They want us just to revert back in time to the basics. We think that we need to progress and do a better job of teaching both.

Mr. McAllister: You should teach both, and you should focus on the basics for our children.

Now, given that Manitoba just went through this very same thing, Mr. Speaker, and given that their government did the right thing, reinstated a focus on the fundamentals as their primary teaching strategy – they listened and did the right thing for our kids. Minister, stop the polarizing of this issue. Will you do the right thing for our kids and focus on the fundamentals?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, who's polarizing here? They asked us some time ago to promise to make the basics emphasized in the new curriculum. I said that, yes, we would. It's in Hansard, March 4. I said: yes, we would. We've said yes, yes, yes so many times that they can't take yes for an answer. We agree that the basics are important. It's already in the curriculum. We've also agreed with some of the parents and groups that are concerned. We're going to re-emphasize that in September, and we're going to make it an emphasis of the new curriculum that we're working on. But we also agree with world-leading experts. We believe and we agree with business leaders that the soft skills and problem solving are also important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

2:20 School Codes of Conduct

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. Last week I asked about the Heritage Christian Academy. Today it's about the Prairie Christian Academy, a fully funded public school which makes staff sign a professional ethical standards document that requires them to – get this, Mr. Speaker – uphold the sanctity of marriage, defined as that between a man and a woman, and abstain from homosexual relations. To the minister: 15 years after the Supreme Court of Canada stated that this practice is against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Humans Rights Act, why is this still happening?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we were also extremely concerned when the reports came out this weekend. Obviously, I want to be clear that we don't tolerate any discrimination or any bullying in any of our schools for any reason, and that goes for staff or students. We want to make sure that all the operations in our schools fully comply with provincial legislation. That means the Education Act and the Human Rights Act, and we're taking steps to make sure that that's the case.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, over the course of my time as critic I've repeatedly brought examples of these violations of the Charter and the Human Rights Act. Given the frequency, Mr. Minister, does your ministry approve of these policies, or do you just turn a blind eye to the practice of what is actually happening here in Alberta? It happens all the time.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this member doesn't believe in choice, he doesn't believe in giving parents choice with respect to different schools, and he doesn't believe in us funding that education. So he would like to wipe and smear every private school, every charter school, every alternative program with the same brush because we've got an issue in a few. Let's deal with the issue in the few, and we're going to do that. We've told the department that we want them to review all the master agreements between alternative programs and school boards and all the employment agreements to make sure that they're complying with provincial legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you had two points of order, one at 2:21 and one at 2:21 and a half or so. We'll deal with them shortly. Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: What I do believe is that all schools in this province should be subject to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act and that no one should be discriminated against on the basis of sexual orientation. It appears that this minister really doesn't care that much about it. Given this information that has come out today and this weekend, can you not now see the need for us to protect lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered kids in schools across this province where this type of attitude exists and make their lives better with this legislation to be made mandatory? Will you not do things to make . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I agree. Yes, I agree with the member, and we're doing things every day to make kids' lives better. We want to make sure that not only that segment of the population is protected but every segment of the population, not just our students but also our staff. We have those provincial legislations. They should be enforced. We're taking steps to make sure the ministry is going to look at this very closely. We've also got a regulatory review committee that doesn't have its final report back. They're going to be tasked to have a close look at this to make sure that if there are any regulations that we need to put in place, they give us assurances that these provincial legislations are being enforced. Then we'll do that, too.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this Education minister capitulated to right-wing, special-interest groups and the Wildrose and removed the protections of the Human Rights Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms from the Education Act. The minister just said that he doesn't tolerate discrimination of any kind in schools. To the Minister of Education: then why did you remove it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let's be really clear about what section 11 of the Human Rights Act is about. It's about parental rights. There was a time in the history of this country and in the history of this province when parental rights with respect to education were not respected, and we spent a day last week lamenting that dark period in Alberta's history. The government knows better than the parent with respect to making choices for the education of their children: we don't believe that. Obviously, we've got some strict standards. We've got some great legislation to protect human rights. Those things are in place, and they supersede the Education Act and other things that are out there. But parental rights and parental choice are important, too.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, human rights are being trampled.

Given that we have at least two examples of schools blatantly violating human rights that are enshrined in the Canadian Charter and given that schools are openly discriminating against vulnerable youth and teachers by requiring them to sign unconstitutional codes of conduct, to the same minister: why are you allowing publicly funded schools and school boards to violate the Charter rights of their students and staff and discriminate against them?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're not allowing anything. We do devolve a lot of authority to school boards. They're duly elected trustees of the system, and they manage the operations. They manage those employment agreements and so forth, and they should. If circumstances come to light like we've recently been made aware of, we're going to look into those, and we're going to address those. There's provincial legislation and national legislation to protect people, and we're going to make sure that's enforced.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that because this PC government succumbed to pressure from the Wildrose and special-interest groups, students can be expelled for exercising their constitutionally protected rights and given that as Minister of Education it's your responsibility to ensure that all students can go to school free from bullying and discrimination, will you stop making offensive excuses and commit to ensuring that constitutional human rights are protected in publicly funded schools, and if not, why not?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think it's only the NDP that view parents as a special-interest group. I think that what I've just said here over the last several questions is affirmation that we are committed to the Human Rights Act in Alberta. It is affirmation that we are committed, if you look at the Education Act in Alberta and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We're going to work with our school boards and everyone who's funded by this province to deliver education to make sure that those pieces of legislation are being adhered to.

AISH Wait Times

Mrs. Towle: My questions today will be on behalf of vulnerable Albertans. Last week at budget estimates for Human Services we learned that the wait time for an AISH application sits at three to four months. This is apparently due to over 50 applications being received each and every day. According to the minister approximately 50 per cent of AISH applications, or about 9,000 cases per year, are denied, and of those that are denied, there is an additional five-month wait time to hear the appeal. Minister, how is it even remotely acceptable for any Albertan applying for AISH to wait for nine months to a year for their application to be processed and/or appealed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member raises a valid point. The fact is that since 2012, when AISH rates were increased, the sheer volume of applications has gone up very, very significantly, with some estimates of an over 80 per cent increase in applications. What we have to do is make sure that while we reduce processing times, which we have done – we've made some progress on that, down to 15 weeks. We have more work to do. In addition, we've appointed new members to appeal panels that will attempt to clear up the backlog in that area.

Mrs. Towle: Given that the increase in AISH applications is not a surprise and the minister is able to foresee an additional increase in the workload to handle these appeals, can the minister tell Albertans exactly how many additional new members, not replacement members, have been appointed to the citizens' review panel to deal with these AISH application wait times?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I believe the number is 53 new members; 53 new members from across the province have been added to the AISH appeal panels. In addition to that, additional sitting days have been instituted so that we can try to clean up the backlog as quickly as possible to make sure people can get results as quickly as possible.

Mrs. Towle: Given that there is a 5 per cent budget increase to the Ministry of Human Services yet the only increase in staff is two full-time equivalents, which are only in the minister's own office, can the minister explain how hiring political staff in his own office is more important than hiring front-line staff who are trying to help vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, we spoke about that issue at length. It's not entirely accurate, but we'll let bygones be bygones for today. It's Monday. The fact is that we have a series of new applications. It's very important that we support vulnerable Albertans. That's why this government, on this side of the House, increased AISH by $400, to make sure that it is the most supportive program in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Little Bow.

Promotion of Alberta Energy Industry

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship tabled its final report on the review of the monetization of natural gas in Alberta. As an advocate for Alberta's Industrial Heartland, currently Canada's largest petrochemical processing region, there is a recommendation of great interest to the area. Knowing that the heartland's economic growth means economic growth for Alberta, to the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education: what is being done to make Alberta an even more attractive place for value-added companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister and Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question for all Albertans because we have a policy that, for example, calls for 66 per cent of our bitumen to be upgraded here at home and 50 per cent of that going upstream. We also have an ethane policy. What we need to do is make sure that the foundations are there for business to be able to engage right here. Innovation and Advanced Education works with Energy, works with other departments in government to develop those policy frameworks, and works with industry to make sure that those policy frameworks will be workable for them so that they can do their business here.

2:30

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the Minister of Energy: given that time is of the essence when these companies are deciding where to set up shop, what can we expect with respect to a policy decision on the report, and how long will it take to implement those recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time is of the essence. A lot of times when businesses are looking at the opportunities that they might have, their time frame is finite, so they want to work closely with our departments to understand what policy frameworks are in place, and we need to work with them to make sure that our policy development results in policies that actually work for industry and for Albertans. We try to do that on a timely basis. We're working with Energy and with other departments to make sure that that can happen, and it is happening for Albertans.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. My final question is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Given the industrial traffic that commutes through Fort Saskatchewan, my constituency is looking for a heavy-load bridge. Can we expect one in the near future?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, currently there are three heavy-haul bridges across the North Saskatchewan River – Vinca, Waskatenau, and Duvernay – that support development in northeast Alberta. It is expected that the completion of the northeast leg of the Anthony Henday, to be completed in 2016, also will provide two new bridges with seven lanes across the North Saskatchewan River. This will help the congestion on highway 15 at the crossing of Fort Saskatchewan. It will also help with the movement of people, goods, and services in and around the northeast part of the capital region.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Cross.

Rural Flood Damage Payments

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 30 I raised a question about Jeff Callahan, a local farmer near High River who had flood damage in the June flood. The former Municipal Affairs minister explained that his crop loss should be covered through the emergency management incurred costs, which at that time we were all happy with. It looked like we had the problem solved. But then we found out that nobody was taking responsibility for who pumped the water on those said lands. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Someone paid for those pumps to run on this farmer's land. Why won't they pay for the damage they caused?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank this member for this question. I think it really highlights one of the issues that we haven't talked a lot about, and that is some of the damage done during the flood in rural Alberta. You know, we lost something like 30 municipal water-pumping systems, and we did have farmland damage. It was a major event. The DRP does cover input costs like fertilizer and those sorts of things on land that has been damaged by overland flooding.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, part of the problem here is that it wasn't just overland flooding. It was the fact that the local municipality kept pumping water onto this land into August. It damaged the land. It made it muddy. It made it where the combines have been stuck during harvest time. When can this farmer and other farmers around him expect the MD or the government to take responsibility and find a solution to actually pay for the loss and the damages due to the value of it?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to speak on behalf of the county that did the pumping. I'm sure that the member can sit down and work with them as he is a ratepayer of theirs. We always try to help find solutions to these very important cases. Any damage caused by the overland flooding portion is covered by the DRP for the input costs only, not for loss of crop.

Thank you.

Mr. Donovan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it kind of interesting because the MD of Bighorn, I believe, paid $1.2 million or $1.7 million for rocks from Lafarge, that Lafarge billed the DRP for, which, it was obviously laid out, was worth more than the rock value at the time. Can the minister tell me how Lafarge can get paid for extra value on their rocks, yet my farmers are expected to just take the loss?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know the value of the rocks that Lafarge was selling or who was using it, but I do know that we're concerned about the farmers in the south and some of the damage that they incurred. We'll continue to work with these landowners. For any of the landowners that do feel that the DRP process didn't work for them, there is an appeal process in place. We would ask them to go ahead with that for any of the damages caused by overland flooding, and the DRP will treat them fairly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Student Employment Supports

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the last day of classes for postsecondary students, and tomorrow thousands of students will be out looking for summer jobs. It will be difficult to find employment because we know that the unemployment rate for youth is twice that for the general population. I can tell you that students remain very upset that the summer temporary employment program, in place for over 40 years, was cancelled last year. My question is to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: why was the STEP program cancelled when it provided 3,000 jobs a year for students?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the program, that at that time was administered by the Ministry of Human Services, was indeed cancelled. It was a very difficult decision, I imagine, for the ministry and for the entire government as it was made at a time of fiscal restraint. At the same time, I have to tell you that we found that there was a better way of allocating these dollars for students to allow them not only a job during summertime but much more practical and relevant experience. So stay tuned in the future.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: does that mean that you will commit to students, nonprofit organizations, and businesses that the STEP program will be reinstated in time for them to access it this spring?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have given direction to my department to look at the program. One of the weaknesses found in the last program was that students were not finding employment in areas that were actually relevant to their studies, so we're hoping to give a triple benefit: give students jobs, give them relevant experience during the summertime on the job, and allow businesses and not-for-profit agencies to benefit from the wisdom that these students will be bringing from the classroom into those offices and places of employment. We are committed to it, and our departments are working on putting a much better program in place.

Mrs. Fritz: That is good news, Mr. Speaker, because what I hear the minister saying is that you will lift the suspension and reinstate the program that was suspended in 2013. My question is: how and when will you communicate this new program to the students and the nonprofit organizations and businesses?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that we will do better than that. We will not lift the suspension, but we are in the process of designing a much better STEP program, which probably will be known by a different name, a program that will actually meet not only the employment needs of our students, even though at this time we know that employment is ample in this province, but will give them, more importantly, related experience in the area of their study and, by doing so, also benefit the businesses. So stay tuned. Our departments are working on this. It's a crossministerial initiative. We know it's very important to our students and business sector.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Dunvegan-Central-Peace-Notley.

Lung Cancer Diagnosis and Treatment

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2011 Alberta Health Services announced that it would open new rapid-access clinics in both Calgary and Edmonton to co-ordinate lung cancer assessment, testing, and treatment for people around the province. AHS said that once these clinics were fully functional, they would treat 4,000 patients per year. We were told these clinics would dramatically reduce wait times across the province and that central Albertans would benefit, yet here we are in 2014 and wait times for lung cancer treatment in Alberta are by far the longest in the country. To the Health minister: why have these clinics failed to deliver the results that Albertans were promised?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing more important than making sure that when Albertans have a health issue, they have access to the services they need. That's why this government has made huge commitments right across this province, particularly on cancer care, with the cancer corridor and with moving out treatment right across the province. I know that the Minister of Health has talked a number of times about the plans in place to reduce wait times, and that work is happening as we speak.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that these rapid-access clinics were supposed to result in Albertans accessing lung cancer surgery in 60 days or less from the time of booking yet three years later most Albertans are waiting close to 90 days to access this life-saving procedure, can the associate minister of Health tell us what specifically he is doing now to get these wait times under control?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question. I can tell him that in the last couple of weeks I have been through the Cross Cancer hospital in Edmonton and through the Tom Baker in Calgary just last Friday. I want the hon. member to know this government takes that seriously. I spent some serious time with the people that are in charge of the cancer care system here in Alberta. They are making the point that we deliver a great quality of service here, that we need to keep investing and that we need to expand the system.

2:40

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the wait times in central Alberta to see a medical oncologist from the date of referral to the first consult is by far the highest in the province at 7.3 weeks and given that the benchmark in the province is four weeks, can the associate minister of Health please explain this failure to my constituents and the constituents in central Alberta?

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, we're always conscious of wait times in this province, especially with something as critical as oncology. AHS will be targeting these areas. We know that we've got some wait times that are slightly longer in some areas of the province than others in this country, but we are working on that. We also have to remember that central Alberta along with many other areas in this province is growing at a very, very rapid rate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The time for question period has expired. In 30 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements, beginning with Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us proceed, then, with the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Cross.

Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bitamo, welcome, a phrase you will hear quite often at the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village, which opened in 1974. It's 40 years young this year, and the village will welcome guests beginning May 17 for this season. It's open daily throughout the summer from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. until Monday, September 1, with the addition of the Harvest of the Past Festival on September 7. The site is located 45 minutes east of Edmonton in Lamont county. The village re-creates with historical authenticity the settlement of Ukrainian immigrants to the area from 1899 to 1930.

The site is hosting some notable festivals this year. On May 19 is the Celebration of Dance, Alberta's largest Ukrainian dance extravaganza. On June 14, a very special festival, the village is proud to collaborate with the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra to present Symphony at the Village. This live concert in the meadow will feature a collection of Ukrainian-inspired music and traditional family favourites. It's a significant first for the village. On June 29 a special display of historic vehicles is part of Vintage Day. On August 10 a celebration of Alberta's vibrant Ukrainian community past and present is co-hosted by the Ukrainian Canadian Congress. On August 24 Friends of the Ukrainian Village Society present Music Fest 2014. The season wraps up with a harvest of the past, a re-creation of an old-fashioned threshing bee.

Family-friendly activities are found throughout the historic village. Horse-drawn wagon rides, traditional Ukrainian food, and costumed role players will make your visit memorable. It's a Zabava all summer long. Bring the family out to enjoy the party and celebrate this great history.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Agrium Western Event Centre

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to advise that an exciting new facility for the exhibition, competition, and display of animals is being constructed for Albertans by the Calgary Stampede. It will be the only facility of its kind in Canada. The Agrium Western Event Centre is near completion and is designed to have an essential role in making the Calgary Stampede a year-round gathering place.

This concept is new, and it is critically important. The centre will connect urban and rural communities, and it will host an engaging, globally focused educational program.

This beautiful $60 million facility includes a show floor with seating for 2,500 people, a 20,000-square-foot multipurpose hall, and an outstanding 8,000-square-foot rotunda.

The Agrium Western Event Centre will be the new home for western equine events at Stampede Park, hosting both regional and international competitions, exhibitions, and trade shows. Four events have already signed multiyear agreements with the Stampede to host their major shows and competitions there. The centre will also promote how agriculture changes lives around the world, emphasizing the sustainability concept of food supplies. The building's magnificent rotunda will also be the home of journey 2050, which is a unique educational program for junior high school aged children. They will be empowered to make decisions and have fun exploring the challenge of sustainably feeding the world in 2050.

Mr. Speaker, as a director of the Calgary Stampede board I'd ask that you and members of the Assembly join me in acknowledging and thanking the governments of Alberta and Canada for their matching contributions along with Agrium and the private donors and the Calgary Stampede board, staff, and volunteers for creating an outstanding, world-class Agrium Western Event Centre.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Public Service Pensions

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the years since the cowboys on Wall Street crashed the world economy, there have been repeated attacks on public-sector pensions by right-wing elected officials across the world. We've seen this in the U.S., and we've seen this in Alberta. In fact, we've seen this Conservative government pass two bills, Bill 45 and Bill 46, that contravene the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the ability of front-line workers to assemble, and the ability of Albertans to even speak freely about striking, one of the most fundamental rights, freedom of speech, in this country.

The fact of the matter is that public servants built this great country. Our civil service is run by some of the hardest working, best public servants. Our public school system is run by very good public servants and teachers and support staff. Our health system is run by the very heroes who look after the patients: the unit clerks, the cleaning staff, the nurses, the LPNs, respiratory therapists, the paramedics. Public servants stay on call 24 hours a day, while we sleep, to protect us, from our police officers to our firefighters to our paramedics. Mr. Speaker, I think you can agree with me on that. The question is: why would this government attack the rights and freedoms of the very people who built this province and this country?

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about pensions. The public service pensions allow those people, those very heroes who built our province, to live their lives with some dignity, some dignity so they can pay their bills, which are pretty high in this province, so they can buy their grandkids some toys, and look after themselves. The Alberta Liberals stand here in support of public-sector workers.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table this document written by Dr. Charles Boulet, entitled Debunked. He gives reasons why Bill 203 should be supported. He says, "For too many children, visual impediments are a burden they cannot describe, let alone fix, but they interfere with behaviour and learning. This bears tremendous costs to school boards and health care."

My next tabling is a document written by Dr. Steven Hoang. Dr. Hoang is from Calgary, and he is an optometrist. He says that he graduated with his doctor of optometry in 2013 and that in the eight months that he has been practising, he has already seen first hand the number of children with undiagnosed refractive error, eye alignment disorders, and ocular disease. The age range of kids I see for their first ever eye exam ranges from 6 months to 18 years old. The majority of their decreased visual performance are corrected by a simple pair of glasses.

My next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a document from the Eye Physicians and Surgeons Association of Alberta. They're the experts on the eye, and they're part of the Canadian Ophthalmological Society. They fully support enhanced vision screening designed to capture and treat eye health problems in as many affected children as possible, but they're concerned about the difference between eye exams and vision screening, which we will be dealing with in Committee of the Whole, if we get that far, with Bill 203.

My last tabling is from a blog on the Internet. It's titled Bill 203, Childhood Vision Assessment Act, and it's in full support of Bill 203.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a review of Childhood Vision Screening in Canada: Public Health Evidence and Practice from the Canadian Journal of Public Health, 2012, where the conclusion indicates that amblyopia [or weak vision] deserves attention from Public Health. Efforts should be made to maintain existing programs, and provinces without organized screening programs should reconsider their role in the prevention of inequities with regard to preventable blindness in Canadian children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe we have one more, and that's the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you're aware, today in question period I referred to some documents that were on the Prairie Christian Academy website in regard to professional and ethical standards that teachers were asked to sign, where it clearly said that "teachers will uphold the sanctity of marriage, defined as that between a man and a woman, and abstain from homosexual relations and sexual relations outside the bonds of marriage." I've also included in my tabling the philosophy of their Christian education.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Hon. members, in a moment I'll deal with the points of order.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

The Speaker: The points of order that I have were uttered by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, so let me recognize the hon.

member or someone on her behalf. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, citation, and we'll go from there.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I have to go on very long about this, which will make you very happy. I'm citing 23(h), (i), and (j) in our rules. Essentially, these say that references cannot make allegations, impute false or unavowed motives, or use abusive or insulting language.

I listened somewhat to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Education. In my view, my questions were directed to legitimate policies of certain schools that have been fully funded as public schools in this province that had references, in my view, to things that were outside of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act. It's a legitimate place to bring these up. By no means was I disparaging to them, and by no means did I disparage Catholic schools, which are constitutionally protected in this province and the like. In my view, if you look at the Blues, the minister's response to my question was outside of what my thrust was and what the questions were dealing with. I think he should withdraw those comments and move on from there. The questions asked were about legitimate policy and what the government was going to do about what I saw was a clear violation of what we expect out of our education system here in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll be very quick. I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I'm not privy to what the exact conversation was. If I remember correctly, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo asked his questions, stated his opinion about private schools. The minister got up and gave his opinion and sat down. I don't think that at any point were his remarks disparaging. I don't think he made any allegations against the member. It was just a response to a question that was asked by the member.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I'm at a bit of a disadvantage as well in that I don't have the full Blues of that exchange. What I do have suggests that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo did rise at approximately 2:20 p.m. and said words that approximated the following: Mr. Minister, does your ministry approve of these policies, or do you just turn a blind eye to the practice of what is actually happening? It goes on before that, and it goes on after that. We'll have to wait for the official Blues or Hansard tomorrow.

In response to that – again, I hope I'm not paraphrasing here – I think the hon. minister stood, that being the Minister of Education, and said something about the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo doesn't believe in choice and doesn't believe in giving parents the right to choose or words to that effect. We'll just have to wait until the final words come out.

Let me just say this, hon. members. In this House we hear every day people disagreeing with each other about what they say, about what they believe in. We often have two different versions of the same account. We've had the Member for Calgary-Buffalo clarify his position. We've had the government member clarify his. I'll review the Blues as well. If there's anything further on this, then I'll raise it again tomorrow. Otherwise, the ruling today stands as a clarification of the points, and we're going to move on with Orders of the Day.

Thank you.

Full-day Kindergarten Costs

Q3. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

What is the government's projected estimate of the cost to implement full-day kindergarten in Alberta?

Mr. Hehr: I'm going to move Question 3. With Question 3 now moved, I think this has been a long-standing provision in this province. Actually, the former Premier at least at one time promised that she was going to implement this program. I'm not sure if the government still has plans to do so. Nevertheless, it should have some documents where it has estimated the costs of this program. I'm hoping that they can provide it to allow us on the opposition side of the House to establish whether it is in our best interests, whether we have the funds to do so, and assess the relative merits of it going forward against other priorities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government is currently exploring what the best solution for Alberta students will look like in terms of full-day, every day kindergarten. This includes giving consideration for any projected costs. Until this work has concluded, we don't have an estimate of the costs, unfortunately. Alberta Education is continuing to work with our stakeholders to ensure that we find the best solution for the students.

Funding in Alberta ensures that school authorities can provide flexible programs for their students, including children at the preschool level and children with special needs. I can say that currently Alberta Education provides funding to school authorities that offer 475 hours, which is half-day, of early childhood services programming. School authorities have the flexibility to charge a reasonable fee to cover the costs of any additional programming hours. Funding is also available to school authorities for approved early childhood services programs for children with severe disabilities as young as two and a half as well as programming for ESL learners as young as three and a half. We'll continue to fund the collection of the early development instrument, EDI, data to inform early childhood development policy and programming, which is also part of our planning, as well as the infrastructure piece and the professional capacity that we have in this system to deliver full-day K.

We're also collaborating with Human Services and Health to create an inclusive, early years continuum of evidence-informed strategies, which will focus on achieving four common outcomes, and one of those is a healthy start for children. The second is children realizing their full development potential when they enter school. The third is parents providing nurturing and stable environments for their young children. The fourth outcome is safe, supportive communities for children to learn, grow, and thrive.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, there's lots of work under way and lots yet to do. We just are not at the position where we have definitive projections of costs for this program even though we are still at this point committed to develop it and to deliver it. Therefore, I move that we reject this question.

Mr. Hehr: Well, that's fair enough if the minister hasn't developed a cost projection for full-day kindergarten. I'm surprised because it has been talked about in this province for some time. Nevertheless, if you don't have it, you don't have it. I'm in support of full-day kindergarten. Many jurisdictions have it. I think it provides a benefit to our kids at an earlier age. My hope is that the minister will develop a cost for this program so then we can talk about it as a more real scenario rather than hoping and wishing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Q7. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

As of January 1, 2014, what is the government's estimate of how much the Alberta heritage savings trust fund would be worth if it had consistently transferred 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue into the fund every year since 1976?

Mr. Hehr: The reason why I ask this question is, I guess, fairly clear. At one point in time it was this long-serving government's mandate, put forward by former Premier Lougheed, that as a principle this should in fact happen. In my view, it was a reasonable public policy piece given that we know that once a barrel of oil is taken out of the ground, you never have that barrel of oil to sell again. So having some of that money transferred into a provincial wealth fund was good public policy. We've seen over the course of time that the government has failed miserably in this regard. In fact, we haven't saved a dime in our heritage trust fund since in 1986, and in fact estimates are that if we had kept up with this, our fund would be very substantial instead of the rather, in my view, limited heritage trust fund we have today.

I think the government would have these statistics and figures readily available to them given that they have the information on how much they have brought in and how much they have saved, and it would highlight to us the importance of getting back on track to Lougheed's vision, in fact, maybe even a vision that would be more conservative, paying for what we use with taxes and saving the oil wealth for the future. In any event, I think that's information the government has or could get relatively easily, and it would allow us to look at what we've done and what we're going to do in the future with the wisdom of this information at our fingertips.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government does not prepare calculations of the fund's value under what-if scenarios. Making the 30 per cent assumption would require us to make several other assumptions – you know, "How much did the fund make? What happened in the economy? Where are we going with the interest rates?" all of those sorts of things – which could've produced a very wide variety of results.

Further, you would have to consider the impact those assumptions would have had on Alberta's fiscal situation at the time given that there were other things going on in the economy. Certainly, in the '80s there were some significant challenges being faced by the government, and certainly in the '90s, Mr. Speaker, there were significant challenges being faced by then Premier Klein and his government. For example, if you set aside 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue every year no matter what, you would have to reduce spending; you would have to increase taxes. I know the hon. member and the party is in that vein, but they'd also have to make changes to the royalty regime to make up the difference.

The idea that Albertans should save is certainly one this government has taken to heart. We passed legislation in this House, Mr. Speaker, last year that would make it mandatory that before we calculated our operating revenue, we had to take savings off the top and put it into the account.

The fact of the matter is that in this budget that we've got before the House today, our savings will grow from $24 billion today, Mr. Speaker, to $26 billion, you know, given the financial plan and this three-year business plan. Albertans have told us several times that even in good times and bad times they want us to set some money aside. That means that they wanted to see that legislation. In order for us to continue to do that, it does mean that we're going to be building capital projects using the markets. When you can make 11.6 per cent on your savings and your average debt-servicing costs are around 3 and a half per cent, that makes good financial sense as well.

To say that, you know, we're going to spend a lot of time on what-if scenarios of, "Gee, if it would've been this or it would've been that, what would it be worth?" – what would the federal government have done, Mr. Speaker? We don't know that. I mean, we could've created a considerable target on our backs.

Another thing needs to be answered when they do these comparisons of Norway and these sorts of things come up. Number one, Norway has considerable sales tax, some 20-plus per cent sales tax, and the highest income tax in Europe, probably, Mr. Speaker. They made a conscious decision not to use any nonrenewable resource in their operating, day-to-day expenditures even though they do actually balance their budget every year by drawing from their fund, and it is their pension fund.

The other thing to remember, Mr. Speaker, is that roughly 55 per cent of the economic benefit generated from Albertans' energy resources is actually attributed to the federal government. What if we were to change the assumption and say, "Well, maybe we shouldn't do that"? There are a lot of what-ifs in that kind of a question, frankly. Therefore, we are recommending that this written question be rejected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always interesting when you hear the government trying to defend what has happened with our oil and gas revenues and how come there was so little saved over the course of the last 42 years. I think we were treated to another one of those, I guess, apologies for that, in my view, for the not very reasonable amount of savings that is currently found. You know, I'm not on the government side, and I don't have access to these figures, but from what I've gathered, we've taken in over $375 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue and have only managed to save $16 billion. At this point in time we are headed for a $21 billion debt. I think that if we can't really honestly look at ourselves and provide these numbers and try and get a handle on what we should be doing with our nonrenewable resource revenue, well, that's concerning to me.

Nevertheless, I accept the hon. minister's explanation for what it is and understand that the government is not interested at this time in putting that information out in the light of day.

[Written Question 7 lost]

Debt-servicing Limit

Q8. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

Using the formula in section 6 of the Fiscal Management Act for the calculation of the debt-servicing limit for a fiscal year with respect to outstanding capital borrowing, what is the government's calculation of its debt-servicing limit for the 2013-14 fiscal year, and how much money can the government borrow in the 2013-14 fiscal year before it reaches this debt-servicing limit?

Mr. Hehr: I will say here that this is actually an important piece of knowledge for the opposition to learn because, really, should the government wish to or should the government need to or the like, there's always an ability for the government to borrow money. Now, the government did change our current financing rules from ones that were very clear and very easy to understand and ones that, like we heard about in question period, former Finance minister Jim Dinning preferred and was able to easily calculate what our net position was in terms of debt and revenue. The new rules are, in my view, less clear. You know, I think there are many people who have stated that. I think, honestly, I read in the paper that the hon. Minister of Justice would prefer those old, simple accounting rules again and many other people who would be surprising given that they were formerly part of the government of the day.

Nevertheless, we would have this number in a clear, concise manner for us to understand sort of how this new act works – what the debt-servicing limits are, how it impacts government's ability to go forward, and how it impacts, you know, what our obligations are given that we are headed for a $21 billion debt by 2016-2017 – and what the triggers are in this act and the like given the substantial changes that have occurred in our financial accounting practices in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is actually referring to section 6 of the Fiscal Management Act, which states:

The debt-servicing costs of the Government for a fiscal year in respect of outstanding capital borrowing must not exceed 3% of the average of the actual operational revenue for the fiscal year and the previous 2 fiscal years.

The hon. member went on at length to talk about how confused he is about the financial statements that are, I guess, currently within the purview of this Legislature in the budget, and I guess it's understandable that if he's that confused, he failed to recognize that the answer to his question is actually in the budget documents for the fiscal year 2014-15.

I would also add, Mr. Speaker, that the limit on debt-servicing costs for 2013-14 is also already available online in the 2013-14 fiscal plan, as are the forecast debt-servicing costs. It is all online.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that I would add to this commentary is that in 2003, as part of an attempt to move closer to public-sector accounting rules and presentations, we actually went to consolidated financial statements. We actually moved closer to the public-sector accounting rules. Previous ministers of Finance, frankly, didn't probably follow the same standard because we moved to it in 2003. So it is totally understandable that this might be a little different than some of the presentations from the '70s or the '80s or the '90s or perhaps even some of the early 2000s.

I guess I'm having difficulty understanding that the hon. member, as the critic for Finance, would suggest that the public-sector accounting rules are to him confusing and hard to understand. Yet the University of Toronto just recently released a commentary on a report that they did where they actually called on provincial governments to do what municipal governments have been doing for some period of time, and that is to separate capital from operating. They actually called on provincial governments, Mr. Speaker, to be more clear and concise and more detailed in their reporting.

Part of the question the hon. member is asking is about the detail around debt-servicing costs. Mr. Speaker, in previous presentations of our budgets we didn't even allude to those things. We have been borrowing for some period of time. To suggest that we're now going to have additional borrowing, that we might not have had in the past, would be wrong because the $20 billion that they're referring to also includes P3s. We don't know the balance of P3s to capital debt, what that will be, because we haven't reviewed those projects. P3s are debt, and they have been on our books since somewhere around 2003-2004. To suggest that we're just going into there is some of the misrepresentation that has been presented by the Wildrose Alliance Party and others, I guess.

The other thing that I have to put on the record: to suggest that we're doing this and that there are no other options. There are options. There are options, Mr. Speaker. We've readily admitted that the options we have are to follow the Wildrose platform of not building, deferring the capital into the out-years. That's an option. You wouldn't have to borrow. You'd be able to do some of the capital planning to the out-years, granted. The other option is what the Liberals have asked for, which is to increase the taxes. That's another option. We could increase taxes, generate more revenue, and put cash into long-term assets. No financial expert in today's economy at today's interest rates believes that that's the thing to do.

The option that we chose was to leverage a triple-A credit rating, that is the envy of the world. The option that we chose was to provide taxpayers with value and assets today. We said to them that it will follow four very simple rules. One, it has to be for capital. Two, it cannot exceed the debt-servicing cap, which the hon. member is referring to, which is in the documents, which is online, Mr. Speaker, which is all very, very clear. Three, it has to protect that triple-A credit rating. Four, it has to have a repayment plan, which is also, I would add for all hon. members, in the document called the budget, which we are debating in the House today.

Mr. Speaker, I would reject this question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was a nice story. It doesn't ring true, in my view, on how the long-running government has essentially engaged in a practice of intergenerational theft, which has basically amounted to spending all the oil wealth in one generation. Really, if there's anything else that they can take credit for, that would be about it, okay? It was a nice story to try and defend that.

Nevertheless, I'll go look for those numbers on the limits on how much debt we can take on in any calendar year, and if it's there, it's there. I stand by my earlier commentary about changing the financial rules. In fact, virtually every Tory Finance minister has stated on the record that this practice is against openness and transparency. In fact, I believe the C.D. Howe Institute stated exactly the same thing, where they said that this government's financial rules and regulations make no sense and that it's sheer and utter obfuscation to suggest otherwise and the like.

Nevertheless, I'll leave it at that and go from there. It is what it is, Mr. Speaker. If the minister says that that information is there, I will go and take a look.

Thank you.

[Written Question 8 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Cancer Incidence Rates

Q9. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted. Which 10 municipalities had the highest leukemia, lymphoma, and lung cancer incidence rates in Alberta for each of the years from January 1, 2001, to December 31, 2013?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is in the interest of looking at the potential for environmental impacts on cancer rates, especially air emissions in this particular set of diseases, and trying to look for any trends across the province in which some communities might be more exposed to coal emissions, to industrial emissions, to refinery emissions, and to sort out any significant trends in cancer rates, those three being the most sensitive indicators to some environmental pollutants.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Health or someone on behalf of. The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have an amendment to table. Would you like it now, or would you like me to speak to it first?

The Speaker: Now is good.

Hon. members, the associate minister will be moving an amendment, and I wonder if we could just have him read it aloud and then continue with his debate on the amendment. Is that acceptable? It appears it is.

Hon. associate minister, why don't you continue with the amendment, reading it aloud, and, pages, will you distribute the written copy?

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to read it. I have some short comments that will follow. The amendment will read:

Which municipalities in Alberta had the highest leukemia, lymphoma, and lung cancer incidence rates for the period from January 1, 2001, to December 31, 2005, and for the period from January 1, 2006, to December 31, 2011?

I will now give the reasons as to why I trust that this will be acceptable to the House.

I first of all want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his written question identified in Written Question 9. In the question the hon. member asked, “Which 10 municipalities had the highest leukemia, lymphoma, and lung cancer incidence rates in Alberta for each of the years from January 1, 2001, to December 31, 2013?” Mr. Speaker, the reason for the amendment is that the question cannot be answered as written. The Alberta cancer registry is the only provincial repository for cancer data. However, updating and verifying the data is very complex, and the data for 2012-2013 is not yet available for analysis.

Also, where the case counts or populations are small, the data may become identifiable and compromise a patient’s privacy. Finally, municipal populations and cancer rates vary widely across the province and from year to year, and any instability in numbers may lead to misleading results. That is why years are routinely combined as a means of protecting privacy while also providing reliable information. To protect people’s privacy and to produce meaningful results, it would be necessary to combine the data asked for in Written Question 9 by five-year increments.

That is the reason for the amendment as read prior to my comments and now distributed here in the House. So, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, amending the question this way would ensure that we can provide a meaningful answer to what is a very serious question.

With that, I conclude my remarks for now, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes. I’ll accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to move Written Question 12.

First Nations Education

Q12. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

What progress has been made on the First Nations-Alberta-Canada February 2010 memorandum of understanding on aboriginal education?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is building on a long-term strategic action plan that Alberta arranged through an MOU with First Nations in Alberta in September 2013. Treaty 6 chiefs abstained from voting to approve the plan; however, all other parties – Treaty 7, Treaty 8, the government of Alberta, and the government of Canada – agreed to move forward. The question relates to a number of related questions. What work has been done since the Treaty 6 folks left the table to reintegrate them in the discussions? With the 2014 federal Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development’s introduction of Bill C-33, the First Nations Control of First Nations Education Act, I guess the question is: how will that affect the memorandum of understanding between the province and the First Nations? That bill, the federal bill, would provide $1.9 billion over three years, starting in 2015-16, to 600 First Nations across Canada. Again, how will the federal bill affect the current MOU for First Nations education in Alberta? Will Alberta chip in for any funding shortfalls during the interim?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Written Question 12 be amended by striking out “on aboriginal education” and substituting “for First Nations education in Alberta.” The amended written question would read as follows:

What progress has been made on the First Nations-Alberta-Canada February 2010 memorandum of understanding for First Nations education in Alberta?

I move to amend the question just to more accurately reflect the proper name of the MOU.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: I accept the amendment.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in my haste to move things along because we have so many written questions, we went straight to a vote on the motion as amended. More properly, we should be voting on the amendment first, so let’s do that now.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 12 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to move Written Question 13.

School Teacher Staffing

Q13. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

How many full-time, part-time, and substitute teachers were/are there in the public and separate school systems in Alberta for the 2012-13 and current school years?

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think, actually, in estimate debates I received a graph from the hon. Minister of Education which may in part answer this question. But the reason for it is that there have been a great many students arriving in Alberta over the course of the last number of years, with a lessening emphasis on the amount of money that is going to education, at least from a baseline year of 2008-2009. The Alberta Teachers’ Association put out a graph where if we had kept up with that funding allocation, there would be substantially more teachers in this province than we currently have. Getting information on where our education system is in terms of the number of students and the number of teachers is very important to assess what is happening in our classrooms in terms of our classroom sizes and the amount of, I guess, pressure on schools, school boards, and teachers in this province to deliver programming. Having an actual number would assist us in assessing what’s working in education, where we are, and where we need to go.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I move that Written Question 13 be amended by striking out “were/are there in the public and separate school systems in Alberta for the 2012-13 and current school years” and substituting that with “were there in the public and separate school systems in Alberta for 2012-13.” The amended written question would read as follows:

How many full-time, part-time, and substitute teachers were there in the public and separate school systems in Alberta for 2012-13?

Mr. Speaker, Education collects statistical information on teacher employment from school authorities throughout the year and at the end of the year. This data is used to maintain a current and accurate teacher registry system in accordance with section 15 of the Certification of Teachers Regulation. We don’t have the year-end results for this current school year, obviously, so I move to amend the question as the final counts for this school year, 2013-14, are not available to us until August of 2014.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, an amendment to Written Question 13 is now being circulated as far as I know. The minister has read it into the record. Is there any debate on the amendment?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: I accept the amendment. I thank the minister for his co-operation in this matter, and I look forward to getting that information in due course.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 13 as amended carried]

School Bus Transportation Costs

Q14. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

What is the average school bus transportation cost per student in both the public and separate school systems in Alberta for the 2012-13 and current school years?

Mr. Hehr: The reason we ask this question is because increasingly, as a result of this government’s failure to build schools in neighbourhoods where kids live, we’re seeing that not only busing costs faced by local schools boards but that busing times are increasing for children who ride the bus to school. This is a concern for us in that we believe it’s in the best interest to have kids at a school in their own community. This is not happening at this present time, so accordingly we want to figure out what is in the best interests of our children in terms of busing, how much this costs, and whether this is really an efficient use of government resources and in the best interests of our children going forward.

I also note that many school boards are having difficulty as a result of the fuel contingency agreement, that was in place in previous years, no longer being available. It means more costs are on them, and they have an inability to then hire teachers and build schools and the like and all of those things that school boards are tasked to do. In any event, that’s why we believe that information is pertinent, and we’re hoping that the minister can provide us with that information.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to move an amendment to this question as well. Maybe the pages want to distribute this while I move that Written Question 14 be amended by striking out “and current school years” and substituting “school year.” The amended question would read as follows:

What is the average school bus transportation cost per student in both the public and separate school systems in Alberta for the 2012-13 school year?

I know the pages are getting their exercise here today with all these amendments.

Mr. Speaker, this is just similar to the last amendment that we requested. It’s a good question. We’re happy to provide the information. We just don’t have it until the end of the school year, and we can provide this information after the end of the school year just as we can with the previous question, Written Question 13.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the amendment to Written Question 14 is now being circulated. Are we ready for the discussion anyway? Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, hon. minister, for the assistance with my grammar in writing the question as well as providing the information to me in due course. I accept this amendment and thank him for it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, you have the amendment, and it’s been accepted by the original mover and, of course, by the original sponsor.

Survey Results for Budget 2014 Priorities

M1. Mr. Hehr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the responses that the government received from Albertans through its online survey on their priorities for Budget 2014.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my view, how Albertans respond to these online surveys is very pertinent information to opposition parties as it would have a tendency to show Albertans' responses to budgets and what they believe to be in their best interests for their future in terms of how much revenue we bring in, how much spending we do, and how much debt we accumulate. The government collects this information. I assume they would be able to have this information put out to opposition parties to understand truly what Albertans believe or don't believe, frankly, on the current state of our finances. I think this information is in the hands of the government, and if they could provide it, it would be most helpful to all concerned in the name of openness and transparency.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Motion for a Return 1 this consultation report again – and I almost hate to say this – is already available online. The What We Heard report provides details on the background and the purpose of the prebudget consultation. It provides a summary of the online survey results and a summary of open house results. The report also provides numerous anecdotal responses made by participants, even those that perhaps we didn't necessarily agree with. Given that much of this information is already online, I see really no reason to send a member the individual surveys filled out last fall by more than 2,000 Albertans.

It might be of interest to the House, Mr. Speaker, to know that the very first question on there was whether or not we should be using capital, you know, basically borrowing for capital, when it made financial sense. The overwhelming response on the survey was yes, which I thought was kind of interesting as well as some other interesting things. I'm sure the hon. member will like to read about the fact that we want to keep taxes low and the fact that we want to build the infrastructure even if it does mean going into capital debt. It's interesting that 2,000 Albertans surveyed would say that given what you hear from across the way sometimes.

Therefore, I do recommend that Motion for a Return 1 be rejected, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have before us Motion for a Return 1, and we have the hon. sponsor to close debate on that.

Mr. Hehr: I categorically disagree with the story that was just told by the hon. member. With the deepest respect I don't think it would take his ministry that much in man-hours or time to let us have all 2,000 of those survey examples. I have every confidence that the ministry may have – I won't say "did" – tended to see more positively some of the responses from Albertans than the average person in this Legislature or, in fact, the average person here in Alberta. I tend to think the government likes to see things that they want to see in responses, not as they actually are. So I take things like that with a grain of salt, what the hon. member just informed me of. I think it'd be very easy for him to click a button and to compile all of this information and get it to us.

I think that was their mandate, to be open and transparent, and then we, the opposition, could go through it and actually see what was said because frankly, sir, I have difficulties with the postulation that the government just condensed everything neatly into a couple of anecdotal sentences that said that Albertans think everything is sunshine and roses and lollipops in this province, because that's not what I'm hearing on the street, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

Online Portal for Registry Services

M4. Mr. Kang moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any documents relating to the implementation plan for an online portal for registry services in 2014.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall or someone on behalf of. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-McCall I think the request is eminently sensible. It talks to openness and accountability, and I look forward to the minister's response.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We reviewed this motion for a return. We do have an initiative under way for services to be made available online through the government-wide service portal, but we're still doing a lot of work on the consultations and on what exactly that would look like. We are planning some fundamental changes, but we are nowhere near any sort of implementation phase, so we have no document, so we're suggesting to members that we reject this motion for a return.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm a little surprised on behalf, again, of the Member for Calgary-McCall that we haven't made more progress on this. This has been talked about for at least six months. I would have thought that we would have at least some indication of where this government is going on the portal. I'm disappointed, I guess, is what I would say, and I hope that the minister will provide us with that information as soon as possible.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

Tax Rates for Small Brewers

M5. Mr. Hehr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of proposals to amend tax rates for small brewers that were developed by the government between January 1, 2012, and December 31, 2013.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, as you will recall, there have been many proposals made by both small and mid-sized brewers in this province who believe that the rules and regulations around beer brewing in this province do not foster a vibrant local brewing industry. I've asked questions about this before, and there still appears to be a great many people involved in the brewing industry who do not find that the rules and regulations incent a local brewing market. They point to many things, like the limits on the amount of production a company must have. The government gives out tax breaks to organizations to actually set up in other jurisdictions outside of Alberta, that appear to make no sense to many of the small brewers in this province. At one time I noted that the former deputy premier, back approximately a year ago, stated that he was actively working on this file to try and bring changes in. I do know that the government brought in some changes, but we're looking specifically at the proposals to amend the rates for the small brewers that were developed by the government during this time period.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are at this point in time no changes being presented. As it relates to the proposals mentioned in Motion for a Return 5, the requested information would constitute advice from officials. On that basis it should remain confidential, and we recommend that Motion for a Return 5 be rejected.

[Motion for a Return 5 lost]

Spirit Distillation Rules

M6. Mr. Hehr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of proposals to amend Alberta's spirit distillation rules that were developed by the government between January 1, 2012, and December 31, 2013.

Mr. Hehr: This is similar to my last proposal, on the small brewers in this province, so I'm certain I'm going to get the same answer from the hon. President of Treasury Board.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Nevertheless, the reason why I'm pushing the government on these – although they have made some changes, especially to the spirit distillation side of things. The recent changes to encourage some other people to get into this business, I think, were a step in the right direction. I'm looking for more robust changes, again, to look at the small and mid-sized brewers in this province, who I believe are unnecessarily penalized in our system from actually developing a local brewing economy that would ensure that local employees are hired, that local products are used, and that people have more of a variety of Alberta-based brews and spirits.

Nevertheless, I know what the answer from the hon. minister of Treasury is going to be, so in order to move this along, I'm going to withdraw this motion for return so he doesn't have to get up and tell me that this is a private matter. I'll think about how to rework this question next time to maybe get some information. So I'm withdrawing the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Then for the record you are withdrawing Motion for a Return 6? It can't be withdrawn? We have to deal with it, hon. member, so we'll just be quick.

The President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: He was right with his assumption, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we reject this.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Just for the record, then, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, did you care to close?

Mr. Hehr: No. That's fine.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203 Childhood Vision Assessment Act

[Debate adjourned April 7: Mrs. Towle speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had some speaking time left.

I would look, then, for the next speaker. I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was taken aback on the change of direction there. With regard to this bill we have had great discussion in our caucus, and what I've certainly agreed to – and we all have our individual votes to deal with it. I would then support this to take it to Committee of the Whole to see what changes the hon. member brings and keep a very open mind on how this bill progresses.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Just to keep the rotation going, I'll recognize the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock next.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this bill forward. The purpose of Bill 203 is to promote comprehensive and rigorous efforts to identify early vision issues in children so that they do not become a problem later in life. Specifically, this bill would require a vision exam for all children before they enter first grade. This bill also encourages the use of the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, with which some hon. members might be familiar.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North has never swayed in her advocacy for vision assessment in children, and I know I'm not alone in applauding her dedication. It is no secret that by now vision assessment plays a pivotal role in the success of every child in his or her academic and, eventually, professional pursuits. I am very pleased to be able to say that this government currently does an exemplary job of ensuring that visual health is its central focus in schools and pediatrics. It seems to me that the bill this hon. member has presented in this House is meant to build on our already strong accomplishments.

Of course, the plan outlined in Bill 203 would require the in-depth involvement of teachers and administrators, who are on the ground in our public schools. No plan can be implemented successfully without giving these dedicated individuals a central role. Teachers in particular are well positioned to identify potential problems and difficulties that children face given the amount of time spent with them. Obviously, teachers are physically in the classrooms with our children and have the opportunity to make assessments of the child's progress on a day-to-day basis. Teachers are typically the first to be aware of any difficulties a child may be having. The early eye exam proposed in Bill 203 would assist teachers in making assessments as accurately as possible. This, in turn, would enable teachers to make the appropriate recommendations to parents and school administrators.

Almost 80 per cent of children in Alberta begin school without a comprehensive eye exam, yet vision problems have been identified as one of the major factors in limiting a child's ability to learn and succeed. For the first 12 years of a child's life 80 per cent of the child's learning is visual. Furthermore, it is no secret that good vision and good grades are strongly correlated. There is some interesting research that has been done in this area. Working out of the University of Lethbridge, Dr. Charles Boulet and Dr. Noella Piquette have argued that if there is an error in or impediment to sensory perception, higher cognitive functions such as reading, memory, emotional awareness, and impulse control can be affected. Dr. Boulet and Dr. Piquette both advance the argument that comprehensive vision assessment for children entering the 12-year academic cycle ought to be treated as a fundamental human right.

In schools functional defects in the visual process impair reading acquisition and learning. They also influence other behaviour. Children are affected by different types of impairments to eyesight and to visual function. The degree to which children are impacted varies according to the depth and nature of impediments present and to some degree ethnicity. Some children are at a greater disadvantage simply because of the greater visual demands of the modern classroom. Specifically, the increased use of smart classrooms and digital technology can pose potential problems for some students based upon their visual needs. These visual impediments to learning may include dyslexia, visual stress, and scotopic sensitivity syndrome. These are rarely detected in common eyesight screenings and are associated with limited socioeconomic success and increased criminality.

Significant visual impediments to learning limit academic and life outcomes, with some demographics affected by a greater prevalence of reading impediments. This study finds that this presents added difficulties for various public agencies at all levels of the government. Matters are complicated further when children who are afflicted with visual impairments choose not to report the problem. This is a decision that can stem from frustration and embarrassment. Teachers are trained and experienced in noticing the manifestations of this frustration in student performance. This is why they may be our single most valuable resource when it comes to monitoring how our kids are developing.

As the situation currently stands, the success of the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program relies heavily on teachers who work closely with parents. Each fall kindergarten teachers send information packages home with each of their students to be received by parents. Parents are encouraged to book appointments for their children to have their eyes examined. The program has gained endorsement from every public school division across Alberta. Free eyeglasses are also offered to kindergarten students when prescribed by an eye doctor.

One question to ask now is whether this is a sufficient application of what our teachers are potentially capable of. While the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program has enjoyed some admirable success, we may be able to do more. Achieving universal vision assessment prior to grade 1 for all students would be a remarkable accomplishment and would certainly be something that we could be proud of.

But as important and worthy a goal as the promotion of vision health in children may be, we ought not to overlook the additional positive impact that could result from implementing a strategy such as Bill 203 proposes. Children benefit greatly when there exists a close and constructive relationship between their parents and their teachers. Through Bill 203 we can offer another avenue that joins both parents and teachers together by being thoroughly invested in students' vision assessments and further nurturing that relationship.

This inclusion could extend to school administrators as well. There is much room opened up by this bill for new ways to more tightly integrate the various elements of the school environment, and this is only to the benefit of students. A system of tight-knit supports is essential for any child's success. What could be better than to foster it with these supports from day one, or rather from grade 1, when children begin their student careers in earnest?

Mr. Speaker, I am very excited by the range of potential this bill promises. It offers an invigorating opportunity to improve the health and lives of children, to improve the academic performance of students, and to foster closer and more effective relationships between parents, teachers, and administrators.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this to the attention of the House today. I also want to reiterate my respect for this hon. member for her continued advocacy for children and students.

With that, I conclude my remarks and look forward to supporting this bill, I hope alongside my hon. colleagues and counterparts. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize next the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act. I just want to say at the onset that, you know, I believe in the spirit of this bill. However, I'm going to outline some of my concerns with the way it's written. I do want to note that I've already heard that amendments are going to be coming forward to strengthen and improve this bill. It begs the question: why didn't the mover of this bill take the time to ensure that we got it right the first time as opposed to tabling a bill and then having amendments come forward?

Having said that, I want to speak to this because I think childhood vision is a very important subject, and it should be addressed and addressed by this government. No child should have to go without a proper vision screening and assessment and without ensuring that they have the proper tools to be successful. I think, you know, the fact is that many of the issues related to vision and vision care can be prevented or fixed, so I thank the member for raising this bill in the House and this issue.

Just to give a quick little recap, Mr. Speaker, I mean, it would legislate all parents to be responsible for having their children's eyes tested before entering grade 1. Now, the parents must provide to the school a form signed by the optometrist or ophthalmologist. Part of the challenge with this first piece is that it places the onus on the parents rather than the school or the health care system within the province as far as tracking this down and getting them to sign off on it.

Now, I recognize that the eye doctor is forbidden from charging parents for the completion of the form, but it doesn't address the actual cost related to the eye exam itself. Alberta health care provides coverage for one visit a year for children up to 19 years of age. It does not address the problem if a child needs follow-up examinations or if the child must get glasses. I do appreciate that the previous speaker talked about, you know, one pair of eyeglasses being included. I would challenge any member of this Assembly who has children to claim that their kids can go through one set of eyeglasses for a number of years. I think it's more like multiple pairs of glasses as children are children.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the bill doesn't say anything about the passing on of added administrative costs incurred by the optometrists' offices or the schools themselves with the new paperwork and tracking that would be required.

What the Alberta NDP is looking at, Mr. Speaker, is that instead of forcing parents to obtain a test and the form, the public school system ought to be empowered and funded to provide eye exams, screening exams, for all students going into grade 1. Let's equip the very institutions that all of these young people are coming to to be able to perform these screening exams and assessments right at the school. We'd accomplish the same goals that the legislation is attempting to address, but we'd do it in a way that's more inclusive and putting less of an onus on parents and on families, especially those living in fairly remote parts of the province.

Many parents may not have the time or the ability to take their children or child to an optometrist. They may be both working during hours of operation, during the day. One question that I have, Mr. Speaker, is: how would these students be accommodated, and would the parents be compensated in any way if they had to take time off work to take their child or children to get these eye exams or screenings done?

Now, the ministry is also able to set the conditions and standards for visual assessment of children who transfer from a school outside of Alberta, where the law is not in effect. A question, Mr. Speaker, is: will this have an effect on students transferring from outside of the province?

This bill as it's currently written, Mr. Speaker, would ensure that all students have their eyes tested before starting grade 1, which is obviously an important part of the learning process, and the Alberta NDP are onboard with ensuring that kids have every tool at their disposal to be successful in school. Obviously, we recognize that if kids, you know, can't see or can't see well, it's going to adversely affect their ability in school to learn and to succeed. Again, a concern, Mr. Speaker, is making the parents responsible for getting their children's eyes tested. You know, some parents may feel the government is telling them that they're unable to adequately parent their child. Additionally, it's true that some children don't have a problem with their vision at this age and may not need an eye exam.

This would also, obviously, greatly increase the workload of optometrists in the province, and it's likely that those costs are going to get passed on to the government or to the consumer. Would we still have to pay for these tests? In fact, the cost would probably go up since now all grade 1 children would be going for an eye exam, where before only some of them were. You know, again, what we're looking at or proposing or asking, Mr. Speaker, is: why can't we just spend this money to be proactive, providing exams in schools rather than reimbursing on the backside? This would also, going again to the backside, increase the amount of paperwork and administration associated with it.

Now, the minister is able to make regulations concerning any additional matter or thing that is necessary in furtherance of this act. Questions for the mover: what's going to be included in this measure? What additional requirements will be issued in regard to vision assessment?

Forcing all parents to have their child's eyes tested and provide the school with proof before they can start grade 1 could be perceived as discriminatory. Now, again, while the NDP supports the objective of having all children get their eyes tested before they enter grade 1 – if children cannot see, obviously they'll fall behind in class – our position, my position, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill goes about this task in the wrong way, that it could be much better.

We're talking about removing barriers to children being successful in school. Instead of forcing parents to go out and get their children examined before they start school, the idea of providing the school system with funding – and I need to make this evidently clear, especially for the Education minister, that there would be dollars to help ensure that schools can provide this service as opposed to just thrusting another demand on our front-line workers and our schools and school boards.

Dr. Swann: Preferably well before the school year.

Mr. Bilous: That's a very good point – thank you – that these exams aren't done all at once on day 1 of the school year, so that we actually have, again, a staggered approach and do this in the most efficient way possible.

Again, you know, let's have optometrists come and test grade 1 students at the beginning of the year. You could stagger it throughout the school system. The approach achieves the same outcome as the bill as it's currently written though it's going to be much more inclusive. We're going to ensure that we're getting all students as opposed to some falling through the cracks.

On that note as well, I just want to note, Mr. Speaker, questions that I do have around: if students don't come to school with a note saying that they got this test, what are the consequences? Are they refused completion of their registration? Are they refused participation in extracurricular activities? What are the consequences? Again, I don't know how punishing our students even further – so now they have inadequate vision in addition to being unable to participate in some activities or even register – is going to be beneficial.

The other point with that, Mr. Speaker, is that if they are prevented from completing the registration, that could mean for school boards that they get fewer dollars because how the funding envelope works is that schools are funded for their student count. But there is a time set on that, and I believe that for the fall it is the end of September. So if there are challenges for a student, where they're not allowed to finish their enrolment at a school, then the school is not going to be able to receive dollars for that student, which could cause problems, obviously, as far as ensuring that the school has enough resources for every student in the classroom, or you know, some schools may even be refusing the student the right to register after the end of September.

Regarding the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, this is a great example of a current program that helps kindergarten children obtain an eye exam and, if needed, complementary glasses. But, again, the challenge with this program, Mr. Speaker, is that it still requires that parents seek out and make an appointment with a participating optometrist.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to speak on Bill 203 as proposed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. In my view, this is a forward-sighted bill that looks to address a very complex issue, youth eyesight exams: how they're best administered and how they can make the lives better for those kids if we have these exams and they're universally provided through some mechanism in our society. I applaud the member for putting that bill forward.

I do note that there have been many suggestions here, and probably very valid ones, as to some of the pitfalls of the proposed legislation. I would prefer for us to look at this in a more holistic manner and in the manner of trying to actually rectify a problem and rectify some of the inequalities that are out there in our society. I think we can do that. I think we can do that with some hard work and effort on our amendments to see that this bill survives.

The reason why, in my view, I think it should survive is because of some of the statistics brought up in debate here today. The fact is that by grade 1 80 per cent of kids who are going to our schools here in Alberta have not received an eye exam. That identifies to us a clear problem that exists, and when we as legislators see a clear problem that exists, like kids not getting eye exams, I think that means that we should respond in some form or fashion. The evidence is perfectly clear that children's eye problems if not identified early – and there are arguments that maybe we should even be doing this earlier as a legislative body, that this should actually be happening in some form or fashion. This bill does its best to do that.

So we've identified a problem, we're identifying one mode of solution, and we can see that it will affect kids going forward. When we know that evidence, now what do we do with it? Well, we have to bring in something to ameliorate the circumstances that there are. I think that for us to look at this problem, we have to understand that 20 per cent of parents are getting their kids the help or the eye exam they need. What's the issue with the other parents? Well, I don't know. For some it may be financial. For some it may be otherwise. For some it may be information. Frankly, it doesn't matter. The kids need eye exams.

I believe in the concept of equality of opportunity. Whether you're born in a rich family or a poor family, the government of the day should give kids an opportunity to succeed. They can succeed more easily or more readily by having some form of eye examination, preferably as early as possible.

I was just chatting with the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who suggests that even a more practical approach to this matter may be having eye exams at the age of three, when they have their immunizations. Really, is it too late for us to be waiting until ages five or six, when they're in the school system? Should we not be using this opportunity to explore whether that is an option, to have a screening test set up at that time for kids so that they can get the eye help they need at an even younger age, which would allow them to be even more ready for the school system and more ready to develop their potential? I believe that solution is one that in all practicality should be explored, and whether that can be done in this bill or not, I'm not certain. What is clear from this bill is that we have to act on this situation. We have to ensure that kids have access to eye exams and go forward with that.

Just as one of those interesting things, I look at what our society funds. Once kids get to be six years old, we fund their school. We fund things like postsecondary. We fund things throughout people's lives in the health care system. When we turn 65 and even older, we get some form of a pension cheque or some form of health care. We all know the statistics that the vast majority of health care dollars or probably dollars spent by our government is when people get older. Really, is that the right thing? If we're looking at maximizing the potential of our society going forward, that would be reversed. Governments would invest much more money in children's lives between the ages of zero and six in terms of learn-through-play programs, in terms of bills like these, which get kids the eye help they need and set them on to really develop their potential. I think this bill also alerts us to that. Why are we often ignoring kids who are zero to six and often dealing with other issues that seem pertinent, but those individuals may actually just have a different ability to have their voices heard? We have to continue to listen and look at what best serves our society going forward and evaluate that.

In any event, I believe this bill has great merit for getting kids the eye exams that they need to succeed. It fits firmly within equality of opportunity. It recognizes that there's a problem out there and that we as legislators have to deal with it. Whether we can get that best placed in Committee of the Whole, I believe we all should bring our best ideas forward through that and try and do that at this time. What we've learned in this Legislature is that kids need eye health and need to be ready for grade 1 and to succeed in school. If somehow it does not succeed – and I'm hoping we can rectify everything there because it's an idea whose time has come – then we move immediately to where this government or some other private member puts forward another idea to get this established here in Alberta.

In any event, those are my thoughts, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you very much, as always, for the opportunity to take part in debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Associate Minister – Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise today and speak to Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act, which has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. I know that children's vision awareness is an issue and that this hon. member is particularly passionate about that issue.

Mr. Speaker, although there is no legislation currently in place that requires school-aged children to undergo vision examinations prior to entering grade 1, few know that Alberta Health fully covers the cost of eye examinations for all children up to age 18. Bill 203 would ensure that by grade 1 children would fully utilize these free Alberta Health eye examinations in order to help reduce potential learning and behavioural difficulties, that are detrimental to children with eyesight impairments.

Specifically, it would mandate a form with proof of examination in order to complete grade 1 enrolment and encourage the use of the Eye See... Eye Learn program. However, this would in no way stop a child from entering school. Essentially, Bill 203 is looking to ensure that childhood vision issues are identified and resolved in order to give each child the best chance at academic success. I am confident that hon. members of this Assembly are well aware that eye examinations are an important public health strategy for a healthy Alberta. Early identification of vision problems is asymptomatic for individuals and allows them to benefit from direct preventative action.

Given the importance of eye screening as a public health strategy it is essential that we examine the work of other jurisdictions such as the United States regarding this important issue. Therefore, I would like to spend some time discussing the work of the American Association for Pediatric Ophthalmology and Strabismus, or AAPOS, as well as the state-by-state vision screening requirements. The goals of that organization involve advancing the quality of children's eye care, supporting the training of pediatric ophthalmologists, supporting research activities in pediatric ophthalmology, and advancing the care of adults with strabismus.

For those who are unfamiliar with strabismus, it refers to the abnormal alignment of one or both eyes, characterized by a turning inwards or outwards from the nose, thus preventing parallel vision.

In terms of advancing the quality of children's eye care, AAPOS establishes practice guidelines for pediatric ophthalmology at the highest level of competence and ethics, encourages the training of ophthalmologists who are primarily concerned with eye care of children, and fosters concepts that benefit children's eye health through preventative as well as remedial activities.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits of vision screening are numerous. They are quick, accurate, cost-efficient, have a high rate of problem detection, and minimize unnecessary referrals. In preschool children, for example, vision screening has been used for the early detection of amblyopia, or lazy eye, the leading cause of monocular blindness in the 20- to 70-year age range in high-income countries. Unfortunately, the benefits of vision screening are either ignored or not well publicized. I say this because almost 80 per cent of children in Alberta begin school without a comprehensive eye exam. This means that there are numerous children in school right now with undiagnosed vision issues.

I believe Bill 203 would go a long way to correct those undiagnosed vision issues in children. By requiring a form with proof of examination in order to complete grade 1, parents can be assured that their children are not suffering from any undiagnosed eye issues. I want to be clear, though, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 203 would not prevent children from attending school.

According to AAPOS 43 out of the 50 American states have either a state policy, a code, statutes, regulations, or local school board requirements regarding vision screening and tests. For example, Alabama's screening requirements fall under code 16-29-1, which was established in 1965. This code states that the Department of Education and the State Board of Health are to arrange for the examination of each child attending public school in the state, including for "diseases of the ear, eye, nose and throat, mouth and teeth . . . and any disease requiring medical or surgical aid in developing the child into a strong and healthy individual."

California's education code 49452 requires the governing board of a school district to provide for the testing of hearing and vision of each enrolled pupil within the district while education code 49455 requires students to have their vision screened upon enrolment and at least every third year thereafter until completion of the eighth grade.

In Arkansas code 6-18-1501, which governs vision screening, requires all children in pre-K, kindergarten, grades 1, 2, 4, 6, and 8 to be given eye exams and vision tests. The code stipulates that "the responsibility for the enforcement of this section rests equally with each school district or public charter school and the parent or guardian of the child." Further, the code details that eye and vision screening shall include the specific tests, procedures, equipment, and instruments approved by the Arkansas Commission on Eye and Vision Care of School-Age Children and the department.

In Kentucky one section of Bill 706, An Act Relating to Early Childhood Development, requires that all children three to six years of age entering public preschool or public school for the first time have an eye examination by an optometrist or an ophthalmologist no later than January 1 of the school year.

This section of Bill 706 states that "a vision examination by an optometrist or ophthalmologist . . . shall be required by the Kentucky Board of Education" and that "the administrative regulations shall require evidence that a vision examination that meets the criteria prescribed by the Kentucky Board of Education has been performed." Given the existence of Bill 706 in the state Legislature it is clear that the Kentucky General Assembly identified problems with vision as an important factor limiting children's ability to learn and succeed and decided to act upon these problems. I believe that Bill 203 provides our Legislative Assembly with the opportunity to follow in the footsteps of other jurisdictions such as Alabama, Arkansas, California, and Kentucky.

It is unacceptable that almost 80 per cent of children in Alberta begin school without a comprehensive eye exam. Bill 203 could help ensure that any previously undiagnosed vision issues are corrected prior to grade 1. Mr. Speaker, one of the pillars of the building Alberta plan is investing in families and communities. This pillar specifically mentions that every child should have the opportunity for the best possible start in life. By moving forward with Bill 203 in this Assembly today, we are keeping our commitment to Albertans. We are illustrating to them that current and future generations of Alberta's schoolchildren will have the tools that they need to succeed with every step that they take into the classroom. For too long children have been allowed to enter school without proper vision assessment.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forward Bill 203. Once again her passion for children's issues is nothing short of inspirational. I hope all hon. members of the Assembly will rise today and join me in supporting Bill 203.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that if I were here today and didn't have my glasses with me, I wouldn't be able to read my notes off this page. As a young child when you don't know what you're missing before you have an eye exam and get your glasses, I think your mind tends to wander. You find some ways to be able to occupy yourself because you really can't focus on the words on the page. So I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing childhood vision health for debate in this Legislature.

Bill 203, as we've heard, would require a comprehensive vision assessment by grade 1 to help reduce potential learning and behavioural difficulties that affect children with impairment. My colleague has brought this bill to our attention because many children of school age have vision-related problems, and many more begin school without a complete and comprehensive eye exam. Grade 1s would do well to be encouraged to use the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program. Currently, the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program provides kindergarten students with a free pair of glasses, when needed, after undergoing an examination. I would think that all parents would welcome that kind of support.

As one of my colleagues across the floor had mentioned, children will need probably more than one set of glasses over the span of many years. Well, that's true, but I think we've got to find out whether children do have those visual impairments, and we need a place to start. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North has provided us with a very sound bill with the amendments that she has proposed to allow us to be able to assist children. We want them to succeed. According to figures gathered by the Alberta

Association of Optometrists, more than 25 per cent of school-age children will have vision problems that limit their potential in all aspects of academic success.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 is part of an even better vision for Alberta. This is a vision where Alberta's families and communities are set up for success with the resources and the tools needed now and into the future. Testing the visual health of our children is a very important part of that vision, too. I myself certainly acknowledge the importance of screening for health conditions which can adversely affect educational quality for our students and their overall health. In saying this as part of our mandate, this government has made a commitment to enhancing the health and the well-being of all Albertans. This commitment includes recognizing the important role that vision examination plays in maintaining the health of all Albertans.

This government has recently reinforced its commitment to screening through its dedication to the importance of vision health, where children up to 18 years of age are eligible to receive eye examinations at no extra cost to families. After all, over 80 per cent of a child's learning is visual. That means that from day one children rely heavily on their eyes and vision to read and to write, to connect with their peers, their teachers, and to succeed in the classroom environment. Poor vision health can act as an impediment to the learning process, hindering our children from succeeding and mastering an absolutely critical skill, reading.

Now, there have been various studies drawing on the link between deviant behaviour and illiteracy, as previously mentioned by one of my colleagues. Mr. Speaker, 43 out of 50 states have policies, codes, statutes, regulations, or local school board requirements regarding vision screening and tests. This figure emphasizes the importance of vision in the classroom and the overall academic environment. Even research conducted right here in this province highlights the crucial role that vision plays in a child's learning environment.

For many of us visual ability can be something that we take for granted, but if our visual health was compromised in any way, how we see the world would impact us as well. Our day to day would become more difficult, reading and learning more strenuous. Mr. Speaker, children learning to read for the first time do not report these difficulties more often than not because they do not know that what they are seeing is out of the ordinary and sometimes do not understand the difficulty that they are experiencing. Until a comprehensive eye examination is completed, children may go through their first years of school disliking reading, writing, and overall learning.

Dr. Charles Boulet and Dr. Noella Piquette, working out of the University of Lethbridge, have argued that visual or sensory functioning is very much interconnected with higher cognitive functions such as reading and memory. Further, functional defects of the visual process can impact a number of things, from reading and learning to our other behaviours. Given how essential vision is to learning, it has also been argued that adequate vision management is a matter of fundamental human rights. Again, this connection between visual-perceptual problems, reading, behaviour, and other disabilities makes vision one of the most important areas to target in early testing and assessment.

Mr. Speaker, today's modern classroom also presents added challenges to visual processing. In many classrooms today children no longer have overheads, chalkboards, or even whiteboards to learn from; they have computer screens, iPads, and PowerPoint presentations. That has become the norm as well as digitalized Smart boards replacing familiar whiteboards and modes of instruction, creating more demand on students' visual processing skills.

Ms L. Johnson: How about brown boards?

Ms Fenske: Brown boards? I don't think I had those in my life. Thank you, hon. member.

Within the various domains of visual processing a child's visual health can vary significantly. Mr. Speaker, I know in speaking with the hon. member about some of the issues that people may see preventing children from getting their eye exams if they live in rural areas, which she has had the opportunity to address in speaking with people who provide that service. I'm looking forward to not only having the vision of the students tested but, I guess, the opportunity to have some creative methods of ensuring that that testing occurs throughout the province of Alberta.

I think that Bill 203 is an important step in working to achieve that our children can see and can be successful in school. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate on second reading of Bill 203.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all the members who spoke in second reading debate on Bill 203. There are a few comments and questions that I would like to clarify.

The first is regarding consultation. There has been consultation with a number of groups although as a private member I do not have the resources for extensive consultation. I've consulted with the Alberta College of Optometrists, the Alberta Association of Optometrists, teachers, the Alberta School Boards Association, the CNIB, and others. If Bill 203 passes and the minister responsible decides to proclaim the bill, the department will conduct further consultation to determine what the regulations will be and to develop this policy. I've also received letters from the Alberta College of Optometrists and the Alberta association that suggest amendments to strengthen the bill. Mr. Speaker, I have already committed to take the advice and recommendations of these organizations with whom I have consulted and put them forward as amendments in Committee of the Whole.

When the bill passes or if the bill passes in second reading, another concern that has been raised is the interpretation of section 2(2), that states that a parent must provide a form, and section 2(5), that states that registration is not complete until this form required is received. This does not mean that a child cannot attend school. A child will be able to attend school, and parents will be reminded and encouraged to have their child's eyes examined. I will clarify these sections in Committee of the Whole so that there cannot be any misinterpretation.

Mr. Speaker, a number of members also raised the concern about costs. I can tell you that we are now paying 10 times the costs for the extra work and efforts required to teach a child suffering from undetected visual impediments. As Dr. Hoang said in the document that I tabled earlier, "If you have a child who is 6 or under, ask them how well they see. You will find that they have a hard time understanding this simple question. This is because they do not know any differently." They do not know. It is up to us to partner with parents to ensure that all children are prepared to learn in school.

The costs for complete eye exams are already in the health care budget, and if a child receives the eye exams through the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program in kindergarten, they also receive eyeglasses free of charge if needed. Cost is not a factor in Bill 203. However, savings is a huge factor. We can save significant costs to the educational, health, and justice systems simply by implementing Bill 203.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to address many of the concerns raised in second reading debate. I would like to especially thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who gave a very clear, concise, and logical speech about supporting this bill. I don't say this very often, but I'd like to say it now. The Member for Edmonton-Centre is right. "Kids should have eye exams before they come to school. We can agree on that. That's a fairly straightforward principle, don't you think?"

Mr. Speaker, I wish I had the time to quote from many of my other esteemed colleagues. However, a five-minute closing speech does not allow this. Second reading is to debate the principle of the bill. We all agree on the principle of having eyes checked in preparing a child for school to have the tools they need to learn. Some believe, and I quote Dr. Boulet from the letter I tabled today, that "accepting the status quo is to say that neglect of children is an acceptable standard." The status quo isn't good enough anymore because now we know the difference.

Mr. Speaker, the right thing to do is to support Bill 203. We expect children to be in school for 11 or 12 years, and we do everything possible in the classroom to help them succeed. For 25 per cent of students the path to success includes correcting visual impediments. Vision is complicated, and it is important. It affects everything from health and speech to reading, balance, coordination, and fine motor control. There is nothing in Bill 203 that would prevent a child from gaining access to a quality Alberta education. There is no cost to families for this service, but the cost to children, education, and health care are enormous when children suffer in silence. Passing Bill 203 in second reading is the right thing to do. It is proactive, and it is the only way to ensure that all children are prepared to learn and to read. I ask all my hon. colleagues to support Bill 203 and to support the children of Alberta by doing so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 203 read a second time]

Bill 204
Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy
(MLA Public Interest Fee Waiver)
Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and talk today about Bill 204, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy (MLA Public Interest Fee Waiver) Amendment Act, 2014. As colleagues I invite all of you to support this bill. Many, many times I've heard you all stand up and talk about your desire for greater transparency, for greater public input into our government and our society and our province. I've also seen many written articles, whether it's articles with journalists or some of your blogs or some of the papers that you've put out, again, requesting the same kind of thing, asking for a greater opportunity to have openness, to have more transparency, and to have public input into what happens in our great province.

Of course, we've used the phrase "gold standard" in here more than perhaps any other phrase, so I will ask you to support this bill because I believe it does enhance our gold standard. I believe it does go a long distance to improve the engagement of Albertans in our government, the engagement of taxpayers and Albertans in our public process, and the opportunity for Albertans to be involved.

It starts by allowing MLAs to have four free freedom of information requests per year. The importance of this: I think we may be the most involved watchdogs of public dealings. Certainly, there are lots of other people with vested interests in important things that go on, but for the 87 of us once every four years or thereabouts, we're held totally accountable by some side of 40,000 of our constituents and all 4 million Albertans. We are the most involved watchdogs of public dealings, opposition MLAs and private members of this Legislative Assembly. We're elected to serve. We're elected to hold the government accountable. We're elected to make Alberta better and stronger, and to do that, from time to time we need access to public information.

Of course, with FOIP requests there are fees attached. Sometimes there are very high fees attached to accessing information. My bill is simple. It empowers MLAs to bring about transparency. It empowers us to bring about transparency by giving MLAs four fee waivers per calendar year.

I think it's an area where it may really open up the chance to engage Albertans when we look at some of our low voter turnouts, when we look at how countries like Switzerland have so much more engagement from their citizens, without $200 fines and those kinds of things. This bill will allow any Albertan and, especially, I hope, it will allow not-for-profits that function so efficiently and so well throughout our province, that do so much work so efficiently for us, to go to any MLA, not just their own but any MLA, to ask them to do the freedom of information request, thereby improving transparency, thereby engaging all Albertans.

When we were first elected in April 2012 – or at least I was – one of the things that really set me back was that after a while it was discovered that we were past our budget in monies that we had been spending on freedom of information requests. We were waiting to hear if some of these were in the public interest, if we were going to get some of these fees back. But the long and the short of it: it was slowing us down in doing the job that we were elected to do. Again, it made me think of the not-for-profits, the many, many hard-working people in our province that do tremendous work for us, and if this is a bottleneck for them, this is a way to really, really help information, public information, become accessible to where it can do the most good, to where Albertans can work with it and make our province better.

MLAs would first request a fee waiver through the current process. If the MLA is turned down, we could invoke the Bill 204 waiver right through the Privacy Commissioner, waiving the fee. The importance of that, of course, is that the Privacy Commissioner would look at the request and could determine to satisfy it if the request was not frivolous, vexatious, or without merit. We would still have the Privacy Commissioner looking at it to ensure that it was in the public interest, in the public good, and that it was on the right track.

Also, the bill has an addition. For any fee waivers granted pursuant to section 93.1, the name of the Member of the Legislative Assembly who received the fee waiver and the public body involved would also be disclosed, again increasing that gold standard of accountability, that gold standard that we have to deal with every four years when we face our electorate anyway. But this would go a long distance to protect the public, to get the public involved in public information to make our province better. I also believe that this bill would increase our government's willingness to provide information on a proactive basis without MLAs, without not-for-profits, without Alberta citizens having to chase it down. More information in the provincial sphere, in the public sphere, would be a good thing.

You know, one of the reasons I think this bill is important: some of the freedom of information requests we've done appear to take a year and a half to two years. Some of them have taken up to four to six years, I understand, obviously destroying how pertinent that information is and costing us as Albertans the opportunity to take that information and do something valuable with it, to make us stronger.

It was interesting hearing my colleague from Red Deer-North talk about all the consulting that she did and all the hard work that she had done. Well, I took it upon myself to talk to many, many Albertans, particularly in Cypress-Medicine Hat, and it always amazed me how many of them were surprised to hear that MLAs just couldn't do free freedom of information requests anyway. I believe the federal government only charges $25 for theirs, so it's almost like being free. There were many, many that were concerned that we couldn't do more than four. A lot suggested 12, once a month. I decided to come up with four to keep it reasonable, to start somewhere. Of course, if this moves through, we'll have the opportunity to make some amendments and discuss this.

But, again, many, many Albertans out there are relishing the opportunity, are looking at this as an opportunity for us as MLAs, accountable every four years, and for them, the 4 million Alberta citizens, to be more engaged in our process. Also, I think that if it's four per year, it'll hold it to a situation where it would be more relevant ones, and it'll be the opportunity for us as MLAs to engage more of our constituents and more of our fellow Albertans.

Colleagues, I've talked to many Albertans, again, particularly in Cypress-Medicine Hat, who relish the idea of this, who were surprised that we couldn't do it anyway, who are asking that their government be more open, be more accountable, make it easier for them to access the information, and for the opportunity to be involved in this great province of ours.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I would relinquish the floor, and I would ask all 87 of my colleagues in here to please consider this bill, that will enhance our gold standard.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Associate Minister for Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 204, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy (MLA Public Interest Fee Waiver) Amendment Act, 2014. I'd like to thank the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for bringing this bill forward. This will give us an opportunity to discuss the FOIP process in some detail as there seems to be some confusion as to what it entails. Bill 204 proposes to provide every MLA with four free freedom of information, or FOIP, requests every year.

It may be helpful to provide some background for context. The FOIP Act was introduced in the Alberta Legislature in the spring of 1994, following an extensive public consultation process by an all-party panel. The act, which reflected the recommendations of the all-party panel and the input of Albertans, is seen as the cornerstone of an open, accessible, and accountable government for the people of Alberta, and rightfully so. It was proclaimed into force on October 1, 1995, for public bodies such as government departments, agencies, boards, commissions, and other organizations designated in the FOIP regulation.

Extending the act to include local public bodies such as school boards, health authorities, postsecondary educational institutions, and municipalities began with school boards in September 1998. It concluded with local governments, such as municipalities, in October 1999. The act was amended in 1999 in response to a review by a select special committee of the Legislative Assembly. A second review by a select special committee was completed in 2002, and the act was subsequently amended in May 2003.

Section 93 of the act allows that fees may be charged to an applicant. There is a structure as well as limitations for maximum rates that govern how fees are to be charged. There are a large number of factors that go into determining the fees to be charged, including such things as shipping records, supervising the examination of records by the applicant, basic retrieval of records, and so on.

Processing FOIP applications is by no means a cheap task, Mr. Speaker. It is a process that requires time, resources, and manpower. This is a fact that seems to be underappreciated. Given the resources that go into fulfilling FOIP requests, the fees that are charged are very minor in comparison. The FOIP regulation stipulates that there is a $25 initial fee for one-time requests, a $50 initial fee for continuing requests, and additional fees when the cost of processing requests for records exceeds $150. The FOIP regulations already contain a provision to excuse applicants from paying fees where appropriate.

As I do not believe the current FOIP legislation was even reviewed when Bill 204 was drafted, I would like to remind members of the law that is in place. Section 93 of the act:

- 93(1) The head of a public body may require an applicant to pay to the public body fees for services as provided for in the regulations.
- (2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a request for the applicant's own personal information, except for the cost of producing the copy.
- (3) If an applicant is required to pay fees for services under subsection (1), the public body must give the applicant an estimate of the total fee before providing the services.
 - (3.1) An applicant may, in writing, request that the head of a public body excuse the applicant from paying all or part of a fee for services under subsection (1).
- (4) The head of a public body may excuse the applicant from paying all or part of a fee if, in the opinion of the head,
 - (a) the applicant cannot afford the payment or for any other reason it is fair to excuse payment, or
 - (b) the record relates to a matter of public interest, including the environment or public health or safety.
- (4.1) If an applicant has, under subsection (3.1), requested the head of a public body to excuse the applicant from paying all or part of a fee, the head must give written notice of the head's decision to grant or refuse the request to the applicant within 30 days after receiving the request.
- (5) If the head of a public body refuses an applicant's request under subsection (3.1), the notice referred to in subsection (4.1) must state that the applicant may ask for a review under Part 5.
- (6) The fees referred to in subsection (1) must not exceed the actual costs of the services.

As you can see, the ability to waive fees is already in place, and the process is merit-based, as it should be.

We need an answer to the obvious question of why Bill 204's proposal is necessary. We have yet to receive a satisfactory answer. There are a few other questions in addition to this that remain unanswered. For instance, would these free FOIPs be in addition to the ability to apply for fee waivers as outlined in the regulation? Would they be transferable if they were unused? Would they carry over to the next year? Perhaps most importantly, how would this be monitored and regulated? Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the many glaring contradictions in policy at play in Bill 204, it has also clearly not been carefully thought out if these sorts of questions are still up in the air.

Quite frankly, this is a demonstration that the party opposite has little in the way of practical qualifications for governance. A big part of governance is about helping things to run smoothly. It is about implementing policy that serves the needs of Albertans, not the conveniences of politicians. Those policies need to be crafted in a manner that allows them to be manageable . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. minister, but the time for consideration of this item has expired. You will have time carried over when we revisit this item at the next opportunity.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Traffic Safety Act

504. Mr. Allen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act allowing harsher penalties to be imposed on drivers guilty of excessive speeding in order to deter high-risk driving behaviours on Alberta's highways.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to present my first motion in this Assembly. It's also with a heavy and hopeful heart that I bring Motion 504 forward and urge my colleagues to support it as it's an issue of great importance to not only the constituents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo but also to many Albertans in all constituencies.

In just two weeks it marks the second anniversary of a horrific accident on highway 63 that killed seven people. Four occupants of one car, driven by Pastor Shannon Wheaton, were killed when it was struck head-on by another vehicle that passed into their lane, including Pastor Wheaton; his wife, Trena; their two-year-old son; and their pregnant friend, Courtney Penney. Three people in the other vehicle were also killed. The Wheaton's three-year-old son survived, an orphan, as did Ms Penney's husband, Mark. I'm not trying to be ghoulish by invoking their memory; I'm just trying to put a human face on an all-too-common tragedy.

Police believe excessive speed to be a factor in many fatalities. My constituents, many of whom have become inured to traffic fatalities on highway 63, were left reeling in the wake of that dreadful accident, which made headlines across Canada. There was in the weeks that followed a tremendous conversation about traffic safety on the so-called highway of death. I myself was asked by the Premier to prepare a report that would examine necessary approaches to improving traffic safety on highway 63, which was then submitted on June 29, 2012.

To its credit, Mr. Speaker, this government has committed to twinning the portion of highway 63 from Grassland north to Fort McMurray by 2016. In order to complete this project, intended to help address the carnage that is all too common on this highway, the government borrowed in excess of $600 million for an expedited construction program. Having driven highway 63 as recently as yesterday, I can say that tremendous progress has occurred in the last 12 months. The government has also stepped up enforcement by adding dedicated RCMP and sheriff units on highway 63 as well as aerial enforcement where that can be used effectively. My constituents and I are grateful.

The public advocacy group Coalition for a Safer 63 and 881 was born from tragedy, and citizens and employers across Wood Buffalo have joined together to develop public awareness campaigns such as the pledge, in which individuals are asked to pledge that they will drive safely to protect themselves and others. But idiot-proofing this highway will not be achieved with the mere addition of additional lanes of traffic in each direction. Greater enforcement, while it appears to have reduced the number of irresponsible speeders and has changed somewhat the culture of the drivers on that highway, also appears insufficient so far as to persuade the worst offenders to slow down, and the pledge is only taken by those for whom personal and public safety is already a priority.

Highway 63 is not the only roadway in Alberta on which traffic fatalities are all too common, Mr. Speaker. It is a distressing and disappointing fact that over 1 in 4 fatal collisions on Alberta highways involve a driver travelling at an unsafe speed. In Edmonton 56 per cent of traffic fatalities involve speeding. This morning alone there was a traffic ticket issued to a driver in Edmonton doing 170 kilometres an hour. When motorists callously and selfishly disregard speed limits, they put innocent people at risk in addition to themselves.

Our traffic codes, no less than our criminal justice system, rely on the basic principles of retribution and deterrence. When someone has ignored the rules of the road and is caught by a police officer or sheriff, they're ticketed. If the offence is sufficiently serious, the driver must also appear before a judge to face the possibility of further punishment. But it strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that there is a compromising inequity between our existing fine structure and the offences for which those fines are imposed.

For example, running a red light will earn a driver a $287 fine and three demerit points. In fact, a rolling stop at a stop sign, which would involve speeds below 10 kilometres an hour, will earn a driver the same fine. Driving 50 kilometres above the posted speed limit will earn a driver a $351 fine and six demerits, an increase of less than $70. For every 10 kilometres a driver exceeds the speed limit, simple physics demonstrate that this driver ensures any resulting collision will have 10 times the force, greatly increasing the likelihood of serious injury or death.

Mr. Speaker, let me give the members assembled some statistics to illustrate the gravity of the problem of excessive speeding. In 2010 20.6 per cent of drivers in fatal collisions and 23 per cent of those in injury collisions on highway 63 were travelling at excessive speeds. One enforcement blitz weekend, May 3 to 6 of last year, officers issued 552 speeding tickets between Redwater and Fort McMurray, 95 of which were for hazardous driving, including excessive speed. One ticket was issued to the driver of a vehicle that clocked at 228 kilometres per hour.

This is not simply a problem in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 27.4 per cent of drivers in fatal collisions across Alberta were travelling at excessive speeds. In other words, though there are proportionally more fatalities on highway 63 than other Alberta highways, excessive speed is actually at fault more often on highways 2, 3, 16, 22, 43; you name it. Speed kills. Though I do not have quantifiable data to demonstrate the point I'm about to make, there is far too much anecdotal evidence to indicate that those drivers most likely to use excessive speed on Alberta's highways are not deterred by our present traffic code, existing fines, or demerit points.

Fines levied have not kept up with inflation. The cost of changing the oil in your car has gone up with inflation while the cost of burning rubber on your car has stayed flat. Too often it is said of and by excessive speeders on highway 63 that a fine equivalent to four hours' wages, where there's no guarantee they'll be caught, is woefully inadequate. It's play money, as easily dumped behind the wheel of a speeding car as it is in a run of bad luck amusing oneself at the blackjack table, except that occasional blackjack players do not gamble with other people's lives. In short, $351 is not enough to make chronic offenders bat an eye.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for this government to increase the penalties for driving at unsafe speeds on all Alberta roadways and highways. It is time to adopt measures that are sufficiently heavy to act as a deterrent. Critics of this initiative will argue that drivers who exceed the speed limit by 50 kilometres or more are already liable for additional penalty since the offence includes a mandatory appearance before a judge; however, these penalties are left to the discretion of the judiciary and in some cases are based on the average income of all Albertans, which may not apply, for example, to excessive speeders in my constituency, which has the highest average wages in the country. Regardless, considering the tremendous danger to public safety that excessive speeding creates, higher base penalties are appropriate in and of themselves.

Three provinces – British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec – have recently imposed much stiffer penalties for excessive speeding, including the threat of seizure or suspension. Ontario, for example, imposes fines nearly 40 per cent higher. In Quebec fines are as much as three times the norm in Alberta. All three jurisdictions have a registry system to increase fines for repeat offenders.

The Alberta Association of Police Governance also passed a resolution in 2013 calling on the province to increase the penalties for excessive speeding. Let me be clear, however. Knowing that members of this Assembly have already conducted their own research that will have identified the full range of penalties requested by the Alberta Association of Police Governance and imposed by B.C., Ontario, and Quebec, I am not in this initiative advocating for seizure or immediate suspension. I am advocating for stiffer penalties for excessive speeding and dangerous driving to be imposed by the judiciary during the mandatory court appearance required for any driver travelling at speeds 50 kilometres above the posted speed limit.

In 2007, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Solicitor General said that he wanted to review the data from jurisdictions that have imposed stiffer penalties before introducing the same here in Alberta. Now is the time. The data is available. The prevailing will of Albertans is behind this initiative.

I've conducted a public consultation in my constituency, both in 2012 and recently, to assess the opinion of the public towards stiffer penalties for excessive speeding. The response I have received from the citizens of Wood Buffalo and Albertans across this great province has not been . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The speaking order will be the hon. Minister of Justice, followed by Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 504, urging the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act, allowing harsher penalties to be imposed on drivers found guilty of excessive speeding in order to deter high-risk driving behaviours on Alberta's highways. I wanted to thank the member for his comments and for bringing this motion forward. Traffic safety is something this government does take very seriously. It's something that was engrained in me as a kid, when my dad worked in the insurance business.

This member will recall that last year we funded 16 new officers for integrated traffic units that patrol highway 63. I've driven that highway before, and it can be a very dangerous highway, frankly, as can highway 2, that I drive often, between Calgary and Edmonton. This year as well we're providing resources to hire 40 new RCMP officers to be deployed across the province, and of course a lot of their work will involve traffic.

Just as enforcement is one piece of safe highway travel, so too is driver behaviour, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 the Wood Buffalo and Boyle-Redwater integrated traffic unit issued about 24,000 traffic charges. Of those, about 15,000 charges were issued along highway 63, showing again that driver behaviour on that particular roadway is a problem.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the penalty for speeding 40 kilometres over the limit is $273 and four demerit points. Of course, if you get 15 demerit points within the course of two years, you will lose your licence for 30 days. The penalty increases to $351 and six points if you're speeding 50 kilometres over the limit. What's most important there is that the existing law requires that if you're speeding 50 kilometres over the limit, you get a mandatory court appearance, which can involve an additional sanction as well. If a police officer believes that the driver was engaged in a race or was driving for a bet or a wager, the vehicle may be seized immediately by the police regardless of the speed. Law enforcement in Alberta can apply penalties under the Criminal Code of Canada as well. For example, a conviction for operating a vehicle that is dangerous to the public can result in a five-year prison term.

Now, there was some talk about vehicle seizures over the last year, Mr. Speaker. We provide many tools for law enforcement to crack down on serious offenders in traffic safety. One tool that other provinces use is that they impound vehicles for excessive speeds. For example, in B.C. if you're going more than 40 kilometres over the limit, your vehicle will be impounded immediately by the officer. Now, I personally believe that without clear evidence that this has enhanced road safety, vehicle impoundment is a measure that goes too far. I believe in evidence-based legislation like how our drunk-driving law was based on evidence that it would reduce fatalities, and it actually has. But in this particular case I would add that in serious infractions, where racing is involved, the vehicle could already be seized. I don't think that we should be seizing vehicles for just being 40 kilometres over the limit because that hasn't been shown one way or the other to bring the speeds down.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one thing to consider is that our justice system is currently under considerable strain, largely because of the number of people that keep moving to this province. It is conducting a number of initiatives to manage serious systemic overload and consequent delays. One key cause of delay is the resource drain associated with the prosecution of a high volume of relatively low-severity offences such as speeding. These offences already consume a disproportionate amount of scarce judicial, prosecutorial, and enforcement resources. Increasing penalties associated with speeding would likely increase the number of trials to be heard and further exacerbate current systemic issues. However, I am pleased that we are making progress on how many of these issues are dealt with thanks to the hard work of many people in my department, particularly Mr. Greg Lepp, Alberta's chief Crown prosecutor.

We're also looking at making reforms to traffic court. Despite criticism from some criminal defence lawyers we will continue to make traffic court more accessible for Albertans, with the overall goal of enhancing their access to justice. Despite the fearmongering from some members that I just heard from here, Albertans will continue to be able to fight a traffic ticket before a court of law.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support that the spirit of this motion is to deter high-risk driving behaviours. There are numerous tools that can be used to achieve this. Some I agree with, and some, I believe, would require more evidence before convincing me of their effectiveness such as automatic vehicle seizures. I do note that other provinces have fines for excessive speeding that exceed $1,000, but I also believe that we could look at going in the direction of higher fines. That is something that I think our departments, between myself and the Minister of Transportation, could examine. It has been many years since the dollar values of traffic fines have been adjusted.

I wanted to thank the member for bringing up this important topic, and I will be supporting it because I do think that this is something that we need to continually look at in Alberta. We do have some very fast roadways here, Mr. Speaker. Highway 63, that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo mentioned, is one of them, but we also have to take a panprovincial perspective on what actually is going to improve road safety. Cars aren't going away any time soon. We have to make sure that things are safer for people who drive vehicles, for people who are passengers, and, of course, for pedestrians.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good afternoon, everyone. I, too, would like to thank the hon. member for bringing this interesting topic forward for discussion. It's an interesting discussion once you think about some of the little intricacies that there are. I'd also like to thank the Solicitor General for his comments as well. I think they're well worth noting.

As we know, this essentially calls for an increase in the penalties imposed on drivers caught doing 50 kilometres or more over the limit. It basically encourages the government, therefore, to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to allow for harsher penalties. While I have reservations about these changes to some degree, I certainly would look at these amendments, should this motion be approved, with some interest because it certainly is a complicated topic.

Just to quickly review – and I think the other speakers have said this very clearly – the current rules in the Traffic Safety Act and in the use of highway and rules of the road regulation and in the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and in the procedures regulation provide that where a speeding ticket is issued in accordance with the table of values, they can fine for these types of things up to a maximum of $306, as was mentioned. These types of offences can also give six demerits for that kind of situation as well.

Further, as was mentioned, too, where they do exceed the speed limit by more than 50 kilometres an hour, the person is already required to appear before a justice without the alternative of making a voluntary payment. There are certainly some rules in place that, one would think, would be adequate. Unfortunately, from the figures that were just mentioned in the House by the other speakers, the public seems to definitely be at risk. Currently the fines, obviously, therefore seem not to be significant enough for some. Despite the fact that 50 kilometres over the limit means a six-demerit penalty and that later on 15 demerits means a licence suspension, it obviously doesn't seem to be doing the job that we hoped it would.

However, this motion as it is seems a little bit vague to me. It talks about things in generalities, and it does not necessarily talk about some of the things, as was mentioned by the other speakers as well, in terms of vehicle seizures and so on. I do understand that that was left out for a reason, and I think it may be prudent to look at that for a moment because the immediate seizure of vehicles and the impoundment would mean quite an administrative cost to the province and to the public and tie up police and towing and impound resources and so on.

Despite those observations and the reservations I have, it does target only the most careless and dangerous speeders, and I think that's an appropriate thing. With the automatic court appearance, this could allow judges to actually deliver stiffer penalties, which may be worth while to consider. If that is imposed in the amendments that might come forward, they would be something I would be keen to review at that time. You know, there would be discretion for the government over what those sanctions would be in the regulations coming up, I would think.

This seems to be where Albertans are paying a toll to speed these days, and the penalty doesn't seem to be a good enough deterrent. Taking all this into account, I therefore support the motion, and I look forward to the possible amendments as a result if this motion passes.

Thank you very much.

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Next the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Foothills, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 504, regarding higher fines for speeders. I just want to take a moment here to thank the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for bringing this motion forward and for all the work that he's done to bring attention to the dangers of highway 63 and especially to speeding on Alberta's highways.

Now, having said that, I'd like to go through specifically and just talk about a few points, Mr. Speaker. You know, I may add that I am with the member a hundred per cent in spirit behind this bill. I have a few questions for him, but I'm definitely leaning toward making Alberta highways safer.

One of the challenges, Mr. Speaker, is, first of all, that I'm not sure if speeding fines and increasing fines are a deterrent for those that are the most dangerous on Alberta highways and those that are in a rush to get to where they're going. I think, you know, that for folks who are speeding, especially when we look at, again, many of the ladies and gentlemen who work up in the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo region, I'm not sure if increasing a fine by a couple of hundred dollars is going to be an effective deterrent.

I do want to reference that back in 2010 British Columbia brought in legislation that allowed police to seize vehicles from people caught driving more than 40 kilometres an hour over the posted speed limit. Now, I am going to talk about this, and I'm not necessarily in favour of immediate vehicle seizure because that skips the process of due process. I believe that every Albertan is entitled to that, you know, to innocence before guilt.

However, what's interesting about B.C.'s legislation is that within one year the number of fatality- and injury-related crashes in the province was cut in half. You know, the Solicitor General asked for proof. Well, reducing the number of fatalities and injuries from excessive speeding and the fact that B.C. did it and reduced their numbers by 50 per cent after introducing this legislation shows that maybe we don't have the appropriate deterrents in the province at the moment for cutting back some of our reckless or heavy-footed Albertans.

Having said that, I do want to qualify that obviously this isn't every Albertan and that obviously there are many that tend to drive safely, but it seems that the only way to stop people from speeding is to take them off the road completely. Now, while seizing a vehicle or taking away a licence is one way to do it – you can't speed if you can't drive – it's also important that we advocate for mass transportation means, alternative means, whether that's carpools, trains, HOV lanes, et cetera, which is a way to take excessive speeders off the road.

I just want to cite – and I recognize my time is short – that the state of Georgia had the Super Speeder Law, and it's the best comparison, from what I've found, to this current motion. Under this particular law anyone caught speeding at 75 miles an hour or over on a two-lane road where 55 miles per hour is the typical posted rate – so we're talking 20 miles per hour or more – is subject to an additional $200 fine on top of the general fines for speeding. Now, the fees collected under the Super Speeder Law are intended to be used to help Georgia's trauma care hospital system, where approximately 60 per cent of all trauma care patients are crash related, which is a surprisingly high number, Mr. Speaker. Similar proposals have been mentioned for fines collected within our province.

Now, impressively, since the Super Speeder Law went into effect, Georgia has racked up nearly 23,000 Super Speeder cases and more than $34 million. However, as advertised, the law has not had the intended consequence or the intended effect of reducing speed on state highways though the upside is that it's become, you know, a lucrative source of income and, again, income that is going toward funding the hospital. The root cause or the purpose behind this law is not achieving the results that they had hoped.

State troopers have said: "Society doesn't slow down. Society is always in a hurry. As a matter of fact, when we stop a lot of people, the common response is: 'Can you go ahead and write my ticket and . . . get me on my way? I was late for something.'" I mean, this U.S. law seems like a good example of the effects that the proposed motion would create, but as we see, fines alone aren't necessarily going to make people drive better or slower. Again, the proposed legislation would only give out a fine, without the added benefit of giving the power of a potential seizure like in B.C. and Ontario.

Now, I want to give one of my suggestions or proposals, because I, too, don't believe in immediate vehicle seizure. I mean, there could be challenges with the photoradar gun if it wasn't calibrated properly, et cetera. But I think one way to meet in the middle is looking at, you know, vehicle seizure upon conviction, still going through the proper steps but for drivers to know that if they are speeding excessively, they will in fact have a consequence or a penalty stronger than just a monetary fine, that they will lose their vehicle.

Let's see here. I'm sure I'm running short of time. You know, again, one of the ideas or suggestions that comes out often is looking at driver education or increasing that. Sometimes it doesn't matter how much education we give folks; it's not going to change their driving habits or their driving behaviour. I think educational programs will put a dent in the problem of speeding. When we look at examples of, say, either smoking and drinking or drinking and driving, education still has had mixed results.

As well, there are others that have put forward the idea of increasing the posted rates of speed. I don't think that's an effective way. The tendency would be that if people get an extra 20 kilometres an hour to buffer, then they'll just take another 20 on top of that if they are speeding excessively.

One question would be, again, potentially looking at photoradar. I believe that when the Minister of Infrastructure was Minister of Transportation, he said that he'd be open to using photoradar on 63 but not any other rural highway. It's interesting that it's okay for one highway but not others. Now, again, this may be one deterrent. Maybe at the end of the day the approach is a multifaceted way of trying to head this off.

I will support this motion because I do believe it's a step in the right direction. I think that we do need to acknowledge that monetary fines aren't necessarily a strong deterrent for drivers, and there are, you know, lots of examples of this.

I will ask a couple of questions, if I can find them, and read them into Hansard. Of course, at the moment I can't find them, but one of them was to look at ways that we can deter speeding other than just increasing fines: looking at HOV lanes; looking at improving mass transit, rapid transit; looking at possibly rail. Again, upon conviction, would seizure of a vehicle, loss of a vehicle for a certain period of time also be a deterrent for those speeding down the road?

I will say that I have spoken with families who have lost family members on highway 63 primarily due to speeding. I know that they've been pushing and have done incredible advocacy work to have all MLAs in this House address the fact of how dangerous 63 is. But I do appreciate that we do have other highways that are dangerous as well.

I want to thank the member for this motion. I will be supporting this, but I would like to look at other ways to deter excessive speeding. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have 25 minutes left, and I have quite a list of speakers. The next three speakers in order will be the Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be short. I do stand in favour of Motion 504, put forward by my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and I thank you, hon. member, for bringing this to the attention of the Assembly. Almost every year we hear of horrible death and injury accidents that occur on Alberta's highways. I see many of these in my travels back and forth from here in Edmonton to my constituency in Calgary. Police believe excessive speed to have been the major factor in many of these accidents.

The QE II corridor between Calgary and Edmonton is a very busy one, as you know, Mr. Speaker, and it is a key economic route for this province. As I drove back to Calgary just last week, while the snow, of course, has melted, I saw on the shoulders of the highway debris strewn throughout, on the sides of the highway and into the ditches, and that has occurred from all the various accidents over the winter months. As we all know, excessive speed seems to have played an important role in most of these cases. As this highway is twinned and has fencing between the north and south roads, the issue most responsible is excessive speed for the road conditions or dangerous driving habits.

Highway 63 is not the only roadway in Alberta on which traffic fatalities are all too common. We see it all over the province, Mr. Speaker. It is a fact that over 1 in 4 fatal collisions on Alberta highways involve a driver travelling at an unsafe speed. When motorists callously and selfishly disregard speed limits, they put innocent people at risk in addition to themselves. I ask myself: is where they are going more important than the lives of the other drivers on the road?

Already when someone has ignored the rules of the road and is caught, they are ticketed, of course. If the offence is viewed as more serious by the enforcement officer, the driver must appear before the courts to face the possibility of further punishment, but it appears that the fines are just not harsh enough. In 2012, Mr. Speaker, 27.4 per cent of drivers in fatal collisions across Alberta were travelling at an excessive speed. Clearly, the fine is just not enough of a deterrent. This $350 fine is just not enough to make chronic offenders bat an eye.

Mr. Speaker, I do agree with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. It is time for this government to increase the penalties for driving at unsafe speeds on all Alberta highways and roadways. It is time to adopt measures that are sufficiently heavy to act as a deterrent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to rise and speak to Motion 504 from the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I learned quite a bit from reading the briefings on this well-researched motion. I'll just summarize a few for the record.

This motion would preserve the assumption of innocence until the individuals get their day in court. It does nothing about subverting that issue.

Statistics show that as of 2010 between 21 and 24 per cent of drivers in injury collisions were travelling at an unsafe speed. That's a very substantial proportion of injuries caused by speed or at least contributed to by speed. Between January 2013 and January 2014 11,000 tickets were issued by police just in the Wood Buffalo area, 10,000 of them for speeding. About 90 per cent of the tickets handed out were for speeding in that area, 228 of those in excess of 50 kilometres an hour over the speed limit, with speeds as high as 228 kilometres an hour.

The Alberta Association of Police Governance passed a motion in 2013 calling on the government to "enhance deterrent measures for excessive speeding within the Traffic Safety Act." It's interesting to note that Ontario is taking this to another level in terms of their fines, which range between $2,000 and $10,000, compared to our $350, in addition to a licence suspension, a seven-day vehicle seizure, six demerit points, up to six months in jail, and up to two years of licence suspension for a first conviction for speeding in excess of 50 kilometres over the speed limit.

The purpose, as indicated, of Motion 504 is to "urge the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act allowing harsher penalties to be imposed on drivers [caught speeding excessively] to deter high-risk driving behaviours on Alberta's highways." It seems eminently reasonable to me that if individuals do not understand the risk they're putting themselves and others at, there should be a much higher fine than $350 and a few demerit points, commensurate with this government's response to driving under the influence, where they dropped the level of acceptable alcohol from .08 to .05. I think the significance of speeding, especially speeding over 50 kilometres higher than the speed limit, warrants that kind of serious attention and serious penalties.

There was a story once circulating on the Internet that the best deterrent is a six-inch spike sticking out of the steering column. In some respects, I understand that. If there was a spike sticking out at drivers, they would tend to drive slower speeds. If our own fear, in other words, was in our consciousness with respect to the damage of injuries, most of us would drive differently. Unfortunately, we need to be reminded of that in many different ways. One is through the pocketbook, and another is through restricting the use of the vehicle with licence removal. I personally think that this is just one step towards what our future societal demands will be for the kind of destruction that speeders are creating in our society, not only human suffering and death and disability but tremendous costs to a health care system whose costs are already burgeoning out of control.

I have no hesitation in supporting this fairly conservative, I would call it, decision on penalizing these high speeders. I would even entertain some of the other measures that Ontario is bringing to bear, notwithstanding that what is really needed is a stronger educational process among schoolchildren and adolescents around risk-taking and the recognition, I guess, in more concrete ways of the kinds of responsibilities that young people and all of us are taking on when we get behind the wheel of a car or any vehicle, the responsibilities we take on not only for ourselves but for everyone in society.

This is a very short-term, front-end penalty that's being promoted. There are a number of different issues that relate to prevention and behaviour change that I think we should also be considering, that the Transportation ministry should be considering. I don't know what currently is happening within the administration, but we need to look at all manner of prevention in our society, and this is one other area that I think is deficient in our investment in prevention programs and prevention behaviour, the state-of-the-art prevention behaviour challenges.

I'll be supporting this motion, and I thank the member for bringing it forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 504, proposed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Motion 504 calls on the government to amend the Traffic Safety Act in order to deter excessive speeding on our roadways. It aims to do this by calling for harsher penalties to be levied on drivers who are guilty of excessive speeding. As Minister of Transportation I can tell this Assembly that I take traffic safety very seriously. Even one fatality is one too many, in my mind, and I'm pleased to be able to contribute to this important debate today.

Mr. Speaker, 2011 was the Year of Road Safety in Canada, where a number of initiatives were introduced to improve road safety. One such effort was the development of the road safety strategy 2015. The strategy was developed by the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators in consultation with various government members, law enforcement, engineers, and other key stakeholders from across Canada. The main purpose of the strategy is to achieve an overall yearly downward trend in fatalities and serious injuries caused by vehicle collisions.

The strategy involves enhancing enforcement measures, raising public awareness, and promoting a commitment to road safety by focusing on the areas of greatest concern, which include drinking and driving, excessive speeding, and non-use of seatbelts. Recent indications suggest that we are making significant progress, with fatalities 6 per cent lower than the baseline and serious injuries 15 per cent lower nationally.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian road safety strategy has identified speed and aggressive driving as the leading contributing factors to motor vehicle collisions. That is why the Alberta Traffic Safety Act contains significant penalties for excessive speeding. We have substantial fines and demerit points in place as consequences, which increase in severity along with speed. For example, speeding over 50 kilometres per hour above the posted speed limit will currently result in a mandatory court appearance, and if you're convicted, the court will determine the fine, and six demerit points will be recorded against the operator's licence.

There are also programs in place for drivers who repeatedly commit serious offences or begin to show a pattern of driving violations and collisions. They include mandatory retesting and appearances before the Alberta Transportation Safety Board.

Specific to enforcement, the Alberta traffic safety plan recommends implementing integrated enforcement strategies to target high-risk locations and target offenders by using enhanced data collection to develop enforcement plans specific to high-collision areas. The traffic safety plan takes a safer system approach, encouraging a better understanding of how the three elements of our road system – drivers, vehicles, and the roadways themselves – interact. The co-ordination of public education and activities in tandem with enforcement programs and roads that are designed, engineered, maintained, and operated for safety help to make us all safer on the road.

Mr. Speaker, the net result of these traffic safety initiatives here in Alberta is a 25 per cent reduction in traffic fatalities since 2007. Further to that, serious injuries have decreased by 26 per cent, intersection-related fatalities have decreased by 24 per cent, alcohol-related fatalities have decreased by 39 per cent, and speed-related fatalities have decreased by 16 per cent, all of this despite a significant increase in the number of drivers and vehicles on our roadways during that time. To me, this proves that our strategies are having a positive effect on road safety in our province, but we can always do more.

My department is currently conducting a comprehensive review of the Traffic Safety Act. Part of this review includes continuing to conduct research with respect to excessive speeding and other high-risk driving behaviours. Phase 3 of the review will include substantive policy amendments to the entire act and public consultation on those proposed amendments. Mr. Speaker, we would consider an amendment to increase the penalty to excessive high-risk speeders to be a substantial policy amendment. We know that excessive speeding is one of a number of high-risk driving behaviours that puts the public at risk, including non-use of seatbelts, impaired driving, and running red lights and stop signs. All of these high-risk behaviours should be considered under phase 3 of our Traffic Safety Act review, and as such I can commit today that we'll do just that.

Mr. Speaker, as MLAs we can certainly appreciate how much we all depend on our vehicles and our vast network of roads. Last year alone I drove hundreds of kilometres all over this great province, and one thing remains constant: road safety is dependent on all Albertans taking the time to slow down. We as Albertans are the cure to making Alberta's roads safer for all who use them.

I want to thank the hon. member for his commitment to traffic safety. This is an important debate, and I look forward to hearing from the rest of my hon. colleagues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the hon. Associate Minister – Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak in support of Motion 504, proposed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Motion 504 calls on the government to amend the Traffic Safety Act in order to curb excessive speeding on our roadways. The overall intention is to deter high-risk drivers on Alberta's roadways and to improve upon general road-user behaviour. Given the occurrence of speed-related traffic incidents on highways this motion seeks to give law enforcement another tool to ensure that Alberta roads are safe for all those who use them. Simply consider the challenges posed by highway 63 to and from Fort McMurray. This is something that the person who has proposed the motion, my colleague, and I know first-hand.

Excessive speeding carries with it various interpretations in many different jurisdictions. In British Columbia excessive speeding is outlined in section 148 of the Motor Vehicle Act and is defined as driving at a speed greater than 40 kilometres per hour over the posted speed limit. A person who drives a motor vehicle on a highway at a speed greater than 40 kilometres per hour over the posted speed limit commits an offence and is liable to conviction. The B.C. Motor Vehicle Act outlines the fines as follows. Exceeding the driving limit by more than 40 kilometres per hour is a fine of $368 plus the penalty of three demerit points on his or her driving record. Exceeding the driving limit by more than 60 kilometres per hour is a fine of $483 plus the penalty of three demerit points on his or her driving record.

Additionally, excessive speeding of this nature will result in the immediate impoundment of the user's vehicle along with the following costs: seven days for a first offence plus towing and storage costs in the amount of $210, 30 days for a second offence within a two-year period plus towing and storage costs of approximately $700, and 60 days for any subsequent offences within two years plus towing and storage costs of over $1,200. B.C. has stated that speed is one of the leading causes of death on its roads. Accordingly, their legislation and regulations reflect the government's level of concern for ensuring roads remain safe for all who use them.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec the Highway Safety Code stipulates that excessive speeding is travelling at 40 kilometres per hour or more over the speed limit in a zone of 60 kilometres per hour or less, 50 kilometres per hour or more over the speed limit in a zone of 60 kilometres per hour but not more than 90 kilometres per hour, and 60 kilometres per hour or more over the speed limit in a zone of 100 kilometres per hour or more. A peace officer shall immediately suspend for a period of seven days the licence of any person who commits an offence in accordance with the traffic safety code. The suspension period is increased from seven to 30 days when a user commits a repeat offence within a 10-year period. This suspension can also be increased to as much as 60 days if the user is convicted of more than one speeding offence. The fines for excessive speeding in Quebec begin at $541 and can increase to as much as $1,277. Demerit points are also given and start at six, ranging to 14, for excessively exceeding the speed limit in Quebec.

Comparatively, Alberta's Traffic Safety Act contains penalties for excessive speeding such as substantial fines and demerit points which increase with the speed of the vehicle. Mr. Speaker, for example, speeding over 50 kilometres per hour above the posted speed limit will currently result in a mandatory court appearance. If convicted, the court will determine the fine and six demerit points will be recorded against the operator's licence. This sentence is three points more severe than the starting-point demerit system practices in B.C. for excessive speeding and is at par with practices in Quebec.

Increased deterrence for excessive speeding has been a goal of police services throughout our province for many years. I share that goal. The safety of all Albertans on highways and roads is important to all families and communities, and our government sees this as an important initiative. As a part of the government's capital plan investment Budget 2014 provides $5 billion for the provincial highway network, including road rehabilitation and the twinning of highway 63, so that Albertans have the safest roads to drive on.

I believe it is prudent to revisit the amounts violators can be fined. There are other measures that can be examined, but these are alternatives that we ought to be considering carefully as we decide whether to pursue the course of action that Motion 504 is urging. We would need to be very clear as to how these harsher penalties would be determined and administered, consulting not only with stakeholders but also with the public. Regardless of how such amendments to the current legislation would be carried out in practice, I am nevertheless sure that all hon. members in this House would agree that traffic safety should be a continuing priority moving forward as our population increases and, with it, the traffic on our roads.

I congratulate the hon. member's commitment to traffic safety as demonstrated by his sponsorship of this motion, and I look forward to hearing the remainder of the debate. I support this motion and its intent to make our roads safer.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. We have approximately three minutes if anyone else would like to speak to this motion.

If not, then I would ask the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to close debate. You have five minutes.

Mr. Allen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd particularly like to thank all of the members of this Assembly from all caucuses that spoke to Motion 504. As I mentioned before, the responses that I received from the citizens of Wood Buffalo and Albertans across this great province – I mean, I did a significant amount of consultation during the highway 63 report in 2012, and a great deal came across in social media. We did a telephone town hall. That's all posted online as well. You don't have to FOIP that, members.

There are some that feel quite passionately that they should be able to speed as much as they want under certain circumstances – say, passing a vehicle or whatever – but collectively the response of ordinary Albertans has been in favour of stiffer penalties. We had a number of comments as well that ranged from having vehicle crushers on the side of the road or public floggings, so certainly we're not advocating for any of that. But, by and large, Albertans have no tolerance for excessive speeders, who put the lives of others at risk in addition to their own.

Mr. Speaker, I said often when I was preparing the report that it was not just to twin highway 63, but it was to come across with a plan, and that's why the plan was called Towards a Safer 63. That plan was multifaceted as well. I said at the time that I'd be damned if I'd have any involvement in a project that was going to build a four-lane speedway because as we all know as well, all you're doing is opening that up to additional collisions. Fatalities or not, it puts higher costs and higher pressure on our emergency services. On highway 63 that's a particularly strong issue because there are 200 kilometres of nothing from Fort McMurray all the way to Wandering River. In fact, the number of collisions that were occurring caused one of our volunteer fire departments a great deal of stress, so they no longer respond to motor vehicle collisions on highway 63.

Albertans want to see these penalties increased. Albertans want their roads and highways to be safer for themselves, their friends, and their families.

I thank again all the members that spoke, in particular the Minister of Transportation, from Grande Prairie-Wapiti, for some of your comments and your commitment towards making all Alberta highways safer. As you mentioned, the plan that you've been putting forward with your department is having a noticeable effect. It is having results, and we see those results. But as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview mentioned, we do need to look at a multifaceted approach, one that includes increased levels of enforcement, the advertising and marketing that you spoke of in estimates, but, I believe as well, significant fines. In Ontario alone they showed, when they put advertising out, that with their new plan of vehicle seizure and $10,000 fines, there was a significant drop in speeding on highway 401.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General indicated that there were challenges around the judicial resources. I would argue that making the fines significant will in fact relieve some of the pressure on our judicial resources.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank all members for speaking to this, and I urge you all to support this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, were you trying to get my attention?

Mr. Campbell: Yeah. Well, we'll call it a night, Mr. Speaker, and we'll adjourn until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: The legislative policy committee on Alberta's Economic Future will convene at 7 p.m. in committee room A for consideration of the main estimates of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, guide us to a place of worship when lives are lost, especially when they are lost through tragedy, and hear us in our prayers for those whose youthful lives were taken in Calgary. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has an introduction of a visitor, which will be done by the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young man who captured our imaginations a couple of months ago because of his exploits at the Sochi Winter Olympic Games not so much because of what he did but because of what he didn't do, and that is that he didn't skate in the 1,000 metres in speed skating. He gave his spot over to Denny Morrison, and because of that sportsmanship gesture Denny Morrison was able to compete and win the silver medal. I'm talking, of course, about Calgary's own Gilmore Junio.

Mr. Speaker, Gilmore is visiting us today. He had an opportunity to meet the Premier, and we had a discussion about a number of things. I'm very proud to be able to say that Gilmore has come up through the Alberta sport development system. In fact, I was coaching at the very first speed skating meet, 11 years ago, that Gilmore competed in. I wasn't coaching Gilmore. I was coaching my son, and I was hoping against Gilmore. I must say, though, that even at that point I recognized that he was skinny and awkward, but he got better. I will tell you now that he is one of the top speed skaters not just in Alberta and Canada but in the world. This year he skated the fifth-fastest 500-metre time ever skated by a men's speed skater. He has won gold, silver, and bronze medals this year representing Canada in World Cup events. His time of 34:25 is a mere 22 one-hundredths of a second over the long-standing world record held by another Albertan and another Canadian, Jeremy Wotherspoon.

Gilmore, as I said, came up through the Alberta sports system. He was the 2010 recipient of the athlete of the year, and I'm so pleased that he's able to join us today. Ladies and gentlemen of the Assembly, please welcome Gilmore Junio.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll begin with school groups, and then we'll go on with other special visitors.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 23 wonderful students and visitors from Belmead school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Neelam Boora, and Miss Frances Leard. When I asked them how I should describe them, they used the words "creative, unique, extraordinary, inspiring, well informed, and amazingly difficult." In fact, they even used the word "fabulous" right here in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. There's a future MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark in that group.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to welcome a wonderful group of students from Holy Spirit Catholic school in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon. There are 45 bright grade 6 students that are here with us along with their teachers, Ms Laura Joyce and Mrs. Mandy Jensen, and also parent helpers. I'm so thrilled to have them here. I know there are several of them that will be great leaders in our province. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 29 students from Our Lady of Victories school. They're here with their teacher, Tannis Williams, and parents Shelley Smith, Lana Tensen, and Donna Van Horn. I can tell you that I had an opportunity to speak with these students, and they had some tough questions. They're looking forward to question period today.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, we're going to proceed with the introduction of other guests. Let us go on with a number of guests who are here for the special Vaisakhi celebration. Please let's make these as quick as we can, starting with the hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two sets of introductions, the first of which is that we've effectively got three generations of the Bhullar family here in the Alberta Legislature today. I'm very pleased and very proud to introduce my grandfather Jogir Singh Bhullar; my grandmother Mohinder Kaur Bhullar; my father, Baljinder Singh Bhullar; and my mom, Sukhvir Kaur Bhullar. I would ask them to rise. When my grandparents are around, I suddenly lose words. I guess I will have to behave today. My grandmother actually watches me in question period quite often. Some days I'm glad she doesn't have the best command of the English language, but she can tell when I'm in trouble.

I'm going to move on, Mr. Speaker, to other members of the community from Calgary that have joined us here for the Vaisakhi celebrations: my aunt Hardish Kaur Sekhon; my uncle Darshan Singh Bhullar and his daughter, who is here all the way from India; as well, Mr. Mohinder Singh; Mr. Gurdial Singh Khehra; Mrs. Kaur; Sewa Singh Premi; Mohan Singh Sidhu; Mr. Jangbahadur Singh Sidhu; Gurdarsha Sidhu; Jaswinder Sidhu – they're not all related – Inderjit Rana; Naib Singh Sandhu; and Atkar Singh Sanghara. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the Associate Minister – Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you. I have three introductions to do today if you'll allow me. My colleagues from Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Mill Woods will be introducing the rest of the guests. It's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly as my first introduction my wife, Kamal Sandhu. She's been my life partner for the last 30 years. She has been a pillar through good times and bad times. She is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would ask my lovely wife to rise.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to this Assembly is our special guests Mr. Sony Ahluwalia, Crown prosecutor; his lovely daughter – she's sitting in the members' gallery – and his mother, Auntie Ahluwalia.

From the Gurdwara Nanaksar executive committee we've got Mr. Zora Grewal, Mr. Jagdev Dhillon, and Mr. Lotay; from Siri Guru Nanak Sikh Gurdwara, executive committee are members Mr. Randawa and Jagdish Rai; and from the Sikh Federation of Edmonton are executive members Kulmit Sangha, Sunny Sangha, and Karnail Deol, past president. I would ask all of these guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

My last introduction to you and through you to the Assembly is Mr. Raj Tiwari, international Punjabi singer, with his group from India. He came all the way from India to take part in this Vaisakhi celebration along with Yash Sharma, editor of the Asian Tribune, and a constituent of mine, Paul Boparai. I would ask my guests in all of the galleries to please rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister – Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also have three introductions to you and through you. It's my honour and distinct pleasure to introduce Mr. Mehar Singh Gill, president of Gurdwara Siri Guru Singh Sabha; Avtar Birk, who's also my constituent and general secretary for the same Gurdwara; as well as Darshan Gill from Siri Guru Singh Sabha, former president. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is my constituent and friend for many, many years, Mr. Tariq Chaudhry, president of Pakistan-Canada Association. Joining him today, also very good friends, are Iqbal Khan and Akmal Randalla. Please, gentlemen, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, for my final introduction I have Harbir Sandhu, Ranjit Powar, and Naib Sidhu. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a few members of the Sikh community who are very good friends of mine, Edmonton-Manning's, Edmonton-Ellerslie's, and, of course, yours. I will call their names and request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House: Mr. Verinder Grewar; Bota Gill; Joga Punimia; Sunny Briach; Manmohan Dhaliwal; Mager Ubihi; Gurmel Singh; Harjinder Gill; Lakhvinder Atwal; Hajinder Dhesi; Latt Bhinder; Parmjit Maget; Gurshan Buttar; Ashak Gagsane; and our guest from Calgary, Joginderpal Singh. Please rise for the traditional warm welcome of this House.

I also want to thank the people who prepared the food that we have all enjoyed today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition, I have you down for another introduction. They are not here yet? Okay.

Let us move on.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, you have two minutes each for your member's statements. Let's begin with Edmonton-Manning, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Vaisakhi Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise today to speak about the Vaisakhi Day celebration that took place today under your watch in the Legislature. Vaisakhi marks the birth of the Sikh religion on the 14th of April, 1699, a traditional harvest festival season for Punjabis, and, according to the Bikrami calendar, the Sikh new year. The harvest season begins with the Vaisakhi celebration, and our farmers are happy to greet the crops. Sikhs reflect on the values and morals taught to them by their gurus and celebrate the birth of the Khalsa.

The Sikh community very much enjoys the values, freedom of speech, equality of life, and justice in Canada. These are the basic fundamental truths of the gurus' teachings. Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to see that Vaisakhi is celebrated in many parts of the world, especially here in Canada. Yesterday many ceremonies took place in Sikh temples. The Sikh community also believes in donating money and food to those who need it most such as the food bank.

Mr. Speaker, today members from my constituency, Edmonton-Manning, and members of the Sikh communities in Alberta came to celebrate with us here at the Legislature. Thank you to everyone who attended today and participated in this celebration. Members of the Sikh community are proud to say that they are proud Canadians. On behalf of the Sikh community we say thank you to Canada, who gave us a lot. Over the last 100-year history Canadian Sikhs have served and are still serving in fields such as the Canadian army, the RCMP, and within the Edmonton police force. Many have worked hard to become successful businessmen as well as successful politicians.

I sincerely invite our fellow Canadians to share in our Vaisakhi celebrations and parade coming up on the 18th of May in Mill Woods. Mr. Speaker, you have been part of that celebration for the last 10 years.

We are blessed to live in such a wonderful, multicultural Canada. I would like to wish everyone a happy Vaisakhi. God bless everyone.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, the Education minister and his educators are rewriting the Alberta curriculum and changing the way mathematics and other subjects are taught. This push to inquiry-based, or discovery, learning is also fundamentally flawed, and it's not new. It has failed virtually everywhere it's been introduced, especially in the United States, and there is ample evidence that it is failing here. Our PISA scores have plummeted, we have fallen substantially in international and national rankings, and, perhaps most troubling, the number of math-illiterate kids in this province has doubled since the introduction of this math in 2008. Study after study reveals what should be obvious: students who don't know their basics struggle as they move to higher levels.

I'm a parent. Most of us in this Legislature are parents. I know and you know that we should not be clouding our children's minds with multiple strategies to figure out five times six. The answer is 30. They should memorize it. It is a basic skill that will serve them well. The minister says that we need to teach our kids problem-solving skills as if this is a revelation. Does he not understand that having a high proficiency in fundamental math skills is proven to improve a student's problem-solving skills in critical thinking? You can't run before you walk.

New math textbooks like Math Makes Sense and Math Focus are the flawed recommended resources that Alberta Education is forcing on our students. Parents and many teachers are fed up with these new fuzzy math textbooks and unproven techniques. Alberta Ed should be giving our teachers the resources they need to help our kids. There is not one piece of empirical evidence that supports this inquiry-based, discovery-based model, yet all of the evidence shows that if you want to have math that teaches complex problem solving and critical thinking, you have to teach the basics.

I call on everybody to support us in calling on the minister to do this.

Family and Community Support Services

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to speak about the good work done by a group of outstanding Alberta organizations. Family and community support services operate in cities, towns, and municipalities across Alberta. They bring together partnerships between the provincial government, the local municipalities, and numerous charitable organizations serving their communities.

Local FCSS programs share a common goal with the Ministry of Human Services, that of creating better outcomes for all Albertans and their communities. FCSS program staff and volunteers in every corner of the province have been acknowledged by ministers and MLAs for their tremendous support in advancing the social policy framework and poverty reduction strategy by organizing and facilitating community conversations for comprehensive input into those plans.

Over 318 municipalities and Métis settlements participate in the provincial FCSS program, ensuring that Albertans have access to a strong network of prevention supports and social services. Over half of those municipalities now contribute far more than the required 20 per cent of FCSS funding because provincial investment in FCSS has not increased since 2009. They do so because monies invested in FCSS-funded programs provide a strong return in savings by reducing the social needs of those served, including involvement with health care, social supports, policing, and justice systems. In many rural communities the municipal FCSS program is the first and last contact for residents. Alberta FCSS programs face daily challenges to meet the needs of the rapidly increasing population and demand for services.

The FCSS program budget, as I said, has not increased in the past five years and does not account for population growth or annual inflation. The result is that FCSS is declining in its ability to maintain prevention supports for Albertans, and in many cases municipalities are now faced with reducing or eliminating prevention supports and funding to community agencies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, a reminder that you have 35 seconds for your questions and 35 seconds maximum for your supplementals.

Let's begin with the loyal opposition leader.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, let me also start with a few words on the horrific murders in Calgary. Our thoughts and deepest condolences go out to the families and friends of the victims of this incomprehensible act.

Alberta Health Services Sole-source Contracts

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, a week ago we revealed that AHS spent $250 million on outside consultants for things like image and reputation reports, executive coaching, and art consultants. The waste doesn't end there. Today we released more documents showing that AHS has spent nearly $1 billion on untendered sole-source contracts over two years. To the Health minister: why is Alberta Health Services spending so much money without even attempting to get the best deal for taxpayers?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, that again would be a wrong assumption. She has no idea whether they attempted to get the best deal or not. In fact, there are rules around sole-sourcing contracts, and in fact Alberta Health Services' contract policy indicates the criteria for deciding if a sole-sourcing arrangement is appropriate. The policy also requires that Alberta Health Services contact the managers' unit to review and approve appropriate contracts before the contracts are finalized. The Auditor General has selected and assessed a sample of sole-source contracts for compliance with the policy and found that the contracts complied with Alberta Health Services' sole-sourcing contract. The premise the hon. member puts forward is absolutely wrong.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, let me give the hon. Premier some more statistics. Of the almost 1,300 sole-source contracts we uncovered, 503 of them were above the maximum limit set by AHS in its sole-source policy. Together these contracts that violate the policy account for 98 per cent of the total billion-dollar bill. That means AHS violated its own policy 503 times by literally handing out contracts to hand-picked firms and individuals without a competitive bid. To the Health minister: how on earth is this acceptable?

Mr. Hancock: It's absolutely amazing that we have an officer of this Legislature, the Auditor General, who does a sampling survey of the contracts and finds nothing out of order, yet this hon. member can make an allegation like that in the House. The reality is that Alberta Health Services, like many health services, sometimes buys equipment from suppliers that are the only ones that supply the equipment. That would be a unique circumstance which would require a sole-source contract. I'm not going to speak to the individual specifications of each of these contracts, but I can say that I trust the Auditor General has audited the policies, has found that the policies are being adhered to, and the appropriate operation is being undertaken.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's answers are unacceptable. He routinely brushes aside these gross abuses of tax dollars as though they were nothing. We saw it last week with the outrageous consulting fees; we're seeing it again today. Clearly, he sees absolutely no problem with this kind of waste. To the Premier: if the Health minister won't get to the bottom of how and why AHS wastes so much taxpayer money, will he find a Health minister that will?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this House that this Health minister, this Premier, and this government are very interested in Alberta Health Services and any other agency of government doing appropriate work with respect to the issuing of contracts, making sure that they're fair market value, making sure that we always get the best deal. What is not helpful for Albertans is for this hon. member to drag out one contract and somehow make the assumption that somebody has done something wrong. The Auditor General has the job of making sure that we review our expenses against our policies, has done that, and has found nothing wrong in this case.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Actually, the Health minister's job is to make sure AHS is following its policy each and every time.

Last week in this Legislature the Premier said this:

Virtually all of the contracts in this government go through an RFP process, with appropriate competition, but there are some times, in unique circumstances or when you need a unique talent, when you can sole source a contract.

In light of the information we've revealed today, is he still willing to stand by those words?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. In fact, my understanding of the information that the hon. member is relying on today is that there are a number of those contracts which are buying specialized equipment and that have to be sole sourced because there's only one supplier. There may be other perfectly viable and valuable explanations for that, but this hon. member doesn't care. She wants to besmirch the reputation of everybody who works in the system instead of relying on the processes that we have. Auditors General make sure that the public's money is spent appropriately and that policies are adhered to.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's words have proven completely and utterly false. Alberta Health Services has sole sourced everything from food and beverage services to snow removal to paper shredding. They've sole sourced marriage counselling, public opinion polling, and, yes, even more executive coaching. They've even sole sourced a research firm to review their sole-sourcing policy. To the Premier: please tell me how these unique circumstances are requiring a unique talent.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can't tell her that, nor am I going to go back and look at two or three years of past sole-sourced contracts. The ones that she's talked about are a minimal portion of the ones put out, I'm given to understand. There are policies in place. People are expected to adhere to those policies. I understand that they have been reviewed and audited and that they have adhered to those policies. That's the appropriate way to deal with these things rather than going back and second-guessing people after the fact, picking out a supplier and saying: why four years ago did you do it this way? That's not the appropriate way to do it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is 2012 and 2013, under the mandate of this government and that Health minister.

This government simply cannot go on defending the rotten contracting and spending practices at Alberta Health Services. It is bureaucratic waste at its worst, and taxpayers and patients are paying the price. AHS was foisted on Albertans with a promise to reduce bureaucracy and get more money to the front line. The exact opposite has occurred. We know that this Health minister doesn't care, but let's hear from the Premier. Will he finally admit that AHS is a disaster and lead the way . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this Premier, this Health minister, and this government care very deeply about how Albertans are served and about how Albertans' money is spent effectively and efficiently. We've gone through a results-based budgeting process to look in all corners, to make sure we're achieving outcomes using Albertans' resources effectively and efficiently. We care about how Alberta Health Services does it, but we don't do that by going on a witch hunt and pulling out papers and waving them in the air. [interjections] We audit them against policies, we have the Auditor General audit them against policies, and if there are incidences of waste or problems with respect to contracts, we expect that to come to light in that process, and we deal with it in an appropriate way. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's just a struggle sometimes to hear overtop of the chattering that goes on across the bow, so please just keep it down, okay? That's all I'm asking. I'd like to not have to remind you again.

Let's go with the third main set of questions, please.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect this government and this Health minister to do his job.

Government Airplane Usage

Ms Smith: Yesterday we asked for details on one of the 50 flights the former Premier took with a family member. During last year's June flood the Premier flew to Jasper for the weekend. The government has so far failed to provide any details about the trip, which was paid for entirely by taxpayers. Albertans deserve to know if their taxpayer dollars were used appropriately or if they paid for a long-weekend vacation in Jasper. Will the Premier tell us which government officials the former Premier met with that weekend and what government business was accomplished?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the former Premier herself asked the Auditor General to review the spending policies, review the flight policies, and review those expenses. This Premier and this Premier's office will co-operate with that. We'll make sure that the Auditor General has access to any of that. What we would like and, I think, what Albertans would like to know is that there are appropriate processes in place to determine whether issues are appropriate or not, whether policies have been followed or not, and whether Alberta taxpayers' money is being used wisely or not. They would also prefer that this House focus on the policy and interests of Albertans rather than a witch hunt from the opposition.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, why is this so hard? What government business was conducted at the Jasper Park Lodge during the height of the floods last June?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea, and I am not about to go back and check everybody's calendar to find out what they were doing on any given day. I'm not going to ask ministers to give me their calendars so I can check to see whether they had an appropriate meeting with somebody before they booked a flight. We have ministers of the Crown and Premiers who are charged with doing the public's business. They do it well. They do it 24/7. They book flights when it is appropriate to do so. If any question is called into that, the appropriate way to investigate that question is to have the Auditor General do it. The Auditor General is doing it and will have access to all the information he needs to do that job.

2:00

The Speaker: Let's try again.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it boggles the mind that they can't even answer a simple question.

As we stated yesterday, this government can't be trusted to competently and appropriately make use of its air fleet. The government of British Columbia, which also has the need to travel to remote communities, uses commercial flights for the vast majority of their travel. They've sold off their aircraft and saved taxpayers the cost of maintaining the fleet. They also usually fly economy, which this government might want to try from time to time. Will the Premier commit to putting taxpayers first and sell the government fleet?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have already answered this question several times. The Auditor General is going to look at the efficiency and the taxpayer value for flights. I did take the liberty of checking to see what the charter flight would cost to go to High River. We did fly there a number of times last year because of the flood. A charter flight to High River is roughly $4,000 from Edmonton. The flight cost for ATS was about $1,400. Let's take Lloydminster. Lloydminster is a little farther away. Flight costs for the government plane to go to Lloydminster . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Thank you. Have a seat.

Let's just settle down here a little bit. I hear some outbursts coming from the government side now, I hear several coming from this side, and they're just not necessary, are they? They just aren't. They tend to create disorder, and they tend to create interventions by the Speaker. I'd like to avoid that.

Let's try to carry on. Let's go with the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, please, for your questions.

Government Spending

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problems in health care aren't due to a lack of funding. Overall health spending is up from $12 billion in 2007 to $18.3 billion today, a 53 per cent increase compared to a 15 per cent increase in population. Since its inception AHS spending is up 73 per cent, from $6 billion to $10.5 billion, and still wait times are far too long today, a stunning example of AHS waste and why I've been calling for an audit. Premier, will you agree to conduct and make public a full forensic financial audit of AHS?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is an officer of this Legislature and has the duty and obligation to do an audit of public agencies, including AHS. He does that. There's the Public Accounts process if people want to question the annual reports or even question the Auditor. There are processes in place every year for audits to happen, and we expect that the business of government will go on, the business of Alberta Health Services will go on. The hon. member referenced the increase in services. We're very proud of the fact that Albertans get some of the best health care in the world right here in Alberta. People come from all over western Canada for heart surgery, for liver transplants, for many other services that are provided right here in this province.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, a full forensic audit of AHS is what we're asking for. Yeah, you do get world-class care once you get in.

Let's try to get to the bottom of this waste and mismanagement another way. After Alberta Liberals exposed a suspicious sole-source contract granted to Navigator, a who's who of Tory land, I wrote the Auditor General asking for a review of these contacts. Following today's revelations the need for an investigation into all sole-source contracting is a no-brainer. To the Premier: will you join me by asking the Auditor General to investigate your government's overall policy of awarding sole-source contracts?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's not necessary to ask the Auditor General to do his job. He does it on an ongoing basis. In fact, with Alberta Health Services he's audited it twice now with respect to sole-source contracts and followed up with the recommendation that he made. He's made comments within his report, and he's indicated that he assessed a sample of sole-source contracts for compliance with the policy and found that the contracts complied with Alberta Health Services' sole-source criteria. These hon. members would want to use up all the resources of the public in looking at how all the resources of the public were used up. We want to use them in the best interests of the public, providing the services that they need.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals aren't calling for an audit of a little sample; we're asking for an audit of these billions that could be better spent.

As we saw with the untendered contracts for Navigator and again today, the current rules allow for sole-source contracting under $75,000. That makes it way too easy for this government to avoid accountability by splitting them up into small contracts. Alberta Liberals have proposed a motion this session that will put a stop to this practice once and for all. To the Premier: will you commit to open, public tendering of contracts and put an end to sole-source contracting once and for all?

Mr. Hancock: First the hon. member suggests that he's got a motion in the House that he wants the House to debate and make decision on and make a recommendation, then he wants to preempt his own motion by asking me to do it ahead of time without any debate. I don't understand the nature of this person's understanding of democracy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The public-sector unions have been saying it, the pension boards have been saying it, and now the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has said it: Alberta's public-sector pensions are sustainable as is with no changes. They're good. Really. Why has the Minister of Finance told Albertans just the opposite?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it isn't just the Minister of Finance that has suggested that we have to address this problem now. The unfunded liability that is currently on the books has been addressed through the contribution rates the members are making. We've said that all along. This is not a great revelation for either the hon. member or for the unions. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview asked the Auditor General in Public Accounts the other day whether or not this was a premature decision. The Auditor General said, "No. To consider these plans at this time is imperative because the contribution rates have reached, in the view of many people, an unaffordable level." It is our duty to do this to save the pension . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has misrepresented what the Auditor General had said. It is clear that these plans are sustainable, which leaves many Albertans wondering: why is this Minister of Finance determined to weaken them? Why does the Finance minister want to force public employees to work longer and retire with less?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the pension promise that we have for our employees in the defined benefit plan, which 85 per cent of Albertans do not enjoy, is that when they retire, they will receive a percentage – five years, usually the five best years in their employment – for the rest of their life regardless of how much they have put into that pension plan. In July 2012 we went to all of the boards, and we said: we need to make sure that that pension promise is sustainable into the future for those members. That's exactly what we've done. These things have been in consultation for the last almost two years. We will actually do what . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The only people that this minister has consulted with on this are the pension boards, and they've told them that the plans are fine.

Every time that this government refuses to negotiate and imposes its will through legislation, it provides more evidence that it is arrogant and out of touch. Here we go again. To the Finance minister: why do you insist on dictating instead of negotiating?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm actually quite pleased that the hon. member has brought the concept of negotiation into the House, because that's exactly what we will be doing about joint sponsorship of the plans, about the contribution rate caps that are going to help sustain these plans. What is arrogant and perhaps even misleading to Albertans and the pension plan holders is the fact that this is going to lessen their pension. The pension promise at age 65 is exactly what we are trying to save for all of those members of the plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. The taxpayers' waste at Alberta Health Services knows no bounds. As has already been pointed out, AHS spent nearly $1 billion on sole-sourced, untendered contracts over a two-year period. The one that particularly caught my eye was a $110,000 contract to review exclusive AHS procurement contracts. Yes, Mr. Speaker, unbelievably, they sole-sourced a contract to review their sole-source policy. To the Premier. I'm curious. Just what was the outcome of this review, and when will they be making changes to the policy?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, allow me to speculate because that is what I'll be doing. As I said to the House earlier, the Auditor General actually reviewed Alberta Health Services' sole-sourcing policy and said that they needed to review their policy and update it. I would suspect they probably hired a contractor from outside to review their policy so that it could be updated. I suspect it was actually successful because in the subsequent review of sole-sourcing by Alberta Health Services, the Auditor General said: we found that the contracts complied with Alberta Health Services' sole-sourcing criteria.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, this Premier has to learn what's happening, truly.

Given that AHS violated its own sole-source contract policy 503 times in only two years, how can anyone be confident that the Audit and Finance Committee, who the Health minister claims is responsible, is actually doing their job? Will you table the report on sole-sourcing contracts from the Audit and Finance Committee?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll have to take that under advisement for the Minister of Health to determine. I mean, Alberta Health Services is an agency of the government. I'm not sure where that report is or what it is. You wouldn't expect me to know that off the cuff today. But we'll take that under advisement and see if there's a report there and, if so, if it can be appropriately tabled. One thing this government is convinced of is that the public needs to know the policies, the programs, and how their funds are spent. That's why we have appropriate processes so that instead of taking these things out of context they can be done in a thorough and reviewable manner.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about policies and processes. Given that last week the Health minister brushed aside our questions about AHS misspending, saying, "I challenge her to present those questions to the Public Accounts Committee," I'd like to ask a question of the chair of the Public Accounts Committee. Will you immediately call AHS before the committee so we can get to the bottom of waste and mismanagement?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, that is a fantastic question. The Public Accounts Committee, of course, is tasked with looking at previous years' spending by government and their agencies to see if the money was spent properly. So I would be happy – happy – to bring this motion forward to the Public Accounts Committee. Although the government, of course, has the majority of members on that committee, they are responsible members. I know they want to get to the bottom of this as soon as possible. I'm confident that that motion will pass, and we can get to the bottom of these expenses.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will clarify later about questions to chairs of committees.

Let's move on. Edmonton-South West, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Daycare

Mr. Jeneroux: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure it's very well known by now that my constituency of Edmonton-South West is home to many new families composed of young working parents and their children. Young parents are frequently put in the difficult position of having to either sacrifice a second household income or seek out child care. One daycare, Global Aware Care, in my constituency is on the verge of shutting down services because of a lack of transportation. In these new communities especially it's very important to look into ways to encourage operation of daycares. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. What sorts of government supports are provided for on-site daycares so that we as parents can entrust our children . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely agree with the member that it makes a lot of sense to have daycares located in places that are most convenient for parents and where parents are actually close by. Ultimately, the decision has to be made by private organizations or nonprofits, but what we do is provide for wage top-ups and some training and retention promotion funds that are available for staff once they become accredited to ensure that we have high-quality daycare programs in the province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: given that transportation options to and from southwest schools to daycare facilities are increasingly difficult for parents to plan for, will you commit future plans to dedicate space to child care options permanently within our schools?

The Speaker: Mr. Minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Education I'd like to say that although it is always a plus to have schools with daycare facilities attached, this is something that has to be made at a local level based on enrolments in the local schools. The first priority for those particular schools is the K to 12 enrolment. However, we'd like to see, in cases where it's possible, more and more co-operation and collaboration between schools and daycare facilities.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that daycare costs are continuing to soar and given that it's often not worth it financially to return to work after parental leave, what incentives can your department currently provide in order to encourage parents to return to the workplace?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, it was in 2012 that the government changed its income threshold from $35,000 up to $50,000. That means that individuals making $50,000 and below are eligible for a subsidy on their daycare somewhere in the range of up to 600 some-odd dollars per student. This is a very important piece that allows nearly 25,000 students to be supported on any given day through this particular program. It allows a lot of families to get financial assistance to make sure that they can return to the workforce if they so choose.

School Construction and Modernization

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Satchel Paige, an old MLB player, once said, "If you tell a lie, always rehearse it." A few members of cabinet have crafted a story about the 50/70 school plan, but they really should have spent more time together in the rehearsal process. Last year the Education minister was a bit more up front and admitted that a lot of these projects will take up to six years to complete. But the Infrastructure minister is declaring that all 120 projects will be done by 2016. With no shovels in the ground, which of these timelines should Albertans believe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll repeat what I've said in this House before, and perhaps the hon. member will listen. We do have every intention of getting those schools open for the 2016 school year. I will remind the hon. member that the shovel in the ground isn't the first step. There's planning, and there's co-operation with the school boards across the province, with the Ministry of Education, and then with Infrastructure. We are working with the construction industry. We'll get those schools built. We're building Alberta. It's what Albertans want, and it's what that member wouldn't make happen.

Mr. Barnes: Two years in we've started zero schools.

Admitting their own incompetence, the government finally listened to the Calgary board of education's proposal to take care of building some local schools themselves. Will this government commit to giving other local school boards and local builders the chance to competitively build their own projects so that some of these projects actually have a shot at completion before the next election?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the member says in the first question that we're not started and in the second question acknowledges that we're well along the way working with school boards and the construction industry. I think he'd better check his own notes. Of course, he doesn't write it himself; somebody upstairs tells him what to say.

But on this side we do the work. I can tell the hon. member and all Albertans that we're working closely with the construction industry, with the school boards. Our intention is to get those schools open for Albertans in 2016. It's still our intention. Building Alberta isn't something that's a joke, Mr. Speaker. It's something we take seriously. We're doing it. That hon. member would never get it done.

Mr. Barnes: It's a big promise. A lot of sensitivity over there.

With a massive sole-source contract for 19 P3 schools, with the Infrastructure minister then admitting no plan for 100 of the 120 school projects, with the Education minister flip-flopping between projected completion times of three and six years, tell me: will the Premier also stand behind his colleagues' promise that these schools will all be done before the next election?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, Albertans want schools for their children, and they want modern schools for their children. This government has promised to deliver those schools, and this government will deliver those schools by the opening date that we indicated, which, I believe, is in the fall of 2016.

The Speaker: Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Kinship Care

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was reassured by the recent decision of Human Services to sign an information-sharing agreement with the Calgary Police Service that will be used to speed up the placement of children at risk with extended family members and close friends in kinship care arrangements. Anything that can help to reduce the number of children that have to go into emergency foster care is certainly a good thing. My question is for the Minister of Human Services. How often is a tool like this needed in the city of Calgary?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, we could have as many as about 90 children a month that come into care in and around the Calgary area. Now, a lot of these children can come into care for a variety of different reasons, everything from issues of neglect to issues of very extreme abuse. It's my hope that those children, that have been through some sort of trauma, are provided with a safe, loving place to stay, hopefully with somebody that they know, a family member, a family friend. I'm hoping that this process will allow us to place them with someone they know within hours.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister and your department, for your sensitivity on a day like today in Alberta.

Given that privacy is such a delicate matter in these cases, should the general public be concerned about privacy breaches in light of such an agreement?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, my first and foremost priority is the protection of children and ensuring that the trauma that they may have experienced is reduced as much as possible as quickly as possible. My priority is to make sure that we get the data and information needed as soon as possible to make better assessments as soon as possible so that within a period of hours, not weeks or days – this is my hope – those children are within the arms of loved ones when they need it most.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you. My final question is for the Minister of Justice. What can be done by your department to reduce the time it takes for private citizens to get a security check for those who wish to volunteer?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for that question. Security checks are typically processed by local police, and I'd be happy to facilitate a meeting with her local police detachment in Calgary-Glenmore.

One thing I just did want to mention is that we don't want to have excessive barriers to volunteer, but at the same time, as the Minister of Human Services has mentioned, children's safety is absolutely paramount. I have full confidence in our police service that they're effecting that as a number one priority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Public Service Pensions

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Finance minister gives no proof to support his fears that the public pension plans are unsustainable due to unfunded liabilities and increased longevity of our hard-working public employees. In fact, these fears have been shown to be baseless by independent actuaries and economists. The Minister of IIR admitted last week that “current . . . liabilities will be paid down over . . . 12 years.” To the Premier: why are you allowing this minister to forge ahead with his fabricated, fear-driven, Republican-style attack on hard-working Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Wow. Mr. Speaker, when we had meetings with the boards of all four of the pensions which the Ministry of Finance is the trustee of, one of the things that we talked about was sustainability into the future. One of the reasons we were talking about sustainability into the future was because of the $7.5 billion unfunded liability of today. We also recognized at that time that the unfunded liability of today was being handled in the contribution rates currently paid by employers and employees, taxpayers and employees. What we're talking about is the future.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this government contradicts itself in saying that public service pension plans are both healthy and unsustainable, yet they won't give the workers guaranteed cost-of-living increases, unlike high-ranking political staff. To the Premier again: why does the government only guarantee pensions for high-ranking political staff and threaten the well-being of the hard-working, everyday people that keep us safe, healthy, and make sure that the province is working?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the management employees pension plan is one of the ones that we're proposing to close off. In fact, we will be suggesting that after 2015 there would be no new entrants to that plan, that management would actually enter into the same plan that employees are in, probably with a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to come back to this. What we care about is maintaining the pension promise for employees of today and tomorrow. The opposition, especially the opposition over there, should understand that we are protecting employees of the past, of the present, and the future for their benefit.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, they're going to retire our seniors into poverty.

The Finance minister says that he consulted with pension boards, but he didn't say that there was agreement because there wasn't any. Stripping pension plan boards of their powers and bullying these groups who disagree with them is very routine here given bills 28, 45, and 46. Premier, when will you stop this abuse of power?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's extremely unfortunate that every time a member opposite wants to raise an issue, they call it bullying. The fact of the matter is that there was consultation, as the hon. Provincial Treasurer mentioned. It started in 2012, and it continued through 2013 because we have an obligation to our employees to ensure a sustainable pension fund. It's about public discussion, appropriate public discourse, coming to a resolution. In government you have to make tough decisions. That's not bullying. That's listening, learning, and acting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Family and Community Support Services

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 40 years FCSS has supported community mental health programs, family intervention services, child care, and seniors' programs, to name a few. Yet even as this government pays lip service to early intervention, FCSS funding has been virtually frozen for a decade. By failing to keep pace with population and inflation, FCSS has been cut by almost one-half since 2004. To the Minister of Human Services: why does his government care so little about supporting communities to care for their most vulnerable neighbours?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, our government makes substantial investments in protecting everyday, hard-working Alberta families and those that need our supports in times when they're down. FCSS is a great program. We're glad we have it, and we'll continue to work with all of our partners across this province to make sure Albertans are looked after when they need it most.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that underfunding forces FCSS to reduce or even eliminate funding for programs that keep seniors secure in their home or, say, keep families intact and successful and given that the slow demise of community supports is the predictable result of this PC government's misplaced priorities, why won't the Minister of Human Services replace empty platitudes with action and increase FCSS funding to make up for your years of neglect?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year the Human Services budget is going up about 5.5 per cent. We have various different investments that we're making on the front line to help people in their most difficult times and to do a lot more early intervention work; for example, working with our parent link centres to be able to help reach families that may potentially have issues of domestic abuse. So we're investing very heavily in early intervention services, and we'll continue to work with our partners to make sure Albertans are protected.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you're not investing; you're freezing.

Now, given that when there's a press release to be sent, this government is the first to fill it with empty promises to help vulnerable Albertans and given that the real story is that by cutting almost 50 per cent, either services are significantly diluted or the number of people shut out from these early intervention services is growing drastically every single year, I'll ask again: why won't this minister increase funding to FCSS to make up for his government's decade of disregard?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, this year's budget for Human Services, as I said, has an increase of about 5.5 per cent: 6 per cent in the area of child intervention, 5.9 per cent for support for persons with disabilities, 4.5 per cent for AISH, 6.7 per cent in the area of child care, 17 per cent in the area of homelessness. We're investing in areas that help support Albertans when they need it most, and we'll continue to do so.

Health Care System

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, constituents in my riding are hearing of all the latest news involving Alberta Health Services mispending hundreds of millions of dollars, and they're outraged. Wait times to access surgery in the central zone are not improving. A year ago the average wait for a knee replacement was 26.6 weeks; today it's 33.2 weeks. Hip replacements were 21.3 weeks; now they're 27.1 weeks. Can someone from this government explain to my constituents why access to health care continues to get worse while spending continues to climb higher and higher?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hundred thousand people a year move to this province. The province is growing. New ways of treating patients are invented every year. There's new equipment every year. We do more hips, more hearts, more procedures every year on almost an exponential basis. More Albertans are getting service every year. Yes, it is important for us to get the wait times down so that they can get those services. But if you take a look at the system we have, people come from all across western Canada to the Stollery centre to get liver transplants, to get heart procedures done, to get the very high level of service that this province and this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rowe: Given that long-term care spaces in Didsbury and Three Hills were cut so this government could save a dollar today only to have Alberta Health Services spend it on art consultants or high-priced image consultants, to the Premier: does this government really think it's right that families in my constituency are being separated when they enter continuing care as a result of the complete mismanagement of our health care dollars?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's not right that any family members are separated as a result of a health incident or deteriorating health. In fact, this government would like to ensure that we have in place the services that Albertans need so that there can be quality of life right through to the end of life. That's the goal of this government. But one cannot meet that goal by picking apart this piece and that piece and saying: if you saved a dollar on this corner, you could use it there. It's a very complex system. It requires intelligent people running the system. Yes, there are ways that we can improve the system, and we look every day to improve the system. I'd ask this hon. member and others to do that in a respectful way, to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rowe: Given that patients waiting for something as serious as a scheduled heart surgery now sit on a waiting list for an average of 22 weeks, 30 per cent longer than they did last year, again to the Premier: how can Albertans have any confidence in this government and this Health minister when every performance indicator imaginable shows that access to health care is getting worse and worse, year over year?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think what Albertans have confidence in is the fact that when they need services, they can get the services. Yes, there are wait times, and we need to work very, very diligently to get those wait times down to more acceptable levels, absolutely. You cannot build a system that's available at the moment a person needs services, but what we can build and what we have is a health service that's available when people need them on an urgent basis. There's a triage process. People get in when they need it. Yes, we need to work at making sure that the waits for the rest are shorter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Little Bow.

Highway Maintenance

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to hear from municipalities and constituents in northern Alberta about the inconsistencies of maintenance on our highways. My question this afternoon is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. In order to protect the long-term maintenance and the viability of our highways, what is your department doing to make sure that these roads will last for the lifetime of the projects?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. We share some common interests. Budget 2014 has an increase of $200 million over the next three years for highway rehabilitation and maintenance. That's a total of $735 million for highway rehab. This is equal to about 2,500 kilometres of provincial highways that will be rehabbed. You know, Alberta has a total of 31,000 kilometres of road, 28,000 of which are paved, and 4,000 bridges. We understand the need to protect these assets.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really excited to hear that. That's wonderful news.

The problem I have is that I continually hear about problems with delineator posts and signposts that have been down for many years, and these are very important, especially at rural intersections on a snowy, windy night. Can the minister assure me that these maintenance contracts will be looked at and make sure that these delineator posts for the safety of our rural residents will be installed again?

Mr. Drysdale: Delineator posts are often sheared off by snowplows, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we had a long, hard winter, so I think that there were a lot of posts that got shaved off this winter. Also, the movement of agricultural equipment, the wide equipment – I might even have been guilty of that myself once in a while, going down the highway. But, you know, highway maintenance contractors do inspect our delineator posts regularly for damage. We also followed the new national standards two years ago, and we increased the delineator strip from two inches to four inches.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final comment is on the quality of paint that the department seems to be using. Typically, once the lines have been painted on the highways, they seem to disappear within the first week or whenever the first rain comes. Could the minister assure us that paint that will be used with the increase in the budget will be of a higher quality?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, many Canadian provinces have problems with highway paint because, of course, like I said before, snow removal, the snowplows scraping the highway, is hard on our paint. Our maintenance contractors work every summer to repaint areas where needed. We test all paint for a full year to make sure it's suitable for Alberta roads. We did have a problem in 2010 and 2011 with our paint, but we worked with manufacturers and painting applicators to develop a stronger testing process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Barrhead-Morinville, Westlock.

Highway 3 Intersection at Coalhurst

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the month of March concerned citizens from the town of Coalhurst canvassed the area to make three simple changes to the highway 3 intersection in town. The initiative was led by two outstanding community-minded individuals, Taylor Hewlett and Jake Vanschothorst, whose goal was to improve traffic flow and save lives. To the Minister of Transportation: these are priorities repeated countless times by the town of Coalhurst council and now by almost a thousand citizens in this petition. Will your government listen and make sure these improvements are a priority?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since becoming Minister of Transportation, I have heard from a number of people about the concerns with this intersection on highway 3. The increased traffic there is a concern. The problem is that, you know, the county of Lethbridge and the town of Coalhurst haven't always agreed on what the proper solution is there. My colleagues, especially the Minister of Municipal Affairs, have been meeting with the municipalities there, and I hear that they're coming up with an agreement. I don't want to go down there and do something if half of the people don't agree on the right process. But it sounds like we're close to an agreement on what needs to be done there, and when we have the agreement, we'll move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow. First supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that of the three suggestions that are in here, two of them come at relatively no cost to the province – the first one increases awareness by adding flashing lights and alerting motorists of the important intersection ahead, and the second one reduces speed in the area – and given that these suggestions are something the minister can do today, will the minister take my constituents' safety seriously? Please look at these ideas, and tell me if it's possible to implement them.

Mr. Drysdale: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we're looking at all the aspects of safety there. There are quite a few different things we can do there, but we want to make sure that we incorporate them all together at the same time and make the proper decision for the area. We'll be moving forward with that as soon as possible.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the third suggestion is to increase the length of the deceleration lane that moves towards the tracks to improve visibility as you go north and given that this fall there's a plan to implement the overlay for highway 3, will this minister save taxpayers' money and address these very serious concerns and safety concerns by completing the third suggestion in tandem with this fall's highway 3 overlay?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we'll look at all suggestions. You know, that's one of them: right in, right out. There are quite a few different options there. There's a road in from the back, from the other side. So I'm sure we're going to be doing some asphalt work there, and we'll work it all together in one process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Highwood.

Provincial Diploma Examinations

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the recent constituency week I had the pleasure of meeting with a group of grade 12 students in the Westlock library. We had a sit-down discussion about diploma exams. Not only were the students there, but we also had a school trustee from Pembina Hills division as well as a superintendent and R.F. Staples staff. A big part of the discussion was regarding the purpose the exams serve and the fact that they're worth 50 per cent of the grade. To the Minister of Education and perhaps the Premier: could you please explain to my constituents of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock why diploma exams are worth 50 per cent of the grade 12 students' final marks?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fairness to all students is a cornerstone of the whole diploma examination program. There can be a great variation in assessment across the province from one school board or one school to another. Assessment practices vary, but a diploma examination certifies a student's achievement against a province-wide standard. The equal weighting of the diploma examination with the school mark assures all students that their marks are fair and reliable. That's important because when they go to postsecondary, Alberta students actually do very well because of the respect for our diploma results.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that B.C. universities add 3 and a half per cent to student applicants from Alberta and Saskatchewan universities let in Alberta students who border on that line of acceptance, can you please tell me and my constituents if there's any discussion regarding changing the current practice of diploma exams counting 50 per cent, and could that be lowered?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is not a discussion about changing the percentage weight of the diploma exams. However, I would say this. Curriculum redesign is under way, and when you do curriculum design, you have to actually do examination redesign. As part of that examination redesign it would be appropriate to consider the weighting of those exams and how you can continue to assure that same standard of fairness with respect to marks across the province.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you. Can the Premier please detail why there is a current shift to machine scoring for all written questions, not just multiple choice, and why this is being considered a benefit to students?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, technology is taking over our lives. The reality is that when you can do something using technology, it can reduce costs, and it can create more standardization. If it works appropriately – that's the real question here, to test to see how and where it can be used appropriately – then those resources saved can be applied to other parts of the system, making even better investments in education for all students across the province. Machine scoring is one tool that is being explored, that's being investigated, being used where appropriate for Alberta students so that we can use the resultant resources in other places for more . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that concludes the time for Oral Question Period. I've received a couple of notes. I'm just going to comment on them briefly, and we'll take a 30-second break to carry on with private members' statements.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: First of all, with regard to preambles after the fifth main question I've reminded you every day except today, and a number of you sort of forgot that and went on with preambles. However, I also noted some disruptions when some people had what appeared to be a long preamble, but in actual fact they were using the word "given" ahead of their preamble, so to speak. We've always allowed that, but today it just seemed that there were some exceptionally long "givens" given.

Secondly, questions are permitted to chairs of our standing committees. As you would know from looking at the inside of your Hansard every day, we have 10 standing and special committees of the Legislative Assembly. However, the caveat, the rule, which has been followed since 1997, at least in this Chamber, is that those questions must pertain to agenda items or scheduling matters, not specifically the workings and machinations and procedures. I interpreted the question from Calgary-Fish Creek as being one pertaining to an agenda item. In fact, the hon. member had said something in the second supplemental about calling AHS before the committee. To me, that sounded like she wanted it placed on the agenda. That's how I interpreted it, and that's why it was allowed to proceed.

Thirdly, tomorrow I will remind you of what the proper uses and protocols are regarding tablets, iPads, and other electronic devices. I've received some notes from some members asking for clarification. I shouldn't have to remind you, but I will because it's in the procedural letter that I sent to you, I believe, a month or two ago; in any event, before session started. But I will present that again for your use tomorrow.

Thirty seconds from now let us continue with the private members' statements, starting with Calgary-Bow. Just before we hear from Calgary-Bow, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Bev DeSantis. Bev and her husband Carl are very good friends of mine and have been for many years. A little known fact about Bev is that it's a toss-up whether she loves Carl or Rod Stewart more, but she loves them both. I know that, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have Bev join us here, and I hope she enjoys her visit to the Legislature. It's my honour to introduce her, and I invite members of the House to give her the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us move on with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Cross.

Alberta International Offices

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2014 and our government's building Alberta plan is about taking tangible actions to build new markets for our products that attract international investment so that we can keep investing in what matters most. Over the last year alone this government's focus on building new markets in Asia resulted in at least $460 million in new investment and trade for Alberta. Alberta's international offices played a critical role in strengthening Alberta's relationships with foreign governments, promoting Alberta's businesses internationally, and telling Alberta's story on the world stage.

Last year 651 Alberta companies worked with our international offices to advance their international business objectives. Having on-the-ground resources enabled us to facilitate more than 1,400 business introductions, resulting in 197 negotiations and follow-up meetings. Our offices helped to facilitate 128 trade and investment missions to Alberta and over 270 missions to markets abroad in 2013.

In today's competitive global marketplace this work is critical. The expansion of our international office network, supported by Budget 2014, will substantially strengthen Alberta's presence internationally, enhancing our ability to attract investment, facilitate trade, and support Alberta's businesses. This will result in more rapid economic growth and diversification of the economy and provide companies with access to new technologies and expertise.

Our government will continue opening new markets to create more economic opportunity, investment, jobs, and revenues that support the programs and services Albertans rely upon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Wrestling Championships

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to highlight a very important event for youth that was held at Lester B. Pearson high school in my constituency on March 7 and 8. The 2014 Alberta Schools' Athletic Association provincial championship had 302 top wrestlers from across Alberta compete this year. Fifty-four urban and rural schools were represented throughout the province.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, wrestling is a very elite level of competition that showcases the ability and the talent of our young athletes. All of the competitors worked hard to reach their goals. Their commitment to training and their drive to succeed are admirable.

Mr. Speaker, there were 84 gold, silver, and bronze medals in 28 weight categories that were awarded to the winning athletes. They competed as individuals and contributed points for their school in the team population for both boys and girls. The schools that had the most points received a plaque for first, second, and third place.

In addition to the athletes at Lester B. Pearson school, they hosted 400 spectators, family members, coaches, and officials. One hundred student volunteers and 80 staff members welcomed and assisted guests. The wonderful brunch, that was prepared and served by Pearson students and staff, was enjoyed by well over 600 people.

I would like to thank Greg Weir, principal at Lester B. Pearson high school, and recognize outstanding coaches Lindsay Marsh and Kai Kleinitz. Their tremendous efforts in organizing the planning of this athletic event was a year in the making.

Wrestling is a sport that requires determination, sportsmanship, and excellence. I would ask members of the Assembly and you, Mr. Speaker, to please join me in offering our warmest congratulations to each and every competitor who participated at the championship competition because each of them was an inspiration to all of us.

2:50 Flood Recovery and Mitigation in High River

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, last summer's flood devastated High River, and my hometown is still struggling to get back on its feet. Nowhere in Alberta were as many people's homes and businesses destroyed by the raging waters as they were in High River.

This government often describes the flood as a $6 billion event. Sadly, very little of that money has actually gone to the people who were hurt the most. Houses still sit empty and derelict. Businesses are still shuttered. The province of Alberta is getting at least $2.8 billion in federal dollars to pay flood costs, but the amount of money that has gone to rebuilding homes in High River is in the $48 million range. Less than 2 per cent of the money spent on the flood has made its way to those who were the hardest hit. Lots of money has flowed to sole-source contractors, who have been too slow, too expensive, and too uncaring of the needs of our communities.

This file has been grossly mismanaged. The government doesn't like hearing that from us, but anyone who's had to deal with the disaster recovery program, the messed-up contracting process, and the endless bureaucracy knows it to be true. It isn't just the contractors that have messed up. Parts of this file that belong directly to the government are also in chaos, and that is hurting everyone in High River. For example, this government's reliance on the 1992 flood maps and its reluctance to update the maps are having an impact on everyone in High River, even those lucky few who were not flooded.

You see, Mr. Speaker, without new and accurate flood maps insurance companies do not know how to assess and mitigate the risk. Without that data insurance companies don't want to write homeowner policies in High River, and the few who do write policies have dramatically increased their rates and their deductibles and have substantially curtailed their coverage. The absence of adequate and reasonable insurance coverage threatens the viability of every business in High River. It also threatens the economic and emotional security of every resident.

The government needs to solve this problem. It's the right thing to do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I'd like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards our office has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards, collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the U of A, are clear evidence that this government is not listening to the demands of all Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary system that is both accessible and affordable for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Little Bow I'm tabling two different petitions asking for the government to take a look at extending and moving the westbound deceleration lane, moderately reducing the speed on both sides of the Coalhurst intersection, and installing yellow flashing warning-light signs on both sides of the Coalhurst intersection.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plan regulations the 2012-2013 provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plans annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Griffiths, Minister of Service Alberta, responses to Written Question 16, Written Question 17, Written Question 18, and Written Question 29, asked for by Mr. Kang on April 14, 2014.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Famous Five

The Speaker: Hon. members, we don't appear to have any points of order today. However, we do have a minute or two on the clock, so if you'll allow me, I'd like to just make a brief statement about the Famous Five.

I'm pleased to announce the installation of an enhanced exhibit in our Legislature Building. If you visit the fifth floor of our building, you'll be very pleased to see that a stunning new tribute to the accomplishments of the Famous Five abounds there. The Famous Five, of course, were and are Emily Murphy, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Irene Parlby, Louise McKinney, and Nellie McClung. These five women shared the belief that all women play an essential role in politics and, if given the chance, could contribute a great deal to building a better Canada. Prior to October 18, 1929, the BNA Act did not consider women as "persons," which, in turn, prevented women from service within the Senate of Canada, where they could fully participate in the parliamentary system and effect meaningful change.

The group of five, however, challenged the interpretation of the act and marched forward to change the status of women in Canada. Their legal battle, which is known to all of us as the Persons Case, set a precedent for how the word "person" would be interpreted thereafter by the highest court of Canada, thus planting the seeds of reform within our legislative and judicial systems. In their ruling the Privy Council described the BNA Act as "a living tree capable of growth and expansion within its natural limits." From this, the living tree doctrine was established, changing the way Canadian law was interpreted and, within that law, forever entrenching women's rights.

The ruling on the Persons Case remains a landmark decision, and the Famous Five continue to symbolize not only women's rights but also the evolution of Canadian equality. They were posthumously appointed honorary Senators in 2009. The Famous Five: their names are now and forever known to us all.

The exhibit is currently open for public viewing as part of our free guided tours. I hope to further honour the legacy of the Famous Five on the 85th anniversary of the ruling of the Persons Case, which will be in October. However, I bring it to your attention now because I did not want to keep the exhibit closed until October since we receive thousands upon thousands of visitors here, and I wanted it open. I'm just telling you why we are not doing an official opening at this time. It will be done later in conjunction with the anniversary.

Hon. members, we are now at the end of our afternoon sitting. Routine has completed, and we are going to proceed to estimates. At 3:30 p.m. the Families and Communities Committee will consider the estimates for Justice and Solicitor General in committee room A. At the same time, Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for International and Intergovernmental Relations in committee room B. Tonight at 7 you're all invited to the Families and Communities Committee meeting, where they will consider the estimates of the Ministry of Culture in committee room A.

That being said, the House now stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:58 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Life and health are truly precious. When they are lost, we all grieve. Today let us remember those who are no longer among us. Let our thoughts be positive, and let them be filled with compassion, understanding, and prayer. May all blessings be upon them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

State Funeral for the Hon. Jim Flaherty

The Speaker: Hon. members, today the state funeral is being held for the late Hon. Jim Flaherty. Accordingly and in keeping with Alberta provincial protocols, our provincial flags have been lowered to half-mast. On behalf of all Albertans all of us join with all Canadians to mourn the passing of the late Hon. Jim Flaherty. We pay tribute to his dedicated public service, and we express our deepest condolences to his family and friends. The state funeral is now under way, and it takes precedence.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us begin with school groups, starting with Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the sharpest, the coolest, the most exciting, and the brightest students of Edmonton-Mill Woods's Hillview elementary school along with their teacher, Herman Chang, and two teacher helpers, Mrs. Tracy Ross and Mrs. Janice Davison. I will request that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you two classes, 56 students in total, from Lynnwood school. They are joined by their teachers, Sheldon Durstling and Erin Bayly, and parents Angela Shymko, Stacy van Cingel, Pam Wallace, and Ibeth Pinilla-Canon. They're all seated in the gallery. If they could all stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 23 bright young grade 6 students from a school that used to be in an area that you represented, Mr. Speaker, Rutherford school, but who are here today from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Sandra Colquhoun, and parent volunteer Pam Van Lersberghe. I would now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, if I may, it's just to acknowledge and recognize a group that will join us in a few minutes. They're a group from Heart Valley Christian school, next to Wanham. They will have travelled just about six hours one way to get here to visit and spend some time in the Legislature, so I just wanted to acknowledge that they will join us a little later.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you. Are there others?

If not, let us proceed with other special guests, beginning with Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to welcome to your gallery today 16 individuals who are the 2014 nominees for the Ernest C. Manning innovation awards, Canada's most prestigious innovation awards. The Ernest C. Manning innovation awards have been recognizing Canadian innovators of all ages with the imagination to innovate and the stamina to succeed. Albertans are well represented as recipients of Manning awards since they were established some 33 years ago as a national award program, named after Alberta Premier Ernest C. Manning. This year there are 56 nominees from across Canada, and of these, 18 are Albertans.

Here in Alberta we are indeed fortunate to enjoy a supportive business and research climate which encourages innovators. The impact on the Alberta economy by innovators has been immense. This year's nominees include well-established innovators and start-up entrepreneurs. Some of these innovations are now being exported all over the world, and others are in the early stages of entering markets. They deserve our attention and recognition. They are the individuals who are changing the way Alberta and, indeed, Canada compete, manufacture, communicate, and care for each other.

I would ask the nominees to please rise as I call their names and remain standing until all are introduced. We begin with Adrian Banica from Edmonton, innovator of the realSens system, a helicopter-mounted remote gas-sensing instrument package; Wade Carson of Edmonton, Jim Colvin of Calgary, Andrew Czarnietzki of Edmonton, and Jonathan Klippenstein of Sherwood Park, innovators of the world's first snubbing simulator, a software training program – Jonathan Klippenstein was unable to join us today – Dale Gregg of Edmonton, innovator of the Handle-Tech hose and pipe handle; Kevin Grumetza of Thorhild, innovator of the Easy Sheet curling rink ice liner; Sean Hannigan of Edmonton, innovator of the Swift rig vac; Reza Nasser of Edmonton, innovator of the Landmark precision building system; Dennis Prince of Edmonton, innovator of Airdar, a new technology that measures the locations and sizes of emission sources; John Putters of Edmonton, innovator of WANDA, a washroom management system; Jason Dewling of Olds, innovator of the connect your passion initiative, a mobile learning strategy; Dennis Filips of Edmonton, innovator of the iTClamp, a small, lightweight temporary wound-closure device; Jerry Hanna of Sherwood Park, who invented the accelerated sediment removal technology; and Vern Sparkes of Calgary, innovator of the Ditch Hitch, a safe vehicle recovery device.

Mr. Speaker, there are three more 2014 nominees, who were unable to attend today. Ross Thurston of Calgary, innovator of LWR, a patented manure treatment system – his mother, Norma, attends in his stead – Jan Kowalczewski of Edmonton, innovator of ReJoyce, the rehabilitation joystick for computerized exercise; Dr. Ray Rajotte of Edmonton, innovator of the perfusion device for human islet isolation, a noninvasive transplant procedure freeing severe diabetics from insulin injections.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask all the members to join me in recognizing the 2014 Ernest C. Manning award nominees with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests who are constituents of mine, Jerry and Katherine Hanna. Jerry, recognized a brief moment ago, is a made-in-Alberta innovator nominated for the Ernest C. Manning innovation award. His wife, Katherine, is a dynamic business leader in her own right and is on hand today to help celebrate her husband's success. I'd like to acknowledge the combined accomplishments of this couple, who are outstanding entrepreneurs and great supporters of our community in Strathcona county. Their many contributions include volunteering with the Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce and hosting an annual charity fundraiser at their home. I'm especially honoured to count Katherine and Jerry as friends. Jerry is in the Speaker's gallery today, of course, and Katherine is in the members' gallery. I would ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we are very pleased to have the HealthPartners group visiting the Legislature with one of their partner charities, the Kidney Foundation. HealthPartners is a unique collaboration of 16 of Canada's most trusted national health charities, representing 87 per cent of Canadians who are likely to be affected by chronic disease. Now, this crucial organization offers a convenient way for individuals to donate to health charities such as the Kidney Foundation in the workplace. I hope that all hon. members were able to take some time to visit the HealthPartners' kiosk located on the first floor of the Legislature rotunda earlier today to learn about the initiative. HealthPartners is an exemplary charity-based initiative, and I'm very proud to introduce one of its national board members, Leigh Allard. As you might know, Leigh does so many things, including serving as the president and CEO of the Lung Association for Alberta and the Northwest Territories. I would ask that she accept our very, very warm applause and welcome to our fine Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, you know how proud I am of all of the different agencies in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Today we have joining us some representatives, some ambassadors of Terra Centre. Terra serves teen parents in Edmonton, and as part of their service for young moms at Braemar school they are running a youth leadership ambassador program to instill confidence and give them opportunities. So here's one of their opportunities. Joining us today in the public gallery with the facilitator, Laura Barry-Johansen, we have – and please stand when I call your name – Reyane McDermott, Kerry-Ann Crossman, Mercedes Larocque, Kaylin Schick, Stephanie Attwell, Teesha Taylor, Michelle Martel, Chantelle Gibbs. Laura, please rise. Please welcome these wonderful ambassadors to our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an incredible advocate and someone I can now call a friend, Andrew McFadyen. Andrew is the founder of the Isaac Foundation, an organization that advocates for families and children affected by a debilitating disease called MPS. You'll recall the efforts last summer to get treatment for Aleena Sadownyk, an adorable four-year-old suffering from MPS. It was through the efforts of Andrew that the battle for the funding was won. Today Andrew has told me of another enzyme replacement therapy, that will be approved by Health Canada in June, which could greatly enrich the lives of six other Alberta children suffering from MPS. I know that the government won't hesitate in funding these children. I ask Andrew to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very distinguished Albertan, Dr. Allen Benson. Dr. Benson is the chief executive officer of Native Counselling Services of Alberta. I was pleased that today we announced a $200,000 grant to Native Counselling Services to write Gladue reports. Dr. Benson is a graduate of the University of Alberta with an honorary doctor of laws. Along with Dr. Benson is Patti LaBoucane-Benson and Gabriel Benson as well as Dr. Curtis Clarke, my ADM for corrections. I'd ask them to all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of support staff from the seniors' Churchill residence run by Revera. Meseret Kifle, Rhonda Wolfe, and Kevin Tirimba are all members of the AUPE. They are among the roughly 70 workers, including LPNs, health care workers, housekeepers, cooks, and services, who are in negotiations with Revera. Sitting with them is the AUPE vice-president, Mike Dempsey. If they could now please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, allow me to please say congratulations to our Ernest Manning award winners and also to introduce some of the board members and other volunteers who are here: Sol Rolingher – if you would please stand – Jennifer Diakiw, and Bob Bowhay, northern Alberta chapter incoming vice-chair. Thank you, and congratulations to all of you on your hard work.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you know, we each have two minutes for these statements. Let's start with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Alberta Health Services Sole-source Contracts

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Wildrose revealed that AHS spent nearly $1 billion – that's billion with a "b" – on sole-sourced untendered contracts in clear violation of its own contracting policies. This was a week after we revealed that AHS spent $250 million on outside consultants in just 18 months. That works out to some $460,000 every single day. Now, sole-source contracts might be great for the bureaucrats in charge because it means less work for them, but they're lousy for taxpayers. If AHS needs to be reminded, they deal in taxpayer dollars. It's their duty to get the best bang for the buck.

Speaking of which, Mr. Speaker, I want to highlight a few specific sole-source contracts that raised our eyebrows. You'll recall that last week we revealed that a former AHS VP was sole sourced a $252,000 executive coaching contract the day after she left AHS with a million dollar pension. Pam Whitnack left AHS on August 31, 2011. She received the contract the very next day. Also, between August 2011 and January 2012 Spearhead Executive Coaching was handed $88,000 for things like succession planning, capital management, and, of course, executive coaching. Now, who was an associate with Spearhead Executive Coaching? None other than Pam Whitnack. What a happy coincidence for the former AHS executive.

Mr. Speaker, you can see why we are so concerned with how AHS conducts itself. We have known for quite some time that health care wait times in Alberta lag behind the rest of Canada, and they're only getting worse. Meanwhile AHS is flushing hundreds of millions of dollars away in lucrative handouts for their former executives and outside consultants. The AHS bureaucracy is out of control, and patients are paying the price. What's worse, all we get from this government is spin and excuses.

AHS has failed, Mr. Speaker, and it's time for leadership that will put patients first.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Public-sector workers are the backbone of our hospitals, our schools, our communities. They are nurses, school aides, sheriffs, police officers, college teachers, garbage collectors. They are our front line, and we depend upon them.

Now, with no proof of a crisis, this PC government is renegeing on a promise made to generations of public-sector workers. Experts agree that Alberta's public pension plans are among the most stable in Canada. The proactive steps taken by the pension boards years ago will eliminate the unfunded liability within a dozen years. As is par for the course with this government, the minister is now advancing legislation that will allow him to drastically and unilaterally affect the pension benefits of thousands of Albertans.

He's made his plan very clear. He wants to reduce the cost-of-living adjustment so that pension benefits will not keep up with inflation. The retirement factor of age plus service will be raised from 85 to 90, forcing people to work longer. Anyone hoping to retire early will see their benefits severely penalized. Finally, he's aiming at a cap on contributions, which means that in future economic downturns the plans may not be able to raise the money they need to maintain the benefits. It could result in the end of the defined pension benefit, and pensioners will no longer be able to count on any kind of reliable fixed income.

Take the example of an average worker with 25 years of service planning to retire at age 60 in 2030. He or she makes the average yearly salary of $55,000. Under the changes that are proposed his monthly benefit would be just over $1,300, a loss of $241 a month. Mr. Speaker, living on a fixed income, we know that every single penny counts, and $1,300 is not good enough.

These proposed changes will condemn people who have worked for the public sector to a retirement at or near the poverty line. The minister is calling it a compromise, but there's been no consultation with workers directly affected, and there's no negotiation, just more dictation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Three quick reminders: you have 35 seconds for each question, 35 seconds for each answer, and no preambles, please, after the fifth main question.

Also, I was asked to clarify the use of computers, laptops, that type of thing, and electronic devices. A memo is on your chair with respect to the procedural letter I sent to all of you on February 11. It has yellow highlighting. Please pay attention to it.

Let's start the clock, and let's start with Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition leader.

Alberta Health Services Sole-source Contracts

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we revealed even more waste at AHS. First it was $250 million in outside consultants and now nearly a billion dollars in untendered contracts. Last week we showed that a former AHS VP, Pam Whitnack, was handed a $250,000 executive coaching contract the day after she left AHS. This week we found out that another company, Spearhead Executive Coaching, received $88,000 for the same services. And who is listed as a Spearhead associate? None other than Pam Whitnack. To the Premier: doesn't he see a problem here?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the opposition labelling things as waste and tossing it out like that doesn't actually make it so. In fact, the vast majority of the money that went out on sole-source contracts from Alberta Health Services went to suppliers of health services and care centres. The policies are in place. The Auditor General will audit to ensure that actions are carried out in accordance with policy. The vast majority of the resources that are used are used well. Can we do better? Obviously, we can.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Ms Whitnack must be the Vince Lombardi of executive coaches to keep on getting these sweetheart contracts. I'd say that she's more like the John Tortorella of executive coaches, coaching AHS executives out of their jobs all over the place. The bottom line is that there is no possible way to justify the spending of this kind of money when wait times are getting longer and patient outcomes are getting worse. To the Premier: is he is going to go over the head of this incompetent Health minister and get to the bottom of what is happening in AHS?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what we see day after day in this House is an opposition leader who does not respect the fact that people make a contribution day after day in this province. One of the people that she's disrespecting is Pam Whitnack, who was the head of the Chinook health region for a number of years. The Chinook health region, as people may recall, was the health region that had the best example of primary care networks in the province and was renowned for some of the health service deliveries that it had. Now, I am not involved with Alberta Health Services in terms of why they hire people for executive coaching, but it does not become us to besmirch the character of people not in this House.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they gave her $250,000 the day after they let her go from AHS. It can't be justified.

This Premier has been on the job less than a month, and his head-in-the-sand routine is already getting old. We know he won't be in the job very long, but that doesn't mean he can't make a difference. [interjection] Albertans are looking to him to show leadership and a determination to change his government's dismal performance of the last number of years. To the Premier: what is his legacy going to be, a placeholder and defender of PC failures or a champion of renewal in government?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I've never been one to worry about my legacy, but I will say that my record will speak for itself. In case you missed the sotto voce voice of the leader of the ND opposition, he warned the Leader of the Opposition that if she scares too many people off, I might just last longer than she thinks.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Oh, Mr. Speaker, we can only hope.

Yesterday the Premier tried to downplay our revelations that AHS had a problem with sole-sourcing contracts by saying that the Auditor General thinks that's all fine. That's not what the Auditor General said. Let me quote from page 128 of his October report, recommendations that are still not dealt with. "We recommend that [AHS] develop and implement a sole-sourcing policy for contracts and ensure that sole sourcing is clearly documented and justified." Will the Premier admit that AHS is a disaster and lead the way in doing something about it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of our Minister of Health, who is one of the most competent Health ministers in the country and has a wealth of experience in the area, we are doing exactly that. We are making sure that Alberta Health Services deals with the issues it has. It's a large operation. It has had some difficulties in bringing 11 organizations together to serve Albertans better. It's well on its way to doing that. We can do better, and we will do better. But it won't be as a result of people pulling things out of the corners and waving them in the air. It will be as a result of thoughtful action taken by this minister, this government, and this Alberta health care system.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is more. The Auditor General did review some AHS transactions, as the Premier said. That was back in 2011. While he noted some progress, he wanted more. He said that without progress on this file "AHS will not have adequate support to justify sole-sourcing contracts." Now, the documents we released are for sole-source contracts in 2012 and 2013. Any reasonable person will look at this and know that there's a problem, or does the Premier think that sole sourcing contracts for fitness instructors, snow removal, and paper shredding is justified?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea how the executives in charge would justify doing those contracts, but I do know this.

There is a process. There is a policy. They are required to adhere to that process and policy, and they're held accountable against that process and policy not only by management, not only by this government, but by the Auditor General. The Auditor General has an ongoing review of sole-source contracts, as the hon. member has acknowledged. That process will continue. Obviously, Alberta Health Services knows that the Auditor General will be reporting on progress on a time-to-time basis, and they would obviously take that into account as they're managing their processes.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier seems offended that we ask questions about government spending and the waste of taxpayer dollars. Now, I will remind him that the Legislature has the power of the purse. Question period is the place where the executive is held to account for their decisions. When the cabinet wastes taxpayer money, we should all be offended. Will the Premier admit that after 43 years his government no longer cares about accountability and they've lost the moral authority to govern? [interjections]

Mr. Hancock: There is no one who cares more about fiscal accountability and responsibility than this government. This government puts taxpayer dollars first each and every day. I have never been offended by an appropriate question from the opposition or anyone else about my role and responsibility or about the government's role and responsibility in the process. [interjections] What I am offended by are people who misinterpret the facts, throw things up in the air, combine things that shouldn't be combined in order to create confusion and in order to create an expectation of waste when, in fact, there are appropriate processes in place to deal with accountability in an appropriate and understandable way.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, third set of questions.

Former Premier's Travel to Jasper

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's just test that premise put on the table by the Premier, shall we? Yesterday we asked for details on one of the Premier's taxpayer-funded trips. We want to know the details about any meetings the former Premier had with government officials in Jasper on the long weekend during last year's flood. Taxpayers paid for the Premier to get to and from Jasper. We paid for her security detail. We paid for her stay and her staff's stay at the luxury Jasper Park Lodge. Taxpayers have a right to know: what government business was conducted in Jasper that weekend?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the former Premier herself asked the Auditor General to look into the travel and expense policy, to review it, to see that it's robust enough, and to use the Premier's office as a sample in terms of determining how it's being followed. That process is in place. Any information that the Auditor General needs to do that review will be provided to them. That report presumably will be made available because he is an officer of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, we have appropriate processes to look into things. It's not appropriate just to rise and make assumptions and aspersions and then try and believe that they're facts. Our policy is that planes are used for government business. That's our expectation.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Premier to review every single item in the former Premier's calendar, just one weekend. I remember that weekend well. It was the weekend when Albertans in my town and thousands of government workers, including a few cabinet ministers, were struggling to get the first of the residents of High River back into their homes. The former Premier was in Jasper. The documents say that it was for a meeting with government officials. Who did she meet with?

2:00

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if we're going to talk about what we remember, I can tell you that I as well remember the weekend well. On the Sunday of the long weekend I was in Calgary with my deputy minister and with a number of colleagues going to the three centres that we had set up in Calgary, with a number of public servants who were also there on their long weekends helping to hand out cards to people who were displaced by the floods. [interjections] A lot of work was being done by a lot of people. Now, some people were actually in other places in the province also doing work on the long weekend. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members it's getting difficult to hear the questions and the answers, and I'm going to ask you: please, let's be respectful of the questioner and the person answering.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have seen the RCMP called in to investigate federal politicians who improperly used taxpayer dollars for personal gain. If the former Premier really had meetings in Jasper, fine, but if there were no meetings, then we have a big problem. It's called breach of trust. Will the Premier clear the air and tell us who the former Premier met with in Jasper that weekend, or is he saying that we should take this to the RCMP for investigation?

Mr. Hancock: One of the things I know about our police in this province and this country, Mr. Speaker, is that they investigate criminal conduct that's brought to their attention. They do not just investigate aspersions, and they do not just investigate because somebody says that something might have happened. [interjections] So the appropriate process is for the Auditor General to review as he's been asked to do. He has access to all the information. If they have information otherwise, it's up to them to take it to the police if they believe so, but I can tell them right now that the police will not investigate just on their say-so. They'll have to have some actual evidence.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

FOIP Request Process

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Exactly one year ago I made a statement that government sees all FOIP requests. The Health minister denied it, saying that it's an independent process, but Alberta Liberals have a FOIP showing that not only are there weekly FOIP status reports but that Executive Council co-ordinated Service Alberta's response to all our Liberal FOIPs. To the Premier, if FOIP is supposed to be an independent process, free of political interference, why isn't it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would believe that it is. Just because Executive Council – i.e., the head of the civil service in this province – reviews and creates a process whereby FOIP requests, that are the same FOIP requests that are provided to all departments, are co-ordinated and synchronized and the best use is made of public resources in terms of answering, that does not equate to political interference. Peter Watson is the chief deputy minister of this government, and it's his job to do the most effective use of resources in responding to FOIP requests, as it is in other areas.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this Premier is in charge of Executive Council.

One of the main reasons for the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is to make sure that access to government information is free from political interference. This government claims to have the gold standard of transparency. Well, let's find out. This Alberta Liberal FOIP reveals that there are weekly FOIP reports. So I'm curious, Premier, just exactly who sees these reports – you, your ministers, chiefs of staff, executive assistants, political staffers – and what do they do with this information?

Mr. Hancock: Once again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's assumption is wrong. Just because I am the leader of the party and the Premier of the province does not mean that I interfere with everything that the civil service does. In fact, Peter Watson is the chief deputy minister of Executive Council, and it's his responsibility to make sure that all of government operations work well. [interjections] Now, by that member's suggestion, we could never, ever release a FOIP report because every minister is responsible for their department and the Premier is responsible for the rest of it. So you couldn't do any of that. [interjections] The fact of the matter is that it's set up appropriately, it works appropriately, and I don't see any of the weekly reports.

The Speaker: I'm sure the record will show several interjections because we actually have two microphones on the left walls, and two microphones over there. I think that's enough. Okay? Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Shocking. He's the Premier, and he doesn't know what his right-hand deputy is doing.

Mr. Speaker, opposition members and journalists can tell you how common it is to get the runaround, get delayed, or get responses that have large chunks deleted, which is a nice way of saying "censored." It's almost as if this government has its own frequent-flyer program when it comes to responding to the opposition and the media FOIPs. To the Premier: why is this government undermining the integrity and independence of the FOIP process by controlling what, how, and when we receive our responses?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the short answer is: it's not. The longer answer is that this hon. member is famous for bringing in his boxes and boxes of paper and no evidence. [interjections] Once again he's casting aspersions on a process and casting aspersions on the people who carry out that process, with no evidence whatsoever that anything wrong is happening. [interjections]

The fact of the matter is that we have a legislated FOIP process. That process is carried out appropriately. It's carried out by civil servants, and appropriate information is made available when that happens.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: I do have some of you listed for a question later, and I'd be remiss if I didn't remind you of that because I would hate to see somebody lose their question because you're speaking out of turn now. So be warned as of right now, okay? You know who you are, and I'm not going to warn you again. All right? Thank you.

Let's go on, please, and be respectful. The leader of the ND opposition.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the Premier knew he'd be left holding the baby, but he probably didn't think it would be twins.

Pensions are critical to our economy, crucial to keeping seniors healthy and out of poverty, and critical to attracting and retaining the quality staff we need for our public services. To the Premier: will you stop pretending that you are trying to protect the pensions of public employees and stop the unnecessary attack on the pensions, which do so much for our economy, for seniors' health, and for our public services?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dallas: Well, hon. member, I think a review of what the Auditor General has said with respect to this is significant. You know that he conducted a review, that the report was released on February 13. It's clear that there needs to be recognition of some simple facts, the facts around the ratio of those contributing to the plan to those collecting from the plan and the mortality rates that have changed. Of course, there are a number of other factors. Simply, the time is now to address these problems in a very modest and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister is pretending that the Auditor General has endorsed these changes, and that's just not true. Alberta Health Services used George & Bell, the same actuary that projected that pensions would be fully funded within 10 years, for a report on managing a legacy fund, so they think they're credible. Yet this government isn't listening to those experts. In fact, they won't even negotiate with the hundreds of thousands of their own employees, who stand to lose hundreds of dollars a month from their retirement income. To the Premier: why won't you listen to the responsible experts who say that these plans will be fully funded even if you don't make any changes at all?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member references a study by George & Bell, and the problem with that particular study is the methodology. The forecast projected in the study, the numbers that were likely chosen by the proponent of the study, indicated that the assumption would be that the assets would earn at least 5.75 per cent every year from now until 2023 and that there would be no other unexpected cost pressures. Those numbers simply are not appropriate for a study of this kind.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, employees and the unions that represent them, the plan boards themselves are willing to negotiate on changes to the pensions. It's just this government that refuses to negotiate, just like when they tried to freeze the wages of their own employees. Mr. Premier: will you please show good faith with the Albertans that work hard to provide our public services and go back to the negotiating table and talk to them about these changes? Why don't you negotiate instead of legislating?

2:10

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the consultation process behind this particular change has been fairly long. It was the middle of 2012 when the Provincial Treasurer went out to talk to the pension boards and others about what was needed to ensure that we had a sustainable pension plan so we could keep our pension promise to public servants. Throughout 2012 and into 2013 that discussion took place. In 2013 the Provincial Treasurer tabled some proposed changes to the pension plan for discussion, and that was open for discussion till December 2013. He then took the feedback that he got from that and built it into the response.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Seniors' Housing for Couples

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, many residents in my constituency have parents living in seniors' housing elsewhere in the city and throughout the province. I've heard concerns regarding divorce through separation. My constituents feel that there are parents that are suffering. Albertans that built the province we love must travel long distances to visit their most loved family members. It is important to quality of life to try and keep these couples together. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: as recipients of Alberta seniors' benefits do not qualify for Calgary senior citizens' transit passes or a reduced rate, is there some way that the province can help these individuals?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, thank you. With respect to couples in seniors' housing our government, of course, has built up to 5,000 accommodation spaces in the last five years. Part of the design of these new buildings is that all of them have couple suites in them. They're around the province, of course. That is the end goal, actually, that instead of these folks having to move around with transit, they would actually be in the same facility. In some cases the different levels of care are drastically different, and it can't always be accommodated.

Mr. Webber: Minister, there are many seniors who are separated, and it's a disgrace.

Given that transportation is only part of this issue, what actual steps is the government taking to allow most of our vulnerable citizens the dignity of aging in the communities that they have helped build?

Mr. Quest: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, very specifically, the bricks-and-mortar part of it is that there are, in fact, new facilities being built all over Alberta that are being funded by the province or in partnership with not-for-profits or faith based. Also, in those facilities there are multiple levels of care. If one spouse requires a very high level of care, perhaps dementia or something of that nature, and the other one requires a lower level of care, they can be accommodated in the same facility. We are working towards that right now.

With respect to the transit question that the hon. member brought up earlier, there is an AHS volunteer services area on their website.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Webber: To the same minister: will your ministry change its current mandate and make the reuniting of these couples a priority?

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's any mandate to be changed. We have the bricks and mortar and thousands of spaces around the province now, with plans, again, to meet our commitment to build the next 2,000 around the province, and part of that will be an increase in couples' accommodations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we revealed that in two years AHS sole-sourced $1 billion in contracts. The Premier said that this was somehow all okay because it might have complied with policy. He missed the point. Gifting a billion dollars in contracts is not in the best interest of taxpayers. If tendering these saved only 1 per cent, that's an extra $100 million. That would pay for 300 hip surgeries, 300 knee surgeries, and 100 heart surgeries. It's not just about waste; it's about getting dollars to the front line. Why doesn't the government do something about it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there's a very clear policy in place. Alberta Health Services has thresholds for any contracts over $75,000 for goods and services and any contracts over $200,000 for construction contracts. Exemptions include: only one supplier can provide the service when no other supplier is qualified or an unforeseen situation of urgency exists; the subject matter, the procurement, is of a confidential and privileged nature; or an RFP or other competitive process has resulted in no proposals or bids.

The point is that they manage these contracts. They're supposed to be managing them in an appropriate way, and the Auditor General will determine whether or not they have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. He walked into that one.

Given that cab companies, couriers, and even Coca-Cola were all handed untendered contracts and given that all of these companies clearly have competitors that could have bid against them for deals – I personally like Pepsi – will the Premier admit that a policy that doesn't require an attempt to get the best deal for taxpayers is a policy that clearly needs to be changed?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, from the questions and answers that have happened in the House over the last few days, a number of things are clear: first of all, that there is a policy in place; secondly, that the Auditor General over the course of a number of reviews has been reviewing that policy and has been providing advice to Alberta Health Services with respect to what they need to do. It's also clear that the Auditor General has sampled contracts from time to time – there's at least one instance that I understand took place – and has indicated that the contracts met the policy at that time. This hon. member could go back and pick something and talk about what brand of pop she likes, but the fact of the matter is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second and final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's clear, Premier, is that you're not following your own policy.

Given that when we revealed that a former AHS VP was gifted a $250,000 consulting contract the day after she resigned, the Minister of Health assured the House that he'd inquire with the AHS official administrator about the situation and it's a week later and we haven't heard anything, how can Albertans believe this government has any concern for the consistent abuse of taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans can be assured of is that this government clearly has at its forefront the respect for every taxpayer dollar. We operate a budget of approximately $42 billion on a day-to-day basis. That is important work. That's important work in Health Services; that's important work in the other jurisdictions and other aspects of government. The hon. minister has indicated he will go back and have a look at that particular contract, but that is a contract that has been in place already. We are taking care of the public's dollars on a day-to-day basis. We have processes in place to make sure that there isn't waste, and we constantly strive to improve through our results-based budgeting.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Marigold Library System Funding

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Marigold library system provides library services to 41 municipalities and 260,000 residents in south-central Alberta, including the fast-growing communities of Airdrie, Cochrane, High River, Okotoks, and Strathmore. It's currently receiving its per capita funding based on 2010 population numbers. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given the rapid population growth in those areas, why are the 2010 figures being used to calculate library grants?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really happy to receive this question. We've been very committed to our libraries. Even though over the last two or three years we've seen some challenges in our budgets, we've committed, we've held the line, and we've kept funding for our libraries at $26 million for operating. That isn't all we provide to libraries. We provide interlibrary loan services, the provincial library network. We also provide electronic content, resources for the print disabled, and improved high-speed Internet services. We are trying to support our libraries as best we can.

Dr. Brown: Looking forward, what does the minister intend to do to ensure that the library grant funding matches the current population growth, which is now depriving that system of about a hundred thousand dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister responsible.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, public libraries are incredibly important in our communities, especially in rural Alberta, where in many of our smaller communities it is the centre of the municipality. Right now if we were to try to increase the dollars to match population, it would be a million and a half dollars this year and half a million dollars every year to keep up with that. We'll continue to look at how we can do that. Libraries are funded in a partnership with our municipalities, so we'll continue to work with them to ensure that library services are available and that libraries continue to be the centre of our communities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I see there is no second supplemental, so let's move on.

Highway Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, after receiving complaints regarding highway maintenance, a FOIP request proved that out of six highway maintenance contractors one, known as Carillion, has been charged with the most penalties, 195 times, in fact, over the 2008 to 2012 period. Despite this terribly poor record, Carillion Canada was given a new 10-year contract by Alberta Transportation in 2012, worth approximately $450 million. Can the minister responsible for this decision tell the people of Alberta why you rewarded such a poor performer with a 10-year contract?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the minister is not here today, but he has told me that he is reviewing all the contracts. I'll take this under advisement and get an answer to the member.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Considering that four other contractors each had less than 20 fines during the same period that Carillion received 195, will Alberta Transportation continue to consider bids from this company when new highway contracts in other areas of Alberta go to tender this year?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only assume in the criteria for the letting of these important contracts that the safety aspect of road maintenance for all Albertans is critically important. I'm sure the criteria goes well beyond the exceptions that the member acknowledges. We'll be happy to bring this forward to the minister.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that Carillion obviously has been known for continuing to fail to provide acceptable levels of performance in the past, will the minister then please describe what performance measures and steps will be used to ensure this contractor completes future tasks in an appropriate and fully satisfactory manner?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the minister would be more than happy to discuss with the member the criteria for the letting of these maintenance contracts. There is absolutely a robust series of criteria that is utilized to make these important selections. Safety is the number one priority. Obviously, the importance of our roads for all Albertans for market access goes without saying.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Please be reminded not to refer to the absence or presence of members.

Let's go on. Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

FOIP Request Process

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It is very difficult and consuming of time and money to pry information out of this government. Now, I've always suspected that requests from media and opposition were treated differently, and look what we found: government e-mails showing that Liberal FOIPs were intercepted by a deputy minister, then run through a committee for discussion, and then sent to cabinet for consultations. To the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: why did Executive Council, the Premier's office and cabinet, bend or break the rules of the FOIP Act?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that this government has an excellent record of responding to FOIP requests. [interjections] In 2010 and 2011 we responded to more than 4,200 FOIP requests; 90 per cent of those requests were responded to within 30 days, and 96 per cent of those requests were responded to within 60 days. We have an excellent record responding to FOIP requests. [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: That doesn't mean you didn't interfere.

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's have your first supplemental.

Could the rest of us please give her the floor without the yelling and the outbursts that we just heard? Please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I can feel the attention.

Back to the same minister: given that in the definitions of FOIP a third party is a group other than government, why were we told that another 30 days were needed to consult a third party when it was Executive Council which was being consulted?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I want to correct an assumption that was made by this hon. member in her first question, and that is that cabinet sees FOIP requests. I want to assure her that cabinet does not see FOIP requests. FOIP requests are handled under the provisions that are set out in the act and handled appropriately. When it refers to Executive Council, it obviously refers to the chief deputy minister, who co-ordinates the activities of other civil servants in appropriately responding to FOIP requests.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry; that's just not what it says.

Back to the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: was the permission sought of the commissioner of freedom of information to allow extending time for multiple questions? That one would have been legit. Did you try it?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the hon. member is asking for. We do have a good record. There is a procedure in the act that can be followed. Section 65 of the act provides a procedure that any person who makes a request under FOIP can go to the commissioner and follow up, and the commissioner has the power to investigate and take other measures under the act. There is an effective piece of legislation, and there are procedures that can be used under that legislation.

School Infrastructure Priorities

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this week some Edmonton parents got the bad news that they have to sacrifice three community schools, shutting the doors forever, just to get one new school from this government. But while children in Edmonton's mature neighbourhoods are losing schools, this government is spending $7 million expanding Prairie Christian Academy, a school with discriminatory codes of conduct, where enrolment isn't even growing. To the Premier: will you tell Albertans why public schools are being closed while schools like PCA are getting more dollars?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in urban centres we have a problem with growth in the suburbs and requiring more schools there, but we have a lot of schools that no longer have the students they need to have a viable educational program. It makes sense to take three old schools out of circulation but to provide one new school with current, viable, and up-to-date equipment and a site for good learning opportunities for those students.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that this PC government is dictating an arbitrary 3 to 1 policy, forcing school boards to close at least three schools to get one new one, ignoring local community needs such as demographics, student needs, and geography and given that, on the other hand, when it comes to ignoring universal human rights, you people can't defer to boards fast enough, to the Premier: why are you being so hypocritical?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, school boards determine what their priorities are, but we do want to make sure that school boards use resources in appropriate ways. It's very difficult to use educational resources in an appropriate way if you have to heat old buildings that are only half or a quarter or 20 per cent full. When you can't provide proper educational programming in that circumstance, it just makes sense to take old buildings out of circulation. But we do need to, when we do that, provide the proper educational experience and educational site in those areas, and that's precisely what the policy does.

Mr. Bilous: You should apply that to old governing parties.

Mr. Speaker, given that it's this PC government that decides how much funding our school boards get and given that it's this PC government that's allowed deferred maintenance in our schools to grow and grow and grow, back to the Premier: will you admit that your PC government's failure is forcing school boards to close mature neighbourhood schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the experience of school boards that have old buildings is that they cannot keep those buildings open without devoting an awful lot of educational resources to doing so. It makes sense at some point in time, when we don't build a new school on every block today, to go back into those neighbourhoods and say: how can we create the right kind of educational opportunity for those students, take those buildings out of play that are no longer viable or valuable, but make sure that those students have a place to go to school in and near their neighbourhood?

PDD Supports Intensity Scale

Mrs. Towle: According to the 2009 annual report the supports intensity scale, or SIS, is used to determine individual support needs and to develop service plans for individuals in the PDD system. Last year we heard the previous minister of PDD explain how effective and important this tool was. We now have a new minister, who has been travelling the province once again to hear from clients and those impacted by SIS assessments. Can the associate minister for persons with developmental disabilities provide Albertans with his assessment of SIS and its effectiveness in determining need and funding?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. SIS is only one of the tools which is used to establish just a baseline of the needs of the individual. There's a philosophical difference between asset based or needs based. We have chosen to take the needs of the individuals, their goals, and their aspirations and meet those needs. That's what SIS is all about.

Mrs. Towle: Given that on April 3 the associate minister addressed the Alberta Disabilities Forum and expressed that he has heard multiple concerns from families and service providers around the flaws of the supports intensity scale, which is exactly what the previous minister heard as well, and given that at that same forum the minister himself agreed that SIS does not work, can the minister tell families and organizations what he is going to do about a program that he himself admits doesn't even work?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, SIS is one of the tools. When I travel the province and talk to a number of different families, the impact of the SIS and having challenges with the SIS – we have a focus group who is going to be travelling the province, meeting the individuals and the families who want to be reassessed. We're going to be meeting the needs of those individuals. The forum she's talking about: yes, I did acknowledge that there are people who are asking to be reassessed. We're absolutely going to be meeting the needs of those individuals.

Mrs. Towle: Great. So we're going to spend more money on the same focus groups the previous minister already spent money on.

Given that on April 3 this minister said that the supports intensity scale doesn't work and that the previous minister already did his focus groups all last year and heard that SIS does not work and that families and service providers have repeatedly said that SIS doesn't work, how can the minister possibly assure vulnerable Albertans and their families they will receive the support that they require if the very system they're using to assess them doesn't work?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, I have never said that the system does not work. What I have said is that part of the PDD transformation is about meeting the needs of the individuals: their needs, their goals, their aspirations. SIS is one of the tools which is used right across the province to have a consistent approach to providing services to the most vulnerable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Highwood.

Calgary Aging in Place Initiative

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Responding to the rising needs of seniors, we in Calgary-Hawkwood have launched the aging in place pilot. This pilot focuses on a continuum of services to keep seniors living in our community. It includes soft services such as snow shovelling, grocery shopping, doctors' appointments, and also infrastructure support such as assisted housing arrangements. The pilot will utilize a community-based model to encourage people to take part in decisions that impact their future. My question is to the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors. Given the competing demands in this area, is there . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the people of the Calgary-Hawkwood constituency and, of course, this hon. member for starting this pilot project, that's dedicated to helping seniors to thrive and stay in their communities. He's talking about soft services. I know where he's going. The government is committed to providing supports and care options to help seniors age in place. As a matter of fact, we have the strongest seniors' supports in Canada, including the special-needs assistance program and the property tax deferral program, which could perhaps be helpful in this case. It's a pilot project, as the member said, and we look forward to working with those folks and finding out how it's gone.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you. To the same minister: given that a community grassroots program like this one will benefit a great deal from professional facilitation, if no money is clearly identified for such a program, can you offer some support from an HR point of view?

Mr. Quest: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I say, it's a pilot program, so this is all open to discussion. Volunteers like the community members in this project have given generously of their time and their talent. We very much appreciate that. Again, we look forward to working with them. Soft services is an area that we need to get some work done in because it is all part of our strategy to help seniors age in place. Having some options for seniors for those services is all part of that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Luan: Last but not least, if the minister is unable to promise any specific dollars or people, can you at least commit yourself to coming to the aging in place community fair that we will be hosting on Saturday, October 4, 2014, so that you can learn from those fantastic volunteers what they are intending to do and how you can help them?

Mr. Quest: Well, I'd like to learn more about what they're doing, Mr. Speaker. That sounds like a good opportunity to do that. Perhaps we can, hopefully, have an opportunity to sit down and chat about how it's going before then. But if there's an event on that day, schedule permitting, I'd love to be there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by St. Albert.

Okotoks Health and Wellness Centre Parking

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question to ask the Wellness minister on behalf of my constituents. In July 2006 Alberta Health Services was given a report, conducted on their behalf, regarding the use of the Okotoks health and wellness centre. It identified a growing need to increase the number of parking stalls available for both staff and visitors. Although Okotoks has seen remarkable growth since that time, nothing has been done to increase parking at the site. Can the minister tell my constituents what plans are in place to improve access to this important community facility?

Mr. Rodney: Well, I would personally like to thank the opposition leader for bringing up wellness. It's, I believe, the first time in two years that we've had a question from the opposition. I just kind of wonder where it's been on their priority list. I would expect that she agrees that we want to do everything that we can to be positive, proactive, preventative in our programs and policies. I'm happy to look into this exact file.

The Speaker: First sup.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that in this same report it was identified that urgent care, located in the Okotoks health and wellness centre, sees over 75 patients a day and given that patients going to the medical laboratory, family resource centre, and other community health and wellness services adds hundreds and hundreds of people a day at the facility and they need parking, can the minister indicate when new parking stalls will be made available at the Okotoks health and wellness centre?

Mr. Rodney: Having been to the fine facility on more than one occasion and seeing the great work that the great people do there, I am very happy to do what I can to see that they have what they need. I'm happy to discuss this, as mentioned, with the Health minister, and we will get back to you.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. They did have another suggestion. The Healthy Okotoks Coalition has written a number of letters to both the Health minister and AHS executives, unfortunately to no avail, but they have prepared a proposal that would have qualified volunteers remove sod and make a gravel parking lot at the Okotoks health and wellness centre. Will the minister commit to immediately addressing the parking needs at this facility, or will he give these volunteers permission to do the work themselves?

Mr. Rodney: Well, as mentioned in my previous answer, I'm very happy to talk to the Health minister. I kind of wish that I had seen a copy of that. But let's face it: my bailiwick is to do with programs and policies that are really about keeping people happy, healthy, and out of the hospital as much as possible, to increase the quality of life for Albertans while decreasing health care taxes and costs, and I know that we would agree on that. As mentioned, I am happy to bring this up with the Health minister in the next week.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Shawna Rodnunsky is a constituent of mine in St. Albert. Dr. Rodnunsky has visited my office a number of times to raise awareness and voice her concerns to me regarding supports for patients with chronic fatigue syndrome. CFS is a physical illness that makes those who suffer from this condition debilitated and unable to do all normal daily activities. To the Associate Minister of Wellness: what services, treatments, or supports are available in Alberta to help those diagnosed with CFS?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his advocacy on this very personal and, obviously, very important issue not just for the person in question but for others across Alberta. I believe that he knows that our government recognizes that chronic fatigue syndrome is a complex health issue and that it has debilitating effects on those who suffer from it. As with most chronic illnesses we truly appreciate that our primary health care providers, our family physicians and our practitioners, are those in the best position to provide care for Albertans across the province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the current understanding of chronic fatigue syndrome is, as the minister points out, still very limited, will your ministry work with health care professionals to expand the awareness, diagnosis, and treatment of chronic fatigue syndrome and related conditions?

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to share with the hon. member that our government is currently working closely with Alberta Health Services to improve chronic health disease management and to improve province-wide best practices in this area. Along with the Health ministry and AHS we'll continue to look to new research not just across the country but around the world. It's a similar approach that's led to success in many other areas. As we continue to learn more about CFS, we'll continue to work with our partners to not only raise awareness based on best information available but to apply it as well.

Mr. Khan: Well, thank you for that, Mr. Minister. To the same minister again: given that chronic fatigue syndrome is, as he points out, a complicated disorder and many patients are desperately in need of care, will your ministry allocate more resources to help those diagnosed with CFS?

Mr. Rodney: Another great question. I can tell the member and the people of the province that our government is very strongly focused on improving access to primary health care services for Albertans and helping more people to manage chronic diseases and illnesses within their communities. That's why I really want to take the opportunity to thank those that are on the front line. They're really in the best position and are the main publicly funded supports available to assist all those who are coping with CFS and other chronic diseases across Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the member that I will take his questions and suggestions forward to the Minister of Health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we will continue with private members' statements.

Members' Statements

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, she was only three years old. She was just a toddler. That was how old my Armenian grandmother was when she was taken from her mother's arms. It was her good neighbours, her Turkish neighbours, who offered to say that she was their daughter and to care for her as their own. They said that she was too little to keep quiet when her family had to hide, and they would keep her safe until her family returned.

The 99th commemoration of the Armenian genocide will take place on Thursday, April 24 around the world. You probably won't read about it in the newspapers, yet what was done to Armenians at the hands of the Ottoman Empire in 1915 marked the first genocide of the 20th century. A genocide denied is a genocide repeated, and, oh, how we have repeated the horror of this statement. The international community failed to hold the perpetrators of the Armenian genocide accountable for their crimes, and this has encouraged crimes against humanity, including the Jewish holocaust, the Ukrainian Holodomor, Cambodia, Rwanda, Darfur, and now Syria.

Mr. Speaker, denial prevents healing. I quote from the dissertation by Ashley Kalagian Blunt that I will table today.

The global recognition and remembrance of the Armenian genocide is an issue that has personal significance for Armenians as well as political significance for the world community... In light of this, it seems imperative for Armenians to continue to advocate for genocide recognition and Turkish admittance of responsibility.

On April 21, 2004, our Canadian government officially recognized the Armenian genocide. This is a monumental step towards eliminating future genocides, but it is not enough. As long as nations in the world continue to deny genocides and accept alterations to the facts of history, we will continue to face systematic annihilations of entire cultures.

Hope does survive, Mr. Speaker, because of loving and kind people like the Turkish family that saved my grandmother, Mariam Kalagian, and taught her that love is better than hate.

I call upon the Turkish government to recognize the Armenian genocide and to stop trying to alter the historical...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Peace Wapiti School Division

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to talk about a school in one of my communities called Teepee Creek and talk about their school board a little bit, the Peace Wapiti school division. Teepee Creek is a small farming community approximately 50 kilometres from Grande Prairie to the northwest. This small rural school hosts approximately 80 students ranging from kindergarten all the way through to grade 8, with five classrooms, a gymnasium, a computer room, and a library.

This is the oldest school in the Peace Wapiti school board, and it was built in 1955. This school is one of the 70 schools recently approved for modernization, which has already begun. This school also offers specialty programs, including counselling, early literacy, intervention, speech pathology services, an individual classroom project program, as well as swimming programs.

The Peace Wapiti school division consists of more than 5,600 students in 32 schools. Peace Wapiti school board's mandate states that it is "responsible for the provision and maintenance of an educational environment that enables all students to achieve their potential to become productive members of a changing society."

Both the Teepee Creek school and the Peace Wapiti public school board have huge impacts on the residents in these communities and the surrounding area. These organizations enrich individuals and allow them to fulfill themselves. My constituents are blessed to host these organizations, and I wish them the best in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Deaths of Calgary Students

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past I've always been pleased to rise and report on what is happening in my constituency of Calgary-Varsity. I never dreamed that I would ever have to rise and speak on such a senseless tragedy as we have endured this week. Yesterday residents of Brentwood awoke to a nightmare. Five young people had been murdered while celebrating the end of their semester at the University of Calgary. Lawrence Hong, Josh Hunter, Kaitlin Perras, Zackariah Rathwell, and Jordan Segura all had their dreams, futures, and lives brutally torn away by a horrific act of violence. As a mother with a son currently attending university, I can only imagine the heartbreak their parents are feeling.

I know that all members in this House join in offering our condolences and deepest sorrows to their families and to their loved ones. Ever since Calgary-Varsity was formed in 1993, students and seniors have lived side by side, one generation supporting the other. Students and seniors are the heart and soul of our constituency. Students are our future. They embody our dreams for a better Alberta. Five sets of dreams have been forever silenced this week, and the sadness of this act will weigh on our hearts for a very long time. It has diminished our community and our city.

It's natural to ask how someone could lash out in such anger and also how we can keep ourselves and our communities safe from such hatred. Such answers to these questions will come as the investigation proceeds, and others will need much more reflection.

What we can do right now is to be proud of the University of Calgary's compassionate response. We can be grateful for the effective and determined response of the Calgary Police Service in swiftly apprehending the suspect. Lastly, we can be confident in the ability of our city and community to come together and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Highway Construction and Maintenance

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, through the process of discussing the budget for the Ministry of Transportation, the overriding resulting impression was that this so vital a department to our province is sadly far behind in terms of existing infrastructure, maintenance, and expansion plus that the department severely lacks the ability to address the immense long-term deficit in highway construction projects that need to be completed. From the north end of Alberta, where our heavy industries need better access routes and infrastructure to deliver their components for the construction of their facilities, to the southern region, where the main routes out of the province are so severely constricted that their size and conditions limit our abilities to easily ship our products, the main transportation corridors need enhancements immediately to prevent the further decline of our ability to properly and safely participate in world trade.

In terms of maintenance, according to the Transportation business plan of '14-17, the physical condition of provincial highway services is far below reasonable expectations, where fewer than 59 per cent are in good condition, fewer than 27 per cent are in fair condition, and over 15 per cent are in poor condition.

Regarding key postponed construction projects, the twinning of highway 3, for example, which is the southern major transportation corridor to the border and to the shipping terminals at the coast in B.C., that was confirmed to be a bottleneck type of problem, that was confirmed to be constructed by the Premier of this province in 2007, has been studied, designed, yet it has been ignored.

Mr. Speaker, considering all of the above, it is hard to understand how a province with the highest revenue in Canada cannot adequately fulfill their obligations to maintain our highway and road network and address this enormous infrastructure deficit. Yet this same ministry claims that it provides a world-class transportation system that supports Alberta's economy and quality of life. Really?

Not according to the facts as we in the public see it.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I beg leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 98(2).

- (1) the petition of Dr. Lyle Oberg and Dr. Terrence H. White, directors of the Rosebud School of the Arts, for the Rosebud School of the Arts Amendment Act, 2014.
- (2) the petition of Patricia Goodwill-Littlechild, executive director of Maskwachees Cultural College, and Dennis Callihoo, legal counsel for Maskwachees Cultural College, for the Maskwachees Cultural College Amendment Act, 2014.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister and International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Bill 9

Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance I'm pleased to rise today and introduce Bill 9, the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014.

Mr. Speaker, public-sector pension plans, like many across North America, face serious challenges. People are collecting pensions for longer while the number of retirees is rising, causing a bigger cost burden to fall on active plan members. The situation is further compounded by continuing low interest rates expected to trend in future years. The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance as the trustee of these plans has a fiduciary duty to plan members and to taxpayers. The proposed changes in the bill strike the right balance between all stakeholders. By acting now with some modest course corrections, we avoid leaving future generations of plan members and taxpayers with significant problems to deal with later.

The Speaker: Did I hear you move first reading?

Mr. Dallas: Yes.

The Speaker: I think I did.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Bill 10

Employment Pension (Private Sector) Plans Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance I'm pleased to rise today and introduce Bill 10, the Employment Pension (Private Sector) Plans Amendment Act, 2014.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will affect pension plans offered in the private sector and should not be confused with the work we are doing on public-sector sustainability in Bill 9. What the employment pension plans amendment act will do is permit defined benefit pension plans in the private sector to convert previously accrued defined benefits into target benefits as well as also address some required housekeeping changes. By allowing these proposed changes, we will be helping private employers address some of the challenges they are facing, including pension plans that are too costly to maintain. In an era when pension plan coverage is very low, legislation should be aimed at encouraging those who have pension plans to continue to do so. This amendment will contribute to that goal.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Your first of two.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is copies of a petition with approximately 2,000 signatures from the Alberta Federation of Labour. The petition is gaining hundreds of signatures every day and is calling on the government to pass legislation that will ensure that any changes to the LAPP or the PSPP are the result of direct negotiations between the government and the affected employees.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is 50 of over 4,000 postcards that our office has received asking the PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards, collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, are clear evidence that the government needs to listen to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary system which is accessible and affordable for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a dissertation written by my niece Ashley Kalagian Blunt as part of her master's degree in cultural studies at the University of Sydney. The dissertation states that nearly one hundred years have passed since the Armenian genocide, which prefaced and in some ways encouraged the Holocaust – yet the Turkish government continues to deny the genocide and uses political manipulation to prevent its recognition by other nations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition or someone on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the leader of the Liberal opposition I table copies of Hansard from April 16, 2013, which he referenced during his questions this afternoon.

May I continue with my own tablings? Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

I also have the appropriate number of copies of a selection, I believe, of documents that we received from a FOIP, including ones that talk about: “Executive Council (EC) did request the ARTS Lists are to be sent over after your consultation with Legal Counsel.” There are a number of other references where they talk about deputy ministers being involved or getting the approval of cabinet or getting the consultation of Executive Council.

Thank you very much.

Dr. Swann: I have the appropriate number of copies of a tabling from the Ministry of Energy in Ontario called Creating Cleaner Air in Ontario. Ontario is now the first jurisdiction in North America to fully eliminate coal as a source of electricity generation. The minister had this to say.

Getting off coal is the single largest climate change initiative undertaken in North America and is equivalent to taking up to seven million cars off the road. Today we celebrate a cleaner future for our children and grandchildren while embracing the environmental benefits that our cleaner energy sources will bring.

Signed by Bob Chiarelli, Minister of Energy.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of Dr. Sherman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, a letter dated April 7, 2014, from Dr. Sherman, leader of the Liberal opposition, to Merwan Saher, Auditor General, requesting an investigation regarding the circumstances surrounding all contracts awarded by the government of Alberta to Navigator Ltd. since 2008.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We have no points of order today, but I'd like to draw to your attention the MLA for a Day program. I've received notes from some of you yesterday and today. As you know, the cut-off was Monday, but there were some hiccups with some of the machines, so I've spoken with the Sergeant-at-Arms and visitor services, and the deadline has been extended only to the end of today. We have just over 70 representatives. It takes a lot to co-ordinate this, so please if you have anyone interested, let me or the Sergeant-at-Arms know before the end of day today. Thank you very much for your support.

Introduction of Bills (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 8 Appropriation Act, 2014

Mr. Dallas: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Finance minister I request leave to introduce Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, 2014. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 7 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014.

This proposed legislation will amend our personal and corporate income tax acts. These are mostly technical and administrative amendments. They parallel federal tax changes and will maintain consistency between federal and Alberta legislation.

The amendments will also implement policy approved by this government in November 2013 to introduce a tax regime for qualifying environmental trusts, or QETs, in Alberta. Madam Speaker, QETs are a means to facilitate the accumulation of funds for future site reclamation. For example, QETs will help ensure that adequate funds are set aside to restore the environment after oil sands extraction. This new tax regime for QETs essentially shifts the tax burden on QET earnings from corporations to the QETs themselves. It is also important to note that the QET regime is revenue neutral.

Madam Speaker, this government has consulted with the energy industry, and they are supportive of this regime. Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Ontario have already adopted this special tax regime. As many of the pipeline and oil sands development corporations have their head offices here, Alberta is the logical place in which to locate these trusts. If these revenue-neutral tax changes are not made, it is likely that these trusts will be located in British Columbia or Saskatchewan even though it would make the most business sense for them to be located in Alberta.

I would also like to tell you about the proposed changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act which also form part of this legislation. Measures introduced by the federal government will increase the tax on dividends paid out of small-business income unless Alberta adjusts the dividend tax credit rate. The proposed changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act will prevent this unintended tax increase.

Other amendments are for housekeeping purposes or to make sure Alberta's legislation properly references applicable sections of the federal Income Tax Act.

In summary, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014, will implement the technical and administrative changes necessary to maintain the integrity of our tax system and consistency between the federal and Alberta tax regimes, encourage companies to establish their QETs in Alberta by making our tax regime more competitive with respect to these trusts, and ensure that Alberta's tax legislation is aligned with federal tax legislation.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll give a few brief points on Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014, which involves, of course, qualifying environmental trusts, or QETs. These are, of course, trust funds established by resource developers for the sole purpose of reclamation.

The current tax regime in Alberta places corporations in a tax disadvantaged position by not allowing income generated in the trust to pay for corporate income tax. Resource developers must therefore pay income tax on the returns from the QETs with funds from their active businesses. Bill 7 creates a revenue-neutral tax regime that corrects this tax disadvantage and also, of course, includes several minor housekeeping amendments to accommodate technical and administrative changes that parallel the federal government changes in this area.

It is the Wildrose position that the change in Bill 7 for the QETs as well as the technical and administrative changes to income taxes bring us in line with the federal government tax regime, and that is a good thing. We also believe that it creates a revenue-neutral regime for the purpose of another tool used to ensure that there are proper financial resources available for resource development reclamation, which, of course, is a large part of responsible environmental stewardship. It places the financial cost of reclamation upon the project owner and operator versus government and taxpayers.

We do support this bill and look forward to its quick passage. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I always find these bills really interesting. You know, I'm certainly supportive of socking money away to help pay for reclamation of pipeline and oil sands sites because, goodness knows, the system we're using right now doesn't work very well. Companies go bankrupt and disappear, and the site they had: nobody's looking after it. They're gone. They then become orphaned sites. Okay. Well, then we had an orphaned well fund. That doesn't seem to be covering the costs of it either.

You know, my constituents and a number of other people in the province say: "How come the polluter doesn't pay? How come in Alberta the polluter doesn't pay? Why don't they have to pay to clean up these reclamation sites?" And the government says: "Yeah, yeah. Well, they kinda do, sort of, mostly, sometimes." Well, maybe not. It's just not the deal we all signed up for. You know, just imagine going back to your mother or your grandmother and saying: yeah, well, I think I'm going to make a mess, but I don't think I'm going to be responsible for cleaning it up. The reaction of my mother or my grandmothers – yikes. I would have been brought into line very quickly on that one, and I think most people here would have. Not so much in the province of Alberta.

Even the brownfield sites that exist in the urban centres, which are the ones that I have to deal with: years and years and years, decades to deal with those abandoned sites or sites that had gas stations on them. A blight on the whole block. It's just a big, sucking, inactive hole. Sorry; it can't be inactive and sucking at the same time, but you get my point. It's a problem for us, and I think the lack of vigour of the government in pursuing a polluter-pays strategy with pipelines, abandoned wells, well sites, gas well sites is a broken deal, as far as I'm concerned, and it's very frustrating.

Again, I had two budget debates yesterday, so I haven't quite had time to read my way through this whole bill here, but I've started marking it up as you all expect from me. Well, revenue neutral is what the government says, but as best as I can tell, this is a way for them to be putting some money away and not paying so much income tax now so that they can clean up any sites that they need to clean up later. Okay. But from where I'm reading this, doesn't that still mean that they're getting a break on the taxes that they're paying now because they're going to end up paying a lesser rate? You know, somebody's going to explain that to me, so I'm looking forward to the explanation because, frankly, I just haven't had time to read the bill yet.

Is that the deal, that they're going to get a special rate? You know, when an individual puts money into, say, an RRSP, well, you don't pay interest or you pay a much lower interest rate on that money that you can prove you put into a set-aside fund. Or the tax savings fund – no, that's not quite the right name.

Mr. Mason: Tax-free savings account.

Ms Blakeman: Tax-free savings account. Thank you very much.

With that one, again, you're supposed to be paying a lower rate when you take it out, I think. The fact that you saved money – so you're not paying it out of your paycheque when you put it in there; when you take it out, you pay a lower rate. So it's a deal, right? It's an incentive. It's an encouragement.

Bottom line, Madam Speaker, incentives and disincentives are the only tool the government really has to try and change behaviour. So what I'm seeing here is government trying another way of changing the behaviour of companies developing the oil sands and conventional oil and gas sites to put more money away. They've chosen to do it in this way, with an environmental trust. Trusts always come with kind of special deals attached to them.

Am I opposed to the idea of setting money aside for this? No, I'm not. Obviously, I'm not. I want them to do that. If there's a special deal that goes along with the tax rate, I'm not so keen on it, to be perfectly honest. I mean, honestly, I just have not seen many oil and gas companies clutching their tattered rags about them, shivering on the corner. I really haven't. Now, some of them are smaller companies and even family companies, and they're not making the kinds of profits that others are. I understand that. But I have not seen anyone having to sell their silk tie for food. So they're not that badly off. If this is the only way we're going to get it, then, yes, okay, I'll support that, but I feel like I'm being backed into this one.

The other part of this, the technical changes. Maybe this is part of it this year, but we used to have this race to the bottom that a previous, previous, previous Treasurer by the name of Stockwell Day – he wanted to always be able to claim that we had the lowest tax regime, and every time the feds changed their percentage, it had an effect on ours and we were no longer at rock bottom, so we would rush out a bill in which he could stand up and say: this is going to bring us to the bottom again.

Decades later, from him doing that, I look around and say: really, was that such a great idea? You know, he's the guy that brought us the flat tax, and I can say now – and I can certainly say it on behalf of my constituents – that it was not a good idea. I don't think the flat tax has benefited middle-income earners at all. I think it has imperilled them. It has certainly made them work harder for the same or a lesser amount of money. They are the first generation that is not doing better than their parents, and you've got to look around and say: "Well, what? Are they lazier?" No, I don't think so. "Are they getting paid less?" Well, that's an interesting point and a bit of a tangent, Madam Speaker, so I'll try and save that for the end. [interjection] Yeah, that particular tangent.

What we have in Alberta is this flat tax. Everybody pays the same. Yes. Except that it has a markedly different effect to pay a flat tax of 10 per cent on a salary of $40,000 or $50,000 than to pay a flat tax of 10 per cent – maybe it's 11 or 12 now; I don't know – when you have $500,000 or $600,000 worth of income every year. Not many people get that kind of money, but there are certainly some senior officials in Alberta that do get that kind of money. You know, we've heard about it. Certainly, in the private sector lots of people make that kind of money, so 10 per cent for them is pocket fluff. Pocket fluff. It does not have nearly the same effect on their standard of living. It has no effect on their standard of living or their pension plan or anything else, but it has a huge effect on someone that's making $40,000.

The flat tax was a really bad idea, it continues to be a really bad idea, and I would very much like to see the end of it. If this act is doing anything to sort of prop it up or make it look good or make it look good in comparison to anybody else, then I'm not in favour of it.

The other thing to keep in mind with the personal income tax structure that we have here is the fact that we're spending all of our nonrenewable resource revenue. When I explain this to people, I say, you know: every day the money that the government spends to provide programs and services is only being collected through taxes and fees and other ways they have of making money, 70 cents of every dollar that they're spending. "What? How can that be?" Well, that's because they charge a really low income tax, so they're only collecting 70 per cent. Well, where is the other 30 per cent coming from? That would be coming from the nonrenewable resource revenues, specifically conventional oil and gas and, increasingly, from the oil sands sector.

So we're subsidizing our everyday – today's, tomorrow's, yesterday's – provincial programs and services from that nonrenewable resource wealth. Also, if the price of a barrel of oil in the States or wherever changes, that's the money that really gets affected. What happens to the government? Well, they're already trying to spend as little as they possibly can on the number of programs because ideologically they're conservatives. They want a smaller government. They want to spend less money. Nobody should be surprised about this. This is what they stand for. So they want to spend the least amount of money possible on all of these programs.

Now, they're in real trouble if the 30 per cent that they're subsidizing themselves with or subsidizing the budget with is worth less, and that's what happens sometimes. Is this the answer to our problems? No. I don't think that's working out so well for Albertans, and I see that every day. I see the wage gap widening between the very, very wealthy and the working middle-income and low-income people in this province. How can that be? How can rich people be getting even richer, more and more and more money, while for people that are working every day to provide programs and services – teachers and nurses and plumbers and all kinds of small-business people and middle-sized business people – their money is worth less. It's buying them less stuff today than it bought them 10 years ago.

There's that issue of what tax rate we're actually charging, and there's the issue of subsidizing ourselves by our nonrenewable resource revenue because once we've used it once, it's gone. I think what we should be doing is taking that nonrenewable resource revenue and putting it into endowment funds – if you want to call it something else, fine; call it something else – and letting it build up interest, which we can then spend because that is renewable. That kind of money making money is renewable. But nonrenewable resource revenue: once you've sold that barrel of oil once, it's gone, and you can't get it out of the ground again. You got it out once; it's gone. And I think it's causing real problems for us.

In a lot of ways we're not as creative as we could be and the government is not as creative as it could be because we have too much money. I mean, really, if the government gets into trouble: dig a bit more out and chuck it at the problem. They don't really have to come up with something new and innovative. In the 17 years I've been in here, I haven't seen anything that is new and innovative. I see a lot of retreads and slight adjustments and tinkering but very, very little that is genuinely innovative and taking the lead on new things because we don't have to. We're not desperate. We can always subsidize it with money from those resources.

I think there are two things that need to be addressed. One is to take that nonrenewable resource revenue out of the budget lines and put it aside so that that amount of money builds up for us but also those that come after us.

The other part of that is that the oil is not going to last forever. There are pretty good reserves in there. I'm not arguing that. But, you know, they are finite. What's much more likely is that people will stop buying our coal and gas and liquid natural gas and bitumen. That's much more likely just given the way the world is moving, especially when this government is so obstinate on not getting out from under the black eye it's given itself and getting out there and really doing some brilliant, innovative, new techniques and supporting some of the wonderful research that is going on in this province to make the oil sands and conventional oil and gas less consuming of water, getting rid of the tailings ponds, all those things that we know we're supposed to be doing.

That's the reason why I think that money needs to be set aside and that I think we need to increase the income tax. People go: "Oh, my God. You can't be increasing the income tax. Tax-and-spend Liberals." Well, actually, when I go out and talk to people and say: "What do you want? Do you want to pay the same as . . ." [A timer sounded] Oh, you see, Madam Speaker, that's why I need batteries.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: On 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, the standing order.

Mr. Mason: Well, I just wanted to know if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre wished to continue her point that she was just making about tax-and-spend Liberals.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, Standing Order 29(2)(a) requires a question and answer, so a question?

Mr. Mason: Would she like to do that?

Ms Blakeman: Actually, Madam, it does allow for statements. It does say that in there.

I never understood that because in my life the debts have not been incurred by Liberal governments; they've been incurred by Conservative governments. Despite the fact that Conservatives are the ones that go around saying, "Aren't we wonderful money managers," our debts federally and provincially have been exclusively by Conservative governments. So don't talk to me about tax-and-spend Liberals.

Mr. Mason: Well, you brought it up.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I know, but it's the Conservatives that really cause those debts.

I ask people: do you want the services, or do you want to pay the lowest taxes in Canada? And they ultimately say: "Yeah, we want the services, but we want good services. We don't want people to be giving us, you know, something cheap and selling it as something better. We, honest to God, want those streets plowed. We don't want them bladed or whatever the difference is there." They want quality stuff. They're willing to pay the taxes, but they want quality services for it. To which I say: "Great. It's a deal." That's the way I think it should be, and that's what I would like to see.

Do I approve in principle of Bill 7? I don't know, one, because I haven't been able to read the whole thing, and two, because if it is repeating a number of the things that I've just gone through, then, no, I don't support it. I think we have to be very careful about this. You know, people say: oh, don't change the tax rules so that it's a disincentive for me to make more money. I've never seen that stop them from making money. I've never seen anyone that actually said that to me, that shut their business down to go and sit in the corner and fold their arms and go: "That's it. I'm not working anymore because you're going to tax me more. The more I make, the more I'm taxed." Well, I've never seen them do that. They seem to keep working. They seem to be keeping making money. So what's the problem?

I think we've been hoodwinked from a very, very long procession of conservative ideology on what government is supposed to provide and what kind of tax is needed to provide programs and services. [interjections] I'm sure they're just on their way out. There we go. We've been hoodwinked, and I don't think we should . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, just so you know, we do have one more question that needs to be asked.

Ms Blakeman: Sure.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to ask about: the hon. member started her speech with a complaint about the fact that we don't have a polluter-pay system. I wonder if she's aware that the bill that we're discussing does not establish a tax regime to encourage people to set up these trusts. We already have to set up these trusts. It's a mandatory thing to set up these trusts because we do have a polluter-pay system.

The bill that we're talking about provides a competitive tax regime to encourage companies to locate those trusts in Alberta, which we think makes sense, first of all, because that's where their head offices are. Second of all, that money can be invested in accordance with trust legislation in Alberta, and we think that's a good thing. The corporations are already required to set up those trusts because we do have a polluter-pay system in this province.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks for that. Well, I think you and I are going to have to agree to disagree on that definition of polluter-pay. You believe that your system is working, and I don't believe your system is working. But I appreciate the background on the fact that this is not to set up the trust; this is to entice the businesses to set up the trusts here in Alberta. I'll give you that. I'd rather have it here than somewhere else as long as Albertans and our lands are going to be the beneficiaries of this. If it's a trust that just gives them a better tax break and we come out of this with less, well, then, it's not so good. But if this is an enticement of an additional percentage point so they'll be here rather than in B.C., then I'm willing to go for it. I appreciate the briefer because I only got to page – it doesn't look like very far.

Thanks very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have 20 seconds on 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, on second reading, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and give a few comments with respect to Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014. Now, I'm quoting the minister on this, the Government House Leader, and it's consistent with what we just heard.

The proposed legislation also implements a tax regime for qualifying environmental trusts to help facilitate the accumulation of [these] funds for future reclamation of pipeline and oil sands sites.

I note that the minister also indicated:

These are revenue-neutral changes [intended to] encourage the creation of trusts here in Alberta, where the majority of pipeline and oil sands activities occur.

[These] changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act will prevent unintended tax increases resulting from federal changes to the dividend tax credit system.

Others are just housekeeping items.

Now, the biggest change in this is the implementation of a tax regime for environmental trusts that is supposed to encourage companies to set up trusts in Alberta that will help them facilitate the payment of future reclamation efforts once their projects are complete. A qualifying environmental trust is a special kind of trust under the Income Tax Act of Canada that is maintained solely for the purpose of accumulating funds to finance the future reclamation of a qualifying site such as an oil sands mine or a pipeline. A QET is the only vehicle that enables a corporation to claim a tax deduction in the year for the amount set aside for future reclamation.

Specifically, a QET refers to a trust resident in a province maintained at that time for the sole purpose of funding the reclamation of a site in the province that had been used primarily for or for any combination of the operation of a mine or the deposit of waste where the maintenance of the trust is or may become required under terms of a contract entered into with Canada or the province. It does not include a trust that relates to the reclamation of a well.

Madam Speaker, it's clear that Alberta's new tax regime for QETs parallels and reflects the federal tax regime and is similar to regimes already in place in both Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

We have some questions, I think. First of all – and I hope that these questions can be addressed when the minister responds or when we're in committee, anyway – how many of the firms currently operating in Alberta will meet the definition of a small single project? We'd like to know how the large companies, massive companies with multiple projects will use these trusts or do use these trusts, or would they only use them at the end of the project's life, still relying on lines of credit for the majority of the projects? We want to make sure – and this is the concern – that we are not making it easier to get off the hook when it comes to leaks or other damage. We hope that this will not just be another tax giveaway.

Now, most of the changes in the bill, Madam Speaker, appear to be bookkeeping based around maintaining consistency with the federal personal and corporate income tax changes aside from the implementation of these QETs. So we will be prepared at this stage, depending on what we hear in answers, to give a tentative and cautious approval. We are generally in support of qualifying environmental trusts because they ensure that the money for environmental remediation relating to mines and tailings ponds is clearly put aside up front rather than relying on credit to finance remediation in the future. QETs to this point in time have been largely ignored in favour of letters of credit. If these changes are indeed truly revenue neutral and actually encourage greater uptake of the QET model, then we are prepared to be supportive.

We are interested in knowing how many QETs are currently in place in the province, whether any more are being considered or anticipated, and whether or not the minister thinks these changes will be significant enough to increase the number. That, of course, is one of the stated objectives of the bill. In addition, we're hoping that the minister can fill us in on whether or not – well, I guess I've answered that question.

It has been noted in some studies that B.C. and the Northwest Territories have been the most active in demanding fully funded environmental trusts prior to mining. Hence, that's where most of the QETs to date have been established. So it's not just a matter of adjusting the tax relationship to match other jurisdictions; it's also a question of insisting that these trusts be established and fully fund any future environmental liability.

Some general support for QETs aside, Madam Speaker, we do have some concerns regarding the potential for tax avoidance through the timing of establishing and withdrawing from a QET. Because contributions to a QET are deductible and the funds are contributed to income on the way out, there is a concern that improperly timed QETs might be able to reduce the overall tax and royalty contribution. We'd like to know what safeguards have been put in place to make sure that this doesn't happen.

Madam Speaker, there are a number of other points not covered in the bill, some of which were touched on by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, that I would like to highlight. The question of corporate taxation rates in this province is an issue that we continue to be very concerned about. There are potentially billions of dollars of additional revenue that could be collected in corporate taxes based on the profits of the corporations, and Alberta could yet remain the most competitive tax jurisdiction in Canada. That's an objective that we have in the NDP, to not only increase the revenue side to fund the programs that Albertans want and ensure that taxation regimes are fair so that the people who benefit the most from our province and our society contribute the most, something that doesn't exist now, but also that we remain competitive in terms of our tax regime relative to other jurisdictions in the province. It's amazing how much flexibility the government could have, if it chose to, in adjusting tax rates, keeping our taxes competitive in all categories and still making sure that we are increasing the revenues, which we badly need to do in this province.

I'd also like to just mention Premier Lougheed's resource royalty targets. We need to ensure that we get full value for the resources, which we all own together. All Albertans own these resources. I think that his target of 30 per cent of the value of the oil and gas in the ground coming to the owners is still a very valid target. We have slipped in Alberta since those days and collect about 9 per cent of the value of the oil and gas in the ground for the owners. The rest goes to the companies that are extracting these resources. That's actually a lower rate than was collected by the previous Social Credit government in this province. I think it's a crime that the government is letting the oil companies take us to the cleaners, literally. In fact, I won't blame the oil companies. I'll blame the government because they're the ones that set the royalty framework. That's something that I think we want to talk about, also the flat tax, which I've talked about in this House as well. Many of the same points apply to that.

I just wanted to indicate that the people that we've talked to or heard from with respect to this are generally supportive. I'll just quote one, and that is Andrew Leach, who is a noted energy economist at the University of Alberta. He says, and I quote: putting my NDP hat on, it's hard to find a reason to object to QETs; they should be close to revenue neutral, potentially cheaper as debt-carrying costs are left out, and put the costs of reclamation front and centre.

On that basis and pending some response to some of the questions that I've raised, Madam Speaker, I want to indicate the cautious and tentative support of the New Democratic Party caucus with respect to this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, did you wish to speak under 29(2)(a) or on the bill in second reading?

Dr. Swann: On the bill. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody under 29(2)(a)?

Please proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014. It proposes amendments to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to accommodate technical and administrative changes that parallel federal government changes and implements a tax regime for qualifying environmental trusts, QETs, to help facilitate the accumulation of funds for future reclamation of pipeline and oil sands sites. I presume, then, that it does not apply to other industrial operations like mining operations. I'm thinking of coal. If it does, that isn't clear to me.

Obviously, we've had very little time to review this, but I have a number of questions before I can give it even a qualifying support. Who gets to qualify these environmental trusts? By what criteria do we assess certain activities as being in and others as being out? Whose interests are being served by including some and not others? What do we do with those corporations that are multinational and have the ability to move money between this country and other countries? What is the nature, what is the size of the qualifying amount that will ultimately result in tax deductions for that corporation? Is it verified, or are companies just able to put in whatever they choose to put in there in order to gain short-term tax advantage?

I'm reminded – I suppose it would be about five years ago – of when former environment minister Guy Boutilier was challenged on the need for a downstream environmental cleanup fund for oil and gas and other industries and said that he would very strongly support that. The next day the oil industry visited him, and he publicly stated that he was no longer interested in downstream reclamation funds, orphan-type funds, for the downstream oil and gas industry. We still don't have any interest in a fund that would ensure that the downstream oil and gas sector is paying its full share and putting aside funds when they have to abandon some of the refinery sites, some of the various pits, those environmental scars on the environment that constitute the downstream oil and gas activity.

I still have a lot of skepticism about this government's commitment to the environment and its willingness to take the costs now and not put them forward onto future generations when some of these corporations go out of business. Obviously, this bill promotes itself as a vehicle for cleaning up some of these sites, but again it's qualifying environmental trusts, and it's not clear to me how they qualify. Again, it's a serious question about how much companies are putting aside and what their benefits are by inflating that cost and if, in fact, those costs will be even close to the cleanup costs.

I wonder if, for example, the multibillion dollars in cleanup costs associated with the oil sands are going to be in any way reflected in some of these trusts when we've already seen that this government only requires a fraction of 1 per cent as a down payment on some of those cleanup costs in the oil sands on an annual basis from some of these large corporations, which means, ultimately, that if these assets get stranded, we are not going to be seeing anything from these corporations, who have put down pennies on the dollar in relation to the cleanup costs. It's going to fall to the public purse and to our children's children perhaps or to our children to make sure that these cleanup costs are adequately addressed.

I have a lot of questions about the whole financing around risk and environmental cleanup and the long-term commitment that we have not made to some of the, well, multibillion dollars of liabilities that we are passing on to future generations in this province, not the least of which I'm increasingly aware of in relation to fracking and groundwater issues, which still haven't been properly investigated. Still no reports on the website in relation to how many groundwater sources have been contaminated by fracking. Even though we have the technology for isotope testing and examining individual water wells that have gas in water, we still have no completion of a 2006 study for a baseline groundwater assessment, 12,000-odd groundwater tests carefully taken at $2,000 to $3,000 per test, all at some level tested and no analysis of this roughly $30 million – Madam Speaker, I’m having trouble speaking over the noise.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we’re all having trouble hearing. Can you keep the noise down, please? Thank you.

Dr. Swann: More than 12,000 groundwater tests taken at a cost of $2,000 to $3,000 each and still no analysis of whether any single groundwater sample was contaminated by industry. It’s a scandal, Madam Speaker. I have great difficulty in believing that anything this government puts forward in relation to environmental costs and environmental reclamation is going to actually serve the public interest as opposed to the corporate interest.

In respect to my earlier comments about the lack of bonding or deposits or savings these trusts appear to be, at least on the surface of it, an attempt to put aside funds, but I think we deserve a lot more information from this minister about exactly how these criteria are established and when we’re going to see the level of investment put aside for cleanup costs that is merited.

Those are my preliminary questions and comments, Madam Speaker. I look forward to hearing some answers. It’s very clear to me that this government has made no serious attempt at long-term security for the higher environmental risks and negligence that’s gone on in this province for 20 to 30 years, so I’m not optimistic that this is going to be a substantive benefit to Alberta and to the long-term interests of our children.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any questions or comments for the hon. member?

Seeing none, I would ask: are there any other members who want to speak to Bill 7 in second reading?

Are you ready to close, Minister?

Mr. Dallas: I can make some comments, Madam Speaker, yeah.

The Acting Speaker: Are you making comments under 29(2)(a) or closing comments?

Mr. Dallas: Well, I’ll make them closing comments.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, Minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just want to thank the hon. members for the debate at second reading of Bill 7. There were a number of good questions that were posed there, some a little bit technical in nature, examples being: how many firms will meet the definition of a small single project, and how many existing QETs are in place today? I think we need to do a little bit of research, so I ask for some latitude from the hon. members. We’ll quickly try and find those numbers, and we’ll present those, hopefully, at Committee of the Whole. If that’s not possible, I’ll make the commitment that we’ll have those numbers certainly before third reading.

There were a number of questions that were posed around the tax neutrality, that I could address right now, but I think I would ask for a little bit of latitude from the Assembly. I’ll come back and make one presentation that seems to sum up all of the questions that were asked.

I also want to respectfully submit that perhaps as much as 75 per cent of the debate was on policies that were inside the scope and realm of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and the like. I won’t be addressing those, nor the corporate and personal income tax rate schedules. We’ll keep the debate from the government side specific to the matters which are proposed in Bill 7.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would move that we close debate on Bill 7 at second reading and call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I’d like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 6

New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Madam Chair. It’s a pleasure to rise today and present to Committee of the Whole Bill 6, the proposed New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014. I’d like to thank all the members who participated in second reading debate for their supportive comments.

Bill 6 contains minor modifications to the existing act. It provides clarification and technical changes in the way some provisions are implemented. Section 2 contains changes to the definitions in the act. The term “common facilities” is defined to cover parts of the condominium buildings that are not common property as the term is conventionally defined under section 1 of the Condominium Property Act.

Common property has two definitions in the act. One is under section 1, and a different definition is under section 14.

Section 2 contains the renaming of the term “purchase period” to “protection period” in section 1(1)(y) of the act.

Section 3 introduces section 1.1 to the act, which sets out how the protection period is calculated for new homes. This section was introduced for drafting reasons as section 1(1)(y) would have been too long with all of these subsections. The provisions in new subsections 1.1(3), 1.1(4), and 1.1(5) clarify how the protection period is calculated for condominium conversions.

Sections 4 and 6 are both amendments consequential to the drafting of the protection period. Both provisions now refer to the protection period instead of separately setting up an identical 10-year term for each section. Sections 4 and 5 also contain provisions originally in the regulations.

Section 5 introduces the rental use designation into section 3(1) of the act. Builders and owners of multiple family dwelling buildings will be required to register caveats in respect of rental use designations on a building’s land title to get an exemption from home warranty insurance requirements. This exemption comes from the regulations but now requires a land titles registration.

New subsections 3.1(5), 3.1(6), 3.1(7), 3.1(8), and 3.1(9) in the act address how these caveats are registered on land titles, maintained on land titles, and discharged on land titles. The rental use designation must stay on the land title for 10 years. During the protection period for the uninsured multiple family dwelling building all discharges of rental-use-designation caveats require an application to the registrar under the New Home Buyer Protection Act, who will discharge the caveat from the land title at the end of an uninsured building's purchase period.

Sections 7 and 8 come from the regulations and contain the New Home Buyer Protection Act registrar's powers to clarify which buildings qualify as a new home and delegate responsibilities to staff.

Section 9 clarifies that administrative penalties may apply on a per-unit basis. It also requires that administrative penalties are paid or posted by an irrevocable letter of credit prior to filing an appeal. Irrevocable letters of credit are issued by banks, and they are similar to cheques that cannot be cancelled. The process is similar to security for costs in a court action. If an appeal is successful, the letter is returned. If the appeal is not successful, the letter is cashed. Consequential amendments in other sections confirm that the requirement to pay or post an administrative penalty cannot be stayed by the board on appeal.

Sections 10 to 15 are board related. These changes to the appeal process are intended to increase efficiencies. Some of these provisions are adopted from the regulations. Appeals are to be filed directly with the board. The chair of the board may delegate powers subject to regulations. The board may make rules of procedure subject to regulations, and the board has the ability to order costs and determine the sufficiency, validity, and timeliness of document service. These provisions originate in the regulations. All appeals are due within 30 days instead of one month.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment I'd like to submit to the chair.

The Deputy Chair: We will take a minute as we pass the amendment around. This will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, I think that you can proceed now if you'd like to.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be amended in section 8 by adding the following after the proposed section 8.1:

Limitation on Fees

8.2 Notwithstanding any other section in this Act, the Registrar shall not impose a fee for the registration of a new home built by an individual for personal use.

Madam Chair, this was discussed in second reading. There is discrimination in the form of how the fees are charged as a result of the regulations. What this amendment proposes to do is to correct that.

I want to explain. Under this New Home Buyer Protection Act and under the amendment act itself the new homes carry – and I'm just going to paraphrase here – a 10-year protection period. Anyone can get technical. There's a two-year for different portions, but it's a 10-year protection period. Anything beyond 10 years is moot. So whether a person is exempt or nonexempt, beyond 10 years means nothing.

A nonexempt person, a residential builder, when they want to register to this new IT system that has been created, calls in to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and they get a user name and a password. With this user name and password they go onto a website. They enter the password. The next column is a drop-down box of the warranty companies. They check the warranty company. They enter their project number, which is the next line down. The application date is automatic. That's when they log in to the system. Then there's a drop-down box on what type of property there is, and the builder then checks off the type of property. The builder then goes down to the next level, enters in the address, and if there's a unit number, they put in the address and unit number. Then they pay a fee of $95, and that's just to enter the data. They go out, and they buy the warranty. It's their business how much they pay for the warranty.

The individual who's applying for exempt status does pretty much the exact same thing. They call the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. They get their user name and password. They go onto a little bit of a different portal, a little bit different website, and they enter in all the data. Then they have to pay $750 because they're applying for an exemption.

Now, what we did to investigate this is that we had two individuals, one from Edmonton and one from Red Deer, propose to go in and get an exemption, and each one talked to the ministry that was involved, which is the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. There is no extra work to put this in the system. As a matter of fact, when a residential homeowner is applying for an exemption, all they do is fill out the proper data, and if they qualify for an exemption, they receive their exemption. It's no different than if the residential builder, who's not exempt, fills out their entry. So why does one get charged $750 and another get charged only $95? That is fundamentally wrong. That is biased, and that is discriminatory. Realistically, it's nothing but a tax grab.

Now, nothing changes for the homeowner. If you're a homeowner-builder and you get a mortgage, you're going to need mortgage insurance as the bank dictates. If you build your house in Edmonton or Calgary or in Rimbey, you still have to have the building inspectors come out for your foundation, for your framing, for your electrical, for your plumbing. That's four inspections minimum, and in some cases there's a full-envelope inspection, depending on the jurisdiction you're in. So it doesn't change the inspection or the fees that you pay a local municipality. Nothing changes. Why should somebody be forced to buy a home warranty? If they're planning on living in their house and are building their own house, they are the person responsible, and they plan on living in it forever or at least 50 years or more. That is why they get the exemption. After 10 years, again, remember, everything is moot.

What we're looking for here with this motion is just to be fair. The individual homeowner-builder is applying for an exemption so they don't have to have home warranty. Why should they have to pay a fee? That just doesn't make sense. All they're doing is paying for – what? Seven hundred and eighty dollars gets them what? That hasn't been answered.

I had these people ask specifically at the Ministry of Municipal Affairs' offices: does somebody come out to inspect? One of the government workers said: "What would they inspect? You're only filling out a form on the Internet." They're not out there to inspect the building. That's up to the building inspectors. That's an entirely different jurisdiction.

I want to make sure that we understand what's happening here. There is no extra work involved. Either they fill out the correct data that qualifies for an exemption or they do not, and if they don't get the exemption, then they still have to go get the warranty insurance, and that's only good for 10 years. Clearly, those people who do qualify for an exemption are those acreage builders that are building on their homesteads, willing to continue to farm where they were born and raised, where probably their parents and grandparents homesteaded. That's all they're looking to do. They're not looking to enter the housing market, to build a house to sell a house. That's not their goal.

So the law itself is fundamentally good in that sense. It allows them an exemption. What is prejudicial is the fee that is being imposed upon them. That's wrong. All they're doing is entering the data on a website, and it's one page of data.

Now, there could be somebody coming out, as one of the bureaucrats stated, if you commit fraud. Well, that's a totally different ball of wax altogether. That's got nothing to do with the system. If somebody commits fraud, that could even be criminal. That's taken under the Criminal Code. That's a whole different ball game. If somebody does not fall into compliance and somehow violates the rules that are governing this, they are subject to fines. That, again, is a whole different ball of wax, and that's equal to both sides. Whether it's a contractor that's exempt or one that's not exempt, they still would fall under the same thing.

It isn't like there's any more work for either one. What this is is a brand new bureaucratic registration system. It's an online system. But if you're applying for exempt status, you get charged $750. It gets you nothing more than the other one.

Clearly, we have a real problem here. I'm hoping the minister will keep an open mind and look at this. An exempt status under this motion would make that exemption complete: they're exempt from the fee.

Here's why they should be exempt from the fee. If they're planning on owning that home for more than 10 years, now it's all moot. If they own the home for more than 10 years, what was once on the registration system means nothing now anyway. So why should they pay to get on the registration system?

Again, it is something that we want to correct. There are a lot of homeowners out there that are going to be owner-builders that qualify for the exemption that plan on living in their new home forever or for however long. There is a risk for them, but that's the risk that they accept. If they try to sell the house prior to 10 years, then they've got to go get the warranty. That's a risk that they take. What the site probably should do to help homeowner-builders is make sure that they have the information to know that. It's not that clear. It's clear in the law, but you have to read the legislation. It's absolutely clear that if you're exempt and you try to sell that house before the 10-year period is over, you cannot sell that house until you go get the liability insurance. That's already covered.

Again, as we walk through the system both with the nonexempt and the with exempt, there is no extra work. All it is is an individual getting a password. All it is is an individual filling out the forms on the Internet, and either they qualify or they don't qualify. It's not a big deal. Why the difference in the fees? Why the fee in the first place if you're exempt? That doesn't make sense.

So I would like to hear from the minister and see what he has to say about this. I know that when I asked you in a note, you sent a note back to me. It was stated in the estimates by the deputy minister that there would be a site visit. That's not logical. It makes no sense. Why would you do a site visit to see what somebody entered on the computer given the fact that there's no building on the site to begin with? You apply for this before you buy your first stick of lumber. Don't tell me that there's a site visit. When you call Municipal Affairs and ask them, they tell you bluntly that there's no site visit. Clearly, somebody's got it wrong. There needs to be some answers here to clear this up.

I can tell you this. There are a number of rural home builders that are going to be owner-builders that are exempt, and I can't imagine that you would go out to every one for a site visit. That doesn't make sense. What are you visiting the site for? Building inspectors will go out to the site, but those are municipalities. You're going out to the site to see if somebody entered the form correctly? That doesn't make sense to me.

Clearly, the information being passed by the government workers when you call in, what they're telling people – and we got that information – is that there is no site visit. If the minister is going to stand behind the site visit, what does the site visit do? We need to understand that. That $750 fee doesn't make sense. It doesn't make sense that we would have a site visit. All the parameters for building inspections, for licensing, for getting your zoning, for getting your occupancy permit: that's all taken care of by another jurisdiction. It has nothing to do with this registration system. So I'm not sure why we would have a site visit.

I see the minister shaking his head that there's a site visit for data entry, so I've got to hear and, hopefully, get an answer as to why we're having a site visit. How many employees are we hiring to go out? I can tell you that in my constituency alone almost every farmer who's cutting off 20 acres for a son or a daughter to take over the farm is going to be an owner-builder that will be exempt. They will build their own homes, and they will live on the homestead with the intention of always farming there for their careers, for their lives. They definitely qualify for the exempt status. What are they getting? What's the value of the visit? It doesn't make sense to me.

Minister, I hope you take this into consideration and you can provide me with some answers on why they should pay $750 for an exempt status.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A1? Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, are you speaking to the amendment?

Dr. Swann: No. I'm speaking to the bill.

The Deputy Chair: We're on the amendment. Thank you.

To the amendment, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's wonderful to stand today in support of my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on this amendment. I was hoping that we would actually see the associate minister stand up and answer some of the questions that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had on this particular amendment and on the legislation and on the current . . . [interjection] Oh, he's now the minister? Sorry. The hon. acting minister. I had to get the right terminology there.

Anyway, I was hoping that he would stand up and answer some of these questions because the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre did make some valid arguments and some valid points on what's going on with this particular registration process.

I find it kind of interesting that if a builder was to go through this process to purchase the warranty, the registration is $95. The cost to the builder is $95. But if you're applying to be exempt from it, the cost is now – how much? – $750. That's quite a difference. And you're not getting anything more. You're just filling out paperwork. It doesn't make any sense to me that the response back would be that there would have to be a site inspection.

I can tell you that I come from the insurance industry. I didn't inspect something until there was something there to inspect. Why would I go out and inspect a hog barn if there wasn't a hog barn on that piece of property? Or if I was going to inspect a wood stove in a home to make sure the clearances were correct, you know, the wood stove actually had to be in the home for me to pull the measurement tape out and measure the different clearances to make sure that it conformed to the CSA stamp on the back of the wood stove.

I kind of find it interesting that there is this extra fee or this large fee that is different from what somebody applying to be registered with the warranty would be charged. It really doesn't make sense. It sounds like and it seems like we're just nickelling and diming Albertans. We're billing Albertans. Well, I guess that's something that is somewhat familiar to this government: billing Albertans. They continually bill Albertans for the mistakes that they're making.

It's kind of interesting that it's not even two years since this piece of legislation was passed and we're amending it already. Now, I do understand that legislation does require amendment from time to time to bring it up to date with what's going on in society, but we just passed this two years ago. I remember when we passed this. We did bring up some ideas and some issues that we saw with the legislation back then. Unfortunately, none of those issues were acted upon, so here we are, back two years later.

We saw this with the whistle-blower act as well when we're talking about legislation that we're coming back to already. Unfortunately, with the whistle-blower legislation we haven't seen the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation table an amendment to it, but we did clearly hear from Justice Vertes in his report that that piece of legislation did not cover all health workers and that we did need to revisit that brand new piece of legislation. Two years old. In fact, it was Bill 4 in that 2012 sitting, and this one was Bill 5.

It's just something that I've noticed since I've been in the Legislature here, that the legislation coming through sometimes isn't thought out as well as it should have been, and there isn't enough time spent on it. You know, we spend too much time going late into the evening and ramming legislation through that the government wants rammed through. It's unfortunate that we don't talk it out and meet with stakeholders and use our legislative committees in the way that you would think this Chamber would.

Again, we have an issue here with this particular amendment. We can fix it really easily. We could stop nickelling and diming Albertans.

But I digress. I will leave that to the minister. I would hope that he'd stand up and respond to the comments that were made by my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and talk about why there is this extra fee, the $750 fee to fill out some paperwork, just documentation. Again I would ask that the acting minister please stand and respond to that.

Thank you very much for your time, Chair. I look forward to his comments.

4:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on amendment A1.

Mr. Strankman: Actually, Madam Chair, it's Drumheller-Stettler. You had it half right at the outset.

The Deputy Chair: Oh, sorry. This is on amendment A1?

Mr. Strankman: To the amendment, yes, ma'am.

The Deputy Chair: Drumheller-Stettler, please.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you for that. I, too, would like to stand in support of this amendment because I feel it negatively affects and detracts from the Albertan initiative of self-starting. I see the member opposite from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, who knows well the riding that I'm from, that it includes the special areas, and I've sent a note to the Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs regarding the special areas. Out there we tend to start on our own. We don't have a lot of multiple-home builders. We sometimes in some cases build them with a single initiative.

It is with explanation from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – he explains to me, and I understand it, that this $750 charge is discriminatory for those people who have self-initiative. I would implore the minister to look at our amendment here with great sincerity and possibly consider action regarding an amendment to the legislation. It's not necessarily a large amount of money, but it holds to the principle that I believe that this province embodies. Those of us in rural ridings take great umbrage to discrimination, financial discrimination particularly, of a bureaucrat in a far-off location only available by phone to require additional fees.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll relinquish my position and implore that the minister review our amendment with all sincerity. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? The hon. Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that if you look in Bill 6, you won't see any reference to any number of dollars for any of the charges or fees or anything that is being done. Bill 6 is amending the original bill to change and clarify some of the things that we did find in discussions with the home builders, with the insurance world. Bill 6 is an amending bill.

But I will speak to this because this is actually an attempt to amend the original legislation, that we passed last year. Those figures are held in regulation, Madam Chair, and they are fair, or at least we assume going forward that they're fair. We've set these fees up in discussions with the home builders. We've set them up in discussions with others in the business. It's easy to say that somebody is going to build it and stay forever, but we know there is no guarantee of forever. We know that when someone builds a home, whether it's in town or on a farm or anywhere else, things can change and happen in people's lives that allow that home to have to be sold. Saying "I intend" or "I plan" is really good, but this is about buyer protection. This is about ensuring that every person that makes the largest investment in their life has some ability to be protected, that that home is built to a certain standard, and that it can meet that challenge.

Madam Chair, if we're dealing with a builder, a builder that's registered and registered through the home builders and comes to us and registers, we know who we're dealing with. We know what they're doing. They simply fill out a piece of paperwork, and they can move forward. This amendment actually states that they "shall not impose a fee for the registration of a new home built by an individual for personal use." So every person in the province would not have to pay a fee for a home built for personal use. We've seen it in other jurisdictions, where when something like this is put in, every home built becomes a home built for personal use. Builders build it for them, but it's registered for personal use, and you end up with no protection for anyone.

Madam Chair, we want fair fees. Want to ensure that we can deliver the services we have to. We are planning to include a site visit. When people register and pay the $750, what this does do is give them that future flexibility to be able to get insurance on that home so that if they do have to sell it and they find themselves in difficult circumstances, they will be registered in the system, and the insurance company will know that a site visit has been done to ensure that a property has been built there, that the home that exists on that property has been registered. Then anyone coming forward to purchase it or before the seller has to sell it or chooses to, they can go forward, work with the insurance companies, and try to get that insurance so that people can buy it.

Madam Chair, I spend a lot of time talking to insurance companies. They do not like to insure a home five years after it was built when they didn't get to inspect it or see it built or have anything done, so it will make it very difficult for people after the fact to get it. This process is meant to help streamline that process, help to ensure that those folks can get insurance down the road because it's been a registered home, a registered build in the system.

Madam Chair, I would totally not support this. I think that for any home that is for personal use, not having a fee imposed would mean that every other home has to pick up that cost for that one. We are talking about an inspection being likely for all of these properties once they're built to ensure that they're there and that they meet the requirements of the act.

Madam Chair, I would ask my colleagues in the House to not support this amendment. We will go forward, but we'll continue to look at those fees. I know the issue around homes on farms has been brought up. We have looked at it. We'll continue to try to work with all parties to create a fair system, but at this time this is an inappropriate use, and I would ask that everyone vote against it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: An exempt home is not about buyer protection. That's what's gone wrong here. If you're exempt, you're going to go beyond the 10-year period. Everything is moot to begin with. Everything is equal. There is no warranty insurance. To go out there doesn't make sense to me, and it doesn't make sense that you would inspect something today and think an insurance company is going to use that inspection, a private company of one of the bureaucrats going out there and giving some sort of validity to what they did inspect. That doesn't make sense.

Without even talking about the bureaucrat that you're saying that we're paying for to go out there, you get a warranty inspection if you buy the warranty. That's from the insurance company. You get a foundation inspection. All the municipalities do that today. They come out and they inspect the foundation, and they check that off. They come out, they check the plumbing, and they check that off. They come out and they check the electricity, and that is inspected. Most jurisdictions – and I believe most cities do this – do a full envelope inspection before you close a house in. You have all those inspections that take place other than just some bureaucrat coming out. So what does the bureaucrat do? I can understand wanting a record of the inspection. Force the homeowner to submit their inspection records: that makes sense. Why are you sending a bureaucrat out, and how are they trained to inspect a house?

An Hon. Member: You train them.

Mr. Anglin: Are you hiring a number of home inspectors? You're going to need hundreds. That doesn't make sense.

An Hon. Member: Just one.

Mr. Anglin: Member, I'm going to love to debate you. Don't worry. Come on down to my area.

But I will tell you this: $750 doesn't get you anything compared to the $95. It's not about the buyer protection for warranty. That's the difference. This is about somebody who's not intending to sell their house. They have a right. It's a risk. If they decide to sell it within five years, lo and behold, if you try to get warranty insurance, you're going to pay through the nose. Everyone knows that. But people who don't want to do that are the builder because they're the person that's warranting it, and they are planning on living in it for more than 10 years. That's the risk they take if they apply for exempt status. If for some reason they have to sell the house, the minister has an exemption appeal board that they can go to, but the fact is that you want to make sure this is done right.

I still can't see where you're telling me that someone is going to go out and visit. When we called in Edmonton and Red Deer – and we did this yesterday – when we inquired to see the purpose of the fee, what we were told by one of the people that was handling the phone calls for the ministry, the agent on the helpline, is that she didn't know the exact reason for the fee besides that it was administrative. Then up here in Edmonton what they said was that there wouldn't be a site inspection associated with the fee although there could be an inspection if you break the law or if you commit fraud, but that's a whole different ball game. A builder that sells houses could commit fraud. I would suggest to you that they probably commit more infractions than the homeowner that qualifies for an exemption, the homeowner who wants to live in this. What we are looking for is a fair way of dealing with exemptions.

To say that a bureaucrat is going to go out there: I didn't see that in the budget. Where are they going to get all the bureaucrats from? It's not in your budget. How many do you plan on hiring? It's just not there. So I don't understand when you're saying that the registration system is going to send somebody out to inspect, to double-check the building inspectors, the minimum four, if not five, that are going to go out to the house anyway and sign off on it. All you need to do on the administrative level for anyone who is exempt is to say: before we give you the exemption status, submit to us all the forms from the various inspectors that came out so we have them as part of the record. But for $750 that doesn't make sense.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the bill. Speaking on Bill 6, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Madam Chair, I have another amendment to submit to you.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. I'll take one moment here to have the amendments passed out. Hon. members, this amendment will be known as amendment A2.

Hon. member, would you like to proceed?

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be amended in section 8 by adding the following after the proposed section 8.1:

Limitation on Fees

8.2 The Registrar shall not impose a fee for the registration of a new home built by an individual for personal use that is greater than the fee imposed for the registration of a new home built by a residential builder.

Now, the hon. minister said earlier that he wanted something fair and equitable. That's what this is going to impose in legislation, something fair and equitable. In other words, the fees will be equal. All we're doing here, Minister, is entering data on a data system. I understand you say that there are going to be inspections, but as I just read to you, the people that we're talking to from the ministry say that there's not going to be an inspection. Clearly, somebody has got some misinformation here.

I will tell you something else. I don't understand how you're going to get that number of inspectors out there if you don't have it in your budget. It's not there. What type of inspectors are you planning on hiring? These homes, all of them, whether they're exempt or nonexempt, are going to have a foundation inspection and paperwork to support it. Each one will have a plumbing and electrical inspection and the paperwork to support it, and each one will probably have a full envelope, with some jurisdictions that don't do a full envelope inspection. So that's four inspections right there. For those that are nonexempt, they will have the warranty inspection, but that is only good for 10 years. Again, after 10 years it's all moot. So we're dealing with the individual homeowners who qualify, not the ones who are looking to sell their homes.

In my area mostly they're farmers looking to build another house on the family farm that they plan on taking over. They have no intention of selling it, and they have no intention of moving. Many of them do qualify for an exemption. They're quite talented; they build their own homes. They are their own general contractor. They build it not to cut corners but just the opposite. I will say this. Statistically – and you should know this – we don't have problems with single-family homes as compared to things like condominiums and those types of builders. That's what your law takes care of quite well. It covers that with that 10-year warranty. But this is about the exemption and treating them fairly, and that's all we're asking. If you tell me that it costs us more to deal with the exemption, I just don't see it. If you tell me that we have to send an inspector out there, it doesn't make sense. You'd make better use of your time if you just made a requirement that all the inspections that did take place got submitted with the paperwork to qualify for the exemption. It could save a lot of money, and you don't need to send somebody out there.

It's really curious that you would send somebody to inspect but that nobody knows what they're going to inspect. Are they foundation inspectors? What type of building inspectors are they that the government is going to hire? Are they for electricity? Are they for plumbing? If they don't get out there while the home is under construction, they can't do the inspection.

Now, again, we all know that there is a risk to the person that qualifies for an exemption should they try to sell their house, but the law is quite specific. There's no risk to the buyer. They can't sell that house within 10 years unless they get a warranty. That's absolutely clear in the original act. So there's no threat to the buyer, and the fee doesn't add anything. The law covers that.

What we're asking, Minister, is exactly what you just said. You want something that's fair. This is fair, that everyone pays the same fee to enter the data. What you do with the data is your business. The law is clear on how you deal with privacy and everything else. This is only about the application to either get exempt status or not. I'd like to hear what the minister has to say about treating everyone equally and not being prejudicial to those that qualify for the exemption. Remember that once they try to sell that house, they're no longer exempt. They have to get the home warranty insurance.

To give an example of fair, if somebody buys a home or builds a home, they qualify for an exemption. Now they want to give up their exemption and get a warranty, and they pay for that. They had paid $750 to register initially for the exemption, and now they have a homeowner warranty compared to the one who paid $95 and has a homeowner warranty. That's not fair. I think we can do something and be universal with this and have a fair fee that is not outrageous in the form of $750.

With that, Madam Chair, I'd like to hear what the minister has to say to that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Well, Madam Chair, I find this a really unusual debate. I find it unusual that the member stood and so passionately tried to sell the last amendment to me and now stands up and tells me that it wasn't fair and that this one is because it changes those fees. I'm not here to try and negotiate back and forth on what fee we're going to charge to whom. This isn't a negotiation. We're not going to raise it $10 or $15 a time on each amendment until we find something that works. We're going to put a program in place that works. The best thing is: "Have everybody buy the insurance. Then it's done. Then if they have to sell that home, it's finished. Let them get the insurance they need."

But you know what? We decided we weren't going to go that way. We're going to try to create a little bit of room. Most of these exempt homes don't exist in your municipality, and they don't exist in rural Alberta. They exist in Calgary and Edmonton and Lethbridge and Red Deer. Yes, there are a few in rural Alberta, but they exist in all of our communities. We want to make sure that the buyers that walk in to purchase those homes are protected, and we don't want people assuming that in a year from now – they built it; now they want to sell it, anyway – when they decide to, they'll be able to just go and get the insurance.

What we're trying to do is get people to buy the insurance when they're building it. If they have a very legitimate reason to ask for an exemption, they can do that. There is a fee for that to help manage that exemption through the process. We don't even yet know how much work that exemption is going to cost, especially if some of these people start coming back to us down the road and people start coming in and saying: "Is this house exempt? Can we get insurance on it?" This is a brand new system. We're working our way through it.

What we've done is worked very closely with the home builders and other agencies to say: "What do you think? You've been building houses here for years. You've been insuring houses here for many years, 30, 40 years. People have been able to buy these protections. What do you think would be a reasonable fee? What's it going to take to get us there?" We believe we've gotten close. If we see down the road that there are places where we can do this better, we're going to look at that, and we're going to try to do it. We want to be fair to all Albertans. I don't believe this is fair. I believe we have a system that will be fair. I believe it will treat everyone not equally but equitably. At the end of the day, what we want is for buyers to be protected when they make that big investment.

Let me tell you that you can do a lot of inspections on things, but you will not always get a proper inspection on structural. You will not always get a proper inspection because sometimes it's impossible. You don't always know what the soil conditions are. To say that there are none of these things happening on individual homes, I can tell you that I had people in my office in the last week that are challenged with a huge amount of money that they're looking at because of some structural issues that happened because of soil conditions that the inspector couldn't have seen. But now it's there. We're dealing with it. It's a significant issue. This is a young couple with three kids that have invested everything they've got to try to have a family home. They need a family home. They need the protection. And now we're in a position where you're saying: let's try to figure something else out. I'm saying: work with us. We're going to make this thing work. We've been at it since February.

The one thing that I do appreciate is your mentioning that some of the folks that are on the phones and the front line may not have all of the information. We're training them. I will make sure, when I go back, that folks have the best information so that we can get it to everyone that phones in. I want people to be educated. What I would love to see is that every person that builds a home in the province of Alberta puts insurance on it for the fee that it costs. Then no matter who buys it or if they have to sell it, whether it's a death or a divorce in the family or just financial issues, if that house has to come up for sale – when that young family with three kids walks through the door, they know they can count on the insurance to help them be safe, to have that biggest investment of their life protected. I am going to stand by that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: I think we have a misunderstanding on your law. In the example you gave, that individual that came to your office is already protected under this law. They weren't protected before February 1. They are protected now. You did a good job with the original law in that sense. That's not what we're debating here.

By the way, I do have nothing but individual home builds. I have very few home developments. I'm sorry. Sundre has got one that was built 10 or 12 years ago. The last time Rimbey had a home development build was probably five years ago. You compare that to Edmonton or Calgary; they're popping up all over the place. Those are residential builders. We're not even talking about them.

What we are talking about are the ones that qualify for the exemption, and you're charging them as if they're going to sell their home. They're not. They qualify for the exemption. That's the whole purpose of it. You're asking them to insure their home, and you said that you want everyone to insure their home. Why didn't you just put it into law in the first place? You didn't. You created an exemption, that I think is correct. We do have owner-builders who want to build their own home. They're the ones that are responsible. There's no other builder involved. They're the owner-builder. They're going to live in the home, and their intention is to live there forever.

I have a lot of them. That's why this has come up through my riding. Most of my rural farmers are giving that 20-acre, that 30-acre cut-off to a son or a daughter to build a house to take over the farm. They're the ones that qualify for the exemption.

The other thing is your example of missing an inspection. What makes you think some government inspector is going to catch it? He's not. If the inspector misses it, the inspector misses it. The fact is that for an owner-builder who's not selling their home, that is their responsibility. By the way, defects show up later, down the road. If that defect shows up beyond 10 years, it doesn't matter whether they're exempt or not. That warranty insurance is gone. It's gone. We know that.

If your intent was that all homes carry this insurance, you didn't put that in legislation, and I think justly so. There are reasons for an exemption. The fact is that what you're trying to do and what it appears that this registration is trying to do is say: "If you don't buy the warranty, you've got to pay an exorbitant fee. You might as well just buy the warranty." Well, actually, that's what we were told. You can shake your head, but I tell you that when you look at the figures, they're not too far apart, so there's a little justification in that.

Now, I will tell you this. I would advise anyone to put the warranty on it because you don't know what's going to happen between now and 10 years. That's what I would advise, but people have a right to make their own choice. The thing is that they are exempt.

What we're asking for is that we can look at this. That fee is nothing but a data entry fee. If you're telling me that you're sending bureaucrats out there to inspect, I don't know what they're going to find if the house is complete. I don't know what they're going to find if the walls are already up and everything is enclosed. They can't look at the plumbing or the electrical. They can't check the framing if the foundation is in and the house is on it.

If you're going to have building inspectors, the way our current system is set up is correct. You pour the foundation, and you don't do anything till the foundation inspector comes out. You frame the building, and before you move on, you get the framing inspector out. You put in your electrical, and then the electrical inspector comes out before you close it all in. That's the process every community uses today. Nothing changes.

What this fee is for is the administrative fee to enter data on a computer. That's all it is. There is a tremendous disparity between the exempt and the nonexempt, and it's wrong. Those people whom you determine – and I'm not telling you who to determine or not. That's your decision; that's the ministry's decision. But when they're exempt, they should be exempt, and I'm asking for a fair fee.

Now, you say that we're not in negotiation. Well, actually, I think we are negotiating. I would rather have no fee whatsoever because they're exempt. They're going to live in there beyond 10 years. It's all moot. But the fact is that you said that you wanted equal. You said that in your debate. So now I've presented you a motion that would treat everybody fairly, and it doesn't set an amount. You still can set your amount in regulation to whatever you decide, but it's universal, and it's fair. That's what this amendment does. We're not haggling over what the amount is; that's for your department to decide. What we're talking about is having it fair universally. That's what we're saying.

All you've created is a bureaucratic system, an IT database, and that's what you have. You're not doing building inspections in any way, shape, or form to issue a permit for occupancy or a permit for approval. You're not doing building inspections for the insurance company; they do their own. Clearly, what we have here, Mr. Minister, is a chance to be equitable, as you said. It doesn't say equal; it doesn't say equitable. It says: just and fair, that the fee posed certainly won't discriminate. That's what we want. That's what we're asking for. We're asking for some type of equitable, and there's nothing wrong with that because an exempt person and a person that's nonexempt do the exact same thing. They enter it in on a computer, and that's all they do.

If you're telling me that you're sending inspectors out there, you're department doesn't have it right. I will tell you this. It doesn't threaten anyone buying a house. If people try to sell this property before the 10 years, they've got to get the insurance, the way the law is set up – no ifs, ands, or buts about it – or they can't sell the house. So you have that base covered.

Your example that you brought up earlier does not apply to this amendment. Those people are covered as of February 1. That's why the law was brought forward. All this is trying to do is create some sort of equitable fee that everyone pays to register their property, whether they're exempt or nonexempt. It doesn't set the amount; you get to set the amount.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Well, this is kind of proving the point about why you should read the legislation and not just the press release. I went and looked at the original legislation, and in fact it does exempt the owner-builder. It gives the definition of an owner-builder as “an individual who builds or intends to build a new home for personal use with a valid authorization issued by the Registrar and includes any builder prescribed as an owner-builder to which this Act applies.”

Then it starts out:

A person other than an owner-builder shall not build a new home unless the new home

- (a) is covered by a home warranty insurance contract that complies with [the subsections] and
- (b) is registered with the Registrar.

And then it goes on. You can't sell it unless you've got the home warranty on it or you've got a disclosure notice that's satisfactory to the registrar. So my memory of what this was about is actually not being held up by what's actually here.

I'll tell you, Mr. Minister, that what surprised me was when I heard the amounts. I think the first time I heard it, it was $75. But okay; I'll take it now that it's $95 for a developer, if I can call them that, who's building a number of homes and then selling them to the first person to officially own the home. But I understood from the first time around that the owner-builder would also be required to have the insurance. They would be required to build it. But as I look through this now – and I'll admit that I'm only eight pages in; I might have missed the section – it looks like an exemption was given to the owner-builder. Not a great idea.

Where I'll disagree with my hon. colleague: I think the home warranty is not necessarily about the first person that owns it. It's not necessarily about the owner-builder, the family with three kids that the minister was referring to. In the case of the owner-builder I think the protection is for the next people that buy it. And if nobody buys it, fine. Fine. If the first people to build it live in it for 45 years, fine, but they need to have the insurance for the next people that buy it.

Mr. Anglin: Ten years.

Ms Blakeman: It's only good for 10 years. I know that. But I'll tell you that with the number of houses that turn over in my constituency, it'll get used.

Let me just go to the crux of what my concern is here. I was really surprised to hear the amount that the government was now considering charging to the owner-builder versus the amount that was being charged to the developer. I remember at the time going: whoa. It's, like, 600 and something dollars.

An Hon. Member: Seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Ms Blakeman: Seven hundred and fifty dollars. Okay.

So it's $95 for a developer, and they're building a development with 10 places in it, so 950 bucks. For a single person who's, you know, probably trying to do things carefully if they're building their own home – you know, granted, some people, my neighbour, in fact, who owns a development company and is now building his own home: he could probably afford that amount of money. But I find that a lot of people that build their own home are being very careful with their money, and all of a sudden they're paying – okay. Who's done the old math? How many times more is that, those of you that memorized your multiplication tables?

An Hon. Member: What are the two numbers?

Ms Blakeman: Ninety-five and 750.

Mr. Wilson: Eight.

Ms Blakeman: Eight times more, according to the old math.

That's a lot more for an individual, and that's where I'm struggling with this. One, I thought that the owner-builder would be included in the legislation and would have to get something, not be exempt. It sounds like they're automatically exempt rather than automatically included. Two, the difference in the amount that is being charged to the individuals is a jaw-dropper.

Now, I think that at one point somebody over there – how's that for specificity? – said that this had to do with actuarial tables and that the likelihood is that the owner-builder stuff is just going to cost more because it's one building as compared to what a developer is doing with many buildings. I'm really struggling to accept that it's eight times more for an individual builder. I'll tell you that it sounds like too much, even just to my ear. If you haven't already decided on that, please re-examine it. I think you've created a barrier there that you don't need to have. If you have already decided, well, you know, there are amending acts, and we could certainly be doing something with that.

Two things that I was looking for were that the owner-builder would also be required to have the insurance and – I'm probably speaking against your amendment, aren't I?

Mr. Anglin: Doesn't matter. They're going to vote against it.

Ms Blakeman: It doesn't matter. Okay.

So everybody would have the insurance. That was the point. To me, it's not necessarily the first owner; it's the other people that are in six, eight years later.

Secondly, that amount that you have for the owner-builder I think is too high. It's like a mental block. You know, you charge $9.99 for something, and people are okay with it. You charge 10 bucks, and: “No. That's too expensive.” It's the way people react to that amount of money. My experience has been that people that are owner-builders are watching their pennies, and all of a sudden they're going to get dinged for $750. That's a lot of money, you know, when you're an owner-builder. Yes? Yes.

Mr. Campbell: Not in Alberta. That's for $400,000 or $500,000 houses.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I don't know what the average of homes across Alberta is. It's actually more than that in Edmonton-Centre. You'd be hard pressed to find a decent condo for that.

But it's that extra stuff that just nickels you to death, and it makes people crazy. What I don't want to see is people trying to get around it or, you know, defaulting or not paying or whatever the heck. I want this program to work. I want it to be easy to get at. I want people to sign up for it. I think there's a barrier that's been created here.

If I may just also comment on why you end up with cascading amendments. Since you have not had the delight of being on this side of the House, just let me explain it to you briefly. We try hard to get what we want, and we have to work with Parliamentary Counsel, who tells us: you know, you can ask for this, and if you don't get it, then you can step it down and ask for that. So, clearly, if you want something really badly, that's what you're going to do, which is why on bills that are really important to members of the opposition you're going to get cascading amendments. We're trying to get something out of it. We're trying to save it.

Sometimes I walk up the hill to do great things, and sometimes I walk up the hill to stop the government from doing quite so much bad. When you're dealing with a bill that you think is pretty bad and you're trying to make it less bad because you guys are going to implement it, how do I work with you to make it less bad? You're going to get cascading amendments from me because I'm going to keep trying to get that change in place. Of course, I'm having to deal down every time I do it. I wanted nothing. Then I'm going: "Well, okay. This amount. Well, okay. A little bit higher." That's why you get it, and it's not a bad thing. To defend my colleague, I know you're irritated by it. You clearly were, but that's why we do things over here, because you're kind of a stubborn wall to deal with, so I'm going to come at you more than once.

Thanks very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: We're still on that amendment, are we?

Ms Blakeman: The second amendment.

Mr. Mason: The second amendment. Okay.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, to answer the hon. member's question, everyone so far in this debate has brought up the subject of protecting the buyer. I understand that. What you're missing is that – and the hon. member from the fantastic constituency of Edmonton-Centre . . .

Mr. Wilson: Fabulous.

Mr. Anglin: Fabulous.

Again, if you read the bill, the original act, what it says is that "subject to subsection (5), a person shall not sell or offer to sell a new home while" it's either "being constructed or during the purchase period." If you look at the amendment that we're bringing, we're changing "purchase period" to "the duration" and I think "protection period." So the protection period is the 10-year envelope.

Nobody can sell a home within that 10 years that doesn't have the liability. That is in law now. So when you say that you're protecting the buyer, the buyer is protected, even if the person building the home is exempt. They cannot sell that home within 10 years without a liability. It is the law, so you're covered. What we're looking for is some sort of equitable fee here. I know they get it, but I've got to make a big statement from my constituents. I'm getting a lot of phone calls on this. That's what it is. [interjection] I know, but they love me for it.

The point is that if you're concerned about the buyer, the law is quite specific. The buyer is protected. Actually, if there are any holes in this law – we haven't covered those holes – they have to do with apartment buildings. Those are still complex in many ways, and that's where things can get dicey. But on the single-family home where people are exempt, you cannot sell that house. It's against the law to sell that house if it's not covered by a warranty insurance. The only one that gets the exemption is the homeowner-builder, who's going to live in it. If they try to sell it, they've got to have the warranty insurance. It's the law. So the buyers are protected.

What's unfair is that the homeowner-builder that qualifies for the exemption is being unfairly taxed, and they're getting no value for that extra fee. It's not there. All the inspections are done by other jurisdictions, and those are valid inspections. I have no idea what a government bureaucrat will see or do if they come out after the whole place is complete, particularly if it's two years down the road and there's absolutely no indication and there's no requirement for anyone to come out. It's not in legislation. So, clearly, we have some correcting to do, but the first step in correcting is making sure we have equitable fees.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the bill, Bill 6.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on Bill 6.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm going to just make a few comments, and then I have an amendment as well. I just wanted to make a comment about the necessity for this particular bill. The New Home Buyer Protection Act was passed in the previous session and officially went into effect on February 1, 2014. That is this year. It's a brand new piece of legislation, and we're already back trying to fix what was wrong with it.

Now, Madam Chair, during that debate the New Democrat opposition and, I believe, other opposition parties as well introduced a number of amendments to that bill to try and correct the obvious deficiencies that it had. These amendments were rejected by the government, and as a result they passed a bill that was woefully inadequate.

So now we are back again with this bill, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014. The ink on the original bill is not even dry yet, and the government is already back to the drawing board because they didn't do the job right the first time. If they'd actually work in a little bit more co-operative relationship with opposition parties when it comes to these kinds of pieces of legislation, I think we would be farther ahead, and I think the place we're in would be more productive. I think people would be better served.

We also have ideas, and we also listen to our constituents and try to relay their views in these debates. When the government routinely ignores the opposition and its amendments only to reintroduce similar amendments later on after bills are already put into force, I think it really undermines the government's claim to actually be listening. If they're not listening here, they're probably not listening out there either, Madam Chair.

I have an amendment here, which I will convey to you, and then I will await your instruction on when to introduce it.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we hand the amendment out to all the members. This amendment will be known as amendment A3.

Hon member, would you like to proceed on amendment A3, please?

Mr. Mason: I would like to do so, Madam Chair. Thank you very much. I am moving on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be amended as follows. In part A section 4 is amended by adding the following after clause (b):

- (b.1) in subsection (6) as follows:
 - (i) in clause (a) by striking out "one year" and substituting "2 years";
 - (ii) in clause (c) by striking out "5" and substituting "10".

In part B section 6 is amended in the proposed section 4(2) as follows:

- (a) in clause (a) by striking out "one year" and substituting "2 years";
- (b) in clause (c) by striking out "5" and substituting "10".

Now, I'll just take a few moments to address this. These are similar amendments to the ones that we proposed when the legislation was originally introduced. They increase the amount of required coverage on materials and labour as well as defects in the building envelope. They amend amounts both in the original bill, by inserting a paragraph, and the amendment bill. We also mentioned our concerns to ministerial staff during the briefing on this bill.

In consultation with experts and in looking at some of the examples of building failures both here and in other jurisdictions, especially B.C. with the leaky condo crisis they've experienced, we see a serious need for longer coverage periods.

There are two aspects of the coverage periods we're addressing here. The first is materials and labour. The rationale is that in new buildings the coverage period, which is short right now at only one year, may start long before an owner actually moves in, and that means that the actual period the owner has for discovering the issues in the new build can actually be very short. By extending that period to two years, we give more of a cushion for that move-in period of time to elapse and a new homeowner to still have time to find issues and seek a solution.

The second aspect, Madam Chair, is extending the building envelope. We think this is really a critical issue, and five years seems far too short for coverage. Failure in a building envelope means that the building winds up rotting. The whole side needs to be ripped apart, windows are covered up with shrink wrap, and the total cost for repairs winds up being in the tens if not hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Our concern originally was brought to the issue by Professor Tang Lee, an architecture professor focused on building envelopes at the University of Calgary for over 35 years. He has consulted on leaky condos and acted as an expert witness in a number of cases. The concern he had is that the building envelope issues often don't turn up until the siding has been breached. Then mould or rot sets in, a process that can take time and years, often much longer than the five years that the act currently covers. We've seen time and again the time it takes to come up here and in B.C.

In British Columbia the leaky condo crisis has cost billions of dollars in repairs, more than 20 years since the first issue came up and standards were improved. Condos built prior to the improved standards were still showing up with new problems. It might take even longer for problems with the envelope to surface here, because we have lower levels of rainfall and humidity, but we have seen it come up here past that five-year mark. At the Palisades condo owners were hit with a $6 million repair bill for a leaky envelope in a seven-year-old building. At Glenora Gates an eight-year-old building needed $5 million in repairs for leaks. Really, again, we're just trying to make sure here that Albertans get the protection that they need when they buy a home. With envelope issues, especially, that means we need to see longer coverage periods mandated, not just optional, where consumers may not be aware of the full extent of the risk they take.

Madam Chair, those are my arguments in favour of this legislation. It simply extends the coverage period to find defects. Particularly, with respect to the building envelope, the evidence is clear that five years is not enough and that many problems emerge after the five-year period is up. They are massively expensive repair jobs when you're talking about repairs to the long-term damage to the envelope that may have continued undetected for a number of years. I think that if the government is truly interested in protecting homebuyers with respect to the construction of condos and homes and so on, they would gladly support this amendment. I consider it to be something that would actually enhance the bill considerably and, I think, protect buyers, which is the avowed intention of the bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: You're welcome, hon. member. Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. I'll just make a real quick mention. As you know, this is increasing the minimum. This bill sets the minimum standards for protection, Madam Chair. We work very closely with the insurance industry. As you increase the minimums, you start to increase the cost of every home, and in low-cost housing and others, it could create a very untenable situation.

All of these coverages are available by paying the extra. Someone can go in and ask to have the higher coverage, and they can purchase them. But to force everyone to pay that much more to have much higher coverage when we're not even sure of the value that they would be, Madam Chair, I believe would be wrong. We're trying to keep it both affordable and protective of the citizens that are buying these homes.

So Madam Chair, I will be voting against this, and I would ask all my colleagues to do so as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, I mean, if I hadn't been here so long, I wouldn't have believed what I just heard. In actual fact, what is more expensive is having to make major repairs to a condo or a home because the protection isn't there? The minister poses as if he's defending lower housing costs, but in actual fact it's clear that he's merely defending builders from taking legitimate responsibility to guarantee that their product is sound. I don't think anybody who heard that speech would really believe that rejecting this amendment is about saving money for homebuyers.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on Bill 6, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014. Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Seeing none, I shall call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Hon. members, we're moving on. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Madam Chair. I'd ask the House for unanimous consent to move on to Committee of the Whole for Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The Government House Leader has requested that we move to . . . [An electronic device sounded] We just had a phone call. We're moving normally to that anyway, so we didn't need to ask for consent.

Bill 7

Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise, having made a commitment at second reading that I would try to address some of the questions that were raised by members. I think I'm prepared to do that now. Maybe it will facilitate the balance of the debate at Committee of the Whole if I proceed with that.

A couple of things, not necessarily in sequential order. The Member for Edmonton-Centre wanted to know about the tax rates on the QETs. The tax rate is the same as the Alberta corporate tax rate, which is 10 per cent.

Now, the second part of that question was – and I think there were several members that asked this – are companies going to be getting a tax break now on QETs that they used then to save for reclamation costs? Actually, what happens here is that the regime simply shifts that tax burden from the corporation to the QET. What happens is that both entities pay the tax, and then there's a tax credit that's issued to the corporation, so that eliminates the double tax that would otherwise occur as both the corporation and the QET are required to pay tax on the same QET income.

Corporations are currently allowed to deduct their QET contributions in computing that income, and these amendments don't change any of that.

There were also some questions that were raised, again, I believe, by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, around: who pays in a bankruptcy situation? Will the QETs protect against oil companies that go bankrupt? In essence, if the company goes bankrupt, the money that's been accumulated in the QET is protected. Money can only be pulled out of the QETs for site reclamation purposes, so no other uses under the act that establishes the QETs.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre also indicated that she was uncertain about the mechanics of the tax regime, asking the question: was it just more tax breaks for corporations? In fact, the net tax impact, as I think I alluded to earlier, of the QET regime is actually absolutely neutral. I went through that, I think, in the context of how that works.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View wondered what the legislation did to provide assurance that the reclamation costs are covered off and do not fall into the public purse. That's actually not applicable to the conversation here, nor were questions around whether or not the trusts covered downstream oil and gas cleanup costs and that type of thing. That, obviously, as I alluded to in my closing comments in second reading, would fall under the regulatory oversight of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

The same member wanted to know how trusts qualify. The eligibility rules for those QETs are actually set out in the Income Tax Act of Canada, so it's not Alberta-based legislation that establishes the rules, so to speak, in terms of qualifying as a trust. That's the CRA, and those criteria are clearly defined there.

Then the same member spoke about the cleanup costs with respect to the oil sands being reflected here. The QET regulatory regime, which covers off which costs must be covered, would again fall under the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood asked questions around: how many firms are in operation in Alberta that would meet the definition of a small single project? I don't have an answer for you relative to that. In fact, the next question was: how many of these qualifying environmental trusts are currently in place in Alberta, how many more are anticipated as a result of the implementation of this legislation, and what impact would that have on increasing the number? The answer is that this is, in fact, a new regime. We're currently not aware of any qualifying environmental trust having been established in the province of Alberta at this time, but we are expecting that there will be a handful of pipeline-related qualifying environmental trusts that would be established in the very near term in Alberta now that pipeline corporations are required to use these QETs. So none today, as far as we know; some in the near future, probably specifically in that area of pipeline corporations establishing them.

5:30

We also would anticipate and should note that oil sands corporations will likely also use this QET mechanism given that they are supportive in the discussions and, obviously, would likely benefit from the opportunity to establish those in Alberta. Given that it's just being introduced, we're really not sure how many of these QETs would be expected in the long term, but I think that with just those two general ideas, one can establish somewhat of an idea of what the uptake on that will likely be.

The same member asked questions around safeguards that would be in place to ensure that tax avoidance by corporations wouldn't happen by them using a QET to avoid tax. In fact, the federal government, obviously, would enforce the QET eligibility requirements, and to qualify for a QET for Alberta-specific purposes, first a trust would have to meet those federal requirements. I think that to the degree that you would accept that as assurance, that is the safeguard.

The same member, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, also asked about the safeguards to make sure that money isn't removed from the trust and taken out and then perhaps used for purposes other than reclamation. Again, the Income Tax Act of Canada prescribes that money can only be removed from the QET to pay for reclamation as prescribed, and I think that inside that act there are a series of criteria around how those funds would have to be used specifically for reclamation.

Then there were questions regarding whether it would be large corporations that would use QETs or who specifically as an entity might use those. In fact, all corporations of any size are eligible to establish QETs provided that they can meet the eligibility criteria.

Then the same member was observing around what the appropriate corporate tax rate was. Of course, that's not the basis of the discussion that we're having here, but I appreciate you raising that. I think I've heard that somewhere previously. I'm not sure where I might have picked up something like that.

To the members: I hope that that addresses the questions that were raised in second reading. You know, if there's more requirement for information during Committee of the Whole, I'll do my best to see if we can get that on a timely basis.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 7, Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 7 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Now we will rise and report.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Mr. Jeneroux: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 6 and Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thanks, Madam Speaker. Let's call it 6 o'clock, and we'll adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:36 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, may our spoken prayers be answered for those who cannot speak for themselves, and may our actions be of help for those who cannot act on their own. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a significant year for the Canadian armed forces, and we join all Canadians to extend our deepest gratitude for their courage and sacrifice to protect our freedom and the freedom of others. It is my distinct honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 10 representatives from the highly honoured Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, fondly known as Patricias, here in recognition of 100 years of contribution to the defence and security of Canada in war and peacetime.

My honoured guests are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for that honour. I would ask that they please rise and remain standing as I introduce each of them: Lieutenant Colonel Nick Grimshaw, commanding officer of 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry and chairman of the Regimental Executive Committee; Master Warrant Officer Gordon George, quartermaster sergeant instructor for 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry; Major Harpal Mandahar, project director, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry 100th anniversary; Warrant Officer Chris Durette, sergeant major for the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry 100th anniversary office; Master Warrant Officer Curtis Hollister, sergeant major B company, 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry; Sergeant Shelldon Hawman, section commander, A company, 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry; Master Corporal Byron Crowhurst, weapons detachment commander, C company, 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry; Corporal Brent Baron, light armoured vehicle driver for the commanding officer, 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry; Corporal Kevin Koldeweihe, storeman, recce platoon, 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry.

Also, Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the Patricia's slogan, Always a Patricia, I introduce Sergeant Major Tim Turner, former member, 1st Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry, currently serving in the Premier's executive protection unit.

I would now ask that the Assembly join me in honouring my guests. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, and welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity today to introduce or, perhaps more correctly, reintroduce to you and through you to all members of this House a person who has made an important commitment to renew democracy in the House of Commons. He is the former MLA for Calgary-West, former Minister of Education, former minister of health and wellness, former Minister of Energy, and former Minister of Finance. Last weekend he won, by a landslide, reportedly, a hard-fought nomination campaign for the federal constituency of Calgary Signal Hill. He is a spirited Albertan, an opinionated contributor, who may well have eloquently, verbally sparred with nearly everyone in this House at one time or another. We are confident that he will be representing Albertans effectively in Ottawa. Please welcome Ron Liepert, now standing in the members' gallery.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Khan: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I am so very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of absolutely incredible and energetic kids from one of my very favourite schools, Leo Nickerson elementary school, from my constituency in St. Albert. Leo Nickerson is an incredible school – both of my children are proud alumni of Leo Nickerson elementary school – and accompanying them today are some incredible, amazing educators: Laura Banu; Marin Thomas, also affectionately known as Mille Thomas; and Ben Schepens. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that the students and teachers from Leo Nickerson please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly l'école Citadelle elementary school from Legal, located not too far north of here in my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. They are accompanied by their teacher, M. Chris Page, and a parent helper, Melanie Thibault. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fantastic group of students and parents from Plamondon. They are joined today by their teacher, Karen Lavoie, and parent helpers Michelle Ewaske and Julie Lemieux. I'd like to ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly excited students from Bowden Grandview school. This is the same school that my brother graduated from as well. These 22 grade 6 students are clearly eager to learn all about the Legislature and the democratic process. They're joined today by two teachers, Ms Tracy Dreher and Ms Brenda Sherwood, and 10 parent helpers. I'd like to offer them the warm welcome of this Assembly. Please stand and receive this welcome.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let's move on with other important guests, starting with the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. April is Daffodil Month, a time when Albertans unite in the fight against cancer. We wear yellow daffodils to raise awareness for those who are affected by cancer. Prevention is crucial in the fight against cancer and starts with a healthy lifestyle, physical activity, healthy food choices, and staying tobacco free. With us today are some very special guests, who have joined us in recognition of this important initiative, and I would ask them to rise as I state their names: Dr. John Mercer, who has over 30 years of experience as a cancer researcher and is currently a professor on the faculty of medicine at the U of A; as well as Angeline Webb, a policy analyst who has worked for the Canadian Cancer Society for 10 years; and then Tim Buckland, a truly inspirational Albertan. He's a three-time cancer survivor who was diagnosed at 18 and two times at the age of 21. He underwent three surgeries, four months of chemotherapy, and was pronounced cancer free seven years ago this April. Wouldn't you know it? He now works for the Canadian Cancer Society. I would ask all of our members to extend a very warm welcome to all of our visitors here.

1:40

The Speaker: The Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a great honour for me to introduce two people that are very special to me. Some 34 years back, in veterinary school, I was Charlie Brown, and she was the little red-headed girl.

Mr. Quest: And she pulled the football away?

Dr. Starke: She did pull the football away more than once, but that was Lucy.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, since that time she's become my wife, my business partner, my confidante, the mother to my two sons. She's done that for nearly 30 years and for that probably should receive some sort of recognition. My wife, Alison.

Mr. Speaker, the other person I've only known for, actually, a couple of years, but over that period of time she's become a good friend and a trusted adviser. I know that she's been that to many people who've passed through this august Chamber in her nearly three decades of dedicated public service to the people of Alberta. That period of public service comes to a conclusion today. I will tell you that it has been my pleasure to work with her, and I know that she will do well regardless of what she goes into next although I know what it is. I'm now going to ask my chief of staff, Tammy Forbes, and my wife, Alison Starke, to please stop planning what I'm to do next and stand up and receive the recognition of the House.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also with a mix of joy and sadness that I want to introduce my executive assistant from Calgary, Jenna Shummoogum, and her mother, Jaya. Jenna has been with me for three years, has been stalwart and energetic, artistic, passionate about her work. She's now moving on to even greater work with another poverty group, the Calgary Immigrant Women's Association. I'd like them to both stand and get the appropriate response.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Bruce Kyereh-Addo, who is a researcher with our caucus, and his lovely companion. Bruce has added great value to our team, and we appreciate him being here to watch the proceedings of the House today. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, you have two minutes each.

Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry 100th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to rise today to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. Their service has been integral to every 20th-century war and military conflict in which Canada has participated, including notorious World War I battles such as Vimy Ridge and Passchendaele; battlefronts in Sicily, Italy, and western Europe in World War II; Korea and Germany, as part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; United Nations' peace-keeping operations; Yugoslavia; and Afghanistan.

Named for Princess Patricia, granddaughter of Queen Victoria and daughter of Prince Arthur, Governor General of Canada, the regiment was raised in 1914 in Ottawa and 100 years later serves with an unchanged mission, to provide an excellent infantry regiment for service to Canada. The regiment is composed of three regular force battalions and a reserve battalion, three of which are located in Edmonton. The colonel-in-chief of the Patricias is former Governor General of Canada the Right Honourable Adrienne Clarkson, Queen's Privy Council for Canada, companion of the Order of Canada, commander of the Order of Military Merit, commander of the Order of Merit of the Police Forces, Canadian Forces Decoration, who in 2007 became the first Canadian installed to this position.

With regret more than 1,850 Patricias have fallen in service, indeed the ultimate sacrifice. The renowned regiment has received numerous battle honours and exemplifies their unofficial motto of First in the Field. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my heartfelt gratitude to the families, who were kissed goodbye and left miles behind but whose sustaining presence was carried onto foreign soil in the hearts and memories of the regiment. It is with sincere admiration that I commend the valour of the Patricias, the sacrifices and achievements made by those who have served and continue to serve during times of war and peace, creating an enduring legacy of military professionalism, courage, distinction, and honour.

Congratulations, Patricias, on your 100th anniversary. God bless.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Women's Equality Rights

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Mid-April has two special meanings for me. One is Law Day, as celebrated by the bar associations across Canada. It was on April 17, 1982, that Queen Elizabeth II and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau – yes – signed the Charter, thereby guaranteeing fundamental rights and freedoms for all Canadians.

Now, in honour of this milestone the Canadian Bar Association introduced Law Day in 1983 as a means to commemorate the event and educate the public about the legal system. The Alberta branch of the Canadian Bar Association works in co-operation with and with funding from the Alberta Law Foundation and the Law Society to organize events across the province, including in courthouses in Calgary, Edmonton, Drumheller, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, Wetaskiwin, and St. Paul.

Members of this House and anyone who gets within 10 feet of me will hear how important it is for every woman and for every other group that has systemically experienced discrimination to have section 15 and section 28 of the Charter. This is a sacred day for me.

On April 19, 1916, Alberta passed An Act to Provide for Equal Suffrage, which gave white women the right to vote in Alberta. Women of colour had to wait for some time, and aboriginal women didn't get the vote until the 1960s.

So two days on the calendar, two critically important days for women in Alberta and Canada.

I need to take this opportunity to thank LEAF, the Women's Legal Education and Action Fund. The founding mothers of this organization pounded the halls of Canada's Parliament to make sure that women and others got those equality rights. They wouldn't have had them otherwise. They badgered, cajoled, argued, yelled, and sweet-talked every parliamentarian into it.

This is a good time to make a donation, a big one, to the organization in your life who upholds your equality rights.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Alzheimer's Face Off Hockey Tournament

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I took part in the 2014 Alzheimer's Face Off in the beautiful city of Leduc. Alzheimer's is a disease of the brain that affects men and women of all races, religions, and socioeconomic backgrounds. It is not a normal part of aging. No one is immune. Symptoms include having difficulty remembering things, making decisions, and performing everyday activities. These changes can affect the way a person feels and acts. There is currently no way to stop the disease, but research is improving the way we provide care, and we'll continue to search for a cure.

Mr. Speaker, the continued search for a cure could not occur without events and initiatives like the Alzheimer's Face Off. The Face Off tournament saw teams paired with former NHL players such as Theo Fleury, Marty McSorley, Sean Brown, and others. This weekend also included a Face Off luncheon with hockey legends Frank Mahovlich, Garry Unger, Paul Coffey, and Alex Delvecchio.

I'd like to acknowledge Greg Christenson for his incredible efforts in making this happen. Even more than his hockey prowess, Greg was a major fundraiser that put our team in a position to acquire Russ Courtnall as our NHL draft player. Our team, the NHL All-Stars, was very well managed by our bench boss. That would be you, Mr. Speaker. Along with myself and the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and former MLA Art Johnston, we put in a gritty effort on the ice.

Mr. Speaker, this event raised $1.2 million for Alzheimer's. I would like to send a big thank you to all the volunteers and players who helped to raise these much-needed funds for a great cause.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We'll commence in just a second. A reminder that you have 35 seconds for the questions, 35 seconds for the answers. Let's be mindful of civility and decorum today, please.

Let's start with the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Service Pensions

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the PC government has once again resorted to bullying our public-sector unions rather than negotiating in good faith. Instead of getting a deal on pension reforms through tough but fair negotiations with union leaders, the PCs are again bringing down the legislative hammer, potentially smashing apart pension arrangements that thousands of Alberta front-line workers have built their future plans on. To the Finance minister: does he not see that these heavy-handed tactics will make future negotiations even harder?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the hon. member opposite, who doesn't believe in defined benefit plans, we actually want to maintain the pension promise of the defined benefit plan. That's what we talked about to all of the plan board members in July of 2012 and have been talking to them ever since July of 2012. The AUPE, or the union leadership, are not the members that are on the plan boards. The plan boards are the people that we have been talking to because they represent the members of the pensions. She would do well to learn that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we fully support sustainable, defined pension plans.

The government is fond of stating that pension plans as they're structured are unaffordable and that changes must be made, but that point is certainly up for debate. Recent reports by credible firms have cast doubt on the government's position, and even the intergovernmental affairs minister has said that the problem will solve itself. To the Finance minister: why is this government forging ahead with these changes when the jury is still out on whether they're actually needed?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General believes that they're needed; the actuaries believe that they're needed. In fact, the plan boards themselves, even on the LAPP website, still suggest that there is unsustainability in the plan that needs to be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing. The Twitter piece here is really quite interesting because the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on Twitter in May 2012 actually said, and I quote: we will not support a defined benefit pension plan. So I guess they're changing because they think there are votes there or something. Unbelievable.

Ms Smith: I think that was that we would not support a defined benefit pension plan for MLAs when they were trying to . . . [interjections]

Albertans are simply no longer getting good, honest government from this tired PC dynasty. As if their reckless approach to bills 45 and 46 wasn't enough, they're now going for broke with these premature and unnecessary changes to pension plans that will impact 200,000 workers. The Wildrose would repeal Bill 45 and Bill 46, and if the PCs keep it up on Bill 9, we'll repeal that one, too. To the Premier: will he put the brakes on these pension changes and once and for all concede that the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it just goes to show that they're going to say that they're going to repeal whatever will get them votes. Unfortunately, even their Finance critic said: around the world pensions are going bankrupt, and so if we don't do something, we'd better do some better accounting on how we're going to pay for this one; that's what we risk. The point that I am driving at here is that this government is actually saying that we want to do something to save the pensions for the future employees of this government, for future Albertans. The changes we're making are modest. All of the other pensions across the country are doing similar things or even more drastic things. We have been communicating with plan members to say that this is to save the pension promise.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. leader, the second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. They should be respecting contracts and negotiating fairly.

Former Premier's Travel to Jasper

Ms Smith: On Friday, June 28, 2013, the cabinet declared its first-ever provincial state of emergency to deal with the High River flood. That same day the former Premier went to Jasper to stay at a luxury resort for the weekend. That weekend was when residents of High River first got to see how devastated their town was. Hundreds of dedicated government workers, including a few cabinet ministers, were struggling to get the first of the residents of High River back into their homes. Who was the Premier meeting with in Jasper while this was going on?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if my recollection serves me correctly, that's exactly the same question the hon. member asked yesterday, and I'd give her exactly the same answer. Well, probably not exactly the same answer because I can't remember my answer. I wasn't listening to it.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the former Premier did a lot of work on that flight. She was everywhere on that flight. She was very, very much leading this government in assuring Albertans that their interests would be taken care of with respect to the damages that they sustained in that flood, and many of the rest of us were on the ground doing the same thing.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that you shouldn't use taxpayer dollars for personal gain. If the former Premier really had meetings in Jasper that weekend, then there is no issue, but if there were no meetings, then it appears that taxpayer dollars were used for a personal vacation, and that is not acceptable. In fact, it's also illegal. Is the Premier covering up misconduct by refusing to tell Albertans what the former Premier was doing in Jasper that weekend?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, throwing out wild accusations may be what this hon. member considers to be good opposition or good government, but it's not what the people of Alberta expect from her or from anyone else in opposition. [interjection] There are many real, important issues to be discussed for this province, but she can make up things, taking one set of facts, make up some allegations, and then ask us to go and look and tell her what the answers behind them are.

What was the Premier doing on June 15 of last year? [interjection] What was she doing on June 1 of last year? Mr. Speaker, it's not for me to go and look back at the calendar every day to satisfy her curiosity.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, hon. Member for Airdrie, I see your names on the list. I'd be happy to leave them on the list. I'd be happy to withdraw them. If you continue to interrupt, I will.

Let's go on with your second supplemental, please.

Ms Smith: Yes, it is.

If this Premier knows something untoward has happened, he owes it to Albertans to tell them. Not telling them is tantamount to covering it up. If this Premier refuses to answer, we will have no choice but to ask the RCMP to investigate whether taxpayer dollars were used to pay for a Jasper resort vacation for the former Premier. This Premier can clear the air right now. Did the former Premier actually have any legitimate business to justify being in Jasper at taxpayers' expense that weekend?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the House that I have no information with respect to that, and I'm not about to scurry and get information with respect to that. The Auditor General is looking into the travel policy and the expense policy and has access to all the information and will report in due course. What I do know of that weekend is that there was somebody who was getting in the way of the law, and that was that hon. member, who refused to be evacuated from High River at a very serious time, setting a very bad example for her constituents.

The Speaker: A point of order from Airdrie has been noted at 1:58. Thank you.

Let's go on. Third main set of questions. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Anderson: You're going to defend her to the ground? Like, what are you doing, Premier?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, I've given the floor to your leader.

Mr. Anderson: The Premier is talking, too.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Anderson: The Premier is talking, too.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Anderson: And you work both ways, not just one way.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, please. I'm trying to talk to you, and I don't appreciate your indignation at the moment. I understand who was giving an answer, and I saw who was interrupting, and it was you. Then the bantering started. I'm going to you first, and I'll ask the Premier also the same. Please, we have 35 seconds for a question; we have 35 seconds for an answer. Let's show some respect for each other and, in particular, for your own leader from the Wildrose.

Hon. Member for Highwood, Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, you have the floor for your third and final main set of questions.

FOIP Request Process

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier was asked about the process by which freedom of information requests are reviewed and vetted by his ministry. When asked to confirm that there was no political interference in information requests, he commented that the Deputy Minister of Executive Council reviewed them as a matter of efficiency. Can the Premier explain how this is done?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I did inquire, actually. What I'm advised is that there was some time ago a FOIP request for all of the headlines of all of the ARs in government. Now, I'm not sure the people who made that request understand how many perhaps millions of documents that might be across government and various departments. So the executive head of government, the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, requested the FOIP coordinators across government to do a co-ordinated approach with respect to that and to ensure that there were no cabinet documents being released as part of that request, a perfectly appropriate exercise.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we now know that the Premier's office is creating weekly FOIP summary reports. The Premier was also asked: who sees these reports? Is it the Premier, another minister, or their political staff, and what exactly are they shown? Now, the Premier didn't actually answer that question. Are there any cabinet ministers or their political staff reviewing the list of freedom of information requests from the media or the opposition parties?

Mr. Hancock: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we don't even know who has actually made a FOIP request because that information is not available. I'm not aware of any cabinet minister who reviews the weekly report. That is an administrative function. There is a process by which the deputy minister of Executive Council has asked for a co-ordination of certain types of FOIP requests so that there can be a common dissemination of information in an appropriate manner and a co-ordination of the way in which those requests are handled.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it comes down to this. Freedom of information exists to prevent the government from suppressing damaging information about their mistakes. The process is supposed to work free of political interference; however, it appears that the cabinet has found ways to insert themselves in it. Will the Premier assure us that no one in his cabinet is undermining the integrity and independence of the freedom of information process?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Environmental Agency Appointment

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the first points of order I argued in this House was against the former environment minister Dr. Lorne Taylor for calling me a water witch. I won. He withdrew and apologized. Now I'm shaking my head. He has been appointed as the chair of the industry-funded, now responsible for it all Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation and Reporting Agency. It's irony, old boys' club, and a Hail Mary pass all wrapped into one. To the minister of environment: did the minister not understand the optics of appointing a Tory insider – that Tory insider – who actively campaigned against . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, I don't have any issue with the fact that Dr. Lorne Taylor was made chairman of the board. It was an open competition. He went through an interview process like everybody else did. I look at the chair and vice-chair of the board, I look at the members that we've just appointed, and we have a world-class board that will provide world-class results and monitoring as well.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Back to the same minister. Given that a lot of damage can be done to Alberta's environmental image in a year – think dead ducks – I'm wondering if the minister intends to stand behind Dr. Taylor for the requested year he's asked for, no matter what happens.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, what Dr. Taylor said, you know, was to judge him after a year, after we've had a chance to do some work with the board. I can tell you that the environment is very important to this government. It's about market access, getting our products to market. We know that the world is watching us. We are continuing to do a better job in environmental monitoring. We're continuing to do a better job in reclamation. We continue to do a better job with our First Nations and Métis people on this land, basically, to get them involved in monitoring. I am very confident that we will continue to do a good job and that all Albertans will be proud of the environmental record of this government in the coming year.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. Given that the reporting done by Dr. Taylor as the chair is to the minister and not to the Legislature and is at intervals determined by the minister and given the aforementioned, shall I say, skepticism from me, would the minister agree to implement a quarterly reporting schedule for the first year and agree to release those reports publicly?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll say that any time the hon. member wants to come and talk to me about the environmental monitoring agency, she's allowed to do so. I'll sit down and have lunch with her, and we can talk about any questions or any concerns she has.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the hallmarks of this PC government is its habit of walking away from a disagreement and using its legislative power to impose its will. Bills 19, 36, and 50 overrode landowners' rights; bills 45 and 46 overrode the rights of government employees. Now once again the government is at it. Why are you once again resorting to legislation to override the pension rights of Albertans in public service, Mr. Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm going to come back to the discussions that we've had with the plan boards dating back to July 2012. We are taking these steps in order to maintain the defined benefit nature of the plans while keeping the contribution rate increases as low as possible. Even the Auditor General, in Public Accounts, has identified that the contribution rates that our employees currently have are continuing to grow to unacceptable levels. We need to do some things that will be beneficial to the future of the plan. There will continue to be no changes to core benefits, with the same formula continuing based on age . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, each time this government overrides Albertans' rights through legislation, it loses a whole schwaack of support. Bills 19, 36, and 50: whoosh, there goes the right wing. Bills 45 and 46: boom, there goes the left wing. Now pension bills 9 and 10: there goes the landing gear. My question is to the Finance minister. How will your government ever make a safe landing if it keeps overriding people's rights through legislation?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member from the NDP continues to not realize is that we're also responsible for taxpayers' rights. We have to make sure that these plans are fair and equitable for our employees, that they are sustainable into the future. The hon. member is exactly right. This isn't our money, but we are the trustee of these plans. It's important that we make sure that they're sustainable so that employees today, past, and future have those pensions when they need them.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wonder why the Finance minister sees the pensions of its own employees and other public employees as the source of the financial problems of this government instead of the very low taxes, instead of all of the waste, instead of all of the fabulous perks and severances and so on for its management employees. Why are you going after people's pensions to save money?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be farther from the truth. Indeed, this is about maintaining a benefit for employees and fairness to the taxpayers, who contribute roughly half of what this is. The hon. member is trying to somehow connect the pensions to our financial situation. The financial situation of this government is very, very strong. We have never said that this was about saving money. We have always said that this is about saving the defined benefit pension plan for our employees, not going to a DC, which is what the Wildrose has in their preferred budget, and not raising taxes or contribution rates to an unacceptable level, which is what they want.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Let's go on with question 6. No lengthy preambles hereinafter, please. They're not allowed.
Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Electricity Generation from Renewable Sources

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During my time with the Ministry of Energy I learned lots about electricity and also about the potential of renewable energy. I'd like to ask this question of the Minister of Energy. How will your ministry create the conditions for the greening of our electricity grid while at the same time not compromising the market-based electricity system that we have here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question. It's a great question. Certainly, in our energy-only market system, that is working very well for Albertans as well, we've seen that more than 45 per cent of the province's electricity generation capacity comes from alternative and renewable energy sources. We have been working and meeting with the stakeholders to make sure that they, too, can give us their input into this because, first and foremost, it's important to hear from those stakeholders how they see that we can continue to green the grid.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you. We need to know more about incentives, but I'd like to talk a little bit more about cogeneration facilities. They provide one-third of our electricity here in Alberta. I'm wondering how the alternative and renewable strategy will allow us to reach the full potential of cogeneration facilities for the benefit of consumers.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I started saying in the last answer, we had the opportunity to bring stakeholders together this week in Calgary and to talk about not just cogeneration but to talk with wind, to talk with solar, to talk with geothermal, all of those and to hear their ideas. Certainly, it's the first time that that whole group collectively has been brought into the room to really talk about that and hear ideas from each other. That's what we're doing right now. Under an energy-only market how do we make sure that we add more alternatives and renewables to the system? We're hearing great ideas from them.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Given that the minister is reaching out to industry stakeholders, one of the questions I have from my constituents is: when are they going to be seeking public input, particularly consumer input, into this framework?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Right now I'm listening to stakeholders from the environmental groups, from the industry groups, from the wind, the solar, the geothermal, all of those groups to hear some ideas from them first. After that, we'll go out and talk to Albertans. But, first, what's important is those with the ideas, those that will do the investment in renewables from all sides, being able to hear from them: what kind of ideas do they have? When we do that and we come with a draft framework, we can actually talk about the things that they have told us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary Fish-Creek, followed by Red Deer-North.

Alberta Health Services Consulting Contracts

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we've asked dozens of questions about the financial practices of AHS, $250 million here, a billion dollars there, and every time the answers are the same, that they were approved under the former AHS board and that that board has been fired and that AHS has an audit and financial committee that reviews these contracts. Well, it turns out that the chair of the committee is in a bind. He sat on the former AHS board before he was fired last June, the same board that's apparently to blame in the first place. How can members of the former board be both the cause of the problem and the solution?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what an invention. Whoever said that the former board was the cause of the problem?

In fact, if one looks at the $1 billion worth of sole-source contracts, that are so nefarious, one will find that $900 million of that $1 billion was spent on cataract surgery and long-term care, hiring the services that Albertans need and want so that they can get timely access to service, they can get appropriate long-term care, and they can get the things they need for quality of life. Interestingly enough, those contracts adhere to the policy, a procurement policy that was in place, a procurement policy that the Auditor General reviewed, and a new procurement . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was his Health minister that made the comment last week. You had better read your briefing notes again.

Given that the AHS Audit and Finance Committee has the power to conduct or authorize investigations into any matter within the scope of its responsibilities and the power to retain independent counsel and forensic accountants to assist in the investigation, will the Premier issue a ministerial directive ordering the committee to investigate the consulting and sole-source contracts awarded by AHS?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member had been paying attention, she would know that there's been a sequence of activities by the Auditor General over the years looking exactly at the Alberta Health Services sole-source contract process, making recommendations with respect to that, doing a sampling, as I mentioned in the House previously, with respect to it, finding in fact that the contracts were being awarded in accordance with the policy, and continuing to make recommendations with respect to how they should proceed. In fact, as a result, I presume, of much of that work, there's been a new policy put in place, effective April 1, by the AHS executive called the procurement business practices policy and noncompetitive procurement procedure.

The Speaker: Thank you. Time is up. I'm sorry.
Let's go on.

Mrs. Forsyth: Premier, I had a lot of hopes on you, but gee willikers.

Given that as a result of all efforts to expose the waste and questionable contracting practice at AHS, a spokesperson from AHS is now considering posting all contracts online to show greater accountability to taxpayers, will the Premier tell AHS to post those before we leave this session?

Mr. Hancock: Gee willikers. Golly. I'm almost speechless at that.

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that Alberta Health Services is providing health services to Albertans on a daily basis. Can we do a better job? Absolutely. We strive every day to do a better job for Albertans. But are we providing through Alberta Health Services some of the best health services in the country? Absolutely. And on so many measures it is true. Albertans are well served.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Seniors' Lodges

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of seniors' lodges in Alberta, some that are owned by the government and some that are owned by foundations, that need upgrades, renovations, and modernizations. Many are very old, like Autumn Glen Lodge in Innisfail, that is over 50 years old. It has a needs assessment that makes it clear that it has surpassed its best-before date. Seniors' lodges are one of very few programs that provide affordable and supportive housing for seniors who do not require continuing care. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what grants are available for seniors' lodge modernizations and rebuilds?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and answer this question. I just have to thank this member for consistently advocating on behalf of seniors not just in her community but across the province. Thank you so very much.

Mr. Speaker, last spring we allocated $31 million to the seniors' lodge program, that can be used to retrofit or add fire suppression support in the buildings, and in Budget 2014 we're investing $289 million in capital over three years to renew seniors' lodges and social housing across the province.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: will the government of Alberta continue to support seniors' lodges, or is its focus now on continuing care facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. acting minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. The Alberta government has dedicated over $150 million towards seniors' housing across the province, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the $31 million that we talked about last year, we have $88 million that went towards nine lodge redevelopment projects in '12-13, and we included $40 million for rural lodges. We're evaluating all lodges right now and determining priorities. There will be another $40 million this year dedicated to rural lodge redevelopment.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: is there a capital financing program available for affordable housing that can be used for seniors' lodges as they're one of the oldest forms of affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. acting minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this government is looking at every possible way that we can support our seniors, our seniors' housing, and our housing agencies. That's why recently we approved that Alberta Social Housing Corporation now has the authority to lend money to eligible housing providers for various projects that maintain or add Alberta housing supplies. This is a great change. This lending policy will ensure that housing providers and municipalities have the financial support they need to forward the lodge projects that are so necessary in their communities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale Assessments

Mrs. Towle: Service providers and families have long said that the supports intensity scale interview is humiliating. Here are some of the questions that are asked of clients in the SIS interview. What assistance would you need to have a romantic relationship up to and including an intimate one like other regular people your age? If you were a regular 28-year-old woman who wanted to take a course, would you need help? Did you ever expose yourself inappropriately? Do you steal? Can the associate minister explain why he is demeaning clients with developmental disabilities by asking them to compare themselves to regular people?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, this government is focused on delivering the highest quality of service to Albertans, who can lead fulfilling lives in their communities. I answered this question yesterday. SIS is a tool which is used to make baseline assessments right across the province so we can deliver consistent services regardless of where you live in the province: east, west, north, south. That's what the SIS tool is all about.

Mrs. Towle: "Regular people" is offensive and demeaning. Given that the person with developmental disabilities is often unable to answer or comprehend the questions so someone is their proxy and given that nonverbal individuals are subjected to these exact same questions and their proxy answers for them, how does the associate minister believe that the supports intensity scale assessment is even remotely accurate?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, SIS is one of the tools which is used to make the assessment to meet the needs of the individual. To meet the needs of an individual, we use their existing support systems in place, their geographical locations. It's about their needs, their goals. That's what this tool is all about. When other people are answering the question or assisting the individuals, that's what they're assisting them with: their guardians, their loved ones helping them to attain the goals that they're looking for.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, this minister is supposed to be an advocate. Given that yesterday the associate minister said that this is only one of the tools, as he has said today – and, clearly, based on this line of questioning, it is so offensive and demeaning to these clients – can the associate minister explain what other tools the PDD ministry is using to assess needs for funding?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, Mr. Speaker, I answered this question in my previous answer. When we're talking about the funding, we're looking at the needs of the individual. Their geographical location plays a significant role. Their needs, their aspirations, their goals play a significant role. Of course, included in all of this is taking all of the services which are required to meet the needs of that individual.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

LGBTQ Rights

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a fair comment that our lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered Albertans have not always seen this government as being progressive when it comes to advocating for those rights. I guess one small step of progress was taken today in that nine years after the federal government changed the marriage act to recognize that, essentially, you're allowed to marry in this country whoever you love, this government, I guess, today made some changes to their Marriage Act. I'd like to ask the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety why this debate happened today and why she thought . . .

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Both he and I share an interest in issues around the LGBT community, and I'm proud to say that this is the first time the minister has had LGBTQ issues in their portfolio. So I'm tremendously proud of that and all of the issues that we are able to move forward on and I'm able to move forward on in that capacity. My door is always open when the member has concerns about that community, and I'm happy to answer any questions about that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I take the minister's comments at face value, but do you think she's going to have the same success when she's talking about LGBTQ rights in terms of changes to Bill 44 on our human rights, especially section 11.1, which many people in the LGBTQ community found a slap in the face?

Ms Jansen: Once again, I thank the member for that question. As I said before, my door is always open to discuss issues that make the LGBT community feel accepted and part of an inclusive Alberta. Thank you for that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, a wise woman once said that GSAs are grounded in issues of equal access and accommodation which are firmly established and protected in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. To the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety: do you think you'll be able to talk to your colleagues on that side of the House about the importance of GSAs and bring forward legislation in the upcoming fall session to make these mandatory in all schools in Alberta where kids want them?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again I thank the member. As he knows, I spoke very passionately about my acceptance of these issues and the passion I felt for Motion 503. I admire him for bringing it up. I still believe that it is important, and I will always have those discussions with anyone who wants to have them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Fire Safety in Seniors' Facilities

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This January a Quebec seniors' home caught fire with very tragic consequences. Thirty-two residents died in the blaze. Those that perished lived in an older section of the home built before regulations required the installation of sprinklers. Without immediate action, we run a risk of a similar tragedy happening here in this province. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how many Alberta seniors are at risk, living in facilities without sprinklers, and what are you going to do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister responsible for Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question, and I'd like to thank the member for asking it. We care very deeply about our seniors and the protection of our seniors. As you know, the rules changed in 1990, and sprinklers were required in all seniors' facilities, and we have complied with that. We've also talked earlier in a question today about money we've put into our budget to allow housing authorities to upgrade their facilities because any facility – many of ours were built before 1990, and any of those will not have sprinklers. So we're working with them to renovate and make sure that happens.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that in the budget estimates this Minister of Municipal Affairs admitted that “an incredible number” of Alberta's seniors' facilities don't have sprinklers, not safe, and given that in Edmonton the fire chief estimated that at least one-third of seniors' care homes are unsprinklered, unsafe as well, will this minister, then, please make public the reports of many other fire chiefs and health professionals that have raised concerns about fire safety in seniors' facilities, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work very closely with our fire services across the province. They're an important advocate. Fire suppression is not just about sprinklers – it is one part of it – but it's about manning within the facilities, and we're looking at that. We're looking at other types of fire suppression and protection of our vulnerable seniors. What we're going to do is to continue to put a holistic approach together of how we can both protect seniors in existing facilities and upgrade facilities to take care of some of the concerns we have around our older facilities.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that other provinces are committing funds directly to fire safety in seniors' care facilities and given that staffing in seniors' facilities is often inadequate to evacuate residents in a safe and timely manner, this time to the Associate Minister of Seniors: when will your government commit to an action plan for fire safety in seniors' facilities, including sprinklers and adequate staffing?

Mr. Quest: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Municipal Affairs has said, there are evacuation plans for all of these facilities that are done not just in consultation but with the oversight of the local fire departments. For the facilities that were built before 1990 our government has recently invested $31 million for the repair and retrofit of some of the seniors' facilities, that includes sprinklers, and there is still some funding available for that. We encourage any housing management bodies that haven't done that to apply.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Strathcona Community Hospital

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the need for beds far exceeds supply at almost every Edmonton area hospital, so I was shocked to learn that this PC government was cancelling the beds and operating rooms it promised in Sherwood Park for the long-awaited Strathcona community hospital. This $130 million health clinic is set to open next month, but it has no beds and zero operating rooms. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how can you call this glorified walk-in clinic a hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're proud of opening that facility in the near future. I can tell you that there are a lot of people in Sherwood Park actually looking forward to it. They're looking forward to improved and new places to go and get health care. We think that it's going to be a positive addition. Frankly, I would say to the hon. member that I think if he checks, he may find more happy people than unhappy people, and he should probably spend some time with them.

Mr. Barnes: Residents just want to see the hospital they were promised, Minister.

Given that this PC government broke its promise to renovate the Misericordia hospital, which is now in dire need of repairs, does the government not see the value in keeping their promise and finishing phase 2 in Sherwood Park to relieve some of the pressure in Edmonton?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, because it's been said in the House and he was here – I'm making the assumption that he was listening – that we are actually in the midst of a $19.2 million renovation to the Misericordia in co-operation with the folks in Health. This is part of a bigger program. In Alberta, of course, we've got a growing population, we've got a great economy, and because of that we are always trying to balance dollars between new facilities and looking after the old ones. It's a struggle that will never end. We're doing this for the benefit of Albertans, and we intend to continue.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park promised this hospital to his constituents and then his government delayed the project several times with a full guarantee that the entire project would eventually go ahead, does the minister not agree that a full, public, prioritized infrastructure list would be a better way to build Alberta and protect Albertans from vote-seeking MLAs over this minister's current bait-and-switch list?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting. The last time I checked, the opposition's list doesn't list any projects that they would build. Why? Because they don't want to tell Albertans which schools they wouldn't build, they don't want to tell Albertans which hospitals they would not build, they don't want to tell Albertans which roads they would not build. Our government, on the other hand, has a list of all the projects we will build on our website, which all Albertans and even the hon. member, if he could get someone to find it for him, may look at.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

2:30 Municipal Government Act Review

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The review of the Municipal Government Act has been on the books for years, but there appears to have been little progress to date. Municipal leaders in my constituency of Banff-Cochrane are confused and have expressed concern regarding the process and timelines for the MGA review. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the current public consultations on the MGA are a good start but are far from adequate on such an important piece of legislation, can the minister outline the complete process going forward and the realistic time frames to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank this member for the question. I know his involvement in municipal government has really created an interest in this area. The Municipal Government Act really defines the relationship between the province and our municipalities, which are one of our most important partners. It's critically important that we get this document right because it will help frame how municipalities can deal with the issues they face around incredible growth over the next number of years. We're in 11 communities right now holding hearings, listening to people, but at the end of the day we're going to do it right.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that many of our property assessment processes are decades old and that when the act was rewritten the last time, there was an incomplete review of assessment, can the minister confirm that the MGA review this time will include a thorough and complete evaluation of property assessment?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. I can assure this member that that is one of the most important parts of the review that we're doing right now. As I've sat in on some of the meetings, I've heard concerns and issues around assessment. In fact, in the newspaper today in Medicine Hat there were concerns brought forward by a nonresidential around assessment in those areas, so we know it is an important issue across the province.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The 1995 MGA was groundbreaking in that it gave municipalities natural person powers. However, times have changed, and it is now time to move on to the next level. Can the minister ensure that the review will include consideration of a new relationship between municipalities and government?

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you again for that question. Really, the review: that's what it's all about, defining that relationship and looking at a new relationship for the next 20 or 30 years, as we face incredible growth, as we are the engine of the economy here in Canada. What does the relationship have to be to make sure that municipalities have the tools to grow, to be sustainable so that we can work with them to provide that support? Mr. Speaker, absolutely, we're going to work with them to define what that new relationship with municipalities will be like.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Bow.

ALERT Program Funding

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta law enforcement response teams, or ALERT, are busy in the city of Brooks and across the province in efforts to co-operate and share information, which helps to bring cases against criminals across all boundaries of Alberta. In our community ALERT has been responsible for a serious reduction in crime through their targeted attack on drug trafficking rings. Just this January ALERT alongside the Brooks RCMP took over $50,000 worth of drugs off the street. To the Associate Minister of Public Safety: why is this ministry cutting funding to a made-in-Alberta solution to an ever-evolving gang and organized crime problem?

Mr. Olson: Obviously, I'm not in a position to provide a detailed answer to this question, but I will say, Mr. Speaker, that we are proud of our record when it comes to crime reduction. This is a great example of a success, as the member points out, and we will continue to support those kinds of programs. In terms of the details of this question I can't answer this for him right now. I can take it under advisement.

Mr. Hale: Thank you for your support, but given that the Minister of Justice has instructed the joint chiefs and ALERT's management team to find 20 per cent in the budget to cut and given that this minister has now hired a consultant to produce an efficiency study, can the Associate Minister of Public Safety tell us why they are looking into cutting a program which promotes seamless collaboration between all law enforcement agencies and the RCMP?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell you is that our law enforcement on the front line are very valuable to Albertans. We've made a commitment in this province to make sure that we protect Albertans but at the same time find efficiencies. I'd be happy to sit down with this member and go through in a detailed way exactly what's happening on this particular file. It's an important one. We need to make sure that Albertans are safe. We'll continue to do that. That's what our government is here to do. We're going to do it with Albertans, for Albertans, and by Albertans. I can tell you that our front-line staff are capable. We'll take any recommendation, and I'll take the recommendations of this hon. member.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental.

Mr. Hale: Thank you. I would urge the associate minister to listen to the front-line staff. That's who's calling me.

Given that Alberta law enforcement response teams have seized more than $500 million worth of drugs from Alberta streets since being formed in the province in 2006 to tackle organized crime, will the associate minister commit today that no funding will be cut from ALERT, which would ultimately affect the boots on the ground and put Albertans' safety at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, what I can tell you is that our front-line staff are very valuable, and they'll continue to be. Also, there are administrative people within the Ministry of Justice and in my department that look at every aspect of how we protect Albertans. It's about finding efficiencies. It's finding new ways to do things. We're building a province where a hundred thousand people are coming here every year. This government is committed to being nimble and making sure that our communities are safe. I'll be happy to sit down with this member and talk to the front-line staff he's talking about.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my neighbourhood of Bowness a number of houses that were flooded are now dealing with foundation damage that has caused irreparable harm to the house itself. In one case an outer wall bulged outward four feet from true. These houses are destroyed, with electrical, plumbing, and structural damage so severe it's economically unfeasible to repair; yet in each case the DRP offered only the cost of repairing the foundation. Given the government's commitment to help those who were impacted by the flood, can the minister confirm that cases such as these will receive a thorough . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was an incredible event that has caused families and homes to suffer like this. We would hope that as many as possible of these files can be solved right at the front end and that we can deal with these families as quickly as possible. We do know that there will be an appeal process that is going to happen. The first line of appeal is that the person can appeal to the managing director of AEMA. They have support to look at that and get advice. If that doesn't work, those folks can then appeal to me as well, and I can have a look at that file and try to make sure they're . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Given the widespread concern over how the DRP rushed the closure of people's files over the last month of the program, can the minister assure the House that these files will be reviewed to ensure they were properly handled and not rushed to closure?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have heard from people across the devastated areas that they wanted us to move as quickly as possible on these files, so we have put many more people to work. We have worked very hard, weekends and evenings, to ensure that we can put these files through as quickly as possible. We have done a very good job of that, but we do know that just over 300 of the files have been appealed to date. We're working very quickly through that process, and we're going to try to ensure that every one of those gets fair treatment and that each of those files is considered fairly and accurately.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My final question is to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister assure me that the application from residents on Bow Crescent to stabilize the bank will be dealt with this week as there is only a three-week window for the construction period this year before the coming high-water season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that my department met with the residents' group that the member is referring to, and we agreed to fund the cost of an engineer on a pilot basis to assess the damage and design an acceptable erosion protection system for these properties. However, the construction and maintenance costs for mitigation projects on private land are the responsibility of the landowner, and provincial flood mitigation funding programs are only available in our municipalities. I can say to this member that I have asked our department to look at that, and I'll get an answer back to her this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Stony Plain.

2:40 Transportation Infrastructure Priorities

Mr. Stier: Thank you Mr. Speaker. Albertans are very concerned that Alberta Transportation has an enormous infrastructure deficit and no plan. Through a FOIP request we discovered that the 2014 infrastructure deficit as of November 2013 for Alberta Transportation structures is $520 million. Deferred maintenance, however, which is the overall accumulated infrastructure deficit that was to be addressed in previous years, is now apparently at a whopping $1.4 billion. Minister, what is the plan for Alberta Transportation to address this enormous infrastructure deficit this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be the first to agree that we need to spend more money on transportation in this province. But as we all know, we had to face some realities here a couple of years ago, and there was $900 million cut out of the Transportation budget. So we're living within our means.

I was really happy to see, Mr. Speaker, that in this budget I had an extra $258 million added to the budget, bringing it to $758 million, to help with the rehabilitation of 2,500 kilometres of roads.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, one year ago the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View raised the issue of highway 8, which runs east from Calgary to the junction of highway 22 and the Trans-Canada, highway 1. It has had multiple fatalities in the last few years, climbing traffic counts, increased trucking, and has residents of Calgary demanding that Alberta Transportation address this very large safety issue. It is known that designs for twinning have already been completed. That being the case, why is this very vital link to the west of the city not on the '14-17 construction list, please?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very important piece of highway. We have designed the twinning, but as I said, we have to live within our means. We only have so many dollars. As Minister of Transportation it's my department's job to balance all the requests we have with the money we have. Highway 8 is part of the ring road in Calgary, and part of that project will twin part of highway 8 and the bridges. So until we've done the ring road, we can't continue with the twinning.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. Well, one last question, then. With the summer driving season now fast approaching, the mayors and reeves of southern Alberta have once again raised their concerns regarding highway 3, especially from Fort Macleod to the Crownsnest Pass, where enormous traffic congestion of highway transports and recreational traffic plague the efficiency caused by the bottleneck constrictions in that region. When will the minister fulfill the obligation made when the Premier confirmed in 2007 that it was to be constructed, please?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, every MLA and every municipality I meet with have priorities, including this one, and we have lots of them from all over the province. There's more to this province than Edmonton and Calgary and the ring roads and highway 63. We have to spend money all over rural Alberta. We'll try and balance the dollars with the projects we have. I hope this opposition takes note of how hard it is when we cut $900 million out of the budget. They're recommending to cut $5 billion out of the budget.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Two reminders. One, you have 35 seconds for a question; you have 35 seconds for an answer. I don't have any joy particularly when I have to stand up and cut someone off. So please review that. Those of you who have practised questions, please practise them with a second-hand, not a, more or less, guessing hand.

Number two, and perhaps even more importantly, is that one hon. member is celebrating a milestone birthday today, and I know that we will all want to give her our full attention and recognition as she turns a magic age. Please join me in congratulating the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for reaching a certain 50 club. Thank you.

Thirty seconds from now I'll ask the Clerk to announce the next order of business.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us continue, then, with Members' Statements, beginning with Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Cancer Awareness

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to commemorate Daffodil Month, the Canadian Cancer Society's annual fundraising initiative that focuses on the fight against cancer. Every day 500 Canadians are told that they have cancer. Estimates show that 2 out of every 5 Canadians are expected to develop the disease during their lifetime, with an estimated 1 out of 4 dying from it.

In 2012, an estimated 16,000 Albertans were diagnosed with cancer, and as current projections suggest, by 2030 this is expected to rise to an astonishing 24,000 Albertans annually. This is a 60 per cent increase compared to today's numbers. We all must do what we can to prevent this rise. Our government implemented Changing Our Future, a cancer prevention strategy that addresses this projected increase. Last session we passed Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, with the intent of eradicating tobacco use amongst our youth.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we don daffodil pins, a symbol of our strength and courage, in order to show our support for those currently battling cancer, for those that have won the fight, and those who have lost. Their struggles will never be forgotten. If you haven't yet, I urge you to show your support and purchase a pin, make a donation, or volunteer time to a local event. Together we can all make a difference in combating this illness and find a cure.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by St. Albert.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale Assessments

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The supports intensity scale, or SIS, is used to determine individual support needs. Last year we heard the previous minister of PDD explain again and again how effective this tool was. The new minister has indicated that while SIS is very important to how the government identifies the needs of vulnerable Albertans, it is just one of the many tools they use to do so.

Mr. Speaker, this is not what we hear from the front-line workers and the families of vulnerable Albertans who try to work within this broken system. These families have indicated that the system relies far too heavily on the supports intensity scale and that the questions asked are humiliating and often hard for the PDD clients to understand. Let me give you an example. If you were to participate in postsecondary education like regular people, would you need help to do so? Are you sexually active? Are you safe when sexually active? Do you need help to be sexually active? Do you ever sexually assault others? What assistance would you need to have a romantic relationship, up to and including an intimate one, like other regular people your age?

Imagine if the assistance given to your loved one relied on how you answered those questions. Imagine PDD clients knowing their livelihood is at stake when they're asked those questions. Imagine front-line workers, who see the holes in the system every single day, having to ask a person with developmental disabilities about their sex life and then attempt to gauge what assistance they should receive for the rest of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, also imagine what it is like to be told that the answers to those questions should be given in the context of a regular person. That is so offensive and out of line. I am shocked that anyone in this PC government or any reasonable person, for that matter, would find that language acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of SIS assessment appeals going on right now. These subject the clients and families to another round of demeaning questions by a different person. Please fix this broken system.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring attention to an issue that has been brought to my attention by St. Albert constituent Dr. Shawna Rodnunsky. Dr. Rodnunsky is an exceptional advocate for an illness that affects many Albertans, chronic fatigue syndrome, or CFS.

Individuals who suffer from chronic fatigue syndrome are often debilitated and unable to do normal daily activities. This illness is characterized by symptoms such as profound fatigue, muscle pain, memory loss, poor concentration, and depression. Despite vigorous research, we have not been able to identify the exact cause of CFS, and there are no direct tests to diagnose CFS.

While there is no single cause for this disease, many factors are said to be possible triggers for CFS. They include infections, immune system dysfunction, hypotension, nutritional deficiencies, and stress. Because of CFS's complex nature and our current insufficient medical understanding of this illness, many Albertans affected by it are not able to receive the proper care they need through Alberta Health Services. To date one of the only resources available to assist CFS patients is the Calgary Fatigue Centre, which is mainly staffed by naturopathic doctors. While holistic options to treat CFS can be helpful, conventional medical testing, prescribed medication, and treatments through AHS still play a major and irreplaceable role in successful CFS treatments.

However, because of high demand the Calgary Fatigue Centre alone cannot meet the medical needs of all CFS patients province-wide. Going to Calgary on a regular basis for CFS appointments is not a viable option for those who live outside of that city. It's crucial for AHS to create an organized system to assist those diagnosed with CFS and make sure their access to care is effective and timely.

Additionally, we must enhance the focus of CFS treatments in Alberta, and we must ensure that health care providers are well informed and trained to recognize and diagnose this illness. It's my sincere wish that AHS will expand its support . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'm sorry to interrupt, but the time has elapsed, as you know.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Calder and Edmonton-Centre. Did you have a tabling, Little Bow?

Mr. Donovan: No. I tabled it yesterday.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Let's take that one off, then, and move on to Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings here today. The first one is copies of a petition with 160 signatures from the Heritage Senior Stop-in Centre. The petition strongly opposes "any changes in the Pharmacare/Alberta Health Care program which will financially affect the seniors" here in the province.

The second tabling I have is 50 of more than 4,000 postcards our office has received asking the PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education here in Alberta. That's by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of petitions signed by individuals from across Alberta. Given that the pensions of front-line workers must be fair and provide decent retirement income and that legislated, non-negotiated changes to LAPP and PSPP are unfair and will gut retirement, they are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "pass legislation that will ensure any changes to the LAPP or the PSPP are the result of negotiations between Government and affected employees." You know what? I didn't do an exact count, but we're in the thousands. Thank you very much for that first tabling.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is hot off the press. It's the most recent issue of Municipal Connection, which is produced by Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. In the second paragraph they note: "AUMA's submission to [the President of Treasury Board and Finance minister] highlighted our member concerns that pension reform could cause issues with the attraction and retention of qualified staff in the municipal sector." I'll tell you that if we lose too many of those, it's going to be a problem.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're now at points of order, and I believe we have one, which was raised at around 1:58 p.m. I believe, if memory serves, it was the hon. Member for Airdrie rising on a point of order. Yes, it was.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically with regard to making allegations against another member of this House as well as imputing false or unavowed motives to another member or using abusive, insulting language to another member. I don't have the Blues in front of me, but the gist of what the Premier said – and he made it quite clear; he took a large part of his answer to make this accusation. He said that the hon. Official Opposition leader had somehow broken the law by refusing to obey an evacuation order. I will take you through (a) why that is completely false and (b) why that should be withdrawn by the hon. Premier. The hon. Premier should know better in this regard.

As you know, there was some terrible flooding in High River. The Member for Highwood, the Official Opposition leader, is the MLA for that area. Of course, immediately upon the flooding there was chaos. She was separated from her husband for a long period of time as she had been sand-bagging at a hospital during the initial moments of the flood and then had to be rescued thereafter. Then she was involved for two days after that with pet rescue, when they were able to rescue dozens of pets. Sadly, they had to deal with a lot of dead pets as well and take care of that issue. She worked basically around the clock for those two days.

Her husband at that time was helping her pick up residents around the town who were still in their homes and trying to get them to safer ground. As part of that they also offered their house, which was one of the few houses that did not get flooded, as temporary shelter for those displaced individuals.

After about three days, on June 24, the mayor then asked all residents, including the Official Opposition leader, to leave because they were going to begin to enforce the evacuation order for safety reasons, and they wanted everybody out. She immediately left and did not return until she was permitted to, after July 3.

I don't even know what to say about the Premier stating that the hon. member had done something wrong in this regard. Clearly, she followed the orders of police and the mayor of the town, who had asked for her help up until that point, and she had freely given it. As soon as she was asked to leave, she left. She did absolutely nothing wrong and certainly did not break the law as has been stated.

I think it's pretty clear that when you say someone has broken a law, that's a problem. We couldn't say that about another member in this House. We certainly have talked about the need to get answers regarding the issue of the Jasper Park Lodge and so forth, with regard to: please give us information, or we'll have to turn this over to the proper authorities. It's one thing to do that; it's quite another to say that someone has broken the law. Not only have they not broken the law, but it's an allegation that should not have been thrown at this hon. member, especially since she was actually one of many heroes of the flood during that time.

I would ask that the Premier withdraw those comments immediately. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make some comments regarding this matter. First of all, I would state the obvious, that neither the member opposite, who just spoke, nor me nor you, apparently, have the benefit of the Blues. I think it's very important to know exactly the words that were spoken.

That is not my recollection. I did not hear a direct allegation. I did hear a mention of something that has been mentioned numerous times coming from the other side in the context of questioning certain members of this side of the House, in fact repeated questions about criminal activity.

I think one needs to consider the context in which this exchange took place. When questions are being raised about potential criminal activity of one member of the House, if another member of the House in response raises a question without even a direct allegation, then I think that has to be taken into account. In fact, sir, just very recently I think you mentioned that when ruling on another point of order, where you have said that one needs to consider the context. It can't be one way on one side and another way on the other side of the House. Given that and given the fact that, at least in my recollection, there was not any direct allegation – the Premier did not say that the Member for Highwood broke the law. I certainly stand to be corrected if the Blues prove me wrong on that, but that is not my recollection of what the Premier said.

With that, I would say that there is no point of order here, sir.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much. I was moved by the words of the minister of agriculture to contribute to this discussion. I don't see how past comments by one side to the other side have anything to do with what happened today. Points of order are always ruled on for exactly who said what to whom today, not yesterday or the day before, unless, of course, there's a ruling by the Speaker, and then we would all be obeying it and there wouldn't be a point of order.

Unlike the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, I did hear the Premier accuse the Leader of the Official Opposition or make a statement that was casting aspersions upon her to the point that it was causing extra work for police services to have to evacuate her, that she had refused to go. That's just not the case. Especially around that particular incident that's just not necessary. I was really disappointed in the words of the Premier, speaking like that about someone that worked so hard in a disaster. I hope that the minister of agriculture is able to withdraw a wrong and a particularly nasty allegation and that we'll deal with the context that is before us today and with the words that were spoken by the minister to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

You know, these are the leaders, Mr. Speaker. If they can't manage to raise the tone and dignity, there is no hope for the rest for us. In particular, I set a high standard for the Premier as he was Government House Leader for so long and has sat in this Chamber as long as I have. Really, he should rise above that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, let me address this. I don't have the complete set of Blues, but I think I have enough here to come to a verdict as it were. At approximately 1:56 this afternoon the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition rose and said, among other things, the following:

If this Premier knows something untoward has happened, he owes it to Albertans to tell them. Not telling them is tantamount to covering it up. If this Premier refuses to answer, we will have no choice but to ask the RCMP to investigate whether taxpayer dollars were used to pay for a Jasper resort vacation for the former Premier. This Premier can clear the air right now. Did the former Premier actually have any legitimate business to justify being in Jasper at taxpayers' expense that weekend?

The Premier, according to the Blues, said the following in response:

Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the House that I have no information with respect to that, and I'm not about to scurry and get information with respect to that. The Auditor General is looking into the travel policy and the expense policy and has access to all the information and will report in due course. What I do know of that weekend is that there was somebody who was getting in the way of the law, and that was that hon. member, who refused to be evacuated from High River at a very serious time, setting a very bad example for her constituents.

Now, I know you're all aware of what Beauchesne's and HOC say, but I want to read the comments to you in any event because we've all been in this Chamber for almost two years at least, some of us much longer. We know what the cut and thrust of debate is all about. We also know that sometimes you have to accept two different versions of the same situation. But I can say this. I hope we can rise higher than some of the innuendo, frankly, that has come from both sides of the House. Let's be fair, applaud each other, and hang your heads where you want. It happens from one side to the other, from the other side to the other, and there's just so much of it that goes on that I'm surprised, frankly, we don't have a point of order on almost every question. You know what I'm talking about.

When we get into issues that are matters of inference or innuendo or insinuation or imputation of false motives or allegations – all of the "I" words you can think of and all of the "A" words you can think of – attributing aspersions, all of those things, you know that we're treading on very thin ice with each other. You know that somebody is going to lose their temper, and you know what it's going to result in.

Now, I wasn't personally there. I don't know what happened. I take the Member for Airdrie at his word when he says that his leader was there to do some sand-bagging and rescuing herself, helping out with pets, picking up residents, offering her home as a temporary shelter, and so on. I take him at his word because that's what we do here. By the same token, I take the hon. Premier and the hon. minister of agriculture at their word when they say that they didn't impute any false or unavowed motives there.

Now, we could interpret this in different ways perhaps, but I know what this is all aimed at. Generally speaking, in this House it's aimed at getting under each other's skin a little bit, right? But you have to be able to take as good as you give and vice versa, and I have seen that happen here time and time again. Asking the same question, hoping to get a different answer is one tactic. I understand that, too.

I'm going to accept this as two different versions of the same event, and I'm going to rely on Beauchesne's 494, which I will remind you of briefly. It'll take 35 seconds. Beauchesne's 494 says the following:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible.

"Intentional" is a key word here.

On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

One final sentence, perhaps two, coming out of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009. On page 510, at the top of the page, it reads as follows:

In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

That's where I'm going to rule on this one.

But I want to caution both sides, government members, particularly Executive Council, and opposition members as well, that you cannot do indirectly what you're not allowed to do directly, and I would ask you to please elevate the tone and timbre of the debate in this House. We have a long weekend coming up. Some of us will be celebrating Easter. Some of us will be celebrating some time off with our families, being from different faiths. Let's take this time to reflect on our overall demeanour in this House. Hopefully, we can elevate the debate to a higher level when Tuesday rolls around.

In the meantime let's go on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 8

Appropriation Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, 2014.

The Appropriation Act, 2014, will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government of Alberta for the 2014-15 fiscal year. The schedule to the act provides amounts that were presented in greater detail by the 2014-15 government and Legislative Assembly estimates, tabled on March 6, 2014. These estimates were subsequently debated in Committee of Supply and the legislative policy committees.

Mr. Speaker, as I said on budget day, the actions we took in the previous budget were tough but necessary. We needed to bend the curve on annual spending increases, and we did that. Budget 2014 keeps Alberta on a disciplined fiscal path with a modest 3.7 per cent increase in our operational spending. An increase, yes, but well below the 5 per cent increase you would see under a population plus inflation scenario. At the same time our revenue outlook has improved due to higher tax revenues, higher energy prices, strong investment returns, and a lower dollar. This improved revenue picture combined with our focused effort to contain spending has set the stage for our government to do something this spring that it has not been able to do in six years: present a fully balanced budget.

The real story of Budget 2014 is what we are doing for Albertans. We're investing in communities and families, we're living within our means, and we're opening new markets to grow our economy. With Budget 2014 government is focused on working hard every day to create a better quality of life for all Albertans. It is the next step in the building Alberta plan, a forward-looking action plan sharply focused on addressing the needs of Albertans today while meeting the challenge of rapid population growth head-on without raising taxes, Mr. Speaker.

As you know, Alberta's population has reached the 4 million mark, surpassed it, and is expected to reach 5 million within the next decade. There are lots of positives to that. More people living and working here means jobs get filled, the economy grows, and government revenues will increase. But the influx of new Albertans also increases the demand for infrastructure, programs, and services. Budget 2014 responds to these growth pressures with priority-driven infrastructure spending.

I know the hon. members opposite were talking about infrastructure deficits, Mr. Speaker. They're as bad as cash deficits. In order to compensate for that, we're building 155 school projects, seven postsecondary projects, 24 health facility projects, 258 kilometres of new and twinned roads, 2,500 kilometres of rehabilitated highways, and there's more than $5 billion to support municipal infrastructure. There is also a $1 billion increase in core program spending in areas that Albertans have told us are a priority for them like health care, K to 12 education, postsecondary education, and human services.

As we welcome the next million Albertans, our future does look bright. We're outperforming Canada and the United States, and we are expected to lead the provinces in 2014 in economic growth and employment. Our unemployment is among the lowest in Canada. In spite of our blessings, though, we must remain prudent and flexible. Factors beyond our control can dramatically affect our financial situation; for example, the 2008 meltdown, energy price volatility, and, of course, natural disasters such as the June 2013 floods.

We're preparing for the unexpected, growing the contingency account to $5 billion this year. We're also saving for the future, setting aside money in good and challenging times with a legislated savings plan that will see our savings grow to $26 billion in 2017. We're leveraging a portion of Alberta's growing savings to encourage innovation, support labour force development, and position Alberta for future transformational opportunities with the creation of a social innovation endowment, an agriculture and food innovation endowment, heritage trade scholarships, and the Alberta future fund.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, Alberta is well positioned to move ahead. We have a growing economy and a balance sheet that is the envy of most jurisdictions in North America. Those strong fundamentals are why Alberta has a triple-A credit rating, that allows us to borrow at the lowest rates available. With interest rates at near 50-year lows, there has never been a better time to borrow, and that's what we intend to do. The reason is simple: we must keep building Alberta. If we don't borrow to build now, we risk falling even further behind on that infrastructure deficit that was mentioned by the Wildrose member, burdening the next generation with years of catch-up on infrastructure. When construction costs and interest rates are higher, it will be that much more expensive for us to build.

Budget 2014 calls for $19 billion in capital spending over the next three years. One-third of the capital plan will be paid for with cash. The other two-thirds will be financed through direct borrowing or P3s, whichever makes more sense. It's important to note that we have strict rules in place for borrowing. Borrowing costs are limited to 3 per cent of operational revenue. We must protect Alberta's triple-A credit rating. We can only borrow for capital, and there must be a clear debt repayment plan. Government is setting aside money now to repay the bonds when they come due, cash over and above our savings, over and above our operating.

In exchange Albertans get tangible assets like schools, roads, and health facilities when and where they need them the most. The comment has been made that these don't appreciate; however, I would commit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the assessed value of many of the assets that we have on our books is considerably higher than what we have on the books. Alberta is the only province with net assets, currently about $44 billion in net assets. Under Budget 2014 our net assets are expected to grow to about $49 billion by 2017.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in keeping with Budget 2014's prudent revenue forecasting and projections, the amounts in this act demonstrate the government's commitment to managing the growth in the province's operating expense. At the same time Budget 2014 reflects the priorities that Albertans told the government are most important. We're spending smarter and focusing on providing excellent public programs and services while investing in needed infrastructure for today and tomorrow. Budget 2014 is a good budget for all Albertans. I ask all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 8.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 9

Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's going to be a busy day. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 9, the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014.

Alberta's public-sector pension plans are currently on an unsustainable path. While we're not in a crisis situation now – and we've readily said that many times – without adequate changes we could be down the road. Today we're in a situation where thousands of members are enrolled in plans created two generations ago. Today people are living longer, and there is a decreasing ratio of workers to retirees. Today investment return trends are not as high as in the past, yet pension plans depend more and more on volatile investment returns to cover the cost of pensions. So much has changed in four decades, yet our pension plans have not adapted to keep up with the times.

Here we are in 2014, working with a pension system that was designed for another era and another workforce. We are at a critical juncture in time, where these significant challenges threaten to undermine public-sector pension plans. Yet there remain those who claim that Alberta's public-sector pension plans are sustainable as is. Labour groups are trying to convince their members that there's no problem. They expect their members and employers to increase their contributions year after year, ignoring the fact that they already pay among the highest costs in Canada. They seem to think that crossing our fingers and hoping for high interest rates is the solution for the future. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not.

All signs point to significant problems ahead if we don't act now. Don't just take it from me; experts around the world are warning of the danger ahead. If anyone wants a good understanding of what we and other jurisdictions are facing, they really should read a good book, Mr. Speaker, The Third Rail, by Jim Leech and Jacque McNish. Jim Leech is the former CEO of the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan and had this to say in his book:

Rarely does the pension argument acknowledge the root cause of the retirement meltdown: record numbers of workers are retiring and living longer than anyone anticipated; pension funds have not built in sufficient surpluses to cope with market and demographic stresses; and, employers are increasingly unable or unwilling to shoulder ballooning pension costs.

Experts like Mr. Leech are sounding alarm bells, and jurisdictions across North America are responding. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and P.E.I. have all made drastic changes to their public-sector pension plans recently to make their plans more sustainable. Saskatchewan changed their plans from defined benefit to defined contribution decades ago. In Nova Scotia they've reduced pension benefits and applied some of those changes to the benefits plan members have already earned. In New Brunswick they've moved from a defined benefit plan to a shared-risk target benefit model, where plan members are no longer guaranteed a set amount of benefits in retirement.

Alberta's pension plans are in many ways in better shape than those of our neighbours to the east and across North America; however, the fact remains that our plans are structured the same way as these other plans. Even though we're not yet in the eye of the storm like places such as Detroit or New Brunswick, if we don't change the path we're on, we will be in the same situation down the road. The time has come to tackle the real problem of these plans; that is, the design of the plans.

What I'm putting forward today is a very moderate and common-sense approach to getting these plans back on track, protecting all benefits that have already been earned while making modest adjustments to the add-on benefits. What you see in this bill is different from what we initially proposed last fall. We consulted with plan members and employers directly and listened to their feedback. The result is the changes we are now proposing, changes that are more modest than what we had proposed earlier while still effective in steering us back to the path of sustainability.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre tabled some letters from the AUMA saying that the pensions were a recruitment and retention tool. We agree, Mr. Speaker. What she failed to also say is that those same employers recommended that we change the early retirement subsidy from the 85-50, not get rid of it but change it, to a 90-60. That's where it came from.

Ms Blakeman: Actually, it doesn't say that.

Mr. Horner: Another letter.

Ms Blakeman: You'll have to table it.

Mr. Horner: I will.

Let me be clear that we are not changing the benefit that pensioners currently receive. Let me repeat: we are not changing the benefit that pensioners currently receive. We are not – and I want to repeat this as well, Mr. Speaker – changing the core benefit formula, and we are not retroactively applying changes to benefits that have already been earned. Now that we all understand what is not up for discussion, let's walk through some of the planned changes.

In our consultation process back in the fall plan members and employers made it very clear that it's important for our pension changes to recognize long service. As a result, as I mentioned earlier, we are modifying but not eliminating early retirement subsidies in the local authorities, public service, and management employees pension plans. Currently LAPP, or the local authorities pension plan, and PSPP, the public service pension plan, have an 85 factor while members of MEPP, the management employees pension plan, have an 80 factor. Under the planned changes all three plans will have a 60-90 factor where plan members can receive an unreduced pension if they work to at least 60 years old and their combined age and years of service equals 90. That will be the new subsidized early retirement.

Individuals will also collect their full pension if they work until the age of 65. We are not increasing the age of retirement, Mr. Speaker. Those who want to retire early can still do so, starting at the age of 55. But for every year that they are short in the 60-90 factor, they will take a 5 per cent reduction in the pension benefits earned after 2015, so only on earnings after 2015.

It's important to emphasize that retirement is a highly individualized decision. People take many factors into consideration, including whether or not the pension they have earned up to that point is enough to live on. So if a person decides that he or she does not have enough pension income to retire yet, they can continue to work a bit longer. In that extra time the person will add to his or her pension benefits, increase the final average salary, and lower the early retirement deductions. It isn't as long as people might think before they have the same amount as they would have had under the current rules. In some cases it's only a few months.

I also want to point out that most people in the plans today do not retire at 55. The average age of retirement in these plans is actually over 60, even with the current early retirement subsidies.

The next set of modest changes that we're introducing is to target cost-of-living increases instead of guaranteeing them. By targeting the cost-of-living increase instead of guaranteeing it, we give plan sponsors more tools and flexibility to manage the plans. The changes that we're making will create a safety valve that enables plan managers to withhold COLA in very bad years when they feel it's appropriate to do so. However, if things turn around, a catch-up COLA could be paid in a subsequent year. Mr. Speaker, what we're saying here is that if the plans are doing as well as some out there say that they will, then there is no issue in paying the COLA every year. But if the plans aren't, then the plan sponsors should have the ability to react.

Currently plan managers only have one lever to address the rising cost of pension plans, and that is to increase contribution rates for plan members and employees. That simply isn't sustainable, Mr. Speaker, as even the Auditor General has pointed out.

This leads me to the next change that we're introducing, a contribution rate cap. Alberta public servants currently pay among the highest contribution rates in Canada. In fact, over the past 20 years contribution rates in our province have doubled. That's a significant amount of additional money coming off plan members' paycheques just to maintain the same level of benefits. Taxpayer-funded employers and plan members are telling us that the plans are already too expensive.

The passage of this act will allow us to establish a cap, but it should be pointed out that we have not yet determined what that cap will be. We will not set a cap without significant consultation with employers and labour groups just as we have been doing all along. Mr. Speaker, I would also add that the work document from when we talk to both the labour unions and to the plan members around the contribution cap, the conversation we're going to have, will be available very, very soon.

One of the other changes that we'll be implementing is a move to joint governance of the plans, and this is something that the unions have been asking us about for a period of time. Currently the unions claim employees do not have a share in the governance of these plans. Well, this is simply not true. Employees and their unions have representatives on the LAPP, PSPP, and the Special Forces Pension Board. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they have half the representation on those boards. They've had the power for over 20 years to recommend benefit changes. They have also had the power to increase contribution rates. They have done the latter, but they have never – never – done the former.

So why give more governance responsibilities to the unions? Well, we agree with them that the people who bear the costs and risks should have a say in the governance of those plans. They will have joint sponsorship with employers, which will allow them to decide on the benefits and the funding and the investment policies of the plans. The plans will also be managed by professional trustees, whose job it is to make sure the plans are financially sound and that they can deliver the benefits in the most cost-effective way. The changes we are making will reduce both cost and risk, which will decrease the potential for unsustainable future unfunded liabilities.

Mr. Speaker, across this country, across this nation, across North America, even in Europe – the Dutch had to make changes to their pensions, and some would say that that's where defined benefits came from – the case for pension reform is very, very clear.

I'm going to give the final word again to Mr. Jim Leech as I read another excerpt from his book. He says:

Our pension plans were not built to accommodate so many greying and long-living boomers. And unsteady markets can no longer make up for these structural failures. But none of these weaknesses have to be fatal if we repair them now.

He goes on to say:

If we ignore these reforms, we will bequeath future taxpayers and workers with a pension bill that . . . no one can afford. The solution to our crisis is smarter pension coverage, not less.

I agree fully with Mr. Leech's assessment.

The solution to the challenges we face is not to eliminate public pension plans as some in the opposition would say but to manage them in a better way. Contrary to what the labour groups are saying, this was my number one priority all along, to protect Alberta's defined benefit plans for the long term. These reforms, Mr. Speaker, will do just that.

I'd like to say thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 9.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10
Employment Pension (Private Sector) Plans
Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Moving right along, I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 10, the Employment Pension (Private Sector) Plans Amendment Act, 2014.

This proposed act will amend the Employment Pension Plans Act, which was passed by this Assembly with the support of all parties in the fall of 2012. The act was based upon the recommendations of the 2008 report put forward by the Joint Expert Panel on Pension Standards. The panel was struck when the governments of Alberta and British Columbia appointed a variety of experts to look into ways to harmonize and modernize the two provinces' private-sector pension plans legislation. While this act has been passed, it has not yet been proclaimed. As part of their recommendations the panel proposed a new type of pension plan called the targeted benefit plan and suggested that rules be developed to allow a defined benefit plan in the private sector to retroactively convert accrued defined benefits into targeted benefits.

For a number of years employers have been bringing forward concerns regarding the sustainability of their defined benefit plans. These employers have expressed a lot of interest in the target benefits proposal. In response to the interest expressed by employers, a policy change is required to permit the retroactive conversion. This proposed amendment reflects that policy change.

The conversion does transfer some risk to plan members. However, the regulation rules, developed in consultation with stakeholders, will be drafted to equitably deal with the risk transfer. It's important to note that the regulation rules will ensure members are aware of this risk and in agreement with the change before a plan may convert to a target benefit. Provisions to clarify the process for conversion to target benefit will be included as part of the regulation following discussion with stakeholders.

In addition, the changes I'm bringing forward in this amendment act also address housekeeping changes for consistency of wording. I want to be clear that this act does not affect the public-sector pension plans. Public-sector pensions are governed under a different act entirely, and their sustainability changes have been dealt with under a different bill, as we just talked about.

Let me explain to my colleagues in this Assembly why we believe this change is necessary. Many employers today are in a precarious situation when it comes to funding their employee pension plans. Their defined benefit pension plans are struggling to keep up with their pension promises, similar to the problems that we are facing in the public sector. People are living longer and, as such, collect pensions longer than they used to.

Pension plans are maturing, with the number of people collecting pensions from the plan being greater or equal to the number of people earning benefits under the plan. Factors such as plan maturity are causing ever-increasing costs to maintain a pension plan. As a result, pension plan sponsors increasingly rely on market returns to support plan funding.

When those investments don't work out, as we saw in 2008, the plans get into the situation where they develop unfunded liabilities. In the private sector the burden of these liabilities often falls to the employers alone. This has made it increasingly difficult for them to keep up pension contributions. Employers we've met with have been quite frank, Mr. Speaker. They need more flexibility to deal with the skyrocketing costs of the plans, or they may stop offering them altogether.

Mr. Speaker, this government believes pension plans play an important role in retirement income. Currently only 1 in 6 private-sector employees in Alberta participates in a pension plan, and this is in danger of decreasing further if the existing plan costs aren't addressed. It's in the best interests of Albertans to ensure that whatever pension plan they're enrolled in, whether it's in the public sector or in the private sector, is sustainable in the long term. It is hoped these changes will give plan members peace of mind in knowing their plans will be there in retirement and ease the financial burden on the employers.

Target benefit plans were initially meant for union-sponsored, collectively bargained pension plans as a means of dealing with contribution limits tied to collective agreements. However, employers sponsoring non collectively bargained pension plans have also expressed an interest in these plans as a means of controlling costs. A target benefit plan establishes a level of benefits that it intends to pay to members at retirement and sets contribution rates so that there is a high probability that the target benefits will be paid to pensioners. However, benefits are not guaranteed and can be reduced if the plan is in financial difficulty.

The Employment Pension Plans Act permits all plans to apply target benefit rules for benefits earned in the future. The regulation coming out of the act allows collectively bargained plans to retroactively convert their defined benefit to target benefit based on rules that have already been developed.

Currently other plans do not have the same option. To maximize the cost-effectiveness of the conversion to target benefit, an employer needs to be able to convert all defined benefits into target benefits. In return, our regulation will include a clause that stipulates: plan members must be in agreement before a conversion can happen. I want to repeat that, Mr. Speaker. In return, our regulation will include a clause that stipulates: plan members must be in agreement before a conversion can happen. In fact, a threshold of agreement must be met in order for the conversion to take place. This will mean that plan members will be consulted, and if a significant portion of members disagree with the conversion, it cannot go through.

We believe this is a fair solution to all parties involved, and I hope that all of my colleagues here will agree. In an era when pension plan coverage is very low, legislation should be aimed at supporting those who have pension plans to continue to do so and encouraging new plans to be developed. This amendment will contribute to that goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 10.

Third Reading

Bill 6

New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Acting Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today in third reading of Bill 6.

I believe that Bill 6, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014, only strengthens one of the most important pieces of legislation that we've brought through this House in quite some time. This helps to protect the largest purchase that most of us will ever make. I'd like to thank all the members on all sides of this House for their supportive comments during second reading and Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill 6 contains some minor modifications to an existing act, and it proposes definitions that provide more clarity to the act. In discussion during Committee of the Whole there was an amendment introduced to extend the minimum warranty coverage. In fact, our legislation already has the best minimum coverage in Canada, and the regulation requires insurers to offer an option of extra coverage on building envelopes. Bill 6 also included significant consultation with stakeholders. Further increases to minimum warranty terms would have an extra cost on the building industry and homebuyers. I recognize the spirit of the proposed coverage, but it could be unnecessarily hard on the building industry to extend warranty coverage terms without consulting them first.

With respect to the $750 owner-builder exemption application fee, discussed during Committee of the Whole, it is important to note that this fee is not comparable to the registration fee as these are two different processes. The $95 registration fee is for development and maintenance of the program and comparable to other jurisdictions. The $75 fee offsets costs of administering owner-builder applications, Mr. Speaker. There is a lot more work for the department for owner-builder applications, and the $750 cost reflects it. The new requirements ensure that Albertans can still build their own homes, without warranty if they choose, while still protecting subsequent purchasers. This fee is not part of the legislation.

Other amendments will need to be made to the regulations: section references will need to be changed, some sections will need to be removed, and regulations for rental-use designation removals and appeals will be included. Where apartments are converted into condominiums, other provisions will need to be completed.

I ask for the support of all members for Bill 6. It brings more clarity to legislative provisions and follows stakeholder consultations in 2013. To recap, Mr. Speaker, this legislation provides amendments to the technical implementation of legislation that protects Albertans and helps build stronger communities, issues which we all agree on. With your support for the new legislation, we will begin work on regulation amendments to be in place later this year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 6.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 7 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 7, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2014.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 7 amends our personal and corporate income tax acts. These are mostly technical and administrative amendments. They parallel federal tax changes and will maintain consistency between federal and Alberta legislation. The amendments will also implement policy approved by this government in November 2013 to introduce a tax regime for qualifying environmental trusts, or QETs, in Alberta to facilitate the accumulation of funds for future site reclamation.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed tax regime for QETs is revenue neutral and simply shifts the tax burden from the corporation to the QET. The tax credit provided under this regime eliminates the double tax that would otherwise occur as both the corporation and the QET are required to pay tax on the income each year. Corporations are currently allowed to deduct their QET contributions in computing income, and these amendments do not change that.

We appreciate the questions from the many members who took the time to consider this legislation and put forward their support and comments. I would like to thank the Member for Airdrie, who noted the support of his party for this legislation. The Member for Airdrie recognized the benefits of qualifying environmental trusts and the need to align Alberta's corporate and personal income tax legislation with the federal legislation. Mr. Speaker, the member is correct when he says that this is a good thing. The introduction of the QETs in Alberta is fiscally responsible and provides the most tax-efficient way to accumulate funds for future reclamation.

We also appreciate the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Centre when she said that she supports putting money away for the reclamation of pipelines and oil sands sites. With regard to concerns about the bankruptcy of a company the benefit of a QET is that the money accumulated in the QET is protected. Money can only be pulled out of a QET for site reclamation purposes.

Thank you also to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his questions about how trusts qualify. Mr. Speaker, the eligibility rules for QETs are set out under the federal Income Tax Act and must be met for a trust to qualify as a QET regardless of where the trust is established.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for his questions. With regard to his question about the number of QETs in Alberta, there were no QETs in Alberta in 2013. However, we do expect a handful of pipeline QETs to be established in the near future now that pipeline corporations are required to start funding future reclamation. We anticipate that oil sands corporations will also use QETs. However, given that the regime is just being introduced, we're not sure yet how many of these to expect in the long run.

With regard to the member's question about safeguards, Mr. Speaker, the money can only be pulled out of a QET to pay for the reclamation as prescribed by the federal Income Tax Act. Furthermore, QETs can be used by pipeline and oil sands corporations of any size.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support that has been put forward in this House for this bill, and I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 7.

Bill 8 Appropriation Act, 2014 (continued)

[Adjourned debate April 17: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, after such a nice speech by the Finance minister and knowing that this has been a very, very talked-about budget, I'm actually going to just say a few words on this budget, just a few words, and hopefully we can go home early after one or two others.

Mr. Eggen: I don't think so. No.

Mr. Anderson: No? We can't go early?

Mr. Eggen: The school bell goes when the school bell goes, right?

Mr. Anderson: Oh, fine. It's almost Easter, goodwill and all that sort of thing.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Obviously, the Wildrose has been very clear in its opposition to this budget. We feel that it is a grossly irresponsible budget. We feel that it is incumbent upon the government to pass a budget that sees both a balanced budget with no debt being accumulated and one that builds the infrastructure and provides the services that Albertans need and require. We do not think that this is an overly difficult task given the massive revenues that we are realizing as a province. We have record overall revenues coming into our coffers, record resource revenues coming into the coffers, unemployment, obviously, is very low, and lots of taxes are being paid. There is just no reason to be borrowing over $5 billion this year alone. That is not a responsible thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I wish we had the resources of government, where we could see all of the requests that have come in from the departments for different infrastructure, all the requests from Alberta Health Services as they happen, and all the requests from the school boards with regard to schools and so forth so that we would have the information and data at our disposal to put together a prioritized infrastructure priority list that we could put online so everyone would see what the Wildrose proposed $4 billion in infrastructure spending this year would build and what it would not build.

There's no doubt that we're not going to get into a bidding war with the PCs. That's not who we are. We are the party of fiscal responsibility and balanced budgets. We will never be able to outbid the PCs on spending, nor do we wish to.

That's something that we wish we could do. We wish we could put that information up, and there's no doubt that there would be some projects that might be deferred six months, some that might be deferred a year, some that might be deferred a year and a half. Others, like that wonderful, beautiful federal building, that we're all going to be moving into very soon against our wishes – we would defer those types of projects permanently, of course, as we would things like funding for carbon capture and storage and things like that.

There are ways to save in this budget. There are ways to build what we need while still balancing the budget, and we think that a government that is doing its job properly would be able to marry those two. We shouldn't be ones to play this, essentially, fearmongering card, where we say: if we don't borrow, we can't build anything. That's just not true. If we don't borrow, obviously we wouldn't be able to build as much as fast. But if we put our heads together, I am sure we could find a way to build without going into debt, with the amount of revenues we have right now.

We are in our highest income-earning years as a province right now. Things will continue, I hope, to be good for a while as we develop the oil sands and as the price of our resources remains high, but that will not last forever. At some point, in 10 years, 20 years, 30 years down the road, whenever it is, oil will not be worth what it is today. We already see the amazing technologies being made in alternative energy. Those will over time drive the price of oil down, down, down just like the price of other resources over time has gone down, whether that be timber or coal or whatever. It has gone down not because we have run out of timber or coal; it has gone down because the demand for those resources has gone down. That's something that needs to be realized by this government.

In our high income-earning years we should not be going into debt. We should be building what we need. We should be being very careful with our pennies and putting as much as we can into high-priority infrastructure projects. I absolutely agree with that. But we should be balancing the budget, saving for the future, and not going into debt.

I think that we have a window left of 10 to 25 or 30 years where that's going to be possible, where we can put a lot of money away and not go into debt and have a mountain of investment capital to replace our ocean of resource wealth that we have. That would be one heck of a legacy to leave to our kids, that kind of financial security, knowing that we have that capital, that we will be able to use the interest for dozens and dozens of years over the next century. As Mr. Dinning, in his latest column in the Calgary Herald, said: we want to make sure we can be prosperous and have the ability to maintain our programs and use the wealth accrued from the oil sands for the next century or more. That's an incredible vision, and it's a vision that I and many others have in this House and in this province.

We can do that, but we can't do it if we're borrowing 20, 30 times more than we're saving. That doesn't work. We can't do that. [interjections] Or if it's 10 times more or five times more. It's amazing that the Finance minister still argues this point. They're putting away a few hundred million, and they're borrowing five billion, and somehow he doesn't think it's reasonable to say that they're borrowing 10 times more than they're saving. Of course, they are. Anybody with a calculator can figure that out. He talks about infrastructure and the importance of that. Of course it's important, but we can build what we need without borrowing and balance the budget. That is our number one critique of this.

You know, I don't understand why the government opposite doesn't understand where Albertans are at on this issue. We have polled this and polled it and talked to hundreds of people, as they have. I don't understand how they cannot be getting the same information that we are getting. Albertans agree with us on this. The reason for their low popularity right now is not because of one person going on one flight to South Africa. That's not the reason they're at 15 per cent in the polls. That's not the reason why they're about a point ahead of the Liberal party right now. That's not the reason. The reason is because they have lost the confidence of Albertans on a number of key files, and one of those key files is the finance file.

If you look at their trust rating on that, they have a negative trust rating of over 70 per cent on finance right now in this province, about 72 per cent, and an approval rating in the high teens on that. Now, if they want to go into an election with that kind of approval, well, I guess they go into an election with that. But they shouldn't. They need to turn this ship around. I hope that whomever the successor is – I'm assuming it's probably not someone from that caucus over there. If it's someone from the outside, I hope that they run and are elected on a platform of balancing the budget, not going into debt, and making sure that they are balancing the consolidated budget on a go-forward basis. I really hope for the best for that individual, whomever it is.

Mr. Horner: Are you going to throw your hat in?

Mr. Anderson: No. I know you're going to throw your hat in, though. That should be interesting. You should take a shot at it. It'd be interesting. Yeah. I don't know; maybe I'll vote for you.

Anyway, we do look forward to that. That will be the happiest "I told you so" ever given when I get to look across and see them say: we are committed to not going into debt. When they say that in this House, with that new leader, I'm going to be as pleased as punch, and I'll give that person a standing ovation for doing it. I will. Mark my words. I will stand up and applaud that man, even if he's on that side, if he says that. I'm looking forward to it. Make me stand and do that. I beg you.

Mr. Dorward: It could be a woman.

Mr. Anderson: It could be a woman. Absolutely it could be. I think the next elected Premier of Alberta will be a woman, in fact. [interjections] She sure will.

Anyway, how would we do that? I mean, we could go over all of these. Obviously, we as the Wildrose have put out our 2014 budget recommendations, and several of them, of course, deal with leadership at the top with regard to MLA salaries, cabinet minister pay, the size of the Public Affairs Bureau, bonuses, severance packages, government travel, all of these things. These are all things we can look at and show an example to Albertans on. That is another reason why this government is having troubles with the people right now. They've really lost trust with regard to walking the walk and showing an example. I think that's pretty clear.

We would end corporate welfare. That used to be standard operating procedure for this PC Party. It was a proud tradition. At some point, you know, over the last several years that has gone by the wayside. We are guaranteeing loans for billions of dollars to companies like North West Upgrading. We're giving hundreds of millions of dollars to companies like Shell Canada and so forth. It's very disappointing that we're doing that, that we're picking winners and losers in the economy. We need to get out of the business of being in business, as the PC Party once was.

We need to really look at the bureaucracy, of course, and find a way that we can limit the growth of the size of the bureaucracy and get more jobs and positions and money flowing to the front lines – more nurses, more social workers, people on the front lines – and fewer people working in the offices at AHS and other bureaucracies of government. We'd like to see a real stress on that, to improve social services without necessarily having to spend more but simply moving the resources to higher priority areas.

We've already talked about infrastructure, of course, and zero-based budgeting, which we would say is much different than this results-based budgeting process. I hope that at some point they find a way to decrease FTEs, full-time equivalents, there on the government side through this results-based budgeting process. They have not yet been able to. Hopefully, one day they will.

We believe that every dollar should be justified every three years in each department so that we can make sure that programs don't become outdated and positions don't become outdated and so forth, so we can justify every cent that's being spent in government and do so in a way that doesn't affect services negatively.

Obviously, we believe we can strengthen the Auditor General's office a bit more so that he's doing more value-for-money audits. Roughly two-thirds to three-quarters of his time is spent on essentially auditing the reports of government, that they put on their annual reports and so forth. I don't particularly think that that's an overly effective use of his time. If he wants to do that, great; then give him the resources to do that. But also give him the resources to do more value-for-money audits, because every dollar spent there saves us $10, as far as I'm concerned.

Establish a waste-buster program protected by whistle-blower legislation. Let's get the public service involved in finding waste and identifying waste and blowing the whistle on waste and find a way to reward them for blowing the whistle and protect their jobs and so forth.

Those are some of the ideas that we would put forward. I feel very strongly that we'd be able to balance the budget, not go into debt, build the infrastructure that Albertans require, commit to the services that Albertans need, and do so in a fiscally responsible manner. We will not be supporting this budget because it does not do those things.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I hope that everyone – everyone – in this Legislature except the Finance minister would oppose this budget. I'm sure that will happen. I'm sure it will.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of interest to make some comments on this 2014 budget. It took a long time, I think, to sort through this budget because of the Byzantine sort of way in which budgets are presented these days in this Legislature. So many people have made comments about the way that both assets and liabilities and expenditures have been presented over these past number of months.

Certainly, on the very most global level, I would be so appreciative – I think all Albertans would – if we rationalized the way we present these numbers so that people can understand. You have money in, money out. You have revenues; you have expenditures. We don't need all of these separate budgets, that take, as I say, sort of a PhD in economics to be able to sort through. The Auditor General, who's been quoted so often here – I think his ears are burning because he probably doesn't appreciate it – does say, certainly, that the way that we do report here is less than transparent. I think that all Albertans would appreciate a way by which they could enter it into their calculator and find a more clear balance between whether we're in debt, where our revenues are, and how we are spending them.

Again, as an Alberta New Democrat it's very important for me to ensure that we are moving the wealth of this province in an equitable way to reflect the hard work and the investment that Albertans have put into this province over their working lifetimes and retirement, to ensure that we invest in our young people so that they are getting the very best education possible and that no one is excluded from that education due to how much money they happen to have in their pocket, that we are investing to strengthen our public health system so that it is there now and for the future and that it is a publicly delivered system, that can provide the security for you and your family to know that that public health system will be there for when you need it for yourself and for your family.

Unfortunately, considering the great wealth that we have in this province – I mean, this is always the subtext of so many of these budgets that I've seen over the years. Yes, a lot of money flows through this province, but, no, a lot of the money doesn't hit the ground and stay with value-added investment that can benefit the most people for the longest period of time.

You know, I listen as an English teacher and a student of language and so often hear how misrepresented our financial position is and where the money is going. We hear this so often: oh, well, we all have to tighten our belts. First one, right? Well, this is a cliché, Mr. Speaker, but it also is a deliberate misrepresentation of the fact that (a) our economy is growing at a greater rate than most places around the industrialized world and (b) our population is growing, too, commensurate with or even exceeding that economic growth rate. You cannot expect Albertans, who live inside a growing economy and a growing population, to swallow the tale that somehow we are in a period of austerity and we all have to tighten our belts. This is neither logical, Mr. Speaker, nor is it a reflection of the world which regular Albertans live in every single day. When we as Alberta New Democrats travel from Fort McMurray down to Medicine Hat, we see each of these jurisdictions in between growing, both in population and economy.

So as a responsible government, as the Legislature disbursing billions of dollars to provide essential social services, we must make sure that we are growing those responsibilities which we have been vested here in the Legislature, commensurate with the population and commensurate with the growth of the economy. If we fail to do so, then we are abdicating that responsibility. We are not fulfilling that responsibility, and you end up with all of the trouble that we see through essential things that we own together, that public interest, which erodes year by year, albeit more slowly, probably, than in some other conservative jurisdictions because we have that extra money to be able to put back in there. But slowly but surely, Mr. Speaker, the public interest is being eroded, and in 2014 there is no exception to that erosion. This budget maintains the status quo, where it doesn't really do much for the future well-being of all Albertans together in an equitable, in an equal, and in a socially just manner.

This latest budget is a prime example of how this government is out of touch with regular Alberta families and with the economic pressures that take place even when you're in an economic boom or in a period of economic growth, where the costs for an average family living in this province often exceeds the wealth that is heading back to that same family through their work and through the public services that we're meant to provide here in the province.

So many examples of ways by which this great wealth that flows through this province fails to touch regular Albertan families, and the idea of this trickle down, this sort of measly idea of crumbs, perhaps, dispersing through the economy is more of an insult than it is a reflection of what actually does happen: $150 million in in-kind royalties to oil corporations that, in fact, should be paying us for our natural resources, not the other way around; $8.6 million dollars in corporate subsidies to industry in the postsecondary education budget; and a million-dollar increase to the Premier's office as well.

Middle-class families are also feeling the effects of this year's budget, with no real investment in postsecondary education despite a $147 million cut last year; no funding for full-day kindergarten, part of the promise that brought this current government into power at this particular juncture; a $120 million cut to seniors' drug benefits; and the continuation, Mr. Speaker, of, I think, the very, very serious problem of the flat-tax, which demonstrates very clearly that middle-income people actually pay more tax in Alberta than in other jurisdictions around the country.

With extra revenue coming in, Mr. Speaker, this budget should have been a really great opportunity for this government to actually invest in Alberta's families. Instead, once again they've been left behind, and as I say with the bills coming in, people are finding it difficult even though you have employment in the family. The PCs have continued their attack on the most vulnerable in this province. Not only have they given up, it seems, on the idea to eliminate child poverty, cut $20 million from PDD, with huge cuts to programs that help low-income families get out of poverty, and funded Human Services well below the rate of inflation and population growth. This government, in my mind, does not understand the priorities of Albertans.

Fortunately, we do have a democracy, though, so we do have other voices, both inside and outside the Legislature, that will struggle for a more equitable change. Our party, the Alberta New Democrats, will continue to fight for regular Alberta families that are squeezed by these policies and to stand up for vulnerable Albertans who are attacked in this budget.

We expected a lot more, Mr. Speaker, in this year's budget, and quite honestly we believe that average Albertans did expect more as well. Right from the start of the session, for example, we've been talking about this idea of prosperity but how the prosperity is not making its way down to regular Albertan families. A tale of two Albertas, I venture to say.

Some examples, I think, of how we could have done better, how we could have turned this around and, perhaps, over the course of these next few months, how we might revisit some of these issues that are particularly fractious, I would say. For example, the University of Alberta specifically asked the minister to reinvest in their infrastructure maintenance program in order to avoid "catastrophic failure of some of [their] buildings systems." Instead, Budget 2014 allocates millions of dollars in corporate subsidies to industry in postsecondary instead of the institutions themselves. Despite a $147 million cut last year there was no reinvestment in postsecondary education, meaning that our secondary institutions will remain inaccessible for so many Alberta students that simply can't afford the tuition and to live and to go to school full-time. For the rest of us the cost is unnecessarily expensive.

There's still no funding, Mr. Speaker, towards full-day kindergarten, so parents are forced to pay more to give that early childhood education, to have extra child care costs, and so forth. Combine this with the changes to the curriculum that we've seen over these last couple of years, and again K to 12 education is feeling the pinch. We see larger class sizes than we ever have over this past decade or more since I left teaching. It's astounding to see the size of high school classes exceeding 35 or 40 students in a class. You simply cannot deal with that properly, to give the education that young people need. The idea that this would continue to erode – it was almost never a practice in Edmonton public before to have something exceeding, like, 30 students in a high school class. Now it's the new normal, and that new normal is unacceptable.

The Minister of Health promised to scrap the changes to seniors' drug benefits, but still there seems to be $120 million somehow left in limbo. What's changed there? I find that very disturbing. Of more than a billion dollars that the federal government just gave this province specifically for health care, really not more than $600 million of that money went into the Health budget. So while we have a Canada Health Act, while we have Canada health transfers, somehow that cash has not been put back into our public health system even though the money was specifically earmarked based on a formula, based on the population growth, and the needs growth of our province. It was adjusted for that need specifically, yet somehow those federal transfers did not go back into our public health system, where they should have been invested.

Budget 2014 should have been the time when this PC government took action to help Alberta families, and they failed to do so. More than 400,000 Albertans live in poverty and a very high percentage of children. Poverty costs $7 billion a year in this province for increased demands on public services. As I said before, clearly, the promise to eliminate child poverty has been passed down the wayside even though our economy is growing significantly. Instead of reversing the cuts to PDD, this government has continued the trend and cut significantly from these programs.

This budget had all sorts of spending issues, but I would also say that it had lots of inefficiencies and waste as well built into the budget. This whole idea of investing, giving industry so much money for carbon capture and storage – right? – is an absolute waste of money. We know full well that this is just another way for enhanced oil recovery. It's another way for large energy corporations to receive public funding, and there's very little evidence that this very expensive public investment will pay any significant returns either to our environment or to the original plant to which it was intended.

We saw the increased spending around the Premier's office. Again, it was not a lot of actual dollars when we're talking about a multibillion-dollar issue, but I think it was a question of losing trust in expenditures that the Alberta public picked up on, and this has stayed with this government now. It doesn't matter if we're spending a dollar or if we're spending a thousand dollars or a million dollars. If it's not being spent in an equitable and fair way, people pick up on that. Unfortunately, it's caused a great deal of consternation amongst Albertans. I think they have an honest view of this. The unfortunate part, as I described before, is this loss of trust, this loss of the public trust, that we need to regain more than ever, in this institution that continues to be eroded away.

So, Mr. Speaker, you know, there's a question of this budget. I was expecting something that maybe would more directly reflect the PC election platform by which they were elected in the first place in 2012, this idea of departing from a traditional sort of conservative base and, in fact, making a wider investment in the more diverse and larger population that we see in this province right now. Alberta is the most urbanized province in Canada, and we see an incredible influx of population, of immigration for jobs coming not just from the rest of Canada but from around the world.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, things just didn't go my way this afternoon. I was hoping to be able to speak to this earlier, but that's not what happened. Now I have a couple of minutes before you're going to call the vote.

I'm really struggling with this budget. Earlier my colleague had asked that when we did the votes from the estimates, we pull out the ministries of Aboriginal Affairs and Agriculture because he, having been in the budget debates, felt that they were reasonable amounts of money, and he wanted to be able to vote in support of those two budgets. But in going through the rest of the departments, for various reasons, either because we felt there was mismanagement or broken promises or there wasn't enough funding being given or there was too much funding being given, we couldn't support the budget estimates for the rest of the departments. In the end we had to with the exception of those two ministries vote against the budget as presented.

Mr. Speaker, that doesn't mean that we, you know, don't want civil servants to get paid, but it is a way of registering how we would have done the budget if we were in a position to do so and where we really think the government is going off track with what they're doing.

I'm going to look forward to being able to speak to the appropriation bill, Bill 8, in Committee of the Whole, and I'm giving fair warning now that I'd like to speak the first time the bill comes up and not the second so I get cut off after three minutes because I would like to talk a bit more about the departments that I wasn't able to participate in the budget debates on.

Because the government now forces us into a situation where often two departments are debated at the same time, I don't get into most of the other departments because I'm in another room. So on behalf of my constituents who want me to speak, for example, on seniors' issues or health or infrastructure or education or advanced education, I don't get a chance anymore to be in those budget debates. So this is my opportunity to talk about where I see the pluses and minuses and where, as it often does with the budgets for this government, the ideology trumps the common sense and management of the actual finances, and I have great difficulty with that.

In second reading we're supposed to be speaking for or against the principle of the bill that's presented in front of us, and I'm not willing to support the principle of what's included in the budget that's been given to us. You know, I was joking earlier with one of my colleagues that sometimes when I hear the hon. members opposite answer questions, I could swear to you that there are little government phrases that are on strips of paper, and they put them in a hat, and then they just pull them out randomly, and five of them make an answer. That's kind of how I feel about this budget.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The time has expired, and I'm now required under Standing Order 64(3) to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn to 1:30 on Tuesday, April 22.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:16 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 22, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Let us pray that our strength will be renewed as we begin this new week of duty and service in this Assembly. May wisdom, patience, and civility guide our speech and actions on behalf of those whom we serve. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem. Further to the memo I sent out to each of you on April 4, in which I indicated that there might be circumstances where others would lead us in the singing of the national anthem, today is one of those days. I'm very pleased to have with us the Bonnyville Tune-Agers senior choir, who will now lead us in the singing of O Canada.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, hon. members. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly 28 grade 6 and grade 12 students from Satoo school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Gordon Garritty, and parent helpers Eunice Tan, Janice McGillivray, and Charles Tompkins. I request that you please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an enthusiastic, outgoing group of students from George P. Nicholson elementary school that are here for the School at the Legislature this week. I've had the pleasure of meeting with this friendly group of grade 6 students several times this year. I believe that they have a strong sense of community, which is fostered by the unique design of their school, which houses a health clinic and a daycare. Minister of Infrastructure, please take note. There is also great support from their teacher, the beautiful Mrs. Sprague, and parent volunteers such as Marcel Balino, Dilushi Perera, and Vivienne Garbutt. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you some of the best and the brightest of the Leslieville school. I want to point out, as some members of this Assembly may remember, that Leslieville registered this last winter, on one particular day, as the coldest place on earth. Wow. What a record for an Alberta community. But they are the warmest hearts in all of Alberta. With their teacher, Ms Colleen Rudd, and the principal, Mr. Stanton Swain I would like to welcome them and to have all of these students rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups? I'm sorry. Edmonton-Decore – my apologies – followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A piece of Alberta's history is going to be made today. It is my privilege and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Alberta Legislature two school groups from St. Philip Catholic school. The students who are here today certainly are leaders of tomorrow, and we'll have to wait to see what their contribution to Alberta's history is going to be. Also, the gentlemen in one of the school groups are wearing bow ties today, so bow ties rock. They're joined today by Mrs. Garet Dafoe, teacher, and Mr. Matthew Charrois, teacher. I would ask that the students from St. Philip Catholic elementary school please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the wonderful Tune-Agers, a seniors-only choir from my beautiful constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake; their founder, Lil Bodnar; and their director, Sharon Sharun. They are seated in your gallery, and I would ask them and their bus driver, Gil Proulx, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of improving the child intervention system, it's my privilege to introduce a number of people here today for first reading of a bill that I'll have later this afternoon. First of all, it's my pleasure to introduce Chief Wilton Littlechild today as a newly appointed member of the Child Intervention Implementation Oversight Committee. As you may know, Chief Littlechild is a member and former chief of the Ermineskin Cree Nation, a former Member of Parliament, a current member of the United Nations human rights Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and a commissioner for the Indian residential schools Truth and Reconciliation Commission. It's my privilege and honour at this point to ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. Joining Chief Littlechild are a number of individuals that are here today in support of our bill. First of all, is Monique Marinier, a panel participant at the Child Intervention Roundtable in January, who is representing youth in care; and Samantha Wipf, who is also representing children in care and was at our round-table as well. On behalf of the Member for Lesser Slave Lake I'm pleased to welcome members of the Metis Child and Family Services Society, starting with their leader, Donald Langford, then Donna Kratky, Amanda Collins, Kari Thomason, Mary Dion, Lorna Audette, Kaila Eisel, Claude Gallant, Bernice Gladue, Kayla Simms, Kym Pelletier, Kelly Klause, Kyle Lafond, Shirley West, Lezlee Martin, Rebecca Countaway, Angela Walsh, Harry Fuccaro, and J. Langford. It's my pleasure to have them here to join us today for what will be an exciting introduction of our bill.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you a resident of Killarney, Manitoba. He has travelled a long way to learn first-hand about Alberta politics while visiting his family here in Alberta. Dale Banman is an economic development officer for the Turtle Mountain region, a great place to visit in southwest Manitoba. He is also the father of one of the hard-working and talented communications staff for the Wildrose caucus, Tim Banman. I'd ask Dale to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests today, Gemalil Bischoch and Marco Luciano from Migrante Alberta. Migrante Alberta is a community-based organization committed to the protection and promotion of the rights and welfare of Filipino immigrants and migrant workers in Alberta. Migrante Alberta takes the position that the migration of Filipinos abroad is a product of the extreme poverty and joblessness in the Philippines and that the commodification of Filipino labour is encouraged by the Philippine government's labour export policy. Migrante is a member of Migrante Canada, a Canada-wide alliance of Filipino migrant organizations in B.C., Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec. I would now ask Marco and Gemalil to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Teresa Schmidt, Teresa Budzick, and Theresia Brokamp, all visiting Alberta and Lacombe county from Germany. They're here today with Edie Biel of Billyco Junction Gardens in Lacombe county. Billyco Junction Gardens is a WWOOF farm host, and these girls are here from Germany because of the WWOOF Canada program. What does the WWOOF stand for, you ask? It's World Wide Opportunities on Organic Farms. These girls will be living and working on the farm for a few weeks and will get a chance to get to know the Canadian way of life. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I have two introductions today. First, it's truly a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Michelle and Jeff Bates, two very close friends of mine and community leaders for the city of Airdrie. I'll be touching a little bit on their story later today in Members' Statements. Michelle and Jeff were instrumental in establishing the Airdrie Health Foundation; in fact, Michelle is its co-chair. The foundation works to see overall health and the delivery of health care in Airdrie improved, and they are also a strong voice and advocate for 24-hour emergency services in the community and area. They have been working tirelessly for a modern, state-of-the-art 24-hour medical facility suitable for Airdrie. Michelle and Jeff have two wonderful girls, aged five and seven, and they are seated today in the gallery to watch our presentation of the Airdrie 24 petition. I'd ask the members to give them a warm welcome.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, staying with that theme of great folks from Airdrie, is of one of the councillors for Airdrie city council, Mr. Allan Hunter. Alderman Hunter has been on council since 2010 and is currently serving his second term. He has lived in Airdrie for the past nine years. He and his wife have a daughter and son. Allan has also been a strong voice for improving health care in Airdrie and is an active board member for the Airdrie Health Foundation. He's also a great guy and is very famous for his belt buckles, cowboy boots, and common-sense approach to getting things done. I'd like to thank him for his service and hope we could all give him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very strong advocates for youth engagement in Alberta. My first guest is Timurlane Cakmak. Timurlane has attended both of the youth think tanks we've held and has given his input on how government, in particular the Youth Secretariat, can continue to engage youth. He's an active student at the University of Alberta, competing with the track and field team, and is a team lead for Caring for Campus. He is also a yoga and indoor cycling instructor in his hometown of Leduc.

My second guest is Kyle St. Thomas, who is also a fantastic advocate for the engagement of youth. He is currently premier, which is an elected position, of the TUXIS Parliament of Alberta and is involved in Caring for Campus. Next year he will be the recreation co-ordinator for Campus Saint-Jean. He currently lives in residence and comes from Lacombe, Alberta.

I would ask both to please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, you have two minutes each for these statements. Let's start with Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Airdrie.

Lil Bodnar and the Bonnyville Tune-Agers

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to stand here at the Legislature to talk about my good friend Lil Bodnar and her Tune-Agers. I have known Lil for close to 40 years. Her husband, Ted Bodnar, was my principal when I started teaching in Glendon, and I finished my career teaching in a school named after her father, H.E. Bourgoin. Lil is 87 years young. A couple of years ago she created a bucket list that she wanted to complete. One of the items on her bucket list was to visit our Legislature, which she'd never done before, and to sing O Canada. Thanks to you, Mr. Speaker, her dream has come true, and she can cross this off her bucket list.

Music is in Lil's blood. She was instrumental in starting the Bonnyville Society Singers over 25 years ago, and 16 years ago she founded the Bonnyville Tune-Agers, a group of the best singing seniors in Bonnyville and surrounding area. The Tune-Agers are very active in my constituency. Every year they put on two concerts for three seniors' centres in our constituency. They also perform at weddings, anniversary parties, and many events in the area too numerous to list. In 2003 and 2008 the Tune-Agers sponsored a Seniors' Choir Festival and plan to have another festival this May back at home in Bonnyville.

Thank you to Lil and their director, Sharon Sharun, an honorary senior and a former colleague of mine, for coming to Edmonton. Enjoy your tour of the Legislature. May God bless you all. Keep singing, and provide music everywhere you go.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome, all.

Airdrie Health Foundation

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Michelle and Jeff Bates lost their precious little boy Lane four and a half years ago. We still don't fully understand how it happened. He was an active, healthy, and kind little boy, but one night he felt sick, and his parents did what every parent in Airdrie would have done. They decided that rather than waiting hours in an emergency room in Calgary, they would let him rest and take him to a doctor the next morning if he wasn't feeling better. Tragically, Lane passed during the night.

Obviously, this experience was devastating for Jeff and Michelle, but instead of permitting despair to overwhelm them and retreating from life, Michelle and Jeff showed a level of courage and strength that is difficult to comprehend. They were determined that Lane's premature passing would leave a legacy of love and care for others. So, Mr. Speaker, the Airdrie Health Foundation was founded, with Michelle as chair.

AHF has quickly become the primary driving force in the campaign to bring 24-hour health care to Airdrie. Along with Michelle it includes Airdrie's political leaders, health professionals, and business and nonprofit communities. All have come together towards the common goal of providing better access to health care for the people of Airdrie, including around-the-clock urgent health care services. It has been so effective in its efforts that Alberta Health Services has taken notice and, to their credit, has established a formal working group, including senior AHS executives, to work with the AHF in designing a health care model for Airdrie that focuses on improving primary care and bringing 24-hour health care to Airdrie. I applaud AHS and the minister for their involvement and for recognizing Airdrie's exploding growth.

Today I will present the first 2,400 signatures of Airdrie residents who are requesting that this government and AHS work with AHF to establish 24-hour health services for Airdrie, and many more thousands of signatures will be following.

Mr. Speaker, Jeff and Michelle may have to wait a little while to be with their sweet son again, but Lane's legacy on this Earth is already larger than anyone could have dreamed. It's a legacy of love that Lane and his parents, though separated for now, are building and growing together one day at a time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Invasive Mussel Species

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on a very important issue; that is, aquatic invasive species, particularly zebra or quagga mussels. Anyone familiar with these tiny freshwater mollusks will know that their infestation results in objects being completely encompassed by these miniature creatures, creating a surface almost like concrete. High populations of these mussels in other jurisdictions along the eastern seaboard, including the Great Lakes, have led to an ecosystem shift that affects commercial and recreational fish populations. They've been linked to blue-green algae blooms and have significantly impacted infrastructure, irrigation, property values, and recreational activities. This could result in $75 million per year being expended to clean, repair, and replace infrastructure here in Alberta.

This government is the owner and operator of more than $8 billion in water management infrastructure; for example, dams, irrigation canals, and pumping equipment. An infestation of zebra mussels could result in major financial losses not only for the government but for the farmers who irrigate southern Alberta and rely on irrigation to grow our agricultural products. The amount of damage these small creatures can cause is exponential to their size.

It's important for the government and the public to work in tandem to ensure that this invasive species stays out of Alberta. ESRD is aware, but unfortunately at this point there are no budget dollars. Watercraft owners, particularly those who use their boats in the southern U.S., should always remember to completely clean their motors and boats and drain water from buckets, live wells, and coolers before they return to Canada.

Albertans play an important role in protecting our waterways from aquatic invasive species and should educate themselves to be proactive about keeping our aquatic ecosystems safe so that we will all enjoy Alberta's lakes and rivers.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, you have 35 seconds maximum for a question and 35 seconds maximum for an answer. I appreciate the notes that you've sent regarding my enforcement of that rule.

Let us begin with the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Spring Flood Preparedness

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have some important questions about the freedom of information process, but first I want to ask about flood preparedness. First thing this morning Environment Canada put out a special weather statement. They're predicting that heavy rain will begin early tomorrow over central Alberta and that almost three inches of rain can be expected in the foothills northwest of Red Deer. They warn that "some areas may be particularly sensitive to flooding due to already high water levels from the spring melt." Can the government reassure Albertans that our flood monitoring process is ready for this?

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can say that our flood response program is in place and ready to go. Again, we don't control the weather, but I can say to you that we're ready to move if we have to.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I asked the government questions on this topic on April 10. The environment minister replied that the government would increase the monitoring of rivers in June, and he talked a lot about the eastern slopes. Well, it's still April, and the area under threat this time is further north. Can the government assure Albertans that they have learned from last year's mistakes and that they have upped the monitoring of potential high water everywhere there's a risk?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say that, first of all, we didn't make any mistakes last year. We had rainfall of unprecedented proportions. We had 214 millimetres in a 24-hour period. The rainfall was so hard and the flood so devastating that it wiped out our monitors.

Mr. Speaker, we've put more monitoring in place. Our people on the ground are ready to give 24-hour response, and we'll be ready to go.

Ms Smith: For us to learn from mistakes, we have to admit them, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't appear that the government is ready to do that.

This government has been slow to adjust the needs of our foothills communities. Rain on snow events can be extremely dangerous. Last year's rains in Kananaskis Country resulted in the devastating southern Alberta floods. Many places in central Alberta are equally at risk should there be a major rain on snow event. Can the government assure Albertans that they have worked with all communities in the central and northern foothills to be sure that they are flood ready?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier to the other question, we have people on the ground, we have monitoring in place, and we will be able to get a hold of the communities as soon as we have to. Again, we have no control over the weather, so we will be monitoring on a 24-hour basis to make sure that we're prepared to move forward.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. leader.

FOIP Request Process

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A government whistleblower leaked us an e-mail that states the following:

On November 29, 2013, the former Deputy Premier circulated a Memorandum to the Premier and Cabinet requesting that Ministers gather information about materials being released by their departments and that their press secretaries gather information about active FOIP requests which have the potential to generate media, session, political or other reputational issues for government. It was requested this information be sent to his office by noon Fridays in the template provided.

What does the Premier say about this?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would say that it would be quite normal, when information is made public, that the people who are making it public be aware of that information as it goes out. There's no interference with the process, but it's very important for us to know what that information is. I'll give you an example. In December a FOIP request was made about deaths of children in care who had been touched by care. I was briefed on that the day it went out, as I appropriately should have been.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday we asked the Premier to confirm that neither his office nor any other minister's office was undermining the integrity or independence of the freedom of information process, and he glibly said yes. This memo was written by the Deputy Premier and circulated to all of cabinet. It instructed that ministers gather information about materials being released by their departments and that information be sent to the Deputy Premier by noon every Friday. Does the Premier think this is the right thing to do?

Mr. Hancock: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, what the hon. member is talking about is that as information goes out the door, it would be prudent to be aware of what's going out the door so you know how to respond to it when the people who get it, including the media or others, ask questions about it. At the time it goes out the door, it's public information and quite appropriate to share.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the freedom of information process exists to prevent the government from suppressing and hiding damaging information about their mistakes, and the process is supposed to work free of political interference, yet the memo asked that the very political press secretaries to the various ministers should assemble the information in the template provided and send it to the Deputy Premier's office. If this isn't political interference in the FOIP process, what is it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is trying to again create something out of nothing. What happens in the FOIP process is that the FOIP co-ordinators in our departments respond to FOIP requests. When the information goes out the door, it's quite appropriate for ministers to be made aware of that information because if it comes from their department, they ought to know that it's going out, and they ought to know how to respond to it. Press secretaries are doing exactly that job on behalf of their ministers, being aware of what is public information and advising on what the appropriate responses are.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Third and final set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's not the answer he gave us last week. Last Thursday the Premier said that he wasn't aware of any cabinet ministers who reviewed FOIP weekly summary reports. At the time he said that it was "an administrative function." Now we know that the Deputy Premier requested a different kind of weekly summary report, and that one definitely wasn't administrative in nature. It was handled by ministerial press secretaries, who are paid to be political. Why are embarrassing FOIPs being assembled and vetted by ministerial press secretaries?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is talking about two different things. The Deputy Minister of Executive Council has a role to play with respect to FOIP co-ordinators across government. There was a memo that went out from him. It clearly talked about the FOIP requests and a specific FOIP request, as a matter of fact, which dealt with things that were potentially cabinet information and therefore had to be screened from that perspective. That's an entirely different issue than the former Deputy Premier asking that when information is being released, all press secretaries be made aware of it so that the ministers can be briefed as to what . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the leaked e-mail we have from the whistle-blower makes it clear that there is crossgovernment co-ordination for dealing with FOIPs and that there is another highly political process for assembling politically sensitive FOIPs. It is clear from the e-mail that we have that routine FOIP requests are being revised and massaged. In fact, in this e-mail there's a specific reference to revisions on three requests. If routine FOIPs are being revised, how can Albertans have any confidence that this government isn't fixing FOIPs that harm the government's reputation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: The Leader of the Opposition has a habit of asking questions about things of people who may not know the facts on this particular matter. She should know that this particular memo was actually proofread by the Privacy Commissioner – the wording was approved, and then it was subsequently sent out – for the very reason that the Premier right now is indicating.

Ms Smith: I'm not sure why they were so afraid to admit to that last week, then, Mr. Speaker.

Our freedom of information process is under threat from this government, that likes to brag that it's transparent and accountable. The truth is that, for all the bragging, this government resists transparency and never wants to be accountable for its mistakes. All over this government thoughtful and committed provincial employees see that, and they are coming to us to try to do something about it. Will the Premier start afresh with an all-party review of Alberta's freedom of information laws so that Albertans can be reassured that our process isn't going to continue to be politicized?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the associate minister responsible has spent almost the better part of a year going around Alberta and talking with Albertans about the freedom of information and protection of privacy process and will be bringing that back to this Legislature at an appropriate time. We have talked about freedom of information many times as an automatic review of the act on a regular basis, and the only thing which threatens the FOIP process is the indiscriminate use of it by the opposition, who want to FOIP everything in the world, including – and I presume it's them because I don't get to know who asks the questions – a request for all of the ARs in government, which could be a million.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

2:00 Public Service Pensions

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 the cowboys on Wall Street crashed the economy, causing the unfunded liability of public-sector pensions to spike to $7.5 billion. Employees stepped up in Alberta by increasing their contributions and forgoing wage increases in favour of matching government contributions. As a result, the liability is down to $6.4 billion, and the Minister of IIR says that pensions are healthy and will be fully funded in 12 years, at which time contributions will drop. Premier, the crisis has passed, so why are you launching a Republican-style attack on the pensions of public-sector workers?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would hardly classify this as a Republican-style attack. We are not changing the pension promise. In fact, what we are doing is defending the pension promise. The age of retirement before the changes we introduced in the Legislature was 65. The age of retirement after the legislation, hopefully, is passed in this House will be 65. We are making changes to two things. The early retirement subsidy: we're not getting rid of it; we're actually keeping it and making it sustainable. The second thing we're doing is that we're ensuring that there are funds available to pay cost-of-living adjustments into the future. Hardly radical.

Dr. Sherman: Defending pensions by cutting them: please, we don't want your defence, thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, too many seniors in Alberta already struggle to survive on insufficient pensions, and the PC plan to reduce cost-of-living adjustments will only worsen the problem by depriving future retirees of enough money to pay their bills, thus retiring them into poverty. The Premier used to be Health minister. He knows how expensive poverty is, and he knows how much it will cost in terms of extra health care and subsidized housing. Premier, why are you bringing in a cold-hearted policy which is so obviously penny-wise and pound-foolish?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member really, clearly does not understand what is happening and ought to go back and review the material again. The major change with respect to cost of living is going from a defined cost-of-living adjustment process to a targeted one, and that's based on return on investment. That's prudent, so we can keep the pension promise to Alberta's public service workers, because if you do not sustain the viability of the program, then it won't be there for anyone. As you have fewer people paying and more people drawing, it's more and more difficult to sustain that promise unless you assure sustainability. That's what this government is doing.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, targeted is right. They have targeted front-line workers with Bill 45, Bill 46, and these pension reforms.

This PC government's right-wing, antiworker ideology blinds it to certain basic facts. We've already covered a couple, and here's one more. Gutting public-sector pensions will make it more difficult to attract and retain workers, which means the government will be forced eventually to pay more in wages and salaries. Premier, precisely how much more will it cost to attract and retain public-sector workers who no longer find it appealing to work for your right-wing Conservative government? Have you done the math on this?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the premise, again, is wrong, so there's no answer to his question because you can't answer a hypothetical that's based on a wrong assumption. But this is the reality, that it's always been there for public-sector workers to be paid fairly, to get good benefits, and to have a pension. The benefits and the pension are not there for all the people in the private sector, but it is there for all the people in the public sector, and that's why many people who have a passion for public service also want to join the public service, because there is security, there are pensions, and there are good benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the PC government continues its doublespeak on what their real plans are for Alberta's public-sector pensions. While publicly the Premier and the Finance minister proclaim that the government is protecting the defined benefit, behind closed doors pension bureaucrats admit that these changes essentially abolish defined benefit pensions for public-sector workers. My question is to the Premier. Don't you think that the 300,000 Albertans who depend on public-sector pensions deserve a little more honesty from your government about what you're actually trying to accomplish?

Mr. Hancock: What they deserve, Mr. Speaker, is a little bit more honesty and a little bit more comfort from that hon. member because it's very clear that the defined benefit pensions are here to stay. But the sustainability of those pensions is going to be enhanced by the modest changes that are being proposed by this government so that they will not only have the opportunity for those who are retired now to continue to draw the benefits they're drawing but for those who have retirement plans in the near term to understand that their pensions will not be reduced significantly or at all. Those who have a longer term to plan will have that longer term to plan so that they can make up for the fact that the early retirement is not going to be as beneficial for them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that they'll have to work longer for pensions that pay less. This PC government is misleading Albertans. They claim they're maintaining a defined benefit plan, but if pension boards can't raise contribution rates to meet their obligations to their members, they can't possibly maintain a defined benefit. That's the bottom line, Premier. Why won't you stop this unnecessary attack on the modest pensions of Alberta's public employees and stop misleading Albertans about what you're up to?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely absurd that that hon. member would try and tell public-sector workers that their pensions are going to be less. Their pensions will be a factor of their best earning years, as they are now. That does not change. That will not change. That's the pension promise that we've made.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: are you cutting the cost-of-living increases built into the plans or not? Yes or no?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. What we're saying is that instead of being guaranteed at the cost of living, they will be targeted to the cost of living and paid at what the return on the investment is. That's what makes them sustainable. Those can be accumulated over time. That's a sustainable cost-of-living increase that goes into the pension benefit, but the base pension is based on your best five years or your best three years of service. That has not changed whatsoever, and people can be guaranteed that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Please curtail your preambles now to supplementals.
Let's start with Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Missing and Murdered Aboriginal Women

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 15 I was honoured to attend the missing and murdered aboriginal women round-table in Fort McMurray at the Nistawoyou friendship centre. In listening to their heart-wrenching stories, many expressed the sentiment that while stories about these women appear in the media initially, the files are then just thrown onto a pile of cases that go cold. They're not prepared to give up hope, and they're imploring that the federal and provincial governments do more. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: can you please give some specifics as to changes your department can make to ensure that cases are investigated thoroughly and not just forgotten?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Please forgive my voice today as I'm not feeling that well.

I'm happy to chat with the member offline, but it would be a hazard to indicate any specific actions dealing with investigations here as both investigations and prosecutions are fully independent of political authority. I do think, of course, Mr. Speaker, that on a higher level this is a matter worth looking into, and I thank the member for bringing this up.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: why is there no way to gather and measure information regarding these hateful crimes when it's easily determined that these missing women are aboriginal in descent?

Mr. Denis: I'm not aware, actually, that there is any type of system, other than the actual FOIP system or our statistics, that this member could use. Again, I would be happy to undertake to go and investigate in my department because, again, I do think that this is a very serious issue, with the number of missing aboriginal women that this member mentions.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the minister of aboriginal affairs: given that the government is committed to teaching students about the residential schools' impact, what else can you do to ensure that education extends beyond the terrible tragedies of yesterday and to the circumstances that are happening right now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his advocacy on this very, very important issue. He will know that we've struck in the last year two aboriginal women's security councils, a Métis council and a First Nations council. Both of those councils have identified the safety of aboriginal women as being of the utmost concern. We're working with them on that. The member is probably quite right; maybe there's an educational component here as well. We will continue to advocate on the national stage for missing and murdered aboriginal women. As I told the member the other day, we have advocated for an inquiry.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Unfortunately, the time has elapsed.

Let's move on to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November the former Deputy Premier issued a directive to this arrogant and out-of-touch PC cabinet. He told them to use their partisan political staff to vet all incoming FOIP requests that had the potential to generate "reputational issues for [this] government." To the Minister of Human Services: you were the Minister of Service Alberta at the time; you were in charge of maintaining the dignity and credibility of the FOIP process in Alberta. Why didn't you speak up the moment that you found out about this wrongdoing?

2:10

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there's no end to how far they will go. Cabinet ministers in any cabinet, I imagine, are expected to know what their departments are releasing so that they can answer to their constituents, to the opposition, and to the media when asked that day about a certain piece of information. This memo was written and first sent to the Privacy Commissioner for her approval. She read it, she approved it, and then subsequent to that, it was sent to cabinet. Keep digging, but you're digging in the wrong place.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act guarantees that all Albertans, from private citizens to professional journalists, have the right to access public records, does the current Minister of Service Alberta believe that this ongoing practice of using partisan political staff to vet FOIP requests is or isn't illegal political interference?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The word "vet" is where the entire problem here is. There is nothing being vetted. All of the FOIP requests are following the process. They're all being released publicly. The simple request was that we could coordinate what they are so that all of cabinet could know and all of caucus could know what FOIP requests are coming out, just like we do with any other public announcement. But nothing about the data or the information was being vetted at all. It doesn't even say "vetted" in the memo. They can keep pushing that issue, but they're incorrect about it.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we now know that this PC cabinet is improperly vetting FOIP requests if there are reputational issues with the government, will the Premier accept this blatant breach of legislation, or did he not know that this rotten practice was wrong at the time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I have a copy of what he's referring to right here, and there's nothing that says "vetting." All it discusses is gathering the FOIP requests so that they could be reviewed so that we'd know what was going out. Otherwise, they get publicly released, and we don't know what's going out, and then we get phone calls about it. There's nothing in here that mentions vetting. It's about gathering information so that everyone is aware of what's going out publicly. Nothing is being singled out or eliminated or affected by that process.

The Speaker: Thank you.

A point of order by the Minister of Justice was raised at 2:12:30.

We'll move on to Lethbridge-East, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Invasive Mussel Species

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Water is a force of nature that winds its way through bodies of water full of organisms that bring both nutrients and in some cases detriment. This brings me to the rising issue of infestation by quagga or zebra mussels. These freshwater mussels encompass objects and have been seen to be moving inward from the east coast of North America. Southern Alberta relies heavily on irrigation systems that could be directly affected by these mussels. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. What is the government doing to protect Alberta from this possible infestation, and is there a budget in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and SRD.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question and, actually, a real challenge to our waterways in Alberta. I can tell you that we developed an aquatic invasive species program, that looks at outreach and education, regular monitoring for invasive species, rapid response planning, watercraft inspections, and policy and legislation. We've put in place a boat inspection program, that's been initiated on our major highways coming into Alberta in an effort to stop any unintentional transport of the species, and it's also important that we work with our neighbouring jurisdictions – B.C., Saskatchewan, and Montana – to make sure that we intercept any boats that may be carrying the aquatic invasive species.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of my questions were answered already in that very succinct answer, for which I'm grateful. I'd also like to know if perhaps the minister would speak more about how this infestation – I've been talking about southern Alberta – could affect other parts of the province.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's important to realize that we are estimating that this infestation could cost the province about $75 million annually, so no small cost.

Mr. Speaker, also, high populations of mussels in other jurisdictions have led to ecosystem shifts that affect both commercial and recreational populations. They're linked to blue-green algae blooms and have significantly impacted infrastructure, irrigation, property values, and recreational activities.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Could the minister explain if there are any initiatives under way to better educate the public about this threat, I guess, particularly at the border, when people are coming home from the south?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are launching an education campaign this summer promoting the clean, drain, and dry message. The campaign will help in recognition of the program while giving instructions about what actions boaters can take to prevent the spread of quagga or zebra mussels. We also have a hotline in place, which has been established for the public to call with questions. If someone calls about a mussel-infested vehicle or boat that they've seen, we have trained officials that can be there to clean those boats up.

The Speaker: Thank you.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, last week the associate minister of PDD dodged questions on the supports intensity scale. Families and providers that work with SIS cannot understand why people with developmental disabilities must be asked questions that ask them to compare the assistance they require to that of regular people in order to assess the supports they receive. The associate minister has had all weekend to think about this and the effect of these demeaning questions. Will he respect Albertans and put an end to this line of questioning immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to delivering the highest quality of services to all Albertans. SIS is just a tool which is used to measure and to do a baseline assessment of individuals so that we can deliver consistent services right across the province. In PDD we serve 10,700 people. Of that, 97 per cent of SIS assessments have been completed so that we can deliver consistent services right across the province.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Towle: Clearly, the minister is not going to stand up for people with developmental disabilities.

The associate minister keeps saying that the supports intensity scale is only one tool used to determine funding. In practice this simply is not true. It is the only tool. Can the associate minister explain to Albertans, who are challenging your statements day after day, what other tools your ministry is using to determine funding in the PDD system? And geographic area is not a tool; it is a factor, Minister.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, SIS measures individuals in nine different themes and 85 different categories. The reason for doing that assessment is to measure their needs, their goals, their aspirations right across the province so that we can meet their needs. When it comes to funding, SIS is just one of the tools which is used to have a baseline assessment for consistent services. Their existing natural supports play a role. Geographical location plays a role. Most importantly, once again, their needs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, clearly, the associate minister does not understand that SIS is demeaning and humiliating and that 97 per cent of these people have had to go through a demeaning and humiliating process, and this associate minister has defended that process all the way along. What other tools does this government, this ministry, have to assess funding for people with developmental disabilities over and above SIS?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, before selecting SIS, we went through a rigorous process. There were a number of different options which were available. At the time we had community boards, and we had the CEOs of community boards. A number of different options were provided to them. This is an international tool used by 14 different countries. In terms of funding, as I stated in my previous answer, their natural supports play a role, their geographical location plays a role, and their needs, their goals, their aspirations are the centre of all of that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's go to Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first-quarter report of the Market Surveillance Administrator validates what Alberta Liberals have been saying all session, that economic withholding leads to higher energy prices, and it is tacitly endorsed, if not encouraged, by the Alberta electricity watchdog, our system operator, and the government itself. To the Minister of Energy: whatever happened to the government's lofty pledge that deregulation and competition would bring lower energy prices?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

2:20

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are seeing lower prices. In the last several months we've seen lower prices. January was higher, but February and March – in April, quite frankly, we've seen lower prices than we've seen in several months. The system is working.

The other part of that, Mr. Speaker, is that Alberta's system, compared to other provinces, has no public debt.

Mr. Hehr: Up is down, east is west, and north is south.

Given that economic withholding is causing real hardship for Alberta families, the same families whose pension benefits this government is now threatening to claw back, when is this minister finally going to stand up to power producers and offer a solution to what is happening in our electricity market?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. We're doing many things. One thing, first and foremost, is that if customers are uncomfortable with the month-to-month fluctuations in prices, they can sign a contract, or if they want, they can go to a fixed monthly plan.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we have an MLA team that is reviewing different scenarios to look at these very same things. We always think of the consumers first and foremost.

Mr. Hehr: Well, the solution she offers is part of the problem. When are we going to cut all the nonsense of having Albertans trying to figure out which contract is best for their electricity needs? Why are we asking Albertans to become energy contract experts? Why wouldn't we just go to one energy price for all residential consumers by having them pay something like the spot energy price averaged out over a 12-month period?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, consumers in Alberta can go to a month-to-month, or they can go to a fixed monthly plan. Over the last 10 years electricity prices in Alberta have been competitive with all provinces that do not have access to cheap hydro. We have a great system here in Alberta and, again, no public debt on our system here in Alberta.

Mr. Anglin: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Public Service Pensions

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is also going after private-sector pensions and the workers who earn them. Employers said, "Jump," and this government begged, "How high?" They want to let private-sector employers gut defined benefits for their workers and replace them with a cross their fingers, cross their toes approach to scraping through their hard-earned retirement. To the Minister of Finance. Long-serving, hard-working Albertans want the defined benefits that they earned. Why are you stripping them of their retirement security?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, the steps that we're taking are steps to actually protect the defined benefit pension plans that are in this province, both private and public. I would also suggest to the hon. member that she might want to look at what's going on outside of the borders of Alberta. She might want to take a look at some of the things that are happening to defined benefit plans where people did cross their fingers and hoped that things would be better in the future, where they hoped that the returns would be there. Those defined benefit plans are in crisis mode and are changing the planned benefits for those individuals. That's not what is happening in Alberta.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government thinks it's okay for the cabinet behind closed doors to set the rules for consulting workers before stripping those benefits from their retirement and given that this government's idea of consultation means that if they don't like what they're hearing, they flip over the table and write their own rules, to the Minister of Finance: why is it so hard for you to understand that Alberta's seniors need retirement security, not empty promises to consult from a broken-promises government?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, seniors who are retired on defined benefit plans today are protected under the program that we're putting forward. They will not lose any benefits. For these hon. members to even suggest that is only to raise fear in their minds, and that is deplorable. What we are doing is protecting future benefits, benefits of today, and those seniors who are on retirement benefits today. Unbelievable.

Ms Notley: What's unbelievable is that this minister will not admit that he is making changes that are going to cut the benefits that people get when they retire five years from now, 10 years from now. Just admit it.

Given that the minister says that he's bringing in changes because he's been asked to by employers and given that the changes will be made on the backs of individual retirees now or in the future living on fixed incomes, will the minister admit that yet again he and his entitled PC government are placing the interests of their entitled corporate friends over that of regular working Albertans once again?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, again, you know, it's funny. When I started this process almost two years ago, I was actually in the camp with the Wildrose. I thought defined contribution was the way to go. I've actually changed my tune on that one. Over the last two years I've looked at a way that we can actually defend and protect and preserve defined benefit programs for our employees in the four pension plans that we're the trustee of, and that is exactly what we're doing. We are defending defined benefit programs. I met with all of the union leaders last week. We're starting the contribution cap discussion this week. We'll be talking about joint sponsorship as we move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, your point of order was noted at 2:22. Now let's recognize you for your question.

Planned Transmission Line Shutdown

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Electric System Operator announced last week that May was the best time to shut down the transmission line for 12 days so that ultimately it could do its work to connect a new HVDC transmission line. This decision jeopardizes the reliability of the system, and it's going to raise electricity prices by 30 to 40 per cent, costing consumers millions of dollars. Why should consumers pay for this mismanagement and not AltaLink?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The prices for May have not yet been released, so at this point that is just mere speculation. If people want to make sure that they have prices that are the same from month to month, we have a plan, and we have a system in place for consumers to do that. As I said, the prices for the month of April are the lowest that we've seen in months.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, listen up. Listen up. Given that the new HVDC transmission line is not built and that it won't be built until 2015 and given that there are no wires to be connected to in May and that some of the towers have not been constructed, can the minister explain to hard-working Albertans why they will pay more in May to connect to a transmission line that does not exist and will not exist for another year?

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, we make sure that as we're building out transmission for the entire province – and I believe it was that hon. member, who wasn't in the House at the time, who was going on and on about how we didn't need transmission. We have been making sure that we have a system that is effective, reliable, and affordable for Albertans. That is what we have been doing as a government, and that is what we will continue to do.

Mr. Wilson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary Shepard generating plant will be online and completed by 2015 and given that it will provide an increased stability to the system once it's energized, eliminating AltaLink's need to destabilize the system while they work, why can't AltaLink wait until the Shepard plant is energized to do their work and save Albertans millions of dollars in utility charges? What's the rush?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that when Albertans need to turn on the lights, we have the lights there for them to turn on, that the system is built. We believe in a competitive marketplace, unlike this member or members from the other two parties. It is our responsibility to make sure that we have affordable, accessible electricity for Albertans when they need it, and that is exactly what this government is doing.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Shaw, your point of order at 2:27:45 has been noted.

Let's move on to Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Flood-related Temporary Housing

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following last year's flood the government moved forward in building two temporary communities for Albertans that needed accommodation. Many of the people that signed up for temporary housing lost everything overnight. Since then the temporary community named Great Plains, in Calgary, has closed, and the community called Saddlebrook, just outside of High River, is still open. Great Plains was built to house about 700 residents, and its population only hit about a hundred people. Saddlebrook was built for a thousand residents and was fully occupied last fall. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell us what the costs to taxpayers were for these temporary communities?

The Speaker: The associate minister responsible for Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year, in the worst disaster we've seen in this country, a hundred thousand people were impacted, 15,000 homes were damaged, and 3,000 people asked us for temporary housing. This government moved very quickly and within 10 days had a plan to put temporary housing in place for these folks. The cost of this housing for these two communities was approximately $87 million, and I believe it was money well spent for the families that had a place to live.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister and your department, for the hard work that was undertaken at the time. Will any of the costs from building and operating the Saddlebrook and Great Plains temporary communities be recovered from the federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

2:30

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to take a minute to thank the federal government and the disaster relief program for working with us and, in fact, all of the private and public and not-for-profits that worked with us through this very difficult time. We believe that under the disaster relief program, we're going to see nearly all of this money returned to the taxpayers of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what is the status of the Highwood Junction, the third temporary community that is planned for High River?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, High River was extremely impacted by this event, and there are still many people out of their homes, some still living in temporary housing. Highwood Junction is a community that we're developing right in High River to help people with longer term housing. This is for people that have disabilities, for seniors that need to be close to their homes, for people that want to be in their own community while they're rebuilding their lives, or for larger families that need that kind of space. We're going to work with them. We'll build this community in High River and help those families get back into their community.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Firearm Collection during High River Flooding

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This very liberal Justice minister has done a good job ducking responsibility for his government's part in the High River gun grab. However, documents obtained through an access to information request show a yet to be identified minister had advance information about plans to kick in doors and seize guns from private homes in the flood-ravaged town well before it happened. Minister, the truth has a way of coming out. If any minister in this PC government had advance information about the High River gun grab, shouldn't it be you?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I thank this member for his question about the continuation of our common-sense conservative justice policies. As I've indicated before at our main estimates, I can only speak for myself, and I found out about this issue when I was visiting the RCMP detachment and saw many guns coming in. I immediately wrote a letter to the RCMP former commissioner, Dale McGowan, which I've already tabled here. That actually has triggered a full investigation. I'll let the RCMP complete that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we now know a minister from this incompetent PC government had advance information about the gun grab in High River, will the minister commit to an independent investigation to see which minister took actions against law-abiding gun owners in High River, or is that a stone he just doesn't want turned over?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there already is an independent investigation going on, and that's with the RCMP Public Complaints Commission. That's not police investigating police; that actually is a fully independent body. I expect that probably sometime in June, but that's in their hands. I will make it public to this Assembly when I get it.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Justice minister said that there was no direction from his government to do this, does he understand that if the minister named in this document turns out to be him, Albertans will know with certainty that he was the one that ordered the gun seizures and that his Trudeau-inspired and PC-endorsed liberal agenda will be uncovered?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a point of order. I'd like to indicate that perhaps this member should be doing better research as an MLA and stop practising law as a criminal defence attorney.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Grain Rail Transportation Backlog

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Last year . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, Leduc-Beaumont has the floor, and he's trying hard to be heard with it. Thank you.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year's crop yields were 30 per cent higher than normal. However, that entire crop won't be shipped till at best later this year due to issues with the rail lines. Considering that larger crops are becoming the norm, this problem is expected to continue. Our farmers will suffer and our customers will look to other sources for their products until the government of Canada and the rail companies understand the importance of our agricultural sector being able to deliver their products on time. To the minister of agriculture: what is your ministry doing in conjunction with the government of Canada to push the rail companies to ensure that this backlog does not become a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. This is a matter of great concern to us, and it's an issue, really, of national concern. We have been very aggressive on this issue, but as well industry partners and other provinces have also been very aggressive. We're very pleased that the federal government has now taken some steps. They've passed an order in council, which creates some quick action, but also they've now tabled some legislation which is taking some of the suggestions that we've made in terms of interswitching distances and keeping better track of data and whatnot.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Minister. I do appreciate those efforts so far, but are you exploring any other options for grain farmers to get their goods to market on time?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we've been having a lot of discussions, and these are discussions, interestingly, that have been going on for, really, decades. We are pleased that we're seeing some action from the federal government now. There are conversations in the New West Partnership. We're going to be involved in a symposium next fall in Saskatchewan. Interestingly, this is not just about grain, though. This is about all commodities because the movement of all commodities is a matter of great concern to us right now.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: Mr. Minister, are you planning on providing any form of assistance to the farmers whose livelihoods are being impacted through no fault of their own?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of options already. The federal government has an advanced payment program where producers can get $400,000 advances, and $100,000 of that is interest free. As of April 1 we're into a new year, so that's another possibility. There are also other options. I would note that AgriInvest, which is a federally-provincially funded program, has some half-billion dollars that producers have in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Acute Health Care in Consort

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've asked six questions, given two member's statements, and presented a 1,000-person petition on the lack of acute-care beds in the community of Consort, and still nothing. Once again to the Minister of Health. It has been over three long years now that Consort has not had their acute-care beds and that this government has had the time to find a solution. Consort does not want to hear the PC pig Latin about mitigating circumstances. They want to know that these hospital beds will be returned to their community. Will they?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've also had the pleasure of answering these same questions multiple times for the hon. member, and the answer actually hasn't changed from the last time that he asked. We continue to have challenges in the community of Consort with respect to ensuring sufficient volume to allow us to provide services that are safe and also to allow us to attract the required health professionals to offer those services. The question is about meeting the needs of not just the citizens of Consort but the surrounding area, and we are doing that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As some members have said, this is question period, not answer period.

Given that the Minister of Health continues to speak in bureaucratese about factors and circumstances and he meets and consults without getting anything in done in over three years, will he please tell AHS that enough is enough and that he expects acute-care beds in Consort to be in operation as soon as possible?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that of all people, the hon. member would not want a situation where in the political sphere we were directing the delivery of programs and services at the local level. The question is a question for Alberta Health Services and their professionals to determine. The hon. member knows full well that there is a significant issue with respect to having sufficient volume in that hospital to allow it to deliver services safely and effectively and to attract the required health professionals. If and when we're in a situation where we have those conditions, I'm sure that AHS will restore the acute-care services.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'm rolling towards nine questions and no answers.

Given that this is a secretive government that does not share information with the public and does not keep its promises, will the Minister of Health once and for all break out of the PC government mold and show some leadership, follow through with your promises, and open the beds in Consort?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, leadership would be recognizing the fact that with 99 hospitals across the province, we have to ensure that all of the hospitals are attracting a sufficient volume of patients and health professionals to deliver services safely and effectively. A number of our smaller hospitals, including Consort, are facing these challenges. That is not to say that they do not deliver other community-based services that are very, very important to the community like public health and mental health. I appreciate that this hon. member would like the same hospital in his community that they had in 1970. The fact is that health care delivery has changed in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Organ Donor Registry

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know that April 20 to 27 is National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week. This week draws awareness to the need for organ and tissue donation across the country. That's why I was very pleased to learn about and attend this morning's launch of the Alberta organ and tissue donation registry, following on Bill 201, which I sponsored in 2011. My first question is to the Minister of Health. Can you, Minister, tell us how this online registry helps increase the number of organ donations in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his question. He was, in fact, a leader within our caucus in bringing forward a private member's bill a few years ago that raised awareness of this issue significantly. Today we have over 500 Albertans waiting for an organ transplant in our province. Many more are waiting for tissue transplants such as corneas or heart valves. This online registry, in short, will make it easier for Albertans to register their intention to donate, and it will support that decision-makers respect their wishes if and when they are in a position to be a donor.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you. To the same minister: what safeguards have been put in place to ensure people's personal information is well protected by this system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've taken extensive measures to ensure that information provided in the registry is kept secure. The registry complies with all the requirements of the Health Information Act. The registry is maintained by my ministry, the Ministry of Health, in a secure environment. There are a number of checks and balances within the registry itself that require people to identify multiple pieces of personally identifying information in order to verify their own identity.

Mr. Sandhu: To the same minister again: this registry system is a good step, but what else is the government doing to help improve organ and tissue donor rates in Alberta?

Thank you.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. There is more to be done. The registry is an important step in making it easy for Albertans to register their intent to donate electronically. Later on this spring, when Albertans renew their drivers' licences and personal identification cards, they will be asked if they wish to register their intent at that time. Drivers' licences will contain a symbol designating that that individual has registered their intent to donate. Of course, later this year we will be establishing a separate organ and tissue donation agency for the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, today marks a significant birthday – well, aren't they all? – for the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. Please join me in congratulating him on his birthday.

Equally important, I had received several notes asking for a 30-second time out, so to speak, at the end of question period when we have members' statements with which we want to continue. Now I've received several notes saying: please discontinue the 30 seconds. So let's try that for a while. I'm at your service.

The Speaker: Let's go on with Calgary-Glenmore for her private member's statement, followed by Sherwood Park.

Genetics Research

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 29 is the anniversary of one of the most important discoveries in the field of genetics, and an Alberta organization has been taking the lead in making it a day worth noting. In April 1953 it was determined that the double helix structure of DNA is the basic building block of what makes us who we are. Because of genetics ranchers can now do a simple test to gain insight into the genetic makeup of their livestock to help raise quality Alberta beef and to ensure the best dairy cows. In plants it is genetics that allows crops to thrive in Alberta's climate. With careful genetic selection and testing Alberta researchers have helped the canola and flax industry be more competitive.

Here in Alberta we are proud to have an outstanding industry leader. Genome Alberta was created in 2006 as a joint initiative by the government of Alberta and Genome Canada. It has led many successful research efforts and is a leader in Alberta's contributions to the field of genetics. On April 29 Genome Alberta along with the Let's Talk Science organization will mark DNA Day with its fourth annual day of online activities. Experts in the field of genetics have recorded videos answering questions, all to be released on that day. Also, there will be digital chat rooms with experts and a Google Hangout with Jay Ingram, a well-known science broadcaster based in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, since the double helix was discovered 61 years ago, the world has made significant progress in understanding genetics. The work that Genome Alberta is doing ensures that our province is at the forefront of international human research and innovation. Major research in the energy sector is also under way to help industry deal with corrosion issues and clean up tailings ponds.

An important day in the world of science is occurring on April 29, Mr. Speaker. I encourage all members along with all Albertans to recognize this day by going to letstalkdna.ca.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

GreenTRIP Funding

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday I was so pleased to welcome the Minister of Transportation and the Associate Minister of Seniors along with the Strathcona county mayor, Roxanne Carr, to Sherwood Park for the unveiling of the new Bethel transit terminal. The new transit centre will have parking for 1,200 vehicles and a passenger pickup and drop-off area in addition to the new bus station and loading area. It is all estimated to cost $23 million. Our government is contributing $13.6 million through the green transit incentives program.

Mayor Carr reported that the new transit centre is one of the largest in the capital region and that it will facilitate 5,000 passenger movements a day. She said, "This terminal allows our community to restructure its bus routes, improve inter-municipal and local transit services, and take cars off highways."

I understand GreenTRIP is funding transit programs in 15 municipalities so far, to a total of over $1 billion. I also understand that the call for a second round of applications, for close to another billion dollars, just opened up. You may wish to ensure that your municipalities are aware of the availability of the GreenTRIP funding that covers transit vehicles, light rail transit services as well as transit terminals. Applicants are required to contribute at least one-third of the cost of projects.

I am proud our government is helping Albertans access a wider range of sustainable and accessible transit alternatives for local and regional travel while cutting down on our carbon footprint.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health Care Professionals

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that politicians want to talk about personal health issues. I recently underwent surgery, and I spent about a week in the hospital recovering. I feel it's important to mention the hard-working health care professionals, who truly deserve to be thanked.

Once you're in the system, Alberta health care is top notch. The quality of care I received in the operating room and during recovery was absolutely excellent. I saw doctors and nurses and health care aides doing everything they could do to make sure that not only I was safe and comfortable but also everyone else around me.

Mr. Speaker, the people taking care of me didn't know who I was or the job that I do. They had no idea I was the opposition Health critic. Quite frankly, they were too busy dealing with patients to give it much thought. Everywhere you looked, there were patients in bed. During my recovery one nurse suggested I take a walk, so I thought, "I'll go to the patient lounge," but, no, I couldn't do that because even the lounge was full of beds. Someone suggested they wouldn't be surprised if AHS started deploying bunk beds in the hospital to deal with the constant overcapacity.

Mr. Speaker, when we bring up issues of waste in the system, whether it's executive coaches, sole-sourced contracts, or image and reputation consultants, it's because the Wildrose believe these dollars should be going to where they actually need it, down to the front lines. When I came out of surgery, I was sick as a dog, and who was there for me holding the bucket? It certainly wasn't an AHS executive. When I needed to go to the washroom, who was there to help me up? It wasn't a bureaucrat. When I rang the call bell, who came rushing to my bedside to help? It wasn't a consultant. It was a hard-working front-line health professional: doctors, nurses, health care aides amongst them. They are the ones who are constantly holding the system together, and they are the ones who need to be thanked over and over again.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented on Wednesday, April 16, 2014. As chair of the committee I can advise the House that the petitions comply with standing orders 90 to 94.

Thanks.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition of just over 2,400 signatures from residents of Airdrie. It states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to recognize the need for 24-hour urgent health care services in Airdrie and work with community leaders and health professionals to provide the resources necessary for its prompt establishment.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Bill 11

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce and move first reading of Bill 11, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Amendment Act, 2014.

This legislation is another step in support of our plan to build a stronger child intervention system built on continuous improvements. It puts a renewed focus on quality assurance that will improve supports for vulnerable children. The legislation and consequential amendments enhance our continued emphasis on providing quality services in supporting and protecting Alberta's children, youth, and families.

Lifting the publication ban with this bill will allow families to speak publicly about a child receiving intervention services who has died. Our government believes that it is the basic right of each and every person to express grief publicly if they so choose. It's also their right to protect privacy in a period of tremendous sadness, Mr. Speaker. This decision is not one for government to be making. It's one for families to decide and for those closest to the children to decide what's in the best interests of children.

This bill also expands the Child and Youth Advocate's investigative powers to include young people whose intervention files have been closed for up to two years, which will put additional scrutiny on how we assess outcomes. The works and reports of the Child and Family Services Council for Quality Assurance will also help increase public understanding and confidence in our system by having them be reported publicly.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards our office has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. These postcards were collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, clear evidence that this government is not listening to the demands of Albertans for well-funded postsecondary education.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else with a tabling?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, a couple of pieces that the Wildrose opposition doesn't want Albertans to know the truth about, stemming from this question period. My memo, addressed to the hon. Premier, which was also copied to Jill Clayton, information and privacy officer, and dated November 29, reads:

Of course, the intention is not to interfere in the timing or content of materials being released through the FOIP process, or to gather information about individuals filing requests. Rather, it is to ensure that ministers can provide informed comments to media and Opposition about materials in the public domain.

Also, the honourable office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner's response, signed by Ms Jill Clayton, the commissioner, dated December 6, 2013, thanking me for engaging her in the process of putting this new system in place, advising me of a whole bunch of potential risks that could stem, and advising me on how to mitigate risks to make sure that our FOIP process is intact.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I would wish to table the requisite number of copies of a memo that was referenced in her questions earlier. In the document it is quoted:

On November 29, 2013, the former Deputy Premier circulated a Memorandum to the Premier and Cabinet requesting that Ministers gather information about materials being released by their departments and that their press secretaries gather information about active FOIP requests which have the potential to generate media, session, political or other reputational issues for government. It was requested this information be sent to his office by noon Fridays in the template provided.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We are going to deal with points of order. The first point of order was raised by the Minister of Justice at approximately 2:12. Would you proceed with your citation for your point of order?

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and (l), particularly but not limited to "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." In this particular case, this was in an exchange between the Minister of Service Alberta and the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but what made me rise on this particular matter is that I believe the member had indicated that the government was, quote, blatantly vetting FOIP requests. That was in the third exchange.

If you just look at what the definition of vet is, it is to appraise, verify, or to check accuracy. The Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour – I hope I got that right – has tabled the document in question. If you look to the final paragraph, Mr. Speaker, it says that "the intention is not to interfere in the timing or content of materials being released through the FOIP process." He's already gone through it; I won't beat the dead horse. It doesn't say "vet." It doesn't say "check." It doesn't say "verify." It doesn't allude to any of that at all. The intention, obviously, is not to interfere as to the timing or content. To say that the government was actually trying to vet FOIP requests: the very document that that member references proves his allegation to be incorrect. All I would ask is that the member please withdraw that particular comment and refrain from making that assertion in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's certainly no point of order here. If you have the opportunity to review the Blues, as I'm sure you will, you'll see that in the answer to the very question that the Minister of Justice has risen on in his point of order, the Minister of Service Alberta suggests something along the lines that they're not vetting these FOIP requests, that they're simply reviewing them. You know, you can get into the semantics of the definition of those two words, but at the end of the day the majority of Albertans would understand that reviewing FOIP requests is very similar to vetting them. Therefore, I would suggest to you . . . [interjections] The predictable calls from the peanut gallery across the way, particularly those that I always hear from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that it's simply not a point of order, and I would ask you to rule accordingly. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I know they want to deal with semantics because any opportunity to slander anyone on camera is an opportunity that will be taken. You should know that in the memo to which the opposition is referring, they're purposely not reading the last paragraph of this particular memo, which advises the commissioner that the fact is that ministries are inundated with FOIPs from the media, from the general public, and from the opposition, and ministers, who are in charge of the ministry, ought to know what information is going out so that they can knowledgeably answer questions about it. When a camera is in their face or the opposition asks a question in question period, the minister, to be competent and deemed to be competent, needs to know what information comes out of that minister's department and be able to answer that information knowledgeably. As the head of a department, as the minister of a department one must know what is in the public domain.

What the opposition, Mr. Speaker, is purposely doing is that they're tabling a memo, but they will not read you the last paragraph. They (a) won't tell you that this is a memo asking for advice from the Privacy Commissioner – in order for the system to be intact, I think any minister is well served to ask for advice from the commissioner – and (b) they will purposely not read you the last paragraph of this memo, that explains exactly why we're doing what we're doing.

What they also will purposely not do, Mr. Speaker, is present the response from the Privacy Commissioner. If they have this memo, they obviously would have received the response from the Privacy Commissioner, which says, first of all: thank you for giving me the opportunity of participating in this; thank you for soliciting my advice; here is a list of potential risks that may stem from introducing this new process; this is how to mitigate them; again, thank you for staying in touch, and thank you for making me part of this process.

That, Mr. Speaker, they will not tell you because they're not in the business of letting Albertans know what truly happened. They're in the business of slinging mud and hoping that something sticks.

3:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

I want, first of all, the record to show that there was a request made to revert to introductions by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and unfortunately it got caught up here, and I failed to recognize her. I apologize for that.

Are there others on the point of order? None.

Well, let's deal with this. I don't have the complete Blues on this matter either, but I have some, and I want to just review them with you very quickly. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills rose at approximately 2:11:49 and among other things said, "This PC cabinet is improperly vetting FOIP requests if there are reputational issues with the government," and then went on to say, "Will the Premier accept this blatant breach of legislation or did he not know that this rotten practice was wrong at the time?"

The Minister of Service Alberta then stood and said amongst other things the following.

I have a copy of what he's referring to right here, and there's nothing that says "vetting." All it discusses is gathering the FOIP requests so that they could be reviewed so that we'd know what was going out . . . and then we get phone calls about it. There's nothing in here that mentions vetting. It's about gathering information so that everyone is aware of what's going out publicly. Nothing is being singled out or eliminated or affected by that process.

Hon. members, a couple of points, very quickly, then we'll move on. First of all, I would remind you to please, if you wouldn't mind, take a look at Beauchesne 408(1)(c), 409 (3), and 410(13) as well as House of Commons, page 502, the last line. All of them talk about issues pertaining to question period, where you shouldn't ask questions that require an opinion or questions that require a legal answer or words to that effect. I don't have all of that just in front of me. But just review those, if you would, please.

I would look at this and say that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills did use some very stern if not harsh language in his questions, but that's what question period sometimes is all about. In response I think the Minister of Service Alberta did his best to clarify it. I think what we really have here is just a classic case of a dispute as to what the facts are surrounding this. No doubt there might be more that follows on it. But today I see no point of order here, so we're going to move on with a reminder that we shouldn't use points of order to prolong or initiate debate.

Let's move on, then – that closes that matter – to point of order 2. Point of order 2 was raised at approximately 2:22 p.m. by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It was raised I think with respect to something to do with the Minister of Energy. Let's hear the citation for the point of order.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm citing 23(h), (i), (j), (k), and (l). The member twice – and it should be in the Blues; I don't have a copy – referenced that the public carries no debt with regard to the Alberta electric system. Now, we went over this in the estimates. The government can play with the words and with the definition of "debt" when it applies to generators, but when it applies to the system – I brought this up, and the minister clarified it in estimates – transmission lines carry debt, and that debt is passed directly on to consumers in the form of a charge called transmission charges. That has never changed. Transmission lines are heavily regulated. So to make a broad statement twice in this House that the system doesn't carry any debt, that Albertans don't carry debt for the system would be inaccurate. We went down this road before.

I won't say that that is misleading, but the member should know or should have known the exact correctness of what was being said with regard to the entire system. To solve this, what I suggest is that the minister correct and rephrase her words, that there may be no debt, in her opinion, as it relates to generation but that the system carries debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. First off, thank you to whoever gave me these Halls to help me with my speech today.

The Minister of Energy talked about – I don't have the benefit of the Blues, Mr. Speaker – no public debt. She said that there is no public debt, and her reference was that we don't have any public utility debt. Within the context of that question-and-answer exchange I think that was a reasonable submission. We were talking about utilities, so it was easily assumed that she should have said: no public utility debt.

This member brought up 23(k), which refers to: "speaks disrespectfully of Her Majesty or of any other member of the Royal Family." I don't believe that the Minister of Energy undertook that at all.

The Speaker: Are there others? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you wish to supplement briefly? Very quickly.

Mr. Anglin: Just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, the member brings up the issue of utilities. The fact is that a transmission line company is a utility. It carries a tremendous amount of debt, and that debt is passed along to Albertans, just as I stated earlier, in a direct charge. The consumers carry that debt.

I made the citation broad like the other member did, but it really pertains to (l), which I cited also. We can play games with that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, again two different versions, two different, perhaps, definitions, if you will, of what debt is or isn't and what the energy policy might or might not be. Some might see it this way, some might see it that way, but truly I don't see this as really a point of order, and we're going to stop it right there. Thank you for raising it just the same.

Let us conclude that matter there and move on to point of order 3, which was raised at 2:28. I believe it was Calgary-Shaw, again with reference to a discussion with the Minister of Energy.

Please proceed with a citation.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll make this very quick. No need to extend this one. It's pretty straightforward. In response to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre the hon. Minister of Energy in one of her responses suggested that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre may not understand her answer because he may not have been here in the House at the time it was given. It is a long-standing tradition that the absence or presence of members not be referred to in debate. Look no further than 289(3). [interjections] I don't know what it is that they're talking about on the other side, but if we were to overlook this, I can assure you we would have quite a bit of talking to do about this issue.

So with 23(j), use of insulting language, or (l), offending the practice and precedents of the House, I would ask her to withdraw.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I again don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I believe the Minister of Energy indicated that the member was not in the House at that time, and her reference was that he was not elected prior to April 23, 2012, actually two years ago tomorrow. Her reference was to the fact that he was not elected at the time and, therefore, was not in the Legislature. I think this can be dealt with by the way of a point of clarification.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. members, that was my recollection of it as well. We can review the Blues to get more clarity and intent, but I thought that the hon. Minister of Energy also was referring to a time referred to as election time versus actual presence in the House. We all know that we do not and should not and must not refer to the presence or absence of members in the House, so we'll leave it at that. I hope the hon. members on the opposition side will accept the explanation. That is my interpretation of it. So that closes that matter. I don't have any Blues in front of me, by the way, on that point either. It's just too early.

That concludes that matter, and we'll move on to point of order 4, which was the Minister of Justice.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Orders 23(h), (i), (j), and (l). I've stated many times that I had no prior knowledge of the RCMP's gun storage or seizure or whatever you may call it. I've stated many times that I found out about it when I went to the RCMP detachment at the end of June, and then I sent a letter immediately the next day, on June 27, to Dale McGowan, the former deputy commissioner of the RCMP, subsequent to which there was an investigation triggered by the RCMP public complaints office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've stated this almost for, I'd say, about nine different months. There is no evidence to the contrary. I recognize it is a serious offence for one to state in the House items that he or she knows are blatantly incorrect. I know this member is a trained lawyer. At the same time, he needs to stop making these types of intimations because there is no evidence to back up his particular claims and there's, in fact, evidence to the contrary. I would just ask that this member please withdraw those statements and refrain from making them in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would suggest that there is no point of order here. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was simply asking the Minister of Justice if he knew about this, and therefore I don't believe that it's necessarily a point of order. I don't know that there were accusations involved. It was seeking clarification on the facts as the Justice minister knew them at the time.

Further to that, I would suggest that in the answer if anyone is guilty of a point of order here, it was the way in which the Justice minister insinuated that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills should stop practising criminal law based on the way he asked the question. This cuts both ways, and I would just simply suggest again: no point of order.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, again, it's been an afternoon of clarification and dispute as to the facts and accepting two different versions of the same event and so on. I don't have the Blues. I'll review them, and if there's a need to, I'll get back to you with that, but for the moment we'll just leave that as a concluded matter now that there's been quite a sufficient airing of it and a clarification of what both sides feel about the matter.

That should take care of it unless there are any other points of order.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate April 17: Mr. Horner]

The Speaker: Are there any speakers to Bill 9, Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act? It's been moved and adjourned, and we're looking for a second speaker. It will be the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, an honour to rise and speak to Bill 9 and speak against Bill 9, the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014, as it is called. Along with Bill 45 and Bill 46, Bill 9 forms the unholy trinity of bills in this Assembly. You know, it really is amazing that you have a government that is trying to negotiate a good deal, a fair deal for taxpayers and a fair deal, obviously, for our public-sector workers. The strategy for doing so is to poison the well so badly that, really, there is no goodwill left right now between the government and our public-sector workers. So, of course, it follows that it then becomes somewhat difficult to enter into good-faith negotiations when one side completely mistrusts the other. That's exactly what has been the case here.

The PC government has failed to lead by example. In the midst of publicity around the obscene severance packages that their political staff is getting, they are ramming through public-sector pension changes. When the folks in the public sector see the stories of these ridiculous pensions and severance packages being handed out, they just shake their heads when the government then turns around and tries to nickel and dime their own pensions. It is extremely obtuse and tone-deaf of the government to do such a thing.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear up front with regard to our statement on Bill 9 so that there's no misinterpretation of it. We have issued the following statement on Bill 9: the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act threatens existing public pension benefits for hard-working Albertans across the province.

As usual, the PC government's standard operating procedure on labour relations issues is that of bullying instead of good faith negotiations. Wildrose has long supported the view that contracts and agreements must be respected. That includes the pension [agreements] promised to current public sector workers and pensioners who chose their careers in the public sector based, at least in part, on the promise of the current public pension arrangement. Although we feel some reforms to the current system may be needed to ensure the long term sustainability of public pensions, we believe that any such changes need to be negotiated openly and respectfully with union leadership, and that [if there are] any substantial changes [they] should only be applied to workers who have yet to be hired, rather than those already employed or retired.

Wildrose is committed to repealing Bill 9 if elected in 2016, along with Bills 45 and 46 which also unjustly ignore the legal rights of our public sector employees.

We look forward to members of this House, hopefully, holding us to account on that statement in 2016, Mr. Speaker.

We couldn't agree more that Bill 9 is a bill that absolutely is not only unwarranted but is an affront to the good-faith negotiating process, especially given that we have bills 45 and 46 before the courts right now. To add Bill 9 onto the top of it is only going to poison things further.

Now, I want to be clear. We can look at different jurisdictions across the country. I look at, for example, Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan faced an issue with pension sustainability. Now, let's pretend that right now there is a pension sustainability problem, for the sake of argument. Let's pretend that the government's actuaries and numbers and calculations are correct and that we need to make changes to make the pension sustainable. If that's the case, one might argue that the best approach would have been to follow the Saskatchewan approach, when back in the '70s it was decided that they needed to make some alterations to the pension arrangement that worked for them to make public pensions more sustainable over the long term. So they did so.

It doesn't necessarily have to apply in Alberta, but in the Saskatchewan case they switched over to a defined contribution pension plan as opposed to a defined benefit pension plan. That was back, I believe, in 1977 that they did that. Now, when they did so, what they did is that they grandfathered it in. They said: "Look. Everybody who has already paid into the current pension system and everybody who is a current pensioner: we are not going to change the rules for those folks. We're not going to change the benefits. We're not going to change anything for them. What we are going to do is grandfather it so that new hires, new people that have not been hired yet, will be under the new defined contribution plan." They did that, and now they're here today and have a reasonably sustainable pension program there in Saskatchewan, far more sustainable than it was in the past.

Now, that solution worked for them. I want to make sure I'm clear that I'm not saying that it's necessary in Alberta's case to have a defined contribution plan. Like our friend over there, my friend the Treasury Board president, I must say that in past years, before knowing too much about the pension issue, I was a bit of a fan of defined contribution plans as well, and I've said so. I'm not sure if I've said so in this House. I might have. [interjection] No, not last week, I assure you.

But I've looked more into the reports that have come out about the sustainability of pensions, about some of the other options like pooled pension plans, which I wasn't aware of four or five years ago but am aware of today, with regard to changing the contribution rates, and so forth. There are other ways that the system can be fixed and the system can be changed rather than just switching to a defined contribution plan. Perhaps that worked for Saskatchewan, and perhaps that's something that one day might work in this jurisdiction. Perhaps not.

The point is the grandfather principle. If you're going to make changes, you've got to make sure that it doesn't apply to our current workforce, that has already made plans for their retirement, has already made plans for their career choice based largely upon the pension arrangement. As an example, when I was coming out of law school at the U of A, I had to make a decision about where I was going to practise law. One of the options was one of those big Calgary law firms, which I eventually did go to, Borden Ladner Gervais. Or you can do other things. You can go to a mid-size law firm, which pays a little bit less but maybe has a little bit of flexibility with family and so forth, or you can go to the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton and practise law for them.

Now, the salaries at the city are much lower than what I could make at a larger firm. I made a decision to go with the larger firm at that time, but one of the things that the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton offered that I found very attractive, the same with Justice Canada and Alberta Justice, and did twig me a little bit was the chance that even though I would take a lower salary, I could have a pension plan that was generous but I thought fair compromise for the fact that I'd be making far less as a lawyer at those institutions. That was part of the thing that made me at least consider working in the municipal legal department or Alberta Justice or Justice Canada.

I decided to go another way, but a lot of folks, when they go and work for government, part of their plan is to say: "Look. You know what? I could make more in the private sector, I could make more in oil and gas, I could make more in many different areas, but I'm going to go into the public sector because (a) I love the job that's being offered there, and I want to do it, whether it's nursing or social work or whatever, and also there's a pension plan. So even though I'm giving up some income at the front end, I'm getting a little bit of secured income at the back end." That pension tool is used as a recruitment tool, especially in Alberta, where it's competitive for workers. When it comes to trying to get employees to come and work for different organizations, it's very competitive. It's hard for the employers to compete with one another in that regard. This is a tool that our public-sector institutions use to try to get the best talent possible.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The problem with this bill fundamentally is that it changes the deal. It breaks the contract. Does it tear up their pensions completely and throw them out the window? No, it doesn't do that. No one is saying it does, but it does alter the agreement. It alters the benefits for existing pensioners as well as workers who are nearing retirement and soon to be pensioners and for those that are just in the system. They have made career choices. They have made decisions based on this pension arrangement. They have made investment decisions based on it. In my view, we need to respect those decisions.

Will it cost the government a little bit more to respect those decisions and those contracts than it would if they made these changes? Yeah. Sure. But does it mean that there's going to be a sustainability problem in the short term with regard to our pension plans? I don't think so. I think we can make negotiated changes. We can look at contribution rates. We can look at the way that the pensions are managed. We can look at a lot of different issues and different ideas to make pensions more sustainable rather than changing the promised benefits to our public-sector workers.

There's also a lot of uncertainty with regard to what the exact problem is. I know that the minister of intergovernmental relations was quoted as saying that the current $7.4 billion unfunded liability with regard to public pensions would be corrected in the next 10 to 12 years or so without major changes. He was saying that in the context of the public pensions. He didn't think, at that time anyway, that there was much of a liability problem. Other studies have put that more at roughly nine years. It depends on who you talk to, frankly. I've seen lots of different studies ranging from "It's a very serious problem" to "It's not really a big problem at all" to a whole bunch of stuff in the middle. The point is that the government I don't think has made the case that the pensions right now are, in fact, unsustainable.

The George & Bell analysis, for example, predicted that the unfunded liability in Alberta will be eliminated in nine years under the current pension arrangements. George & Bell is an independent actuarial firm that has been used by agencies of government in the past for several initiatives.

Madam Speaker, the services that our public sector provides Albertans are obviously of critical importance, and we all agree with that. It is so important that our front lines feel valued, that they feel secure, that they don't feel the need to go to a different jurisdiction, that they're not feeling undue pressure so they can concentrate on their job and not have to worry about illegal strikes and negotiated this and legislated 45 and 46 and bills like Bill 9 and so forth.

I'm getting and I'm sure all of us are getting literally hundreds of e-mails on this. People are upset. These are front-line workers that are doing important work every day, and this has thrown them into a very unsettled state very unfairly and probably unnecessarily.

So I would ask that the government, before proceeding with this bill, table this bill and make sure that they have done proper consultation with the union leadership as well as all stakeholder groups. I think it's fair to ask, Madam Speaker, that we wait until after we know who the next Premier is going to be. It is, I think, very unfair for this decision to be made by this Assembly when we don't know what the head of the executive branch in the next couple of months is going to think about this, and I think that's wrong. I think that there's a debate that's going to happen over on that side of the House about who should lead their party and, therefore, because they're the governing party, obviously become the Premier, and during that debate it would be a good time to have a debate about these ideas. You know, we can chime in. I'm sure the other opposition parties will chime in, and I'm sure the candidates will chime in. We can have a good, fulsome discussion. Did I just use fulsome discussion? I did. Fulsome discussion. Kudos to the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I'm now using her vernacular.

Mr. Wilson: With respect.

Mr. Anderson: With respect.

Anyway, I think we should have that discussion, and only when the new Premier is chosen do we then proceed with this legislation, if at all. I think that that would be a much more democratic solution to this problem. When the leadership is held and that discussion happens, my guess is that there may be a change of heart in this regard. [interjection] Perhaps. It generally happens. It depends on how competitive it is. If it's a coronation, then maybe not. Who knows? They're having trouble finding candidates right now.

Madam Speaker, I hope that this will be tabled. I hope the government will respect our public-sector workers enough to realize that they have made serious life decisions based on the current pension arrangement and that if they're going to make any changes to the pension plan, those changes will be negotiated in good faith with the union leadership, with the public sector, and that if there are any substantial negotiated changes, those changes only apply to new hires, the folks that have not been hired yet. That would be the fair, the sensible, indeed I dare say, the moderate approach – the moderate approach – that the reasonable right over here believes in.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is, as always, an honour and a privilege to speak in this House to bills although my comments in regard to this bill, Bill 9, really reflect on what, in my view, are not positives for the average worker in this province, the average person who has worked very hard for this government and for the people of Alberta over the course of the last number of years and, of course, those that will continue to do so going forward.

Essentially this bill, Bill 9, introduces substantial changes to public-sector pension plans, and I think it's important to highlight who the people are that the government is going after, who will have their lives irrevocably changed when this bill is passed. In the main, Madam Speaker, these are the people who keep our hospitals running, who work at the Alberta Cancer Board, who work at the Alberta College of Art and Design, who work at the city of Airdrie or the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton, public servants who are there doing work on a day-to-day basis ensuring that Albertans get the public services that they need to live a high-quality life in this province. We have a whole host of organizations: the Lloydminster hospital, Mackenzie Regional Waste Management Commission, Medicine Hat Catholic board of education. The list goes on. These are not some nameless, faceless people who we are affecting; it's the Albertans who work very hard on behalf of the citizenry to provide quality public services.

This bill, in concert with Bill 45 and Bill 46 from last session, in my view, constitutes an unprecedented attack on working people in this province, people who are working an honest day for an honest day's wages. Essentially, it ties into a whole host of ideas. I mean, what's in it for the average Albertan anyway? It ties into what all this prosperity in Alberta is about. It seems like we have a whole host of people in this province who are getting exceedingly wealthy as a result of our oil boom and our energy resource industry, and we have a whole host of people who are not supposed to be part of this, who are not supposed to be part of the good fortune of our living on 25 per cent of the world's resources. It appears that the government believes that people who work in our public services should not be entitled to some of the Alberta advantage of living on that resource wealth. It continues along with that theme.

We see that one of the major things that, in my view, is going to affect not only Alberta but probably the rest of the world over the course of the next 40 years is inequality. We continue to see a portion of our population throughout the world doing very well and other groups of individuals who are continuing not to do very well. There's a continuing gap between the wealthy and the poor not only throughout the world but in Alberta as well. This contributes to this and does not rectify it. It does not do anything to work towards solving that issue or having people understand that Alberta is a place for everyone.

If we look at this, what are the changes? We'll be talking a lot about this over the course of the next couple of weeks, and I'm glad for that. If you look at what this is for the average person who receives a pension, who works for one of Alberta's four major public-sector pension plans, the average retirement package that they're currently getting is in and around $12,000. That's not large sum of money, Madam Speaker. We are looking at that as the average payout of pension benefits to people who have worked for this great province. We are not talking about egregious pensions. We are not talking about buyouts of AHS executives or people who have close ties to this government or the like. You know, we have had countless examples over the last number of years since I've been in this House of people receiving golden handshakes or gold-plated pensions. This is not an example like those individuals, and let's be clear about that.

Let's face it. Pension benefits are negotiated between a government and their employees. That's what they are. Simply put, the employees have contributed their wages to these pension plans. The government as the employer has contributed as well. So it's part of a negotiated contract settlement. Now, in the future when the government goes to negotiate these contracts and there's no longer a pension plan to offer to find quality workers to do the services that Albertans need, does the government just think that these workers are going to continue to work for exactly the same wage? Or do you think that maybe they might demand a higher average hourly wage? Do you think that might happen? I don't really know where the cost savings or the certainty is coming from in this. All I know is that it seems to be an attack on the average working man and woman in this province.

Here are some of the specific changes that the government is now proposing. They're proposing to move the retirement age from an 80 or 85 factor, depending on the plan, to a 60 and 90 factor. That means people will be working longer to obtain any pension that they would have otherwise received. There are also cost-of-living adjustments for pension benefits earned after 2015, and the cost-of-living adjustments for pension benefits earned up to 2016 will remain – oh, just wait. I'm rambling here, but I've got to get my place. If you look at how it is, as part of the pension reforms the government will transition all – well, what we're basically going to here, Madam Speaker, is that we will only have a COLA, which people will be entitled to on their retirement savings, to be paid out at 60 per cent of inflation.

But here's where the kicker is. It will be dependent upon whether or not the plan actually makes money or is doing well or not because the government is limiting the contribution rates. It is saying: look, we are going to limit the contribution rates of both employees and employers. This puts the beneficiaries, the people who are involved in the plan, in a very difficult place. If we run into a situation like we did in 2008, where the market crashes, where you have a fundamental breakdown of what is supposed to happen in our world economy, well, those pension plans will no longer be able to raise revenue from their workforce in order to keep pension benefits for those members who are still involved in the plan.

Having this happen will simply make the plan – in my view, it won't serve the purpose of getting people the funds they need when they are in retirement, which is essentially what they're designed to do. You know, if you look at the changes as indicated, the end result will be that the pension plan, in my view, will not be workable or sustainable or provide people who have retired, most likely in their senior years, with any guarantee of an income. How can they figure out what their monthly benefits will be? How can they be assured that they can pay their bills, assured that they can handle their basic living arrangements when they have no idea what their actual benefits will be in the future? I think it's specious at best to say that this new arrangement will provide any predictability or sustainability to pensions. That is the reason why they were first intended to be there for individuals, to allow them to have that certainty of limits.

We can go through a lot of this later on: the hard cap on contributions; the end of the 85 factor; the increased penalties for early retirement that are, in fact, egregious; a reduction or removal of the cost-of-living allowances for pension benefits; and long-term benefit reductions of a nature that, in my view, will make it very difficult for the average person who works for us in our public service to retire in any kind of dignity.

To sum up, Madam Speaker, in my view, a lot of the noise around this is politically driven. I think at one time the government was looking up ways to support its right-wing flank as they saw the Wildrose as their natural competition in the upcoming election. I think that has driven them to this type of extreme, where they've gone after pension benefits and they've done things like Bill 45 and Bill 46. In my view, it is not in our society's best interest to be going down this path. Basically, while these changes appear to be what the government thought at one time would be an election-winning strategy, I think that if we observe them in the cold light of day, they're not in the best interests of our citizens' long-term health, the long-term sustainability of our workforce here in Alberta, an ability to have some equality in our society, some recognition that Alberta is a place for everyone, including our public service workers, and trying to eliminate some of the inequality that is out there.

Really, I don't know whether the government at the end of the day is going to get very far ahead economically. I think they're going to be better off – well, if you don't have people on pensions when they're retired, what's going to happen? Well, one has to look at, you know, the relatively low contribution rates we have for RRSPs and other things like that and understand then that the government eventually has to carry the can anyway, whether it's through government-assisted housing or through benefits of some kind to try and keep people's lights and heat on.

In any event, Madam Speaker, I think that the much more humane way to do this, the much more sane way to do this is to recognize that pensions work and to provide people with a reasonable place to work at a reasonable wage and allow for people to live in retirement in a reasonable fashion.

I would submit that the government should revisit this after they get a new leader because I know that what I've watched previously with PC leaderships is that they've all denied everything that happened in the past and have tried to run away from it as quickly as they can. This may in fact be the case in this case: it wasn't me; it was her. That may actually happen, Madam Speaker. I've seen it happen before. Actually, I saw the hon. minister of Treasury Board, last time he ran for leader, say a lot of that stuff: "No, no, no. That was that guy, not me. Not me." I saw that. I read your platform. It was different.

Anyway, there you go.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or question the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise and speak to Bill 9. In what may come as a shock to many of the members, I am adamantly opposed to this bill and everything in it, so I'm going to go through as concisely as possible the issues that I have with Bill 9. I mean, this is an unprecedented attack on our public-sector workers. In fact, it may not be unprecedented because bills 45 and 46 started that attack, and this is just a continuation of it.

Madam Speaker, it's important to note, first of all, that this bill has far-reaching consequences, which I'm going to go through, but as far as oversight of the pension plans there's as well the shifting of risk, that is shared by the members and the government. This bill is essentially shifting all of the risk, the responsibility onto the very workers who have spent their lives contributing to these plans.

I'd like to begin there, Madam Speaker. You know, many of the members of this House may not understand or recognize that the concept of pensions fits under an employee's remuneration. It is part of their salary. They are choosing to accept a lesser salary today in order to have a pension and be able to collect a salary once they retire. The public-sector pensions as they are were negotiated in good faith between the workers and their representatives, our union leaders, and the government and had worked and have worked for decades.

It's quite frustrating that the government continues to use this rhetoric of: they're unsustainable, and we need to make these changes. The reality is that they are sustainable, and there are ways and methods within the plan to accommodate a downturn in the economy. For example, after the downturn in 2008 employees increased their contributions in order to bridge that gap in the unfunded liability. Now, what's frustrating and simply untrue is when the government says: well, the unfunded liability is too large, and we won't get it paid off. The fact of the matter is that there have been different figures batted around. I'll ballpark it that within 10 years the unfunded portion of the pension liability will in fact be covered, Madam Speaker.

I think it's interesting to note as well that Alberta is the fastest growing and has, I believe, the most young people of any province in the country, so the concern that there are not enough younger workers, younger generation, coming in simply is not true in this province.

The other thing about these plans. Part of the reason that the Alberta NDP is completely opposed to this bill and to Bill 10 is that this is an ideological attack. This is set out by this PC government to attack the very workers who make this province function every day. We're talking about the front-line workers, that this government will praise in one breath yet put a wage freeze on them, claw back their benefits, and look at making life much more difficult for our friends when they're retiring.

You know, one thing that's going to happen with this bill is that it's going to make public-sector jobs less attractive. This is one of the ways that we attract and retain quality workers when we're looking at comparing to the private sector. The private sector often pays more, as the Member for Airdrie had talked about, that before he got into politics, the private sector had offered a larger paycheque. But where the public sector can counter that is, again, in looking at benefits – health benefits, dental benefits, life benefits – and also looking at retirement benefits, which is a way to attract and retain quality workers. By reducing those benefits and attacking the very plans that workers have been paying into for many, many years, many of them for their whole lives, first of all it's going to weaken the pool of public-sector workers because they'll be driven out and more attracted to jobs in the private sector that can pay much more.

The other thing about this plan and the pension plans as they currently stand and why they are sustainable and cost-efficient is that risks are shared equally and over long periods of time. When these plans were set up, there was a recognition that there will be downturns in the market, absolutely. There are provisions currently for that, as I've already said. Employees increase their contributions, which has been helping to pay down that unfunded liability.

You know, I honestly believe, Madam Speaker, that part of this government's intent is to attack pensions across the board; I mean, this and the private sector. This is the start, but they'll be going after pensions in general. Some say that it could be because of lobbying from companies and corporations that stand to profit off people making individual decisions. You know, if they lose their money, then, hey, that's great. It works for some of the companies. Canada has the highest mutual-fund fees in the world, which is interesting to note, which does reduce the value and protectability of pension benefits.

Now, I'd like to just touch again on the fact that this bill is one way, one form of attack and method that this government is using to privatize our services. Again, make the public service less attractive for Albertans, and maybe more of them will not go into the public service, which will continue to weaken the system, which allows a nice little road for the government to continue its agenda of privatization.

You know, the frustration is that we should be looking at ways to expand our pensions, and in fact the Alberta NDP has been a strong advocate of expanding CPP. All working Albertans should have access to a pension. Instead of bringing everyone up, this government is choosing to remind us that many Albertans don't have a pension and that therefore we should just take it away from all of them, which is quite absurd.

For us, the answer is not taking away defined benefit plans from nurses, firefighters, front-line workers, who have been paying into it and counting on it for years. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that my office has received hundreds of letters, e-mails, and phone calls from irate Albertans. You know, they're asking me: how dare they threaten or touch my pension, which I've been contributing to my whole life? In fact, these decisions are being made unilaterally. They're not being made in consultation.

You know, Madam Speaker, if there is one word that this government does disservice to more than any other, it is the term "consultation." Previously the board's recommendation was required for fundamental changes. Within this new piece of legislation that's gone. All the powers are being shifted to the minister or the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

This bill reduces the required input of the board to simply consultation. The minister no longer needs the recommendations of the board to change any of the plan's benefits, and the board simply acts as an adviser. Basically, the minister is saying that he has the expertise, not the board, and can make these unilateral decisions.

You know, there's as well a clause applying to all changes to the plan rules that flow from this bill, deeming consultations done prior to this bill as sufficient for meeting the already watered-down requirements for the board members' input. This gives us an idea of the government's concept of consultation, which, by the way, as usual, is not defined anywhere in this piece of legislation. There are no guidelines, no guarantees for what is adequate or acceptable consultation when we're dealing with the retirement security of over 300,000 Albertan families.

You know, I could go on. When we look at how this government fails to consult, we need to look no further than to many of the aboriginal consultations, including the ironically titled Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, on which they were not consulted on a levy that affects them even though it's in the title of the bill. Again, Treaty 8 was shocked and dismayed. Treaty 6 was surprised. They hadn't been told the legislation was coming. Again, this government often references information travelling one way and terms that consultation. Sadly, that couldn't be further from the truth.

Now, some of the major issues of this bill are, basically, the attack on different areas: changing the age requirement and basically forcing Alberta workers to work longer and, again, to receive less than they're currently entitled to; the attack on the cost-of-living adjustment. I do want to point out that Alberta has the highest rate of inflation of any province in the country. I'm just trying to find my one number here because it's quite surprising what it's up to. In March Alberta's inflation rate surged to 3.9 per cent, the highest jump in five years and more than double the national rate of 1.5.

With the cost-of-living adjustment taken out, this is a serious attack on the value of the pension to ensure that dollars in the pension plan retain their purchasing power as opposed to losing money every year. Moving to a targeted COLA, I think, is simply ridiculous from the fact, Madam Speaker, that year after year that could remain zero or very, very low, in which case seniors or retirees would be losing money. So with all the money that they've put in over their lifespan and working in the public service, they're now losing money because of the changes to the cost-of-living adjustments.

The other issue, Madam Speaker, is the contribution cap and the fact that by imposing a contribution cap, the PC government has essentially handcuffed the board and all of its members from finding solutions in the future. You know, should another market downturn occur, you've basically stifled any options that would preserve the defined benefits. Now, at the other end of the equation the government will say: well, the only thing we can do, then, is to lower the benefits.

Madam Speaker, again, this is an unnecessary attack on pensions, on public-sector workers, on over 300,000 Alberta workers and their families. I can tell you that the Alberta NDP will be fighting bills 9 and 10 tooth and nail and is asking the government to shake its head and get rid of this piece of legislation and send it back to the drawing board. This is unnecessary.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or to question the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to Bill 9. The Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014, is yet another example of the government's structural failures. The minister has tried to position himself as a good steward of public pensions and public-sector workers whose aim is to prevent unfunded pension liability for taxpayers, but nothing could be further from the truth.

This bill serves as yet another slap in the face to front-line workers in our province, escalating the labour relations problems caused by bills 45 and 46. While political staffers are receiving costly severances from the revolving doors of the Premier's office, they are ramming through public-sector pension changes. They expect public employees to take one for the team while they are lavishly spending on their personal staff, sky palaces, and jet-setting trips across the globe. I have heard from many, many of my constituents who are outraged by the lack of respect they're showing for the front-line workers. While they claim to be defending the public pension plan and the promises that they have made, it is clear that they are using this as a means to undercut public servants and blame them for their own government's lack of foresight.

Madam Speaker, there seems to be a lot of doublespeak around this issue: the minister on one hand saying that there's not a serious crisis, and on the other he's claiming that the unions are undermining the seriousness. The government hasn't done a decent job of explaining what the real problem is. The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations said himself that the $7.4 billion unfunded liability would be corrected in the next 12 years without major changes whereas another study puts it at more like nine years. So why are they putting 300,000 workers' benefits at risk when this government isn't clear on their own numbers?

The Wildrose recognizes the strain public-sector pensions can put on public finances, but we would negotiate. For a government that is seemingly always engaged in conversations, they clearly do not listen. Legislating wages and silencing in those bills 45 and 46 have made that loud and clear. Even if some changes are needed, we believe that any such changes need to be negotiated openly and respectfully with the union leadership. Furthermore, I believe that any changes need to apply to new hires only going forward. The government has promised that current retired pensioners are safe; however, only time will tell, and actions speak louder than words.

I have spoken with many constituents on this issue, and they are worried. They are worried about the power the minister will retain through regulating caps. They are worried that the rules will be in the defined contribution regime, and they cannot trust this government.

I will not be supporting Bill 9, and I hope others do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll move to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I'm glad I've got the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 9, which is the first of the one-two pension punch from this government. Bill 9 is affecting public-sector pension plans. Just for anybody that's going, "What is a public-sector pension plan?" well, our world divides itself into two pieces. One is the private sector, which is business, and the other is the public sector, which is any form of public administration, so government, hospitals, education, municipal government and administrators, libraries. All the not-for-profits would fall under that sector because they are not driven by a profit motive. So it divides itself that way. One group is out there to sell their product or service to as many people for as much money as possible. Fair enough. We are very happy to have them do that, and hopefully most of them are really good at it.

The other side tries to provide a program or a service, and they do it for the most part very responsibly. Any surplus that they have, so when they take away the money they made from what they spent, if there's money left over, is a surplus, and they reinvest that into the product or the service that they are dealing with. So it gets reinvested into health care, for example, or reinvested into seniors' care. It doesn't go into a shareholder's pocket. In health care I would sure hope that it doesn't.

Here we have the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014. Now, I just want to talk a little bit about the history of pension plans. Typically these were annuities, and they still are. The idea was that they're not for a specified period of time. A pension doesn't say: okay; this is for 10 years. It says: this is what you're going to get upon your retirement – it's always based upon retirement – every year until you die.

Some of them have survivor benefits, where you can agree at the very beginning that – well, I'll speak for myself. With my parents, they were teachers, so they could agree that they would take a smaller amount all the way along, but then there would be a survivor benefit for the spouse after their death. Both my parents worked. They each had their own pensions. They didn't take that option, but it was certainly available to them. It's meant to be a payment, a revenue, that is going to pay your living expenses for the rest of your life. Okay. We're clear on that one.

Where did this come from? Is this just a newfangled thing? Well, actually, according to my research the original pensions were for the surviving spouse. They were for widows of – you've got to love this – ministers, people in the church, so that when the local minister died, their spouse would be looked after with a pension. That was established in 1645 and 1662, so it's not as though this is a newfangled thing. This has been around for a long time, with the concept that it's going to last until the recipient dies.

Now, Bismarck really was quite an amazing administrator. Otto von Bismarck established pensions in Germany in 1889. In Ireland the clans or the kins were expected to look after each other, and they did that by purchasing annuities, for example, which would pay out a certain amount of money for the life of the recipients.

The English system was based more on poverty, coming out of the poor laws and the relief of distress. Theirs was more a sort of social-based state allowance for people who were in distress. They were in poverty. Smart move. Ours tends to be sort of a flow-through from that one. We do have state-sponsored ones like the Canada – oh, no. That's not exactly true. Old age security and guaranteed income supplement. Canada pension plan: remember, the employees are also contributing to it, so it's not just an assistance program; the individual is also contributing to it and, of course, to the pension plans like we're talking about amending with Bill 9.

What's the deal with the timing of this? We've got a government that says, "Well, okay. I'm thinking about this," in a budget speech a year ago. Then it rolls around to September, and they go: "Okay. Here, I'm releasing this, and I need you to have your responses back in less than four months." Then we get into this spring, and here we are – tah-dah – and we need to pass this pronto. Well, okay. And it would take effect when? Eighteen months from now. Yikes. Okay, well, hmm. That's not a lot of planning time, especially if people are going to be having reduced pensions or reduced parts of that benefit package.

I'm very curious about this because CPP has got more than a 10-year lead-in. I'm one of the happy campers that is in the first group that will have a delayed kick-in for CPP. Just, you know, a little kind of funny aside here. My partner, who is exactly six months older than me, got in under the line because he was born in a different year. So he will be eligible for his CPP when he is 65. This girl: 66 or 68. The point is that they've given me a decade to figure this out and to work it into my retirement plans. They didn't give me 18 months. They've given 10 years for me to work this into how I'm going to figure out my retirement plans.

I don't understand what the rush is, and I also don't understand how the government expects people to be able to deal with a complete change in their retirement income in 18 months. I know I couldn't. I wonder how many people in here could. I think it's terribly unfair, and the timing is deplorable. I think it's just about a rush in getting it through before there's actually an election.

Perhaps someone could assist the Member for Edmonton-McClung. He seems to be having a hard time of it this afternoon.

I would suggest that one of the things the government – no. Actually, I really don't like this bill, and I think there's not much to recommend it. Really, what I'm going through is the list of all the reasons why I really don't recommend it. But I'm just making a few helpful suggestions to the government if they wanted to try to do it better. I suspect not. I suspect that that isn't what they're all about at all.

Well, my goodness, he is certainly enjoying his afternoon siesta.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: Relevance, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. I just couldn't be more interested.

Let me talk about poverty, talk about the history of pensions, the timing of this pension, poverty. Why would the government take a dual contribution scheme, especially when we know that there are already a number of seniors who are in poverty, and add more seniors into poverty with this reduced pension scheme? Poverty costs a lot of money, so why is this government going to cost themselves and the individuals a lot of money? That's what's going to happen here. This scheme may save the government a few dollars on one side or the other, but it is going to cost you a lot more when you have ill, destitute seniors.

As several of my colleagues have mentioned, we're not talking about pensions that are $36,000 or $50,000 or even $24,000. The average pension in Alberta from the public-sector pensions: 12,000 bucks. Let me just remind you that AISH recipients, who we recognize – oh, I'm getting a real sad look from one of the ministers over there, so I'm sure he'll get up and correct me. They're from actuaries. I'm not going to question them. If he wants to – we give assistance benefits of a little over $1,000 to people that we deem will never be able to participate fully in the workforce on a Monday to Friday, 8:30 to 4:30 basis. We offer them an assistance benefit of just a little over $1,000. My goodness, we are now subjecting a group of seniors to an average salary that is below that rate.

That's how much we value our public-sector employees? That's how much we value firefighters and librarians, your administrative assistants, the security guards that look after us and our life and limb all the time? That's how much we value the people that work in our municipal governments in every little town, in every little county, that, you know, keep everything running? That amazing woman at the front desk that knows where everything is in the town hall: that's how much we value her, less than we give as a benefit to AISH recipients? Seriously? That's pretty bad.

Mr. Bilous: It's pathetic.

Ms Blakeman: It's pathetic.

We know from looking at the statistics that we have a widening gap between the rich and the poor in North America. Widening. The rich are getting richer, the poor are getting poorer, and the middle income are sliding into poverty. We're going to accentuate that by now giving them a reduced pension. What did I say at the start of this? Poverty costs money. And what are we planning on doing? Putting more people into poverty. I'm sorry, but you're going to have a hard time convincing me that this is a brilliant move. Actually, you're not going to convince me.

We also know that wages are not keeping pace. People are not getting increases in what they're making that allow them to have a better quality of life than they did 10 years ago. Also, for the first time we now have a generation that is not going to do better than their parents. Their quality of life, their standard of living, by any measurement you want to make, is going to be lower than that of their parents, which is supporting everything I've just been saying.

Who is this? I've talked a little bit about who is going to be affected by this. It really is anybody in municipal governance, in the health sector, advanced education. Remember that this is approximately 50 per cent of the workers in Alberta. It's a lot of people, and it's the people that deliver those services that we so want to be there when we need them.

One of my colleagues was kind of going through a list of who would be affected by this, and I had seen the same list. It's kind of scary, actually, because it does go through every little town, every little county, you know? The town of Picture Butte. Whoever works in the Picture Butte town hall is going to be affected by this. The town of Elk Point. Anybody represent Elk Point here? Well, your person is going to be getting less of a pension here. How about the town of Didsbury? Anybody representing them? Or Castor? Or Beaverlodge?

How about the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation? The staff working there: that's whose pension you're fooling around with. How about the Red Deer Museum? Anybody represent that? I know somebody here does. Well, those people that work there, you're fooling around with their pension.

How about Olds College? I know somebody here represents that. Or the municipality of Jasper? Or the Kneehill Housing Corporation? Or the Health Quality Council of Alberta? I know that is a favourite one of yours. I cannot believe you would want them to have their pensions affected. Crowsnest Pass seniors' housing. Drumheller and District Solid Waste Management Association. That's important. How about the irrigation districts? Oh my goodness. People that work for irrigation districts. That's whose pensions you're fooling around with here. That's who you think isn't worth getting more money or getting a decent wage when they retire.

How about the Calgary Parking Authority? Ooh. I'll let you guys make the enemies out of those folks. Capital Power Corporation. The Calgary Convention Centre. The Badlands ambulance service. Hmm. That one's not going to go over so well, is it? You're affecting those people that provide those services that we all want.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would love to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre if she's aware of other groups that are going to be affected by these changes and if she'd like to further espouse her opposition to this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. There are pages of them. I mean, it's the staff that work at every single village, every single town, every single city, every single municipal district, every single country, every single library, all the irrigation districts, all of the regional boards, all of the waste management, anything that's offered by a municipality. I mean, this is a long, long, long list of people.

An Hon. Member: Flood workers.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yeah. Flood disaster recovery and flood mitigation people. All of those people that everybody couldn't wait to say enough good things about, those are the people whose pensions you guys want to reduce. That's who you want to affect here. That's who you're doing this to.

If it's okay with you, I just want to go back and pick up one little thing on the history. There are three groups that I forgot there. The other ones that followed on the Scottish clans were military pensions. That's the first time we really had pensions that recognized service, that service was given by those that were in the military, particularly starting in North America with the Revolutionary War and then the Civil War in the U.S., and those people were granted pensions. Federal civil pensions were started in 1920, recognizing individuals who served in the federal civil service. In World War II we started what we would think of as the normal pension plan today, which was where you were paid less because they were really strained in those circumstances. You were paid less than what you wanted to get, for example, but you got retirement benefits. We've heard a lot of people here talking about the choices they made to take a lower paying salary in public service, but they were going to get the pension that made up for it.

What I'm beginning to see here is the breaking of a deal, that in a number of ways a deal has been struck for quite some time that the government is looking to tear apart: the timing of it, who's affected by it, the sort of balance of the pay that people are earning versus what they're getting through retirement. We really have pensions that were in place for an extended reward for services like the military, alleviation of poverty, and lower wages than people wanted to make or that employers could afford to pay them that were offset by the pensions.

I think the final thing, aside from who's being affected by this, is the fact that it's being imposed, not negotiated. Now, generally we negotiate with the people that work with us and for us rather than saying: this is what you're going to get. Everything is negotiated in the public service. You negotiate the different levels of pay and even the days off and the extra benefits that go with that. It's a long process. But this government doesn't seem to have any time to do that.

As I've said, we've got a process that's 18 months long, and it's going to pass right now – thank you very much – never mind 10 years to ease people into it, and they didn't get a choice to negotiate. I've heard the hon. President of Treasury Board say: oh, we consulted the board members of these pensions. Well, good on you. Not the recipients of the pensions; just the board members. Well, I don't think many of the people that are recipients are going to take that as a great consultation process, especially when they now find out they're going to get less money.

Let's talk about the add-ons. I find it really curious that the government talks about these add-ons. What's an add-on? Well, the cost-of-living increase: I don't think that's considered an add-on anymore. That might've been an add-on 20, 30, 40 years ago. It sure isn't nowadays. That can affect how much money you've got for a long period of time in a big way.

So the government is going to take away and legislate instead of negotiate. They're going to take away choice, take away transparency, and take away accountability. Wrong. Totally wrong.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Seeing as there's only seven seconds left in 29(2)(a) and I see no members wishing to ask any further questions, we'll move on.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 9, Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak, actually, against Bill 9, the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014. I find this an interesting bill to stand up and discuss. As the Health critic I'm busy enough dealing with health issues. I get, as I've told my colleagues, between 50 to 75 emails a day on health alone. Then, all of a sudden, up pops Bill 9, which has increased the e-mails that I have been receiving from people within my constituency and, actually, people across the province that have become very frustrated from not getting any response from their MLAs when they contact their MLAs' offices to discuss their concerns about the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014. I guess as an MLA I always feel that we have to be accountable to our constituents. Even if we agree to disagree, it's important that you at least call them back. So we're logging and documenting all of the calls that we're taking from across the province, especially from Calgary, that they're not hearing from their own MLAs in regard to this bill.

I just wanted to get some things on the record. I know we talk in second reading of Bill 9 about the intent of the bill. It's quite interesting because it's a fairly large bill. It's 49 pages.

I just got a letter, actually – and it's a well-written letter – that's about seven pages. It's a letter to all MLAs, and its signatures are from Guy Smith, the president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees; Heather Smith, president, United Nurses of Alberta; Elisabeth Ballermann, the president of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Marle Roberts, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Alberta division; and, of course, Gil McGowan, the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour. It's dated April 16. They talk about:

As a Member of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, you are about to embark upon a debate that has huge implications for the life-savings and retirement security of 300,000 Albertans. Because most of these people have spouses and dependents, your decisions will actually affect at least 600,000 Albertans.

They talked about:

To put that . . . in perspective, [about] 1,290,000 Albertans voted in the last provincial election. So, the number of Albertans who have a personal stake in the outcome of your debate on changes to the Public Sector Pension Plan Act is huge.

You know, when you get that in perspective, that's a lot of people that are going to be in affected by a bill that's hit this floor, that's 49 pages.

What I like about the letter is the fact that they've put some pointed questions out that, I think, probably in committee will be the minister's responsibility to answer because I think it's important to refute questions that are put before the Legislature. We don't have a lot of time to read all of this into the record, but the first thing they said is:

You've been told by the Minister that Alberta's public-sector [pensions] . . . are struggling under the weight of large and growing unfunded liabilities. Specifically, the Minister says the unfunded liability for the four pension plans under review amounts to $7.4 billion.

Then they go on to explain – and it's very interesting, and I'd just like to read this into the record if I may. It says:

It's true that unfunded liabilities in pensions around the world grew in the wake of the global recession. But, the unfunded liability in Alberta's pension plans is no longer $7.4 billion – and it's not growing, it's shrinking.

I think it's incumbent upon the minister to answer that question because, in my mind, it's a great question.

According to a recent analysis conducted by the independent actuarial firm George & Bell (a company which has been used by agencies of the government), the unfunded liability in Alberta's two biggest pension plans, the LAPP . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to ask you if you have tabled that document.

Mrs. Forsyth: Sorry; I can't hear you. Just a sec. I've got to get wired up.

The Acting Speaker: Have you tabled that document?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Madam. I'd be pleased to table that document.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.

Mrs. Forsyth: Can I continue?

The Acting Speaker: Yeah. I think you have to go back a few sentences, though.

Mrs. Forsyth: Sorry. Just a minute.

Mr. Hale: You have to go back a couple of sentences.

Mrs. Forsyth: Sorry. That's why I have a service dog.

The Acting Speaker: Yes. Would you please just go back a few sentences?

Mrs. Forsyth: Absolutely. Sorry, Madam Speaker. I have to be wired up to hear you. I apologize.

According to a recent analysis conducted by the independent actuarial firm George & Bell (a company which has been used by agencies of the government), the unfunded liability in Alberta's two biggest pension plans, the LAPP and PSPP, has shrunk by about $1 billion over the past year alone. George & Bell estimates that the unfunded liability will be gone entirely within nine years.

When unions pointed out that unfunded liabilities were shrinking, not growing, we were dismissed – even mocked – by the Minister. But, just a few days ago, PC MLA . . .

They say his name, and I believe it's the MLA for Red Deer-South.

. . . admitted to the Assembly that the unfunded liability would be gone in 12 years.

Then they use his name again, so I'll say that Red Deer-South's . . . comments were not a mistake – they reflect the projections of the Boards themselves, and can be confirmed by looking at their valuation reports.

We think that [Red Deer-South's] projection is too pessimistic, but at least he admits that the strategies to eliminate unfunded liabilities put in place years ago by Pension Boards, are working. Clearly, the Minister has not been entirely straight with you on the question of unfunded liabilities.

I don't know if I'm going to have a lot of time to read this into the record, and as you've asked, I will table it.

They talk about in sec. 2:

You've been told by the Minister that Alberta's public-sector pension plans are unsustainable in their current form because people are living longer.

They go on quite eloquently.

While it's true life-spans are increasing (and the last time we checked, that was a good thing) the reality is that all of Alberta's Pension Plan Boards have had strategies in place to deal with these trends – the same way they had strategies in place to pay down unfunded liabilities.

In fact, actuaries and pension experts now agree that the impact of changing trends in longevity on the long-term health of pension plans will be much smaller than previously feared.

The Boards of both of Alberta's largest pension plans, the LAPP and the PSPP, are set to release detailed updates on the health of their plans in June. Both reports are likely to show that unfunded liabilities are shrinking and that...risks are manageable.

Why is the government in such a rush to pass legislation before this information is available? Could it be that they want this legislation passed before you, as an individual MLA, realize that the challenges being faced by pension plans are not nearly as serious as you've been led to believe?

They go on again in number 3. You know, I don't want to use all my time reading this into the record, so I think it's important that you've asked for it to be tabled. This is actually addressed to all MLAs. Every single MLA in this Legislature will be in receipt of this particular letter. It's dated April 16. I think it's important to read it. The third one is: "The Minister has told you that pension costs for public-sector employers are too high and that these costs are rising."

The letter is very, very well written, very articulate, and there are some serious questions that have to be answered, in my mind. It's a seven-page letter. I think it's incumbent upon each of us, every single MLA in this Legislature, to have the Finance minister answer these questions because then it sets out for us how we're going to be able to vote on this bill.

I can tell you that the conversations I've had over the long weekend, including driving up – that's three hours on the phone hands-free, I'll say – you know, are these poignant stories. I believe it was the opposition NDP that brought up the issue of the effects of these pensions on people who were planning their life. If their pension is even deducted, say, by $300, that's a lot of money when you're on a fixed income.

I find that there are always two sides to every story. I think it's important when we're dealing with a significant bill to hear both sides of the story. I think it's important and it's interesting to watch. Right now we've been debating this bill for – I don't know – maybe an hour at this particular time, maybe an hour and a half. Gee, Madam Speaker, it's been opposition, opposition, and opposition again. We have not heard from one single government MLA on this issue, not one single government MLA. I could be wrong. Other than the Finance minister. I'm sorry. He introduced the bill, and he gave his speaking notes. He has colleagues all around him that can get up and speak with regard to this bill – I imagine they're going to speak in support of this bill – so that we can hear what they have to say.

I can't imagine in a million years that people are only calling the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek or the MLA for Medicine Hat. None of the other MLAs, whether it's Calgary-Cross or – Strathmore-Brooks, I know, is getting calls, because we sit beside each other. I think he said that he's received 120.

Mr. Hale: Thirty.

Mrs. Forsyth: A hundred and thirty. That's a lot of people contacting an individual MLA. That's more than I got as the Health critic. Wow. It's a lot for MLAs.

I have always judged in my political career whether I have an issue or not by the amount of calls that are coming into my office. It always sets my spidey senses off when I start getting calls. For the people that I have talked to, it's not a one-issue sort of thing like they're reading out of a song book. They're very articulate. They have some good questions, some that I can't answer, some like what I indicated earlier from the five different union representatives. They're representing, obviously, the employees that they represent in the individual unions. It's the individual calls that are coming in, passionate and concerned, about: what are you doing to my pension; what are you doing to my family? I think that not only the questions that are articulated in the letter that I started to read into the record – and I will table it, Madam

Speaker; it would be my pleasure – need to be answered by the government.

We know that this bill will pass. There's no question that this bill will be passed, and I expect at any time that we're going to have time allocation on it. That would be my gut. Maybe not. I could be wrong. We're here for another two days, and then we're on a break, and then we're back for another two weeks. We don't control that agenda. Hopefully, we can continue to debate this and we can continue to bring forward questions that we're hearing from constituents and, for that matter, Albertans.

Whether it's in second – I doubt if it'll be in second because we're talking about the intent, but in committee I'll make sure that the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance gets a copy of the letter. I know as a former minister of the Crown the amount of mail that you do get as a minister, so when we get one of the pages a copy, I will personally make sure that I send him over a copy of the letter so that he can read it and, hopefully, answer all of their questions. More of the questions you're going to hear probably in the debate in second, about the intent of the bill, will be answered when we get to the committee stage.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I did feel somewhat compelled to rise because I wanted to ask the hon. member a bit of a question. Just to confirm for her, I do indeed have the letter from the labour group and, in fact, have met with them and talked about the contribution cap discussions that we're about to embark on, the joint sponsorship discussions that we're about to embark on, which this bill actually allows to happen, something that, quite frankly, the unions have been asking for for some period of time in terms of the joint sponsorship.

The other thing that troubles me a little bit, which is why I wanted to ask the question of the hon. member, was that there seems to be a bit of a theme here amongst some of the opposition speakers around trying to tell people that their pension promise, their best five years or three years of their salaries over their life's career, is somehow going to be reduced after the passage of this bill. Madam Speaker, that's not true. The cost-of-living adjustments will be paid if the funds can afford to pay them. By virtue of the opposition's claims that there's nothing wrong, that there's going to be enough money there to pay for that, they shouldn't have a concern about that either because it's going to be there.

Certainly, the joint sponsorship, which will be responsible for that, will have the payers and the employees sitting at the table. They will be able to make that determination, which they should. Right now it's based on the trusteeship of the Ministry of Finance. I disagree with that. I think it should be in their hands, Madam Speaker, and that's what this bill is going to do.

I have to ask the hon. member if she has actually realized that the pension promise is not the add-ons, it's not the early retirement subsidy, it's not the cost-of-living adjustments that may or may not be able to be paid if the funds cannot be paid because the unfunded liability will rise if it cannot; it's the actual pension promise that they will get, the guaranteed amount, a percentage of their best five years' average salaries for the rest of their lives regardless of how much they put into it. I'm wondering if the hon. member has actually figured that out from what she has seen in the bill. If there's confusion there, I'd be more than happy to clear it up. Her party actually wants to get rid of defined benefit plans, so I'm having difficulty listening to the Wildrose Party talk about protecting defined benefit plans when in their budget document they talk about getting rid of that.

The second question for the hon. member. When they talk about moving and cutting everybody off and changing it so that everybody new coming in doesn't have the defined benefit, I'm curious whether in her research she looked at the Alaska model, which did exactly what the Wildrose is asking to do, cut off all new entrants to the defined benefit plan and move everybody else to defined contribution. Is she aware that there is a $12 billion unfunded liability that the Alaska government is now going to have to deal with because they have no new contributors to the defined benefit plan? I'm curious whether the hon. member has researched either of those two issues.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you. I'm pleased to stand up and respond to the minister. I guess, here's the problem, Minister. You know, I've known you for a long time. Albertans do not trust you anymore. They don't believe what you're saying. Unfortunately, that is an unfortunate fact of life.

Mr. Horner: I didn't resort to name-calling.

Mrs. Forsyth: I apologize. I was with you for 17 years, and that's the problem right now. When I was an MLA, from 1993 to 2010 . . .

Mr. Horner: I wasn't elected then.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, we were together. We might not have been together for 17 years.

The problem right now is that Albertans don't trust you. Obviously, the people that are writing this letter don't trust you either, and that goes back to bills 45 and 46. Yes, I'm aware of the ARIA, which is the alliance, the Alaskan legislators, and the comments that you've made at this particular time. The AUMA doesn't like your reforms. You know, it's just a fact of life.

What I would like you to do so that you can change the minds of not only myself – I can't speak for my party because, quite frankly, we believe in free votes – is to stand up and answer the questions on this. [interjection] You know, it's amazing how you get – they haven't got the guts to stand up and speak on a piece of legislation, but they can yell at you when you're standing up speaking. You know, it's just amazing to me.

If he answers the questions . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 9? The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to vote against Bill 9. The Alberta Liberals seek to build a strong economy and a strong society. In building a strong society, having a good public-sector pension plan is part of that promise. The Conservative government here has a pension promise. They do. They promise to cut the pensions of our public servants, who each and every day work hard to build this province. Public servants: those who 24 hours a day stay awake to guard us and protect us, whether they're on the street in police cars, fire trucks, ambulances, or in hospital departments. These are the good people who each and every day teach our children, care for our sick and elderly, clean our hospitals, and are the very public servants, the civil service, who advise all of us here.

I don't understand why the government would attack the very people that help them to do their job, who help this building run, the good men and women who have spent a lifetime serving this province and serving democracy, why they would go on an attack of their very benefits, that they have paid into for years. I can't understand why this government would change the rules more than halfway through the game for hundreds of thousands of hard-working men and women who have contributed to their own pension plans and contributed to building our province.

Madam Speaker, I know the Finance minister read a book and got all scared and got all panicked. He got all scared and panicked because he read a book. Yeah. The Third Rail it's called. He read a book by somebody from Ontario, and he panicked. It's bad enough that they actually attacked the public servants with bills 45 and 46, with unconstitutional bills that will fail a Charter challenge, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but they've gone above and beyond by attacking the very pensions that front-line workers have contributed to.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to talk just about certain facts. Alberta is actually a younger province. We're not a province that is aging. We're getting younger. We're one of the youngest provinces if not the youngest in the country. We have a baby boom. Albertans are having children, and many young families are moving here. That's a good thing. So the argument that we're an aging population does not hold any water in this province. We are not an aging population.

Ms Blakeman: Our average age is in the 30s, isn't it?

Dr. Sherman: Well, it's getting younger, hon. member. It's getting younger.

This is an argument that's been used by Republican-type Conservatives for years, whether it's to blame the seniors for health care – now they're blaming the seniors for our pension plan. The reality is that they are not to blame.

Now, you know, Madam Speaker, it's tax time. Every Canadian is going to pay when we file our taxes if we haven't done so already. We're going to be paying into the Canadian pension plan. There's a reason they brought pension plans into place. They brought them into place because people were retiring into poverty. We have the Canadian pension plan. We have private industry pension plans.

You know, my father worked in the mill, Weldwood, for 35 years. He was a good union man. In fact, I worked in the mill, Madam Speaker, and I've still got my union card from the International Woodworkers of America right here. There's something good about having collective labour bargaining rights. The reason a group of people bargain collectively is so that worker safety is protected, standards of work and standards of education and standards of training are protected, but also worker rights are protected. When collective bargaining units negotiate with government – we've had years of inflation in this province. Well, the leaders of our unions didn't take pay raises. At a time of inflation they said: you know, in lieu of pay raises we want to protect our pensions.

Now, they will say that the pension plan is unsustainable. As you know, the cowboys on Wall Street were fiddling with the market, and the market crashed. So there was this $7.5 billion unfunded liability, and the leaders of the unions, working with government, said: "You know what? Our workers will increase their contributions if the employer, the government, increases their contribution." Now, they didn't take pay raises at a time of inflation, so essentially the employees, you know, directly and indirectly subsidized both sides of the pension.

That liability has come down from $7.5 billion to $6.4 billion. The Minister of IIR himself says that the pension plan is healthy. To me healthy means sustainable. The Finance minister says that it's unsustainable. The Minister of IIR says that this can be paid down in 12 years. Well, you know, the leaders of the unions say that at this rate this can be paid down in five years. The market is doing well, and contributions are up, and when the unfunded liability – maybe the truth is somewhere in the middle. It might be between five and 12 years. Even if it is 12 years – we'll go with you, Minister – this can be fully funded. When it's fully funded, the contributions for the employer and the employees are going to drop.

Employees have significantly increased their contributions, and in lieu of wage increases – they have not taken wage increases – they have said to the government: "Look, we won't take a wage increase. As long as you do your share, we'll get this unfunded liability paid up. We'll get caught up." So that argument doesn't hold any water. It's going to be fully funded in a few years, and contributions will drop.

Now, Madam Speaker, these pensions aren't lavish pensions that the government gives to its senior people, the SERPs, the supplementary pension plans that are, you know, $5,000, $10,000, $22,000 a month, that they've been giving to some senior health execs. They're not the fancy management pension plans that they've given to their buddies. We're talking – I don't know – 1,200 bucks a month. [interjection] Somebody here disagrees with that. Maybe it's $1,400. Even if it's $1,500, how much is that? In today's economic climate what's 1,500 bucks a month? You've got to pay your rent. You've got to pay your bills. You've got to pay for food. You've got to pay room and board.

I'll tell you one thing. Seniors need to maintain their independence, to live in their own homes for as long as possible. We've got amongst the highest bills in the country – amongst the highest bills in the country – for gas and electricity. The cost of everything is going up, and these public servants, who built this province, need to have independence when it comes to driving their vehicles. While the cost of gas is really high, the cost of the vehicle is high. Essentially, by cutting the pensions, cutting the cost-of-living adjustment, our seniors are going to be retired into poverty. We already have so many seniors struggling with poverty today, as we speak, because many of them have lost their life savings. We know the effects of poverty on individuals, especially on seniors.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Well, I'll give you some certain facts here. Poverty leads to poor health, and poor health, in turn, leads to even more poverty. You know, a study came out years ago in the Capital health region where poor men were dying seven years before high-income men. I'll tell you one thing. Before these poor men die before rich men, there's a lot of suffering that happens, a lot of visits to the hospital. Because of the paramedics and the nurses and the doctors in the health system, the health staff that do such a great job, we can actually say to people when they come into our hands that the costs to health care of dealing with poverty are absolutely immense.

The cost of poverty to the taxpayer for housing folks who can't afford to live in their homes is immense. Because seniors can't afford to live in their homes and there is such inadequate home care and long-term care today, we've put about 550 seniors in hospital beds, at 1,200 to 1,400 bucks a night, causing the whole

ER crisis. That alone costs a quarter billion dollars directly to health care.

To retire a whole new generation into poverty is bad economic policy. It's bad business. It's going to cost the taxpayer way more down the line in terms of money, but it's going to cost society in terms of human suffering as well. This decision is short sighted and it's ill conceived. The fact of the matter is that the pension plan is sustainable.

Mr. Speaker, here's another thing. People are living longer right now because they lived healthy lives 60, 70, 80, 90 years ago. The fact of the matter is that the next generation, the children of the current seniors, will not live to the same age as their parents. Their children are getting sicker even before then. Because of childhood obesity rates, inactivity, and processed food, we have a triple tsunami of illness coming down the pipeline. Okay? So the baby boomers and their kids will not live to the age of the octogenarians and the 100-year-olds that we have today. To those who are using that, these are incorrect facts that they're spelling out.

Now, they talk about targeted benefits. Well, my question to the government is: "What if the market doesn't do so well? Does that mean there's no cost-of-living adjustment whereas inflation continues?" That's exactly what that means.

Mr. Speaker, really, the most fundamental issues of our society are the issues of inequality, fairness, and justice, and that's what this issue is really about.

You know, really, these are Republican Party policies. I thought that these guys were the Tea Party, but even the Wildrose opposes this bill. Thank you, members, for opposing it. When the Wildrose opposes a bill – you know what? – the Conservative Party definitely should be passing this bill. It's really a policy of right wingers who talk about trickle-down economics. It's about trickle-down economics, and they have essentially doubled down on trickle-down economics, where if you give a few people a couple of billion dollars, they think that benefits will trickle down to the regular working folk. Well, I'll tell you that benefits don't trickle down; burdens trickle down. And this is one of those burdens.

Income disparity, Mr. Speaker, is one of the biggest issues facing our society today. In Alberta, the wealthiest place in the country, we have 90,000 children living in poverty. That's 90,000 children living in poverty. Well, here's a fact. Poor kids have poor moms and dads. You know what? Now you're going to give these poor kids poor grandmas and grandpas as well. We've got 90,000 kids in poverty, their parents are in poverty, and now you're going to retire their grandparents into poverty as well. Thank you very much.

My mother is a widow. My mom is turning 75 this year, God bless her soul. Dad left us a few years ago. She doesn't get a heck of a lot of money from his pension. It's barely enough to pay the bills, you know. She doesn't have a fancy house. In fact, she's over the limit, where her teeth aren't covered. She goes to India to get her teeth done because the limits here are so low and she can't afford the $5,000 bill. We pay for our mom's flight. Thank God Mom's kids did all right. We look after our mom.

Madam Speaker, not many families have children that have done very well in their lives, right? Many families have children. Remember that I talked about their children also being in poverty and their grandchildren being in poverty. With my mom and dad we got lucky that we had such good parents and we got lucky that education was cheap and we got lucky that we had a good public education system that was affordable. We all did okay as kids.

Madam Speaker, we are going to have tens of thousands of widows. This is going to affect the women in our society, not only the seniors, not only the men, but it's going to affect women and grandchildren.

I urge members of this government to vote against their own bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who wish to question or make a comment to the leader of the Liberal opposition?

Seeing none, we'll move to the next speaker, the hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this bill. It's been interesting. You know, I happened to be speaking this morning to the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. One of the members before I got up and spoke asked where I thought this pension legislation was coming from. He said: "It certainly didn't come from us. We the business community didn't tell the government to go and attack their own employees' pension plans. It didn't come from us. Why are they doing this?" To be honest, I didn't have an answer. It certainly seemed to come a bit out of the blue.

We've taken a look at the government's numbers. We've looked at their rationale. We've looked at the changes they've made from what they originally proposed. We've also, of course, been working with the affected unions and going through their numbers and their analysis of what's happening here. We've also heard from hundreds and hundreds of people who are directly affected. The e-mails are coming in fast and furious every day. We've actually had a chance to really, I think, get a good handle on the positions of the various affected parties with respect to this, and it doesn't illuminate for me why the government is doing this.

It's pretty clear that the pension boards themselves, that include representation from the employers and the employees, have not sanctioned these changes, have not recommended the changes, and are firmly committed to the course of action that has been undertaken, which will, according to their work, eliminate the unfunded liabilities within nine years even if you do nothing. Again, it doesn't help explain in any way what the government is doing. I think that when you really press the government and the ministers on this, they will admit that ultimately without these changes that they're proposing, the plans will eventually get back to the point where they do not have an unfunded liability, which just leaves the reason that I think is lying behind this, that the government is trying to save some money.

The government doesn't like the temporary increases in the rates that they have to pay as an employer in order to get the plans back on track, and as a result of that, they are prepared to dilute the plans, to make them weaker. They're doing that in a number of ways. I think one of the most important ways is to make people work longer. So the 85 factor, which is the number of years you've paid into the plan plus your age, is changed to the 90 factor. It means that people will have to work two and a half, three years longer to qualify for the pension. That's the first thing.

There's also a COLA clause that applies. It has never been a hundred per cent of the cost-of-living increase, but it is being reduced. What that means is that the benefits that people receive over time will fall farther and farther behind the cost of living, and they'll do so at a faster rate than they do now. So the bottom line for employees under this government's plan is that in order to save some money for itself, the government is making them work longer for a smaller pension, and that's just not fair, Madam Speaker. That's why we've been so strongly opposed to it.

If it was absolutely necessary, if the government could prove that it was necessary and that it would really save the plan, then I think they would have a case, but it's pretty clear that the pension boards have the matter under control, and the government is not acting out of necessity but out of a desire to save some money at the expense of pensions that are extremely modest. These are not rich pensions. People are earning, actually, very little under these plans. A reduction, as we indicated earlier last week, in the plan's payout benefits maybe amounts to a few hundred dollars a month, which is an enormous amount for people who are living on a fixed income.

For the government to try and save money at the expense of its own pensioners and the pensioners who work for cities and health care institutions and so on is just a very, very mean-spirited thing to do given the amount of waste that we've seen in the government, given the amount of subsidization of business, given the fact that the tax system heavily favours wealthy Albertans at the expense of middle-class Albertans. For the government to actually try and save money on the backs of pensioners I think is extremely mean-spirited, and I think that accounts for a lot of the negative reaction from the public, including from people who are not expecting to draw a local authorities pension plan or a public pension plan.

The other thing that the government isn't really telling us the truth about, in my opinion, is that this is to save the defined benefit nature of the pension plan. Now, they're quite right about the Wildrose position until recently being that we could no longer as a society sustain and support that kind of a plan, but the government isn't being honest about what it's doing. By putting a cap on contributions and hamstringing the boards, it may result in a position where they are unable to raise enough money to get the plans back on track should they run into difficulty. Normally they run into difficulty because the stock market runs into difficulty. This is invested money; it's not because they're mismanaged. If the pension boards can no longer get the plans back on track because of this cap, then they're going to have to reduce the benefits.

What the government is actually doing here is transforming defined benefit plans into targeted benefit plans. That means that should the plans run into difficulty – if the stock market is bad, if there's some reduction in the number of people who are working and paying into the plans that was unanticipated and so forth – they'll have to reduce the benefits that are going to be paid, and they'll have to change the benefits. So it's not under this plan, under this legislation, going to be a defined benefit plan anymore.

When the Minister of Finance stands up in this House day after day and asserts that they're trying to protect the defined benefit nature of the plan, he is some distance from the truth, I think you could say, Madam Speaker. It's something, I think, that people who are in these plans really do understand. They do get that, and they're very angry about it.

We have a situation, for example, in the United States. Some of these things have happened in other places, and I want to deal with a couple of states. The Minister of Finance has mentioned Alaska, and I'd like to come back to Alaska, but I'd also like to talk about Nebraska. Now, way back in 1964, Madam Speaker, Nebraska switched from a defined benefit system to a defined contribution plan for state and county government workers. The first thing that happened was that their administration costs went up. It required more record-keeping fees, investment management fees, educational programs, and other administrative lines. In 1999 the state of Nebraska found that the expenses of its defined contribution plan were double the cost of its defined benefit system. It also found that when employees hired under the defined contribution plan managed their own investments, investment returns were lower than under a defined benefit system.

Now, there's lots of other information here, but ultimately what happened is that they took a hard look at the benefits that were being received under this plan by their retirees, and they found that participants in the state's defined benefit system with similar pay and service credit meanwhile had an annual retirement benefit of only $16,797, which is $3,100 more than the poverty level of a family of two. That was under the defined benefits system. So that's $3,000 above. When they looked at what the defined contribution retirees with 30 years of service and an average annual salary of $30,000 were getting, they had only about $11,230 annually, which is $2,460 less than the poverty line for a family of two. So, Madam Speaker, what they did in 2002 was that they went back to a defined benefit plan. I believe that this government will place many retirees at risk of living in poverty if it proceeds with this erosion and reduction of the plan.

Now, the Wildrose has a plan, and their plan – and I think I should deal with this a little bit as well – is to keep everybody on the plan now and grandfather them and continue to pay them a defined benefit plan and then to place all the new hires on a defined contribution plan, which is their philosophical preference. They've made that very clear over the years: in the last election, in their budget submissions, and so on.

I think the Minister of Finance raised the question of Alaska. We've also looked at what's happened in Alaska, and I think he's quite right. What happens if you do that, what the Wildrose is proposing, is that you no longer have new people paying into your defined benefit plan, but you are responsible to pay all of the retired people all of the benefits that they were guaranteed, so you get a deficit in the plan. You get a large, growing deficit because you don't have any new money coming in from employees to support the ones that have retired. People are living, you know, longer, so there's a huge liability there, which in Alaska's case has grown to $12 billion. I think that is the actual figure. This year alone Alaska had to put in $3 billion of public money just to keep the defined benefit plan afloat. Now, it's a good thing that they have a decent royalty system in Alaska, unlike you guys, because they can afford it, but I don't think we can afford it if you're going to keep all this corporate welfare stuff that you've got going on.

Is that one minute? Oh, my goodness.

I think, just to wrap up, that we should defeat this bill, and we need to maintain and support our existing pension plans and support the boards that are managing them. I think they're doing a good job, and I think the plans are solvent in the long run, and we need to avoid, as the Wildrose is suggesting, eliminating the defined benefit plan going forward for new employees because I think that would come close to bankrupting the province.

With all due respect, Madam Speaker, we think that the position that we've taken and that the Liberal Party caucus has taken is the correct one, and that is to stand up and fight for the pensions of public employees in this province, and we will continue to proudly do that.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Did you have a motion that you wanted to present?

Mr. Mason: Oh, yes. Thank you very much. Can I do that at the end of 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: We have 29(2)(a) in place. Are there any members who wish to question or make comments about the member's presentation?

Seeing none, we'll move on. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise here and speak to Bill 9, the Public Sector Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2014. Before I say anything, I think it is important to know that every single public-sector pension plan this province created was created by this PC government and was agreed to in good faith with public-sector unions. If there is a problem with these public-sector pensions, then the government should be approaching the unions, explaining why they believe they are no longer sustainable, and negotiating in good faith on any changes that they wish to make.

Still, this is a government that simply ignores doing the right thing. Instead, the government has brought forward changes they wish to mandate through legislation. These changes are not supported by workers or by the public-sector employees who work on the front lines, front-line Albertans who see this province misuse everyday resources.

Madam Speaker, let's talk about our public-sector employees. The government doesn't seem to want to have this discussion. First and foremost, they don't seem to want to make changes to their own benefits. One can only understand how it must be hard for our front-line people, who are providing fantastic service and fantastic care to everyday Albertans, to see that one of the first things this government did was to double the RRSP contribution they receive every single year. This amounted to approximately $11,000 more every year, or an 8 per cent pay raise. In the case of even this past year that amount exceeded $11,000. The perks don't stop there. We have ministers and potential leadership candidates that charge taxpayers $10,000 for new office furniture. We have ministers that use government aircraft like it's their own personal airliner, even to fly them to PC Party fundraisers when they might need a lift.

It is almost embarrassing to say to our front-line staff, to say to 300,000 workers from over 54 unions: you must take it on the chin, but we're not going to set the example in this Legislature first. For that this government should really be embarrassed. Bill 9 says nothing about MLA pay raises, nothing about excessive government perks paid out from tax dollars, and nothing about using the government aircraft like a political party's airline. Instead, it involves taking away existing benefits from public-sector retirees.

I understand this is an uncomfortable conversation for many of the members on the other side. I understand you want to stop having a conversation about how we as Albertans and we as legislators are responsible for everyday taxpayer money and to everyday taxpayers. I get that that's uncomfortable. I get that when they were knocking on the doors in 2012, they didn't bang on a single door and tell them they were going to introduce bills 45 and 46 and then take away worker rights. They sure as heck didn't bang on any door and tell them that with Bill 9 they were going to do a full review and actually penalize everyday Albertans who are doing hard, hard work in the front lines. They also didn't tell them how they were going to abuse taxpayer money each and every day and then not answer for it in the House. I get that they don't want to talk about how they used the government plane to go to PC Party fundraisers, because that's uncomfortable.

Well, it's just as uncomfortable for everyday Albertans who are providing services to our seniors, to our vulnerable, to our disabled, cleaning our Legislature, applying all the services for our plant maintenance. They don't want to have those conversations with those Albertans when they tell them how this is going to negatively impact their everyday lives. Yeah, it's uncomfortable. But you cannot go and put this on the backs of front-line people when you haven't taken the step to actually set the example.

There's no question. Did we have to look at pension reform? Probably although the minister of intergovernmental relations would tell you that it was going to be solved in 12 years. The government keeps refuting that and saying that that isn't actually what he meant when he said that or that he meant something different. Well, the reason this pension plan is in this position – if it truly is in the dire straits that this government says that it is, then you should have been planning for that over the last 12 or 20 years. The fact that people age and they stay alive longer isn't their fault. You really couldn't see that one coming? You really couldn't see that people are going to age longer and that the people contributing were dwindling if that's the case? You had no plan?

You could have done these kinds of reforms graduated so that it didn't hurt them quite so much as they're doing right now, and you sure as heck could have done it while you were setting the example by cutting back on all the things that you're taking away from Alberta taxpayers. You sure as heck shouldn't have given yourself a 50 per cent raise on the RSP on one side, and then turn around to the union employees and say: "We're going to do this on this side. We're going to set a terrible example, and then we're going to expect you to take the higher ground and take it on the chin."

Let's take a look at another group that the government doesn't seem to want to touch, the inflated bureaucracy at Alberta Health Services. They previously had more than 90 vice-presidents until they shuffled those people into new roles with no change in pay. Now, the Minister of Health will tell you a thousand times from Sunday that, you know, they got rid of all the vice-presidents and now they're down to 10. The reality of it is that they didn't get rid of any. They fired five, which cost us a fortune because their contracts are so bloated with bureaucracy. Literally what they did is that they gave them all new name changes, and they expected the public just to look the other way. You cannot sit there and say, "We're going to make mediocre changes to Alberta Health Service's bureaucracy," which is really a cost to the taxpayer, and then turn around and penalize everyday front-line people who are providing the great services that we see at the likes of Michener, the likes of every single seniors' home. Our municipalities fall under this union as well.

Alberta Health Services gives out nontendered contracts for things like yoga, and executives are even treated to some New Age, out-of-this-world, six-figure coaching, but the government doesn't want to attack those perks. Instead, they bring across Bill 9. They didn't campaign on it. They didn't campaign on ending any of this. What they do is they sit there and they tell Albertans every single day, "We're working for you", when in reality what they're really doing is taking from them. Instead, you want to legislate changes to nurses' pensions, LPNs, health care aides, service personnel, sheriffs, health sciences that would take away their cost-of-living allowance.

This is the fundamental problem. You lose all credibility when, on one hand, you're robbing from Peter not to give to Paul but to pad your own pockets. That's exactly what's going on here. A 50 per cent raise in the RSP allowance goes into your own pockets. [interjections] The sole-source contracts at Alberta Health Services is a benefit to them themselves. There is no benefit to Albertans from executive coaching. There's not a single executive – and I would take you back to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. She gave an amazing member's statement. You can yell out all you want. I get that that's what you need to do because this is uncomfortable. I totally understand that. I get the heckling. That's fine. I'm happy to have you guys stand up in the House and address all of your comments and concerns to the chair. That's great.

The reality of it is that today the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek gave a moving member's statement talking about what front-line people do every single day: how they hold your hair back when you're getting sick; how they can't even put people in the patient restroom area, like where they can go and make phone calls, because it's full of beds; how our front-line personnel are honestly talking about how they might have to go to bunk beds to actually deal with clients who are coming in.

That's the problem with the waste in our system. You can't literally say to those folks, those folks who are changing your catheters, changing your diapers, rolling you over for bedsores, taking care of our children in foster care, making sure that those who are disabled have all the supports that they need – you can't turn around and say to them: you need to take less, but I'm going to take more. It's embarrassing, and the public isn't buying it.

You can make this about the unions wanting to protect their membership. You can make this about: we didn't take as many perks as we thought we could take. The reality of it is that you cannot enforce something on someone else until you yourself have set the example. Every single one of us who is a parent has seen this every single day. I cannot expect my daughter to do something that I would not do myself or that I haven't set the example of doing. I can't expect her to do that. This is a fundamental problem with our society, and this government is literally perpetuating it. It is symbolic of a government's lack of priorities. It is symbolic of a government that ignores the front lines while allowing the bureaucracy to grow. It is symbolic of a government that wants to freely take more benefits for themselves while legislating to take benefits away from others.

I can understand the argument on behalf of the unions wanting to protect their membership. I understand that. I also can understand the government saying that we need to do something to have pension reform and we need to roll out that process. The problem with this government is that they don't do things in consultation. They don't set the example. Two years ago you ran an election and you never, ever even brought this up.

The other problem that you have is that this government continues to download costs onto municipalities, onto everyday Albertans, roles and responsibilities that they are supposed to shoulder. Everyday Albertans can't take anymore, and everyday Albertans, our seniors, are maxed out. I know because I take care of my parents. I take care of my parents, who make a total of $43,500. That's it. That's not huge money, and my mom works full-time. My dad was self-employed. He didn't have much of a pension, and I'm sure there were lots of bad decisions along the way. But that's all they have. My dad's pension is 844 bucks, and my mom makes a total of $1,600 a month. That's it. And my mom is one of the people who is going to be affected by this. When you start telling people like her and telling people like LPNs that their pensions are going to be affected, they go into panic mode.

There's one thing this government could have done, and I don't know why they don't think about it. You could have campaigned on it, you could have made it clear, and you could have done it in consultation with the unions. Instead, it's like this constant force of nature where this PC government decides: I'm going to do something, fly off the handle, and literally put in legislation that nobody supports and is going to impact 300,000 Albertans. I'm not exactly sure who they think votes for them, because 300,000 Albertans are going to remember this, and 300,000 Albertans' families are going to remember this bill. Mark my words. Bills 45, 46, and 9 are going to lose the 2016 election for the PCs. If that's their choice, that's their choice. Then, clearly, they made a campaign message, and that's the message that Albertans will get.

In the past the government negotiated all of these agreements. If they were inadequate, it is a problem of their own making. They cannot now put all of the blame directly onto unions and their front-line service workers and then literally come back and say: "Oops. Sorry. It wasn't our fault. It wasn't our fault." If this problem is as big as it is, it literally should have been at the forefront of at least the last two – two – terms of this current government, so since Premier Stelmach, because this didn't just come to light yesterday. You could have run a whole campaign on it, and you could have garnered support from unions and their membership.

You can achieve the reforms that you might want to achieve if you started talking about new hires and the impacts that this would have on new hires. You don't have to be retroactively punitive. You don't have to do that. There is no requirement for wholesale legislative change at this point in time. If it was there, it was there two years ago when you were in a campaign, and you could have been honest with Albertans.

The other thing I would just like to remind every single member in this House of. We can get into an ideological debate about whose plan is better. It's not what this is about. What this is about is literally every single person on the front line doing the best they can to provide services to our loved ones. So just remember that.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10
Employment Pension (Private Sector) Plans
Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate April 17: Mr. Horner]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll keep this mercifully short. The original Employment Pension Plans Act reached royal assent, of course, less than two years ago, at the end of 2012. The original act was a regulatory response to the introduction of new types of pension plans, specifically involving targeted benefit pension plans and jointly sponsored pension plans as well as the implementation of the recommendations from the Alberta-British Columbia Joint Expert Panel on Pension Standards. There were some i's that were not dotted and some t's not crossed in that legislation, so we're back here fixing a couple of things that were missed. Essentially, it's been introduced to update and modernize the private-sector's pension plan legislation, and it gives the private sector the flexibility to use targeted pension plans if they so choose.

The Wildrose supports that choice being given to the private sector, and that is all we have to say about that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on Bill 10 in second reading?

Mr. Anderson: I would love to move to adjourn debate if that's okay with the Legislature.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

5:30 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8
Appropriation Act, 2014

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm really glad to be able to get the chance to speak to Bill 8, the appropriation bill, in Committee of the Whole. I tried in second reading, but it turned out I had four seconds left before the vote was called. So I really appreciate this. The issue for me is that the way the budget debates are structured now, I can't be in every debate, so I've missed my opportunity to question and comment in the other 19 ministries that I wasn't able to attend the debates for.

A couple of things. I know I can't get responses back from the ministers, but maybe I can at least put some statements on the record. One of the first things that I want to note in Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, is the very first series of numbered votes, which is support to the Legislative Assembly. Specifically, I want to talk about the officers of the Legislative Assembly. Over the time that I have sat on the Legislative Offices Committee, which is from 2001 till now – this is our bastion. By "our" I mean Albertans' protection and also the government's protection. If something fails and it fails because the Auditor General didn't catch it – you know what? – it's not me that's going to catch heck for being on the Legislative Offices Committee; it's the government for not doing whatever they were supposed to do or the Auditor General says that they're supposed to do.

I think we have to be very careful when we examine the budget of those officers, making sure that we are funding them to be able to get the work done rather than approaching it by saying, "How little are we going to increase their budget by this year?" or, you know, "How much can we hold them back this year?" These are the areas that I think as officers and as members of this Assembly we really have to be careful about.

If the office of the Chief Electoral Officer fails because they couldn't get a good voters' list, who suffers from that? Democracy suffers. Every single citizen in Alberta suffers. Everybody in here suffers. It's a major problem. You know, we could end up in court and have the results of an election completely overturned. So that office having enough staff to be able to do the work they need to do is really critical.

That's for all of them. You know, that's for the Auditor General, the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman is the court of last appeal. It's the last place where a citizen can appeal to get a fair hearing, let's call it. It's meant to be administrative. I think people often think that if they don't get the answer that they want or if they're, you know, unhappy with what the rule is, they can go to the ombudsperson and say, "Well, I'm unhappy because of this" or "I got ripped off because of this rule." That's not really their job. Their job is to make sure that the individual was treated the same as any other individual would be treated and that the full administrative opportunities were offered to person A the same as they were offered to person B. Often the ombudsperson will say: "You know what? There is nothing here that would have helped this person, but there should be." And they spend time with the department negotiating to say: you should have some processes in place, and this is how we recommend you do it and fulfill some of this, you know, put some stuff in place.

I talked about the Chief Electoral Officer.

The office of the Ethics Commissioner. That's the public's belief in us. If that office doesn't have credibility, we don't have credibility. If we don't have credibility, then the legislation that we pass in here, people will blow it off. Why should they take it seriously if they don't take us seriously? That becomes a much larger problem because it's far beyond us. It's not personal anymore. It's that the work we've done here is not credible, which, frankly, is mostly going to, you know, come down on you guys. So I really don't need to be worrying about this so much, but I'm a nice gal, and I'm worrying on your behalf.

Mr. McIver: Bless your heart.

Ms Blakeman: There you go. Bless my heart. I know.

Actually, I'm worrying on behalf of democracy and all that good stuff. You know, that's why I'm talking about this.

The office of the Child and Youth Advocate is relatively new, about 18 months now, I think, or two years. We've talked a lot about how important it is to make sure that children have a voice in the way things are done here. That's certainly what that office is set up to do.

The office of the Public Interest Commissioner. That's the whistle-blower person, which I think hasn't really done anything because nobody felt protected enough by the legislation to blow the whistle on anything. But that's another conversation. Frankly, I don't think giving them any more money is going to change that. Unless you're going to change the protection for the people that are considering coming forward, that office isn't going to get a lot more business.

I just wanted to really underline that before we started because we do tend to approach those offices with that same sort of, you know, "How do we hold the line on these offices?" in the same way that we approach the other ministries, and I don't think that approach is appropriate for those offices.

My caucus, the third party Liberal opposition caucus, voted in favour of the budgets for Aboriginal Relations and Agriculture because our critic, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, felt they were reasonable budgets and both ministries were doing a fairly good job of administration. I have one little disagreement with him about that, about the elk, but for the purposes of my argument here, I'll just keep going. We were willing to vote in favour of that, so they were pulled out for separate votes. But we didn't vote in favour of the rest of it, and I think that there are a number of reasons why.

It's really frustrating to me how badly we have done with the Culture budget. You know, there is a lot of lip service. Tourism likes to put the picture of all those tens of thousands of people on the Folk Festival hill in their brochures and take advantage of all of the festivals and the arts that we do here. Lots of people talk about the economic development. We talk about the films coming in and revitalizing smaller communities. Lots of lip service but when it comes right down to it at Treasury Board, no money.

This is a particular job creator. It costs less money to create a job in the cultural industries and cultural community than it does in any other sector, so if you're trying to create more jobs for people, this is an area we could be concentrating on. It also is the hub, the start of our creative industries. If we're trying to diversify Alberta, as we all keep mouthing for decades now about how we want to diversify our economy, but nobody actually does it, this is one of the ways to do it.

You know, Alberta has a sort of small, fingernail hold on being a centre for gaming in North America. We have a number of companies here that specialize in electronic digital games. I'm sorry; I don't actually play these, so I'm a bit at a loss here. I'm looking around for anyone under 40 that might be able to help me with the language. I'm thinking BioWare and some of the other ones that have sort of a story-based interaction that goes on, where you select an avatar or character and go through a series of storylines. We have amazing digital artists here, animators, voice-overs. There's a lot of talent that is coming out of the theatre pool, the dance pool, artists that are already here that are contributing what they know to a different sector, and that sector makes money, a lot of money. It's a great place to diversify.

In education I think there are a number of issues. The ones that I hear most often being brought up are overcrowded classrooms and the fact that we now have integrated classrooms and very high numbers. I admit that when I went to school I travelled through in a cohort that was between 36 and 39 students, which was okay. I don't have any bad memories of that. But you know what? There was not one kid in those 39 that had an issue with the English language, that needed ESL or whatever they call it now. There were no kids with any kind of behavioural problems. If there were, they got whisked off to a private school or an institution before you could say, "Gee whiz, I . . ." Nope. They were gone. There were no kids in that class that had any kind of physical or mental handicap. So the teachers taught, and the 39 of us learned. If the teacher needed to spend time with an individual student, they could do that, but there were no teacher aides in those classes.

Now we're expecting teachers to perform miracles. We keep cutting the budgets and changing the way that we code these kids and not giving the resources, which isn't always money, by the way, and not allowing the resources for the schools to support the students that are in it. I've talked about how wonderful my schools are. They have become experts in how to deal with kids that are nonverbal, that come from different language backgrounds, from different faith backgrounds, but also kids that come from trauma and torture. That may not be something that a lot of the rest of you deal with, kids in your school system that came out of Somalia or the Sudan, where they were born into war, where they were perhaps a child soldier, where they lived in a refugee camp somewhere else for a period of time before they came to Canada. Those are just not things that we considered, having kids like that in our schoolrooms. There are things that we need to do to help them become full, productive, engaged citizens that are contributing to our society.

Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. I did get my 10 minutes of questioning the minister in that. There was a conference last week that the government participated in, and so did the city of Edmonton. Everything I looked at coming out of that conference just underlined that this government doesn't get it. They keep hoping that if they just put out enough PR and if they just say it often enough, it will be true. There has to be more. Talk is not enough. Pretty pictures are not enough. Nobody gives the government credibility when they say that they are great and responsible environmental stewards. There's just no credibility there . . .

An Hon. Member: Or that they're transparent.

Ms Blakeman: . . . or any kind of transparency, any kind of accountability in that whole file. People snicker and start to do other things because they're just not engaged and listening anymore.

Seriously, we have to look at a price on carbon. We have to look at how we're subsidizing coal and allowing it to continue to be what drives our electricity sector. We're just so far behind on that, and we just look silly now. I'm an Albertan, too. I don't want to look silly in the eyes of the world because my government just won't grapple with climate change and what really has to be done and action that needs to be taken.

Let me talk about some of the other ministries I didn't get to be involved in. In Executive Council I still see a lot of duplication of services between Executive Council and International and Intergovernmental Relations. There always seem to be two different departments, and they're each kind of delivering the same sort of thing. There have always been reasons about why that is, but they still don't ring true to me after all these years, and I think there are some ways to save some money there that could be used in other places by getting rid of that duplication.

Health. You can't explain to me and you can't explain to the people, you know, that are outside right now walking home how on earth you could put that much money into health care and not improve the access to it. It's just mind-blowing. And so much money. I know that people that work in the health sector, of all of the not-for-profit and public sectors, get paid the best salary. Anybody can look that up and find that out. But, holy mackerel, I don't know who was signing the paycheques and saying that this was okay over there. It's out of line, and there's a lot of waste and mismanagement, to anybody's eye, where we could be either saving money or redirecting money back in so that we had better services and better access times. The fact that we keep changing our targets and our monitoring benchmarks so it's harder for people to figure out if we've actually improved: it just looks really bad, and it's very frustrating.

Each year I see more and more money put into those departments and not put into other departments. Then everybody runs around, you know, with their hair on fire going: "Oh my God. Look at how much money we're putting into health care. That must mean that it's the best health care system in North America." Well, no, it's not. There's something very wrong if you're putting that much money into health care and you're not getting better results, if you're not getting better outcomes, and you're not. In comparing ourselves to others, we're just coming lower and lower on the measurement scales every time.

Human Services, the ministry of everything. You know, can I just jump ahead? I'm wondering how long we're going to have three associate ministers of disasters. Is that forever? Are those permanent now? Who am I asking this to? Municipal Affairs, I guess. We've got three ministers of different regions that are all responsible for flooding and disasters. I think: "Well, okay. Are you anticipating more disasters this year so that you need to keep people in place?" Or they haven't finished the job from last year, which also doesn't speak very well. [interjection] I don't begrudge you being a minister, sir, but there are – what? – nine of you that aren't a minister of something or other, just a few of you back there, good, hearty souls that are kind of holding down the teeter-totter on that side. I mean, honestly, you've got two full benches full of people that are some kind of minister or associate minister. You might want to look into that.

Anyway, let me get back on track here. Innovation and Advanced Education. This whole thing about the social . . .

Mr. Bilous: The social policy framework.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yeah. Well, the social policy framework just dissolved. It just went poof. None of you mentioned it. It wasn't mentioned in the throne speech. It wasn't mentioned in the budget. It's just, like, gone. Thousands of people put a lot of time into that, and I don't know what you did with it. Lit it on fire and smoked it or something? It's gone. That's not a good thing because we needed some framework that we could move forward on, so kindly give it back or reconstruct it or whatever. Spit it up so that we can have it back.

In Finance and in Innovation and Advanced Education the idea of these social justice funds, the social bonds: I just can't find very many places where these have really been successful. Where they have, they've been successful in a very narrow, very defined way, which is excellent, and I'm delighted when that happens. But as much as I hear this government kind of banking on these three funds – you know, in budget debates I say, "So how is this going to work?" "Well, we're figuring that out, and we'll let you know later in the year." How did you get a budget if you didn't know what you were doing?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, 2014. As New Democrats have been saying since this budget was tabled, we have clearly a tale of two Albertas, one set of rules and standards that apply to the very wealthy and the friends of this PC government and then one set of standards and realities for the rest of the province, which is probably more than 95 per cent of Albertans.

You know, I want to just list a couple of ways in which there is this tale of two Albertas. For example, in Budget 2014 there is $150 million going in in-kind royalties to oil companies. Instead of, again, us collecting royalties from our natural resources, that are owned by all Albertans, today and future, we see these same companies getting $150 million in in-kind royalties. This year's budget paid $8.6 million in corporate subsidies to industry in the postsecondary education budget and a million dollar increase to the former Premier's office.

Meanwhile we've got middle-class families, your average Albertan, feeling the effect of this year's budget, with no reinvestment into postsecondary education, starving our students and placing Alberta at a disadvantage when it comes to a knowledge-based economy. Now, that's in spite of the fact that postsecondary institutions saw a $147 million cut in last year's budget. We see the continuation of a broken promise of funding for full-day kindergarten – the former Premier, before she left, even said that it's unlikely that it will even exist by 2016 – and we saw a $120 million tax cut from seniors' drug benefits.

You know, it's quite frustrating, Madam Chair, because the picture of Alberta could look much, much different. I think, first and foremost, some of my colleagues here in the House have talked about mismanagement of dollars, a waste of taxpayer dollars. I mean, look no further than AHS, when we look at how much goes to higher management. They play the shell game versus paying front-line workers, the folks who really make this province tick every day.

Also, this government is reluctant to look at three other areas which would increase the revenue that the government brings in, which would mean we could actually have smaller class sizes, that we could repair our crumbling infrastructure, whether it's schools, hospitals, highways, bridges, and again cut down on our wait times and ensure that Albertans get the services that they deserve, especially from the fact, Madam Chair, that we are living in the wealthiest province in the country. Yet you wouldn't know it if you walked into the Misericordia hospital or into some of our schools that have 40-plus kids in a classroom.

The way to address these, Madam Chair, is obviously cleaning up the mismanagement of wasted dollars that this government has. AHS is one example. I just want to highlight the fact that it was the Alberta NDP that put forward amendments this year that would have eliminated the associate ministers' offices. I find it quite rich that more than half of the PC MLAs that are elected have some sort of ministerial post. I mean, I'd venture a guess that there might be more ministers in this provincial government than there are in any provincial government across the country.

Mr. Mason: Or the world.

Mr. Bilous: Or the world.

As well, we proposed an amendment to freeze the Premier's office budget. You know, those two different amendments would have saved over $3 million in this budget, Madam Chair. So that's one example of cleaning up some of the mismanagement of dollars.

You know, to briefly touch on it again, the NDP has been calling for a review and an overhaul of our royalty regime within the province. Royalties are the lowest here of anywhere in North America. Again, we've got examples from our friends in the United States in jurisdictions like Alaska, that are run, you know, by Republican Senators and by the Republicans, and they pay more in royalties. And guess what? The companies aren't going anywhere.

Second of all, Madam Chair, again, within the last 10 years there has been a race to the bottom with corporate taxes. We went from 15 down to 10. I think a modest adjustment, still remaining competitive with other jurisdictions in the country, would increase revenues.

And then, of course, a move to a progressive taxation system, which I would like to highlight for a few members. You take a household income of, let's say, a hundred thousand dollars, and you compare what that family pays in taxes in Alberta under a flat tax at 10 per cent versus British Columbia or Ontario, where there is a progressive income tax system. With an income of a hundred thousand dollars or less, they actually pay less than 10 per cent in taxes, so their take-home at the end of the day is actually larger than Alberta. In Alberta the flat tax for many Albertans is actually an Alberta disadvantage, yet this government continues to peddle that it's advantageous for everyone.

There are different ways to address revenue, but I just want to point out some of the issues that I have with this budget. Again, you know, this PC government continues to attack Alberta's most vulnerable. Not only have they abandoned their plan to eliminate child poverty – and I'll remind members that we're almost halfway there, and very little has been done on the promise that was made – but they've cut $20 million from the PDD budget. There have been cuts to help low-income families get out of poverty. As well, funding to Human Services was well below the rate of population and inflation.

You know, again, it's almost humorous, if it wasn't so sad, when a minister gets up and says that we've increased our budget this year. Yeah, well, if it doesn't keep up with population and inflation, it's actually a cut. We see that in many, many areas as well as in our education system, Madam Chair. I'll get to it when I speak about Infrastructure, but we have aging infrastructure in this province. Again, I was speaking to a member earlier who said: "Yes, but Alberta has no deficit. We've cleared our books." Well, what we did was that within the last two decades we – and by "we" I mean this PC government – downloaded much of our debt onto the books of municipalities and off its own books.

You know, we've got hospitals that are crumbling. We've got schools that are aging. We've got a government that's forcing school boards to have to close schools in order to get one new one in a mature neighbourhood, which is really tying the hands of folks. I would have liked to have seen so much more out of this budget.

Let's see. What else can I talk about? Again, we have soaring child care costs in this province, Madam Chair. I have had friends and constituents that have two or more children come in and say: "You know what? Both of us parents could work, but it's not worth it for both of us to work because it's just as expensive."

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt, but it's 6 p.m. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the committee is recessed until 7:30 this evening.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8 Appropriation Act, 2014

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. This is the first time, actually, that I've been able to get up to speak to Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, 2014, so I'm looking forward to offering up my comments regarding it. I'm just fiddling here so that I can find my clock, and in that way I can have some sense of how long I have been talking. I know it will feel like forever for everybody else, but for me I still need to get a sense of what that is. Okay. There we go. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Bill 8 is the Appropriation Act, which, of course, authorizes the government to go ahead with the budget that they have . . .

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. Hon. members, the noise level is a little high. If you have conversations, you can take them out into the other room. Otherwise, keep it low so that we can hear the speaker.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm doing my best to speak succinctly, but since I can't even pronounce the word, it's probably somewhat indicative of what is to follow.

We're talking about the budget that the government has put forward for all of us to vote on over the course of the next few days. Now, generally speaking, we've offered up comment around this budget to the effect that this government has a revenue problem, and because of that, they are making a number of cuts and, generally speaking, unwise decisions in order to deal with the fact that they are not collecting enough revenue.

There are really, in my view, Madam Chair, two explanations for their revenue problem. First of all, we have a flat tax in the province. You know, it's interesting. That flat tax has been in place now for – I don't know – 12 or 13 years. I'm not exactly sure how long. As much as everyone here threw themselves a little party and conducted a little parade around here to congratulate themselves on introducing this flat tax, it's very interesting because no other jurisdiction has followed suit. The reason no other jurisdiction has followed suit is because it's a really, really bad idea. It's a very unwise way of managing.

As a result, we here in Alberta are in a situation where, you know, if you earn – I can't remember what the figures were – somewhere between $50,000 and $70,000 a year, you pay more than the national average in taxes. But, lucky you, if you earn a million dollars a year, you do get away with roughly $40,000 a year in savings. Now, you know, that $40,000 a year in savings is pretty awesome, and I'm sure a lot of million-dollar-a-year income earners have invested excellent amounts of that $40,000 in their third homes in Palm Springs and in, you know, the vineyards that they visit on vacation, typically not in Alberta, and in all those places where they spend all that disposable cash that people tend to have when they earn a million dollars a year.

The question is: is that really wise? While we are ensuring that those fabulous million-dollar-a-year earners pay $40,000 a year less in tax than they do in any other province, we are making decisions that impact very important services in this province and the vast majority of Albertans, who, just to be clear, are not earning a million dollars a year.

The other source of our revenue problem, of course, is that we continue to refuse to collect a reasonable share of the resources that we own. I don't want to get into a huge discussion about this, but I will say simply that the measures of what we collect relative to other jurisdictions in a similar situation to ours show that we collect the lowest amount. That says to me that there is room for us to capitalize on our natural resources for the benefit of the people who elected us as opposed to for the benefit of the multinational companies who are extracting that oil and in a fashion that is wiser and more judicious with respect to our resources. But we're not doing that, Madam Chair, and for that reason we are, you know, making cuts, or alternatively we are not caring for the most vulnerable Albertans in this province.

It's really kind of hard to focus in on all the places in this budget where I would want to see different priorities, but I will say, you know, that we've had one very interesting discussion repeatedly over the course of the last three or four weeks around the fact that we essentially have no access to justice in this province and that we can't fund our legal aid system. We have a Solicitor General who claims that his first priority is to ensure I think he calls it equality for taxpayers or something like that and that for that reason we need to sometimes compromise the principle of access to justice. That's disturbing, I have to say, Madam Chair, coming from the Solicitor General of the province.

But the fact of the matter is that I'm of the view that we truly are on the precipice of having our whole legal system collapse upon itself because it truly is an area that only the most wealthy and entitled of Albertans can actually make use of. We're spending many, many dollars to ensure that, you know, Enbridge can have its hundreds of thousands of days in court, but at the same time folks who need the intervention of the courts on family matters, who need the intervention of the courts on basic income security matters, who need the intervention of the courts judiciously and fairly in matters that impact upon their life, liberty, and security cannot get access to the courts in a way that the courts contemplated them getting access, and that is with fair representation. I think that at a certain point we run the risk of really losing public faith in the judicial system.

Of course, that's one area where we are making cuts to justify that $40,000 a year that our million-dollar-a-year earners can pocket every year. Another one, of course, is the draconian cuts that this government has legislated or attempted to legislate and which find their way into this budget in the form of a salary freeze on public-sector employees in violation of their own legislation and, more importantly, in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These guys aren't just sort of, you know, picking and choosing and going: "Okay, folks. We all need to tighten our belts, and we're all in this together." No. They're ripping up the Constitution in order to go after a certain group of people who earn on average about $52,000 a year. So it's a question of choices. They earn slightly more every year than those million dollar earners, that this government is so committed to protecting, get to save in taxes in this province and no other. That's who we're picking and choosing. In this government it's all about choices, and I would suggest that they've really lost their way in terms of understanding who it is that they represent.

Now, when we look at issues in Human Services, which is one of my major areas that I pay attention to, you know, we had a Premier who ran to Albertans on what I would refer to as almost an NDP-light platform, shall we say. That was what she ran on, and in part of that, what she promised was to eliminate child poverty.

Mr. Hehr: You guys ran on a Liberal-light platform.

Ms Notley: And you guys joined the CPers for about 32 days.

An Hon. Member: The CP?

Ms Notley: The Communist Party.

Anyway, as we characterize what everybody else was actually representing at the time, the fact of the matter is that the former Premier promised Albertans, among other things, a plan to eliminate child poverty in five years, and she promised Albertans full-day kindergarten. Both of those things are actually not unreasonable commitments to make. The more early intervention we get, the greater the health, the education, and the economic, income-earning outcomes of those kids 15 years later. The studies are incontrovertible that moving to a full-day kindergarten system would have measurable results in the prosperity of all Albertans.

7:40

That was a good promise to make, the whole issue of eliminating child poverty in five years. Well, quite frankly, if we were to use our rather extensive resources and consider the kind of interventions brought in by the Ontario government with respect to the child tax credit, that too could go a long way to eliminating child poverty. Hey, with just a drop in the bucket, this whole notion of having a universal school lunch program, at least we'd be making sure that kids in our province, that everyone likes to claim as being so wealthy, would all actually have a full stomach while they're at school and learning. Yet we are the only province in the country that doesn't have school lunch programs funded by the government.

You know, we're making these decisions all the time to allow the gap between the extremely wealthy and everybody else to grow and grow and grow. That's a very intentional, policy-originated decision, and it is entirely reflected in this budget. This budget is a corporate budget that has long since abandoned the needs of the vast majority of Albertans.

The one thing these folks are doing in this budget is playing around with starting to put a little bit of money into developing their infrastructure although I actually find that kind of amusing because they're out there sort of trying to paint themselves as these great saviours and somehow having the foresight to initiate some investment in infrastructure. They see that that's kind of popular. They do that with themselves being the 43-year-old architects of the crumbling infrastructure that is now in such desperate need. Really, if I were them, I'd be embarrassed every time I talked about building Alberta. Whenever I see a Building Alberta sign or a Building Alberta commercial, I think: building the Alberta we broke. These guys are the ones that sat by for 43 years letting it fall to pieces.

To then turn around and try to convert that into a political plus: I have to say that it takes some political chutzpah. But I'm not convinced that even your 240 communications people are going to make Albertans buy it. Again, we can talk about your 240 communications people as being a whole other question of where your priorities are as we continue yet another year of not including a school lunch program in the Human Services budget.

What else did we do this year? Well, we made some dramatic cuts to income support programs that would help people who are on income support get off income support and back into either schooling or into the workforce. Of course, the minister says: "Well, you know, we didn't really want to, but we haven't finished negotiating that with the federal government, so we had to make these massive 20, 30, 40 per cent cuts in our budget from what we're spending. But, you know, don't worry. We've kind of got our fingers crossed, and we're hoping that our pals in Ottawa will come through with the money that we think they might." Of course, we don't know if that's true, and we also don't know if what they come through with will actually be what we need.

In any event, the fact of the matter is that this is a province that also got themselves a billion dollar windfall from the federal government this year for health care funding and then chose to only put three-quarters of that into health, putting the other $250 million windfall into their back pocket to maintain their ability to give that million-dollar-a-year income earner his $40,000-a-year tax break.

See, I think that that money could have gone to make up for the employment support programs that we are not currently funding. So when we talk about eliminating child poverty, we could have actually done some meaningful stuff to get the parents of those kids who are poor off income support programs, which at this point run at about one-half of the low-income cut-off, which is a level that experts have long since indicated actually represents real poverty.

We are intentionally funding income support programs at about one-half of the poverty rate that we know to be true. We are intentionally having families live in that level of poverty. When we talk about getting those folks off those programs, we are now cutting the programs that would assist in that objective by 20, 30, 40 per cent because it's the federal government's problem, even as we're pocketing another $250 million that we didn't expect to get, that was supposed to be going to health.

You know, again, it's just another choice. It's a choice about giving tax breaks to your wealthy friends. It's a choice about shovelling money out the door to the oil and gas industry in any one of a number of different subsidies and creative gift-giving strategies that this government has at their disposal when it comes to that particular select group. The difficulty, though, of course, is that Albertans lose in the process, and that's what this budget includes. That is what we are choosing to ignore.

Another area that would assist people in fighting against the trend towards a growing level of poverty and a growing level of inequality, of course, is postsecondary education. As you know, Madam Chair, we have the lowest percentage of people going on to postsecondary education in this province. We have the greatest income gap between men and women in this province, including those who have graduated from postsecondary education. We have the second-highest combined tuition and noninstructional fees in the country. On a per capita basis we're putting less money into postsecondary education. That's the status of that.

Yet, again, we are a province that has the kind of resources that 99 per cent of every other jurisdiction in the world could only begin to dream of. The degree to which we are frittering it away and not investing in genuine ways to diversify our economy, starting with investing in people, investing in our young people, investing in students, and ensuring that we actually could provide a first-class postsecondary education system with access which is affordable – this is something that we could have done in this budget.

We could have undone the truly ridiculous round of cuts that we had last year. Instead, you know, we picked away at a bit to try to make friends with a few political people here and there, but we really did not undo the damage that we imposed upon them through those cuts, nor did we actually invest in this sector in a way to move forward, to deal with the fact that ours is amongst the most expensive postsecondary systems in the country, to deal with the fact that our class sizes are growing, to deal with the fact that our infrastructure is going down, to deal with the fact that we have the lowest number of our high school kids transitioning into postsecondary in the country. Those are all things that we could have done if we could look beyond six months and that could be in this budget, but they're not there either, Madam Chair.

What else could we do to really grow the potential of this province? Well, child care. Every year I hope to see some kind of genuine investment in a truly affordable, accessible, nonprofit, public child care system in this province. The government loves to brag about how many child care spaces we have. Well, you know, we have had an increase in child care spaces. It's still a fraction of what we need, and the vast majority of them are unaffordable for regular Albertans. What that means is that children in Alberta are growing up in a potpourri of frantically sewn-together care arrangements, which undermine their future learning ability, which undermine their social growth, which undermine their sense of security. Of course, that happens the most in our lowest income families, continuing to increase the very gap that people claim we need to eliminate.

A proper child care system, like the one in Quebec, has been shown repeatedly to have measurable differences in outcome in terms of health, in terms of education, in terms of income. Again, it seems like a no-brainer in a province like this, where we have such a great amount of resources. It seems a no-brainer that we would introduce that kind of child care system here to really give an advantage to people who are born and raised in this province, to really have something that Albertans can be proud of, saying: "Yeah. You know what? We're in Alberta. We throw money on the fire when we're cold, but we also have this awesome child care program, and it made such a difference in my life and in my family's life."

You know, it does work that way because in Quebec the minute someone starts talking about taking away that child care program – well, politicians have learned that it's like threatening medicare, which, of course, I know that these guys also try to do but subversively. It's just something that people are proud of and know makes a difference in their lives. It's something that we could also look towards achieving if we had any creativity, if we had any notion of actually building Alberta for Albertans as opposed to a select slice of industrial friends and insiders who currently have this government's ear.

So that's sort of a brief summary of why I'm not keen on this budget and this bill and why I will be voting against it. There are certainly a number of other areas. I could go on at greater length. We haven't restored the funding to PDD. We are continuing to cut that funding through the SIS program, which everybody, depending on what day of the week you ask them, has a different opinion about and a different understanding of as to how it's being used. Either way, we shouldn't be using that to cut that population.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, 2014? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's, as always, a privilege to speak to bills in this House, and I speak to Bill 8 in, no doubt, a similar fashion. It's a bill that I will be speaking against. In my view, this year's budget, like the last number of them, does little if anything to correct Alberta for the long term. I think the hon. member from the fourth party who just spoke touched on a lot of things that I, too, will touch on.

There's no doubt that the reason why we have a budget that doesn't seem to really address fundamental problems that are showing themselves to exist in Alberta is because we have a revenue problem. That has beyond a doubt been stated by former Finance ministers of the Progressive Conservative Party itself as well as economists of all stripes. In fact, it's more than evident when you look at the amount of programs and services and the ability of the government to do day-to-day tasks in this province. It's beyond clear that that is, in fact, the problem.

The hon. member did a good job of pointing out that we have many strange things here in Alberta. You know, you would tend to think that if we had gone to a flat tax in 2001 and if it was such a wise idea, that it brought such prosperity to this province, some other jurisdiction in this country would have followed along and said: "My goodness. Did that not lead to a whole bunch of prosperity? My goodness. Did everything just happen there? That was just amazing." But no. No other province has bothered to even look at it. I think it's because they know full well that it's ridiculous. It's ridiculous because, generally speaking, your middle-class taxpayer ends up paying more in taxes than your wealthiest citizen.

Furthermore, the real thing that it does as well is that it doesn't collect the global amount of revenue that a true progressive tax system would. By bringing in more revenue, of course, we could do some of these things in Alberta that clearly are not being done given the revenue sources that are available to the government under its current fiscal structure. Let's take a look. What are some of those things? I think they're well known, some of them. The school lunch program: we're the only jurisdiction in Canada that doesn't have one. Full-day kindergarten: I believe we're the jurisdiction that is furthest behind on this issue. The hon. member brought up a great thing. Our legal aid programs are in a shambles. Our welfare payments or our Alberta Works payments are the lowest in the land by a country mile. All of these things are nothing to be proud of. Furthermore, given the fact that we apparently need schools and need them fast and we haven't built them in a generation – there's a reason why. We haven't collected any revenue.

I guess the other thing we can look at is not only that we need these things today – there is no doubt in my mind that we need these things today – but as a result of our fiscal structure we have managed to go through the vast majority of nonrenewable resource revenue we have brought in. One has to look back to 1971, when this government took over, and the fact is that we brought in and fundamentally spent virtually all the oil wealth. We've saved $16 billion, and we brought in close to $400 billion. Really, where has that money gone? If you look at it, it's tax breaks, okay? It's tax breaks and an inability to collect revenue for things we need.

You know, we can just look at the evidence. Any way you cut it, it's absurd as to where we are, and to have not changed course over the last two years is beyond me. I'm actually interested: how is the current government going to defend, going into the next election, the record of how they have run things? Either way you cut it, simply put, we don't have the services that other provinces seem to have. Now, even without the services, we're heading up to $21 billion in debt. Like, any way you look at this, this is just silly.

I would also like to bring up the fact that there are other things in this province that we could use that have been implemented in other provinces. I think the hon. member brought up – and I'm a big believer in this, too – daycare spaces in our communities here in Alberta. Right now if you look across the lay of the land, we don't have enough daycare spaces in Calgary for the number of people that need them. Furthermore, the space for one child in Calgary is between $1,600 and $1,700. Clearly, that is unaffordable for many if not most working families. When you see a problem like that out there, you have to look around. You have to look at jurisdictions that are doing things to eliminate a problem. One of those jurisdictions is Quebec, that has had their national child care program now for 15 years. It allows people to have their kids in high-quality learn-through-play programs from the time they're born to the time they're six years old.

Not only are these available; they're actually having tremendous results. You know that we all look to PISA, these international educational studies that are evaluating education systems. If you look at Alberta's scores, we tend to be trending downwards. Actually, so does every jurisdiction in Canada except for Quebec. Wouldn't you know it? That's because they've had 15 years of having an early childhood daycare program where kids learn through play. This is not some government boondoggle. This is something that I think all parties should eventually just support.

You want to know why, Madam Chair? Because it's revenue neutral. You heard me. It's revenue neutral. After you establish it with some initial seed money, inside of five years the Quebec daycare program – and this was done by experts, economists and the like, who say it's revenue neutral. You know why? Because young families and in particular young mothers are out working, having jobs, paying taxes, and then some are not staying at home collecting income support or EI as long as they usually do. They're out working. That should be something that even my right-of-centre friends should be interested in, a revenue-neutral policy that helps kids learn and get ready for grade 1, as is clearly shown by the PISA exams as well as by experts who have looked at the reasons why Quebec is doing better on these tests, and it allows it to be revenue neutral.

Really, it's one of those things that – if you look at a piece of government policy that all parties should adopt because of its revenue neutrality, it's that daycare component. Simply put, the more time we waste on not doing it – it's beyond me, and to be honest it plays into a mindset of not understanding young families and in particular not understanding what women need to succeed in the world today. I think we need to move on that quickly.

There are a whole host of areas in Alberta where – I guess it's great – most people have a job on Monday morning, but I think that at this venture we have to ask ourselves if this is really working for everyone. Really, is this all there is? We don't have schools in neighbourhoods where kids live. We don't have a social safety net that assists people when they are needing either a lawyer to defend them in court or needing to get social assistance when they find themselves out of work. We're unable to do many of the things that other provinces with reasonable fiscal structures can do.

I'm wondering if that's right. To be honest, I think that at least the PC Party with their platform that they ran on in the last election seemed to have the pulse of the electorate and seemed to understand that and seemed to be heading in that direction. Like the hon. member from the New Democrat Party said, they ran on a

New Democrat light platform, and I pointed out that the New Democrats ran on a Liberal light policy program on that one, just to put that into perspective, you know. There seemed to be a general sense of where our electorate was and where we needed to go and the like, but the fundamental difficulty is that despite this understanding, the government refused to do anything about it.

If they would address the revenue problem even in some small fashion – I brought this up before. There is an $11 billion gap between our fiscal structure and Saskatchewan's fiscal structure, the second-lowest taxed province. Even if they would have taken back, say, $4 billion or $5 billion of that gap, they would have been able to deliver on the entire platform. The entire platform. They would have been able to build the schools, they would have been able to do the roads and the hospitals, provide the care, and start eliminating child poverty. All that stuff was possible if they would have gone in and actually addressed a problem that has been nagging us for a while.

Instead, the brain trust said: "Oh, my God. We can't fix what's broken. We've just got to continue doing what we're doing." Sure enough, that's why I think we're here, you know, at this point in time searching for a new Premier and the like. I have every sense that when you don't keep your promises in an election, it's just not going to happen for you. But that's where we are.

In any event, I was disappointed in the budget for those reasons. It seems like we have not addressed the revenue problem. By not addressing the revenue problem, we may just be destined to continue spending all this oil wealth in one generation. That's what we've done over the last 25 years. If we haven't learned it now, I'm not certain when we're going to learn it, Madam Chair. There is much that needs to be done today as well as tomorrow.

Thank you very much. Take care.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd just like to remind everyone that the noise level is climbing again. Please try to keep it low so that we can hear the speakers.

Are there any other members who would like to comment or question or have amendments on Bill 8? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to share some feedback on the budget from the Calgary-Varsity constituency. I want to start off with the positives, and there are many. Our constituency was very pleased with the discipline of having a three-year budget vision and alignment to that vision and reporting on that three-year cycle. So kudos to the minister.

Our constituency is largely also in support of borrowing for capital, with a repayment plan clearly marked out. It felt like things got a little bit beyond what was expected, beyond the $5 billion a year for capital, but there is a sense that the flood costs and the infrastructure costs associated with the flood were a reasonable explanation for that.

Our constituency is also the beneficiary of a lot of third-party funding for infrastructure at the university, at the Children's hospital, at the Foothills hospital. They would like to have the opportunity to do even more of that with greater impact in the future. We understand that the Ministry of Infrastructure is responsible for that, but we would also hope that the Ministry of Finance and Treasury Board would take a leadership role in that as well and set a very clear course. There are decisions we're making now like spending money on big roads.

Highway 63 is a very expensive road that needs to be built in this province, but perhaps we need to have different conversations about infrastructure. Some of the examples I hear from my constituents are: would we rather have more assisted living for seniors in our constituency, more youth mental health facilities, and some of the billions that are going into highway 63, for example, and other road infrastructure redirected to those kinds of needs instead by being able to attract third-party investors into roads and other infrastructure? I think we see greater potential than is being realized right now.

The results-based budgeting process is viewed very, very positively in Calgary-Varsity because people see it as a process, a policy tool that allows us to test value for money, especially around program spending and around the role of government and better definition. But they're asking for more hard information on the outcomes of that process. They would like to see it, and I think it would be beneficial for all Albertans to understand that with greater detail.

One of the points in the budget that I've heard a lot about in our constituency and a lot of disgruntlement about is the Alberta future fund, the $2 billion going from the heritage savings trust fund into general revenues for a purpose that is not clearly defined at this point in time. It may just be the way our constituents are wired, but they want to understand why that money is leaving the heritage savings trust fund, which they hold very dearly, into general revenues. They would like to understand that.

That concludes my comments on behalf of Calgary-Varsity. I fully support this budget and will be voting in favour of it. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the appropriation bill here once again. As you can see, in the spirit of equity and equality I deferred to the Member for Calgary-Varsity. I was curious about what she had to say as well. It's somewhat chivalrous but also a little bit Machiavellian. I wanted to see what you were up to back there. Now I know.

You know, it's interesting. I haven't seen these advertisements yet, but I heard word that they switched the building Alberta concept now from sort of signs on the side of the road every half-kilometre or so and in every little nook and cranny in the province. Now they have Building Alberta advertisements for the new budget, apparently.

In the spirit of my own imagination, not having seen these yet, I'm wondering exactly how these advertisements are going to look, right? Do they sweep past the Misericordia hospital, where the nurses today told me when I was there that the air system wasn't working, so the place was at, like, 35 degrees, and where the attendants had to deal with the backup in the sewer again? Or do these advertisements somehow flip over to the postsecondary institutions, our universities, where students are literally not able to afford to go anymore every time you raise tuition so dramatically like it has been done over this last decade? Do you realize that a whole other socioeconomic class of people simply drop out of that institution, regardless of their ability to actually pass and thrive in that postsecondary institution, purely for financial reasons? I'm wondering if these advertisements, this new building Alberta budget, flip over to the fact that while in the midst of an economic growth, almost an unprecedented economic growth, I think, at least regionally, and certainly an unprecedented population growth, all the public service wages are frozen again here in the province of Alberta.

When you look at the very highest inflation rate in Canada here in this province, our entire public service, the very people who actually make this Legislature run here, each of your ministries – do you think that you can look each of your workers in the eye and say: "Thanks a lot. Here's your budget cut, and by the way we're going after your pensions this year, too?" Do you really think, if you could read their minds, about what you honestly would see inside? That's harder to do in an advertisement, I guess. You can't show what's in people's minds. I guess you could show a little thought cloud, perhaps, or something like that.

I'm wondering as well, with the budget that we saw this year, if we take into consideration the longer term situation – right? – as they claim to do in this budget. They say that we're taking a three-year cycle. Well, that's great. It's a good idea. I certainly concur with that. But the cycles of three years: you can move them any which way you want. If you move it back two years, then in fact we suffered significant cuts over those three-year periods. In postsecondary while we might have put back $48 million, last year, not three years ago, not even 12 months ago, we took out $148 million. Madam Chair, I really have a hard time trying to get my head around this budget.

You know, I would like to support a budget at some point. I mean, it's not an unheard-of thing. If something reasonable and fair and in balance serves the best interests of Albertans, then certainly I would be happy to vote for the budget. But this one, with all of its sort of flashy paint job and new aluminum rims and maybe some fancy headlights and all this kind of thing, is really the same broken-down old thing that we've seen over the last number of years that really doesn't serve the public interests very well at all.

Yes, you can say that we spent a lot of money. There are billions of dollars in this budget, and certainly our economy is hot. But where is the substantial, equitable, sustainable, and socially just policy that would be commensurate with all of that wealth? All of that wealth is a privilege, Madam Chair. It's not as though we just, you know, created it out of dust. It's a privilege based on nonrenewable resource money that simply is a one-time deal. Maybe it lasts over 40-some years, but it still is not renewable unless we figure out a way to make oil out of water. That would be even more ridiculous because the water will become more expensive, in fact, than the oil will. Unless we manage to create some sort of magician's trick, then all of the money and the effort that we're spending on these budgets are nothing but living on borrowed time. We're living on borrowed time just like your mom and dad probably told you when you were a wayward teenager, right? We all were at some point in our lives, Edmonton-Strathcona excluded, I'm sure, straight and narrow as the Peace River as it winds its way through northern Alberta.

Living on borrowed time is a very serious thing, though, right? We only can presume that we earn the good trust and the equity that we earn through our hard work and effort and good intentions. When you spend a good portion of your nonrenewable energy resources to pay for regular budget items, then that's the very opposite of equitable and sustainable and working off the sweat of good policy. Rather, it's a very short-sighted thing.

I mean, we've heard this before, but we will continue to say it again more emphatically than ever because more Albertans are catching on to this idea, Madam Chair. They're catching on that this not a sustainable thing. It's not ethical, but it also isn't working for them and their families so much anymore either. What's happening here in the province is that as we depend more and more heavily on a single economy and a single aspect of that economy, which is taking raw energy resources and trying to export them as raw and as unprocessed and sort of as fixed as possible to other locations to find that value-added in places like the United States or Asia or elsewhere, as our economy pulls apart like that, polarizes, so does the local economy and all of the different socioeconomic strata that exist in our local economy here in the province.

We hear it so often: the rich get richer. Well, yeah. You know what? We can see a textbook case of that here in the province of Alberta today, and we exacerbate that problem by having a very, very primitive and unethical tax structure which only benefits the very, very wealthiest people in the province.

We know the scale now. I don't have it in front of me, but if you are making a lot of money, more than a million dollars a year, then you are in the very best place in the country to live, for sure, economically. Now, you are in a very awesome place to live if you're not making a million dollars, too. But if you are doing so here, it's like you've won the bonanza. It's like you've won the lottery every single year. You get the equivalent of, you know, a mid-sized luxury car in your tax benefits because you live in Alberta and you're making a million dollars a year here.

There are people that are putting their residences here in Alberta – right? – and working and operating out of other provinces because they make more than a million dollars a year and they can use this place as some kind of a tax haven.

An Hon. Member: Maybe they make more money.

Mr. Eggen: Really. I mean, that's not only unethical; it's not even reasonable for the people who are doing that here in this province to be doing it in other provinces, ripping them off. On the corporate level we see the same thing, too, where you have lower corporate taxes here in the province of Alberta.

You know what the Americans do? If you are paying a lower corporate tax level than you would pay back in the United States, then they'll just charge you the difference. So for us to have a lower corporate tax level here in the province of Alberta, we are simply subsidizing the United States government, who takes the balance from that same corporation who files their taxes in the United States.

A lot of people don't realize that to be true. We do. Absolutely. But as they start to warm up to the idea, this nagging notion that the promised land here in Alberta is not working out so great for the middle class, for regular working people who don't earn a million dollars – maybe they earn $70,000 or $50,000 or $80,000 or $40,000—for them that tax structure doesn't work. They're paying more in Alberta than other places.

The affordability issue is really starting to come back and bite us on the backside, Madam Chair. I don't know if anybody noticed that the real estate market in all of our major centres is on fire. Lots of people who, let's say, own houses or multiple houses or invest in real estate probably will say: well, that's great. But for most of us it simply means that we pay a lot more. You pay a lot more when you move, you pay a lot more if you're renting, and you pay a lot more for all of the other goods and services that trickle down through a hot real estate market in any given urban centre.

You know, when I look at the Appropriation Act, Bill 8, it's a reminder that we do very well in this province, that we deal with a very, very strong budget. We can provide lots of strong goods and services here. Of course, we should, and of course we would, and of course we could do a whole lot better if we had the common sense to make investments in key areas that create what I say are value-added human investments – right? – making value-added human investments.

We've heard a lot about it already. I mean, when I go back to the K to 12 schools, I'm absolutely shocked by the class sizes. Again, another place for your Building Alberta budget advertisements, right? Try passing by a high school with your camera, and you'll see 40 kids in the class. It's difficult to teach kids properly and mark the papers properly and actually run a functional modern education in the classroom when there are simply too many kids to deal with. We've seen it before, but I know, looking at these budget line items, that we don't have to be seeing this again here in this province in 2014.

You know, for all the kids that you don't give the time of day to, where you're not able to learn their situation, their learning styles, maybe some of the challenges they might have, either personally or academically, that contributes again to our low graduation rates and our falling test scores and all of that kind of thing, the lowest graduation rate in the country and, as we've seen, people bemoaning these test scores falling over time. Well, they're not going to go up, Madam Chair, at all over the next five years because – you know what? – the kids that will be writing those tests in the next five years are in these large, overheated classrooms right now.

It's not like there's going to be a miracle happen, right? Human education takes place on a developmental level. At each different time and place, from three years old till 18 years old, different developmental stages are hit. Those sweet spots are either there and you address them with good education, or those kids lose out, and it doesn't come back necessarily. You don't give a student three years in high school classes with 40 kids in a class, and they do sort of mediocre, and then expect that suddenly something miraculous will happen and change it over. I mean, sure, people change over time, but you've given that person a handicap right from the beginning, and that handicap passes right back to this very Chamber, to this very budget and the fact that we're not paying for the goods and services that we are legally legislated to do so here in this Chamber and provide that public interest and provide the funding and the personnel.

I was asked to talk about EMS and hospital wait times again today, you know, meeting the targets, right? I wanted to think about what I was going to talk about here tonight with Bill 8, the Appropriation Act, 2014. You can't blame EMS workers as they run around from place to place looking for an emergency room and active treatment beds that are available to them. Every little space along the way, where they're maybe not staffed up the way they should be in the emergency room or in the wards or in the long-term care facility, coming out the other side, each step of the way, one little piece of that, adds up to a very large problem when you add it all together. That's kind of the sum total of this budget, too. That's the problem that I have with it, quite frankly.

You know, there are ways by which we could fix it, right? Alberta New Democrats know that part of the budget that we don't ever just deal with properly here on this side is the revenue side. We know that there are billions of dollars that are flowing through our economy here right now, and we're simply not capturing them. To me that's irresponsible. It speaks of, again, this very cavalier attitude towards our nonrenewable resources, that we don't put a price tag on them which is commensurate with the value of them not just now but in the future, plus the responsibility we have to those nonrenewable resources in regard to the damage that is done in regard to the environment and in regard to the carbon and so forth. If we do start to capture those resources, have a modest increase in the royalties that we take from our nonrenewable energy resources and invest that in a long-term plan, not just in yearly cost expenditures like we have here but start to save that money for now and for the future, we would just be so much better off.

As I said before, the flat tax is, again, quite irresponsible. Our corporate tax rate only serves to feed to the bottom here somehow. You know, sometimes I wonder where – like, on a practical level, it seems so obvious – this government gets all of these ideas from. Do they go to some kind of special convention somewhere, where they all talk about all of these things, and say: “Well, yes, we know that your pensions are actually really good here in Alberta. But, listen, we need you to cut them as well because we’re doing it over here in Albania and in Alabama and in wherever. So just for us to look like we’re all normal somehow, that this is the new normal, we need you to cut your defined benefit pensions in Alberta, too, if you don’t mind. Thank you very much?”

I don’t know if there is that kind of convention somewhere, but it’s got to be like that because I don’t see logic and reasonableness. I know there are lots of very logical and reasonable people across the way over there. I quite like some of them, really. They have nice suits, and they seem to laugh at jokes and things like that.

But when it comes to these very fundamental policy issues like progressive taxation or investing in renewable energy by increasing our revenue share of nonrenewable energy resources or investing in preventative health care or putting serious money into K to 12 education or actually having policies that would eradicate child poverty in this province here in the next five years and poverty in general by having a reasonable, common-sense approach to labour, not this antagonistic sort of Fred Flintstone kind of fight-it-out, you know, shoot-it-out and see what happens kind of thing, or giving safety and security to our seniors so that they know now and in the future that there will be some small, reasonable policy in home care and health care and pensions available to them, I mean, all of those things are not like they’re radical ideas, right?

I’ve noticed since I’ve become politically aware that what was probably progressive 20 years ago may be more left-wing thinking now. You know, for New Democrats we sound like a bunch of Lougheed PCers – right? – talking about these things. I guess that’s the way things are. You’ve got to start somewhere. But it must be kind of embarrassing when you go to bed at night to know that over the last 40 years you’ve taken this province so far to the right that it’s difficult to recognize it really.

So I think that we will not vote for this budget. I feel a little bit embarrassed about that, a little bit sad – right? – because we work so hard on these things, but I know that we can do better, too. I think that I can see some change on the horizon coming. I can see that people are not just putting up with the same old thing, where the PC government tells everybody to be quiet and take your medicine, you know, the go back to sleep sort of attitude. We’re becoming a much more sophisticated province than we ever have been. We are more than 4 million people here. We’ve become one of the great economic leaders of Canada, we’re the most urbanized population in the country, and Albertans are smart. They have a very practical sense of not just a tomorrow sort of attitude but long-range planning.

People don’t move to Alberta just on a whim. People move here from other countries with their families and so forth expecting a better future, and a better future isn’t just, you know, a couple of bucks and a flat-screen TV, right? It’s to know that you have the public institutions, that public interest is invested in, and it will continue to be invested in and strengthened for not just tomorrow but for the next generation.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I’m pleased to rise and speak, my first opportunity also, to Bill 8, the Budget 2014 appropriations. Let me begin with a few questions. What is the role of government? Well, surely, we all are clear in this House that the role of government is to provide leadership through fair laws, services, oversight, and a stable resource base to protect people and the planet for the long term. Those are pretty basic. It’s a pretty basic understanding that I’ve come to after just a few years in this job. Sadly, I haven’t seen a lot of evidence that the government shares the same definition for the role of government; that is, leadership, fair laws, adequate services, oversight, and a stable resource base for people and the environment.

Jumping directly to Budget 2014, does it do this? Does it provide for that fundamental role of government? Alberta Liberals get a resounding no from the people that we consult with. From our constituents there is a clear rejection of this 43-year-old PC government’s attempt to provide a resource base for the next year that will adequately address these fundamental roles of government.

Let’s look at each one of these individually. Providing stewardship of resources and a sustainable energy future. Clearly, this government has been so obsessed with one resource and one type of energy future that we have lost our way in terms of providing cost-effective, environmentally responsible, and sustainable energy for not only our generation but the next generation. Small, late investments in energy efficiency, conservation measures, renewables. Again, I guess it comes down to the question of how this government defines its role in our society. It’s unfortunate to see again the recurring theme of short-term thinking and heavy influence from the private sector.

There’s nothing wrong with the private sector. There’s nothing untenable about their goals and their agendas to create jobs and to create an economy. What is the problem is a government that doesn’t see its role as being the referee between the long-term public interest and the short-term corporate interests and a lack of attention to the longer term public liabilities that many of these developments have created. Many of these industries have put down pennies on the dollar for reclamation, for example, for the largest mining operation on the planet.

If things go south in terms of our oil industry, and there’s reason to believe that it could given alternatives that are emerging and liabilities associated with carbon and our environmental crisis in relation to climate change, it is very foreseeable that our primary resource may become less valuable on the planet than it is today, leaving tremendous stranded assets for us now and in our future to deal with. A few hundred million dollars will barely touch the oil sands in terms of reclamation. If these folks walk away, we and our future generations are stuck. That’s a tremendous contributor to what we are calling intergenerational theft on this side of the House.

Unlike an upstream orphan fund for conventional oil and gas abandonment, we have no downstream oil and gas orphan fund for refineries and sites that are developed for various petrochemical operations and gas station operations, no ability to hold people accountable if they walk away from these, again a huge public liability; a failure to really address what is an appropriate scope and scale of development in our oil and gas sector, again resulting in a total imbalance between resources coming in and the potential liabilities for the future; an almost complete absence of savings for our future, a wonderful start in the '70s under Peter Lougheed with the heritage fund and almost nothing added since then.

In any other country this would be a scandal. There would be people on the streets. But we are in a petrostate, and with low taxes and an apparent inability to influence the direction of this government, a lot of people have walked away from their civic duty and, unfortunately, have been discouraged about their political role. I think people are reuniting and regalvanizing and re-energizing around the political nature in Alberta and seeing both the short-term and long-term risks of the way we are budgeting and managing.

The second element is a fair revenue system. Again, as has been said by my colleague in Calgary-Buffalo, we are living at the very bottom of the barrel in terms of resource revenues, tax revenues, and the ability to meet our obligations as a government to protect people and the planet. Stable, dependable funding: impossible. Whether it's schools or hospitals or roads or people with disabilities or municipalities and their infrastructure and maintenance needs, we cannot begin to meet those demands with stable funding; a budget that simply looks, again, at the short term and emphasizes the business opportunities in Alberta instead of looking at the responsibility for services and sustainable funding for people and the monitoring of our planet.

A third area, protecting the environment: loss of boreal forests; loss of habitat; threatened species; a loss of wetlands with, clearly, no credible wetlands policy yet in 2014; not recognizing the critical nature of the environmental goods and services that are unconsciously declining and that, indeed, the economy is a subset of the environment and must be recognized as a subset. If we do not take care of the environment, we will have no economy. Unfortunately, we are still acting like this is a frontier with endless opportunities for land and water and squandering those in the name of short-term gain.

A fourth area is providing infrastructure and public services to ensure that every person can reach their potential. Does this budget do that? Well, no, Madam Chair. Again, we see a huge deferred maintenance problem in this province, a lack of school spaces, overcrowding, reduced postsecondary opportunities at a time when we desperately need innovation and investment in our young people in terms of both their futures and their capacity to contribute to the economy. This speaks again to a government that has not really examined its critical role in terms of developing leadership and stable revenue and an honest look at what will serve the long-term public interest.

To quote someone that many in here will recognize, Ken Chapman: we are not going from good to great in Alberta; we are not even serving the greater good. It's clearly time for this government to look at where its priorities are and to recognize that the more Albertans learn about the lack of long-term vision and commitment to a sustainable future, whether it's in terms of our children's care or in terms of a revenue stream and the infrastructure that this province needs or whether it's in terms of our environment and a new energy future that the rest of the planet is moving to – we have not seen evidence that this government with this budget gets it.

There's no question on this side of the House that the Liberal opposition will not be supporting this budget. I dare say that thousands of people across this province will recognize that it's time for change in this coming year as we move towards an election.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.
