Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Monday, March 3, 2014

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 26, 2014, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and assembled guests, let us pray. Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for Your blessings on those present here today. We ask for Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments, our thoughts, and our actions for the true benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, may we please remain standing for the rendering of our national anthem, which will be sung today by Mr. Robert Clark. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Clark and all. A very lively and welcoming rendition of O Canada.

Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm honoured to inform you that the Royal Canadian Artillery Band – and I'm sure you're familiar with them, having just heard them in the rotunda – are going to play now a brief musical interlude, and the details of that interlude are spelled out in your program. The RCA Band is Canada's oldest regular army band, having been formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax, and it has seen service in both world wars as well as the Korean War, and it has travelled across Canada and elsewhere, throughout our Canadian and national borders. The band was reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, and today is under the very capable direction of Captain Patrice Arsenault, CD, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

Mr. Maestro, if you wish, please.

Very tempting to join in there, wasn't it?

We shall await the next step in our procedures.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Mr. Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Pray be seated.

To the people of Alberta, hon. Premier and hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly, distinguished visitors and guests, it is my privilege to deliver the Speech from the Throne as we celebrate the opening of the Second Session of the 28th Alberta Legislature.

Today we live in the most open, unabashedly confident, and forward-looking province in Canada, an Alberta asserting itself proudly on the world stage.

You told your government to work with determination to build an even stronger, safer, healthier, more innovative and prosperous Alberta. You chose a clear path forward, grounded in our proud western values, that have built the Alberta we know today, where hard work and bold, innovative ideas are rewarded, where we enjoy well-paying jobs and continue to have the lowest taxes in Canada while at the same time supporting our most vulnerable citizens, a place where being a good neighbour still matters, where we work together to build caring communities that are as tolerant and welcoming as our people, and a place where families have confidence that their government will stay true to its word and be there with the education, health care, and infrastructure they need.

Your government has an unwavering belief that while our quality of life is great, it can be even better, and that core principle is the very foundation of the building Alberta plan.

The Building Alberta Plan

Almost two years ago I delivered this government's first Speech from the Throne. It contained the following passage.

Over the next four years this government will . . . deliver and fulfill a clear, focused, target-driven mandate. Albertans will know where the province is headed and how progress is being made because this is a government that will stay true to its promises.

The building Alberta plan is your government's answer to that commitment, the blueprint for action focused clearly on the three priorities you told your government are most important: investing in families and communities, opening new markets for Alberta's resources, and ensuring government lives within its means.

Since 2012 your government has made tremendous progress on all three fronts despite the challenges our province faced from the worst flood in Canadian history and the deep discount Alberta receives for its oil and gas. But neither nature's wrath nor economic fury stood in the way of your government's plan to build an even better quality of life for Albertans.

Investing in families means your government is making good on its key promise to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more over the next three years, keeping class sizes low with over 86,000 new spaces for our children.

Your government is already working with communities across Alberta to develop the first wave of family care clinics that are open later and provide health care closer to home. More FCCs will follow.

Just last month new neonatal intensive care beds at the Alberta Children's hospital were opened to help give parents peace of mind and more newborns a healthy start in life.

From the Calgary film studio, the new seniors' care home in Strathmore, and the new training labs in Lethbridge to the new nurse training program in Grande Prairie, the final mile initiative to connect our rural and remote regions, and our partnership on affordable housing with Habitat for Humanity in Edson, the largest rural build in Canada, under the building Alberta plan your government is making the investments today that matter to Albertans.

Last fall your government signed an agreement 50 years in the making to complete Calgary's ring road. This government is three years ahead of schedule in finishing Edmonton's ring road and will twin highway 63 from Grassland to Fort McMurray in full and on time by 2016.

To support these initiatives and investment in the quality services Albertans expect, your government is opening new markets. Key to the building Alberta plan, new markets mean higher royalties, better jobs, and fairer prices for our products.

In November the governments of Alberta and British Columbia signed a landmark agreement to move Alberta's oil and gas to the B.C. coast while protecting Alberta's royalties. The first-ever provincial energy agreement with China was signed last year. To increase agriculture exports, already Alberta's second-largest industry, we signed trade agreements with the states of Meghalaya and Punjab in India this January. Over the last year alone this government's focus on building new markets in Asia resulted in at least $460 million in new investment and trade for Alberta in addition to major new investments in our province by companies like CNOOC and the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China.

Your government will continue to fight for Alberta's producers and against unfair country of origin labelling rules in the United States while leading the charge for better rail service so our rural farm families can get their grain to international markets. This includes pushing the federal government to impose real penalties for those shippers who fail to meet their grain delivery obligations to our producers.

To meet the commitment under the building Alberta plan to live within its means, your government made difficult decisions in Budget 2013, decisions that helped Alberta turn the corner, putting our province on the path to a balanced budget. Some 375 programs have already been reviewed under results-based budgeting, with the third phase set to begin and be fully completed this year.

Last year MLAs froze their pay for four years, following an 8 per cent MLA pay cut in 2012. Your government negotiated long-term wage agreements with Alberta's hard-working teachers and doctors to ensure stability in learning and care.

Through a new single energy regulator, a new environmental monitoring agency, and a refocused Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission your government has acted on many years of consultation and hard work to make Alberta more competitive. With the commitment to keep royalties steady and partner with our oil and gas industry on innovative solutions to enhance Alberta's position as a responsible energy producer, your government continues to build our competitive advantage.

And, clearly, the building Alberta plan is working.

The Building Alberta Plan Is Working

Alberta is Canada's economic engine. We led the country in economic growth for the last two years. TD Bank says that we will do so again this year, Statistics Canada shows that we have the highest rate of job creation and the highest family incomes in Canada with the lowest taxes, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business says that we have the friendliest small-business climate in Canada.

It's no secret why Alberta saw our highest rate of population growth since 1981 last year, when we proudly welcomed over 100,000 new Albertans to our province. Our population will grow from 4 million people today to 5 million in the next decade. That's equivalent to adding a new city the size of Red Deer to our province every year for the next 10 years.

While new Albertans bring skills and innovative new ideas, pressures will continue to mount on our schools, health facilities, roads, and transit systems. The actions we take today under the building Alberta plan will have a direct bearing on life in Alberta 20 years from now. Building nothing would sacrifice Alberta's future. That's clearly not an option. Today marks the beginning of the next phase of the building Alberta plan, focused on meeting Alberta's enormous growth head-on while having the courage to invest in innovation and in future generations to set our province up for long-term success.

The Next Phase: Investing in Families and Communities

Our cities and towns are at the forefront of dealing with Alberta's explosive growth, and we know that Alberta's success depends on all regions of the province, no matter how small, being able to meet that growth head-on.

To keep building communities, your government will complete the review of the Municipal Government Act, working with municipal leaders and partners like Bob Barss, president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and Helen Rice from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, who have joined us today.

Your government recognizes the unique challenges faced by our two largest cities and will finalize the Calgary and Edmonton city charters with Mayor Nenshi and Mayor Iveson, who is also here today.

To help our rural towns and urban communities keep up with growth, your government will renew the long-term funding commitment to the municipal sustainability initiative and GreenTRIP funding in Budget 2014.

Standing with those communities hard hit by last June's floods, this government will make firm the commitment to build community mitigation projects and to undertake new flood hazard mapping throughout the province, starting with southern Alberta watersheds.

The next phase of the building Alberta plan will continue to invest in families. This government will invest in better seniors' care, focusing funding on aging in place and on innovative new technology that allows patients to recover in their own homes. Your government will consider options, including using provincial land, to meet the commitment to build new continuing care beds.

For a healthier and more prosperous Alberta your government will implement Alberta's wellness strategy to lower acute health costs and improve quality of life, working closely with champions like Jim Gray who have done much to promote the importance of wellness in our province.

To give Alberta's kids the best start in life, your government will invest in additional newborn screening, support for parents, and child mental health, working across government departments to ensure our families receive the help they need.

To ensure Alberta's kids are able to compete in a dynamic, highly competitive world, your government is developing a new, student-centred curriculum that will ensure a strong understanding of basic literacy and numeracy. Your government is replacing provincial achievement tests with new student learner assessments to better identify areas of strength and areas where children may require additional supports throughout the school year.

Your government is committed to building a culture of transparency, quality care, and continuous improvement in Alberta's child intervention system on the foundation of changes made to date and the recent child care round-table. These changes will include extending support for young adults in care by two years, to age 24, to help youth transition more successfully to adulthood.

And your government will challenge Albertans, including businesses, nonprofit organizations, and employers, to provide mentorship opportunities for young people and connect those who are already driving these initiatives to ensure our kids have positive influences to help shape their future.

To better protect families, this government reaffirms its commitment to projects like I-TRAC to bring together police, specialized court officers, and counselling for Albertans facing domestic violence, including immediate protection for victims and punishment for offenders.

Your government will take the long view when it comes to investments in higher education, working on innovative new ways to ensure Albertans have the opportunity to acquire the skills and knowledge they need to become the entrepreneurs, skilled workers, and researchers we need to thrive. To ensure rural residents have quality education opportunities without having to leave home, your government will work to ensure that distance education is an important part of Campus Alberta.

With the support of industry partners your government will build Canada's first and only dedicated pipeline training facility to train more heavy equipment operators and those who work in pipeline construction and land reclamation. Your government will also work to diversify Alberta's own domestic energy mix and will introduce an alternative and renewable energy framework that empowers consumers to exercise choice within the market-based electricity system.

The Next Phase: Living within Our Means

And while this government will continue to invest in programs, services, and infrastructure to build a better quality of life for Albertans, it reaffirms the commitment under this next phase of the building Alberta plan to live within its means and balance the budget. By expanding the results-based budgeting process and holding spending below population and inflation growth until 2016, your government is keeping its commitment.

The first bill of this session will create new supports, funded from Alberta's growing savings, for research and world-leading innovation to drive growth and economic diversification for decades to come.

The agriculture and food innovation endowment will fund research in rural Alberta and help new made-in-Alberta agricultural solutions get to market.

The social innovation endowment will invest in new research and co-ordinate action between small businesses, cultural organizations, and nonprofits to address social issues, including poverty and family violence.

The Alberta heritage scholarship fund will be expanded to support excellence in the apprenticeship, trade, and technology systems and encourage training to build the skilled workforce Alberta needs.

To further set our future leaders up for success, your government will fund the creation of the Lougheed leadership institute, working with the University of Alberta and the Banff Centre.

And your government will create the Alberta institute for research and commercialization as a clearing house to help solve challenges and turn Alberta's best ideas into tomorrow's solutions.

The Next Phase: Opening New Markets

What makes all of this possible, indeed what your government has deemed job one, is an unrelenting focus on selling Alberta to the world. The next phase of the building Alberta plan continues to build new markets for our products and welcomes the world's investment in Alberta so your government can keep investing in what matters most.

Building on the success of the Premier's Canadian energy strategy, your government will advocate for a Canada free trade zone, seizing the opportunity to have provinces reduce internal trade barriers that often make it more difficult to trade within our own borders than outside.

To increase trade, business, and tourism, this government will support open skies, building on the work being done by both the Calgary and Edmonton airports. This week marks the inaugural Icelandair flight out of Edmonton International, an initiative led by the airport's past president Reg Milley. Alberta's doors are open, and we are ready to welcome the world and tell our story.

To support rural families in communities like Peace River, Slave Lake, and Whitecourt, your government will continue to support innovation in the forestry sector, Alberta's fifth-largest industry, that today employs 13,000 people. By opening new markets for our forestry products, even more jobs will be created.

The government of Alberta will continue to work with the federal government on areas of shared interest, making sure Alberta has the skilled workers it needs while standing up for our province by seeking clarity on foreign direct investment rules and improvements in aboriginal consultation and care.

And no matter where or when it arises, your government will continue to advocate for important projects like Keystone XL, which are so vital to our long-term prosperity, while meeting misunderstanding with fact in promoting our record as a responsible energy producer.

Conclusion

Under the next phase of the building Alberta plan our province will continue to stand as a beacon of opportunity, where we work every day to build a stronger, modern, better province together. Your government will rise above the daily fray and remain squarely focused on what truly matters to Albertans.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen. May God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Thank you, Your Honour.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Robert Clark to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion of the singing.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Hon. members and esteemed guests, I beg your indulgence in allowing me to impart some very important information about this wonderful, this beautiful building that we call the Alberta Legislature and you, of course, who are seated here in the Legislative Assembly Chamber. It is with great pleasure that I am able to announce that the restorations of both the minor dome, which sits right above us, and the cupola, that sits above the rotunda outside, have now been completed, and the Legislature Building will be celebrating this fact throughout the month of March. We've been waiting a long time for that to happen. I want to thank and congratulate the Minister of Infrastructure for doing such a great job within two months, a project that took nearly two years, by the way.

The objective of the project, which commenced back in 2012, was to restore both domes so that they were replicas of the original structures, which were completed more than 100 years ago. The project, of course, involved the demolition of the existing terracotta cladding of the cupola and the upgrading of the structure with the installation of a new concrete shell and a waterproof membrane. How do I know this? I know this because the Minister of Infrastructure invited me to climb right to the top of the cupola a few days ago. We made it all the way up and down safely and soundly. Thank you to the wonderful workers who made that possible. The successful completion of this project is a very fitting tribute to this most resplendent of all Alberta landmarks, which just enjoyed its centennial last year.

Allow me also to fill you in briefly with some historical vignettes in this regard. I want to point out that 2014 marks the 75th anniversary of the royal visit to Canada and to Alberta of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. This was the very first visit of a reigning monarch to Alberta and to Canada, for that matter, and as Their Majesties were making their way across Canada by train in May of 1939, preparations were already under way for the royal visit being finalized here, in our own Alberta Legislature. In preparation further for that visit life-sized portraits of King George and Queen Elizabeth were placed in the Chamber, a new green carpet was installed, the Chamber was repainted, and a temporary fountain containing live fish was situated in the rotunda. The permanent fountain was installed in 1959, actually, to commemorate the visit of Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip, whose portraits adorn our walls today.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

On June 2, 1939, the king and queen arrived, and Edmonton played host to Their Majesties. Addresses were made by representatives of the province and of the city of Edmonton at the Legislature Building on the front stairs. Seven Albertans who had been awarded the Victoria Cross for outstanding service during the First World War were presented to the king.

The royal couple then entered the Legislature Building, arriving in the Chamber, where two Speaker's chairs to be used as thrones had been placed on the dais right here for Their Majesties. One of the thrones used was that of the Speaker of the day, Mr. Peter Dawson. The other was the chair of former Speaker George N. Johnston, which had been presented to him in appreciation of his services. In the Chamber itself, where you now sit, Members of the Legislative Assembly and city councillors, amongst other dignitaries, were presented to the king and queen, and Their Majesties then signed a register of their royal visit, which has since been stored and preserved in our own Alberta archives. Commemorating the 1939 royal visit were name changes enacted by a city of Edmonton bylaw, changing Riverside park to Queen Elizabeth park and Portage Avenue to Kingsway Avenue.

Now, with respect to a couple of other brief historical notes March, of course, is the month during which the opening of the first Legislature of the new province of Alberta took place. In fact, the first Legislature opened on March 15, 1906, at the well-known Thistle rink, the curling club, which was the only facility in Edmonton, by the way, large enough to host such a prestigious opening. The rink, located in our own downtown area, had a capacity of 3,000 seats, and every single seat was filled for that occasion. Subsequent sittings of the Assembly took place in the McKay Avenue school, at the top of the 105th Street hill, just a few blocks from here. This particular building, the Legislature, where you sit, was then opened in the fall of 1912.

My final note is just to inform you that March 3 is the sixth anniversary of the provincial general election of March 3, 2008. I want to congratulate all the members who were elected for the first time or who were re-elected on March 3, 2008, and I would like all of them to please rise now and receive our thanks, everyone who was elected or re-elected. Thank you, all, and congratulations once again.

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour now to table a copy of the speech that was graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Bill 1 Savings Management Act

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Savings Management Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed act puts into action a new vision for Alberta's savings as we launch the next phase of the building Alberta plan. It strikes a balance between saving for the future and putting our growing heritage fund savings to work for that future by funding innovation and diversifying our economy for the benefit of generations to come. Bill 1 creates new innovation endowments, it enhances the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, and it establishes the Alberta future fund. The endowments will help to provide ongoing funding for social, cultural, and agricultural innovation as well as trade scholarships. It will foster research. It will strengthen our economy, help solve complex social problems, and position Alberta to take full advantage of our incredible know-how and research brilliance.

The agriculture and food innovation endowment will fund research in rural Alberta to build ongoing diversification and competitiveness and position Alberta's agriculture and food processing sectors for sustained growth in new and expanded markets. The social innovation endowment will increase the capacity of the social service and cultural sector to innovate and to find solutions by supporting new ideas and encouraging creative collaboration. The Alberta heritage scholarship fund will be expanded to support excellence in the apprenticeship, trades, and technology sectors and will help us build the skilled workforce that Alberta needs. Finally, the Alberta future fund will provide government with a source of funding so that we can take full advantage of future opportunities. Together these commitments will help to encourage innovation, grow our economy, and solve complex social problems while still allowing for our savings to grow by approximately $2.8 billion over the next three years.

This bill complements the great work that is currently under way and better prepares all Albertans to thrive and to build Alberta's communities, our economy, and our quality of life. This bill will help our entrepreneurs, tradespeople, small-business owners, innovators, social workers, and community organizations to turn today's ideas into tomorrow's solutions. In the same way that Progressive Conservative governments have taken the long view and built Alberta into the economic powerhouse that we are today, Bill 1 will put in place today concrete measures to ensure that we have the skills and the leading-edge ideas that we need to secure a better tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, this bill keeps the commitment that we made to the people of Alberta to build a stronger, more innovative and prosperous Alberta, and I'm proud to have the opportunity to introduce it today.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 4, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. On this day I would ask all members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly as well as all others present here and those who are situated elsewhere and may be observing or listening to these proceedings to join with us together in a minute of silence and personal prayer as we reflect upon the lives of Canadian police officers and military personnel lost in service to their country, to their province, or their community. In a moment of silence let us remember them all. May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful for their service. God bless them and their families. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to the members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome members of the Abdurahman family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. I will ask each of them to rise as I call their names, and then perhaps we could recognize them all together once all have risen: Dr. Abdul Abdurahman, husband, from Edmonton; Miss Amanda Burnett, daughter, from Beaumont; Ross Abdurahman, son, from Edmonton; Vanessa Krysta, daughter, from Sherwood Park; Dean Krysta, son-in-law, from Sherwood Park; Dara Ann Irvine, granddaughter, from Edmonton; Christina Girringer, granddaughter, from Fort Saskatchewan; and Alexandra Irvine, granddaughter, from Edmonton.

Please know that our thoughts and prayers are with all of you, and thank you very, very much for coming today.

Mrs. Muriel Ross Abdurahman April 29, 1938, to December 22, 2013

The Speaker: Now I would ask all members to please rise as I deliver a tribute for Muriel Ross Abdurahman, who passed away on December 22, 2013. Mrs. Muriel Abdurahman served this Legislative Assembly of Alberta as the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan from June 15, 1993, until March 10, 1997. Trained as a nurse in her native Scotland, her commitment to community well-being led her to enter public service. Once settled in Fort Saskatchewan with her family, she was elected to town council for one term. She subsequently served as mayor for two terms and oversaw Fort Saskatchewan's incorporation as a city.

She then turned her attention to this Assembly, where she served for four years. Her intellect and experience made her a knowledgeable voice in this Legislature and elsewhere on issues such as finance, health, the environment, transportation, municipal affairs, and most of all she knitted it all together with one word, integrity. She emblazoned that phrase on all of us who had the pleasure of working with her.

In a moment of silent prayer, hon. members, I ask you to remember Mrs. Muriel Abdurahman as you may have known her. Rest eternal grant unto her, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon her. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with some school groups. The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of grade 9 junior high students from l'école Broxton Park school in Spruce Grove. These students did not have an opportunity to attend the Legislature when they were in grade 6, so it's kind of nice to see them here. As they're taking the federal government, they're comparing the differences between the federal government and the provincial government, and of course I helped them along with the differences on that one in the rotunda. They are accompanied by Ms Fran Korpela, their teacher. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 55 students from H.E. Bourgoin school and the Iron River school in my beautiful constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. A warm welcome to some former colleagues of mine and to all the parents that accompanied these fabulous students here to Edmonton. They are seated in both galleries, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 51 students from Our Lady of the Prairies school in Edmonton-McClung and their teachers and parents Mr. Bill Swan, Mme Lisa Mercurio, Raphael Fortin, Gabrielle Liles, Miss Karla MacLennan, and Mrs. Darcia Westling. I ask the students and their chaperones to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you 30 members and parents from St. Angela elementary school. We have parent helpers Mrs. Theberge, Mrs. Davies, Mr. Skreden, and Mr. Henrik Larsen along with teachers Mrs. Perry and Mrs. Schoenberger. The class is also here for the whole week, so they're learning a lot about the Legislature. I'd ask them to stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

If not, let's move on with other guests, starting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you on behalf of our colleague the hon. Minister of Education representatives from the town of Gibbons. I know that the hon. minister is really honoured to work with these outstanding constituents. He looks forward to meeting with them a little later today and discussing local issues and thanking them for the good work that they're doing on behalf of the community of Gibbons every day. I'd like to ask these individuals to please rise as I say their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. I'm introducing that Doug Horner, not this Doug Horner. This is Doug Horner, the mayor of Gibbons; Councillor Louise Bauder; Councillor Amber Harris; and Councillor Darren McCann.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Marilyn Koren. She's an advocate for protecting children. Marilyn's granddaughter, Delonna Sullivan, was taken away by child services without an apprehension order and, tragically, died six days later. Marilyn and her daughter Jamie were successful in having a publication ban lifted through the Court of Queen's Bench. Marilyn is here to be a voice for Delonna and for every other child in our province and encourages us all to make our children our priority. I would like to ask Marilyn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my constituents, Mr. Gordon Francis. Gordon is president and CEO of MD DataBank, an Alberta-based health care IT company that specializes in data assurance services for physicians and other custodians of health information. Gordon's experience spans more than 25 years and includes technology development in the aerospace, energy, and mining sectors. Gordon has spent the last 10 years in the health sector. Gordon is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly three wonderful ladies: Olesia Luciw-Andryjowycz, president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council; Daria Luciw, past president of the UCC; and Slavka Shulakewych, provincial co-ordinator of UCC. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 20 new employees in the Department of Service Alberta. They're led by Tyler Jameson, the human resource services co-ordinator, and they're touring the Legislature as part of their orientation. Now, we know that we have incredible people working in every single department of this government, and Service Alberta is no different. I know these 20 individuals will be welcome additions to an already strong team in Service Alberta. I know they're spread between both galleries. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Lori Sigurdson. Lori is the manager of professional affairs at the Alberta College of Social Workers, where she works on behalf of all provincial social workers to influence and improve government action on issues like child poverty, family violence, and homelessness. This evening Lori will be taking her commitment to these values to the next level when she also becomes the first candidate of any party to be officially nominated to run in the next provincial election. We look forward to having her join us here in the Legislature as the next NDP MLA for Edmonton-Riverview. I would now ask Lori to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if my group has an MLA in it somewhere as well. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a group of 25 citizens from the town of Slave Lake. The guests are here today to send a strong message to this PC government that the crisis in health care in their community is very real and very unacceptable. I'll be tabling a petition with almost 3,000 signatures later today. If I could ask my guests to rise as I call their names and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly: Scott Astle, Dion Villeneuve, Kristylynn Barton, Alma Conrad, Alenen Beaudet, Pat Kanzig, Mary Hulberg, Roberta Kozar, Kathy Klassen, Rita Hogan, Marilyn LaRivee, Maureen Mariampillai, Judy Nelson, and Sandra Azocar. If you could rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Events in Ukraine

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address the current situation in Ukraine, a situation that has had a major impact around the world, including here in Alberta and particularly amongst our Ukrainian community of the entire province. The recent violence and the events over the weekend deeply sadden and concern us all. Our thoughts are with the people of Ukraine at this time. This uncertainty and the potential for conflict are quite scary indeed. To the extended families and loved ones of those who have been killed over the last few months, our hearts go out to you. We can all relate to the basic need to feel safe in our homes, our cities, our communities, and our country, to live in communities that uphold and support the rights to freedom, democracy, and the rule of law.

Mr. Speaker, as an Albertan with Ukrainian ancestry yourself I have no doubt that these recent developments have resonated with you. Alberta is home to more than a quarter of a million Albertans of Ukrainian descent and a strong and vibrant Ukrainian community. I recognize that all Ukrainian Albertans have been affected by these events; in fact, all Albertans have, whether through their strong cultural ties or through relatives and friends who are experiencing this crisis first-hand. Many Albertans have friends and family living in Ukraine, and we have heard so many scary stories in the past few months. I can only imagine their worry that at any given moment the ones that they love could lose their homes, could face violence, and could lose their lives.

As the situation in Ukraine escalates, the government of Alberta will continue to strongly support the government of Canada and the Ukrainian people in opposing all efforts to undermine democracy and freedom in Ukraine. Alberta also supports international condemnation of the military intervention in Ukraine over the weekend as well as the government of Canada's diplomatic efforts and proposed economic sanctions, the preferred method of assisting Ukraine. Alberta will continue to stand united with the government of Canada in support of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity. It is my hope that through diplomacy and collaboration stability can be restored to Ukraine.

Yesterday the ministers of Culture and International and Intergovernmental Relations joined me in a meeting with the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations to discuss the ongoing situation. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is chair of this council, Mr. Speaker, and will continue to lead the council's efforts to represent Alberta's Ukrainian community, as you have done in the past. This will also give us the opportunity to identify and strengthen and further the co-operation between the governments of Ukraine and Alberta. The government of Alberta has also been working to develop an aid package for Ukraine. This will include up to $100,000 in matching funding to facilitate the provision of humanitarian aid to Ukraine through Alberta Culture's international development program with a foundation grant of $25,000.

Here in Alberta we will continue to monitor the situation in Ukraine alongside the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations, as every other citizen of this province will. Mr. Speaker, it is events like this that remind us of how privileged we are to live where it is safe, in a democratic country like Canada. We stand in solidarity with the people of Ukraine, and we are hopeful that a peaceful resolution will be found soon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in solidarity with Ukrainian Albertans and all freedom-loving Ukrainians around the world. Our thoughts are with all of those, especially those who have lost their lives, who have fought so hard for peace, liberty, and democracy. It is our sincere hope that Russia will choose to withdraw their troops from the Crimean peninsula. Samantha Power, the American ambassador to the United Nations, expressed the view of the global community perfectly when she said this: "Russia has every right to wish that events . . . had turned out differently, but it does not have the right to express that . . . using military force."

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, it is not Russia that is the problem; it is their leadership. Vladimir Putin has said that he had to intervene in Ukraine to protect ethnic Russians and the Russian language. The fact is that almost every Ukrainian speaks Russian. The vast majority of their television channels, magazines, and books are in the Russian language. There continues to be no evidence of any threats to Russian citizens or ethnic Russians in the Crimean peninsula despite Russia's insistence. Again, to quote Ms Power: "Russian mobilization is a response to an imaginary threat." We've seen this all before. Russia continues to occupy vast sections of the republics of Georgia and Moldova.

As the Official Opposition we support our federal government's call on the Russian President to respect the will of the Ukrainian people, who have made it clear that they will not tolerate corruption and want their country to be a free and prosperous democracy. Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird recently wrote to the Ukrainian people: "Canada has never been indifferent. Canada will never be indifferent. Our country will continue to stand with you in your time of difficulty, and we will walk with you step-by-step in your journey to democracy." We in the Wildrose Official Opposition couldn't agree more.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I invite all Albertans to the March 12 fundraiser for humanitarian aid to Ukraine at St. John's Cultural Centre in Edmonton. Canada is home to the world's largest Ukrainian community outside of Ukraine and Russia. It is our duty to stand with them during this time of crisis.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I assume you're rising to seek consent to participate?

Ms Blakeman: Indeed I am, Mr. Speaker. I'm hoping for the co-operation of my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly to allow the leaders of the Liberal opposition and the ND opposition to add their remarks.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a request has been received to allow participation by the leader of the Liberal opposition and the leader of the ND opposition, and by extension it goes out to you, independent member, as well, should you wish to participate.

The Speaker: The leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, fellow members of the Assembly. The Alberta Liberals stand united with the Premier and the leaders of the opposition parties and each and every member of this Assembly in condemning the violence that's happening in Ukraine. Violence and terror are absolutely unacceptable in a peaceful world, where children and families are being punished for fighting for democracy and freedoms. As a democratic nation this is what our forefathers have struggled to protect, a safe world for our families and our children. We as a human race, as a global community, must stand with those who are suffering as they fight for the democracies that we fight to protect.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Ukrainian community have helped transform not only this province or this country but, in fact, even this Legislature. You yourself – your family and your ancestors are from the Ukraine – and many members of this Assembly, a former Premier, former Liberal leader Laurence Decore helped transform this country, making sure that this was a multicultural and multilingual country. Members of the Ukrainian community in Alberta have been leaders in economics, academics, research, and all walks of life.

I stand alongside every member of this Assembly in solidarity, in fighting for protection of their family members back home. Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we as human beings focus on peace, love, and our shared humanity, we can make this a better world.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to stand up for our fellow human beings and brothers and sisters across the world. May God bless Ukraine. May God bless Alberta. May God bless Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by thanking the Premier for raising this important issue in the Legislature and by expressing our support for the government's decision to match donations for humanitarian aid to help those who have been affected by the recent violence in Ukraine. Alberta's New Democrats believe that everyone has a right to safety, security, and democracy. The Alberta NDP calls for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops in Ukraine and an end to all foreign interference in Ukraine's internal affairs. Ukrainians must have the right to determine their own future peacefully and democratically. On behalf of the Alberta New Democrats I wish to express my concern for people of Ukrainian descent in Alberta who have family in Ukraine. Our hope is that they will remain safe and well. Finally, I extend the hopes of all Alberta New Democrats for a very bright and prosperous future for the Ukrainian people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo? Not at this time. Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us begin the process in just a moment. I want to indicate a couple of brief comments that affect the rotation. Before we proceed with the actual daily Routine and question period, I want to make this brief statement about that rotation and members' statements as well. This statement that I'm about to offer is further to the memo I sent to each of you on February 11, and included there were some attachments that pertained to projected sitting days and to the Oral Question Period rotation for this Second Session. There was a slight change required because of the change in caucus membership when the Member for Edmonton-Manning rejoined the government caucus in December of 2013.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, who is the sole independent member, receives question 6 on day 4 of the Oral Question Period rotation. Accordingly, the member will have his first opportunity to ask a question next Monday, March 10, 2014. This will give that member one question every four days, which replicates what happened in the fall sitting of 2013, when each independent member received one question per sitting week. Furthermore, it mirrors what happened the last time there was only one independent member in this Assembly, during the fall sitting of the Fourth Session of the 27th Legislature, when the independent member at that time was given one question every four days.

Question 6 on day 1, which was asked by an independent member during the last sitting, will now revert to the Official Opposition. The PC caucus will receive one additional spot for one question on day 1.

Now, with respect to the rotation for members' statements, this has also been modified to provide for one statement for the independent member every three weeks. This is reflected on the projected sitting days calendar that I sent to you under the same aforementioned memo of February 11.

Bearing that in mind, let us proceed onward. We can start the clock.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First question.

Premier's Travel to South Africa

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no sense beating around the bush here. I'll be blunt and short. There's one question that Albertans are asking the Premier, and I hear it everywhere I go. I'm sure all 87 of us are hearing the same thing, so here it is.

Will the Premier reimburse taxpayers for her $45,000 South Africa trip? Yes or no?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. This has certainly been an issue that has been in the news, and it's one of the reasons that I went out to Albertans and said that I was concerned about what that final number was. It's why I apologized to Albertans. I took responsibility for that.

You know, this was a trip where the Prime Minister of Canada asked me to attend as part of government business, a Canadian delegation. I did participate in that trip. I did come back for a cabinet swearing-in. Mr. Speaker, I take full responsibility. We have taken steps to ensure that these sorts of situations don't happen again, and that's what I've said to Albertans.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier of Nova Scotia went for $1,000.

This government continues to claim that they are living within their means, but when the Premier herself spends more on a single trip than thousands of hard-working Albertans earn in a single year, it is impossible to take those claims seriously. The Premier's credibility is in tatters and with it the credibility of the government on fiscal issues. Again to the Premier: doesn't she see that her actions and her words simply don't line up?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, that is the reason that when this issue first came up, I did go out and speak to Albertans. I was very forthright with Albertans. There is no doubt that this is a number that troubles me as well. It was certainly part of the work that I did as the Premier of this province.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue to do the work that Albertans have asked us to do. We had a throne speech yesterday and have a budget on Thursday that will demonstrate clearly to Albertans that the fiscal framework that is in place in this province is going to allow for continued success. That is the work that this government will continue to do.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's not leadership, and Albertans deserve better.

In criticizing the Premier's South Africa trip expenses, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview gave voice to thousands of frustrated Albertans when he said that they were inconsistent with Alberta values. He was right. Albertans don't abuse their privileges; Albertans don't take what doesn't belong to them; and when Albertans screw up, they admit it, they fix it, and they do it without being told. Again to the Premier: why does she continue to be so offside with the values of everyday hard-working Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, you know, as I said, I thank the hon. member for the question. I clearly stood up in front of Albertans, said that I screwed up, and did take responsibility. I certainly hope that that is something that Albertans understand. I will say that I have had many Albertans ask me that question as well. I've been forthright with respect to that. We've certainly taken steps with respect to moving forward to ensure that we continue to be accountable to Albertans. We have an expense policy in place and complete transparency with respect to these costs, which is one of the reasons that we are able today to talk about this issue. We were honest, we were straightforward, and I took responsibility.

The Speaker: Thank you.

On the second main question, the hon. opposition leader.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, taking responsibility means paying the money back.

The government has a travel, meal, and hospitality expense policy that the Premier should probably get familiar with. It spells out in pretty clear terms what kinds of expenses are legitimate to claim on behalf of taxpayers and what kinds aren't. The Premier's South Africa trip clearly doesn't make the grade. So let me ask the Premier a simple question. When did the Treasury Board give the Premier and her staff a blanket exemption from the government's own travel policy?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I went to South Africa because the Prime Minister of Canada asked me to go. That, in my mind, is government business. There are many different functions that many of us in this House, whether we're members or members of the government, undertake as a result of our responsibilities and our duties. Certainly this was one of those. It was a very tight time frame. You'll know that we do have policies and procedures in place with respect to this. We continue to abide by those. It's why I spoke to Albertans about this, and it's why I apologized to them.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the policy states that if an official travels at a cost, that has to be "direct, practical or cost-effective." That's what the policy says. They're only entitled to reimbursement on that amount. Anything over and above that is the sole and personal responsibility of the individual. In the example of the Premier's South Africa trip she could have travelled to Ottawa for a few thousand dollars. Instead, she spent $45,000, a difference of $40,000. To the Premier: why did she violate her government's own travel policy?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as Albertans know, all of these events happened in a very short period of time. [interjection] Well, it was a short period of time. There is certainly a policy that we have in place in our office with respect to estimating costs of missions before we attend those missions. Because of the timeliness of this, it was very difficult to do that. As I said to Albertans, I was surprised by that number. That was something that I was disappointed in, and it's why I stood up and took responsibility for that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the policy goes on to state: "taxpayer dollars are to be used prudently and responsibly." Obviously the South Africa trip expenses were nothing of the sort. We've heard the Premier several times now claim responsibility and say sorry, but she continues to do nothing to demonstrate her remorse. Again to the Premier: doesn't she realize that her stubborn refusal to repay this bill is the ultimate contempt for taxpayers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as soon as these numbers were brought to my attention, I went out and said to Albertans that I was disappointed by the numbers. I said that I took responsibility. I apologized to Albertans. We will ensure that that never happens again. We've taken steps with respect to requesting the Auditor General to review out-of-province travel on government claims, and we've also taken steps to ask the President of Treasury Board to review our expense policy in the context of RFPs for accommodation, for travel. These are steps that Albertans can have confidence in.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, you and I are parents, as is the Premier, and I think we've all had the opportunity with our children to teach them that when you take something that doesn't belong to you, you give it back after you say sorry. Premier, you took at least $45,000 that did not belong to you, and you spent it on a trip that should have cost you about a thousand dollars. You did so not for the benefit of Albertans; you did so to pamper yourself. Will you do the right and honourable thing and pay back the money?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, every single day we make decisions in this House that honour the trust that Albertans have put in us as a government. There is no doubt that that was a time when it was very difficult and very quick to make the decision to attend that trip. You'll know that on the Friday we changed cabinet. On the next Friday we were going to swear in cabinet. There were a number of logistics that were involved in that trip. But aside from all that I said to Albertans that I did take responsibility, that I was sorry. We have put steps in place to ensure that this does not happen again, and we'll abide by those.

Mr. Anderson: Taking responsibility means paying back the money, Mr. Speaker.

You may remember the infamous no-meet committee prior to the last election. Only after public outrage did the Premier finally order her caucus members to pay back the money they had received. So, Premier, some might say that you're practising a double standard here, ordering your caucus to pay back money that didn't really belong to them but refusing to pay back your own $45,000 flight of fancy. Premier, why will you not take responsibility, not only say you're sorry but pay back the money?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I will remind the House that this was a Canadian delegation to a state funeral for someone who mattered to the world, and that was business that I undertook on behalf of Albertans as the Premier of this province. I do not disagree with the opposition, with my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, and with some people in Alberta who have said to me that that was a very high number for two people to travel to South Africa. I don't disagree with that. I've acknowledged that. I've taken responsibility for it. We've put steps in place to review those policies, and we'll stand by those.

Mr. Anderson: You can't take something that's not yours and then apologize and then not give it back. That's not how the world works, Premier. You're embarrassing yourself, and you're embarrassing your caucus with this and rightfully so.

Albertans are saying that if you can't competently manage a million dollar travel budget, how can we have any faith in you to manage a multibillion dollar Education or Health budget? How can we? Premier, don't blame the Wildrose or the media or your staff for the problems here. Will you do the right thing and pay back the money?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have clearly said that this was an unfortunate circumstance. I personally wish that it hadn't happened. It did, and we will now move on and continue to do what Albertans did. If the hon. member has any doubt about whether or not this government can manage the economy and the budget of this province, just wait until tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only person who looks good in the Travelgate affair is the Premier of Nova Scotia, a fiscally responsible Liberal, who managed to get to South Africa and back for less than a thousand dollars. Everyone knows that this Premier, on the other hand, who claims her government is committed to living within its means, billed Albertans $45,000 for essentially the same trip. To the Premier. You've apologized.

You've acknowledged you made a mistake. But Albertans don't want your words, Premier. Just pay the money back. They expect action. Will you please pay the money back?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I cannot disagree with what the hon. member has said with respect to the fact that this was a large amount of money. That is why, as soon as I realized how much it was, I said to Albertans that I agreed with that comment. I took responsibility for this. Even though it was the business of the government of Alberta and I travelled as Premier on a Canadian delegation, it was more money than we expected it to be. There were some circumstances related to that, and I certainly take full responsibility. I have apologized to Albertans, and I hope that Albertans will accept that apology.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, nobody disputes that the Premier and any MLA have reasonable duties they must perform. There is an old saying that when you find yourself in a hole, stop digging. The Premier seems to have forgotten that when a similar expense scandal erupted, she forced members of her own caucus to take up a collection to reimburse taxpayers for the no-pay committee fiasco. To the Premier: when it comes to returning wasted taxpayer dollars, why is there one standard of rules for your caucus members and another standard of rules for you? Why, Premier?

Ms Redford: Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member wants to draw a comparison between these two circumstances, but they were actually entirely different circumstances. I travelled to South Africa, I attended a state funeral as the Premier of this province at the request of the Prime Minister, and I returned. As I have said, while this was an unfortunate amount of money, which I fully acknowledge and I've taken responsibility for, I don't think anyone will dispute that I actually went on the trip.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is right. These are different circumstances. The MLAs were forced to be on the committee; the Premier had an option to take a cheaper flight. This government is ruthless when it comes to clawing back money from AISH recipients, the assured income for the severely handicapped, and single mothers on welfare. It even goes as far as sending collection agencies after them. Yet there seems to be no end to the government's sense of entitlement or the amount of money it will spend to make itself comfortable. To the Premier: why the double standard?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we run a $40 billion corporation that matters an awful lot to the people of Alberta and to the economy of this country. I remember at the last election listening to Albertans talk about the fact that they were proud that Alberta had a role on the Canadian stage and the international stage. It's one of the reasons that we continue to do the work that we do, and there is no doubt that there are expenses associated with that. I have clearly said that this amount of money was not an acceptable amount. I've apologized to Albertans, and I believe that as we do that, we should be able to move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is the best of times; it is the worst of times. In this PC government's tale of two Albertas the Premier jets around the world in first class while Alberta families must make do with less. Legislated wage freezes, pension rollbacks, and cuts to programs for vulnerable Albertans are the thin gruel offered by this PC government to Alberta families. Why does the Premier expect Alberta families to make sacrifice after sacrifice while she and her friends live high on the hog at the taxpayers' expense?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the hon. member understands the work that we all do as members of this Legislature, the work that we do as elected politicians, the work that we do as cabinet ministers, and the work that I do as Premier. There is no doubt that as we do that work, there are expenses associated with that. One of the things that has been troubling to me, and I said it to Albertans – I've written today to the Auditor General on this, and I'm quite happy to table that letter – is that we must take a look at how those expenses are costed and what they are. It's why I went out and said to Albertans that I took responsibility, and I apologized for something that I wish hadn't happened.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The one thing I don't understand is the Premier's double standard. Why won't this Premier recognize that her exorbitant use of public funds for travel, excessive security, use of government aircraft, and staff severances is an unfair and unjust contrast to frozen wages and reduced pensions for public employees in our province?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to ask me questions with respect to this circumstance, that's fine, but it is entirely inappropriate for this hon. member to mislead the House with respect to AUPE negotiations or pension reform. It is not appropriate to suggest for any reason that the great work that our Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has done with respect to pension reform will not be helpful to public servants in the future. Let's remember that as we saw last week, our better offer to AUPE involved wage increases for four years.

The Speaker: Point of order from Edmonton-Strathcona has been noted at 2:16.

Final supplemental, hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, zero plus zero plus zero doesn't add up to an increase every year.

The vast majority of Albertans do not have private aircraft to pick them up in Palm Springs. If they do have to go to an important event such as a funeral, they drive or they use a commercial flight. Again, Mr. Speaker, it's the tale of two Albertas. To the Premier: won't she abandon her lavish ways and stop her attacks on Alberta families' incomes and their pensions?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, you know, I don't expect a lot from the hon. member, but I think he could at least read the newspaper. The offer that we put on the table to AUPE was increases over four years; not a zero in the deal. So if we're going to talk about apples, let's compare apples to apples, not apples and oranges.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We're going to move on to the sixth main question, so no preambles from this point on, please.

Mathematics Curriculum

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, parents, teachers, and students across this province are very concerned with the radical new curriculum rewrite by Alberta Education. You see, the government and its educators believe in inquiry-based/discovery learning, but to forget about the fundamentals and to abandon tried, tested, and true methods that our kids have been using like times tables is ridiculous, and it does not serve our kids well. Will the Minister of Education do the right thing and ensure, not provide an option but ensure, that the fundamentals of mathematics like times tables are taught in our schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: I will.

Mr. McAllister: Wonderful, Mr. Speaker. Happy to hear it.

How will he do it, when will he do it, and will he make sure that each and every school is teaching times tables?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, those skills that he's talking about are required in the Alberta curriculum today, but exactly how a teacher teaches them from one classroom to the next is a little bit different. Obviously, I expect my kid to know the times tables, and I expect every kid in the province to. One of the things we're doing with the review of the curriculum is that we want to make sure that the basics of literacy and numeracy are becoming more emphasized and are foundational across all subject areas, not just in math and language arts. I'd be happy to talk to the member about that. He obviously has done no research on it, and he has not inquired with me, and he hasn't shown up at any of the sessions.

Mr. McAllister: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are more than 7,000 Albertans that have signed a petition disagreeing with what this minister has to say today, so I would say that given that there are 7,000-plus Albertans who would like to see the fundamentals taught in our education system, will the minister agree to meet with Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies, who has spent the time to put this together to stand up for our kids while he and the bureaucrats believe in edubabble and double-talk as opposed to representing Alberta's students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we have in fact met with the individual. I have looked at the petition. You know, I'm really heartened by the fact that a parent is engaged and has done that great work, and 7,000 names on there – as a matter of fact, they're not all from Alberta. Many are from outside our jurisdiction. But if there's even one parent that's concerned about that, we'll take that into account. We've had her meet with very senior people, including my chief of staff, my deputy minister, and the people working on curriculum, and although we do those revisions on an ongoing basis, we're going to take into account what she's brought forward and what other parents are telling us, including research from around the world and best practices. We're going to make sure that this is the best jurisdiction in the world for our kids to go to school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday our Premier introduced Bill 1, the Savings Management Act, legislation that will see the creation of two new endowments and enhancements to the Alberta heritage scholarship fund. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Is this really important for Albertans at this time?

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, please.

The Speaker: Point of order has been noted there.

Hon. Minister of Finance, I'm going to allow you to briefly comment on this and explain to the member where this actually fits in the Routine.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, when we went out around the province last year doing our budget consultations, what we heard from Albertans was: yes, you put legislation into the House last year to legislate savings, but it's important that Albertans understand how those savings are working for them. And that's essentially what Bill 1 is. Hopefully, when we debate it in this House, it will be passed.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I'll invite you to ask a supplementary question that doesn't run the risk of being fouled, of being in anticipation.

Mr. Dorward: To the same minister: given that last year you introduced the Fiscal Management Act, acting on a commitment this government made to save in good and challenging times also, how does more spending on endowments and funds fit into that body of work? [interjections]

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a good question because that is a question that comes up in round-tables that we have around the province and open houses that we have in many of their constituencies where Albertans have said: we want you to save, but we also want to know what you're doing with the savings. And that is a critical point of where we're going next. The future of this province means that we have to leverage what we have in the bank, and that means we're going to be using the earnings from those savings for what we're going to be doing in the future.

Mr. Dorward: Again to the same minister: you have said that borrowing for capital purposes is good for Alberta taxpayers because of low rates, but with this legislation it seems like you've opened the government purse strings and you're spending our savings. [interjections]

The Speaker: Why don't we just move on past this? I'll make a comment later with respect to what anticipation is so that everybody understands it more clearly, and I'll take the fault for not having explained it more thoroughly earlier.

Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Stony Plain.

Health Services in Slave Lake

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's Speech from the Throne indicated that the government was working with communities across Alberta to develop family care clinics, yet we have people in the gallery representing their community because this government was not working with them on the already established FCCs. The pilot project Slave Lake FCC was created two years ago, and this past fall four physicians abruptly resigned. Now a community is left with fewer physicians per capita than the country of Nigeria. What is the minister going to do about Slave Lake's grave concerns about the deteriorating access to health care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted that the hon. member refers to the family care clinic in Slave Lake. It wasn't that long ago, following a fire in that community, that the community was down to one doctor. With the introduction of the family care clinic model and the attraction that that brought to physicians and other health professionals, the number of doctors was raised from one to nine. Since then we've seen tremendous progress in Slave Lake in the addition of nurse practitioners, other health care professionals working in the family care clinic, working with local physicians, and working in the emergency department of the hospital. This is a model that is working. It is true that there is a dispute involving physicians at the moment, but the issue is not the model.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's talk about that model that is working. Given that Slave Lake has lost its obstetrics, its trauma service, the local air ambulance, and now half of the doctors, how can the 11,000 residents be confident that they can get the care they need when they need it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you today that there are six physicians practising in Slave Lake. There are a number of other physicians that have site visits scheduled to the community. This is a community that has been served well by the family care clinic model. It is true that there are four physicians that chose to resign their positions in Slave Lake, as I understand it, in order to pursue private practice in the community. That is certainly their right as private contractors. But the fact remains that this is a vibrant community with a successful model that is attracting more doctors.

Mrs. Forsyth: So, Mr. Speaker, let's continue talking about that successful model. Given that first-time expectant mothers and those with high-risk pregnancies cannot give birth in their home communities because of the lack of doctors, anesthesiologists, and obstetrics support and given that Slave Lake's birth rate is substantially higher than the provincial average, does the minister really expect a mom in labour to drive two and a half hours to a hospital in Edmonton? Frankly, Minister, if it would have been me, I would have never made it.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member is actually interested in supporting the citizens of Slave Lake and recruiting doctors to their community, I suggest she might want to try a different tack. The fact is that one of the four physicians in the community that resigned to pursue private practice had the obstetrical qualifications that the hon. member refers to. At least one of the physicians that will be making site visits to Slave Lake has those qualifications. If this member is interested in supporting that community, she might want to change her recruitment message.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Electricity Market Investigation

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, I represent the constituency of Stony Plain. There are several electricity generation facilities in my constituency. A lot of people in my community pay attention to electricity, and they are paying attention to what is going on with TransAlta and the Market Surveillance Administrator. My question is to the new Associate Minister – Electricity and Renewable Energy. What the heck is going on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you for my first question in this House. This is a really serious matter and one that we're all paying a lot of attention to, so I'm grateful for the question. Briefly, here is what's been happening. The Market Surveillance Administrator, our electricity watchdog, investigated TransAlta for what they're calling anticompetitive behaviour. The MSA has also filed notice with the Alberta Utilities Commission about these allegations. The parties named in the investigation have also filed complaints about the MSA's conduct. Mr. Speaker, this is evidence that the system is working, and it is exactly what should be happening when complaints and allegations arise.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all this finger pointing back and forth, how is the AUC going to proceed?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Unlike some others here in the House, we are not going to jump to conclusions. The AUC is gathering its facts right now to determine how to proceed with the issues. On your question about their capacity the AUC has the experience and the expertise to review these complaints. They have engineers. They have electricity experts. They have lawyers. They have economists. They have people equipped to dig deep on these issues. Mr. Speaker, I have confidence in the AUC's ability to consider and adjudicate these questions.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the AUC finds that the market manipulation was happening, how is that going to help consumers who have overpaid for electricity?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: I'll say it again. We cannot prejudice the outcome of this AUC decision. If market manipulation did happen, the government has given AUC the authority to levy a penalty of up to a million dollars a day. As well, they can claw back any economic benefits the AUC determines resulted from that behaviour. Protecting electricity consumers is a priority of this government, which is exactly why we have the regulator and the watchdog in place. If the AUC levies a fine, this government will ensure that those funds are directed to consumers.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: Well, TransAlta Corporation was criticized last week for its alleged manipulation of the electricity market, but they cite documents that show this government may have the most serious explaining to do. It's troubling that in recent years the Market Surveillance Administrator, which is supposed to protect Alberta electricity consumers, appears to have adopted a regulatory approach whereby economic withholding, which is just price gouging, is not only permitted but perhaps encouraged. To the associate minister of electricity: was the MSA acting on government instructions when it adopted the new Wild West approach to market surveillance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you for my second question in the House today. The MSA is an independent body that was created when this government chose to deregulate electricity. It was created for the express purpose of what it's doing today. And if you look at the qualifications of the individual who is acting in that capacity today, you'll be nothing but impressed.

Mr. Hehr: When the MSA was operating under its own policies and procedures, which clearly said that economic withholding is a good thing for these companies to do, why didn't the government step in and say that it is ridiculous to allow corporations to be gouging Albertans on their power bills?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: If the government of Alberta interfered every time there was an allegation about corporate activity, we would be awfully busy.

We have created a system of oversight of the electricity system, including protection of consumers, that is predicated upon the independence of the watchdog and the Alberta Utilities Commission, and we respect those roles and those commissions.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the Market Surveillance Administrator clearly published two reports that said, and I quote, that private corporations were allowed to engage in economic withholding, end quote, why was the minister and her department not aware, and why didn't they end this practice when that amounts to price gouging?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: I believe that this hon. member might be jumping to conclusions. I would rather that these questions be reviewed by experts in the place where we've determined for that adjudication to occur. Concluding that there has been wrongdoing here is entirely inappropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Public Service Pensions

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier says that we should slash the pensions of over 300,000 retirees because we need to, quote, live within our means. But I think the Premier could benefit from a workshop on living within one's means. For public-sector retirees, their means are around an average of $15,000 a year. To convert that into language the Premier can understand, that's just a touch more than a private flight back from a vacation in Palm Springs or about one-third of a trip for two to South Africa. To the Minister of Finance: aren't you even a bit embarrassed about attacking the modest incomes of retired provincial workers in the face of your Premier's repeated display of overindulgence?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, almost two years ago the Premier asked me to work with the pension boards through the local authorities pension board, the public-sector pension board, the Management Employees Pension Board, and the special forces board, all of whom are made up of members of those unions and those payers in the system, if you will, to ensure the sustainability of pensions into the future. She also asked that I would look at all of the options, including the DC option, which is the Wildrose Alliance's option of defined contributions, including, perhaps, even some other options. There was a resounding that they wanted to protect the defined benefit plan. In order to protect the defined guarantee, we must make some changes for the future.

Ms Notley: Well, given that this government has decided to actually eliminate the retirement security provided by guaranteed inflationary protection and given that this will mean seniors who have devoted decades of service to this province will slowly slip into poverty as they age, will the Minister of Finance at least be making the same cuts to the Premier's travel budget so that she will eventually be forced to fly commercial, make the odd transfer in L.A., and perhaps take the occasional red-eye like the rest of us?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wish that members opposite would stop trying to scare retirees with misinformation. We are not getting rid of the guarantee for defined benefit contributions. Eighty per cent of Albertans do not have a defined benefit plan. The public sector has a guarantee of a percentage of probably what would be their highest earnings in their work with the public sector, a guarantee of a percentage of that for life. That guarantee stands. It stands today. It will stand after the changes. What will change is being able to afford to pay cost-of-living adjustments every year of . . .

Ms Notley: Given that the average pension payout is a mere $15,000 per year and given that the PC decision to eliminate the 85 factor has been estimated to represent a 20 per cent clawback from that very group, instead of standing behind the Premier's lavish spending habits, why won't this government stop picking on people who can least afford it and reverse the mean-spirited attacks on our public-sector workers?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the hon. member has been, but if she was to look around the world, defined benefit programs are under stress. They're under stress because we're living longer. We have not the same number of people coming into the system as are now dependent upon the system. That's very evident in all of these plans. What we have done is presented to the membership of the plans a compromise from where we were before. In fact, we are not getting rid of the early retirement subsidies. We are changing from an 85 to a 55, to a 90-60. There are still early retirement provisions with full pension at age 60 within the new proposals.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, shocking news: the government's own Market Surveillance Administrator is now satisfied companies have been rigging electricity prices since 2011. This is three years of stealing from seniors, low-income families, and Alberta's businesses. Last May that minister accused the Wildrose of fear-mongering when we brought this issue forward. When will this government get its head out of the sand and put a stop to this stealing from Albertans once and for all?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, if you wish.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Thank you for the third question today. I want to respond to this question by focusing on consumers. Again, I want to restate that we cannot prejudice the outcome of this case, and I hope that the hon. member understands that. If market manipulation did take place, the government has given the AUC the ability to charge penalties of up to a million dollars a day and also to claw back any economic benefits. Consumers are a priority. If the AUC levies a fine, this government will ensure that those funds go to consumers.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: Given that the last time TransAlta got caught stealing $5 million from Albertan ratepayers, they had to pay a fine of $380,000, why should Albertans trust this government or the AUC to even care when the punishment for stealing from consumers is nothing more than a cost of doing business?

The Speaker: Hon. members, we allow a lot of leeway here. I'd caution you to be very careful when you use the word "stealing" going forward, okay?

Mr. Anglin: Absolutely.

The Speaker: I don't see anybody rising on a point of order yet, but it's sure to come.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Again, I must remind this hon. member that we cannot prejudice the outcome of this case. It's being reviewed by the AUC as it should be. I restate that we care about consumers. Consumers will be looked after if there is a problem here.

Mr. Anglin: Given that the MSA allegations are, in effect, allegations of fraud, theft, destruction of evidence, all of which are criminal in nature, will this government ask the RCMP to investigate and file criminal charges as necessary and hold these companies and individuals to account?

Mr. Campbell: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order, I assume, at 2:39?

Mr. Campbell: Yes.

The Speaker: Let's go on with the answer to the question here.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To conclude, I hope, the RCMP will make their decision about what they do. This member is getting way ahead of himself. This decision has yet to be reviewed by the Alberta Utilities Commission. They have the ability to do that. They have the authority to do that. I would like to let them do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bullying Prevention

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than 26 per cent of Albertans believe that bullying is just a part of growing up. Last week many members of this Assembly wore pink to help change that stigma and stand up against bullying. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Education. Given that bullying is a concern for many parents and students of all ages, what processes are in place in our schools to ensure that bullying is dealt with in a serious manner?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, thanks to the member for the question and for being such a strong advocate for her constituents. On this particular issue I know that she as a former teacher is well in tune with it. You know, bullying in any form, anywhere, at any time in our schools is unacceptable, and we've set very high standards and expectations for school boards. One of the biggest things we've done recently is the Education Act. We passed some of the strongest language of expectations with respect to anti-bullying language in the entire country. I'd also point out that we've got a new Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety, which makes a great statement for this government in terms of our priorities. In short, there are lots of tools out there. There is lots of support and even higher expectations on the roles and responsibilities of school boards and parents . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: if parents are unhappy with how bullying is being addressed at their child's school, whether it be lack of initiative or consequences, what other options are available to ensure that a fair course of action is taken?

2:40

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the first thing we always encourage parents to do is to try to resolve the issue locally. Obviously, that means talking with teachers and if unsatisfied there, of course, talking with the administrator at the school. But if they don't get satisfaction, the autonomy, the authority, and the responsibility for this rests with the local school board. Then they've got the superintendent to deal with. They've got an elected board, duly elected officials that have a lot of responsibility. If they're not getting satisfaction, if they're not happy with the outcomes, we welcome them to come to our office or work through our local MLAs. But, obviously, first we want them to work with the local schools and the local school boards.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. My final question is to the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety. At the community level where would you direct children and families who encounter bullying?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, every community has its own unique needs when it comes to resources for bullying and cyberbullying, and we are very proud in this government to have created a toll-free provincial bullying helpline. It's 1.888.456.2323. It's a wonderful resource. It's available in more than 170 languages 24 hours a day, seven days a week. It is fantastic. We appreciate the fact that a lot of people use it. It is a great resource.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Cross.

School Construction in Blackfalds

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost one full year ago the community of Blackfalds in my riding got some really good news, or so they thought. A new K to 6 school for the community was announced. But it is now one year later, and the only work that has been undertaken at the site has been the completion of a large Building Alberta sign. Can the Minister of Education please explain to my constituents when Blackfalds' new school will consist of more than just a couple of signposts and a PC billboard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question. I can assure you that the first piece of work we do isn't when the hole gets dug. There's a lot of planning going on, and our schedule for that school is still 2016. We've got all the people working diligently to make that happen, and I expect that the people of Blackfalds are looking forward with much anticipation to that school. It's part of our building Alberta plan. It's a commitment that this Premier and this government made, and we have every intention of fulfilling that very commitment.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, there are many communities in Alberta that are waiting for schools. Given that the government lists that the project is under way on their online inventory of school announcements, can the minister please explain why not a single shovel has been in the ground since officials left the site of the announcement? Show me the shovels, minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my earlier answer, we intend to have those schools open in 2016. That's still the plan. The shovels will be there in due course, but those people in those communities around Alberta ought to be very glad they chose this Premier and this government, with our building Alberta plan, because the opposition, with their smoke and mirrors plan, would not be providing the infrastructure that Albertans need and depend upon, the ones they asked us to deliver and the ones that this Premier and this government are delivering. That's why we're here. That side would not be providing the infrastructure that Albertans need.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, the clock is ticking. Will the students of Blackfalds be in their new school before the 2016 election is called, as your government has promised? Yes or no?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be glad to know that he's essentially quoting the Premier. When she asked me to be the Infrastructure minister, she said: minister, the clock is ticking. She said: we want to get those schools open in 2016; it's your job and your ministry's job to get it done. Those are the instructions and the directions I'm working under, part of the building Alberta plan. It's a promise made. We intend to have it a promise kept. We're committed to it.

Physiotherapy Services for Seniors

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, many seniors are slipping and falling in this cold weather, and they need physiotherapy to recover from their injuries. As you know, physiotherapy is not covered by the Alberta health care insurance program, the plan, and coverage through other programs is very, very limited. My question today is to the Minister of Health. Seniors in my constituency want to know what you will do, Mr. Minister, to ensure they have access to physiotherapy without causing them financial hardship.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an excellent question, and the weather that we have experienced this winter brings to mind a number of hazards that seniors face, particularly those who are living independently in the community and many of them alone.

We continue to be committed to supporting seniors to live independently. They have a number of options currently available to them when it comes to a full spectrum of health care services. This includes physiotherapy. A number of publicly funded physiotherapy services are offered through community rehabilitation programs across the province, and in this instance the physio-therapist determines the number of treatments that will be publicly funded.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you for that answer, Mr. Minister. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker, given that seniors often need additional treatment for physiotherapy over and above what is available, my question is: will you look at programs to cover physiotherapy needed to help keep the seniors living independently in their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Physiotherapy is one of several supports that can be made available to seniors to help them. Obviously, when the issue of a fall arises, the involvement of physicians and physiotherapists and occupational therapists and other professionals is warranted, but seniors have a number of choices, as I have said, when it comes to accessing these services. Low-income seniors who require publicly funded physiotherapy can continue to access these through the flexible community rehabilitation programs that we have in place. Some services that are not covered by government are available through private and other plans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, that's the problem. Some services aren't available through government, and as I said, the programs are limited and not everyone is in the low-income stream. In fact, they're just above that, so they're caught in this very serious situation.

My question to you, Mr. Minister, is: will you consider reversing your current health care policy to restore the physiotherapy funding for seniors that was lost five years ago? It is my sincere hope that you will say yes.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can commit to and what we have already committed to is increasing access to all primary health care for seniors, including access to physiotherapists through family care clinics and through primary care networks. I will certainly admit to the hon. member that I in my own constituency have received letters from seniors who feel that the number of physiotherapy visits that are covered through the community rehabilitation program may not be sufficient to meet their needs. We will review that. But it would of course be short sighted to look only at that aspect of support for services for seniors that is needed in Alberta today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Medicine Hat Landfill Fire

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much to the relief of Cypress county, the Westar Landfill fire, that raged for a month, was extinguished at the start of the new year. Residents were displaced, toxic materials were burned, and chemicals were released. At this point we don't know what caused the fire, but we do know that not one provincial check was done to monitor proper protocol. Can the minister of environment explain why his government took a do-nothing approach to ensure that the proper dumping procedures were being followed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I disagree wholeheartedly with the member. My department is currently investigating this fire and its cause. Once the investigation is complete, my department will determine if any of the environmental authorizations or regulations were not followed, and appropriate enforcement action will be taken. Enforcement actions can include warnings, administrative penalties, orders, or charges. My department also has monitored air quality extensively during the course of the incident. From January of this year results from the air monitoring are posted on our website. Nothing of concern has been identified at this time.

Mr. Barnes: Given that this situation revealed how serious the consequences could be for all associated and all in the neighbourhood, what is the government doing to ensure that private dump sites are going to be held accountable in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we took immediate action on the Westar site as soon as we could, and we had people evacuated because we were concerned about health issues. Once those health issues were alleviated, we brought people back in. I can tell this member that I've authorized my department to go out and start doing – I forget the word. Anyways, they're going to go and look at landfill sites without the people knowing they're coming, unannounced.

Mr. Barnes: The government was nowhere around before this happened, Mr. Speaker. Now, with the total cost of the fire past $2 million, will the government commit to reimbursing Cypress county for expenditures that proper government of Alberta oversight in the first place could have prevented?

Mr. Campbell: As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this is under investigation right now, and I won't comment until the investigation is completed.

The Speaker: I believe the bell rang, Mr. Clerk, did it not? So 30 seconds from now I will proceed with the first of several members' statements.

Before we go, Government House Leader, do you have a point?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to Members' Statements, I'd ask that due to Standing Order 7(7) we extend the Orders of the Day past 3 o'clock.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Je me lève aujourd'hui pour souligner les 16e Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration nationale de la langue, du patrimoine, et des cultures françaises.

Du 7 au 23 mars près de 10 millions de francophones à travers le Canada participeront dans des festivités. Le thème de cette année, La joie de vivre d'hier à demain, cadre bien avec notre province. De Plamondon à Grande Prairie, de Fort McMurray à Lethbridge, des communautés à travers l'Alberta souligneront le début des festivités ce vendredi avec des levers de drapeaux symboliques. Les francophones comme les Anglophones se rassembleront pour le lever du drapeau franco-albertain, un symbol d'unité qui représente l'entrelacement de nos cultures, de nos gens, et de nos langues.

Comme vous le savez, M. le Président, il y aura beaucoup d'occasions pendant le mois pour que les Albertains participent à des célébrations, de rassemblements communautaires à des activités éducatives. Même ici à la rotonde de la Législature vous accueillerez les membres de cette Assemblée et le public lors d'une réception dans le cadre des Rendez-vous le 10 mars.

Aujourd'hui notre population francophone est en croissance et devient de plus en plus plurielle et vibrante. Avec plus de 239,000 Albertains qui parlent français, les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie sont une excellente occasion pour tous les Albertains à sortir, célébrer la diversité culturelle et linguistique, et à découvrir ce que nos communautés francophones offrent à notre province.

Merci à tous les membres de l'Assemblée pour leur appui continu de cette célébration culturelle vibrante. Je vous encourage tous à prendre part aux activités de cette année.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I rise today to highlight the 16th annual Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national celebration of French culture, language, and heritage. From March 7 through 23 close to 10 million francophones across Canada will take part in the festivities. This year's theme, Joie de vivre d'hier à demain, Joy of Living from Yesterday to Tomorrow, couldn't be more fitting for our province. From Plamondon to Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray to Lethbridge, communities across Alberta will kick off the festivities this Friday with ceremonial flag-raising ceremonies. Francophones and anglophones alike will come together to raise the Franco-Albertan flag, a symbol of unity that represents the interconnection of our cultures, peoples, and languages.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there will be many opportunities for Albertans to participate in celebrations throughout the month, from community gatherings to educational activities. Even here in the Legislature Building rotunda you will be welcoming members of this House and the public to a reception in celebration of the Rendez-vous on March 10.

Today our francophone population is growing and becoming even more culturally and ethnically vibrant. With more than 239,000 Albertans who speak French, Rendez-vous de la Francophonie is a great opportunity for all Albertans to get out, celebrate our cultural and linguistic diversity, and experience the incredible joie de vivre that our francophone communities bring to our province.

My thanks to all of the members of the Assembly for their continued support of this vibrant cultural celebration. I encourage everyone to take part in this year's activities.

Merci. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Shaw, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our caucus recently released our vision for municipal funding, something we call the 10-10 community infrastructure transfer. Municipal funding can be a complex issue, particularly under the current system; however, our plan is very easy to understand. The first thing you may note is that this is a transfer, not a patchwork of grants. This is the key difference between the status quo and a truly sustainable future under Wildrose leadership. A Wildrose government would bundle together 10 per cent of the revenues collected from personal and corporate income taxes as well as education, tobacco, and fuel taxes and flow it directly through to the municipalities. The 10-10 community infrastructure transfer will result in more money reaching municipalities through ironclad block funding with no strings attached.

We believe this is exactly the type of funding arrangement Edmonton and Calgary will require to build out their transportation and LRT networks without having to impose punitive new taxation on Alberta families. Just to clarify for all stakeholders and especially the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who managed to completely miscalculate the totals of his own government's funding in a press release, under a Wildrose government all municipalities would be better off.

It is well known that a strong and effective opposition can lead a government. I'm sure this is why in the throne speech yesterday we heard the renewed commitment of a previously broken promise to again increase funding to municipalities. If the budget does in fact have more money flowing to municipalities on Thursday, we in the Wildrose can rest assured that our announcement of the 10-10 community infrastructure transfer played a role in achieving this small victory.

I say "small victory," Mr. Speaker, because with this PC government you never know when they're going to change their mind. Bottom line: under a Wildrose government our municipalities wouldn't have to wait for good news in a budget or a throne speech. They would have a true partner that respects their roles, values their contributions, and recognizes that their future success is integral to Alberta's future success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Stony Plain.

Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville Police Services

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to recognize the work of RCMP officers in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville as well as those across the province. These are the individuals who put their lives on the line every day. They go to work making our communities a safer place. These are the individuals who deliver our province's police services and face situations that are unimaginable for many Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, early this past January the dedicated men and women of the Vegreville, Tofield, and Two Hills RCMP detachments were called into action to protect our community after a resident had several firearms stolen from their home by intruders. More than five Mounties were called into the line of fire after a dangerous standoff with a suspect. Two individual officers sustained injuries as a result of their tremendous efforts, and they are still recovering.

These Mounties, the several others from other detachments called in, and all of our law enforcement officers are courageous men and women in our province, who every day go above and beyond so selflessly to aid others in their time of need. These are the people that I would like to salute today. As the MLA and a resident of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville I want to extend my sincerest thanks and gratitude for their unwavering dedication to ensuring that all Albertans have safe communities to live, work, and to raise our families in. Our communities are so grateful.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Grain Rail Transportation Backlog

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I call attention to an issue impacting our agricultural sector and one causing immense concern in my constituency and in the constituencies of many of my colleagues. It's been a challenging few months for our agricultural community. This province's grain elevators are filled to the rafters while the ships intended to take Alberta's grain to market are in port. Our government is committed to providing the opportunity for all businesses to succeed, but this problem is out of our control. That's why I'm addressing the misinformation regarding the lack of rail cars available to haul Alberta grain to market.

Some have heard that the backlog is caused by a disproportionate amount of rail cars seconded by the oil and gas industry; others have heard about a shortage of total rail cars; and others, because of the Canadian Wheat Board transition. This is simply not true. Many industries are facing the same problem. It must be addressed. Other commodities, such as lumber and oil, are unable to find adequate rail shipping. This is not a new problem. There were complaints about rail service before.

Canada's railway network, which is responsible for moving our grain to market, is a federal responsibility. We are fully supportive of the federal government introducing legislative changes to make the system more accountable through direct and immediate penalties for whichever part of the system is responsible for the backlog, including inadequate rail service. I believe that legislating greater financial accountability in the rail system is one meaningful change that will yield more meaningful results.

Market access is a top priority for our government and is one of the key pillars in our efforts to continue building Alberta. Our reputation as a world-class supplier of food, energy, and other exports is at risk if we are unable to meet the needs of our customers in a timely fashion, so it is imperative that immediate steps be taken to improve the efficiency of our rail transportation network.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Fallen Four in Memoriam

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nine years have passed since the national historic RCMP tragedy in the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency shook the country. Candle lights flickered at the Fallen Four Memorial Park in Mayerthorpe last night as the community gathered to bring light into the darkness that descended on March 3, 2005, when four young RCMP officers were shot and killed north of the town. We have healed and moved on, but we do not forget the lives of constables Peter Schiemann, Leo Johnston, Brock Myrol, and Anthony Gordon, that ended tragically that day. I ask you to join me in remembering them, their families, friends, troop mates, co-workers, and the communities of Mayerthorpe, Whitecourt, and surrounding areas that embraced them.

Thanks to the Mayerthorpe Fallen Four society there's a beautiful six-acre memorial park that was built to honour Peter, Leo, Brock, and Anthony plus all police and military forces. It reminds us all that wounds heal and that a new beauty is possible in time through nature and community spirit. In this park four bronze statues stand on guard with a 24-foot centrepiece that salutes all peace and police officers, all soldiers, and all those who have given their lives for their uniform. The volunteers who built this park, maintain it, and bring everybody together for the candle-lighting service are true Albertans, proud of those that protect us and ensure those who are gone are never forgotten.

Today, colleagues, I wear my Fallen Four pin with pride as a reminder that the brave are forever remembered, and I ask everybody in this House to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Slave Lake Health Services

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Slave Lake is in serious trouble. In 2011 the community of Slave Lake had doctors, a surgeon, an anesthesiologist, a full dialysis unit, and a functioning operating room to meet patients' needs. These services are essential because Slave Lake faces high birth rates and also high mortality rates, close to double the provincial average. Being a young and growing remote community means there is a critical need for urgent care services and access to their doctors.

In 2012 the Premier decided Slave Lake would play host to her experimental family care clinic idea, an experiment introduced with little consultation, without guidelines, no parameters, and was not even supported by physicians and health care professionals across this province. Let's look at the effect of becoming the pet project for the Premier's next big idea.

In 2011 Slave Lake had 11 doctors. Today they have less than half that. In fact, they now have a lower doctor-to-patient ratio than the whole country of Nigeria. In 2011 Slave Lake had one anesthesiologist. Today they have none. In 2011 Slave Lake had a functioning operating room. Today nothing. In 2011 Slave Lake had a fully functioning dialysis unit. Now the residents have to drive three hours to Edmonton. In 2011 Slave Lake mothers could give birth in their own communities. Not anymore.

Despite this the PC government insists family care clinics are a success. This government talks about everyone having a home in the health care system, but for Slave Lake that home is somewhere else, not in their own community. The PC government, the Health minister, Alberta Health Services have let Slave Lake down.

However, there is hope. The Premier, the PC government can respect local decision-making. They can work with their stakeholders, with their community, and they can put this community first. They can swallow their pride. They can admit that the plan to ensure that Slave Lake's family care clinic was a success has failed. They can also offer the community of Slave Lake actual access to primary health care. To the Premier, to the minister, to Alberta Health Services: it's okay to admit you were wrong; make this right.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: We have several tablings. Please do your best to be as brief as you can.

The Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan Statistical Supplement for 2012-13, detailing payments to physicians and for supplementary drug benefits in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Meadowlark, I understand there are two tablings. Edmonton-Centre on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is the evaluation report from the Leger research and development group on Reach Edmonton's schools as community hubs program, which, of course, they have found produced a value of $4.60 for every dollar invested.

The second tabling on behalf of the leader of the Liberal opposition is an article, Health Stats Veer Off Course, and that to change things on the run with the new budgeting format is not helping things in health care.

May I continue, Mr. Speaker? I have tablings on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo and one from myself.

The Speaker: Yes. I see there are about five tablings for Calgary-Buffalo and one for yourself, so why don't you get them all done now.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I can't see all five tablings for Calgary-Buffalo, so he's going to get what he's going to get.

The first one that I would like to do, Mr. Speaker, is the report by the MSA, the Market Surveillance Administrator. I'll just draw everyone's attention to page 3, in which it says that "the MSA accepts that economic withholding is rational profit maximizing behaviour, for example, when a market participant has long portfolio position." That will not be questioned or challenged. So what they did, they were allowed to do. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague for Calgary-Buffalo.

The second tabling I have for him is a report by Deloitte on Alberta Infrastructure, the RFQ for 19 schools located in southern and north-central Alberta.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my beloved – oh, it isn't my beloved constituency. Well, it's on behalf of David McIntyre, who believes that the Alberta government should do everything they can to save Alberta's heritage rangelands. "Please give these lands bottom-to-top protection as part of the South Saskatchewan Regional Plan."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Finance, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. On behalf of the Premier it's my pleasure to table the letters to the Auditor General that the Premier mentioned in her responses today. These letters are asking the Auditor General to review the travel and expense policies and specifically the office of the Premier as one of the examples for him to start with as well as to review the government of Alberta's air transportation service and the use of the planes. In addition, in this letter it is noted that the Premier's direction to myself as President of Treasury Board is to suspend out-of-province travel on all ATS planes and to look at the costing that we use for the government of Alberta planes. That would be the first tabling.

The second tabling is a letter from the Premier to myself outlining an ambitious piece of work for us to undertake that would be around the government's travel and expense policy, that we are to look to an RFP process for preferred providers in the area of travel and expenditure and air travel and hotels, et cetera, which we will be undertaking tout de suite, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Calder, you're next.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the appropriate number of copies of a petition of almost 3,000 signatures from the citizens of Slave Lake and area who are very concerned about the state of health care in their community. The petition was calling for the PC government to act in order to save the Slave Lake doctors who are being forced to leave the community. Basic and essential health services have been removed; for example, maternity care. These need to be restored immediately as well.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? If not, I have a tabling that I would like to proceed with. In my capacity as chair of the Members' Services Committee and pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act I'm going to table with the Assembly five copies of the following orders, that were approved at the December 10, 2013, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: the first being the Constituency Services Amendment Order 28, that being Order MSC 12/13; the second being the Transportation Amendment Order 12, that being Order MSC 13/13; and the third one is the Members' Services Committee Amendment Order 1, that being MSC Order 14/13.

Let us move on, then, with points of order. I believe we have three or four to deal with.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: We are going to start with Edmonton-Strathcona. You had a point of order at 2:16 p.m. Let's hear it, please, with the citation.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The citation is 23 (h), (i), and (j), and it relates to the Premier's comments in response to the question that was put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I, of course, don't have the Blues, but I do have the question that the member himself asked, and I have a clear recollection of the Premier suggesting that the member was misleading the House with his question.

In his question he asked the Premier: why won't she recognize that her exorbitant use of public funds for travel and excessive security and use of government aircraft and staff severances is a poor contrast to the frozen wages and reduced pensions that they are proposing for public employees? Then the Premier responded to that by accusing the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood of misleading the House.

Now, the parliamentary authorities are quite clear that the term "misleading the House" has been found to be unparliamentary, and Speakers on repeated occasions have called upon members who have accused others of misleading the House to offer an apology. Although, frankly, we don't have to get into a long discussion of the facts because we do know that the language in and of itself is unparliamentary regardless of whether or not the statement made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is accurate.

I will, however, suggest that Bill 46, which, of course, granted, is somewhat up in the air right now given the proclamation through judicial review about what an outrageous piece of legislation it is, notwithstanding that fact, that piece of legislation proposed for April 1, 2014, to March 30, 2015, is a freeze on public-sector salary and wages of zero.

You know what? We can't talk about what lovely little discussions are going on behind closed doors. Strangely, I think it's kind of reasonable for us as members of this Assembly to hold this government to account for pieces of legislation that they bring in and pass through this Assembly, even those pieces of legislation that subsequently receive outrageous levels of criticism by the judiciary as that particular piece of legislation did. I think it is quite reasonable for the member to have suggested that this government is freezing public-sector wages.

We also know that the ATA deal, which was legislated by this government, also imposes zero per cent for this particular year. I believe the government claims same thing for the doctors, although I'm less clear on that one.

Regardless, I think it's arguable that what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said is absolutely true, in fact. As well, the government is proposing to reduce pensions, and no amount of spin can get past the fact – and we'll have lots of opportunity to discuss that – that the changes that this government is making to pension plans will result in a loss of income to future pensioners.

That being said, that's what the member said. Now, had the member actually said that the Premier was dressed up like a unicorn, even then the Premier would not have been able to suggest that the member was misleading the House because that is the parliamentary tradition. The fact of the matter is that it might simply have been a misinterpretation or mistake about whether or not she was dressed up like a unicorn. Although, you know.

Anyway, the point is that it was an unparliamentary statement by the Premier, and I would respectfully request that the Speaker ask that the Premier offer an apology to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and withdraw the statement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader to respond.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was quite a diatribe of nothing to do with the point of order. The member did make some comments that were misinformed and did, in my mind, lead me to believe that I didn't know what was going on at that bargaining table. The member talks about three zeros, which he knows is not true. If you look on the AUPE website and if you look at the offer with prejudice to the union, it's $1,550, $1,550, $775, 1 per cent, 2 per cent, and then paid holidays between Christmas and New Year's for the second, third, and fourth years of the agreement, Mr. Speaker. So those aren't zeros. That's actually almost 10 per cent over four years when you look at the math on that.

Mr. Speaker, the member also talked about the fact that we're reducing pensions. That, again, is categorically untrue. We are not reducing pensions at all within the public sector.

As the House leader for the fourth party went on about all of the things, the fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that the Premier called the member to task because he was misleading this House in talking about issues that aren't there. At no time can we now go back to zeros, because with the with-prejudice argument that we put on the bargaining table, we are held to that final offer. Again, let me say that that's $1,550 the first year, $1,550 the second year, $775 the third year with a 1 per cent increase on the grid, 2 per cent on the grid the fourth year, and paid days between Christmas and New Year's for all members that are nonessential services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a pretty simple case, I would think, rather cut and dried. There was a question asked by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. In the response the Premier suggested that that member was in fact trying to mislead this House. It is a long-standing tradition in this facility, in all parliaments, that that is language that is deemed unparliamentary. Look no further than Beauchesne's 489. It's very clear in there, and this is not a case where I believe that there can be multiple interpretations of a phrase. It was very clear what the Premier was trying to say. She was trying to deflect from the responsibility that her government has taken and actions that her government has taken, and quite truthfully she was trying to deflect from the actions that she had taken in a trip to South Africa. Now, I am not going to, in this argument on the point of order, get into the long details around that trip. We all know what they are.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, it is unparliamentary for this Premier to stand in this Assembly and tell this Assembly that a member is intentionally misleading the House. It is that simple, and I would echo the member's comments, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and I would ask that you rule that the Premier apologize and withdraw that remark.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, I've stood in this House a number of times to comment on parliamentary language and unparliamentary language, and I've told most of you at least half a dozen times that tone is important, temperament is important, context is important.

I received the Blues just a minute or two ago, so let me just refresh your memories as to what happened. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood stood and said the following:

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The one thing I don't understand is the Premier's double standard. Why won't this Premier recognize that her exorbitant use of public funds for travel, excessive security, use of government aircraft, and staff severances is an unfair and unjust contrast to frozen wages and reduced pensions for public employees in our province?

Shortly thereafter the Premier stood and said the following:

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to ask me questions with respect to this circumstance, that's fine, but it is entirely inappropriate for this hon. member to mislead the House with respect to AUPE negotiations or pension reform. It is not appropriate to suggest for any reason that the great work that our Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has done with respect to pension reform will not be helpful to public servants in the future. Let's remember that as we saw last week, our better offer to AUPE involved wage increases for four years.

Now, I don't know about most of you, but I can tell you that I'm not privy to those particular discussions, so I don't know what went on in them. I don't know where negotiations stand. I don't know who's at the table. What I do know, though, is that an allegation has been appropriated here to a member of the House by suggesting that he misled the House with respect to AUPE negotiations or pension reform. I'm going to wait until I get the rest of the Blues just to make sure that I'm adjudicating this correctly, but frankly I do think that was an unfortunate choice of words, to accuse someone of misleading the House. We've had the point clarified here. Nonetheless, I will ask if under the circumstances the hon. Government House Leader would do the honourable thing and simply ask that on behalf of the Premier those words be withdrawn.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. They're unfortunate, the words the Premier used, but she just wanted to make sure that all Albertans did know the truth about negotiations and about pensions. On your recommendation I will withdraw the comments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

That closes that matter, but please let it stand as a warning to all of you. We're looking forward to a very productive session. Today was pretty good, and members were in fairly good form. I will be clamping down on all of these points regardless of who says them, so please know that in advance.

Let us move on.

Point of Order Anticipation

The Speaker: We had a second point of order, by I think it was Edmonton-Centre against Edmonton-Gold Bar, at 2:20 p.m.

Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to use as my citations on anticipation Beauchesne's 408(1)(a), 409(5), 409(12), and 410(14), all of which are different versions of a request or an outlining that anticipation should not be – and I think the clearest way it's put is in 410(14). "Questions should not anticipate an Order of the Day although this does not apply to the budget process."

Now, Mr. Speaker, as you and other Speakers have reminded us in this House repeatedly, when it appears on the Order Paper, it can be called any time. Although it may not be on the House leaders' agreement for the day, it could of course be called, and sometimes the government does that if they want to have a bit of mischief. Lo and behold, when I look at the Tuesday, March 4, 2014, Order Paper, on page 6, halfway down the page, it does say: Government Bills and Orders, Second Reading, Bill 1, Savings Management Act, Hon. Madam Premier. In fact, we do have this on the Order Paper. It's there for anyone that wishes to reference it. Standing to ask a question about something that is on the Order Paper for debate is, I believe, a tragic misuse of time.

Now, I'm going to go on and talk about the principles of question period, which appear in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 501. It's specifically talking about the need for urgency in questions and accountability and keeps making the statement that time is scarce. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly complained to you and to previous Speakers on just about any opportunity I can get about what I believe is an inappropriate number of questions that are allocated to government members and inappropriate placement in the rotation. This Assembly is the only one in Canada that gives such prominent placement to government backbenchers in question period, both the number of questions that they get and how high they appear in the rotation.

This was a perfect example of why it is so wrong, Mr. Speaker. By that member asking a question that was, one, inappropriate and, two, mischievous or perhaps his version of levity – I don't know; he will, I'm sure, tell us – he took away a question from an opposition member who was trying to be here and do what we are supposed to be doing as a principle in question period, which is a matter of urgency and which holds the government to account. So I would say that what the member was doing was a perversion of the principles and guidelines for oral questions.

I'll also make note that since the government members do have that time – and I have been assured they need that time in the rotation and the number of questions so they can bring forward urgent, terrifically important questions from their constituents – then I would rather expect that that would be what was happening. So I think this is a very good example of why government members should not have questions in question period. If they do, they should be restricted to a very low number, two or three, at the end of the rotation. This was an egregious misuse of time in question period.

An Hon. Member: A perversion.

Ms Blakeman: I used “perversion” already. You want it twice?

It was egregious, it is a perversion of what we are meant to do here, and I believe that the member should apologize to this House for having done that. I would certainly ask the Speaker to find that he has breached 408(1)(a), 409(5), 409(12), 410(14) from Beauchesne, and the principles found on page 501 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice for oral questions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think you’ve already answered this point of order by the fact that you didn’t allow the supplementary question by the member, so we get your point, and we’re prepared to move on.

The Speaker: Anyone else? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ll briefly comment, just following up on the comments that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre made. I believe that we saw an example today of a good use of a government backbencher asking a question – and that was the Member for Stony Plain – a valid question. It’s unfortunate that it’s such a rarity that it actually stands out in our memory that it happened. All too often we see the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you know, striving to mediocrity, which he again achieved today. It’s a clear violation of Standing Order 23(e): “anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper.” I hope that this is something that we don’t have to deal with again because, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre noted quite clearly, it is an absolute waste of our time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, hon. members, anticipation is accurately portrayed here in our own standing orders, as has been referenced. Because not everybody carries this little bible or booklet around with them, let me read it to you. Under our own standing orders, which are the ones that we’re mostly guided by, item 23 says:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker’s opinion, that Member . . .

- (e) anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.

With that in mind, let’s review what actually got said. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stood at approximately 2:19 this afternoon and said the following:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday our Premier introduced Bill 1, the Savings Management Act, legislation that will see the creation of two new endowments and enhancements to the Alberta heritage scholarship fund. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Is this really important for Albertans at this time?

At that point Edmonton-Centre rose on a point of order, I acknowledged it, and then the Minister of Finance stood to try and answer the question.

Now, I want to point out one other item here that’s very important for you to read, and that’s in Erskine May, 24th edition, page 398, where it says the following about the rule against anticipation:

Formerly, the House strictly observed a rule against anticipation according to which a motion could not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the House, whether it were a bill or an adjourned debate upon a motion. The rule survives in Standing Order No 28, which requires that in determining whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation the Speaker must have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the House within a reasonable time.

In fact, that particular bill, that was cited by Edmonton-Gold Bar, is on the Order Paper today, so that’s one violation there, obviously, because it is coming up for debate very shortly. But it also seeks an opinion, and you have to be very careful, hon. members, when you’re crafting your questions or if you’re getting help with the crafted questions, to make sure that you don’t violate rules of anticipation or the rules that pertain to matters that seek an opinion: is this good, or is this bad? That’s more opinion than it is fact. Please keep that in mind.

I know that members have risen here on occasion and kind of circuitously, perhaps, referred to something that might have been on the Order Paper, so I listen very carefully to those, but this one, I think, is fairly direct and blatant, and as such I do find that there is a point of order here to be upheld. Let that stand as a reminder and an admonishment to all to check the Order Paper and make sure that what your question is about is not going to be in violation of the anticipation rule.

In closing, let me also remind you, though, that the House of Commons – I believe I’m correct in this – no longer has this rule, and perhaps it’s time that we visited that same rule and withdrew it from our standing orders. That, however, is up to you to determine. But at the moment I can only enforce what is in the rules. So that point of order has been made, upheld, and we can go on to the third point of order now.

I believe we had a third point of order at 2:39. It was the Government House Leader, who rose in response to a comment made by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. We’ll go to the Minister of Justice for the citation.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m rising on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader with respect to citations 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) as well as Beauchesne’s 72.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, the reference that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre made was that a member or a minister here should seemingly direct the police, direct the RCMP to investigate a particular matter. It’s well known that we do not simply direct the police. We can report things to the police, but we do not direct them. For example, if I had a problem with the Minister of Human Services, I couldn’t just tell the police to go and arrest him. I would have to simply give the information to them, and they would have to decide, in their sole and unfettered wisdom, whether or not to pursue it. There’s a whole balance of case law in the courts on that.

Particularly, though, with 23(l), “introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly,” again, Mr. Speaker, there’s no business that any of us has directing any police or law enforcement here.

Now, I realize that we're just starting new again. This member has a lot of experience in a lot of areas, so I'm just simply suggesting that he withdraw this statement and refrain from making comments dealing with directing the police in the future.

Before I take my seat, Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to quote from Beauchesne's 72. It's "well established that outside police forces should not enter the precincts [here] without permission." Obviously, they have nothing to do with us here, and similarly we have nothing to do with them. That is really a key point in a free and democratic society, that politicians do not and should not ever direct the police.

I would just ask that this member kindly withdraw these particular remarks.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you wish to respond?

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of the jurisprudence that the associate minister was referring to, the issue here is the allegations that the Market Surveillance Administrator made, not any allegations that were made by anyone in the opposition.

Now, the allegations comprised two full binders. They're quite extensive, and it's already been documented here today that they're quite significant. I would add that they're quite tragic in nature, and they are extremely severe, being made by the very people who are tasked with monitoring the market.

In other jurisdictions, unlike Alberta, the Market Surveillance Administrator is the adjudicator, and the individual or the company or the parties must then appeal if they don't like the decision. What the hon. member is saying is that I had asked the minister to direct the RCMP. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. I didn't say, "Direct the RCMP" at all. What I asked, which is something this government is fully capable of doing or that any individual here is fully capable of doing, was: will this government ask the RCMP to investigate? Not direct. Anyone can ask; anyone can report.

What we have here is an issue of gaming. That's not under dispute. Those are the allegations being brought forward by the market administrator. I will point out that the Speaker cautioned me on my first supplemental, and justifiably so. I got close, but I didn't cross the line. But it was a justifiable caution when I use language.

Basically, I didn't make any allegations whatsoever. That's what has to be determined here. When the Speaker cautioned on the language that I used in the first supplemental, that was in direct relationship to a previous finding. What the hon. minister has brought forward on the point of order is a point saying that I've requested that they direct the RCMP. I fully understand that nobody directs the RCMP.

Here's what we've got. What we have is a situation where allegations have been made, severe allegations. Gaming is a form of stealing under numerous jurisdictions, and that is not a stretch. You can make that connection when you look at market manipulation. When you can look at gaming, if there's profit made from that gaming, that is looked on as theft.

Now, the allegations extend much further than that. The Market Surveillance Administrator is making allegations that are akin to fraud, theft, and destruction of evidence. Those are serious under all jurisdictions. Those are criminal by nature under Canadian law. We still have the ability to take this from the Market Surveillance Administrator, which is what this government has done, give it to the Alberta Utilities Commission, and say: you adjudicate. There's nothing preventing anybody, particularly the ministry or even the Alberta Utilities Commission, from calling in the RCMP and saying, "Hey, we've got a bigger issue here," and there is a much bigger issue going on, in my view.

The point that the member is making, that I requested that the minister direct the RCMP: that's not what the question says. If you check the Hansard, it says quite simply, "Will this government ask the RCMP?" Anyone has that right to ask the RCMP. That is to make a point of how severe these allegations are. Now, what's missing in this and what's missing in the point of order is all the harm that has been caused over a period of time that is within the allegations, and you can't convince any Albertans that something is not wrong with this system. All these members here have heard the complaints from their constituents, and now we have not just one allegation. It's not the first allegation. This is now a history of numerous allegations that have come forward over the years. We have had findings in the past. I documented that finding in my first supplemental, and we have a pattern here that borders now on corruption. That needs to be dealt with. Corruption itself is a criminal offence.

Again, at what point do we deal with the violation of utility regulations and cross that line into criminal offences and ask the RCMP to investigate? I don't believe what I'm doing here is making any direction or declaration of direction at all to this government. I'm asking the government.

I will finish with that. If you check the Hansard, it says quite clearly, "Will this government ask the RCMP?" Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, let me review the circumstances as I saw and witnessed them and have since read about. At approximately 2:36 p.m. the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre stood and said the following:

Given that the last time TransAlta got caught stealing $5 million from Albertan ratepayers, they had to pay a fine of $380,000, why should Albertans trust this government or the AUC to even care when the punishment for stealing from consumers is nothing more than a cost of doing business?

I immediately stood thereafter and said to the member the following:

Hon. members, we allow a lot of leeway here. I'd caution you to be very careful when you use the word "stealing" going forward, okay?

I want to remind you all again. You know, what's important here isn't only the language that we use here but the accusations that we attribute against people who are not in this Assembly, who would otherwise be given an opportunity to defend themselves, but because they don't enjoy the privilege of immunity, like we all do, they are at a disadvantage. They cannot stand up and defend themselves. I found the use of the word "stealing" in this instance to be not appropriate, and I stood on that very point, and the member himself has just said that he agrees with my intervention and my admonishment at the time.

There are many different ways to try and get a point across. In this case, you might have used something more polite such as "overcharging" perhaps, if that was the case – I don't know – but certainly I take offence on behalf of others that the word "stealing" is inappropriate here, and it's inappropriate to level some blame at someone who is not here and able to defend himself or herself.

On the second point, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre went on and in a supplemental said:

Given that the MSA allegations are, in effect, allegations of fraud, theft, destruction of evidence, all of which are criminal in nature, will this government ask the RCMP to investigate and file criminal charges as necessary and hold these companies and individuals to account?

At that point the hon. Government House Leader rose on a point of order, which I had anticipated 30, 40 seconds earlier because I could see where this was going.

It's very clear here that the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was not directing or dictating that the RCMP step in or whatever the banter was between the two members earlier today in support or in defence of this particular point of order. He actually did say, "Will this government ask the RCMP?" So I accept that, and Hansard will stand as a record of that.

I think that sometimes we are prone to asking very tough questions here, and this was a tough question. This was up to a point, I thought, a fairly well-worded question except for the allegations that were made against somebody not here and the use of the word "stealing." So I'm going to admonish anyone going further in that line of questioning and tell them to please refrain from using that kind of language. The point about the RCMP I think has been sufficiently clarified.

We're going to move on and carry on. That's it: no more points of order. We can go on with Orders of the Day, the former point having been now clarified.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

2. Mr. Campbell moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 2 carried]

3. Mr. Campbell moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

Evening Sittings

4. Mr. Campbell moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the 2014 spring sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you. Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. When supplementary estimates are tabled, section 8(3) of the Fiscal Management Act requires that an updated fiscal plan be tabled. Accordingly, the 2013-14 supplementary estimates include an amended 2013-14 fiscal plan. The supplementary supply estimates will provide additional spending for 13 government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize approximate increases of just over $2 billion in operational funding, $223 million in capital funding, and $11 million in financial transactions funding for the government. The largest share of these amounts will fund the province's ongoing flood recovery activities.

5. Mr. Horner moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

6. Mr. Horner moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for six hours on Wednesday, March 5, 2014.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

Amendments to Standing Orders

7. Mr. Campbell moved:
 - A Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective March 5, 2013, be amended as follows:
 1. Standing Order 18(1)(h) is amended by striking out " , except as provided under Standing Order 52".
 2. Standing Order 52 is amended
 - (a) in suborder (1) by striking out "18" and substituting "15" wherever it occurs;
 - (b) in suborder (3) by striking out " , which shall not be subject to debate or amendment".
 3. Standing Order 52.01(1) is amended
 - (a) by striking out "18" and substituting "15";
 - (b) in clause (b)
 - (i) by striking out "Enterprise and Advanced Education" and substituting "Innovation and Advanced Education";

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor’s Speech

Ms Kubinec moved, seconded by Mr. McDonald, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty’s most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a tremendous honour to move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne, presented by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta. I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for setting forth the vision of the Second Session of the 28th Alberta Legislature.

I would also like to thank the hon. Premier for the opportunity to move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. I am excited by the Premier's vision for Alberta and her commitment to build Alberta and move this province forward on many fronts, from outstanding health care delivery to finding new and expanded ways to get Alberta's products to international markets. Our province is fortunate to have a visionary, proactive leader committed to building a better and more prosperous Alberta that serves the needs of our vibrant communities, peoples, and businesses.

The Speech from the Throne sets forth the next phase of the building Alberta plan, and our constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock is an example of building Alberta. We are having a new school built in Neerlandia. The plans are under way, and the shovels will go in the ground this August. We have a modernization project in our Pembina north schools, that my constituents are very excited about.

This plan is one that will ensure Alberta remains in a position to be the best it can be and a leader on the national and international stages. It signals a commitment to excellence in transparency, determination, and strength. It provides certainty of direction, with a clear blueprint for action that's focused on the three priorities that matter most to Albertans: investing in families and communities, opening new markets for Alberta's resources, and ensuring that the government lives within its means. Significant progress has been made on all three priorities since 2012.

The Speech from the Throne articulates our actions and investments to further this work and ensure that Alberta remains the province of choice for over 4 million people. It clearly outlines how we are investing today in Alberta's future to support the nearly 1 million people expected to join our fine province in the decade to come.

Investments in research and innovation will maintain and grow our world-class resource economy and build the skilled workforce we need to stay strong. To quote from the throne speech, "Alberta is Canada's economic engine." We know first-hand the pressures associated with this prosperity. Our population will grow to 5 million people in the next 10 years, and the Speech from the Throne exemplifies the courage of this government to meet Alberta's growth head-on, to invest today in innovation for tomorrow, and to set our province up for long-term success.

This work includes opening new markets through co-operative efforts with other provinces and other jurisdictions. It includes building our communities through targeted funding for municipalities so that they can successfully address growth pressures. Alberta's success depends on all regions of the province, from Edmonton to Calgary to our vital, small rural centres, so this government will continue to invest in the necessary programs, services, and infrastructure to build on our collective expertise and will to succeed.

This throne speech sets out a commitment to create new supports for research and world-leading innovation to drive growth and economic diversification for years to come. It will fund innovation in rural Alberta to maximize our agricultural and food-processing sectors. It will invest in new ways to encourage collaboration between social and family organizations and non-profits to address important issues like poverty, homelessness, and family violence. It will expand support for apprenticeship, trades, and technology sectors to build the skilled workforce Alberta needs to remain successful as we grow our markets.

The Speech from the Throne also sets up the action this government will take to ensure that Alberta's kids get the best start in life, from education to health care to social well-being. I think all Albertans will be pleased by this forward-looking approach to governance, that is focused, target driven, and responsible, and one that is committed to putting in place the infrastructure, education, public health care, and social supports to enable all Albertans to be the best they can be in an open, inclusive, and prosperous society.

I am excited to be a part of a government that is committed to building our province, strengthening our communities, investing in our families, and broadening our economic base to realize the full potential of our resources through research and innovation but, most importantly, a government that invests in Albertans.

In closing, I would like to again thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his inspiring words. Again, I thank our Premier for her inspiring leadership and commitment to the people of Alberta.

It has been an honour to rise today and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it is a pleasure to rise today and speak to the Speech from the Throne. I guess I'll hit it pretty well off the cuff on most of these things. In here we have quite a few things about agriculture, which I think is great because it has been pushed to the back burner for a number of years, so I do appreciate that it's been raised to the level that it has, pointing out that it is the largest renewable resource this province has and the second largest that brings money into this province, behind oil and gas.

Now, some of the challenges that we have in here are – and I'll quote – leading the charge for better rail services to our rural farm families so they can gain international markets, which is a great, warm, fluffy thing to say, but this isn't a new problem. Back in the '90s, when there were problems with grain movement, the province bought numerous cars – I believe it was one per constituency at the time; don't quote me on that because I don't have the exact facts – with the heritage trust fund. Now, my question is that all these cars were out there, and nobody can ever find one. It seems like they've all disappeared. It would be . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but I overlooked the fact that the motion needs to be seconded first, and I've got to go over here to Grande Prairie-Smoky. That is my error, not yours. My apologies.

Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. McDonald: Sorry, Ian. Nice start, anyway.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is a privilege to rise today in the House and second the motion to accept the Speech from the Throne. The Alberta that we know and love today is a place where families have the supports they need to thrive and grow, including world-class education and health care, social programs and community services, and essential infrastructure like roads, schools, bridges, and health facilities. As we heard in the Speech from the Throne, this government has an unwavering belief that while our quality of life is great, we can always be better, and the commitments laid out in the throne speech clearly support this vision.

This government will invest in families and communities by building new schools, modernizing old ones, keeping class sizes low, and supporting new spaces for thousands of students. We'll build stronger families and communities by investing in child intervention and addressing family violence and other important social issues like poverty and homelessness. We will ensure that Alberta communities have access to effective services like home care, mental health supports, and enhanced youth outreach programs, and we will continue to dedicate resources and supports to enhance the quality of life for the most vulnerable in our society, low-income seniors and disabled Albertans.

Alberta's success depends on the regions, from cities to towns to smaller rural centres, and this government will help them address growth challenges with renewed long-term funding for GreenTRIP and municipal sustainability initiatives. This government is also investing in our future by creating new supports for research and world-leading innovation to drive continued growth in our economy. These investments will be made in our agricultural sector for new, made-in-Alberta solutions that will get our products to market and in our communities through the social innovation endowment.

To support these investments, this government is opening new markets, as highlighted in the throne speech. Alberta is the economic engine of this country, and we remain in a strong position despite some of the challenges we've faced in recent years. The key to building Alberta is opening new markets and finding fairer prices for our products. The throne speech outlines the many ways that we are focusing our efforts to increase agricultural exports, build new markets for oil and gas across North America, sign trade deal agreements with China, Japan, and India, and fight unfair labelling for our exports.

It also outlines the investments we're making at home for Albertans to ensure that we have a highly skilled workforce and a relevant workforce that has the capacity to grow and diversify along with our economy. This includes the creation of a dedicated pipeline training facility, one that will arm Alberta's workforce with many heavy equipment operators, pipeline construction experts, and land reclamation specialists. We will continue to work to diversify our energy mix to give consumers more choice within our electricity market, including alternative energy and renewable, all of this while we continue to build our savings, maintain the lowest tax structure in Canada, and put ourselves on the path to a balanced budget. This government will continue to live within its means and will continue to invest in the things that matter to Albertans.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I know that our government has the right plan in place. I also know that the government focuses on the things that matter most to the people in Alberta. Alberta will continue to stand as a province of choice, where we all work together every day to retain our high quality of life and open the doors to tomorrow's possibilities. I look forward to working with all of my hon. colleagues in the House as we build a better session this spring.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We're going to go back to the hon. Member for Little Bow, with my apologies once again to that member for the interruption. Standing Order 29(2)(a) will be available following this next speaker.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just clarification on time on this. Ten minutes, is it?

The Speaker: You have 15 minutes plus five minutes under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Donovan: Oh, perfect. Let me stretch my legs out on this, then.

As I was talking earlier about back in the '90s, the grain movement isn't a new problem that we've had in this province, and I am glad that the province has identified it and has been working with their federal counterparts to try to get some grain movement. There are definitely some lingering questions that I get from my constituents about what happened to the railcars that were around back in the 1990s. I'm hoping that at some point we can track down what's happened with that.

My due caution. When the ag minister brings up the statement that we're going to fine the companies for their lack of grain movement, my challenge with that is that as a grain producer, when there are only two companies that move your grain, you're well aware of what's going to come back. They're just going to up your costs. When you pass that on, they're going to pass it on to the producer, with the additional stress to the bottom line. So it's not really going to help us out a lot. Hopefully, we can move forward on that.

I'm glad, again, that the ag minister touched on MCOOL. Also, the throne speech talked about MCOOL, the country of origin labelling. Again, as an agricultural producer these are key things that need to be dealt with that are hurting our economy greatly.

One of the good things I like to see in here – and I guess I always like to be optimistic on what comes out in these. Whether there's actually going to be any backing to it afterwards, that will be the challenge. One of them is the standing of those communities hit hardest last June, the firm commitment to rebuild these and mitigate the projects under way. I'm excited to hear that because my constituency had over 300 homes that were affected by the flood and some of the challenges of fixing that.

One of the challenges also with mitigation is that when you send the water downstream somewhere else, you're hoping that it will be able to be in good hands and capable spots to deal with that. I hope the Minister of Infrastructure has his ears open for this because downstream the Bow River irrigation district has some great plans that could be laid out which would help with any of the water that is sent downstream, to be able to capture that and be able to use it down the road for irrigation and also for off-stream storage. I think those are some things that we need to do.

Now, you can understand that I'd probably have a little bit of a challenge on some of the wording in here: "This government will invest in better seniors' care, focusing funding on aging in place" and on innovative technology for them to stay in their own homes and in the areas where they were raised. We always talk in this province about aging in place, staying in your community. I had a challenge right when I first started this job when in Carmangay a long-term care facility was shut down. Now that's water under the bridge, so to speak. I've worked with the minister on that. Hopefully, we can make that a community project that will turn around to be a better project at the end. You can see that it's one of those challenges that once you've been bit, you're a little bit shy of whether it's actually going to come through or not.

One of the other challenges that comes through from that, if we're going to let people age in place, is rural handibus funding. I've met with municipalities, recently with the MD of Taber, and one of the questions they had was: if we're going to let people age in place, how are we going to fund it so they can safely age in place, be around, and still be functional in their own homes? Transportation is always a challenge. That's one of the things in this Speech from the Throne that I hope the government does follow on with their own wording. That's something that they could recognize and, hopefully, work with people on.

I guess education is something that is always key in rural Alberta, and I think we want to make sure we have a good education system that allows all students to have the same equal access to education. I'm hoping that that's also something that stays in there.

The Alberta agriculture and food innovation endowment I believe is a welcome addition to the promotion of things that we do make in Alberta, how we can fabricate and make a good product to be able to sell in our own province. One of those things we need to be able to do is make sure how we fund that, and we have the challenges to that.

I guess we have multiple things as we go through the nice orange-and-blue pamphlet we got here. As we talked about earlier here on some of the made-in-Alberta agricultural solutions and getting them to market, the Alberta sugar beet growers, for instance, have lots of challenges on their plates down there in my riding and also in other ridings that are adjacent to it on where their markets are going to be with only one player in the game. I'm hoping also with some of this that there's some actual backing because I'm trying to understand and be able to tell my constituents that there are things actually being done. As the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka talked about earlier today in question period, we put up the signs, but where are the shovels, and when are things actually moving forward? Those are things, I guess, that people in my constituency would definitely like to be able to see.

We do have great opportunities in this province. I think we should all be proud to say that we're from this province and the things that we have to offer. I think that we need to be able to move forward on that, and we need to be able to figure out how to get our provincial economy back to scale. Part of any good economic program is that – yes, we have a $40 billion budget, but when we spend $44 billion, that's maybe not the best way to do math, for any of the economic majors on the other side of the floor.

One of the challenges – and I hear that constantly from my constituents – is: live within your means. We need to be able to do that. I understand that we have lots of challenges and infrastructure things that we need to raise. Every time we ask, it gets tossed back at us that you'd cut it, that we'd have a build-nothing quote. I thought it was quite skilled to tuck that one here in the throne speech. That was a nice touch to it.

My comment is that, you know, I think it gets down to pure politics. Everybody does the banter back and forth, what's not being done right. I think we should probably focus on what we can do right, and one of the things we could do right is figure out how to balance the books, live within our means and make sure we spend accordingly, make sure we get value for our dollar. I think that just about every constituent I ever talk to doesn't have a problem with the money that's being spent in this province, but one of the challenges is: do we actually have value for our dollar on anything that's being spent?

There seemed to be quite a few questions today in question period about a trip to South Africa, I believe. One of those things there is that it becomes an entitlement issue. There's not a constituent that I've talked to who said that that should have been done. They don't disagree with the fact that the Premier was invited to it. They've never disagreed that she couldn't go on a trip like that. It's a matter of the cost and the means and the ways to get there. It goes back to an entitlement issue. I think that it really resonates, you know. So I guess from the constituents I've talked to, I think that's one of the things that definitely needs to be looked at. I'm even excited to see in the news that the Premier has asked the Auditor General to look at the travel expenses, so I think that's a positive.

One of the things we have in here also, as I was going through the nice pamphlet, is that at the end of the throne speech we talk about our trade barriers within our own borders. These have been challenges for constituents since I've started this job. In the MD of Foothills the Foothills Meat Processors, because it's an abattoir and they actually kill the animal there and cut it and sell it, falls under different rules. They fall under the Alberta Agriculture rules. Now, if that abattoir, for instance, opened a building across the street, brought in the animals and killed them but actually cut the half and sold it at a building across the street, they'd fall under Alberta Health rules, which aren't as stringent on some of the things that need to be done.

Not that I ever think our food is unsafe in this province. I'm a firm believer – and as you can tell by my size, I eat lots of it – that we have great food here, and I'm more than happy with the safety of it. We just need to make sure that all the parties are playing under the same set of rules. I think that something that this province needs to look at is some of the challenges that we have with our rules to make sure that there's a process in there, and then they can follow it so that everybody is on the same page.

As a business owner, you know, there would definitely be a challenge to know that all the rules aren't the same, so I'm hoping that when the line in here says that our internal trade barrier is often more difficult than trade within our own borders and outside, we can figure that out just on our own rules that affect a lot of our agricultural producers and any of the people that work in that market, which is also the meat processing programs and businesses that run with that.

You know, I've tried to stay with what my constituents want. I think our constituents are well aware that we need to spend money on infrastructure that's done in our province. We want to make sure that our value for our dollar is good on that. I encourage our government to please stick with that while they're moving forward on their plan, with the building Alberta together program, I'd assume for the next two years, of where they see things going.

We really need to focus – I guess I'm fairly biased on focusing on rural Alberta. I'm happy with all of our urban centres and the great things they bring us, but rural Alberta brings us lots of vibrant things like the taxes and things like that and the hard-working people that work out there to make Alberta what it is, say, as agricultural producers. I'm glad to see that the throne speech focused multiple times on agriculture. I couldn't be more ecstatic because I've always told people I'm an advocate for agriculture, and I'm willing to work and I always have been willing to work with the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. He's been very helpful to work with, and so has his staff.

I think that at the end, as long as we have a vibrant and strong rural Alberta and Alberta in general, you have a better province to work in. People come in, and they stay in the small towns, and the rural doctors are going to start coming out and working in the rural areas.

The Minister of Health and I have had numerous conversations about doctor retention in rural Alberta. Again, it's another challenge, as we heard today with Slave Lake, about how far people have to travel to be able to deal with a physician in their area. I think people expect levels of service. One of the challenges is that if you're a doctor, what's the incentive to go to rural Alberta and practise? I think we need to figure out a program and a system that works for that, and I assume that the minister – he's tried multiple things, and I appreciate that because we're not going to get it right every time. He's always willing to give it a whirl, and I hope he continues to do that.

To keep rural Alberta vibrant, we need to keep adding those things. There are lots of neat things out there. The final mile for Internet I think has helped a lot of rural people to be able to stay on the edge of technology that way, and I think that is a positive. I'll try to, I hope, bring their concerns forward, their questions to this Assembly. I'm hoping that at some point, with what's written in here, we can follow through with a lot of that from the Speech from the Throne and actually have something to show Alberta's constituents of what they're going to be able to expect in the next two years. Hopefully, it's not just some lip service.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, let me take a moment here to acknowledge the birthday of a gentleman who is celebrating a particular milestone birthday. I don't know what the age exactly is, but I know that he's young enough to not be embarrassed if it were to be known. Please join me in congratulating him on his birthday.

Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, happy birthday, sir.

Are there others who wish to speak to the throne speech? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. It is an honour as always to respond to the Speech from the Throne. The first time I had the opportunity to do this, as many members in my caucus had the opportunity to do, was in our maiden speech, so this is kind of nice to follow up and have another shot at it, this time being a little bit more directly in response to the words that were spoken yesterday by our hon. Lieutenant Governor.

It is always interesting to me to hear a Speech from the Throne laying out a government agenda. I suppose there should really be no surprise that in these documents, in these words, you find a rather, I guess, contrived vision of where it is that we are in our province's history. Obviously, there were a number of references to building. I believe 25 times the word "building" appeared. The building Alberta plan appeared another 12 times. My colleague from Airdrie and I were having a little bit of fun with that yesterday. I don't know if any of you happened to notice our little game we were playing, but you know, it is what it is.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There are some things that I do want to specifically address about this document and the speech, some things that just – it kind of boggles my mind how this government had our hon. Lieutenant Governor come and say some of the things that he did. For example, confidence. Page 1, the second-last paragraph: "A place where families have confidence that their government will stay true to its word." I mean, we've seen example after example of this government breaking its word and breaking commitments that it made to the public in the 2012 election campaign to the point where it's lost pretty much all credibility on a number of files, particularly the fiscal file.

You know, I know that we will be seeing a budget later this week and that, again, based on the Speech from the Throne there's a general consensus that they're going to present what they call a balanced budget. But who knows what term or terms they're going to use in which to shake down those numbers to arrive at a balanced number? Last year they changed the way that government finances are reported, and with that, I guess, changed the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the government management act. It's an unfortunate turn of events.

We get into the building Alberta plan, page 2. Again we have in the second paragraph that "this is a government that will stay true to its promises." You know, it's flabbergasting to me that this appears in here. It's just simply not the case. This is a Premier who will probably most be remembered for not staying true to her promises if she can get past the scandal of the day.

Another line that this government likes to use all too often, Mr. Speaker: "Ensuring government lives within its means." I'm not sure what this means to the government of Alberta, but what it means to families living in Alberta is that they actually spend less than they take in. What we've seen this government doing consistently year in and year out over the past six years is running deficits and spending more than they take in.

A little bit further down here we have "neither nature's wrath, nor economic fury." Economic fury? The bitumen bubble was economic fury by overestimating the resource revenue income that the province would take in by predicting hundred dollar plus barrels of oil. That's not economic fury. That's poor fiscal planning. Call it what you want, but "economic fury" is certainly not a term that I would have put in here.

The next paragraph. "Investing in families means your government is making good on its key promise to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more over the next three years." Well, three years from the date that this was read in the House, which will be March 3, 2017, is not the key promise that was made in the election that was held on April 23, 2012. That promise was that these 50 new schools would be built and 70 modernizations done by the election in 2016, which, as all in this House are probably keenly aware, could be called as per the fixed election date legislation pretty much two years from right now. Well, schools don't just magically build themselves, and this government is seemingly taking some credit for schools that were announced by the former Premier in 2011. We've seen members in this House make comments about how some of those 50 new schools have been completed already, but it's just simply not true. We see a large number of building Alberta signs, but unfortunately there are no schools behind those signs.

So I don't understand. Again, here we are on the second page, and we've now made three references to a government that stays true to its promises, one of which is noted as its key promise, and they're not going to deliver on it. Now they're changing the terms so that the key promise is now for the next three years. Well, I guess that even remains to be seen. Like all governments, this government, I'm sure, will be judged in history, and some of these promises – it just boggles my mind that they're putting these on paper and claiming them to be today's promise.

We move on. In the next paragraph we're talking about family care clinics. One of my colleagues earlier today referred to that as a pet project of the Premier. It's really encouraging to see that more FCCs will follow, considering the absolute disaster that one of the first ones was up in Slave Lake. You know, I guess this is what happens when a government puts blinders on to the realities around it. Disasters happen around them, and they don't really care. They're just moving along.

We keep moving on down, and we get down to: "This government is three years ahead of schedule in finishing [the] ring road, [in Edmonton] and will twin Highway 63 from Grassland to Fort McMurray – in full and on time – by 2016." [interjection] I think they are rather encourageable on the other side. But this is a commitment that was originally made in I believe it was 2006. So

I don't know why they're suggesting that this is something that's going to be on time by 2016. That's 10 years later than the date that it was originally announced and certainly not on time by the date that it was originally announced. [interjection] Oh, I'm sorry. I thought the hon. Minister of Infrastructure had something to add, but I'm sure he'll ask me a question later.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please. The member has the floor.

Mr. Wilson: You know, I'd be happy to table the press release from 2006 announcing the twinning of highway 63 tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

We move on now to page 4. More gold. It's talking about how "the Governments of Alberta and British Columbia signed a landmark agreement to move Alberta's oil and gas to the B.C. coast," which is great. That was a bit of a struggle for our two provinces to come to an agreement, and you know, we're happy that they were able to. Unfortunately, there's still a pile of regulatory framework and its hurdles that we need to go through on a federal level before that's ever going to become a reality.

Signing a provincial energy agreement with China is good, assuming that you can actually get your product to that market, which at this point in time we can't do because we don't have a pipeline out to that coast. Now, we do obviously have some other ways of getting it there through rail or whatnot.

Page 5 we get the goal of putting our – I'm just going to read it because it deserves it.

To meet the commitment under the Building Alberta Plan to live within its means, your government made difficult decisions in Budget 2013 – decisions that helped Alberta turn the corner, putting our province on the path to a balanced budget.

Well, I have got to say that I really appreciated the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood after the Q3 update where he referred to the government as lucky idiots. It's rather fitting that these tough decisions that were made in Budget 2013 really have nothing to do with the fact that your numbers are looking a little bit better. It has everything to do with the state of the Canadian dollar being at around 90 cents. It has everything to do with natural gas prices going up. But I suppose it is the nature of a government to take credit for things which it does not do.

You know, talking about the new single energy regulator, from my understanding from some of the people that I have in my constituency of Calgary-Shaw, this has been somewhat of a problematic drilling season for some of our small producers because the regulator decided to go through an entire review process in December, and it has stalled and delayed what would be the drilling season. I'd hope that this government is well aware of the problems that the single regulator has created for itself at this point in time, although like many other things I don't have high hopes.

Then we get to page 6. Page 6 for me was probably the lowest point of this speech. Again, when we talk about His Honour, our Lieutenant Governor, we're talking about the most decorated living war veteran in our country, and he sat in that chair, Mr. Speaker, and he read this phrase. "Building nothing would sacrifice Alberta's future." [interjection] Pound all you want, Minister, but that is just a shameful thing to have our Lieutenant Governor read in this House because it's a partisan shot on a government talking point that has been proven to be absolutely false about the opposition, and it's in here veiled as part of a throne speech outlining the vision for this province. It is absolutely shameful that this phrase appeared, and it's shameful that you would support it in the way in which you just did, Minister. But I guess not much surprises me anymore.

I'm looking forward to seeing what the Edmonton and Calgary city charters have to bring. That's going to be an interesting debate. As I referred to earlier in my member's statement, from the bottom of page 7, "your government will renew the long-term funding commitment to the Municipal Sustainability Initiative." Well, there we go again as I refer back to broken promises. In 2012 the Premier promised to take the municipal sustainability initiative from $846 million, and then the next year it was going to go up to $1 billion, and in 2014 and years afterwards it was going to $1.6 billion year after year after year. Well, what happened? Apparently because of economic fury she broke the promise, and it was left at $846 million. Well, it's encouraging to see that that broken promise will be rectified, and I'm looking forward to seeing on Thursday to what extent. Are they going to go right to the $1.6 billion as was promised in the election campaign? Who knows what they're going to do.

Talking about the flooding, the "government will make firm the commitment to build community mitigation projects." Definitely important. I'm excited to see what they're doing with new flood hazard mapping as well. The flood hazard mapping, as we all know, was a very critical debate that we had here back in the fall session, something the Wildrose pushed for very, very, hard. I'm happy to see that the government has included this in part of their move forward.

At the bottom of page 8 we get into some of the education issues. Now, this has been a hot topic in Alberta, particularly around the curriculum and assessment piece in education. I have to say that I was a little surprised to hear the Minister of Education today stand and suggest that he was going to change course and he was going to ensure that knowledge and understanding and the multiplication tables in education systems throughout the province will remain as requirements in the Alberta curriculum, which has not been the case recently as per many media reports and a 7,000-signature petition that will probably be tabled in this House at some point. It is an encouraging development.

But at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, this is a document that really doesn't hold a lot of weight. It's not really much of a vision. The Premier was talking about putting forward a vision for the next 15 to 20 years. All I see here is a document that will try to hang on or allow this government to hang on to the thing that it craves most, which has been power, that it has had for 43 years. I'm a little disappointed, as I laid out, that some of the overtly partisan remarks were put into this speech, that we had to put our Lieutenant Governor through reading some of that.

I look forward to seeing what actually comes from this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the hon. member to comment particularly on issues dealing with flood mitigation. I understand that it was brought up in the speech. I know that not just High River but Calgary and a community in my own constituency, Sundre, suffered greatly during not just the last flood but previous floods going back in history. The government now has claimed to make it a commitment, but I'm not sure where this is leading to. I was wondering if the member would care to comment on the government's proposal to deal with flood mitigation and the issues with our watersheds.

Mr. Wilson: Well, I thank the member for the question. I think one thing that we learned this past spring was that we need to do everything that we can to be prepared. It is encouraging to see that the government is taking mitigation very seriously. I think it's something that we need to act on as soon as possible because, as we're all aware, political will to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on flood mitigation will dissipate the further away we get from a natural disaster like what we experienced in the spring of 2013.

I think that it's a good step forward that they struck the task force. They seemed to come up with some interesting ideas around the dry dams on the Elbow and Sheep and other rivers. There's extensive work that's being done in High River already to this day. I think that we're going to see some of this being covered as we go through our supplementary supply estimates through the Municipal Affairs budget.

I think it's critical that this government does work with municipalities and makes sure that they have the funds available to them to properly set up a mitigation plan for their communities, in particular Calgary, where the majority of our businesses downtown were impacted fairly severely. As one of the economic drivers of this province, which is, in turn, the economic driver of our country, I think that protecting downtown Calgary and the areas around it is critical.

There are some very interesting projects that have been floated, Mr. Speaker, particularly the underground tunnel that would go from the Glenmore reservoir flowing through to the Bow River under the 58th Avenue. I guess it's going to go underground. It's a fascinating project. It's a pipe that could be eight metres wide from what I've read. It could take up to, I believe, 650 cubic metres per second, which is a substantial amount of water. It's thinking outside of the box, which is, I think, something that we recognize that we may have to do a very good job of. I hope and pray, as do, I'm sure, all members of this Assembly, that we do not get hit with another disaster of the nature, size, and scope that we did in 2013 before we have the opportunity to get these very important mitigation projects built to their fullest extent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I do have some more time. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to ask my colleague. I, too, paid very much attention to the throne speech, as we all did, and I paid particular attention to their continued commitment to supporting municipalities. I was looking forward, as the member was, to seeing us maybe getting back to where the MSI was promised to be, as the member has said. In our supply estimates that were handed out just a little while ago, I see that the MSI, the municipal sustainability initiative, has gone from a whopping $846 million with a huge increase to $847,000,570. That's not much of a commitment, so I'd like to get the member to respond to that.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, are you referring to the supplementary supply estimates for the finalization of the current year, or are you referring to the comments from the throne speech?

Mr. Rowe: Supplementary supply estimates.

The Deputy Speaker: The member might attempt, but I think you're mixing two items there.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would concur with your assessment. I believe that what we'll see on Thursday will be a massive injection of cash into the MSI fund, and that will be for Budget 2014 moving forward as opposed to supplementary supply estimates for this current fiscal year. But it is a good question and something that we should be watching very closely.

As noted earlier – and one knows that I like repeating phrases like this – it was a broken promise by this Premier. Hopefully, this government will do what it can to rectify that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I have a very short list of people that wish to speak. My next speaker will be the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Alberta Liberals I'm pleased to reply to the Speech from the Throne for the Second Session of the 28th Alberta Legislature. The Alberta Liberals will work hard to build a strong economy and a strong society. Alberta Liberals want a fiscally prudent, socially progressive, and environmentally responsible government at home and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate to live in the best province in the best country in the world, where the people cherish democracy, personal freedoms, and the rule of law. As Albertans we are blessed with an abundance of natural resources which are in high demand across the country and the world. Our greatest resource, however, lies in the character, the work ethic, and the potential of our people. Hard-working, industrious men and women have built this great province, and we owe them a debt of gratitude. They have braved many challenges, and they have made this a better place for their families, a more welcoming place for newcomers, and a better world for us. Alberta is a place where hope meets opportunity. Many continue to arrive here every day from across the world to make a better life for themselves and their families.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a good economy, and it thrives in spite of government policies, not because of them. We do well as a province despite our grossly unfair flat-tax scheme that sees multi-millionaires pay the same small percentage as a single mother earning minimum wage. Nor is it due to the poor environmental record this government has created for Alberta, a poor record which is making it very difficult for us to get the needed pipelines built so that we can get our product to market. Instead of solutions, this government offers nothing more than foot-dragging and exercises in political spending.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta succeeds because of the vast natural wealth with which our province is blessed and because of the hard work of everyday Albertans working to make a better life for themselves and their children. This government will see all of their prosperity squandered in one generation with current policies, saving peanuts while other jurisdictions by comparison have put away hundreds of billions of dollars in less time. It would launch a direct assault on the people who built this province by bullying them into contract negotiations and denying them fair compensation.

It would cram our children into overcrowded classrooms while promising to build badly needed new schools, many of which will be nothing more than portable trailers loosely thrown together in a field. It would saddle our young people with crushing student debt and limit their educational choices.

It would see people languish in hospitals because this government neglects to invest in nonprofit, community-based home care and long-term care, as a result wasting hundreds of millions of dollars and leading to cancelled surgeries and lost workplace productivity, all while subsidizing private companies, many that are outside of this province, that can neither reduce the costs of health care nor deliver the high quality Albertans expect and deserve.

It would treat local governments, who are directly responsible to the vast majority of Albertans, as wards of the state or administrative puppets serving the interests of the provincial government instead of the residents who elected them. No, Mr. Speaker, this is not the way to build a strong Alberta economy.

If there is one thing that Albertans have seen clearly over the last couple of years, it's that the Conservatives' fiscal management – or should I say mismanagement? – leaves much to be desired. To say that it has expensive tastes would be a massive understatement, as evidenced by first-class flights and very expensive hotels. I have reminded the government at every opportunity that we are here to serve the public, not to be served by the public. We need to find out where all of our money is going, end the government's wasteful spending, and ensure that we're getting the best value for taxpayer dollars so that we can provide Albertans with the level and quality of services that they pay for and deserve and desperately need at a time of growth.

This year's throne speech, with all of its chest thumping about the economy, raises one very important question that Alberta Liberals want the government to answer. Mr. Speaker, what good is a strong economy if you don't have a strong society? The words in this Speech from the Throne are not backed up by the brutal cuts in the 2013 budget. The effects of the cuts will be felt by Albertans for years to come. This is a time to build this province, but the budget from last year will hurt the province for the years ahead and hurt our ability to build a strong economy and a strong society.

In fact, one thing I saw missing in the Speech from the Throne – well, a couple of things. You know, the Premier didn't even mention ending child poverty. She made a commitment to end child poverty in five years. We're year 3 into that commitment. Also, the Premier completely omitted the social policy framework, the very policies that will help build a strong society and improve our economy for the future, an economy of innovation, research and development, and technology.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to do something a little different here. I believe that the government has many issues. I believe that what we need to do is propose solutions. This is what an Alberta Liberal government would do. The Alberta Liberals support the energy economy. We believe that it's essential that we get our pipelines to tidewater. We believe that it's essential that we get our pipelines going east, west, and south. The way to get our pipelines to tidewater is to rebuild our credibility on the environment. The Alberta Liberals would bring in world-best practices on the environment, independent monitoring of the environment, and strict enforcement of the rules.

President Obama and the Democratic administration in the U.S. expect us to take meaningful action on carbon as do European partners. By putting a real price on carbon and dealing with the environmental issues, we can remove the barriers that impede our ability to get our pipelines to market. Mr. Speaker, the world wants us to do well in this file. I believe Albertans are ethical, moral, good people, and I believe we are the safest, most reliable source of energy on the planet.

With respect to the economy we also need to cut red tape. Many entrepreneurs have told me that there are too many rules and too much paperwork. In a global marketplace business needs good rules and strong rules. Many in business also say that we need an educated, skilled labour workforce. We have the people, but the people need an education system that meets their needs so that they can meet industry's needs. This is good business, Mr. Speaker.

I believe, also, that when we get our product to tidewater, we as a province and as a country should make an effort to upgrade and refine as much of our product at home, if not in Alberta, at least in our country. The Alberta Liberals would love to see a national energy corridor and a transportation corridor from coast to coast with bidirectional flow of products and people. We need to break down interprovincial trade barriers. We as a country need to work together. I believe that the resources Alberta has been blessed with can benefit the nation more than they are currently benefiting our nation today.

I would like to talk about social policy, Mr. Speaker. One of the major issues for Alberta Liberals is the education system. We would like to ensure that every child in our province and every citizen has a chance to get a world-class education that's affordable, that's accessible, that's of high quality, and that meets the needs of the individual and our society.

Today we have 1,000 fewer teachers and 50,000 more kids in the school system. Over the last four years alone Alberta had one of the highest high school dropout rates in the country, the lowest postsecondary participation rates in the country. The Alberta Liberals would make the largest investment in Alberta history in education, from early childhood to postsecondary.

We need to maintain our schools. We need a massive investment in maintenance of the schools that we currently have. We need to staff our schools appropriately with the right number of teachers, and those teachers need support. We need to ensure that our students are getting the best possible learning experience from their classrooms.

We also do need new schools. Absolutely. The Alberta Liberals will build new schools, not as private-public partnerships but schools as community hubs, schools that would include a cafeteria so children can get breakfast and lunch, schools that will have daycares so working parents who have some kids in school can have affordable world-class daycare, child care, many of them single moms. Mr. Speaker, our schools need to have public health clinics. Let's put not only the school nurse but the nurse practitioner and the whole health care team, the prevention side of the health team, into the schools, what we call wraparound services.

Let's give our teachers the opportunity to teach. Our teachers are being parents and social workers and nurses to many of our children. I believe if we make this investment, it will actually save us money in health care, in the criminal justice system, and in the children and youth services system. An ounce of prevention will save us a lot of money down the pipeline, but more importantly it would improve the lives of our young people and give them the opportunity to do amazing things.

Mr. Speaker, the next billion-dollar idea in Alberta will come from our children. In postsecondary the Alberta Liberals would not only restore the drastic cuts that were made; we would actually make a massive investment into postsecondary education and adopt the recommendations of the Ignite report, one of the largest reports made with the consultation of the teachers and the staff and the students in postsecondary institutions, to make sure postsecondary education is accessible, affordable, of high quality, transferable, and there's full accountability in the system. Today we have amongst the highest tuition and fees in the country and amongst the lowest postsecondary participation rates in the country. It also is hurting our economy, it's hurting individuals, and it's hurting our community.

The Alberta Liberals will care for our seniors. We will do what is necessary to treat them with dignity and respect. The very people that have built this province and this country will live out their lives with dignity, with world-class home care, nonprofit community-based home care and lodge care, and world-class nonprofit community-based long-term care. Alberta Liberals will bring in a drug plan so that seniors can afford their drugs, unlike the government who wants to bring in a drug plan that's a tax on the sick. If seniors can afford to get their drugs, they will actually stay out of the hospital system. We know this investment in a drug plan will actually improve their lives and save us money in the acute-care health system.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about health care. The Alberta Liberals will fix the health care system. In fact, we will bring back the strongest performance and accountability measures in the country, and we will legislate them. In order to achieve those measures, yes, investing in our seniors and the disabled and the community capacity system is essential. We will make sure that every Albertan has a family doctor. We will invest heavily in our family care clinics or primary care networks. We need to have one type of clinic. They need to be one. We will integrate them into acute care and integrate them into seniors' care and into our school system. We will bring in the most robust health care guarantees in the country.

Health care spending is up 43 per cent since 2007. The population is only up by 15 per cent. If you can't manage health care, you can't govern because if you can't manage health care – that's a $5 billion increase since 2007 – the province is either going into debt or you're cutting the very services that keep people healthy and out of the health system, services like education and seniors and disabled supports.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals would give our civil servants, the nurses, the teachers, the front-line responders, the support staff, the very heroes who build this province – we would treat them with respect by repealing Bill 45 and Bill 46, which violate the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Alberta Liberals will not take away their pensions like the Conservative government wants to do. The Alberta Liberals will ensure that the seniors who will retire shortly will not live a life in poverty.

I'd like to talk about infrastructure. Infrastructure is essential for an economy. We need to build the roads and the bridges and the buildings necessary to grow our economy and to serve our society. The Alberta Liberals will invest heavily in LRT in Edmonton and Calgary and green transit to ensure that Albertans have affordable and green transportation. The Alberta Liberals will ensure that our municipal leaders are given the respect, revenue, and shared responsibility that they need to build our cities and towns.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans shouldn't look to the Conservative throne speech for any real solutions to a decades-old problem. There simply aren't any. The throne speech is a eulogy for an intellectually dead and very tired political dynasty. It was a force for good decades ago.

There's only one thing from this speech that growing numbers of Albertans can agree on. It's time for new management, and it's time for change. Not change for change's sake. We don't need to look to the radical right or the far left, that will hurt the economy. We need smart and thoughtful management. Alberta needs a government that knows how to provide both a strong economy and a strong society. An Alberta Liberal government will handle that task. We will get Albertans . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I'll recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member had talked about budgetary measures. I'm just wondering how the Alberta Liberal Party would balance the books. Apparently, this government can't.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member. This is one of the most fundamental questions. The economy: this is as good as it gets. The best employment rates in the country, amongst the highest incomes. Oil is as high as it gets. Gas is at $5. Why are we going into debt? Why aren't Albertans getting the services? Well, I'll tell you why. The Alberta Liberals believe that good ideas should not be rejected because of the source. In fact, the Wildrose has put out some good ideas on how to cut some wasteful spending. I believe all of our political parties can agree on that because that just makes sense. It does make sense, and I give them the credit because it's due.

The Alberta Liberals would implement many of those wasteful spending cuts, and we would go beyond that. In health care alone, better management in health care. Imagine, just a 10 per cent efficiency in health care could achieve possibly a billion dollar savings and better health care. The Alberta Liberals will better manage health care. We're the only party with the solutions to fixing the health care system. That's on the spending side.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, on the revenue side we talked about that we do need to increase our revenue. The way to increase the revenue is to deal with the environmental barriers and get our pipelines to tidewater. There'll be more money coming in for corporations and businesses and companies and government coffers. That just makes sense. It's good economic policy, actually.

The plants: the royalty holidays are over, Mr. Speaker. There's a lot of money coming in. There's a lot of money that's coming in, but we also believe we need to go back to a progressive income tax. A progressive income tax would actually be a tax cut for the majority of Albertans. We did some research and found that the progressive tax that Premier Lougheed brought in was 44 per cent of the federal tax bracket. In fact, the taxes used to be 7.48 per cent for low-income Albertans and 12.76 per cent for high-income Albertans. So the flat tax that was brought in in 2001 was actually a tax increase for the vast majority of Albertans.

The Alberta Liberals understand that if you cut taxes for working families and cut their school fees and cut their bills that they've got to pay for electricity and gas, when working families have money in their pocket, they have money to spend on a better house, a better car; they eat out. We believe that's actually good for the economy. With the policies of trickle-down economics, where you give a few billionaires a whole bunch of money, well, all that trickles down is burdens.

The Alberta Liberals are the party that believes that if you invest in middle-income and low-income working Albertans, if you invest in education, health, literacy, and make sure that they've got money in their pockets, we'll have a stronger economy and a stronger society. And if we do that, we will also save money in the criminal justice system, in the children and youth services system, the health care system. These systems are the symptom of a lack of investment upstream. That's exactly how we will not only balance the budget, but we will actually save money and get our citizens the services they need: a good education system, a good health care system, good public infrastructure. Not only a good social policy, they're actually economic enablers for the economy of the future.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for asking me a very complex question to a very complex problem. I believe that if we all as legislators work together, we could all build a strong economy and a strong society and a better Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw on 29(2)(a). You've got about a minute.

Mr. Wilson: Yes, sir. Thank you. I appreciate it, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, you acknowledged that men and women built this province; however, reading this document, you would almost assume that the PC government built this province. Would you care to comment on that?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, hon. member. I didn't want to be too negative about the Speech from the Throne, but it did look like more of an election document. It was lacking in humility. Really, it's regular, everyday, hard-working people, the heroes, who have built this wonderful province, not a political government. It's our seniors who built this province. In fact, many of them who built this province never voted for this current government. They built it before this government ever came into existence. It's the moms and dads right now who work hard every day who are building this province, and our children will continue to build this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Next speaker. I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm absolutely thrilled to stand up and make some comments in regard to the Speech from the Throne. I've been here a long time. Honestly, I hate saying that because it dates you. You know, you think, "Oh, my gosh," when you start reflecting. The last time I stood up and spoke to a Speech from the Throne was shortly after I got elected in 1993, and I can tell you that that's 21 years ago.

It's been interesting to watch what has happened over all those years and all the different speeches from the throne that have taken place since then. It always used to excite me, listening to it. I thought it was a great ceremony, and I listened intently to what the LG had to say. I've been around long enough to know that this is a back-and-forth sort of negotiation, that this is what the government wants in the speech, this is what the LG is prepared to say, and at the end of the day, after much back and forth, it gets approved.

I was really kind of looking forward to hearing what was going to be said in the Speech from the Throne yesterday because, if you recall, we haven't had a Speech from the Throne for the last two years. You know, that's unusual. I haven't gone to any debating to find out exactly if there has been a period where there wasn't a Speech from the Throne for two years. It's a speech that kind of sets the agenda for where the government is going, what they are doing, a time to tell Albertans what the agenda is.

It was interesting for me to listen and see where this government is going in regard to what they're going to do on behalf of Albertans. You know, words are interesting. I find that sometimes you have to sit back and put the 24-hour rule in place and take some time to read it. Throughout this whole speech I haven't identified anywhere – and one of the members can stand up and correct me – where it talks about the openness, the accountability, and the transparency that this Premier alluded to when she first got elected. You know, they talk about working hard and innovative ideas.

The other thing that's missing in here that I have found interesting: nowhere does it even mention telling the truth to Albertans. I know that's a word that we have to be very cautious on.

I've had the privilege, if I can say this, of being on both sides of the House, and I say that in all honesty and all fairness. I was elected in 1993 as a PC, had what I consider probably the most privileged and honoured time working under the Premier at the time, Premier Klein, and have a deep, deep, deep amount of respect for the man and learned so much under his leadership and with some of the colleagues that were with me at the time. In fact, I had so many mentors over there at that particular time that I sometimes wonder if when I first got elected in 1993, they all of a sudden thought that they had a Siamese twin because to me I was beside them right from the beginning, sucking up as much energy and as much knowledge as I could from them because I had, as I indicated, a great deal of respect.

What I found under that leadership, under that particular Premier, Mr. Speaker: it was rocky. In 1993 that particular Premier had an agenda, and he said that he was going to balance the books. I know there are a couple of my colleagues over there that were with me in 1993. Calgary-Cross comes to mind. Lesser Slave Lake was there. It was an interesting period of time. We've heard Premier Klein talk about how there wasn't a protest that we didn't go through every day. I remember coming home one day to my husband and breaking down and saying: "You know, nobody likes me. Everybody hates me." He said: "Yeah. You're going to go to the garden and eat worms next, I'm sure." But this was the agenda that was focused on, and this was what we were going to do.

What I find so interesting about the building Alberta plan – and I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I hate that slogan out of all the slogans I've seen this government do since 1993. They talk about their building Alberta plan, and my colleague earlier today talked about his school, and we see these multiple big signs – I see all these big signs – yet to this day I haven't seen a shovel. If anybody could even show me a shovel. I appreciate the fact that we're promising . . . [interjections] I hear some words over there. I think it's the Solicitor General.

The Deputy Speaker: You've got the floor, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, he still hasn't learned in this Legislature that I'm hearing impaired, so all I get is a muffled noise from him, and that's probably . . .

Mr. Hale: You're lucky.

Mrs. Forsyth: Lucky that I can't hear him. You know, I find it interesting that the Solicitor General and the Associate Minister of Public Safety, who are supposed to be representing the people of Alberta, can't sit quietly and listen to some of the comments I have to make. [interjection] He's going again, and fortunately I can't hear him.

We talk about their two-year mandate, and then they've delivered this government's first Speech from the Throne. It contained the following message.

Over the next four years, this government will . . . deliver and fulfill a clear, focused, target-driven mandate. Albertans will know where the province is headed and how progress is being made, because this is a government that will stay true to its promises.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I've given up counting how many promises have been broken by this particular government, and I'm sure we would have no problem tabling how many broken promises this particular government has. You know, I can give you a ton of examples under health care. I can give you a ton of examples as simple as promises that the Premier made prior to when she was running for the leadership about all the things that she was going to do, and it's just been one broken promise after another broken promise.

You know, as Health critic for the last four years I don't even know what to say on the health care file other than the fact that the health care professionals in this province truly, truly, truly are the ones that need to get a standing ovation day in and day out for the jobs that they do under very difficult circumstances. I hear daily about when people get into the system and how well they do and how professional the people in the system are.

What we continuously hear about are the cancelled surgeries, the wait-lists, the quarterly reports that this government was so adamant they were going to do. Now we're not even getting a quarterly report; we're kind of getting a half sort of a quarterly report, maybe not so much a quarterly report on what they're doing, which I think really is a tragedy, quite frankly. If there was one thing that I did respect about Alberta Health Services, it was the quarterly reports. Even though they were failing on many of their performance measures, at least they put it in black and white, and at least they showed that they were making some progress.

You saw today when we had the people up from Slave Lake on the FCCs that the answers we got back from the minister truly were sad. Albertans, quite frankly, are onto his answers when he answers things in the Legislature. The amount of FOIPs that we're getting, and the amount of brown envelopes that we're getting. I tweeted a little while ago that it makes my day when I hear from a leak or I get a brown envelope or I get a FOIP because none of them lie. Quite frankly, when you have it in black and white – I think it's 86 pages of a FOIP that I'm trying to go through right now just on one and then another 81 pages on another. You have to go through that, and these kinds of things don't lie. The dickering that we have to go through back and forth just to get these FOIPs released, and then they have them all blacked out because there's something within the FOIP legislation. You know, it's some sort of confidentiality under 23(1). I can appreciate that.

I guess for me and on behalf of Albertans if the government could talk about when they're going to build these. The Minister of Infrastructure answered the question today in regard to the school, I think, in Blackfalds that my colleague asked him about. I'm not a builder. I'm not a plumber. I don't know other than that I'm in major renos at this particular time and I see the problems and the delays that I have and others have in regard to when they're doing major renovations. I don't know how the heck he's going to do, I think, 50 new schools and 70 renovations in two years. I'm not a rocket scientist. I just don't know how these are going to be built. The Minister of Infrastructure, no question, is going to be out there with his own shovel, making sure that this stuff gets done, because otherwise it's not going to get done. Are all of us . . . [interjections] Oh, he's saying something also. You know, I've known him for a long time, when he was an alderman and when he was running for mayor, so I'm sure that he will get that school done if he has to even use his own shovel and will provide us with information.

The other thing that I find fascinating in this is that they talk about that "375 programs have already been reviewed under Results-Based Budgeting, with the third phase set to begin and be fully completed this year." I would imagine that falls under the Minister of Finance. I stand to be corrected on that, but I do think that it was his initiative or the Premier's. I would love to know and to get some details about his results-based budgeting. I can tell you as the critic for Health that I haven't seen any results-based budgeting in Health. In fact, we're having some very interesting conversations back and forth with AHS in regard to some numbers that they've recently put out that they can't seem to find. We'll be bringing that to the minister's attention to find out just exactly how they're going to go back and rationalize that to Albertans.

The family care clinics. This is one of my favourites. "Your government is already working with communities across Alberta to develop the first wave of Family Care Clinics that are open later and provide health care closer to home. More FCCs will follow." Well, that's an interesting statement. It doesn't say if it's going to be the 140 that they promised. More FCCs to follow. This is in the Speech from the Throne. More FCCs to follow. Just incredible.

They talk about how "this government will invest in better seniors' care, focusing funding on aging-in-place and on innovative new technology that allows patients to recover in their own homes." Well, we don't have to look back on what's happening to the seniors in our province or some of the horrible, horrible things that we've seen. The government doesn't seem to understand that the fact of the matter is that while we appreciate what they're doing in continuing care spaces, we have seniors in this province that need to be in long-term care nursing beds. These particular seniors, many of them, hundreds of them, for that matter, are still tied up in an acute-care facility. We've had people that have spoken out more often than I can imagine, like Dr. Paul Parks, in regard to the need for building some long-term care nursing beds so these seniors can age in place, because they don't fit into a continuing care model.

I saw that with my own mom, who was in a continuing care facility and ended up in the hospital. The doctor that was taking care of her said to me that we needed to sit down and have the family chat, and that's always kind of not so good. He said that my mom would not be able to return to the continuing care facility that she was already in, that she would have to go into a long-term care nursing bed. He didn't think that he would be able to get her into that kind of a facility because there was no room, and the government wasn't building any more long-term care nursing beds.

You know, you hear these stories, Mr. Speaker, but when they hit you personally, you have to make some difficult decisions. The government needs to understand that there have to be long-term care nursing beds.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2). The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. You have been an outstanding advocate for health care and seniors' care in this province. I'm wondering if you could comment on some things that you would hope to see in this document regarding both health care and seniors' care.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are so many things. I mean, I've briefly touched on them. I think probably one of the most disgusting things that I've seen from this government within the last couple of weeks is how they buried the Wild report, the most anticipated mental health and addictions plan, that this government paid thousands and thousands of dollars for. It's historical. That's how important this report was, and they buried it on February 14 at 4:30 in the afternoon on their website, without any press release or anything, probably a 272-page document on mental health and addictions, which is key to moving people, 1 in 5 people with mental health, 1 in 10 people with addictions. And this government buries it. It's a disservice to the mentally ill in this province and a disservice to people with addictions in this province. They should be embarrassed about doing that, quite frankly.

I can tell you about some of the things in regard to what's happening with our seniors. Health care. I can honestly stand up every day for every question in question period and probably go 365 days in regard to asking the minister and the government health care questions, and they continually tend to BS their way around some of the answers. You know, it really is embarrassing.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be interested in asking the hon. member. I know she was directly affected by the flood of 2013. With the comments in the speech dealing with the whole flood and flood mitigation, I wonder if the hon. member would make some sort of comment on what her expectations were. Or did the throne speech meet those expectations?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we were some of the lucky ones in the floods. We were evacuated on the Thursday night at about 10 o'clock. I had a nice officer at our door, knocking on the door, telling us that we would have to be out of the house in the next hour. We spent most of the time after we were evacuated from the house – my husband and I started off at the drop-in centre, and then we moved out to High River.

This government always seems to want to take the credit for everything, but the problem with taking the credit is that they forget to thank the people who should have had the credit, the thousands of Calgarians and other like-minded Albertans that knew when people were in trouble and went out. We were working with many of my colleagues, including my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. We kind of ended up in the same team, slugging through the mud, carrying stuff out for seniors, and things like that. My colleague from Strathmore-Brooks: for the mom of one of his friends we had a crew out there for days trying to help her out. You know, the government can take the credit, but in retrospect the credit has to go to the absolutely incredible Calgarians and thousands of Albertans that did the job of the government.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Next to speak, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered yesterday by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. There is nothing in that speech that lays out a real vision for this province from this Progressive Conservative government. It barely talks about improving primary health care. It doesn't address fairness for workers. It forgets altogether the Premier's promise to end child poverty. I want to tell Albertans what the New Democrat vision for Alberta is. This is the Speech from the Throne, were we to be the government, that we would deliver in this House.

Alberta is a great province. It's a province that I'm proud to live in. It's a province fortunate to have great natural resource wealth, but the most important resource in this province, the resource that our prosperity is truly based on, is Albertans themselves.

Albertans have told this government what they want. They want a government that invests in essential services like health care and education. They want to see the government plan for a prosperous future by developing our oil sands carefully and intelligently. Albertans believe in fairness. They believe in protecting the vulnerable, working to end poverty, especially for children, and caring for Albertans with disabilities. They want a government that builds schools and hospitals but ensures that they are properly staffed. But they also want balanced budgets, and they want to see fair, competitive taxation that gives a break to middle-class families while ensuring that the very wealthy in our society pay their share. Those are New Democrat values, too, Mr. Speaker.

There are four pillars that a New Democrat government would depend on: first, to develop a strong fiscal plan to fund the province's needs; second, to create the economic conditions for long-term prosperity that includes everyone; to protect the clean air, water, and land that will sustain Alberta for generations to come; and finally, to deliver the public services that Albertans need and expect.

New Democrats believe that it's past time for us to put our finances on a firm footing. More than 20 per cent of operational spending in Alberta is funded from oil and gas royalty revenues, which are notoriously volatile and which see us at risk of cutting our core services and laying off teachers and nurses every time the price of oil drops. We can do better than that, Mr. Speaker. We must do better than that.

Alberta has a structural problem with revenues. Cuts to corporate and personal income tax for high-income individuals have drastically reduced the revenue we receive and have given a massive tax break to the very wealthy. Moreover, our royalty framework continues to bring in the lowest returns in the world on oil and gas resources. We've lost out on billions and billions of dollars that could have gone to our provincial treasury to fund essential services and to fund savings for the future. While our ability to fund essential services has been negatively impacted, middle-class families have had to pay more than their fair share in taxes.

A New Democrat government would embrace competitive taxation while ensuring that we have a stable source of revenue to fund the services we need. When the wealthy pay their fair share, Mr. Speaker, we can provide lower taxes for the middle class. Of course, we also know that Albertans want balanced budgets, and we believe that revenue reform is the best way to deliver the services Albertans expect and deserve while balancing the provincial budget.

An Alberta New Democrat government would plan for a thriving, sustainable economy, which includes everyone. It's a prosperous province, Mr. Speaker, and all Albertans need to share in that prosperity. The public-sector employees of this province help us deliver the services that Albertans expect and deserve. Bills 45 and 46 and sudden dramatic changes to pension plans are a poor repayment for the hard-working employees who keep our province healthy, maintain our roads, and work with vulnerable Albertans. An Alberta New Democrat government would immediately repeal both bills 45 and 46. We would work with unions to negotiate a fair contract for all public-sector employees. A government that fails to reach a fair contract with its workers is, quite simply, a government that has failed to do its job.

Prosperity for Albertans should mean security for Albertans as they age. Albertans need a government that delivers quality of life after retirement, which means a government that protects pensions and works to expand the number of people in the province with access to good pensions. An Alberta New Democrat government would join in the calls for an expanded Canada pension plan, which has been blocked by the government of the province of Alberta, and not continue to block improvements that would dramatically improve the quality of life of retired Albertans.

We would also seek to negotiate fairly and openly with plan members and unions to ensure that public-sector pensions provide guaranteed benefits and a fair, livable retirement for the people who work to make our province great year after year.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's oil sands are an essential part of the economy of this province, and they're the source of much of the prosperity that this province enjoys, but the New Democrats believe we could be doing so much more to build on and to protect our oil sands prosperity. Upgrading more of our resources here in the province would deliver good, long-term jobs for Albertans long into the future.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize that our prosperity requires access to more markets than just the United States, but we also know that it's time to do a better job of balancing development with a long-term, value-added strategy and a plan to protect Alberta's air, land, and water.

Mr. Speaker, power prices in this province are far too high. Gaming the system by power corporations has become almost routine. A New Democrat government would reregulate the industry, starting with the residential and small-business electricity rates.

We need to do a better job of protecting our air, land, and water. We need better public transit in our cities, better environmental protection, a strategy to deal with tailings ponds, and real regulation on the use of water, on flaring, and on drilling in urban areas. Monitoring of energy projects must be independent and science based. For too long our energy regulations have simply been a rubber stamp on development projects. The boards are stacked with industry friends and insiders and lack the balance that they need. Citizens, First Nations, and environmental groups are all stakeholders, and they all deserve a seat at the table when we discuss the future development of our resources.

A New Democrat government would focus on developing a world-class renewable energy institute. We would look into the options for Alberta's energy future and develop a future for this province that will be prosperous long after our natural resources run out.

Alberta's New Democrats also share a vision with all Albertans for better public services. Year after year Albertans say that investing in health care, education, and other essential services is their priority. That would be our priority as well. We'd fix Alberta Health Services, and we'd protect and expand public health care.

Mr. Speaker, public health care isn't something just as a talking point. It's been shown over and over again that the best, most cost-effective health care is publicly delivered health care, yet in this province we are too dependent on private delivery and the corporate model for Alberta Health Services, that has created chaos in our health care system. The system is more top heavy and less responsive to the needs of today's Alberta families. While the professionals who work in our health care system report feeling less supported in the crucial work that they do, spending on administration has increased, and services have not improved. A New Democrat government would abolish Alberta Health Services altogether and bring the governance of the public health system back under the control of the Ministry of Health.

We'd make major investments in health care with a common-sense, targeted, and fully costed plan for the $1 billion yearly increase in federal health transfers, that Alberta will begin receiving this year, investing in long-term care and home care, reducing prescription drug costs for seniors and low-income Albertans, supporting mental health care, expanding our medical and nursing programs, and protecting public laboratory services in Alberta. We'd continue to invest in community clinics to improve access for families across the province in rural and in urban areas.

Ensuring excellent education and care for our young people from child care to kindergarten through to postsecondary is another area where Albertans expect investment and excellence. Sadly, it's yet another area where years of Conservative failure have damaged the system. Child care in Alberta is far too expensive for ordinary families. We would work to create a child care strategy that ensures that parents living in a province where people already work the most in Canada aren't working still more hours just to pay for high-quality child care.

We'd end the failed P3 model for building schools and return to a traditional financing model to build schools where they're needed. An Alberta New Democrat government would finally do the necessary work with municipalities and school boards to solve overcrowding and to revitalize schools in older communities.

For young people looking for a postsecondary education and training, it's vital that we restore programs at Alberta's colleges, universities, and trade schools. As the province with a post-secondary participation rate that's already the lowest in Canada, Alberta needs a strategy to ensure that our young people are developing the skills and the knowledge they need for a successful, prosperous future. The Alberta New Democrats would strike an affordability task force to work with young Albertans to ensure that postsecondary education is accessible, affordable, and attractive. For a start, we'd put a real freeze on tuition fees and work to deliver a ban on mandatory noninstructional fees as well.

As Alberta's government New Democrats know that we can do better. We can provide the public services that Albertans need and expect. We can give our young people the skills, knowledge, training, and opportunities to be part of the most prosperous workforce in the country. We can strengthen and protect our public health care system. We can balance the budget. We can make things easier for middle-class families. We can ensure that Albertans get the prosperity that we all deserve from the resources that we all own together.

We believe that Alberta is a great province, a province with great natural resource wealth and fabulous people. It's time for those people to have a government that respects what they want, what their families' needs are, and what they're asking for. That's the kind of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, that we can all be proud of.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for your speech there. I was wondering if you could offer some comment on the insinuation that difficult decisions that were made in Budget 2013 are going to put our province on the path to a balanced budget as per what was written in this speech.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you for that question, hon. member. I think that when the government betrays the trust of the people that elected it, their favourite euphemism is to say that we had to make difficult decisions. They only made some kinds of difficult decisions: difficult decisions to cut persons with developmental disabilities, to cut postsecondary education, to break their promise on child poverty, and so on. Those were the difficult choices they did make.

The difficult choices they didn't make were to look at the revenue system that we have in our province and make sure that everybody is paying their fair share. They didn't make a decision to look at the royalty regime that we have in this province, and they didn't make a decision to cut wasteful government programs that are subsidies to big business; for instance, the carbon capture and storage program. Those are the decisions they didn't make. The decisions that were made I think will do very little to put us back on a firm footing financially.

I know that the government is not willing to examine the taxation system in our province. They're not willing to reverse corporate tax cuts or tax cuts for the wealthiest of Albertans, so they depend more than ever on volatile royalty revenue, which is a roller coaster. We even had the Minister of Finance use that term the other day. We have to get off that roller coaster. We can't be laying off nurses and teachers every time the price of oil goes down. But that's the kind of situation we're in.

Now there are additional government revenues – we heard that from the Finance minister – but he says that they're not going to invest in more spending for the social programs that they've cut. Instead, they want to rebuild the fund so that they can go through it all again. So the question really is: will we get out of the cut-and-add, cut-and-add, debt, pay-down-debt, more debt, pay-down-debt kind of roller coaster, that kind of unstable financial planning for the province under this Progressive Conservative government? No, I don't think we will. I think that it's going to take a government that's prepared to put our financial position on a firm footing and deal with the structural fiscal imbalance that exists in this province so that we can have balanced budgets and the kinds of programs that Albertans expect without having them cut every other year.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a response to the throne speech, there's something that I was quite disappointed in, particularly when we talked about the agreements between Alberta and B.C. to get our oil and gas to the coast. It's significant because it has to do with the environment. The speech had an absence of any commitment to address environmental issues, and that's significant because all of our abilities to access markets are being hindered by our record or the perception of the lack of a record of dealing with the environment. Without addressing this, we're basically not just handicapping the ability to help our industries access the market, but we are also doing a disservice to the average Albertan, who desperately wants clean water, clean air, and clean land, without a doubt.

Universally, across this province, people do want a clean environment. They want a good environmental policy. They want a good environmental record. What we have is a situation where in the last year we have experienced the largest coal mine disaster ever to leach into a riverway in Canadian history. That's the Obed coal mine disaster. Currently there are no changes to policy. There is no mention of what we would do differently to prevent this from happening again. We also still have the issue of the condition of the Athabasca River. As a result, is there going to be any mitigation? We're dealing with heavy metals that do not dissolve. Unfortunately, the minister previously had said that they would dissipate or dissolve in the river, but that's not true. That's not science based.

We have significant issues, and these issues plague us as a province. It plagues our economy if we're not able to address them to the satisfaction of the everyday Albertan, if we're not able to address these issues to the satisfaction of the marketplaces that we're trying to access. When this government looks at some of the issues that are hindering the building of our pipelines, all those hindrances are based on environmental concerns. If you look at Nebraska dealing with the XL pipeline, it's all about water. It's all about the pipeline going through an aquifer. If you look at the Gateway, going to the B.C. coast, First Nations are concerned about the river crossings and are concerned about the safety and the likelihood of having leaks.

Now, what's missing in the formula is that our industries have the technology, and they have the qualified people. We have the ability to actually do something to set the record straight, but we're not doing it. Hence, what we have is, in essence, hollow words. The words are good. The intentions may be well meaning, but if they're not followed by action, then everything is for naught. It's the action that actually makes that commitment a reality, and what we're not seeing here is action. Clearly, this is a problem for this government. It's a problem for all Albertans.

I want to give a microexample of the words not following the actions. The little community of Bentley, Alberta, which is in my constituency, has a highway 12 bypass. This government likes to take credit for things that it doesn't do. Unfortunately, now it's going to get credit for doing something terribly wrong. They stuck up a big building Alberta sign, which is wonderful. We really like the building Alberta signs. It helps the sign companies stay in business. It contributes to our economy. Unfortunately, they've got a big building Alberta sign where the government decided to start the construction of a bypass and then cancelled it. They cancelled it after it broke ground, allowed the runoff to violate our environmental laws, and there it lies in an absolute mess.

The community of Bentley is going to celebrate their centennial this summer, and we only have a matter of a few months to do one of two things, either complete the project – I don't expect the minister to be able to get it done. Hopefully, he would stand up and say that he can guarantee that he'll get it done, but I'm not expecting that. What I am expecting is for him to address the issue and say: we're at least going to clean it up so that when you hold your centennial, it doesn't look like we've trashed your community. That's not an unreasonable request from this community. Here we have the whole premise of building Alberta, but what we don't really have is the follow-through and the actions of actually building.

We're seeing the same with schools. I for one would desperately like the government to follow through and actually do what it says it's going to do. Unfortunately, even the builders who are dealing in this industry, who are dealing with the government, are all saying in unison that they will not have these schools built on time, not on the time frame this government has said. Now, I would like these builders to be wrong. I would like this government to be right. But what I can't see, even from this speech, is where there's a connection from what the government is saying through to a fruition, where they will actually accomplish their goal. That's not visible, but what is visible is that the government is going to be consistent in what it's been doing, which is not getting the job done. Clearly, we have a disconnect between this speech and the reality of what's happening out in Alberta.

Now, another example is seniors' care. In seniors' care we've got some significant issues, but I'll just deal with a couple of issues that I'm quite familiar with in my constituency, and those have to do with the long-term care out in Rocky Mountain House. We have a situation where we have a new seniors' facility, that the ribbon was cut on last year. All well and good. That started under Ed Stelmach, and we saw the follow-through. It took years to do it.

But what happened in the process is that we've cut funding for the operation of our long-term care in that facility, where those front-line workers cannot meet the commitment of Alberta Health, which is to provide even two baths a week. They can't do it. They're not staffed and they're not funded to get it done. The problem is that more and more staff are being cut back. Now we have seniors who are in critical need of getting their meals to them on time. A lot of these meals now have to be reheated in a microwave because they sat too long, and they got cold. Anyone here who knows anything about eating out or eating anywhere knows that if you have to continually reheat food, it takes away from the quality. So they get a lesser quality product. They get a lesser quality meal.

What's happening here – and to a T every one of the front-line health care workers in this long-term care facility in Rocky Mountain House will testify that this now is an extreme example, and it's a critical situation, where proper care is not being delivered. It's not for wanting to deliver the care; it's just that the resources are no longer there in that operation to provide that care. The cutbacks have been too great. We have an imbalance in the system. I wish Rocky Mountain House was the only place, but it's not. We're seeing it elsewhere, in other places in the province, and this is a real issue that affects us.

I just want to come back to the issue of dealing with the environment because it's something that's been haunting the enforcement on environmental issues. It's woefully lacking. I used this example once in the House. I'll use it again. Unfortunately, I'll probably use it multiple times because it has not been resolved. Anyone can understand that when there's a question about environmental damage, you want an adjudicator. You want to determine: what was the damage? What was the extent of the damage? Who was responsible for the damage? I think we all understand that type of process. We want a fair and reliable process that gives the public confidence that justice can be served.

In the case of the Bilozer family we have an issue where none of those requisites are in question. Imperial Oil was found guilty. Imperial Oil admitted it. Alberta Environment has issued multiple – multiple – enforcement orders in the last 20 years, yet nothing has been done to clean up this quarter section belonging to this family. That is just absolutely unreasonable, that you could go to that length and still not have the ability as an organization – this would be Alberta Environment or in the case now of the Alberta Energy Regulator. They cannot just make this company do what they said it should have done 15, 20 years ago, do what they said it should have done 10 years ago or even five years ago. We still have not cleaned up the damage, the environmental damage.

Again, I wish this was the one example, a one-off example, that we could just isolate. Unfortunately, it's becoming the norm for the average property owner in Alberta who has suffered environmental damage. That should not be the case. Again, I understand if that's in question – what the damage is, who's responsible, to what extent the damage is – everybody understands that, but when those questions are answered and enforcement orders are issued, there should never ever be hesitation or delay in the execution of an enforcement order because that's when people lose confidence that we're doing the right job to protect the environment.

Another item that the throne speech focused on was the whole issue of the MSI and the hope that some expressed that there would be a lot of money – and I mean a lot of money – focused on the MSI going forward. If that amount is measured by the smile on the minister's face, I know it'll be a lot of money, and it should cover all those cuts that took place, going way back, in infrastructure building and at least get us on the path of making up that infrastructure deficit. One of the real criteria that keeps many of the municipal councillors, the municipal mayors up at night is: "What's going to happen here? How is it going to affect me short term? How is it going to affect me long term to build infrastructure for my community?" Again, that's universal right across both the AUMA and the AAMD and C.

Infrastructure is critical to the growth of any community, and I don't think anyone here would argue differently. In order to encourage economic growth, you have to have that in place. Without that, it makes it extremely difficult to grow communities. This is a huge issue. Although the throne speech mentioned it, what I would have liked to have seen is a larger commitment so that when this budget rolls out, these mayors, these councillors, the reeves, and these various municipalities would have the anticipation that they have good things to come because there's going to be long-term, steady funding to meet their needs.

Some of these communities are desperate in the sense that the infrastructure has been lagging for so long. Everyone knows there are pressures on all our communities. They differ from community to community, but I think right across Alberta there are pressures on every community to get their infrastructure caught up with the rate of growth in this province, and we're lagging. I think the minister admits we're lagging. We need a plan and a long-term plan on how we're going to get there.

That takes me to flood mitigation. I know that ministers have met with the community of Sundre. I want to thank them for taking that opportunity. Like High River, Sundre is one of those critical communities that faces imminent threat from the flood potential of spring, just barely a few months away. Now, we have studied the river out there to death. I mean, if you look at the studies that go back 20, 30, 40 years, we've got enough studies that we could build a dam with the paperwork we produced, but the fact is that we've not done anything substantive to mitigate the flood.

Now, you don't have to be an expert to realize that it takes action. In the long term there might be the realization that water storage in the form of a dam is one opportunity or one measure that we could take to mitigate and manage that water system, mitigate the floods but also to manage that water system to prevent future floods and also to provide a recreational area or water as needed during those arid times. That makes sense. But in the short term we need . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his comments on the throne speech. I know he has a lot to say about the environmental side of things, but I'm wondering if he could comment perhaps on the number of times, as reflected in this document, that the government maintains that it is keeping its promises.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't get to mention a lot of things, but I do want to talk about these promises. There's a promise in here by the government to diversify its energy mix, both alternative and renewable energy frameworks, to empower consumers. This is one of those comments that is hollow in this document when you contrast that to this government's actions. The Alberta Utilities Commission just recently cancelled, based on an interpretation of its regulations, a number of private contracts and put out of business a number of solar companies that were viable, that were in business, and it really shook the industry. How do you get a government which says, "This is what we want to do, empower customers' choice," yet the agency that it created, the Alberta Utilities Commission, which it put so much faith in, cancels a number of private contracts without even consulting these people and puts these businesses right out?

What I want to follow up on also is this idea of the Alberta Utilities Commission being the adjudicator of what is going on in the industry right now, which is the price-fixing of our wholesale market. The former Minister of Energy said last May, in reference to this price-fixing, "The hon. member is trying to frighten people with evidence that is unconnected to what people pay for electricity." Unfortunately, that's not true. What people pay for electricity has everything to do with the bottom line on the bill.

When you get a company like TransAlta manipulating electricity prices, that reflects on all those ancillary costs, all those extra costs that are added onto the bill beyond the price of electricity. It's a rigged system against the consumers. These big generators get to charge consumers for the loss of electricity, but they also get to charge consumers for the building of transmission lines, which is free to these big generators. So consumers pay for electricity that they never receive. In doing so, the system is set up so that these companies are allowed to do this. Those are the rules that the Legislature has set up with the Alberta Utilities Commission.

So how will this commission act as an adjudicator? Most jurisdictions don't have the commissions do that in issues of price-fixing. Most jurisdictions have the Market Surveillance Administrator as the adjudicator, as the watchdog, as the agency that issues the penalty. Then if the companies or the individuals don't like that, they have the ability to go to the appeals court.

We don't have that. We've got this little buffer in between. Right now TransAlta is asking for an in camera hearing so the public doesn't have access. I have to tell you that we're going to be watching this closely. If you look at the rules of the Alberta Utilities Commission, they favour the industry to get an in camera hearing. That's how they're set up. I'll be really interested to see if the commission has the ability not to provide that in camera hearing.

That's a sad state of affairs when you look at how we want to protect our consumers, because in the end it's not just Alberta's economy that's being hurt by this gaming. It really hurts, and it makes our seniors suffer, particularly those seniors on fixed income. It really penalizes those people that are on limited income and lower income families. It forces them to make choices.

When you take a look at what's been happening, TransAlta was found guilty of manipulating the California market. They were named in all those allegations, and they were found guilty by the FERC during that Enron scandal back in 2000-2001. They have been found guilty in Alberta now and charged multiple times. So where is the incentive not to do this? Oh, by the way, anyone who knows this industry – one company can't do it alone. They need help to manipulate the prices. How many times have they gotten away that we've not caught them? We know how many times we've caught them.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if we could call it 6 o'clock, and I'll postpone my remarks until I have the full 15 minutes.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the advice of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View we'll call it 6 o'clock and reconvene at 7:30 tonight.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 4, 2014

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Kubinec moved, seconded by Mr. McDonald, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 4]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you wish to speak?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I would. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the throne speech, which I, of course, listened to and read again yesterday. In Edmonton-Calder people are not interested in just words. They're not interested in rhetoric. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Edmonton-Calder has the floor, please. Thank you.

Proceed, member.

Mr. Eggen: People in Calder want action on making life affordable for themselves and for their families. I have a clear and very concise message for this PC government, that is the consensus of the vast majority of people in my constituency in Edmonton and of the rest of this province, too. The message is simple, and it's this. When you keep on breaking promises, people stop believing you. This government promised the moon in order to get elected and proceeded to dismantle each promise after the election. If you keep on breaking promises, Mr. Speaker, people end up stopping believing you.

I found it here again in the throne speech as if somehow an echo or rubbing salts in the same wound that caused so much trouble before. The quote is here, "holding spending below population and inflation growth," from page 10 of the throne speech. This simple directive effectively undermines the budget from last year and, I fear, this coming year as well.

Last year, with similar cuts to spending, broken promises were stacked up like cordwood. The five-year plan to eliminate child poverty has not even been dignified with a mention. Full-day kindergarten has been backtracked considerably, and it is very unclear as to its future. Increasing funding to postsecondary schools: well, we certainly saw a hole blown right through the middle of that one, Mr. Speaker, with significant cuts. I was just speaking at the University of Alberta this evening, and those cuts are real and significant and long-lasting. Delivering a balanced budget by 2013 with no new taxes and no service cuts: this is right from the PC campaign platform. Well, Mr. Speaker, at least I can give it enough credit to say that if you're going to dish out this kind of thing, you might as well make it a whopper.

Albertans are looking for practical solutions that are actually delivered, that will make life more affordable for themselves and for their families. New Democrats went on an extensive prebudget tour like we do every year to listen to people and carefully document what is being said. The results are strikingly similar almost everywhere, with some local variation, of course. I say let's build a throne speech and a budget that addresses these concrete issues that we heard loud and clear in each corner of this province.

In no particular order, Mr. Speaker, the first one that comes to mind is utility rates. Albertans are paying some of the highest rates for electricity in Canada. As we saw with events in these past few days, there is a lot of confusion and, I would say, trouble associated with the same big five power producers controlling the market like they have done before deregulation. Deregulation has only served to push us into a much narrower channel for how we produce electricity in this province and has made it difficult for us to diversify and to make electricity bills more affordable for Albertans. There's a simple solution. It's a solution that's been used right across North America, and we are the outliers on this one. Simple, basic regulation of our utility rates in this province would make life a whole lot more affordable and a whole lot more conducive to small- and medium-sized business to actually build and prosper and diversify our economy here in the province of Alberta.

I was struck right across this province, from Grande Prairie down to Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, with how fast the rental rates are going up for accommodation in this province. Certainly, we would like to see more production of units for people to live in. We're having the largest immigration of population of anywhere in Canada, and quite frankly at this juncture, with rates going up between 6 and 8 to even 11 per cent in places like Red Deer, we need some rental regulation in place, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the workers that we need to drive our economy have a place that they can afford to live in. If you're spending more of your money on rent than you can afford, every other aspect of a family's life starts to fall apart. You have less money available for education for the kids, you have less money to buy good quality food, for transportation, and so forth.

I think, again, that with our economy being so hot, with rental rates going up so quickly, the time has come that we put some regulation in place for our rental markets. It doesn't have to be there all the time, but I think that at this moment Albertans would appreciate a break on skyrocketing rents in this province.

Again, the minimum wage issue has come up as we travelled around the province, and there has always been lots of misinformation around this. Yes, many people are not just earning the minimum wage, but with the lowest minimum wage in Canada here in the province of Alberta, this casts a negative shadow on the wages for service industry people that are earning a little tiny bit more here and there right across the province. Certainly, it's an expensive place to live out there. We all know that. The idea of not having a living wage for someone who is working full-time, I think, is not just unconscionable, but it defies logical thinking as well. Businesses are capable of paying higher wages. They need that regulation to ensure that the minimum wage is put up to a living level and everybody must abide by that.

This whole idea that service jobs are just something for pin money or for kids who live at home: well, you know, I don't think so. Lots of people end up having to have two or three jobs at low wages in order to pay for themselves and for their families to get by here in this province. I don't like it. I don't think it's good business. I don't think it's equitable, nor is it just. That is something that we could do here in the spring session, raise the minimum wage and allow those benefits to pass through wage earners right up to differing scales along the economy.

The whole issue around pensions, again, is a very, very sensitive issue. It's not just a question of people being able to save for their future for when they do retire, but it's a question of the security that goes along with having a pension that you know is going to be somewhat affordable or something that you could live on in the future. The idea of disregarding out of hand participating in a national increase in pension contributions and building and strengthening the Canada pension plan, I think, again, is a mistake that we need to reconsider during the spring session. It's a way by which we can supplement other pension incomes that people might be building towards, and it's a way by which we can provide that security, that people are just not having here now.

We know that the public-sector pension issue has been very hotly contested in these last few weeks and months, and certainly it's something that all Albertans would like to see addressed in an equitable way. When we had more than 2,000 people at Churchill Square in Edmonton on Sunday in minus 35 degrees Celsius, it struck me and I think it should strike everyone in this room that these are not just public-sector workers who are making this plea and protesting the changes to pensions, but it's anyone who knows that we set the precedent for what happens with public-sector pensions, and that can certainly have a direct effect on everyone's pensions and security for the future.

Postsecondary access is something that I'm seeing and hearing from people, and the statistics bear it out as well. We have fewer of our young high school graduates going to postsecondary education, and part of the reason is that it's just not affordable. For many middle-income people in this province with families and all the other pressures of a high cost of living, more people are making that choice to not go to postsecondary school. That's a tragedy that has a slow burn, Mr. Speaker, because it burns right through a person's career and their lifetime, not having adequate postsecondary education and the right sort of postsecondary education. They have to carry that burden of lower wages and poorer jobs around with them until they finally can make it to college or some other form of postsecondary. It's becoming unaffordable. We have the lowest rate of participation, and it's quite shameful. At the very least it's a waste of our most precious resource, which is young people, and certainly on an individual level, on a moral level, and on an economic level it's just a bad choice to make postsecondary so expensive.

I'm hearing as well very clearly that we would like to see something to be done to create affordable daycare in this province at this time. People are working two jobs. We have lots of families with two people working in the family in order to make ends meet, but it becomes prohibitive when you have to pay very expensive rates for daycare.

In jurisdictions around the world where daycare has been made much more affordable, such as in our own Quebec in Canada, it has allowed the economy to move ahead and for family incomes to increase, and all sorts of other benefits have come from affordable daycare. We need it here in this province now. We need to regulate that. It needs to be decommodified in some fundamental way, and we have the power to do that here in the Legislature.

Then, of course, finally, there is a whole host of health care issues that Albertans would like to see addressed. I think that we can do that in this budget coming up, and certainly there would be a universal benefit for all Albertans. We know that seniors' care is becoming much more expensive. We've somehow moved it out of the provincial budget, and so many more people are having to pay for care for seniors with assisted living and so forth. That price, that burden, is often more than families can afford.

As we know, we have an increasingly aging demographic that's moving through our society now. It's not something that we should be worried about because these things come and go. We knew that the baby boom would be passing through our demographic for the last 50 years. It's arrived now, and with planning and with care we can build the public seniors' care that we require for these next number of years.

We saw as well the whole issue around not building more capacity. Because of increased population and the growing economy in our province we're seeing that the pressures on acute care are starting to become more and more of a problem in different cities and towns around the province. We need more of those acute-care beds. We certainly can free them up by building seniors' care that can relieve the pressure on acute-care facilities, but ultimately we need those acute-care spaces in order to have the proper ratio between population and the capacity in our hospitals.

By running our hospitals at such a high capacity now, we overstrain so many aspects of those institutions and the workers that are in those institutions. By running large hospitals, such as the Royal Alex here in Edmonton, at more than 90 per cent, you end up burning out your staff. You end up not being able to provide the care that people need because of strain. Ultimately you end up with reduced health outcomes, especially if you somehow have an extra emergency plopped on top of that, with some sort of outbreak or something like that. Then the whole system is just overstretched and overheated.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's an honour and a privilege to be able to address this august Assembly and give my comments on the throne speech, which has been the first throne speech we've had in a couple of years, which is the time for the government to lay out its case as to what it's going to do for the Alberta people and how it's going to bring about peace, order, and good government and move the issues of the day forward. In my view, yesterday was not quite a banner day for the government. It didn't seem to me that the throne speech contained its usual zip or pomp and circumstance and the like. It seemed to be almost a recognition that we're halfway done a mandate with no clear sense of where to go or what direction to go in, and it just seems to be in a holding pattern.

Now, maybe that is my reading into it, but it seemed almost more like a speech given at a funeral than it would have actually been a throne speech. I've been to I think four previous throne speeches, maybe five, and there seemed to be a little bit more energy in the room, a little more zip, a little more: "My goodness. We're on top of things. We know the direction forward. We've led the government. We've got a handle on things." I didn't get that sense yesterday in the throne speech. Maybe that was me. Maybe that was just what I felt in this room. I guess here we are. We're essentially two years into the Redford revolution, I think, if that's what it was to be called.

Mr. Denis: Names, names.

Mr. Hehr: The hon. Premier's revolution. My apologies.

It has now been, essentially, two years since an election where we were promised a great deal of change and a great deal of hope. I believe some advertisements were: this is not your daddy's PC Party and the like. I think the Premier even advertised herself as being the second coming of Premier Lougheed. There was lots of hyperbole going around. I think there was a lot of thought amongst many progressives, if I can use that term, that it was the progressive hour of the Progressive Conservatives. But not only them, they were going to become even a bigger tent and become the answer to the middle of what, in my view, good government looks like and what the good government looked like under Peter Lougheed, representing that middle ground.

I think that was the thought of many people who were out there who voted for Ms Redford – oh, I'm out of practice, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize; I will get back in the flow – the hon. Premier, in the last election. In fact, I think many people ran for the hon. Premier because we were getting away from a lot of the stuff that we had done over the course of the past 20 years.

If you look at the election platform, my goodness, that promised a lot of stuff in there that I, frankly, liked. Predictable, sustainable funding. Schools – can you believe that? – in neighbourhoods where children live. My goodness. We hadn't heard of building schools in neighbourhoods where kids lived in 20 years in this province. This is a good thing. There was a commitment to public education that I thought had been absent, a move towards full-day kindergarten, something that other jurisdictions have had for a long time, Mr. Speaker. A real bevy of things that I like and, frankly, the voters would like.

You know, we get two years into a mandate, and many of those promises have just gone up in smoke. It was like: we promised them, but did we really have a commitment to follow through and deliver on those promises? Frankly, I think the government full well could have delivered on those promises, but that would have taken some real heavy lifting and real emphasis on getting out in front of the public and leading, leading Albertans to a better place, a better future, a better direction for us not only now but 50 years from now. Here's where I can try and explain where I think the government of the day made the mistake, and we find ourselves at this junction, which I don't think is really a pleasant place for anyone, much less the government, much less the citizens of this great province, and much less future generations.

I think that when the platform was put together, it was made with the recognition that our fiscal structure was broken, okay? People have heard me say this before. By fiscal structure I mean our tax code. Our tax code is the lowest, and we're the lowest tax jurisdiction by a country mile.

If we adopted Saskatchewan's tax code, we'd bring in $11 billion extra, okay? Even if you bring back half of that or even a third of that, you know – let's face it – you can do a lot of stuff. Let's say a third, $4 billion extra dollars. You, essentially, are able to build schools, roads, and hospitals without going into debt. You'd actually be able to keep kids in school right now or be able to teach kids in a more reasonable state.

I know the Minister of Education is here, and we have 51,000 more kids in classrooms today than we did three years ago with a thousand less teachers. Well, that could have helped. You know, you don't have to go whole hog on this stuff. Progressive income taxes essentially would have covered much, much of that shortfall, okay? Really, for most people it would have actually ended up in a tax cut to your middle class.

There are a whole host of ways of doing this to ensure that the platform could have been delivered if the government of the day chose to get out and lead. You know, I also see that there comes a recognition when government should do what maybe not is in their best interests but what is in the best interests for the province's future. I've heard some people on that side say that we should be statesmen, not politicians. I like that line. I like that sentiment, and there have been governments in this country who have been that, who have put the interests of the people ahead of their own political party.

I note the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is here tonight, and largely, I think, he was part of a government who put the interests of the country ahead of their political interests. I'm talking about the Brian Mulroney Conservatives of 1988 to 1992. I thought they did a lot of things that may have not been popular but may have been necessary, okay? I think they got out and led, and I don't actually even think that some of those changes were what lost the election. Other things happened. They got out and led. I think that at the end of the day I didn't like those decisions they made back in 1988, but looking back, 25 years later, I say: "My goodness. There was a government that went out and did big things, fought big issues, brought a sense of government to the people that I think we look back on as being thankful for, and we don't recognize that at the time."

I think that's what bothers me about the government of the day here in Alberta. They did not put the best interests of this province for the long run at the core of their decision-making. It seems to me that they put their political interests to the forefront. The political calculation was: well, if we do any tax reform, whether it be any move of the magnitude that the Brian Mulroney Conservatives did or even lesser moves on the progressive income tax or corporate income tax side, my goodness, the electorate will just not vote us in, and it will be Wildrose government, and it'll be the end of the dynasty.

Well, six of one, half a dozen of another. We're two years in. The decisions they made, anyway, haven't, in my view, corrected the problem that's out there in our society, and I don't necessarily know if the political calculation was right, okay? Sometimes governments have to put themselves in the position of doing what's best for the people. I think that in that respect this government failed miserably.

But with respect to the throne speech, you know, the government also sees a day where possibly two years from now, four years from now, we are back in a position, say, like we were in 2001, with lots of money, okay? I see that day coming. Everyone sees that day coming. Still, if we haven't learned what happened over here in the last 25 years, that we're not building permanent prosperity, that we're tending to run from crisis to crisis to crisis, and that we have spent all the oil and gas wealth over the course of the last 40 years as soon as it's come in, I don't know if we'll ever learn it. To be honest here, guys, four years from now you probably won't hear speeches like this in the Legislature. People will have moved on because governments can only do things at certain times, and this was the time to actually do this, to right Alberta's course for the future.

We'll go back to the period of 2001, where we will all think that we are building that permanent prosperity, where we'll have these endowments and things like this and thinking that Alberta's going to be permanently wealthy forever, but eventually, because of the massive subsidization of the taxpayer, essentially $11 billion dollars compared to other provinces, we will not be building that permanent wealth. We will simply be on a permanent cycle where eventually we're going to be broke one day again. That, Mr. Speaker, I believe is inevitable, for I cannot sit here and tell you that our oil sands – although I hope they do pump for 300 years. I really do. I hope we have that type of prosperity, but to be honest, can I see past 50 years with our oil sands? Maybe. Some people can't see past 30 years, okay? That means, to me, that there's some real risk out there that we could have tried to mitigate against at this time, and we're not going to be able to do it six years from now.

Let's talk to the day-to-day stuff, even, that we're missing despite the fact that we live in this place of alleged wealth, with our economy ticking along, personal incomes up, corporate incomes up, housing sales up, everything up except for government revenues. Really, if any other jurisdiction had our type of economy, would there be an issue with building schools in areas where kids live? Let's look at that specific promise of those 50 new schools built in Alberta. In my view, Mr. Speaker, that's not going to happen. We'll be lucky. We've gone two years into a mandate, and we haven't started building these schools. There are no P3 contracts in place. There's no government funding in place. These schools may be built sometime in and around 2018 if we're lucky. Here's the real rub. By the time all of those schools are built in 2018, we will have had more children move into the province of Alberta. That makes the crowding at our schools even more onerous than it is right now. We're seemingly on this perpetual cycle on where we go, and we didn't deal with those problems there.

In any event, that's probably one of the last times – I tend to go on and on about our fiscal structure, that seems to be the decision of the government of the day, to avoid that big issue and, simply, in my view, the excess of spending all the oil wealth in one generation. Given that's what it is, I think they've missed an opportunity to do what was right for this province for the long run.

In any event, you know, always an honour to speak to this.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me start by saying that this was a misdirected, misleading, and underachieving throne speech.

Mr. Denis: Point of order. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you are rising on a point of order?

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Yes. Point of order: 23(h), (i), and (j) as well as Beauchesne's. The member has used the word "misleading," which was ruled out by your brother Speaker earlier today to be an improper comment, and I would just ask that he withdraw that particular word.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Hon. member, you might like to choose another word to make your point or withdraw that.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you very much. I'm sorry. I will withdraw it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Barnes: Starting with the title of the speech itself, Building Alberta Together, the document misfired. It's Albertans who built Alberta, who build it now, and who will continue to build Alberta in the future. This government needs to simply stay out of the way more to make it happen, and the jargon of the throne speech does nothing for the real progress and the real innovation needed here in Alberta.

It continued to be misdirecting because parts of it were aimed directly at the Wildrose while failing to recognize this current government's continued assault on property rights, individual rights, and front-line workers. It made no mention of the Premier's habit of unfocused globe-trotting and foreign office expense accumulation. It did not focus on the bread-and-butter work here in Alberta.

A continual PC talking point of the Wildrose build-nothing plan was mentioned. Let's get the facts straight. As the Alberta government the Wildrose would actually invest $48 billion over the next 10 years in health facilities, schools, roads, and other necessary government facilities. Our commitment to a provincial public priority list, more competitive bidding, more design/bid/build contracts would ensure more effective and efficient infrastructure spending for all Albertans, and we would not do it on the backs of future generations.

Oppositely, infrastructure projects like schools that are being announced without plans, budgets, and timelines: it will be impossible to complete them on time and not break another election promise. Worse, though, is that this way of building by political announcement and doing it on the backs of future generations will lead to huge inefficiencies, cost overruns, misallocated assets, and reduced value and services for all of us.

The throne speech makes no mention of the PCs continuing to increase the size and mandate of the provincial government. This increase in bureaucracy has been making many nervous as the South Saskatchewan regional plan chugs along with huge concerns about the economic and lifestyle consequences.

The government fails to take responsibility for a huge bottleneck in Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, that has been incapable of formulating plans and policies and not recognizing the good stewardship of ranch and farming families or the many environmentally sound policies of our oil and gas companies. This is of huge importance now, Mr. Speaker, as the sage grouse protection order is in effect in 42 townships, in Cypress-Medicine Hat, and where this may lead to throughout the rest of our province.

The throne speech ended with a section entitled The Next Phase: Opening New Markets. Amazingly, the PC government has made it their priority to focus unrelentingly on selling Alberta to the world and advocating for a Canada free trade zone.

In the 22 months since the last election we have seen the Premier's Canadian energy strategy achieve not a kilometre of pipeline, not a metre of right-of-way or move a litre of diesel fuel. Instead, what we have seen is a $1.3 billion potential subsidy to a for-profit industry, countless trade offices admissions, and a bundle of money spent on government jets.

We measure the success of our elected officials in results, and the Premier's luxurious travels to the four corners of the Earth have produced none. Amazingly, we have a Premier not even willing to wait 10 hours to fly home with the Prime Minister of Canada to discuss the very things she claims she wants to accomplish. Perhaps she could've considered that this is the man she has to talk to, to work with in order to actually achieve some of these things – interprovincial pipelines, trade agreements, and the like – to make Alberta a stronger participant in Canada.

A year ago, in an effort to hide a $17 billion deficit looming two years from then, our Alberta PC government broke our financial situation into three budgets and added billions of dollars in P3 spending that will indebted us and our children for years to come. But this throne speech says that the government will live within its means and balance the budget. That is not a consolidated Ralph Klein style budget that would once again show the reality; this is a province billions in debt and nearly reaching the financial lows that Don Getty caused decades back.

Of course, “transparency” might be the most overused, underutilized word offered by this government. A round-table on the improvement of Alberta’s child intervention system failed to invite many of the necessary stakeholders to truly explore the problems and solutions. I for one had great hopes for this round-table, have great hopes for this type of system in the future, and I do hope the government will strive to improve it.

This government has also talked about meaningful consultations with Albertans, talked about involving the opposition more in a constructive improvement to the legislative process. Tightly managed, orchestrated, low turnout meetings in Cypress-Medicine Hat and around the province and a failure to engage in discussions around numerous opposition amendments to legislation prove that this government has no desire or little ability to be more transparent.

Lastly, I especially believe this throne speech was under-achieving. It failed to take into consideration the real challenges Albertans have. The list is endless. Wait times for elective surgery are measured in years and cancelled appointments. It’s embarrassing in Medicine Hat that our number one radio advertisers are the Great Falls and Kalispell private clinics saying: come down here; pay your money to get your elective surgery.

Municipalities are bogged down in provincial paperwork and uncertain funding levels, our education system is falling behind competitively in a fast-paced and changing world, rural Alberta is faced with economic uncertainties and government service decay, and our transportation and infrastructure spending is enormous with unacceptable results. Utility rates and their ancillary charges are skyrocketing. Everyday Albertans are feeling the hardship of this.

With this in mind, let’s take one last look at the title, Building Alberta Together. If this government truly meant that their plan was to be done together, the speech would have been completely different and the government’s 2014 priorities would have actually reflected the 2014 priorities of Alberta’s public. Instead of things like decentralization, innovative ideas, or intentions of meaningful consultation with Albertans, we heard misdirected and underachieving talking points.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the hon. member would make a comment on the issue of the economic effects of the sage grouse, that he mentioned in his response to the throne speech.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you very much for the question. It is estimated that the oil and gas industry alone in the area of the southeast corner of the province could be hit as hard as $200 million, not considering all the spinoff and benefits that would relate to people conducting their everyday Albertan life. Although for the oil and gas industry the impact would be much more severe, quicker, it is estimated that for the ranching industry over a mid-term period of time the impact would also be as high as $200 million. It was also, I think, put in one of the federal government’s protection orders that the estimated impact was $161 million, so another number that’s in the ballpark. Again, compensation doesn’t appear to be mentioned as part of the eligibility with this and is something that I hope can be addressed.

I will add to the hon. member that although, you know, with Bill 36 the regional advisory committee plan had marked 30 to 35 per cent of Cypress county as a potential conservation area, this federal protection order and where it may lead to seems to be falling right into what we all felt were grave concerns about the Alberta Land Stewardship Act right from the beginning, right from the initial stage. I will also add to the hon. member that one of the big fears in the constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat is where this may lead to for the rest of Alberta.

Thank you.

8:10

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Are there other speakers to the Speech from the Throne?

Seeing none, did someone wish to move to adjourn debate on the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Barnes: Could I adjourn debate on this, please?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Savings Management Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 1, the Savings Management Act.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have told us that saving is important, but they also want to know how our savings are supporting the province’s long-term growth and development. They want to know that they have a purpose. That was made very clear to me at budget consultations over the past couple of years and at other public forums like the economic summit the government hosted last fall. Bill 1 strikes a balance between consistently saving for the future and leveraging a portion of our savings now on targeted province-building investments that will benefit Albertans now and for generations to come while still allowing us to continue growing our savings in the heritage fund.

The proposed Savings Management Act will support innovation in the social services and cultural sectors, help address Alberta’s demand for skilled labour, and position Alberta to take advantage of future strategic opportunities. To do this, Bill 1 enhances the Alberta scholarship fund, establishes the social innovation endowment and the agriculture and food innovation endowment, and creates the Alberta future fund. Together these funds and endowments will help secure a brighter future for Alberta, moving us forward as we continue to build Alberta. Spending of disbursements from any of these funds and endowments must be for the purpose stated in the legislation and must be approved by a vote in the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, it’s no secret there’s a shortage of skilled labour in this province, particularly those workers with a trade. Bill 1 addresses this issue by enhancing the Alberta heritage scholarship fund: $200 million will be earmarked for trades-based education, helping apprentices complete their programs, engaging industry, and promoting excellence across the apprentice system. Our aim is simple, to encourage and support people pursuing a career in the skilled trades. The Alberta heritage scholarship fund was originally established by a grant from the heritage fund, and Bill 1 will build on this precedent with a $200 million transfer from the heritage fund in 2014. Disbursements from the earmarked portion of the scholarship fund will be limited to 4 and a half per cent of the fund's value based on a rolling three-year average of its market value. That works out to $9 million a year, starting in 2015-16.

Providing scholarships or bursaries to encourage and assist Albertans with a career in the trades is a problem and a solution that we can wrap our minds around pretty easily. But other issues, especially those in the social sphere, are not so simple. Complex issues like poverty and family violence demand we change our thinking, working in ways that may fall outside of traditional government approaches. It's not just shovelling more money into existing approaches but instead working collaboratively with our partners to find a better way of doing things. That's where the social innovation endowment comes in, providing a stable source of funding to create new knowledge and for the development and testing of new approaches to support innovation in the social services and cultural sectors.

The social innovation endowment will be established as an account within the heritage fund and will be allocated $500 million in 2014 and another $500 million in 2015. Disbursements from the social innovation endowment will also be limited to 4 and a half per cent per year. That works out to 22 and a half million dollars in 2015-16 and $45 million in 2016-17.

Mr. Speaker, I'd now like to turn your attention to the other new innovation-focused endowment, the agriculture and food innovation endowment. Agriculture is an important industry in this province, and we want it to continue to flourish, providing diversity to our economy and supporting our rural communities. The agriculture and food innovation endowment will support Alberta's agricultural innovation system, providing enhanced funding for basic and applied ag research and supporting value-added product development in commercialization activities. Like the social innovation endowment, the agriculture and food innovation endowment will be set up as an account within the heritage fund. It will receive a one-time allocation of $200 million in 2014, which again, based on the 4 and a half percent rule, works out to $9 million a year, starting in 2014-15.

Mr. Speaker, that's a thumbnail sketch of the three endowments covered by Bill 1. At a very basic level those endowments are about creating and exploiting opportunities to move Alberta forward, which brings me to the Alberta future fund, a different kind of fund that is being set up for a different purpose.

The Alberta future fund will enable government to capitalize on future strategic opportunities as they arise. These are large-scale, province-building opportunities that may require a large, one-time investment by the project. They may or may not be capital projects, and because the government only borrows for capital, government needs some other mechanism for responding to unexpected strategic opportunities when they come up.

These opportunities are not yet known, but the Alberta future fund will ensure we are in a position to respond when the time comes. It, too, will be established as an account within the heritage fund. The future fund will be allocated $200 million in 2014 and $200 million for the following nine years, to create a total fund of $2 billion. The money will stay there and continue to grow until the right opportunity comes along, at which time the government may withdraw, following the passage of a resolution in the Legislature, any amounts for investments that provide long-term benefits to Albertans and the Alberta economy.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, our savings, which includes the heritage fund, will continue to grow. We put a legislated savings plan in place last year, and we're still sticking to that plan. Apart from the legislatively authorized disbursements from the new account, the net income of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund will remain subject to the provisions of the Fiscal Management Act. The provisions require that by 2017-18 and in all subsequent years 100 per cent of the heritage fund's net income will be retained within the fund. As planned, we will set aside a portion of our nonrenewable resource revenue for savings right off the top every year so that the heritage fund, our savings, will continue to grow.

Mr. Speaker, I fully expect that some in this House will take this bill as some sort of strike against the heritage fund. It's not. In fact, this new vision for our savings in many ways reflects the government's original vision for the heritage fund. When the heritage fund was established in 1976, the fund's stated objectives were to save for the future, to strengthen or diversify the economy, and to improve the quality of life for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Little Bow this afternoon talked about the grain cars that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund bought to help Alberta grain producers move their product to market. They are still on the rail. In fact, I can recall seeing them on sidings in the province just last fall. I saw them at Prince Rupert, parked waiting for vessels to come in. It's still a very honourable thing to see those cars go by on the railway tracks today. That was an investment of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, if you go to the Medicine Hat airport, as an example, there is a plaque on the wall that says that the terminal at the Medicine Hat airport was built with Alberta heritage savings trust fund dollars.

Mr. Speaker, Premier Lougheed and his team at the time, of which I'm proud to say that my dad was one, had a vision for where that fund could be used. They had a vision for those three areas that Bill 1 is also emulating. So despite what many have said, the fund was not intended to simply be a vessel for saving money for future generations. It has also benefited past and present generations of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I also recognize that the heritage fund has a very special place in the hearts of Albertans. It has a special place in the hearts of every member here. I fully acknowledge that there will always be many opinions about how the fund should be managed. It's my firm and ardent belief that Bill 1 strikes the right balance between saving some of our natural resource revenue while setting out a clear vision for how the fund can be used now, and in very targeted ways, to improve the lives of Albertans now and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, when you think about the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for medical research and the tremendous things that that has spawned based on the same rules of these endowments, when you think about the Alberta ingenuity fund and the tremendous research that that has provided in our province and the commercialization opportunities that are there, when you think about the access to the future fund and the tremendous amount of philanthropy that that has brought into our province, and when you think about the scholarship fund and the thousands of students that have benefited from that endowment from the heritage savings trust fund, our savings should have a purpose, our savings should be used for today's generations and future generations, and they should be leveraged. That's what Albertans told us they wanted to see. That's what Bill 1 attempts to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
I recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to stand up in this House and respond to the government's proposed legislation. This is a very interesting bill. You know, many of you would be familiar with the term "mission creep," where you start out with a very laudable goal, and then over time, instead of achieving the goal that you've set out to achieve, you get distracted by other things, and pretty soon the original mission that you had undertaken has essentially failed. Nothing could be a clearer example of mission creep and the unfortunate nature of it and the unfortunate consequences that stem from it than how this government has handled the heritage fund.

There was an article in The Economist recently. I know that the government is always looking to build the profile of Alberta around the world, so getting an article in The Economist is certainly something to aspire to. The only problem with this article was that it used Alberta as the absolute poster child of how not to run, how not to handle a resource-based savings fund. The economists were right. They compared Alberta with many different jurisdictions, resource-rich jurisdictions, and basically were pointing out how poor a job successive governments have done in managing the finances of this province, particularly with regard to the heritage fund, and how so many opportunities have been lost. I'd like to discuss that because Bill 1 is another example of why we have failed as a province so perfectly with regard to how we have saved or failed to save and to fulfill the original mission of Premier Lougheed and the heritage fund.

Now, of course, research and scholarship endowments are good things. We all like research and scholarship endowments. We certainly support, in times where we have a surplus, in times where we're not going into debt, using some of the surplus to establish endowment funds for the purpose of research and innovation and scholarships in particular. We support that. But the caveat there is that it is in times where we have a balanced budget, in times where we are not going into debt. Those are the times to establish endowment funds.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, is not one of those times. We are in deficit despite a record amount of revenue this year, an all-time record for Alberta by about 2 and a half billion dollars, an all-time record for revenue, and we're still in deficit. That's a problem. Until we're out of deficit, the consolidated deficit, and into surplus, then we shouldn't be setting aside savings and doing so with borrowed money, which is essentially what we're doing this year alone, borrowing I believe it's up to $3.7 billion. That's not what we should be doing.

Also, we need to be careful because, by the vague nature of this bill, some of these endowment funds are so vaguely described that it's very clear the money used for them, the interest generated from those funds and then given out, could easily be funneled to for-profit corporations and other companies that should not receive that type of funding. If we're going to do research into technology and so forth, obviously we could fund some of our postsecondary institutions, whether that be the U of A or Olds College or some postsecondary education institutions like that, but we should not turn this into another way that this PC government can use heritage fund money and interest from the heritage fund to fund for-profit corporations, some of them legitimately applying, some of them getting money because of their connections to the PC Party, depending on the situation.

First things first. We need to balance the budget. We need to quit borrowing. It's funny. When the budget is truly balanced, you will see us quit borrowing. That's the critical piece there. Until we stop borrowing, really, we do not have a balanced budget.

Then we need to leave the interest in the heritage fund alone. If we want to set up separate endowments using surplus money, as I stated, when we're back in a consolidated surplus, then perhaps we can do that, but don't carve out parts of the heritage fund. The heritage fund's purpose is to make sure that over the next – hopefully, we still have enough of a window here – 15 to 20 years we can put enough away and let it compound and grow with interest so that when we get to 2030 or whatever it is and the price of oil is just not high enough to be economical to develop on a mass scale because of alternative technologies and cheaper ways of getting oil out of the ground in the United States and so forth and large reserves there, when that happens, we will have a mountain of investment capital that we can use to replace that oil and gas income, that resource revenue income.

That's what we should be doing with the heritage fund, and we're not even close. We're at $17 billion, $18 billion. We need to get that fund up to $150 billion over the next 20 years if we're going to get to that goal. That means putting in some serious savings. It also means leaving the interest alone. Get your hands off it, and let it grow.

Just think about this. If from 1986 to today we had just left the interest alone, not put another cent of oil and gas royalties towards it, nothing, no oil and gas royalties whatsoever, if you could have put it all towards debt and endowments and anything else you wanted from 1986 on and just left the interest alone, if what was there in 1986 had compounded, today it would have been worth – guess what? – $150 billion. Think about that lost opportunity, Mr. Speaker. It's tragic.

If you look at a 7 per cent return on investment, the ROI, on that $150 billion, that's roughly $9 billion to $10 billion a year. Guess what? That would replace our reliance and then some on nonrenewable oil and gas revenues today. We would have already achieved that goal, and now we could be using resource revenues to create endowment funds and to build whatever the hell we wanted to build. But, instead, here we are, and we haven't saved jack squat. It's embarrassing.

Here we are talking about a bill whose stated purpose is to essentially carve out pieces of the heritage fund, not the majority of it but a good percentage, $3 billion, 3 and a half billion dollars over several years, to carve that money out of the heritage fund and use the interest to funnel into various programs and so forth. That's not the direction we should be going in. And this is after last year and the government stating that they committed to leaving all the interest in the heritage fund completely alone on a go-forward basis, starting, I believe, next year. That was the commitment that they made.

Now, we've already seen a deviation from that commitment, and we're not even a year into it, and we're using borrowed money to do it. We're creating a legacy over here of a few billion and borrowing several more billion to create that legacy and putting our kids in debt. That's the legacy we're leaving them with. I don't understand why we continue to go down this road when it's just so clear we have to stop, especially in good times, like we're in now. This is where we should be making hay, not going backwards, and we are going backwards, in my view.

Now, what would the Wildrose do differently? Well, we're really blessed in this province in that we do have a booming resource sector right now, so there is time to get this right. I don't think there's a lot of time. I don't think we're talking about 50 years now. I think the window is shrinking, but I still think there's a window, and I think that most experts in the investment field would agree with that. Alberta's oil is still going to be worth a lot for at least another 15, 20 years, hopefully – cross our fingers – more.

So what would we do? Well, the first thing we would do, of course, is balance the consolidated provincial budget. That means all operational and capital spending. In other words, total revenues would have to be larger than total operational expenditures plus capital expenditures, including MSI, roads, bridges, schools, postsecondary, everything, all of it. Once we get back to a consolidated balance without raising taxes and without cutting front-line public services or the salaries of front-line workers, once that's done, we need to pass legislation that makes balanced consolidated budgets mandatory, restores budget transparency by including all operational and capital spending in the calculation of annual deficits or surpluses, prohibits debt financing, and caps year-over-year increases in overall government spending to the rate of inflation plus population growth.

That's important, Mr. Speaker. How we got out of whack is that we started doubling the rate of inflation plus population growth in our spending, and that's what kind of threw us all off over the last 10 years. We can't do that same mistake. That means that we will have some big surpluses moving forward, but that's okay. We can put good chunks of that into the heritage fund. We can provide the cities with a little bit more funding for LRT and other infrastructure with some of those surpluses, and we can even use some of that extra money, when we're not borrowing anymore, to set up endowments like what's being suggested here in some respect, the research endowments, for example, and the scholarship endowments.

So once that's done, once the provincial budget is balanced, we would implement the following budget surplus and savings strategy. We would not transfer any portion whatsoever of the heritage fund, including annual earnings, into general revenues until the total annual earnings from the fund exceed that of the average annual provincial revenues from oil and gas. And, yes, that will take some years to accomplish. There's no doubt about that.

We would invest at least half of all surpluses in the heritage fund until the total annual earnings from the fund exceed that of the average annual provincial revenues from oil and gas. We would direct at least 10 per cent of those surpluses to Alberta's municipalities for the purpose of building additional municipal infrastructure, at least 10 per cent, maybe more. Certainly, with our 10-10 plan, a minimum 10 per cent of surpluses.

We would direct the remaining surpluses to one or more of the following initiatives: paying down or offsetting the debts and liabilities incurred by this Premier and this government; sustainably lower personal or business taxes and fees over time or inflation-proof them, what have you; invest in infrastructure critical to economic growth and development like LRTs, for example; establish endowments and scholarships dedicated to excellence in research and education in Alberta's postsecondary institutions; and rebuild and maintain the sustainability fund for the purposes of disaster relief and assistance and to protect against significant short-term decreases in provincial oil and gas revenues.

That's our plan, and it is a simple plan. I mean, this clearly is not rocket science, and we're not claiming that it's our idea. These are the ideas of Jim Dinning. These are the ideas of Ralph Klein. These are the ideas of Premier Lougheed. That's what they are. We're just taking them. We're borrowing them and trying to get back to them because they were good ideas and they were worth it. But we didn't stick by the plan, and because of that we have failed our kids to this point. That's not to say that every dollar that's been spent from the interest from the heritage fund hasn't gone to a good cause. It's not to say that. But we have to look at the overall performance of what we've done in this Chamber over the last 20 years, 25 to 30 years. We haven't done the job. We haven't made our fund worth what it should be.

Norway's fund, of course – and people say Alberta is not like Norway, and in some ways we're not. They have a trillion-dollar fund now. It has just gone through the roof because they've used the power of compound interest, partially. They've invested a lot in it, for sure, but it's really been compound interest, the stock market, the way they've invested large amounts. Now they are set, way past oil and gas time. Now, we're not saying that we need to be a trillion dollars up in the heritage fund. Surely, our taxes aren't 10 times lower than Norway's. They always say that the taxes are higher in Norway. They're not 10 times higher. All we're saying is: let's get our heritage fund up to about one-tenth of that amount, $150 billion. Let's do that over the next 10 to 15 years. Let's be strict with ourselves. Let's be disciplined, and let's make sure that in 20 years we can tell our kids and our grandkids: "Look. This is what we did. We saved enough, and now you have enough to pay for your core services and to have the best institutions and the best infrastructure even though oil and gas isn't worth what it once was."

That's, I believe, the vision that Premier Lougheed had. I believe that's the vision that Premier Klein had, and I hope that one day we will return to that vision under, hopefully, a new Wildrose government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I recognize the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Not yet. It'll be after the next speaker for 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, being that I want to be Government House Leader again tomorrow, we'll call it a night and move to adjourn till 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:37 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members and guests.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, fill us with strength to labour diligently and with wisdom to speak clearly. Give us courage to speak thoughtfully and conviction to act boldly without prejudice. For this we pray. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Standing Order Amendments

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before the Clerk calls the next item of business in our Routine, I want to alert you to the green sheets that you will find on your desks, which were distributed earlier by our pages. Please note that these are the amendments to the Standing Orders that were approved yesterday by this Assembly following approval of Government Motion 7. These amendments are relevant and are immediately applicable for consideration of supplementary estimates later this afternoon.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, starting with the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 40 young, energetic individuals from Nellie McClung elementary school and their escorts. The school is located in the community of Palliser and serves the communities of Palliser, Bayview, Pump Hill, and surrounding areas. The students just finished a science fair, are writing and producing their own plays, and are welcoming a dance company soon to the building. This busy school offers programs of choice and activities that help build the community in Calgary-Glenmore. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would like to ask all the guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark or someone on his behalf.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm so excited about this school that I have sort of snatched the introduction away from my hon. leader. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 40 students, that are here with us today, from Annunciation school. They are here with several teachers and group leaders: Mrs. Maureen Ostrowerka, who is the grade 6 teacher; Mrs. Michelle Padilla; Mrs. Linda Girard; and Mr. Chris Koper. Sorry about the mispronunciations, anybody. I'm sure Hansard will fix it. Would you all join me, please, in welcoming these great students to our Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am also pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 24 visitors from the Academy at King Edward school, consisting of, I believe, 21 very bright and super hard-working grade 6 students. I was very pleased to be able to go the academy this September to read to a bunch of students The Story of Mouseland, written by Tommy Douglas, and I recall some really excellent discussions at the time. They are joined today by their teachers, Peter Beairsto and Maureen Munsterman, and by parent helper Leanne Howard. I would ask that they all now rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

If not, let's move on, then, and welcome the Associate Minister – Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, please.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very important people, and that's not just because I'm married to their daughter. My mother- and father-in-law are here today from Calgary, Ken and Heather Miller, and this is all made possible because Ken just retired a week and a half ago from 38 years as an engineer at ExxonMobil. Heather is a public health nurse with Alberta Health Services. They've been a great support to me and Ashley as we've gone through this great journey of being an MLA, and I do want to thank them for that support as well as thank them for raising such an amazing daughter. So I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, that's a very hard act to follow. It's a pleasure of mine to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine and a resident of the beautiful constituency of Calgary-Acadia, Dr. John Rook. Dr. Rook is the former president and CEO of the Calgary Homeless Foundation, and as president he was responsible for overseeing the implementation of the 10-year plan to end homelessness. He has a PhD from Oxford University and a long history of service to his community. From 2004 to 2010 he was the chief executive officer of the Salvation Army community services. He also has an extensive teaching background as an adjunct faculty member at the U of C since 2008 and an associate professor at McMaster University – he's an incredible gentleman – and he's also taught at Booth college as well as Ambrose University College. Dr. Rook, please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Public Safety.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Cheryl-Ann Orr and Barb Sinosich. If they'd please rise. These two wonderful women have had the experience with their families to experience the love and passion and compassion of Wellspring Calgary. They're here representing their big fundraising day, Toupee for a Day. It's people like this that make Alberta great. They advocate for our communities, and really it's what we're built upon. I'm proud of them and proud to introduce them in this House. Thank you for coming today. If the members could give them a warm welcome, I would appreciate that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you today and through you to the Assembly my guests from the Non-Academic Staff Association, otherwise known as NASA, which represents more than 6,000 support staff at the University of Alberta. My guests and their team have collected more than 4,000 advocacy postcards, signed by residents from all over the province, containing a simple message to restore funding to postsecondary education. I would now like my guests to rise as I call their names and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly: Rod Loyola, Leonard Wampler, Lilian Campbell, Dennis Johnson, Donna Coombe-Montrose, and Jamie Smith. Let's hear it for them.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some very special people. They are the family of Jon Wood, who was an exceptional young constituent of mine who was killed by a drunk driver. Jon's family have provided these pins for members of the Assembly with the words of Jon's favourite song: "keep your head up; keep your heart strong." I would ask Jon's family to rise as I call their names: Lori Church, the mother of Jon Wood; Jon's siblings Daniel Wood, Andrea Wood, Eli Church, and Eric Church; Jon's grandparents Jack Lotzien and Bernice Lotzien. They are accompanied by 12 other family members and friends, who are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery and have travelled from Calgary to honour the memory of Jon and hear my member's statement. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Neil Cashman and Dr. Bob Gundel. Dr. Cashman is a world-renowned neurologist and neuroscientist specializing in Alzheimer's disease and ALS. In July 2005 he was appointed professor of medicine at the University of British Columbia, where he holds the Canada research chair in neurodegeneration and protein misfolding diseases. He's also scientific director of PrioNet and founder and chief scientific officer of Amorfix Life Sciences. Dr. Bob Gundel is president and CEO of Amorfix, and he's a 35-year veteran of the pharmaceutical industry. Dr. Cashman will be speaking this evening in my constituency, where he'll be sharing the exciting news of a new test he has developed for early identification of Alzheimer's disease. They are seated in the members' gallery and are also joined by Mr. Roger Kotch. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Let's move on, then, to Edmonton-Riverview, followed by a repeat introduction by the Associate Minister of Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 14 members of Rotary International district 5370. These youth exchange students and new generation of youth are very excited to be here.

Among them are district 5370 governor Betty Screpnek; Jerome Martin, Rotary district image chair; Merle Taylor, my president at the Glenora Rotary; Hannah Werkgarner, youth exchange from Austria; Grégoire Vidal from France, a youth exchange student there; Henriette Olesen, a youth exchange from Denmark; Christina Haltou-Nielsen, a youth exchange student from Denmark; Milja Kauppinen, youth exchange from Finland; Lindsey Lam, Rotary youth exchange awards; Bashir Mohamed, also from the leadership awards; Yvone Joubert, district 53 youth council and youth conference; Amy Smith, the Rotaract club from the University of Alberta; Abdul-Rahman Madi, the Rotaract club of Grant MacEwan; and Tempo Sabatier, Rotary youth leadership experience. They're all seated in the public gallery. I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also see up in the gallery a former councillor from the city of Calgary for ward 4 that served from 2010 to 2013. Gael MacLeod is there. I'd hope that she could stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us begin with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Premier's Travel to South Africa

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week marked the sixth anniversary of the 2008 provincial election. It was March 3 – a day, I'm sure, the Premier won't soon forget – when she was elected to this Legislature for the very first time. She'll also recall that not long after that day she sat around the cabinet table and voted with her colleagues to give themselves a 34 per cent pay raise, courtesy of the hard-working taxpayers of Alberta.

Not surprisingly, there was a backlash, a big one. Albertans were furious at the brazen entitlement of their newly elected government. After an ugly and prolonged scandal the government finally relented. They announced they would return the money to taxpayers. Not all of it, though. After hiking their pay by more than a third, they gave back a measly 5 per cent. What was supposed to be a grand gesture of apology and contrition became yet another slap in the face to taxpayers. They knew they did something wrong. They knew they had to do something about it, but they still kept most of the money for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, history is repeating itself. Yesterday the Premier announced she was going to pay back her travel expenses. Not all of them, of course. Certainly not the big one. No, instead of giving back the $45,000 she used to get to South Africa in style, she's giving back, coincidentally, about 5 per cent of that. She's going to keep the rest, an amount of money that exceeds the annual salaries of nearly 4,000 of our front-line public-sector employees. I suppose all should be forgiven.

Mr. Speaker, this is not leadership. When Albertans see this kind of personal pampering and self-service in their leaders, they lose faith not only in that individual but in the political and democratic process itself. The lasting effect of this kind of entitlement is a cynical public that believes the worst instead of hoping for the best. We should see the very best of our values and the very brightest of our intentions reflected in our leaders. It's a shame this Premier has let us down. Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Government Policies

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Middle-class families are starting to see the truth about the entitlement and hypocrisy of this PC government. We're living in the tale of two Albertas, where for this government and their wealthy friends and corporate donors flying first class is just a symbol for their way of life. The wealthy in this province pay less in taxes than they would anywhere in Canada. In this province wealthy Albertans can buy memberships in private health clinics to help them navigate their way to the front of the line.

But most middle-class Alberta families don't live in that Alberta. They pay more than their fair share of taxes because of the flat tax. They can't afford tens of thousands of dollars a year to avoid the long wait times in our health care system. The cost of their electricity is much too high, thanks to the PC's deregulated electricity market, which yet again benefits major PC donors like TransAlta while costing families more every year.

Albertans want a responsible and trustworthy government. They have instead a government that can't even be trusted to use a government plane for government business. Albertans want a government that invests in vital public services like health and education. They have a government that erodes the qualities of those services every year. Albertans want a government that's consistent and fair. They have a hypocritical government that freezes the wages and attacks the pensions of Albertans while wasting money on expensive travel and lavish severances.

Alberta's New Democrats will continue to fight against this hypocrisy and to fight for an Alberta that works for all of us, not just the PCs and their entourage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Jonathon David Wood

Mrs. Jablonski: "My worst days are better than some people's best days." These were words that 33-year-old Jonathon David Wood spoke and lived by. A man of endless optimism, Jon could see the positive in any situation. His youngest brother said: to Jon, success wasn't success unless you had your friends and family with you. Jon never left a man behind. He believed everyone had something to teach him. He did everything with intensity and plenty of good humour.

Jon's song was Keep Your Head Up by Ben Howard. He used the lyrics, "keep your head up; keep your heart strong," to lift the spirits of those around him. It was an affirmation that everything was going to be all right.

On the morning of November 2, 2013, Jon took a cab home after a night out. A short distance from his home, while stopped for a red light, Jon's taxi was struck by an impaired driver. Jon was killed instantly.

I would like to quote his mother, Lori Church.

Now we are left to pick up the pieces and go on. In a way, we all died in that taxi. We all lost something that can never be replaced. Ironically, though, Jon would find something positive to take from this inexplicable tragedy, and I can hear what he'd say: keep your head up; keep your heart strong. Your worst days will be better than some people's best days.

For Jon and for our community we must find the good in this. While we believe significant reform is needed with respect to the way our society views impaired driving, our efforts will be better invested at the grassroots level, to nurture more Jon Woods, who truly care enough to make responsible decisions.

The Jon Wood memorial fund supports programs that ignite passion and caring in young people. To learn more about Jon and Jon's fund, please visit jonwoodmemorial.com and facebook.com/celebratejon.

Mr. Speaker, Jon's life was an inspiration to all of us. Alberta lost a very special person that night. We all lost something that can never be replaced.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Thank you. We'll begin in a moment, and we'll continue with private members' statements after question period.

Let us begin with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Premier's Travel Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we pressed the Premier to pay back the money she recklessly overspent on a trip to South Africa. We pointed out that her trip was in no way consistent with the government's expense policy. After question period the Premier agreed to pay back some money but not for the South Africa trip. Instead, we learned that the Premier admits to five other flights which don't fit the rules. To the President of Treasury Board: when did he give the Premier and her senior staff a blanket exemption from following the government's expense policy?

Mr. Horner: We've never given such exemption, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier has now admitted that she doesn't follow the government's travel, meal, and hospitality expense policy. My question again is to the President of Treasury Board, whose department controls the government air fleet. Did he know that the Premier was using government airplanes for her family vacations, and why didn't he do anything about it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has answered these questions repeatedly, both in this House and in the scrum. Members of cabinet, members of government, and, in fact, even members opposite that used to be in government have used government aircraft to get to the 90 per cent of communities in our province that are not served by commercial aircraft. They've used the government aircraft to get to meetings where there was a timeliness issue, which the Premier has done as well, and in fact they have used it when family is accompanying them to government functions and nongovernment functions. It is a normal course. We've been doing it for a long time, not just this Premier but Premiers before her as well.

Ms Smith: They didn't use it for family members.

The expense policy states, "Claims should be able to withstand scrutiny by the Auditor General of Alberta and members of the public." It is obvious that many of the Premier's claims will not stand up to that scrutiny. Will the Premier do herself a favour and do the right thing and pay back the $45,000 for the South Africa trip?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I had a long conversation yesterday with reporters, with people who are my constituents, and I talked about exactly what I talked about in the scrum yesterday, which was that after some of these questions came to light in January, I did ask my office to take a look at what had happened in the two and a half years since I became Premier. As soon as I was made aware of that information, I set the record straight and dealt with that issue. You know, the steps that we took yesterday to ask the Auditor General to look at out-of-province flights, the work I've asked the president to do is consistent with the work that we need to do to ensure that Albertans have confidence in the system.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition, for your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier did indeed write to the Auditor General and asked him to review the use of government airplanes. A review isn't needed. He's already done the work. In 2004 the Auditor General said that the airplane use policy wasn't as clear as it should be. He was worried that the fleet would be used inappropriately unless the rules were clarified, but he did make it clear that "family members may not travel on government aircraft unless it is the minister's spouse invited to an event." Someone in the cabinet must have known that the rules were being broken. Why didn't anyone speak up?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I travel an awful lot around this province, and one of the things that people often do when they introduce me is that they introduce me as Alberta's first woman Premier. I'm also the first Premier who is a mum. Last year, just to remind the hon. member, in Committee of Supply when the Executive Council budget was reviewed, I mentioned the fact that there are flights that I take my daughter, Sarah, on – my husband will not fly on the plane because of exactly this sort of thing – and the hon. Leader of the Opposition said: well, we wouldn't want to interfere with that because we know that that's important. So now I'm confused.

Ms Smith: The Premier also said in that exchange that she pays personally for family flights, which turned out not to be true, did it?

In 2005 the Auditor General again raised concerns about the absence of policy regarding the use of government planes, but he was told by the government that ultimately members of Executive Council are accountable for their use of aircraft. My question is for the cabinet. The Auditor General says that you are accountable. Was no one aware of this abuse of the air fleet, and why did no one tell the Premier to change her ways?

Mr. Horner: Well, I'm not sure who the hon. member was directing the question to, but as the ATS falls under my purview, Mr. Speaker, I will again reiterate what has been said here. The Premier has instructed the Auditor General to review not only what we have done but what has happened since his review in 2004 and 2005. As I recall – and I've not gone back and read it in detail – the Auditor General did believe that having that fleet at that time was a useful use of the planes because we need to be able to reach Albertans, talk to Albertans. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to see the Premier in their communities, they want to see the cabinet in their communities, because that's what reaching out to Albertans is all about.

Ms Smith: Yes, but the Auditor General didn't want to see anyone abusing it.

The fact is that no one wants to speak up. No one wanted to tell the Premier that what she was doing was wrong. The Premier has now banned all out-of-province flights on government planes for everyone, not just for herself. This leaves Albertans wondering if the problem goes further than the Premier. Are there other PC ministers that are jetting across the country on personal business? Anyone else want to fess up?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that in this hon. member's member's statement she talked about people losing confidence because of trust and circumstances that, quite frankly, this hon. member throws out there month after month and year after year to suggest inappropriate behaviour, which over and over again independent offices of this Legislature have said have not been the case. So I guess we will continue to see this. We certainly want to deal with the issue. I have heard what Albertans said. I took responsibility, apologized, have taken steps, and will continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader for your third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: And that, Mr. Speaker, is why this Premier has 20 per cent approval ratings.

Family Care Clinics

Ms Smith: Yesterday the Health minister brushed off some serious questions about the state of health care in Slave Lake. While the causes of Slave Lake's problems are complex, there is no doubt that the structure and organization of the family care clinics are making the situation much worse. Doctors don't like family care clinics because they include gag orders in their contracts and have resulted in an unfair assignment of tasks within the clinics. Is the minister reviewing the way family care clinics are run so that communities like Slave Lake are not left in the lurch?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we certainly are reviewing the many successes of the family care clinic model across the province as well as the PCN model, and I'm happy to tell you that in the case of Slave Lake since the family care clinic opened, there has been a very significant reduction in nonurgent patients in the emergency department of that hospital. People in Slave Lake are getting health care closer to home. They are getting it at hours that are convenient to them. They are enjoying the benefit of many other health professionals who have not previously been available to them to support their health care needs. This is the biggest success story in health care in Alberta.

Ms Smith: It's an imaginary success story, Mr. Speaker.

In big cities like Edmonton and Calgary doctors who don't like a family care clinic have alternatives, and so do their patients, but when the minister puts a family care clinic into a small town and it goes wrong, it can disrupt all of the health care in that community. That is exactly what is happening in Slave Lake. Will the minister admit that family care clinics as currently designed are not the right solution for Alberta's small towns?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has done an excellent job of representing her constituents on this matter, and what she has told me is that they are extremely pleased with the quality and access of health care that they have, particularly compared to the state of health care after the fire only a few years ago, when there was only one doctor. What is not imaginary is that this opposition will stop at nothing to politicize health care in this province. They treat health care as if it's political currency, and every time they do so, they demean the very front-line workers who deliver care to the rest of us.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're almost getting to the point where you can actually hear the question being asked and you can actually hear an answer being given, but these additional conversations that continue to go on across the bow are really out of place. If need be, I will step in and I will shut some of you down, and that's just how that's going to be. It goes for both sides. So let's listen attentively now to the next question, the third and final one from the leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly not blaming the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for the Health minister's mistakes.

This experiment in delivering family medicine in a new way has resulted in Slave Lake losing its anesthesiologist, its operating room, the use of its dialysis unit, and its maternity ward. Health care for the residents of Slave Lake has never been worse. Will the minister explain why any small town should be willing to take the risk of bringing a family care clinic into their community if this is the result?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why communities all across this province are asking for family care clinics. They're asking for the roles of their primary care networks to be expanded. It has to do with things like the fact that 50 per cent of patients in Slave Lake have now been screened for common health risks, things like colorectal cancer and heart disease. [interjections] This is a model that represents our Premier's commitment and her vision to expand health care to Albertans. It is a rejection of cheap political tactics that are aimed at dividing health care workers, particularly doctors in this province, who are also working very hard to expand this model of care.

Mrs. Forsyth: Why don't you read the other stats, too?

The Speaker: Are you done, Calgary-Fish Creek? Thank you.

Let us move on. Edmonton-Meadowlark, first main set of questions.

Cabinet Travel Expense Policy

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is trying to change the channel on Travelgate by pleading guilty to a lesser charge of $3,100 for a family friend. But Albertans really want her to pay back for wasting $45,000 of their hard-earned tax money and not hide behind the Auditor General. The Premier's South Africa expense is completely indefensible, and it gets worse. She billed the taxpayers $20,000 for her executive assistant alone. To the Premier: was it absolutely necessary for you to bring your EA along, or was this just another perk you expected your inner circle to get paid for by the Alberta taxpayer?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the work that I do as the Premier of this province involves a lot of different things, and there are a lot of people who work in my office to support me in that work. One of those people is my executive assistant. My executive assistant travels with me. You know, the day that we learned the unfortunate news of the flooding in southern Alberta starting, I was on my way back from New York. I spent an awful lot of time dealing with issues of government at that time. I certainly appreciated the support of my staff in Edmonton, my staff in Calgary, the public service, and my executive assistant, who was travelling with me in New York. That is simply the way that work happens, and I'm grateful for it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All leaders here have EAs that work with us. But let's pretend for a moment that it was necessary for the Premier's EA, or shall I say her briefcase carrier, to travel to South Africa. There is still the matter of the cost of his first-class flights to and from South Africa, $20,000 first class. That's more than my expenses for the entire year alone as leader of an opposition party. To the Premier: why should taxpayers shell out so much money for your assistant to fly first class to and from South Africa when he could have flown economy for a fraction of the cost?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the fact that 18 months ago we put in place travel and expense policy guidelines that are transparent to the people of Alberta so that everyone knows how the expenses related to the operations of government take place. At that time you will remember that the Canadian Taxpayers Federation said that not only our disclosure policy but our travel and expense policy was – let's say it together – the gold standard for this country. What I will tell you is that we do work, that it does involve expenses, that there are rules in place. We follow those rules, and I look forward to another question from the hon. member.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, they do have a really good expense policy, and the funny thing is that it's public: first class for them and third class for Albertans.

The last time a cabinet minister abused taxpayer dollars on inappropriate travel expenses, not only did the Premier make her pay it back, she fired her from her post. Now the very credibility of this government is being degraded and the reputation of every government member on this side. To the Premier. You're the leader of the province. Will you just do the right thing, please? Just pay 45,000 bucks back, and let's move on to other topics, please.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I remember at the beginning of January saying to people that we needed to do better. I took responsibility. I apologized. We've taken steps to ensure that the Auditor General can continue to have the open access that he always has on these issues.

In fact, we're very much looking forward to moving on. I was at the mayor of Edmonton's state of the city address today. He's looking to the future. He's moving on. I think the hon. member was there. Let's talk about that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. To the Premier: given that the Auditor General has already examined the policy with regard to government aircraft and he specified that family members other than spouses attending official events should not travel on a government aircraft, was she aware of this policy when she booked the trips for which she repaid the money yesterday?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we know what the Auditor General said about government aircraft in 2005 and 2006. One of the reasons we've asked him to review the policies now is because we think it is important for issues to evolve. I'll tell you, quite frankly, that one of the evolutions in this province is that you have a Premier who has a 12-year-old daughter, and because of that we're going to continue to balance everything we can to make sure that I am able to do my job to the best of my ability, that I'm able to spend time with my family. It has never been my intention and never will be my intention to in any way trick the taxpayers of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of government employees who are women, who have families, and who are not allowed to bring their children to work. Why does the Premier believe that she is so entitled that she can do it when the employees that work for this government are not allowed to do so?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamental values of Albertans are family values. When you're elected to government, whether you're an MLA or cabinet minister or Premier . . . [interjections] If you're an MLA, a cabinet minister, or Premier, one should not have to abandon their family to do their job, and when there's an extra spot . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Speaking of families, speaking of children, how do you think what you just did carried out there amongst Albertans that we're serving? I don't think it was very adultlike, and I would think that most of you would agree with me that it wasn't. So, please, let's show some decorum that is filled with the dignity which this institution, this House, is usually known for.

Mr. Deputy Premier, would you conclude your remarks, please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a member of this government is travelling on government business on a government aircraft and there's an extra seat that you can take a family member along to participate with you, why would you not do that? Why would you not take the time with your family, involve your family in the public service that you're doing, set the example for your family in terms of how you give back to the community in every way that you can?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. ND leader for your third and final question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again, it's the tale of two Albertas: one rule for this government and their cronies and another rule for the rest of us.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is an officer of this Legislature, not the Premier's personal adviser. She's asking him to tell her how to be ethical and prudent with Albertans' money. She shouldn't have to ask. To the Premier: why do you have to depend on the Auditor General to tell you what Albertans expect you to understand already?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, based on the last two and a half years of experience in this House I'm pretty sure that if I hadn't asked the Auditor General to do it, the opposition would have demanded that I did. We are very happy to take the advice of someone who is an independent officer of this House and not, as the hon. member suggests, my personal adviser. That's ridiculous.

The Speaker: Okay. The first five main questions are done with, so now no preambles, please, to your supplementals.

Electricity Market Investigation

Mr. Anglin: Yesterday we learned that the associate minister of electricity is confident in the ability of the Alberta Utilities Commission to adjudicate the serious allegations of electricity price-fixing. Today we learned that the AUC may hold these proceedings behind closed doors, in secret, excluding the public. Will the government exercise its authority and guarantee that these proceedings will be held in public and not behind closed doors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I must caution this member to make sure that we do not do anything in this House to prejudice the outcome of this decision. It's up to the Alberta Utilities Commission to determine how they hold these investigations and the hearings. That is in their discretion. It's not up to the government of Alberta to direct the AUC on how those proceedings will be held.

Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: Given that the minister stated today and yesterday that she didn't want to prejudice the outcome of the proposed AUC hearing and given that the allegations levelled by TransAlta imply the AUC may have acted incompetently and possibly illegally in addition to the MSA, how can the AUC possibly adjudicate a proceeding without bias when the proceeding itself may implicate the AUC?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, I had a little bit of difficulty following around in that loop of discussion, and I would really encourage this particular member to participate in law school. I know we've had this conversation before. He seems very, very interested in this. The Alberta Utilities Commission has very clear rules. This is not unusual, for specialized tribunals like this to hear decisions. We do it with securities regulations all the time.

Mr. Anglin: Mocking thousands of Albertans – there are enough lawyers.

Given that millions of Albertans are victims of electricity price gouging and given the seriousness of these allegations levelled by both sides in this dispute, if the government will not ask the RCMP to investigate, will the government protect Albertans, recuse the AUC, and have another independent judicial body adjudicate this process?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: I'd like to remind this member that protecting consumers is a priority of this government, and making sure that we protect the integrity of this market-based electricity system is in all of our interests. If this particular member has claims that he would like to assert to the RCMP, I encourage him to do that. I would do the same if I had that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Public Transit Funding

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The big-city mayors have repeatedly called on the provincial government to provide additional funding to support new LRT projects. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can he please tell us what is being done to support public transit in urban centres?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as we know, the larger municipalities, in fact all municipalities, require stable, predictable funding in order to invest in these major undertakings. The municipal sustainability initiative will provide $11.3 billion to municipalities over the life of the program. Many municipalities have already allocated over $1.5 billion to transit projects through MSI.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. It is my understanding that many municipalities may have already committed their future MSI dollars to other projects. Are there any other provincial programs available to municipalities that could help them fund these transit projects?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition to MSI – my colleague could perhaps speak about this – the Ministry of Transportation also has a program called GreenTRIP. This program, obviously, provides direct funding to transit projects. You know, I also, together with the Premier and her other colleagues, was at the state of the city speech today by the mayor of Edmonton. He said that Edmonton is worth investing in, and I couldn't agree more. Edmonton is worth investing in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We just heard the Minister of Municipal Affairs cite the GreenTRIP program. Can the Minister of Transportation tell us whether the city of Edmonton can count on a program like GreenTRIP for the southeast expansion of the LRT line?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've always supported Alberta municipalities when it comes to transportation infrastructure. GreenTRIP is a big part of our building Alberta plan, and we're committed to fulfilling our commitment by 2020. Mayor Iveson has done his job. We talk on a regular basis, and he's promoting the LRT. So far GreenTRIP has approved funding for public transit projects in 15 Alberta municipalities, totalling more than $1 billion.

Mathematics Curriculum

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Education insulted 7,500 concerned parents and teachers who signed a petition when he dismissed concerns about his new wishy-washy, edubabble curriculum, which abandons the basic fundamentals of learning. So let's flip the switch. The following questions don't come from me; they come from Albertans. Cristian Rios, a mathematician at the University of Calgary, says that the new system is upside down, that it creates chronic confusion and an aversion to everything mathematical in students. Minister, ignore and insult me when I ask you these questions, but what do you say to experts like Mr. Rios?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I thought I said yes to his question yesterday. He had asked me; I said yes. It sounds like they can't take yes for an answer.

Mr. Speaker, the other point that I made yesterday – and they were a little loud, so maybe not everybody heard it. We pay very close attention. We're very interested if even one parent or one Albertan has an issue with any aspect of the education system. The petition that we got, the meetings that we've had, the feedback we get from postsecondary, parents, industry, anyone are going to be well thought of and are going to be taken into account as we're doing new curriculum changes, which happens on an ongoing basis.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, it would be wonderful if what he said actually matched his actions, but it does not.

Given that Donna Nixon, a math teacher in St. Albert, says that your new system has made it so that some of our grade 7 students can't even do basic addition and subtraction, never mind multiplication or division, why do you think, Minister, that you know better than experts like Ms Nixon?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not think that. That's why we want to take all of these considerations into account. We look at the research from around the world, we look at best practices, and we look at the international exams that just came back. The hon. member said sometime ago, I think, that our results had declined by 32 per cent. This was in this House on December 4. Well, if you're looking for evidence that we have a math issue, there it is right there.

Mr. McAllister: I'd give the minister a zero, but I know his government doesn't like zeros.

Considering that Jacqueline Fern, a math teacher in Red Deer, said that due to your new system students from grade 6 to grade 12 have absolutely no concept of basic math skills and pleaded with you directly to stop this bureaucratic disaster, can you again explain why you know better than Alberta parents and teachers? Minister, you're not listening to what Albertans are telling you.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think what this member is saying is just simply offensive, and it echoes what he said on December 4: "We have really hit the skids."

Our education system is fantastic. The international tests attest to that. In the international tests, as a matter of fact, it's in the area of basic math that our kids excelled, and the researchers tell me that they nailed it. The problem solving and when you're trying to apply those concepts to complex situations are where we fell down. We are making changes to the curriculum, and we are listening, but I expect that they won't be happy with that either.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: You know what happens every time I have to intervene? I take away a few seconds from your time to ask questions. I have to then do something about it because I'm not going to put up with this. I'll tell you right now; I've told you before. If I see another outburst from any of the four caucuses, then you lose the next question on the rotation period, and I will strictly enforce that. I've had enough for today, okay? So, please. No more. That's it. You've hit the top.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Wellness Initiatives

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Alberta's population grows and ages, rising health care costs will definitely test the resilience of our health care. According to Wellness Alberta over 90 per cent of our health care budget is spent on the treatment and management of chronic diseases, and many of those are preventable. My question is to the hon. Associate Minister of Wellness. Are there any efforts by our government to undertake a wellness approach, to fundamentally transform our strategy on health care and wellness?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, and thank you to the hon. member for his advocacy of wellness. Mr. Speaker, you know very well that we have wellness champions clear across Alberta, and I applaud all of their efforts to promote wellness and also to prevent chronic disease and injury. This obviously increases quality of life while decreasing health care costs and taxes. Wellness requires financial and personal human investment, and everyone has a role to play. Our government, I'm proud to say, is a leader when it comes to wellness. We're the only jurisdiction in this country with a provincial wellness strategy and with a special focus on wellness that our office is honoured to provide.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you. To the same associate minister: will the government be able to guarantee stable and long-term funding for wellness foundations, or are we going to leave our champions in this area to struggle to find their own resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We approach wellness in many ways here in Alberta. Our government continues to advance, first of all, numerous partnerships which complement our significant investments in primary care, that are designed to promote wellness and early intervention. We also fund and support healthy eating and active living as well as mental wellness in schools and workplaces and community settings. There are many initiatives: nutrition guidelines for children and adults, Healthy U, Alberta healthy school community wellness fund, Communities ChooseWell, ever-active schools, Premier's award for healthy workplaces, Uwalk, just to name a few. Please visit, everyone in Alberta, healthyalberta.com for a gold mine of wellness initiatives.

Mr. Luan: A last supplemental question. I heard a long list of things happening. Is this really making a difference to Albertans' lives, or is it not lip service?

Mr. Rodney: I'll tell you that folks in a couple of categories would definitely beg to differ. For instance, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act created a $500 million endowment fund that provides $25 million every year for 25 years to support cancer research, prevention, and screening. Alberta's strategy for tobacco-free futures aims to prevent and reduce and protect Albertans from the harms of tobacco and tobaccolike products as well as second-hand smoke.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many other examples, that you know more than most folks. There's a long way to go, but as long as we have the best choices made by individuals and the creation of a society that makes the healthy choice the more attractive and easier choice, we're on the right track.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Hehr: I didn't get to ask today's question yesterday, so let's try again. TransAlta Corporation was criticized last week for alleged manipulation of the electricity market, but they cite documents that show the government may have the most serious explaining to do. To the minister: when the MSA adopted policies and procedures allowing economic withholding, in other words price gouging, was it implementing government policy, or if it wasn't, why did the government not step in to stop Albertans from being gouged on their power bills?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Again, protecting the consumer is a first priority. The Market Surveillance Administrator is well qualified, Mr. Speaker, to examine these situations. They have experience in this kind of issue, and they are doing their job. It's up to us to let them do their job.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the minister is listening to the question very closely, so I'll try it again. When the MSA adopted policies and procedures allowing economic withholding, in other words price gouging, was it implementing government policy, or if it wasn't, why did the government not step in to stop Albertans from being gouged on their power bills?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: The MSA was reviewing a policy regulation in consultation with lots of different organizations and companies. The Alberta Utilities Commission has the mandate to provide oversight of that, as they have been doing and continue to do.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, again I'm not getting a clear answer. Was the MSA implementing government policy when it wrote in their directives that they would allow for the economic withholding or price gouging that led to Alberta consumers paying increased prices on their power bills?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Again, I will repeat and caution this member that we will not prejudice the outcome of this case. The Market Surveillance Administrator is carrying out its functions. It's very Wild Westish in the extreme and speculative to suggest what the member is suggesting here.

Social Innovation Fund

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, with Bill 1 this government signalled that they will implement social impact bonds, a failed U.K. austerity scheme which outsources the delivery of crucial social services. The truth about these bonds is summed up well by the leader of the U.K. Official Opposition. The government is, quote, cynically attempting to dignify its cuts agenda by dressing up the withdrawal of support with the language of reinvigorating civic society. End quote. Can the Minister of Finance explain why instead of funding programs for Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, he proposes to fund wealthy investors who will profit from the misery of others?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the hon. member must not have been present or did not hear my speech on Bill 1 last night in this House. He would have then realized that Bill 1 is in addition to what is our normal operating budget. In fact, what the endowment is set to do is to do things that are outside the normal operations of government, to do things that would be innovative, to try to solve some of these complex problems. I would suggest that the hon. member might want to talk to people like the Edmonton Community Foundation and some of the not-for-profits, who are eagerly awaiting the ability to try some of these innovative ideas.

Mr. Bilous: Eagerly awaiting stable, predictable funding.

Mr. Speaker, given that we've seen this government's attempts to undermine the public sector and cut funding to nonprofits, all part of privatization by stealth, and given that stable, predictable funding for public services is the number one priority for Albertans, why is this government pursuing an unproven scheme that will allow investors to profit off Alberta's most vulnerable?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it's a very narrow interpretation of a social innovation fund to say that it's all about social impact financing. However, that's not to say that one shouldn't keep an open mind to every different way of financing social operations. We have issues, social issues, in this province. We have a social policy framework put in place. What we need to do is get the community to embrace those issues, to step forward into those issues, and make sure that every Albertan has a chance to succeed. Social impact financing is one way and only one part of the social innovation fund.

Mr. Bilous: So the minister is basically summing up. They are going to privatize social services.

Given that in 2011 the Premier promised to implement social impact bonds and given that in 2012 she promised to end child poverty in five years, for some reason this government is only keeping one of those promises, the one that benefits wealthy investors and endangers the services which lift children out of poverty. To the Premier: why?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely absurd to suggest that wealthy finances are going to get more wealthy off social impact bonds. Social impact bonds, or social impact financing, is a way in which investors can show social conscience and then use their money in a social way in the community and take a lower return but benefit the community. Again, the social innovation fund is about so much more than just social financing. It's about how we bring innovation to the social agenda, and that's an extremely important initiative for this government and this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Red Deer-North.

Small-business Regulations

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This out-of-touch PC government seems to be ignoring the impact of overregulation on the lives of Albertans. During the recent red tape reduction week Albertans shared horror stories about battles with bureaucracy as they tried starting or growing their small businesses. Recently a constituent of mine received some Transportation department tickets. When he complied with one set of rules, he was fined because it made him offside on another set, a new set. When he changed, he was fined again for breaking the first set of rules. What is the minister doing to eliminate this kind of dysfunctional overregulation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park just recently completed a consultation with small businesses across the province. One of the things that small business is telling us is that what they want is access to good information, to be able to understand regulations, and to be able to comply easily with regulations. They recognize that regulations are important to the operation of a society. However, we have made a commitment to reduce and eliminate unnecessary regulations and, certainly, to clarify and ensure that we don't have regulations operating on each other. So I would very much appreciate getting those types of ideas because we often hear about overregulation, but we don't hear the specifics about what we can do about it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be glad to share that information with the minister. Thanks for the opportunity.

What tangible, concrete evidence can the minister table in this Legislature that demonstrates that real action is in fact being taken on reducing red tape and this kind of counterproductive dysfunction for Alberta businesses?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe it was the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that published a statement recently that Alberta was the best place in Canada to do business, and I think that businesses continue to indicate that as well. But we can always do better. Rather than simply this broad generalization that seems to happen time after time – and I'm not saying that this hon. member is saying it, but generally speaking, we say that red tape and regulations get in the way. We need to start specifically addressing those regulations that should be reviewed to see whether they still make sense, whether they're still necessary, whether they're understandable, whether they can be complied with easily. Those are the things we commit to do, and every time someone wants to bring a regulation into effect, they can go onto the website or . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit today to acting on the 2012 Red Tape Reduction Task Force report: Focusing on What Matters by implementing an integrated strategy for systematically making life and businesses simpler and more cost-effective for all Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that it is my job each and every day to work systemically to make it easier for businesses to do business in this province, to reduce red tape or regulations where they're no longer necessary or where they're not easily compliant, and to ensure that it's easy to do business within this province, within the necessary regulations with respect to environment, transportation, and those things which also make our province a safe place to live. So it's that balance between appropriate regulations appropriately enforced and constantly reviewing to see if they're still relevant and needed and getting rid of them when they're not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Little Bow.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a considerable amount of discussion in the media about potential changes to the drug plan for seniors, and as a consequence seniors in my constituency expressed concerns. They're very worried that they will have to choose between prescription drugs and food on the table. Seniors today are very happy with the seniors' drug plan now and wonder why it's being altered. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health. What changes are being made to the seniors' drug plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, seniors in Alberta and other Albertans who are part of other programs enjoy some of the most comprehensive drug coverage in Canada, and I can assure the House that they will continue to receive that. The government will not be proceeding with income testing for patient contribution towards drug costs as had been announced, but what we will be doing is continuing our drive to ensure that we have the lowest drug prices in Canada, both those paid by the taxpayer and those paid by employers and Albertans. We will be continuing to consolidate the 18 programs currently across government to achieve administrative efficiencies. This is good news for Albertans and for taxpayers.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: what's the timeline in making these changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll certainly have more to say on this after the provincial budget is tabled in the House tomorrow. This is going to take some time. As we've explained before, the consolidation of 18 programs in various ministries across government is a complex process. Part of this work involves creating a common formulary, or drug benefit list, so that Albertans enjoy a consistent level of coverage. The other part of this work is that Alberta will be continuing to lead the charge to urge the federal government to work with us as provinces and territories to develop a national catastrophic drug program.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: what reassurances can I give my constituents and all Alberta seniors that they will not be adversely impacted by these changes?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can certainly assure her constituents and all Albertans that they will continue to get the prescription drugs they need in a program that continues to be the best in Canada. We are looking at ways, as I've said, of improving the delivery of programs; reducing redundancy by consolidating the 18 drug and supplementary benefit programs; continuing to push for lower drug costs, not for just this province but for all of Canada; and, of course, making sure we're doing all we can to extend drug coverage to those Albertans who currently do not have that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Rural Seniors' Transportation Needs

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Monday's throne speech was full of promises from this PC government, and you can always be assured that the opposition and Albertans will be holding you accountable. The government has consistently failed to provide adequate protection and care for seniors. For rural seniors access to essential services in large cities is largely based on an individual's ability to drive. In light of the throne speech's recommitment to aging in place and what this government is going to do with transportation needs to help our rural seniors, to the Associate Minister of Seniors: have you considered providing stable funding for handibuses in rural communities? Your first question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, hon. Member for Little Bow. Yes, my first question in this House.

Mr. Speaker, our seniors in this province are the ones that are responsible for the quality of life that we have today. We enjoy that quality of life because of all the hard work that they've done on our behalf, and we'll continue to do that. With respect to the member's question on transportation I do not have an answer for him today. But we're, of course, always open to any discussion, any ideas that make life better for seniors in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm always open to discussions also with the minister.

Can this Associate Minister of Seniors help me understand how he intends to address aging in place without a competent plan to tackle transportation needs for all seniors in Alberta, not just the ones living in the cities?

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, our commitment to seniors for accommodations in this province has been to add 5,000 new spaces over five years, and we're actually on track for that right now. The intent is for our seniors to be living in the communities or close to the communities that they've spent their lives in. They can live in these facilities as couples. They're close to their families. That's been our target. With respect to transportation this is often done in co-operation with the municipalities and local volunteer groups, and we'll continue to support that.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final question.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Minister. Would the minister be willing to meet with the communities of Hays, Vauxhall, and the MD of Taber and the county of Vulcan to help establish a sustainable program that would allow all seniors to have access to handibuses in rural Alberta?

Mr. Quest: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

First Responder Communications System

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2011 the province has allocated almost $400 million to a public service radio network called the Alberta first responder radio communications system, or AFRRCS. Since that time the scope has been limited by eliminating any data capability, limiting it to only police services. The project was originally set to be completed in February 2014. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: when will the project be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do expect the project to be fully completed in the next two years. Just so the member knows, of 332 sites there are 57 that are complete, and 107 are on their way to completion. This is also a very important project for rural communities, specifically our first responders throughout the four corners of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you. To the same minister: given that API3 was eliminated from the budget last year, what is this government's plan to enable information sharing amongst Alberta's police services and the RCMP?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member has been no fan of API3 at all. In fact, I had frequent meetings with him last year in which he had wanted API3 to be completely taken away. I actually took his advice along with several others, and we decided to move the hardware into other areas and act in the interest of the taxpayer as always.

Mr. Young: To the same minister or the Minister of Municipal Affairs: are there police services in Alberta or municipalities that are asking for this system today?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, this is a very important program for all of our first responders throughout all of Alberta, particularly in rural Alberta. We have regular meetings with our contractors but also with the individuals that will be served by this particular program. I'm very confident that we're on the right track and that within the next couple of years we'll be fully onside and that our first responders will have the best possible radio system throughout the entire province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Public Safety Legislation

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall Albertans were saddened to hear of the death of Quanto, an Edmonton Police Service dog who was killed in the line of duty. At the time the Minister of Justice stood with all Albertans in their outrage, saying: police dogs are almost like another police officer. For people who require service dogs because of hearing or sight issues, service dogs are an important part of their very well-being. The minister pledged to strengthen the Service Dog Act to include penalties for those who harm or kill service animals. In fact, he said that he'd like to have it for this spring session. Minister, when are you going to table it?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that this member uses a service dog, and I welcome her input in this particular area. I've had meetings with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and also the police. We want to ensure that we get this done right the first time. But, more importantly, I'm also looking forward to what the federal government is doing because the federal government mentioned Quanto's law in its throne speech a couple of months ago, and we will continue to work with our federal counterparts and see if we need to do anything provincially depending on what the federal government decides to do on a national basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Minister, you used the excuse for not proclaiming my Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography bill, and you then blamed the feds, and it's four years later. Given that Saskatchewan has provincial penalties for those who commit violence against service animals, when will you bring the same protection for service dogs to Alberta?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind this member that had we proclaimed her bill, there would be less protection for children in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given her mandate to champion efforts to protect Albertans from issues of family violence and sexual exploitation, will the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety, who I know loves children, commit to ensuring the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act is proclaimed into law?

Ms Jansen: I would like to thank the member for her question, and I would also like to thank the member for her service in this area and her input in the last little while. These are areas that I'm proud to say that we are fully committed to. We've held two round-tables in the past six months on child sexual abuse. We are committed to putting together a sexual violence framework. I have asked for the member's input on that. That topic and all those topics will be a part of our sexual violence framework. I welcome the conversation that we will have in the near future.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order was noted at 2:41.

I think we're done, then, are we?

Okay. In 30 seconds from now we'll resume with Members' Statements, starting with Calgary-Glenmore.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for a private member's statement, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Toupee for a Day

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is Wellspring Calgary's Toupee for a Day. Toupee for a Day was begun as a means of providing visible support to those who are living with cancer and those who love them. Each multicoloured toupee represents a different type of cancer. Today participants will wear their toupees to raise money and awareness for Wellspring Calgary.

Wellspring was founded in 2007 and provides support, resources, and programs for anyone living with cancer as well as added support for their loved ones. Programs offered by the charitable organization are free of charge and do not require referral. It's the only charitable organization of its kind in western Canada. The volunteers that work tirelessly to support the needs of those suffering from cancer as well as their family and friends, including Cheryl-Ann Orr and Barb Sinosich, who were with us in the members' gallery today, make Wellspring Calgary a successful organization.

On Monday, March 3, the PC caucus, including our Premier, donned toupees and took a group photo in support of this important cause to gain awareness for Toupee for a Day, and I believe it's all over the social media networks as we speak.

Mr. Speaker, organizations such as Wellspring Calgary are crucial to building even stronger and healthier communities in Alberta in several locations. Wellspring builds in Alberta warm and welcoming communities that ensure that no one will have to face cancer alone. I encourage all my colleagues to raise awareness for Toupee for a Day.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Agriculture Literacy Week

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share with you that March 2 through 8 is the third annual Agriculture Literacy Week in Canada. Alberta is part of Agriculture in the Classroom Canada, a national organization of provincial ag in the classroom programs. Through this organization the provinces work collaboratively to develop curriculum-appropriate education materials for teachers and students. Learning about agriculture and how food makes its way to our tables every day is the foundation of this educational approach.

Agriculture Literacy Week will see classrooms of students participate in activities to learn about, connect to, and understand this important industry. Some of the educational initiatives these organizations offer include All about Food, which is a series of materials that includes a teacher's guide, student activities, and information about farm safety; and a favourite of mine, The Real Dirt on Farming, which is a reference manual with students' questions answered by farmers from across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, agriculture is that largest sustainable industry in Alberta and accounts for a record $9.2 billion in exports. There are more than 40,000 farms in Alberta, and the industry employs over 75,000 people. Today's youth are tomorrow's agricultural entrepreneurs. We know that it is an important part of our rural development to engage today's youth and new farmers in continuing and growing the legacy of Alberta's agricultural sector.

The government of Alberta is proud to recognize Agriculture Literacy Week. We extend our thanks to the organizations that are working with industry and educators on these important programs for Alberta's youth. I would encourage you all to go to YouTube and look up the video Long Love This Land. It is an ATB video that gives you a lot of information. It's inspiring.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Acute Health Care in Consort

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2011 the government temporarily shut down acute-care beds in Consort because of a lack of physician services. The bed closure was supposed to be temporary, but the months have turned into years.

I stood in this House and raised this issue in March of last year. I was assured that the government would work with the community to get this facility reopened.

Again in May of last year I stood in this House and addressed this issue with the Health minister. Unfortunately, the minister responded with: "The decision around matching physician supply with the ability to open acute-care beds is more complex, of course, than simply the availability of physicians. There are many other support staff that are needed." However, that is not what was promised to the community of Consort, which has met all of the requirements put on them by this government. Yet Consort continues to wait for a timeline concerning the reopening of their acute-care beds.

The community of Consort has gone out and recruited the doctors and even built them new homes in an effort to reinstate these life-saving acute-care beds promised by this PC government. In response, their efforts have been answered with nothing more than excuses. Unfortunately, excuses do little to help the people in need of emergency care. Another promise made, another promise broken.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 3

Securities Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce Bill 3, the Securities Amendment Act, 2014.

Members will note that this was originally introduced as Bill 42 last fall. This bill was originally introduced in November but did not pass before the fall session was concluded.

Bill 3 will further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's security laws as part of the ongoing collaborative reform of Canada's securities regulation. Bill 3 focuses on over-the-counter derivatives and the harmonization of derivatives regulation in Canada. As members of this House may recall, the lack of transparency with this type of investment was cited as a contributing factor in the global financial crisis in 2008.

Bill 3 creates a statutory framework for the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives, providing the Alberta Securities Commission with the authority to make rules such as mandating central clearing, trade reporting, electronic trading, solvency, and other conduct requirements for those trading in derivatives. Provincial and territorial regulators will be encouraged to agree on a harmonized approach to regulating derivatives capable of being adopted across Canada. Bill 3 is an important step in that direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Bill 4

Estate Administration Act

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act.

The bill continues the work of the succession law project by modernizing and reorganizing the Administration of Estates Act, the Devolution of Real Property Act, and substantive rules from the surrogate rules.

The current estate administration law is not easily accessible or understandable. There is little guidance to help personal representatives understand their role and responsibilities in their dealings with a deceased person's estate. Bill 4 is intended to make the laws dealing with estate administration more modern, user friendly, and easily accessible. It will make it easier to understand the role of the personal representative in carrying out the final intent of the deceased. It is intended to reduce delays and costs for personal representatives, beneficiaries, and their advisers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock once again.

Bill 201
Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight)
Amendment Act, 2014

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce another bill, Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014.

Bill 201 would amend this act, setting Fusarium graminearum levels for Alberta seed and feed at .5 per cent. Currently there is a zero-tolerance Fusarium level in effect for seed produced across the province. This zero-tolerance level puts Alberta farmers and producers at an economic disadvantage compared to other jurisdictions like Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Ensuring that Alberta farmers and producers get a fair price for their seed is integral to the government's plan to maintain a competitive economic future for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 202
Independent Budget Officer Act

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise to introduce for first reading Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act.

It's no coincidence that I am tabling this bill the day before the provincial budget is to be read. My colleagues on this side of the House and I fully expect tomorrow's budget to continue to baffle Albertans as it is broken apart in ways that are so difficult to comprehend. It saddens me, Mr. Speaker, that a Premier who campaigned on open accountability and transparency has repeatedly broken that promise and changed the most comprehensive budgetary reporting as was introduced under the leadership of Premier Ralph Klein.

Bill 202 seeks to remedy this going forward by providing an opportunity to members and to the public to receive government financial information and budget estimates through an independent third party that reports directly to the Legislature. I believe that the independent budget officer will allow all members of this Assembly to better represent their constituents. As a result, Albertans can expect a more responsible and accountable government.

I look forward to the debate on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister – Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and table the appropriate number of copies of 176 letters from my constituents. These letters speak to the concern and opposition to a proposal by Goldenkey to drill exploratory wells in the urban areas of my constituency. There is incredible concern by our community, by our city council, and by our chamber of commerce, and I'm here tabling these letters today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(3) I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the schedule for the 2014 main budget estimate debates.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you have one?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I have two tablings today. The first is from Melissa Kehler, and she is quite concerned about access to psychological services, believing, rightly, that the mental health needs of Albertans are not being met, particularly because the services of psychologists are not funded under provincial health plans, and is urging the government to take more action.

The second is a letter I received from Lori Germaine. She's a youth support worker who accompanied a youth into the Alberta Works office and was quite appalled at the belittling, degrading, oppressive, and appalling interrogation she felt the youth received, and she details that in her submission.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings? Sorry. Cardston-Taber-Warner, my apologies. I have you on the list. I just overlooked it, so go ahead.

Mr. Bikman: I won't take it personally, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

I have the requisite number of copies to table of a letter sent to me by Cliff Bullis of Jay's Towing Service, commenting on an accident that occurred about a week or so prior to the sending of the letter, expressing concern about the hazard that it is to be a tow truck operator and wondering if we can't look at this and perhaps find a better way to alert the public to the dangers that add to the hazards that tow truck operators are working under.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Seeing no others, I am pleased to rise and table five copies of the page biographies for the Second Session of the 28th Legislature, spring 2014. I encourage you to have a look at our pages.

Hon. members, it is just about 3 o'clock, so we can squeeze this in. There is one point of order that was raised by the Member for Airdrie, that came up during a response to a question, the response being given by the Solicitor General. I'm not sure if this is more a clarification point or what, but let's hear what you have, then.

Calgary-Fish Creek.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am, I guess, troubled to rise on a point of order. I'm going to use the citation, if I may, of 23(h), (i), and (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I honestly am troubled, quite frankly, by the answer that I received from the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General when I asked him the question about the child pornography bill. I think his answer was that the bill would be making children more unsafe. I guess I want to first of all remind the minister exactly what was contained in the bill, that "any person who has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a representation or material is child pornography shall immediately report the matter to a reporting entity."

3:00

You know, Mr. Speaker, I have a reputation, if I may, in this House from the 21 years that I've served in this House for the work that I've done on the protection of children. I've spent the entire 21 years of my career protecting children in this province. I'm deeply hurt and deeply saddened on behalf of Albertans and all the children that I have helped for this minister to say that it makes children more unsafe. I need to remind the minister that I brought forward the PCHIP legislation, which was the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, which, if I may say, was the first in North America. We have literally pulled hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of children off the street that have been involved in prostitution. I brought the first Amber Alert to Canada, to this province and then took it right across this country as the minister. And I can go on and on about some of the things that I've done in regard to protecting children in this province.

When I brought forward the mandatory reporting of children involved in prostitution, if I recall – and I will have to go back to Hansard – I think this minister stood up and spoke in support of this particular legislation. You know, I have asked him repeatedly about the fact of the importance – as a previous minister of the Crown you don't always have to wait for the federal government to do something. It's always a good initiative to kind of take the lead, that we've always been proud of in this particular province, on the protection of children involved in prostitution. He could have used the excuse on the .05 legislation that the federal government has under the Criminal Code .08, that kind of thing.

I guess that for me and on behalf of the people that serve in this Chamber and, for that matter, Albertans and all of the children that have been involved in child pornography – and I know full well that this minister in his position, quite frankly, because I was in that position as Solicitor General, sees horrific things come across his desk in regard to the horrendous, awful things that are happening to children in this province in child pornography, so I'd ask him to withdraw his remarks.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, do you wish to clarify?

Mr. Denis: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I, like this member, will never apologize for standing up for children's safety. I thank her for the past work that she has done, but my comments were true and accurate, and I will quote directly from a legal opinion that I've received from an independent lawyer as part of the Alberta Justice department on October 1, 2012:

- (a) The limited use that may be made of this information [is concerning]; and
- (b) The lack of a prohibition on letting the suspect know they have been reported, thus giving the suspect an opportunity to destroy the evidence.

That is their legal opinion about Bill 202.

The opinion goes on, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that proclaiming Bill 202 into force would lead to legislation that would create a mandatory reporting scheme that would create information that would be difficult for law enforcement agencies to use.

Perhaps most importantly, it would allow [Internet service providers] to circumvent federal data retention rules and prohibition from notifying the suspect.

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I do appreciate this member's commitment to children's safety, but at the same time, proclaiming her bill would provide less protection for children in Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. You know full well that points of order should not be taken as an opportunity to prolong debate on this matter. We've had a former minister, now the private Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, indicate her comments. They are on the record clarifying the work she did and her intentions in that regard. We have the Minister of Justice's opinion plus an opinion he solicited from outside, and I believe we've heard enough on this matter.

It's a point of clarification, two different versions of the same story, if you will, and we're just going to move on.

That concludes the Routine. Let us go on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Kubinec moved, seconded by Mr. McDonald, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 4: Mr. Barnes]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Monday's throne speech was an opportunity for the Premier and her PC government to hit the reset button on several fronts and lay out a positive and achievable vision for Alberta's future. Now, I always enjoy throne speech day because of all of the ceremony of the day, and maybe it's because I'm feeling so warm about having participated in that as an observer that I'm going to start with some positive things that I liked about the throne speech. It really shouldn't be all that surprising that we're able to find a few things that we agree with.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek explained how the negotiation goes between a government and our Lieutenant Governor when it comes to issuing the throne speech. It's a bit of a negotiation where he finds in the government's agenda the things that he agrees with. Now, I know that the Lieutenant Governor, His Honour, is an honourable man. I have found many areas of common agreement with him, and I think he articulated several things in the speech that we can all agree Alberta should aspire to. I don't think that many of the concepts that were enumerated in the throne speech are of a partisan nature.

I think that all of the caucuses can agree on certain aspects of it; for instance, asserting Alberta on the world stage. The government and the Premier well know that when she is travelling abroad, we support the efforts that she's doing to represent Alberta's interests. We just have an issue when she travels abroad on personal travel and tends to bill that to the taxpayer. But when she does her work on the international stage representing Alberta's interests, we're very supportive of that.

I noticed that the throne speech mentioned twice that Alberta is the lowest tax jurisdiction. It mentioned that we've got the most jobs and the highest incomes, but it was the fact that it mentioned twice that we are the lowest tax jurisdiction that gives me some hope that the government has turned away from some of the initial types of comments they were making when this Premier first came into the position when she talked about reviewing the Income Tax Act and seemed to suggest she'd be looking at a whole new range of additional taxes. Plus, as we're going into a discussion about big-city charters, I can take some comfort that because the lowest tax jurisdiction was mentioned twice, that may be an indication that the government might be interested in following our approach of better revenue sharing as opposed to giving new taxation powers.

I also noticed in the throne speech that they mentioned my old boss the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in acknowledging that Alberta has the friendliest small-business environment. I think we can always aspire to do better and that we should continue to lead the country. I think my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner identified some areas that were slipping. Particularly on the regulatory front, it certainly would have been nice to see, as there has been in previous throne speeches, some mention to reducing the regulatory red tape and paperwork burden on our small-business community.

One thing that warmed the cockles of my heart: the idea that they were finally, finally, finally going to commit to reducing spending to less than inflation plus population growth, something that the MLA for Airdrie has been a tireless proponent and advocate for for many years in his alternative budget and budget recommendations. It finally sunk in, Mr. Speaker, that this is the kind of approach you need to take. In an environment where you have volatile revenues, you actually need to keep a handle on spending. I'll congratulate the government if, indeed, they actually end up committing to and implementing that the way we had expected that they would.

I did also acknowledge and think it's very important that the throne speech acknowledges that we need to take seriously the issue of aboriginal consultation. I, of course, have demonstrated how serious I take this issue as I am the critic for Aboriginal Relations. I notice today that Jim Prentice has been seconded to work with Enbridge and the other pipeline companies and proponents of the Gateway proposal to be able to try to work as an advocate and intermediary between the different parties to try to get a pipeline proposal approved with our First Nations communities. I think it's a very positive step, and I'm looking forward to seeing how that develops.

The issue of new flood mapping. Once again, this is something that we have been advocating since the weeks following the flood. We had wished that the government would have done it in the right order. Instead of arbitrarily identifying communities that needed to have flood payout, we would have preferred to see flood mitigation measures, new flood mapping, and then see the compensation follow from that point. They've got it backwards, but at least they're committing to that in this throne speech, and we'll see how that ends up playing out. I think we have a huge opportunity to make sure that this does not fall off the radar as it has in previous years.

After the flooding of 1995 and the flooding of 2005 there were recommendations that never got acted upon. I think in this case where the two hardest hit ridings were the ridings of the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition, it guarantees that we're going to be able to keep the pressure on to make sure that we see some action on this. I'm sure that the Premier is receiving the same phone calls that I am, and I'm hopeful that this time we're actually going to see the government take the actions they need to take to be able to protect our communities in southern Alberta.

I'm glad as well to see a renewed commitment to ensuring that our friends in rural Alberta are supported. I'm so proud of my caucus colleagues from Little Bow, Strathmore-Brooks, Cypress-Medicine Hat, Lacombe-Ponoka, and Rimbey-Rocky Mountain

House-Sundre. They went on a grain tour over the weeks leading up to session to be able to hear directly from farmers the impact that the disruption in rail service was having on their businesses and gave some fantastic feedback, which we intend to continue to press the federal government to take action on. I'm glad that this is an issue that is on the government's radar screen as well, in addition to issues such as country of origin labelling, more education in home communities through distance learning, and completing the last mile of broadband Internet access.

In addition, the new relationship with cities and other municipalities has been an issue that my colleague from Calgary-Shaw has been an outspoken advocate on. We've put forward a proposal, which I hope the government takes a close look at. As ideas go, this would be one we wouldn't be upset if they stole because we think that this is exactly the kind of new relationship and partnership that we need to have with our municipalities to recognize their area of autonomy, recognize their status as another order of government, and give them the long-term stable funding they need to be able to meet the needs of their community.

There are some whoppers in the throne speech that I do have to address. One of the lines, "building nothing would sacrifice Alberta's future," is clearly not an option. I'm not sure why this line would appear in the government's throne speech. It's pretty clear that none of the parties represented in this Legislature, none of the caucuses have a build-nothing agenda. If you look at our plan for 10 years – investing in infrastructure, $50 billion, and doing it debt free – we recognize that building infrastructure is a core government function, a core business of government. It is unfortunately the government opposite, that has had such wild variation in infrastructure spending and the lack of certainty that they've given to our partners in postsecondary education, health care, education, municipalities, and other areas, that has created this level of uncertainty. We clearly need to have a new funding model to be able to ensure that we can build all the infrastructure that we need when we need it without going into debt.

The throne speech also said that the government "will stay true to its word and be there with the education, health care, and infrastructure [that Albertans] need." Once again I have to question the kind of examples that they brought forward, touting family care clinics when the Slave Lake example has shown that the family care clinic being implemented is an absolute disaster and is actually reducing the services in our small-town communities. I would hope that the Health minister would take seriously that lesson and, rather than forge ahead with a failed plan, that he would do the proper consultation with our physicians to make sure that he's not putting any other small communities at risk.

The acknowledgement of highway 63. We're pleased that the Transportation minister finally did put that on a faster timeline, but it's a bit of a stretch to say that the highway 63 project is going to be completed in full and on time. As my colleague from Calgary-Shaw pointed out, it's about 10 years late. In fact, when the new announcement came out that they were going to finally prioritize this, my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills pointed out that the construction was taking place at a snail's pace. The Calgary Herald decided to actually map out: if construction had started and a snail had started at the same time that this project was proposed, which would have gotten further faster? The snail would have moved along further and faster than the government did on this project. So it's a bit rich for them to claim that it actually was in full and on time. We're pleased that they finally did end up fast-tracking it after all of the delays. I think this would be a wonderful service to our friends in Fort McMurray and absolutely essential in supporting the economic growth up there.

The issue of education: to ignore the full-scale parent and teacher revolt that is taking place over the new math and to forge ahead anyway despite the fact that there is all of this push-back, 7,500 individuals signing a petition, and I predict it's going to be several thousand more before they're done. The fact that this government is so tone-deaf that they don't realize they're going too far too fast on a flawed model I think is something that should be very worrying for parents.

The argument that they made, that they froze MLAs' pay following a cut: well, let me tell you my recollection, Mr. Speaker. I recall passing the Major report here, and MLAs at that point were making $144,000 per year. By the end of that year the Members' Services Committee, the PC members anyway, voted for an increase, and then we were making $156,000 a year. By the old math that's an 8 per cent increase, but under the new math I guess it's whatever the Premier says it is. So I would have to say that the fact of the matter is that that's another whopper in the throne speech, and I think it's unfortunate that the government is trying to push forward false information to the public. I just wanted to call that out.

In addition, we already see that they're hedging their bets on the new school promise. We all recall the promise in the last election of 50 new schools and 70 more modernizations before the 2016 election. Well, I'll point you, Mr. Speaker, to the question yesterday from my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka. All there is on the Blackfalds site is a PC-branded Building Alberta sign and a couple of posts. That's what the promise for a new school in Blackfalds looks like, no shovels in sight, and I can tell you that that's what we're hearing all around this province.

When the Education minister says that we're going to see all of these schools built before the next election, why, isn't that interesting? The throne speech said that it's going to be built over the next three years. Well, three years would take us to 2017, which would actually be after the next election. So I'm just going to put it out there that my guess is that the government is just using this as an election ploy and that they don't really have any intention of meeting the objective of getting these projects built before the next election. Just a prediction, but I may as well put it out there since it was mentioned in the throne speech.

In addition, they talk about a new framework for renewable energy, something that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has been talking about for some time, but I've got to say that when you've got a Market Surveillance Administrator catching a company manipulating the market to boost prices artificially, not just once but for a second time, you have to wonder about whether the government is truly committed to putting consumers first. We just simply aren't seeing it.

A Canada free trade zone. This came out of the blue. I'm not sure where this came from. It's the idea of reducing internal trade barriers. I think that's not a bad idea, but sometimes I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I get the impression that the Premier thinks she's the Prime Minister rather than the Premier of Alberta. If I were Premier of Alberta, I would focus on getting the New West Partnership right because the two most important relationships that we have right now are with our neighbour to the east, Saskatchewan, led by Premier Brad Wall, and our neighbour to the west, led by Premier Christy Clark, and I have to say that those two are fellow travellers on the Conservative side of things. You would think that there should be an amazing partnership between our three provinces to be able to move aside all of the trade barriers that we have that are preventing the free flow of trade and goods across our borders. It seems to me that this is the partnership the Premier should be focusing on getting right, and I have to say that it appears to me that when you read stories about the relationship between our Premier and some of these others being frosty, I think this is the area that she needs to do a little bit more work on.

The throne speech also bragged about the agreements with teachers and doctors but mentioned nothing about the blind-side hit that's coming to our front-line public-sector unions with new pension legislation that is taking place this fall unilaterally. I have to say that it is not our AUPE front-line workers who are the problem when you're looking at government overspending. As they pointed out when the sunshine list came out showing how many workers are making over a hundred thousand dollars per year, it was only 88 of the 22,000 AUPE workers who were on that sunshine list, and those were scientists. Most of the people who were on that sunshine list were political appointees, senior managers, not the folks who are down in the trenches doing the front-line work.

In addition, they have pointed out as well that 4,000 front-line AUPE workers earn less than $45,000 a year, so you can imagine how they're feeling when they've been watching the debate in the Legislature this week, to see that the Premier continues to refuse to pay back $45,000 for a single trip, when that's how much they make in a single year. Now they're being asked to have wage austerity for the next four years. Since the government doesn't seem to even want to acknowledge our front-line workers let alone thank them, let me stand and thank our front-line workers with the AUPE for the incredible work that they're doing on behalf of all Albertans.

So now we have the biggest whopper of all in the budget. The government is going to live within its means and balance the budget. Well, I have to say that when you look at the supplementary estimates that we're going to be debating, albeit there are hundreds of millions, billions of dollars in there because of flood relief, there is also $700 million of additional spending increases that have nothing to do with the flood relief effort, 700 million additional dollars that this government is asking for, which I find a bit peculiar because in the throne speech they bragged about the fact that they have already had 375 programs reviewed, that they're two-thirds of the way through the results-based budgeting process, and they're asking for $700 million more.

Wasn't the whole purpose of the results-based budgeting process to find efficiencies in certain places so that the money could be moved from low-priority areas to high-priority areas? If that's the case and they are continuing to ask for more money, having gone two-thirds through that budgeting process, I would have to say that results-based budgeting is not something you should be touting as a success. It's actually turning out to be a pretty big failure.

The other thing that we're seeing as well is this strange action that the government is taking to try to pretend that they're saving more. But they're not really saving more; they're saving through borrowing. They're borrowing to save money so that they can spend more money on corporate welfare programs through the various different endowment funds that they're creating. We as a party do not support subsidies to private corporations, and we'll be watching the kind of decisions the government makes in how they allocate these dollars. We saw through the years of late 1980s and the early 1990s, before Mr. Klein came in and fixed things, that there were billions of taxpayers' dollars wasted on failed diversification efforts. I fear that the government has started us down a track of taking a very similar flawed approach. On balance I'd have to say that the throne speech offered Albertans little assurance that the Premier's government has Albertans' best interests at heart. It gave no indication of a change in approach. The speech was very disappointing in many ways.

To truly understand this throne speech, we should step back to the 2012 throne speech. We've now had two years to see whether or not any of the high ideals actually translate into meaningful government action. There are a couple of things that I think indicate whether or not we should have some optimism in looking at the issues that are raised in this throne speech. In the 2012 speech this government promised to "deliver and fulfill a clear, focused, target-driven mandate." Albertans were supposed to know where the province was headed and how much progress was being made. This government claimed that it would be true to its promises. You know, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I can't think of a single promise that this government has kept let alone being true to its promises more generally. We were told that the government would "bring new fiscal discipline to budgets so they deliver the outcomes Albertans want in a financially sensible way." The government bragged about its fiscally conservative beliefs.

Well, here we are today, two years later, and we have an absolute fiscal mess. I have to tell you that we had to go to the extreme measure of holding a press conference to give the media a tutorial on how to interpret the government's budget numbers. When you cannot actually have on budget day any kind of consistency from opposition parties or advocacy groups or any kind of commentator even being able to figure out what the debt or deficit number is, that's not a problem with the analysis; that's a problem with the way the government is presenting the books. We had to go through and talk about what an operating surplus is versus what a consolidated operating surplus or deficit is because the government's definition of a consolidated surplus or deficit is different than what accountants would look at as a consolidated surplus or deficit.

We also know that it's impossible to say that you're running a surplus and then still take out billions of dollars worth of debt. This is what puts the lie to the argument that the government is putting forward. We are going to be racking up billions of dollars worth of additional debt. We are going to have hundreds of millions of dollars in additional interest charges. I think this is important. I'm not sure if the government is thinking about the way in which debt and finance charges impact their ability to deliver on their operational promises. If we follow down the track that the government outlined in last year's budget, we'd be looking at $17 billion worth of debt by 2016, $600 million worth of finance charges. Where are those dollars going to come from?

Let's remember last year: $147 million they gutted out of postsecondary because they were looking, scrambling to try to find ways to make their deficit look less bad than it was; $42 million cut out of persons with developmental disabilities programs, causing absolute chaos and near devastation on the front lines of providing services for our most vulnerable. Those are in combination less than $200 million. Where's this government going to come up with $600 million to pay those finance charges? That, I think, is the aspect that they're not considering when they try to argue to Albertans that borrowing billions of dollars has no additional cost. It has a massive cost, and it pulls dollars away from the things that Albertans value in being able to hire front-line teachers, nurses, correctional officers, social workers, and so on.

We were also told in that throne speech in 2012 that the new Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation would usher in a new era of transparency and accountability. There would be a new Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, whistle-blower legislation, and world-class conflict-of-interest legislation. Well, instead, what we've seen is a FOIP review act that has a process that is the most flawed review process in Alberta history. Normally you actually have members of the opposition involved in that process. They're choosing not to do that this time. Our whistle-blower protection legislation is classic Orwellian doublespeak. What we've seen in practice is that its main function is to protect the government from whistle-blowers.

We saw this when my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake went public with the whistle-blower who found that there was $10 million worth of new computers stuffed into a storage room for a year and a half and becoming obsolete rather than being deployed by Alberta Health Services. These are the kinds of things that we need to have come forward so that we can find some of the solutions to these problems. But it's very clear that that's a dramatic example of how our whistle-blower legislation just isn't working.

Instead of world-class conflicts of interest legislation, this Premier has had to deal with some of the most serious conflicts of interest allegations in Alberta history, including one where she has been at the centre. This government's record on its promises is nothing to be proud of. The program this government delivered over the last two years from the last throne speech was not clear, it was not focused, and it was not target driven.

I have already talked about some of the promises in this throne speech, some of the concerns that we have with health care. We've got incredible concerns that they have made no practical movements on being able to correct the problems that we see in health care, particularly in seniors' care. We keep getting told that issues are going to be addressed, yet the 100-kilometre rule still exists, we still have seniors who are getting only one bath a week, we still have seniors who are not being fed home-cooked meals, and we still have instances of seniors suffering neglect, in the case of some suffering neglect to the point of death and not actually seeing any mechanism for being able to be redressed with their family.

Let me just finish by saying that the one thing the speech made clear was that more debt is in Alberta's future, and there's absolutely no plan to repay any of it. The 2012 throne speech promised fiscal discipline and fiscal conservatism. Instead, we got three budgets which even the Auditor General had a hard time deciphering. For a government that claims to be investing so much in future generations, they seem to be more content than ever to saddle those future generations with billions in new debt. I think the Finance minister has said that rather than buy himself a new pair of shoes, he chose to buy his grandkids new pairs of shoes. I suppose that's pretty appropriate because it's going to be his grandkids who are going to have to pay back the debt that he's borrowing on their behalf today. I think it's shameful.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, Albertans were hoping that in this throne speech they would see some humility, they would see some leadership from this Premier, and they would see a government that desperately needs a change. Instead, they got a laundry list of vague promises and an uninspiring indication that the status quo will continue. This throne speech will not put this government on track to recapturing the trust of Albertans. It will not solve the big problems that Albertans want the government to act on. It has no real solutions to our finances, to health care, to education, or on dealing with the pressing needs of our municipalities. I'm afraid that most Albertans will agree with me that despite the best intentions expressed in this throne speech, this is a government that clearly just can't deliver.

With that, I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:30 Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Hon. members, before we commence consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to review briefly the Standing Orders governing the speaking rotation. As you know, yesterday the Assembly approved amendments to the Standing Orders that impact the prescribed rotation for supplementary supply consideration. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (d) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the fourth party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.

During the above rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes.

The amendments to the standing orders that were approved yesterday by the House now provide that the above rotation continues to the extent possible for the time remaining. However, the speaking times are limited to five minutes as set out in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

Government Motion 6, approved by the Assembly yesterday, provides for six hours of consideration for supplementary supply. Accordingly, this time frame allows for another complete rotation of the above-noted time allotments. For the balance of the time remaining the chair will recognize members in accordance with the prescribed rotation, but the time allotments will revert to five minutes for the member, followed by five minutes by the member of Executive Council.

The chair appreciates that this is a new procedure, so if members have questions as to when their caucus will be called in the rotation, please approach the table or send a note to the chair.

We will now proceed to the estimates.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2013-14, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund.

When passed, these estimates will authorize increases of $2,014,000,000 in voted operational funding, $223.2 million in voted capital funding, and $10.7 million in voted financial transactions funding for the government. The estimates are consistent with the amended 2013-14 fiscal plan presented in the appendix and will authorize additional funding for 13 departments: Aboriginal Relations; Culture; Education; Energy; Environment and Sustainable Resource Development; Executive Council; Health; Human Services; Infrastructure; Municipal Affairs; Service Alberta; Tourism, Parks and Recreation; and Transportation.

The requested funding includes a little over $1.3 billion for flood recovery activities by 11 of the 13 departments involved, and the ministers responsible for these departments will be pleased to answer any questions from the members of this House or their designates, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Just before you proceed, hon. member, in the past we have either had the members speak their full 10 minutes and then the response is a full 10 minutes or you can choose to go back and forth for the 20-minute period. Can you let us know which way you would like at this time, please?

Mr. Anderson: I think we'd like to go back and forth, and I don't think we'll be spending an overly large amount of time.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: All right, Madam Chair. See, I got that on the first try. We'll note that.

The first 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates, back in November, increased operational spending by $625 million and capital by $140 million. This second supplementary supply will increase operational spending by over $2 billion and capital spending by $223 million.

Much but not all of the increase that we can see in here is due to the 2013 Alberta flooding. According to the updated fiscal plan operational spending is up about $700 million in nonflood operational spending. It is clarified further on in the document that when you take away federal flood money, revenues this year will top $42 billion. That's $3.3 billion more than budget and $2.5 billion more than our previous provincial record of 39 and a half billion dollars, set in the Premier's first year.

The government on the other side is clapping for those huge revenues, which is dumbfounding because despite these record revenues, Madam Chair, this government is unable, or I would say unwilling, to balance the budget. That's an embarrassment. That's what that is.

I do not understand, and we would like to understand from the ministers why, when you've gone through this results-based budgeting process that you keep harkening to, you have been unable to find enough efficiencies that you don't need to ask for more non flood-related money, why you could not find efficiencies in other areas to mitigate the $700 billion ask. We understand in here that, for example, in education we need $70 million more for unexpected enrolment. Obviously, that needs to be paid. There's no doubt. But why could we not find efficiencies in other areas of government to offset that requirement?

Why could we not find $34 million for the start-up costs associated with the Alberta Energy Regulator? How could we not have looked at other efficiencies in government to find that amount so that we're not here having to ask the taxpayer for more money?

We've given in our alternative budget, which we presented to the President of Treasury Board, many examples of where money could be saved. We would never expect him to follow all of our advice, obviously, but certainly there are some savings there that could be used to offset the amounts, the need to borrow another $700 million.

Although we're not going to take issue, I don't think, with any of the specific line items in these supplementary estimates in Bill 2 here, it's still very frustrating that we have to do this. Why isn't the results-based budgeting process working? How can we smash our provincial revenue record and still be borrowing $3.7 billion this year to build capital? Why can we not pay our bills even in these best of times, revenue-wise?

Madam Chair, if we can't get it right now – I mean, there might be another couple of years in front of us where, you know, we have high oil and gas royalties, in excess of $100 a barrel and so forth for oil, et cetera, et cetera. I hope so. But, boy, we're sure putting ourselves in a heck of a pickle here if revenues go south at all at this point. That's really disconcerting for me as a father of four and for many Albertans and, I'm sure, many parents in this room, the effect that that will have on our kids' future if we don't get our spending under control and have a sustainable budget.

Asking for $700 million of non flood-related spending in a record revenue year: it's just not appropriate. We shouldn't be doing it, but we have to because most of these items in here are not really optional. I mean, you really do have to. These are legitimate expenses. It's just that it's too bad that savings couldn't be found. That's really my critique or problem with this process.

I will say that I'm completely supportive of what the government asks with regard to the flood-related spending and rebuilds. There are, of course, some issues on the education file that were a little bit questionable with some of the capital that was used in the Premier's riding, whether that was really necessary, but that debate has already taken place, so I won't dwell on it here. Other than that, most of the flood-related spending in here seems to be appropriate.

With that, I will – now, how does this work? A point of clarification: if it goes back, can I have another member of the caucus stand up within our time, or do we have to wait it through?

The Deputy Chair: No.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Those are my questions, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. member talks about balancing the budget, and he mentioned yesterday in one of his speeches about the consolidated balancing. I know he was referring perhaps to the way the federal government might balance their budget. Hon. member, I'm assuming that's probably what you're chatting about or perhaps the B.C. government – maybe that's the one – or Saskatchewan, which actually had qualified statements prepared by their Auditor General. Not a very good thing to have happen to you.

I'm curious, Madam Chair, if the hon. member will criticize Mr. Flaherty when he comes out with a balanced budget, which he intends to do, which includes a significant amount of borrowing within his balance sheet in his time. I'm curious whether he will stand up in this House and claim that the federal Conservative government is misleading the people of Canada and Alberta with their financial statements because they're not really balanced. I'm curious about that because I've been in consultation with some of the other Finance ministers across the country about where we're all at in terms of our finances.

I would point the hon. member to page 75 of the supplementary estimates document, which shows that we have indeed done considerably better this year than what we had put out in our budget last year. In fact, in my third-quarter estimate we did actually foreshadow what was in the supplementary estimates. We prepared a consolidated statement of the fiscal plan, which shows that rather than having a deficit in the net assets or consolidated financial statements of $1.97 billion, which was what was in the budget previously, we're going to end up probably around the $335 million mark. As well, we're going to have a considerable amount more in our contingency account at the end of this year than what was budgeted because, Madam Chair, we didn't budget for the flood. We didn't budget for the largest economic disaster this country has ever seen. Yet because of those high revenues and because of the fact that we had money in the contingency account, we were able to manage what turned out to be a very significant hit to our operating budget and now a very significant hit to the capital plan.

Do you know what, Madam Chair? We're showing Albertans how we're going to pay for our capital plan. We're actually putting it on paper and putting it in financial documents so people can understand where the money is coming to and from. You know, the suggestion from across the way was that there was some document that the Wildrose Alliance had put out there that showed something like a budget or balance sheet. I haven't seen it, but I would love to. I would really like to see where they're going to come up with $4.8 billion a year for the next 10 years without going to savings – maybe that's what they're going to do – or without raising taxes or without cutting education, health care, human services, the environment, any of the departments that are large enough. Well, health care, obviously, would be the big one. They would have to probably take a couple of billion dollars out of health care, which would be an interesting thing for Albertans to understand where they really stand.

Madam Chair, he's right. This is a very significant amount of money, and we had a very significant event. The floods in 2013 were a $6 billion event that this province was able to manage and still come out of with being the only jurisdiction that has no net debt, that has net assets. In fact, it has net assets of some $44 billion. Net assets: that's our net worth. There isn't a province in Canada that can stand in their Legislature and say that except this one.

Madam Chair, I look forward to tomorrow because I think the hon. members opposite will be happy about the plans that we're going to be putting in place. But tonight is not about tomorrow. This afternoon is not about tomorrow. This afternoon is about the supply estimates.

I think I've answered some of the general questions that the hon. member had. My understanding of what we were going to do, hon. member: from the listing – we have the ministers here – if you'd like to maybe go through each one, and you can do the questions back and forth like we've done in the past. Is that the way you want to?

Mr. Anderson: Sure.

Mr. Horner: Okay. I will do the Energy estimates, when we get to that, I guess, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy.

But just as another piece of information that I think is important to get on the record, there is $1.3 billion worth of flood-related requests in the $2 billion. There are also things like $160 million worth of energy costs for marketing oil. We're actually not asking for more money. We're changing the way we account for it. We're putting it separated so you can actually see what the revenue is and the cost of the transportation. It's an accounting change. It's not asking for new money, as the hon. member might suggest.

There are legitimately new money requests in here because our population grew by 105,000 people last year. We had a lot of people move into our province, and they came, Madam Chair, why? Because we've got the jobs. We created 70,000 jobs last year, the most in all of Canada. That meant that we had to do some other things, and we did have increases in the Education components, obviously in health care, in Human Services, all of those components where we are going to be dealing with a larger population because of the volume.

Outside of the flood, the $1.3 billion, outside of the energy accounting change of the $157 million or $160 million, there were, yes, increases to the budget because we had the largest increase in our population that this province has seen, and we needed to adjust to it. Thank God that we had the financial resources to do that without borrowing for operating, because that's what we did, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: You just heard the minister's strategy for balancing the budget: thank God. That's the strategy right there. I'm not saying that that shouldn't be one of the arrows in the quiver, but maybe we should rely on a little bit of common sense and not just divine intervention to help us balance our budget, Mr. Minister.

I think that the minister attempted to answer as best he could. He is, of course, restricted by the facts, so it's difficult for him, but I have no further questions at this time on this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members from the loyal opposition party? Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, would you like to go back and forth, or do you want to talk for 10 minutes?

Mr. Anglin: I'll just take the 10 minutes, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: You're going to take the 10 minutes? Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: It's easier that way, and hopefully I don't even have to take up the full 10 minutes. I just have some questions, and I'm hoping the ministers can answer the questions.

There is a significant amount of money in this supplementary that clearly has to do with the whole debacle with the flood, and I fully understand that. It is reasonable to presume, as the minister just said, that we didn't budget for the flood, nor can you. With an event of that magnitude, if that becomes a regular item, then we have to rethink how we're going to live in this province. But the fact is that it does happen, and we have to deal with it.

The question I have is: with a lot of the money that was allocated to the disaster recovery and to some of the municipal flood readiness, where are we? What I don't get from the report – I just get the total amount – is: how was it spent to prepare for us, particularly, going into the next budget? Clearly, I think the minister knows. I'm going to use Sundre as my example because I have intimate knowledge of this one community, but it still applies to all the other communities in these floodways, whether it's Drumheller, whether it's High River.

Sundre is the community where I have my office, it's where I have very good relations with members of the community, and it is a community in imminent threat of flooding should it happen again this spring. I can venture to say that it will happen in one form or another. The key is: how are we spending that money, and are we doing the right thing? Does that dovetail with our future plans that will be coming up?

A couple of questions I really have. I believe there were some spurs that were built for some flood mitigation, and that would be probably under the heading of some sort of erosion control or bank control. I have seen that in government reports.

The other is dealing with spurs. Clearly, if we're going to do flood mitigation, we are going to do some work with the erosion of the banks, we are going to be building spurs, and we have to also be thinking about dredging. There was money spent on dredging both in I believe Canmore and High River, but there was no money spent on dredging in Sundre unless the minister can correct me on that. I'm pretty sure that no money has been spent on dredging in Sundre.

The key here is this. Where are we with the money that we've spent? I know there's been money allocated. It's in here somewhere. It's been allocated to do some additional studies. I believe the county of Mountain View got an allocation of money for the Sundre area dealing with the headwaters of the Red Deer River, which, by the way, will affect Red Deer, which will affect Drumheller and all the communities downriver. If we take care of the headwaters, we do sort of get ahead of the curve a little bit, helping all those other communities downriver in dealing with the flood. The question is: how much of this money has been allocated both from ESRD and under Municipal Affairs? I'm not clear where the overlap on some of the money spent occurs, but each shares in the responsibility as it falls under their jurisdiction.

What I want to have, hopefully, a clearer understanding of, particularly as it relates to dredging, is that this is an area that I think is absolutely paramount to the flood mitigation for the community of Sundre. They have long bridges that have a very shallow riverbed going underneath them, and of course when that river rose, as the Minister of Transportation understands, we lost some bridges here. I believe that that money would be in the allocation or in the supplementary dealing with Transportation and Infrastructure as we repaired those bridges. What we don't want to do is have to repair those bridges again. I think we can all agree on that.

What I'm really looking for is sort of connecting the dots, connecting the dots from the previous supplementary to this supplementary, which is now dealing with a lot of issues as we move forward into our budget, and how we're going to connect the dots here. If the minister or ministers, because it does criss-cross ministries here, could give an explanation of how much of these monies were on flood mitigation, particularly relative to the high-risk communities – specifically, I'm interested in Sundre – that deal with berms and spurs, the two items, the third item being dredging. It is clear from the people who live in the community that if we take some very economic measures, like cleaning the debris out of the river north of Sundre, we could actually save a tremendous amount of money if the river were to pass unimpeded.

It is when trees fall into the river and act as, you know, nature's own dams that causes the river to cut a new path. The minister knows, after his visit, that the Red Deer River upriver from Sundre has moved almost a complete mile from its previous riverbed. It does have that ability to change and shift just because – and I refer to it as a gravel delta – it is very wide. The river can shift easily from one channel to another, depending on just a small blockage, whether it be trees or any other type of debris that would form.

What every study has confirmed to this point is that there needs to be a short-term plan to deal with what's coming up this spring, there needs to be a long-term plan that needs to fit into, hopefully, what we've spent so far, and that plan has to take in three items: berms, spurs, and dredging. Without this I'm not sure how we can get a plan to work. Really, the two ministers that I'm focused on are the Minister of Environment and SRD and the Minister of Municipal Affairs. If they could connect the dots for me, I would appreciate that.

I will tell you this. The money that you spend and the money that you've spent here has a tremendous impact on saving us money in the future. As the Minister of Finance just stated, you did not plan for the flood; you could not have planned for a flood of that magnitude. But what we can do is plan on the prevention so that we don't have to suffer something of this magnitude again. That's the key. I want to make sure that the money that we did spend and the money that we're going to spend is doing exactly what we need to do so that we never have to endure a disaster of this magnitude.

The disaster affected lives, it affected property, and it affected the economies of these communities. It killed the economy when it destroyed those small businesses. It took a long time to start to rebuild these communities, and they may never be the same again. Sundre doesn't want to go through this once again. This is a serious issue dealing with the one community. It's a serious issue dealing with every community that faces this every spring. It is not something that we can minimize or marginalize. It is something we have to take very seriously.

Most importantly, in these dollars that we spend, what is dealing with planning versus what is dealing with action? Most of these communities have seen document after document dealing with planning, the community of Sundre being one. We've done multiple studies. What we're looking for is committing to action and taking action. If the minister could explain what action has been taken physically with the money that's been spent, what actions remain that have been identified, and how this goes from this point to the next point, that would be extremely helpful to the citizens of Sundre. I believe the mayor and council are up here this week for the breakfast, and they certainly would like to hear some good news on what the game plan is. So what's been done, what needs to be done, and what, really, is the long-term plan?

Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Hopefully, the minister can kind of connect the dots for me.

The Deputy Chair: There are now 10 minutes available for any member of Executive Council to respond. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, I'll certainly attempt to connect the dots. Sometimes the dots may not be completely connectable, but I'll do my best.

You know, these are important questions that the hon. member has raised, and I do appreciate the comments in general from the hon. Member for Airdrie in terms of the support for the work that this government has done. We appreciate that support and appreciate the encouragement that we're all providing to ensure that we support southern Albertans who've been through this catastrophic event.

The hon. member was asking, largely, about mitigation measures that are being done in Sundre. As he well knows, I was in Sundre on the 7th of February. I met with representatives of Mountain View county and the town of Sundre. We had very, very constructive discussions. There are two or three different aspects there. We work very closely with the municipal governments and work with them to meet their needs as they define them, supported, obviously, by engineering work that has to be done. We want to do the right things, not the quick things. We want to ensure that we build up so that communities are prepared should there be a spring flush or a high flood anything at all like there was last year.

The hon. member called it dredging. Really, it's scalping. Removal of the rocks and debris in the river course tends to happen without actually going into the water, so it tends not to be dredging but scalping out the gravel and the debris and the rocks that have been deposited there by high water. That's really an initiative led by the municipality if they see that that is something that needs to be done. They work with their engineers. We help them fund that work.

You know, we have a lot of mitigation work being done around southern Alberta, that's already started, where equipment is out on the road already, getting ready to do this work. A lot of it will be done over the next month or two months. Many communities are preparing to be ready by the middle of May so that they have all of the berms – the berms and spurs, as the hon. member calls them – in place well in advance of where we would normally expect there to be a risk of further flooding.

Actually, we've allocated – you can see the numbers in the plan – very substantial resources to the mitigation across the province. Some of those projects are still being costed because the engineering work is still under way, so the final cost we'll see at the end of the day. But we've allocated very substantial resources to make sure that we're ready, that these communities are protected, that the berms are built, and that they're built in time. That's obviously what we're doing in every single community that's been affected. We're working with the reeves and the mayors and the councils of all of these communities.

Obviously, there's erosion control along the sides of the rivers as well and on the edge of important infrastructure like bridges. The member referred to the bridge in Sundre. There's an awful lot of work that is going on. You'll see that there are trucks travelling around this province loaded down with big rocks that are, you know, hardening the sides of many rivers in order to prepare for the future.

The mitigation initiatives throughout the major watersheds that were affected last year: some mitigation projects can be done this spring. Those are the smaller ones. Those are the rock barriers along the sides of rivers. Some will take much longer. Some will be multiyear projects, undoubtedly. But we expect to be in a position before too long to address both short-term and long-term needs for these communities in order to protect them. The goal is to protect Albertans and ensure that communities are protected from future floods.

I know that that doesn't answer in a great deal of detail. If the hon. member – and I say the same to any of my colleagues on all sides of the House – has specific suggestions or specific projects that they think perhaps a community is not seeing or that they're not hearing back on in time because of the volume of projects going on, I'm happy to entertain a conversation to explore that and to work with MLAs and with the communities, the municipal leaders, whether of counties or towns or cities or villages, in order to make sure that we help everybody be ready for a flood should there be that possibility this spring.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition that would like to speak?

Seeing none, we'll move on to the second. This is 20 minutes that you can take. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, did you want to go back and forth, or do you want to take your 10 minutes?

Mr. Hehr: Well, we'll see what we're going to do here. Yeah, we'll go back and forth. I'm going to rattle a little bit, and then hopefully they'll rattle a little bit. We'll sort of go by their – I don't think anyone is going to get their shirt in knot about too much of what I'm going to do. Does that sound fair?

The Deputy Chair: Certainly, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: All right. There we go. Well, you know, it's an honour and privilege to speak to supplementary supply estimates, to offer a few comments and, hopefully, direct a few questions towards what has sort of gone on here over the course of the last year.

It's always sort of interesting when you get a chance to see the Minister of Finance as well as the Wildrose Finance critic offer their various solutions to today's problems and various interpretations of what has or has not transpired in this province. It's really sort of a neat experience. First off, you have parties that, in my view, essentially believe in the same thing. They believe in the same fiscal structure, so how can you really do things differently? The other thing is the viewpoints of the past, where the Minister of Finance says: what a glorious record the Progressive Conservative Party has had in terms of managing our finances.

Here is where I will agree with the hon. Finance minister or the Finance critic of the Wildrose. When you look at that Economist article that was written in the Economist some months ago, that was going through jurisdictions positively and negatively as to how countries or regions have dealt with their oil wealth, they single out Alberta for having abjectly failed in its obligation to save this oil wealth for the future. They say that we've run it essentially like a tinpot despot would, you know, with no idea or no clue on what to do with the oil wealth. So on that the Wildrose Finance critic is correct although on other things I'm not so certain.

In any event, turning to the flood, it looks like much of these expenses were related to the flood as well as to regular population growth exercises, that really should be funded as a matter of course. My comments on the flood are, one, like the comments from the last speaker, that we have had to mitigate for damage.

I will also put a bug in the Minister of Municipal Affairs' ear because I believe he's the minister in charge. Although the federal government said that they would look at somewhat of a national flood insurance program, it was really kind of a lukewarm response that I saw out of the federal budget. In my view, if the federal government doesn't get onto this program pretty quickly, the Alberta government should seriously consider moving ahead with its own provincial flood insurance program. In my view, this could be accomplished given the fact that we're headed for five million people. Also, it would be prudent in that 57 per cent of the natural disasters that have occurred, that have tapped into the national program, have emanated from Alberta. So it would be very important for us to move along that path should the federal government forgo the opportunity to provide what I think would be in this nation's and definitely in this province's best interests.

Moving on to some specific questions, I notice that the Minister of Education is here, and possibly I could direct them there. Some supplementary amounts were unutilized by his department. So I'm just looking at the operational program spending, operational support for public and separate schools, and I believe that says that it's almost $63 million. Is that primarily due just to population growth and strictly per-pupil grants? Would he have a number of how many extra students that would have covered?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes, Madam Chair. That's accurate. The member is right. The increase in the operational grants to school boards is primarily and almost exclusively for the enrolment growth that was unexpected or beyond our forecasts. In total about 18,000 students were added to the school system last year, up from about 600,000 the previous year.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Are the numbers and the increases to accredited private schools and accredited private early school service operators the same?

Mr. J. Johnson: Yep. The total number is just over $60 million, and about $2 million of that is to accredited private schools and about $2 million as well to accredited private early childhood service operators. The rest would have been to the public schools.

Mr. Hehr: On the capital projects it says that you got some money for "35 new schools and modernizations re-profiled to 2013-14 due to project delays in 2012-13." Just to confirm, these were not any of the new schools or modernizations promised by your political party in the last provincial election, were they?

Mr. J. Johnson: No. This is just cash flow, basically money that didn't get spent from the last year, like you said, due to projects where the money is just not out the door because they were delayed in one sense or another or other reasons. But the money was there, approved for budgeted schools, and it was just the cash flow of the projects.

Mr. Hehr: Now, I don't see it specifically mentioned here, but there were some spending announcements after the flood in regard to education, in particular the rebuilding of Elbow Park school. I believe the ministry and the government of the day earmarked $10 million for the building of Elbow Park school. Is that in this supplementary estimate here?

Mr. J. Johnson: Some of that is, and then a good part of that is with all the flood dollars that we had in some of the other supplementary estimates. I believe there's about $20 million out of here for the flood recovery. Part of that is for the modular classrooms, not just at Elbow Park but also at Notre Dame and Senator Riley and in High River. The Sprung structure: about $650,000 for that. That was at Elbow Park, that temporary gym structure that we put up there.

Mr. Hehr: Was any of this earmarked for the actual reconstruction of the old school?

Mr. J. Johnson: No, they're not.

Mr. Hehr: When will that money be forthcoming?

Mr. J. Johnson: That's in upcoming years.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Well, thank you very much.

I think those are all my questions, Madam Chair, and I thank the hon. member for answering them.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

We'll move to the fourth party. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we've just started another 20-minute block for you. Would you like to do 10 minutes and 10 minutes or back and forth?

Ms Notley: Well, I'm still kind of rushing through things right here. I think I will try 10 minutes, but I'll ask questions in the course of it and then ask for answers back, I guess. We will see. Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Ms Notley: What's that? [interjections] Yeah. I don't know. We'll see. I'm just sort of going through this. This is very off the cuff. Let me just say that.

I guess one thing I do need to point out is that these documents didn't reach our office until this morning. They were provided to the MLAs in the House yesterday. Our staff had made inquiries to get these documents provided to our office last evening so that they could do what they often do, which is work late into the evening, going through this stuff. Those documents were not provided and didn't arrive in our offices till this morning. I will say that we are a bit frustrated by that process, and I hope that that will not be repeated with additional stuff going forward.

We're looking at a fairly significant increase, and I guess I have a few questions around . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt you, but the noise level is getting pretty high here.

Could I ask all the members to please keep the noise level down? If you have a serious discussion, you can take it out into the outer rooms. Thank you very much.

Ms Notley: I'll be directing my questions and comments to Health, Human Services, Advanced Education, and Energy, and I think that's mostly where my questions and comments will be focused. I'm hoping that somebody will answer in the event that the minister of that particular area is not here, that somebody else will answer in their stead.

I guess we might as well start, then, with Innovation and Advanced Education. I am assuming that the $53 million that we're putting in there is the one-third restoration of the $147 million cut that was announced in April. Is that correct? Okay. I guess I said that I was going to go 10 minutes, so that's my first question. Is that what that is?

Then my question is: how did we come up with that $53 million number? I'm sure, as members on the other side know and people in the public know, our position was that the $147 million claw-away from the ministry of advanced education was not a positive development, but I am very curious as to how the ministry came up with the $53 million that went back into it. What were their criteria? How does that particular number fix the multiplicity of problems that we've seen develop as a result of that $147 million cut?

Today I joined with some university staff-worker unions to call on the government, of course, to complete the restoration of the $147 million that they cut. So we've got the $53 million here. We've got the other $100 million that also needs to go back in there along with the increases that were promised by the government to Albertans, frankly, in the last election, which was regular, predictable, stable funding at the rate of about 2 per cent per year over three years. That was actually what was promised in the election. Instead, we got a $147 million cut, and then we got a $53 million return. So my question is: how is that $53 million calculated?

I'm wondering if part of that calculation relates to what I've started referring to somewhat casually as a chaos premium or a chaos tax. I'm sure the minister of advanced education will have seen the comprehensive institutional report that was put out by the University of Alberta or at least appended to its minutes in January, which talked at great length about the level of chaos and the level of cost incurred within the institution, not by simply losing the money and having to cut those services but also the insecurity and the chaos that those cuts caused and the additional cost that that created and the lost opportunity that that created as a result of the rather extensive damage to their reputation and the contracts which suddenly were cancelled and the high-level academics and students that they had hoped to attract to the university who then left because they perceived that the postsecondary system in Alberta was under attack, all of that stuff.

My question is: what does that $53 million that we are putting back in do? How does it work in relation to the $147 million that was cut in April?

Of course, I take this opportunity to say again that I certainly hope that the government, with its new-found wealth, might reconsider the commercialization and Americanization of our postsecondary system plan that they appear to be on and, instead, focus on developing a postsecondary system that actually is able to serve Albertans and serve as an opportunity for people to improve their quality of life and their income-earning potential over time, which is not what's happening right now as much as it could be. So those are my comments about the additional money going into advanced education.

Now, I do know that one of the ministers here was at one point responsible for the issue of PDD. I'm not sure if he still is or if he's been moved around now, so I apologize for not remembering everyone's roles, but hopefully someone can answer this question. We see in Human Services an additional $81 million, and I would like to know what that's for. We were told that the roughly $40 million that was planned to be taken from PDD would not be taken, so I'm assuming that that's part of the money that's in that $81 million. That is my question. Is that what's in the $81 million?

My other question is: what's the other money? I know that certainly historically it's often been the case that the government has come in here and made fairly major cuts to income support under the sort of somewhat delusional assumption that as the economy improves, those at the lowest end of the economy will just improve as sort of a percentage of GDP growth. We know that that's not happening, that the level of inequality in this province is in fact growing, and that every time we recover from a boom, the lowest sector of the population, or the population that's most at risk, does not actually recover with the rest of the population. So we have this cycle of boom-bust, but the difference between those benefiting from the booms and those who are not grows each time.

That's significant. What it means is that when the government projects that it can cut $50 million from income support, really, in fact, that's probably not a wise projection. Just because the economy is picking up does not mean that income support is going to be reduced accordingly. That's what I've found in the past, that it's often been the case that the government has come in and said, "We're going to be able to knock all these people off income support," and then, lo and behold, in supplementary supply we're asking for that money back. We have set up administrative processes that make it absolutely almost impossible for people to get income support because of the bureaucratic labyrinth that they must negotiate in order to meet a social worker, get the forms filled out, and receive the funds. It becomes increasingly challenging every year. Notwithstanding that, some real sort of strong-hearted people will manage to make their way through it or in many cases find advocates who will help them so that, in fact, they do continue to receive these benefits.

I'm wondering if that's the other portion of the money that is going back into Human Services. I think it's important. I'd like to make the point, of course, that the throne speech said absolutely not a single, solitary word about the Premier's at the time profoundly cynical commitment to end child poverty in five years and then ignoring the issue for the next two years.

That being said, this issue of income support is absolutely fundamentally linked to it. Children are not poor in isolation, and children do not become members of the middle class while their family is otherwise living on $700 a month in substandard housing. Frankly, the access to income support that is required by families that are at risk, where children are living in poverty, is very important.

I certainly hope that we are increasing income support. Frankly, we need to increase levels of income support. I challenge anybody on that side of the House to raise a family of two and feed them and live in safe and secure and non bedbug-infested accommodations in either Edmonton or Calgary for under a thousand dollars a month, which is currently what they're being asked to do in many cases. That's just a little aside.

That being said, I'm wanting to know more details around what the increased money going to Human Services is for. Alternatively, was that additional money that went out with the money cards during the flood? Maybe that was it, too. I don't know.

Another question relates to energy. I see that we're looking at about $35 million for the AER.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's going to come, apparently, as a complete surprise to this hon. member that you just can't simply raise every budget in every department in every year. From time to time there will be difficult decisions that have to be taken. You heard members opposite in another opposition party taking quite the opposite view to that which you did, which had us cutting significantly more out of our budget. So we did indeed make some difficult decisions, and one of them was cuts to operating grants, a $147 million reduction to postsecondary institution operating grants last year.

We did, however, at that time recognize that there could be or would be increased enrolment pressures, and we promised that if conditions improved during the year, we would address those enrolment pressures. Indeed, conditions did improve during the year, so we are now looking at a $53 million increase to address enrolment pressures.

Now, for the hon. member to suggest that this is somehow a chaos premium, as she said it was, is facetious and somewhat insulting. I can assure her that members of staff and the minister himself worked with institutions to determine what their pressures were and came up with an appropriate funding level. If that truly is the low regard with which that hon. member holds her fellow duly elected MLA members of this Assembly, then I might suggest that she find another line of work, because this one isn't going to be a very happy or productive one for her.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Chair. In the absence of anybody else here to answer the question with respect to Energy and given that I have some passing familiarity with the question, I'm happy to try and be helpful although perhaps not as definitive as one of my colleagues might have been.

The hon. member has asked about the $34.3 million with respect to energy regulation. That is to help with the initial stand-up of the Alberta Energy Regulator. It relates to investments that were required both from a timing of capital availability perspective and also from the perspective of investments like technology investments that needed to be made to accommodate the single regulator taking on the responsibility not just for the six energy statutes but also the four environmental statutes as well. So it's really one-time capacity building within the Alberta Energy Regulator, and subsequent to that the regulator is paid for by fees paid by industry through an allocation to industry for services they receive from the Alberta Energy Regulator. I hope that answers the hon. member's questions.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister – Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You were asking about $81.6 million for PDD. Sixty-three million dollars of this for PDD was to slow the pace of change and also to address the higher caseload. Traditionally in PDD the growth is about 2 per cent, and last year we had an unprecedented growth of about 7 per cent, so we took in more than 700 people. Out of the $63 million approximately $42 million is to support the PDD transformation. The new contracts with the PDD service providers will help support the individuals to achieve positive outcomes, so that's where the $42 million is going.

Government also committed, however, at that time to defer signing of the new contracts to give service providers more time to assess individual needs up to an appropriate service level. The key results now, if we look at it today, are that 99 per cent of the service providers have signed on to the new outcome-based contracting, which we were talking about. By slowing the pace down, it gave the individuals the opportunity to adapt to what we were looking for, so now 99 per cent of them have signed onto the new contracts.

The other clarification and change they were looking for is in terms of the supports intensity scale, SIS, program. If we look at it today, 96 per cent of the individuals have SIS assessments done right now, so the system itself is working fantastically well.

PDD also has been working with service providers to create an actual plan which will outline their transformational strategy. I can tell you that 75 per cent of them have completed their transformational plans as well.

Included in the $63 million, also in the PDD program, was an additional $21 million to address the caseload. As I alluded to earlier, we had about a 7 to 8 per cent increase in the caseload, approximately 770 people, of which 713 were eligible, so that's why 81 point some million dollars was asked for.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members of Executive Council that would like to address the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

There are four minutes left in the block of time.

If you wanted to speak, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you have four minutes.

Mr. Bilous: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair. I have four minutes, and then the other side has . . .

The Deputy Chair: That's the total amount of time between you and a minister, so if you want to ask a minister a question, make sure you address that person.

Mr. Bilous: I'll defer to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I prefer for it to cycle back through, so I have a full block of time.

The Deputy Chair: Well, there's another rotation. Then you'll have to wait to the second rotation.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: So I'll defer to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Deputy Chair: You want four minutes?

Ms Notley: I'm wondering if the Minister of Health can begin answering probably a series of questions that we will ask around the money going back in vis-à-vis the proposed change to the seniors' pharmacare plan, what was planned to be coming out of the budget, and what is now going back into the budget. I believe there is an increase there that you're asking for, and it's related to the delayed implementation of that plan. So we'd be looking at: what were the assumptions last year, what were the annualized assumptions, and what are the changed assumptions going forward as a result of the delayed implementation of that plan? I may run out of time, and he may run out of time, but we can start the discussion.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll do my best. I'm sure the hon. member knows that in supplementary estimates and certainly prior to budget day I'm not in a position to discuss any go-forward initiatives with respect to this program or any other program. Obviously, what I can talk about today are the items that are included in supplementary estimates.

With respect to drug and supplemental health benefits, as I think the hon. member would be aware, a portion of the supplementary estimate for Health is related to a delay in the implementation of changes to drug and supplementary programs in the fiscal year that is about to conclude. We had a delay in implementing some of these strategies that resulted in an anticipated savings of $45 million this year, that was therefore forgone. So these supplementary estimates for my ministry take those forgone savings into account. They obviously create an issue in the current fiscal year, which is addressed.

I can answer in subsequent questions as to how that $45 million works into the net amount that is requested by the Ministry of Health in supplementary estimates for this current year.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

There is a minute and 13 left, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, I'm just looking through the numbers from last year's budget, and it looked as though the expectation was that just this year, understanding a delayed implementation, we were looking at a savings of about $60 million. Then, of course, it was deferred I think in its entirety. As a result, there was an extra $45 million, that we're asking for now. My question is: what happened to the other $15 million to $20 million?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Well, Madam Chair, the difference obviously represents efficiencies which were used to offset other increases in expenditures, notably physician compensation and other aspects of drug and supplementary benefit costs, in particular high-cost drugs for cancer and high-cost drugs for rare and orphan diseases. So the answer is that the net amount was used to offset anticipated overexpenditures in other areas of my budget.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We will now move to the next 20-minute block, set aside for the independent member. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise. This is the first time I've spoken to the supplementary supply estimates.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt, but would you like to take the full 10 minutes, or do you want to go back and forth for the 20?

Mr. Allen: No. I've just prepared some comments to make, and there's perhaps one question in here. I'll just go through my notes and allow the minister to address those if he sees fit, probably the President of Treasury Board.

I guess, you know, technically, I was told that now as a member of the opposition I'm supposed to critique things like this that the government is bringing out. As I went through the supplementary supply estimates, I really had some difficulty finding anything that I disagreed with. As a member of the Treasury Board previously I'm quite familiar with the processes that happen, and I'm quite familiar with having to reallocate items from ministry to ministry and with how that happens. Certainly, we can appreciate the emergencies and unexpected circumstances that can arise. So I'm going to take more of a nonpartisan approach on this and really narrow my comments down to my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, which is the constituency I'm very proud to stand up for and represent here in the House.

Every year we try to budget for disasters and incidents that are out of our control. I know that quite often there's criticism that we didn't budget enough or that we budgeted too much. I understand that there are those occurrences that you just cannot budget for appropriately such as 100-year floods, that happened this year. They just come up, and we're simply not able to prepare adequately for them all the time. But they do offer us an opportunity to learn from our mistakes and ensure that preparations are in place properly should these occurrences ever happen again. Who knows? You never know. Sometimes you just have no idea what you'll be faced with, and the result will be these supplementary supply estimates.

I only really had a quick chance to go through the supplementary supply last night. Looking at the ministries that directly affect my riding, there are quite a few of them. One of the biggest issues in my constituency last year, of course, was the flood. Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was hit in early June of 2013. It was the first to be hit in the province, and it caused literally millions and millions of dollars in damage. It left many with very difficult and challenging living conditions, and we're still trying to recover from those devastating effects.

I note in here as well that Aboriginal Relations will be receiving $50 million to assist those flood-affected homes in all of the First Nations communities and bring them back up to provincial standards. As we know, whatever affects any community in Alberta affects all of them. Families stretch across the province, and I know that the First Nations in Wood Buffalo will be very pleased to see that their interests are being acknowledged both at home and across the province. Having a safe and livable home is one of the basic necessities of all people. Those that were directly affected by these floods throughout the province need assistance. And help to the First Nations, of course. They were very heavily impacted.

The operational amount of $2 million needed for the flood recovery program to complete additional studies under the provincial flood hazard identification program is unfortunate. As I've said many times in this House, Fort McMurray does reside in a flood plain, and we're surrounded by the Athabasca River and its tributaries. As such, we're not really impacted by the new identification program. We were identified a long time ago. But as years go on, it's important that other flood plains are identified and that the rest of Alberta learns from the lessons that we in our constituencies are continuously faced with.

Because of our geographical location erosion was a very significant issue this year, and it's a large concern. We have two major rivers and other tributaries that flow into that, and that's where a significant amount of our damage happened during our floods. So $96 million for restoration that resulted from erosion damage is very welcome as I know that that was, again, our biggest issue. I'm curious how much of that is being made available for our area, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Road construction, of course, which is also so very important, as well as damming and drainage were all directly impacted by the flooding and caused significant damage to these infrastructure necessities in Fort McMurray.

I'm curious as to the estimated $66 million that was requested for the 2013 Alberta flood recovery by Human Services. How much of that total would have been earmarked for the residents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo? I know that many of these residents of our communities required services, so if the minister would be kind enough to let me know how many of these dollars came to our area, I would appreciate that. It doesn't have to be answered right away today. I can always get that answer later.

I do note that there was $10 million earmarked for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo through Municipal Affairs. Thank you, Minister – we appreciate that – as well as the Minister of Infrastructure for everything that was done during our disastrous flooding. The citizens that were directly impacted required everything from health care and housing to erosion damage. Municipal Affairs did handle this untenable situation, and I am grateful that they're continuing to do so. I would also have to acknowledge the work of my friend and colleague the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation for his work as the associate minister responsible for the flood mitigation in the DRP in Fort McMurray.

The stabilization of municipal revenues for lost property taxes is also important for us to ensure the quality of life.

I guess I was also looking through there, and I noticed that for the total for fiscal 2013 to end of March we're showing approximately $4.3 billion in expense for flooding, but also on the revenue side we've got $3.1 billion in recovery from the federal government. In our messaging we tend to always focus on the $4.3 billion that we're spending. I'm going to go out there and tell people that the net is going to be $1.2 billion. But, really, in the big scheme of things, we've seen this before, and when we apply for the federal government's funding on there, that can be sometimes tenuous in itself in recovery. So I'm curious if the ministry has any estimate as to when we may be able to expect the federal government to fulfill that commitment. I'm assuming as well that we wouldn't be able to peg that down as to how much of that from the federal government would be coming to my constituency. It would be just in the general revenue mix.

We were severely impacted by the flood. That is the biggest impact in the supplementary supply estimates. Again, I think this was a situation that had not been experienced. It was the most significant natural disaster in Canada's history. I commend the government for the work they did in responding so quickly and assisting those in need. I know we still had some lessons to learn should it happen again, but I know that those actions will now be in place for the future.

Thank you for the opportunity to address this. So just a couple of questions. If I can leave those with the minister.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a brief comment on the remarks the hon. member made about the Aboriginal Relations supplementary supply estimate. I want to clarify for the House that we estimated $191 million of spending would happen over the next three years as we help those communities recover. We had put in a supplementary estimate already of $50 million for the current-year spending.

We are now voting an additional $20.758 million, which is purely a cash-flow thing. We have to move it forward from next year's spending. The overall estimate of $191 million still remains firm at this time, but we're going to spend that in this year, so we have to have it voted in this year.

I do want to highlight for the House – and the member went partway there – that this is not a normal thing for Alberta or indeed any province. I'm informed that after a flood that happened some two years ago in one of our sister provinces in our country, there are still First Nations families living in motels. We committed at the start of this that we're not going to do that. We're going to address First Nations housing as we do with all other Albertans, so we undertook this program, and that's what the spending is about. That hon. member can inform his First Nations constituents that that stands for everybody in this province. When you're impacted by disaster, we're there to help.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll take some of the questions and answer what I can at this point, and we'll review the Blues to ensure that we get a written response to the hon. member subsequently on the more detailed questions that he's asked. We can certainly provide him with the details of the pretty substantial assistance that's gone to Fort McMurray as has gone to many other communities around the province.

The hon. member has asked about the federal share, essentially the backstop from the government of Canada on the disaster recovery program. You know, we're all grateful as Canadians to have the support of the people of Canada in an event like this. I've recently taken a look at the historical disaster recovery programs that have taken place in Alberta, and I can say that the government of Canada, while eventually paying up, doesn't always pay up with great alacrity. The Premier asked for the government of Canada to give us a billion-dollar advance on the costs of this flood. We're fronting that as the province of Alberta, and we expect that to come through.

But there are about a dozen disaster recovery programs that go back as far as 2007, and it's worth as much as a couple of hundred million dollars, in that order of magnitude, that we haven't received payment on yet as well.

We're going to be encouraging the government of Canada to come up with the money a little more quickly this time and to perhaps settle up on their previous obligations. So, by all means, I encourage all members to encourage the government of Canada to support us in this time of need. We're grateful for the support. The cash would be helpful, too.

With respect to the other projects there are DRP, disaster recovery program, files where people have received assistance. In the order of magnitude of $20 million was set aside just in the supplementary estimates from November and this set of supplementary estimates. That's just one portion of it. There's a lot of work going on around the province. We're making very substantial commitments to mitigation measures, to hardening the sides of rivers all over the province, including in the hon. member's constituency.

We're working very closely and, I would say, very effectively with municipalities to help make sure because we respond to and support municipalities when they come with specific proposals for support from us. That's primarily how we are able to deliver the assistance to Albertans, because municipalities actually deliver on the ground and do arrange for the work that's got to be done on the ground.

I'll take a look, and we'll make sure we get the specific answers to the specific questions to the hon. member with alacrity, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members of Executive Council that would like to respond? There are a few minutes left if the independent member would like to have any further comments. Thank you very much.

We'll move on to the next block, which is a 20-minute block for the government. Are there any members of the government that would like to speak at this time?

Seeing none, we will move to the second rotation. The second rotation requires that no member may speak for more than five minutes at a time. The first block of time is 60 minutes for the Official Opposition. Are there any members? All right. Thank you very much.

We'll move on to the second opposition party.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Sure. I might as well ask a question here.

The Deputy Chair: All right. Would you like to take the full five minutes, then?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, whether it takes five minutes or not, one never knows, so we'll go from there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you so much. A couple of those questions were going through my mind when the hon. member from the fourth party was asking questions of the Human Services ministry in and around disability supports in this province. It did look like at least some of the line items went up. You see those there on I think it's page 44 for people to see. It's in support to people with disabilities and the like. I think it was $64 million, actually, that went up. If you could just walk me through why some of those costs went up. Was it the population increase or the like? Then I may have a follow-up question.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. Madam Chair, $63 million was for persons with developmental disabilities. It was essentially to slow down the pace of change that was going on. Then $42 million was to the supports for PDD.

So two things happened. One was to slow the pace down; the other one was for the caseload. Traditionally in PDD we have 2 per cent growth. We serve approximately 10,000 people, so that would have been 200 people. This year we've had approximately 700-plus people who applied for this. As a result, that money was needed as part of the transformation. Also, the new contracts with the PDD service providers will help support the individuals to achieve positive outcomes. If that's what the question was, that's what we were looking for.

Hon. member, if we were to look at it today, 99 per cent of the service providers have signed onto the new outcome-based contracting, and when we look at what we were trying to achieve in terms of the support intensity scale, the SIS program, 95 per cent of the individuals around the province have been assessed.

Mr. Hehr: Did you guys chalk up the 700 additional people on PDD to population increase? What was your assessment as to why? Was it increased awareness of PDD as a result of the big hullabaloo in the community as a result of the cuts? Have you guys made an assessment as to why there were 700 additional people on PDD?

Mr. Bhardwaj: When you're talking about last year and slowing the pace down, as the previous minister was travelling the province and as I travelled the province, we heard from people loud and clear that they needed more time to adapt to the transformation. As a government we listened, and we slowed down the pace to adapt and allow the service providers the opportunity to make sure that they adapted to the pace. As a result, if we look at the success of that today, the vast majority of them have signed up.

To answer your other question, in terms of how come all of a sudden there's an increase in the numbers, well, some of the numbers were in the queue, which was being assessed at the time, so all of a sudden there's a jump which we see. It also has a lot to do with, you know, that on average in the province of Alberta we're probably getting 10,000 people moving to this province almost every single month. So it's a combination of things, not just one thing.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I think that's where my follow-up question is, you know, and it moves to the assured income for the severely handicapped line item. Sir, to be blunt, I represent Calgary-Buffalo, and I have individuals who come into my office on a continual and ongoing basis who appear to be at least applying for the assured income for the severely handicapped program. In my view, they appear to be qualified and, again, appear to have available the magic wording needed from their doctor: cannot work in any capacity. Okay? Those words are said explicitly on the form. Yet despite our population growth last year, despite that we have a Minister of Education who clearly showed 18,000 more kids in our system, we somehow did not find one additional person who moved into this province or an additional population number who qualified for the assured income for the severely handicapped program. Could you tell me why? You can see why I'm a little befuddled on that.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, I can tell you that in terms of assessing the needs of individuals, this government is very much committed to providing the highest quality of life for its citizens, making sure that they're inclusive in the communities and making sure that they enjoy quality of life, that they have a nice, caring, nurturing environment.

In terms of looking at the programs in PDD in terms of the unmet needs, in fact right now we've got a pilot program in place where we're looking at 20-plus people who are missing perhaps in some of the other areas, and we're trying to look after them as we speak right now and looking after their specific needs right now.

Mr. Hehr: I don't know if you understood my question, so I'll try it again. You know, the Minister of Education clearly indicates that we have an increased number of expenditures on the Education file from the sheer number of children who moved into this province and from the sheer number of people.

My question is: given that there are expenses going out in Education and other places that simply relate to the number of people who come into the province who need education, I'm surprised that we didn't see any increase in the number of people who have been deemed worthy or needing assured income for the severely handicapped because of our population increase. Was the program capped to say, "No matter what, we are not paying for anyone else regardless of whether they're qualified to go on assured income for the severely handicapped"? Was it just an anomaly that despite our population increase absolutely no individual beyond what was budgeted for at the start of the year was deemed as meeting the criteria of the program? I'm just wondering if you guys have had an assessment on that.

Mr. Bhardwaj: We absolutely do, hon. member. On average the assured income for the severely handicapped number grows by 2 per cent. So as we speak right now, the considerations in the assessment process for whomever applies for AISH are being considered. I don't know exactly what number you're looking for, but in terms of the actual number of people who are being assessed, it has grown by approximately 2 per cent year over year.

Mr. Hehr: So what you're telling me right now is that as long as the person qualifies for AISH and they are Alberta citizens, they will get that funding that they're due and entitled to, with no limitations on what your actual budget number is and that there's no messaging down to the rank and file saying: "Hey, look, tight budget. You're not getting any."

Mr. Bhardwaj: No. As I stated earlier, this government is very much committed to providing, you know, the highest quality of education. As long as people are qualifying, whatever their qualifications are, that's what's been allocated to them.

Mr. Hehr: All right. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We now move to the fourth party. Is there anyone? This is a block of 20 minutes, where you can speak for five minutes at a time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Yes, I'd like to go back to just the changes to the allocation for Health. In particular, the minister as well as the document itself talks about the $136 million that was made available from lower-than-budgeted expenses in other programs. I think I heard that, basically, there was about $15 million in savings from the delay in implementing the pharmacare program. I'm not entirely sure. Anyway, I'm wondering if the minister could simply outline for us where the $136 million in savings came from within the Health budget.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Certainly. Thank you, Madam Chair. The $136 million is from various areas of the Health budget. It includes surpluses that were identified in a number of areas, and I stress that the fact that there are surpluses is not a reflection that these items are still not a priority in the Health budget. They are with respect to timing differences in the allocation of the monies that take us over the year-end.

The surpluses include, first of all, some unexpected delays in the implementation of family care clinics and $30 million net of increased patient volume accessing primary care networks; reduced operating cost requirements for the South Health Campus in Calgary and the Kaye Edmonton clinic, for a total of $25 million; deferred implementation of accommodation rate increases for long-term care until 2014-2015, which represents $25 million; a prior-year surplus reducing current-year requirements for blood and blood products, for a total of $15 million; deferral and reprioritization of community programs and healthy living and other support program grant initiatives for a total of $11 million; deferral and reprioritization of projects which implement internal information system maintenance and support for a total of $9 million; and several other smaller reallocation opportunities totalling $21 million from programs such as the health services provided in correctional facilities, seniors' services, and allied health services. So those, Madam Chair, contribute to the total of $136 million.

Those surpluses and those program areas offset the considerable increases that we experienced this year in the areas of physician compensation and drug and supplemental health benefits, again referring specifically to the types of drugs that I talked about earlier for cancer and for rare and orphan diseases.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm wondering if I could just ask the minister: did you tell me the number associated with the delay in the FCCs? You might have, and I just missed it.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Madam Chair, I believe I indicated that it's $30 million.

Ms Notley: Thirty million? Thank you. Thank you very much. Okay.

So I understand, definitely, that there were increases due to the higher-than-anticipated costs with the contract with the AMA. I understand the higher-than-anticipated volume in physician services, but I'm not quite sure of the previous one. It says that the $100 million was due to the higher-than-anticipated contract settlement, particularly $92 million for specialist physician services and $8 million for primary care. I assume that those are broken out because they're not related to a higher-than-anticipated volume in the actual service. I'm wondering if the minister can explain what those increases are due to, then. How did we end up with $100 million more going to physicians than we'd anticipated, separate from the increased pressures due to a higher volume of services?

Mr. Horne: I'll do my best to address the question. Just before I do, I'm glad the hon. member is asking about the physician compensation line. The primary factors that are driving the request for the supplementary estimates that we have before you are in fact not due to the AMA agreement although there is a $100 million item there. The fact of the matter is that we are experiencing larger-than-expected population growth, but we also run a health care system where physician compensation is still largely based on fees for service. About 83 per cent of physician payments in Alberta are made on a fee-for-service basis. So what happens is that a combination of rates that we pay for those fees for service and the volume associated with each one creates an increase in the cost that rises far and above population growth and inflation. I'll be pleased to talk more about this in answers to further questions.

With respect to the Alberta Medical Association agreement, the budget before us, the current year's budget, was developed while negotiations were under way, as I think the hon. member knows. One of our objectives was to manage volume increases by reallocating savings from rate reductions and cancelling some benefit programs. As hon. members may recall from the information provided by me and the House and through the media, as those negotiations progressed, we were actively working with the Alberta Medical Association in our discussions to try to reduce rates for specific fees for service that we believed to be out of step or out of alignment with fees for similar services paid in other parts of the country.

So we identified at one point in the negotiations a list of specific fees that we would have proposed to reduce. They roughly totalled $100 million dollars. We were looking to those savings to meet our budgetary commitments for 2013-14. While we're very, very pleased, obviously, that we were able to reach an agreement in the end with the Alberta Medical Association, a seven-year agreement that included zero per cent increases in the first three years, we did not achieve through the negotiations that $100 million reduction in fees.

What we have in place today, Madam Chair, as part of this new agreement is a structure within that agreement called the Physician Compensation Committee. It is charged with setting rates within a budgetary envelope that's identified by the government, and the chair that has been selected by the president of the AMA and myself is Mr. Chris Sheard, who will be known to many people in this House. He will be chairing and overseeing the process by which we review all of those fees. It will be up to the parties at the table to discuss the methodology that will be used to review the fees, in some cases reduce fees and in other cases, perhaps, increase fees where the evidence merits.

So that was originally the genesis for the $100 million amount that we had hoped to achieve in savings. It did not materialize, but very fortunately, I think, for everyone and to the credit of a number of people we did successfully reach an agreement that includes a process for addressing issues such as fee-for-service amounts and considerations such as relative value in comparison to other jurisdictions.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. That was interesting. I didn't know that.

I guess, just following up from that, my one question is: are there timelines associated with the output of that committee in terms of changes that might be forthcoming? Is it expected to report within 12 months, 18 months, or is it just sort of meeting over the course of the seven-year agreement? That's just my question. What are the timelines?

The other question that maybe you could answer as well – you did sort of reference it, the $149 million increase with respect to higher-than-anticipated volume in physician services. You implied, I think, that the volume was higher than anticipated because of the fee for service, and thus, I presume, the service offered was greater than the population increase; hence, it was higher than predicted. I'm wondering if you could speak to why it was higher or if you have any ideas for why it was higher than anticipated.

Mr. Horne: Absolutely. With respect to the question around timelines, around reviews of physician compensation, and, specifically, fees by the Physician Compensation Committee this is now a permanent part of the agreement, Madam Chair. This is an ongoing process. The chair was appointed, I believe, a couple of months ago now, so the process is just newly up and running. It will be up to the parties at the table and the independent chair to determine the agenda for the review. This is not, I might add, simply restricted to fees for individual services provided. This is with respect to all aspects of compensation, direct compensation that's paid to physicians, and that includes things like the hourly rate that has been established to pay physicians that work in a family care clinic and other alternative models of compensation that are available.

So it's a very exciting development, and obviously, you know, it is my hope that the group develops an agenda that reflects a hierarchy of priority. There are literally hundreds if not thousands of individual fee codes in the scheduled medical benefits. We talked during the negotiations about specific areas where Alberta was significantly out of alignment with other jurisdictions, so we hope that the committee will look at that in developing its agenda, but that is an ongoing process. They work, Madam Chair, within an envelope of funding that is provided for in the budget.

Now to talk specifically about volume in physician compensation and why it is an issue pretty much on an annual basis in Alberta. The total amount we spend on physician compensation is a function of both the rate and the volume. While, certainly, I would agree that a portion of that volume increase can be attributed to population growth in Alberta, it is also directly related to the ability of our health care system to make the most appropriate use of physician services.

To illustrate, I'll give you a recent example where physicians and government have worked together to make sure that we're not using those scarce physician resources inappropriately. The Edmonton Oliver primary care network a little over a year ago developed an orthopaedic screening program right in the PCN. That program provided for a common assessment process right in the primary care environment for people who, potentially, could be referred to an orthopaedic surgeon. By using nurse practitioners and by using other professionals right in the family clinic setting as part of an assessment team, this team has been able to move 75 to 80 per cent of the patients that go through there out of the queue to see an orthopaedic surgeon.

Of course, Madam Chair, what this means is that people who do need to proceed to an orthopaedic surgeon and to surgery get in the queue quicker and move through faster. That, obviously, saves on unnecessary volume for those services. It also saves on volume for people who avoid unnecessary diagnostic imaging tests, MRIs, that also involve physician fee codes associated with them. That's a very practical example of what we hope to achieve.

It is certainly not my view as minister, and I think the AMA would share this view, that the volume increases that we have been seeing – in this year, I think we're heading close to an 8 per cent volume increase – need to be at that level. The appropriateness of the use of the services, the appropriateness of the fee that's charged if it's a fee-for-service mode, and the appropriate use of other resources are obviously critical to reducing these volume increases.

The Deputy Chair: Does that conclude your comments, hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Five minutes.

Mr. Bilous: Total or each side?

The Deputy Chair: I think there are about eight minutes left in the entire block, but you can't speak for any more than five.

Mr. Bilous: Great. Wonderful. I'm going to start off by talking about Education, so I'll give the minister a heads-up on that. A hundred and seventy million dollars for Education, $70 million of which is operational, $103 million of which is capital due to project delays on 35 new schools and modernizations: now, again, this was from the 2011 budget, and these are schools that are scheduled to open this fall. These are schools, again, that were announced three years ago, so I find it interesting that we're funding out of sup supply right now for schools that should be open this fall. I guess my first question to the minister, if we can go back and forth, is: will these schools be ready to open this September, this fall?

Mr. J. Johnson: I believe so. I can't answer that particularly because I don't have the specific lists of all those projects in front of me and how this cash flow rolls out with respect to any of them. Any time we're doing projects, even when the school is finished, not all of the bills have been paid, of course. I'm sure you know that. It takes a while to close out those files and those contracts and that bookkeeping and make sure that there aren't any holdbacks for shortcomings.

Mr. Bilous: A follow up – and I think I know the answer to this – just to confirm that these schools opening this fall are not part of the commitment of the 50/70 from last year. Is that correct, Minister?

Mr. J. Johnson: That's correct.

Mr. Bilous: All right. I'm curious to know. I get that sometimes costs come in after the fact, but my concern is with the previous commitment as far as the 50/70. Now, those have been announcements, but if we're having this type of delay on 35 schools, then how can we or Albertans or you be certain that all of the schools that were committed will actually be opened on time in the next couple of years?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, I don't want to give you the impression that all of these 35 schools are delayed. That's not the case at all. Some of them are already open. You asked which schools, and I don't have the specific list in front of me as to which dollar is attached to which contract. Some of these might have to do with the P3 cash flow, too. I can endeavour to get you more detailed information on that. But these are not to do with the new 50/70. It's the normal course of business that these cash flows get adjusted throughout the year based on the progress of work, and it also takes time to make sure that there are no shortcomings in the work before we flow all the money and close out the file. This all just has to do with that.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. I'm not sure, Minister, if you have the number offhand, but out of the 35 that are being completed or are already completed, as you've said, do you know how many of those are P3 and how many of those are built in-house?

Mr. J. Johnson: Sorry. I don't have the numbers in front of me, but if memory serves, from that list of 35 I think there were 22. But I'll endeavour to get you those as well. The Minister of Infrastructure is the guy that manages those projects.

The other thing is that these dollars may not just be assigned to the 35. There were other projects in addition to those that were ongoing that some of these capital dollars would be tied to. If the member wants a list of which projects these dollars might be applied to or have to do with, I'd be happy to get those.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Minister, for that offer. I would definitely take you up on that whenever you can get that list. That would be greatly appreciated.

Moving on, I do find it interesting and, to be honest, a little alarming, the dollars that are going to be going towards private schools and private early childhood service operators. We're looking at, you know, over $5 million, almost $5.5 million that's going to grant funding for private schools. Now, I think it's worth mentioning that 5 per cent of the student population in Alberta currently attends private schools. So that's a significant amount of money that's going to private schools versus, you know, money that could be going toward public. Again, they're getting an equivalent, so that $5.4 million is an amount equal almost to 10 per cent of what the public schools are getting yet, again, with half the number of students. I guess my question is: why are private school students getting much more than their proportionate share compared to the public school students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, I know how much the member supports private schools, is a strong supporter of private schools. As a matter of fact, didn't you used to work at one? They used to pay your cheque. It wasn't a problem then, was it?

In any event, the money that we flow to schools doesn't just follow a child; it also follows demographics. Different kids come into the system with different needs, and the money for those children is different depending on whether they're an English language learner, whether they have a FNMI background, whatever kind of special needs they might have. Again, you know, I know some of the private schools are not just the posh boarding schools. These are schools for inner-city kids at risk, First Nation kids. Some of them are special needs, and some of them are handicapped, all those types of things. Certainly, we want to support those kids. The early childhood service providers do an incredible amount of good work with some really high-risk kids. So the dollars don't just flow with the head count; they flow with the needs of those children.

A lot of the growth was in the earlier years in our school system. A lot of the enrolment growth was in the kind of early childhood development, that pre-K to K to grade 3. So even when we look at the dollars that have to flow into the system, most of our small class size initiative dollars for that envelope are targeted to the earlier grades, and even though we might increase that grant – we promised, and we did; we increased that grant by 2 per cent last year – there are a disproportionate number of kids coming into that segment of the school population, the primary grades, that K to 3, so then the enrolment exponentiates the dollars that have to go into those primary grades. That's why you might see more in the earlier years than you would just across the whole system.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Madam Chair, how much time is remaining?

The Deputy Chair: Two minutes.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Excellent. There are a couple of comments that I would love to address, Minister. First of all, I can appreciate that what you're saying is that the types of students that are coming into the private system are needing those dollars. However, there are many, many students – ELL, special-needs students, FNMI – that are in our public system that greatly need financial support and teachers that need supports in their classrooms.

I find interesting your timing, bringing up the fact that I taught at Inner City high school. So for the sake of the members in the Assembly here I'll explain, first and foremost, that Inner City once upon a time was part of Edmonton Catholic, but part of our funding formula issues meant that they couldn't get the dollars that they needed to deliver the services to the high risk. You know, 90 per cent of the students are FNMI. Many suffer from different not just struggles, but there are many that are coded. In fact, most of the students, all of them, have IPPs, et cetera. Believe me, it is my wish that those types of private schools and charter schools come back under the umbrella of Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic, but again supports need to be there for them to do that.

The challenge that I have, Minister, is not just that some of these schools are receiving dollars that they need for the population they have. Again, I'd love to have the breakdown of which schools are getting what percentage of these dollars and how many of these dollars are going to fund private schools. You know, we're draining money from the public system to feed the private system. If there are parents and families that want to put their kids in private school, that's fine. They can. Then pay for it. The public system really should be all inclusive and should have the supports that are necessary. My question, because I'm probably running out of time, Minister, is: do you have the breakdown as far as the different private schools throughout the province that are receiving funding from this?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. The minister will probably provide those answers for you in writing.

We now move to the 20-minute block for the government. Are there any members of the government who wish to speak?

Seeing none, we have some time left in the second rotation. Are there any members in the House who would wish to further comment?

Seeing none, we move to the final rotation, which is a five-minute opportunity for the Official Opposition. Do you have any comments you wish to make?

Seeing none, I'll move on to the third party.

Seeing none, I'll move to the fourth party. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: It'll be five minutes, just so you know, and whoever responds has five minutes as well, a 10-minute block.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. All right. I'm going to jump actually – and I may come back to Education just because I enjoy the back and forth with the minister so much – to Transportation if there's a minister that can speak to it. So $51 million is going to Transportation, $45.5 million for the provincial highway preservation, which at the onset does not appear to be flood related. I'm not sure, then, if this means that the government is not staying on top of monitoring the conditions of the highways and that instead we're going back to just crisis response. If that's the case, I'm hoping the minister of possibly – forgive me. The Minister of Transportation is here. Where did that additional need come from?

Madam Chair, can I back-and-forth with shorter questions with the minister?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, you can. You have that 10-minute block. The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Yeah. Thank you for the question. I missed a little bit at the start there. Transportation requires about $51.5 million in operational vote to address provincial highway preservation and the 2013 Alberta flood disaster. The first amount of $45.5 million is to address the priority provincial highway preservation work. Performing preservation work in a timely manner results in slower deterioration of roadways and is the most cost effective since delays lead to rehabilitation work at higher costs.

The second amount is for $6 million related to the 2013 Alberta floods. This funding provides for feasibility analyses of flood mitigation projects through the Bow, Elbow, Oldman, Sheep, Highwood, and South Saskatchewan River basins.

We are also requesting a $10 million increase in the financial transaction vote for the purchase of salt and sand and gravel to use for highway maintenance. The cost of the usage of this inventory has risen significantly in recent years.

Finally, we request the transfer of $4 million in the capital vote from Transportation to Municipal Affairs for water and wastewater projects in Bragg Creek. This funding was originally approved under Transportation, but it has since been determined that the spending is more appropriate under the disaster recovery program within Municipal Affairs.

I hope that answers your questions.

Mr. Bilous: I think so, Minister. Sorry. Just a quick follow-up. I had a hard time hearing some of your response. [interjection] Yeah. You try telling her.

Minister, the bulk of it, because of the flood disaster relief, did go towards cleaning up the highways. Then you referenced sand and salt. So, I guess, two questions. One, shouldn't that have come out of the budget estimates last year? I'm just wondering why it's coming out of supply. Two, are any of these dollars allocated for flood mapping, or is that coming out of the budget that will be tabled tomorrow?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, the flood mapping isn't in my department. It'll be coming through Municipal Affairs through the DRP. The sand and salt is just, over the years, the cost increase and escalation. The more highways we build, the more we need. We were short in our budget, so we added to it last fall.

Mr. Hughes: Can I just augment that?

Mr. Bilous: If I can just ask a quick question before you respond, Minister. It's to do with this, too. I'm just looking at the $6 million for the 2013 Alberta flood recovery to provide feasibility analyses of flood mitigation. In that, I guess I'm wondering: does that contain flood mapping? Is that part of that $6 million, or is that going to be separate?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Chair. There are a lot of different categories, so it's not always understandable exactly where everything is. In fact, ESRD is really the department that has the long-term accountability for flood mapping, for the work that is being done to ensure that we're well armed and well prepared for being alerted to any possible flood conditions, those kinds of things.

You asked about the feasibility studies. There are a lot of feasibility studies going on on just about every watercourse. That comes out of the funding for the southwest Alberta task force, the flood recovery task force, the committee of cabinet that I chair. We're taking resources from that in order to prepare with each of the communities. These are largely led, in most cases, by the municipality, where they say: Okay; we need to do some work here. You know, maybe it's the town engineer or the town officials that decide they need to look at something. They go out and get third-party engineering work done on it. Given the immense volume of work that's being done around the province, people are competing for very tight resources.

Then those projects come back through. They need approvals from ESRD in order to do them, particularly if they're close to a water body. I can tell you, just as an example, that in High River there is 9 million dollars' worth of berms that are being done by the town, and they expect to have them all done by the 15th of May and to be ready should there be anything like what we saw last year. This is happening in every community right across the province that was affected by the floods last year.

I hope that answers your questions.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Minister. That does.

I'm going to jump to Aboriginal Relations if I can. There's $20 million in spending for Aboriginal Relations, most of which, I appreciate, is going towards repairing, relocating, or rebuilding on-reserve homes. I know from speaking to the previous minister in the fall that there were about 600 homes affected. Just two quick questions. Has that number changed at all? Has it gone up from the 600 or down? Minister, could you provide a little bit of a breakdown between the number of new builds and the number that can be saved? I'm not sure if you have those stats with you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

5:30

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. The actual impacted number is very near to 800 homes, and the costs outlined here cover a range of things: relocation, rebuilds, renovations. There is also a significant amount of infrastructure. As you can imagine with a house that's completely destroyed, the below-ground infrastructure is going to be impacted as well.

In addition to that, we've got to bring things up to Alberta code, which, we're troubled to find, is not really the case in many places.

So there's an array of costs involved in that. I don't actually have the breakdown of the number of new builds versus renovations or repairs. [interjection] My learned colleague, who knows better than I what needs to be said here, pointed out to me that I do have to point out that we're looking at a hundred per cent recovery from the federal government here on disaster recovery.

It's not really an Alberta responsibility to do housing on-reserve. We're doing this because it's the right thing to do. But we're looking at very close to a hundred per cent recovery here.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Minister. That was helpful.

My last question – I probably only have a couple of minutes – is to the Minister of Culture. There is $4.3 million for Culture in sup supply, $3 million of which is for museums and conservation assistance. Now, $500,000 was to the Philippines, if my numbers are right or my eyes; $333,000 for artists and arts organizations directly affected by the flood; an announcement in January of $6 million for support of the conservation of artifacts and archival materials. My only question, Minister, is: can we expect to see the remaining $3 million in funding from the coming budget, or where is that other $3 million coming from?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you very much. As we all know, the impacts of the flooding were pretty incredible in southern Alberta and up in Fort McMurray as well. With respect to the funding that was announced, we did announce in total the $14.7 million in January for heritage, arts, and nonprofits. There was some money that was made available in 2013-14, and there'll be money available in '14-15 as well. This funding that was rolled out: people are applying right now for some of that funding, but some of the other funding will be made available in '14-15.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We do have some time left in this block. Are there any other members who wish to speak in the five-minute block?

Seeing none, shall I call the vote?

Mr. Jeneroux: Madam Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again. The following resolutions relating to the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, have been approved.

Aboriginal Relations: operational, $20,758,000.

Culture: operational, $4,393,000; capital, $500,000.

Education: operational, $70,300,000; capital, $103,839,000.

Energy: operational, $192,000,000.

Environment and Sustainable Resource Development:
operational, $137,595,000; capital, $62,701,000.

Health: operational, $209,000,000.

Human Services: operational, $81,649,000; capital, $640,000;
financial transactions, $680,000.

Infrastructure: operational, $49,769,000.

Innovation and Advanced Education: operational, $53,275,000; capital, $1,680,000.

Municipal Affairs: operational, $1,141,867,000; capital, $49,841,000.

Service Alberta: operational, $895,000; capital, $2,600,000.

Tourism, Parks and Recreation: operational, $958,000; capital,
$1,382,000.

Transportation: operational, $51,502,000; financial transactions,
$10,000,000.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt you when you are doing so well, but we need to keep the volume down so that we can hear the report, please.

Thank you.

Mr. Jeneroux: Okay. The Committee of Supply has approved the following amounts to be transferred.

Transfer from Education operational vote to Municipal Affairs
operational vote, $9,050,000.

Transfer from Executive Council operational vote to Executive Council capital vote, $300,000.

Transfer from Transportation capital vote to Municipal Affairs
operational vote, $4,000,000.

Transfer from Municipal Affairs operational vote to Municipal Affairs capital vote, $7,200,000.

Madam Speaker, that concludes my report.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I would like to alert hon. members that Standing Order 61(3) provides that upon the Assembly concurring in the report by Committee of Supply, the Assembly immediately reverts to Introduction of Bills for introduction of the appropriation bill.

Introduction of Bills

(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 2

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Savings Management Act

[Adjourned debate March 4: Mr. Anderson]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As always, it's an honour and a privilege to rise in this House and respond to proposed legislation. I will say in this case that I am somewhat surprised that the government chose to highlight the Alberta heritage savings fund with their first bill of this session given the dismal state of that fund. Let me elaborate as to why I think the classification of that is dismal.

In fact, I take probably the same sort of look at this as the Finance critic from the Wildrose Alliance does. We tend to see this from different sides of the ideological spectrum, but we tend to see what has transpired here in Alberta as amounting to nothing less than intergenerational theft, and by that, we mean what we have done with our responsibility to save some of this fossil fuel resource wealth for future generations.

I, like the Member for Airdrie, saw the article from The Economist, and I was struck by how poignant the article was in singling out Alberta as one of the violators, how not to run an oil and gas economy. There it was in black and white for all to see. It's essentially what we have been saying in this House over the course of the last five years. I don't think people mistake The Economist as a left-of-centre magazine or something like Pravda or the like. It's just generally looking at things as they are and going forth in that effect. There it was in black and white that Alberta really has made a joke out of its finances and how to really run a system that recognizes that this is a finite resource and that all is not going to continue on like we think it is.

I was also struck by the Member for Airdrie's comments in that he, too, like me, believes there is a limited time for us to get this right. In my view, over the course of the next 50 years maybe, 30 years more probably, we should as a province and a legislative body understand about saving this oil wealth for the eventual transition from an oil and gas economy at a time when maybe the stars align so that solar, wind, other things may take off or that, simply put, we move to a natural gas economy because there are 200 years of natural gas out there from ports around the world. These may make Alberta not as prosperous a place. That thought is out there with many people.

Many people, futurists, have looked at this, many people who really assess what is going on out in the world. I think that thought is different than what we had here in 1997 when we established some of these systems in place, when we thought that our oil and gas economy was going to last for another 300 years and that it just didn't matter, frankly, what we did because we were in the driver's seat.

I think that, really, what we've done with our heritage savings trust fund has been a sham. It was pointed out again by that speaker that if we had just left the interest alone from the Alberta heritage savings trust fund since 1986, that fund would be worth some $150 billion. Let's also take a look at, say, since 2001. If we hadn't eliminated progressive income taxes – my goodness – it'd probably be worth another $100 billion, possibly more, on top of that. Really, what we've done here has been silly. Either way you cut it, we didn't save enough. So when the government of the day chooses to highlight in one of their bills, this bill here, that they're going to use more resources from the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for today's usage and today's enjoyment, I have to question the logic of that. Haven't we already stolen enough from future generations? Do we have to continue to do that today?

I also note, you know, there's an article in the Edmonton Journal today that really goes through the nuts and bolts of this social innovation endowment account by Mr. Ricardo Acuña, a person who I believe has distinguished himself as being a person who thinks a great deal on this stuff. It says that these things are simply not going to work. They haven't worked anywhere else in the world. Why would they work here? The idea that Goldman Sachs is going to invest money in some of these alleged innovative treatments for, say, alcoholism or drug treatment I think is folly. They're not going to invest unless they have a guarantee on investment or a pretty good chance. He doesn't see it. I certainly don't see it. Why we aren't just investing in our non-profits or shoring up government muscle to do the hard work that is necessary simply, to me, doesn't make much sense.

Those are my initial comments on the bill and the like. You know, I'm looking forward to hearing other people comment on this. It doesn't seem to make much sense to me. I don't think it's going to make sense to a whole lot of people in the nonprofit industry who are going to have to somehow incorporate this into the mix. I don't know how this is going to be.

Those are my comments. With that, I will adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've made excellent progress this afternoon, and I move that we adjourn until tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:52 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 6, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, as we conclude our work for this week in this Assembly, stay with us in our work beyond this Chamber, be among us in our fulfillment of duties to help others, and lead us with wisdom and kindness as we represent those who put their faith and trust in us to represent them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the members of a very distinguished delegation from Iceland. They're on a working visit to Alberta to strengthen the ties between us and to promote friendship, understanding, and shared prosperity.

I would ask each of them to rise as I introduce them: His Excellency Sigmundur David Gunnlaugsson, Prime Minister of Iceland; Mrs. Anna Sigurlaug Pálsdóttir, the Prime Minister's spouse; Mr. Jóhannes Þór Skúlason, political adviser to the minister; Mr. Jörundur Valtýsson, foreign policy adviser to the minister; His Excellency Thordur Aegir Oskarsson, Icelandic ambassador to Canada; Mr. Hlynur Gudjonsson, consul and trade commissioner at Iceland's consulate general in New York; Mr. Gordon Reykdal, honorary consul of Iceland in Edmonton; and Mr. Stewart Wheeler, Canadian ambassador to Iceland. They are accompanied, Mr. Speaker, by a business delegation, which is seated in the members' gallery and includes representatives from the Icelandic tourism industry; Icelandair, which we're very excited about in Edmonton; and the Iceland press.

On behalf of the government and the people of Alberta it's a privilege to welcome all of them here to our beautiful province in the heart of western Canada. I know that their visit will be a fruitful one on many different fronts, and I'm sure and confident that our friendship will continue to grow and deepen. We are tremendously glad to be their hosts. Now I ask all members of the Assembly, who've already done it, to give them another warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you, and welcome to all guests.

Deputy Premier, you have some introductions.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today a good friend and a good public servant, indeed, Mr. James Rajotte, Member of Parliament for Edmonton-Leduc. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 2000 as the Member of Parliament for Edmonton Southwest and was re-elected as the Member of Parliament for Edmonton-Leduc in 2004, 2006, 2008, and 2011. He has served as the chair of the Standing Committee on Finance for the House of Commons from 2008 and still serves in that capacity today. Previous to being chair of the Standing Committee on Finance, he served as the chair of the Parliamentary Committee on Industry, Science and Technology.

I've known James for many years. I believe he's the hardest working Member of Parliament for Alberta, and I think he's the smartest Edmonton Member of Parliament for Alberta. I can say that because he's my Member of Parliament. He represents me in Ottawa, and it's a privilege to work together with him serving the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud and all Albertans. He's here today to observe question period and, more importantly, to observe the Treasurer's delivery of the Budget Address this afternoon. He's in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. He has risen, and I would ask all members of the House to acknowledge him.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let's begin with school groups, shall we? The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from J.J. Nearing elementary school in St. Albert. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Curtis McDougall; Ms Christine Sowinski, who just happened to have taught one of my daughters; and parent helpers Mr. David Roberts; Mrs. Valerie Alvarez; Mrs. Skerik; Leanne Feregotto; Mrs. Tina Barrett; and a very close friend of mine, Mrs. Joanne Krips.

I would like to mention a special young man within the group, Aaron Krips. Aaron has a great deal of energy and expends it by playing hockey and dancing competitively in hip hop. I've known Aaron since he was born. In fact, his mom and dad were my campaign managers when he was that young. Aaron is very interested in current Alberta events. I can also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the guides that were touring these two classes through today, when I went down to talk to them, said that this is one of the best groups that they've had. I have watched Aaron grow into a fine young man.

I've also been in this school a number of times. The teachers are excellent, and they produce excellent results, Mr. Speaker, as does our entire system. I'm sure these grade 6 students are having an enjoyable day at the Leg. today. They are seated in both the public and the members' galleries this afternoon. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 36 individuals from the grade 9 class of Ponoka secondary campus along with their teachers, Brady Teeling, Jolene Deleeuw, and parent Lee Arnold. I'd like to note how incredibly bright these young students are as they asked about the concerns that they have in protecting our education system in this province. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

If not, we'll proceed with the introduction of other guests. Please note that we have 20 more introductions to go, so may I beg your indulgence to keep your intros as short as possible so that we can get them all in before 10 to 2. Let us start with the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce two sets of individuals. First of all, I have seven members of the Alberta College of Social Workers, five of whom work within the Ministry of Human Services. It is National Social Work Week, and given what you've just told me, I'll jump to their names and thank them for their service: Justin Mettler, Pamela Anderson, Mira Zorniak, Tim Golumbia, Rick Guthrie, Lori Sigurdson, Alec Stratford. Social workers deal with some of the most difficult social issues in our society. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, on your behalf it's my pleasure to introduce Gurmeet and Tina Sidhu – great friends of yours, of mine, and of the members for Edmonton-Manning and Edmonton-Ellerslie – generous individuals that contribute immensely to our community. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly four representatives from the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Edmonton branch and the Ukrainian Music Society of Alberta, who are here today to help pay tribute to the 200th anniversary of Taras Shevchenko's birth on March 9, 1814, and are the host organizations for the upcoming Shevchenko concert in Edmonton. My guests are seated in the gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise as I mention their names. I would like to welcome Mrs. Luba Boyko-Bell, president, Ukrainian Music Society of Alberta, and vice-president, Ukrainian Canadian Congress Edmonton branch; Mrs. Maria Miroutenko, executive member, Ukrainian Canadian Congress Edmonton branch; Ms Irena Tarnawsky, vice-president, Ukrainian Music Society of Alberta; and Mr. Michael Bell, member, Ukrainian Music Society of Alberta. I would now ask that we provide them with the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister – International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a delegation currently involved in importing Alberta's beef products into China, worth about $100 million a year, which is sure to grow as demand for the high-quality agricultural product in Asia is going to increase. We are joined today by Mr. Shen Ling and Jonathan Chang with ZRHL Group, and Mr. Lin Weizhong and Liu Qing with BGH Group. Also accompanying the delegation are Mr. Jake Louie, Mr. Grant Louie, Stan Cichon, and Liang Wei Long with Canadian Elite Beef Inc. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask all of my colleagues to give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two residents of my constituency, the beautiful area of Calgary-Acadia. First of all, a friend of mine, Karen Lloyd, originally from Vernon, B.C., has lived in Calgary for 22 years. She's quite active in school traffic safety, school councils, and service to her community. I had the privilege of meeting her at the door during the last election. With her also is her daughter, Hannah, who is a straight-A student, a grade 8 student at Willow Park school. She is the fourth of eight children. Her favourite topics are humanities and reading. This is her first visit here. Her mother, Karen, has brought her to see question period and also the budget today. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two outstanding gentlemen from the town of Strathmore. His Worship Michael Ell, mayor of Strathmore, has lived in Strathmore for more than 35 years and in many capacities has always strived to build a stronger community, and Mr. Dwight Stanford, the CAO for the town of Strathmore, who is an invaluable resource to our community and council. I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It gives me great joy to introduce to you and through you to members of this House a very important young person in my life. Thirty-nine years ago this weekend I had one of the greatest adventures of my life when I gave birth to our first child, Jeremy Jablonski. Jeremy is the president and CEO of The Coverall Shop in Red Deer, Alberta, that has the theme: We've Got You Covered! In the past five years Jeremy has been instrumental in winning the business of the year award twice. I'm depending on his great success so that I can have a comfortable retirement. He's in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Also with us here today, Mr. Speaker, is the president of the Red Deer College for the past five years, Joel Ward. He must be doing a great job because he just received another contract for another five years. He's a great dancer, a great conversationalist, and a visionary, and we are very fortunate to have him as the president of our college. He is accompanied by his chief of staff, Elaine Vandale, who has been with the Red Deer College for the past 17 years. She is the woman behind the man, who knows everything. She's always one step ahead. She serves the president, the college, and our community with excellence. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two active members of the community of Calgary-Hawkwood. These gentlemen volunteer for associations in our community and were very strong contributors in mobilizing community support for flood relief and community rebuilding during the unprecedented 2013 flood in southern Alberta. My first guest is Mr. Edmond Lee, president of Sunflower Development, and the second is Mr. Byron Price, with the Thomas J. Ranaghan Foundation. I would ask them to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of Education.

Dr. Swann: My guest hasn't arrived, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, followed by the Associate Minister of Electricity and Renewable Energy.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured to introduce to you and through you two members of my region in Fort McMurray, in the oil sands region, who exemplify public service. The first is Kim Jenkins. He is currently the chief operating officer of the Keyano land trust corporation. Prior to his move to the Keyano land trust corporation, he spent 32 years with the Fort McMurray public school district, the last five in the role of superintendent. He is the current Canadian superintendent of the year. Mr. Jenkins is also the chairman of the Wood Buffalo Housing & Development Corporation.

The second individual is Bryan Lutes, who is the president of the Wood Buffalo Housing & Development Corporation. He is also the president of the regional chapter of the Urban Development Institute. Bryan brings his experience also to the Fort McMurray chamber of commerce.

I'd like both of my guests to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now we go to the Associate Minister of Electricity and Renewable Energy, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a joy for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a tireless advocate for seniors' care in Alberta, Mr. Greer Black, a constituent of Calgary-Varsity and CEO and president of the Bethany Care Society for the last 22 years and soon retiring. Please rise, and let us celebrate you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you a mayor of a small community. As all elected officials know, the most overworked, underpaid elected official is the mayor of a small community. This isn't just a good public servant but a great public servant, His Worship Mr. Fred Nash. I'm going to ask Mr. Fred Nash now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by St. Albert.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you one of my staff from Calgary, Ms Jennifer Wainwright. Jennifer is in my office in Calgary, and I'm extremely pleased to have her up here. She is the unbelievable health researcher that I have on my team in Calgary. I'll ask her to rise and accept a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to my colleagues in the House three very outstanding people who are pillars in the St. Albert community. The first, I'm very pleased to announce, is Mayor Nolan Crouse of St. Albert, who is in his fourth term on the St. Albert city council and recently began his third term as our city's mayor. In addition to serving on a number of boards and working tirelessly for our community, he also serves as the chair of the Capital Region Board. Mayor Crouse is incredibly involved in our community, and we are most lucky to have him serving as our mayor.

My second guest, Mr. Speaker, is a gentleman named Al Evaniew. Al is a partner at the law firm of Brownlee LLP. Al is a remarkable and active member in our community. I'm proud to acknowledge and congratulate Al on his recent appointment as Queen's Counsel. I'm extremely pleased to know Al and consider Al a very dear friend.

My third guest, Mr. Speaker, is Cathy Heron. Cathy is a lifelong St. Albert resident who is in her second term as city councillor. She's a very busy wife, mother, and an incredible community member who works, again, tirelessly for our community, and most importantly she's a great neighbour.

I believe His Worship Mayor Crouse and Mr. Evaniew are seated in the members' gallery. Councillor Heron is in the public gallery. I'd ask them now to rise and receive our warm acknowledgement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to extend and delay the clock at the same time here for a couple of minutes so that we can finish these intros off.

Let's go to the Minister of Infrastructure, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mr. Fouad El Kardy and Ms Selma Amery. Fouad and Selma are dear friends of mine and are here to join us for this exciting budget day and to witness the building Alberta plan in action. I'm pleased to introduce them to you today and ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests today, all great community leaders. Coming all the way from the charming town of Elk Point, Debra McQuinn is a financial planner with Servus Credit Union by day and is an Elk Point town councillor and the president of the Elk Point chamber of commerce by night, yet somehow she finds time to play for the town's ladies' hockey team. Debra has been a resident of Elk Point for 17 years now along with her husband, Andrew, and two children, Colby and Jessica.

My second introduction is Chris Brown, who joins us today as a resident of Lloydminster, where he is a reporter with the Lloydminster Source. Chris came to Alberta in 2013 from Ontario, where he previously served as the assistant director of communications for the hon. Leona Dombrowsky, the former Minister of Education. So with the Minister of Justice he has something in common. He's a former Liberal staffer.

The third is Garth Rowsell, who is a financial adviser with Edward Jones in Lloydminster, and I know he would be able to teach the government a thing or two about planning a budget and saving for the future.

I'd ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by the Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you the mayor of Woodlands county, Mr. Jim Rennie, and his lovely daughter Hannah. The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and I in Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock share this dedicated elected official. Please join me in welcoming the mayor and his daughter.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, followed by Medicine Hat.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a man of integrity, a man of principle, and a man who's always told it like it is. This man is my hero, but more importantly, members of the Assembly, it's my dad. Mr. Speaker, he's seated in your gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The final one is going back to the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Please read the names that you have and ask them to rise, and then we'll move on. They've already been introduced. Thank you.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate it. My guests are seated in the members' gallery, a delegation from China and members of Canadian Elite Beef Inc. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: My apologies. Medicine Hat, you had one on the list here, too. Quickly.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests that have joined us today in the public gallery. Petros Kusmu is the president of the University of Alberta Students' Union and is always a great advocate for students across Alberta. Petros has been instrumental in the IGNITE report, which was launched last month and which I hope the minister reads cover to cover. Petros was born and raised in Edmonton and in his spare time performs with his band, Quordal Fusion.

Conner Brown is the vice-president external for the University of Calgary Students' Union and the chair of the Council of Alberta University Students, and it has been my great pleasure as the advanced education critic getting to know him. He's originally from North Vancouver. He played for the Delta Ice Hawks before attending the U of C.

Kenneth Taylor is the vice-president external for the SAIT Students' Association and is also the chair of the Alberta Students' Executive Council. Ken has been great to work with over the last couple of months, and he is a great reminder that our best and brightest come from all 26 of Alberta's postsecondary institutions.

I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to recognize the leader of the Liberal opposition, and that will be it. We will have set a record for introductions in this Chamber today.

The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Toby Ramsden. He's an accountant. He works with Dogs with Wings. More importantly, two of his children ran as candidates in the last provincial election for the Alberta Liberals. I'd like Toby to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, your first main set of questions.

Premier's Travel Expenses

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is in all sorts of hot water over her travel expenses, and I want to give her a chance to clear the air for Albertans by telling us some of the details about how her travel decisions are made. Can the Premier tell us how her flights are booked, who decides between the options, and who signs off on those decisions?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I understand that Albertans want to know that their tax dollars are being used wisely. That's why I've written to the Auditor General. I've asked him to review out-of-province flights. We've grounded the government planes travelling outside of the province until that review is done. I've also asked the Minister of Finance to move forward with RFPs with respect to accommodation, with respect to rental cars, and with respect to transportation airlines.

Ms Smith: I notice, Mr. Speaker, that she didn't answer the question, so I'm going to try again more specifically. I would like the Premier to tell us about how the decision was made to take a government plane to Ottawa for the South Africa trip. We know there were at least three other options, which we put in a press release on February 6. I'll table that. Can the Premier tell us why she ruled out a $625 direct flight from Calgary to Ottawa on WestJet and why relatively inexpensive Air Canada flights through Winnipeg and through Toronto were also rejected?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said in this House before, this is certainly something that's very important, which is why I've asked the Auditor General to come to the office to review these processes. That is certainly the appropriate forum for this. From our perspective, it's very important that Albertans know that they get value for taxpayers' dollars. We want to make sure that the Auditor General feels completely comfortable taking that responsibility on – it's an independent office of the Legislature – and we're looking forward to that work.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe third time's the charm. A whistle-blower who works for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations told us a different story. They said that they provided several flight options, including the ones I've mentioned, that would have made it to Ottawa on time. However, they said that these options were rejected because it is the official policy of the Premier's office that the Premier will never fly economy and that the Premier will never take any commercial flight that is not direct. Can the Premier tell us whether that's true?

Ms Redford: No.

The Speaker: Official Opposition House Leader, your second main set of questions.

Mathematics Curriculum

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, over the last two days we have been asking the Education minister some important questions about the elementary math curriculum. Alberta parents are concerned that the new math curriculum is not focused on learning the fundamentals, but in mathematics, knowing the basics is the whole point. Will the minister make changes to the elementary math curriculum so that mastering basic addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division is its primary goal?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this question sounds very reminiscent of one I had a few days ago, to which I answered quite simply: we will. There is a curriculum review ongoing of the math curriculum right now and our entire curriculum, and one of the key goals of that is to make sure those foundational, basic pieces are more strongly emphasized.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that the Education minister keeps trying to say that there's no issue here, but Alberta parents disagree. They know their kids are not being taught to memorize the basics. They know that their bright and talented kids are getting to grade 5 without memorizing their times tables. Does the minister agree that if kids leave elementary school without having memorized their times tables up to 10 times 10, then our math curriculum has utterly failed them?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, once again, it seems like they can't take yes for an answer. We agree that this needs to be very strongly emphasized. We agree that this is something that we want to make sure is in the curriculum and is a high priority. However, I don't want to concede that Alberta is not one of the top-performing English jurisdictions on the entire planet, which other jurisdictions tell us is the case and international tests prove is the case.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's the reason it shouldn't be changing. Now, we know that the government has a hard time with basic math because we have to keep explaining deficits to them over and over and over again. For decades the Alberta basic math curriculum was world leading. Now this government has decided to chase after New Age fads, and our kids are suffering the consequences. Now, the Premier is a mom, so will she stand with the thousands of other parents and instruct the Education minister to return us to the tried-and-true methods to teach basic, elementary math?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's pretty exciting to embrace change, to look at progress, and to think about how to improve things. That's why Albertans voted for us two years ago. That's why this budget today will speak to progress and will speak to change. I hope that the hon. member isn't suggesting that we can continue to succeed and grow and thrive in this world and in this country by keeping everything exactly the same. I know that's what they said in the last election, but I thought they would have learned something themselves by now.

The Speaker: The hon. opposition leader for her third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would hope all the parents over there would go and ask their kids what the result is of two times eight, because a lot of kids these days can't answer that question.

Electricity Pricing

Ms Smith: Albertans expect fairness in the marketplace. That's why market manipulation allegations brought against TransAlta are so troubling. If true, they represent a major breach of public trust and another failure of this government to protect Alberta families and small businesses from being gouged on their power bills. To the Premier: will she confirm that her government will not tolerate electricity market manipulation?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly why we have a system in this province that ensures that if those circumstances are found to be true, the companies have to deal with the consequences. I'll go further than that, and I will say that if it is determined that that is the case, then we will ensure that we are accountable to consumers, that companies that pay fines are able to see that money go back to consumers because that's protecting consumers.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The allegations against TransAlta are serious enough in some jurisdictions to be considered at least illegal if not criminal. The rules in Alberta, however, are not nearly as strict. As is, they currently appear to give market manipulation and intentional price inflation a free pass, leaving ratepayers like families and small businesses open to being gouged. To the Premier: is it the policy of the government to allow a power company to turn off a power plant so they can force up prices and gouge consumers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is an independent process going on to determine what happened. It would be ridiculous for this hon. member to suggest that this government would think that that was appropriate. That's why we have a system in place. It's a system that protects consumers. That's why this issue is before that regulator right now, and we look forward to the results.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rules don't protect consumers. It certainly appears as though the electricity market is stacked against everyday Albertans who pay their bills. Those bills keep going up, and while this kind of price gouging is great for a handful of power company executives, it could mean the difference between profitability and bankruptcy for a small business or making monthly rent for a family. Again to the Premier: why hasn't her government stepped in to protect consumers by clearly making it illegal to turn off power plants and drive up prices?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in this province we have a system that is very closely monitored, and we know that there are times when decisions have to be made. Our concern as a government is to ensure that if a company ever makes that decision and it is found that there is any sort of manipulation, they pay the consequences. That is why we have a regulator. That is why this investigation is going on, and we look forward to the results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Public Service Compensation

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Madam Premier, you're recognized as a smart lawyer and a champion of human rights. Alberta union people, therefore, are honestly insulted and distressed by Bill 46, apparently designed to save public dollars. Bill 46, of course, takes away bargaining rights guaranteed under the Charter and assured by former Premier Peter Lougheed, your mentor. Please explain to all Albertans, particularly unions, how a protracted Bill 46 battle in the courts, paid for by Albertans and which you will lose, will save money.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we said when we introduced the legislation, we believe it's very important to be accountable to Alberta taxpayers and to make sure the public servants get fair compensation. We hope that that legislation will allow for a negotiated settlement. We understand that everyone has the opportunity to take a look at challenging legislation. We understand that the AUPE has decided to do that. Our fundamental responsibility is to try to reach the outcomes that we set in our legislation, and we'll try to do that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm just going to get the Minister of Justice to clarify whether Bill 46 is sub judice.

Mr. Denis: My understanding is that it's under appeal, Mr. Speaker, 23(g).

The Speaker: It is sub judice, then, to pursue questions in that way.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, do you want to recraft your two final sups?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier not see how this action is harming both her moral credibility and her credibility as a responsible steward of the public purse?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's precisely the responsible stewardship of the public purse that brings forward a bill like Bill 46. We made a promise to Albertans and a promise to all of those who are paid by the public that we would treat them fairly and we would treat them consistently within the context of the fiscal framework. We made the promise, and we made agreements with various sectors that are paid by the public purse, and we wanted through Bill 46 to ensure that that same opportunity was extended to our union.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Try and avoid Bill 46 directly.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, these are front-line workers: public servants, teachers, cleaners, nurses.

Adding insult to injury to all Albertans is the poorly managed imposition of pension changes. Have you considered the cost of these negative actions both in terms of loss of your trust and reduced worker morale and lost productivity in this province?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member mentioned the pension changes that we're advocating for the pensions. The promise of keeping a defined benefit pension plan is exactly what we're protecting. As I said in this House a few days ago, in July 2012 I met with all the pension boards – members of the union are represented on those boards – and we talked about whether we would go to a defined contribution or a defined benefit program. They wanted us to protect defined benefits, and that's exactly what these changes are all about. In fact, we are doing what we can to protect the promise to those employees.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A government policy identified by the Auditor General specifies that "family members may not travel on government aircraft unless it is a minister's spouse invited to an event." A list in the current policy of those eligible to take government aircraft does not include family members. While we can all sympathize with working parents who try to balance work and family, it does not justify breaking the rules just because you can. To the Premier: why do you think that the rules don't apply to you?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, on the policy as it relates to the government aircraft, number one, the first call on our aircraft is if we have an emergency. We had that last summer when we had to move cabinet ministers, environment ministers, the minister responsible for municipal affairs to the area of the flood. That was the first call.

The second call on our planes, Mr. Speaker, is the Lieutenant Governor because we want him to be in communities that are not served by commercial aircraft. We want him to be in places like High Level, High River.

The third priority, Mr. Speaker, is the Premier. When the Premier or any cabinet minister is asked to attend a function and they want to bring a family member, whether it's the spouse or others, we have said: let's keep the families involved in what they're doing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A little different than the answer that the Finance minister gave yesterday. I have the list here. It doesn't say family members on the list.

Most working moms – and dads, too, for that matter – would like to spend more time with their kids, but they're also very upset when this Premier uses the mom defence to justify taking a government plane to and from Palm Springs when a cheaper commercial flight was available. To the Premier: why didn't you take a commercial flight back from Palm Springs instead of ordering up a government aircraft at a cost of thousands of dollars?

Ms Redford: Because there were no commercial flights available from Palm Springs on that day.*

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that is patently untrue.

Mr. Campbell: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: And I'm going to go on to another matter. Apparently, the Premier also had two security staff with her in Palm Springs. Albertans are wondering: why does the Premier need security while on vacation in Palm Springs? Is this standard practice? How much has been spent on vacation security since the election? Please fill us in, Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To this member's inquiry, it has always been the practice to provide any Premier of this province with security, and the security is tailored towards their individual needs.

With respect to specific comments, we don't talk about matters of police investigations and court cases here, and similarly neither should we talk about matters of individual security. That is something that is determined by the actual security officers, not politicians.

The Speaker: Okay. The first five questions have come and gone, so no preambles now to your supplementaries, please.

Let's start with Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

2:10 Whistle-blower Protection for Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been inundated with story after story of waste and mismanagement from this government. The last week alone has provided a number of completely unacceptable examples coming from the Premier's office. Knowing this, you would expect that the Alberta whistle-blower commissioner would be busy. Sadly, that's not the case. As reported in January, most days the phones are silent, and only one single investigation has been undertaken. To the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: how can you call this gold-standard legislation when, seemingly, nobody has the confidence to use it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think every Albertan can be proud of the whistle-blower legislation this House brought forward. It provides an opportunity for any concerns to be addressed. We have a person that's responsible for dealing with the legislation. I think it's an effective piece of legislation. The fact that people aren't calling might lead to conclusions other than that suggested by the opposition. We are a very transparent government, and we're delivering transparency.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, they don't have trust in the whistle-blower legislation. They're blowing the whistles to us, actually.

Given that last fall, when I asked the minister when he would be following the advice of Justice Vertes and tabling legislation to include whistle-blower protection for all physicians, not just a few directly employed by AHS, the minister seemed entirely unaware of the recommendation, has the minister rethought this? When will you be bringing forward amendments for the spring session?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that 89 per cent of physicians are covered by the current whistle-blower legislation. That seems to be a fact that's ignored by the opposition. There is also a section of the whistle-blower act that covers the other 11 per cent. They can also make a whistle-blower claim if they'd like to. So physicians are covered by whistle-blower legislation in Alberta.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, I said it last fall, and I'm saying it again: he doesn't even know his own legislation. Read the report.

Given that the minister has made it clear he has no intention of following through on Justice Vertes' key recommendations to provide whistle-blower protection to, Minister, all physicians, should Albertans be calling the commissioner to report the outrageous waste of $10 million on this inquiry, that you ignore?

Mr. Scott: Just to repeat what I've said earlier, physicians are covered in Alberta. Eighty-nine per cent are covered directly by the whistle-blower legislation. The other 11 per cent are covered by a section in the whistle-blower legislation that permits any person in Alberta to make an anonymous report, or if they have information, they can make a report of a whistle-blower concern that they have. Alberta is covered by whistle-blower legislation. The legislation is effective.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, your point of order was noted at 2:09 p.m.

Let's move on to Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Public Service Pensions

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are dedicated, hard-working public servants, and they are looking for justification for the changes to their pension. Well, I would think that last night at the Public Accounts Committee the Auditor General clearly gave that justification. To the hon. minister of Treasury Board and Finance: if you informed us today that instead of having a defined benefit plan, we would have a defined contribution plan, how much money would Alberta taxpayers be on the hook for?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the actual number would be part of the actuarial analysis that would have to happen, but what would happen is that you would have no more new entrants going into the defined benefit program to pay for the unfunded liability that is already there. That means that taxpayers, presumably, would be on the hook for the full amount, $7.4 billion. That's one of the reasons – one of the reasons – why we did not look to do what the opposition wants to do, which is to cut off entrants to the defined benefit and move to the defined contribution. We think that having a defined benefit program for our employees is a benefit they should keep.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the government has agreed to accept the Auditor General's recommendations, are you going far enough to ensure that my constituents receive their pensions when they turn 80 or 90? They are living that long.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in the Public Accounts last night asked the Auditor General whether or not, you know, we can maybe just let this slide a little bit because maybe things are going to get better. From the Hansard Blues of that I'll quote the Auditor General saying: "No. To consider these plans at this time is imperative." It's imperative that we do what we're doing now so we can keep the promise to those individuals because they are living longer. We need to do it now.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, one of the concerns of the Auditor General was if employees could clearly understand their plans' designs and outcomes going forward. How can you ensure that plans will be conveyed in a reasonable manner so that Albertans can understand what they are buying into?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a limited number of ways that we can fan that out. There are 500 employers that are participants in these plans. That's a lot of employers. It's a lot of employees. So what we've done is that we have asked those employers to distribute a letter from the ministry to the individual plan members to tell them what those changes are. We've also communicated them through the websites that we have, both our department website as well as the plan websites and the APS website. We've actually put calculators out there. I'm very happy to say that the calculators are probably the most popular piece of what's on the legislation because it tells the employees exactly what's happening.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

School Construction in Calgary

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary communities of Cougar Ridge, Aspen Woods, West Springs, and surrounding areas are desperately needing some schools. They're not alone on that front. In fact, a group of concerned parents and teachers have created a petition, which has received more than 4,000 signatures thus far, asking the minister for help. I'm sure he has seen it. The schools in these areas are bursting at the seams. They literally have no more room for kids. I'd like to ask the minister: will he offer them some help before 2016?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I think I said in this House a couple of days ago, the Premier gave me pretty direct instructions to get the approved schools open in 2016. I'm working diligently with my staff to do that. I would say to the hon. member that he should tell those constituents of his that they ought to be very glad that this government is there rather than anybody he's attached to be in control, because under this government, under this Premier we're building Alberta. We're providing those classrooms so that kids can prepare for the future.

Mr. McAllister: A couple of points to the Minister of Infrastructure. They're not my constituents. They have two PC MLAs as their representatives. Secondly, the difference between us and government: we'll build the schools, not put in the signs, Minister.

Given that parents, teachers, and students behind this petition deserve a new school as much as anybody else, will the minister commit to what Wildrose has been asking for all along, a full public and prioritized infrastructure list to put an end to these kind of guessing games so communities know when they are going to get the schools they so desperately need.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I was to hold up a blank piece of paper, that would be a list of what they're going to build. The fact is that we have actually committed to a bunch of schools. They're on our website. After the budget today what's approved will be on the website if it's not already there. Rather than make statements, as the members of that party have in the past, about how up to a third of the schools approved aren't needed, they should perhaps actually be onside with Albertans and their children that need those schools. This Premier, this government, building Alberta: we're doing it; they would not.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, this party on this side of the House would build 100 schools and honour every commitment made by that party. The only shovel that that minister has is the one that follows him around to the podiums when he makes announcements.

Given that this government is building a new school in Elbow Park for 200 students or thereabouts for up to $20 million, I would ask the minister: has he considered building a bigger school at this site or a more appropriate site that would take the pressure off some of the surrounding Calgary communities and put more kids in a new school?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, for a party that says that they want to respect local autonomy, I find this line of questioning almost comical. We respect the good work that the local school boards do. We respect their capital plans when we have situations like we did through the flood. When they build the regular capital plans, we take direction from them, and we try to respond to them because they're on the ground. It's funny how now we're criticized for not building fast enough the schools that they didn't actually want us to build.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, your point of order has been noted at 2:19 p.m.

Let us move on to Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Please, no preamble to your supplementals. We let a couple go there. I'm not going to let much more go on. No supplementals with preambles.

Labour Shortage in Bonnyville-Cold Lake

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I heard from my constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake about the serious challenge of labour shortage in the hospitality sector. With the high-paying oil sands so close our local businesses are having a hard time finding workers. These issues affect not only the local economy but our quality of life. My question is to the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. What are you doing to help employers in Bonnyville-Cold Lake find workers in sectors other than oil and gas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, that is a problem that businesses not only in the region of Cold Lake but throughout the province are suffering from. It's a problem that most jurisdictions would love to have. Nonetheless, it's a problem. We are working with groups that are currently underemployed or unemployed, marginalized groups. We are working with our aboriginal communities, persons with disabilities. Often women find it difficult to re-engage themselves in employment. We are focusing on Albertans and Canadians and trying to merge them into our workforce in all parts of the province.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister: with Kehewin First Nations so close why aren't we doing more to help the aboriginal people fill in these jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our aboriginal community is, obviously, one of our priorities. We have business and industry liaisons throughout the province working with aboriginal communities and businesses and trying to match skill sets with the jobs available. Also, the Minister of Human Services has 59 offices throughout the province of Alberta Works, where job fairs are being put on, where resumés are being built, where linkages between people who are unemployed or underemployed are made with businesses, so no effort is being spared to make sure that every single Albertan and Canadian gets to work to the maximum of their ability.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister: if the employer cannot find any Albertans to do this job, how will you help them to assure that they will get workers that they desperately need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, that's a good question, Mr. Speaker. Let me be perfectly frank on this. It is the position of this government that any and all jobs available in Alberta have to be offered and made available to Canadians first. Canadians should have the first right of refusal; however, in cases where there are no workers ready or willing to take on the jobs that are available, there is the federal program of temporary foreign workers, which has been a lifesaver to Alberta industry for a number of years already, and we will probably end up continuing to rely on this program for many years to come.

Alberta Energy Regulator Investigations

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been watching and waiting to see if the performance of the new Energy Regulator actually does balance environmental protection and oil development. In 2012 Plains Midstream had a pipeline spill of crude oil into the Red Deer River and the Gleniffer reservoir. The Energy Regulator has just ruled that the company didn't inspect the pipeline, didn't follow up on government warnings, and failed to mitigate once the oil started leaking. One would expect some severe, memorable sanctions, right? No. Does the environment minister support the regulator's sanctions for Plains Midstream's incompetence and repeated breaches of directive 019?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are aware that the Energy Regulator has completed their investigation. I can tell you that my department is currently finishing our investigation. Once the investigation is complete, we will determine if charges need to be laid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much. To the same minister: what happened to polluter pays? How is requiring Plains Midstream to develop emergency responses – wow; tough – to audit past actions, really tough, and to develop resident contact plans a vigorous sanction?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the Energy Regulator has done their due diligence. They came up with their recommendations. I can tell you that my department is now continuing to look at the investigation, and we will do the appropriate thing. That could include prosecution. But at this point in time it's premature for me to say what we are going to do, as our investigation is not complete at the department level.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Minister, either you or the regulator can put those sanctions through.

But let me ask if the minister is able to give me three examples – okay; how about one example – of where the regulator put the environment first, ahead of industry's interests. Just one example.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, being that the regulator just started to be in the process of doing its business in the last eight weeks, I can't give an example at this period in time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Medicine Hat.

Seniors' Drug Coverage

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 private health insurance dealers, big pharma, and other hangers-on were lined up to cash in on this PC government's plan to charge seniors more for prescription drugs. Albertans responded and hit back that blatant attack on universal health care so far that it took this government four years to find it again. My question to the Health minister is this. Why did you think that you could dust off this dirty, old policy to make seniors pay more for their prescriptions and not expect that sensible and caring Albertans would make you stand down on this once again?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to talk about our policy with respect to how we're making drug and supplementary health benefit programs accessible to more Albertans. What surprises me on a continual basis is the lack of recognition on the opposite side of the House of the fact that 20 per cent of Albertans have absolutely no access to drug coverage in this province. We are seeing drug costs grow at a rate like never before. Albertans continue to enjoy the broadest, best drug coverage in the country. We intend to keep it that way. What we have said is that we will pursue this by consolidating our 18 programs into one and a number of other measures.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that this PC government has now twice tried to defy common sense to make seniors pay millions more for their prescriptions, why won't this minister stop putting his hands on the burners of the stove, smarten up, and stop rolling out this sort of two-tier, American-style private health care and put in a universal pharmacy plan?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is welcome, if he wants to, to raise the ire of Albertans, or at least attempt to, by talking about the United States. What we're interested in is Alberta and coverage for Albertans. We will continue with our program to consolidate those 18 separate programs into one. We will continue to push the federal government, join our other provincial colleagues in pressing for national catastrophic drug coverage for Canadians, and we will continue to capitalize on our very good success in the last year in lowering drug prices that are paid by Albertans, both by taxpayers and out of pocket.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that in 2009 the income-based seniors' pharmacy plan was shot down and that in 2014 the scheme to make seniors pay more for their prescriptions went up in flames, too, is this a pattern that you intend to follow, to attack seniors specifically and universal health care in general? Mind you, maybe your PC government won't be here next time to pull these sorts of tricks.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it's hardly a question of government policy, but I'll give him an answer on government policy. It would be very refreshing, actually – and maybe we'll hear it in estimates – for this hon. member to demonstrate what knowledge he has, if any, about the very broad drug coverage that's offered in Alberta; about some of the very specific drug cost pressures, including drugs to which this hon. member and his colleagues and all members of this House are advocating access for Albertans; his knowledge about the efforts of provinces and territories to work together to address this issue, to see Canada pool our population health risk and our financial resources to deliver a better level of coverage for Canadians. Maybe he's interested in that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Emergency Medical Dispatch Services

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Slowly but surely the Minister of Health is retreating on his failed one-size-fits-all approach to emergency dispatch. The minister is now letting some communities keep their local services. It's good to see him coming around to the Wildrose point of view, and we support these changes. There is a growing opinion that the minister is cherry-picking these communities based on petty partisanship. Now, I won't jump to conclusions, but something is not right here. Minister, why are some communities like Lethbridge and Red Deer allowed to hold on to their dispatch services while others like Medicine Hat are not?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has already jumped to one conclusion by suggesting that we have moved away from our commitment to consolidate dispatch services across the province. What we have done and what was reflected on this morning at the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association breakfast by our Premier is that we have successfully worked out arrangements with Lethbridge, Red Deer, and Fort McMurray to have them operate as satellites of the provincial dispatch system.

What this means, among other things, is that any of those three satellites will be able to run the entire provincial system in the event of a natural disaster or another emergency. They will be able to better serve their own citizens by accessing ambulances across borders.

Mr. Pedersen: Given that this government likes to talk about local decision-making and supporting local autonomy, why is the minister listening to some communities but still ignoring others?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to wax nostalgic about jurisdiction in Alberta, municipal versus provincial, he's welcome to do that. What we're interested in is building a state-of-the-art emergency medical services system for the citizens of this province by adhering to a dispatch system which recognizes the principle of borderless ambulance services. What that means is that the closest ambulance to any emergency will be the ambulance that responds to the emergency anywhere in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that countless community leaders from Medicine Hat have been loud and clear about wanting to keep our regional dispatch services because the service you offer is not as good as what we had, why is the minister ignoring locally elected officials and proceeding with central dispatch, that our community just doesn't want?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to talk about these sorts of jurisdictional issues, he's welcome to pursue those questions with my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What happened here is that three very large dispatch providers that provided integrated dispatch services – fire, ambulance, and, in some cases, police – have become satellites of our provincial dispatch system, allowing us to complete the remaining 5 per cent of dispatch services in this province and bring them into the provincial system. The common technology that will be used, the borderless ambulance principle that I talked about earlier, all of those other improvements are going to be made possible because these municipalities co-operated with a provincial . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Elk Population in Northern Alberta

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley and other north-western constituencies have seen significant stored grain crop damage from elk over the past few years, with no government herd culling or financial compensation programs in place. This is a problem our government created in 1968, when elk was first transported into the area by our provincial government. The damage is also compounded by the fact that we are experiencing poor grain-delivery opportunities. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Given that the Alberta government introduced elk into farming communities, will financial compensation be offered to the numerous farmers who have suffered increased, severe financial hardship?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have a compensation program for farmers who suffer damages to unharvested crops. It appears that the issue here relates to harvested crops. By the way, for the unharvested crops you don't have to have insurance to be covered by this program. On the issue of harvested crops I think that as a policy decision one would have expected that those crops are protected, they're in storage, and so on. It appears that there is an emerging issue relating to the stored crops. I'd be happy to speak with the member further, and I have already alerted my department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: given that the elk population is well over 5,000 head in the Spirit River area alone, will we see the launch of a herd-culling program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a timely question for the member. I was just up in Rycroft a couple of weeks ago and had a chance to talk to a number of municipal officials and farmers in the area, and they did raise their concerns about the number of elk in the area and the fact that there was eaten grain. So we have two issues. One, we've got to get the railcars on the roads so we can get the grain out of there. The second thing we have to do is reduce the elk population. Right now hunting allocations for elk will be determined this spring, and multiple seasons will be available for hunters to help reduce the number of elk in the area through hunting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when are we going to change those hunting regulations, maybe going possibly from a draw system to an open system that allows anyone to purchase an elk licence and to have maybe a longer hunting season?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, we're still not the Wild West, so we have to do some things and have some order. We believe that the elk population will be successfully managed through a draw system, where the number of hunters are limited and multiple hunting seasons are available. Allowing a smaller number of hunters at one time and more hunting seasons will result in more elk being removed. What we will do through the draw season is that we will have my staff contact hunters with elk licences and pair them up with farmers with elk problems. That's something that we can do to help reduce those issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Health Facilities in Strathmore

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Strathmore hospital is the second-busiest rural hospital in Alberta, seeing over 33,000 patients a year in the emergency room alone. Despite rising populations and the broadening of their service area the facility has not expanded to meet our community's growth. In fact, since construction in 1985 the facility has not met the growing needs and could be putting patients at risk. Given that AHS's capital plan says that, and I quote, many of these facilities are functionally and physically obsolete, to the Minister of Health: what are you going to do to address this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll answer the first question, and my colleague may wish to supplement. As the hon. member knows, the Strathmore hospital redevelopment is referenced in AHS's five-year capital plan. It is currently an unfunded project. It is one of several across the province. I am aware of the importance of Strathmore to serving not only residents in that area but also to providing overflow for Calgary. I visited the facility myself. We'll continue to work toward completing the necessary needs assessment for this, but as I'm sure the hon. member will appreciate, our capital dollars are limited.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that last year the government forced the Strathmore hospital to close the functional 25-bed unit and given the much-needed demand for facility expansion, why is it taking the Health minister so long to address this important issue?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely not the case. Neither the government nor AHS forced the Strathmore hospital to close the long-term bed unit. What happened, of course, was that across the street a brand new facility developed by the operator Age Care opened, a state-of-the-art continuing care facility that provided state-of-the-art housing for those residents and the residents that were to follow. We call that progress.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would this minister be willing to meet with myself, the local council, medical professionals, and AHS to address the critical need for the expanded and up-to-date facility our community requires now?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that both my colleague and I have visited the Strathmore hospital. I know that I certainly have talked to the mayor on a number of occasions, other stakeholders in the community. I believe we have a handle on the situation, as I said. We certainly understand the need and the desire of the community, and we will continue to work to do our best to make this occur. But, as I said, it's one of several projects across the province that we continue to try to complete.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Grain Rail Transportation Backlog

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since last year's unbelievable harvest in northern Alberta our farmers have been trying to get their grain to market, and it seems to me that we are having some backlogs in the railroad industry. Could the minister of agriculture please explain what his department is doing to help us with this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member quite properly raises an issue that's probably the forefront issue in my department right now and a topic of lots of discussion around rural Alberta. The fact is that this is a matter of federal jurisdiction. The federal government is responsible for the railways. We have been a loud advocate with the federal ministers both of agriculture and of transport regarding this issue as have other provinces. I was in Winnipeg last week speaking with Minister Ritz and provincial counterparts. My deputy has been engaged in conversations with provincial deputies across western Canada and the federal government as well as the transportation deputies we're working on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, these tracks have many different commodities on them, and we're hearing that a lot of these tracks are being used with oil right now. Could the minister tell me: are we taking a back seat to the oil industry as grain producers in this province?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that's a comment that we also hear quite a bit, and we've been making inquiries not only with the rail companies but also with experts who are independent observers. My understanding and information is that there has been an uptick in some of the traffic in terms of moving oil, but the numbers are pretty small. They're only about 2 per cent of the rail traffic compared to 16, 17 per cent for the grain traffic. It's interesting, though. When you look at our province's submission to the rail freight review in 2010, we said then that only 20 per cent of shippers of all kinds were happy with rail service. So it's not just the grain people.

The Speaker: Thank you.

One more supplemental, please.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you. Just one more: could the minister actually tell me if, in his discussions with the rail companies, they're going to be adding any more grain cars to supplement the fleet?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of talk about railcars. I think that may be a simplistic suggested solution. I think that there's an agreement and a consensus that it's really the power, the locomotives, and the crews that are probably the bigger issue. Also, on the question of grain cars – and I had a discussion with Minister Ritz about this last week – it's not just the number of cars; it's where they're spotted and when they're spotted, and that's a huge issue for our producers and our grain companies. So all of those are details that we're encouraging the federal government to deal with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Lyme Disease

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lyme disease is a serious illness that is hurting Albertans, not only with debilitating symptoms but also with a chronic lack of support from provincial health services. Anyone at any age can get it through contact with deer ticks. And while the disease is best remedied in early phases, symptoms increase in severity over time. Several of my constituents have expressed their dismay at not being able to access diagnostic services and the treatment they need to cope with Lyme disease. To the Health minister: why is AHS denying access to testing for Lyme disease?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, Lyme disease is, in fact, a very serious disease. I agree with the hon. member. I am not aware of any circumstances where AHS is denying testing for this. It's actually a public health matter. The tests are conducted through AHS public health in co-operation with the chief medical officer of health for Alberta and the staff in my ministry. But I'm certainly not aware in any case that we are denying testing.

Mr. Rowe: I will be happy to provide the minister with evidence that that is indeed happening.

Given that many of my constituents are having to pay thousands of dollars out of pocket for testing alone and then must pay for their own treatment, when will this government take Lyme disease seriously and ensure Albertans have access to the best available diagnostic services and treatment?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure the hon. member appreciates, neither he nor I requisition tests for Lyme disease. Those tests should be and are requisitioned by physicians. I'd be happy to look at the information that the hon. member refers to and see if there is any irregularity or anything that needs to be done in order to improve access to testing for Lyme disease. We take it seriously as do our partners to the east and the west.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you for that, Minister. I will provide that evidence.

Considering that the severity of symptoms increases over time, does the minister agree that early diagnosis must be available for Lyme disease so that Albertans are assured that such serious illnesses are addressed and alleviated as soon as possible instead of being left on their own to suffer without hope of assistance from this government?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I would be speculating in trying to answer that question, and I don't want to do that. As I said, I'd be happy to look at whatever information the hon. member has that pertains to the experience of his constituents. I repeat that we take the disease very seriously. I know there are a variety of tests that are available to detect Lyme disease, and I said that I'd be happy to look into it further upon review of the information provided by my colleague.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall, after many years of negotiations, an agreement was signed to allow for the construction of the southwest section of the Calgary ring road. My questions are all for the Minister of Transportation. Minister, many of my constituents are questioning the design of the bridges crossing the Elbow River. Can the minister confirm that the designs will be reviewed in light of the water levels and flow rates that were experienced during the flood of 2013?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to this member. She is always advocating hard for her constituents. Last June's floods in southern Alberta resulted in an unprecedented amount of damage to many provincial roads, highways, and bridges. Part of the recovery effort includes making sure new transportation infrastructure like the south Calgary ring road can withstand the low flow rates and increased water levels experienced last spring. All design requirements for proposed bridges over the Elbow and Bow rivers will indeed be reviewed and will incorporate the high water levels that are based on the latest flood maps.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you very much. My constituents are also concerned about the impact of construction and traffic on the Weaselhead environmental park. What measures will be taken by your department to address these concerns?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to building Alberta's transportation infrastructure in a way that is responsible for our natural environment. My department will continue to work closely with the city of Calgary and interested stakeholders to ensure that there is minimal impact on the Weaselhead environmental park. The road design will follow all legislated environmental requirements.

Ms L. Johnson: My final question: when and where is the construction expected to begin on the final section of the southwest ring road?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, completing the Calgary ring road is just one of the many examples of how we are building Alberta to increase market access for our province's goods and services while supporting growth in local communities. Currently we are considering building the final stages of the Calgary ring road in two segments, using a P3 model. Project updates will be posted regularly on the Alberta Transportation website.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the formal time for question period has expired, but we do have a request for a point of clarification, which we are going to hear from the Deputy Premier, regarding an issue that arose during question period. That will entitle the opposition to ask a supplemental question, to which an answer will then be expected.

The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier, in responding to a question earlier today, subsequently realized that she had not been responding specifically with respect to the flight that the question was about.

To correct the record, commercial flight options were considered, but there were reports of significant challenges with getting passengers out of Palm Springs at the time. The decision was made to send the government plane to ensure with a degree of certainty that the Premier would be in Calgary in time for Premier Klein's memorial.

That's the correct answer to the question that was addressed earlier. The Premier realized subsequently that she was not addressing the flight that was requested about.*

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Deputy Premier clarifying on behalf of – oh, pardon me.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Is this in response to the Official Opposition or to the ND opposition?

Mr. Horner: The ND opposition.

The Speaker: My apologies, Calgary-Shaw.
Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, there were plenty of options available during that time between Palm Springs and coming back. So if there is some obfuscation or some smoke that's being blown there – clearly, the planes were there. Why didn't the Premier choose to ride a commercial plane instead of spending $9,000 of public money on this flight unnecessarily?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's easy for the opposition or others to take specific decisions out of their context, without all the information, and then make these types of character-slighting allegations. The reality is that people make difficult decisions every day, use their best judgment, using the information that they have at the time.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're fighting the clock here, so to speak, but let's give it a go. Let's start with Edmonton-Decore, private member's statement, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

200th Anniversary of Taras Shevchenko

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to help commemorate the bicentenary anniversary of the birth of an eminent Ukrainian national poet, accomplished artist, and humanist of global stature and significance in Ukrainian history, namely Taras Shevchenko. On March 9, 2014, and over the course of the year Ukrainians from all over the world will pay tribute, through festivals, presentations, and activities, to the 200th anniversary of Taras Shevchenko's birth.

Shevchenko was born a serf, orphaned at 12, grew up in poverty and misery, but died as Ukraine's national bard. For his satirical political poetry he was arrested, punished with military service, exiled to a remote region, and was forbidden by Czar Nicholas I to write, draw, and paint, an edict he patently ignored. Taras Shevchenko was never allowed to live in Ukraine. However, shortly after his death his remains were transported from St. Petersburg to Ukraine and reburied on Chernecha Hora, known as Monk's mountain, in Kaniv.

The importance of Shevchenko's poetry about Ukrainian culture and society has garnered a unique place in Ukrainian history. His uncompromising poems exposed the terrible conditions under which the Ukrainian nation was suffering. This resulted in a reawakening of Ukrainian national identity, which is unprecedented in the history of any nation. Also, his artistic works laid the foundations for the use of Ukrainian as a language of modern Ukrainian literature.

Taras Shevchenko was revered as an ardent fighter for freedom and liberty. He was a great hero, who dreamed of a time when his country would be a free, sovereign state in which the Ukrainian people, their language, culture, and history would be respected and valued for all time.

Mr. Speaker, God bless the Ukrainian people. Glory to Ukraine. [Remarks in Ukrainian] Glory to the heroes. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Women's Issues

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we approach March 8, International Women's Day, I set aside time to take stock, to review how far women in Alberta have come and how far we still have to go to achieve the full and equal participation of women in the life of the province. Now, this week we had both the throne speech and a budget speech, so I thought it would be an appropriate time or opportunity to see if the provincial government is making the grade. Is it moving toward that equal participation?

Well, there's still a wage gap between men and women, no matter the education or upbringing. Women running single-parent households continue to be more likely to be living in poverty. Immigrant and new Canadian women are still less able to access ESL training, leaving them behind their spouses and their children in language skills. We look longingly at Quebec's $10-a-day child care fees. Minimum wage still disproportionately affects women workers.

While government has added advisory councils and policy commissions of every possible shape and size, it closed both the Advisory Council on Women's Issues and the women's secretariat after starving them of funding for years. Now, there is no mention of the concept of consent in the health or sex ed curriculum, nor do we store sexual assault kits so survivors can recover and then consider whether they wish to contact the police. Rather than increasing the number of provincially elected women to reach a critical mass, Alberta has steadily declined in the numbers elected. This government still does not adequately, never mind fully, fund shelters for survivors of violence against women nor sexual assault centres nor agencies for pregnant and parenting teens nor any other NGO that provides services primarily for women. Alberta has made disgraceful progress in cases of missing and murdered indigenous women.

There is no question that women have made progress, but like so many things in Alberta, it could be so much better. Women are an untapped resource for us, one that Alberta needs more each day, and I will continue to press for this government to take leadership roles in achieving economic, social, and legal equality for women.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Edmonton-South West, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Youth Engagement Think Tank

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Alberta Youth Secretariat I'm very excited to rise today in recognition of the second youth engagement think tank, which is set to take place on Saturday, March 15. The core principle behind this undertaking is the importance of getting youth actively involved in engaging and improving their communities. The first think tank took place in December 2013, and its great success led to the decision that a follow-up discussion ought to take place.

Mr. Speaker, the second think tank will allow for a more in-depth exploration of ways to maximize engagement opportunities for youth. In particular, four fundamental questions have been selected for discussion. What principles should guide youth engagement moving forward? How should family and community engagement councils engage youth? Are youth being sufficiently represented in the draft children's charter's principles? How can youth be engaged in the development of a bullying prevention strategy? Exploring these four questions is an essential task for the young Albertans that will be gathering on March 15. By doing so, they will be taking another step in cultivating themselves as future leaders in their communities and in our great province.

Occasions such as this truly highlight the importance of emphasizing the role of youth as we seek to build upon our strong families and communities. Informed and motivated youth are the lifeblood of a bright and prosperous future. This is why I'm immensely excited whenever I get the opportunity to participate first-hand in encouraging their enthusiasm to make a difference in the lives of those around them.

Mr. Speaker, for this reason I know that all hon. members in this House will join me in wishing these young Albertans well when they convene at the youth engagement think tank next weekend.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Events in Ukraine

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations I want to speak to you about something near and dear to my heart, the situation in Ukraine. On behalf of ACAUR, my family, and the Ukrainian community in Alberta I want to say thank you to our Premier, the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, the Minister of Culture, and our Prime Minister for the support given to the people of Ukraine.

Our government is stepping up to provide aid to Ukraine and continues to stand with the government of Canada in opposing all efforts to undermine democracy and freedom in Ukraine. As we stand beside the people of Ukraine, we are hopeful that a peaceful resolution will soon be found. We honour the 100 Ukrainians who gave up their lives so future generations would experience freedom and democracy. Ukrainians around our province have held memorial services to pray for those who've lost their lives in the struggle for freedom.

We live in the greatest province and country in the world. The freedoms we take for granted are those same freedoms I hope and dream Ukrainians in Ukraine will one day experience regardless of what language they speak or in what part of the country they live.

Once again, the Ukrainian community of Alberta thanks the Premier and all members of this Legislature for the unified support and understanding of the difficulties facing Ukraine today and for bringing this issue to the forefront.

Thank you to all.

The Speaker: Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Highway 3

Mr. Stier: Good afternoon. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently, at a meeting of the mayors and reeves of southern Alberta, significant concerns were once again expressed regarding the lack of attention to the highway 3 twinning upgrades and improvements that were promised several years ago by the government of Alberta. Communities across southern Alberta have looked forward to these improvements to highway 3 as that road system connects dozens of communities with one another and also forms the key connecting corridor to the province of British Columbia and the northwestern United States.

Stretching across the province, the road serves many small towns and rural areas plus Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Fort Macleod, Pincher Creek, and the Crowsnest Pass communities. It is the main transportation route into and out of the southern tip of the province that carries Canadian products to foreign markets via the nearby U.S. border and to the west coast terminals in Vancouver. This road was extensively studied, had several recommended new alignments to eliminate the frequent bottlenecks, and was approved several years ago for significant upgrades, including the twinning west of Fort Macleod, by Premier Stelmach himself in May 2007. Yet despite the fact that this corridor is so vitally important to Alberta's economy and an obvious crucial link to our entire transportation network, it still today remains a two-lane road in most areas, full of bottlenecks, with only slightly altered areas that have had only minor improvements.

As the mayors and reeves of southern Alberta are deeply concerned that the provincial government has been ignoring this issue for far too long and fear that without added attention to this matter the economies in the region will continue to be hampered, on their behalf I'm asking for immediate attention by the Minister of Transportation and for this government to please act now. Make this project a chief priority by putting it on the major highway construction plan just as soon as it may be possible, please.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interject here, but it's 3 o'clock, and unanimous consent to proceed with the conclusion of the daily Routine has not been asked for, so I must go directly to points of order.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask for unanimous consent to hear the last member's statement, to extend the Routine today for one more member's statement.

The Speaker: Well, I'll ask for it, but just so you know, I still have to deal with points of order after that.

Mr. Campbell: Yeah. It's only two minutes.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Then let us hear, please, from Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

3:00 National Lymphedema Awareness Day

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues, for allowing me to provide my member's statement.

On behalf of our colleague the MLA for Calgary-Foothills I wish to draw to your attention that National Lymphedema Awareness Day is today, March 6.

Lymphedema is recognized as one of the most feared side effects of cancer treatment, yet public awareness of it remains minimal. We have chosen this day as the day to draw attention to the problem, whether it is primary or secondary, cancer related or not. Lymphedema is a chronic, long-term condition in which excess fluid collects in tissues, causing swelling. It commonly affects but is not limited to the arms and legs and can affect people of all ages. According to the proclamation of Lymphedema Awareness Day over 100 million people worldwide are affected by some form of this condition. It is often a consequence of surgically removing the lymph nodes or due to damage caused by radiotherapy.

Founded in 2003, the Alberta Lymphedema Association is a not-for-profit charitable organization. This dedicated team of people recognized the need to help people living with and affected by this. The association serves as a learning one, committed to ongoing education and awareness about lymphedema. They act as a resource to empower affected individuals and their families in managing this condition.

This date unites the entire lymphedema community to take action and to raise awareness of this underrecognized condition. Mr. Speaker, today is a day for therapists to honour their patients and for patients to honour their therapists and for all of us to understand lymphedema a little better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I must proceed directly now to points of order. There was a point of order raised at around 1:56 p.m. by the hon. Minister of Justice, and perhaps he's not wanting to pursue it, or is he?

Mr. Campbell: No. We'll withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That is officially withdrawn on his behalf by the Government House Leader.

A second point of order was raised by the Government House Leader at 2:09 p.m., and I've received a note indicating that you wish to withdraw. Is that correct? Okay. The Government House Leader says that that is correct.

So we have one point of order left. It was raised at 2:19 p.m. It was Calgary-Shaw with respect to an answer being given by the Minister of Infrastructure.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will, in the interest of time, do this as quickly as possible. I'll give the minister, hopefully, the opportunity to do the honourable thing and be a team player for his own team and just simply withdraw the remark.

But we've heard it in this House before – it probably will not, unfortunately, be the last time – this whole idea that our party, Mr. Speaker, will build nothing or, as he suggested, that he could hold up a blank piece of paper, and that is what our infrastructure plan would be. It is a fabrication. It's a manifestation of a communications director who thought that it would be a great talking point. It is patently false. I would just simply ask the minister to do the honourable thing and under 23(h), (i), and (j), please, to just withdraw the remark.

The Speaker: Let's be quick about this. Hon. minister, do you wish to rethink this or withdraw it?

Mr. Campbell: No, Mr. Speaker. There was no point of order. We had a question from the opposition to the hon. minister. The hon. minister gave his answer. This was a policy discussion. We disagree with their policy. You look on their website and see what their policy is, and we patently disagree with what the Wildrose is doing. There's no list. There's no point of order.

The Speaker: Well, I suppose that clarifies the position that the government has on this matter. I think you've indicated what the Wildrose has. If you have something that clarifies this further by way of a tabling, then why don't you bring it into the House and table it on the next sitting day, and that will clear this matter up even more formally.

All right. With that, we will observe the necessity to recess the session until 3:15 p.m. to allow adequate time for the set-up of the budget speech itself. Accordingly, the House stands recessed until 3:15.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:04 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's take our chairs, please. Quickly.

Orders of the Day Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2015, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits these estimates of certain sums that are required for that year and recommends them to all.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the 2014-15 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2014-15 government estimates. Further, I now wish to table the government's business plan, titled Strategic Plan, and the ministry business plans.

The Speaker: Hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, just before you deliver your comments, I wonder if we could take a moment and congratulate someone who's celebrating her birthday today, and we'll just see what the President of Treasury Board has in mind for her and for all Albertans.

Hon. Premier, happy birthday.

Government Motions

Mr. Horner: I now wish to table the government's Budget 2014 fiscal plan, which contains the operational plan, savings plan, capital plan, and major economic assumptions used in developing these plans.

Budget Address

11. Mr. Horner moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please proceed.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to present the government of Alberta's proposed budget for the fiscal year 2014-15, a budget that is fully balanced. Before this one, 100 provincial budgets have been tabled in this House. No two budgets have been identical, and each one has reflected the times in which it was being presented, whether it's supporting the tens of thousands of Albertans impacted by major flooding in southern Alberta or helping Albertans cope with the devastating drought in the midst of the Great Depression or working to maintain a fiscal balance in the face of rising and falling revenues, the price we pay for being an energy economy.

Change and adversity are not new to this province, to its people, or any of the governments before this one. One of the constants over our history is the resilience of Albertans and our ability to recover from whatever challenges may arise. Albertans have always been defined by their irrepressible spirit, right from those early days when a handful of fearless western Canadians decided to call Alberta home. This is despite what George Simpson, governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, said in the 19th century: "The west should be left to the trapper and trader. Forever."

Albertans have never been afraid of a challenge. We've never been afraid of rolling up our sleeves, whether it's to tackle adversity or to work towards our dreams. It's this commitment to the future and the courage to shape it that has allowed Alberta to evolve over the last century and become the remarkable province that it is today.

We've been building Alberta from day one. This is why people chose Alberta more than 100 years ago, and it's why they continue to choose Alberta today. We stand out among provinces and we always will. In fact, in spite of what early detractors like George Simpson said, many people, including economists and other experts, point to Alberta as the place to be now and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, there are some good reasons for this. As we enter a new fiscal year, Alberta is outperforming Canada and the United States. Alberta has led all provinces in economic growth for the last two years, and many forecasters estimate Alberta is Canada's economic growth leader for 2013 as well. And we keep going. The big five Canadian banks expect Alberta to top all provinces again in 2014.

We led all provinces in job growth in 2011 and 2012. Over the past 12 months Alberta created nearly 70,000 jobs, accounting for just under half of the jobs added in all of Canada over this period. Last year Alberta's unemployment rate was 4.6 per cent, the same as it was in 2012 and well below the national rate of 7.1 per cent. This speaks to just how good our job opportunities are when we can boast such a low unemployment rate in the face of such high population growth.

More than 105,000 people moved to Alberta last year. That's like adding a city the size of Red Deer. The numbers do tell the story. For living and raising a family, for working or starting a business, and for playing and enjoying the good life that Alberta has to offer, Alberta is the people's choice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, our government has also made choices. Some of them have been tough choices. All of them have been the right ones. I'll talk about some of the choices we've made in this budget, but first I'll speak about how decisions we made over the last fiscal year have set Alberta on a course for success. A year ago almost to the day I stood in the same spot and tabled a budget that represented a once-in-a-generation shift for our province, and it set a new direction for our government. It had to. The actions we took in Budget 2013 were necessary to address numbers that were substantially different than what we are seeing today. At this time last year we were facing a potential $6 billion shortfall in revenue thanks to volatile energy prices and the lower price Alberta producers were getting for their bitumen.

Budget 2013 included some hard but necessary decisions. It forced us to not just scrutinize our spending but to rein it in. It was one of the toughest budgets we'd seen in a while. It included a zero per cent increase in operating expense, and that wasn't easy, not when for the past 10 years the average increase in operating expense had been 7.3 per cent. It wasn't easy as well, Mr. Speaker, when population growth plus inflation was 4.3 per cent, but we did it.

Budget 2013 brought responsible change to how our government does business in this province. For example, we brought together some of the best and brightest minds from across Canada to discuss Alberta's economic future. Last year we hosted two economic summits and two forecasting summits. We tapped into the expertise of leading economists from Canada's top banks to get us the most accurate forecast we could.

Of course, we know that even with their expertise, as soon as our forecast goes to print, there's a high chance it's already off, and of course there's a hundred per cent certainty someone will tell us we're wrong. In any forecast there are many unknowns. We don't know what the Canadian dollar will do. We don't know what the energy market will do. That's why we base our forecast on what we hear from those experts. We don't pick and choose to meet a certain objective. We don't forecast high to justify extra spending just as we don't forecast low to justify lower spending.

Last year, based on the most accurate information available to us, we held the line on our spending. It was the right decision, one that's helping us turn a corner. To be clear, Mr. Speaker, we haven't quite finished turning that corner. We can't see everything that's around the bend, but we need to be prepared for whatever is there.

It is in that same spirit of optimism and caution that I announce an operational surplus of $2.6 billion in Budget 2014. Happy birthday. Mr. Speaker, you can be sure this government has a plan for this money. Even more than a plan, we have legislation. Last March we introduced the Fiscal Management Act, or the FMA, along with Budget 2013. The FMA ensures that each year before we do anything else with our revenue, we take money off the top and we put it into savings. Because of the surplus we will reach the $5 billion in our contingency account in this budget. With more savings in the bank we'll be ready should we need to deal with another significant or unexpected challenge in the future.

Stronger revenue has put us in a much better fiscal position this year, and improvements to our revenue are due to a few factors. For example, we've seen a healthy return on our investments. In fact, we expect investment income in 2014-15 to be the fourth-highest ever. A lower Canadian dollar has also made a difference. The drop in the exchange rate has brought more money for our energy resources, which, of course, are priced in U.S. dollars.

More significant is the increase in tax revenue. With more than 100,000 people moving to Alberta in the last year and no sign of that slowing down, there are more Albertans paying personal income tax and corporate tax. Tax revenue accounts for nearly half of total revenue, so that has an effect on provincial coffers. We've seen a 5 per cent increase from last year, Mr. Speaker.

Nonrenewable resource revenue accounts for 21 per cent of total revenue, so when prices are up or, conversely, when prices are down, you can bet Alberta's bottom line feels the impact. Unlike in Budget 2013, prices are up, and in 2014-15 we expect resource revenue to be $9.2 billion, more than 6 per cent higher than last year. This demonstrates quite clearly just how much Alberta's revenue is affected by the ups and downs of the global market.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, energy has brought Alberta both rewards and challenges since the Dingman discovery well put Turner Valley on the map a century ago, in 1914. That marked the beginning of Alberta's new identity as an energy province, a label that continues to attract job seekers, innovators, and entrepreneurs to Alberta today.

Last summer Alberta's population surpassed 4 million people, and our population continues to grow faster than all other provinces. In fact, we've tripled the national growth rate. This isn't the first time that Alberta has experienced tremendous growth. Canada's first census showed that Alberta's population jumped from 73,000 in 1901 to nearly 375,000 in 1911. That's an increase of 413 per cent in just one decade, Mr. Speaker. When Leduc No. 1 was discovered in 1947, another big moment in Alberta's energy story, it led to another rapid population boom. Now, here in 2014, a century away from the Dingman discovery, we're feeling it again.

There's no question that population growth has its economic benefits. When more people choose Alberta, more people pay income tax, more people spend money in our shops and businesses, and, of course, more people use government services. Alberta is expected to reach 5 million people in the next decade or so. That's about the time that my grandsons will be graduating high school, Mr. Speaker. So not just as Finance minister but as a grandfather and father I want to make sure this province can continue to provide a high quality of life for future Albertans. I want to be sure that when my grandsons are adults, maybe even with their own kids, they have access to the schools, roads, and health facilities their families will need.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that Albertans want the same for their children and their grandchildren. They've told us public infrastructure is a priority. We know it's essential to our quality of life. That's why building Alberta for today and for tomorrow will continue to be the focus of the year ahead. With Budget 2014 we will continue to implement the building Alberta plan. I'm excited about the progress that we've made over the last year, and we will continue our work under the plan's three priorities: investing in families and communities, living within our means, and opening new markets for our resources.

Since the beginning, Alberta's cities, towns, and communities have thrived because of the strength and determination of the people who live in them. Families and communities are the backbone of Alberta. That's why 60 per cent of the operational expense is allocated to support the ongoing success and quality of life of Albertans across this province.

We've made a number of promises to Albertans, and we've kept them. For example, we're working with 24 communities to establish family care clinics across the province. We're building the first wave of 50 new schools and 70 modernizations. We're on track to finish the Calgary ring road. That's the realization of an agreement 50 years in the making, Mr. Speaker. We're also on our way to completing the Edmonton ring road ahead of schedule. We don't believe Albertans should have to wait years for us to build and maintain public infrastructure, especially when our province is growing faster than any other.

Albertans should not have to drive on unsafe roads, and families should not have to drive miles out of their way because the schools in their neighbourhoods are too small for the number of students or nonexistent. Why should we make Albertans wait for adequate infrastructure when we are in a position to build now?

Our capital plan delivers the right infrastructure in the right place at the right time. We're investing more than $19 billion over the next three years through the building Alberta plan. We will ensure Albertans today and in the future continue to have the schools, the health facilities, and the municipal capital projects they've told us are important to them.

We are investing $3.7 billion under the municipal sustainability initiative so municipalities can continue to build strong communities by meeting local infrastructure priorities. Mr. Speaker, that's a $150 million increase over three years from Budget 2013.

We are investing $1.4 billion to support other municipal infrastructure, including $667 million that honours our commitment to the green transit incentives program, also known as GreenTRIP. I'm sure the mayors will be happy.

We are investing $2.6 billion over three years for building, maintaining, and renovating health care facilities. This allows us to complete the work on health facility projects in Edson, High Prairie, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat, to name a few, Mr. Speaker.

Our three-year capital plan also includes $5 billion over the next three years to build, expand, and maintain Alberta's provincial highway network. That's nearly 28,000 kilometres of paved roadway that moves goods to market, gets kids to school, and takes Albertans to work. It also brings tourists and new Albertans to our province.

Mr. Speaker, we are investing $2.7 billion over the next three years for the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads. We're investing $735 million over three years to rehabilitate more than 2,500 kilometres of existing provincial highways. That's nearly a 65 per cent increase over last year's capital plan. We are investing $691 million over three years to finish twinning highway 63 from Grassland to Fort McMurray. We promised Albertans we would enhance their safety on highway 63, and we are keeping that promise.

With $1.8 billion budgeted over the next three years for school capital projects, we are also keeping the Premier's promise to complete 50 new schools and modernize another 70 facilities. We are investing three-quarters of a billion dollars for postsecondary facilities over the next three years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2014 includes $4.9 billion in new direct borrowing for capital. We're not hiding it. Alberta's strong economy and our positive economic outlook mean we've got a triple-A credit rating. That's an excellent position to be in, and it means we can access interest rates still close to 50-year lows. Albertans and financial experts alike have told us that borrowing for capital makes good financial sense. What doesn't make sense is spending our savings, which are currently earning over 11 per cent interest, when we are borrowing at less than 4 per cent. It doesn't make sense to wait a couple of years to build a school, for example, when over those two years the building costs will escalate, and Alberta taxpayers would end up paying 10 per cent more than what we would have paid if we'd built today. In the meantime during those two years our families would still have trouble finding new schools for their children.

We will not sit idly by because of some ideology against debt at all costs because, Mr. Speaker, there is always a cost. In the mid-90s the Alberta government didn't invest in capital because of the circumstances of the day. The decision to delay investment in infrastructure may have been the right one for the time. In 1996, for example, interest rates were about 9 per cent, quite a bit higher than they are today, and the province was feeling the pressure of an accumulated debt from previous deficits.

We are living in different times, Mr. Speaker. Consider this: the population of Alberta was 2.6 million in 1994. In 20 years – 20 years – we've added a city larger than Calgary to our province. That's more than a million new people who need access to schools, who drive on our roads, who use our health facilities. Over the last 20 years government has struggled to catch up with our province's infrastructure needs, and today public infrastructure is the number one priority for us and for our municipalities. Our borrowing plan ensures Albertans continue to have the infrastructure they need today and into the future.

A critical part of our borrowing plan is our debt repayment plan. Just as we have economists, we also have experts who are focused on how we borrow, including how we repay our debt. We make sure money comes off the top each year to pay the interest costs on our capital, and we are setting money aside now to repay this debt when it comes due in the future, more than half a billion dollars in this business plan alone, Mr. Speaker.

Our borrowing plan also includes a cap on debt-servicing costs that limits how much we can borrow. Interest paid on debt cannot exceed 3 per cent of our operational revenue. So let me be clear. We are borrowing only for capital projects. We've borrowed zero dollars for operations, and, Mr. Speaker, this is how it will continue to be. I would like to add that our borrowing plan does differentiate us from other provinces. While other provinces borrow to keep the lights on, to deliver services, or to pay off accumulated deficits, Alberta is only borrowing to build the future of our province. This will result in tangible assets Albertans will use and enjoy for decades.

Without borrowing any money for operational spending, Budget 2014 provides $40.4 billion for government operations. It brings an increase of more than $1 billion in spending for health, education, postsecondary, and support for vulnerable Albertans. We are investing in healthy families, communities, and seniors. We are increasing the Ministry of Health's operational budget to $18.3 billion, Mr. Speaker. That's an increase of more than $600 million.

Budget 2014 provides $805 million for community programs and other services, including community-based health and wellness programs, tissue and blood services, and enhanced home-care and rehabilitation services. We are investing $271 million to support primary care networks and family care clinics. We are increasing the Alberta Health Services base operating grant to $10.7 billion. We're also providing $393 million per year over the next three years to support new health care capacity at the South Health Campus in Calgary, the Kaye Edmonton clinic, and the Strathcona community hospital.

We know that health care providers are a cornerstone of our health system, and we are providing $4 billion in 2014-15 for compensation and development programs for the almost 9,200 physicians and 1,500 medical students in our province. We're investing $1.5 billion in drug and supplemental health benefits for Albertans. This budget provides $353 million for the Alberta seniors' benefit in 2014-15, an increase of more than 6 per cent from last year.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has one of the most comprehensive packages of seniors' benefits in the country. Building Alberta means strengthening programs and services that support children, families, and vulnerable Albertans. Budget 2014 is increasing the operational budget of the Ministry of Human Services by more than 5 per cent from last year. This includes providing $967 million for programs that encourage independence and community involvement for over 10,000 adults with developmental disabilities. It also supports the families of children with disabilities as well as fetal alcohol spectrum disorder initiatives. This is an increase of almost 6 per cent. We're investing $703 million in programs that help underemployed and unemployed people find and keep jobs and help eligible Albertans cover their basic cost of living.

Budget 2014 invests $735 million in child intervention. That's a 6 per cent increase from last year and includes $199 million for foster care support, funding about 5,000 child placements. We are also investing $288 million in 2014-15 for child care programs, also an increase of more than 6 per cent.

We're investing 6 and a half billion dollars in our kindergarten to grade 12 education system so that Alberta's kids will continue to have access to leading-edge learning opportunities and so we can continue to strengthen the best education system in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

We are increasing Alberta Education's operating budget to accommodate the booming student enrolments and changing student demographics. This reflects our government's commitment to enhance funding in priority areas like small class sizes, inclusive education, and for school infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's universities, colleges, and polytechnics are a great source of pride for Alberta. With Budget 2014 we will continue to place a high priority on advanced education, including entrepreneurship and innovation, so more Albertans can find their passion and maximize their potential.

We're improving access for students, using our savings to support scholarships, and helping entrepreneurs and innovators get their ideas off the ground. We are also unfreezing the access to the future fund, which supports innovation and excellence within Alberta's advanced learning system by matching the generous philanthropy of Albertans and world-wide donors.

Postsecondary institutions will receive more than $2.1 billion in operating grants. With $50 million from the access to the future fund, postsecondary institutions will receive $106 million more in operating support in 2014-15 than we projected at this time last year. We recognize the important role that learning and innovation play in our future, and Budget 2014 provides more than $2.8 billion in 2014-15 for this ministry. That's more than a 5 per cent increase from last year, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, it is a priority of this government and this Premier to honour Alberta's communities, ensuring the safety of families and the resiliency of those communities. Last year's flood in southern Alberta tested that resilience, and Albertans were quick to prove that we remain strong when overcoming adversity. We continue to recover from the devastation of the floods, and Budget 2014 provides nearly $1.1 billion in operational expense and capital spending over the next three years to address flood recovery initiatives. This money is in addition to the $3.8 billion in spending forecast in 2013-14, which was mostly related to the disaster recovery program. Flood recovery funding in 2014-15 will complete the floodway relocation program, it will provide property tax relief to affected municipalities, it will continue addiction and mental health supports for Albertans affected by the flooding, and it will support the Alberta flood recovery interest rebate program to assist small businesses in affected areas.

Budget 2014 also shows this government's support for safe communities and our commitment to fighting crime. We are investing $500 million in public security programs, more than 5 per cent more than the 2013 forecast. This includes an increase in funding for the provincial policing contract, providing for 40 new front-line RCMP officers in this fiscal year.

A second pillar under our building Alberta plan is living within our means. Mr. Speaker, this is about restructuring our priorities and spending smarter. We will live within our means by challenging how our government spends, investing wisely, saving for the future, and changing processes where we need to. In Budget 2014 operating expense is increasing by 3.7 per cent. That is less than population plus inflation, which is 5 per cent, but higher than what was in last year's budget.

Budget 2013 was a hold-the-line budget. It focused on fiscal prudence, spending restraint, and getting our own house in order. That meant and still means challenging every dollar we spend. We've been doing that, Mr. Speaker, through the results-based budgeting process, which continues to review every government program and service to ensure relevance, efficiency, and effectiveness.

We will be reviewing how we regulate the financial sector in Alberta. The financial sector is an important part of our economy and of Albertans' lives, and this review will ensure that we continue to be a leader in the regulation of pensions, insurance, and financial institutions.

In Budget 2013 we also bent the line when it comes to spending growth. As I said, in the 10 years prior on average we had increased operating expenses by 7.3 per cent per year, much more than population plus inflation. That kind of growth had become unsustainable, so we reined it in. That's why we have a determination to control wage growth in the public sector. Salaries make up around half of government's operating expense. We implemented management salary freezes and are working towards a 10 per cent reduction in the number of managers.

We reached successful agreements with doctors and teachers, and we're working to secure a wage agreement with government workers, one that's fair to both the employees and to the taxpayers, Mr. Speaker. We want to ensure government offers competitive salaries. We want to continue to attract the best people, but it isn't for government to lead the pack. To protect the defined benefit plans of our workers, a pension promise, we are also making changes to our public-sector pension plans.

We need to ensure the plans are sustainable for the long term. It's become increasingly clear that when it comes to pensions, as the Auditor General has stated, the status quo is not the way to go.

Living within our means also means investing wisely. We know what we need to invest in to be successful in the future: a knowledge-inspired, innovative, and diversified economy; a resilient workforce with the right skills to participate in a dynamic economy; and a sustainable education system that meets the lifelong learning needs of Albertans and the needs of the province. With an eye on our future, Budget 2014 invests approximately one-third of the operational budget in programs and services aimed at securing Alberta's economic future.

Securing our economic future also means saving for our future. With last year's budget we established the first legislated savings plan this government has had in decades. Our plan dictates that we save in good times and in challenging times. Before we do anything with our revenues, we take money off the top, and we put it into savings each and every year.

Our savings plan is for the long term. Alberta's heritage savings trust fund will grow from just over $15 billion today to over $17 billion by 2017. As I said earlier, thanks to our approach to savings and our commitment to controlled spending, Alberta's rainy-day fund, the fund that helped us during the challenge of the flood, the contingency fund, will reach $5 billion in this year's budget. Overall, Mr. Speaker, our savings will grow to nearly $24 billion by the end of the fiscal year and to $26 billion by the end of this fiscal plan.

No one will argue with saving money, but the question we need to answer is: why do we save? It's an important question. Our savings plan involves putting aside a lot of money. It doesn't make sense to simply lock it away under the mattress with no long-term plan. In Budget 2013 we said that we would talk to Albertans about our long-term savings, and over the last year the Alberta government consulted with Albertans in a number of ways, including the two economic summits I mentioned, budget consultations in 11 Alberta communities, the online survey, and conversations with their MLAs. Albertans told us to find a balance between consistently saving for the future and using part of our savings now for strategic, future-oriented investments that would benefit Albertans and the Alberta economy, much as they do in their own homes and their own businesses, Mr. Speaker. We listened, and on Monday we introduced Bill 1, the Savings Management Act.

Under Bill 1 government is building upon its existing innovation infrastructure by committing $1.4 billion to enhance Alberta's innovative and labour market capacities. The bill creates targeted endowments that won't just grow for Albertans but will work for them. These endowments are designed to foster innovation, strengthen our economy, help solve complex social problems, and position Alberta to capitalize on future strategic opportunities.

We've established two new innovation endowments. The social innovation endowment will bring more capacity to the social service and culture sector to innovate and collaborate when resolving challenging social issues. It will support new ideas, risk-sharing, and creative collaboration with the nonprofit sector. The agriculture and food innovation endowment has been established to promote sustained growth in the agriculture and food processing sector. This endowment will fund key activities such as expanding research grants and promoting value-added product development and commercialization. Agriculture is key to our province, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 1 also enhances the Alberta heritage scholarship fund to better address our major challenge of attaining skilled tradespeople when confronted with a critical labour shortage. The enhancements to the fund will be dedicated to trades-focused education and will help apprentices complete their programs, engage industry, and encourage excellence in the apprenticeship system.

We have also established the new Alberta future fund, which will support strategic investments that provide long-term benefits to Albertans and the Alberta economy. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta future fund honours the legacy of Premier Peter Lougheed, who established the heritage fund in 1976 with three objectives: saving for the future, strengthening and diversifying the economy, and improving the quality of life for all Albertans. Through the heritage fund Premier Lougheed established the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research in 1980, which transformed medical research in this province. Today, nearly a quarter century later, we are following in his footsteps with new heritage-driven endowments.

Just as we are honouring Premier Lougheed with a 10-year, $70 million commitment to create the Lougheed leadership institute, we are honouring his spirit with Bill 1, Mr. Speaker.

Success for future generations is also tied to the success of our energy industry. When I talk about the success, I'm not only referring to Alberta but to the entire country. All Canadians benefit from the revenue and the jobs created by Alberta's energy resources.

Our building Alberta plan makes real strides to further open new markets for these resources and other exports. Mr. Speaker, we need to find ways to go beyond our borders, across the ocean, and into new markets in order to get the best prices for Alberta's products. This continues to be job one for this government. Our Premier continues to lead the charge when it comes to opening these doors, whether it's advocating for approval of the Keystone XL pipeline in the U.S., building new opportunities in promising markets like India, or working with other Premiers to develop a Canadian energy strategy that would not just benefit Alberta but all of Canada.

In terms of our energy resources it's also vital that government and industry maintain a balance between economic success and environmental stewardship. We know that they are not mutually exclusive, and we will ensure that sustainable, environmentally responsible development goes hand in hand with the growth of our energy industry.

Budget 2014 allocates about 2 and a half billion per year in operational expense to advance Alberta's world-leading resource stewardship. We're focused on two critical areas: an integrated resource management system and expanded market access for Alberta's products. This funding includes $59 million this year and a total of $208 million over three years for Alberta's contribution to the new Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation and Reporting Agency. It also includes $230 million in 2014-15 for the first full fiscal year of operations for the Alberta Energy Regulator.

Building relationships is also critical to our success in opening new markets for Alberta products. This budget supports these efforts through investments in Alberta's international strategy, funding for agriculture support, and funding to enhance our relationship with and provide economic opportunities for our First Nations and Métis people in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I am excited about the work ahead, and I am very proud to be a part of this government at this time in our history as we present this budget, as we build a stronger Alberta for the future. I can predict with confidence that if we continue down the path we've set, Albertans will have the roads, the schools, and the hospitals they need. If we continue to follow this road around that bend, Alberta's economy will gain even greater rewards from our resources as we expand into new and emerging markets, and if we continue on this path, we will have a diverse economy built on innovation, one that attracts investment from around the world and provides jobs and other opportunities, exciting opportunities, to all who choose Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we are committed to moving Alberta into this future. Budget 2014 will drive the next phase of our building Alberta plan with an even sharper focus on expanding our economy, driving innovation, and working every day to create an even better quality of life for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we will make sure Alberta has the skilled workforce and the training opportunities to keep growing our economy, and we will build an innovative and diversified economy so we are well positioned for the future.

We will balance the budget by challenging every dollar we spend through the results-based budgeting process. We will continue to have surplus, Mr. Speaker, and we will strengthen front-line health care and drive down wait times by establishing more family care clinics. We will build the next phase of new and expanded schools in our fastest growing communities to keep class sizes low and rebuild in communities affected by floods, including undertaking projects to better protect communities from future flood damage.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue making streets safer and focusing on bullying and crime, and we will open new markets for Alberta's resources and products. With Budget 2014 we're preparing for bigger growth. We're preparing for success. Make no mistake: the government has a plan not just for today, not just for tomorrow but for the next generation or two of Albertans. Our commitment to the future is one of the reasons Albertans chose this government, and it's why more people from across Canada and from around the world are choosing to live here. We are the people's choice.

It's both an honour and a privilege to present Budget 2014 to the Assembly today, and I look forward to supporting this budget in this House. May God bless Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

The hon. opposition deputy House leader.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30, March 10, 2014.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:56 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 2nd Session (2014)

Activity to March 06, 2014

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Let us pray.

May the scruples by which we abide be evident in our words and actions, may the disagreements we encounter become tools for amelioration, and may we always be blessed with wisdom to make the right choices on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee. [applause]

The Speaker: We don't normally applaud after the anthem. However, on this occasion we allow it because Mr. Clark, of course, has just signed on to be our regular Monday leader of O Canada. Congratulations and thank you.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day Message from the Queen

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you would all know, today is March 10, and that is Commonwealth Day. I have a message for you and for all Commonwealth nations from Her Majesty the Queen, head of the Commonwealth.

In her own words, Her Majesty says the following.

In July this year, the opening of the 20th Commonwealth Games will be marked by the arrival in Glasgow of the baton that started its journey from Buckingham Palace five months ago.

Many of us are following closely the news of the baton relay as it passes through the 70 countries and territories whose teams will gather for the Games. The images bring vividly to life what we mean by the Commonwealth family: it is wonderful to see the warmth, shared endeavour and goodwill as the baton is passed through the hands of many thousands of people.

Affinities of history and inheritance from the past are strong, yet we are bound together by a sense that the Commonwealth is a powerful influence of good for the future. People of all ages from different cultures are weaving an ever-growing network of links which connect us in our diversity and our common purpose. It is this unity that is expressed in this year's theme: 'Team Commonwealth'.

While national teams will be concentrating on the competition in August, Team Commonwealth will have a longer focus, working together to achieve a more enduring success.

Experiences of life differ widely throughout the Commonwealth, and we each make contributions from sometimes very different viewpoints. But we are committed to the same goals. Together we offer each other encouragement and draw strength from this mutual support.

The understanding that we belong together, and are able, through teamwork, to achieve far more than we could do alone, has always been at the heart of our approach. For all of us this is now captured in the Commonwealth Charter which sets out the values and principles which guide and motivate us.

This year, more children and young people are participating in Commonwealth Day celebrations. Advances in technology enable us to reach a greater number of young people in schools, on-line using the 'Commonwealth Class' initiative, and through events in local communities where the Commonwealth flag is being raised.

I am delighted that in this, the year of 'Team Commonwealth', we will be working to build a brighter, united future in which every one of us can play a part and share in its rewards.

Signed by Her Majesty, our Queen.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Neil Ferrer, the consul general of the Republic of the Philippines; Mrs. Melanie Rita Diano, consul of the Republic of the Philippines; and Mrs. Esmeralda Agbulos, who, of course, is the honorary consul general of the Republic of the Philippines.

Last November the Philippines experienced a devastating typhoon, deeply affecting our friends in the Philippines. This typhoon not only impacted Alberta's Filipino community but all Albertans, and we continue to send our thoughts as communities in the Philippines work to rebuild.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and the Philippines have a long-standing trade, investment, and cultural relationship. In fact, Alberta and the Philippines benefit from close to $90 million of two-way trade annually. We'll continue to work together to strengthen these ties so both of our jurisdictions can thrive today, tomorrow, and in the future.

I would now ask Consul General Ferrer and his delegation to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this Commonwealth Day 2014, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House members of the Royal Commonwealth Society, Edmonton branch. This organization has evolved since its founding in 1868. The Edmonton branch, founded in 2005, is very active in promoting an appreciation of a modern, progressive, and dynamic Commonwealth and the basic principles for which it stands – tolerance, diversity, freedom, justice, democracy, human rights, and sustainable development – to a generation living in an increasingly interconnected world. I had the distinct privilege to be the guest speaker at the society's dinner this past Saturday.

Seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are Joe Zasada, chair; Mr. Alex Tsang, vice-chair; Dr. John Slade, treasurer; Tara Ferris, director of education; Margaret Day, director of membership; and Jennifer Reiz, secretary. I would ask all our guests to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some special members of Alberta's French-speaking community. Alors que notre province souligne le début des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie du 7 au 23 mars, je tiens à vous présenter quelques merveilleux individus qui contribuent à la Francophonie albertaine. Earlier today I along with the hon. Speaker and the Deputy Premier and many of the members here had the opportunity to kick off Rendez-vous, which celebrates French language and culture across Canada.

Se joignant à nous pour cet événement et assis dans nos galeries sont des représentants de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta: M. Jean Johnson, président de l'ACFA, et M. Denis Perreaux, directeur général. Please rise as I say your names.

Also in the gallery are representatives from Canadian Parents for French, the Alberta branch of a pan-Canadian association that aims to promote, support, and enhance French immersion and core French programs. Bienvenue à M. Richard Slevinsky, president of CPF Alberta; Carole Anctil-Michalyszyn, vice-president of CPF national; Victoria Wishart, secretary; Candace Rogers, director from Edmonton; and Michael Tryon, executive director. CPF Alberta has more than 3,500 members and 33 chapters across the province.

Finally, I want to acknowledge some staff members from the Francophone Secretariat: Mme Cindie LeBlanc, executive director of the Francophone Secretariat, and M. Rhéal Poirier, community liaison officer. I wish these individuals des bonnes célébrations and ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Did you also have a school group to introduce, Madam Minister?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Je vous remercie, M. le Président. Il me fait grand plaisir de prendre la parole et de vous présenter, à vous et aux membres de cette Assemblée, 56 élèves des quatrième et sixième années de l'école Holy Cross Académie Internationale, une école d'immersion française située dans ma circonscription. Les étudiants sont ici avec Laura Kunce, Albert Tshakatumba, et Emilia Borruso. Avec Ms Laura Kunce, qui les a accompagné à la guitare, ils nous ont entouré avec leur performance magnifique dans la rotonde dans le cadre des célébrations de la 16e édition des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie et ont chanté O Canada et Je voudrais voir la mer. Mes chers élèves, félicitations pour une performance magnifique et pour vos efforts à maîtriser l'autre langue officielle du Canada. Je voudrais demander aux élèves de se lever pour recevoir l'accueil chaleureux et traditionnel de l'Assemblée.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members a group of 95 students and teachers from Richard Secord elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are seated both in the members' gallery and in the public gallery. These students have just participated in a mock Legislature. Richard Secord is a tremendous school, of which we are very proud, in Edmonton-Rutherford. Accompanying these students are their teachers Mrs. Eaton, Miss Biette, Mr. Girard, Mrs. Chalia, and Mrs. Dempster. I'd ask the students and their teachers and parent helpers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 27 students from St. Angela elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Daniel Jackson. This school is here all week participating in the School at the Leg., so if you see them wandering around, please say hi. Please give them a warm welcome now from the Legislature.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on, then, with the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly several excellent student leaders from the Alberta Students' Executive Council, or ASEC. These young, dedicated leaders will be meeting with several MLAs over the next two weeks to discuss issues affecting postsecondary education in our province. ASEC represents students from most Alberta colleges and technical institutes as well as Athabasca, MacEwan, and Mount Royal universities and Concordia University College of Alberta. We are committed to listening to students and their concerns because postsecondary education plays a significant role in our building Alberta plan, and it's important that students are included when we discuss the future direction of Campus Alberta.

I'd like to introduce to you the following individuals seated in the members' gallery and ask them to stand when I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Carol Neuman, executive director, ASEC; Teresa Currig, stakeholder relations, ASEC; Kenneth Taylor, vice-president external, SAIT Students' Association; Martin Cruz, president, Red Deer College Students' Association; Bethany Tynes, vice-president external, Athabasca University Students' Union; Andrew Koning, students' association president, Concordia University College. They were joined today by Daryn Rainer, vice-president external, NAIT Students' Association. Meagan Strachan, vice-president of academic, NAIT Students' Association couldn't join us this afternoon. They have risen, and I'd ask you to give them our traditional warm welcome and thank them for the work that they do.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly an outstanding Albertan, Dr. David Schindler. Dr. Schindler recently retired after an exemplary career in research and teaching at the University of Alberta of more than 24 years. He's the recipient of 11 honorary doctorate degrees and numerous other academic awards. I'll be honouring him in the House this afternoon with a member's statement. Dr. Schindler is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Velvet Martin. Velvet's daughter Samantha had a rare genetic disorder, and Alberta child services demanded that Samantha be placed in the foster system as the sole means of accessing medical care. Samantha had not been examined by a doctor for three years, got sick, and eventually died of a cardiac arrest. In the courts Velvet fought and won a publication ban of Samantha's circumstances so she could again utter her daughter's name in public. Her advocacy has resulted in Samantha's law. Velvet is a champion for our children who desperately need help and care. I would ask Velvet to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and introduce today Mr. Len Thom, who's a very, very good friend of mine. We can talk politics. We can talk business. We can talk law. We can even talk about the Oilers and hockey and many other sports.

An Hon. Member: Hairstyles.

Mr. Dorward: We talk about hairstyles on occasion. Mr. Len Thom is the president of the PC association of Gold Bar, in my area, and, as I said, a very, very good friend. Mr. Thom, if you could rise please and receive the warm response of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly two members of my family, who are joining us in the public gallery today. The first is my daughter Angela Cardinal, who along with her family are four of the 100,000 people who moved to Alberta in 2013. Angela is a professional engineer practising here in Edmonton, and I'm so proud of her and so pleased that they're much closer to home. She's joined by her father-in-law, Dr. Raynald Cardinal, a chiropractor and a passionate organic farmer. He practises his medical profession both in Quebec and Ontario, and he farms on the border between the two. We have interesting conversations about my Bill 201. This is the first time for both of them watching any proceedings in the Legislature, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have two more introductions. Let's try and squeeze them in.

Edmonton-Calder, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members here today someone who certainly is very well known, at least in my family. He's a writer, he's a traveller, and he's recently moved back here, Stewart McLean, that Stewart MacLean, my cousin who lives in Sherwood Park. I would like him to rise here, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Merci, M. le Président. Je vous présente ma première fille. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my oldest daughter, Candace Rogers. Candace is a product of the French immersion system in this province. She is a graduate of Campus Saint-Jean, and she now serves as head of recruiting. She has been introduced earlier as a member of the board of CPF Alberta. I'm extremely proud of Candace. Candace Rogers, please rise.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Provincial Borrowing

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier once said that it's not debt; it's hope. If that's the case, Budget 2014 is the most hope-filled budget in 20 years. This government will borrow nearly $22 billion by 2016, all but wiping out Alberta's reputation as a leader in fiscal management. Most importantly, Alberta taxpayers will be on the hook for $820 million a year in interest payments alone. That's $820 million that won't be available to hire teachers, to reduce health care wait times, or to look after our seniors. To the Premier: why is she saddling future generations with so much debt?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of groups in the province that understand the financial situation that we're in, and that is that we are in the best financial situation of any jurisdiction in this country. I'll quote the chair of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, himself a chartered accountant.

We see this as being a very solid and forward-looking budget... If we were going to operate solely on a cash basis, we wouldn't be able to manage the increase in population that we see in a year-over-year basis... It's very important that we... borrow to build this infrastructure.

If they were to pay cash, they would cut a billion dollars out of Education, cut a billion dollars out of Health. How are they going to pay for it?

Ms Smith: We'd cut unnecessary travel and other unnecessary expenses.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier also once said, "Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams." Later on she was even more specific. She said: Alberta does not have debt, and we will not incur debt. Those quotes are barely two years old. Now here we are, and this Premier is set to plunge us back into debt levels that we have not seen since the early 1990s. We all remember those dark days. To the Premier: why did she break her promise on debt?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, one of the Premier's promises is that we will build the schools, we will build the hospitals, we will build the roads, we will do the things that you do when you're a growing province. The debt that we are taking on is capital debt. We cannot borrow for operating. We've been very clear with that. There are four rules around that debt. We capped it. This is an argument that they tried to put forward last year. They've lost their deficit argument. Now they're going on this argument.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if they're so impressed with their level of debt, it makes me wonder why it is that they're going to great lengths to hide this debt. They've reworked the entire provincial budget to try to sweep it under the rug and trick Albertans into believing that there is a surplus, which doesn't actually exist. But Albertans are smarter than that. They see through this government's spin, and they know that this budget is not balanced. To the Premier: why does she continue to insult Albertans' intelligence with phony surpluses and hidden debt?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. member wasn't listening to the Budget Address because in the Budget Address I actually made it very clear that we were going to be borrowing for capital projects this year. I also made it very clear that the consolidated surplus of $1.1 billion is calculated in exactly the same way that the federal government does it, that the provincial governments of B.C., Ontario, and all of the other budgets do it. If Minister Flaherty is wrong, then I guess we are wrong, but he's not.

The Speaker: The hon. leader, second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: It's certainly not calculated the way Mr. Dinning used to calculate it back in the 1990s.

Mr. Speaker, this government is now bringing in more revenues than ever before. We are projected to bring in $44.4 billion in Budget 2014. That's $5 billion more than they budgeted last year.

In fact, Alberta now takes in as much revenue as British Columbia despite having half a million fewer people, but apparently that's just not enough for this government. Despite having record revenues, this government still can't balance the budget or stay out of debt. To the Premier: why do we need to borrow billions when we have way more money than we ever had before?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that B.C. is losing people. We are gaining people. We are growing. We will be the third-most populous province in this country in no short order. Here's the CIBC's analysis of it.

In general, direct borrowing has triggered an increase in provincial liabilities.

That's true.

However, Alberta has implemented a prudent debt management framework, including a cap on borrowing, the setting aside of revenue for associated interest costs and the establishment of debt repayment funds to fully cover future capital-related maturities. Moreover, with large and growing financial assets, Alberta remains the sole province without any net debt – a unique financial . . .

Ms Smith: Imagine that, a bank encouraging someone to borrow more money.

Mr. Speaker, this government's spin isn't fooling anybody. No matter how many fancy tricks this government tries to pull on the budget, Albertans know at the end of the day that there are only two columns that matter: total money coming in and total money going out. Of course, this government has done all it can to make it impossible to calculate those two columns, and it's obvious why. So tell us again, Premier: how can we have a budget surplus when the money going out is at least $2.7 billion more than the money coming in?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the first quote that I read to you was not from a bank; it was from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, who are the business owners across this province and actually know how to create economic wealth.

The second thing I'm going to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal government suggests that they have a $2.9 billion deficit. They are borrowing $95 billion this year. Is the hon. member across the way suggesting that the federal government is lying about the deficit situation that they are in today? I think not.

The other thing that I would tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that there are people in this province who are looking for their new school. There are people in this province who are looking for the road being fixed. That's what this budget does.

Ms Smith: There are people in this province that are looking for a single, consolidated set of books, Mr. Speaker.

Let's make this simple. Since the Finance minister likes his household analogy, say a family brings in $4,300 a month. They stick to their budget, spending $4,000 on things like rent and car and groceries, leaving them a modest $300 surplus. But instead of banking it, they go out and buy a car and a computer and new furniture, all on their credit card, increasing their payments by $600 a month. So now they've got $4,300 coming in, $4,600 going out. Here's a trick question for the Finance minister: is that family budget balanced?

Mr. Horner: Absolutely not, because they are . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I'm glad they finally figured it out, because not included in her $4,300 budget was the price of their house. They didn't pay for it all in one month. They made the payment. That's how they balance the budget.

It's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that that party opposite won't even tell Albertans how they plan to pay for their capital plan. I find it interesting that they actually separated their capital plan from their operating plan in their alternative budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: It's a 10-year, debt-free, $50 billion capital plan within a single, consolidated budget.

Provincial Budget

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're not the only ones baffled by the government's fiscal incompetence. Mayor Don Iveson and Mayor Nenshi were disappointed to learn that Budget 2014 contained no money for improving the cities' LRT networks despite promises to the contrary. Paraphrasing one commentator on Twitter: record revenues, record debt, and no LRT; what gives? To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that we have record revenue and we are spending more money than ever before, what is he telling mayors Iveson and Nenshi? What gives?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I'm pleased to report that I have a very constructive, engaged relationship with the two mayors of the large cities. We've talked about a lot of different topics, including how we ensure that these world-class cities are funded appropriately for what we are asking them to do.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. You didn't have to check Twitter.

Mr. Hughes: We didn't have to check Twitter.

Ms Smith: This government should stop making promises they cannot keep. The Deputy Premier is in charge of negotiations with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Now, that's a tough job at the best of times. I can imagine that that job didn't become any easier when the Premier's own budget got a juicy 10 per cent increase in Budget 2014, to say nothing of the Premier's well-documented personal travel preferences. To the Deputy Premier: does he think the Premier's personal pampering of herself will help him or hurt him in his efforts to convince the public-sector unions to take less?

The Speaker: Just be careful with questions that solicit opinion. That one does.

Mr. Hancock: Well, not only is it soliciting an opinion, it is making an egregious comment that's entirely untoward and entirely uncalled for. The real question is: do Albertans want to get timely, quality, accurate information from their government? The answer is yes. In order to do that, do we need to have people who will receive those letters, receive those comments, and respond to them with accurate information? Yes. That's why the Premier's office and the Premier need the ability to communicate with the public.

Also, Mr. Speaker, people want to come to this province. We go out to sell Alberta across the world, to tell the world about Alberta, but we also want people to come to Alberta to see what we have here, to see what's happening in the oil sands. That costs money, and Albertans want . . .

Ms Smith: Well, that's certainly not what I'm hearing, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Education must at least take some comfort in this budget because the fuzzy math curriculum that he's pushing to Alberta's classrooms appears to have made it to the cabinet table. There's no other way to explain how a deficit can become a surplus if not for a stunning lack of basic math skills. To the Education minister: does he support his government's new-math budget, or is this the kind of faulty addition and subtraction that they are going to be teaching to our children?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely support this budget because it's putting classrooms out there for students. You know, it's interesting that when we're in here, we get questioned about the capital – they don't want the schools; they don't want them borrowed – yet when we're out in the constituency, the only question we get is: where do we stand for the sod-turning, and where do we stand for the photo op? On the front page of the Airdrie Echo you'll note last year the Member for Airdrie was there turning sod on a government building, a P3 financed school. I guess it's okay to borrow capital, borrow funds for schools as long as it's in their constituency.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's go on to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Premier's Office Budget

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier refused to pay back the $45,000 she wasted on her South Africa trip. Now we learn that in Budget 2014 spending in the Premier's office is up $1.2 million, nearly a 10 per cent increase for the imperial court. Meanwhile this government slashes the child health benefit by 6 per cent and the seniors' drug plan by a whopping 25 per cent. To the Premier: why is your office budget so much more important than Alberta's seniors and children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, by phrasing the question in that way, the hon. member is obviously misunderstanding entirely what's happening with the Seniors budget and the other budgets. I can tell him what I told the Leader of the Opposition. Albertans contact this government. They want to tell us what they're thinking. They want responses, and they want them on a timely basis. We make no apologies for giving Albertans timely, accurate information about what's actually happening in this province. The Premier's office and the Premier want to have others come from around the world to see what's happening in Alberta because they make investments in Alberta, they come and work in Alberta, and they buy our products. It's important to be able to host them . . .

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's no wonder we're going into debt. They don't know how to do math. A cut is a cut, and a $1.2 million increase in the budget is an increase.

According to the imperial court itself $400,000 of this increase is for hosting expenses. Assuming our famously well-travelled Premier were to stick around from Monday to Friday every week, she would still be spending $1,500 a day on entertaining, all this while taking a let them eat cake approach to our children, our seniors, and public-sector servants. To the Premier: just how much champagne, caviar, and foie gras do you and your inner circle need?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes light of what's a very important piece of public work. It's not champagne and caviar. It's about bringing the world to Alberta to see what we have here. It's about making sure that people from the United States understand what the oil sands looks like, understand what happens in Alberta and are prepared to invest here, to work here, to come here, to travel and to spend their money here, sometimes to relocate here, but also to buy our products. It's not just about going out and selling to the world. It's also about having the world come to Alberta. [interjections] That's not champagne and caviar. It's good public work.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, advice to this government: investing in our children, treating our seniors with dignity and respect, and investing in front-line public servants is the best investment we can make as a society.

Of the $1.2 million increase to the Premier's $11.6 million budget $300,000 will be spent on scribes tasked with replying to what must surely be a mountain of incoming correspondence. [interjections] To the Premier: if you are getting so many angry letters about Travelgate, wouldn't it be more cost-effective just to pay back the 45,000 bucks instead of wasting another 300 grand?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it may well be possible that that hon. member can answer all his letters on a Friday afternoon within an hour, but I can tell you from experience in this government that Albertans contact their government on a daily basis. They want information. They want accurate and quality information. They want to give the government their ideas about how we should do things, and we want to hear them and listen to them, and we want to respond to them. [interjections] There is nothing improper with that. That's actually how government works. The hon. member ought to know that because he did have a short mentorship in that area, but he's obviously forgotten what he learned.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's getting increasingly more difficult to hear the questions and to hear the answers. When you hear your own colleagues having to shout their questions out and you hear colleagues on this side having to shout their answers out, clearly the noise level has escalated beyond what it should be. Let's try and keep it down, shall we?

To demonstrate how we do that, let's go to Edmonton-Calder.

Misericordia Community Hospital

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is leaving the front-line staff to prop up the Misericordia hospital in Edmonton while the facility crumbles around them. Last month the CBC released photographs showing the building hardly fit for habitation, let alone hospital work. Staff complain about the intensive care unit. Meant to be there for only two more years, it's still in use after 13 years. To the Minister of Health: why is there no immediate action for the Misericordia hospital in this year's budget?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is immediate action for the Misericordia hospital. As I'm sure all members in this House know, particularly those from the capital region, the Misericordia is one of our oldest and one of the proudest hospitals that we have in the city. A total of $19 million has already been allocated for critical infrastructure repair at the Misericordia. I've asked Alberta

Health Services to work with Covenant Health to identify what other resources may be needed in the next five years.

Mr. Eggen: This budget: you needed to use it as a starting point, to start building a new hospital at the Misericordia. The patients and their families know how bad the hospital is. They see it every day. Staff working in the ICU certainly know how bad it is. Why is this government subjecting Albertans to dangerous and unhealthy conditions at the Misericordia hospital in Edmonton?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that last statement is patently untrue and completely irresponsible. The care that is provided at the Misericordia hospital is safe care. It's of high quality. It's comparable to any other hospital in this province.

We know and the hon. member as an MLA in this city should know that the city of Edmonton is going to need additional hospital capacity in the very near future. We're working on that. I'm working on that with the Minister of Infrastructure. In the meantime we are flowing very significant funds to Covenant Health to keep the facility running and in good repair.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, the physical structure of this hospital requires immediate attention. By any measure of logic or science or health this facility does not make the grade. Will the minister please tell us what motivates this government to ignore the sad state of this Edmonton hospital? Is it politics? Money? Denial? Why don't you just fix the hospital?

Mr. Horne: We are fixing the hospital instead of spending our time, as the hon. member is doing, attempting to scare patients and staff and bring the facility into disrepute. Mr. Speaker, $19.2 million as a contribution to critical infrastructure repair is a very significant contribution. There are other facilities across the province that also have needs. We're working to address all of those. Edmonton will see a new hospital in the very near future. As I said, I'm working with the Minister of Infrastructure on that very issue right now.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The first five spots have now gone by, which means no more preambles, please, to supplementals, starting with Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Highway 63 Safety

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just over a year ago the government accepted recommendation 12 from my report entitled Towards a Safer 63, which called for dedicated RCMP and sheriff traffic enforcement as well as aerial enforcement. This increased presence has succeeded in increasing the number of charges laid, and I've heard comments from my constituents that there's been a noticeable improvement in driver behaviour. But I do hear that regardless of these efforts, the worst offenders are now commercial traffic, and many have not changed their dangerous driving habits. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: given the higher percentage of commercial traffic on highway 63, what percentage of fatal accidents involve commercial vehicles and what percentage of tickets . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The data for 2013 is not available yet, but for 2012 3.6 per cent of casualty collisions in Alberta involved commercial vehicles, down 1.4 per cent from the year before. Again, the commercial vehicle inspectors work very hard to look at defects involving commercial vehicles. The vast majority of the commercial vehicle accidents, though, involve actual driver error or speed and not defects to the commercial vehicles.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that there's a significant volume of wide-load and commercial traffic on highway 63, what is the ratio of commercial vehicle enforcement to civilian enforcement?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, that isn't available for 2013. The member is quite correct in that we do work very hard, specifically with the report that he authored, and we will continue to do so, particularly as we move forward to twin highway 63, which is something being done by the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Allen: Again to the same minister: what measures have you taken to discourage traffic offences by commercial vehicles on highway 63 as well as on all of Alberta's highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Officers with the integrated traffic units in the commercial vehicle enforcement branch regularly patrol highway 63 and often include many checkstops. We are dedicated to making highway 63 safer as well as all highways throughout the four corners of Alberta.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the serious allegations of electricity price manipulation in Alberta the opposition has tried twice now to get a straight answer from this government on its policy dealing with companies that withhold electricity from the market in order to raise the price of electricity. So we need to try one more time. To the minister: is it the policy of this government to allow companies to withhold electricity from the market in order to raise prices?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is so tempting for me to go down this rabbit hole with this member and dig into these questions being looked at by the AUC, but we both know that to do so would put the AUC's independent considerations of these allegations at risk, and I just won't do it.

Mr. Anglin: It's got nothing to do with the allegations.

Given that Albertans have a right to a straight answer and given that the market needs clarity, again to the minister: is it permissible in Alberta's electricity market to withhold electricity from the market to raise the price of electricity? Yes or no?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, I would say that it would be very clear to this particular member, who is very familiar with this system, that the values of the system – fairness, efficiency, open competition – remain as true today as the day this legislation was drafted. They're essential values that ensure the integrity of this system and protect consumers, residential and small businesses. That should be the priority of all of us, including this member.

Mr. Anglin: Well, let's talk about integrity of the system. Given that a straight answer could save Albertans millions of dollars in lengthy hearing costs and given that electricity companies deserve clarification, again to the minister: is it legal for a company to withhold electricity from the market in an effort to raise the price of electricity? Yes or no?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, this member knows that this place is not where this issue is going to be adjudicated. [interjections] This member seems to be the only person suggesting that the AUC is not the right venue for this issue to be reviewed. I'd also like to point out that this member has from time to time commented very positively on the AUC's capacity to look at these kinds of issues. So I'm alarmed at his lack of consistency here. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's Commonwealth Day. Let's be nice, please.

Let's go on to Calgary-Bow, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Workforce Planning

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. New numbers show that Alberta's unemployment rate is 4.3 per cent. Now, while we can all be excited that Albertans have jobs, this is also a challenge. Are we essentially at full employment, and are shortages just around the corner?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy in a sense to report that our official rate of unemployment is 4.3 per cent, which most economists in most places in the world would argue is full, frictional employment. The federal government has just recently credited us for creating in the province of Alberta 80 per cent of all jobs created in Canada last year.

But that, Mr. Speaker, even as it is great news, also brings its own difficulties. Even though we have full employment, there are still Albertans that are marginalized or may not have the skills required to fill some of these jobs, and that is something that we will continue to work on not only as a province but also with the federal government.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. This supplemental is to the Minister of Finance. The budget is based on the building Alberta plan and assumptions of future economic growth. What risks do job numbers like this pose to this growth?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the very high risks within the economy of Alberta. In fact, today I spoke to the Chambers of Commerce, who, by the way, gave us a qualified balance sheet description of the surplus, so the accountants know what's going on. It is one of the things that the chamber is concerned about. In fact, the chambers in Calgary and Edmonton and the Alberta chambers have all said to us that one of the things we need to do is to attract more people to our province, train more people. That's what Bill 1 is all about. We need to talk to the federal government about getting more people to come into our province, because even with 105,000 people we actually lowered our unemployment rate.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Back to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: what are you doing to ensure that we are dealing with the economic threat of skills shortages?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working with our postsecondary education system, making sure that the students who graduate from schools have the skills required to fill the jobs. We're working with our marginalized groups – our aboriginal community, persons with disabilities, and often women who find it difficult to get back to work – though groups like Women Building Futures. Also, yes, temporary foreign workers are important. However, I have to tell you that I am much more inclined to be supportive of permanent foreign workers as opposed to temporary foreign workers.

Mr. McAllister: I know it's Commonwealth Day, but surely we can do a little better than that, Mr. Speaker.

School Construction

Mr. McAllister: We've been asking the Minister of Education about his New Age, wishy-washy math curriculum a lot lately. A careful reading of the budget, though, suggests that his issues with math might be more serious than we first thought. You see, this government promised to build 50 schools and renovate 70 more this term. They claim that it will cost $2 billion, but when you add up the money committed to these schools in the budget, it comes to just over half of that. Is the Education minister aware that his school promises don't add up for Albertans, or is this some sort of New Age mathematics?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: I'm actually grateful for a good question today. Thank you. The fact is that the budget talks about – in fact, we did a release that said that the schools will cost in the neighbourhood of $2 billion. There's $1.2 billion in the budget. The reason is that we haven't put the contracts out, we haven't put the tenders out, we haven't even decided yet whether they're P3s or otherwise. A P3 can actually be paid out over as much as 30 years. So I'll just ask the hon. member to consider that, and as the contracts and the tenders go out, we will have those numbers, and the questions will be answered then.

Mr. McAllister: So many unanswered questions. It's like we're watching a soap opera in here with this government.

Given that the minister has made 50 announcements, planted 50 signs, done 50 photo ops and given that according to his own numbers he won't be delivering the 50 new schools that he promised on time, I would ask the minister: will he come clean with Albertans, and will he let us know which communities will not be getting their previously promised schools?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, under this Premier, with this government the building Alberta plan has promised 50 new and 70 renovated schools, and that's what we'll do. But I would also ask the hon. member: his members on that side have talked about how important it is to have an infrastructure list on their website. We certainly have one on ours. He hasn't got a single school listed on their website despite the fact that they come in this House all the time and protest and pound the table that they should be on there. They haven't promised any. This government is actually building them.

Mr. McAllister: Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the fearmongering by this side is as tired and old as the government itself.

Given that this government is relying on P3s to build more than half of their new schools, given that they're getting little to no interest from contractors on this, will the Infrastructure minister change course, switch to the manageable and competitive design-and-build contracts, which the Wildrose has been lobbying for all along, so that we can finally do the right thing for Alberta and get some shovels into the ground?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member doesn't know whether it's Monday or Friday. He's talking out of both sides of his mouth. The fact is that we will make the decision. We will announce it. But I'm sad to see them against P3s when they've saved the taxpayers in this province over $2 billion, when they've delivered projects on time and on budget, when they've given good quality infrastructure that Albertans can enjoy for years and years and years. Eighty-six thousand Albertan kids will enjoy the new and improved seats from the plan we have coming forward. That's what this government is doing with the building Alberta plan.

Mr. Hehr: Well, let me build on those questions. One of the key promises made by the Premier was that her government would build 50 new schools by 2016. Two years into this mandate not a single hole has been dug, no cement poured, nary a nail pounded. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it takes three years to physically build a school. Clearly and in no uncertain terms, this government will fail to complete even one of these promised schools, much less 50. So to the Minister of Infrastructure: will you please come clean with the Alberta public and admit that these 50 new schools will not be complete by 2016?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's concern, but I would ask him to look at a little bit more information. I took the time on Friday last week to go through a school in Airdrie that's under construction. It's almost finished, in another couple of months. [interjections] The fact is that after about 16 months the school is almost complete. [interjections]

The Speaker: You know, I would have thought that constructing schools would be a very serious question requiring a serious answer. We've had one. Let's wait for the other one here. These interjections have to stop, folks, please. Let's show some respect for each other.

Hon. Minister, would you like to start over?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just finish my thought.

The fact is that there are examples right now of schools built in well under two years. That's what we're challenged to do. There's no doubt that it's a challenge, but, Mr. Speaker, the Premier and this government promised under the building Alberta plan to get those schools done, and we are working feverishly to do so.

Mr. Hehr: Well, the answer given by the Minister of Infrastructure is simply laughable. Given that this government's own documents show an $800 million shortfall in funding these new schools, how is the minister going to pay the construction workers to build these schools? With IOUs?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to reanswer the question I answered two or three questions ago, because the hon. member clearly needs to hear it twice to get it through whatever it has to get through. The fact is that the 50 and 70 schools are in the plan. When we do the contracts, we will work out, decide whether they're P3s or otherwise. We will get the schools built. As those contracts get firmed up, whether we decide on P3s, which could be paid out over 30 years – or as the Wildrose suggests, they could be quicker under the other plan. As we do that, we will update the numbers. Today the numbers are not . . .

The Speaker: Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Hehr: No, no.

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. One more supplemental. My apologies.

Mr. Hehr: Now, Mr. Speaker, given that it takes three years to build the new schools – that would take us to 2017 if the government started building them today – and given that even a kindergarten student knows that it takes money to build schools and given that this government doesn't have any, will the minister just admit that these schools will not be built by 2016? It's a pretty easy answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll repeat again: under the building Alberta plan we've promised to do it. It's in our business plan. It's in our budget. We'll get it done.

But I'll actually give this hon. member credit for one thing, Mr. Speaker. He's quite forward and public about saying that he wants to raise taxes to build the infrastructure. Under this Premier and this government we're going to do it without raising taxes because that's what Albertans want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Child Poverty Reduction Strategy

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, continuing on our theme of broken promises, the Premier claimed she would eliminate child poverty in five years. Now we've got the budget for three of those five years, and instead of concrete commitments we see more cuts and growing inequality. To the Minister of Human Services: almost 20 per cent of young children in Alberta live in oppressive poverty. Why doesn't he understand that the longer he waits to act, the more they will suffer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're going to be moving forth with creating a child poverty strategy, that will help us to ensure that all Albertans have access to all the opportunities that we know 82,000 new Albertans had last year, because Alberta produced 82,000 new jobs last year. Economic development and prosperity is one of the best ways to help people reach out from poverty, and we have a solid track record of that.

Ms Notley: More empty words.

Given that this year's budget contains massive cuts to services that lift families out of poverty such as income support for learners, adult upgrading, and training for work and given that you can't end child poverty without ending poverty for the families with whom those children live, can the minister explain how he thinks any Albertan will believe this government's claims when they have chosen to cut proven poverty-reduction mechanisms by up to 50 per cent? Shame.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the member would be well advised to know that the reason why there appears to be a decrease in that part of the budget is because we're working on a new agreement with the federal government on the jobs grant. As soon as that agreement is signed, that money is there, that training is there, and more Albertans get more opportunities. This is the best place to be to reach out from poverty and achieve great economic success.

Ms Notley: Well, it's not there now.

Given that this government has received countless antipoverty reports from researchers, advocates, community agencies, and municipalities in the last five years and given that all of those reports say that neither income support nor the minimum wage are anywhere near adequate to provide for the families of the 90,000 Alberta children living in poverty, why won't this minister admit that this do-nothing provincial budget and its recipe for continued government inaction put responsibility for that child poverty directly at this government's feet?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, there are a variety of different tools that we are using to help Albertans that require support, whether it be the 25,000 Alberta children that receive subsidized daycare, whether it be the countless Albertans that receive income supports, the thousands of Albertans that receive training supports. The fact is that this is the place that has the lowest taxes of all the jurisdictions in this great country of Canada and pumps out 87 per cent of the new jobs in Canada. Alberta is growth and opportunity, and everybody shall see it.

Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, in the real world people who mismanage assets are fired, but in this PC government these people are promoted. The budget included $1.8 billion for the southwest leg of the Calgary ring road, but when asked for a total cost, the Transportation minister was flippant, saying, quote, it will be less than $10 billion and more than $1.8 billion. How's that? Unquote. To the minister: do you have any idea what this project is going to cost? Two billion? Five billion? Ten billion? Twenty billion?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I remember doing that article with the journalist, and the journalist was trying to pin me down to say a number that we don't have yet, so I wasn't going to. That ring road won't be finished for seven or eight years. We don't know if it'll be a P3. We don't know all the land costs yet. So I don't have the exact answer to that question. Unlike those opposite, I don't say facts that I don't know.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The government members can thump their desks all they want, but does this government still believe that projects like the $400 million federal building, renovated for PC MLAs, are a greater need than 20 schools that could have been built instead, are more important than 20 schools?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, on the federal building it's kind of interesting to hear the member from that party talking. Apparently, they think it's important because they're going to be in it. [interjections] It's important enough to them that they actually asked for a change order the other day, that would slow it down, add additional costs. [interjections] They can't decide whether it's important or not. This government, however, is building Alberta and putting in place . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: You know, there are times like this where you're just not sure what to do, right? So I'll tell you what I'm going to do. I'm going to take away your last supplemental right now because there was considerably too much heckling going on over here. There was too much heckling going on over here. And then – guess what? – we had too much heckling going on over here, too, so I'm going to come back and penalize someone on this side when your turn comes as well. That will hopefully show you that I'm serious about having some order and decorum here in the House.

Mr. Anderson: Point of clarification.

The Speaker: Please have a seat, hon. member, okay? I'm taking away your supplemental, and I'll be taking one away here as well, all right? You'll address me at the end of question period.

Let's move on. Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Native Grassland Conservation

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The South Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council, or RAC, comprised of a broad-based group of 18 stakeholders, met over 18 months and made recommendations to the South Saskatchewan regional plan. The RAC detailed the need to protect grasslands conservation areas which are critical to grassland habitat in southern Alberta. They are the Wild Horse plains, the Twin River heritage rangeland extension, the South Saskatchewan River corridor, and the Bow River-Majorville upland corridor. This protection would have allowed continued use of grazing and resource extraction while preserving the natural areas. My questions are for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Why does the South Saskatchewan regional plan not . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We consulted with Albertans, and the advice we received from the regional advisory council on this is a very important issue. During those consultations Albertans in the regions, including those in the grazing and ranching community, told us they did not support the development of conservation management areas for grasslands. This is due in large part to the good grazing practices of landowners and ranchers in this area, which have resulted in significant intact grasslands. Those well-managed cattle grazing and traditional practices of long-term grazing contribute greatly to the ecological health of this continent's finest remaining native grasslands.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: will your ministry remedy this oversight and take steps to protect the vital publicly owned grasslands in these specific areas mentioned by the RAC and in southern Alberta in general?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the member for his continued advocacy of this situation. However, we are indeed taking steps to protect grasslands under the regional plan for southern Alberta. We know that grasslands have a high ecological value for biodiversity and watershed protection, and we are committed to maintaining intact native grasslands as a high priority under the regional plan. We will implement footprint management strategies and integrate other initiatives like conservation offsets and species-at-risk conservation programs. As well, we will work to minimize the conversion of grasslands to other uses. These are significant actions under the regional plan to help us conserve this vitally important southern Alberta landscape.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to have to take away your second supplemental, but I'm taking one away from this side as I did from this side to be fair so that you will all know that I'm serious. Have a seat, please.

Let's go on. Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Stony Plain.

Travel Alberta Executive Expenses

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have seen PC ministers flying their family to the Olympics and a Premier who wastes money on flights, so it's no surprise that the CEO of Travel Alberta, who makes $240,000 in salary plus $150,000 in benefits, saw fit to bill taxpayers for a $150 tuxedo rental as a hospitality expense. Will the minister ask the CEO to pay back this claim?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. You know, I just recently returned from the world's largest tourism and conference centre in Berlin, and while there we, including the CEO of Travel Alberta, met with a variety of officials from around the world in promoting Alberta as a tourism destination, promoting the 139,000 jobs, the 19,000 businesses, and the $7.8 billion tourism industry.

These guys want our CEO to show up in suspenders and blue jeans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. First sup.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll table the picture of the tuxedo on the CEO after question period.

Given that the Travel Alberta CEO expensed an $830 meal at a very high-end restaurant in Banff, which the CEO then tweeted that eating there was, and I quote, one more check on the bucket list, does the minister not recognize that this is an open and blatant abuse of taxpayers' dollars?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I will say it again. Travel Alberta, which during the course of the conference in Berlin won its 47th international award for trade and marketing, for an organization that only turns five years old on April 1, has done an outstanding job of promoting Alberta as a tourism destination throughout the world. In fact, we were told throughout our time in Berlin that Alberta remains on everybody's tourism bucket list, and that's the bucket list that we're really concerned about.

Mr. Strankman: Will it be your bucket list or theirs?

Given that taxpayers shouldn't be subsidizing the luxuries of government officials and given that taxpayers will be distressed to learn that Travel Alberta's CEO took an $8,800 first-class flight to Singapore this past June just to have one dinner meeting with one applicant for a job, will the minister of tourism call on the Auditor General to get to the bottom of what's happening in Travel Alberta? This culture of entitlement has . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, in point of fact, the Auditor General reviews Travel Alberta along with all of the agencies within Tourism, Parks and Recreation on an annual basis. I'm proud to know and I'm proud to state that we have not had any negative recommendations. It comes up at Public Accounts this Wednesday, and they'll have every opportunity to ask those questions.

Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that our tourism levy grows, and our tourism business grows. If it was up to those people over there, our brand would not be Remember to Breathe; it would be Just Try Not to Choke. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Some people don't think I'm serious. I'm very serious. I will take away more questions. I have the right to do that if I need to maintain law, order, and discipline in this Assembly, and that's what I'm going to do. So make no mistake about it. I warned you last week. I'll be clarifying it for Airdrie, I'm sure, at the end of question period if he asks. I'm just telling you again.

Please. I can appreciate that when somebody stands up, you want to pound your desks and give them a little moral support. When you hear a really good question or a really tough one or a really good answer, I can appreciate that you want to bang your desks and cheer them on a little bit then. I'm prepared to go along with that but not during the question itself and certainly not during the answer itself, please. It's rude; it's disrespectful.

You all saw the letter I sent you from one school. I could send you more from other schools who have now said that they're not even bringing their students here for question period anymore. How do you like that? That just happened last fall.

Let's go on. Stony Plain, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Services for Seniors

Mr. Lemke: Thank you. Every day 60 Albertans reach the age of 65. It is projected that by 2031, Mr. Speaker, 1 in 5 Albertans will be a senior. On a daily basis I hear my constituents voice their concerns over the waiting lists that they are put on and the costs of living in these facilities. To the Associate Minister – Seniors: how are you building Alberta for the people that have worked their entire lives contributing to this province?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the Member for Stony Plain for the question. I know he's a strong advocate for the seniors in his constituency and for all of his constituents.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize the enormous contribution that our seniors make, and we remain committed to building an Alberta that meets their needs. Since 2010 we've undertaken an unprecedented expansion in continuing care. There have been 3,000 continuing care spaces built in this province, and another 2,000 are going to be built in the next two years. We're on target to deliver it. That's a 15 per cent increase since 2010. So there are many spaces coming for seniors and many great things to come.

Mr. Lemke: To the same minister: how do you plan on addressing the wait times that plague the seniors of Stony Plain?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we want to see that our seniors have timely access to continuing care services and supports no matter where they happen to live in the province. In Stony Plain there are 236 publicly funded continuing care spaces.

In addition to these spaces, one of the most effective ways we can reduce wait times is by providing more home care to people in the community. Since 2010 we have increased our investment in home care by more than $100 million, or 24 per cent. Last year we invested more than half a billion dollars to help more than 108,000 Albertans get the care that they need staying in their own home.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What exactly are you doing to ensure that the new spaces are affordable and feasible for the seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Quest: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. We're committed to providing publicly funded health care that's accessible to all Albertans regardless of their ability to pay, and that includes access to continuing care in our province. That's not going to change. As I mentioned, we've added thousands of spaces and we're adding thousands more for seniors that cannot meet their costs or are eligible for the Alberta seniors' benefit, which is somewhat unusual in Canada, and have provided more than $320 million in assistance to these seniors last year alone. That includes supplementing benefits to ensure a minimum monthly disposable income.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mobile Dialysis Service

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Minister of Health is a complete and utter disaster. Lac La Biche was promised a dialysis bus. Then it was delayed. Then we finally got a dialysis bus, but there was no staff to run it. Then the bus broke down. It might actually be funny if it wasn't a matter of life and death. Now the bus just sits in front of the hospital. This leaves me wondering: why aren't the dialysis units being permanently moved from the bus into the hospital?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of communities across the province that are served by mobile dialysis service. What this has done is that it's allowed us to extend dialysis services to communities that do not have sufficient capacity within their hospital, whether it's a question of space or staff, in order to run a full-time dialysis unit. We'll be continuing to do this as we move into the future. The hon. member's constituency has obviously benefited from that service. Home dialysis is where we are headed in the future, and that will allow us to expand additional capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are other communities such as Athabasca that could use a dialysis bus, why doesn't the government simply move the dialysis units from the bus into the Lac La Biche hospital to free up the bus so it could be used elsewhere like Athabasca?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it's wonderful that the hon. member wants to advocate for a dialysis unit in his hospital. I'm sure that my colleague the Minister of Education and others in this House would also like to see that be a possibility. Unfortunately, we aren't able to put in place fixed dialysis units in every hospital in the province. Instead, what we've done is that we've made the most of the mobile resources that we have, including staff, many of whom today are LPNs who have been specially trained to run dialysis equipment, who are going across the province delivering this much-needed service to people who require it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that northern Albertans who require dialysis must travel up to four hours each way to receive treatment and they don't have access to a government plane, doesn't the minister care that many people are being forced to move away from their homes, communities, and loved ones?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really difficult to understand whether this member is making a case to eliminate mobile dialysis services in the province, just trying to make a case for the hospital in his own constituency, or whether there's any glimmer of hope that he might be considering the needs of the province as a whole. Dialysis and kidney disease are a growing issue in our health care system as they are across the country. We'll continue to use mobile services to extend the dialysis capacity that we do have. I am very cognizant of the travelling that some Albertans are doing. We will be moving, as will most of the other parts of the country, to home dialysis in the future for patients for whom it is appropriate.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. The time for question period has been consumed.

We have one point of clarification at 2:36 from Airdrie, which will be dealt with in the usual spot just before Orders of the Day.

In the meantime we'll move on with hon. members making their members' statements. In 30 seconds the Clerk will call for it, and we'll start with Calgary-Glenmore.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Airdrie.

Pipeline Development

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to update you and the House on the important work that continues to open new markets for our province's resources. What I'm referring to is the ongoing work on new and existing pipelines. Shipping oil by pipeline is currently the safest method of transporting large volumes over large distances, and shipping it through an existing pipeline helps to minimize the environmental impact.

Last week TransCanada began the process for a west-east crude oil pipeline known as Energy East. The company filed a project description with the National Energy Board and is expected to proceed with a regulatory application in a few months. Energy East is a $12 billion project that provides thousands of jobs across Canada. It will have the capacity to move 1.1 million barrels of oil per day to Quebec and New Brunswick.

Also, the National Energy Board has approved line 9B. Reversing line 9B has widespread benefits. It gives producers an opportunity to get Alberta oil to new markets and for eastern refineries to reduce or eliminate their dependency on higher priced foreign oil.

Our government also made our national interest determination submission to the U.S. State Department for the Keystone XL project. The submission outlined Alberta's strong regulatory framework and proven track record in developing some of the world's most progressive environmental initiatives.

We are delivering on our government's promise to continue to advocate for important projects which support our long-term prosperity. We have been clear that opening new markets is job one for our government as it will ensure fairer prices for the resources every Albertan owns, allowing us to invest in building a stronger, more secure Alberta. As part of the building Alberta plan we continue to build new markets for our products and services so we can keep investing in what matters.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. Anderson: Budget 2014 adds over $5 billion in debt this year and brings Alberta's total debt to over $21 billion by 2016. The Finance minister compares debt financing for infrastructure to a home mortgage. This is a poor comparison. A home mortgage is secured by an appreciating asset worth more than the amount of the loan, and it's easy to sell. In contrast, government assets depreciate, are worth less than what they cost to build, and they are difficult to sell even if you would ever want to.

The minister also says that because interest rates are currently low, now is the time to borrow. Interest rates are indeed low, for now, but these debts will need to be regularly refinanced, and as our debt load increases, so will the available interest rate and with it billions in new annual interest charges. Have we forgotten the consequences of sustained debt financing in Europe, the U.S., and Ontario? Interest rates won't always be low, Alberta won't always enjoy record revenues, and when those realities manifest themselves, we and our children will pay a heavy price.

The minister states that folks moving to Alberta aren't bringing their roads and schools with them; thus, we must borrow to build. First off, new Albertans don't bring roads with them – that is true – but they do bring their taxes. Population growth is not a drain on our finances. It pads our bottom line. Secondly, if we must borrow for projects now to cope with high growth, what's going to change in the future so we don't have to borrow? Forecasts predict high population growth for decades. Those folks will all need schools and roads, too. If we can't build what we need today without going into debt even with record revenues, when will we ever be able to do so, and when our economy and growth rates slow, how are we going to pay the interest charges on the debt incurred during the high-growth years?

Colleagues, it's never too late to do the right thing. Let us leave our children with a legacy free from the burden of debt. We owe them nothing less.

Dr. David Schindler

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a fellow biologist, Dr. David Schindler. Dr. Schindler recently retired as professor at the University of Alberta after 24 years of service. He's become known as a pre-eminent leader in his field of limnology, the study of freshwater ecosystems. Dr. Schindler began his career at Trent University, where I also taught, and from 1968 to 1989 he served with the federal fisheries department, where he was founding director of the experimental lakes area in Ontario. Dr. Schindler joined the faculty at the University of Alberta as the Killam Memorial chair and professor of ecology in 1989.

Among Dr. Schindler's many career accomplishments was his early work on eutrophication of freshwater lakes induced by the introduction of phosphates, principally from household detergents; on acidification of freshwater lakes by air pollutants; and on long-term effects of climate change on freshwater ecosystems. Later together with his scientific colleagues he made contributions to knowledge about the effects of the oil sands industry on contamination of the Athabasca River watershed.

Among his many honours and awards Dr. Schindler is an officer of the Order of Canada and the Alberta Order of Excellence. He was the recipient of a Rhodes scholarship, the Gerhard Herzberg gold medal, the first Stockholm water prize, the Volvo environmental prize, and the Tyler prize for environmental achievement. He's also the recipient of no less than 11 honorary degrees from North American universities and numerous other academic awards.

In an era when our federal government's muzzling of scientists has compromised their role and politics often trumps scientific fact, Dr. Schindler is an embodiment of what it means to be a scientist: to discover, to seek the truth, to rely on facts, and to disseminate knowledge to the public for the benefit of society.

Slave Lake Family Care Clinic

Ms Calahasen: Thank you to all the constituents who have contacted me in many ways to express their concerns regarding health care services in the Slave Lake region. Health care is a priority for all Albertans, and the residents of Slave Lake are no exception. The fires in Slave Lake seriously damaged the health care infrastructure and left our region with limited services. So when family care clinics were presented as a new health care model, I investigated this approach and was convinced this was the way to provide the best services holistically.

Let's look at the facts. After the fire many medical professionals were forced to leave the community. Today the Slave Lake region, serving 12,000 residents, has four full-time doctors, two locum doctors, and services are supplied seven days per week with extended hours. In fact, four new doctors are being recruited, some of whom will have specialties in obstetrics, which is a high-priority need. In addition, the FCC has seven nurse practitioners, two LPNs, two chronic disease nurses, a dietitian, a social worker, a pharmacist, two physiotherapists, a mental health and wellness co-ordinator, and an aboriginal liaison worker, people who work hard for Slave Lake.

Since the FCC opened in April 2012, there have been over 22 per cent fewer emergency department visits to the hospital because the FCC met the immediate medical needs. Fifty per cent of the patients who came in with one concern were screened for additional common health risks. Over 80 per cent of FCC patients who were surveyed said that they were happy with the care they received.

Although two physician couples chose to leave one of Slave Lake's clinics, we should not lose sight of the tremendous gains in health care services to Slave Lake residents since the fire. But, yes, there is still room for improvement. Therefore, I convened a meeting between the Tri-Council and Alberta Health Services a few weeks ago to keep all parties informed and to put a plan in place to address any shortages and to get answers to the many questions. This meeting was very successful and helped alleviate many of the concerns. As of today 10 Q and As have been posted on the AHS website, and more will be posted.

I believe that the FCC is a proven holistic model of health care. From the evidence I have seen and more to come, the residents of Slave Lake can be assured that they will continue to receive a very high level of medical services in our community.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Paralympic Winter Games

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As our province continues to celebrate the accomplishments of our athletes at the Sochi Olympics, there is another international competition in Sochi where our best athletes are representing our province and our country. I'm speaking of the 2014 Paralympic Winter Games.

Among the competitors is a Leduc native, Ms Michelle Salt, who is there to compete in parasnowboard. Michelle is one of 49 athletes representing our country in Sochi. Michelle lost 75 per cent of her right leg above the knee after a near-fatal motorcycle accident in June of 2011. But instead of allowing herself to be limited by her disability, she defied it and set herself a new goal of becoming an elite athlete.

She didn't even wait to get out of the hospital to begin. Three weeks after her accident Canadian sledge hockey player Greg Westlake visited her to advise on how to get started in Paralympic competition. Since that day Michelle has trained hard at not only recovering from the horrific injuries but at becoming an elite athlete, all the while continuing with her own real estate business as well as becoming a motivational speaker, sharing her story and her life lessons. Her struggles, her strength, and her success serve as an inspiration to us all.

I would ask that we all learn more about the para-athletes in our constituencies and support and celebrate those who are currently representing our province and country in Sochi, including the gold medal won today by Brian McKeever, a para-Nordic skier represented by the Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tax Policy

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, people say lots of things about the character of Albertans, and one that comes up often is that we value fairness. We don't like to hear that someone is getting a special deal when others are restricted from accessing that same deal. Albertans like to compete on a level playing field, and I think that's why the flat tax is really irritating folks these days. The idea that one group, the wealthy, are getting a better tax deal than everyone else rubs against the grain.

There is another situation where taxation is unfair in Alberta, and that's the nonresidential industrial property tax. This is a tax that is collected on transmission lines, pipelines, telecommunication lines, railways, cogeneration stations, and machinery and equipment. When you think about it, most of these are located in large empty spaces, but they are paid for and needed by all Albertans.

So where is the unfairness? Well, the money is mostly collected by MDs and counties, and it stays there. These sparsely populated areas are collecting $1.4 billion for 17 per cent of the people while the other 83 per cent, living in urban areas, get to share in only $81.5 million. Put another way, counties and MDs get 98 per cent of this tax while cities, towns, and villages get 2 per cent. It's just not fair in today's Alberta, when two-thirds of the citizens live in towns, villages, and cities.

Now, we can fix this. Today I am bringing forward Motion 501 to urge the government to distribute the revenue from the combined low expenditure assessments, the same industrial property tax, on a per capita basis across the province. I've been working on getting a better deal for urban areas for some time. In 2009 I brought forward Bill 204, which was the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act, to redistribute income tax. The government shot it down. But I'm persistent, and I'm trying again with Motion 501. Please join me in prodding the government to be fair.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, as the new chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report dated March 2014 and entitled Review of the Monetization of Natural Gas in the Province of Alberta. Copies of this report are being distributed to members today.

This review was undertaken on the committee's own initiative in accordance with Standing Order 52.07(2). I was fortunate enough to be a member of the committee during the review process, and I'm pleased to inform you, Mr. Speaker, that it was a very valuable learning experience for all those involved.

I would like to thank the members of the committee, from all sides of the House, for their co-operation and great ideas throughout the process. I would also like to thank the LAO staff for their dedication in helping the committee with this review. Finally, I would like to thank all of the stakeholders who met with us in person, over the phone, and via video conference for sharing their opinions and expertise on the subject.

The committee looks forward to receiving the government's response to the recommendations set out in this report within the 150-day period set out in Standing Order 52.09(1).

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 5

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act I'm pleased to table the 2013-14 third-quarter update on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Copies were distributed to members' offices on February 26.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from constituent Jill Sheward, and she is writing with her concerns about hearing that the government of Alberta is considering changes to the operation of the land titles system. She believes strongly that this is an essential public service and that the government is best placed to ensure protection for industry and consumers.

The second tabling that I have is an e-mail from a constituent who is very concerned at the amount that rents are going up. Her rental increases: the first year it was $20, the second year it was another $20, and the rental increase this year is $90. So she is asking as a low-income person for a rental cap. She believes that it's outrageous and unjustified to have that kind of increase.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Cardston-Taber-Warner, just before you go ahead, Government House Leader, you caught my eye there because it's coming up to 3 o'clock.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that we go beyond 3 o'clock for the tablings.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let's go to Cardston-Taber-Warner for tablings.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a summary by my assistant in Taber of a conversation that she had with Mrs. Mary Sinclair of Milk River expressing her unhappiness — very unhappy — about the Premier's decision not to pay back the $45,000 about the trip.

Secondly, an e-mail from Roger Davies, a pharmacist from Magrath, Alberta, expressing his concern about the continuing problems that small-town pharmacies are having.

Thirdly and finally, another e-mail, from Mr. Lloyd Morgan, the owner of Newcastle Towing in Drumheller, expressing his concern about the safety of tow truck operators while they're out performing their important duties, making a request that they be allowed to run a different colour of lights to enhance the awareness of the public.

I have those three with the requisite copies. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, wish to table documents in relation to my question to the minister today regarding expense submissions in regard to Travel Alberta. I have the requisite copies thereof.

The Speaker: Hon. members, with the exception of points of order, that concludes our Routine.

Point of Clarification

The Speaker: Now, the Member for Airdrie did rise on a point of clarification, which is in effect a point of order according to our standing orders. He wanted some clarification on a ruling that I had made, and I'm prepared to give that now as I said I would. I'll try to do this in a matter of a few minutes if you'll allow me.

I want to draw your attention to a few specific points. First of all, in our Standing Orders, item 13, order and decorum, it states the following: "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and decide questions of order." Harness that thought, "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum." What do I do to try to preserve order and decorum? Well, typically, when something gets out of hand, it flares up, I rise, and I say, "Hon. members, cool your jets," or words to that effect, or I just stand up and stay silent, hoping to get your attention so that you will then get silent so that we will then have the House restored. Typically, I might do that twice in a row. Today I did it three times in a row. Last week I did it many times in a row. Last week I also said that somebody will pay a penalty if you disregard the Speaker's requests, and I will penalize an entire caucus if necessary.

Today I had to put that rule, that particular admonishment, into effect. It gave me no joy to not let Cypress-Medicine Hat finish off his question. I'm sure he had a very good final supplemental that he didn't get to ask, but there was justification for it, in my mind. I'll bet you that I would get a number of other members to agree that there was quite a loud outburst from the Wildrose at a certain point, and I'll bet that I'll get the Wildrose to agree that there was an equal outburst on the government side as well. So I had to penalize one of their members to be fair, but it was justified.

I give time outs, I give warnings, and I give admonishments. A week ago I stood in this House, and I indicated that I would be doing everything I could to help preserve that order and decorum.

Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, I took no pleasure in taking away your question either today. I have just explained why, and you can read about it in Hansard.

I wrote you procedural letters. I wrote to you all on January 23 about Assembly procedure. I'm assuming you read it. It's a long letter, but it covers a lot of what we're trying to do in this House. I wrote to you again just before we went into session on February 11. On page 2 I gave you an explanation of decorum in the House. You all got copies of this. It says here: I'm writing to you saying decorum is referred to in chapter 13 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, and in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, 1989, paragraph 35. And it goes on. I said: I am asking all members to review these rules before March 3 and to abide by them. I not only uttered these requests from the chair verbally, but I also put them in writing so that it would be abundantly clear exactly for a moment like this, which I was hoping we could avoid, but we couldn't.

I go on to say: the Speaker's role should not be viewed as a substitute for the individual responsibility that members must have for their own conduct. In my view, the Speaker's responsibility to the Assembly includes ensuring fairness by being consistent in interpretation and management, which leads to predictability. Members are always responsible for their own actions, and their conduct reflects primarily on them. Unfortunately, however, an individual's conduct is not viewed as a reflection of that member but also of his or her entire caucus and of the Assembly as a whole. Hopefully, all members are now very aware of this reality. The citizens of our province expect and deserve the highest standard of conduct and decorum from each one of us. I'll table a copy of that for Hansard later.

So there you have it. I have indicated that Speakers don't have a lot of power of enforcement, really, when it comes down to it. We can stand up and interject. We can stand up and say nothing and hope that you'll all come to order. Then when we say that we're going to do something if you step over the line, I for one feel honour bound to act on it, and today I did.

I'm asking you again. I fully get this game that goes on in here. Fully. There are only one or perhaps two roles in all of this Chamber that I have not had the pleasure of having yet, but I've done it and seen it from the opposition's side. I know exactly how it works. I've seen it from the government's side, I've seen it from the House leader's side, and I've seen it from the whip's side, so I get what's going on here. I am prepared to let quite a bit of it go because it does get a little bit dull on occasion in here without all of that. I fully respect that you like to liven things up and spice it up. I indicated in my comments that I don't mind some thumping and heckling or whatever you want to call it that goes on during a member rising to question or speak, similarly to somebody offering an answer. It gives a little bit of added wind to the sail. I understand that.

But when it goes on and on and on throughout all 35 seconds of a question, through all 35 seconds of an answer and you can't hear a darn thing, you know what starts to happen? I start to get notes like this, and they don't just come from any one caucus. A lot of you don't know this, but – these are confidential; I don't show them to anybody, and I keep them – I hear people saying: when are you going to clamp down on people who are shouting out loud, questioning where a certain member might be? You know that the rules say we don't refer to a person's absence. They could be dealing with a family emergency, they could be dealing with a visit to the washroom, for all we know, or they could be on a trip or something else. But we don't try purposely to embarrass them by shouting out, "Where is so-and-so? Where is so-and-so?" yet this was heard. Unfortunately, it doesn't get recorded in Hansard, so all I have are notes to prove that by.

Then I get other members on both sides questioning and shouting out loud, "What a waste of time. What a waste of time," but Hansard doesn't pick it up. There are many other comments like that. Then I get members saying: well, why don't we just let the House decide how much heckling they want to permit? Right? I expect that's what Edmonton-Centre might want to speak on. I'm going to hear you in just a moment, Edmonton-Centre, because I respect where you're going to be coming from, I'm sure.

The point is that it's my job, or whoever is here in the Speaker's chair, to use some judgment. I do that. That's why I don't jump to my feet right away at the first outburst or the first major heckling or whatever. I typically let it settle down a little bit. You know me, and you know I've done that. But I also want you to get to know that when I say that I'm going to do something, you can count on me doing it. I have said it, and I will do it. We don't have much else we can do.

The final thing I'll say is this. If I don't impose some polite sanctions such as I imposed today, the only other recourse I have is to name you. Today I could have named about 30 of you. That would mean you'd be asked to leave the House. Well, that's hardly how this was designed to work, right? So I just ask you to show some respect and dignity for the institution, show some for your colleagues from your own caucus, from other caucuses. Let's get on with opposition holding the government to account and government giving the best answers they possibly can. If you don't know the answer, take it under advisement and come back with a good answer. That will help. A lot of little things like that will help.

Let me go to Edmonton-Centre. I know she has something to contribute here. I think Airdrie would like to speak, or someone on his behalf. Let's go to Edmonton-Centre first.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a question asking for clarification under Standing Order 13(2). I noticed that the Speaker indicated that he felt that in order to preserve that order and decorum under Standing Order 13(1), it was justified to levy punishment on compliant members. He recognized that the two members from which he prohibited a final supplementary question had not in fact breached any of the rules in the House. I am wondering where I could find a reference that indicated that breaches from the Speaker would be imposed upon people who in fact had not broken the rules.

As a footnote, I will admit that the Speaker is correct. I have suggested that we have a vote in the Assembly as to how much we believe that the heckling is out of place, and we can all vote on it rather than putting the Speaker in a position of having to make a decision. It is pretty well known that I disagree with the Speaker on his use of removing questions given that they are such an integral part of what the opposition does and such an integral part of holding the government to account. I think it's inappropriate to do that.

But I would like an answer to the levying of punishment on those who are innocent.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, everything that's printed in this book is like a rule or an order of some point. That's why it's called Standing Orders. That's why I started with that very question, and it's called 13(1). I'll dig up other examples if you like. I'll write them, and I'll send them out to you so as to not take up too much time here.

I cited in my procedural letter some spots in Beauchesne's that you should look at and also in House of Commons Procedure and Practice. But our very own standing orders say very clearly under 13(1) that "the Speaker shall preserve order and decorum," and it goes on to say, "... and decide questions of order." And I decided today. I decided twice today. I've already said that it gave me no joy to take away those two questions, but I wanted to make the point as seriously as I could without hurting anybody. I hope I didn't hurt either of those two members. They'll have a chance tomorrow as well. But anything that's in this book should be abided by. It's all for your own good, your own guidance, your own abidance if you will.

I will clarify further, if necessary, but I'd like to move on. We have other business to do. I know Wildrose wanted to have a quick comment on this, and then let me go to the fourth party, and we'll have that. Make them brief, if you would, please. I'll try to be brief as well.

Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the indulgence on behalf of my colleague from Airdrie under 13(2). In your comments, which were heard, you comment on how there is a certain amount of ebb and flow that you're willing to allow in the House, yet there is seemingly a bit of a blurred line as to when admonishment turns into punishment. I'm wondering if you could perhaps try to clarify for us where that line is. Hopefully, we can attempt to abide by it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Yeah. I don't know that there is a real easy way to answer your question, but take this as a hint. If you see me rise once, you know that I'm not rising to exercise. If you see me rise a second time a few minutes later, again, you know I'm not rising just to be noticed. If I then rise a third time, it's probably game over for some reason, and I have to do something at that point.

Take that as one perhaps hint. If you see me rising, or if you see me doing this while I'm seated, waving my hand up and down to silence it, like I did on the Wildrose and the Liberals and the NDs today and like I did on the government side over here as well – I motioned them down a few times to keep it quiet, keep it orderly. You all saw me do it.

I try to be fair, you know. I know it's not just all opposition that does the heckling. I understand that, and I don't like some of the heckling that goes on on the government side, either. So I try to do that. Take that as sort of a hint, if you will, deputy opposition House leader, because that's usually how it works. I'm not often going to jump up and cut somebody off and issue a sanction right off the get-go. I realize it's Monday. You haven't seen each other for four days. You missed each other. You love each other. I get all that. You want to show that expression. That would be one way to watch for it next time, okay?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just have three questions that I'd ask you to consider for clarification in the course of preparing your written note to us. First, you referenced the authority under the standing orders of the Speaker to decide questions of order, and I am inquiring as to whether or not you are interpreting that to mean the order of the questions as opposed to questions of how you maintain order. I would suggest that the former interpretation is an incorrect interpretation of what the standing orders say. They aren't referring to the issue of questions in question period. But I'd ask that you clarify when you write your thing.

The Speaker: Very good question.

I'm sorry; you have a second one?

Ms Notley: I did. I have three.

The Speaker: Yeah. Go ahead.

Ms Notley: The second one was simply, again, to clarify that I'm seeking clarification further to the question asked by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, which is: where is the authority to penalize one member for the actions of another?

The third question is simply whether you can turn your mind to the issues of whether taking away a question in question period from an opposition member has the same impact to our legislative and parliamentary system as taking a question from the government and its right to so-called question itself, given the disparate opportunities for questioning government that exist between government members and opposition members and given the fact that question period is, in fact, the opposition's sole opportunity or often one of the very few opportunities to question government and that it's not the same for government members as a result, when you consider the fair disposition of penalties, whether or not you have considered what I would characterize as an unfair effect of equal imposition of that particular penalty on members of this Assembly as it relates to the members of the opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you. Very good questions. I'm not going to get into a long debate on this because I see that Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill wants to speak as well, and I'll allow him in just a minute but very briefly.

This is not the only opportunity to hold government to account, as you know. But it's not just opposition that holds government to account; it's also government members who try to hold government to account, too, because they are not government.

Yes, they are on the government side, but only sworn cabinet members are the government. Everyone else in here is absolutely in the same boat when it comes to questions, okay? It may not look like that to you, hon. member, but that's how it's designed to be.

Your first question about order and order: I would ask that you as a House leader for your caucus and the others to get together and actually clarify some of these standing orders for yourself so that it would be a lot clearer for me. I'm interpreting it one way, and you might be interpreting it a different way. It's just the same as supplementals. Should we allow preambles or not? Should we allow supplementary questions to have a preamble? Yes or no? I made a ruling that I will allow it for the first five questions only, the first five main questions, and then after that I won't have it. Why? Because the agreement amongst the House leaders is that supplementary questions should not have preambles. Should not. Now, I don't know how far back that goes, but I've referenced it many, many, many times, yet the House leaders haven't seen to get together and ask how to clarify that. It would be a great help if we could do that.

I forgot your third question. What was it, briefly? Do you remember what it was?

Ms Notley: It was the authority to penalize one member for the actions of another.

The Speaker: Oh, right. Thank you for that.

Well, in the absence of any other sanction that I can impose as a Speaker – and I can tell you this with great authority, having conversed many times with Speakers across Canada over the past two years – we sometimes make a rule and enforce a rule on the spot when no precedent perhaps exists. Now, I don't know if that precedent that I just set today exists anywhere. Perhaps it doesn't. But I gave you warning last week of what I would do, and that's what I had to do today. I'm sorry to have done it.

Let's go to Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. We'll give you a quick minute to comment, and then we'll move on.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have any issue with losing my supplemental. That's not what I'm rising for. You have argued long and hard and admonished the Assembly on many occasions with respect to these disturbances and interruptions and heckling, which take away from the discourse here. You mentioned earlier that there is nothing, in your view, short of naming these individuals that you can do other than warning them, but I would say that there is nothing in the standing orders, there is nothing in parliamentary conduct that requires you to stick with the speaking order that's given to you by the various parties.

I would say that the way to bring some discipline back into this House is to refuse to recognize individuals who have been egregious in their interruptions, whether it's on one side of the House or the other, refuse to recognize them for the next 24 hours or the next day in the House, and in that way maybe we can achieve some better discipline in the Chamber. I don't think that you need to be restricted to the sanction of naming somebody. You can just simply refer to those individuals who are next in the speaking order and refuse to recognize them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Very briefly, in 30 seconds: let me just tell you that I gave that warning last year, and I'm just waiting for the opportunity to remind people here again, and that's what I will be doing. I will have to do something if this House continues to go into disorder. Now, if you want to take up

Edmonton-Centre's suggestion, as House leaders get your heads together and figure out how much heckling you think we should allow.

Maybe we should bring in some sort of a barometer, thermometer type of apparatus, a noise machine, that says when it hits this level here. Well, I'm being facetious, obviously. But you have to leave that to the good judgment of the chair, and I do my best to allow as much of it as I can, to keep it lively and spontaneous but also to maintain law, order, good discipline, and good conduct so that we can be role models that are admired in the community, not those who are boycotting having their students attend because of our ill behaviour. Okay?

Let us move on, then.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I would rather that you name me than punish someone else in here because of what I've done. I'd offer that to you. You name me; don't punish somebody else.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'd be happy to do that on the next occasion.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014. The purpose of Bill 201 is to amend the Agricultural Pests Act in order that a tolerance level for Fusarium graminearum of 0.5 per cent be accepted for Alberta seed and feed. This is an issue that is important to my constituency as well as many communities across Alberta. Fusarium is an air- and soil-borne toxin that is classified as a pest under the act. Specifically, Fusarium head blight is the fungal disease caused by the presence of the Fusarium graminearum toxin.

It is environmentally specific in that it flourishes in high heat and humidity during the flowering stage of cereal grains. If the weather conditions are dry and hot during this stage, the fungus will not develop. Once the toxin had infected the crops in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, it began to spread to the southern regions of our province. Mitigation and best practices have been in place in hoping to lessen the spread across the prairies. What we do know about the current regulation is that section 10 details that it is the duty of the inspector, who is usually the county ag field man, "who finds on any premises evidence of an infestation of any crop" to "notify persons engaged in the growing, transporting or processing of any crop... affected by the infestation." Theoretically, the landowner or producer is supposed to destroy the crop even if there are trace amounts of this fungus. This is not happening, Madam Speaker, nor should it.

The next person in the system who may see signs of Fusarium is working at the local seed cleaning plant. Some plants strictly enforce the rules, and others are less rigid. In other words, at the present time in Alberta the rules are not being consistently enforced. Those plants that do enforcement will reject seed that has trace amounts. If they find just one seed in 200, they will reject it. That producer has the ability to take his seed to another seed cleaning plant where the same level of enforcement is not in place.

Our current regulation is unrealistic and unenforceable. Fusarium graminearum is here in Alberta, as it is in most of the rest of North America and Europe. Madam Speaker, our current regulation is not helpful to the success of Alberta farmers, growers, and producers and puts our province at a noticeable disadvantage economically. This economic disadvantage is exacerbated by the fact that strong agricultural provinces like Saskatchewan and Manitoba treat the issue differently. Growers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba are free to sell their seed with acceptable levels. What is acceptable? The Canadian Grain Commission allows a range of .2 per cent to .5 per cent for export, depending on the type of grain. Other countries allow in the range of .5 per cent, thus the reason for my bill. Best management practices indeed help to mitigate and deal with the presence of Fusarium but will never eliminate it completely. In order to help farmers, that would be in keeping with the zero-tolerance standard. Because of the very nature of Fusarium, expecting to have an absolutely pure and natural environment free of toxins is almost impossible.

For example, Albertans are being proactive in similar issues, with the porcine epidemic diarrhea virus. The people at Genome Alberta are heading up a collaborative Canadian effort to develop a vaccine for this deadly pig disease. It has recently been discovered in Ontario and Manitoba. Approximately 20 per cent of hogs in the United States are infected. It is devastating to the hog industry. Its effects on the hog industry are being described as similar to BSE in cattle. PED virus is not here in Alberta yet, but we are being proactive in leading the team to discover measures to mitigate its spread.

Madam Speaker, I wonder how we can expect a seed grown and developed in a natural environment to be completely free of bacteria, pests, or insects. This leads me to believe that there is almost nothing that is truly pure or free from something in the environment since it is an open ecological system and different factors are consistently interacting with one another in a series of symbiotic relationships.

To explain this line of reasoning a little further, Madam Speaker, I ask you and my fellow hon. members to think about wine. Now, wine has a familiar toxin in it. Arsenic is found in almost all types of white and red wine in trace amounts. Many of us enjoy a glass of wine from time to time, whether it be with dinner or surrounded by friends and colleagues. As my chemist son-in-law tells me, the poison is in the dose. In the case of wine and many other foods and beverages, there are regulated acceptable levels of toxins, but this presence of arsenic, a toxin, has not stopped many of us from drinking it altogether.

Madam Speaker, the level of toxin that causes Fusarium to occur is already regulated by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. This means that in very small amounts Fusarium is tolerated. There have been many studies that deal with the ingestion of contaminated foods and feeds, yet we still do not allow our farmers, landowners, and processors to sell their crops that may have trace amounts of it.

We know that Fusarium will continue to spread. We know that other prairie provinces allow for the presence of Fusarium in their wheat and barley. We know that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency regulates levels of toxins present in cereal grains, corn, seed, and crops so that it is not harmful to humans or for livestock consumption. Simply not allowing for Fusarium-infected kernels to be present in our agricultural products is not a sound or reliable management technique.

So I ask: what should our practices be? The Alberta Wheat Commission has expressed its concern for the zero-tolerance position, feeling that realistically it is unattainable. They have also begun investigative work to propose a reasonable tolerance level based on sound science.

I have a letter of support from Lethbridge county. I would like to quote part of this letter.

We strongly support the amendment as it would not deem fusarium head blight a pest or nuisance unless it is found at a concentration of greater than 0.5% in any plant, seed, crop, vegetation or other matter.

This amendment would aid seed producers in the province by creating a tolerance level on seed that could be legally sold. Seed producers would also be given the opportunity to propagate seed that contains small amounts of fusarium head blight in an effort to create resistant varieties.

I will be tabling five copies of this letter at the conclusion of my remarks.

Madam Speaker, the rural Alberta economic footprint is $77.4 billion annually, and because of initiatives from this government in collaboration with our hard-working Alberta farmers and growers, we are well positioned for an even greater growth across many agricultural sectors. But our position as an agricultural leader could be compromised by dated practices like that of the zero-tolerance position. Given the current reality regarding grain transportation in our province, for which the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development has advocated strongly on behalf of Albertans, we must give our producers every advantage possible.

Madam Speaker, I understand that Bill 201 may not garner full support from all of my colleagues in this House. If anything I am thankful that I have the opportunity to bring this important agricultural topic to the forefront of discussion with our constituents, friends, and family.

Alberta has a reputation as a world-class supplier of food, energy, and other agricultural commodities. With Bill 201 I only ask that we begin the discussion on this zero-tolerance practice to ensure that we maintain and enhance our reputation today and into the future.

With that, Madam Speaker, I conclude my comments. I look forward to hearing the remainder of the debate on Bill 201. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, would you please table that letter from Lethbridge county tomorrow during the regular time for tablings? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First off, I commend the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for bringing this issue up. It is key. With seed producers in my riding it's one of the big things and in Alberta generally. We're losing huge revenue by our zero tolerance, which is something that I don't feel is obtainable as a grain producer myself.

The member brought this up, and it touches – I mean, she hit everything quite clearly on it. A lot of seed plants don't have a testing process. Some do; some don't. I was a member of the Blackie district seed cleaning plant for over 15 years. About 10 or 12 years ago we brought in testing for Fusarium before you could clean it. Now, that's just one. Within 15 miles of that there's another seed cleaning plant where you do not have to test before you clean. So therein lies the problem. You have producers with not exactly the same set of rules, and trying to go along with it – not that anybody is trying to shortcut anything. But unless the seed cleaning plants, for instance, are all playing by the same rules, producers that are cleaning their own seed, whether they plan to or not, are not checking for this, and then they also could be planting seed with Fusarium.

Now, this goes back economically to all the seed growers in the province, who obviously have a lot at stake here. We're the only province in Canada that has a zero tolerance on Fusarium for seed growers. Now, this puts us at an economic loss because other seed growers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba don't have that on there.

With that, I think we've got to look at the big picture, you know, in simple math. To buy No. 1 wheat for seed right now is running about 12 and a half dollars a bushel for certified seed. Now, the certified seed growers put a lot more time into producing their grain. As far as the cleaning process, when they're going to clean out augers, combines for seed, anybody that farms can understand the challenges of making sure that the varieties don't get crossed over. In saying that, they obviously have to charge a premium for what they do to have certified seed. When you buy certified seed, you get a little blue tag that tells you the amount of weeds that are in that, what the standards are. I think this could be something that could be worked into this motion, to be able to make sure that it's something that's followed through on the enactment part of it.

The biggest thing is to let producers know what they're buying. Now, if they know that they could be buying a seed that has up to .5 per cent Fusarium in it, that would give them the opportunity to decide whether they do or don't want to buy it. In this province it's a very divisive argument. Every MLA in here that is in an agricultural growing sector has probably heard from producers on both sides of the coin. Some are saying: "Okay. We don't have it. Don't allow it into our area." It's almost a north-south split.

Last fall it came up as a motion at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. It was a very heated debate. People got up there and got talking about how we don't have it in northern Alberta. The argument could be taken that there is probably Fusarium in northern Alberta. There are some tests that show it. It's just that if you're not looking for something, you don't tend to generally test for it.

Not that they're bad producers, but heat and humidity is the key to how this disease gets transferred around. It's a fungal disease. It's in the soil, and it's also airborne. So what happens is that strong winds, which we do have in this province once in a while, can transfer it over from somebody that's doing best management practices on their farm. They're treating their seed. They're making sure their rotation isn't tight on anything that's close to that in a cereal program.

The problem with Fusarium is that we're also starting to get it in potatoes. In southern Alberta, where we have our large irrigation areas, these are things we need to look at. There's also Fusarium in canola. It goes back to heat and humidity. That's the whole element of how this product moves along this disease.

I guess one of the key things, to me anyway, is that we have the fight of the north-south. It's not healthy for the province to be split that way, but it does come down to that. I commend the member for pulling this up because it's pretty gutsy for anybody north of Red Deer to bring up this topic and fight for it as she is. So I commend her for that.

Now, one of the things there that she talked about is how the Alberta ag service boards are – in all honesty, this is something that could be done through the municipalities. Each municipality has the process of what they decide, they deem what to check for.

The ag field men and their society are the ones who go out and actually – if you get a weed management act or a pest act, they're the ones that enforce it.

So the way to do this to keep, I guess, all parties happy is to be able to have it where each municipality would decide how to enforce it or not enforce it, be kind of that happy medium. Right now I'll guarantee that anybody in this House that has had calls on it has had it 50-50. We've had people call adamantly against it, saying, "We need to stick to zero per cent or we'll end up like Manitoba and we'll lose millions every year on production because of the Fusarium in there," or we have people saying: "Let's be honest about this. Let's look at this as a proactive way to deal with it rather than reactive."

Now, when you get into Fusarium, it's a mycotoxin. I'll have to go to my speaking notes here because I'm past the – we're into the smart stuff which doesn't roll off my head quite as fast. The disease has been spread widely due to extensive planting of highly susceptible varieties. So into the varieties side again – you know, I compare it a little bit to a flu shot – in order to be able to get a vaccine back on something, you need to be able to know what you have and give the plant that so it knows how to fight it.

We get into GMO talks of how – I'm not even getting into that dance. But genetically modified grains, food, anything like that, you introduce a trait into the genes, and then you figure out how that goes against it. We use it, and everybody talks immediately about Roundup and canola and things like that.

Papaya has had it for years. Back in 1985, I think it was, papaya had a ring in it. It's a fruit, so they had this ring that was coming in and eating and causing the whole – going from like 56 million pounds a year of papaya down to 26 because they wouldn't introduce this whole vaccine stream into it. It's not that we're against genetically modifying anything; it's figuring out what we're going to do economically to make sure that we're a viable province.

To me, this is one of those things we need to really figure out. We're getting hurt huge because we're the only province in Canada that has a zero tolerance on it. The seed growers in Saskatchewan automatically have an economic gain on us because they don't have to worry about it. I'm not saying we throw the reins in the cart and we just let the horses run wild with it and we don't have any kind of a standard. We need to have some kind of a standard in there, and I think .5 is attainable.

When you test for Fusarium, there are different tests. There's the old plate test. Fusarium is on the outside of the seed, so making sure that the seed plant place, the laboratory that's doing it, has zero Fusarium in it to begin with. It's airborne, so if they're testing numerous amounts – I'll go the north versus south. Some of the laboratories, for instance, if they have grain samples coming in from the south, where they have higher tolerances of Fusarium in it and they have that in their lab – I'm not saying that they're doing a bad job. I'm just saying that the probability is there that a trace amount of Fusarium could be just lingering in their lab when they bring in a seed sample from a certified seed grower.

That certified seed grower can have a grain bin, a 5,000-bushel grain bin at, say, $10 for easy math. Fifty thousand dollars worth of grain is in there. Just a trace amount of Fusarium on that test will roll out to the fact that they can't sell that as seed. Now, these are people's livelihoods. These are people that put a lot of time and money into what they're doing, and they make sure that they do the high-end job that they do.

Like everything we have in this province, I don't think we're second to none on anything that we do. I think we always show that we know what we're doing and we have the best product to sell and market out there. That's what makes our agricultural industry at the $77 billion cash receipts that we have. It also rolls out the fact that it's the largest renewable resource that we have in this province. I think we're all stewards of the land, anybody that is in agriculture or is tied to the agricultural sector, because, let's be honest, it's not just the farmer or the rancher that's tied to agriculture.

When we look back to the $50,000 bin of wheat versus if it has a trace amount – it doesn't even have to be the .5; it can be down to just a trace amount, and as long as it has that, it can't be sold as seed. So we have the seed growers in this province now that put their livelihood on the line every year, and they're sitting there, and they've just gone from a $50,000 value on a 5,000-bushel bin rolling it down to, you know, $3 or $4 a bushel for it, and then it goes to $20,000. Well, you sit there, and that's a $30,000 economic hit just on one bin of grain because it has a trace in it.

So I think we really need to sit down and look at this, and that's why I'm supporting this member on this. I think we really need to pull our head out of the sand on this and figure out that zero isn't obtainable and it's not something that we have right now. If it means that municipalities are going to be able to sit there and decide amongst themselves to do this, which is their choice – and it goes back to local decision-making. We make the legislation so it's available. We don't say that all the municipalities have to follow that. It's up to them to do their own decision-making on it. Then that would be able to allow everybody from the north to the south to decide whether they want to have a zero per cent or a .5 per cent or a .25 per cent. They could figure that out with their own ag servicemen, the ag field men, what they're going to do on it. So I think there are means and ways around this so that it could work for everybody.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and speak to Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, that is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. The purpose of Bill 201 is to amend the Agricultural Pests Act in order that a tolerance level for Fusarium graminearum of .5 per cent be accepted for Alberta seed and feed.

Given the airborne nature of Fusarium and its ability to spread rapidly from field to field, management practices have been developed in order to help mitigate its spread. After extensive public consultation in 2002 Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development released the first comprehensive Alberta Fusarium graminearum management plan. The purpose of the plan is to limit the introduction, escalation, spread, and economic impact of Fusarium. This management plan requires that all cereal grain intended for seed be tested and certified free of Fusarium. Land-owners and seed, grain, and feed producers have the responsibility to control, destroy, or prevent the establishment of Fusarium as outlined in the act and respective regulations. Additionally, it is their responsibility to practise and adhere to all management practices to meet the objectives of the management plan.

The plan works to complement the legislative authority by the act to enforce control for declared pests in Alberta. Fusarium has been a declared pest since 1999, and the enforcement of control is delegated to the local municipalities and carried out by agricultural field men. The purpose of the Alberta Fusarium management plan is awareness, not enforcement. Instead, the agricultural field men work with producers to ensure they have the information to protect themselves and their neighbours from the effects of Fusarium. Despite efforts in the motion by the management plan, it appears as though Fusarium has continued to spread throughout Alberta, making its way north, where it had not previously been found.

Madam Speaker, according to Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development projected total losses due to Fusarium-infected seed could possibly be as high as $64 million. This projected loss figure could especially impact central and east-central Alberta as well as the irrigated districts of southern Alberta.

Madam Speaker, best practices for dealing with Fusarium have two objectives. The first objective is for cereal corn producers to limit the introduction, escalation, spread, and economic impact of Fusarium in Alberta. Here the plan suggests that growers should always use healthy seed with no detectable levels of Fusarium to avoid introducing the pathogen into their production area. The plan also recommends that growers request a seed health report that shows testing results specifically for Fusarium.

The second objective is for cereal and corn producers to limit the introduction, escalation, spread, and economic impact of Fusarium in Alberta intended for use as feed, bedding, or industrial use. If Fusarium-infested grain will be used as livestock feed, the management plan recommends that grain samples be checked for mycotoxin levels through a lab analysis. Knowledge of the mycotoxin levels will produce guidance as to whether the grain is suitable for feed, especially for more sensitive animals such as swine.

Feed grain, grain products, and straw suspected of being infested with Fusarium can be fed to finishing cattle, which will aid in the elimination of the pathogen, or they can be composted where compost temperatures reach 60 to 70 degrees Celsius for at least two weeks. If feed grain or grain products are spilled at any time during the feeding and handling process, producers are encouraged to consider recovering and composting.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, a sound management plan and following best practices play an important role in mitigating the spread of Fusarium. This management plan strives to work hand in hand with the zero tolerance for Fusarium accepted across Alberta. However, despite best efforts in employing management practices, Fusarium continues to spread across Alberta, even reaching northern areas, where until recently Fusarium was not present.

Madam Speaker, there are strong views on both sides of the Fusarium debate. Farmers here in Alberta are using best management practice to eliminate the escalation of Fusarium, yet these methods of practice are not working to eliminate the presence of Fusarium, and some argue that Fusarium might not ever be eradicated from Alberta's fields. Bill 201 would amend the Agricultural Pests Act to include a .5 per cent tolerance level for Fusarium, recognizing that Fusarium is here today and that we should employ measures that keep our agricultural products safe and allow farmers to sell their seeds and feed at the same time.

Madam Speaker, Alberta has a reputation as a world-class supplier of food and other agricultural commodities. Bill 201 will help ensure that farmers are able to compete with other agricultural jurisdictions who do not have a zero-tolerance restriction and maintain our position as a world-class agricultural supplier. I commend the hon. member for bringing this issue to the forefront of private members' business in the Legislature today, and I would encourage all members to support this bill and allow our farmers to compete on an equal footing with other western Canada producers.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I speak of something that I am more familiar with, because it's from my heart and from my roots in Drumheller and Stettler, where I'm farming and where I've lived my whole life. Actually, to the evidence of some people in this room, I do know something of Fusarium because I experienced it first-hand on our farm way back in 1986. We were experiencing high rainfall in the area, which is unusual for the diverse area and the special areas. We had a crop of durum wheat that was coming to full flower and full development, but there were no seeds forming in the head. I was fortunate enough at that time to have a crop consultant who was born and raised in Ireland and some parts of England, where he had taken his training. He actually had experienced this calamity, I guess you could call it, in the crop, so he came and inspected the crop.

No one else in the constituency, no one else in the area, actually, even knew what was going on there, and it was a complete irregularity because of the moisture conditions, because of the cropping conditions. We were trying to be the best stewards of our land, the best stewards of our farm, and the best stewards of agriculture in that community, but we were still stricken with a calamity. The gentleman told us that there was, simply, absolutely nothing we could do. It's kind of a disheartening feeling to have that happen, to have someone come out who appeared and showed us his great qualifications and said that there was something the matter with our crop and that there was actually nothing we could do. There wasn't anything modern that we could spray on it. There wasn't a seed treatment that we could have put on it at the time. We simply had to harvest the crop and take it off for feed and dispose of it in a safe manner through our cattle, albeit at a low level. He explained to us the potential contamination or the feed levels that we could not use with our cattle and which would create a situation where the pregnant cattle would abort their calves.

This has been an interesting point with me because I believe that in this case potentially we should try and achieve zero tolerance. In the real world zero tolerance in this case simply isn't achievable, simply isn't attainable. I would like to stand by the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock on her point of bringing this forward in a regulated, correct fashion and that we should be aware and publicly aware, in a legislative fashion, that this calamity needs to be addressed. It's important to the stewardship of agriculture in Alberta. It's important as a member of a province in the dominion, with neighbouring Saskatchewan, neighbouring Manitoba, and neighbouring British Columbia, that we bring this forward in a proper method so we can go forward in a commercial fashion.

I also remember some many years ago when this Fusarium outbreak occurred in Manitoba. Some may remember a certain Canadian organization – the initials I'll just call CWB – that was trying to market grain, and they did not have a proper designation for Fusarium-infected grain. It was unfortunate that this government entity was so clumsy as to not be able to handle this Fusarium-infected grain, and therefore the farmers in southern Manitoba, who had direct access across the American border and could have received cash value for their grain, were not allowed because of this regulation by this clumsy, awkward, archaic – could I call it old-fashioned? I don't know how many other prominent negative adjectives I could have given to it – organization that has simply now become voluntary thanks to a certain federal Conservative government. I'm pleased to have had that happen.

Again, I'd like to reiterate to the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock that I think she's on the right track here. It may prove out down the road that this level of infection will be a wedge level, but it needs to be done in such a fashion, to the Member for Little Bow, that the grain is not simply rejected, that this seed lot would not simply be rejected because of any trace finding of the disease in the seed.

I'd like to explain, too, on sort of a more understandable level that .5 per cent relates to 1 seed in 200, and 200 is about the equivalent of two handfuls of seed or one litre of seed. One seed is a very small amount in that. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock is facing this problem head-on, so we're going forward in that fashion.

It's also bringing forward a position that's of great difficulty for the provincial seed cleaning co-ops going forward. It's been a cause of great concern amongst those organizations. The Member for Little Bow has brought forward an example that some co-op facilities in one region will accept it and that others down the road would not. In this modern day of super Bs and five-axle transportation units it's just not acceptable to have a bi- or a multistandard. We need to have a single standard going forward there.

Again, seed quality and seed determination and good stewardship in agriculture going forward should be the goal of this province, and I believe that is the goal of this side of the House. Sometimes we have questions with regard to directions from the other side of the House, but I think today is the day that I can stand with the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and be in agreement.

With that, I'd relinquish the floor to other speakers. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. It's not often that we're afforded the opportunity to speak on behalf of the agricultural community in regard to bill procedure, so I'm very pleased to do so today.

I stand here to discuss measures and regulations that are in place in various other jurisdictions, both in Canada and the United States, regarding the contaminant Fusarium graminearum among crop farmers, producers, and growers. Various jurisdictions have prudently engaged in Fusarium management procedures in an attempt to reduce the spread of this airborne disease that negatively impacts agricultural seed crops across the nation. Studies have shown that because of the prevalence of the Fusarium head blight and the ease with which it spreads, zero-tolerance measures are neither realistic nor desired by some of the various stakeholders whom this disease affects. As such, there are no other jurisdictions in Canada or the United States that practice a zero-tolerance Fusarium management system as seen here in our province.

Saskatchewan guidelines for Fusarium-infected seed indicate that farmers are not permitted to bring seed into regions where Fusarium is not common unless the seed lot has been tested and is free of disease. Seed infected with less than 5 per cent Fusarium can be planted back into regions where the Fusarium species has already been established as there will be disease inoculum present in the region; for example, infected cereal residue in neighbouring fields. Agricultural guidelines available to farmers in Saskatchewan also indicate that seed infected with more than 5 per cent Fusarium may have other quality problems and is therefore a risk for farmers choosing to plant it.

Madam Speaker, use of a seed treatment is advised if Fusarium is present at levels greater than 2 to 3 per cent. This then becomes a situation where farmers' discretion is required to determine the risk they are willing to take in planting crops with Fusarium present. This situation also establishes a buyer-beware practice and suggests Saskatchewan farmers should always check lab reports for the condition of seeds before purchasing.

Saskatchewan agricultural guidelines also state that seed with up to 5 per cent total Fusarium species infection should be safe to plant. However, a level of 5 per cent total Fusarium infection could still result in significant seed blight if the seed treatment is not used. Madam Speaker, seed blight in this case refers to the term "Fusarium head blight," the disease name for the infection which we speak of today.

Further, Saskatchewan guidelines for seed testing are extensive, and it is recommended to have seed tested at an accredited laboratory to assess the level of seed-borne pathogens. At this time Fusarium testing is only an advisory test as it is not recognized as an accredited test by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. However, Saskatchewan labs make an effort to follow standardized procedures for isolating and identifying Fusarium species as there are various different ones that exist.

Experts in Saskatchewan suggest farmers buy only certified seed that has documented good quality. It's also mentioned that certified seed, according to the federal Seeds Act, must meet standards for germination, purity, and true loose smut but not for Fusarium infection. Therefore, again, the motto is buyer beware when anyone is purchasing seed. Farmers should ask to see the lab certificate before purchasing seed. That's just good practice.

Another important management practice is extensive research. Research as to the effectiveness of seed treatments to control seed-borne Fusarium in provincial fields is ongoing. In Saskatchewan research conducted in this province has found that seed treated with fungicides still develops lesions on the crowns or roots as a result of seed-borne Fusarium infections. Some researchers in this province recommend the use of a seed treatment as good insurance. Therefore, seed treatments may not eradicate seed-borne Fusarium completely but are still important management practices to protect against seed blight and minimize pathogen buildup in the soil that may lead to infection in subsequent years. It should be noted that seed treatments will not prevent Fusarium head blight from developing later on in the season due to residue-borne disease inoculum from neighbouring fields as the Fusarium disease is airborne and difficult to contain with 100 per cent assurance.

Under Saskatchewan's Pest Control Act all persons must "take measures to destroy, control and prevent the spread of all pests on any land or other premises owned, occupied or controlled" by them. Although Fusarium is not listed as a pest under the pest declaration regulations, it is still expected that farmers administer similar measures to ensure the containment of Fusarium as best they can. Doing so ensures that they receive the best possible yields from crops planted on their land and distributed to customers.

Concluding Saskatchewan's jurisdictional overview, I hope it's clear to everyone here today that measures in our own neighbouring province include buyer-beware standards as well as very extensive research as to how Fusarium is best contained and prevented.

Now, Manitoba shares a similar jurisdictional background regarding Fusarium. Fusarium is not regulated, and therefore no tolerance has been set for seeds, and there is no difference between classes of seeds. Manitoba has released preventative measures regarding harvest techniques to reduce the presence of Fusarium as well as storage precautions and feeding guidelines. Along with their neighbours in Saskatchewan they emphasize the importance of seed testing and encourage the education of both producers and consumers.

Manitoba has the Plant Pests and Diseases Act. Although Fusarium is not stated in this act, the legislation does stipulate as follows: "No person owning, operating, leasing, or managing a nursery shall keep or have, or offer for exchange or sale . . . any diseased or [infected] plant or seed." The minister does have the power through regulation to designate a species, animal, or insect to be pests under the act. However, at present there are no regulations that outline Fusarium as being a pest.

As we have just reviewed jurisdictions within Canada with the highest Fusarium disease prevalence, we cannot ignore relevant agricultural jurisdictions in the United States. In North Dakota Fusarium head blight first became a significant problem in 1993 and since that time has contributed to over $5 billion in losses. North Dakota State University has undertaken significant research activities and has developed and released three varieties of wheat that have some degree of Fusarium resistance or tolerance. Farmers are aware of the Fusarium head blight risk and are active in pursuing these types of seed varieties, according to the grain management experts in the area. All preventative measures are, again, at the producers' and consumers' discretion, and there are no regulations pertaining to the level of Fusarium found in seeds.

North Dakota does, however, show numerous initiatives that aim to lessen the financial burden on farmers and various other consumers. The United States wheat and barley initiative funds approximately 130 scientists in 22 states and Mexico who are collaborating to mitigate the Fusarium head blight epidemic. Funding for the program is obtained from earmarked funds through the United States Department of Agriculture and administered by Michigan State University.

Tolerance initiatives show that the issue of Fusarium head blight is strongly noticed among federal and state organizations. Experts in North Dakota have suggested that the regulation of Fusarium would be an unrealistic action because of its relatively high level of prevalence.

North Dakota also recommends multiple management strategies in order to mitigate the spread of Fusarium. These management strategies include seed treatment, tillage practices, crop rotation, and the use of fungicides. The state of North Dakota as well as other agricultural jurisdictions within the United States have never practiced a zero-tolerance policy regarding the level of Fusarium found in seed crops, as is the case here in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I hope that today I've been able to bring a heightened level of understanding and acknowledgement to the jurisdictional measures and regulations found in agricultural communities as they pertain to Fusarium. I look forward to hearing the remainder of the debate on Bill 201.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and discuss Bill 201, Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014. I, too, have learned a lot since this bill was brought forward and talked about. It has been very, very interesting as I represent a large farming constituency as well, with huge amounts of irrigation land and large amounts of dry land and large amounts of ranching. I think I would say that at this point most of my constituents are very, very split as to what the outcome of this act should be. I've also noticed that in my caucus we're on a similar track, a lot of differences of opinions, and we've had a lot of great discussions. With that, of course, I commend the member for bringing this forward and giving us the opportunity to discuss it.

I understand that Manitoba loses somewhere between $60 million and $150 million a year because of Fusarium graminearum in their crops, a terrible situation that's led to where, I understand, many of their smaller animals, chickens and pigs, cannot eat the grain and digest it and flourish or even survive. Cows are more tolerant, but it's still not great. I understand that we're in a situation where trucks and trucks and tonnes and tonnes of contaminated grain get hauled both ways: our grain to their smaller animals so that they can continue their livestock industry from Alberta, and Manitoba grain to our Feedlot Alley and our feedlots and cattle industry, which have a higher tolerance. No doubt this costs our overall economy. This costs a lot of money overall when it just isn't kept local and within that old hundred-mile rule.

I understand, though, that a serious outbreak of Fusarium graminearum occurred in Manitoba in 1993. The province focused on developing resistant varieties rather than trying to control the spread of the disease, and there's a lot of thinking out there that this may have led to the continuation of Manitoba's problem, the growth of Fusarium in Manitoba, and $60 million to $100 million a year in lost value of crops.

I'm also told that there are nine or 10 varieties of seed right now from Saskatchewan and Manitoba that are resistant at no level or a lower level than one-half of 1 per cent, that could be part of the process of preventing the spread of Fusarium. Although I have tremendous empathy for farmers that have developed seed and have contaminated seed and cannot sell it, cannot plant it, it may not be the best long-term solution for us to keep the spread of Fusarium as low as possible or even end it totally.

A lot of my constituents that I've talked to have spent lots of time telling me about proper farm management. The four-cycle crop rotation is the best way to solve the problem, apparently. As the crop grows out of the ground, it picks it up and ends up in head blight, and just a proper rotation can go a long way to solving this problem.

As others said, the fact that we've had some wet, humid springs has caused some problems, and hence in parts of my constituency where irrigation is strong, that's why the irrigated lands would have a bigger problem. In parts of the south, where we don't normally have a lot of moisture, it maybe wouldn't be as big a problem.

Interestingly, I had a town hall on the weekend in Schuler-Hilda. One of the things we talked about was this bill. It's interesting to them because a number of them have land on both sides of the border. Most years go by without any impact from Fusarium, but a lot of them are aware that it could have a huge impact, and they had again some split ideas about: yeah, let's accept a low amount, and let's try to do something. Others, again, felt the best thing was to make sure that we had zero tolerance.

I'm spending a lot of time talking to a couple of people who are very, very strong agriculture producers, and they're telling me and assuring me that the provincial agricultural service boards, the committee, rather, set from these 71 boards, and the Alberta

Association of Agricultural Fieldmen and the majority of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties are opposed to this change. They believe that the pest control act is best as it is now, without allowing for any tolerance of Fusarium.

I've spent quite a bit of time talking to our agriculture critic about it, and he's highlighted for me the pros and cons and the differences and the different aspects. He has highlighted that there is a split, and there are strong components both ways. We talked about different zones in the province, which most Albertans do not feel will work, because we are all one Alberta. How do you enforce that? How do you draw the line? We've talked about different types of seeds, and it was good to hear that there are the nine or 10 varieties that have been proven effective with resistance at a lower level. Hopefully, that's the case, and hopefully that will solve our long-term problem.

Again, I'm concerned that Manitoba attempted to handle it in this way and is now ending up with $60 million to $100 million in losses annually in their agriculture products from grain. Interestingly, we just did a bit of a grain tour in Peace River country, where we had approximately 95 people come out and talk to us about provincial issues, rail issues, and that kind of thing. One of the things I heard in all four communities – Sexsmith, Spirit River, Falher, and Fairview – was that more grain is grown in . . .

Some Hon. Members: Falher.

Mr. Barnes: Falher? Thank you.

An Hon. Member: You have to say it with a French accent.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Thank you for that.

They talked about how there's more grain grown in Peace River country than there is in all of Manitoba, which was absolute news to me. I lived in Manitoba till I was 13 years old and, like Saskatchewan, remember driving by wheat field after wheat field that looked very, very productive. It was actually only my second time in Peace River country, and there was tons of snow, but I was very, very impressed with how beautiful it was and how productive that area could be when I saw the wide, flat areas and all that moisture. That could go some distance.

I also took some time, and I have from the Canadian and the Alberta governments Fusarium Head Blight (FHB) of Cereals: A Disease of Concern For Alberta. Some of the things it says for managing Fusarium head blight are, number one, to plant seed with no detectable level of Fusarium graminearum. This prevents the accidental introduction of FG into noninfested fields. I presume that that is one of the big issues here for a disease that's spread by air and by soil and accidental infection in seeding plants, the unintended consequences of what can happen from neighbour to neighbour or district to district. At one point that, obviously, seemed to be a way to make sure that we didn't head the Manitoba way of $60 million to $100 million in annual losses.

Increase seeding rates. Less tillering leads to more uniform and shorter flowering periods, which minimizes the length of time during which heads are susceptible to Fusarium infection. Less tillering means less variation in crop growth stage, which may improve fungicide performance.

It talks about variety. Varieties with some degree of resistance are available, but they do not eliminate the risk. Consult annual provincial variety guides for current recommendations of FHB-resistant varieties.

Then it talks about the crop rotation that I just mentioned. Avoid planting new cereal crops next to a field where a Fusarium-infested cereal or corn resides. It's obviously picked up through the air or picked up through the soil. Stagger planting dates. It talks about doing that to prevent the spread.

Irrigation management. Limit irrigation during the flowering period to reduce humidity in the canopy.

Fungicide application. Provide suppression only. May only reduce mycotoxin levels. Application at early heading and prior to Fusarium infection is critical.

Harvest management. Combine adjustment and postharvest management.

These are all this pamphlet really illustrates.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Would you please table five copies of the document that you were reading from tomorrow when we have tablings. Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to follow the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I'm sorry you couldn't finish.

I'm honoured to rise today, Madam Speaker, to continue debate on Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, which has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, and I promise I will refrain from referencing arsenic levels in wine as that's probably not good for anybody to think about.

This bill deals with a topic that not everyone may be familiar with but should be aware of, Fusarium graminearum. Fusarium graminearum results in Fusarium head blight disease, which continues to be found primarily in southern Alberta's irrigated corn and wheat fields as well as farms in the Peace River district. Bill 201 seeks to reclassify Fusarium graminearum as a nuisance as opposed to a pest as well as to accept a .5 per cent tolerance level. This is to ensure that producers are exposed to current practices and policies to maintain Alberta's leadership in agriculture and to acknowledge the realities of Alberta's seed producers while enabling them to continue processing.

Currently the Alberta Fusarium graminearum management plan, which was released by Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development back in 2002 after extensive public consultation, requires cereal grain intended for seed to be tested and certified free of Fusarium graminearum. In addition, landowners and seed, grain, and feed processors are tasked with the responsibility of controlling, destroying, or preventing the introduction of Fusarium as outlined in the Agricultural Pests Act and other regulations.

One group that brings all appropriate stakeholders to the table is the Fusarium Action Committee, or the FAC. The FAC provides a forum to represent the interests and views of Alberta's agricultural industry regarding the management of Fusarium graminearum. The FAC also recommends management strategies for Fusarium to be included in the Alberta Fusarium graminearum management plan and educates Alberta's crop and livestock industries about Fusarium and the threat it represents to producers, processors, and other stakeholders. The committee reviews and evaluates the Alberta Fusarium graminearum management plan in consultation with Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development as required.

Fusarium Action Committee members include the Association of Alberta Agricultural Fieldmen, the provincial Agricultural Service Board committee, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Alberta Seed Growers Association, the Association of Alberta Co-op Seed Cleaning Plants, the Alberta Grains Council, the Alberta Corn Committee, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, the Canadian seed association, the Alberta Beef Producers, and the Alberta Barley Commission.

Several FAC members have expressed concern over zero-tolerance legislation. One member, the Alberta Wheat Commission, has expressed frustration regarding Alberta's current zero-tolerance legislation on Fusarium. Directors of the Alberta Wheat Commission have passed a motion in support of establishing a zero-tolerance level for Fusarium that is greater than zero.

In November 2012 another FAC member, the Canadian Seed Trade Association, sent a letter to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development asking that a science-based review of Alberta's Fusarium management plan and the objectives of providing high-quality, competitively priced seed for Alberta farmers and facilitating trade be launched. The Canadian Seed Trade Association highlighted the fact that Alberta farmers were at a considerable disadvantage in relation to farmers in neighbouring provinces due to Alberta's Fusarium regulations as well as farmers being unable to access seed unless it's tested and found to have a nondetectable level of Fusarium. The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development responded to this call in December 2012 by saying that he and his department were committed to minimizing the spread of Fusarium within Alberta, and he directed the FAC to lead a science-based review of the Fusarium management plan.

Another Fusarium Action Committee member, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, has discussed resolutions relating to Fusarium at their annual general meetings. During the 2012 AAMDC AGM resolution 6-13S, which declared Fusarium graminearum a pest under the Agricultural Pests Act and urged continued support for zero per cent tolerance, was defeated. In addition, resolution 5-13F, which also declared Fusarium a pest under the Agricultural Pests Act, urged the government of Alberta to amend the section of the act to include the following categories of pests: prohibited pests, pests, and nuisances. It was also defeated. The defeat of both of these resolutions illustrates that the debate surrounding acceptable levels of Fusarium continues.

In 2010 the then chair of the FAC, Dr. Jim Broach, who is also a pest management specialist with Alberta agriculture, said that the Agricultural Pests Act gives an area the option to apply to the minister for an exemption from nondetectable Fusarium. However, he said that the committee does not have the power to simply issue an exemption and that an area has to request an exemption.

At the last FAC, in 2012, there was no consensus on accepting a detectable level of Fusarium to which the entire province could adapt. This is due to the fact that southern Alberta had an increased incidence of the disease over the last few years while some parts of Alberta only reported trace levels. At the time parts of northern Alberta wanted to keep the nondetectable level on seed to prevent Fusarium from entering their area. As such, Agriculture and Rural Development retain the nondetectable of Fusarium on seed intended for propagation as referred to in section 22 of the Alberta pests act.

Last year the chair of the province's Fusarium Action Committee stated that the Fusarium management plan was being reviewed by plant pathologists. In addition, he noted that it was hard to guarantee that certified seed moving from Alberta and Saskatchewan was Fusarium free.

Madam Speaker, it's very evident that the debate regarding zero-tolerance Fusarium levels continues. On the one hand, it adversely impacts our farmers by giving our neighbours in other provinces who do not have zero-tolerance Fusarium levels a competitive advantage. It also hurts the agricultural community's important role in building Alberta and diversifying our economic base. On the other hand, I also recognize northern Alberta's concerns about wanting to keep the nondetectable level on seed to prevent Fusarium from entering their area. The conversation on Fusarium must continue until an agreement satisfying all parties can be reached.

Once again, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for bringing forward Bill 201. Her passion for agricultural issues and concern regarding the future competitiveness and financial well-being of farmers is evidenced in this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 201 today. I'm going to speak a little bit differently about it rather than the growing of crops. I'm mainly a cattle producer, and there is some concern about feeding grain that has this Fusarium in it. Basically, our cows graze standing corn, and it's my understanding that a lot of the Fusarium is brought in by corn, so that's kind of where the problem started. I just started in the last couple of years, so it's not my fault that it came in. It's just been recently.

I would also like to see, you know, some inoculation for Fusarium within the corn so that we can stop that coming in because when cattle do eat it, it is a risk to cattle if they get a high enough concentration. Also, the birds: pheasants are a big concern in our area. We see a drastic decline in the number of pheasants. So when they're out feeding on the crops, we want to protect them also.

With the issue with the grains, the wheat and the barley, I think it's really important that we get a handle on this. You know, we can say that we want to keep the percentage at zero, but it's not going to happen. We're not there. We've got it, so now we have to deal with it, and I think this bill really goes to show a way that we are going to be handling this situation. It's very important. In my constituency there are hundreds of thousands of acres of crops being grown, and that's a lot of livelihoods. There's a lot of seed production in my area and families that sell seed with these companies and grow the seed, so it's a huge issue. I think, as some of the other members have stated, the Member for Little Bow, it's like getting the flu shot. It has to have a little bit in it to stop the spread, and I think this is a good example of how we can stop the spread. It is very important to all of Alberta.

It, you know, being an airborne issue, we can't stop the wind from blowing. I know there are many times in my area that we would like to stop the wind from blowing, but it doesn't seem to happen, so it's going to continue to become an issue. This is a good way to stop this issue or prevent it and do what we can. We can't just sit back and say that it's going to solve itself. It's not. We have to take some steps to ensure that we can protect our crops and our livelihoods, basically.

We see some issues in the cattle industry. You know, with the amount of grain being produced in Alberta, there are lots of cattle on feed. There are other diseases out there that we didn't have before, and all of a sudden we see them springing up in the area, so we have to be active and we have to find different vaccines. It's a continual progression in the vaccines that we use so that we can keep our herds safe, and this goes along with the safety of our herds, the safety of chickens. We have some chicken producers in our area and dairies and hog producers, and the different animals have a higher or lower tolerance for it.

It's definitely a very good process that the member is taking in getting this started. I think we can see by the number of people who have spoken – we haven't heard anybody speak against it yet. If there is anybody against it, I'd like to hear their arguments of why they're against it. So far everybody is speaking for it. That's a good thing. You know, it's just finding the challenges and dealing with the challenges rather than trying to ignore them. We have to step up and do our part to protect Albertans and our livestock.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister – Family and Community Safety.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, brought forward by the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. The colleague across the aisle is a friend of mine. I had an opportunity to ride a combine for the first time this past summer and experience some of the agricultural issues and talk to some folks in her constituency. I'm always happy as an urban MLA to help support rural issues because they're really not rural issues; they're Alberta issues. They affect all of us if we want to have food on our plates.

Agriculture is Alberta's largest renewable industry. That is an important thing to note. It accounts for $12 billion in farm cash receipts. That was in 2012 alone. I had a chance to spend some time with our agriculture minister out in the Medicine Hat area, an area that is very close to my heart. That was where I had my first television job and, certainly, where I had a chance to speak to a lot of constituents in that area about issues that they're dealing with out there. I know that the Bow Island area grows almost 100 per cent of the catnip in North America. Certainly, those areas are extremely important. Considering that Canada is quickly becoming one of the countries that produces more food than it consumes, more in-depth conversations on the state of agriculture in this province I think are essential.

Prior to my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock bringing up the issue of Fusarium and bringing it to my attention, I must admit I was pretty naive about the intricacies of crop production and the issues that farmers face. Certainly, it's been an education for me. I was aware of the farmers' worries about precipitation levels, temperature fluctuations, and some of the other visibly tangible issues like hail damage, but knowledge of farmers also having to take into account risks that are not so visible to the naked eye, like Fusarium, was unknown to me. So that's why I applaud my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for bringing this issue out for a very public and important discussion. It's essential for all Albertans, as I've said, rural and urban. To be aware of the complex issues that farmers face I think is important in order for them to be successful. It's important for all of us.

The purpose of the hon. member's bill is to reclassify Fusarium graminearum as a nuisance by amending the Agricultural Pests Act to accept a Fusarium tolerance of .5 per cent. Now, I'm a bit torn on how to side with the proposed changes in this bill. My fellow members of the Legislature have already brought valid points on both sides of the argument, and it leads me to think about what we can accomplish if we focus our efforts on new developments in seed technology. I know these things are happening in Alberta right now. I've had a chance to speak to some of the people who do this fine work, and I'm so glad that we have the level and depth of knowledge that we have on these technologies.

I've learned that Fusarium is not specific to wheat and barley, but it's also been rampant in basil and other herbs. I know that in the Bow Island area we certainly have some wonderful companies growing herbs out in that area. While Alberta's economy doesn't hinge on the success of the basil market, it's important to note that a leading researcher at the University of Massachusetts has been able to develop a Fusarium-resistant sweet basil. It's currently being monitored and retested in case the Fusarium fungus mutates and overcomes the resistant mechanism in the strain. However, no signs of this have surfaced.

Madam Speaker, I refer to this case because I know Alberta is a place where innovation and seed technology is essential to the continued growth and viability of the agriculture sector. I've driven throughout the province, and I've noticed the signs on land that is testing new strains of seed. When I see those signs, I often ask myself about how far we have come in agriculture because of the unwavering dedication of Albertans to innovation. I want to take the time to quote our hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, who said that innovation and diversification in all of our sectors are the key to Alberta's long-term success. Nowhere is that more true than agriculture, already Alberta's second-largest industry.

Madam Speaker, that brings me back to the issue at hand about changing the acceptable levels of Fusarium in seed from zero tolerance to .5 per cent. I ask the question: is changing the levels the answer, or should we focus our efforts on solving the problem instead of finding a way to tolerate the problem? I understand the economic downfalls that face farmers when their seed is rejected because of detected Fusarium. However, where do we stop going down what could be a very slippery slope? So much like the breakthrough for the basil growers, we should be striving to develop a Fusarium-resistant strain of wheat to battle the spread of the fungus. With organizations like Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Alberta really does have the tools to target our pioneering background and work towards this growing fungal problem.

People often refer to the Alberta advantage based on our low tax rates in comparison to other jurisdictions, but I really think that the Alberta advantage is really about our human capital. Just last week Bill 1, the Savings Management Act, was tabled in the Legislature, and one of the highlights was the agriculture and food innovation endowment. The endowment fund highlights innovation and diversification as essential to the long-term sustainability and competitiveness of our agriculture industry. It's a $200 million endowment, and it provides enhanced funding for basic and applied agriculture research in Alberta, but it also supports value-added product development and commercialization activity.

Madam Speaker, is our solution to the Fusarium issue in maybe pairing our human capital with this endowment to produce a made-in-Alberta solution? Is our best course of action against an issue where members of this House have heard arguments extremely for and against – personally, I lean toward developing new seed technologies to aid in mitigating the spread of Fusarium. However, we know that new technologies don't happen quickly. In the meantime our farmers in southern Alberta are facing profit losses as Fusarium becomes more prevalent in the spread from our neighbours to the east. The importance of keeping our farmers competitive isn't just limited to their financial livelihood but the livelihood of Alberta's agriculture and the livelihood of people whose tables are filled by Alberta farmers. The success of farmers in the north is not mutually exclusive to the farmers in the south affected by Fusarium. We rise and fall as a province, and a solution has to be found to address concerns on both sides of the argument.

Madam Speaker, I realize I'm not a leading expert on seed development, nor are any of my colleagues in this House. That's not our job as MLAs. Our job is to ensure that experts are provided with an environment that is conducive to economic success, to innovation, and to development in all the sectors. I think with respect to my aforementioned examples of organizations like Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions and our recently announced endowment fund that the House will continue to provide the environment to develop solutions to issues like Fusarium. Like with the oil sands technology and the vigour in northern Alberta, I'm confident that Alberta experts will develop a made-in-Alberta solution that will not only address the Fusarium issues at home but can be marketed around the world.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to all of the arguments my colleagues bring forward and hope we can address the best way to mitigate the Fusarium issue. Once again I thank the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for bringing this issue to the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, introduced by the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. I would like to thank the hon. member for her effort on this bill. As the minister of agriculture has often said, any time we discuss agricultural issues and raise the profile of agriculture, it is a good day, and I would agree with him.

Madam Speaker, the purpose of Bill 201 is to review and amend the Agricultural Pests Act. Currently the act prohibits any propagation and distribution of seed, root, bulb, tuber, or any other vegetable containing a pest. Fusarium graminearum and several other Fusarium species are plant pathogens that cause a serious fungal disease called Fusarium head blight, FHB. This disease affects wheat, barley, oats, and corn and, of course, lowers the quality, as we've heard over and over again today. Landowners and seed, grain, and feed processors have responsibility to control, destroy, or prevent the establishment of Fusarium as outlined in the act and respective regulation.

Madam Speaker, Fusarium is not new to Alberta producers. It's been present in Alberta since 1989. Initially it was found only at low levels. However, over the years there have been increased incidences in severity in parts of central and southern regions of the province, and in the last few years we have seen even more occurrences in the south.

As outlined in the Agricultural Pests Act, municipal authorities have the responsibility to enforce pest control and enhance management measures within their jurisdictions. Because of this we cannot ignore the input from our municipalities. I'd like to take this opportunity to address the positions of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. Madam Speaker, I understand that there is divided opinion among municipalities and counties regarding the zero-tolerance classification. Many farmers whose crop fields are free from this infection support the current zero-tolerance practice. This would allow them to better control the quality of the seed they buy and protect their land from Fusarium contamination. However, other producers, whose fields are infected with Fusarium, feel the pest act does not properly protect their interest. This puts Alberta seed growers at a disad-vantage because zero-tolerance for Fusarium would impede their productions.

As a result of this concern Fusarium has been a topic of resolutions at the past two Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties conventions. During the 2013 AGM resolution 6-13S, Fusarium graminearum, recommended that the association support the Alberta government's support for zero per cent tolerance for Fusarium graminearum. It states that crop producers and the agricultural industry in Alberta have experienced economic losses as a result of lowered-quality crops due to Fusarium. In addition, at certain concentrations Fusarium also presents a health risk to livestock. Therefore, the resolution urges the government to support mandatory testing for Fusarium graminearum prior to grains entering any seed cleaning plant or mobile cleaning unit, to prevent spreading the disease. This resolution was defeated. On the other hand, resolution 5-13F, Agricultural Pests Act – Fusarium graminearum, which supports the reclassification of Fusarium as a nuisance, was also defeated.

Madam Speaker, the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development recognizes the impacts of Fusarium. After an extensive consultation in 2002 it released the first comprehensive Alberta Fusarium graminearum management plan. That's a mouthful. The management plan outlines the objectives of the government and other stakeholders to control and manage Fusarium. It states that "municipalities have the authority to enhance the standard for any named pest within their own jurisdiction," and the ultimate responsibility lies with "the owner or the occupant of the land." However, the reality is that in places where Fusarium has been found, the management plan is often ignored. Some municipalities and agricultural producers feel that a zero tolerance level of Fusarium is unattainable. In addition, it raises into question of the effectiveness of the management plan set out in 2002.

I have had the opportunity to meet with members of the Agricultural Service Board from across the province. I've met with members in my own community, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, in the agricultural community, and the members from my community are divided on this issue. We've heard that a couple of times here today, with members presenting different opinions. I know that many of my colleagues from northern Alberta are concerned about the change in the level.

But once again I would really like to thank the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for her hard work on this bill, because it raises an important issue that affects Alberta's agricultural sector. As I've mentioned earlier, municipalities and counties have expressed differing opinions on the proposed amendment due to each region's unique condition, and as I mentioned, the members of my community of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are also divided.

As agriculture is our largest renewable resource, I would like to make an amendment, Madam Speaker. I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, be amended by deleting all the words after "That" and substituting the following:

Bill 201, the Agricultural Pests (Fusarium Head Blight) Amendment Act, 2014, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has moved an amendment to Bill 201. We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the amendment to each person.

Hon. members, this is a debatable motion, and any member who wishes to speak on this motion has up to 10 minutes to do so.

Mr. Donovan: I'd be more than happy to let my colleague from Edmonton-Centre get up to go on this.

I thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for this amendment, taking it to Resource Stewardship. Just a couple of clarification things on it, I guess, as my understanding is that this will be the first thing that goes up, and then it'll be dealt with right away. It kind of intrigues me a little bit, because I know there are some agricultural producers on that side of the floor that either have rented their farms out or are current farmers from northern Alberta, which kind of seems to be a bit of the split, and I haven't heard a whole lot from them. So maybe in Resource Stewardship they'll let their feelings be known, their thoughts of what some of their constituents think of it up there.

Now, it is interesting that this has been brought before the Fusarium Action Committee in Alberta to begin with, so it is nice to see that this might actually get dealt with right away. I assume that it's a very friendly amendment from one member to another on this, to be able to offer it. I'm getting the nod that, yeah, it looks to be a friendly amendment on that.

Now, I guess the question is on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, the background of the people on that committee. I don't have the actual list in front of me of the people who are on that committee, to see what their background is on it. When you send something to committee, you want to make sure that the people on that committee have a good background in it because you don't generally send it to a committee just for input if they don't have any good history on it. It'd be interesting also to see where the minister is on this, if this is a direction that he sees it going, because then you'd wonder if it shouldn't maybe be a government bill rather than playing along with this.

The notice of amendment, I think, has some positives to it as long as there are people on the Resource Stewardship Committee that have a good background in it. I'm just not sure off the top of my head who's on that committee. I'm just trying to think. If I can buzz quickly – my colleague from Edmonton-Centre always has this kind of information. Oh, look at her. Thank you very much. As I look at this, there's definitely some – I mean, all colleagues in here are always good people on committees, or they wouldn't be on them. Just to make sure they have the background on it, I'm going through that.

Ms Blakeman: Hey, I'm on it.

Mr. Donovan: Right there alone, that makes it worth while.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. But I'm not a renowned expert in Fusarium.

Mr. Donovan: Never question somebody's quality on it.

But it is interesting to see that some of the people who have spoken in favour of it are on this committee. Also, it's good to see that there's a cross-section here. The Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley is also on here, which is good because I know his vast history in agriculture, and as a past producer he would definitely have something to add to it. One of the things there is to make sure that the committee is balanced out on what they're going to do with it.

One of the clarification points for the motion, though, is: what's the actual timeline for it to go to committee and come back? When my constituents ask me . . .

Mr. Campbell: Six months.

Mr. Donovan: Six months? That's pretty fast for government. That's not bad.

It's a process that we can go through. At least it's on the Order Paper, and something can be dealt with then. I was surprised that they hadn't come up with this revelation before they tabled the bill so that maybe the government motion could be on it. As long as the member that's presenting the bill is happy with that, I think there are some positives. At least it's moving forward.

So in six months, once that motion is done, it will come back this fall – I guess I'm making sure of the process – then it comes back to a committee, and then they'll have the report. Then, just to clarify, if the committee recommends it to go forward or they decide to six-pack it, what's the process from there if they allow it to go forward? I guess I'd just like clarification before I say that it's a good idea to go through that, to make sure that if, for instance, it goes to committee, the committee recommends back to us that we proceed with it: does that get done, then, this fall, or is it done when the committee presents their process?

Ms Blakeman: The following session.

Mr. Donovan: Okay. The following session, afterwards.

That's, I guess, some progress. If they decide to give it the old heave-ho, the committee does the same thing. They report back here, and then they report the recommendations from the committee back to this House. Is there a time, being new at the process of how this works, that we'd be able to raise the conversation again and go against what the committee has on it or that every MLA could vote on it in a standing vote, or it is purely a committee thing? It kind of lays all the cards on the table that way so that everybody would know what everybody was thinking and whether they're supporting it or not.

Ms Blakeman: They can come report back to the Assembly to keep going.

Mr. Donovan: To keep going.

So, for instance, if the committee brought it back – this is, I mean, a process question, and I'm glad we have such an abundance of knowledgeable people in here on how the process works. Sorry, Madam Speaker. If the committee comes back and says, "No, we don't recommend it," what's the process from there? What would be done with it? There's another motion, then, that you could go to from that. Even though the committee says, "We don't believe in it," we could actually make a motion to bring it forward and go from there. That's interesting. That's something I'd like to do.

Again, I don't want to see this get lost in the process, where maybe a couple of people don't think it's a good idea and it gets lost. I know this member has put a ton of work into this and, in all honesty, definitely has caused quite a debate amongst everybody in doing it. It has been a bit of a conversation piece in different parts of Alberta, and it's not that all southern Alberta people think it's great, as the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat had brought up. You know, there are definitely some producers in his area that are questioning the validity of the bill. It is good to see.

I think this is definitely something that we don't need to bury our head in the sand on; we need to actually deal with it. So I would support the amendment from the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to take it to the committee on resource stewardship according to Standing Order 74.2 and hope that that actually gives us a full conversation on it and that we'll be able to come to the committee and give our recommendations and points also.

Those are my thoughts on it. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a couple of quick points. First of all, I just want to make sure that the member understands that the minister for agriculture is in support of this going to committee, to answer his question.

I think the other thing that's important, Madam Speaker, is that the reason we go to committee is that we have a chance for experts and stakeholders to come and make their presentations. The makeup of the committee is not as important as the fact that people can come and make presentations to the committee, and then we have our well-rounded debate as to what the pros and cons are for this bill going forward. I'm not as concerned about who's on the committee as I am about who's going to come in front of the committee, and this gives us the ability to have these people come forward and actually educate Members of the Legislative Assembly on some of the pros and cons dealing with this important bill.

I'll leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Madam Speaker, I'm not sure whether to support this or not. What used to happen in this House with motions and bills from private members who are on the government side was that they got hoisted, so they sort of disappeared into the netherworld, never to be seen again. Now we send them to committee, which I would like and hope to see as a positive move, but, I think, often it's fairly akin to simply hoisting the bill because it disappears forever and doesn't come back to the Assembly with any vigour, or it comes back with a recommendation not to proceed. I do recognize the amount of work that not only the sponsoring member but all of the members I've heard talking about this have put into this issue, and I really wish that we could get a better process so that we could get a decision.

We've just spent some time debating it. A lot of people have spent time talking about it. Now it's going to go to a committee which, you know, hopefully, is able to call on some experts, as the Government House Leader suggested, but at the end of that we get a real decision, one that the government can move forward on or not. But this sort of constant moving it around to different places: you just end up with no predictability on an issue and, frankly, very little ability for my colleagues to go back to their constituents and say, "The decision was this" and carry forward from there. We seem to spend a lot of time just kind of shuffling the issue itself around through a series of other parliamentary processes. I really hope that when this goes to the committee, it's able to do a thorough job on it, and it comes back with a very clear decision.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 201 carried]

Mr. Campbell: Madam Speaker, we can call it 5 o'clock, if you like, and move on to Motion 501.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that we call it 5:00 and move on to Motion 501.

[Motion carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Combined Low Expenditure Assessments

501. Ms Blakeman moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to distribute revenue from combined low expenditure assessments on a province-wide, per capita basis to municipalities, towns, districts, and counties.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am going to try to have less paper on my desk and try and do this off the computer. I hope it works.

Thank you very much, everyone, for being here to consider Motion 501, which I am moving on to the floor for debate. I can add Métis settlements in there. But what I mean is that what we know as the linear property tax or the industrial property tax, as collected currently, be redistributed on a per capita basis throughout the province.

When I approach issues, I often say: "Well, okay. Is there a problem? Does it need government participation to resolve it? Do they need to intervene, or do they need to create or take something away? Does this particular government process address the problem?" I would argue that, in fact, all three of those criteria are being fulfilled here. Yes, we have a problem. Municipalities are underfunded. What's a municipality? It's a higher density community of people that are sharing a smaller geographic area and a larger population. We would usually define it as a village or a town or a city. But it does not include a rural, sparsely populated area.

We have municipalities that are, given the tax tools that they have right now, unable to deal with growth – the bottom line is that everybody's yelling at them – and they're unable to provide the modern services that they want to. So if they want to try and be a greener municipality and provide public transit, for example, they're pressed to find enough money to do that. Certainly, the city of Edmonton was having to look, in the last budget, toward the government to get additional money to be able to fund the LRT, which is something that's very important to the citizens of Edmonton. We actually have a situation now where municipalities are told how much debt they can run. How indicative is that of a problem, that no one is told, "You can't run a deficit or a debt"? In fact, what the province says is: you can run a debt up to this amount. I think that's a very bad sign for how municipalities are being funded.

I want to stop here and extend my thanks to Don Good and North Darling and a number of mayors and councillors who have advised and educated me on this particular issue and over a number of years as well. I appreciate their sticking this out with me.

Much of this tax that I'm talking about, which is known under several names – combined low expenditure assessment or a linear property tax or an industrial property tax – is really rooted in history. Let me be clear here. I'm not talking about how the property is assessed. I'm not talking about what the mill rate is. I'm talking about redistributing the tax once it's collected. How it's assessed, how the mill rates are established, what the certain percentage is: that's a whole other conversation I am not having today. I'm talking about redistributing the final amount that is available from the collection of this particular tax.

I specifically am interested in redistributing this tax on a per capita basis so that every area would have access to the tax money and not, as is currently happening, quite a small number of people.

When I look at history – and let's look at work and productivity – in 1920 the GDP from agriculture was 75 per cent. The province changed a lot. By 2010 the GDP from agriculture was 1.8. So it went from 75 per cent to 1.8 per cent of the province. The population, which is the other part of this equation here, in 1900 was 75 per cent rural. That makes perfect sense. But in 2011 the population was 83 per cent urban. Just to note, Alberta is the third-highest urban population province in Canada, behind Ontario and B.C. We have a lot of people that live in urban areas.

What we've had is the population migrating from rural to urban, and we've had the money earned, or the productivity, move from agriculture to, in order, energy, finance and real estate, construction, business and commercial services, retail and wholesale, transportation and utilities, manufacturing, and so on down. At this point agriculture is the very last on the list.

Now, I want to be clear here that I am not dissing agriculture. I am not against family farms. I am not saying that agriculture isn't valued. I think it is valued. If anything, it's increasingly valued as we start to understand food safety, where our food is coming from, being able to know where it was grown. Is it organic food? Is it within the hundred miles diet? Is it within an area that we can get the food from if something was to happen? That has become increasingly important in everybody's book. This is not to say that agriculture and the production of agriculture is not valued. It is, and I want to be really clear about that.

What I'm talking about is a tax that is being collected based on a historic situation that no longer exists and happenstance. The access to this property tax or linear tax or CLEA has decreased as the populations have increased. In 1996 the urban areas accessed $97.7 million. In 2010 we actually accessed less of this money: $81.5 million. More people; less money. The rural areas in 1996 accessed $463.6 million. In 2010 that had gone up to $1,356,000,000. That's a lot, a lot of money.

Taxes are used by all levels of government to pay for the programs and services for their citizens. The province and the feds have access to income tax; the more people that are working or the more they're earning, the more money the province and the feds make without lifting a finger. The municipalities have very limited tax tools. Their biggest one is property tax, and property tax does not deal with growth.

Here we have a tax that is collected on entities that have little or no cost to the governing bodies. These linear taxes, for example, are collected on telecommunications systems, on transmission lines, on pipelines, on railways, on cogeneration, and on a machinery and equipment tax. That doesn't cost the local area very much. I mean, they don't maintain the railroads, for example, or the oil and gas wells or the pipelines. They maybe have to put in a road occasionally, but once the road is built, it's built. That's why these are called low-expenditure assessments. Once they're in there, it requires very little money to keep them up. To quote Dr. McMillan, an economics professor: linear property taxes are associated with no or, at best, relatively little additional expenditure; their effect is much like that of an unconditional grant to a community. So we have many people who cannot access much of this tax, and each year they access less of it.

Now, I spoke earlier about Albertans' very strong ethic about fairness, and I would say: is it fair that villages, towns, and cities get $28 per person of linear taxes collected in this province but rural, sparsely populated areas get $1,930, almost $2,000, per person? No, it's not fair.

It's not fair that the MD of Bonnyville and the county of St. Paul, which have inside those areas the towns of Bonnyville, St. Paul, and Elk Point and the summer villages of Glendon, Horseshoe Bay, Bonnyville Beach, and Pelican Narrows – well, the MD and the county have 50 per cent of the regional population, but they access 78 per cent of the regional property tax.

So I ask for your support in urging the government to redistribute this particular tax. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to participate in the debate on Motion 501, brought forth by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Motion 501 reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to distribute revenue from combined low expenditure assessments on a province-wide, per capita basis to municipalities, towns, districts, and counties.

At first glance this seems like a somewhat harmless motion, but if you examine it closely, there are many potential issues here. Madam Speaker, I'd like to take a couple of minutes just to outline some of those issues.

First of all, a little background would help. The term "low-expenditure assessment" was coined by a former Peace River councillor, but it is not a term that is used by the government of Alberta nor anyone else. Low-expenditure assessments refer to linear properties – machinery and equipment, electrical cogeneration facilities, and railway properties – most of which are located in rural municipalities such as a municipal district or county.

The problem with this, Madam Speaker, is that this statement that low-expenditure assessments come with no cost to municipalities is simply not true. These counties have roads to maintain; these linear assessments all have infrastructure surrounding them. Simply because you're not out there on a daily basis maintaining something doesn't mean that it doesn't come with a cost. Maintaining the road is not a matter of building the road and then it's done. With the amount of equipment moving on these roads to maintain those linear assessments and also to keep industry moving in rural Alberta, those roads as well as the bridges and the other infrastructure are under constant repair and rebuilding.

The councillor argued that these properties generate significant property tax revenues from the municipalities in which they are located while requiring minimal or no expenditures for municipal services. Well, part of that statement is true. They can provide significant tax revenue for those municipalities, but those municipalities all pass budgets that include those assessments, as every other municipality does. That means that those revenues are poured back into that municipality, and they're used to maintain the infrastructure required.

The rural municipalities that have access to a lot of the linear assessments use those revenues to create economic opportunity in rural Alberta. I don't think we can understate the importance of that. With $77 billion a year being generated by rural Alberta, rural Alberta is truly the engine here driving the rest of this province. We have to understand that this money from linear assessments helps to drive that engine. It helps to keep it going. To suggest that we would somehow ask rural municipalities to tax their industry, tax their linear assessment property owners and that you would then take that money away from those counties and redistribute it – let's face it. Anytime we redistribute anything in this province on a per capita basis, it's great for Edmonton and Calgary and a couple of other larger centres, but the rest of Alberta gets nothing out of that. That's exactly what would happen here.

Rural Alberta needs the support of linear assessments in order to revitalize their towns, their communities, and their villages. They work together, with each other, and that's where the solution to this lies. It doesn't lie in taking something away from one and redistributing it on some kind of a social program to the rest of Alberta. What it does come from is that working together with each municipality, allowing them to work on solutions on their regional basis, on their own terms is by far the best way to go with this, Madam Speaker.

To legislate this, to suggest that we would be forcing mostly counties to be giving up their linear assessments in order to benefit all of Alberta, is certainly not fair to anyone in those counties. Taking the wealth from rural Alberta and distributing it in larger urban centres: well, that may be fair in the eyes of urban centres, but it's certainly not fair in the eyes of rural Alberta.

I would encourage all members to vote against this motion not because it's not an issue, not because it's not something that we do need to address. We do need to talk about this, and we do need to be constantly encouraging municipalities to get together, to form the partnerships, the alliances that make for a healthy rural Alberta. But this is truly the wrong method to do that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address Motion 501, and I thank both the Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing it forward and my colleague from Banff-Cochrane for adding to the debate.

Here's what we know, Madam Speaker. We know that all municipalities in Alberta are feeling the pain of chronic under-funding. We know that the current patchwork of grants is not sufficient for them. We know that this Premier and this government promised that MSI funding would go up across the board and that that promise was subsequently broken upon last year's budget. We know that there was a small bump in last week's budget, but it was certainly not enough to make up for the funding inequities that exist in our province.

Now, as a result of some of these things that we know, my colleagues and I in the last election and recently reannounced our 10-10 community infrastructure transfer. What that provides is stable, long-term block funding for municipalities, Madam Speaker. It takes the five main grants that this government currently has, whether that be MSI, waste water, GreenTRIP, strategic transportation grants, combines them all into one, and then divvies that up in a formula that would be somewhat similar to the MSI formula that is currently in place.

We don't necessarily know that the MSI formula is perfect. We're currently in the process of asking all municipalities across this province to give us their feedback on that formula. What we do know is that the MSI formula is far more fair and equitable than just a simple per capita distribution. I would suggest that this motion is doomed to fail on a number of levels. Distribution on a per capita basis would be completely inequitable to rural Alberta, and it's certainly not a formula that we would ever support in terms of municipal funding. We know that right now they take in, for example, the number of kilometres of roads that various municipalities in rural communities have to maintain. It's one of many things, but redistributing this wealth on just a per capita basis is not acceptable.

What this motion is really proposing is a massive redistribution of wealth. I can understand why many individuals in urban centres would look at this and salivate at the thought of more money because there are funding shortfalls across this province for our municipalities. But I would remind members in this Assembly that those who do not learn their history are doomed to repeat it, and I bring up an example of a parallel I would like to share about what history can teach us around a system like this.

In 1980, Madam Speaker, due to a disagreement on revenue sharing between Alberta and the federal government, the federal government unilaterally imposed something, that has been very well known here in Alberta, called the national energy program. Now, the Liberal mindset of the federal government in Ontario and based in Quebec was that Alberta had a small population that could not influence the outcome of an election with the few seats that they had to offer. So why should this rural province have all this additional wealth that it was able to generate based on the oil and gas sector? At the time revenues were going up dramatically.

So what the federal government decided to do was take this massive amount of wealth unilaterally and to redistribute it. One of the problems with that – obviously, there are a number of them – is that there hasn't been a Liberal MP elected in this province since that ill-advised plan. It created severe distrust of the federal government here in Alberta, and it begs the question: why would we ever consider doing the exact same thing right here within our province?

Now, I have grown to respect the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Perhaps it should come as no surprise that, you know, a member of the Liberal Party of Alberta would put forward a motion that would emulate the theory of Pierre Trudeau around redistribution of wealth. It is, without question, one of the most infamous attacks on our province. If you ask any Albertan about their thoughts on the national energy program, they would label it one of the most divisive, detested, disrespectful, and contemptuous policies in the history of our country. I just don't believe that recreating a system like that by taking this wealth from our rural communities is the answer.

Is there a problem? Perhaps there is a problem. We've identified that. We've agreed on that. The Member for Edmonton-Centre outlined that there is a problem in that municipalities are underfunded – we certainly agree with that – but we do not accept nor do we support the idea that taking the combined low expense assessment, or the linear assessment, away from our rural counties and redistributing on a per capita basis is the answer to that problem.

Accepting or supporting this motion I believe would be a mistake. I cannot support it, our party cannot support it, and I would encourage all of my colleagues to vote against this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Motion 501, being brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. As we have heard today, Motion 501 urges the government to distribute revenue from combined low expenditure assessments, or CLEA, on a province-wide, per capita basis to municipalities, towns, districts, and counties.

Madam Speaker, I feel that the conversation we are having today is very timely since last week our government introduced our back-in-black budget. Our plan to keep building a stronger and economically attractive Alberta was conveyed by the minister of Treasury Board and Finance. The government's budget for 2014 contains essential funding for both urban and rural municipalities. For instance, municipalities will receive more than $2 billion in direct funding from government in the '14-15 budget.

There will be an increase of $150 million over the next three years for the municipal sustainability initiative in capital. Our government will also be able to rehabilitate 2,500 kilometres of existing provincial highways, assets that help, yes, to better facilitate the flow of goods between our province and our neighbours to the south.

Yes, Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for allowing us to highlight the many funding initiatives our government has in place to help all municipalities, be they urban or rural, to succeed and thrive.

With regard to Motion 501's focus on revenue from combined low expenditure assessment I believe it would be pertinent to discuss the variety of municipal assessment types. Assessment types can include residential, farmland, nonresidential, nonresidential linear, nonresidential railway, nonresidential cogenerating, and machinery and equipment.

Linear properties are considered properties that have distribution lines or other facilities and may cross municipal boundaries. Some examples include oil and gas wells, petroleum pipelines, electric power systems, telecommunication systems, and cable television systems. Underground tanks, fuel scrubbers, compressors, chemical injectors, and metering equipment, for instance, fall under machinery and equipment. Local assessors are in charge of assessing most machinery. The assessor, who is designated by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, is responsible for assessing machinery and equipment forming part of linear property.

Railway property value is assessed at a fixed dollar amount per kilometre based on the annual tonnage transported on the rail right-of-way. Rail companies must report yearly to the local assessor the type and length of line in each municipality, and the railway property is assessed by the local assessors.

High expenditure assessment types include residential, farmland, and nonresidential, and they are considered high expenditure assessment sources. Low expenditure assessment sources include nonresidential linear, nonresidential railway, nonresidential generating, and machinery and equipment. These four types of low expenditure assessments combined form the low expenditure assessment.

Madam Speaker, most low expenditure assessments are located in rural municipalities. Albertans living in rural areas depend on the property taxes generated from these facilities, and they are used to fund essential infrastructure in those areas. A per capita redistribution of these revenues would debilitate these areas as millions of dollars would be rerouted from rural to urban centres. This would create a definitive divide between rural and urban Albertans. Our government respects and recognizes the autonomy of local governments and has the utmost faith that municipalities are positioned to make the best decisions for their citizens.

Again, our government has in place funding that strengthens both urban and rural municipalities. We must foster a united Alberta by strengthening ties with all municipalities, not just a select few.

I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for allowing us to undertake this discussion, and I look forward to hearing the views of my colleagues during the rest of today's debate. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to support Motion 501. The reason I rise to support Motion 501 is because it's about equality and fairness. As you know, combined low expenditure assessments such as power lines, rail lines, communications, nonresidential cogeneration, telephone lines, telecommunication lines, and oil and gas wells require very minimal expenditure from any municipality. Every Albertan in this province builds this province, whether you're in Edmonton or Calgary or Two Hills or Peace River or the municipal districts and counties. We all build this great province, and we are all in this together. We need to build our towns and our cities and our municipalities.

Now, the Alberta Liberal caucus was given evidence by Deputy Mayor North Darling from Peace River and Don Good, also from the Peace River area. The evidence was that of $1.5 billion worth of taxes, only 6 per cent of them went to 83 per cent of the population. Alberta used to be a very rural province. In fact, this country used to be a very rural country. But this province and this country are very urban. There has been a tremendous growth in urban Canada and urban Alberta. Eighty-three per cent of Albertans live in urban Alberta.

Madam Speaker, in an equal and fair and just society how is it possible that 83 per cent of Albertans, when we all build this province together, only get 6 per cent of the taxation and that 17 per cent of Alberta gets 94 per cent of the taxation, which is approximately $1.419 billion a year, on an annual basis?

The city of Edmonton is the hub for northern Alberta. We understand how important it is to work with northern Alberta. Their success is our success, and for those who live in Edmonton, Edmonton's success is northern Alberta's success. We're all in this together.

The city leaders are in dire need of sustainable, predictable funding to build roads and bridges and for Edmonton and Calgary the LRT. We need to move large numbers of people from all over the province and all over the country, who come to share in our prosperity, to work. We need to get them to work and get them back home. We needed our LRT a decade ago, and we need it today.

If this tax was fairly distributed on a per capita basis, that would mean $260 million out of $1.5 billion for the capital city of the greatest province in the country. That's it: $260 million. That's not a lot out of $1.5 billion. That would buy us about 2.6 to three kilometres of LRT track each and every year. Edmonton and Calgary having a good LRT system benefits all of us in this province. It takes cars off the roads, so roads won't need to be repaired so much. It reduces the amount of carbon pollution and emissions. You know what? When you have a good LRT system, people can actually get to work quicker, faster. We'll have fewer accidents on the roads. People can actually do a little bit of work when they're riding the train. Hey, they can even talk on their cellphone if they like.

Madam Speaker, this issue is the fact that this province has changed and this country has changed, and when there's change, policy must change. Maintaining an old policy that unfairly distributes $1.5 billion – we have to change.

Many of my colleagues from the Wildrose, you know, are from rural Alberta. I really appreciate the work that everyone in rural Alberta does, whether it's agriculture, the oil and gas industry. I grew up in a rural town in a farming area in a different country. I grew up in a small town in Squamish, B.C., worked in the mill. I recognize the challenges of smaller areas. I also live in the capital city in the best province and in the best country in the world. I recognize challenges in the city.

You know, I certainly hope the MLAs in the other political parties from Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, and Peace River would support this policy because this policy will go to help the areas that they represent. There are many areas in rural Alberta that don't get the share of linear taxation. It's not just urban versus rural. There are many rural communities that do not get their fair share when they all helped build this province together. This is the fundamental issue of: how do we build this province moving forward?

Madam Speaker, I guess the question is: is it fair, you know, for all the MDs and counties, that constitute 12.7 per cent of the population, to get 61.5 per cent of the funding? I can understand the economic policy of the Conservatives. It's all about trickle-down economics, right? Give a handful of people a billion dollars, and tell everybody else to eat cake. They think everything is going to trickle down to the average guy.

That's where the Alberta Liberals differ from these two Conservative parties in the House. We believe in equality of opportunity, that everyone should be given a fair chance. We believe that we're all in this together, okay? I certainly hope that the hon. members from both political parties will not be united in opposing this together. In fact, I think you should be united in supporting this together.

Most of the hon. members elected here from cities and towns from across the province: this would benefit the very citizens that you represent and help build the very cities and towns that you represent and get their leaders the essential funding that they need so they can build their infrastructure. Infrastructure is so essential, to have that sustainable, predictable funding, because infrastructure is an economic enabler. It helps to grow our economy all across the province.

Madam Speaker, to be the capital city of the greatest province in the world – you know, the roads have been in a state of disrepair. Municipal leaders have not been given the funding by this provincial government over the years. Mayors Iveson and Nenshi are not happy with the budget. They believe that they need the tools. Whether it's the tax tools, they need a fair share of revenue across this province so they can do their job. They understand that if they get a fair share of revenue on a regular basis – sustainable, predictable funding – our economy can go to the next level, and we can deal with the environmental issues. With a nice LRT system in Edmonton and Calgary our smaller cities can use this funding in other ways, maybe liquid natural gas buses. Our municipalities right now have about $8 billion of debt and about $24 billion of deferred infrastructure projects, plus or minus a couple of billion.

I ask every member here to say if it is fair, if it is right to have a disproportionate share of this go to 13 per cent of the people and the rest of Albertans . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 501, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

This motion calls for the government to ensure that urban municipalities receive their share of revenue from the combined low expenditure assessment, or CLEA. The motion will seek to do this, in turn, by ensuring that revenue is distributed on a province-wide, per capita basis.

Madam Speaker, there are multiple municipal assessment types, ranging from residential to farmland to various other nonresidential types. When considering a more complex topic such as the one which is the subject of this motion, it may be helpful to gain a broad perspective on how similar issues have been dealt with in other areas. Other jurisdictions in Canada, particularly Nova Scotia and British Columbia, have undertaken reviews of property taxation. Nova Scotia has a tax cap system for residential properties. This has been a point of contention within the business community as assessments for commercial properties have risen steeply in some areas while residential properties have not. This can place what is often seen as an undue burden on small local businesses. Several reports and studies on the CAP system have been issues within recent years. This includes the 2010-2011 review of the Nova Scotia capped assessment program.

Nova Scotia has also amended the Municipal Government Act to allow for phasing out of the business occupancy tax over several years. The 25 per cent category included hotels, motels, restaurants, campgrounds, service stations, and motor vehicle dealerships, which were eliminated in 2006. The 50 per cent category included all other businesses except for financial institutions, which were phased out over five years and eliminated in 2010. The 75 per cent category included financial institutions such as banks, trust companies, insurance companies, credit unions, and loan or investment companies, which were eliminated in 2013.

Currently a review of the property tax system is under way, which was commissioned by the Union of Nova Scotia Municipalities, the Association of Municipal Administrators, and the Property Valuation Services Corporation. The review is aimed at figuring out the best way in which to share the cost of providing local services.

Another noteworthy jurisdiction that has dealt with this issue is British Columbia. In 2010 a major industrial property steering committee was formed, and its work focused primarily on municipal property taxation of major industrial properties. The joint review was established by the province, the Union of BC Municipalities, and industry. A need was identified to make property taxes more conducive to investment while assuring local government services were provided fairly for all taxpayers. What the property tax reviews of British Columbia have in common is that they are co-operative in nature. This is in contrast to the idea of CLEA here in Alberta as the Nova Scotian and British Columbian reviews do not seek to pit municipalities against one another.

A potential shortcoming associated with the motion currently being considered by this House is the possibility that it could decrease the amount of revenue that specialized municipal districts and counties receive. Madam Speaker, we ought to be cognizant lest we stoke divisions between urban and rural municipalities needlessly. This motion carries with it the potential ramification that the financial health and economic viability of rural municipalities could be negatively impacted, which would do little to improve a co-operative spirit between urban and rural municipalities. The needs of urban and rural municipalities are not simply quantitatively but are also qualitatively distinct from one another.

Clearly, the distribution of funds on a per capita basis would favour urban municipalities, but this means of distribution may not be sensitive enough to address the different needs and circumstances of rural communities. While populations across the province may vary, requirements for infrastructure may be radically different and indeed quite expensive. I will not go into that at great length, Madam Speaker, but I do want to emphasize that per capita distribution alone may not be the most holistic way of approaching the problem.

I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. While the matter is certainly worthy of consideration, I believe alternative avenues may hold better prospects for all Albertans.

With this, I conclude my remarks and anticipate the remainder of the debate. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to take this opportunity to speak to this motion today. As a former municipal councillor I have a great deal of heart into some of the words I'm going to express in a few moments.

Firstly, I'm opposed to this motion. I feel this is a very complex issue that has been raised. It's a good issue, but it requires a different solution than what has been proposed. As it stands, I think this motion fails to consider there are significant costs in other municipalities, especially rural. You can't just look at the revenues alone. You have to look at the whole picture.

Let's face it. Today we live in a growing society. There are huge demands on our systems and our municipalities and our lifestyles. There are certainly a lot of wonderful things that we do wish to have in our municipalities to support those lifestyles, and they cost a lot of money. Certainly, we have to figure out a way to fund these things that is fair – I certainly do agree with that – but we do not need to be hindering or robbing Peter to pay Paul. That just does not work, in my view. The MSI funding that we've had for the past few years has worked to a certain degree. Although there are some deficits and it may need some tweaking, there are certainly some other things we can do, including, by the way, our proposal in Wildrose with our 10-10 plan, that would provide an increase in funding, sustainable and predictable as well.

Nonetheless, we still have to look at how the other municipalities work. They do have in the rural areas a high amount of costs. Just let me express some of those costs to you. I don't know if the Member for Edmonton-Centre has considered that the infrastructure alone in rural municipalities is huge. They have 72 per cent of Alberta's roads. They have 59 per cent of the bridges, and some of these things can cost a half mil to a million dollars per kilometre to build and maintain. These are enormous, yet they have small populations. They have small amounts of commercial property. They have lesser amounts of a tax base compared to a huge city like Edmonton. How can you take away the funding that they depend on to maintain all these roads that all Albertans wish to use and not replace it with something for them? If you're going to take it away, you have to replace it with something else. Our 10-10 plan would provide that.

I would suggest to the House that regardless of the solution, this particular solution is not going to be the answer. There are a number of things that we can do together, I think, to improve the revenue stream, but taking the linear assessment and some of the other things that they're indicating that they want to combine with it in this plan is definitely not the way to go. Therefore, I cannot support this proposal, and I urge the rest of the House to consider that in their voting this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Many of the comments that I was going to make have already been said; however, I think some of them bear repeating. I will not be supporting the motion. As a municipal politician in a small urban municipality for 11 years I am well aware of the underfunding in all municipalities, not just Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer but the villages, towns. We're all suffering, some to a lesser extent than others, but still we're suffering.

As an AUMA board member for 11 of those years as well, along with my colleague from Banff-Cochrane, who has spoken very well on the issue – I think that he has mentioned much of what I would have said. He pointed out many of those issues. Cities like Edmonton and Calgary do have special needs; there's no question. My little village of Beiseker is not going to be putting in an LRT system any time soon, but we do have infrastructure problems. We have infrastructure deficits. There are programs that can help those situations. The GreenTRIP should be carried on. That can fund those types of special transportation issues.

In early spring of last year I did a tour as a Municipal Affairs critic in northern Alberta, and I talked to urban centres. I talked to rural MDs and counties. Yes, there are lot of MDs and counties that have a real high linear tax assessment base, but there are others that don't. So it's not an equal amount everywhere we go. Like my colleague, I don't believe in robbing Peter to pay Paul. I don't think the issue is that Peter has too much. I think the issue that we should address is that Paul doesn't have enough. How do we fix that issue? I firmly believe that the Wildrose 10-10 plan will do that. We will bring that municipal funding up to where MSI should have been, as was promised us many years ago. We will bring that up and add to it.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre, when she made her opening comments regarding the CLEA, or the combined low expenditure assessment, made a statement that I think she may want to retract. She included industrial assessment in her opening statements. She might want to be careful what she wishes for because Edmonton, I'm sure, has a very high industrial tax assessment. Does she want to share that with the rest of us? I wouldn't think so.

Just to get back to our 10-10 plan here, we will sit with both associations, and we'll come up with a formula based on, I would suspect, much like how MSI is distributed now, with some tweaking, and we'll come to a consensus with both associations so that all municipalities in the province going forward receive substantial funding increases so that they can address all of their issues as well.

I'm sorry, but I cannot support this motion, and I would encourage others not to either. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise, to be here today to talk about this important issue. I can certainly tell you that in my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner, which contains lots of small communities, every community that I go to has an idea about how to spend the money that the county or the MD has.

It reminds me of the story that's told about Vice-president Biden in the last presidential election in the U.S., when it came out that Mitt Romney, the other candidate, had donated $3 million in charitable donations the previous year whereas Vice-president Biden had contributed an awful lot less, somewhere in the order of $300. When he was asked about this, he said that, well, yeah, sure; I've only donated $300 of my own money, but I've donated $50 million of yours.

I think that it's common practice to be willing to look at what somebody else has and to find a way to spend that for them. Certainly, the small municipalities and the larger ones in our province are underfunded, but I don't think this is the solution to that. There may be one or two counties that do have an excess of funds, but I can guarantee you that the majority of the counties do not. As has been mentioned, they have great expenses as well with a small population. One size simply does not fit all.

We know that the province has downloaded additional responsibilities onto counties and MDs as well as municipalities, and they haven't maintained the funding to the appropriate level. In my own little village of Stirling, for example, and in the villages and towns surrounding us, they were hit hard during this current budget year, the one that's just ending, and had to make significant cuts. People lost their jobs, people had to work extra hard, and of course if it wasn't for the spirit of volunteerism that's so common in small towns, likely we wouldn't have been able to accomplish as much as we were able to do.

One of the issues that we have with part of the current funding approach, with the grants, is that you have an awful lot of creative writing taking effect in these communities, with grant application writers trying to pound the round peg of their need into the square hole of the grant that's available, and that's a waste of time and energy. We need to improve the funding model so that it's level and it's predictable and it does address the additional responsibilities that have been downloaded onto our communities, all of the communities. There's no question that our major centres, Calgary and Edmonton for example, have tremendous needs and are underfunded, but I think that the issue is where the funding should come from. We certainly know that they do need to have more money coming back their way.

My company was one of the oil field service companies that endured the national energy program and survived. I went to Ottawa, in fact, and met with the energy minister, Marc Lalonde, to discuss why he was doing something that was so arbitrary and so harmful to western Canada, particularly Alberta. He didn't have any satisfactory answers. He basically said that he was putting us in our place, that we were getting too big for our britches. That wasn't a very satisfactory answer. It wasn't very comforting either because we were laying off people. We had families that were impacted by this.

I just don't think that the solution that's being proposed is the proper solution. The problem exists, and it's genuine, but the problem isn't that some counties have too much money. The problem is that communities, municipalities need to be better funded by the province, and there are ways to do this. One of the ways that you address issues like this, when revenues are the issue – it's probably true at the municipal level, too, but we certainly know it's true at the provincial level, and it's true for every business, and every businessman knows this – is that you cut your overhead when revenues are hurt. You don't cut your ability to provide the services. We've got a lot of overhead, I think, and a lot of waste in a lot of areas that need to be examined before we go about redistributing other people's wealth.

I certainly won't be supporting this, but I appreciate it being raised because it gives us an opportunity to talk about these issues, that are very real. Solutions need to be found. I just don't happen to think that this is the solution.

Thank you.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand up and talk about Motion 501. For all the good reasons heard on both sides of the House, I too am against Motion 501.

I do want to highlight three things, though, first of all how the current system is working anyway. In my constituency I have two counties, Cypress county and Forty Mile county. I bumped into one of the county councillors on the weekend, and we discussed this briefly. He pointed out to me how his county had given some side of $700,000 to the new Medicine Hat Arena, had given considerable financial help to our Esplanade in downtown Medicine Hat, which is the pride of arts and culture, and on the north side of town, close to Redcliff, had given considerable money to our Family Leisure Centre.

He also informed me that Forty Mile county, Redcliff, Bow Island, and Foremost, all the municipalities in my constituency, were great supporters of these things and had sat with the people in Medicine Hat and Redcliff and worked these things all out on a cost-sharing basis and on a fair basis.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate on Motion 501.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to close this debate. Well, this was just so much fun. I'm really, really glad I brought this forward because this is an issue that I have been concerned about for some time. Some of you may remember that I brought forward a bill in 2009 – it's kind of like the Wildrose's but not as bad – looking to take a piece of the personal income tax and set it aside in a fund that could be redistributed to municipal areas.

I'm still trying. I'm willing to stand up for urban Albertans. I will do that. I am sorry that I have so many colleagues who will not, but that is certainly what we've seen today, and it does really crystallize for me part of the problem that we are having in Alberta.

I've heard a number of people stand up and say: "Oh, we have so much infrastructure we have to pay for. We really need all of that money." Well, not exactly, actually, because the provincial government is responsible for highways and secondary roads outside of municipalities. The municipality is paying for four or five blocks' or 10 or 20 blocks' worth of roads inside of their municipality, exactly the same way the city of Edmonton is, but they're not paying for miles and miles and miles of highways or bridges. That's what the province does. That's what that tax money is paying for. So don't tell me that this linear tax is needed for municipalities to pay for this stuff because it's not true.

"Everybody needs – needs – this tax for what they're going to do." Yeah, well, so do the urban areas. They need it as well and just as much. "Well, we need it for economic development because we're doing so badly in rural Alberta that we just need extra to help us with economic development and to revitalize." Well, you know what, kids? Edmonton and Calgary, Sundre, Whitecourt, Grande Prairie, Peace River, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and any number of other towns, villages, and cities would also like to revitalize. Nobody is giving them money. No, because we want to keep it in sparsely populated rural MDs and counties so they can have economic development all on their own.

“Well, we shouldn’t rob Peter to pay Paul.” Hmm. Well, folks, guess what? That goes both ways. The populated municipalities have been forgoing this revenue for a considerable period of time so that Peter could take all the money that Paul didn’t get. So I don’t buy that argument either.

Once again, we, I and the Liberal caucus, are willing to stand up for urban Albertans. We will admit that there is a problem, and I have now brought two solutions forward to this House, only to hear them always knocked down by people that are representing large tracts of rural Alberta. Most interesting. What does that tell us? And no one else has another suggestion. “Oh, you can’t do this. Don’t touch my stuff. Good idea. Just don’t do it this way.” But no one has another suggestion of what to do, so I invite them to actually come up and do the work with another suggestion.

The Member for Stony Plain suggested that the MSI was great and that the government had given all the MSI money and that that’s all everybody needed. Oh, for heaven’s sake. Give your head a shake. There is exactly the same amount of money for MSI in this budget as there was last budget and the budget before that. There is $900 million in the budget for MSI funding. Please refer to page 174 of the estimates book and to vote 3.2, municipal sustainability initiative capital, $871,000,000. Eight hundred and seventy-one million dollars.

What they’ve done that’s tricky this year is that they added in a grant that has always been given but not coupled with the MSI. So now we’ve got the basic municipal transportation grant added in there, and we get a subtotal there of $1.2 billion. But not all of it is municipal funding. That’s including a grant that’s always been somewhere else. So there’s been no increase in MSI funding, and there isn’t going to be.

This government has never managed to come up to what they’ve been promising all the way along, and before this budget came out, they were promising $1.6 billion. Did they meet that? No. So how exactly are these municipal areas – towns, villages, summer villages, Métis settlements, larger cities, smaller cities – supposed to get this funding out of MSI when there’s been absolutely no increase whatsoever? [Ms Blakeman’s speaking time expired] Oh, darn. I was having so much fun.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, March 10, 2014

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance it's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 2, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014.

The government is requesting approximately $2,014,000,000 for operational costs, $223 million for capital projects, and $11 million for financial transactions. These amounts are necessary for the government to fulfill both its commitments for the southern Alberta flood relief during the current fiscal year as well as several initiatives and activities that are more typical of the government's more routine business.

The largest portion of these amounts, some $1.3 billion, relates to flood recovery activities such as continuing flood recovery activities to provide support and assistance to Alberta residents and municipalities; housing assistance for First Nations communities; repair or replacement of highways and education, health, and other facilities; and floodway cleanup and stabilization and restoration projects to address erosion damage.

The additional amounts mainly relate to unexpected increases in student enrolment in public and separate schools as well as school construction and related projects, postsecondary enrolment pressures, oil marketing and transportation costs, the start-up costs of the Alberta Energy Regulator, emergency response to forest fires and the mountain pine beetle, the Alberta Medical Association contract settlement and growth in physician services, volume and cost increases in drug benefit programs, programs for persons with developmental disabilities, and provincial highway preservation.

Now it is time to formalize the first part of that financial commitment, Madam Speaker. I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3

Securities Amendment Act, 2014

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again this evening on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move second reading of Bill 3, the Securities Amendment Act, 2014.

Bill 3 focuses on the over-the-counter derivatives and the harmonization of derivatives regulation in Canada. These are complicated financial instruments, Madam Speaker, and as the Minister of Finance mentioned at first reading, the lack of transparency around over-the-counter derivatives was widely seen as a contributing factor in the 2008 financial crisis. Following that crisis the International Organization of Securities Commissions introduced several new principles relating to the reduction of systemic risk, and the G-20 made recommendations to improve the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives markets. Canada along with the rest of the G-20 countries committed to strengthening the regulation of this type of investment. Bill 3 supports these international commitments made by Canada.

I'll get into some more detail about the bill in a minute, Madam Speaker, but first I think it would be instructive to say a few words about the nature of this type of investment. Derivatives generally take the form of bilateral contracts under which the parties agree to payments between them based on the value of the underlying asset or other data at a particular point in time. The main use of derivatives is to minimize risk for one party while offering the potential for high return at increased risk to another. The main types of derivatives are futures, forwards, options, and swaps. An over-the-counter derivative, which is the subject of Bill 3, is a derivative that is not listed or traded on an exchange.

So what does Bill 3 propose to do? Bill 3 creates a statutory framework for the regulation and oversight of over-the-counter derivatives, providing the Alberta Securities Commission with the authority to make rules dealing with derivatives. Under the framework proposed in Bill 3, over-the-counter derivatives would be traded through a derivatives exchange or electronic trading platform. Trades would be settled through central counterparties, and all derivatives transactions would have to be reported to a trade repository. There would also be solvency requirements. Together these measures serve to increase transparency in the derivatives market, helping to protect investors and reducing systemic risk.

The framework proposed in Bill 3 includes providing for new definitions of a derivative and classes of a derivative; enhancing or creating new definitions of important terms such as "recognized trade repository," "security," "trade," and "clearing agency"; recognizing trade repositories and adding references to them in the Securities Act where needed; expanding or clarifying powers of the Alberta Securities Commission relating to the regulation and oversight of derivatives; replacing references to exchange contracts and futures contracts with derivatives; repealing part 8 of the Securities Act, trading in exchange contracts, with requirements being moved into the rules; adding a new section, section 105.1, to provide that derivatives transactions are not void for noncompliance with Alberta securities laws, and this will harmonize Alberta with other jurisdictions like British Columbia and Ontario; amending section 147 to provide for a security of a reporting issuer to include a related derivative for purposes of insider trading obligations. Again, this amendment harmonizes with similar British Columbia and Ontario provisions.

Madam Speaker, the proposed amendments in Bill 3 will contribute to the harmonization of derivatives regulations across Canada. Provincial and territorial regulators are being encouraged to agree on a harmonized approach to regulating derivatives capable of being adopted across Canada, and this bill is certainly an important step in that direction.

We learned a lot from the 2008 financial crisis, Madam Speaker, and contributing to the reform of securities regulation is a priority for all jurisdictions, including Alberta. Bill 3 will support the ongoing collaborative work by provincial and territorial governments to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws. These changes proposed in Bill 3 will support Canada's international commitments, helping to reduce risk and contributing to public confidence in the financial sector.

Madam Speaker, for the last three years the World Bank has ranked Canada as one of the top five countries for protecting investors, ahead of the United States and the United Kingdom. We want to build on that success, and that's why the government of Alberta and the Alberta Securities Commission are committed to continuous improvement of our securities regulatory system. The commission along with provincial securities regulators in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec have been active contributors to the development of regulatory reforms for over-the-counter derivatives markets at the local, national, and international levels.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 3. Of course, this is a reintroduction of I believe it was Bill 42 from last session. I spoke to it somewhat at length there in support, so I will be brief in my comments.

Unlike in any other industrialized country, jurisdiction over securities regulations in Canada is a provincial matter. This allows provinces to react as needed to special situations that arise in provincial capital markets, a very unique example of that being Alberta and our unique needs for raising capital in our energy sector and so forth.

Capital markets are international, of course, and provinces can't go to the international stage to negotiate common rules and regulations concerning investment, and in this case specifically they can't negotiate rules regarding derivatives. This means provinces have a responsibility to move quickly to implement these international standards when they are negotiated by our federal counterparts and work well for our provincial capital markets.

In 2009 leaders of the G-20 committed to a comprehensive reform agenda dealing with systemic risk in the international derivatives market. These commitments are being turned into regulations established collaboratively with all provincial securities regulators across the country through the Canadian Securities Administration.

Bill 3 will grant the authority to Alberta Securities Commission to implement these new CSA regulations when they are finalized. This is a good example of how the Canadian system of provincial jurisdiction over securities regulation can work in the international marketplace.

Bill 3 will allow the ASC to appoint trade repositories as well. This is a much-needed measure. With its passage over-the-counter derivatives will be reported to trade repositories, thereby eliminating systemic risk. No longer will corporations be able to hide their precarious financial positions created by secret over-the-counter derivative contracts as was one of the main problems and causes of the financial recession in 2008.

Bill 3 also updates woefully inadequate definitions regarding derivatives. The use of the term "exchange contract" does not deal with the complexity of modern-day derivatives. These updates to the definition of derivatives in the Securities Act are long past due and are needed in order to make sure we don't have a repeat of what occurred less than a decade before in this regard.

With that, as Finance critic for Wildrose I support that. We support this bill, as we did last session, and look forward to its quick passage. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Although this is a well-meaning bill, it does nothing to change what we didn't learn from the 2008 debacle. It's unfortunate because what's happened here is that the international markets are really left now to allow smaller jurisdictions – in this case Alberta is a small jurisdiction, B.C. is a small jurisdiction, and Canada stands alone in trying to regulate these over-the-counter derivatives. It can and possibly will put at a disadvantage some of our businesses who want to use derivatives as a risk management tool. What is absolutely needed here is an international agreement on how we're going to deal with these instruments, not just the regulations but how they're created.

If anyone has followed the derivatives from 2008, I think everyone is quite aware of what happened. It goes back to Enron. It goes back to Long-Term Capital. Barings Bank fell victim. There's a history and a litany of major corporate interests that have fallen victim to derivative failures. What we're trying to do is create a small microcosm of regulation dealing with over-the-counter derivatives, which I fear will take certain companies just outside our jurisdiction to enter into these deals.

There is a real problem with the idea of harmonizing regulations when there are no regulations, really, outside Canada in dealing with this. Wall Street has done a pretty good job of avoiding that. So there's a real dilemma on how we're going to handle derivatives and how it will affect our local economies, particularly the companies that have put themselves in a position to use derivatives as a risk management tool.

Again, if we look at our own budget here and our own investments in Alberta for this government, we use derivatives. Now, the presumption is that we use derivatives for risk management. Beyond that, looking into our own budget, there's no way to know what our exposure is, but it's reasonable to presume the exposure is manageable because we've not seen any harm and we've not seen any great increase in derivative profits. The only thing that is available to any auditor in dealing with derivatives is if they see great gains or losses where you're no longer using derivatives for risk management; you're using derivatives to basically gamble for high net worth gains. That's where these companies have run into tremendous problems.

So I don't know how we class these, and that's one of the other things. I realize that that's what the law says, but if anyone were to even look at their own mutual funds going back, say, a decade, anyone in here who invested in a mutual fund probably owned something called a PLUS note. That stood for peso-linked U.S. dollars. They were traded as triple-A bonds, but in reality they were derivatives based on the peso. That is going on continuously in the marketplace. How do we identify these things and deal with them on a regulatory basis?

I bring up the example of PLUS notes because they were created by Wall Street banks to deal with basically worthless bonds out of the Mexican central bank, but they were offshore-type accounts, and they were sold into our markets as triple-A bonds. That goes on. That goes on all the time when they repackage these derivatives and issue them to different classes of securities.

I think the bill is well intentioned. The idea of trying to harmonize regulations is probably well intentioned, but it's woefully short to think that we succeeded in actually being able to deal with these types of financial instruments because these are international transactions. People in this House, people in my constituency don't really deal in derivatives. They may deal in exchange-traded derivatives, futures and the currency exchange and options. The real problem in derivatives is not the exchange derivative; it is the over-the-counter derivative, which is what we're trying to do.

I commend the government for doing its best, but there's a huge problem. And to think that we're solving the problem by passing legislation in Alberta, it's not touching it. What it is going to do, hopefully, is maybe set a standard, but in order to get a real hold on the risk that these instruments have caused in our financial industries, in our financial sector world-wide, we need our own federal government to step up and negotiate internationally how we're going to deal with this on a macro level because these are large banks and these are large industries which we have that are dealing with these. What I see here is that any one of our large companies that wants to deal in any of these OTC derivatives, what they're going to do is just step outside our jurisdiction because we don't then have the ability to regulate that. Most of these derivatives are not known to the public at all; they just are private agreements. So I'm not even sure how we audit these at that level.

Again, I haven't decided whether I'm going to support the bill or not. It's well intentioned, and I understand what it's trying to do, but I just don't see how it's going to get done unless we have a full international agreement on trying to regulate these. I absolutely agree with the government that there needs to be regulation. There needs to be regulation in dealing with this issue.

With that, thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you.

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. We have the five minutes for questions under 29(2)(a). Anyone interested in 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we'll move to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to speak to Bill 3, the bill before the floor that deals with derivatives and how they will be dealt with by the regulatory powers of the Alberta government. In my view this bill goes some measure to allowing for some clarity to take place with a financial instrument that, in my view and, in fact, in many people's view, was largely responsible for the '08 financial meltdown. I call it a financial meltdown. I know some people call it a correction or things of that nature. I look at it as almost an entire failure of the financial system. It was brought down as a result of corporate greed and, actually, a lack of regulation. We didn't quite have an understanding at that time of what derivatives were.

I think that if we even go back a little bit further, you know, no one really can quite pinpoint a genesis as to when the derivatives market started. Of course, Republicans will go back and blame Jimmy Carter for starting something on a housing front that apparently led to this stuff. Of course, Democrats will go down and point to something that Bush and Cheney did. Some Republicans will go back and find some things that Clinton did. So it's a he-said-she-said game of who started the derivatives or allowed derivatives to get a foothold in the marketplace.

Largely, what I think we have to look at as a result of what transpired is the fact that there needs to be some government regulation in our financial matters. I know we always like to say that, you know, we don't need regulations or the red tape, which is the euphemism for these type of rules, but at the end of the day you've got to remember that one person's red tape is another person's financial protection. We have to come to an appropriate balance in this regard. In fact, I think that if one thing – I always kind of giggle about this. There was a big push here in this country probably in the years 2001 to 2008 where many forces largely on the federal Conservatives side wished us to loosen our banking rules to emulate, be more like the United States. By “like the United States,” I mean allow for banks to be both trading arms on the stock markets while also savings investment vehicles for the Joe and Jane Citizen that they were providing banking services for. The United States allowed for a merger of those two institutions, that allowed, then, for a great deal of leveraging to occur throughout that banking system, largely through derivatives.

On this side of the 49th parallel, despite the pressures put on by many of the Conservative ilk here in this country, Prime Minister Chrétien actually wisely said that, no, we're not going to go down this foolhardy path and said that we're going to keep our banks separate, that the banks are going to do the one thing that they've traditionally done, and we'll allow our trading floors to do what they've traditionally done, and thank you very much, but we're not going to get caught up in this folly. Largely, you know, that proved to be wise. Now when you have people saying that our banking rules stood the test of time over the course of that period, it's because we resisted the urge to follow the folly that was going on in the United States. We largely have Prime Minister Chrétien and Finance Minister Martin to thank as a result of that.

In any event, just sort of leaving that as it may, I think the government of the day is doing the best they can to enforce some rules and regulations around financial derivatives. I'm not an expert. I believe that this is probably the best we can do right now. Following along with international protocol as it emerges and setting down those rules and regulations here in Alberta, I believe, is a wise course of action.

In any event, thank you very much for allowing me to make those comments. We can now call the question here on this Bill 3.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 3, Securities Amendment Act, 2014?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations can close debate.

Mr. Dallas: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Bill 4 Estate Administration Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act.

This bill was designed to modernize and simplify the process of administering estates. Bill 4 moves the process of obtaining a grant for the estate of a living minor to the Minors' Property Act. While current legislation applied generally to the estates of deceased persons, there were also provisions for getting grants to deal with the property of living minors. These more properly belong in the Minors' Property Act, and as such, they have been moved to that act.

The new bill also provides a new jurisdiction in the Alberta courts to allow the court to issue a grant, a legal document giving you the authority to administer an estate if the court thinks a grant is necessary. This may be used where there is a legal action in Alberta involving a deceased plaintiff which the personal representative needs to discontinue and the deceased person did not leave any property in Alberta or did not reside in Alberta. This means that a personal representative may ask the court to give them a grant providing the authority to discontinue legal action in Alberta, where the deceased was involved as a plaintiff, so that there are no lingering potential liabilities that could affect the administration of the estate.

Bill 4 clearly sets out the role of a personal representative who is administering an estate. Currently the roles and responsibilities of a personal representative are set out in common law rather than being codified in a statute. Common law holds that a personal representative is a fiduciary. They must put the interests of the deceased person above their own. They must perform their role honestly and in good faith in accordance with the deceased person's intentions and with the will and with the care and diligence and skill of a person of ordinary prudence. The personal representative must also distribute the estate as soon as practicable. This encourages estates to be resolved in a timely manner.

Bill 4 also directs the personal representative and others to the Funeral Services Act and the Cemeteries Act, which applies to determine who has the authority to control and give instructions for the funeral and making funeral arrangements. While the role of the personal representative is clear to estate administration professionals, it is not easily understood by laypersons who may accept the position of personal representative. The Estate Administration Act will rectify this situation and clearly state the roles and responsibilities of a personal representative. The act will also include a higher skill requirement for professional personal representatives who administer an estate as their professional occupation or business.

The act sets out the responsibilities of personal representatives by codifying four core tasks of a person administering an estate. These core tasks are: identify estate assets and liabilities, administer and manage the estate, satisfy debts and obligations, and distribute and account for the estate. Examples of the core tasks are more fully explained in a schedule included in the act. For instance, administering and managing an estate may include such things as creating and maintaining records as well as regularly communicating with beneficiaries concerning the administration and management of the estate. Satisfying debts and obligations may include determining the income tax or other tax liabilities of the deceased as well as advertising for creditors.

Another area that the Estate Administration Act, Bill 4, seeks to clarify and improve is when estates are administered without a grant of the court. The new act recognizes that a personal representative named by a deceased person in a will may choose to administer an estate without obtaining a grant from the court. The new act ensures that when this occurs, these personal representatives named in the will are subject to all the same roles and responsibilities as those that apply when a grant is issued. For example, the same notice provisions applying to a personal representative acting with a grant will apply to a personal representative acting without a grant, including the requirement to provide notices to beneficiaries, family members who may have a claim against the estate, a spouse, the Public Trustee when a minor is affected, and so on.

Additionally, Bill 4 provides that if a personal representative refuses or fails to perform a duty or core task or to provide notice, a person can bring an application to the court to obtain an order to require the personal representative to comply with their duties or even have the personal representative removed.

Bill 4 also will update the rules governing the authority of the personal representative in regard to the property included in the estate. Rather than listing all of the powers of the personal representative, the new act indicates that the personal representative stands in the shoes of the deceased person. The personal representative can do anything the deceased person could do with their property subject to the will and any other legislation restricting them. This means that instead of listing all the powers of the personal representative such as the power to sell, lease, divide, or otherwise deal with property and trying to make sure nothing is missed in the legislation, the deceased person in their will, if their will needs it, can list only circumstances where they do not want the personal representative to have certain powers in relation to certain property. This ensures that the personal representative has all the power they need to help them administer the estate efficiently in respect of the wishes of the deceased.

One final area of estate law this bill will modernize is marshalling rules. This act reforms archaic common-law rules that set out how the gifts are distributed to the beneficiaries if the estate does not have enough money to pay all the debts and to distribute all the gifts. These rules do not affect what assets the personal representative uses to pay the debts or liabilities of the estate. They also do not affect creditors. However, the results of these rules mean some beneficiaries will lose their entire gifts while others will still receive their entire gifts. The new act requires that all the assets in the estate must contribute proportionately to the payment of the debts and liabilities of the estate. This means all the beneficiaries will contribute to the payment of debts and liabilities, and it makes the final distribution of the estate to the beneficiaries fairer.

Madam Speaker, all of the changes I have described are essentially to improve estate administration laws. Albertans will benefit from clear laws, and those planning their estates can rest easier knowing their wishes will be carried out. For those of us who have asked our children to be named as personal representatives, I think they will all breathe a little easier. We owe it to Albertans to continue the work we have done to make sure that those who are administering their estates have a clear view of the obligations of those who have passed on.

Madam Speaker, I move adjournment of debate on Bill 4.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1 Savings Management Act

[Adjourned debate March 5: Mr. Hehr]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has 10 minutes left in his presentation. You're okay?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah.

The Acting Speaker: All right.

The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In 17 years in public life and serving in this House, I've been able to say that I've been able to come to work with passion each day. I've looked forward to the work that we do. I've had the privilege of serving in seven portfolios during that period of time, and I can say that I've come to work with passion and excitement every day because what we do on a day-to-day basis is important not for today but for tomorrow.

As I look at Bill 1 this year, I can say that never have I been more excited about how we're building tomorrow in this province. We've been blessed in this province with natural resources. [interjections] I know it's difficult to understand that the Savings Management Act would be a bill that excites me, but it is, Madam Speaker. This province has been blessed with natural resources, and it's been blessed with good government so that we've been able to turn those natural resources into a province that is the best place to live, work, and raise a family in the world.

It's not just me saying that. People from all over the world are coming to Alberta to establish their homes, to build their families, and that's the way this province has been built over generations. My grandparents came to Alberta to create a new future, and as we work in this Legislature and in this government, that's really what it's about. It's about creating the future. It's about preparing so that our children and our grandchildren can have that opportunity to live and work in Alberta and trade out into the world.

About 10 years ago I had the privilege of leading a process of developing a 20-year strategic plan with government. That 20-year strategic plan talked about unleashing innovation, leading and learning, competing in a global marketplace so that we could have the best place to live, work, and raise a family. Many of the things that we talked about in that strategic plan are things that are happening today, things that are helping to move forward so that our children and grandchildren can have that life.

So why am I so excited about a bill called the Savings Management Act? Well, we do have those natural resources, Madam Speaker. We do have the asset in the ground, and we do harvest that asset, turn it into cash, and as we do that, we have an obligation. Those assets don't just belong to current-day Albertans. They didn't belong to yesterday's Albertans. They belong to the Albertans of tomorrow, and we have an obligation to save at least some of those assets for those future generations.

That's what the savings plan that this government has put in place does, and that's what the Savings Management Act is about. It's about saving with purpose for tomorrow, and that saving with purpose is extremely important. As we put those assets away, we need to use them to build multigenerational assets, schools and roads, that will serve not only today's Albertans but tomorrow's Albertans and the Albertans after that, building those multigenerational assets that help Albertans build the capacity they need for that future that we're talking about, but also to save, to put some assets in the bank, not just to hoard them away but to put them in the bank in a way in which they will actually create new opportunities for the future. That's what endowment funds do.

Madam Speaker, we have had good leadership in this, starting from the very early years of the Progressive Conservative government in this province. The Alberta heritage savings medical research fund is now about 30 years old, and it has established a baseline in this province in the biosciences and the life sciences which really gives us a foundation for the future. It's developed new knowledge. It's created knowledge which not only is utilized in this province but shared with the world. That's important, and I'll come back to that.

Some years ago we established the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research, which most people know by the name Alberta ingenuity fund, again establishing an endowment which will help drive dollars out that can be used for research and innovation; which help to create the new economy, the next economy; which help build on our assets, whether they're oil and gas assets or whether they're products of our agricultural industry or whether they're forestry products; which help us build on those assets and turn them into products that we can share with the world; and which help create the type of economy, a knowledge-based economy, so that our children can live and work in Alberta and trade out into that world.

We have that heritage of the heritage medical research fund and the Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. A third endowment was established, Madam Speaker, and that was the heritage scholarship fund, a heritage scholarship fund which has turned out millions of dollars over the years to help Albertans get the education that they need to maximize their potential so that they can contribute back to Alberta in a very meaningful way, in their best possible way. This is the history that we have with this government and this province of putting money away but putting money away with purpose, to help build that knowledge base for the future.

I come to the Savings Management Act, Bill 1 this year, our Premier's Bill 1 in this session. What it does is truly exciting. We've had the heritage medical research fund, we've had the heritage scholarship fund, we've had the Alberta ingenuity fund, and now we have a social innovation fund. Why is that important, Madam Speaker? Well, it's important because if we want the quality of life for our children and grandchildren in this province that we've enjoyed and if we want all Albertans to be able to share in that quality of life, we have to deal with those really perplexing issues, the social issues in our community. Whether you come to those issues from a sense of social justice or whether you come to those issues from a sense of enlightened self-interest, it is the cost of social failure which really drags down a society. It's the cost of social failure, that's feeding the ongoing cost of not being able to deal with social justice issues, that really draws against the productivity of our society and the quality of life of our community.

We have those issues. Last fall in this province we had a world-leading conference on fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, in fact two conferences, one on the legal side and one on the operational and research side, leading-edge conferences on how to deal with one of the emerging issues of our day, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, something that's entirely preventable. There's a lot of research on it, yet we don't know how to embed that research into practice so that we can do away with an issue that causes so much of a problem for so many people in society.

We want to eliminate poverty, yet we know that we can't just buy our way out of poverty, that we actually have to find a way to embrace all elements of our society and all people in our society, equip them with the tools that they need to be successful in an increasingly knowledge-based economy. Not an easy task.

The social innovation endowment fund, with a billion dollars in it, has $45 million a year going out to create new knowledge, going out to help translate that knowledge into action in innovative ways, going out there to help finance new and different ways of doing things in the social agenda. There couldn't be a more important task for us at this point in Alberta's history, a time in Alberta's history when so many of us have so much, when so many of us have the ability to get good jobs, get a good education, take advantage of all of the opportunities that are Alberta, yet so many Albertans don't have that.

How do we bridge that gap? That gap between those that have and those who have not in this type of a society will get wider unless we invest in social innovation and understand how to deal with those particular issues. That's what Bill 1 is about, Madam Speaker. It's about a social innovation fund which tackles some of the most perplexing and problematic issues of our society today. That is foresight. That's about building the future.

We also in Bill 1, of course, have the agriculture and food innovation endowment, which will also assist us. One of our traditional economies in this province is the food economy, agriculture. It's been a staple of this province for many, many years, and it will be for many years to come. There's one thing that I can assure you, that with all the change in this world, we will always need food. [interjection] Don't look at me like that when I say it.

Madam Speaker, the agriculture and food innovation fund understands that in order to compete in the world marketplace with agricultural products, we can't just rely on what we've always done before. We're going to have to be innovative. We're going to have to find new products. We're going to have to find new ways of raising our products and processing our products. We need to be able to cut the cost curve so that we can take the world price and pay world input costs and still be able to have a successful economy. The agriculture and food innovation endowment fund will help us to do that.

Even more exciting, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund is being topped up by an additional $200 million so that we can put more of a focus on helping those Albertans who want to be in the trades and technologies, who want to get those good jobs that are available to us today and turn them into careers and lifetime opportunities so that they can support their families. To have the $200 million there will give us $9 million more a year, not just for scholarships and bursaries but to partner with business, to close the gaps, to find the ways to encourage more people to consider the trades and technologies as a career. That's what that one is about.

Then the Alberta future fund. Recognizing that the original purpose of the heritage trust fund was not simply to sit there, that it was actually to help build Alberta in exciting ways, the Alberta future fund will create some capacity to do that. So we have the rainy-day fund – we have that savings account – but we also have endowment funds which help to build and create knowledge for the future and translate it into action, and we have the Alberta future fund, which can be utilized to do those big things that you can't budget for on a year-to-year basis, those exciting opportunities that come along once in a generation.

Madam Speaker, I know that you can tell how excited I am about the opportunity that we have today, the opportunity that we have today because of good government and good management. We can build the infrastructure that we need for tomorrow so that the people in Alberta can have the capacities, have the abilities, have the education that they need for tomorrow, so that we can invest our assets in such ways that they will work for tomorrow to build the knowledge that we need for tomorrow.

One other piece I want to add to that, Madam Speaker, because people often talk about how big the heritage savings fund should be, how big the savings account should be. Lots of times they point to other jurisdictions in the world and talk about how big their savings accounts have grown. One of the challenges is that Alberta is a subnational government, and you can't actually build a savings account to the huge level that some people talk about without in some ways creating discombobulation within Confederation itself.

So what do you do? What you do is create knowledge, invest in such a way that you're creating knowledge that shares with the rest of the country, that shares with the rest of the world. It's not just hoarding our assets for ourselves, for Albertans today and in the future; it's a way of saving those assets for future Albertans yet sharing the knowledge that's created from those assets and the translation of that knowledge into action, sharing that with the world. That, Madam Speaker, is why I'm excited today to be a part of this government. That's why I'm excited about coming to work every day with this government, to work with this Premier, my colleagues in government.

Mr. Anderson: This Premier?

Mr. Hancock: This Premier, who has a vision for the future of this province, a vision which understands that what we do today is about creating tomorrow for our children, for our grandchildren, a tomorrow where they can live in an Alberta where they are equipped with the knowledge, skills, education, because of the work that our Education minister is doing today in terms of making sure that our children are equipped with 21st century skills and the ability to solve problems, and trade out into the world, Madam Speaker.

Bill 1 today is building on a platform that has helped equip this province to get us where we are today, creating that platform which will take Alberta well into the future and ensure that our children and grandchildren can enjoy the quality of life that we have and the economy that we have, even though that economy may move beyond traditional agriculture, forestry, oil and gas and into new and different knowledge-based products. That's what we're creating today with Bill 1, Madam Speaker, and that's why I'm very proud to support it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 1? The hon. Associate Minister – Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to stand and speak to this piece of legislation, something that I'm extremely passionate about. I would like to share with the hon. members of this Assembly some of the background that I have with this particular piece of legislation.

I want to take us back to the Fifth Session of the 27th Legislature. That was the session just before the election in 2012. I had two motions on the Order Paper at that time, Madam Speaker. The first motion that I want to talk about was Motion 519, and it read: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to undertake a review and public consultation regarding the purpose and scope of both the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and the sustainability fund, including the mandatory allocation of nonrenewable resource revenue to these funds.

Well, Madam Speaker, it was shortly after the election that the Premier appointed me associate minister of Finance, with one of my mandates being the consultation around a savings policy for this province. And I can tell you that I'm very proud to have brought forward, with the hon. Finance minister, the Fiscal Management Act last spring, which set out exactly that, a mandatory savings policy when it came to the nonrenewable resource revenue. We have debated and passed that piece of legislation in this House, and I think it stands for itself. The government will be, for the first time in a long time, putting aside nonrenewable resource revenue into our savings account, and that's something I can be very proud of.

The second part of that motion talked about what the purpose is for this savings account. I recently, on budget day, did a tele town hall in my constituency. As part of that I did a poll that asked what the government should be using its savings for, and I gave people three options. Twenty-three per cent of them said that the savings should be strictly for the replacement of nonrenewable resource revenue when it runs out; 15 per cent said that it should be a cushion for short-term revenue fluctuations; 28 per cent said that it should be used to invest in Albertans' quality of life today and in the future; another 28 per cent said all of the above; and 8 per cent said don't save at all.

So I know when I speak in favour of this piece of legislation that I'm speaking on behalf of a significant majority of my constituents because, essentially, what this piece of legislation does is that it allows us to invest strategically in our future as a province. It does allow us to put some money away for the eventual depletion of nonrenewable resource revenue. As well, our savings policy does help cushion the blow, through the contingency account, of short-term revenue fluctuations. So I know that the government's savings policy does reflect the values in my constituency, Madam Speaker.

I do want to take you to the second motion I had on that Order Paper, and that motion back in 2012 was: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to undertake a review of current social entrepreneurship in Alberta and develop a platform that will encourage collaboration within and among the public, private, and nonprofit sectors relating to social enterprise and the delivery of social and community programming.

Again, Madam Speaker, this is something that I have been very passionate about for a long, long time in my role in public service. Obviously, as many members know, I was a school board trustee for the Calgary board of education for three years, and it was very interesting. There was something that became very clear to me. I started to see the emergence of the three sectors we have in this society: the private sector, the not-for-profit sector, and the public sector. In many instances a lot of the trends that were happening in those sectors were responses to problems that the other sectors were typically good at dealing with, and I think this has provided us with a huge opportunity here in this province and around the world to look at things differently and to step outside the box, and this is why I support this particular legislation. I am very much a supporter of the social innovation endowment fund because I believe it provides us with the opportunity to do so.

Madam Speaker, I could say, in all honesty, that this is why I stand in this Legislature today. This is what motivates me as a person that wants to get involved in public service, because I know the challenge. One of the main functions of government is to allocate a finite amount of resources, and it's a challenge, and we all deal with those challenges, trying to find the priorities when there are so many of them, to determine what gets the public funding and what doesn't. You know, I always got very frustrated in public discourse around the debate as to how we're allocating resources: if only we had more funding for this, and if only we had more funding for that. The debate around public policy seemed to devolve into a debate simply about whether we had the sufficient amount of funding in something or not.

One of the hon. Deputy Premier's most famous sayings that I love is that there are some people in this world who believe that to solve all of our issues we just need to add more money and stir. I simply do not believe in that, Madam Speaker. I think this world is changing so much that some of the systems, some of the programs, some of the ways that we do things today just simply do not sufficiently deal with the societal problems that we have, no matter how much money you want to put into the system.

One of the motivating factors for me standing here today is not – I didn't come here to put more money into this or put more money into that. I came here today, or got myself into public life, because I honestly and sincerely believe that if we put our heads together, we can come up with systems, come up with ideas that actually meet today's needs instead of just trying to fund at a greater level a system that met yesterday's needs. That is something that I'm very, very passionate about.

In fact, there was an article written in the paper just days before the last provincial election by Nick Gafuik, who at the time was involved with the Manning institute. In that article in the Calgary Herald on March 25, he quoted Preston Manning, when talking about social entrepreneurship and social innovation, as saying:

When should government facilitate, enable and partner with other stakeholders to achieve public goals? How can government facilitate without creating unhealthy dependencies or bureaucratic intrusions into the non-governmental sectors?

The article goes on to make some suggestions such as, you know, that the government needs to – they talk a little bit about my motion, some of the stuff that is happening in the federal government in this area.

Then it goes on and says that the government should create appropriate legal structures for social enterprises that combine social objectives with business discipline: There are increasing numbers of social enterprises in Canada. These are ventures that have a social mission and might generate revenue or even modest profit through their operations.

It continues to go on to say for the government to develop alternative funding mechanisms for social enterprises: To encourage creative thinking about social problems.

It says:

Imagine a prize for the group able to increase the success rates of addiction treatment programs or decrease recidivism.

Madam Speaker, this is what social innovation is about. I just want to provide what the definition of social innovation is. This is from the Centre for Social Innovation based out of Ontario. It defines social innovation as:

new ideas that resolve existing social, cultural, economic and environmental challenges for the benefit of people and planet. A true social innovation is systems-changing – it permanently alters the perceptions, behaviours and structures that previously gave rise to these challenges.

Again, this is something that I know has driven me in my pursuit in public life, and this is why I was so happy to see Bill 1 and why I think all members should support this particular bill.

In fact, it was in 2010 when the idea of social innovation really started to become a little bit well known, when David Cameron and the U.K. Conservative Party put forward in its manifesto the idea or the concept of a big society. This is really what the roots of social innovation are. It's to empower people, empower communities to come up with the solutions, that beg us to come up with solutions in our communities for the social problems, the challenges, those types of things. It was premised on five principles: to give communities more powers, so localism and devolution; to encourage people to take an active role in their communities; to transfer power from central to local government; to support co-ops, mutuals, charities, and social enterprises; and to publish government data.

This is the whole concept – again, at the very heart of it is something that I strongly believe in – to start to develop programming that is based at the local level. It's developed by the local level, delivered at the local level and not delivered by some uniform government bureaucracy that doesn't react very well, reacts with very limited flexibility to the unique needs of many of our citizens and the unique complexities of many of the social problems.

Madam Speaker, I just want to talk briefly about what social innovation is not, and I've heard a little bit of it. Social innovation is not a panacea for all of our social ills. Let's be clear. No one has ever said that social innovation is going to solve everything that comes before us, but it is an opportunity to explore. I believe it said in the throne speech, as was delivered by the hon. Lieutenant Governor, that it is a way to take today's ideas and try to find tomorrow's solutions. That's what this is really about.

It's also not to replace existing funding or to shirk government responsibilities. In fact, this fund and this funding is to provide incremental funding as well as leverage other resources out there in the community. As well, this is not a revolutionary approach to government. This is an evolutionary approach through introducing best practices and programs to the public sector. If we find certain programs work better than others, those programs will naturally rise to the top, and those best practices and those programs will be able to then start to replace what we do in government in the public sector.

I do want to talk briefly about why I'm so passionate about this, Madam Speaker. Why I'm so passionate about it is that I've had a number of conversations over the last number of years with Albertans, in fact, many of them with my constituents, and I want to highlight them for a minute. For example, I introduced just before the last election Tammy Maloney, who is a constituent of mine. Just to read a little bit about her:

After 20 years in the private sector managing businesses and facilitating change management as a liaison between departments in the oil and gas industry, Tammy left Canada to obtain a Master's degree in Business Administration . . . with a focus in Social Entrepreneurship from the IESE Business School in Spain.

In 2010 she launched the SEA Change company in Calgary, which is focused on social entrepreneurship.

After pouring her passion and heart into the public, private, and not-for-profit sectors, trying to determine which one should take the lead, Tammy has come to the conclusion that it's none of them. To end the divisive and bifurcated nature of our society and systems, she believes that we need to leverage the principles of social entrepreneurship to unite the sectors toward a shared vision of creating prosperity for all people. Again, this an Albertan that is very passionate about this and is very excited about this opportunity that is presenting itself with this social entrepreneur fund.

When I introduced her, I also introduced her with a client of hers, Izabela. Izabela is a young lady that receives AISH payments. She has worked with Izabela, who has had a very difficult time keeping down any sort of traditional employment but has got a very creative mind. She's worked with Izabela to develop a company that does greeting cards, Madam Speaker. She sells these greeting cards, and this is an opportunity for her to contribute to society, feel a part of society, and start to bring in revenue. This is an opportunity for her to do that.

Madam Speaker, I want to talk about Bill Locke, who is also a constituent of mine, who founded the Capacity Builders in 1999 after leading community organizations. He is a part of a project called Food n More that brings together over 25 social agencies and community groups in the food industry and all levels of government to address the problem of starvation in our community.

Again, you know, I can go through a number of people. I know I'm running out of time. I've had a number of conversations with Drew Brown, who is a former constituent of mine, who has a not-for-profit organization called Hope for Everyone that works in the homeless sector. All of these people are very excited about the opportunity to have access to a fund that allows them to use their expertise and knowledge of the community and the social challenges that exist in our community.

I just want to mention one last thing, Madam Speaker, and that is . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have 29(2)(a). Anybody for 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was listening intently. I think the hon. member was cut off mid-sentence. I for one would like to hear the end of it. That was a passionate and important speech.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. Thank you. I did want to mention two more things. One is that I was reading a 2012 interview done by the CBC with Brett Wilson, who said that people that are opposed to these types of ideas – this is what he said about those people.

Until the ideas are put on the table and we start to talk about them, I think it's premature for any of the parties to start bellyaching about whether this is good for the country or not.

He is talking about social innovation in our country. He said:

There's no offloading intended — in fact as I saw it, there's actually an opportunity for government to save money if these programs are effective. What they are saying is we believe the entrepreneurial spirit of our country might be part of the solution. Bring us your money, bring us your ideas, we'll reward you.

I believe that's exactly what this does.

I just want to finish off by saying that there are a number of concepts that social innovation encompasses, and I don't think we should jump to conclusions as to what those might be. There is lots of talk about social impact bonds or social finance, which is a form of trying to find private money that invests in a particular program with some sort of return on investment if the appropriate mechanisms or the appropriate outcomes are achieved. That's a very complex legal agreement and would require the government to book a contingent liability on its balance sheet as part of that agreement.

There is social entrepreneurship, that really looks at addressing the ability of not-for-profit organizations to build some sort of revenue into their business model.

There are public-private partnerships, Madam Speaker, looking at ways that the private sector and the public sector can partner to deliver some sort of public infrastructure or public service.

There are also public-public partnerships, where you bring a number of public entities or government departments together to work on projects in a collaborative way that provides a greater good than if they would have done it separately through their own funding mechanisms.

That just brings me to my final point, and it's a point that I was — just about three weeks ago I attended the Calgary nonprofit innovation awards, which was awarded by the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations. Attainable Homes Calgary actually won one of the awards. As their CEO was speaking, there was something that wasn't lost on me, Madam Speaker, and that was that the CEO, David Watson, said that his advice to nonprofit organizations across this province is to make lots of mistakes; just don't make the same ones twice.

I think it's very important. We have an entrepreneurial and innovative spirit in this province. There's no reason why this shouldn't exist in the social sector as well. That's really what this is about. It's about investing, as the hon. Lieutenant Governor said, in today's ideas to find tomorrow's solutions. We need to support this because of that. We need to support our social sector in making sure that they have the opportunity to make mistakes so that we can be innovative and that we don't make those mistakes in the future and we can move on and show progress on many of the societal challenges that we face today.

That's why I'm here, Madam Speaker, and I'm sure that's why every member in this Assembly is here. That's why I think we should all support this particular bill.

The Acting Speaker: We still have a minute left for 29(2)(a). The Member for Calgary-Buffalo on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank the hon. member for his comments, and I appreciate the passion, and you've obviously done a great deal of research on this.

The thing is that I've come to the perspective that while I think this is well-intentioned, I don't know how successful it's going to be. I will say this because I think, really, the largest problem out there for the vast majority of people that are using social agencies or the like is simply a lack of financial resources. That's why these nonprofit groups exist.

You solve that problem of having enough money, you're largely not going to need a nonprofit, so I think there are simpler ways to get rid of a whole bunch of nonprofits out there, simplify the system, and go from there.

I realize this would be through a federal structure, guaranteed annual income... [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired] But I missed that discussion opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on Bill 1, Savings Management Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a great honour to stand and speak to Bill 1. There's going to be a bit of a recurring theme as far as my position on it, but first and foremost I think the question begs to be asked: why can't the government just fund these ministries and programs in the first place so that they don't have to rely on additional endowment funds and layers of bureaucracy of having funding coming from many different sources?

I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo also asked a great question, which is: if we look at addressing the needs or the root causes of what these many nonprofits are trying to do and solve those problems, we will eliminate the need for these nonprofit organizations. Let's keep in mind that these are the organizations that are grassroots, that are in the community, that are carrying out incredible work, that many and most are funded publicly, which they should be. That's the recurring theme for myself, Madam Speaker, as far as Bill 1.

To put it bluntly, I think, essentially, Bill 1 is an admission of failure on the part of the government to budget and maintain operations adequately, so they're looking to the private sector to fund what the government should be funding.

When we look at where this is coming from, the heritage fund, it should be a treasured legacy that was given to us from Peter Lougheed and used for the betterment of all Albertans. It should not be used as a cover-up for the government's failing to deliver proper educational and social services, which is essentially what this bill is alluding to. So if the government intends to encourage innovation of the delivery of social and educational services, they should ensure that there is adequate funding to the ministries to do so instead of slashing those budgets and then coming up with a way for the private industry to fund what should be publicly funded and publicly delivered.

Just a quick recap for members who may have a short memory. In the 2013 budget this PC government cut funding to valuable human services and educational programming by hundreds of millions of dollars: $39 million dollars, or 42 per cent, to PDD was cut in community access supports; income support was cut by $43 million, or 10 per cent; the STEP program was eliminated by 7.4 per cent. There was an initial cut of $147 million to advanced education. When the hon. member across the way talks about innovating our postsecondary institutions, well, here's an idea. Maybe just fund them adequately, and you won't have to rely on the private sector to come up with these innovations, which I'll speak to in a few minutes.

So instead of this PC government transferring the money, that belongs to all Albertans, from the heritage trust fund into these new accounts with as of yet no regulation as to whom or how it's going to be spent – you know, how do we even know that the money that they're talking about is going to be used? Again, we haven't gotten a direct answer. We still don't know. Even within this bill there are many questions and very few answers.

One of my grave concerns is around the area of social impact bonds. Now, this bill tiptoes around that subject and doesn't come right out with it, but when I asked questions in the House last week, it was pretty clear from the answers that I received that the government is plowing full steam ahead in the area of social impact bonds. Let's keep in mind, Madam Speaker, that social impact bonds are profit-driven, similar to a P3 model of development or government-funded business deals. This bill is not about service delivery. It's not about philanthropy or meeting the needs of Albertans. It's about privatizing our social services and allowing the private industry to have access to and profit from the services that are already being delivered. There's been quite a bit of outcry in the not-for-profit community, from the Parkland Institute and Public Interest Alberta, as far as why this is a framework for privatization by stealth.

In this bill it's suggesting that we need the private sector to tell us what innovation means for social services. You know, I need to remind the associate minister and all members on the other side that there already is an incredible amount of innovation in the not-for-profit sector as far as how to deliver services and programs to meet the needs of Albertans today and tomorrow. Their biggest outcry is the fact that every year their budgets are getting cut. They have to lose staff, they have to cut programming, and they have to cut supports, which has a negative impact on the lives of those individuals and, one could argue, society and all of us, who are going to pay for those cuts now and in the future.

The truth about these social impact bonds is that they're actually just going after the low-hanging fruit. They don't really offer any innovation, first and foremost, because investors hate risk. Investors want to minimize their risk as much as possible, so they're going to invest in projects where risk is removed – okay? – where they're guaranteed a payout or at least they're guaranteed that the government or the not-for-profit will cover their investment if there is a loss or if there is a loss of profit or the endeavour turns out to not generate a profit.

A great example of this is the city of New York social impact bond. Goldman Sachs is the investor, and they're backed by the charities. If the charities don't actually meet the targets that are laid out in the contract, Goldman Sachs still gets paid regardless, and it's the charity that's going to have to put in the money. I really don't see how adding this other layer is improving or adding innovation or even benefiting.

Innovative solutions like that idea, you know, are not the issue. There have been straightforward ideas as far as innovating that have come from publicly funded services, public university research. Again, the ideas that the minister thinks are going to come out are not innovative, and they don't require the public sector to profit off them.

I mean, again, that's the big issue here. The bottom line in the private sector for businesses – what is their purpose? What is their goal for existence? It's to earn a profit. So when you add the profit motive to not-for-profit or social services, that should not be delivered with the mindset of: we're making a buck first, and then we're going to try to deliver some kind of service. It should be done through long-term, committed government investment, something that this government refuses to provide.

Let's keep in mind that most of the not-for-profit funding from the government comes in the form of grants. I've spoken about this in the House on numerous occasions. The problems with grants, first of all, is that they're short term. They require a huge amount of research, of human capital navigating through and filling out applications. You've also got a competition between not-for-profits for those dollars because there's a limited pool of dollars. Then, worse, on top of that is the fact that grants are often applied for, and not-for-profits don't know until months and months later. I've talked to many of them where they're trying to budget for the year, when they don't find out if they even have the operational grant for months down the road. You have a real instability. You're basically handcuffing organizations from doing their job, from having proper budgeting and planning when you rely on grants.

Again, the Alberta NDP are calling for long-term, stable, predictable funding. That'll actually be my theme when I respond a little later this evening to the Speech from the Throne. That applies to school boards, education, municipalities. That applies to all different sectors, Madam Speaker.

Beyond the issue of delivering or not delivering innovation or innovative solutions, there are other issues that I have. Basically, through the social impact bonds we're forcing nonprofit program delivery organizations to take on a great deal of administrative and transactional costs. Again, I've talked about the short-term grants which make it challenging. There are several other layers of bureaucracy and middle management that are going to overburden these already overburdened organizations. They must go out and act like salespeople and investment bankers in order to attract investments. They must hire legal counsel, financial advisers to assist them with their bonds.

Again, there are examples that I'm going to speak to, and I'm actually quite happy that the associate minister referenced the first social impact bond and how much of a failure that's been. Clearly, government just looked at the fact that another jurisdiction did this but didn't follow through with the impact that it has had on the not-for-profit community. You know, the sum of this argument, anyway, is that it puts agencies in the indefensible position of having to serve the interests of the investors over those of the clients that they're trying to help or the long-term goals of finding true systemic solutions to social problems as opposed to Band-Aid solutions, that this system of social impact bonds will very likely create and, at best, serve.

The other point to consider is that this government is already having troubles finding companies that are willing to bid on P3s. We've seen the fact, as I've learned with the Edmonton public schools that were promised recently and the announcement that they're all going to be built in-house. Part of the issue is the lack of tenders, which tells us that, again, the private industry is saying: "No. We can't find a way to profit off it. Why do we want to invest in it?" And they shouldn't. Our schools should be publicly funded, publicly delivered. We shouldn't be tendering out contracts to the private sector. I mean, I would argue that for our child care, for our seniors' care, for our home care.

Governments are better placed to deliver programs in cost-efficient ways since they have economies of scale and they have the ability to fund interconnected programs and address systemic issues. Again, I think that every member in this House will recognize that, you know, an issue like poverty has many different facets to it, that there are many different layers, so there isn't just a one-shot silver bullet to resolve it. It does require co-operation and working between agencies, which, I would argue, Madam Speaker, is already happening. Again, our not-for-profits and NGOs are doing a phenomenal job trying to pick up the pieces of a broken system that, I would argue, this government has created and continues to underfund.

Talking briefly about the fact that they're ineffective, they're more costly, and they're also morally wrong, we look at the issue of the fact that the government's failure to solve defined social programs is turning into an investment opportunity that promises profit rewards to successfully innovative investors. There have been numerous concerns from the Alberta College of Social Workers and many others. Part of their message is that they don't feel that people should be profiting off the misery of others.

The example that the hon. minister gave was regarding the first social impact bond, that was brought in in 2010. Basically, it's brought in after intermediaries scanned jails for the most likely to be successful clients, and then took only volunteers into the program, provided support to prisoners and their families before and after release. If it was successful, then they would see, versus a control group, a very profitable rate of return. However, the general secretary of Unison had stated, as the Alberta NDP have brought forward in this House already, that the plan is about saving money, but it's actually going to cost more jobs and lead to more service cuts, which will cost Albertans more in the long term. Again, you know, that's talking about the government washing its hands of its responsibility through privatizing what should be publicly funded and publicly delivered services.

The other thing that's interesting, you know, is that with this bill this government is asking us to just trust them blindly with more than 10 per cent of our heritage trust fund. Something that's extremely disappointing is the fact that this fund, when Mr. Lougheed first created it, I believe, at the end of his term, was somewhere around $15 billion. I'd be happy to stand corrected, but I believe that's about the ballpark figure. Sadly, as of December 31 that fund was still only $17 billion, where we look at other jurisdictions that are wealthy from oil and gas, and they have hundreds of billions of dollars.

The thesis of my point, Madam Speaker, is that I cannot support this bill. Again, the government should just be funding the ministries that provide these services and not look to the private sector, shirk its responsibilities, wash its hands, and basically turn its back on Alberta's most vulnerable.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

On 29(2)(a), Calgary-Buffalo. Go ahead.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My question is to the hon. member. I'd like to get some thoughts just to sort of, I guess, give some background to the question I'm going to ask. You know, I look at this bill here, Bill 2, and the much ado we're making on the social impact bonds and putting the Alberta heritage trust fund to use and all that sort of stuff. It seems to me that largely the impetus for this bill is the result of the hon. Premier's promise to eliminate I believe it was child poverty in five years, which coincidentally should get us, I think, 40 per cent of the way there given the way of the mandate. I think, in particular, that this has been a promise that was largely looked at as being unattainable. In fact, the government has done absolutely nothing, in my view, to try and move in a direction that would not eliminate child poverty but even make child poverty less than it had been prior to them making the promise. They simply haven't done a thing or lifted a finger or done anything in regard to that.

I see this as sort of being something that they can trumpet around to the nonprofit groups, saying: "Oh, look what we're doing. We're really doing something. We care about the poor, the sick, and the disabled. We didn't really just promise it; we're actually going to go out there and do something about it. These shiny little social bonds are the way to do it."

My question to the hon. member is: what does he think would actually be better to move the plight of people in poverty situations, people who are in nonprofit, maybe whether to move Alberta from being the lowest jurisdiction in terms of welfare payments of the nation? You know, a single mother with one child, I think, hon. minister, gets about $700 here in Alberta in terms of a welfare payment, where in virtually every other province they do much more reasonably, and they get treated in a much more dignified fashion. There's much research out there that says that looking at giving reasonable welfare payments actually allows for people to better their circumstances and move off the government dole much more easily. I'd just ask the hon. member if he thinks maybe adopting a reasonable welfare system to allow Albertans to live in dignity might be a better endeavour instead of going on this social innovative bonds or whatever this thing is that we're going down.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. Absolutely, there are solutions that are available, but again, this government is clearly in the pockets of large corporations that are looking at getting in on these types of programs and service delivery with guaranteed returns of investment. So increasing social assistance, increasing the minimum wage. Again, Alberta lags behind other jurisdictions considering we have the highest rate of inflation and the highest cost of living in this province.

I think, as well, many parents have said to me that child care is completely unaffordable, that if we had a system where parents could actually afford to get back into the workforce – I've got many friends that have two little kids, and it's costing them $1,500, $1,600 a month to have their kids in child care. Well, at that point the one parent is thinking: "Well, I might as well not even go to work. I mean, at the end of the day the difference between that is so minimal. I might as well stay home and raise my child." You know, that contributes to our worker shortage. Also, these are costs that parents shouldn't have to pay. There are examples in other jurisdictions in Canada where child care is much more affordable, and that system is working very well.

Again, in this province there's an extremely high gap, and growing, between the rich and the poor. You know, if issues were addressed and we ensured that there was money available for people to get back onto their feet, that there were higher allowances for some of those folks who either were on AISH or on social assistance, if they were able to go out and find work, then there'd be that incentive as opposed to giving such a low threshold for them to earn in a week or in a month that many of them are deterred from even bothering to go out.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That was 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do want to make a couple of comments regarding some of the comments that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview made when he talked about the fact that our fund could be hundreds of billions, like other jurisdictions and whatnot. The hon. Member for Airdrie, my learned friend, also made a comment that the fund would be $150 billion if we had just left all the earnings and interest in the fund. The comment that I'd like to make is that that money was taken for use by the government of Alberta. It wasn't squandered. It wasn't mismanaged. It didn't disappear. It didn't evaporate. It wasn't stolen. It was used for the purposes of the government of Alberta.

Now, admittedly, some of that interest and some of those earnings from that fund were used to fund the operating budget. I would submit that there is nothing inherently wrong with using those funds for the operating budget. If you look at our record with respect to use of those monies after inflation-proofing, the heritage fund did a lot to help us build a lot of things here in Alberta. It helped us to keep the low tax environment, to have the Alberta advantage. The Alberta advantage, the low corporate and personal taxes that we have here in the province, and the low natural resource royalties: those fostered investment in this province. They built Alberta to the way it is now and created jobs, and those jobs broadened the tax base. I would argue that it's one of the reasons that Alberta has become a magnet for businesses, it's one of the reasons that CP Rail moved to Calgary, and it's one of the reasons that Calgary is number 3 in terms of head offices in Canada right now.

As I was mentioning, the other thing that the use of those funds from the heritage fund did was that it enabled us to build an awful lot of infrastructure, and that infrastructure helped us to grow our economy. It helped to build roads and to pave roads in rural Alberta so we could get products to market. It helped to build schools and hospitals to give us a good health care system, and yes, it even helped the social programs that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about. I would submit that there has to be a balance.

One would also look at what the cost would have been if we hadn't spent the money on those infrastructure projects in the past. What if we had waited 10 years to do it? Well, I can tell you that it would have cost a heck of a lot more than what it actually did. So there has to be a balance. Certainly, there has to be some savings, but using those savings as endowment funds, which is proposed by the bill, is the way to go in order to create a good economic climate and to create good infrastructure. I think that by using those funds judiciously, using them as an endowment fund, we're contributing to the future success of Alberta. We're trying to build a better Alberta, to make the jurisdiction what it is, which is the envy of any jurisdiction around North America or the world.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you. I appreciate the comments from the hon. member, because I know the money was not simply flushed down the drain or the like. But my question centres around: one cannot get to the point where we are in this province and not look at the size of the heritage trust fund and the fact that over the last 25 years we have not saved a dime of fossil fuel resources and the fact that we are going to put on approximately $21 billion in debt by 2017 and that our fiscal structure may be somewhat not to Alberta's advantage, may in fact be something closely akin to what they call the Laffer curve. Are you familiar with the Laffer curve? It's when your tax system is so far out of whack that it doesn't impact economic activity either positively or negatively anymore. It is, simply put, askew.

Now, is there an argument to be made, given that Alberta is the lowest taxed province by a country mile and that, arguably, as long as you remain the lowest taxed jurisdiction, your competitiveness is not impacted, that we would in fact be better off not trying to save some of this wealth for the future? Isn't it a more appropriate argument that, simply, where most of the money has gone is just a refusal to tax people and to pay as we go as a society – a conservative principle: pay for what you use in taxes – instead of arguing the other way, that this royalty wealth is ours to spend in one generation? I'd just like hear your thoughts on that matter.

Dr. Brown: Well, I know where the hon. member's party is coming from, and that is, you know, to keep taxing more and more. That hasn't been the philosophy of our government, and I think it's paid off in the long run because we have attracted businesses and jobs to the province. I think that if one looks at what the heritage fund has done, it's done a great deal for the province of Alberta. There's no disputing that. I think that we wouldn't have the province, we wouldn't have nearly the prosperity that we have today if we hadn't spent some of those funds.

I'm not sure exactly what you're referring to in terms of diminishing returns from the heritage fund, but I would say one other thing, and that is that the sustainability fund that this government put in place was one of the very best ideas because we know that natural resource revenues are cyclic in nature. They go up and they go down with the price of oil and with the Canadian dollar, so they are to a certain extent unpredictable by any government. But I think the fact that we've had that sustainability fund there is a very, very good buffer to what those effects of the cyclic nature of natural resource revenues have been.

Mr. Hehr: Have you ever given any thought to why the sustainability fund is gone? Could it be because we're so ridiculously undertaxed?

Dr. Brown: Well, I would say that it's not gone, number one, and number two, it's going to be growing quite substantially, if you listened to the Minister of Finance during his budget speech.

Mr. Hehr: Fair enough.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other speakers? There's still a minute left in 29(2)(a) if anybody else would like to address the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think it's worth, you know, asking the hon. member to expand further his thoughts on – when we talk about revenues, again, I can appreciate that this government believes that we've been doing so well because the taxes are so low and because of our royalties. Yes, Alberta has done well. The issue I have is that when you've undercut yourself compared to every other jurisdiction, whether it's corporate taxes or personal income taxes or royalties, there is a huge sum of revenue that we are missing out on. Those three areas could be addressed, and we'd still be the most competitive jurisdiction in the country.

The other thing that I'd like to hear the hon. member's comments on is – you know, he talks about the dollars that we've spent, yet what I don't hear is the government's recognition, acknowledgement, of the massive infrastructure deficits that we have in this province, whether we're talking bridges, roads, schools, hospitals. So although the government would like to pat themselves on the back for a job well done over the last 30 years, what we're seeing now is a massive amount of . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading to Bill 1, Savings Management Act?

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Acting Speaker: Seeing none, the question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

Bill 2

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Dallas]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to talk briefly on the appropriation bill, a couple of things that I've stated earlier but, I think, need to be stated again. Maybe they'll be heard and acted upon sometime in the future.

Some of these comments stem largely from some information I just read on Twitter earlier this evening. No, it was actually a news article that I picked up there. In our Rocky Mountains right now we have some snowpack that equals the largest amount we've seen over the course of the last 50 or 60 years.

Mr. Campbell: Not true.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'm informed by the Government House Leader that it's not true, so I will immediately stop my rant. That's not true. I will continue to go on my rant regardless.

In any event, at least according to this news outlet – and allegedly they are misinformed, okay? – there is a large amount of precipitation in terms of snowpack that is in our Rocky Mountain region, and there is a strong likelihood or a better than normal chance of us having a recurred bout of flooding this summer. As we're aware, the statistics are that we have a 1 per cent chance every year of there being a flood. I would suggest that those numbers are higher. In fact, if you look in the way that I view the world, at least, global warming is going to cause more erratic weather patterns, and I think Alberta has seen its fair share of those over the course of the last little while, and these are going to continue to happen.

In any event, my point is that in terms of the appropriation bill these expenses that we're seeing here are a result of a natural disaster that occurred this summer, with the flooding. In the main, many of them are. My hope is that this government is going to busy itself with two things. The first is mitigating for future floods. I know that there are a great deal of proposals out there. Allegedly, the government is working hard on implementing them. My hope is that that is true and that they continue to see this through from start to finish. We are well aware that this had not happened after the 2005 flood. This is referenced in the Groeneveld report, that we did not do the best we could to mitigate for future flood damage. My hope is that this time we move the other resources necessary to protect us from this inevitability happening.

Second thing – and I know that this idea would be better served in a national program, okay? – there is no doubt that a national flood insurance program would be preferable to a provincial flood insurance program. Simply put, if you can incorporate more people into an insurance plan, you're able to spread the risk, and they work better. I am well aware of that. I do note that the federal government in this year's budget did mention passingly the possibility of a national flood insurance program. I'm not going to hold my breath on that. In fact, it looked like it was merely mentioned in a throne speech just for the mentioning. It didn't look like the federal government appeared to make this a priority. I would suggest that that is probably going to remain the case.

Given that that is my synopsis, I would hope the various members of the government of the day across the aisle would, first off, explore the seriousness of the federal government's, I guess, appetite to put forward a national flood insurance program. If there is none, then we in Alberta have to seriously consider it or, I think, actually go it alone and devise our own flood insurance program.

There are some simple, pragmatic reasons why. First off, it's because it's in our best interests. Fifty-seven per cent, actually, of the disasters that have occurred in Canada over the course of the last number of years have happened in Alberta. My understanding is that this is because of our unique terrain and our location next to the Rocky Mountains. That, in fact, makes our water tributaries and other areas more prone to disaster. If we don't learn from the past, well, then we're destined to repeat this failure by not protecting ourselves.

Secondly, I honestly think that this is good public policy. It's good public policy that protects families and communities, and it also protects the public purse. People should be able to be protected in flood situations and know they're going to be paid out, okay? You do that through a provincial flood insurance program.

I will note that currently I see that, as in downtown Calgary, many insurance companies are even moving away from protecting many of my constituents from sewage backup claims and the like, that even the moderate amount of flood insurance that was available for many of my constituents will not be available the next time there is a flood, okay? This means that there will be more carnage, more damage, and more strife to families and communities should this flooding occur. Not even should: when this flooding occurs. That means that if the federal government doesn't do it, we need to do it to protect our families and communities.

Another reason why we need to do it is that this has been very expensive for the provincial government as well as the federal government. In order to do it, I think we've got a need, to use a phrase that I consider a bit of an oxymoron but that may resonate with some members on the opposite side of the aisle, for a conservative fiscal philosophy and having people pay for what they use in terms of damage claims they're going to pay out. Adopting a principle of a provincial flood insurance will enable the provincial government not to have to bail people out in the next event. They will have collected premiums and put together a scheme that people will essentially be bailing themselves out on a risk-adjusted premium, and this, to me, is an eminently reasonable principle to protect the taxpayers and, more importantly, protect future generations.

Let's face it. All of this stuff we're doing nowadays is just coming off royalties. You know, whether that's the building of schools, building of roads, building of hospitals, going into debt: it's all royalties all the time. Let's not even kid ourselves. That's what it is. So at least if we develop this program, we can actually protect maybe a small amount of royalties for when the oil and gas are gone and/or the world moves on. That would be another reason.

There's ample evidence throughout the world that basically every jurisdiction that is flood prone has moved to this, whether it's the United States, whether it's Europe or otherwise. Where they've had floods occurring, they have moved to this principle. So us not moving to this, I would say, is an absence of responsibility, and we need to follow through on this in some form or fashion.

I also think we're headed for 5 million people. There are getting to be a lot of people to get into a disaster insurance program. We need to look at it seriously and move on it at some point in time.

In any event, I got that off my chest, Madam Speaker, and I look forward to the government considering this, not just considering this, but, hopefully, moving on it. I think it's good public policy.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any more members who wish to speak to second reading of Bill 2, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll keep my comments fairly brief. I know that we were first told that this bill would be mostly flood related. I would say that most of it is but not all of it. I do find it interesting – and it needs to be pointed out – that, you know, hindsight is absolutely 20/20. However, at the same time, the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again, expecting a different outcome. The government since last year has been talking about the floods being a 100-year flood and that this is so unique and all the rest. I mean, the real challenge with that is that then that leads to lethargy and an unwillingness to act. Our frustration has been that back from I believe it was the Groeneveld report, in either 2006 or 2007 – that was largely ignored by the government. It's frustrating that people's lives were so negatively affected and much could have been done in the way of prevention.

In this bill I hope that there will be dollars earmarked for, again, flood mapping. That was one of the first concerns or criteria that many members of this House, from all sides, have been calling for. You know, how can you look at preventive measures if we're not even sure which zones and areas are most vulnerable? I mean, that's one of the things that we would've done.

I can't help but look at a few other areas. When we're looking in this bill at Education, Education so far has been mostly announcements with very few shovels in the ground. We all know that schools take three to five years to build, which means that it's going to be years before many of the schools are built, are modernized. I mean, many schools are talking about overcrowding. We've got record class sizes. Despite the minister's belief that class size does not impact the quality of education, I challenge him to say that to a group of teachers and look at their facial expressions and the answers that they give back. You know, I mean, I'll save my comments on the budget for that time and the throne speech. Again, questions: when will these schools with the dollars earmarked in this bill be opening their doors? It's a big question that many folks are asking.

Something that I'd like to see is a willingness for the provincial government to sit down with school boards and municipalities and look at talking about how they're going to meet the needs of students today and tomorrow and look at regional growth and planning as opposed to having separate silos of organizations or individuals or orders of government trying to make decisions in isolation when, again, the location of our schools, the size of our schools, the construction of our schools, the layout of our schools are all going to be impacted by the areas in which they are. One of the reasons that the NDP has been adamantly opposed to P3s is because they do encourage the cookie-cutter model as opposed to looking at the specific needs of the community.

Again, I know that there are a bunch of dollars that are earmarked for transporting our royalties in kind to the market. You know, if we had a royalty structure that was adequately serving the needs of Albertans, then we wouldn't have to be giving massive corporate subsidies for the transportation of our product. Again, the Alberta NDP has been a strong advocate for investing in refineries and upgraders here in the province. If you want to ship a product, let's ship a refined product that's got value added. Let's keep the high-quality, high-paying jobs in the province.

Often, and even this evening, Madam Speaker, we've heard from members of the government side talking about all the jobs that are created in this province, but I would challenge them to look at how many high-paying, quality jobs with benefits and pensions have been lost and how many in these numbers of new jobs created are the McJobs or the minimum wage, low-paying jobs. I think they'd be quite surprised at those statistics.

Moving along, again, I know that there is money going into Aboriginal Relations and to help our indigenous friends around the province who have suffered a great deal and loss of homes. I appreciate that the minister, if I recall, stood up and answered some of my questions on that. I'm happy to see that those dollars are earmarked and that we're not forgetting about our First Peoples in this province.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will be supporting second reading of this bill. I just wanted to highlight a couple of my concerns but appreciate the necessity of these dollars going in and, again, hope that the government of Alberta today has learned from the mistakes of its past and that we're going to do a better job preparing for future disasters.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We have 29(2)(a). Are there any members interested in comments or questions?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Kubinec moved, seconded by Mr. McDonald, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 5: Ms Smith]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was pleased to hear in the government's throne speech its commitment that Alberta remains a beacon of opportunity for Albertans new and old who desire to build a stronger, modern, better province together.

The Lieutenant Governor noted that Alberta is the economic engine of Canada. This is indisputable, but, Madam Speaker, the citizens of the region that I represent would want me to remind this government that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is home to the industry that is the economic engine of Alberta. Unprecedented activity in Alberta's oil sands generates prosperity that is shared from Medicine Hat to High Level, from Lloydminster to Grande Prairie. This prosperity is the envy of provincial jurisdictions from Victoria to St. John's and benefits Canadians from all provinces and territories. I am certain that the government of Canada is at least as grateful for Alberta's fiscal contributions to Confederation as are the members of this Legislature since it actually derives a greater aggregate benefit from oil sands production than this province. In fact, some analysts have estimated that the oil sands now account for nearly 10 per cent of Canada's GDP.

That burgeoning prosperity, however, brings with it explosive population growth, as many as 100,000 new Albertans every year, and no community is better acquainted with the decade-plus challenge of addressing 7 to 16 per cent annual growth than Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo. Growth that fantastic puts pressure on land development, transportation infrastructure, education, health, human support services, policing, and the very social fabric of a community.

The designation of the urban development subregion in June 2013 will begin finally to ensure the availability of developable land in Fort McMurray that will stabilize housing prices and make it possible for new oil sands workers and their families to take up permanent residence in Fort McMurray, to pay taxes in this province, to strengthen the social fabric of this province, to harness their personal energies to build Alberta one Albertan at a time.

So I am encouraged to see the throne speech reaffirm the government's commitment to twin highway 63 from Grassland to Fort McMurray and very pleased that this project remains on schedule for completion in 2016. I worked very hard, as this government knows, to help steer that project with my report entitled Towards a Safer 63, tabled in June 2012, and I'm proud to have been part of fulfilling this promise to my constituents. Too many sons, daughters, fathers, and mothers have been lost on a highway that is inadequate for the nature and volume of traffic that flows to and from the region.

But as the government's own 2010 CRISP report amply demonstrates, twinning highway 63, even at a cost of more than $800 million, while substantial, is merely the first step in a more comprehensive infrastructure program that must be delivered if Alberta is to safely and responsibly grow oil sands production and to justify its international efforts to secure new pipeline capacity and new markets around the world. Because they are awarded based on per capita funding formulas, municipal sustainability initiative and GreenTRIP funding are not adequate to keep up with that growth. The census data on which such grants are awarded are based on yesterday's numbers, not tomorrow's projections.

At the same time, however, the government's own financial capacity is constrained by inconstant revenues and the aftermath of last summer's floods, the largest natural disaster in Canada's history. So I strongly encourage this government to embrace the innovation that it champions and to explore with stakeholders the alternative delivery and finance instruments being proposed within Wood Buffalo to support the design, construction, and maintenance of new transportation infrastructure essential to our continued prosperity. It may be that government should not pay for every kilometre of pavement to support resource extraction, but government must be the enabler of a new way of doing business so that oil sands producers, railroads, and other private-sector parties can make meaningful contributions to transportation infrastructure.

Speaking of the impact of last June's flood events, Fort McMurray was one of two communities cited in August by the province as deserving special consideration to maintain its downtown development in a potential floodway. The throne speech specifically mentions that this government will make firm the commitment to build community mitigation projects in flood-affected communities. The Wood Buffalo regional council has already introduced measures to protect Fort McMurray, that will cost approximately $160 million in order to comply with the government's one-in-a-100-year flood requirements. I look forward to hearing how the government will assist my community to meet those requirements in this budget.

Government also committed to investing in better seniors' care, focusing on aging-in-place developments. As all members of this Assembly are aware, Fort McMurray has been advocating for more than a decade for its first long-term care facility, the only such facility in a community of 80,000 people, that, if it were available, would free an entire floor of our critical care hospital.

I know that Alberta Health, Alberta Infrastructure, and Alberta Municipal Affairs are all in discussion with the regional municipality to bring this vision to fruition, not just long-term care but the full spectrum of aging-in-place accommodations for those Albertans who helped to convert the oil sands from Canada's largest research and development project to the engine of its economy and who are now entering the sunset of their lives. I urge the government to bring these negotiations with both the local and federal governments to a rapid close and to break ground on this long-overdue facility in the current calendar year.

Finally, I am heartened to see a renewed commitment to education and postsecondary education that recognizes the important contributions that will be made by the generation just now entering adulthood to Alberta's prosperity over the next several decades. The several endowment funds and additional funding for the Alberta heritage scholarship fund to support apprenticeship, trade, and technology students announced in Bill 1 will be welcomed by my constituents. We in Wood Buffalo know well the deficit of skilled tradespeople required to be overcome if we are to grow Alberta's prosperity.

Further support for the Campus Alberta model also suggests to me that there are new opportunities for Keyano College to expand its offerings and to become the nucleus for advanced education in northern Alberta. I anticipate hearing about exciting new developments between government and the college from President Kevin Nagel in the coming year. The funding for these new education initiatives is coming from our savings, and as any parent would tell you, making long-term investments in your children's education is always wise.

However, as I emphasized when I began, I hope this government is equally committed to enabling long-term investment in critical infrastructure that will also allow Alberta to grow its revenues, making it easier to fund new initiatives without diminishing our savings account and providing the necessary foundation for new opportunities to be realized by our better educated children and our children's children.

Mr. Speaker, I have never said that government should operate like a business but, rather, that it should operate with sound business practice. As such, we need to ensure that we provide strategic investment where we will realize our greatest returns. This province has weathered more than one storm since the global economic contraction in 2008. It is time now to take stock of our opportunities, obligations, and aspirations and to make wise choices that will yield meaningful dividends in 20 years.

For that reason, I'm looking forward to the upcoming process in estimates for the government's budget for 2014-15 to find evidence of those choices. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Is anybody interested in asking any questions of or making any comments to the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo?

Seeing none, we'll move on to our next reply to the throne speech. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to stand and respond to my second Speech from the Throne. Hard to believe how fast time flies. I'm going to talk a little bit about where I was hoping the Speech from the Throne would have gone as far as a little more detail, and then I'd like to lay out some vision for members to consider.

I know that in the Speech from the Throne there was talk – and first I'll start with one of the issues closest to my heart, which is education – that there would be 50 new schools, 70 modernizations. Now, as we've already seen, unfortunately, that's where the funding ends. So as far as keeping previous campaign promises that this Premier made as far as full-day kindergarten, that's not in here whatsoever or referenced, and that's a promise that I think is going to remain broken right through until the next election.

That is unfortunate, Madam Speaker, because the full-day kindergarten program is something that many communities are talking about, about how crucial it would be and about the opportunities it would provide. That's something that many parents have told me about the schools that do provide it. There are some throughout the province. Unfortunately, they have to pull funding from other areas in order to fund full-day kindergarten programs. I believe that if a politician, especially the Premier, makes a promise, then he or she should ensure that they fulfill that promise.

Keeping class sizes low was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. You know, I would challenge the minister to speak to many classes around the province to see that they're actually at record highs. They're nowhere near the recommendations that came out from the Learning Commission years ago. I mean, I've heard from and talked with parents who have kids in classes as big as 55-plus, and I'm not talking about your gym class or your drama class. It just seems absurd to me, especially as a former teacher, to think of how they can possibly offer high-quality instruction and that quality one-on-one time when there are that many students in a classroom.

The other concern here, Madam Speaker, is not just the numbers but, again, really being aware of the class makeup, the composition, of who the students are in today's classrooms. I can tell you that they are very different. It's very much changed over the last few decades. We have a significant number of ELLs, English language learners, in our classrooms. This is attributed partly to many of the new Albertans moving into our province, which is fantastic, and that provides richness and diversity in our classrooms. However, it also comes with certain challenges, and from the teachers and school boards that I've been speaking with, they don't feel that there is adequate support there. Then you combine that with an increasing number of special-needs students and with a shortage of funding and of supports. So that was a real concern.

The other thing that needs to be addressed, Madam Speaker, I referenced earlier. There is a significant – it's actually quite staggering – price tag around the infrastructure deficits province-wide when we look at school boards. I believe the Calgary board of education has a $200 million infrastructure deficit. I know Edmonton public's in the next few years is creeping up to $20 million. These are significant costs. Again, I've often used an analogy comparable to someone owning a car. If they never take their car in to get the oil changed or to get upkeep on the car, it will run, but it's going to start falling apart, and it's going to get to the point where it will be so expensive to fix that it's almost just cheaper to replace it, which is, I think, the reality for many schools.

I've talked to many principals, and there is a big frustration with the fact that many schools are potentially on the chopping block and are being debated as far as being closed. You know, I'd like to remind the minister that there are many, many benefits to community schools and that there are many options that I wish this government would explore, that we would explore, to keep community schools open and to keep communities together, again, cutting back on transportation costs. Shipping kids off on one-hour, two-hour bus rides per day just seems short sighted to me, Madam Speaker.

As well, I want to talk about health care and the fact that I know that the federal government is transferring somewhere around a billion dollars, an additional billion dollars, that this government has to use that is earmarked for health care, yet the responses that I've heard are that there's a large portion of it that is, in fact, going to go into general revenues and not to be applied to health care, which I think is quite shameful, and many Albertans aren't happy with that decision.

When we speak about home care, prior to this government bringing in private contractors and private companies to deliver home care, the in-house home-care services were working phenomenally well. We've met with many different providers who were upset and with many seniors' groups who were outraged at the fact that home care was privatized. In fact, Madam Speaker, when I was out door-knocking yesterday, I spoke with a gentleman whose wife is crippled and can't get out of bed without assistance. Since it's been privatized, her quality of care has plummeted, and there are times when they miss giving her her meds. Her proper supports aren't there. Yes, he has obviously made his voice heard and complained numerous times.

But it's quite frustrating, Madam Speaker, when I look at the plight of many seniors. I look at the fact that, you know, costs of living continue to go up. Seniors are on a fixed income. Many of them require supports and services, and many of them feel that this government is turning its back on them. It's quite disrespectful of the fact that, again, seniors are the folks that helped build this province and make Alberta as rich socially, culturally, and economically as we are. I get quite frustrated, and, you know, there are groups that have been quite vocal.

Actually, as a preview, I have a group from one of the homes in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview coming tomorrow. They lost their home care contract, but they wrote hundreds of letters and had their voices heard and were involved in our round-tables and ended up getting their home care back in-house. It shows you, Madam Speaker, what people can do when they come together as a collective voice. Unfortunately, it also shows how this government needs to be chided into doing the right thing as opposed to leading by example.

When we talk about leading by example, you know, I'll touch on the fact that, again, what's interesting with municipalities, Madam Speaker, is that municipalities really are the grassroots, day-to-day, on-the-ground service providers that most Albertans are aware of and interact with. You know, I find it surprising that municipalities receive the least amount of revenue from taxes yet provide the bulk of services that people rely on on a day-to-day basis, from snow removal to road repair to police, EMS to many programs that folks rely on.

I'd like to see more of a priority and, again, an acknowledgement that our two largest cities in this province, Calgary and Edmonton, are extremely unique in the services they provide and of the fact that there are many services that, no matter where a person lived outside of Edmonton or Calgary, they would have to come to Edmonton or Calgary for those services, which makes them quite unique. They're also two of our areas that are growing at a rapid pace and therefore need to have the ability to generate a proper income stream to support all of the services and programs that Albertans rely on on a day-to-day basis.

I also think, you know, that the issue of transportation needs to be dealt with. I know that in the budget there was funding for GreenTRIP, yet there are big questions around building our infrastructure to help Albertans, at least in our major cities, become less reliant on automobiles, to encourage public transportation. There is the economic benefit, there is the environmental benefit to that.

Madam Speaker, I wished as well that in the throne speech – in the New Democrat Speech from the Throne there would be also the addressing of many of the different issues that are facing our indigenous communities and a real importance placed on the fact that more needs to be done to, first of all, honour treaties that were signed many, many years ago to acknowledge our First Peoples but also to engage in meaningful consultation.

I can't tell you how many times I've spoken to different representatives from different bands and different groups within our indigenous communities and how frustrated they are that they hear the same thing over and over, that they're going to be consulted, and then they get hit in the face with a bill that gets dropped with no notice or changes to policies or the fact that they get cut out from conversations. I find it quite ironic that certain groups have told me that they get better consultation from industry than they do from the government. That speaks volumes.

Sorry. I missed a point as far as seniors. When we're looking at the fact that we've got an increasing number of Albertans that are aging, that are retiring, and that we have a serious shortage of long-term care facilities, of beds for our seniors, again, this should be a priority. I'm adamantly opposed to the private delivery of seniors' care. Again, this comes back to the simple issue that private corporations' bottom line is to earn profit. If that is their number one priority, then it's not providing the highest quality of care for our seniors, and therefore that shouldn't even be on the table, Madam Speaker.

I look at the fact that the Premier made a promise years ago to eliminate poverty, and eliminating child poverty isn't even addressed in the throne speech whatsoever. As other members have pointed out – my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona pointed it out – we're now in year 3 of a five-year promise and nowhere near addressing the issues facing child poverty and eliminating child poverty. You know, I find it quite hypocritical when the government will tout one thing and what they're doing, yet on the flip side they're making massive cuts to programs and services that would help to reach these goals. Again, last year's budget had a massive cut to postsecondary, yet there are claims that they're investing in postsecondary. Believe me, Madam Speaker, Albertans aren't being fooled by these fanciful words.

You know, for the Alberta NDP there are services that should be publicly funded and publicly delivered, and strengthening those systems would do much more to reduce our costs and, again, to invest in Albertans and to improve our quality of life. Alberta suffers from the lowest minimum wage in the country, and we have the largest income gap, that is continually growing on a daily basis. You know, this speech doesn't go far enough to address the issues of child poverty, of the growing income gap between the rich and poor, meaning that middle-class families are being squeezed further and further every day.

Madam Speaker, I mean, there are some real simple solutions, including addressing our revenue shortfall, that this government refuses. I just want to point out one line in the Speech from the Throne, that says, "... holding spending below population and inflation growth until 2016." Well, by doing that, you are essentially making cuts. You are not investing in education. We have a hundred thousand new people moving to Alberta every year. Where are the dollars for schools, beds, roads, hospitals? The Alberta NDP would invest in Albertans today and tomorrow as opposed to this PC government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who'd like to comment or question the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, at this point I'd like to adjourn debate on the throne speech.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, at this late hour, mindful of the good progress that we've made tonight, I'd like to move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:48 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Let us pray.

Holy and Great Creator, help us be ever mindful that our purpose here is to represent others and also to remain true to ourselves and to the democratic values and traditions to which we committed ourselves to uphold. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

17th Anniversary of Elected Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we do the visitors, let me just make a brief statement, if I could, because it's a special anniversary celebration for three members who are celebrating their 17th election anniversary, in particular the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Let us applaud their anniversary.

Thank you.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you someone who is no stranger to this Assembly or these halls, a good friend of mine, a mentor who everyone knows, Mike Cardinal. Mike was a member here for over two decades and represented me as my MLA, and now it's an honour for me to be his MLA. He was a great adviser and mentor as I stepped into this. He served Alberta well in five different cabinet portfolios and accomplished a great deal for Alberta.

Thanks for being here, Mike.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, starting with the Associate Minister – Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you 73 young individuals from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. From Ellerslie Campus school, Mr. Speaker, they are joined by their teachers and parent helper: Mr. Kristopher Skinner, Mr. Richard Sampson, Miss Amy Heidebrecht, and Mrs. Myrna D'Mello. They're sitting in both the public and members' galleries. At this time may I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on with other introductions, beginning with the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our hon. Health minister it's my pleasure to introduce Dr. Michael Cassidy, president of the section of anesthesia of the Alberta

Medical Association, and Dr. Doug DuVal, treasurer of the Canadian Anesthesiologists' Society and past president of the section of anesthesia of the Alberta Medical Association. It is indeed a pleasure to have Dr. Cassidy and Dr. DuVal here today to represent the great work that is being done in our province and in our country regarding anesthesiology. They're here to meet with our Health minister's department on a number of items, including how to best create and maintain efficiencies in surgery, improving the patient experience, and reducing wait times. I want to thank them for being here and for all of their hard work on this file, and at this point I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 17 interns who began their careers working for local governments thanks to the municipal internship program. This program has provided these interns with an opportunity to gain real life experience within municipal government, supporting our province's towns, villages, counties, municipal districts, and cities. They join almost 200 interns who have been part of this program since 2002. The Municipal Affairs initiative contributes to the administrative strength and management of our municipalities right across the province with employees who bring professional skills, training, and a passion for public service at the local level, and what could be better than that? They're in the members' gallery. I'd ask all of them to rise and receive the acknowledgement of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of very special guests from Emmanuel Home, a nonprofit seniors' residence in the Belvedere neighbourhood in my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Last year I received many letters from the residents of Emmanuel Home asking for the government to stop plans to replace their home-care contract with services from a private, for-profit provider. I was happy to celebrate a victory with them when their home-care contract was extended. I ask them now to stand, if possible, as I read their names and remain standing as we give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: executive director Darren Sinke, Karin Kossman, Ann Hexspoor, Annie Fechner, Roeli Moes, Bill Breeuwsma, John Bruinsma, Jane Maat, Martin and Christine Veenstra, Maria Pool, Anky van Dieken, Hazel Rilling, Gladys Pavletic, Anne Mitchell, Clarence Toornstra, Aria Klyn-Hesselink. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to introduce some of his staff that are here in the gallery today. There are over 2,000 public servants who work in communities throughout the province on behalf of that ministry. Today staff from High Prairie, Athabasca, and Slave Lake offices are visiting the Alberta Legislature. We have Mark Heckbert, Jim Castle, Kevin Downing, Myles Brown, Kristy Wakeling, Mike Banko, Denyse Gullion, Marcel Macullo, Michelle Keohane, and Jennifer MacCormick with us. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, it is with honour that I rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special guest. First and foremost, I would like to introduce you to Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies. Dr. Tran-Davies is a doctor from Calmar, Alberta. She is a parent, and Dr. Tran-Davies is showing immense strength, courage, and conviction in standing up for Alberta students. You see, Dr. Tran-Davies is leading the charge in making the population in Alberta aware of the curriculum changes that are taking place in our schools. There are now nearly 10,000 signatures on her petition calling on the government to rethink its rewrite of the Alberta curriculum and go back to the basics that have served Alberta students so well. I'd like to ask Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies to stand, Mr. Speaker, and along with her today are Jerry and Jeanne Manegre, Marion and Bill Leithead, Maurya Braun, and Debra Hoover, just a few of the many who are supporting the grassroots initiative. I'm so proud of them and the courage that they're showing. I'd ask my colleagues to give the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?
Seeing none, let us move on.

Members' Statements

1:40 Cancer Charities Fund Raising

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I'm going to chop off my hair. There are several groups who collect hair like mine, and they make wigs for children and youth who have lost their hair due to cancer treatment. As well, I'll buzz my hair down to nothing, and a lot would say that it's about time. And from that I can make a rhyme.

My mom used to do that,
so tit-for-tat.

A poet she was. People gave her lots of time and would gather to hear her rhyme.
Cancer struck her later in her years, bringing us many tears.

Dad, he loved the outdoors.
Cancer as well took him away, and I would like to say that for me,
Alberta is the perfect place for us to find the key that will chase away this dreaded disease.

The not-for-profit sector plays a huge role, and so it is. That is why I did enrol with Kids Cancer Care, a group that does,
Mr. Speaker, I mean care.
Funds I'm raising, soon to be five digits with everyone's help today.

And for my friend Shanna,
keep up the battle.
And for you and the three baby Lows,
please receive the love and prayers of this Assembly.
Jocelyn and family,
you are not forgotten.

Cancer affects us all;
one in four Albertans will die from cancer.
So please, tomorrow feel all welcome to come out.
L'école Gabrielle-Roy is the spot,

11:30 is the appointed time, and that will about end my rhyme.

Alberta truly is the place to beat cancer, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to do just a little smidge to help that along and to help Kids Cancer Care work with children and youth affected.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McAllister: I'm sure I speak on behalf of us all, Mr. Speaker, when I say to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, "Well done."

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, there is an intense debate under way in Alberta over the curriculum in our schools and the teaching methods being used to educate our children. Traditional learning methods are being thrown out the window in favour of new inquiry-based or discovery learning.

Now, inquiry-based learning calls for less focus on facts and content and more emphasis on competencies and critical thinking skills. This is what it means in mathematics. Instead of having kids master and memorize their times tables, discovery math encourages students to invent their own strategies and techniques. What is that leading to? Well, kids are bewildered and frustrated. Instead of being taught the fundamentals and building on those, they are drowning in an ocean of confusion that the minister and his department have tossed them into. Marks are dropping in record numbers, and parents are forced to look for additional help outside the system they once put their trust in. When it comes to the effect these changes are having, the proof really is in the pudding. The facts do not lie. The most recent PISA results show that Alberta's education rankings in math are slipping substantially.

One individual in particular has risen and stood up for the integrity of our education system. Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies, a doctor and parent from Calmar, Alberta, started a petition pleading with the minister to return to the classroom basics. This is a classic David-and-Goliath story, where one concerned, everyday Albertan is going to battle with a stubborn multibillion-dollar bureaucracy that won't listen. I hear daily from teachers, parents, mathematicians, experts, students, and average Albertans that they, too, stand with Dr. Tran-Davies. In fact, 10,000 have now signed the petition.

The minister views all of this as a thorn in his side. He should view it as a wake-up call, Mr. Speaker. We are imploring the minister to make the appropriate changes before the next school year so another group of kids won't also suffer the same failed fate being pushed into the classrooms. It is his duty to listen to Albertans and the students and parents in the education system.

The Speaker: Thank you. Calgary-Bow, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Seniors' Supports

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is fully committed to building Alberta, committed to building upon the achievements of previous generations of Albertans. Our seniors helped build the strong and thriving province that we have today, and we owe them our thanks, our respect, and our support. We're meeting that obligation with programs that provide the right care in the right place at the right time.

With approximately 60 Albertans turning 65 every day, Budget 2014 is providing increases for several programs and services that help seniors stay at home and maintain their dignity and quality of life. For example, the Alberta seniors' benefit provides 150,000 low-income seniors with financial assistance. Budget increases will help seniors who need this support.

To help seniors stay in their own homes, Budget 2014 is allocating additional funding to the seniors' property tax deferral program to help seniors defer all or part of their annual property taxes with a very low-interest loan.

The special needs assistance program helps seniors with items such as appliances, essential home repairs, and some medical expenses. Increased funding will help ensure that this unique program continues to be available to our most vulnerable seniors facing unexpected costs.

Almost 110,000 Albertans, most of them seniors, depend on home care, and funding for home care and rehabilitation services is increasing by 44 per cent. Now, that includes funding for home care for a thousand people after they go home from the hospital.

Now, the first priority of this government is investing in families and communities. Budget 2014 makes that investment by renewing our commitment to helping seniors remain in their homes and stay connected with their communities, families, and friends.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 10 to 16 is Canadian Agricultural Safety Week. As we all know, agriculture is part of the foundation of this province and our largest renewable resource industry. Each and every year we celebrate Agricultural Safety Week as a way to raise awareness, but the truth is that farm safety needs to be a year-round priority.

Some of the keys to making sure that our farms are safe are education, awareness, and planning. This year the Canadian Agricultural Safety Association's theme for farm safety week is to get with the plan. We are encouraging all producers, farm workers, communities, and organizations to develop written health and safety plans to identify hazards and control them. Our government is committed to working on initiatives that promote a culture of safety on our farms. Our farm safety co-ordinators work hard across the province on assessment, improvement, and the further development of farm safety systems. We also work with organizations such as 4-H and agricultural societies to enhance awareness of farm safety.

In fact, to kick off Canadian Agricultural Safety Week, Agriculture and Rural Development has teamed up with Health Services to provide a fun, interactive health and safety learning environment for kids of all ages at the Peace Country Classic Agri-Show in Grande Prairie. Also, people can always go to Agriculture and Rural Development's website to access everything from printable children's activity sheets to webinars and the latest documents and links on farm safety.

I encourage all Albertans to consider the role they have to play in farm safety and to look for ways to participate in their community, whether by implementing a farm safety plan or by teaching our children how to play safely on the farm. Farm safety needs to be a year-round commitment for everyone, and this week is a good reminder of that commitment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, we can get one more in quickly.

Northern Alberta Windstorm

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between January 15 and 18 of this year Alberta residents experienced again one of the most severe, widespread, and damaging windstorms with record-setting winds as high as 120 kilometres per hour, winds that tore through and toppled power lines and structures in northwestern and east-central Alberta, causing nearly 14,000 customers to lose power. Extreme weather, it seems, is a fact of life in Alberta, but this was a serious situation for both ATCO Electric crews and their customers.

At peak periods ATCO Electric had between 65 and 75 crews working simultaneously across the province. The windstorm was so severe that it damaged the electrical system infrastructure so that crews had to install temporary structures while permanent repairs were completed. Within a 24-hour period ATCO Electric crews, remarkably, had restored power to 12,000 customers.

Mr. Speaker, today I wish to acknowledge and to express sincere gratitude and appreciation to the ATCO Electric crews that braved extreme weather conditions and worked around the clock to repair structural damage and restore power as quickly and safely as possible during one of the worst storms in northern Alberta's history.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Government Airplane Usage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, for the last little while we've been examining the abuse of the government air fleet. But let us be very, very clear. The Premier isn't the only person abusing government planes. Today's Herald story details how often planes fly around half empty while other government planes take off half empty, headed to the same place at the same time. It seems like no members of this cabinet actually want to travel with each other. My question is to the Finance minister, whose department runs the fleet. What is going on over there?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, government officials, including the Lieutenant Governor, including the Premier, including members of cabinet, including others, all carry out some important work throughout the province each and every day. There are some 90 communities in this province that are not actually serviced through commercial aircraft. There are times – and this is one of the issues of having scheduling conflicts – when one plane might be leaving within half an hour or an hour or at the same time as another plane is going to the same destination, and then that plane might go on to somewhere else like Medicine Hat, and another plane might go on to Grande Prairie. There are positioning issues that need to be dealt with. There are deadheads that need to be dealt with as well.

Ms Smith: Well, that wasn't very convincing, was it, Mr. Speaker?

The story mentions abuse of the air fleet by the Finance minister, the former Seniors minister, the Transportation minister, the former tourism minister, and the associate minister for High River among others. Even with all of these ministers and all of their staff and all of the government officials at Finance, apparently no one was paying attention to the fact that the government had multiple planes leaving from the same place and headed to the same place, and none of them were full. Doesn't anybody in that cabinet care about the taxpayer?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we care a great deal about what the taxpayer is charged for travel around the province. We also care about getting to other areas of the province that cabinet ministers are expected to get to. Yes, it's true, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Cabinet ministers use our planes. That's what they're for, for us to get around to meet with Albertans and greet Albertans.

The Premier has already directed the Auditor General to review the capacity, the usage, the policies and procedures that we have in place. We have a policy in place today for requesting the planes. It was developed in 2010 from the Auditor General's report. We look forward to his next report.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the news story mentions at least 10 instances when no one in that cabinet or the government backbench was looking out for taxpayers. We have the highest paid Premier in the country, the highest paid cabinet in the country. The sunshine list shows that they employ the largest and most expensive political staff in the country, yet no one thought to do something as simple as co-ordinate flights so that the taxpayer didn't get shafted. Why should taxpayers have any confidence or trust in anyone in this government?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member would like Albertans to think that we all have the same calendar and we all have the same schedule. Unfortunately, we all have different stakeholders who all request us at different times. The Premier has many stakeholders in the province, and they expect her to be there on time. Sometimes those schedules conflict. Ten flights out of the thousands of flights that we do every day: yes, we would like to see it come down. We are working diligently on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: No other province has government planes, and now we can see why, Mr. Speaker.

Let me give you another example of the government air fleet getting abused by more than just the Premier. On Thursday, October 25, 2012, a government plane flew into Grande Prairie at 4:30 p.m. and left at 10 p.m. The manifest said that it went to Grande Prairie for meetings with government officials. However, at 5:30 p.m. that evening the PCs were hosting their Grande Prairie PC leader's dinner fundraiser. Two ministers joined the Premier on the flight to attend the PC fundraiser. Will the Finance minister be seeking reimbursement from the PC Party?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was one of the cabinet ministers that was present with the Premier in Grande Prairie at that time. We made an announcement, as the hon. members should know, with respect to the expansion of the Grande Prairie hospital. The announcement specifically talked about the progress on the construction of the hospital, an update on the total cost for that facility. This is one example of the important government business that we do using the aircraft that are funded by the taxpayers of this province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the former Infrastructure minister and the current Health minister were both on that flight to attend meetings with government officials. Now, I'm sure the fact that it landed just in time for the PC fundraiser was just a fortunate coincidence. Can either of the ministers provide Albertans with a detailed report on which government officials they met with and what important briefings they received in the 45 minutes before the PC fundraiser started?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, they talk about transparency. The very fact that we're talking about this in this House means that it is very transparent because all of these manifests are listed online. Any Albertan can go and have a look at where the cabinet is flying and who is with them on the flights. Again, there are times when these planes fly empty because they are returning to base. We have only one base; that's the Edmonton base. Deadheads are something that I watch very, very carefully, but as any airline will tell you or any charter airline or anybody who owns planes will tell you, you have to manage those deadheads because people don't always come back when you want them to.

Ms Smith: Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the flight leaving Grande Prairie for Calgary that night had the then-ministers of Tourism, Intergovernmental Relations, Energy, and Health joining the Premier. The associate minister of electricity was on it, too. Again, I'm sure it was just a pleasant coincidence that the government plane was in town to fly all these ministers back from a PC Party fundraiser. To the Finance minister: what is the government policy on having the taxpayer subsidize the fundraising activities of the governing party?

The Speaker: Government policy, if you will.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's hard to find government policy within a question that is baited like that, and I'm not going to take the bait. Albertans don't want us to be debating that kind of thing in this House. They want us to be talking about building Alberta. They want us to be moving forward. If the hon. member cared to, she could request the policy that we have for requisitioning the planes, the scheduling, the procedure, and all of that. They're very well aware of it. They just choose to not bring it up in here because they're choosing to leave some other impression in Albertans' minds. Despicable.

Mr. McAllister: This government needs no help leaving an impression.

Mathematics Curriculum

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, several days ago the Minister of Education promised to ensure that Alberta students learn the basics of math. Unfortunately, his radical new math curriculum tosses out tried, tested, and true learning methods in favour of new-age, bureaucratic fads. One of the most common concerns that I have heard from parents is that nowhere in this new math curriculum are kids explicitly required to memorize and master their times tables. To the minister: at what grade level will you require students to master their times tables up to 10 by 10, or do you consider this a basic skill?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we answered this question last week, and I can repeat it. He asked me: "Will the Minister of Education do the right thing and ensure, not provide an option but ensure, that the fundamentals of mathematics like times tables are taught in our schools?" The answer that I gave was: "I will." [interjections] I believe currently, right now, it's in grade 5 they must know those. I think there are recommendations by others for grade 3. Nonetheless, we are doing some work on the curriculum, as the member knows. [interjections] The information that we've got from the petitions and others and world best practices are all going to go into that to make our curriculum stronger, and we'll be delivering on the things we've promised.

The Speaker: It would help if there was no heckling during the answers. Perhaps everyone could then share in the hearing of the answers given.

Hon. member, first supplementary.

Mr. McAllister: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that nearly 10,000 parents, teachers, experts, and everyday people have signed a petition saying that this new system just is not working for their kids, who are stressed out and frustrated by the confusing curriculum, Mr. Minister, we can't wait until 2016 to make changes. The future of our kids is at stake. Can you tell this Legislature what specific steps you will take to ensure that the basic fundamentals of math, including the mastery and memorization of times tables, are taught in our schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, he's referring to a petition as well, and the first thing I want to do is thank Dr. Tran-Davies and the parents and the engaged Albertans who have signed that petition and have taken the time to get engaged in the education system. It's critical. What we've communicated to Dr. Tran-Davies is that her input is not only valuable but very timely. As the member knows, we do have an entire group of Albertans across the province – school boards, parents, business community – that are working on prototypes for a new curriculum to solve that particular concern of parents and even go beyond and do others that the business community and others are asking us to do in the curriculum as well.

Mr. McAllister: Minister, if we're working out a solution in here, I'm thrilled. Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies started a petition that nearly 10,000 people have signed so far pleading with the government to reconsider its new math approach. Given that the very courageous Dr. Tran-Davies is here today, will the minister, not his deputy minister, not his chief of staff, commit to sitting down and meeting with Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies and her team of experts today as they have been asking him to for months?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, every chance I get to meet with parents, I take it. We have met with Dr. Tran-Davies three times. This member continues to play politics with our students, so what I would ask him: if this is such a critical issue for him and for the Wildrose, as the critic for education working on this file for two years, not once in that two years has he contacted me and asked for a meeting. Not once has he sent an e-mail or a phone call or sent a letter asking me to change the curriculum. But he'll politicize this and grandstand in here and at press conferences. Let's have a real discussion about it.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Airdrie, your point of order is noted at 2:03 p.m.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to the Galleries

The Speaker: Hon. members on all sides of the House, it is not our purpose to try and engage guests or visitors in our discussions and debate. De facto, they are not part of our discussion and debate on the Assembly floor. Granted, our discussions and debates and questions and answers concern them greatly, but, strictly speaking, the debate is here amongst elected members, so let's please try and keep to that if you don't mind. It's okay to reference them, but to point them out and try and get them engaged is not within our realm.

Let us move on to the leader of the Liberal opposition, from Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Cabinet Air Travel Expenses

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Still more examples of the Premier's sense of entitlement and waste of taxpayers' dollars: today we learned that the Premier and an aide or two or three frequently fly on one plane while other members of the PC caucus take a different flight to the same destination within an hour of Redforce One's departure. In all of these cases the PC MLAs, the Premier, and members of the imperial court could have fit on one plane. To the Premier: why don't you just 'plane pool'? Mr. Speaker, I don't know if 'plane pool' is a word, but why don't you save the taxpayer some money and 'plane pool'?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, what they're referring to is a news article that appeared, I guess, this morning from, I believe, the Calgary Herald that talked about 10 instances over the past two years – 10 instances over the past two years – where a government aircraft departed from and/or arrived at the same location at a nearby airport within the hour. We do our best to ensure that the calendars and the flights leaving are co-ordinated as best as possible. We do have a lot of flights every year because our ministers are getting around this province and they are doing the work that Albertans elected them to do.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's no wonder this government can't balance the budget. They're minimizing something that is a major mismanagement problem.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's chief of staff earns more than President Obama's chief of staff. Her director of communications earns more than the president's director of communications. A lot of people in the imperial court make a lot of money. But despite this high-priced talent, there's apparently nobody who can figure out how to get the Premier from point A to point B at a responsible cost. To the Premier: instead of spending 300 grand on new letter-writers to respond to your Travelgate complaints, why don't you just hire a travel agent at a fraction of the cost?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've said in this House, as the front bench we're very concerned about making sure that taxpayers get value for dollars, and that's critical. That's one of the reasons we've asked the Auditor General to take the steps that we have. It's one of the reasons I've asked the Minister of Finance to take steps with respect to tendering for RFPs. But the hon. member's reference to the correspondence unit is inappropriate only because these are professional public servants that are communicating with Albertans when they write to the Government of Alberta and the Premier asking about government policy. This is an important part of the democratic process, and I wish the hon. member wouldn't minimize it.

Dr. Sherman: Premier, there you go again.

Mr. Speaker, the latest chapter in the Travelgate scandal must not distract us from the heart of the matter, which is this. The Premier still has not paid back the $45,000 she acknowledged that she wasted on the South Africa trip. Maybe she hopes Albertans have forgotten. Premier, I can assure you that they have not. To the Premier. You're rich. You get paid well. You receive a generous party allowance. When will you pay back the $45,000 you wasted?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as I've said in this House, we're very concerned about ensuring that there are systems in place to ensure that this unfortunate incident doesn't happen again. It's why I've asked the Auditor General and taken the steps that I have to ground the planes, to review the process for making decisions about out-of-province travel, to ask the Finance minister to deal with these issues. But I really wish the hon. member wouldn't make false assertions in this House with respect to what I may or may not receive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we know the planes are grounded because the cabinet is all here.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Mason: I'm going to ask about something else, and it's the high price of electricity. There's an ongoing public fight between TransAlta and the province's electricity watchdog over allegations that the company intentionally manipulated the market to increase their profit margin, and there's a class-action lawsuit against Direct Energy, which shows that this deregulated electricity market is not working for Albertans. My question is to the Energy minister: why is your government failing to protect Albertans from market manipulation and high power prices?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister – Electricity and Renewable Energy to respond.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been many questions in this House in the last week of this nature. I can't emphasize enough that this government cares about electricity consumers. The Direct Energy case that's noted has been heard by the Alberta Utilities Commission as well, and they've made orders that directly respond to the consumers' needs, including issues around bills. I think they've done a fine job.

The Speaker: Just before we go on to the supplemental, I wonder if I could get the Minister of Justice to quickly comment. Is this matter sub judice or not?

Mr. Denis: I believe this matter is before the courts, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You believe it is?

Mr. Denis: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Then please govern yourself accordingly, hon. leader of the ND opposition, with your supplemental, if you would, please.

Mr. Mason: I understand.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I was referencing the case but not asking about it specifically.

Documents clearly show that the PC's mess of an electricity system allows companies to manipulate the market in order to increase their profit margins and that aggressive marketing tactics and outrageous late fees have seen Direct Energy be the subject of literally hundreds of complaints to the Better Business Bureau. The system is not working for Alberta families. Can the Energy minister tell us why this government operates an electrical system that works for power companies' profits but against consumers?

The Speaker: Hon. associate minister, if you wish to respond.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Answering these types of questions that we've had over the last week gets to the borderline of political interference into ongoing decisions that are being heard before the courts or before the Alberta Utilities Commission. If we are talking about the protection of consumers, I think every one of us has to pay attention to the kinds of questions and answers we provide in this House. We cannot politicize regulatory process.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, please be very careful with your question here as the Justice minister has indicated that the matter is sub judice. It means it's before the courts. Now, that's his comment. So let's hear your final supplementary.

Mr. Mason: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, this just doesn't bear on any court cases. This bears on government negligence in imposing a deregulated electricity system on the people of this province and driving up prices so that power companies can make more money, and the dodge that was given by that associate minister just doesn't cut it.

I want to ask the real Energy minister this question. Are power prices in this province too high or not? Yes or no?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: The unreal Energy minister will answer your question. The real questions that we think are fundamental to Albertans are: are companies in this province allowed to engage in anticompetitive behaviour? The answer is no. Are Albertans being protected? Absolutely. We're the only jurisdiction in Canada without a public utilities debt, the only to assign risk to investors rather than taxpayers, and we have the fastest growing electricity grid in North America.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to question 6. No more preambles to supplementaries, please, starting with Drumheller-Stettler.

2:10 Travel Alberta Executive Expenses

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the tourism minister mocked my concerns over lavish government expenses. Now, no one in the opposition is suggesting that the CEO of Travel Alberta wear coveralls, but we question why someone who is paid $390,000 a year needs us to rent him a suit. To the minister. Help me out here. We pay bureaucrats exorbitant wages, and you're telling us that taxpayers should dress them as well. Why?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I'll answer that question as best I can. Travel Alberta plays an absolutely vital role in supporting our $7.8 billion tourism industry. They are an agency that has been used as a model for provincial marketing agencies across Canada, and I'm very proud of the fact that they've won national and international awards. That said, I am very concerned about any suggestion of any possible inappropriate expenditures and yesterday instructed Travel Alberta to conduct a full and complete review of all expenditures to ensure that they comply with our expense disclosure policies.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Minister. Given that Travel Alberta lavishes themselves with thousand-dollar dinners at Canmore restaurants, including paying $99 for a rib steak, and given that Alberta beef producers know that a $99 steak is incredibly extravagant and wasteful when expensing to taxpayers, will the minister establish reasonable policies for expensing these dinners so that average, hard-working Albertans will not be gouged by these officials?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, policies are in place with regard to expense disclosure, and in fact all of those expenses are public because of the expense disclosure policy that was introduced by this government in September of 2012, the most open expense disclosure policy in the country. [interjection] It is the gold standard as a matter of fact.

Mr. Speaker, we are conducting a complete and full review. I expect that if it does uncover any inappropriate expenditures, those will be reconciled and there will be no further ones going forward.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, they are entitled to their entitlements.

Given that we have first-class tickets to Singapore, $2,000 dinners, $99 rib steaks, $390 in alcoholic drinks, and $150 tux rentals expensed by this $390,000 employee, will the minister commit to ending these outrageous entitlement policies?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, as I've already committed, Travel Alberta is conducting a full and complete review of all expenditures to make sure that they are in line with expense disclosure policies. I will also commit to supporting the vital work that Travel Alberta does as an award-winning provincial travel-marketing agency, not the agency that these folks want to cut 80 per cent of their budget by, which would decimate the travel industry and the 139,000 jobs we have in this province in tourism.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on, then. Edmonton-South West followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Public Transit Funding

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of the capital region are making unprecedented use of the city's LRT system. As of this past fall over 100,000 people are getting on our trains each day. When the new NAIT station opens in June, it's expected that over 10,000 new daily riders will be added to that total. Furthermore, an average of 97 per cent of park-and-ride spaces for the LRT are occupied by 10 a.m. My constituency is not yet serviced by an LRT, and when space is at a premium, we must park elsewhere. We are in serious danger of overloading the system. Edmontonians were asking last week and are asking today. But why did this take so long, Minister? Why did we not do this before with a specific line . . .

The Speaker: I assume that's to the minister of Transportation and Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member mention a line item in the budget, so maybe I'll take the first one. It's not often that you will see a line item for a future project that is actually described by the city or one of our municipalities that would appear in the text and full body of the budget, just as there's no line item that says for the taxpayers of Alberta to support the Wildrose caucus, but unfortunately we have got to pay them, too. The line items that do apply to LRT are GreenTRIP, are things like the building Canada fund, are things like MSI, all of which are substantial commitments to the municipalities in our province for their public . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First sup.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Transportation. Given the increasing importance of GreenTRIP across our province, I desperately urge you to consider a long-term funding commitment, Minister. Can you give active LRT riders like myself a clear message that you are committed to GreenTRIP across the province?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, GreenTRIP by its very nature is a long-term commitment to sustainable public transit in Alberta. The program was first introduced in 2008, and as Budget 2014 clearly outlines, we have no intention of wavering on that commitment to fully fund GreenTRIP's original budget of $2 billion by 2020. To date GreenTRIP has provided or approved funding for public transit projects in 15 Alberta municipalities, totalling more than $1 billion, including $497 million towards Edmonton's LRT.

The Speaker: Second supplemental, please.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the minister of Treasury Board and Finance: given that many of my constituents depend on the use of the LRT on a daily basis and are inconvenienced at having to commute simply to reach the nearest station and that the next phase of GreenTRIP will focus on expanding to the southeast and not to the southwest, when can we expect additional provincial funding that would assist the city of Edmonton to further expand the LRT system out to areas like mine in southwest Edmonton?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't set the priorities for the city of Edmonton's municipal funding and their infrastructure. The MSI envelope is very, very flexible around the capital. We increased that this year. The GreenTRIP is by application process, as we announced today, and we're expecting that the city of Edmonton will be making an application for the southeast line, which the mayor said was the city's number one priority. I'm aware that this hon. member has been lobbying hard for the southwest, and I know he's also been talking to the mayor quite a bit about moving that up in the priority line. They make their priorities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Shaw, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is no doubt a day of celebration in the city of Edmonton. After seemingly endless rounds of raised hopes, letdowns, and broken promises from this PC government it looks like Edmonton finally got the support it needs for LRT expansion. It was a rocky process, one marked by the usual political manipulation of this government. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: instead of this patchwork of unpredictable and politically motivated grants, why don't you just adopt a stable, long-term funding model like the Wildrose 10-10 plan?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the announcement today of the LRT in Edmonton is evidence if ever you needed it that there is stable, long-term, and substantial commitment to communities and the city of Edmonton specifically.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this PC government promised during the last election to double their investment in cities through MSI to $1.6 billion in 2014, doesn't the minister realize that if his government simply kept their word – kept their word – that Edmonton would receive $152 million annually over and above what they're getting now, allowing them to fully expand their LRT system now and into the future?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the city of Edmonton is completely aligned with the province of Alberta in ensuring that we deliver upon the potential of this great city. I have something right here in my pocket. I have right here an LRT ticket, which is the ticket to the future, and you should get onboard. [interjections] I'll give you mine if you wish, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I suppose there are others who have tickets, and they'll be flashing them. Yes, there we go. Let's remember that the use of props is forbidden in this Assembly.

Move on with your final supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the broken promise on doubling the MSI commitment, not to mention the pile of broken promises on things like fixed elections, no debt, balanced budgets, a proper health care inquiry, and promises like building 50 new schools, a certainty to be eventually broken, how can the people in Edmonton have any confidence whatsoever in your promise today that stable LRT funding will be there in the future?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the evidence will be in the delivery of the LRT line over time. I believe that the mayor of Edmonton is fully committed to achieving this goal. He's got to work, of course, with the government of Canada in order to achieve that. The federal government has to match our funding in order to make it happen. We'll all be working together arm in arm to make sure that we deliver the services for the people of Edmonton into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

2:20 Educational Curriculum Redesign

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Over the past several months there's been a growing concern among Alberta parents, teachers, and trustees that the Minister of Education is taking a radical approach to redesigning our provincial curriculum. I've heard comments like: don't throw the baby out with the bathwater. Really, Mr. Minister, if this is what you are doing, though you've stated in this House over and over again that we have the best system in the world and that our students rank among the best in international assessments, why are you making changes to the curriculum?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, quite simply to make it even better. It's true that we have one of the best systems in the world, and international tests attest to that. Unlike the opposition, I'm very proud of our system and of our teachers, that make it so great. But it's only because we continually improve and continually change our curriculum that it is so great, and that's what this is about. It's about taking the world's best practices and leading research and taking the good things that we do and then adding in what Albertans like Dr. Tran-Davies have told us they want, what employers want, that they're not getting out of the education system, and working to make a great system even better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. Back to the same minister: can you, Minister of Education, explain what the main objectives of the redesign are so that the parents and the teachers can have more certainty about what the government is really trying to accomplish?

Mr. J. Johnson: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to. Obviously, we need more time than we have in question period, but we can boil this down to three main things. One is that, you know, educators and parents complain that the curriculum is too compact, that there are over 1,400 outcomes, that they can't get through it all, that teachers can't use their creativity, and that they can't drill down on subjects, so we want to make it a little bit more flexible. The other thing we want to do is that we want to put a re-emphasis on the basics, literacy and numeracy. We don't want those just in math and language arts; we want those to weave through all the subject areas. Then, thirdly, we want to respond to employers, who have told us that in the 21st century the soft skills like problem solving, communication skills, and collaboration skills are important and that entrepreneurialism needs to be instilled in the system.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. Again to the same minister. I'm happy to hear some of the things that you've just said. Given that opponents of the redesign use the terms "discovery learning" or "teachers are partners in learning" and "students are self-directed learners," if this is truly true, how do the basics fit into this?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, firstly, I want to respond to the comments on discovery learning and teachers as only the partners in learning. It's absolute rubbish. That's not where Alberta is going. That's not where we are today, and that's not where we're heading. Alberta's teachers will still teach. Students will not be left to discover concepts on their own. Curriculum redesign does not prescribe a method of teaching that will be mandated or used. It's not just about rote memorization. It's not about inquiry-based learning. It's using all the tools in the tool belt to reach every kid.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the evidence keeps mounting that TransAlta Corporation may in fact have had the full blessing of the province's electricity authorities when it shut down its power plants at peak times to drive up prices. Documents obtained from the Market Surveillance Administrator and from the Alberta Electric System Operator both unequivocally state that economic withholding or, less cryptically, price gouging is simply rational economic behaviour encouraged by the powers that be. To the minister of electricity: were the MSA and the AESO simply implementing government policy when they did this?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's amazing how expert this particular member has become in electricity law. Right now this issue is before the Alberta Utilities Commission. They are the adjudicator responsible to hear this case. For us to offer opinions at this point in time actually compromises consumers, and I would remind this member, including all members of the opposition, that they can be called before the regulator to clarify their comments.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. Hehr: Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Electric System Operator and the Market Surveillance Administrator clearly state in documents that economic withholding, in other words price gouging, is legal in this province. I'm just asking: was this government policy that they were implementing, or were they doing this at their own behest on some Wild West rampage?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To reiterate: are companies in this province allowed to engage in anticompetitive behaviour? Of course not. We are a jurisdiction that cares about consumers. We've been focused on a free, efficient, and openly competitive marketplace that protects consumers. Prices are brought down when we do that. We've added 10,000 megawatts of electricity in the past 16 years here in Alberta. I think we should focus on our strengths and not just focus on undermining the system.

Mr. Hehr: Well, then this question should be fairly easy for the minister to answer. Is it legal for a company to withhold electricity from the market in an effort to raise the prices paid by Albertans on their electricity bills? Price gouging: is that legal in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is asking a question he knows full well that I cannot answer in this House without compromising the independence of the AUC review. Companies in this province are clearly not allowed to participate in anticompetitive behaviour.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order and, hon. leader of the ND opposition, your point of order were both noted at 2:25 p.m.

Let us move on. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education has embarked on a sweeping overhaul of the kindergarten to grade 12 curriculum across all subjects. Not only has he decided to roll out the changes all at once, something that will put exceptional stress on our teachers and system; he's doing it over two years instead of six. The pace is a disservice to our children, parents, and teachers. To the Minister of Education: will you slow down the breakneck speed of curriculum redesign so we can make sure it's done right?

Mr. J. Johnson: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's an excellent question, and we would absolutely slow it down to make sure it's done right if that's what's required. We're doing this in a different method than we normally do. Normally, we have educators sitting in Edmonton in the Education department working on curriculum one subject at a time for 10 years. That's not good enough anymore. It's not nimble; it's not responsive. This request, this new model, has come from educators. It has come from school boards. They're the ones working on it. They'll develop prototypes. If they're not right, they won't be implemented. So we're not talking about a broad, radical implementation in 2016. We'll get it right.

Mr. Bilous: I'd say to the minister that that's jumping from one extreme to the other.

Mr. Speaker, given that in a document from Alberta Education we'll be tabling shortly, Suncor and Syncrude are titled key education partners in the development of our kindergarten to grade 3 curriculum and given that K to grade 3 represents an especially formative time in our children's lives, will the minister please explain to the parents of Alberta the benefits oil and gas companies can expect to receive from codeveloping curriculum for their five-year-olds?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's only the NDP that think that there's a small group of Albertans that have a stake in the education system. Everyone, every Albertan, has a stake in the education system in this province, and every corner of Alberta has been invited to participate in consultations like Setting the Direction, like Speak Out, which is a student engagement, like Inspiring Education. We take all that input, and we want employers, we want libraries, we want parents, we want grandparents, we want everybody to have a voice in the curriculum redesign as well.

Mr. Bilous: That's pretty rich, Minister, considering there's a short list of who's invited, and it's not every Albertan.

Given that oil and gas companies have no business in curriculum development of kindergarten to grade 3 and given that oil and gas companies have been elevated to the same status as teachers in our classrooms, will the minister admit that he thinks teachers might get in the way of his vision for selling out classrooms to the highest corporate bidder?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, just a ridiculous comment. You know, I'd just refer back to: we want every corner of the province involved in this. The oil and gas industry is a strong piece of our economy. What part are they involved in in the grades 1 to 3 classrooms? I can't specifically answer that question, but in general we want all the business community paying attention to and engaged in the education system just like Dr. Tran-Davies is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Flood Recovery and Mitigation

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been patient with the government on the response to the flood, but like my constituents, my patience is wearing very thin. I have so many questions to ask because the government response has been so muddled. For instance, I note that the budget mentioned new flood mapping. Finally. We have said all along that new flood mapping is needed because the maps are wrong, and it is causing the government to waste money that could be better spent elsewhere. Will the Minister of Municipal Affairs halt the foolishly expensive policy of demolishing safe neighbourhoods like Beachwood until he gets accurate flood maps of High River?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, this was, we all know, the largest, most difficult natural disaster in Canadian history, and I have to say that actually trying to politicize issues like this is inappropriate and not acceptable.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the flood maps that are being worked on will demonstrate, if anything, that we're probably working within the appropriate parameters and perhaps need to be more concerned about wider parameters on flood plains. We're just trying to ensure at every step that we protect Albertans and that we protect their property for the future.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Pat George is one of the few lucky residents in High River whose home didn't flood during the worst floods in our history, but the flawed maps say that his home falls in a floodway, and he is being pressured to accept the government buyout and relocate. The government won't pay him enough to replace his home in High River. Pat doesn't want to leave. Both High River town council and Pat have pleaded with the government to reconsider. Will the minister admit that his maps are wrong and let Pat George stay in his home?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, should there be any specific cases, I am happy to take them up. What I can tell you is that the government of Alberta has taken every responsible step to ensure that Albertans who were affected by the flood have all the choices that we can possibly provide to them so that they can make those decisions, take a look at what their options are in the future, and make those decisions as soon as they possibly can, with more options such as in the case that this member has mentioned.

Ms Smith: That's nonsense. It's been nine months since the floods, and I'm sad to say that there are too many of my constituents and business owners who are still waiting for even basic rebuilding assistance.

Frankly, the government's disaster recovery program contractor, LandLink, is an incompetent train wreck. They have been slow, unresponsive, uncompassionate, and unhelpful. Will the minister address this dysfunction by firing this failed contractor and creating a disaster recovery program that actually works?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, on this case it is quite clear to me that the contractor has been helpful to the province of Alberta for a long period of time, but that contract comes to an end at the end of this month. They will not be part of any future disaster recovery program in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Grain Rail Transportation Backlog

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 one of the largest crops on record was harvested, but farmers across western Canada are experiencing railway and port delays transporting grain. Grain companies are being forced to reduce crop prices because they cannot guarantee delivery to the ports. On Friday the federal government announced that they would take measures to move more grain through the transportation backlog. To the minister of agriculture: can you clarify what some of these measures are and tell us if you support them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that is very important to our producers, and I know it's important to this hon. member. She's been very vocal to me. I know that she and her family have been attempting to move their grain, as many other Alberta producers have.

This is federal jurisdiction, and Alberta has been on record for years wanting some action taken in order to make sure that grain moves in a timely manner. We saw on Friday the federal government take an immediate step, which was an order in council requiring minimum grain movement, ramping up over a period of four weeks, on pain of $100,000-a-day penalties.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the grain backlog has negatively affected many producers in Alberta, can you explain the impact that these changes will have on the agricultural industry and why it is important that we act quickly?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that across the prairies over 90 per cent capacity is now kind of the norm in grain elevators while at the same time we're at all-time lows at the terminals at the ports on the west coast, with at last count some 55 ships sitting offshore waiting, so it's a serious problem. The measures that were announced on Friday were short-term measures.

Also, very significantly, though, the federal government announced that they are going to be looking at legislation. That's a longer term fix, and we're fully engaged in that discussion.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you. To the Minister of Transportation. Alberta is an exporting province. How do you think this will affect the movement of other commodities as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank this hon. member for her question and for how hard she works for her constituents, in particular her grain producers.

I know as well as anyone how important it is for Alberta farmers to be able to move their harvest to global markets, and I've spent a lot of time recently meeting with producers, rail companies, and other stakeholders to address this issue. I'll continue to work closely with my cabinet colleagues and federal counterparts on a solution that will move Alberta agricultural producers' products by rail quickly and efficiently.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in November the Minister of Health said that his government was actively exploring options to move interfacility transfers outside of emergency services so that they weren't tying up local rural ambulance services. In February he put out a release once again stating that his government was actively exploring options to move interfacility transfers outside the EMS. Minister, it's March, and this issue puts patient risk every day onto residents in my constituency. When and how will this problem be finally resolved?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. In fact, we know that today about 30 per cent of all ambulance calls in the province are for interfacility transfer. In many cases these involve patients in continuing care facilities or even at home being transferred for routine appointments. There are a number of issues on the EMS front that we have been dealing with. This is a major initiative, and the hon. Associate Minister – Public Safety is actively engaged in this file as well. We are continuing to work on the issue, and when we have something major to announce in this realm, we will.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First sup.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. Given that the government recently acquired a new facility where ambulance units have been noticed in the south of Calgary, in a prime retail location along Macleod Trail at a former car dealership, can the minister describe what the purpose of this new facility is, what it cost, and what improvements this will offer to the EMS system in southern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Working in part of that system and out of that very facility, the discussions have been ongoing for years. Just to address those issues of rural Alberta getting ambulances back to their base, when an ambulance goes down and needs a piece of equipment, it's better to house it out of a southern positioning facility, and that's what they've done. They've brought equipment and people to fix that equipment so that these ambulances can get back into their community. It's a good thing. It's cost-effective. It gets us out of fire halls and gets us back where EMS work can be done, consolidated, and better patient care can take place.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Considering that the EMS personnel are informing me that despite the new Calgary facility being apparently in place, a lack of vehicles and equipment in southern Alberta remains as a continuing issue, what new options is the minister exploring to address this ongoing problem, then?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, as you can imagine, our province is growing very quickly, not to mention that there's a person becoming a senior every 15 minutes. They come with complex needs, particularly in rural Alberta. As we grow, we need to have facilities in place. We need to have people in place. We're looking at every option. We know how important it is. This is a world-class system that I think is going to be better. We're exploring options that are going to increase our clinical capacity to care for these people in seniors' homes, perhaps family care clinics. This is very complex, and we're working with all the stakeholders to make sure that happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government has several grants and initiatives to provide infrastructure funding to municipalities. However, it is sometimes difficult for municipalities to plan for long-term projects as this funding must be applied for on a year-to-year basis. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is the government's plan to help municipalities with long-term infrastructure planning?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we all know that some of these large projects, for example the LRT in Edmonton, on which we made a major announcement today in collaboration with the city of Edmonton, require long-term commitments. These municipalities require some heads-up in terms of how they can use their resources, and that's what you saw today. It was an exceptional commitment on the part of the province to work with the city of Edmonton to ensure that the citizens of Edmonton are well served long into the future. We have a reliable, predictable set of funding mechanisms, including the MSI, in order to provide that support.

2:40

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the municipalities are facing infrastructure challenges, do we have a plan to improve the funding model for municipalities, particularly in major centres such as Edmonton and Calgary?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a plan to work not just with the large centres but with all other municipalities as well, with 347 communities. We have the GreenTRIP transit incentives; we have policing grants; we have social supports; we have the municipal sustainability initiative, both operating and capital; and, in addition, the Alberta community partnership this year, which is a program designed to enable and to support municipalities that wish to work together, which is an important part of the Alberta value system that we all have grown up with.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister: given that a stable funding structure is crucial to providing essential local services, what will the government do to ensure that the municipalities receive the funding they need despite fluctuating municipal tax revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, we're providing nearly $2 billion directly to municipalities across the province. We've also added $150 million into the municipal sustainability initiative over three years as well as an additional $20 million to the Alberta community partnership to fund regional initiatives. These are substantial commitments from the government of Alberta to the municipalities of this province to help ensure that they are well supported in delivering these very important services to all Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today.

In 30 seconds from now the Clerk will announce the next section of our proceedings.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I believe you have the final member's statement. Please proceed.

Lyme Disease

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked the Minister of Health a number of questions about the availability of testing and treatment for Albertans with Lyme disease. Lyme disease is the most common tick-borne disease in North America and can result in serious and debilitating symptoms. Left untreated, heart and muscle damage and even meningitis can result. These are serious symptoms of a serious disease that deserves a serious response from this government.

In my response to questions last week the Health minister assured that both he and the government understand the severity of Lyme disease and the importance of timely treatment. It was good to hear this from the minister. However, this is not reflected in patient experiences. I have a number of constituents with heart-breaking stories of roadblocks not only in trying to get treatment for Lyme disease but even in accessing the two-stage diagnostic testing for Lyme disease.

One constituent of mine wrote to me about her life changing overnight in November of 2012, when she woke up to intense vibration in her chest and head. Blood tests, X-rays, ultrasound: when all of these tests came back negative, doctors began to suspect it was all in her head. She was prescribed antipsychotics and anti-anxiety medication and sent on her way, none of which helped with her debilitating symptoms. When a family member familiar with Lyme disease suggested she get tested, she found the only option was to pay $2,000 for private testing in the U.S., a test that confirmed it was, in fact, Lyme disease. Despite that diagnosis, she has struggled to receive treatment here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on with horror stories from people who have written about problems accessing health care when they join the unfortunate club of those afflicted by uncommon or rare diseases. Despite the minister's assurances that Lyme disease treatment and testing is a priority, there are dozens of Albertans who would beg to differ.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and table the appropriate number of copies of a letter that I've received from some constituents. The letter is accompanied by a couple hundred signatures. They're concerned that, as the director of Alberta health care in the community of La Crête informed them, cuts to their long-term care are both imminent and definite. I will take it up with the minister, but I table this letter as a plea to Alberta Health Services to stop dropping these bombs in my rural communities and start working, co-operating, and consulting with the community so we can move ahead together and provide equitable health care access.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will do Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's tabling as well. The first one I have here is the first 50 of more than 4,000 postcards our office has received asking the PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta.

The second tabling I have today is an appropriate number of copies of a document from Alberta Education entitled Alberta Education's Curriculum Development Prototyping Partners. This document shows that companies like Syncrude and Suncor are considered key education partners and stakeholders in the development of curriculum for those as young as K to 3.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you're aware, in today's question period I referenced documents from the Alberta Electric System Operator that were given out December 2013 in a meeting with members of that organization, the Market Surveillance Administrator, and players in the marketplace. It clearly shows that the AESO understood that there were unilateral exercises of market power in its offered behaviour enforcement guidelines and that it essentially allows for economic withholding to be practised in this province. In my view, a lot of that amounts to, simply, market manipulation. It's a very enlightening document. I'd encourage everyone to take a look at it as it seems to indicate a lot of what's going on here in the marketplace.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies, too, to table of the information regarding my comments today in the Legislature. For your interest it also includes a picture of the $99 rib steak that's available to you should you attend the Canmore facility.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings? I'm sorry. Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, did I miss you? Yes, I did. My apologies. Please proceed.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the letter of support from Lethbridge county regarding my Bill 201.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, will you then allow me, please, to table a letter from the École Innisfail middle school? You may recall that yesterday we had a bit of a set-to here during question period, and I indicated that a letter had been circulated to all of you. In fact, the letter was written by this school to all elected representatives of Alberta. I spoke with the principal today and obtained permission from him to table this letter and let everyone see it, to make sure everybody got it. So it's going out to you. In this letter, among other things, they comment on their disappointment with the behaviour and language used in this Assembly on a particular day in November and state that they will not bring their students back into session. I'll table that letter now.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the Hon. Mr. Zwozdesky, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, procedural letter 2014, Second Session, 28th Legislature, dated February 11, 2014, from Hon. Mr. Zwozdesky, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, to all Members of the Legislative Assembly, referenced by the Speaker in the Assembly on March 10, 2014.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We're going to move over to points of order, and I think we have three to be heard. Let me just get my list here. I think the first one was Airdrie, who rose at 2:03 p.m. Let's do that one first, and then we'll go elsewhere.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, I have two. One could technically be a point of privilege, but it's a point of order. Then the other one is a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I'll deal with the point of order first, from 2:03.

The Speaker: Well, a point of privilege trumps a point of order. Strictly speaking, we should go to the point of privilege first. I see that the leader of the ND opposition has that same point. Since you were up first, let's hear your point of privilege, then, and if it mirrors the other one, we'll hear a word or two from him as well.

Let's go with Airdrie, please.

Mr. Anderson: You know what? I will cede the floor to the Zen master from the NDP. He can go first on the point of privilege.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition on a purported point of privilege.

Mr. Mason: With your permission, Mr. Speaker – and thank you to the hon. member – I’m rising on a point of privilege directed against the Member for Calgary-Varsity, the Associate Minister of Electricity and Renewable Energy. I have a number of citations. I don’t have the Blues, but I distinctly recollect the hon. associate minister suggesting that if members of the opposition weren’t careful, they could be called before the regulator to clarify their comments. This was part of her argument that she can’t answer questions about electricity price manipulation or pricing in the province because of some ongoing hearings with respect to a particular case involving TransAlta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that constitutes a threat, and under section 93 of Beauchesne’s – I’m just turning to it now – it says, “It is generally accepted that any threat, or attempt to influence the vote of, or actions of a Member, is breach of privilege.” That is the first thing.

Secondly, just as a matter of fact, no member can be compelled to appear in a court or by extension, I would argue, can be compelled to appear at any regulatory hearing. That is something, perhaps, the associate . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, could I just interrupt momentarily? Do you wish to argue this point right now or just give notice of it so that you can have the benefit of the Blues and better prepare yourself?

Mr. Mason: I think I can go now.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Mason: If that’s your wish, we can come back tomorrow.

The Speaker: Well, it’s your call, not mine. I’m just saying that the benefit of the Blues might help.

Mr. Mason: Perhaps the hon. member would like some time to prepare as well.

The Speaker: Well, I don’t know if anybody knows exactly, verbatim, what was said, what wasn’t said, so you might want the benefit of the Blues. It’s your choice. What is your answer?

Mr. Mason: You don’t have the Blues, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I can’t get into a debate on this. I have Blues for one section, at 2:23, but I don’t know if that’s what you were referring to.

Mr. Mason: On your advice – and I appreciate it very much, Mr. Speaker – I will simply, then, give notice, and I will prepared tomorrow to bring this forward, okay?

The Speaker: Thank you very much. That notice has been noted.

We will move back to Airdrie. You had a question of order, I think, on the Minister of Education.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I had a question of privilege, but I think I will let the hon. leader of the NDP handle that tomorrow, and I’ll speak to it at that point. It was about the exact same statement.

I do have the point of order. Would you like me to move to that, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: We could go to your point of order right now, that was raised at 2:03, I think. The first one, in other words.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: All right. To the point of order. Again, I don’t want to burden the time of this House with a point of privilege, but this could fall under that. I will just use Standing Order 23:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

This is in regard to a question that the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View asked. The question to the Minister of Education was: “Will the minister, not his deputy minister, not his [political staff but the minister] commit to sitting down and meeting with Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies and her team of experts today as they have been asking him to for months?” The Minister of Education replied that this member well knows that they have met with this individual, Dr. Tran-Davies, several times. Three times, I think he said.

This statement was false. That has not occurred. The minister should be ashamed to insinuate in response to this question that he has met with Dr. Tran-Davies. It just has not occurred. I don’t know if they’re meeting right now or not. I mean, we can have different views of the facts on many different things, Mr. Speaker, but it’s very difficult when a minister of the Crown gets up and in front of everybody, on television and in this Assembly and so forth, makes a statement that is patently false. It’s hard to have a really good dialogue, and I would say that, you know, as much as banter might be offensive to the school kids, flat-out dishonesty is probably more offensive.

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, we could call a point of order if we’re going to toss threats around on the point of order there because the statement that member made is false if you listen to what he said. The minister did not say: I have met with Dr. Tran-Davies three times. He said, “We have met . . .” “We” could be the government of Alberta, or “we” could be the department, which in this case is actually the case. She has met with department staff, she has met with the deputy minister, and she has met with the chief of staff. That has nothing to do with the question that the hon. member asked in the first place. This opposition party can’t get used to the fact that this is question period, not answer period.

The minister said “we” – the minister said “we” – and that is a statement of truth. If anybody should withdraw remarks, it’s that hon. member for calling the minister a liar, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, unfortunately, I don’t have the Blues at hand, and I don’t think anyone else does, so I’m going to simply accept both sides of this argument. There are frequently opportunities here for members to disagree on items. Now we have some clarification of the word “we,” and we all understand how “we” can be used in the collective sense, in the plural sense, so the points have been aired, and they have been clarified on both sides.

We’re going to now move on. I believe that according to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 5
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014.

The Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014, will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period of April 1, 2014, to May 15, 2014, inclusive.

It is anticipated that funding authority for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2015, will be provided before that date. The required funding authority for the full year is detailed in the 2014-15 government and Legislative Assembly estimates tabled on March 6, 2014. These interim supply amounts reflect both the anticipated date of full supply and the fact that many payments are monthly. Other payments are due at the beginning of each quarter and at the beginning of the fiscal year.

The act would provide spending authority for the following amounts: $20.9 million for the Legislative Assembly and $5.4 billion in operational, $1.6 billion in capital investment, and $293.8 million in financial transactions for the government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today in response to the government's budget, the appropriation bill, Bill 5. I have to say . . .

Mr. Anderson: No.

Ms Smith: Oh. Wasn't I supposed to . . .

Mr. Anderson: This is budget response, right? Are we still on Bill 5? Never mind. Sorry. Premature.

The Speaker: I believe the hon. Minister of Finance moved Bill 5.

Mr. Horner: I moved second reading of Bill 5.

The Speaker: Second reading of Bill 5. So is there a change in your batting order, opposition?

Okay. Let's hear from the hon. Member for Airdrie.

3:00

Mr. Anderson: Wrong bill here.

I want to rise very briefly on Bill 5 because, obviously, it is related to our budget response, and I don't want to be repeating myself. Bill 5, of course, is an interim supply bill, where we have to – the budget won't be passed by March 31. The government still needs money to keep the lights on and do the things that government does on a day-to-day basis, and they need to do so before Budget '14 is passed. So here we are, and we do this. We did this last year as well. We generally didn't do this before, but this is something we did last year as well. What it speaks to, Mr. Speaker, is a bit of broken system in this regard. We shouldn't do this. This is really bad practice. We should have the budget passed by March 31 every year. That should be how it works. Under the standing orders, generally, we're supposed to come back in the second week of February, which would allow a budget to be introduced and most likely be passed by March 31. If that's not enough time, we should move it up another week or two.

The point is that the people of Alberta pay everyone in this Assembly a six-figure salary to do a job, and they expect the folks in here to do a job competently. One of those things would be to pass a budget on time. The problem with doing this sort of interim supply, where we have to fund a month of operations or two months of operations while we wait, is that we don't get to properly debate everything that's in that interim supply bill. It's almost a presumption that we'll be passing Budget 2014 without even debating Budget 2014.

Now, I'm not saying that's illegal or against the practices of the Legislature or hasn't been done anywhere else or anything like that, but what I am saying is that it's bad practice. Competent governments are able to get things done by a proper deadline, by the deadline that the people expect, and the people do not expect us to be approving billions and billions of operational and capital spending right now in a three-line document entitled Bill 5, because the government couldn't come to work in time to pass the budget properly before March 31. That's not the right way to do things.

We hope that the government will get its act together. Hope springs eternal, Mr. Speaker. Next year we can do one less bill in this Assembly and just have the budget introduced in early February, pass it by the end of March, and on April 1 the money will flow accordingly. That would be the proper way to do it.

Now, there are many problems with the allocations in this budget, and we will talk about that in our response to the budget speech so that we're not duplicating our words. But in our suggestions for the government that we give in our budget responses, the Leader of the Opposition and myself as Finance critic hope that whatever we say there would apply to this Bill 5 if we had the time to do it twice.

With that, I will move to adjourn debate on Bill 5.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

11. Mr. Horner moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 6: Mr. Wilson]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me start again. I'm pleased to stand and respond to the government's budget, released last Thursday. I have to tell you that when it first came out, we were very surprised. We thought that the government had a historic opportunity to actually do the right thing and get back into a real, full, consolidated budget balance. And why wouldn't we have thought that? They are going to have record revenues this year. Even when you look at last year's revenues, it looks like on paper they had record revenues, but it doesn't account for one-time funding that came in from the federal government for flood mitigation.

We are going to have record revenues this year and an additional billion dollars worth of transfers from the federal government for the health transfer because of the change in formula. There would have been some very simple things the government could have done to get into a full, consolidated budget surplus if they had just actually kept the commitment that was mentioned in the throne speech to increase year-over-year spending by less than the rate of inflation and population growth. They weren't able to do that, not when you include the additional capital dollars, of course, that the government doesn't like to include in any of its consolidated statements. If you include not only the operational spending but also the increase in capital spending, they didn't manage to keep year-over-year spending increases under inflation plus population growth.

If they'd just done a couple of simple things like stretching out the capital plan an extra year or two so that they could actually build at a pace that industry could keep up with and that we could actually afford, if they'd cut wasteful spending – and we have hundreds of millions of dollars of identified wasteful spending in our budget recommendations – they could have very easily been able to get back into a true consolidated budget surplus. We were a bit worried they were actually going to do that, but they never fail to surprise. When they have the opportunity to do the right thing, they so often do the wrong thing, and in this case they did exactly that with this budget.

The fact that we've got record revenues at a time when the government has chosen also to take out record levels of debt is, in my opinion, breaking our commitment to be responsible for our future generations of taxpayers. Future generations of taxpayers are going to be saddled with debt for no reason. You look at the state of the economy. The government goes back and forth bragging about being in debt and then also bragging about how our economy is the fastest growing and the strongest in the entire country.

If you look at the report that came out last week talking about where job growth is being driven, it's being driven from this province, a hundred thousand new jobs, the vast, vast majority of them being driven in Alberta. Those are high-paying jobs, which means they generate a lot of personal income taxes. The companies employing those folks generate a lot of corporate income taxes. It's the reason why we continue to see our tax revenues go up.

We have a level of resource revenues that consistently is high, higher than any other province enjoys. This year $9.2 billion is what is going to be suggested for our resource revenue. It may even come in higher than that. Yet we have a government that is still going to be taking out $5 billion worth of debt this year. It is going to continue growing the level of debt year after year after year. In its three-year budget plan there is actually no projection over the next three years of a year in which they're actually going to run a real, full consolidated budget surplus. By the 2015 Budget we are going to have $18 billion worth of debt. By the 2016 Budget we are going to have $21 billion worth of debt.

We also have to ask the question: what does next year hold? Last year in their budget projections we were only supposed to be at $17 billion of debt by the time we go into the next election. Already we're looking at having that increased by a billion dollars. It's clearly a government where it doesn't matter how much additional revenue they get. They are so committed to going into debt that they are going to go into debt no matter what.

Why is debt bad? They're spending an awful lot of time talking about why they think debt is good, but I can tell you why government debt is bad. It is government's job to invest in capital infrastructure. This is not an add-on that you do if you happen to have money left over. It's not: gee, we spent so much money on operation that we ran out of money to be able to spend money on capital. This is core government business to invest in capital infrastructure. We have a government now that seems to be reluctant to do proper budgeting to allow for the fact that they have to have capital built and baked right into their consolidated budget amount and instead are trying to convince Albertans that somehow capital is different, that it can be treated as a separate budget, a separate line item.

I have to question whether or not this government has a serious commitment to pay it back. The Finance minister often talks about how it's like a mortgage. It is absolutely not like a mortgage. On a mortgage every single year you're paying a portion of finance charges and a portion of principal so that every single year it ends up getting paid down, year after year after year. Ultimately, you're ending up paying more on principal than you are on interest, and it gets paid off. There is no plan in this budget or next year or the year after that to pay off this level of debt. It is not one time. When a family takes out a mortgage for a home, it is a one-time level of debt that they take out. It goes out over time with a plan to pay it off. But, importantly, when a family takes out a mortgage to buy a house, the house is often an appreciating asset. It goes up in value so that at any point they can sell it to be able to pay off the debt, or at the end of their retirement, when it's paid off, it becomes one of their principal assets to fund their retirement.

The problem when politicians take out debt is that they are doing it to seek votes, and they are not going to be the ones who are going to be around to have to pay it back, especially when you look at the plan that they've put forward. They're putting aside so little money to actually pay this debt when it comes due that it is going to be left to future generations of taxpayers, not only kids and grandkids but great-grandkids and great-great-grandkids, if this government continues to get elected and its plan falls into place.

The argument that because interest rates are low, the government should borrow falls apart when there is no debt repayment plan. What happens, as we've seen this year, when debt comes up for renewal and you don't have the money set aside to repay it, you have to then reissue the bonds at whatever the prevailing interest rate is of the day. We know that this government has taken out debts for all sorts of different lengths of time: some 30 year, some 20 year, some five, some 10. Because they're not putting aside enough money to actually be able to pay off the debt when it comes due, we are left open to not knowing what our future interest payments are going to be. We are left not knowing how much in total we're going to pay in interest rates. Again, that makes it unlike a mortgage. In a mortgage people typically take it out for a fixed term, pay it off over time. The government does not have a plan to do that.

The other question I would have to ask. The Finance minister gives the impression that we're making this choice that if we didn't take out the debt, then we'd have to take it out of our savings, and it's our savings that are generating all of this additional investment income. He's implying that we're putting aside an equal amount of money in our savings to be able to pay off the debt that they're taking out, but that's simply not true, Mr. Speaker. There has never ever been any indication that our heritage savings assets would ever be liquidated to pay off the debt, so let's be frank that the heritage savings trust funds are not assets by which we should offset that debt.

It's also not correct to say that the sustainability fund is money set aside to be able to pay off that debt. That's simply not accurate as well. We know what the sustainability fund is for. It's to be able to stabilize our revenues in a period where we have a downturn in our resource revenues. There's no one contemplating that we would liquidate our sustainability fund to pay off that debt. So what dollar figure are we looking at to be able to offset that debt? It's $34 million that was put away this year. They're adding about $100 million to it next year, but we're ballooning our amount owing to $22 billion by the time we get to 2016.

I have to ask the government a question. If they have such confidence in the market, are any of them taking out a mortgage on their homes so that they can invest in the stock market because they're going to earn higher earnings on their investments than they're paying on their mortgage payment? That's what they're suggesting real families do. Real families, responsible families don't do that, but that's exactly what the government is suggesting that we do.

They have such a short memory. Such a short memory. Back in 2009 – they may forget, but let me remind them – we had a market crash, and the heritage savings trust fund actually lost $2 billion. So you can't just be like a gambler and only trumpet your winnings; you have to look at your investment returns over a long enough period of time and factor in some of your losses as well. The fact that they've taken us down this path, where they're essentially borrowing money to play the market: that isn't what people elect a government to do. They elect a government to responsibly manage the tax dollars that they get in, the revenues that they get in. I think that this strategy is flawed from the start, and I hope I'm wrong. I'm hoping that they'll be able to maintain their market returns, but I have to say that history has not demonstrated that we're able to get double-digit returns consistently every year, as the Finance minister seems to suggest.

The other thing I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, is that up until this point we have managed to build infrastructure debt free for about 20 years. I know that there's a mythology that has been created around how much capital infrastructure dollars were being spent in the Klein years. Klein only had a few years where he reduced spending and maintained a very reasonable and slow rate of growth for a period of time, but he started reinvesting in infrastructure spending. It wasn't a choice between building nothing and borrowing. He was actually able to do it all. He was able to maintain operating surpluses plus invest in capital, plus run real surpluses, which he was able to set aside in the sustainability fund. Let's remember that the sustainability fund got to $17 billion by 2006, plus the debt was paid off. Whatever amount was remaining was set aside in the debt repayment fund to be able to pay off when it came due. Now, six short years later, we have a complete reversal of fortunes.

I would remind the members opposite that they used to believe exactly what I'm talking about right now. Their leader used to believe exactly what I'm talking about right now. With a couple of quotes – I mean, I'm assuming that some folks voted for her and her leadership because of some of the things she said at the time. She said – and I believe this – that “it's entirely possible for us to continue to provide the quality of life that we as Albertans have without going into debt, and I am committed to that.” November 8, 2011, PC leadership. She also said, shortly after becoming Premier, in this Legislature in her maiden speech as Premier: “Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams.” October 24, 2011, Hansard.

Mr. Anderson: It's just operational.

Ms Smith: She didn't say that it was just operational. She didn't say that we just have to run operational surpluses and that all the debt that we take out to build capital doesn't really count. That's not what that quote actually said.

The fact that we have seen a complete reversal two years after the fact, even after a general election where these kinds of statements were made all through the general election, I have to wonder how it is that the Premier and the Finance minister and all the folks on the other side feel they actually have a mandate to do this. I certainly don't believe that they do have a mandate to do this.

Why did the Premier say that debt has proven the death of countless dreams? Why did she say that debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments? If you only had to worry about the principal, maybe you could make the argument that debt was manageable. If you didn't have to worry about fluctuating interest rates and all those finance charges, you might be able to make an argument that you could manage your levels of debt. But it's the interest payments that are the killer. It is the interest payments that are the death of countless dreams.

Now, let's talk about what our interest payments are going to be by the time we get to the next election: $820 million in finance charges. That's a big number to try to wrap our heads around, $820 million buying absolutely nothing. That doesn't buy a nurse or a teacher or a doctor or a corrections worker or a social worker. It doesn't pay for supports for persons with developmental disabilities. It doesn't pay to support our seniors. It is money that is simply going to bankers to finance the outstanding debt. We get nothing for it.

How does that compare with the cost of multiple ministries? Well, I have to tell you that to get an idea of just how big $820 million worth of interest charges is, all of the operations of our Energy department are $701 million in a budget year. All of the operations of our Infrastructure department, our operational side, are $664 million; the entire operations of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, $559 million in a year; Municipal Affairs, our entire operations there, $485 million. We can run the Service Alberta department for $286 million; Aboriginal Relations, $201 million; Tourism, $193 million; Culture, $177 million; the Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour department, $167 million; Executive Council, the Premier's office, $51 million; International and Intergovernmental Relations, $39 million.

We have 11 ministries that operate on a budget on an annual basis that is lower than the $820 million in finance charges that we are going to have to pay every single year for at least 30 years. We project that it's more like 70 years, and if they only put aside a hundred million dollars per year, as they are in this year's budget, it'll take over 200 years for them to actually pay back that level of debt. We will be paying those interest charges year after year after year after year, diverting money away from the things that really matter to Albertans. That is why debt is a trap that has caught so many struggling governments, and that is why Alberta should continue to strive to be debt free, and it would under a Wildrose government.

The other problem that we have with the budget is a problem that's been raised by the Auditor General. It's even actually been raised by the former Finance minister. Because we do not have a true consolidated budget – we have three separate budgets – it's almost impossible to actually figure out what the true shortfall really is.

It isn't any victory for them to claim an operating surplus. An operating surplus is not something that has ever been difficult for this government to do in the last 20 years. Even with Premier Stelmach, who had the misfortune of having a year where we had a global financial meltdown at a time when we also had a decline in natural gas prices, even in the year that he was Premier, the worst that they did on the operational side was to have a $59 million operational deficit. So to do some fancy footwork and change the definition of surplus and then try to claim that it's some great victory: I'm sorry; Albertans are not buying it.

The question that we have that is really peculiar, though, about what this government is now trying to sell us, is the pretense that they do have a consolidated surplus. They claim to have a consolidated surplus at the same time as they're borrowing $5 billion. Now, Albertans are no dummies; they've been asking this question. They've been asking it of me in our office; they've been asking it on all of the social media pages: how come you can have a surplus but also have $5 billion worth of new debt? The answer to that is quite simple. You don't really have a surplus. It's smoke and mirrors. It's a shell game. It's not real. That, I think, is what Albertans are saying loud and clear, and I think it also is diminishing the trust that they have in this government.

If the government wants to make the case about why we should go into debt, then they should actually be straight with Albertans about the level of the consolidated deficit. I have to tell you that it's become a bit of a parlour game every year, where you've got multiple different organizations trying to figure out what the actual shortfall is. We've calculated it out at about $2.7 billion. The Canadian Taxpayers' Federation I think has calculated it out somewhere closer to $4 billion. So safe to say that we have a shortfall this year of between $2 billion and $4 billion. And who knows? Depending on how energy prices go, it could be more; it could be less. The point is that we need to have a full, complete consolidated set of books so that we have the answer to this question.

I don't really care about comparing our practices to other provinces who have bad practices as well. We should be comparing our practices to our own best practices. The Finance minister I think was inaccurate when he suggested that Alberta had always done its books this way. I think that if you go back to the early days, when Premier Klein and Finance minister Jim Dinning came in, one of their goals was to have a single consolidated set of books. What is the total revenue coming in, what are the total expenses going out, and what's the difference? Unless you know how much your shortfall is, you are never ever going to plot a track to be able to get back into genuine surplus. This government used to know that, but it seems like they've forgotten the lessons over the last 20 years.

The other issue and concern that we have is with the heritage fund and the way in which the government is now, through Bill 1, changing to be able to allow them to skirt around the policy that they put in place last year. We were actually quite enthusiastic about their policy last year because it looked as though what they were trying to do was create a situation where the funds that are generated from the heritage fund would stay invested in that fund so that it could grow over time.

Now with Bill 1 this year they're actually carving out a number of different accounts so that they can create revenue streams from those accounts to be able to siphon off dollars that were supposed to be invested in the fund. Over the next 10 years we're going to see $2 billion worth of interest income siphoned off in that way, which I think is, again, some more smoke and mirrors. I don't think that that was the intention of what the bill was last year that would have reinvested those dollars in the account. We're very disappointed that the government isn't doing it the way we think you can do it appropriately. We have no objection to endowment funds, but you have to do it the right way. You have to do it with real surpluses.

Let's remember where the heritage savings trust fund would have been if the government had actually kept to the commitment of keeping those investment dollars reinvested in the fund. We now have in that fund on a per capita basis fewer dollars than when the first deposit was made in 1976. If the government had simply kept with the plan of reinvesting that investment income, it would be worth $165 billion today. Now, imagine if AIMCo had had the success of investing at 11 per cent. If they had had $165 billion in that account, we would be looking at over $16 billion in additional investment income that could go to fund the programs and services that Albertans care about. That was a huge lost opportunity. Unfortunately, by going down the same track of finding a new way to siphon off that investment income, the government is ensuring that we won't be able to reach that target going forward over the next 20 or 30 years.

What we would have liked to have seen is the government get back into real surplus. Our plan is to put 50 per cent of those surpluses in this heritage savings trust fund and keep that investment income growing in the fund until it gets to a point where it surpasses the amount that we're generating through oil and gas revenues so that we can wean ourselves off our reliance on oil and gas. I think that that's what Albertans want to see. Unfortunately, they did not see it in this budget. There was a better way to do it, but once again I think it's a missed opportunity on the part of the government.

I have mentioned a couple of our Wildrose recommendations for Budget 2014, and I'll go through a few of those now because I think that to understand why I'm disappointed with the budget today, we have to see the kinds of things that we think were very simple wins that would have set the right tone in government, would have set the right tone for our public service, and I think would have gone a long way towards helping us find the efficiencies that we need to be able to maintain surpluses in the long run.

We have 16 recommendations, Mr. Speaker, and I can table this document later so that it's on file. We would eliminate all associate minister positions and reduce the number of ministries to 16. We'd roll back MLA salaries. We'd cut cabinet minister pay. We'd cut the size of the Public Affairs Bureau in half and prohibit its partisan activities. We'd cap bonuses for public services. We'd limit their severance packages. We'd halt unnecessary extras to the new MLA offices in the federal building; I noticed that the cost overruns continue to go on in the federal building. We'd cap annual travel costs for the Premier, ministers, MLAs, and staff. We would end corporate welfare. We would reduce the cost of government and the AHS bureaucracy while protecting front-line services and positions. We would implement our 10-year, debt-free capital plan. We'd implement a rolling three-year, zero-based budgeting program. We would increase resources to the Auditor General's office and focus on value-for-money audits. We'd establish a waste-buster program protected by whistle-blower legislation, true protection under whistle-blower legislation. Once we get into savings, we would use that to pay down the Redford debt, and we would implement the Wildrose balanced budget and savings plan.

So let's talk about some of the ways in which this budget falls short. I've already mentioned that they did not actually live up to their commitment to keep the spending in line with inflation plus population growth. They're exceeding them. That's always what's gotten us into trouble. When the government increases spending above inflation plus population growth and it ends up outstripping the growth in our revenues, that's what causes our shortfalls. The way to be able to get back into long-term, sustainable surpluses is by limiting year-over-year increases so that our revenues grow faster.

I think that what we often see and expect to see is that leadership really should begin from the top. If you want to be able to create a culture in the administration that you actually care about the dollars and cents, you actually have to see the ministers caring about dollars and cents themselves. Now, the media has already talked about the increases in the Premier's office, an additional $1.2 million, including $300,000 for additional letter writers. We already know about her expensive travel costs, but I don't see any indication that that is going to change.

Let's look at some of the other ministries where we see a large year-over-year increase for ministerial support. We see it in Energy, a 13 per cent year-over-year increase. We see it in Infrastructure, a 34.4 per cent year-over-year increase in ministerial support, and we see in Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour a year-over-year increase of 51 per cent. I have to wonder how the AUPE is going to respond to seeing that they're being asked to have 0, 0, 1, and 1 on their increases year over year, yet the minister responsible for this area sees a 51 per cent increase in his ministerial support budget. I guess he may have needed to get new walnut furniture and paint his furniture to be able to match, as he did in the last ministry he was in. This is exactly the kind of thing that demoralizes our public service, when they see politicians saying: do as I say, not as I do. Those are the scandals.

The other issue that we have is the absolute failure of the results-based budgeting process. We have the budget document and the throne speech trumpeting and proudly proclaiming that they've gone through 375 different programs and found all these efficiencies. Well, let me point out and give a shout out to the two ministries where they have managed to find efficiencies.

You look at the number of full-time equivalent employees that they now employ. Last year Education employed 649 full-time equivalents; this year it's going to be 648. They managed to find one full-time equivalent savings. Congratulations to the Education minister.

Let me also shout out – I should have done this one first because it's bigger. I should have done a shout-out to Service Alberta: last year 1,372 full-time equivalents, this year 1,370. They found two full-time equivalent positions in savings. This in living colour is what the savings are from the results-based budgeting process.

Now, let me tell you what I had anticipated seeing some of the savings being, because we were told that the new energy regulator was going to result in all of these efficiencies. I suppose by relation we had been told that we were going to as well see some efficiencies in how environmental regulations were implemented, a one-window approach making it easier. So I guess I anticipated that by bringing departments together, creating one window, you'd actually need fewer people to be able to push all that paperwork around. Silly me. It's not turned out to be that way. In ESRD we're actually seeing an increase of 206 full-time equivalent staff. They're now up to 2,640. And in the Alberta Energy Regulator they are up 101 full-time equivalent staff, to 2,076.

Mr. Speaker, when I see results like that, I have to tell you that I would call that non results-based budgeting because I would anticipate seeing something a little bit more in evidence that they're actually making some progress, and we're not seeing it.

I have to say that the other issue that has us quite concerned is that we see a budget come down on Thursday and then here we are on Tuesday already seeing other auxiliary announcements being made, that weren't mentioned in the budget. The LRT is what I'm referring to. If it was so important – and it is important to make sure that we have appropriate funding for our municipalities; that's why we put our 10-10 plan for municipal funding forward – then why is it that two business days after the budget came out, there's a slapdash press conference put together to announce some other way in which to be able to fund a priority that should have actually been in the budget?

How can anyone have any confidence that what we're seeing in the budget today is actually what we're going to see next week or next month or two months from now? It's happened in the last couple of years that what comes forward in the budget gets completely thrown out the window with the mid-year announcements that end up getting made. It's just a bit surprising to me that this one occurred within two business days of the budget being released.

Let's talk a bit about capital because this is an important area. This is why we put forward our 10-year, $50 billion, debt-free capital plan. An essential part of it is our 10-10 community infrastructure transfer, which would give long-term, sustainable, predictable funding to our municipalities that would increase with the increase in provincial tax revenues. We're already consulting with municipalities and hoping to hear back from them on what they think about the plan, but so far they're saying that that's exactly what they've been asking for from this government, and we wish the government would take note and do something similar.

The second part of it is – and I hear this everywhere I go – the need for a public prioritized project list. We know that the dollars flowing through to our municipalities are only one part of the overall picture of how much money needs to be invested in capital infrastructure. But I can tell you that there are so many projects where municipalities are left wondering whether or not they're going to have the resources they need to be able to fund them, not only because they're missing out on the long-term sustainable funding from the MSI funding but also because they're uncertain about what kind of capital grants are available to them.

In my own riding, in Okotoks, they have approved a pipeline project from Calgary to Okotoks to be able to fund their water needs. I think Okotoks is the only municipality in Alberta that does not have water allocation to be able to expand with their growth in residents. Okotoks is the only municipality where they're expected to go and buy their water licence off an oil company or an irrigation district or some other industrial development to be able to have enough water to ensure that their residents can continue using it. Their solution is to build a pipeline from Calgary to Okotoks, but there's uncertainty around the water for life program.

The water for life program would have been 90 per cent funded by the provincial government, 10 per cent funded by the municipality. We're hearing from some municipalities that they've received letters that they're no longer going to be funded to the 90 per cent amount, that it's going to be cut back. I have to say that for a community like Okotoks, it's unclear how they're going to be able to access those dollars to be able to build that project. If we had a 10-year public prioritized project list, then they would actually be able to know whether it was going to be three years from now, six years from now, or nine years from now. Right now they're kept in the dark.

I was just in Fort Saskatchewan last night. There's going to be $20 billion worth of growth in the Industrial Heartland region. They have a particularly difficult interchange at highway 15. If you start going out at 3 o'clock in the afternoon to do your commute, you won't get home until 6:30. The North West upgrader is going to bring 3,000 more employees into this area. And what's the government's proposal? They want to put in a couple of traffic circles or maybe some stoplights, but it isn't even in this three-year plan. This is a community that's been waiting for it for seven years. It's not in the three-year plan. When are they going to get it? Is it going to be six years from now, nine years from now? Nobody really knows. But if you actually had a 10-year prioritized project list and you had objective criteria for determining what interchanges would be a high priority and which ones could be moved further down the list, at least they would know. At least they would be able to have certainty.

My colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View has already pointed out that with the promise for 50 new schools and 70 modernizations the numbers don't add up in the budget. It looks like we're short at least $800 million. The government admitted to that yesterday, that they don't quite know how they're going to fund all of these schools that they announced even though they're trying to pretend that they're going to have them all in place by the time we go into the next election. Well, we know that that's not true.

I've already mentioned that the LRT wasn't in the plan.

I met as well with the University of Alberta today, talking about some of the difficulties that they have with the capital funding. They called it lumpy, that it comes in one big lump, and the problem is that you don't know when it's your turn to get the lump and when it's the other universities' turns to get theirs. If we actually had a 10-year prioritized project list, we would actually be able to tell our universities like the University of Alberta and others about when their capital projects were going to come up.

Then, of course, there's flood mitigation. That was one thing that I was pleased to see in the government plan, that they've set some money aside for flood mitigation. I know that in High River they're looking at a dollar figure of somewhere around $350 million to be able to get the projects that they need built to protect our community. I think there's about $700 million unallocated. I'll be watching to see how that does get allocated, because I know that other communities are going to also have those needs.

But, again, it's not just the communities that were hit this time that need flood mitigation measures. There were 66 communities identified in George Groeneveld's 2005 flood report, and the question is: when are they going to be on the list? I'm delighted that my community and Calgary are high up on the priority list because of the tragic floods of last year, but let's not forget that this is not going to be just a one-time investment. We need to know what the long-term plan is, and unfortunately, because the government continues to refuse to have a long-term public prioritized list, we still don't have the answers to those questions.

More generally, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I believe that a culture change starts at the top. I have talked to countless front-line public-sector workers working their hearts out who are absolutely demoralized by the environment that they're working in: corrections officers on stress leave, nurses taking sick days, others who come to work counting up the days in which they can qualify to be able to take early pension. That's a horrible environment to work in. I think the government owes it to our front-line staff to start doing some of the right things so that they can get confidence back that they're valued on the front line.

I have to say that when you see the Premier pretending that she doesn't know that she shouldn't use the government plane for personal vacations, pretending that she doesn't know, and the cabinet as well pretending that they don't know that you shouldn't use the government plane to go to government fundraisers, having an expensive $45,000 trip that should have been essentially for free and then refusing to pay it back: all of these kinds of things demonstrate that we have a political leadership team that doesn't think they have to walk their talk. It filters down through the senior ranks of their own political offices, it filters down the senior ranks of the public administration, and it demoralizes our front-line public-sector unions.

I would point out – and I have before – that of our 22,000 public-sector union employees from AUPE only 88 of them were on the sunshine list. I would also point out that of our 22,000 AUPE front-line workers, 3,800 of them earn less than $45,000 in a single year. When they see government making decisions to pay their senior political staff well in excess of the disclosure limit on the sunshine list, when they see the Premier taking a single five-day trip that cost in excess of what they earn in a year, you can just imagine the kind of environment that creates for those who are doing the work every single day to support the services that matter to Albertans.

I'm hoping, even though we don't see any evidence in this budget, that the Premier and the cabinet take these concerns seriously and start making the kind of small changes that will ultimately end up in paying big dividends not only for our front-line workers by creating a culture and an environment in which they're delighted and joyful to come to work on any given day but also one in which we could actually get to a full, real consolidated surplus that we can maintain so that we can start building surpluses and savings to not only take care of the needs of this generation but to also take care of the needs of future generations.

I have no intention to support this budget, Mr. Speaker. I think that it's an absolute missed opportunity for the government to have done the right thing. Unfortunately, it seems like when the right opportunity presents itself, the government always take another path.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Section 29(2)(a) is available. Does anyone wish to take advantage of 29(2)(a)?

If not, we'll move on to the next main speaker. That's the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all Albertans and the Alberta Liberal caucus I'm pleased to respond to Budget 2014. Our economy is great. We have amongst the best employment rates in the country next to Saskatchewan, amongst the highest incomes. Our population is growing. We're up to 4 million people. The price of oil and natural gas is very, very good. We have amongst the hardest workers in the country if not the world. These are economic circumstances that anybody would like to be in a position to govern. This is as good as it gets. So my question is: why are we going into debt? We've had six successive deficit budget years, so last year what did the government do? They just changed the definition of balanced and changed how they budget.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta deserves not only a strong economy; we also deserve a strong society. You know, the Alberta Liberals called the budget before the election the fudge-it budget. The government got all excited and thought oil was going to keep going up and up. They overestimated revenues. The day after the election they brought in Budget 2013. We called that the bankrupt budget. That's when the government got all depressed and used an extremely low price on energy resource dollars as an excuse to break their promises and to attack the very programs and the very people that actually helped build a good economy, a strong economy, and a strong society. This budget we call the over-under budget – so fudge-it budget, bankrupt budget, over-under budget – because regular, hard-working, everyday Albertans continue to be overtaxed and underserved.

I want to talk about being overtaxed. Mr. Speaker, we did some research. Alberta used to have a progressive income tax under Premier Lougheed. It was 44 per cent of the federal tax brackets. When Alberta went to a flat tax, taxes on lower income and middle-income Albertans actually went up, from 7.048 per cent to 10 per cent, and taxes on the wealthiest actually went down. Alberta Liberals recognize it's important for regular working families to have money in their pocket to spend on their house, on their bills, their car, to feed and clothe their children, to look after their parents, and to maybe have a little bit of fun on the side, eat out once in a while and go on a trip once in a while.

Now, there are other taxes on families. School fees. That's a tax, Mr. Speaker. School fees for working families. If you have kids in school, you're paying up to $530 a year on school fees. The busing fees are taxes. Having amongst the highest tuition fees in the country and noninstructional fees: this is a form of a tax. The provincial government, the Conservative government, has downloaded responsibilities to the municipalities, especially urban municipalities who've had to raise their property taxes. That's also a tax which is hurting families and businesses.

Mr. Speaker, not only are Albertans being overtaxed; they're also being underserved. Let's have a look. Right now Alberta has, as the output of this government, one of the highest high school dropout rates in the country, class sizes that are beyond imaginable. We don't have the teachers and we don't have the support for the teachers that we need to build a better Alberta, to build a better future for our society. The government did one of the biggest cutbacks in history, at least in modern-day history, in postsecondary education last year. They still have not reversed those cutbacks.

Our seniors continue to be nickel-and-dimed. In fact, the government has gone so far as to cut seniors' programs in here, that our seniors rely on. Mr. Speaker, why is it that in the wealthiest place in the country we have the lowest postsecondary participation rate? It's hurting individuals, individual families, communities, and it's actually hurting industry. It's hurting our economy because the education system, that this government severely underfunds from early childhood to kindergarten and from kindergarten to grade 12 to postsecondary, is underfunded, and it's not performing as it possibly could.

We just met with school board trustees, public and Catholic, in Edmonton. There is a lot of deferred maintenance, Mr. Speaker, built up over the years. Our schools in the Edmonton Catholic school system alone: a quarter of a billion dollars' worth of deferred maintenance. If you don't maintain your schools, they're going to get broken down and moldy. You've got to fix the roof.

Our schools already don't have the teachers that they need. We have 40,000 more kids in the school system today than a few years ago, yet we didn't get the teachers and the support they need.

Mr. Speaker, not only are Albertans not getting the services they need; the province is actually going into debt. My question is: where is our money going? Where is our money going? The Alberta Liberal budget would focus around three principles: one, fiscal prudence; two, social responsibility; and three, environmental responsibility. These are things that we are not seeing in this budget, and they are missing. These are essential elements for our economy moving forward.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think that with the current Conservative government, basically, their budget is to spend today and pay tomorrow. What they call spending we call investing in education.

We believe there's a simpler way to do this, and this is how you do it.

One, on the stronger economy side, first the government has to stop wasteful spending. There are many examples of wasteful spending. In fact, I'm going to give credit to the Wildrose here. They've done a good job of identifying at least half a billion dollars' worth of government waste. In fact, I believe all of us legislators here can agree on that. That has to be cut. [some applause] Mr. Speaker, you've got to give credit where credit is due. You do.

I don't think anybody could disagree with the fact that the Premier and cabinet should not be flying around on $45,000 flights and hiring more scribblers and more people for entertainment in the Premier's office. Hosting expenses: gosh, $400,000 more for champagne and caviar and foie gras in the Premier's office alone.

What this budget doesn't address is prudent fiscal management. The Premier talks about results-based budgeting. Let's talk about results-based budgeting. Health care spending: we spend amongst the most in the country on health care, yet the results that they're posting on the website – they took the results down. They took the numbers down. In fact, you were the Minister of Health who put them all up, Mr. Speaker, because you knew we needed to show the results to the public. In fact, we did that together, and I thank you very much for that. The government took those results down and watered down the benchmarks and moved the goalposts. Eighteen billion dollars' worth of spending each and every year: if you can't manage health care, you can't govern. It is the number one spending issue for every provincial government in this country.

Mr. Speaker, health care spending is up from $11.9 billion in 2007 to now more than $18 billion. Jeez, that's more than a 45 per cent increase. The population has gone up maybe 17 per cent. Health spending to Alberta Health Services alone is up 62 per cent from 2007 while the population is up maybe 15, 17 per cent. Why are we not getting the performance and access to care? The key here is access.

The reason I talk about health care is because as a physician, as somebody who was the associate minister of health care, the parliamentary assistant, as somebody who believes in fiscal responsibility, we deserve to get better health care and better access to health care for the amount of money we're spending. In fact, I believe that we can probably get better access to better health care for a billion dollars less.

I'd like to see the results-based budgeting of the health care system, $18 billion. Let's open up the books. We have seen many examples of waste and mismanagement in health care: managers managing managers managing managers. Heck, the government keeps firing its own managers every, you know, four weeks to four months.

Mr. Speaker, we talked about cutting wasteful spending, maybe half a billion dollars. Better management of health care: that's about $1.5 billion.

Now, there are ways to increase our revenues as well. Here's how you increase the revenues: if we actually brought in world best practices on the environment and put a real price on carbon. [interjections] Hon. members from the Conservative caucus, please pay attention. If we actually removed the criticisms of our energy industry, the environmental barriers that this government has put in place, where our credibility has been put at stake, brought in world best practices on the environment, and put a real price on carbon – a real price on carbon would be a consumption tax paid by the tailpipes where our product goes: eastern Canadians, our American partners, the Europeans, the Chinese, or India, wherever our product goes. A real price on carbon would bring $1.8 billion a year into Alberta. If we actually dealt with environmental issues, we could get our pipelines to tidewater, and we would get the world/international price for our product. That's one way to increase our revenue.

Another way to increase our revenue: if we went to a progressive income tax, which would be a tax cut for the majority of Albertans. Yeah, the billionaires and the multimillionaires will pay their share, and, yeah, some of these MLAs are going to pay a little bit more. Mr. Speaker, you don't get rich without a good public education system and public health system and public roads and public infrastructure and hundreds or thousands of hard-working people earning 50, 60 grand a year who have children that need to be educated. People like Warren Buffett understand that. If we actually brought in a progressive income tax, we could bring in, you know, $750 million to 1 and a half billion dollars a year. So $1.8 billion on our carbon tax, $750 million to $1.5 billion on a progressive income tax. You know, I don't think we need to touch taxes too much, but just tax in fairness.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the royalty holidays are expiring. We're going to go from 1 per cent to 25 per cent royalties on all these plants. There's a lot of revenue. We have a lot of money; it's just been mismanaged, wasted and mismanaged. The Alberta Liberal plan would invest in nonprofit, community-based home care and long-term care and a seniors' drug program. We'd get people out of hospital so that the most expensive thing on the books, the health system, can actually function. Getting the seniors out will save a quarter of a billion dollars alone and reduce the lines, which will save more money.

Investing. We would take that billion dollars and invest a third of it in our seniors and our community support system for the disabled and seniors so that they don't have to come to the hospital. If they're in, we get them out. We invest a third of that into getting Albertans family doctors and invest in primary care networks and integrate those into the health system. Fragmenting primary care into family care clinics and PCNs, with everyone doing different things, is actually going to hurt patients. You need one mechanic to look after your body, and that mechanic needs a team. That mechanic is your family doctor, supported by nurse practitioners, the whole health team. We would take a third of that money and get caught up on all the lineups, the wait-lists for hip, knee, and cardiac surgeries.

Alberta Liberals would make the largest investment in history, investment into education from early childhood to K to 12 to postsecondary. We would bring in schools as community hubs. If our schools are built as community hubs, we know it will save money in other areas: health care, children and youth services, and other support systems. If we co-locate the facilities in our school system, it will save money, and we will have a better society, prepared for a better economy.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I could go on and on and on. With the Liberal plan we can actually balance the budget and get Albertans the services that they need and save for the future. This is a plan that Premier Lougheed had. It was about investing in our children, investing in the future. This is the kind of Alberta we would like to build. In fact, I believe we can build even a better Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Section 29(2)(a) is available. Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the leader and would ask him to expand on what the Liberal vision is for prevention and community health promotion.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Mr. Speaker, prevention is the key. They say that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. In our instance, you know, a couple of hundred million dollars' worth of prevention would probably save a billion dollars on the other side of the budget.

Now, let's talk about prevention. Prevention is not just in health care. If we actually invest, say, in the health care system, the preventative side of the health system, all international evidence points to the fact that we will save money on the other side of the system, that's costing us a lot of money. We would save money immediately, and in the medium and long term we would save a lot of money, and more importantly we would improve the lives of people.

Let's talk about the children and youth services system. The government spends a lot of money on the problem side of the system, but if they actually invested upstream, into preventing the problem, we would improve the lives of children and families and have fewer children in care. For those that are in care, they would get the best, world-class care.

Mr. Speaker, poverty leads to poor health, and poor health leads to poverty. We have 90,000 children living in poverty today, right now, in Alberta. Poor kids come from poor families. This is why Alberta Liberals want to cut the taxes of middle-income and lower middle-income working families. We want to get free high-quality, world-class child care for all Albertans. You know, many of them are low-income single mothers, and many of them are new immigrants.

We must invest in child care. We've got to make sure we invest in Head Start and Early Head Start programs, full-day kindergarten, especially in the high-risk areas. If we invest in infant nutrition, prenatal and postnatal programs, and get young mothers parenting coaches and ensure that that mother has a chance to finish her education and get a skill, get a trade, and the child gets looked after, Mr. Speaker, imagine how wonderful this place would be. It's pretty good already, but imagine how great it could be.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Let's talk about prevention in the criminal justice system. If we actually invested in mental health and addictions, we would reduce costs in the criminal justice system. If we invested in policy that reduced poverty, we would reduce homelessness and mental health and addictions.

Mr. Speaker, here is the problem: 42 years. You know, I believe the first 16 years were probably pretty good. The first 14, 16 years were actually really good under Premier Lougheed. But in the last few years this has been a very reactionary government that has put very expensive Band-Aids on the problems. Now they're falling off, and that's why many in our society are not participating in the prosperity of this great province.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Liberals want to make sure that this province will be great once again: our credibility on the environment across the country; the morale of the health staff, of the doctors and the nurses and the support staff and the cleaning staff; our patients get the care that they deserve; our children get the education that they deserve. We have the best and brightest moving here because they want to get a world-class university education. In fact, we retain the best and brightest. They stay here.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to build a strong economy and a strong society that's premised on fiscal prudence, social responsibility, and environmental responsibility. We should be balancing the social books and the fiscal books and putting money in the bank.

Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thankful for the opportunity to speak to Budget 2014. I'm going to make sure that I start the stopwatch here so I know where I am. Obviously, one of the first things that sticks out about Budget 2014 is the record revenue that we are making as a province. This, of course, is good news, absolutely good news. It certainly has very little to do with this government. It has to do with the entrepreneurs of Alberta. It has to do with some great blessings that we've had and luck that we've had as a province to have such a wonderful amount of natural resources, and that's always a good thing.

We do have a record revenue stream right now. That is why people are really baffled by this budget. The budget obviously was called the building Alberta budget by the folks opposite, but it should be called the doubling down on debt budget. It is an irresponsible document, it is a dangerous document, and it is a document that, I believe, Albertans are going to have to look at in the next election and decide what path they want to go down because we're at a crossroads here as a province. We should have had this discussion in general election 2012. Sadly, because of, frankly, some dishonesty by the other side, we did not have that discussion, which was unfortunate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if I may, I'd just caution you on your choice of words.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. I understand that, Mr. Speaker. I was not accusing any member of the House. I just said dishonesty by the campaign opposite, and it's within my rights to do so.

With regard to making sense of the Alberta budget and breaking it down, yes, there is an operational surplus of $2.6 billion. Not much worth celebrating there. Premiers Klein and Stelmach had operating surpluses every year except for 2010-11 where they had a very small $50 million operational deficit. The current Premier in her first two budgets has had large operational deficits despite having the three best revenue years taken together in the entire history of the province.

The second piece is that the government is claiming a consolidated surplus of $1.1 billion. How that works is – we have a chart on our online website that I hope everyone will go to. We posted on Twitter, Facebook, et cetera. It's a document that breaks down the budget so people can take a look at how the PCs get their $1.1 billion surplus. Essentially what they do is include, obviously, their operational spending, they include all the revenues, and they include what are called capital grants: MSI, grants for roads, grants to communities for different roads and different projects where the money is given to community. Grants, essentially. Those grants in 2013 totalled about $2.4 billion, so the government claims that's a $1.1 billion surplus.

What it does not include is $4.2 billion in what's called capital investment. Those are provincial roads, provincial bridges, health facilities, schools, postsecondary institutions, and so forth. That $4.2 billion is not included in the consolidated budget number, and that's where their budget document is clearly misleading. If you include capital investment, not just capital grants like MSI but you include capital investment – the roads, the bridges, the schools, the health facilities, et cetera – then the deficit is at least $2.7 billion this year.

That is the true deficit number. Is that an improvement from last year's budget? It is. Thanks to the increased revenues, we do have a smaller consolidated deficit of $2.7 billion. But it is absolutely untrue, misleading, and wrong to suggest that it is a $1.1 billion surplus.

Mr. Speaker, the real crux of this budget, though, was a decision by the government to double down on the debt, and that's what I want to focus most of my time on today. I could point the minister to the Auditor General, to former Minister Ted Morton, and other recent former Finance ministers that have spoken out about this. We could talk about, you know, dozens and dozens of commentators from across the country that have said that this is folly.

We can even cite The Economist magazine, Mr. Speaker, but I'm not going to because I don't think this minister cares too much about that. He's going to find a few bankers and a CA buddy representing the Alberta chamber to back up his assertions, and he's going to . . .

An Hon. Member: Jim Flaherty.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, Jim Flaherty. That's right.

He's going to say, "Well, because of that, we're doing the right thing," and I disagree. We're not doing the right thing, and I don't think that history is going to reflect kindly on this Finance minister or this government for these decisions.

There is one study I do want to point out, though, and it is interesting. It's from the Macdonald-Laurier Institute, and it was a 2012 study which, after cracking the different numbers and projections and forecasts, showed that Alberta faced the greatest risk among Canada's provinces of defaulting on its debt in 30 years and that Canada as a whole faced a eurozone-like debt crisis because of the high spending by provinces. The author, Mr. Marc Joffe, pointed to Ontario and Alberta as facing the greatest potential pitfalls for a default on our finances over the next 30 years.

Now, Mr. Joffe is a very well-respected economist. He is the principal consultant at Public Sector Credit Solutions in San Francisco; senior director at Moody's Analytics, where he worked for nine years; researched, co-authored Kroll Bond Rating Agency's 2011 U.S. municipal bond default study. He recently published the public sector credit framework for estimating government bond default probabilities. He has a BA and MBA from NYU and is completing his MPA at San Francisco State University. But I'm sure the minister's CA buddy knows more than Mr. Joffe does about these things.

These findings were also endorsed by Mr. Don Drummond, a senior economist, as people know, adviser to TD Bank, a Matthews fellow on global policy, and distinguished visiting scholar at the School of Policy Studies at Queens University.

These are senior people, senior economists, experts in the field that say that Alberta is in severe danger of defaulting on our debt obligations moving forward into the future, not in the short term but in the long term.

Incidentally, who else sits on the board of the Macdonald-Laurier Institute, which commissioned this report? Well, it's none other than the hon. former Finance minister, Jim Dinning. Boy, we sure have come a long way from the days of Jim Dinning and not in a good way.

Budget 2014 adds over $5 billion in debt this year and brings Alberta's total debt to over $21 billion by 2016. The Finance minister, of course, has compared debt financing for infrastructure to a home mortgage. This is an absolutely ridiculous comparison. A home mortgage is secured by an appreciating asset: the home. Because of the down payment made on the home, that home is almost always worth more than the amount of the loan. Almost always. I mean, there are exceptions. But in Alberta, in particular, there are really no exceptions. It's almost always worth more than the amount of the loan. And it's easy to sell. It's easy to sell on the market, get a real estate agent, sell it yourself. You can sell your home and get back that money, pay off your owing amount.

In contrast, government assets depreciate in value, are very expensive to keep up, they are worth less than they cost to build the moment they open or start. The very moment, immediately they're worth less than what it cost to build, and they are difficult to sell even if you would want to sell a school or a hospital or a road. Even if you wanted to, for some reason, sell those public infrastructure assets, it's difficult to do so. You certainly wouldn't do it very much. You would do it in very few instances.

The minister also says that because interest rates are currently low, now is the time to borrow. Interest rates are low, Mr. Speaker, for now. But these debts that are on the books will need to be refinanced. We're refinancing almost a billion dollars in debt just this year alone. But these debts, because they need to be refinanced – as our debt load increases, so will the available interest rate. As our debt goes up, as the senior economists with this Macdonald-Laurier Institute have said, what will happen is that the price of borrowing will go up for Alberta. It will keep going up and up and up and up. As that happens, of course, we will have new and increased annual interest charges that we'll have to deal with. So the $800 million today is going to increase to $1.2 billion, by the government's own numbers, in interest charges by 2016, and then it just keeps going up from there if the borrowing continues.

It's amazing to me that we seem to have forgotten the consequences of sustained debt financing in Europe, in the United States, in Ontario. How could we not see those lessons? How could we go down that path? Have we lost our minds to think that we, somehow, need to follow in the footsteps of Ontario, of Quebec, of the United States, of Europe? That was a good idea? We should be doing what they're doing? Unbelievable.

When these realities manifest themselves, when Alberta doesn't enjoy record revenues anymore, when we can't count on billions upon billions of new revenues every single year because of the oil sands and the price of oil and so forth, guess who's going to be holding the bag? Them? No, Mr. Speaker. They won't. They'll be long gone, hopefully most of them in two years. But if they're not, guess what? It's going to be our kids and our grandkids that are going to be the ones holding the bag for their stupidity, and that is wrong, that absolute irresponsibility of putting our children into debt like this. It's wrong, and I challenge everyone over there that still believes in leaving our kids with a debt-free Alberta to stand up and vote against this budget. I know there are people over there – certainly not the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but there are certainly a lot of people, I would assume, over there that don't think going $21 billion into debt by 2016 is a responsible thing to do. Please stand up and be accounted for.

The minister states that folks moving to Alberta aren't bringing their roads and schools with them and that we must borrow, therefore, in order to build. Think about this logic. Let's play this through. First off, new Albertans, of course, don't bring their roads with them, but they bring their taxes. They bring their economic output. They are not a drain on the bottom line. They are good for the bottom line. What study out there shows that new Albertans, new people moving in – and we're not talking about people that are coming who are leeching off the system. These are some of the best and brightest minds in the country and the world coming here, working high-paying jobs, paying high amounts of taxes. We're not being hurt by this. We're being blessed by this. Our revenues are increasing. That's why we have record revenues, one of the reasons we have record revenues. So that is a faulty excuse.

Secondly, if we must borrow for projects now to cope with high growth, what's going to change in the future so we no longer have to borrow? Forecasts predict high population growth for decades. Those folks will all need schools and they will all need roads and they will all need hospitals. So if we can't build today without going into debt, even with record revenues, when are we ever going to be able to? When the rate of economic growth slows? When people stop moving here? Well, that doesn't make much sense. When people stop moving here, that usually means it's because you're having an economic contraction and you're having a revenue problem. And then what do we do to pay the bills, to pay the high interest costs that we've incurred during the high-growth times? It makes no sense.

And they say: "Oh, well, we'll cap it at about $30 billion. That's what the legislation allows for. We have a debt ceiling, so we won't go past that." Baloney. We all know debt ceilings don't work. They don't work in the United States. They're not going to work here. They didn't work in any other province. Of course, we're going to go more into debt. As soon as we get to the level, we'll just raise the debt ceiling. We're going to be mortgaging our kids more and more every year during high-growth, during high-revenue times. Then when the economic growth slows, our kids are holding the bag.

Mr. Speaker, I don't claim to be any kind of an expert economist or anything like that, but I am a father, and I'm a father of four. I have a great father, and he taught me some basic things in life. He said: son, you have to live within your means. He taught me about the power of compound interest and the power of staying out of debt and how important it is to do all of those things. These are basic, basic principles.

Importantly, he also taught me to leave my children with more opportunities than I had. I think we all try to do that, but as a province we are not doing that right now. We have lost our way. We are going to leave our kids – we had the chance to leave them a mountain of investment capital that could be invested for literally decades and decades to replace our reliance on oil and gas revenues. Not only are we not leaving them with any of that; we're leaving them with a hole. We're leaving them in the hole, in debt to pay for the things that this government wants to give for political purposes. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Hale: On 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: I think you were a little slow there, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker. Is there another speaker?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd move to adjourn debate on the budget replies.

Bill 4
Estate Administration Act

[Adjourned debate March 10: Ms Kubinec]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to speak to Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act. Bill 4 essentially modernizes some of our estate law as well as codifies some of the principles that exist in our common law and the decisions that were made by courts. Bill 4 intends to define the roles and responsibilities of personal representatives when they execute the final affairs of a deceased person. According to the preamble and some of the briefings the purpose of Bill 4 is to make the rules of an executor clear and easily accessible for those charged with this important task.

What's also included in the bill, of course, is an elevated responsibility for executors who have certain skills and abilities. If a layperson is executing the act, they have the normal due diligence requirements, but if, for example, you're an accountant or a lawyer, you would be charged with that higher level of care or, essentially, a higher fiduciary duty.

Mr. Speaker, along with those good faith and due diligence requirements the duties, under Bill 4, of the personal representatives would be

- (a) to identify the estate assets and liabilities,
- (b) to administer and manage the estate,
- (c) to satisfy the debts and obligations of the estate, and
- (d) to distribute and account for the administration of the estate.

There is also some delineation of the specific notice requirements that executors must go through when they're going through the list of the beneficiaries.

I have had the opportunity to do some stakeholder outreach with some of the best estate lawyers in the province, and the individuals that I've talked to haven't indicated any types of red flags. They were quite pleased with the vast majority of the changes to the act.

There is one issue that they mentioned, though. The legislation deals with foreign grants from the United Kingdom, but there doesn't appear to be a provision with respect to grants from the United States. So it would be interesting to see whether or not the government has contemplated that or whether or not that could be one of the issues to debate in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage of second reading I fully support the intent of the legislation and will look forward to debating the details in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, did you move to adjourn debate?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

4:20 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 1
Savings Management Act

The Chair: Are there comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This is actually the first opportunity I've had to make some comments in regard to Bill 1, and the particular area of interest that I would like to speak about today is something that I didn't really believe this government was inserting into the fabric of Bill 1. But upon hearing some questions about it last week, lo and behold, it seems to be true. The issue that I'm speaking of is social impact bonds. This is an issue that I've been looking at more closely as they have been unrolled in other jurisdictions around the world, including the United Kingdom. I guess I just have some serious concerns and questions about them that I wanted to raise here now and perhaps, you know, in the Committee of the Whole. This is a great chance to actually get that clarification and put people's minds at ease or, conversely, take this experiment out.

My concerns are these, right? The social impact bonds have been used in other jurisdictions around the world, Mr. Chair, as a way to privatize vital, essential services and squeeze out the public sector, another way, in other words, to abdicate the responsibility of a government to provide essential public services. Rather, they commodify and monetize those services and sell them as a bond. While that almost might seem bizarre to the casual observer, indeed, as I said before, there seemed to be some noise about that from the government here when we asked some questions about Bill 1 last week.

You know, Mr. Chair, the government cuts education and social services in this province and then, still spending money from the heritage fund, allows the private sector somehow to do the government's job. I mean, it almost sounds diabolical, really. How could you come up with such a combination of taking savings and then have the audacity to create a bond issue that would somehow have another party do the job that the government is responsible for, right? That's why I'm bringing it up here. Hopefully, maybe I'm not right about this. I don't know. This bill does not introduce these bonds themselves, but it does transfer the money and establish the accounts that could be used to guarantee or pay these things out if the government chose to do so.

It also brings in the Alberta future fund, I understand, Mr. Chair, which will take $200 million a year from the heritage fund and put it aside for, quote, something cool, according to the Deputy Premier, that's meant to provide long-term benefits to Albertans and the economy. Again, really, if I wasn't reading it in the paper and I didn't hear it myself, I would say: what on earth is this? Lots of people have been speculating that maybe it's another way to create a slush fund or a pre-election goodie sort of thing where, because the principal doesn't have to be voted on, they can just make the vote or pass that money through. I don't know. You know, I'm trying not to be cynical here, just constructively critical. According to Bill 1, again, there are additional funds for heritage scholarships, agriculture, and food innovation as well.

Mr. Chair, I believe this is an indication both that this government is not providing the budget properly nor maintaining adequately the services for which they are responsible as well. It also is, I think, quite a murky sort of budgeting. We have seen in the past years these different funds, right? Indeed, it helps to sort of confuse or obfuscate the accounting methods by which these different funds and budgets actually come together to create a balance sheet. We see the money moving around here and there between different funds, and somehow in the midst of all of this the essential public services are underfunded.

In regard to these social impact bonds, again, they're very similar to P3s, private-public partnerships, which are on very shaky ground at best. To try to do them in terms of providing social services I find even less believable, quite frankly. It's a profit-driven, government-funded business deal, right? It's less about service delivery or meeting the needs of Albertans. It's more a way by which to repackage essential social services into an investment scheme as if they're investing in a mineral or an oil well or a forestry project or something like that.

Say, for example, you know, we take the word on debt to wealthy investors without it showing up in the balance sheets as debt – right? – to somehow innovate social services, which suggests as well, Mr. Chair, that we need the private sector to tell us what innovation means for social services, when in reality it is social services that have been innovating, really, year after year, delivering more with less as the PCs cut their bottom line.

The truth of social impact bonds is that they pick the low-hanging fruit, they offer no real innovation, and they'll only invest in projects where the risks are largely removed. The whole thing doesn't add up to a very good investment for the public and for ourselves but maybe, if it's packaged properly, for people who choose to put money into these things.

Mr. Chair, last year, for example, the state Legislature of Hawaii ruled out social impact bonds for the delivery of education programs. Their report noted that the social impact bonds are very unproven and very risky and that existing philanthropic organizations are already doing a good job of innovation, as is the public service that's actually there as a government department.

It's not just not delivering innovation. There are many other issues, too, right? I believe, Mr. Chair, it opens the nonprofit program delivery of organizations to a great deal of administrative and transactional costs. Already we've seen this PC government make it difficult for nonprofits by providing short-term grants on this three-month rotation or four-month rotation. It drives up the time and the costs to agencies in applying for grants and reduces their ability to pay for and plan for long-term, stable service.

Now it's as though we're introducing several other layers of bureaucracy and middle management to already overburdened social service and delivery organizations. It's now these organizations that have to go back out and act like salespeople and investment bankers in order to attract investors. They must hire legal counsel and financial advisers. It's just that the whole thing seems to be redundant and reductive as well.

We can go to other places where these are being tried, right? In the United Kingdom they have the Peterborough prison project, which found that the process was time consuming, analytically complex, and a nonstarter, really. There were problems with regulation, accreditation of service providers. Agencies already have difficulties with this. What kind of oversight, really, could we be providing for them here?

Social service delivery should be better regulated, for sure, Mr. Chair, not less. The government is attempting to transfer responsibility away from itself to these nonprofits.

Social impact bonds put the agencies in the indefensible position of having to serve the interests of the investors over those of their clients that they're trying to help or over those long-term goals of finding true, systemic solutions to social problems, right? The more difficult and, hence, costlier and riskier programs could very well go unfunded or be underfunded, and this means that many of the most vulnerable Albertans who require a great deal more service and care will in fact be at greater risk.

This PC government is already having difficulties finding companies willing to bid on P3s. What would make them think that they would be able to encourage investment in even riskier and more complex processes with this idea of social impact bonds? In the state of Massachusetts, in the United States, two projects were announced in 2002, and nobody bid on them, these social impact bonds. Imagine that. They'll always end up costing the government more in the long run, right? It just seems like a nonstarter.

Governments are better placed to deliver programs, Mr. Chair, in cost-efficient ways because they have economies of scale and the ability to fund interconnected programs to address systemic issues. Aside from being ineffective and more costly, social impact bonds just really smell morally wrong. The government's failure to solve defined social problems turns into an investment opportunity that promises profit rewards to successfully innovative investors. I mean, I don't know. It just doesn't seem right.

The Alberta College of Social Workers passed a resolution explicitly opposing this type of legislation. They say that they allow financial institutions to turn human suffering and conditions into a commodity. Again, they also put a statement out saying that we don't need people to profit from the misery of others, that the motive becomes profit, not service, and that the primary responsibility of government is to support vulnerable and marginalized people.

So, Mr. Chair, while we might look at other aspects of this Bill 1 in terms of the savings and management, this one particular aspect of it, as I pretty clearly just said, I find unacceptable, and I just would like to hear someone say, you know, really, that Bill 1 is not a framework for social impact bonds so that we're not heading down this very perilous and experimental sort of road.

You don't just have to make change for the sake of change. Using the word "innovation" and then fishing around for something to appear to be radically changing direction is not necessarily good governance. If you end up fishing and you catch something like the social impact bond concept, then, you know, it just heads down a path that I don't think anybody really wants to go. It seems ideologically driven. It's reductive. It doesn't provide any sort of outcomes outside of some ideological idea that you can commodify and buy and sell everything, and it abdicates the responsibility that the provincial government has to essential social services, to fund and to deliver those services in a reasonable sort of way.

I mean, you know, convince me that it's otherwise, but the aspect of Bill 1 in regard to social impact bonds I don't think is acceptable at all. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? Other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my first opportunity to speak to Bill 1, too. I'm intrigued by it, and I'm very pleased to add my concerns, questions, and interest. I have heard a little bit about this, the concept of social impact bonds, for several years now. I've spoken with groups like the Calgary Foundation. There are groups in Calgary like the YWCA and Vecova, formerly the vocational and rehabilitation institute, where they have some entrepreneurial activity within their walls. In the case of the YWCA they have a sports facility that charges downtown folks, the office towers, for their facility, and they use that money to improve the care of women in difficulty and their families. In the case of Vecova they have also some sports activities for the public, and they bring in income, which they can also use to assist with some of their programs for people with disabilities.

Other examples are Women in Need Society in Calgary, that sells quite a few commodities and, for example, indicated that a new baler that they purchased could bring together a lot of the clothing and bale it if they weren't able to sell it. They could then, again with dollars, translate that to people in other provinces or other areas of the province, which saved them a lot of cost in terms of also serving the needs outside the city.

I don't have a closed mind to the social impact bonds. I think there are some opportunities if it's well managed. I also know a couple of people in Calgary who are involved in social entrepreneurship, and they have given me a deeper insight than I had initially about this also.

It does have real dangers, as previous speakers have indicated. I think all of us should be wary of a government that wants to download responsibility onto the private sector for what is primarily government responsibility; that is, caring for people in poverty, caring for people in disadvantaged situations, caring for seniors and for people with disabilities.

The other red flag that goes up for me is when they are prepared to take money from the heritage fund, which has always been seen as a long-term investment program to improve the opportunities for future generations when needed. The typical imagined scenario would be when oil runs out or people stop buying our oil as readily as they do and there are other technologies and we need to find through research and development and through marketing new opportunities for Albertans to be employed, to create new jobs, and diversify some of our energy mix, in particular. That's the typical scenario that I think Peter Lougheed envisioned for this fund. So I'm concerned that the government would be taking up to $200 million out of the heritage fund ostensibly for good cause, and ostensibly it would come back, at least the capital, if not the interest, for the social innovation fund that they identify here.

The other two areas of investment that they talk about are the agriculture and food initiative, which would be a maximum of $9 million each fiscal year – by the way, the social innovation fund would be a maximum of $67,500,000 – and transfers to the Alberta future fund, which sounds very suspiciously like the sustainability fund, which could be a slush fund for a government that's in trouble, having another crisis and looking for ways to buy its way out of crisis or in an election in which they are struggling to appeal to Albertans. So there are dangers here.

I'm pleased to see that we're going to continue to some extent the scholarship fund and look forward to hearing more about some of the potential here for research and development, which has been so brutally mismanaged in the innovation fund and the decimation of the Alberta heritage for medical research fund. The insecurity and instability that that's created has sent a lot of our best researchers to other parts of the world and very much diminished our capacity to do good science, credible science, and groundbreaking science, that we've done here for at least 25 years under the original heritage fund process.

I still haven't decided how I'll vote on this bill, Mr. Chair. It's got some elements that are already in place when you look at some of the nonprofit societies in Calgary that I mentioned, but it also has a private enterprise dimension that I think raises flags. As a legislator I guess I would want to know very much more detail about how individual contracts are being identified in terms of social programs. I'm speaking now of the social innovation fund more than some of the others. It's reminiscent to me of the P3 concept, where in principle it may have some applications where it benefits both the public and the private sector, but in practice it is almost universally benefiting the private sector. Because we don't do due diligence and we don't make the contracts public, we don't have the accountability and transparency that are needed with some of these P3 contracts.

I'm concerned, as others have been on this side of the House, that especially the social innovation fund is fraught with nepotism and cronyism and the potential for benefit to friends and connections and is not necessarily going to serve either the long-term interests of the individuals that are supposed to benefit from this but also not necessarily the interests of Albertans, who have in trust put these funds within the heritage savings trust fund and expect accountability, expect that we're going to see real return on these investments and not simply another way for a government that is in trouble financially to try another way of limiting their apparent liability on the books.

With those caveats I can see some opportunity for innovation, for strengthening the kind of activities that I've seen in the YWCA in Calgary, the Vecova institute, and Women in Need Society, who have benefited from some of these entrepreneurial projects that go on within their walls. It helps sustain some of their work. I am much more suspicious of the for-profit opportunities that might arise out of these social impact bonds, not only the ability to get return on investment from the public purse but also to ensure that this money that is leaving the heritage fund is not going to be lost as an investment resource for future generations.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks. I just wanted to thank you, Member for Calgary-Mountain View, for those comments. I wanted to just perhaps clarify the social impact bond, differentiating it from entrepreneurial innovation that nonprofit or other groups might use to provide social services or help to fund social services. I mean, very specifically, the social impact bond as it's been, you know, done in the last few places around the world – like I said, in New York City and the United Kingdom and so forth – is an investment where a private investor will fund a program or a project delivered by a nonprofit or a charitable agency. If that project meets the previous agreed upon measurable goals, then the government will pay the investors the full amount of their initial investment plus a 20 or 10 per cent return on their investment. If they don't meet that target, then they lose their money.

It's a very specific sort of scheme that's set up. It's almost like this Dragons' Den kind of scenario. It's very artificial because you're creating these parameters you could decide on yourself – right? – in terms of outcomes. Really, it's just like you're lending the money, so it's not even really a bond. To use the word "bond" – I think it's not entirely a true definition of a bond, right? It's this sort of convoluted contract that is developed.

For the YWCA or YMCA to be setting up these social or entrepreneurial things is great, but this sort of, you know, funny contractual scheme is a whole different thing altogether. You know, people are starting to line up already to put money aside to lobby, to buy these bonds. The Royal Bank of Canada has already put aside $20 million to potentially invest in these once we set up the framework for it. People like Mark Hlady – he's been lobbying the government here for months to be a broker for social impact bonds in education, justice, human services, agriculture as well.

It's much more of a scheme than it is a way for people to get a leg up or an arm up or to learn about entrepreneurial opportunities. It's more like this sort of convoluted contract that somehow allows a private investor to get their hands on public money.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, then I would ask the question.

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 3 Securities Amendment Act, 2014

The Chair: Are there questions or comments to be offered on the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 3?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 2 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014

The Chair: Are there questions or comments to be offered? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. In regard to the supplementary supply act I just had a couple of comments to talk about.

First and foremost, there was a clear indication to our caucus that this supplementary supply was going to be mostly if not all flood related, but there are all kinds of things that pop out from it. As far as I can see, there are sort of two major themes that come out of this supplementary supply. First of all, clearly, this government does not think about the long-term impact of its cuts, right? They ignore inconvenient things like planning and prevention to give breaks, and then suddenly, you know, we have to go back and change it.

I think we've seen in the last couple of days here again this government not – the most important document and action that it is responsible for suddenly becomes a fluid and moving target, and that is the budget. They made some of these rash decisions, and then suddenly we have to scramble back and change over time. I mean, there's nothing wrong with trying to change, but why make such drastic decisions in the first place? So it's necessary to do this, but I'm just putting it forward, once again, that it shouldn't really be necessary if we had responsible decisions in the first place.

For example, say, the $170 million for Education, $70 million of which is operational, $103 million for the capital due to the project delays of 35 schools and modernizations. This government seems clearly more focused on announcements than actually resolving the problems in our overcrowded schools, right? We can't even finish the projects that we announced three years ago, from a different government, on time. If there was a long-term commitment to building these schools and not just this episodic, sort of spasmodic, you know, reaction to the obvious growth that's taking place in our population, particularly for school-age children, then we could probably do this. I mean, it's not easy, but it's a better position than the shrinking economy. We have a growing economy, a growing population. We wouldn't have to be putting kids in copy rooms and in hallways like we do in schools around the province. We're growing, and this would be preventable if we actually had a budget that was commensurate with the actual population and economic growth. Those are my concerns, really.

Another one is for Energy, $192 million: $157 million of that to transport our royalties in kind to market, right? We still have this faulty royalty regime, Mr. Chair, that undervalues our resources and sells Alberta very short. If we were meeting the 35 per cent target set by an earlier PC government rather than this very, very inadequate 10 per cent, then we would have plenty of resources by which to not just balance the budget but save for the future. This idea of using 20 per cent of our nonrenewable resources to pay for operational activities is clearly living on borrowed time. If you just keep doing this over time, then, of course, you run out. You don't save anything, and you mortgage the future. Certainly, as New Democrats we believe that by capturing an adequate royalty cut for our province, we would be able to actually save and wean ourselves out of using nonrenewable energy resources to pay for operational activities of the provincial government.

When we look at these estimates, we're seeing additional price tags attached to our already poor royalty regimes. If we take far less from the companies than we should, then we have to pay them to get it to market. I mean, that's a cost that oil companies should be paying for extracting a resource that, in fact, belongs to all Albertans. Simply put, this budget line is another example of a poor planning process.

Another one, I guess, is in regard to health care, $345 million: $209 million of it new, $136 million of it savings from other programs. You know, it's just really very concerning for me to see that – say, for example, the Alberta Medical Association agreement ended up with $150 million more than anticipated, right? It didn't hold the line at all, really, with doctors. Well, they've been trying to sell this idea of zero per cent to the other public-sector workers. So the whole thing just doesn't seem to add up, Mr. Chair.

Obviously, in the interim we have received the global budget for 2014. I just wanted to put a cautionary word in. Please, let's try to make the careful and reasonable presumptions about the growth of our economy, the growth of the population, and not shortchange these essential services that we are all responsible for here in this House.

Again, the supplementary supply addition to Advanced Education, $53 million, with most of it, $50 million, for enrolment pressures, it says. Obviously, we knew that these additional students were going into the advanced education institutions. Then why would we have cut $147 million last year and undergone all of that pain and transition and confusion and layoffs and then have to put the money back anyway? You know, the whole thing just seems like an exercise in perhaps trying to do something else, maybe trying to make a tax on the people who actually deliver these services. Otherwise, it just seems more like an outrageous display of lack of planning.

Recently the Alberta New Democrats brought attention to a draft report from the U of A, the University of Alberta, that highlights just how damaging this strategy has been. By returning only part of the funding – right? – and then doing that halfway through the semester, they had to lay off staff and not do the maintenance and program development that the institution did require. Our universities, researchers, and students, Mr. Chair, deserve better than what this PC government has been delivering. Without a long-term commitment to secure funding, then we just won't see any different.

This supplementary supply: hopefully, it's not the microcosm for the larger global budget that we will be going through here in these next few weeks. I think that always we should try to learn from our mistakes and try to develop a better strategy for budgeting that involves long-term planning, that involves the revenue side of budgeting and not just the spending, and one that people can count on so that each of the thousands of people who actually build budgets out of this very large sum of money can actually know how much they have and where they will go with it and build a budget and a program that's commensurate with a growing economy and a growing population.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 2?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The committee shall now rise and report.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I assume you're willing to move to rise and report?

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 1, Bill 3, and Bill 2.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 5

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Anderson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, thank you. I'm pleased to rise and speak at second to the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014. It's my opportunity, I guess, to add my sense that this is a government that's adrift, that is prepared to sell the future. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the floor.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: There's a gentleman over there with pink hair that keeps making comments. I'm wondering if he's part of the drag scene. Whether or not he's part of the drag scene, I take his comments very seriously.

All too easily, Mr. Speaker, we focus on the here and now and crisis to crisis. A government that has been in for 43 years, unfortunately, is prone to this, looking much more closely and fearfully at its future, recognizing its decades now of close connection to the corporate sector and its dependence on the corporate sector for its campaign finances and its policy development, that has been so heavily influenced by the corporate sector.

It has lost its vision. It has lost its connection to the people and the long-term public interest. So we see a bill here, an appropriation bill that – no, it's not the entire budget, but it reflects, I guess, some of the concerns that all of us have on this side of the House, that we are making decisions, again, at breakneck speed without a thought for the long-term public interest.

Not enough heat has been placed on this Finance minister and Premier to show us not the money but to show us the vision. Where is this province going? Where is the concern about the kind of society that many of us believe is still possible, where we share and care and develop in a responsible way the resources that are our bounty? Where are the values in our employee relations and public services that shaped the early years of this government? Where is the sense that we're going to address the growing inequality in our society and the barely met needs of our most vulnerable? And where is the sense that we will look honestly and fairly at a tax system that serves all Albertans?

How are we going to move to a culture of health and healing among ourselves, our neighbours, our planet? Do we have the resources as government to properly plan our energy future? Environmental sustainability can create the social conditions – the social conditions – for peace and responsibility in all our citizens. It's been entirely absent from many of the discussions and, certainly, the budget itself and this interim supply.

Without a vision the people perish, Mr. Speaker. It's a commonly used phrase out of the Old Testament, and it's true that we have seen civilization after civilization relegated to the dust heap and extinction as a result of a very consistent pattern of power corrupting and power interfering with the vision of a government. We're seeing the evidence of that again here.

Financial management surely is a reflection of values and vision, and for many of us it's seriously derelict in this province. How is it that after 60 years of active oil and gas development and now with prices well over the '80s and '90s, we've spent everything and are going into debt? We've learned nothing from history, from other countries, even from our own experts, because the politics of prosperity trump everything. Maybe I should say that the politics of boom and bust have trumped everything.

It's easy to say that there's a vision in Alberta because this government talks about a healthy people and a healthy province, but where are the independent measures to say and to prove that we are failing in this? Increasingly, people are suffering from preventable mental and physical illness, social disintegration, growing inequity, environmental mismanagement without accountability due to the lack of resources committed to ongoing monitoring and enforcement of good standards. Lougheed said it well. Slow down the oil sands to meet their cleanup responsibilities. Let them develop only at the level that they're prepared to clean up after themselves, a basic kindergarten tried-and-true principle of living.

Provide the owners of the resource with their share. Move towards new technology, conservation, and renewable as if you meant it. Eliminate our coal-fired power damages, that are going on year after year after year as we still require 60 per cent of our energy through coal, a 19th-century energy source, when we have such great clean opportunities.

We've learned nothing from our several trips by this government to Norway. The previous ministers have gone to Norway and come back with interesting stories to tell and great lessons and admiration for the massive savings fund that they've developed.

Nothing changes because we do it the Alberta way. We have a unique approach to financial management and to planning for our future. Where is the long-term public interest? I'm talking not only about the financial public interest but the human capital, the social capital, and the environmental capital, that we continue to ignore at our peril.

When are we going to move to a balanced budget on our environment, with no net loss of environmental capacity, environmental quality, instead of settling for progressive contamination of our water and overextraction of our water with, in some cases, injection into deep formations, where it's lost forever? This is not the kind of thinking that even our First Nations have shown. Their seven-generation planning is responsible and appropriate. Short-term thinking and private interests continue to trump long-term financial planning and the interests of the earth.

The bottom line, I guess, is the question: what standards will we strive to achieve? What part will government, the private sector, and the nonprofit sectors play in our future? When are going to have that discussion and open it up and engage the public in seriously thinking about a resetting of the agenda here in this province? Many groups are calling, and some have given up because this government just continues to go down the same path it's always gone down.

Mr. Dorward: Not a bad path.

Dr. Swann: Not a bad path? It's easy to say that with $100-a-barrel oil.

We have not addressed the long-term interests and debt that we are incurring without a bigger vision and a better engagement and more trust, I guess. A part of this, obviously, is that we've lost the trust of many in our society, and more and more people are simply thinking about themselves. There's a growing selfishness, a growing insecurity, a growing fear that individuals, families, and organizations have to fight for everything they're going to get because there isn't a bigger engagement and a thoughtful approach to a bigger vision for our province.

In fact, we haven't had that necessary discussion between government, the private sector, and the nonprofit sector to decide who is going to do what and how we can support each other in doing what we do best. Indeed, how are we going to engage our First Nations in a more meaningful way so that they feel an integral part of our future and have a sense that their financial future is also going to be protected? We need to get on with it. We need to make the bigger vision and the planning and the accountability measures a priority before the conditions that we have set in place lead to not only our own increasing health problems and social disruption but also our future generations having extremely limited options.

As a famous business executive said: we need to shift from the urgent to the important. We need to think of our finances in terms of not only the return on investment this quarter and this year and whether or not the budget is balanced this year but on insuring that the long-term interests of all of us and the planet are being addressed. I don't see that changing very soon, especially with a divided Tory party that now dominates the Legislature and is competing with each other about who can have the lowest taxes and who can cut services and planning for the long term, again, catering primarily to our dominate industry, that needs to be brought into check and managed to balance with other important priorities.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have made my comments. I think the interim supply, Bill 5, continues on a pattern of unhealthy and potentially severely damaging priorities and is not serving our children and our children's children, and I will not be supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to the introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you I'd like to introduce a trustee with the Red Deer school board and, more importantly, my big brother. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Bill 5

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of comments with regard to the Bill 5, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014.

My understanding of this from previous occasions is that the purpose of this is fundamentally about accountability, so I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View making those larger remarks, that we do need to recognize, whenever we are allocating any funds – it's interesting, though. I looked at the past few years of appropriation interim supply numbers, and if you roughly estimate the growth of interim supply in direct relation to the population and the economic growth of the province, then this document actually does reflect that reality much better than our global budget that we just saw introduced last week.

I know through this information that you, this government, know that the population is growing and the economy is growing, and I can see that pretty much directly reflected in this interim supply document. But then I don't see it with the much larger, more fundamental document, which is the budget. So again, it's back to what I was saying just previously about not recognizing what is so plain on our faces, which is the reality of the growth of our economy and our population. It's even calculated in the budget from last Thursday. If you do a combination – people can debate about the actual number, but I mean around 5 per cent if you combine economic growth and population – the budget came in under that, at about 3 to 3.5 per cent of that.

You're already setting yourself up for failure, where you're not going to meet the requirements or the responsibilities of governance in the province of Alberta. So we come back and we get the money that we need in the interim supply. I think it's about $429 million more than last year, which seems like a lot of money, but it really does kind of reflect a general growth pattern in interim supply, which is commensurate with population and economic growth. Isn't that interesting? I just wanted to point that out, that you know and we know that the large budgets that we've been putting out in the last two years do not meet the reality of this province. They don't face the actual requirements, yet the smaller, still significant but smaller, budget interim supply document in fact does do that. So that's kind of an interesting anomaly, but this room is often filled with such ironies and confusion for people to ponder as to what the purpose of those confusions might be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. Are there any other speakers?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the minister to close debate.

Mr. Denis: I would move that we close debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, my apologies. I did ask the wrong question. The motion should be for second reading of Bill 5.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I'd ask you once more to clarify what you intended, that I might have misinterpreted.

Mr. Denis: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for recognizing me. I would move second reading of Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 7:30 p.m. this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4 Estate Administration Act

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Saskiw]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. What stage of reading are we in with this bill? Second? Well, that's a relief. By the way things happened this afternoon, I was kind of expecting to come in and find that it had gone to fourth, some new stage of reading.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if any of the staff that worked on this bill are in the galleries. No? Okay. Well, I just want to put forward a thank you and compliments to staff who have worked on this particular project for an extended period of time because I think they've done a really nice job. Many of us in this House have probably been executors or are expecting to be executors of estates soonish, and I have to say that I really appreciate what was done here to make this much more user-friendly in the way you walk through it.

The very first thing that I noticed was a section where it said, "Here is what you're expected to do: one, two, three," which is very helpful because I've been trying to do my homework in advance and going: okay; what do I do on the big day? It was really confusing because I was pulling information from vital statistics and from — I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm debating Bill 4, Estate Administration Act. You looked a little puzzled.

The Deputy Speaker: No.

Ms Blakeman: And here it is. In section 7 on page 8 of the bill it says: "Core tasks."

The core tasks of a personal representative when administering an estate are

(a) to identify the estate assets and liabilities,

Okay. I got that.

(b) to administer and manage the estate,

All right. Pretty straightforward.

(c) to satisfy the debts and obligations of the estate, and

Yeah. Okay.

(d) to distribute and account for the administration of the estate.

Well, thank you. That's pretty plain. It's pretty obvious what I'm supposed to do.

In another area they say: "Okay. Here's the way we expect you to" — not act but, you know — "take responsibility." Of course, that one is not going to pop into my hands like the last one did — I'm just paging madly here — but it basically said: you know, you're expected to be as though you were in this person's shoes. Sorry. I'm just going to madly look for the section because it is really good. It makes it clear that they're standing in the shoes of the person. They have a fiduciary duty, in other words, and they make that really clear.

Fiduciary responsibility. To lots of people: what the heck is that? "Fiduciary" sounds basically like "fidelity." I don't know. Maybe it's about brothers and sisters or something. So most people don't understand what that is, and it's not because they're in any way lacking in any intelligence or schooling. It's because it's not a term that is generally used in everyday life. This sets out the way people are expected to approach the business of what they're doing. Again, I think: nice stuff, nicely done.

The first half of the act is written in a way that's very straightforward, very frank. You know, you have to be on the inside team to understand this stuff, all the lawyer-speak. We all love lawyers — I know we do — but honestly they do speak funny. They've got all these code words, and nobody else knows what that means, so it's sort of a relief when all of that is taken out.

One of the other things that they've made very clear in this is that they've moved away from expecting that the executor would be a lawyer. You know, you think about all the old books and movies that you've seen, and there was the crusty but gentle family lawyer that was in the town law office. "He administered my grandpappy's will and my pappy's will, and he's going to do my will." That's no longer an expectation. As I've said, most of us in this House have probably been named as an executor for someone we're close to to administer their estate, or we may be. I mean, we're all leaders here, and people look to us and say: "Well, you've got it together. Guess what? You get to do this one."

They've moved ahead. They've come with the times, which is a really nice way of reviewing and updating legislation. Unhappily, I'm not able to always say that about the way government updates their legislation, but this, I think, has been done in a really nice way. It's intended for the normal person on the street to use, and it's written out very nicely that way. It gives them exactly what they're supposed to do.

Now, in the second part they get into the nitty-gritty, inside-baseball, lawyer talk, and there's also a really interesting section where it says: you know, if you're a professional, we're going to hold you to a higher standard. Okay. Yeah, that makes perfect sense. Section 7(3). No, that cannot be. There is no 7(3). Okay. Not my best notes.

But they do recognize that professionals know more about this, and they are held to a higher standard, and they should be bringing that into play with what they're doing.

An Hon. Member: Section 5.

Ms Blakeman: Section 5? Thank you. Well, thank you very much. Somebody is reading along at home.

Section 5. Yes. Here we go:

General duties of a personal representative

5(1) A personal representative must

(a) perform the role of personal representative.

That means the executor, but it's no longer expected to be a lawyer. It's a personal representative. It's you. It's me. It's your aunt. You know, I had dinner with a friend the other night, and he had just finished being executor for his aunt. It's made it more along the lines of what people are doing in everyday life.

They're expected to perform this

(i) honestly and in good faith.

They're expected to do this

(ii) in accordance with the testator's intentions and with the will, if a valid will exists, and,

- (iii) with the care, diligence and skill that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise in comparable circumstances where a fiduciary relationship exists.

Okay. Well, they slid a bit over the side on that one.

and

- (b) distribute the estate as soon as practicable.

Again, you know, this is the section I was talking about, where it kind of sets out how you're expected to act. If I can just draw a comparison, Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of thing that I was disappointed does not appear with the same kind of robustness and detail in our very own Conflicts of Interest Act, which is supposed to be governing our behaviour as MLAs.

Now, I'll remind everyone here that we do not have a code of conduct, so nothing sets out the way we're supposed to behave, and I was really frustrated with the Conflicts of Interest Act because we couldn't even get my hon. colleagues opposite to agree that we should obey the law and that we should be honest. We couldn't get them to put that into the act. But here it is turning up in the Estate Administration Act, so somebody clearly thinks along the same lines, that it's worth while to put it in there saying: "You know, you're to behave honestly about this. Don't cheat. Don't fool around with this stuff. It's important." I really like that.

Here we go. Section 5(3), appearing at the top of page 8, does go:

If because of a personal representative's profession, occupation or business, the personal representative possesses or ought to possess a particular degree of skill that is relevant to the performance of the role . . .

blah, blah, blah, they will be expected to . . . exercise that greater degree of skill.

Tah-dah. That's pretty straightforward if you take out all the blah-blah-blah stuff in between. It does place that higher expectation on someone with a particular expertise in this area. It's very clearly written out. And for those with a very particular expertise, you can go to the second half of the bill, where they really get into it, into sort of the technical matters, that if this happens and that happens, then this is what you should do.

I actually learned something new in reading this. I did not know that debts are also passed on. When we got into the section about if there's a mortgage and there are jointly owned obligations, how all of that works itself out but, in fact, consistent with the idea that beneficiaries also inherit the debt – and here I'm looking towards my literary-minded colleagues – I was reminded: what is the Charles Dickens novel in which they all wait for the will to be settled? They wait and they wait, and they keep going back, and generations of people have waited for the will to be settled. Finally, they're all called back into court one day, and the judge announces that there's nothing left in the estate. The lawyers have used it all. [interjections] It'll come to somebody, and we'll just inject it into Hansard at some point down the line.

You know, in that one, once the money ran out, they drew the line and said: "Okay. It's over. There's no more money. You're all gone." But they didn't let the lawyers actually run over and spend more money than what there was and create a debt that people had to pay off. That was a new thing that I learned, and I'm glad I learned it.

All in all, I'm quite happy with this. I was deeply suspicious in my usual style, which, you know, you've got to admit, I had good reason to be over the years here, and duly went through line by line comparing the Administration of Estates Act and the Devolution of Real Property Act and checking everything out. "Oh, my goodness, the minors have disappeared. What have they done to them? They've dropped them in a hole somewhere," which they didn't, by the way. Don't worry about it. They just took them out because they have a Minors' Property Act, and they deal with them there.

Contrary to what usually happens here, there was nothing nefarious that I can find, and if I do in the future, I will beat you over the head with a copy of the act. But it's really nice work. My thanks to the staff of the Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice, who has done this work. It looks like it happened over quite a period of time. You know, God bless him. This was really good work and the kind of work that I know our civil servants do for us all the time. Frankly, they made you guys look really good on this one, so you should be appreciative of that. As far as I can tell, they didn't give me any holes where I can get a piece of two-by-four out of it and whack you over the head because you did dumb things. Well done.

Thank you very much. Happy to speak in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 4. As with my colleague from Edmonton-Centre, I'm scrambling a bit since things that we had thought were happening tonight happened much faster this afternoon. We are not operating on the schedule that we had last been apprised of, so just trying to get caught up here.

This Estate Administration Act arises from the report of the Alberta Law Reform Institute from 2013, and it appears to include almost all of the recommendations that were included in that report. Understanding and respecting the work that is done by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, I have no doubt that many of the changes in here are very worth while. That's good. We know that they are attempting to clarify some of the obligations and the expectations of executors and also administrators under the Estate Administration Act.

Because we are sort of in the midst of trying to consolidate our research on this act, at this point I have just a few questions that I'm going to put out there, and hopefully I will receive some clarification as this bill makes its way through the Legislature. Now, while it's good that we are clarifying the role and the obligations of the executors, I am curious as to whether we may or may not through this act be potentially raising the bar in terms of what they're required to do and what they're expected to do and the liability that they may be held to as a result. I'm getting the shaking head from some members that that's not what will happen although it does, certainly, very clearly lay out the fiduciary duty of the executor, and it lays out some clear obligations of the executor.

The concern I have, like the Member for Edmonton-Centre, is that I, too, have been drawn into being an executor more often than I would like. It seems that one downside to being the only member of the family who's made it through law school is that everybody thinks that you're the natural executor for every familial estate, which, you know, is what it is. The point is that that's not always the case. Many people are asked to be executors without that background. It is a complex and also a trying time in people's lives, and we need to make sure that while we clarify their role and we ensure that the legislation is clear in terms of what the expectation of them is, we also ensure that we do not put too much on their shoulders or establish a system that compels them to go out and seek more legal advice or to get legal advice in order to navigate their way through the courts. I think we know that that is not a process we need to encourage as access to justice continues to be a major issue in our judicial system, and not everybody has the ability to hire counsel to help them navigate their way through the executor process.

However, that being said, knowing that this does come from a very thoughtful consideration by the Alberta Law Reform Institute and understanding, as I've been advised at this point, anyway, that this almost completely follows those recommendations, I suspect that there is very little that is not good in this piece of legislation.

I look forward to receiving just a little bit of extra information from the minister in charge around the obligations and/or liabilities of the executor or administrator under this legislation, whether there is any risk of that particular person being held to a standard which they may not necessarily be able to meet. I look forward to hearing that information. Otherwise, at this point those are my comments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any other speakers?

Then I'd ask the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock to close debate if she chooses.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would like to close debate on Bill 4.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Kubinec moved, seconded by Mr. McDonald, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Oberle]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you wish to speak?

Ms Blakeman: As soon as I can find the notes on my computer. Maybe somebody else would like to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others that wish to speak tonight?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Speaking to the throne speech, I take it. Yes? Okay. Great.

Thanks very much. Well, as usual, I have – well, it's handy when I have some version of the throne speech to speak to, if you don't mind. Oh, maybe this is my stuff. Okay. Yeah, the throne speech.

You know, I counsel my less long-toothed colleagues that throne speeches and budget speeches are not about the opposition; they're about the government. They all look smug and swan around with flowers in their boutonnières. It's their day, and you've just got to grit your teeth and kind of get through it.

This is now our opportunity to have a chance to talk about it. Traditionally, people talk about their constituency. As you know, I have the best constituency because I have the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. It is the best. I am so happy to serve these wonderful people, who keep me on my toes and send me letters and stop me in the bank lineup and parking lots and come down here and watch what's going on. I am so blessed to be able to represent those people and, by the way, most of the people sitting in this Assembly because a lot of them have their out-of-town condos in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I'm always happy to recommend restaurants or theatres or particular plays to go to. If anyone is interested, just send me a note.

What I would like to do is sort of divide this into three parts. I'd like to do a quick review of what was promised in the 2012 election and the throne speech to where we are now, what was not in the 2014 throne speech that I expected to see, and what is in there that I'm not – the bullet says: end on a happy note. Okay. So what's in the 2014 throne speech that I don't want to hurt someone about?

I do represent the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, which includes Queen Mary Park; Central McDougall; the traditional downtown area, which also includes a special designated warehouse section that's growing and becoming ever more cool to live in; Grandin downtown; Rosedale; and Oliver. I have about 48 and a half thousand people now. It's actually growing faster and faster because they keep popping up new condos and more people move in. About 98 per cent of my constituents live in multifamily units: townhouses, apartments, condominiums, life leases, lofts. Two per cent of my constituents live in single-family houses. I think I have under 500 houses now, and that drops every election.

I've got six schools. The two high schools are both unique and much loved. There's St. Joseph high school, which reinvented itself about a decade ago into a self-paced learner. What they ended up getting, which I think surprised them – but they have just leaped ahead with it – were a lot of very bright students that wanted the self-paced so that they could just blow through this stuff. They now have an IB program in there and are just doing amazing things. Plus they're running Jean Forest as part of it, which is the Catholic girls-only school. It is also run in that building and is part of that school, a very strong faith-based delivery of programming, and they all seem really happy to be there.

I also have Victoria school, which, of course, is the special arts school, which is a never-ending treat and a slight irony to me because my father retired from Victoria school, and at the end he spent the last couple of years tearing down the specialized vocational parts of that school in order to help create the arts school. He was tearing down the reason he came into teaching to make way for that arts school, which was what his daughter was making her living doing. Of course, we all know how wonderful Victoria school is.

Then we have Oliver school, which has as its junior high the Nellie McClung all-girls program, and Grandin school, which is now French immersion and Spanish immersion and full to bursting.

John A. McDougall school: I always send out my heartfelt thank you to the staff that work in that school. They work so hard with quite challenging, unique, bright, fun, and sometimes harder-to-love kids and do their utmost to make those kids thrive. I have such admiration for them.

I also have St. Catherine's, which is sort of our multicultural school. It's also under the separate school board. You go in there, and there is one blond kid and 500 kids that have dark hair of many different colours. So it's a pretty cool place to be. They're really up on ESL and kids from the diaspora who just moved here from other places or have been in refugee camps for years and years. They're a really wonderful school. I also have Centre High and Metro and NorQuest and MacEwan University and Alberta College and the enterprise centre, so I've got part of the U of A.

As you've heard me talk about many times, I have a queer community that is just wonderful. Artists, hospitality and service workers, municipal and provincial civil servants – and I hope the ones that did Bill 4 are part of mine because I like to have great people in my constituency – professionals, entrepreneurs, students, seniors. I have a larger-than-normal percentage of seniors. I think I have a little over 12 per cent, which is by no means the highest but more than most people have.

I have quite an ethnic diaspora of urban aboriginal and First Nations people and a lot of people who need services: the mentally ill; people with mobility challenges; AISH; income support; WCB; pensioners; high-risk, high-needs, addicted street people; very, very few children. I have very, very, very wealthy people and very, very, very poor people.

As you can tell, I have a very diverse community, so I really get a chance to look at all parts of things when I'm working on behalf of my constituents. One of the things that I believe was promised and did not happen is removing the offending section 11.1 out of the Human Rights Act and thereby restoring full protections and respect and dignity to the LGBTQ community; in other words, removing that parental rights section that ended up in the Human Rights Act. That just continues to be so offensive to me, and I hold it against you all so hard. It's something that I believe you need to fix, and I will continue to stay on you until you fix it.

Ms Notley: I'm sure it wasn't promised to be fixed.

Ms Blakeman: I thought it was promised.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: I'm just sharing with the other members. As you know, I like to engage everyone.

That is a section they gave with one hand and took away with another in trying to amend the Human Rights Act and include the prohibition against discrimination based on sexual orientation. So they put that into the act, and then they took it away in practically the next page by saying: by the way, you can make sure that your children are never exposed to a single word of anything about people who have a different sexual orientation than you. It's just a horrible, horrible, nasty, awful, evil, backward thing that was done there, and you must fix it.

The other thing that we continue to not embrace or understand is transgender rights. I know it's a struggle for people. Still, you have to understand that some of the things that seem really straightforward for other people – so you're going to go for a pre-employment test; I still find it foul and, I think, unconstitutional to say to someone: well, I think I might hire you, but first I want you to go through a physical. Well, if you take someone who's transgendered and not out – and why should they be when that's nobody else's business? – and you send them for a physical and they say, "Okay; well, you know, strip down, and let's have a little squat here," that's going to be outing someone. As soon as they say, "No, I don't think I want to do that," then the companies which have sprung up now to do this physical testing on behalf of all these companies that insist on it pre-employment say: "Oh, well, then you refuse to complete the test. That's it. We can't give you an okay on that one, so you're not going to get hired."

There are things like that that this government has not come to terms with or come to a place of understanding on, and they still cause people discrimination based on their sexual orientation. Transgendered individuals is one of the places where you're making this mistake over and over again. So you've got to fix that one.

My colleague has been working hard so that if schools ask for gay-straight alliances, it should be mandatory that they get the support once they've asked for it. I think that's a very good way to do it. I think that's right. If the kids get together and say, "Yeah, we want to do this," then it should click in that it's mandatory to give them the support to do it. Don't make them fight for all of that stuff. You know what? When kids like that have to fight every goddamn step for everything, what do you create? You create me, and I would bet that you people over there don't really want more like me. I had to fight every single thing, every antiwomen, antigirl stupid rule and assumption from the day I was 14 on. If you do that to people, you create lifelong rabble-rousers and troublemakers. So if you don't want that, maybe you should get on this one.

I notice that I've now made introducing the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose such a normal thing in the Alberta Legislature that the minister wants to hop on the bandwagon, so she introduced the court this year. I was really miffed because I thought: oh, you know, that's my gig, and those are my people. The member for Strathcona has done that as well. Then somebody said: well, you've just made it so normal that it's safe for the minister to go ahead and do it. I thought: yeah, that's actually right. All right. It is progress.

Other things that I think were promised or should be fixed. This one actually wasn't promised, but you should fix the Family Law Act. Take out that regressive, archaic, backwards, last-century language that continues to distinguish based on old role models: mother-father or husband-wife. Stop doing that. Stop it. It is parent-parent or spouse-spouse. It doesn't matter. In the law now it doesn't matter. But by insisting on using that designated language, you create a situation where people have to go to court. If you're not the official mother according to the language – I've got little air quotes with my fingers here – then you have to go to court and adopt the child and go through money and time and a whole bunch of stuff that you really didn't need to do because you are the mother of this child. You are the one that stands in that place and says: I am the parent of this child.

Get rid of that language. I mean, come on. I stood here for an entire afternoon and moved amendment after amendment after amendment to try and get that language out of this act the first time it came in here, and you voted me down over and over and over again. So don't think that yesterday is the first time I've had y'all vote against me. I've got a lot of practice at this, and I'm right. I was right then, and I'm right now, and I was right yesterday. So that should be done.

Funding of the arts. You know, same pie, more forks.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Ms Notley: Coming from the not fabulous but indeed the best constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona, where there are many, many arts, I am truly interested to hear what the Member for Edmonton-Centre has to say about the need for better arts funding in this province. I'm wondering if she could tell me what her thoughts are on that.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Edmonton-Strathcona. Well, as I said: same pie, more forks. There has been no increase in the funding to the arts, which actually means there has been a decrease in the funding to the arts because there has been no commensurate cost of living increase or inflationary increase, so they have less money. I've talked about this a lot in this House. This is an industry or a sector that creates jobs for less money than any other sector can create a job for, that contributes to a better quality of life for everybody. Their money stays here in their home communities. They don't take it somewhere else. We are prohibited from growth now because you can't get larger as a company if your grants aren't commensurate with that. We've corralled or muzzled everybody. They all have to stay the same size. No one can get a bigger share of that pie because it just takes more of it away from someone else.

We have the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. I noticed in the plan – it's doing yet another plan, which makes me want to scream. I think we're now on plan 3 or plan 4. Obviously, the approach is: if we don't have any money and we're not going to get any more money to put into the arts, then we'll have another plan. We've had the blueprint. We've had some sort of spirit plan. The executive director went off and did a year's worth of something or another to come up with another plan, a four-point plan or something. See? I can't even remember the names of the plans anymore.

Now we've got another one in here that is yet another plan. There is some money or an intention there to, you know, go out and find more ways to make the arts sustainable. Arts have never been sustainable. They're never going to be sustainable. They're part of our life here. If it wasn't the nobility that supported them, it was the church that supported them, and now it's the government that supports them. Why are you wasting time and money trying to find sustainability here? Just fund them and let them get on with it, and you'd have a much better life. They, by the way, are much better managers than a lot of the dumb things I see this government do, certainly better money managers than many of the things I see the private sector do.

The film studio. Fund the film studio, or get out of it. You know, $5 million is not going to build that film studio. They are a large enough institution. Is it worth it? Absolutely. Would we get bigger and better and more films? Absolutely. No question about that. But there is no private sector entity that is going to come in and pick up the majority share of that one. It ain't going to happen, folks. That's why you don't have one in Calgary. That's why it's never happened there. We had it happen in Edmonton in an extraordinary time. When Super Channel was starting out, we had an individual that had the licence for that that started his own company, with government grants I might add, and at the time built the film studio that we have in Edmonton. That time is not going to come again. You are not going to get a film studio in Calgary unless you fund it, and my advice is: fund it. You will get a lot more payback from that than you will from many of the other schemes that the government gets involved with.

The Wild Rose Foundation is now gone, so the funding of volunteers is now turning up in the CIP and CFEP pool of lottery money. Once again: same pie, more forks. I notice with the flooding that there's money coming out of CIP for some of the flooding restoration and mitigation. Well, yeah. Same pie, even more forks or bigger forks. It's just very frustrating.

The human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism fund, which has sort of quietly gone off into a corner – I think it has a million bucks – is really needed, and it really needs an injection of money into that. As we have cultural communities that are starting to grow up and figure out how they're going to work with us and in this world, they need some access to money so they can do this stuff. One of those is the Africa Centre, a very good example of what can happen with that kind of support in Edmonton, but it's not done for nothing.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

8:10

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much. I'm pleased to be able to rise to respond to the 2014 throne speech. Where to start with this? Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with in this province and what we have been dealing with to a greater and greater extent over the last few years is what we have been referring to as a tale of two Albertas. We have certain measurements that we can look at that make it look as though – and to some extent, you know, they are correct measurements, too; don't get me wrong – the province is growing in prosperity. But there are a growing number of alternative measurements which show that the majority of Albertans are starting to be left behind. We have two sets of rules in this province and two sets of states in this province in terms of who is truly enjoying the benefits of the great wealth, which, just to be clear, this government did not put there. The oil was there before they were elected.

Ms Blakeman: Dinosaurs died.

Ms Notley: They appear to be in many cases often as old as dinosaurs, but they aren't.

In fact, the resources that we have that we are sort of awkwardly, ineffectively, kind of stumbling towards capitalizing on were not put there by this government. Nonetheless, we do have great resources and the potential for great prosperity, but what we are doing is that we are failing every single day to share that prosperity in a way that will improve the livelihood of all Albertans in the best way possible. I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that by improving the livelihood and the opportunities and the future of all Albertans, even that very select few of very wealthy Albertans that these folks constantly have their eye on in terms of ensuring that they do what those folks want, even that group will do better. But this government doesn't see that, so we have a tale of two Albertas. In no place is it more appropriately reflected than in this throne speech.

Now, before we came back into the session, our caucus did a crossprovince tour, and we spoke to Albertans in a number of different cities across the province to find out what mattered to them. What we heard about was this growing inequality and this growing struggle to make ends meet and the fact that they had to work harder and longer and faster and that they were more stressed out trying to keep up with where they were just a few years ago and trying to keep up with where their parents were decades ago and at the same time worrying about how they were going to have to run even faster and farther and harder to take care of their parents a decade from now, understanding, of course, that that's yet another area which we once could rely upon and now can no longer rely upon, that being the safe and secure retirement of our parents and grandparents. That's what we heard about.

Now, it's very interesting, Mr. Speaker. I saw a poll about two or three weeks ago that asked people whether they thought this government was on the wrong track or the right track. Interestingly, 70 per cent of people that were being polled said that this government was on the wrong track, and I think there's a good reason for why people are thinking that. A couple of years ago that party over there, in a Hail Mary attempt to maintain power, nominated a new leader, who then went out – and I don't really think she did it personally, quite frankly. I think she was just reading a script that some skilled campaign organizers around her gave her to read, but whatever. She elevated the expectations of Albertans around issues of shared prosperity, around issues of fairness, around issues of eliminating poverty, around issues of providing a bright future for our children. She or her strategists tapped into the fact that that's what Albertans were really looking for, so she dressed up like somebody that was going to provide them with that. Then she went out to people and said that that's what she was going to give them.

Ever since then, ever since April of 2012, when that election ended and people embraced that vision, they have been disappointed time and time and time again. That very vision which the government leader's strategists tapped into, that very wish that Albertans had for more equality, for more prosperity, for shared wealth, for more opportunity, that has been nothing but a disappointment, and you see that very, very clearly in this throne speech.

What we basically have in this throne speech is a lot of sort of vague language to say: "When it comes to programs that expand opportunities for all Albertans, we're going to basically do more of the same, except a little bit less of it as the population grows. But, hey, we're going to build lots of buildings."

Then over on the other side we have the Official Opposition, and they're lovely folks. I love sitting around chatting with them, and we get along, and they're a hoot. But I think we all understand that we don't necessarily agree on all of these things. Those folks are like, "You know what? We kind of agree with the suppressing of the programs for hope and the future and shared prosperity and all of that kind of stuff, but we'd also like you to not build buildings."

So it's like having these two dinosaurs sort of arguing over who gets to climb out of the tar pit first. You know, let the buildings fall apart, don't let the buildings fall apart, blah, blah, blah. That's the discussion we have, and nobody's talking about the fact that inequality is growing, that the gap between what women and men earn in this province is growing, that the number of people going into postsecondary education is dropping, that our class sizes are getting larger, and that families are having to work longer and harder and faster to get to the same place that they got to without having to do that just a few years ago. We're completely missing that part of it.

What were some of the things that I would've liked to have seen talked about in this throne speech to begin the process of truly reaching out to Albertans and giving them that sense that this government was actually interested in sharing the wealth over which they accidentally, you know, planted their tent? What were some of the things that they should have done? Well, obviously, I've talked about it before, and others have talked about it: child poverty. It was a promise made by the Premier; nothing has been done on it. I asked the Minister of Human Services why it was that the very programs designed to help people get off income support – adult learning, adult upgrading, career training, all those things – were cut between 20 and 50 per cent? The minister said to me: Oh, well, you know, that money might still come if we ever negotiate an agreement with the federal government.

But here's the thing. You guys just got a billion-dollar windfall from the federal government. You only put $600 million of it into Health. There's a whole other $400 million that's floating around, yet somehow we still managed to bring in a budget that didn't ensure that we keep that money stable let alone cut it by anywhere from 20 to 50 per cent. So that's a choice, Mr. Speaker. That is a choice. This government makes choices, and that was a choice to betray that group of people, the very children that need to be taken out of poverty. Their parents need to be able to go to school in order to get out of poverty, and they can't.

It's interesting. I have a friend who's a teacher. I can't get into the details of this, but she tells me about how she and another colleague are actually themselves paying the monthly expenses of a young woman who is 17 years old and has a child, has finished high school, but doesn't have adequate education to get into postsecondary, so she needs to upgrade her high school. But to do that, there is no funding for her. None. She's not eligible for income support because she's already got her diploma. She's not eligible for postsecondary, for a student loan, because she can't get into postsecondary yet. So here she is desperately working to try to get herself out of poverty. She can't get that help. Her teachers are paying for her out of their pockets to help her pay her rent so that she can continue at school and upgrade her schooling and do that work. But that shouldn't be happening in a province like this. That's ridiculous, that that kind of thing is happening in a province like this, Mr. Speaker.

Health care. The Minister of Human Services said: well, what would you do to fix the problem around reporting child deaths? We talked a little bit about that, but then I said: you know, really, it's not about reporting children's deaths; it's about eliminating poverty, and what we need to do is bring in a child tax benefit to very quickly and efficiently bring up the income of those low-income families. We need to start dealing with mental health and addictions treatment plans. The paltry little bit of money that the government announced recently for it is just a drop in the bucket. I think anyone over there who cares about these issues knows and understands that. Yet we have a report that the government itself had to go out and ask to be done, which shows that this government is dropping the ball all over the place on mental health services. We are doing a profoundly crappy job on that issue, and it is primarily tied to the short-sighted, ridiculous decision to create AHS back in 2008, where we eliminated the Alberta Mental Health Board. We haven't been tracking what we've been doing on mental health ever since, and it's just a failure. And in so doing, we drove poverty, and we put more and more children and families at risk. So there's something where I would like to have seen some effort, some action to improve.

What else could we have done? Well, you know, we talk about university funding. Now, I appreciate that certain folks at very senior levels within the postsecondary sector have given grudging statements that maybe the sky will not fall quite yet, tomorrow, with this budget because they've been given access to their access to the future fund again. The freeze is off that, so they can now fund raise again in the corporate sector. You know, getting that was a great win, so they're going to play nice and say nice things.

The problem is that for the most part the major cuts to the operating grants of postsecondary institutions have not been restored, and what that means is that access will decrease, quality will decrease, and our postsecondary institutions will continue to get decreasingly accessible to regular Albertans.

In the comprehensive institutional plan that was released by the University of Alberta in January, they talked about the impact of the cuts that were not remedied by the partial restoration of those cuts at the end of last year; they talked about potential catastrophic failure of some of their buildings because their maintenance was so far behind; they talked about losing the best students; they talked about losing the best professors; they talked about losing the best researchers because of the instability that was created and is being created in our postsecondary system by these draconian cuts by a government which is not interested in improving and growing the opportunities of Albertans and sharing the wealth and the prosperity of this province but rather is interested in creating an Americanized, commercialized postsecondary system which serves industry and industry only for a select group of elite students, and that's the end of it. That's their vision of postsecondary. It's a tremendous step backwards, and it is going to limit the opportunities of Albertans for generations to come, Mr. Speaker – generations to come.

Frankly, that's not addressed anywhere. Oh, yes. Here it was. "Your government will take the long view when it comes to investments in higher education." I guess that is Premier-speak for: we're going to cut lots and lots of funding and really restrict access to this institution. "Take the long view." I got quite a kick out of that one.

One of the other things that I'm very concerned about, as I mentioned before, is how we care for seniors in this province. Now, we have this ongoing debate on continuing care versus long-term care, and the government loves to say that we're growing continuing care beds. But, in fact, we all know that continuing care means a whole bunch of different things, and in many cases what it really means is inadequate care. At the same time the government is unprepared to invest in new places where standards of care – minimal standards of care, I will grant you, but still standards of care – exist when it comes to areas of long-term care. Meanwhile those areas are suffering greater and greater pressures. Their staff are getting burned out, their ability to provide care is being undercut, and we are moving more and more towards a commercialized, privatized form of seniors' care in this province.

You know, I had a friend tell me not too long ago that as she planned for retirement, as much as she's a stalwart – stalwart – supporter of public health care historically and in the future, part of her retirement planning is now to buy long-term care insurance because she believes that she has to plan for this government to abandon her and her family when she gets older. So now she's buying long-term care insurance. That's what you guys have done. You've opened a market for your friends in the long-term care insurance industry rather than actually building and improving seniors' care now and going forward. That's what's happening.

Meanwhile we have this horrible situation where the situation in many long-term care centres is deteriorating to such a point that the conflict . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Ms Blakeman: Well, that was kind of an abrupt ending. I'm wondering what the conflict was.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. The conflict between family members and care providers in these overstressed long-term care centres is growing daily because the care providers struggle to provide the care that is required and the families, rightfully, are stressed out and anxious about that. So now we have these Dickensian stories – perhaps not Dickensian; that's probably the wrong literary allusion – these very dramatic and sad stories of families being separated from one another and families being told that they are not allowed to visit their loved ones because they are disruptive. That is what it has come to. Families are being separated from seniors because this government has allowed the long-term care system to come into such crisis that these kinds of reactive policies come into place and everybody is hurt. Staff is hurt, families are hurt, and most importantly the seniors who reside in these care centres are hurt.

This is what this government's vision is. So to the extent that this throne speech says that the government will invest in better seniors' care, well, no they're not. They're not investing in it. They're reducing the number of long-term care spaces, they're not putting staff-to-patient ratios in place, and they're not building new, high-quality, low-cost, accessible places for seniors who require care. They're not. Meanwhile they're engaging in the most chaotic reorganization of home care. You know, you take something that's barely holding on, and then they decided they needed to reorganize it and contract it out to a bunch of corporations who are completely not equipped to provide the service, and you create even more chaos.

In my riding when I did my Christmas poinsettia tour – in December I went to 15 different centres in my riding where seniors live – I heard time after time after time again about how home-care services had decreased and how the quality of care accessible had decreased and how their quality of life had decreased as a result. This isn't me making it up and just waxing poetic because I like to beat up on you folks. I mean, I kind of do, but that's not it. I am telling you about what people told me as I visited them over the course of December.

And let me tell you, things are not getting better for any seniors. These are seniors in long-term care, seniors in lodges, seniors in assisted living, and seniors in seniors-only apartments. All across the board they are getting fewer services, and they are very stressed and very anxious, and it is your fault. It's as simple as that. You could deal with the issue or not deal with the issue. This throne speech is a recipe or a justification for not dealing with the issue. That's what we've got in here.

The last thing I'd like to say about the throne speech that also deals with conflict is that we have had a few bumps in the old international economic world because of our outrageously shameful record on the environment. What do we say in the throne speech about the environment? How are we going to improve our record and our reputation with our international markets? Here's what we're going to do. Through a new single energy regulator and a new environmental monitoring agency we're going to make Alberta more competitive.

Nowhere in there does it say that we are just thinking maybe – just as an aside, what the heck, little bit of a lark – that we're going to make our air and our water and our land cleaner, safer. Maybe – maybe – we might have wanted to just throw out a carrot to folks who were kind of interested in clean air, clean water, clean land. You know, maybe just a bit. But, no, no, no. Our environmental regulation is focused solely on making us more competitive. And you know what? It is making us more competitive. Absolutely. But in the course of doing it, it's making us more competitive because unlike almost every other developed nation, we are prepared to sell out our air and our land and our water for a very, very cheap price.

Yeah, people who make money off being able to exploit an absence of standards, an absence of regulations, you're right, they may well come here a bit faster. But the long-term outcome for Albertans, not only in terms of our quality of life but also for our long-term economic health, is not a good one.

8:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak in reply to the Speech from the Throne?

Seeing none, hon. Deputy Government House Leader, did you wish to move adjournment?

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I believe you meant to move to adjourn debate on the throne speech?

Mr. Denis: Do you want to speak, Brian?

Mr. Mason: I have, but I'll do it again if you want.

Mr. Denis: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the authority to let the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood speak again, but I would move that we adjourn speaking on the throne speech.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Olson: Well, it appears that we've done a lot of business today, Mr. Speaker, so I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:31 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Gracious Lord and Holy Creator, fill our hearts and minds with wisdom and with determination to always do what is right for our constituents, for our province, and for our country. And bless those brave men and women who served in peacekeeping missions, perhaps still are, those who returned, and those who gave their lives in place. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

13th Anniversary of Elected Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we begin the rest of the Routine, I am reminded that we have five members today who are celebrating their 13th election anniversary as Members of this Legislative Assembly. Let me read their names, and then we can applaud them all: the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. Congratulations to all of you.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many of you know, today marked the end of Canada's 12-year mission in Afghanistan, and as the ministerial liaison to the Canadian armed forces and the MLA for Edmonton Garrison it was truly a privilege to attend the flag-raising ceremony this morning at Guthrie school, where I was joined by several colleagues, the Premier, the Lieutenant Governor, troops, families, education stakeholders, students, and staff there. There will be a member's statement on this commemoration a little later today by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, but I wanted to introduce a few special guests that we have here with us this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly four troops from the Canadian armed forces who have served in Afghanistan during these 12 years as well as the family of one – I see she's not here; we may have to revert later – who never made it home. All of these individuals demonstrate the strength and courage that it takes to serve this country, and I know that we are all eternally grateful for their sacrifice. I would ask these folks to please rise and remain standing as I say their names so that we can properly thank them: Major Stephane Pellerin, who has served six tours overseas, two in Afghanistan; Master Warrant Officer Robin Crane, seven tours overseas, three in Afghanistan; Sergeant Paul Rachynski, three tours overseas, all of which were in Afghanistan; and Master Corporal Caroline Brooks, who has one tour overseas in Afghanistan. Like I said, we have one family that's not here yet. I would ask your indulgence to revert later.

These folks are representative of the tens of thousands of Canadians that have served on this mission and made us very proud. I'd like to invite the Assembly to show our gratitude. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, hon. members, starting with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you 115 students from A. Blair McPherson school, located in your constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. They're accompanied here today by their teachers, Tom Henderson, Barb Hennig, Rachel Day, and Jeff Neilson. They're seated in both galleries. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, students.
Edmonton-Centre, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence, I'll do both of my introductions at the same time. The first group that I would like to introduce is always a group that I'm very proud of, and that is the Careers in Transition section from NorQuest College, I believe. Today we're being joined by 10 students, and that includes their instructor, Allan Carlson. If I could get that group to rise, please, and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. There they are. Thank you very much.

My second introduction today, Mr. Speaker, is a group that have come together and called themselves the blue university project. They are a group of students and community members who are taking action on water rights. They've organized a week of events for Edmonton Water Week at the University of Alberta from March 17 to 22. Their leader today, Nichole Batienco, has worked with me on my Motion 515 to have water declared as a public good. I would ask them, please, to rise as I say their names: Nichole Batienco, Tigest Mulugeta, Sheena Lukacs, Jennifer Novak, David Wolsey, and Caitlin Pettifor. If you would join me, please, in thanking them for their wonderful work on the environment.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, then let us move on with the Associate Minister of Public Safety and Recovery and Reconstruction for High River.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, it's with humility and honour that I rise to introduce to you and through you Mr. Tom Sampson, executive officer with the Calgary fire department. Tom Sampson joined the Calgary fire department in 2009 to oversee the Emergency Management Agency and facilitate the building of the new emergency operations centre. During his tenure with CEMA he acted as the emergency operations centre manager addressing the devastating Slave Lake fires and subsequently received the Slave Lake medal of honour for his efforts. Tom was the acting director of the Calgary Emergency Management Agency during the unprecedented floods that we saw this last June.

Prior to working for CFD Tom was the chief of Calgary's emergency medical services, my boss. He worked to establish the Calgary regional EMS partnership, the chiefs of Alberta, and nationally the EMS Chiefs of Canada. He received the Alberta College of Paramedics award for excellence for his advocacy in paramedicine. Tom is a lifetime member of the board of EMS Chiefs of Canada and continues to maintain his registration as an advanced care paramedic. But, Mr. Speaker, the one accolade that is maybe not mentioned in his biography is his dedication to his family. I've always admired that. He is a friend and a mentor, and I'd ask him to rise today and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. member in the seat occupied normally by Edmonton-Gold Bar, or is that Edmonton-Gold Bar himself? Yes, it is, indeed. Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it's a bit breezy in here today. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful individuals that I'm honoured to introduce on this very special day. A little bit of poetry. Mrs. Christine McIver, the wife of the Minister of Infrastructure and chief executive officer of Kids Cancer Care Foundation, and Mr. Stu Reid, chief development officer of Kids Cancer Care Foundation of Alberta, the foundation which I chose to raise money for during these last 11 months. Christine and Stuart are doing exceptional work for cancer research and care in this province, particularly with youth and children. It is great to see such dedicated and passionate people doing such important work for kids who suffer from this terrible, life-altering disease. Christine and Stu were present today as I shaved my lid for kids with cancer at Gabrielle-Roy school. It has been my privilege for 13 months to do my small part in growing my hair and raising awareness and money for wonderful organizations across our province. The government can't do it all. We all have to help in our little ways.

Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, the Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood MLA.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I must say to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that I'm not sure which look I like best. But I know there's a pink wig out there somewhere.

It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of hard-working nurses from the Grey Nuns hospital emergency department. My guests are here today because they believe that two of the most important facets to a strong society are health care and education. I would now like my guests to rise as I call their names: Rob Kroetsch; Sarah Fitzgerald; Christine Maxwell; Tara MacNeil; Pat Mercer-Deadman, RN, who's the president of the emergency nurses of Alberta; Cassandra Garneau; and Alan Vandenbroek. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an amazing young couple. This young couple from Cypress-Medicine Hat have been early organizers, great strategists, and very hard workers for the Wildrose Party in the last few years. These two were and are critical to the Wildrose success in the south, and it's nice to see such young, principled, hard-working, and smart conservative values put into practice. I would invite Colin and Cheryl Phaff to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ron and Jeff Deeprise. I've known Ron and Jeff for most of my life. Ron is an engineer, and Jeff is a teacher. They came here today to see if the rumours are true and perhaps taste the winds of change blowing through these hallowed halls in these past days. If they could rise, please – and I will introduce them – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? Minister of Education, your guests have now arrived?

Mr. J. Johnson: They have, Mr. Speaker, yes. Thank you for indulging me. We have the final group that we want to honour here. This is a tougher one to introduce. Lisa Schamehorn-Eades is here with her two daughters. I know Lisa well. She's been in this House before. She's an Albertan. She's the spouse of Sergeant Shawn Eades, who was killed in action in August 2008, from the Combat Engineer Regiment out of Edmonton here. She's here with her daughters, Breanna and Niya. I just saw them at the Guthrie school, where we had the ceremony. Lisa wears a medal that nobody wants to wear. It's the Memorial Silver Cross, which was established in 1919 for widows and mothers of fallen soldiers. We owe them a debt that we cannot repay, but these young ladies that are here with their mother can take comfort and pride in the fact that now, because of their father, there are 3 million girls in school in Afghanistan that were not there before he went. [Standing ovation]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Government Culture

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think today is a good day to talk about the culture of this government. The Premier is currently under heavy fire for her sense of entitlement and not without good reason. But let's dig a little deeper into how government works.

A government is a team. It's not one individual. Government is made up of MLAs, the caucus, and the cabinet. The Premier hand-picks her cabinet from her team of MLAs to run departments and to set the strategic objectives of the government. One of the key functions of caucus and, specifically, cabinet is to provide good advice to the Premier. Now, what kind of advice do you think you're going to get from a group that would use a taxpayer-funded aircraft to get to and from a PC Party fundraiser? You would think that as good advisers these cabinet ministers would have advised the Premier to not use the government plane and would have not used it themselves.

The bad advice and the bad conduct of this cabinet don't stop there, Mr. Speaker. Under their watch there has been a litany of expense scandals, from the Health ministry all the way down to the Tourism ministry, from jet-setting on a $45,000 trip to South Africa to the $100 million in executive expenses paid out by the Health minister.

Now, the rumours abound that the cabinet is unhappy with the Premier. They aren't pleased that she did the very things they taught her with their advice and their actions. They are looking to toss her under the bus for doing the very things and subscribing to the very same culture they are responsible for establishing. Apparently, they are concerned that if they don't do something, they might cease to be entitled to their entitlements. But let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. A change in the occupant of the Premier's chair won't cut the rot out of this tired, out-of-touch government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government is attacking pensions for employees without justification and without warning. Alberta's public-sector pension plans are among the most stable in North America, and independent analysis shows that they are well on their way to being fully funded. Yet the PCs are continuing to jeopardize the retirement security of more than 300,000 Albertans, who work hard every day to keep our seniors healthy, to keep our roads safe, and to protect vulnerable Albertans.

On January 1, 2016, public employees will start losing value from their pensions, that they've spent years paying into. A letter to the editor in the Edmonton Journal compared these changes to "a marathon runner reaching Mile 25 only to learn the finish line has been extended [by] several miles." Mr. Speaker, it isn't fair, it is not necessary, and it will make it much harder for our public sector to attract and to retain employees.

Two changes are particularly concerning. Imposing a contribution cap means that pensioners will always be at risk of losing their retirement income. Second, eliminating the guaranteed cost-of-living adjustments means imposing growing rates of poverty on seniors over the length of their retirements.

Mr. Speaker, this government should be working to make things better for Albertans, not worse. They should be looking to make retirement more secure, not less. Unfortunately, standing up for middle-class Albertans is not what this government does. That's why we need Alberta New Democrats, and in force.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I beg your indulgence for one more member's statement.

Calgary-Currie, please.

Canadian Mission in Afghanistan

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a privilege to rise today and an honour to note a significant milestone that took place today, at the end of Canada's 12-year mission in Afghanistan. During this time Canadian armed forces' troops performed beyond all expectations in an environment that was dangerous and fragile. Our troops have been trainers, coaches, teachers, and fighters, and through their entire mission they've displayed incredible character.

To honour this commitment and sacrifice, the province started the day by lowering all the flags in the province to half-mast. This act is one we took to remember those who did not come back from this mission, those who gave their lives to protect our country and improve the well-being of a nation on the other side of the world. Forty-six Albertans died while serving in Afghanistan, and many more were wounded or hurt. They were our neighbours, our fathers, our brothers and sisters, and they were all taken too soon. We lowered our flags to commemorate their sacrifice and let those who did return know that they're not alone.

Today is not just an opportunity to remember the sacrifices made by our soldiers; it is a chance for all of us to take a broad look at the world and see Canada's unique place in it. Our hon. Minister of Education encouraged schools around the province to follow the government's lead and lower their Canadian and Albertan flags to half-mast to begin the day and then raise them at noon. This was a unique opportunity for students to learn about history while it's happening, providing them with an opportunity to engage, reflect, and ask questions. Over the lunch hour today the hon. minister was joined by several colleagues at Guthrie school, and along with students, staff, stakeholders, troops and their families, they raised the flags to full height from half-mast.

I would like to close by saying how very grateful we are to all the men and women and parents who served for Canada and those who made the ultimate sacrifice. May they rest in eternal peace and be always remembered.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought that was well said by the MLA for Calgary-Currie. I'm delighted to see the men and women in uniform here today and their families. We're honoured by your presence.

Government Airplane Usage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we learned that the Premier and two cabinet ministers boarded a government plane on October 25, 2012, to attend a PC fundraiser in Grande Prairie. The Health minister said that the use of the plane was legitimate because "we made an announcement" on the Grande Prairie hospital. Now, we've done some checking, and there was no government of Alberta press conference that day in Grande Prairie, just the Premier's $250-per-ticket fundraiser, which the minister attended. To the minister: is he sure that the use of the plane that day was for legitimate government business?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I answered this question yesterday, and the answer that I provided yesterday stands. We did speak to the Grande Prairie hospital construction, which is very exciting for both the constituents of my colleague the Minister of Transportation and all citizens of the Grande Prairie area. There was a government-issued news release that day. There were a number of other announcements in the same week. In fact, this government announced six hospital expansions during the week of October 18.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the paper of record in Grande Prairie, the Daily Herald-Tribune, confirms that there was no government press conference, and the only announcement was a press release sent out at 4:02 p.m., while the Premier and her ministers were still in the air. Again to the Health minister: if there was no government of Alberta event or press conference or meeting in Grande Prairie that day, why did he take the government of Alberta plane?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, first, I'd like to start by saying to all members of our Canadian Forces: thank you; duty well done.

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister mentioned, during that week there were a number of announcements – Edson and Medicine Hat, I believe – around hospitals. This was one of those announcements around the hospitals, that was done in Grande Prairie. On that particular day, as the hon. members opposite would remember, there was a tragedy in St. Paul. There were a number of planes that were used to move people to and from that tragedy. This plane was delayed, unfortunately. However, there was also a PC Party charter plane that went up for all members who were not on government business.

The Speaker: The hon. leader, second supplemental. [interjections]

Hon. members, the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition actually has the floor.

Please take it.

Ms Smith: Notwithstanding what the Finance minister said, it's pretty obvious that the only reason why the Premier and her ministers boarded the government plane that day was to attend the PC Party fundraiser. In addition to using taxpayer-funded aircraft to pick her up from holidays, the Premier and now her cabinet appear to believe that it's perfectly okay to use the government planes to travel to and from PC Party fundraisers. The Premier should stop the gross use of government aircraft and order the PC Party to reimburse taxpayers. Will she do it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that a number of things happen in this world. A lot of them are government business; some of them are party business. We keep government business and party business separate. We charter planes to go to party business. We use government planes to go to government business. In that week, as the Minister of Health said, there was a rollout of six hospital announcements, including a very important one in Grande Prairie, very important to the residents of Grande Prairie, very important to northern Alberta, a very important piece of government business.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there was no press conference, no announcement, no event. Let's see if the other members of the cabinet feel as brazen about this abuse of taxpayer dollars as the Premier and the Health minister do. I'd like to ask the Transportation minister, formerly the Infrastructure minister, who was on the plane out. Is it okay for taxpayers to subsidize the fundraising activities of the PC Party by providing free air transportation to and from PC Party fundraising events?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this is almost ridiculous in this House, that they would use this kind of line of questioning to challenge our integrity or my judgment. I would put my integrity with anybody's over there.

I flew with the Health minister on that Saturday to Edson and High Prairie to make a similar announcement. Maybe they would rather we made the announcement at the PC fundraising dinner. That would have been wrong. We went up ahead of time to do a press release. You might have checked Twitter to find out that there was no press release. I was there in the press release. I can bring all kinds of citizens from Grande Prairie. I can . . .

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they don't need to fly a government airplane to Grande Prairie if all they're going to do is put out a press release.

Let's now ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs, formerly the Minister of Energy, how he feels about the situation, because he was on the plane back. If he were the Premier, would he think that it's okay for taxpayers to subsidize the PC Party this way, or would he recognize that this is wrong and pay the money back?

The Speaker: Hon. member, just be careful with questions that call for opinion. If someone wishes to respond from the bench on fact, that would be welcome, but no opinions, please. That's not in order.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked and answered. There was government business that week announcing hospital projects right across the province, using the plane to go to a local area so local citizens can be part of the excitement of announcements that happen in their community. When we go to party business, we charter planes, and we take government members to that party business on chartered planes that are chartered by the PC Party. It's been asked. It's been answered. It's clearly government business, and there is no reason for these hon. members . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Smith: The only way Grande Prairie residents would have been able to take part is if they went to the PC Party fundraiser that night, which means it was PC Party business, and they shouldn't have been using a government plane for it.

My question is to the associate minister of electricity, who was on the plane back from that fundraiser, too. She's the most junior minister in cabinet, but in a prior life she was an important oil company executive and a self-described expert on ethics. Does she have any reservations about the ethics of using taxpayer resources to help raise money for her political party, or has she, too, already been captured by the PC culture of entitlement?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked and answered. The hon. member can say all she wants about PC business, but PC business isn't the business of the House. We keep that separate. They should keep that separate as well. The ministers went for government business, and they flew there on government business. The plane was delayed for very, very legitimate reasons. That's been asked and answered. It's not in those people's hands to determine what our ethics are. This group of people has a very high standard of ethics on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: If there's no government announcement, they should not be using government planes. End of story.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Ms Smith: Yesterday I asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs if he would deal with the mess of the disaster recovery program by firing LandLink and creating a program that actually works. He answered by saying that when LandLink's contract comes to an end at the end of March, they will not be part of any future disaster recovery program. That's not as clear as I would like, so I'm going to ask the minister to clarify. Is LandLink completely done on March 31, or is he going to allow them to continue to revictimize flood victims for years by keeping these open files that drag on and on and on?

2:00

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, my answer stands from yesterday, and that answer is that LandLink will not be involved in any new DRP files going forward. The question that the member is asking: is LandLink involved in resolving outstanding files? The answer is that, yes, they are, and they're doing so with clear guidance from me to resolve them as quickly as possible, with the goal of having all residential DRP files resolved by the end of March – that's in three weeks; write it down – and it'll be there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. First sup.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. LandLink has been a man-made disaster for those who've had the bad luck to be struck by a natural disaster. Consider Sue Arlidge of Exshaw. Her home was severely flooded with silt by three different surges of creeks around Exshaw last June. Three different engineers' reports said that her house was structurally unfit. The MD of Bighorn issued her a demolition permit. Then the supposed experts at LandLink showed up and said that her house was fine, that it just needed repairs. Now that LandLink is gone, how can Sue Arlidge and all the others like her get their cases reviewed?

Mr. Hughes: Well, as this hon. member knows well, we're working very hard. Many good public servants and others are working very hard to ensure that the 10,500 applications to the disaster recovery program are addressed in a manner that is fair and that is as speedy as possible. I have in fact cleared away many of the administrative hurdles to ensure that these cases are dealt with in a timely fashion. We all have a great deal of empathy and sympathy, and I want to ensure that we are able to deliver to people at the earliest possible date a resolution to their files so they can move on with life.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, please.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has called it a $6 billion flood, but so far LandLink has flowed through only about $22 million to the hardest hit homeowners in High River. Nine months after the flood more than half of the disaster relief claimants in High River have not had their files dealt with. Only 1 in 5 applicants has received their final payments and had their files closed. Now the minister tells us that he's going to have everything resolved in three weeks, which LandLink couldn't do in nine months. Now that LandLink is gone, what is the minister's plan to clear this backlog?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, some would have us completely throw out the whole process and create chaos, but actually LandLink has an important administrative role in ensuring that these files are dealt with appropriately over time and closed. Some 2,200 payments as of last Friday have been made to individuals in High River. There has been substantial movement in the last hundred days, and I think people understand that this is a very difficult time for a lot of people, and we're here to try and help ensure that their cases get resolved. I am open to hearing from people who are concerned about their particular files, and I welcome, if the hon. member has any files, her bringing them forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals thank the men and women of the armed forces and all their families for their sacrifices to humanity and to this country.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we first had Donationgate. Then we had Travelgate. Now we have two in one, Donation-Travelgate. Yesterday we learned the Premier gave two of her ministers a free ride to Grande Prairie on Redforce One. Supposedly by sheer coincidence, there was some sort of drive-by hospital announcement outside the doors of the PC fundraiser. Okay. Let's pretend that's true. I still have a question. Why did you give five additional PC MLAs, who clearly were in town for the PC fundraiser, a free ride back home at taxpayers' expense on Redforce One?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's try to address the answer from the standpoint of government policy because, as you know, questions pertaining to political party fundraising are not on. So, please, I invite you to address this from that standpoint, and I'll ask future questioners to make sure that their question doesn't run into the foul territory.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that clarity. As the Deputy Premier has been saying, we do separate out the party business from the government business, and this is a clear case of that, actually. There was party transportation put on, paid for by the party, for any members who were not on government business. The members who were on the plane going up to Grande Prairie were on government business.

As to the policy, if you will, for the authorized use of the planes, that is at the discretion of the minister who authorized the plane. They can invite guests. They can invite family members. They can invite those people who are relevant to the duties that they're doing, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this is policy. The Finance minister alleges that they're on government business, supposing it's true. But then yesterday he talked about deadhead flights. Truer words were never spoken when he talked about deadheads.

Mr. Speaker, three things are clear. The five PC hitchhiker MLAs clearly got a free ride home from the PC Party fundraiser, these hitchhikers clearly had no business being on Redforce One, and finally Alberta taxpayers deserve to get their money back. To the Premier or Finance minister: when will the PC Party pay Albertans back for these free rides?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to honour the comment that the hon. member made about flights that are used to reposition aircraft when they've been used to travel from one place to another and they need to come back to base. If the flight is empty coming back to base, that's what the industry calls it. Airlines have the same issue. We try to limit those.

Out of the nearly 4,000 flights that are logged over the last two years, which is the time period that the hon. members have been talking about, we do try to minimize the number of deadhead flights. We try to minimize the number of times that the schedule conflicts. However, Mr. Speaker, the policy that we have for the flights is that the minister who charters the plane says who's on it.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister should really listen. The question was: will his party pay the taxpayers their money back or not for the five hitchhikers?

Mr. Speaker, Don Braid wrote a very interesting article in the Calgary Herald on March 10. In it he reported that the Premier at a caucus meeting prior to the budget had "already said she won't repay $45,000 [back] for her South Africa trip . . . because if she did, Wildrose would demand that the PCs repay everything." To the Premier: is what Mr. Braid wrote true? Are you refusing to pay back the $45,000 you wasted out of fear that other members of your caucus will be . . .

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is getting to the absurdity now where he starts to read the newspaper to find out what supposedly went on at a Conservative caucus meeting and then asks questions in the House as though that was relevant to government policy and policy for governing this province. It shouldn't even be dignified with an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition. First main set of questions.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For years this PC government has been accused of using taxpayers' money to subsidize their partisan activities, going back to the days of Premier Klein. Recently a number of PC MLAs and cabinet ministers took a flight to attend a partisan event. They include the Minister of Infrastructure, now Transportation; the Health minister; intergovernmental affairs; Energy, now Municipal Affairs; and the associate minister of electricity. My question is to the Finance minister. Given that this was a fundraising party for the PC Party, what makes you think that you can use a government aircraft as your designated driver?

The Speaker: Hon. member, from the standpoint of government policy, please.

I'm going to remind members of what's allowed and what's not allowed shortly, but go ahead.

Mr. Horner: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. In fact, for the party event, as I said, the party did put transportation on for government members who were not on government duty. The flight in question was for members who were on government duty. As I said before, the policy of the government – we do have a policy for the use of the air transportation service and the charter aircraft, which I have in my hands and which is readily available to many, many folks.

The authorization for category 1, 2, 3, 4 flights: I would actually say, Mr. Speaker, that one of the flights that was taken on that day was a category flight that is actually for emergencies, which was, as I said, to the incident in St. Paul, where we actually carried one of the hon. members of the opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it doesn't matter what new face you may want to put on the PCs' packaging. It's too far past the best-before date. The government issued a media advisory for just 45 minutes after the plane landed in Grande Prairie, and it's wheels up, back to Edmonton before 10 the next day. It arrived at 16:32 – that's close to 4:30 – and left again at approximately 10 o'clock at night. Can the Finance minister explain what crucial government business was done on this trip to the partisan Tory fundraiser?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there were a number of items that were scheduled to happen that day in Grande Prairie, and the flights were to leave earlier than they did. The cause for the delay was that the Minister of Infrastructure at the time was asked to attend at a tragedy of a car accident at a school. The flight that he was on was the one that delayed the flight coming back. Obviously, these are the scheduling challenges that we have with transportation services on an ongoing basis. As I said, close to 2,000 flights a year, and we try to limit the number of times that we have these kinds of delays and these kinds of issues.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the answer is that no government business was undertaken by any of the participants on that flight.

The entirety of this governing party deserves a share of the blame for this kind of behaviour. There were five cabinet ministers and three backbenchers on that flight. It's not just the Premier. It's the whole caucus. It's the whole cabinet. To the Finance minister: why is the sense of entitlement of this government and this PC caucus so strong that they believe that Albertans should pick up . . .

The Speaker: Time has elapsed. We need an answer. The Minister of Finance, please.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, today, as you most aptly pointed out, is the 13th anniversary of my entering this Chamber. I'm very proud of that service. I'm very proud of the fact that I have done and will continue to do service for the people, a passion for service, not a passion for politics, not a passion for ideology. We have a passion to serve Albertans. The things that are being brought up here today are trying to take Albertans' minds away from the very positive things that this government has done like a hospital in Grande Prairie, like a hospital in Edson, like building Alberta for the future. That's what Albertans want us to do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have a point of order that was raised sometime between 2:06 and 2:07 by the Government House Leader – I think it was during the time that the Liberal opposition leader was speaking – and we have a second point of order that was raised by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills at approximately 2:10 p.m. during the question being asked by the member from the New Democrat opposition, but it may go back to something just before that.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: While I'm on my feet, could I just take a moment to please remind all of you of a convention that I've reminded you of several times before, and I've just spotted it now. It's in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. It starts on page 502, and then it goes on to page 504. It says, "In summary, when recognized in Question Period, a Member should [not ask questions that] concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses." There's a reason why we don't allow questions like that in parliament – whether it's expenses or fundraising, it's all to do with party matters – and it's because it tends to create disorder. If you want to pursue those kinds of questions, write them or create them in terms of government policy. There's a clever way that you could all do that. Just be careful. I didn't rule anybody out of order. I let them all go. I'm just giving you a warning, okay?

Let us move on, then. No more preambles now, please, to supplementaries, and let's see how that's demonstrated with Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of flood-affected residents all over Alberta have yet to receive a single dollar in assistance from the DRP to address the devastation they suffered to their homes and businesses. For the last nine months it would appear the government has been held hostage by LandLink, the company they hired to manage the millions of taxpayer dollars used for disaster relief. Now, today the minister has suggested that all cases will be closed, all 10,500, by the end of March. How is the minister planning on dealing with appeals?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, allow me to clarify my comments earlier because the hon. member and his hon. leader have actually misled the House in terms of what I actually said. What I said was . . . [interjections] I perhaps have misstated my intention, and I apologize. I didn't mean to allege misleading. However, let me say that what I have said is that we expect 90 per cent of all the residential files to be resolved by or close to the end of March. Now, there are other files. There are files related to agricultural operations. There are files related to businesses. Those are going to take time to resolve as well.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alan and Joyce Hird of High River recently learned that the disaster relief program is prepared to assist them with only $10,000, which is $25,000 less than what they needed to cover the cost to remediate and repair their basement. Given that there are countless other cases where LandLink is failing Albertans, how is your ministry, Minister, going to resolve these failures in the next two and a half weeks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a helpful question. Actually, what's going to happen is that everybody who receives a settlement as of the last few weeks will also receive with that a letter which spells out exactly why they received the settlement.

There is an appeal process, and that's spelled out in the letter as well. I would encourage Albertans who feel that they have not been dealt with in an appropriate manner to pursue that appeal process and deal with that and also provide the evidence that they are worthy of greater support than what they will have received if they're not . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Endorsing and allowing a company that was never going to be able to capably manage a DRP program of this size, scale, and scope was a massive oversight. Minister, will you commit right here and right now not only to ensure that everyone who feels that they were wronged by LandLink will have a review process in place but also enlighten the House as to what we're doing moving forward from this point?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is, actually, a helpful take on the circumstance. Clearly, this was a model that was developed probably 20 years ago with the independent company providing this service. It's clearly not up to the needs of a disaster of this size. I have taken steps to ensure that the way in which a disaster recovery program is addressed in the future is much different. I welcome input from members on all sides of this House with respect to changes that might be taken into account in that DRP of the future.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order at approximately 2:15 p.m. I believe it was with regard to the word "misled." I think we heard the minister apologize, but we'll see where that might or might not go later.

Let's move on to Calgary-Currie, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Public Transit Funding

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given yesterday's funding announcement by the government for public transit in Edmonton, my constituents are curious as to what that means for the city of Calgary. Calgarians need to know that our provincial government is not playing favourites between Alberta's two largest cities. My question is to the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. Will Calgary be offered the same provincial public transit funding deal that was announced for Edmonton yesterday?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a good day for Edmonton's LRT yesterday and for Edmontonians, some government business. We're pleased in the throne speech and in the budget to extend our commitment to GreenTRIP as well as to talk about our commitments with the building Canada fund. The city of Edmonton had an allocation under GreenTRIP which was applied towards the LRT. The city of Calgary has an allocation under GreenTRIP. All municipalities in the province are eligible for the second round. We look forward to working with all of our municipalities on their number one priorities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Cusanelli: To the same minister: are these sorts of provincial public transit funding deals an anomaly, or is this a new way of doing business?

Mr. Horner: Do you know what, Mr. Speaker? We're looking for ways to do business with our municipalities that work for them and work for us and work for taxpayers. Yesterday's announcement was exactly one of those things. We look forward to doing that not only with the city of Calgary but with all of the municipalities in the province, the rural MDs, the urban and rural municipalities that are looking to do things that will help move citizens to and from their place of work using GreenTRIP funding, using building Canada funding. That's what building Alberta is all about.

Ms Cusanelli: We'd like to see other efforts currently being undertaken by the government that are going to provide long-term, stable public transit funding. Or is this just a one-off?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2014 saw a commitment of some $2 billion to municipalities. In fact, one of the augmentations was another $20 million through the Alberta community partnership, which is a fund for regional collaboration, which is what we all want to see. We want to see municipalities work together. We want to see that they build their communities together with their neighbours and that they serve the interests of their constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Premier's Former Staff Member's Employment

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ryan Barberio is the Premier's former executive assistant. After working in her office of Justice minister, he worked on her PC leadership campaign and then followed her into the Premier's office. He is now listed on the Alberta sunshine list as a senior manager in International and Intergovernmental Relations with a total compensation package of over $160,000 per year. Can the associate IIR minister assure Albertans that Mr. Barberio was awarded the senior position through an open job competition?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many people who work for this government who have talent and are good public servants. The purpose of the sunshine list isn't to open every one of our public servants to attack and question as to whether or not they went through an appropriate hiring process. [interjections] We go through appropriate hiring processes, we find and select good talent, we utilize people in appropriate places, and we move them to where they can do the most good for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not the employee's fault. I'm actually asking the minister.

Mr. Speaker, given the very senior nature of Mr. Barberio's position and given the magnitude of the files and issues IIR is currently dealing with, it's of utmost importance that we hire the most talented, experienced, and qualified individuals that we can for these jobs. Again to the associate minister of IIR: was Mr. Barberio hired to this senior managerial position through an open and fair job competition with other qualified applicants? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, before you speak.

Calgary-Buffalo, could I get you to just tone it down a bit. You might be on the list. I'll recognize you later but not now, please.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to hiring people who have talent, using those talents well, using those people in the most appropriate places. Again, the purpose of a sunshine list is not to expose each individual member of the public service to this type of critique. The assurance that this government can give is that when we hire people to do a job, we hire the best people we can find to do those jobs.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not about the individual. It's about the protocol. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, given that Mr. Barberio wouldn't be the Premier's first former office staffer to land on his feet with a senior high-paying government job, can the associate IIR minister immediately put to rest the notion that this $160,000 per year job was a post created specifically for Mr. Barberio after he left the Premier's office? [interjections] Table the job posting, please, Minister.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Before you respond, could I get Calgary-Fish Creek and the Minister of Finance and whoever else is on the front bench giving the bait or taking the bait to please stop. You can hardly hear the question being asked, but we can sure hear your conversation. Please, let's stop this across-the-bow stuff. Look up here if you have to, look somewhere else, find something to read, but don't take the bait, and whoever is giving it, don't give it.

Let's carry on. Who's answering? Deputy Premier, please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would much prefer to look at you when I answer the questions, and I will take your advice on that because it's very important that in this House we do focus on the important issues.

I can say to this hon. member and to all hon. members of the House that this government takes very, very seriously how we deploy personnel, whom we deploy in offices across the country and across the world on behalf of Albertans. Opening up new markets requires talent. We use that talent well, and we get the best talent we can.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Highway 19 Twinning

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The twinning of highway 19 between Nisku and the town of Devon has been an ongoing issue in my constituency for far too long. While my constituents wait for a definite decision on this project, the industrial traffic continues to increase, and the safety of my constituents continues to be a major concern. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Can the minister provide an update on his ministry's plans to twin highway 19?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. He is always advocating hard for his constituency. Highway 19 is an important route here in the capital region and for the province as a whole. We are committed to ensuring the safety of motorists and improving accessibility to this industrial hub. The twinning project is currently in the design stages.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how is the minister working with stakeholders such as the Edmonton International Airport authority and affected residents to develop this finalized plan?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, my department is working very closely with all interested stakeholders in finalizing this twinning design. In addition, Alberta Transportation and EIA have held a number of public open houses to keep residents apprised of the developments. We have also had direct contact with potentially affected landowners in the region.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. The minister mentioned some public open houses. Could he possibly elaborate on when and whether we'll see some more, if there'll be any more any time soon to update the public on this very, very important issue?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, it's too early to begin planning another public open house at this stage. We are committed to keeping local residents informed of new developments, and we will look at maybe organizing another public open house when we have more information to share.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Centre in place of Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Legal Services for Low-income Albertans

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Access to justice is a critical component of our Constitution and of Canadian culture, but in Alberta the government's funding for access to justice for low-income people has been steadily decreasing. As a result, our courts are faced to deal with an increasing number of unrepresented people because they simply can't afford a lawyer. My question to the Minister of Justice is: what was the reasoning for setting the cut-off level for legal aid so that people on assured income for the severely handicapped or even someone working full-time minimum wage would not qualify?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The cut-off for legal aid, as the member mentions, is actually set solely and completely by Legal Aid itself. It is an autonomous society. I do want to mention to this member that the province is proud to fund 83 per cent of the legal aid costs. The federal government only picks up about $10 million. I raised this issue in Whitehorse last year at our federal-provincial-territorial justice ministers' meeting, and we will continue to raise this issue.

Ms Blakeman: Nonetheless, the government does fund for this. You can't put it off on the feds.

Could the minister explain why a 19 per cent cut was made to the very services that provide civil mediation and law libraries, which is what these unrepresented people are supposed to use and where our AISH recipients and minimum-wage earners are supposed to be getting help. Why would you cut that?

Mr. Denis: The member is quite correct. We did privatize law library resources last year. We found that it was not a good use of taxpayers' dollars to continue funding that in the current model. I also would like to let this member know that we are very proud that as part of our 2012 operations, at the end of the year we had a $7 million surplus, and we gave it all to Legal Aid.

Ms Blakeman: Well, that's an encouraging sign. Maybe I can keep them doing it.

Back to the same minister: given that denying legal aid to people is making them go to court without representation and that's clogging up the courts and given that legal aid isn't even free – sometimes it has to be paid back and sometimes even up front – why is it that the minister is so keen to make it hard for low-income and sick Albertans to get good legal advice?

Mr. Denis: Again, as I mentioned to this member, Mr. Speaker, we fund 83 per cent of the costs of legal aid. The federal government over the last 10 years, under two different administrations, has been gradually decreasing their share of this amount. The previous Minister of Justice and I have had this discussion, and we will continue to encourage the federal government to match where we are at with respect to the strong commitment to legal aid and access to justice that this government has.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, curriculum sets out the basic learning objectives for children in our province. In the past the curriculum for Alberta's students has been designed by teachers, parents, school boards, and experts. This time oil and gas companies have been awarded the title of stakeholders and key education partners, allowing them to shape what is taught in our schools. Alberta's NDP are in favour of children learning about Alberta and its natural resources, but allowing corporations to decide what kids learn in grade school is dead wrong. To the Minister of Education: why do you insist on opening the classroom door to corporate propaganda?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. Our curriculum is constantly upgraded in this province. The member has that right. What's different about this process is that we actually want to take it out to the community and let everyone who has a stake in education be a part of that dialogue. It's still going to be led by teachers. It's still going to be led by educators and those school boards. But we do want to hear from parents, we do want to hear from students, and we do want the First Nations and the Métis to have some input in this as well. We want to hear from the economy. We want to hear from the employers. Some of those are oil and gas companies. There's nothing wrong with oil and gas companies. They drive this province. I see that member over there doesn't mind cashing their cheques either.

Mr. Bilous: Deciding what they learn in kindergarten.

Mr. Speaker, given that oil and gas companies are partners across the board in every curriculum project, all four, from kindergarten all the way up to grade 12, while teachers are partners in only one, to the minister: will you tell Albertans why the oil and gas sector gets four times the influence of teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's not true. Teachers are involved in every one of these, and teachers are leading these. As a matter of fact, I've got educators and teachers and former teachers in my department that have thought up this process, and the ATA has been at the table for two years as part of developing this process, and so have Alberta school boards. Unfortunately, this hon. member left that little piece of it out.

There's no reason that we shouldn't hear from the economy and that we shouldn't hear from entrepreneurs if we want to develop entrepreneurs. That doesn't mean they're building the curriculum; that means they get some input, and our kids will have a more relevant education at the end of the day. These companies also have a really good perspective on how maybe we can interest kids in science and technology and engineering, some of the key areas that we need skilled people for.

Mr. Bilous: Read your own document, Minister. Teachers are not listed.

Mr. Speaker, given that this minister believes that he knows best – better than teachers, better than Albertans – and given the minister can't see the difference between teaching students about the oil and gas sector versus allowing the oil and gas sector to decide what students learn in our schools, to the minister: this is offensive to Albertans. What are you going to do to fix it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think the member completely misses the point. Once again, teachers are leading this. This isn't about oil and gas. This is about being relevant. It's about the economy. It's about entrepreneurialism. It's about making sure that our kids have the skills coming out of it to be employable. There's nothing wrong with working, I mean, or working for oil and gas. We can't all work for Greenpeace.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to listen to these folks, and it's important for them to bring ideas to the table, like I said, that might help our kids get interested in the sciences and get interested in engineering and technology. We're not going to apologize for trying to listen to the business community when we're trying . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-East.

School Construction

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to remind the House of two stories that we often tell our children. The first is about the boy who cried wolf. Remember that this boy ran around everywhere saying something was happening when it actually wasn't. It seems the government does the same thing with building Alberta. The second story is of Pinocchio. This young boy would mislead everyone he spoke to, and eventually his nose began to grow.

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Mrs. Towle: To the Minister of Infrastructure. The other day this House was told that even though the government has announced 50 schools, the government has no idea how much the schools will cost, how they'll be built, or how they'll be paid for. Which story can Albertans believe about this government, the boy who cried wolf or Pinocchio?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question reminds me of the story of the opposition, that always says: you should put the infrastructure that you're going to build on your website. They haven't got a single school listed on their website. We have several under construction now. We'll be building 50 new ones and 70 rehabilitated schools by 2016. We're actually building Alberta. We're putting in place the things that Albertans have asked us for, and we listened. The building Alberta plan under this Premier will provide the infrastructure that Albertans actually want.

Mrs. Towle: It looks like we're going with Pinocchio.

Given that the minister has announced the K to 8 school in Sylvan Lake and it takes three years to build a school and given that this community will actually have no idea when this government will keep its promise to Albertans, does this government honestly believe that it's responsible for them to announce schools they cannot build and cry wolf to communities who desperately need these schools?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I think what's important is what we do in this government. We listen to Albertans, we find out what they want in all communities, including Sylvan Lake, and that's what we're doing. We are working hard to get those schools delivered by 2016. The budget showed that what we have is a plan to get started during 2014-2015. As the contracts are done, more exact numbers will be in. Those folks would have us go to the contractors and say, "We've got this much money. How much do you want?" So they'd take it all. We are actually trying to get Albertans a good deal. They can't seem to get that through their heads.

Mrs. Towle: Doo-doo: finally some language I can agree with the minister on.

Given that a full year after announcing a new school in Blackfalds, there are still no shovels in the ground, and given that the K to 8 school in Sylvan Lake was just announced, Minister, can you give a date when Sylvan Lake can expect more than a shovel in the ground, or will you be making this promise as part of your election campaign for Premier? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. minister, we're anxious for your answer.

Mr. McIver: You know what? Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member may be jealous of the Member for Airdrie, whom we've seen a picture of posing with a shovel in the ground for the schools there, and I recognize that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake wants to be there, too. You know why? Because she's excited also about the building Alberta plan. We're all excited about it. She should just watch and see us put it in place because under this Premier and this government we're going to make it happen.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, your point of order was noted at approximately 2:33 p.m. during the first question from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Let us move on. Calgary-East, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Postsecondary Education Affordability

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. During a recent meeting with the Council of Alberta University Students they expressed concerns regarding costs to the postsecondary students. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-East actually has the floor.

Mr. Amery: Thank you. Many students would like to attend postsecondary schools, Mr. Speaker, but the cost is increasingly becoming a burden. Alberta currently has the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the country, a rate of 17 per cent. My question is to the hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. What is the minister doing to ensure that all qualified and interested students have an equal opportunity to attend an Alberta postsecondary institution?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring access to education is one of the pillars of Campus Alberta. We want to make sure that every Albertan has an opportunity to advance their education, and we want to ensure that cost is not a barrier to any student's getting an education. It's one of the reasons we've created 2,000 new student spaces in the 2014 budget. We're very proud of the education system we have. Our trades system, for example, educates 22 per cent of the trades graduates in this country every year. We have one of the most generous scholarship and financial support programs in the entire country. In this year's budget: $490 million for student loans, $74 million for scholarships, $69 million in grants.

The Speaker: Thank you. The time has elapsed.

Let us hear the first supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the minister doing to regulate noninstructional fees, which are becoming a burden on the students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Noninstructional fees are fees that have been charged by some of the postsecondaries across the province in the last few years. What we've undertaken with students and with the postsecondary institutions is to do a complete review of the funding model and a review of the tuition and other fees charged. That will be pursued this year. Students will have a voice at the table in those reviews, and we will come out with a funding model which works to ensure that Albertans have access to education and a tuition and fees policy which works to ensure, with our student loans and finance process, that finances are not a barrier to education.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister and his department consider adopting an open textbook policy to allow students to use textbooks through an open-source framework similar to what's being done in B.C.?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very excited about digital access to online resources. When I held this portfolio before, we started, you might recall, the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library. Adding more resources to that library and adding more access for Albertans to that library are extremely important objectives.

Open textbooks is a great concept. It's been pioneered in other jurisdictions. We're looking to what B.C. is doing. We're working very hard on that. I'd ask the hon. member and others in this House to keep their ears open very soon for progress in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Travel Alberta Executive Expenses

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] We all remember David Dingwall and his famous quote: I'm entitled to my entitlements. We get the feeling that it could be the next election theme for the PC Party and this minister of the tourism. Presumably, before every disclosure period the minister would review disclosures of their senior bureaucrats. So why did the minister accept a $99 claim, $150 tuxedo rental, amongst other dubious claims? Or did he just not do his job?

Dr. Starke: Nice tux.

Mr. Speaker, as tourism minister – not “minister of the tourism” but Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation – I'm very proud of our tourism industry in this province. I'm proud to be able to promote this province around the world, nationally, and around our province. Travel Alberta has an integral part to play in that, but that being said, they have to play by the rules. That's why I've instructed a full review of Travel Alberta's expenses. That review will be undertaken, and those results will be in my hands very quickly.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's 130 bucks. I paid for it myself. [interjections]

Given that my constituency of Drumheller-Stettler receives large numbers of tourists every year and that we therefore expect nothing but the best from Travel Alberta, is it any wonder that we are upset that the PC government allows $1,800 dinners with $300 alcohol tabs for internal strategy meetings? Or is that just the way this PC government does business?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to confess that I had a difficult time hearing most of that question. Perhaps the tux is a little tight, and he is not able to project well today.

But I will say, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, that Travel Alberta will be conducting a full, thorough, independent, third-party review of all expenses. I expect that when the results of that come to light, we will determine whether there, in fact, are any inappropriate expenses, and those expenses will be fully reconciled.

Mr. Strankman: A $99 steak kind of makes it fit a little tight. [interjections]

Does the minister think it is economical for Travel Alberta to have a $1,000 dinner at a Canmore resort, including the driver, the $99 steak, for a board meeting, or is that just another part of the PC government's entitlements?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite really proves that if you're going to try to be impo'tant, you dress impo'tant. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to promote Alberta as a tourism destination.

The Speaker: You know, it's Wednesday, not Thursday, so could we please restore some civility and decorum here and listen to the final answer?

You have a couple of seconds left, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we're going to conduct a full, independent review. I'm very proud of the work that Travel Alberta does. It's an award-winning organization, and I think everybody should know that Travel Alberta promotes Alberta as a world-class tourism destination, and that's what it will always be.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe I heard the bell amongst all the din, and that means that the time for question period has expired.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

MacEwan University

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to call attention to the continued success of one of our postsecondary institutions located just down the street from the Legislature. MacEwan University is named after a great Albertan, former Lieutenant Governor Grant MacEwan. Founded in 1971, MacEwan has gone from a local community college to an impressive university with more than 13,000 students.

Mr. Speaker, our government places a high value on a postsecondary education, and today this government announced that it's helping MacEwan University to take the next step in its continued growth. Through the building Alberta plan we will invest $30 million over the next three years to help build the centre for arts and culture, a new academic building that is the missing link in the university's dream for a single, sustainable downtown campus. Construction will begin this summer. The five-storey academic and performing arts centre opens in the fall of 2017.

Mr. Speaker, this project puts students first by helping MacEwan University consolidate its operation at one downtown campus. All students will have improved access to recreation facilities, MacEwan sports teams, libraries, counsellors, faculty, and improved amenities. In the future MacEwan University expects more than 17,000 students, and this single, sustainable campus will help make this a reality.

After yesterday's exciting LRT announcement I am very thrilled that students from my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods will take the LRT to go to this amazing addition to MacEwan University.

MacEwan University has an important role in Campus Alberta, and our government is acting to ensure that this institution can continue to grow and serve Albertans today and into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Medicine Hat.

Education System

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, I'm about to end my 23-year experience with public education in Alberta. No, it's not that I haven't been able to master my basic math skills. This June my third child will graduate grade 12.

Education matters, and the education system that is available for all Albertans is among the best in the world. Educators from many countries come here to learn from and copy the practices outlined in Inspiring Education. Alberta high school graduates are Rhodes Scholars. They are inventors. They are entrepreneurs. They are creative thinkers. They are the ones providing services, goods, and innovation so that this province can continue to grow and prosper.

Mr. Speaker, the content, delivery, and format of education is constantly evolving. The work being done with curriculum redesign will improve content to ensure that superior numeracy and literacy become the central focus of classroom activity in new and more intuitive ways.

At the age of 25 one of my children had a bachelor of science and a master's in public policy, another at 22 had obtained a mechanical engineering degree, and the youngest has received early acceptance to the two universities of his choice. All three children were educated in the public system here in Alberta. It is a credit that they and their classmates and their friends are equipped for success to move forward.

Education in Alberta is delivered by passionate, caring teachers and principals as well as by supportive parents and community partners. It is an evolving service that we can be proud of, but evolution requires change. I don't know about you guys; I never did master the slide rule, and I'm glad I didn't have to help my kids learn how to use that one.

We can't let changing times outpace us, and this is why re-design is both necessary and healthy. We will continue to ensure that we hold ourselves to a high standard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government is quick to brag about making promises, but all too often we see them break them and then tell us they never made them in the first place.

Last year the Premier promised to increase postsecondary funding. Instead, she cut funding without warning and without remorse. We should always be working to find efficiencies, but you don't find a better system by placing students and institutions in a chokehold.

The government is now touting an increase in funding for more spaces for Alberta students in classrooms in response to the needs of the economy and our communities. I've heard from students that this is a good step forward. However, I would ask this PC government to bring in sustainable and predictable funding for students and institutions and eliminate politics when it comes to funding postsecondary education in our province.

One thing I'm sure the minister has learned by now – and if he hasn't, he will soon – is that when Alberta students are frustrated with the system, they don't torch cars, destroy stores, and shut down cities like we see elsewhere. They get together, have a discussion about ideas and solutions, and then provide these recommendations to the government. We saw this with the Ignite Report, which brought together students from nearly every postsecondary institution in the province. Students share that they are concerned about the cost and quality of education they are receiving, ensuring increased access for students to the institutions, and how unstable and unpredictable funding is hurting the foundations of advanced education.

As the minister is surely aware, mandatory noninstructional fees are also a huge concern for students, and they are an increased cost to their education. Students have shared with me that they have significant concerns with how these fees are determined and collected. The minister could address these concerns and consult with students and institutions to find a solution that works.

It's time for a sustainable and predictable funding model for Alberta's postsecondary students and institutions. We owe all Albertans at least that much.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: I have notification here of notices of motions. Hon. Member for Highlands-Norwood, you gave notice yesterday.

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We have one from Calgary-Shaw as well.

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) I would like to raise a question of privilege based on a response yesterday by the Minister of Health.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you have a report you wish to table?

Mr. Mason: Yes, in fact, I do. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail to the Premier sent by Robert Kroetsch, a registered nurse in the emergency department of the Grey Nuns hospital. In his e-mail he expresses his frustration with the Premier as well as that of many of his co-workers, asking, "Why is it when times get tough you want to cut my pension, cut my benefits and bully my right to fair and unobstructed bargaining?"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in a moment. Let's go on to Cardston-Taber-Warner first.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today and the requisite number of copies. The first is from an associate of mine from Raymond, Alberta, in my riding. He has written to me and expressed his concern to my assistant that he helped build classrooms during the flood situation in High River and that he and many other workers have not been paid. His attempts to get paid have been unsuccessful, unfortunately. He points out that "the government contracted the job to Wind River Developments, but it was sold to OZO who went bankrupt shortly thereafter." He feels "this all comes back to the government because they should be sure to hire companies that are credible." I have that to table.

Also, a hard-working farmer in my riding, Brian Hildebrand, shares some rambling thoughts, as he called them, indicating that seeing all of the things that he's been seeing on Facebook and social media and in the newspapers about the concerns with Premier, he just thought that he ought to point out the failings of this government, of which he feels the Premier's own behaviour is only "the tip of the iceberg." That's the second tabling that I have.

The third one is from Dale Stuart, who was watching the proceedings here in this Assembly. He's concerned about why power companies are allowed to gouge their customers and the inability of the opposition to get straight answers about it. That's the third tabling.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have two tablings today. For the first I'd like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards our office has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards, collected by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the U of A, are clear evidence the government is not listening to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary system that is affordable and accessible to all.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder, and it's in regard to the Edmonton Journal article that he referenced in his member's statement talking about pension plans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? None? Thank you.

We can now proceed to points of privilege and points of order. We have two points of privilege to hear today. Let's start with the first one from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who served notice of this yesterday.

Privilege Intimidation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in the House yesterday, I'm rising on a point of privilege in response to an answer given yesterday in question period by the Associate Minister of Electricity and Renewable Energy. Now, I am given to understand by the Deputy Government House Leader that there may be a clarification coming from the associate minister with respect to this matter. If that is still the case, then I would be prepared to significantly abbreviate my point of privilege, but I do feel it's important to get the main points on the record, in any event. If that is still the understanding from the government side, then I will do so and with your permission.

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's your point of privilege. Proceed as you wish. I'm prepared to hear it. If you want to get something on the record, now is your opportunity. I'm not aware of any deals or any discussions between caucuses.

Mr. Mason: No. It's not a deal, Mr. Speaker. A remedy has been suggested, so I'm going to shorten it.

I'm rising pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) to address comments made yesterday in the Assembly by the Associate Minister of Electricity and Renewable Energy. In Alberta Hansard, page 168, she said that "for us to offer opinions at this point in time actually compromises consumers, and I would remind this member, including all members of the opposition, that they can be called before the regulator to clarify their comments." Mr. Speaker, the concern is that that could be interpreted as a threat and was certainly intended to inhibit questions on this matter from the opposition. As such, I think it's a serious breach of the rights of the members of the Assembly.

Beauchesne's section 75 says, "The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member." House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 89, also states that freedom of speech is the first right of members. "By far, the most important right accorded to Members of the House is the exercise of freedom of speech in parliamentary proceedings." Further, the comments yesterday amount to a suggestion that a member or all members of the opposition should restrict their statements and questions in the House.

Beauchesne's section 69 confirms that it is not the inflammatory or offensive nature of comments that gives rise to a breach of privilege but, rather, whether they impinge on the ability of members to do their jobs properly. It is, I think, worthy of note.

The other citation I'd like to make is from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which states on page 93 that immunity from prosecution or civil liability for comments made is essential because it allows members "to make statements or allegations about outside bodies or persons, which that they may hesitate to make without the [question] of privilege." It goes on to say that "the freedom to make allegations which the Member genuinely believes at the time to be true, or at least worthy of investigation, is fundamental."

More to the point, it is very important to remember that Beauchesne's says at 89 that "no Member may be compelled to appear in court as a witness." So the associate minister in making the suggestion that we could be called before the regulator to explain our comments was perhaps not aware of the fact that we are protected by our privilege from having to testify before any regulatory body or any court.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on the point of making threats to members, Beauchesne's 93 says, "It is generally accepted that any threat, or attempt to influence the vote of, or actions of a Member, is a breach of privilege." The privilege to be free of obstruction, interference, intimidation, and molestation also flows from the same fundamental right to freedom of speech. A member cannot be impeded from doing the job of representing their constituents.

The ability of a member to speak freely is particularly important for opposition members, who have an additional duty above and beyond the duty to speak on behalf of their constituents. I am referring to the opposition's function of holding the government to account. This function requires that members have the ability to question the government about its business on behalf of Albertans. Question period is, therefore, one of the most important parts of parliamentary procedure. We think that the statements yesterday were threats to those important principles.

Erskine May uses a similar case as an example of a breach of privilege at page 262, where a member in the British House of Commons was threatened "with the possibility of a trial at some future time for a question [they] asked in the House."

There was a similar case in 1993, in Alberta Hansard at page 907, where the Speaker found no breach of privilege only because the member in question was challenged to repeat the questions in another form to see what would happen. Anyway, I don't think that's that important.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the minister's comments do indicate an attempt to threaten, intimidate, or suggest to opposition members that they may not ask questions about a certain matter under pain of being called before a regulatory hearing to explain their actions. It represents, in my view, a real attempt to limit the ability of opposition members to do their job in this place. As a result, unless there is some action on the part of the associate minister, then I would ask that you find a prima facie case of contempt of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I'm going to recognize the hon. associate minister responsible for electricity and renewable energy at this point. Maybe we can save some time. I'm just anticipating, based on your words, hon. leader of the ND opposition, what might occur. I don't know. But let's hear from her now.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have read and reread the Hansard records from yesterday and my response in particular to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. It was in response to allegations about an issue before the Alberta Utilities Commission, and I won't reread the comments. They've already been presented here. When I made the comments, I was thinking about the electricity regulator legislation, in particular the Alberta utilities act in section 19, which states that "the Commission may, when in its opinion the attendance of any person before the Commission is desirable, serve on the witness a notice requiring the witness's attendance before the Commission."

Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to act in any way that is not respectful of this Legislature or of fellow members. It was my intention to indicate that comments by members may trigger the AUC to call that member to a hearing in question. But, of course, you are correct that, based on legal jurisprudence, the AUC may well not be able to compel an MLA to a hearing.

I apologize for any offence. It was not intended, and I withdraw my comments to this member.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that automatically concludes the issue. A withdrawal and apology ends the matter.

We will now go on to the second point of privilege, from Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Please have a seat, hon. member. We're going to the second point of privilege because that first one . . .

Mr. Anglin: Well, there's a problem with . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, that concludes that matter. If you have something else to ask, it might be in order, but that concludes that matter. If you have anything else that you want to pursue, we have question period, and we have debate. We have a number of other avenues. You can send me a nice letter if you like.

Let's go on to Calgary-Shaw now and have the second point of privilege raised. Calgary-Shaw, please.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, can I please seek clarification?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've indicated already that that concludes the matter, and that's the only clarification that is required. So we will conclude that matter and move on now.

A third time I'm calling for the second point of privilege, or are you withdrawing it, Calgary-Shaw?

Privilege Misleading the House

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am rising in accordance with Standing Order 15(2) to raise a point of privilege; namely, that yesterday, March 11, 2014, the Minister of Health interfered with the ability of members of this House to fulfill their duties when he stated that a trip to Grande Prairie on October 25, 2012, was for the purpose of making an announcement related to the expansion of the Grande Prairie hospital.

I would like to refer you to the Hansard from yesterday in question period, where the minister, in answering a question posed by the Leader of the Official Opposition, said:

Well, Mr. Speaker, I was one of the cabinet ministers that was present with the Premier in Grande Prairie at that time. We made an announcement, as the hon. members should know, with respect to the expansion of the Grande Prairie hospital. The announcement specifically talked about the progress on the construction of the hospital, an update on the total cost for that facility. This is one example of the important government business that we do using the aircraft that are funded by the taxpayers of this province.

Circumstances indicate that several government ministers did use a government plane to travel to Grande Prairie, and there was a press release the same day. But the government ministers did not take part in the announcement. Therefore, this was not only an example of the misuse of taxpayer resources, but the Minister of Health intentionally misled the House by referring to the hospital announcement, knowing that neither he nor the other ministers present attended any such announcement. Because of this, I believe that the minister has interfered in the ability of members to fulfill their duties.

First, I would like to mention that notice of this point of privilege was raised at the earliest opportunity since the response of the minister was made in the House yesterday. Notice of the point was delivered to the Speaker's office this morning according to the rules laid out in Standing Order 15(2).

To establish there has been an intentional and grave point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, there is a test required. Looking at House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 86, it explains there are three elements to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt by reason of a statement that the member has made. First, the statement must in fact have been misleading; secondly, it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time that the statement the member was making was incorrect; and third, in making it, the member must have intended to mislead the House.

Now, here are the facts as we understand them, Mr. Speaker. We have not found a government media advisory for October 25, 2012, related to this announcement. A reporter who is on the distribution list to receive media advisories and who was in Grande Prairie at the time has stated that he did not receive a media advisory that day. Neither the Premier nor the Minister of Health was listed on the Order Paper as a ministerial absence. This means they had no prior intention of leaving Edmonton until after question period, around 3 p.m., that day. This is not consistent with a cancelled government hospital announcement.

The government plane left Edmonton at 3:40 p.m. on October 25. The news release related to the Grande Prairie hospital expansion was sent out at 4:02 p.m., while the plane was in the air. The plane carrying the Premier and the Minister of Health landed at 4:32 p.m. The PC Party scheduled a press conference for 5:20 p.m. later that day. A party media availability does not constitute government business. The formal program followed at 7 p.m.

The Minister of Health, reading from a piece of paper that looked prepared as if in anticipation of this very question, stated in the House yesterday, March 11, 2014, that an announcement in Grande Prairie was “important government business” and required the use of the government plane. Well, a report emerged from the Canadian Press reporter later yesterday that the government acknowledged the event did not take place but was cancelled because of the St. Paul tragedy earlier in the day. Now, this claim does not hold up in the fact that no media notices were sent out.

It seems clear, Mr. Speaker, that this is a prima facie case of privilege. First, we must establish whether or not the statement was misleading. In this case, the circumstances indicate there was no government announcement even planned for the expansion of the Grande Prairie hospital. The minister’s statement that the announcement was an example of government business is misleading because no such announcement actually took place, nor is there evidence that one was ever scheduled. A press release does not constitute a press conference, and a media release does not constitute a government announcement.

Second, the minister had to have known that the statement he was making was misleading. It’s clear that the minister knew that he was making a misleading statement. In his answer yesterday, recorded in Hansard, the minister answered the initial question asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition without hesitation and reading out of his binder. Obviously, the minister had already been briefed on the events of October 25, 2012, but he himself should know that he would have not been at any such announcement. It isn’t conceivable that he recalled the events of this day one and a half years ago without being reminded recently of the chronology. So given that the minister had been briefed on the events of October 25, 2012, and had answered the question with no hesitation, he knew that the statement he was making was misleading. He was trying to pass off a PC Party press conference as government business.

Third, the member must have intended to mislead the House. Knowing that the announcement made that evening was part of a party event and knowing that the government plane was used to fly him and the Premier to this event and other ministers home to Calgary and Edmonton from the event, the minister answered the question in a way that was meant to imply that his use of the plane was strictly for government business and that the timing of the flight just fortunately aligned with a planned party fundraiser.

We understand that exactness in every answer is not a requirement in this House, and for that reason a member can speak and later correct his or her statement if it later turns out to be false. But this case is different, Mr. Speaker, and shows a clear intent to mislead the members of the Assembly and subsequently to obstruct other members as they try to clearly understand the actions of this government. Further, the minister again today defended such decisions, such language, and I would argue that perhaps he should reconsider that as well.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to find this minister in breach of privilege in this case.

Thank you.

The Speaker: No one else?

Let’s go, then, to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member had politely stated what exactly the test is out of House of Commons Procedure and Practice – and I thank him for that – and the government also takes no issue with respect to the time which he’d taken here. It was quick. But as far as the test, with no disrespect to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, he’s failed in all three instances.

Mr. Speaker, on the morning of October 25, 2012, the government got word that a serious accident had happened in a school in St. Paul. The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti was scheduled to be in Grande Prairie in the mid-afternoon to make the official announcement of the new Grande Prairie hospital with the Minister of Health. This event was part of the five big hospital announcements that had been planned for weeks. After speaking to school board officials in St. Paul, it was determined that the Minister of Education and the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti would go to the school. In fact, they even brought the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on the government plane to St. Paul that day since the tragic accident happened in his constituency, and that member later praised both ministers publicly for their support during that time, and we thank him for the same.

As a result of these events, plans had to change. The minister had to leave Edmonton with the Premier and with the Minister of Health around 1:30, but the flight was pushed back so that they could wait for the Minister of Education and the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to return to Edmonton. Because the incident was at the school, Mr. Speaker, the event up north had to be pushed back and realigned, and thus the announcement happened very close to the time frame of the partisan dinner that was mentioned earlier. The Minister of Finance mentioned earlier as well that there, in fact, was a party plane that went up for people there that did not have any party business.

So my first statement to you, Mr. Speaker, is that this fails the test. In fact, it was not a misleading statement. Second, on top of that, there has been no evidence tendered to indicate that the Minister of Health had some sort of positive intention, that he knew it was false, or, again, evidence that the Minister of Health planned to mislead.

I do wish to mention to you that the member’s statement that there was no media release is, unfortunately, incorrect, Mr. Speaker. I’m holding in my hand a media release, which I can table for you tomorrow, from October 25, 2012, indicating – this is the title – New Grande Prairie Regional Hospital Means Improved Access to Emergency Services, Surgery and Cancer Care. The next day there was a story about this by Keith Gerein of the Edmonton Journal, Friday, October 26, and there was also another story from the Daily Herald-Tribune, by a gentleman named Graeme Bruce, saying: New Hospital Gets Name Change, Budget Increase. To me, this is very, very rank-and-file government business, and as we all know, this business that we're involved in, opposition or government, can change on a dime. It's very difficult to actually go and plan on a day-to-day basis.

I wanted also to mention a couple of items in Beauchesne's that I have found. First off, I refer you, sir, to Beauchesne's 117(2), which indicates that "the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question . . ." – and I go ahead – "and does not extend to deciding the question of substance." So that limit is what the precedent had to say.

But, more interestingly, Mr. Speaker, I refer you also to Beauchesne's 31(1), which deals with points of privilege. It states, "A dispute . . . between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege." So to state that there is a point of privilege here is simply a misconception, and I hope that I can get this member over to my way of thinking.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Strathcona, you indicated a request to speak.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. The authorities have been reviewed very clearly. The question becomes, essentially: was the statement made by the member misleading, did the member know it was misleading, and did he intend to make it in a context that would as a result be misleading the House?

What is clear to me is that, in fact, there is not actually a dispute over the facts. I think it's very clear that there is consensus on the facts. There was not an in-person announcement in Grande Prairie that can be characterized as government business in Grande Prairie. There was a press release, that I suspect went out from Edmonton, that coincided with the plane being in mid-air, but that is not a government announcement in Grande Prairie. Both the member from the Official Opposition as well as the Minister of Justice have essentially just recounted the same facts, that there was, in fact, no government business, no announcement that took place in Grande Prairie.

Unfortunately, yesterday the Minister of Health clearly stated that the plane went up to Grande Prairie because there was government business in Grande Prairie. So on the face of it we have evidence of a statement that was clearly misleading. One has to assume that the minister understands his schedule and was briefed, so he understood that it was misleading. In saying it in the House, we have to assume that he intended to mislead the House. If he had said it outside of the House, then perhaps he wasn't intending to mislead the House. But in answer to a direct question by the Official Opposition leader we have to assume that it was intended to mislead.

Obviously, in the absence of that government business in Grande Prairie, what we did have was an outcome that taxpayer-funded dollars were spent to get a bunch of people up to Grande Prairie at a time when there was no government business but there did happen to be other business that had no business being funded by taxpayer dollars. That is completely and appropriately within the correct confines of the questioning that should occur in this House: whether or not we are responsibly dispensing taxpayer dollars.

So the question was correct. The answer was unfortunately not accurate, and we have to assume that the minister was aware of that at the time. Then it appropriately raises the question of whether those dollars were appropriately expended and whether or not they ought to have been paid back. But that's another issue.

Thank you for allowing me, Mr. Speaker, to contribute to this debate.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Are there others?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, just briefly, as I don't want to drag this out. I'm not a lawyer, and I feel like I'm on trial here. You can say what you want, you can call me a liar, but I was at the news conference with a whole roomful of media people. I can probably name some, but going back two years they may not remember. I can guarantee you there was a media announcement there that day with the Premier and with the minister, and I can stand up in here as an eyewitness and confirm that. You can call me a liar if you like. I was there.

Mr. Anderson: I think that, clearly, what was stated in the back and forth was that there was a government announcement – a government announcement – for the new hospital. What this member was just referring to was the pre PC Party fundraising scrum that they do, that took place at the PC event. That is not a government announcement. You need to try to understand that because it really is – the mix between government and party here is very, very clear. There is a terrible mix here. You cannot say that you were at a government announcement when it was the PC Party event, so please take that into consideration.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I'll hear one final comment and hear from the minister who is at the heart of this matter, and that is the Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will be as brief as possible, and I appreciate your indulgence. I'm quite frankly shocked at the allegation that's been levelled at me by the member that brought forward this point of privilege. It's obviously his right to do so, and it will be your judgment that prevails in the end.

You know, a number of facts have been presented around the circumstances of that particular day, and I think those have been well explained. I think what I find the most disturbing and perhaps the most offensive here is the allegation by two members that I intentionally misled this House. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I certainly did not mean to mislead the House in any way. We have provided and we can table documents that substantiate both a government news release that was issued that day as well as some of the local media coverage that was provided.

I think that, as my hon. colleague the Minister of Justice has commented, there was a planned series of announcements that week across the province, beginning in Medicine Hat and Lethbridge on October 18, moving to Grande Prairie, and then concluding in the communities of Hinton and High Prairie and Edson on the following Saturday. Over the course of that week, Mr. Speaker, as you may recall, this government announced literally hundreds of millions of dollars of investment in expansion and renovation in some very key hospitals across the province.

The comments that were made in Grande Prairie were part of that communication strategy around hospital infrastructure. I certainly stand by the statement I made in the House yesterday. While I certainly acknowledge that other members in the House, members opposite, may wish to raise a dispute with respect to use of government aircraft – and that’s certainly their right to do so – I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that they have either proven nor should they have the right to question my intent and my integrity and to suggest that I have misled the House in order to further that cause, which is an entirely different matter.

So I’ll repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I certainly did in no way intend to mislead the House in the answer that I gave yesterday afternoon. It was an honest answer to the question. The facts and the circumstances that have been explained here I think provide further context to that, and I would certainly respectfully ask you to take these facts into consideration in your ruling.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

The deputy House leader for the Official Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Shaw, has made a very serious statement and comment; in his words, a point of privilege against the Minister of Health regarding some comments that the minister made yesterday. It pertains to an exchange in this House yesterday dealing with an announcement or not, dealing with a government airplane, dealing with matters related to that particular event that occurred sometime in October. I think October 25 was the date referenced by several members.

We’ve heard now from six different people on this matter, and I listened very carefully. Just so you know, I took my notes as always. I want to begin by saying that the Member for Calgary-Shaw did provide notice in accordance with our rules, and at 10:33 this morning he met the requirements of Standing Order 15(2) with respect to giving at least two hours’ notice before the start of the afternoon proceedings.

I hope not to take up too much time on this matter, but when an allegation is made that someone has misled the House and in particular intentionally misled the House, which I believe is what the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw has said on at least one if not two or three different occasions, that really catches my attention. The reason it does, hon. members, is because frequently we’ll find that one member sees an event or an activity or a statement one way, hears it one way, and another members hears it and interprets it in a different way. So you could argue: well, somebody misled. But it couldn’t be argued that you deliberately misled or that you intentionally misled, could it? You’ve all been on the receiving end of that or on the giving end of it in your own private lives, and it’s no different in here.

Nonetheless, I want to remind you of a couple of things before I rule on this. One is that I have reminded members many times about allegations that you make in this House about this fact, or not a fact, of misleading the Assembly: quite often it’s really a disagreement on facts or a matter of interpretation, as I’ve said. Please be reminded what the Speaker’s role is in the House in general and particularly during question period. It’s set out in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and it states the following: “The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions.”

Of course, someone else referred to it, and I want to refer to it again. In Beauchesne, second edition, paragraph 494 – and I’ve referred to this many times before – it states that the chair often has to accept “two contradictory accounts of the same incident.”

Now, if the member who raised the point of privilege is alleging that the minister deliberately misled the Assembly, then that indeed is a very, very high bar and is almost never made out according to the many rulings that you will have researched as part of your preparation for this point of privilege. In order to constitute a contempt and to conclude that a member deliberately misled the Assembly, three elements must be met, and members have referred to this in their own words. First, the statement must in fact have been misleading; secondly, it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect; and three, in making such a statement, the member must have intended to mislead the House. I think the Member for Calgary-Shaw tried very hard to do that. He tried to prove his case, as it were. Of course, the case was then argued by three members from the Executive Council to the contrary. Again, we have this contradiction of what people perceive to have been the facts.

Nonetheless, the authorities for this particular test were outlined by me in this House before; in particular, I outlined them on December 3, 2012, when I made a ruling, that you can find at pages 1206 and 1207 of Alberta Hansard for that day. I’m not going to take the time of the House to repeat them. But I think it is clear that the wording of this particular purported point of privilege isn’t so much a point of privilege even if it was worded somehow else. It could certainly meet the test of having been a point of order, in which case we would have had a clarification not unlike what we just heard, but I cannot see where this, at the moment at least, constitutes a question of privilege.

I did listen very carefully and attentively to everyone who spoke. I have my notes to back this up. I know that there were explanations given about a tragedy that occurred on that day and that that tragedy then led to certain other circumstances having to unfold, certain changes in schedules. I listened carefully when Airdrie mentioned the issue about the location of where a purported or de facto press conference or media conference or whatever you want to call it may or may not have occurred. Other than the fact that there was a tragedy that day, I think it is still, nonetheless, a fair point to remind government about the choice of locations for some of the announcements. It’s clear from what I’ve heard that there may not have been a choice in this one if, in fact, what Airdrie said is true, and I don’t know that. It may come up again later in this session. I’m not sure. But let’s be reminded that there are circumstances that occur in our lives that are, generally speaking, beyond our control. As such, we must accept that the members who spoke, spoke, I hope, with honour and with their own conviction and their own belief.

In this case I do not find there to be a prima facie case that would constitute a point of privilege. So that will conclude this matter today.

Let us move on to points of order, please. We have, I think, four points of order to be heard. The first one, actually, was raised by the hon. Government House Leader, who rose on a point of order against the leader of the Liberal opposition. He has since sent me a note saying that he will withdraw his point of order. So point of order 1 is officially withdrawn by the issuer, and that concludes that matter.

Point of order 2 was raised, I believe, by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. It was raised in response to something that the Minister of Finance had said. That was during a comment that was being delivered at that moment by the leader of the ND opposition, but I don’t think it was in reference to what the ND leader was saying.

I think I’ll allow some people an opportunity to clarify their positions in here. Whoever it was that raised the second point of order – I believe it was the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills – I’ll recognize you in just a moment so that you can state your citation and move on with it at this time.

The hon. member.

3:30

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and it is in regard to a comment made by the Minister of Finance and then previously, I believe, by the Minister of Education. This year there was an absolute tragedy that occurred in St. Paul. There was a vehicle that drove into a school, with horrific consequences. It was an absolute living nightmare. I was invited as an MLA to go with the Minister of Education along with the Minister of Infrastructure at the time, because it was important business, of course, but also an emergency. It was an emergency situation where we needed to determine the facts on the ground. The families in that incident suffered enough.

Now, during the debate the Minister of Finance used that tragedy as an excuse for using a government plane to go to a PC fundraiser, and I find it, frankly, appalling, disgusting, and reprehensible. Mr. Speaker, these families have suffered enough. For them to drag this issue into the papers is deplorable, and he should withdraw those comments. If there was any incident in terms of timing and so forth, they should have cancelled the flight to Grande Prairie if there was no announcement to be made. They shouldn't be using a tragedy. They shouldn't be bringing it up in here anymore. Withdraw the comment, sir, and let's just go on. Stop playing politics.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to clarify from the government's position, please.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member just did what he is accusing me of doing, and I find that reprehensible. I would suggest that if the Blues were to be reviewed, it would be discovered by this hon. member, if he'd pay attention in this House, that I was referencing the flights, the delay for the Grande Prairie flights, for the government business that was being done in Grande Prairie. I did not bring up the tragedy in a way that would have directed it to the parents, to the children, or to the school. It is – I'm not even going to go there. What is pitiful is that he actually stood on a point of order so that he could stand up and say that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the Blues here from today. In the Blues the Minister of Finance actually stood and said, among other things, in response to the first main question, I think, from the hon. leader of the ND, "I would actually say . . . that one of the flights that was taken on that day was a category flight that is actually for emergencies, which was, as I said, to the incident in St. Paul, where we actually carried one of the hon. members of the opposition."

My own view on this is that a courtesy was extended to you, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you accepted that courtesy, and I think it would behoove all of us to leave that matter as having been clarified and not pursue it any further. I don't see this as a point of order. I do see it as a point of clarification, although perhaps others here might have different versions of it. It seems like a sincere gesture, actually, on both parts. [interjections]

I don't like some of the language that was just used, and I don't like the bantering that's going across the bow right now either. There's just too much of that going on, gentlemen, ladies. Perhaps we could restrict ourselves more to the business of the House rather than any personal attacks or innuendos or whatever have you.

As such, that concludes that matter, and we'll move to point of order 3. I believe this was raised by Airdrie. Did he withdraw?

Mr. Wilson: On behalf of Airdrie I believe the minister clarified his comments, and ours was withdrawn.

The Speaker: That was my take on it as well. Point of order 3 is officially withdrawn. The statement has been clarified, apologized for, or withdrawn, as the case may be.

We can move on to point of order 4, which was the Minister of Justice on comments during the question by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The third point of order dealt with the use of the term "mislead." I refer you to Beauchesne 489, page 146. It indicates that "mislead" is a prohibited term. With respect, it does not matter at all whether this is used towards someone; this is a prohibited term. So I would just simply ask – of course, we just ask to be treated the same as any other party, and since that's been dealt with on our end, I just would ask the member to please withdraw that word.

The Speaker: The hon. deputy House leader for the opposition.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe there is no point of order here. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was simply referring to the story of Pinocchio, and it's pretty difficult to outline the story of Pinocchio without using words something along those lines. She did admittedly use the word "mislead," but I would ask the Speaker in his ruling to look at Beauchesne 486(1), for example. "It is impossible to lay down any specific rules in regard to injurious reflections uttered in debate against particular Members." Well, this was not a comment directed to any member. When the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was talking about the story of Pinocchio, she was not referring in any way, shape, or form to anyone on the government benches.

It also suggests that "much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking." Again, this was not directed at any individual member in this Assembly. It was used in a story. I would ask you to consider the Blues when you look at that if the Justice minister does not agree.

I would also ask you to consider Beauchesne 486(2), that says, "An expression which is deemed to be unparliamentary today does not necessarily have to be deemed unparliamentary next week." So it's pretty clear that this is no point of order, Mr. Speaker.

You know, I don't believe the hon. Justice minister even gave a citation in our standing orders on which he was rising, but I would ask that you just leave this matter as a point of clarification.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, let me say a couple of things here very briefly. I have the Blues here, and according to the Blues from today the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake stood at approximately 2:32 and in her question referred to two stories that we often tell our children. The first story was something to do with the boy who cried wolf, and the second story was to do with the young boy called Pinocchio. Then she said, "This young boy would mislead everyone he spoke to, and eventually his nose began to grow." At that point a point of order was raised. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake went on and then directed her question to a specific person. In fact, she directed her question to the Minister of Infrastructure and concluded by saying, “Which story can Albertans believe about this government, the boy who cried wolf or Pinocchio?”

So I would caution you of this convention as a reminder, which I’ve given you before. I won’t take the time to read the whole thing, but please be reminded that you should not attempt to do or infer indirectly what you are specifically disallowed to do directly. We all know the story of Pinocchio. It’s about the young boy who lied, and every time he lied his nose got longer and longer, and by reference to that story you’re implying that someone else might be lying. That is not on in this House; it shouldn’t be on in this House whatsoever.

I will simply say that there is perhaps a dispute about the facts or whatever you might have surrounding the question about building Alberta or whatever it was that was talked about. There is certainly no point of order deep enough for me to call anyone to order on, but I would call you to a reminder, and I would give you a caution about not trying to imply, directly or indirectly, things that otherwise would be out of order.

As such, that concludes this matter, and I think that concludes points of order, and we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 1

Savings Management Act

The Speaker: I believe the hon. President of Treasury Board has the floor now.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s nice to get to the business of the government. I am pleased to rise today on behalf of the hon. Premier to move third reading of Bill 1, the Savings Management Act.

Bill 1, as has been described, articulates a vision and a purpose for our savings, allowing them to grow while leveraging a portion of them to support Alberta’s long-term social and economic development. The proposed Savings Management Act will support innovation in the social services and cultural sectors, will help address Alberta’s demand for skilled labour by supporting apprentices, and will position Alberta to take advantage of future, once-in-a-generation strategic opportunities. Together the enhanced Alberta heritage scholarship fund, the social innovation endowments, the agriculture and food innovation endowments, and the Alberta future fund will help secure a brighter future for our province.

Rather than providing a rehashed summary of each fund, I would like to address three areas of concern that came up in debate: the social innovation endowment and its potential connection to social impact bonds, the Alberta future fund, and the heritage fund. In a broad sense the social innovation endowment will increase the capacity of the social services and cultural sectors to innovate, supporting new ideas, risk sharing, and creative collaboration within the nonprofit sector. The social innovation endowment will support new knowledge, prototyping, and the design and testing of new funding models and service delivery approaches that will improve outcomes for Albertans. In short, it’s about finding better ways of doing things, not just throwing more money at existing approaches.

Social impact bonds are just one of the many possible alternatives to traditional financing that may be considered. No decisions have been made regarding the use of social impact bonds or any other alternative funding model. Several funding models will be reviewed, with the focus on assessing the potential of each to improve social outcomes for Albertans. Countries like the U.S., U.K., and Australia have developed programs involving social financing as a way to achieve social outcomes. As part of Alberta’s own review of alternative funding models, the experiences of other jurisdictions are being carefully studied to see what lessons can be drawn from them.

With respect to the Alberta future fund there has been some concern expressed about its broad spending parameters. At this time the government does not have any specific uses in mind. The intent of the Alberta future fund is to support investments that are transformative in nature and provide long-term, ongoing benefits to Albertans and the Alberta economy. Because these kinds of opportunities may arise unexpectedly, it is important that the government have some flexible funds in place for this purpose. You can’t budget for these kinds of opportunities, but you can set aside money for them so you’re ready to act when the time comes. The Alberta future fund will be established as an account within the heritage fund, and that money will stay there and grow until the right opportunity comes along. If one doesn’t come along, the fund will keep growing. A resolution of the Legislature is needed before any money can be transferred from this fund, so there will be an opportunity to debate the merits of proposed disbursements from the fund.

The other thing that came up in debate that I would like to address is the concern about leveraging a portion of our savings in the heritage fund to establish these endowments and funds. The vision proposed by the Savings Management Act in many ways reflects the Lougheed government’s original vision for the Alberta heritage fund. When the heritage fund was established in 1976, the fund’s stated objectives were to save for the future, strengthen or diversify the economy, and improve the quality of life for Albertans.

Over the years the heritage fund has been used for a variety of purposes, including capital projects like parks and museums and hospitals. To this day it supports medical and scientific research and scholarships, and in more recent years net income from the fund has supported general government operations.

I think a lot of that anxiety around leveraging the heritage fund is rooted in the fear that our savings will not grow. They will. Apart from the legislative-authorized disbursements from the new accounts, the net income of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund will remain subject to the provisions of the Fiscal Management Act. The provisions require that by 2017-18 and in all subsequent years, 100 per cent of the heritage fund’s net income will be retained within the fund, and as set out in our legislated savings plan, we will set aside a portion of our nonrenewable resource revenue for savings right off the top, so the heritage fund and our total savings will continue to grow.

As I conclude my remarks, I go back to what I heard from Albertans. They want us to save, but they want to know what we’re saving for. In public forums like budget consultations and the economic summit last year many Albertans expressed support for using a portion of our savings for strategic, future-oriented investments. Bill 1 reflects this desire by defining and implementing a renewed vision and purpose for a portion of our savings. The targeted endowments and funds it creates will encourage innovation in agriculture and social services, support trades-focused education to address the demand for skilled labour, and position Alberta to capitalize on future strategic opportunities. I encourage members of this Assembly to join me in supporting this important future-oriented bill to create an even brighter future for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014

The Speaker: Is it Bill 2 or Bill 3 that you're going for?

Mr. Horner: You said 2?

The Speaker: Bill 2 was indicated. Do you wish to go there, hon. minister?

Mr. Horner: I'm ready to do whatever you wish, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you. It is my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 2, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014.

I now move to adjourn the debate on Bill 2.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3

Securities Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems to be my day.

I am pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 3, the Securities Amendment Act, 2014.

Bill 3 supports Canada's international commitments to reduce systemic risk and strengthen the regulation and oversight of over-the-counter derivatives. We've learned some important lessons from the 2008 financial crisis, and jurisdictions across Canada continue to make reform of securities regulation a priority.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo was quite correct in his assessment of the severity of the 2008 financial crisis and that a lack of regulation was a major factor in that event. That's why, following that crisis, the International Organization of Securities Commissions introduced several new principles relating to the reduction of systemic risk, and in tandem with that, the G20 made recommendations to improve the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives markets. Canada along with the rest of the G20 countries committed to strengthen the regulation of this type of investment, and provincial governments and regulators are putting harmonized rules into place for this type of instrument.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre expressed a lot of concerns about the derivatives market and stressed the importance of an international agreement on how we're going to deal with these instruments given the global nature of the market and the size of the companies involved. That's why new regulatory environments for over-the-counter derivatives are being implemented across the world with three core requirements: trading through a derivatives exchange or trading platform, clearing trades through central counterparties, and reporting of all derivatives transactions to a trade repository.

This will ensure a high level of co-operation and collaboration and information sharing between the regulators, which should result in better identification, management, and reduction of systemic risk. Better oversight and regulation is a plus, Mr. Speaker, and will lead to better markets for all. Alberta is the second-largest capital market in Canada, and for the last three years the World Bank has ranked Canada as one of the top five countries for protecting investors, ahead of the United States and the United Kingdom.

We want to build on that success, and that's why the government of Alberta and the Alberta Securities Commission are committed to continuous improvement of our highly regarded securities regulatory system. Bill 3 reflects that co-operative spirit and commitment. As the Member for Airdrie put it, this is a good example of how the Canadian system of provincial jurisdiction over securities regulation can work in the international marketplace.

I therefore move third reading and ask that all Members of the Legislative Assembly would support Bill 3 so the Alberta Securities Commission and securities regulators from other provinces can get on with their work of developing and implementing harmonized rules for the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:50 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 5

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments to be offered? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 5 just in general. I haven't had the opportunity to respond to the overall budget, and I'd like to just provide a few of those general comments before speaking directly to Bill 5.

Of course, prior to the election, Mr. Chair, the Premier stated: debt is the death of countless dreams; we can have all the infrastructure we need without going into debt. That was then; this is now. The new slogan that the Premier and her handlers are pushing is: debt is hope. Debt is hope.

Mr. Chair, I just find it quite alarming, the stark difference between an election period and then after an election period. We don't need to go into debt. We'll never go into debt. Now debt is hope. It must be coming from some of her well-paid staffers who came from Ontario. They're pushing this type of thing. I don't think it's a good signal to send to future generations.

Mr. Chair, the expectation now is that this PC government will go $21 billion into debt. Twenty-one billion dollars. That's $14 million a day. I don't think anyone who watched the Premier in the last election came to any conclusion that she along with her cabinet and her MLAs were going to plunge the province into that much debt.

I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that when I go to constituents and I go to the coffee shops and I do my town halls and I ask them, you know, "There is record revenue in this province, the highest revenues that we've ever had; should we have to go into debt?" they state singlehandedly or almost all the time, "No."

Mr. Chair, what is interesting is that combined with the debt that they're going into, they're also under Bill 1 creating a system of endowments, and what's quite interesting is that that promise to go to endowments actually came from the 2004 Liberal campaign, the provincial one, with Kevin Taft, and it was subsequently the Liberal campaign promise in 2008. So we know where the brain trust is with this current government. They're cherry-picking election promises right from the Liberal Party of Alberta platform.

Mr. Chair, this is the seventh consecutive deficit despite record revenues. I just cannot support plunging this province right into debt.

An Hon. Member: Is it a deficit?

Mr. Saskiw: You know, the question of whether or not it's a deficit is an interesting one. Because they have three separate books, because they're, you know, doing things with all these books, putting numbers here, there, and everywhere, a lot of Albertans – the Auditor General, in fact, has stated that it's very difficult to figure out whether it's a deficit or a surplus. But what we see if you look at the money coming in versus the money coming out: it's a massive, massive deficit.

Mr. Chair, going to Bill 5 itself, of course, because of this government's spending, there are appropriations and so forth that must take place. Again, I cannot stand by while this government states: debt is hope. I won't support the budget on this particular bill. I look forward to the debate and any possible amendments that go forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: No other comments or questions to be offered?

Okay. In that case, then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Am I to be adjourning this when I'm finished? Yes? Okay. I will do that.

Bill 5 is essentially the government's request to get some money before the budget passes, so it is, in essence, I guess, a pro rata allocation of the budget that we will be discussing over the course of the next month. Obviously, by voting in favour of this, we are essentially endorsing the budget that was introduced just a few days ago.

I know the leader of my party will soon be talking about what he thinks about that budget, but I felt that this was an opportunity as well for me to outline a few of the primary failings of this budget and to suggest why, then, we have some difficulty in supporting Bill 5, the effective allocation of funds into the future on the basis of this particular configuration. Of course, we want dollars to continue to flow, and we're always going to support dollars continuing to flow. However, we do need to note that the underlying assumptions on these dollars continuing to flow are problematic for us.

Now, I'm obviously not going to do a line-by-line discussion about that – we will have opportunity to do that later on in this session, when we have more discussion about the budget – but I did want to talk about a few things that I was concerned about based on what I've heard from people in my constituency as well as what I have heard about from stakeholders who are participating in the areas that I'm the critic for.

One of the things, of course, is the failure to completely restore the funding to postsecondary education that is part of this budget. We know that certain bits and pieces have been pulled together through sort of the reopening of the access to the future fund, and we know that there was an ever so slight increase, less than the cost of living in Alberta but an ever so slight increase. But when you put that together with the massive cuts last year, even notwithstanding the partial restoration partway through the year, we're still left in a situation where our postsecondary sector is struggling and where many critical components of our post-secondary sector have been rendered inaccessible to Alberta students. At a time when, you know, the government would argue that the economy is healthy and our budget is healthy, one questions why it is that we would be so miserly with the postsecondary system given that it is such an important vehicle for growing and expanding opportunity and prosperity for all Albertans, not just a select few but for all. So the failure to fully restore funding, to maintain the level of funding that was actually promised in the last election, is disappointing to me.

The other thing that is truly disappointing to me in this budget, of course, is the abject failure to address the issue of child poverty and the fact that it is combined with significant cuts to programs that would otherwise help to at least reduce or limit child poverty. We're cutting those programs at the same time that the government is claiming that they're concerned about child poverty, which is problematic for me and for many, many Albertans. It seems very hypocritical. Again, at a time when the government claims that the province is wealthy and prosperous and we have all these great opportunities and we're building Alberta, it seems that we're just building Alberta for people who can afford the entrance requirements and the entrance fee to the various and sundry buildings, but we're not really building Alberta for all Albertans, just a select few. So the failure to address the child poverty issue in this budget makes me concerned about endorsing the budget through supporting this bill, Bill 5.

The other thing that we didn't do in this budget was give adequate funding to our K to 12 education system. We know that our class sizes are growing, and we have a Minister of Education who claims: "Ah, well, class sizes. That's last year's concern. Class sizes have no impact on the quality of education." Well, you know, Mr. Chair, they do. By failing to keep up with population growth and with cost of living and inflation and by also failing to look at the change in the makeup of our student population, the increased pressures that come from our growing new Canadian population and the increased needs that they have to ensure that they have the same opportunities that our parents and grandparents did – those costs are also not reflected in the changes to the Education budget.

I'm also concerned about the fact that this government has contemplated significant increases in economic activity, particularly in the oil and gas sector, but we do not see an equivalent increase in the investments into protecting our air and our land and our water. If you assume for the moment that our efforts to protect our air and our land and our water for future generations are adequate – I would argue they are not – as business grows, as the applications grow, as the amount of industrial activity grows, so too should the investment in protecting the environment, yet it is staying static. That is, I think, a profound failure and a recipe for continuing the bad record and the ultimately economically negative outcomes that arise from our haphazard and negligent environmental policy. That is concerning.

Another thing that is concerning to me about this budget is the fact that, notwithstanding that everybody has talked about how they've made this offer and that offer at whatever table, what we do have is a piece of legislation that calls for wage freezes, and we also have a budget that presumes wage freezes for public-sector employees. We also have a budget that appears to support what we believe is coming with respect to pension reform, and we know that that is going to be extremely damaging to public-sector employees and to their families and ultimately to seniors in Alberta. Those are some of the main areas that I'm concerned about and that I hear about a lot in my community.

We are also concerned about the failure to fully restore funding to PDD, persons with developmental disabilities, as a result of the cuts that were made last year. You know, some of that funding was restored, but not all of it was restored. Once again, that assumes that everything was working just tickety-boo before the cuts were made, which, to be clear, Mr. Chair, was certainly not the case.

What needs to happen in order to ensure that we do invest in the prosperity of all Albertans, not just a select few, is that we need a budget that amends our revenue side, that looks at fair taxation instead of flat taxation, which simply benefits the very elite few. We need to review that. We need to review the fact that we have a royalty regime that collects less money than any other royalty regime in the world. We need to look at that side of the budget. We are structurally broken in terms of our revenue stream, and the consequence of that is the slow depreciation of the public services that Albertans rely on in order to provide growth, prosperity, and opportunity equally to all Albertans across the board.

With those comments in place, I just feel that I can't vote in favour of Bill 5 because it would appear to endorse a fundamentally broken monetary plan.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak on this.

Mr. Chair, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 5 in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, you wish to move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 5?

Mr. Campbell: Yeah. We move to rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, if you'll take your seats, please.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Having heard the report by the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

11. Mr. Horner moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to the speech of the Finance minister and President of Treasury Board on the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I expected more, and I think Albertans expected more. We all know that we live in an incredibly prosperous province. Not only do we have resource wealth, but we also have vibrant, diverse, and growing communities. The opportunities in Alberta are not limited. In fact, they are rich with possibility. In spite of all of this it's disturbing that these doors of possibility are not open to us all. For too many Albertans these doors are shut completely.

We are truly living in a tale of two Albertas. In one Alberta the opportunities are endless and the PC government works hard to open doors for their friends and supporters. It's the best of times to be a Conservative insider. In the other Alberta, where the majority of us live, it is the worst of times to be a middle-class family or to be in need of support and services this government exists to provide. At every turn this PC government has chosen to do what is in their own best interests instead of doing what it could to make the lives of ordinary Albertans just a little easier.

Budget 2014 is no different, so I say again: I expected more. Albertans deserve more. The latest budget is a prime example of how out of touch the government is. This government has continued its attack on everyday Alberta families while making sure the richest Albertans and corporations are well looked after. The budget abandons middle-class and vulnerable citizens. In this PC government the rich get richer. Budget 2014 includes $150 million of in-kind royalties, which should be paying us for our natural resources, not the other way around. The University of Alberta has specifically asked the minister to reinvest in their infrastructure maintenance program in order to avoid the catastrophic failure of some of their building systems. Instead, the budget allocates $8.6 million of postsecondary education to corporate subsidies to industry instead of to the institutions themselves.

While mired in expense controversy, the Premier's office's budget sees a $1-million increase. There's money in the budget to open three new international offices in Brazil, California, and China, which can only mean the creation of more plum and pricey patronage appointments for the PC government's friends. I might just point out, Mr. Speaker, that the capital of Brazil is Brasilia, the main business centre is Sao Paolo, and the main tourist mecca is Rio de Janeiro, and that's where the government is putting its business office. In California the state capital is Sacramento, and the main business centre, of course, is Los Angeles, but they're putting it in scenic San Francisco.

Meanwhile in this PC government's Alberta the middle class gets squeezed. There's no funding for full-day kindergarten, so parents are forced to pay more in child care costs. After threatening for a third time to change the seniors' drug benefit program and having his office occupied as a result, the Minister of Health promised to once again scrap the changes. But this year the program's budget was cut by $120 million. Despite a $147-million cut to postsecondary last year, this budget does not provide a sufficient reinvestment in postsecondary education. Our colleges and universities will remain inaccessible to too many students and will remain unnecessarily costly to everyone else. Of the more than a billion dollars the federal government just gave the province specifically for health care, only $600 million went directly to the health budget. The balance remains unaccounted for.

Mr. Speaker, this government simply can't be trusted. On February 26 the Minister of Finance gleefully announced that all the fearmongering around the bitumen bubble and the passing of Budget 2013, with a significant operational deficit, was for naught. Resource revenues were up, he said. An operational surplus was guaranteed, he said. So Albertans like myself dared hope that with the extra revenue coming in, Budget 2014 was finally the time when the PC government would help families and vulnerable citizens. Instead, they've been left behind yet again and will see tough times ahead.

Mr. Speaker, 400,000 Albertans live in poverty. They rely on government services and programs to survive and get the hand up that will take them out of the cycle of poverty. This government was elected on promises to support these vulnerable Albertans, but now, three budgets later, the PC government appears committed to the exact opposite. The government has clearly given up on their promise to eliminate child poverty by 2017 since there's still no strategy, no plan, and no money. Last year Albertans rallied at the Legislature week after week in opposition to enormous cuts to services for persons with developmental disabilities. Instead of learning their lesson, the government cut $20 million from the program in this budget.

Albertans believe in fairness and hard work. They also believe in accountability, transparency, and responsible spending. Poverty costs $7 billion a year in increased demands for public services. The most responsible and effective investment in poverty reduction that this government can make is in programs to help low-income families get out of poverty by developing job skills and furthering their education. But what has the government done instead, Mr. Speaker? They've cut up to 50 per cent from the budgets of these proven poverty reduction strategies. It's a shame.

In a fit of spin the government boastfully announced the creation of two new endowment funds in this budget. Now, it may be of some value, but it will also provide cover for the government repeating another conservative government's mistake. The U.K.-tested social impact bonds are a way of encouraging corporations to invest in social programming. Programs that met specific targets were deemed successful, and their investors were paid dividends. The PC government seized the idea of these bonds as the Holy Grail of divesting themselves of their responsibility to fund and provide effective social services. Funding will come from the incentivized private sector, and services will be provided by the eager not-for-profit sector. All the government has to do is sit back and watch.

Mr. Speaker, we can do much better, and we have to. After all, we know that the U.K. experiment has already failed. Putting a price tag on poverty alleviation and promising investors big returns guarantees that only the safe programs – that is, good investments – will be funded. Poverty and the people living in it thereby become a new stock to be traded, bought, and sold. It's disturbing on many levels. Albertans living in poverty do not have the time for the government to reinvent the wheel and try out hare-brained schemes that have failed elsewhere.

The government seems, Mr. Speaker, terribly proud of themselves for keeping their social services budget from expanding to meet the needs of inflation and population growth. How underfunding the needs of a growing province is worth bragging about I do not pretend to understand. It becomes clearer by the day and some days by the hour that this government does not understand the priorities of Albertans. Spending the equivalent of an average public servant's yearly salary on a weekend trip, spending a quarter of that yearly salary on a minister's office redecoration, spending an exorbitant amount of money on severances: that's not what Albertans want. That's not what they voted for. I don't think that Albertans will tolerate it much longer.

Albertans see rising debt and decreasing levels of service, and they are at best confused and at worse very angry. We are not concerned about borrowing funds to finance capital projects. It's the norm in municipal governments and in other provinces in this country. It stretches the financial responsibility to future generations who will benefit from the project. What we need to make sure we have, Mr. Speaker, is an adequate plan to repay that debt, funds set aside to make sure that that happens, and a cap on the total amount of capital debt that can be incurred. We have not seen any of those things so far.

It's fine to have more schools and modernizations, but school boards have pointed out that those are the schools that we needed yesterday. By the time these schools are built, we'll need another 50. What we're really concerned about is the lack of consultation in deciding infrastructure priorities. The Lethbridge public school board has had Galbraith elementary school at the top of their renovation list for nearly a decade, yet it remains untouched and unsupported by this government.

What we're concerned about is that the building Alberta plan seems to be a no-limit, all-you-can-eat buffet. There's no ceiling for the borrowing needed to complete the plan, and there's no plan to pay down the growing debt. But this government isn't really known as wise stewards of our collective resources. Day after day this government issues press releases claiming to have been elected to, quote, live within our means, yet their entitlement seems to know no bounds.

The 2014 budget lays the groundwork for more wage freezes for public-sector workers. Despite ongoing bargaining with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, and the United Nurses of Alberta, the government has not budgeted for moderate and reasonable changes to the contracts of public-sector workers. It's hard to bargain in good faith when the government has declared their position in the budget. Of course, given their track record, expecting this government to bargain in good faith with their own employees is just expecting too much.

Labour relations in this province are in serious trouble. Not only has the government's non-existent commitment to fair bargaining been called out by the courts, but this PC government also plans to undercut the retirement security of hundreds and thousands of Albertans. The public-sector pension plans are the foundation of nearly 300,000 Albertans' retirement savings. Without offering any clear evidence, this PC government is breaking the promise they made to generations of public employees in claiming a looming crisis for the pension funds, yet financial experts agree that Alberta's public pension funds are among the most stable in North America.

Too many Albertans are worried about retirement security. What is needed more than anything is a major increase in the Canada pension plan. Yet alone among the provinces it's been the government of Alberta that has blocked negotiations at the national level for a major reform of the Canada pension plan. This government is committed not to retirement security for all Albertans and Canadians but exactly the opposite.

It was interesting to read the consultation document that the government prepared based on their consultations ahead of this budget. The government heard the same things that the NDP caucus did when they were touring the province and talking to citizens. We found that Albertans prioritize funding for core services like health care and education and that more than half want to see funding increases for these sectors. So did the government. We found that almost half of Albertans want to see an increase in funding to protect our air, water, and land for future generations, and so did the government. We found that increasing support for seniors, students, and the vulnerable are priorities for Albertans. So, Mr. Speaker, did the government. I would be remiss if I did not point out that these are precisely the priorities of Alberta's New Democrat opposition, yet they are not the priorities of this government as evidenced by Budget 2014.

We think there's a way to make it happen. We just need to get off the revenue roller coaster. With more than 30 per cent of our program funding dependent on fluctuating royalty revenue that is unpredictable and tied to the whims of the global resource market, it's impossible to create and sustain the world-class health care, education, and social services that Albertans expect and deserve. Minor changes to Alberta's corporate tax and royalty system would ensure that our province remains the most competitive place to do business yet would bring in significantly higher revenues that would not be subject to the fluctuations of our royalty resource revenue. Minor changes to Alberta's personal tax system would see everybody pay their fair share, would give a tax break to the middle class, and would make sure that we had significantly more revenue to pay for ongoing program expenditures. All of this can be done and still retain the most competitive tax structure in the entire country.

But this government isn't interested in doing the job they were elected to do. Instead, they're grasping at any opportunity to download their responsibilities so that they can focus on what they're actually good at, taking care of their friends. Budget 2014 moves the province closer to privatized land titles, privatized lab services, and privatized social services. Mr. Speaker, none of these things are necessary. None of these things are in the public interest. All of them are in the interests of the friends and insiders associated with this long-in-the-tooth PC government.

Mr. Speaker, the entire billion dollars that was provided in additional transfer funding from the federal government should have been allocated to the front line of our health services. Instead, only $600 million of that billion was allocated to the health system at all. It could have been invested in quality, public long-term care beds for our seniors. It could have been invested in home care. It could have reduced the cost of prescription drugs borne by seniors and low-income Albertans. It could have supported mental health care. It could have been used to address the shortage of health care professionals working in our province. It could have kept lab services public.

That billion dollars could have renovated the Misericordia hospital, which is in dire need of asbestos removal and repairs to elevators, floors, roofs, and plumbing. The minister claims that the money has been spent, but it's totally inadequate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. The member was about to start talking about how current funding, I believe for the Misericordia, was deeply inadequate, and I would like to hear more about the foundation for that assertion from the member.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister claimed the other day that there is money in the budget allocated for this, but it is a fraction of what is required. There's so much more to be done. I suggest that one of our capital city's hospitals has become the icon of PC neglect. It could have been fixed in the budget, but it wasn't.

Mr. Speaker, while we're living in the tale of two Albertas, Albertans also have the choice of two Albertas before them. Our prosperous province can continue down this road, paved by the conservative choices and priorities of the government and its disgruntled cousins in the Official Opposition, or our province can choose a new progressive path marked out by hard-working and trustworthy representatives with Alberta values, momentum, and leadership.

The Alberta New Democrats will continue to fight for middle-class families who are squeezed by PC policies and to stand up for vulnerable Albertans who were attacked in this year's budget. We will continue to put forward common-sense solutions to correct the missteps of this PC government. We will remain the champions of everyday Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Are there other speakers to Motion 11? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to be able to respond to the budget speech that was delivered last week by this long-running PC government. I've been here since 2008 now, and I get the sense that regardless of what the budget is, you tend to hear a speech that trumpets the fiscal competence of this government regardless of the situation, regardless of what the budget says, regardless of what the outside world may comment about our fiscal prudence. A couple of examples of that. We can go back to 2008. Largely, for my course of time here there have been deficit budgets. We've seen year after year the government go through deficits, largely snowing through a contingency account that was at one time $26 billion, I think.

In this budget we finally get here, and through some new voodoo accounting or changing of the Fiscal Management Act, we come up with – I think even the numbers are fairly clear when it's all said and done – a $3.9 billion debt or deficit, actually, for this year despite the government's best efforts in saying that, you know, we're in a surplus. I, frankly, question that. We also acknowledge in this budget that by the end of 2017 we will be approximately 21 and a half billion dollars in debt. Is that all?

I guess, you know, despite the evidence of what I've seen in front of me for the last seven years, like I said, we still get these budget speeches that say that things are great here, that we're prudent financial managers, despite all contrary, objective evidence. And that's starting to appear. The rest of the world knows that when the government says it, it reminds them of the story about Pinocchio, to reference what we were discussing earlier.

An Hon. Member: The story.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, the story.

You see it in The Economist magazine, where they write that Alberta is a clear example of how not to run an oil and gas economy in terms of saving royalties for future generations and taking a fiscally responsible approach to things, paying for what you use out of taxes that you raise. If the government wants to provide a program, well, my goodness, you'd better tax for it. If you want to keep low taxes, well, then you don't provide the service. It's pretty simple, and it's pretty clear that we have not done that kind of budgeting or accounting. You know, I think people here know full well that there is a difference here in the amount of services we provide and the amount of services that we actually collect taxes for. There's a large spread between those, depending on what the year is, of around $12 billion. That spread is not changing despite what we see before us in this budget.

What has that led to here? Well, it has not only led to what I see as a compounding debt number, but it has also led to a real inability for us to do what we need to do today to ensure that we are getting the education system we need for our children, the postsecondary system we need for our young adults, the long-term care system we need for our elderly, and the poverty relief we need for those 400,000 Albertans who are living in that state of existence who we were led to believe in the last election this government was going to start caring about. It's not just all debt. It's got a human cost to it, this budget.

Let's go through the numbers in terms of our education system. Since the time I got here, especially since about 2009-2010, we have started cutting our Education budgets. You can see and the evidence is clear that we have roughly, by some estimates, 51,000 more students in our system, with relatively few teachers added to the system. Any way you cut it, though, the children of today have been shortchanged by this government compared to what other elementary kids and children have gotten before in their education system in dollars allocated to them.

Let's be clear. What else is troubling as a result of our current budgeting? Well, we were promised 50 schools in the last election. I know that the hon. Minister of Infrastructure tries to put on a brave face and says that these schools will be built by 2016, but we all know – at least I know, and maybe the hon. Premier is going to tell me differently – that we will not have one of these 50 new schools that was promised built by the next election.

I also look at some other things going on in this province that are really having a human capacity issue. We promised to get a handle on child poverty, a real issue. That, I felt, was an excellent promise that was made by this government in the last election. We have not begun to follow through on doing some things that would actually start allowing people to move from that symptom. You know, look at the bill we have today, the social infrastructure bonds. I guess we could say: that's doing something. I'm not so sold on whether it actually is. I think it's a distraction for the government, to allow them to say that they're doing things about child poverty or the like without actually putting government muscle into it.

There are things we could actually be doing here in Alberta. We have the lowest Alberta Works payments of any of the provinces by a country mile. You can go google the statistics. You know, if you're a single mother with a child, you're receiving heart-wrenchingly low income support. That just drives me insane. Look, if we really want to do something about it, let's revamp our Alberta Works system and actually look at what the poor are getting and factor in that Alberta is a high-rent place and that you're simply not able to make it. That would be an actual, tangible issue where you could say: yes, our poor are doing better. Okay? You don't need a social infrastructure bond or something like that to do that. You need to get people a cheque in their hand and say: they're going to live better. That is one mechanism we could do on that front pretty easily.

If we wanted to move young families out of poverty, well, look no farther than developing our daycare spaces, okay? Right now there's a shortage of daycare spaces, and they're costing $1,700 a month per daycare space for one child in the city of Calgary. If we're looking at it, is that really affordable for most people in the city of Calgary who are wanting to get out and work, to build their lives, to build their families, to get out of poverty? Probably not.

You know, if we really look at systems that may actually move society forward, there are opportunities to do that out in the world. Quebec has moved to a learn-through-play daycare system that, if you do the math, after some government seed money, inside of five to six years is largely revenue neutral. It allows young mothers and families to get out and work and have their children looked after in a learn-through-play environment that allows them to flourish. In my view, one of the reasons why Quebec seems to be rising in the PISA rankings and Alberta may be going the other way – and there are lots of different reasons for this – is that Quebec is now 15 years into a learn-through-play program, that has given their children an opportunity to learn. I think that piece has really set their society on a course and a trajectory forward on the educational front.

I look at investments like that. That would be substantial if you want to move child poverty, that initiative, forward. That would be real government muscle, going ahead and doing something, not saying that you're going to do something but actually doing something. That's the failure.

We can go down the list. Postsecondary education: you know, we can say that, well, we had to do it, but we cut postsecondary dramatically in the 2013 budget. Was it really flourishing before that? We already, before that cut, had the lowest university participation rate of any province on a per capita basis. So, really, it's not like we were doing exceptionally well there before we whacked that budget by 7 and a half per cent, whatever it was, and whatever we kick back into it simply doesn't even catch up to where it was. It was already underperforming in giving Alberta citizens an opportunity to develop their postsecondary skills.

These are the real, day-to-day opportunities that we've missed out on over the last 10 years. Why did we miss out on them? It's because we simply refused to – yes, you get it – tax people here in this province, guys, and it's not just me saying it. It's your former Finance ministers, from Jim Dinning to Ron Liepert to Ted Morton to Shirley McClellan, who all say: we have a revenue problem. Well, come on, guys. The jig is up. You know what I'm saying. You know, we could have actually done this at some point in time, and that would have allowed us to not only do better today but allowed us to do better tomorrow, okay? Those are two things I cannot countenance us sacrificing on.

The government of the day chose, I think, instead to make a calculation. Instead of solving the elephant in the room, the problem that no one likes to talk about, our revenue streams, they kicked that down the curb. My greatest worry is that we are just going to move into a cycle again where, possibly four, five years down the road here, we in this Legislature – some of us will move on; some of us may be here – will think we're wealthy again. We'll think: "Oh, my goodness, we have all these revenues here. We'll do that project, that project, this project." It'll be like the good old days in 2001 – I think some of you guys were here – when we thought that this would never end, but if we haven't learned by now that this is going to end, I don't know when we will.

My greatest sadness is that because we didn't rectify it here, I don't think we'll get another opportunity. I think that by the time we've figured out, next time, that we're not creating permanent wealth in this province but merely running from problem to problem, false success to false success or the like – that is my true worry. We really could have had an opportunity to fix things. I hear the Wildrose say: we want predictable, sustainable funding. Well, when you guys say that, too, you guys know you can't have it without . . . [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired] Whatever.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't resist. I would just like to hear what you were about to say about how we can't have sustainable funding because . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: When we talk about sustainable funding, Mr. Speaker, just so the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is clear, what we're referring to is from tax revenue.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll make this pretty simple. Right now we have a difference between our tax code and Saskatchewan's. Saskatchewan is the second-lowest tax jurisdiction. If we adopted theirs lock, stock, and barrel, we'd bring in about $11 billion more in taxes. That says to me that we are roughly $11 billion undertaxed here, okay? Call me crazy for suggesting that. So we have that gap. We provide roughly the same services to our citizens as the government of Saskatchewan does. We just spend all of it on royalties.

Although the Wildrose has plans on how they're going to limit spending to population growth for now and forever and a day and all that stuff and never do anything besides their 10-year plan to build infrastructure and the like, what you're going to find if – and I stress: if – you get into government is that, simply put, the pressures of the electorate are far too great to limit it to that for very long.

I'd look at a Premier who thought he probably could do that, the Klein government between '94 and about '97. After that, the pressures of governing became too great. You either have to do some things to – you'll find out that government programs, some of them, actually work, okay? They actually make people's lives better. They actually make things more efficient. Investing in schools and hospitals and policing is what your citizens want. It actually leads to better results in the long term. I think that's what you're going to find out if – and I stress: if – you're going to get to government. And then what happens? Well, because five or six years from now we may be in a position where there is more money available from nonrenewable resource revenue, then that temptation is there.

I realize this tale I'm saying is all about what they've done over the course of the last 42 years. But unless you deal with that predictable, sustainable funding and that gap – you know, you can never get predictable, sustainable funding if your budget consists largely of oil and gas revenues. If we go down to $75 oil this year, which doesn't look like it's going to happen but if it does, where does the predictable, sustainable funding go next year? It goes out the door for these guys. It goes out the door for you guys. There are just no ifs, ands, or buts about it. So we're kidding ourselves if we want predictable, sustainable funding without actually talking about taxes. You're kidding yourself.

You know, I'm 44 years old. I'm getting too old to kid myself. I'm surprised that many people in this room continue to do so. It's really beyond me. Instead of going out and leading for something better and trying to do something, this government chose not to do that. I'm very disappointed in that because – guess what? – I was hoping they would. I hoped they would solve some problems that they saw out there. They chose not to. I don't know if the next government is going to be afforded a unique opportunity like this to fix the problem. Sometimes governments can only solve problems when a crisis emerges. If the crisis goes away, well, no one will think it's a problem anymore.

Anyway, that's why I don't think it's possible. I think there are actually pressures to governing that are out there. I have a sense that if we didn't get a handle on it here, we might just be destined to spend it all on one generation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a pleasure, as always.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There's still some time left if there are others under 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Mr. Speaker, I rise in this Chamber today to respond to the government's Budget 2014 with, like many Albertans, mixed feelings. In its throne speech a week ago this government affirmed its pledge to work with Albertans, new and old, who desire to build a stronger, modern, better province together. There are funding commitments identified in Budget 2014 that are consistent with the government's theme of building Alberta that will be well received by my constituents and, therefore, merit recognition in my remarks. But there is also a great deal that is missing in this budget that is important not only to the residents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo but to all Albertans, especially when we acknowledge that as much as 30 per cent of government revenues originate in northeastern Alberta, which is home to no more than 3 per cent of the population.

As I said just two days ago in my response to the throne speech in a phrase that becomes less meaningful only because it's too familiar, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is the economic engine of Alberta. I would like to preface my remarks this afternoon with a few statistics that help to illustrate what that actually means rather than being obscured behind the foggy thinking that is encouraged by clichés.

We in Alberta, our ambitions to economic diversification notwithstanding, are for the present tied to the petroleum industry as by far the single largest contributor to our envied prosperity. Oil sands production a decade ago was barely 1 million barrels per day. Production will top 2 million barrels per day for the first time this spring. In another decade projects that have already received regulatory approval will drive production up to more than 3 million barrels of oil per day. Some analysts suggest that Alberta oil sands account for almost 10 per cent of Canada's GDP. Round it up because of the discontinued penny, and 10 cents of every dollar in your pocket is derived from oil sands activity.

The Canadian Energy Research Institute estimates capital investment in Alberta's oil sands over the next 25 years to exceed $200 billion, equivalent to running the entire province of Alberta for five years under Budget 2014. That investment is estimated by CERI to generate $350 billion in royalties and $122 billion in municipal tax revenues across Alberta. This mind-boggling economic activity helps to explain why the region's permanent population has tripled in just over a decade and why there are as many as 60,000 people, many of them flying in and out of Alberta and paying personal income tax in different jurisdictions, who may be living in camp accommodations throughout our region, which is not even mentioned that the total camp accommodations capacity in Wood Buffalo as of this past Christmas reached 90,000.

The province's heavy reliance on oil sands revenues, indeed Canada's reliance on the oil sands is why our governments have become so focused on issues like market access and the bitumen bubble, impediments to our prosperity that must be solved beyond our borders. Oil sands growth is also why, I think, the Premier announced two years ago that the province's focus on capital investment was going to shift to include strategic economic investment to lay the foundations to grow our economy. In many ways the spending in Wood Buffalo announced by the government since 2008 to address accumulated infrastructure deficit of colossal proportion – Fort McMurray had become, after all, the nexus of a global tempest to develop oil sands resources – has enabled my community and, by extension, the expectations of all Albertans only to catch up to 2010, perhaps 2011, and we have just turned the page on the calendar for 2014.

I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge again this government's commitment to twinning the portion of highway 63 from Grassland to Fort McMurray by 2016. The government first committed to twinning highway 63 nearly a decade ago. This highway is, of course, the singular corridor for the safe movement of goods, services, and people in and out of Wood Buffalo. It's also the primary route for the arrival in Wood Buffalo of almost 5,000 modules, not tractor-trailer units or trucks carrying large loads or dangerous goods but 5,000 modules, required to construct new oil sands facilities over the next five years.

The improvements to highway 63 are essential to improve public safety on one of our province's most busy, most dangerous highways. However, when this government first announced its commitment to fast-track highway 63 in October 2012, it also announced $350 million for improvements to highway 881 and to study requirements to extend that corridor into the oil sands region across the Clearwater River. That commitment appears to have evaporated as government has grappled with declining revenues and flood recovery.

I want to remind the government, however, that capital investment in Wood Buffalo generates outsized economic return that is distributed among all Albertans in tax and royalty revenues. The public return on private investment in public resources, owned by all Albertans, is 2.5 to 1, and that private investment will be better targeted in partnership with the public sector.

This government is correct when it says that not building is not an option, even as it makes difficult choices about where to spend scarce capital, so it would be childish of me to stamp my feet and say, "You promised" without recognizing that my fellow citizens in southern Alberta suffered through a disaster unprecedented in Canadian history this past summer. Still, the municipal sustainability initiative and GreenTRIP funding are not adequate to deliver transportation infrastructure in Wood Buffalo that will help to grow provincial revenues for all Albertans.

So I repeat my statement from Monday. I strongly encourage this government to embrace the innovation it champions and to explore with stakeholders the alternative delivery and finance instruments being proposed within Wood Buffalo to support the design, construction, and maintenance of new transportation infrastructure essential to our continued prosperity, the very same infrastructure identified in government's unfunded Athabasca CRISP document.

One among the new approaches that has been adopted by the province has been the recent land exchange agreement with the RMWB, that essentially makes the municipality the province's banker. The municipality will provide bridge financing to deliver highway improvements within the city of Fort McMurray that will be repaid through the sale of Crown land to private developers. These improvements are essential in a community of 75,000 residents that had only 40 new home lots for sale last year and two neighbourhoods intended to welcome 40,000 new residents, neither of which can proceed until transportation bottlenecks are removed. This land-for-roads agreement indicates the government is willing to explore its options and the exchange or sharing of assets when required to deliver new infrastructure.

It may well be that the government should not pay for every new road that supports resource extraction, but government must be the enabler of a new way of doing business so that the oil sands producers, railroads, and other private-sector parties can make meaningful contributions to transportation infrastructure.

I'm confident that the transportation co-ordinating committee will make recommendations to this government about how to best advance essential transportation projects in Wood Buffalo through new governance and financing instruments. I am hopeful that the province will examine these recommendations carefully and determine how it is possible to ensure that oil sands companies meet their socioeconomic obligations in a way that ensures increased revenues, manageable population growth, and appropriate quality-of-life improvements for Wood Buffalo residents.

I'm also pleased to have seen in Budget 2014 that the province has reaffirmed its commitment to completing the Parsons Creek interchange, which will enable residential development in the second of Fort McMurray's two stalled neighbourhoods to resume. It's absurd to think that the fastest growing community in Alberta has been prohibited from welcoming any more than a hundred net new residents for nearly two years because there were no lots available in the entire city on which to build new houses. That impasse has been broken by a willingness to do different, and I hope that the province will bring the same courage, for which the residents of Wood Buffalo have waited, to bear on other issues that will require courage to resolve.

The next phase of the Parsons Creek interchange is to build another crossing across the Athabasca, link that road to the crossing of the Clearwater to the east, and extend that road as the beginning of a link to Peace River to the west. That project, again, will be best completed by bringing creativity and innovation to the table to find solutions to the regional transportation network with all the players in the region.

Fort McMurray has also been well served by commitments from this government to build new schools and to renovate existing schools to accommodate new students arising from a 7 per cent annual population growth. Students speak up to 120 different first languages in Fort McMurray schools, making this northern city one of the most diverse urban areas in Canada. Parents, schoolchildren, and the public and separate school boards are grateful for the commitment of the province in providing suitable school facilities.

My constituents will also appreciate the commitment of funding to address flood impacts and mitigation efforts for our downtown schools, which are the flood plain at the confluence of the Clearwater, Athabasca, Horse, and Hangingstone rivers.

But, speaking of schools, not all is rosy on the education front in Wood Buffalo. When the province removed the mitigation measures in place for the education property tax, it failed to understand something unique about Fort McMurray. The average three-bedroom, single-family home in Fort McMurray is roughly half again as much as the same home would cost in Calgary and twice what it would cost in Edmonton. An ordinary new three-bedroom home lists for just over $1 million. When the government went to strict market assessment for education property taxes, it imposed a 40 per cent tax hike and again this year on my constituents, hard-working families who already pay more for their housing than anyone else in Canada.

My constituents do not object to paying their fair share, but they do object to the effective doubling of their education property taxes in just over two years, especially those long-term residents on fixed incomes or those who work in the service sector or who otherwise do not work in high-paying, oil sands related jobs.

I've asked in the past that the full market value assessments be phased in over five years, and I ask the government again to respect the hardship borne by people who already pay more for their housing than anyone else in the country. Two years is too quick; five years would enable folks to manage the transition more favourably.

I said just last Monday that Fort McMurray was one of the two communities identified in August as deserving special consideration to maintain its downtown development in a potential floodway. The throne speech said that the government would make firm the commitment to build community mitigation projects in flood-affected communities. The Wood Buffalo regional council has already introduced measures to protect Fort McMurray that will cost approximately $160 million in order to comply with the government's 1-in-100-year flood requirements.

Budget 2014 says nothing about flood mitigation for Fort McMurray, and I'm simply putting this government on notice that it should anticipate a firm position from the regional municipality, which is committed to meeting provincially imposed requirements without provincially provided assistance. I am certain that was merely an oversight as the government concentrated its attention on communities that were more drastically affected by June's floods. But given that Fort McMurray and Drumheller alone among provincial towns and cities were recognized as deserving special consideration, it is my expectation that the province will help to defray flood mitigation expenses and not expect the municipality to foot the bill alone.

Government also committed to investing in better seniors' care, focusing on aging-in-place developments. As members of this Assembly are well aware, Fort McMurray has long been advocating, for more than a decade, for its first long-term care facility, the only such facility in a community of 75,000 people, which, if it were available, would free an entire floor of our critical care hospital. I know that Alberta Health, Alberta Infrastructure, and Alberta Municipal Affairs are all in discussion with the regional municipality to bring this vision to fruition using money committed from last year's budget, and this includes not just long-term care but the full spectrum of aging-in-place accommodations for those Albertans who helped to convert the oil sands from Canada's largest research and development project to the engine of its economy and who are now entering the sunset of their lives. I urge this government to bring these negotiations with both the local and federal governments to a rapid close and to break ground on this long-overdue facility in the current calendar year.

Back in 2010 the province took 20 townships from Wood Buffalo and gave them to Lac La Biche as compensation for oil revenues from the Cold Lake air weapons range being captured in the new improvement district that would be awarded primarily to the city of Cold Lake. An $80 million net solution to a $10 million problem has been a boon to Cold Lake and Lac La Biche but has left Wood Buffalo with substantial lost revenues. When the proposal was first floated by the province, it was supposed to involve sharing those revenues among all the affected parties. Instead, Wood Buffalo was stripped of up to $60 million in annual tax revenues, more than $1 billion over the life of the oil sands projects, in the lands transferred to Lac La Biche, without compensation. The order in council is up for renewal in 2014. At the very least, the government of Alberta needs to re-examine this arrangement and restructure growing revenues so that Wood Buffalo, too, is a beneficiary.

This province has weathered more than one storm since the global economic downturn in 2008. Alberta remains the best place to live, work, learn, and play. That is due in part to our rich natural resources but also to the wisdom of past leaders who built this province. I look forward to working with this government over the next year to help it understand where it has missed opportunities and how to best correct its oversights so that the wise choices we make today will be recognized by future generations in 20, 30, or a hundred years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and with that, I would like to move to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 Savings Management Act (continued)

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to finally be able to get up to speak to this bill, having had a bit of confusion around stuff and not being able to speak to it prior to now. I will as part of it talk a little bit about the amendments that we had hoped to bring to this bill in an effort to make it slightly more palatable.

Bill 1, you know, appears to be what the government thinks is a flagship bill to begin this latest session, and to that extent I think it's really a rather disappointing outing and represents a disappointing foray into defining the future direction of the government. It represents a transfer of money from the heritage trust fund into a number of different accounts that may or may not be spent. We can't really tell because there's very, very little direction about what is going to come from this bill.

There are a couple of critical areas that I'm very concerned about. The first one – I'll just touch on it briefly – is the plan to create this Alberta future fund, so $200 million just this year and then another $200 million every year till 2024. Now, I realize that these guys have been in government for a long time, and when you look at the cost of their expenses and the fact that they've been here for 45 years, I suppose it makes sense at a certain point that they stop getting how much this money is actually worth. But this idea of putting aside $200 million a year for a fund so we can, quote, maybe do something cool, end quote, in the future – and that was a direct quote from the Deputy Premier – is really a little outrageous, Mr. Speaker.

The Finance minister said previously, in introducing this bill in third reading, that Albertans want to know what we're saving for, but you know, I just really think that $200 million a year for the next 10 years for, quote, something really cool, end quote, doesn't actually meet that standard, Mr. Speaker, and I don't think that it's going to give Albertans great comfort. Moreover, given the inability of members of this government to distinguish between their public duty and obligations and their political duties and obligations and, in particular, the ongoing mixture of their political expenses with their governance expenses, I am deeply concerned that what this fund really is is an election slush fund. It's an election slush fund that's being used with a historic and iconic savings account that almost all Albertans have grown to respect.

You know, I don't want to spend a lot of time on it, but another resource-driven country in the world, that's been producing oil and gas for about half the time that we have, has something like 25 times the amount of money in their savings fund as a result of their much more intentional management of their natural resources, understanding that that management is to be done for the best interests of their citizens rather than for the best interests of those developing the oil and gas resources. So it's always been the case that you look at the heritage trust fund and it's quite disappointing in terms of how small it is relative to how big it could be, but now we see that we're going to skim money off it to create cute little election slush funds, and that is worrisome.

The other item that I want to spend a little bit more time talking about, though, of course, is the social endowment fund. Now, I will say that the idea of setting aside the fund to the extent that parts of it can be used to support research into best practices and to support research into design and implementation of innovative interventions is good stuff, Mr. Speaker. I don't have a problem with that, and I know that many people within the postsecondary sector have advocated for this as a means to increase the quality and the research opportunities for people in the arts sector as a whole in our postsecondary institutions. To the extent that this money ends up going to that, that's a good thing. I, of course, am tremendously skeptical that the money will go to that because, you know, I don't know that these guys feel anything is worthwhile unless there is some oil company at the end of the financial trail receiving a cheque. I would really want to see that part of it overseen with much more caution and rigour.

The other piece of it that I am deeply concerned about is this notion of social impact bonds, and as the critic for Human Services I really, really believe that we need to have a much more intelligent conversation about this ridiculous strategy. Now, the Finance minister at one point said: oh, well, don't worry about it; it's not like these social impact bonds will be instead of our current funding; we're going to maintain our current funding. But I think the starting point, Mr. Speaker, is that our current funding is grossly, grossly inadequate. Let's just start there. We don't have enough funding. The problem now is that as advocates, people who want to build this province and build opportunity in this province and reduce inequality in this province and expand the quality of life for all Albertans, push for more investment into the kinds of programs that will achieve that object, this government is going to say: "Oh, no. Well, we have our social impact bonds, and we're paying business a premium of 10 to 20 per cent for them to invest in so-called innovative practices."

You know, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that this is just an incredibly unproven strategy with almost no record of success anywhere. What we do know is that it transfers money from the public sector to the private sector and that it rewards the private sector for investing in social problems that this government has failed to invest in adequately to eliminate. That is what we do know.

There is almost no successful example of a social impact bond anywhere else in the world, and there are a number of different reasons for this, Mr. Speaker. Partly, what we're doing is that we are increasing the administrative costs, and we are increasing the complexity, and we are increasing the administrative burden on the very nonprofit organizations that are theoretically trying to achieve these objects. That's the first thing we're doing. We are injecting inefficiency into the provision of social services and social development strategies within our province. So that's the first thing that we're going to do. We're injecting cost into it because we are going to fracture it and have an increasingly patchwork system, and in so doing, of course, we're going to once again reduce efficiency and increase cost.

We are also undermining the quality of the work that will be achieved by ensuring that the object is not actually the best interests of the people receiving the benefits of these programs. The object will be the best interests of the investors. In doing that, we also ensure that we've injected another criterion, another standard, another process which will reduce the effectiveness and the efficiency and the outcome in this overall sector, and let me tell you that this is a sector that desperately needs attention because inequality is growing daily in this province. These guys like to think: oh, yeah, it's growing daily because our rich friends are getting richer. You know what? That's not exactly it. The purchasing power and the actual economic quality of life of regular Albertans is decreasing as well as time marches on.

For the social impact bonds we've got some really kind of scary examples. We've got the New York City Rikers Island social impact bond, where Goldman Sachs invested in a project. As it turned out, the nonprofit itself had to guarantee $7.2 million of that $9.6 million, and then if the project actually works, the government is going to give them a 20 per cent return. Why are we paying a 20 per cent premium, or why would we even consider that that was a good idea? It just makes no sense across the board.

I'm overwhelmed by the absurdity of this particular policy choice that these guys are embarking upon, and it really reveals that, you know, it's all about giving money to friends and insiders. It's just: let's find another way to give money to friends and insiders. Let's make sure that there's an opportunity to maximize profiteering on the backs of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens.

Now, there is this notion that: "Oh, well, you know, if we bring the private sector in there, they're the really super innovative ones. Woo-hoo. They're innovative and the government is not innovative." Well, you know what? If you look at the history of social development programs over the years, the innovation actually comes from publicly funded universities, it comes from the public sector, and it comes from nonprofits. There's no history of innovation from the private sector in this area, none at all. Again, it's not evidence based. Those folks over there are constantly accusing us of being ideological. This is one of the most ideologically driven, idiotic initiatives that I have seen come from that side in a long, long time, and it's not going to make things better for the very Albertans that need it most.

Now, will it generate innovation? Well, here's the other thing. Investors are not stupid. They're not going to invest in high-risk stuff. No. They're going to cream the easy stuff off the top. You know what? It doesn't take Goldman Sachs to tell us that if you provide counselling and mentoring and job search assistance to somebody coming out of prison, they're less likely to reoffend. Okay? You don't need Goldman Sachs to tell you that that's going to happen, because the research is out there. What you need to do is just as efficiently as possible provide that service. Why would you then ask Goldman Sachs to do it and give them a 20 per cent return on it? It's just the most silly thing that I've ever heard of.

Then what's going to end up happening is that you're going to fracture things. You're going to carve off the easy stuff that we all know is easy to do – and the only reason it's not happening more is because these guys have slashed funding – and then you're going to leave the really tough stuff in the public system. Then the public system itself is going to be fractured away from these other services, and they're not going to have flexibility to devote the resources that are necessary, so the really challenging groups of people are going to grow and grow and develop and become a bigger cost.

Anyone who has ever done any work on this topic concludes that it is not a good idea. Interestingly, I think it was Hawaii that actually passed legislation to prohibit social impact bonds. They said: “You know what? We’ve done the research, and this is just too uncertain. It’s not a good deal for anybody, and we’re just not going to go there.” Apparently, these folks haven’t done that.

We planned to bring in two different amendments, Mr. Speaker. One of them would have replaced one of the recitals in the beginning of the act. What we would have done is that we would have replaced one of the recitals with a different one that says: whereas Albertans recognize that innovative social services originate from government initiatives, nonprofit organizations, and publicly funded research rather than a motivation for private profit.

Mr. Wilson: It’s the Savings Management Act.

Ms Notley: I know it’s the Savings Management Act. I’m just looking for the actual copy of the act so that I can identify the recital that we would have replaced.

What it currently says is, “Whereas these opportunities should build on the existing innovation system to support new ideas, risk-sharing and creative collaboration across sectors.” We were going to replace that with what I just recited. We were going to do that in order to make it clear that that’s where our limited resources should be going in order to get the greatest outcome.

The other thing that we were going to do was that we were going to strike out section 2(1)(a)(iii). That section of the act outlines that one of the purposes of this particular endowment was to develop new funding models and partnerships. That was one of the purposes of the social innovation endowment. You know what? We were just going to strike that out because we don’t need to waste time finding ways to give McDonald’s or Walmart, of all people, an opportunity to invest in and make money off poverty. It just makes no sense. We thought that that was something we should just ensure couldn’t possibly happen.

If we could have gotten members of this Legislature to agree to that, then we might have been able to provide a great deal more support to the objects of this social endowment fund, but as long as we’re looking at taking heritage trust fund money, which, as I said before, is an iconic savings plan, which Albertans over the years have contributed to through their tax dollars and through forgoing other public services and all those other things, as long as we’re planning on taking that money and using it to find ways to invite Walmart and McDonald’s and anyone else to the table so they can make money off high-risk youth and poor families and those kinds of people, then we can’t support it, so it needs to be removed. Those were the two amendments that we were planning on bringing forward yesterday had the matter carried on into the evening as we had expected it would.

Meanwhile, just sort of going back into a little bit more detail, one of the few examples of a social impact bond that’s actually been implemented, which had sort of limited success, was the Peterborough, U.K., prison project. One of the reviews of that project afterwards concluded that the process was “time-consuming and analytically complex.”

In addition, what has also been identified, as I said before, is that these nonprofits end up having to hire people to act as fundraisers and salespeople. So they can start running around to all these businesses saying: “Hey, we’ve got a quick way for you to make 10 or 15 per cent on your investment. We’ve found some really keen kids who just happened to get in trouble with the law, but they’ve all agreed to volunteer in this program, and we’re pretty sure they’re not going to reoffend. So, hey, why don’t you give us money for that, and once you do, eventually the government is going to give you back that money plus 10 or 20 per cent out of the heritage trust fund.” What a great plan.

But how much money have we actually saved? Well, probably none. What we’ve done is that we’ve just lost that money, and we’ve given McDonald’s or Walmart the opportunity to make money. Meanwhile, instead of actually working on the programs that would bring about the reduction in poverty or high-risk behaviour or whatever it is that you’re working on, the nonprofit organization has hired somebody who does that job, who does the pitching, who’s the salesman, who’s the used car dealer running out there trying to pitch these programs to funders. That’s what they’re spending their time doing. Then they have to go out and hire legal counsel and financial advisers to assist them with the management of their bonds. Then after that the government itself has to regulate these organizations that are making these offers to investors because if they don’t, they’ll probably be found liable for any loss of investment dollars. So it really makes no sense.

I think, ultimately, though, what is probably the most compelling piece of this is the position taken by the Alberta College of Social Workers, which is simply that it is immoral for people to be making money off human suffering. Human suffering should not be turned into a commodity, and that’s what social impact bonds do. We don’t think anyone should be allowed to profit from the misery of others, and we certainly don’t think that anyone should be allowed to profit by skimming the somewhat easy problems to solve off the process and then subsequently leaving the challenging problems with fewer resources and less capacity to fix the problem. Just like this government wants Syncrude in our classrooms – because we all know our five-year-olds are there looking for a job right now – this is a continuation of the same approach.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: I move to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

5:20 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 5 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014 (continued)

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any comments or questions to be offered? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: I’m just pulling my thoughts together here, Mr. Chair, but thank you for the opportunity. I’ll keep this fairly brief. This is the interim supply, right?

My comments really, again, speak to the fund allocations and how this budget is continuing on the narrative of the tale of two Albertas, where there are rules and dollars for some Albertans, which, ironically, turn out to be mostly the supporters of the current government. Then, you know, there’s reality for those that aren’t, the rest of Albertans, including and especially those that are squeezed, I would argue, in the middle and even in the lower socioeconomic bracket.

I think what’s important to point out for myself, Mr. Chairman, and on behalf of, I think, many Albertans is that this current government is out of touch with the priorities of Albertans. One need look no further than the fact that our Education budget barely accounts for the increase in student enrolment, yet still, you know, school boards, classrooms, teachers, and principals around the province are calling out for more dollars to be able to lower class sizes, to bring in necessary resources, whether it's staff training to be able to accommodate today's classroom and its makeup.

You know, from that to postsecondary, still reeling from the cuts from last year's budget, to the fact that we've got an increasing number of seniors that are waiting for long-term care facilities, for beds – that backlogs our health system because there is a shortage. They're tying up beds that are much needed in our hospitals. You know, Mr. Chair, that's really just the tip of the iceberg as far as where we're at.

I think, you know, that the message really comes back to the fact that this PC government refuses to look at the other side of the coin when we're talking budgets, and that, of course, is looking at revenue. I can appreciate Alberta being a very competitive jurisdiction, whether we're talking about royalties or taxes, but what I do find frustrating – and most Albertans understand – is that there's quite a bit of room between where we currently are and where we could go and still remain the most competitive jurisdiction but bring in billions of dollars into our revenue, additionally, to ensure that our classrooms are supported, our health care is supported, supported above and beyond just the capital or the facilities. Of course, as I pointed out numerous times, this government loves to open up shiny new buildings and then walk away when it comes to the operational side or ensuring that there are staff to operate it or, in the example of schools, ensuring that there are enough staff in our schools to deliver the high-quality education that Albertans have come to expect. I would argue that our front-line staff are doing a phenomenal job, but there's no wonder why many of them are overworked, are being, you know, pushed out of the system. It's simply becoming unbearable.

I would like to have seen, again, this government address the revenue side of the budget coin. There are some real, concrete solutions that would ensure that we have dollars not just for today but for tomorrow, that we'd be able to grow our heritage savings fund at a much greater pace as compared to many other jurisdictions and, obviously, invest in infrastructure, which is sorely overdue for maintenance. You know, we need look no further than the fact that – four decades of the same government in power, and they've starved our infrastructure to the point where much of it is crumbling. We don't even know the integrity of some of our buildings province-wide. It would have been much wiser to invest over the last 20 years in our infrastructure as opposed to the predicament we're now in. Look no further than the condition of the Misericordia hospital in Edmonton or other hospitals province-wide that need a complete overhaul.

You know, Mr. Chair, there are lots of solutions, available solutions, again, of addressing moving our personal income tax to a progressive system, which would generate more dollars. Again, it needs to be reiterated that it would save our middle-income earners, our middle-income households dollars. I know the leader of the Alberta NDP, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, has repeatedly given figures on household incomes that are around $100,000, $120,000 and how much more taxes that household pays in Alberta under the flat tax versus living in provinces like B.C. or Ontario, where there are progressive income tax systems but where they would actually pay less in taxes and save more money.

Looking at, again, our corporate income tax rate, where corporations are taxed on their profits, not if they're, you know, a fledging business that is at a loss, unnecessarily dropping – years ago this government dropped it from 15 to 10. This is ideology, Mr. Chair. If, in fact, Alberta was tied for the lowest corporate tax rate in Canada, which we are, if that was the sole driver of where companies set up shop, then, really, the rest of the provinces minus one other province shouldn't have any industry or corporations operating inside of their boundaries. But the reality is that they do, and they pay higher taxes than other provinces. They're still there. They're not running for the hills. Again, it adds more dollars to the revenue.

Really, at the end of the day, Mr. Chair, we're talking about ensuring that there is stable, predictable funding for infrastructure, for the priorities that Albertans have expressed. I can tell you that as long as we continue to heavily rely on our revenue from oil and gas, because it fluctuates so much in the market, it seems absurd to bet on a roller coaster – one year you're doing well, and the next year you're not – and really break that down into month by month as opposed to stable, predictable funding. School boards have been asking for it in schools. Our health care system is looking for it. Municipalities are dying to have stable, predictable funding to be able to manage their plans and their growth. Again, I think that this is another example of an opportunity missed.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to express my views.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Chair: Seeing none, the question has been called.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

5:30

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 5 and Bill 4.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Having heard the report from the hon. Member for Calgary-East, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Due to the agreement between the House leaders I'd like to request unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 64(2) to proceed to third reading of Bill 5.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 5

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance has moved third reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2014.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn the House till 7:30.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:32 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 Savings Management Act

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Campbell]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is my second opportunity to speak to this bill, which continues to raise more questions than it answers. For a government in such financial difficulty the first question, of course, that it raises is: why are they downloading financial responsibilities for social programs onto the private sector? Well, the answer is too clear. This has come up at this time in our history when in spite of tremendous revenue from our oil resources, our gas resources, our gambling revenues this government is now going to try something out of the pages of other countries' books, many of which not only fail to provide the necessary human services, that they're designed to do, but in some cases show harmful effects because they are inadequately supervised, inadequately evaluated, and obviously the conflict of interest between profit and people becomes too onerous to deal with.

It's clear to many of us on this side of the House that a government that doesn't plan for the long term, that doesn't manage its finances in a stable and responsible way is destined for a crash, and not only will it bring down its own success in the future, electoral success; it will bring down tremendous suffering on the people. If this extends into, for example, paid monitors of the environment, this too will suffer.

There are examples, as I have indicated earlier, in the nonprofit sector where private funds and philanthropic funds have enabled nonprofits such as the YWCA and Women in Need and the Vecova society in Calgary to develop some entrepreneurial sidelines, for example fitness facilities and technology, that in the case of women in need help them to market some of their donations to many people in the city, that allow them to have more resources to work with women in need and their families.

The devil is in the details, I should say, Mr. Speaker. Just as in the case of P3s, where we see in some instances that there may have been some benefit to the public in private-public partnerships, there is a tremendous temptation and, if there is no due diligence on the part of government in negotiating these P3s, a tremendous opportunity for misuse of public funds for private purposes and a failure to achieve the ends that were in fact designed to be achieved. There are a number of publications out showing that there have been more failures in P3s, for example. The devil is in the details. If we don't do our diligence in setting up these contracts, if we don't allow members of this Legislature to see the contracts, if we don't allow public scrutiny, it opens the door to, again, a real loss of public interest and a loss of public trust, and the whole political process comes into disrepute.

While there may be some interesting opportunities in agriculture for the kind of innovations and new technology that's been at least mused about in Bill 1 and there may be some opportunities in some other technology, that we could see benefit the long-term interests of Albertans, the real questions revolve around whether this government is competent to manage these in a way that would ensure that the public interest in served for the long term. For many of us that's a real stretch after seeing the way we have managed some of our contracts. One that comes to mind, of course, is the Health Resource Centre in the Grace hospital in Calgary, that went bankrupt under this kind of privatization and public-private partnership that was attempted but without the competence to deal with it in a sustainable and responsible way.

There's no question in my mind that we have to look at all creative options. We have to examine the contribution that the private sector can make in public services and research and innovation. We do not have to sell out the public interest in that context. In fact, Albertans are looking to us to be very careful, critical, thoughtful stewards of the public interest and ensure that not only do we get the best value for the public dollars but that if private interests and philanthropy are moving into the areas of our human services, where our most vulnerable are – and I'm thinking in terms of the homeless initiatives that are being talked about, psychological services, mental health issues, even some of the community outreach and recreation opportunities – we are fastidious about ensuring that we allow the individuals themselves to play a big role in setting the outcomes, the goals of these particular activities and in no way assume that the measurements that are being taken of these particular activities necessarily reflect the reality on the ground.

That's a big question for many of these evaluations and outcome measures. Who's measuring, and how valid are the measures? Do they reflect the outcomes and goals of the individuals involved in these particular services? It's so clear that professionals and organizations, first and foremost, naturally see their own interests, and those interests get reflected in the goal-setting and the measurements and the reporting. Unfortunately, there needs to be, if we're going to go down this route, some independent monitoring of what's happening with these funds, what's happening with the programs, and the extent to which they're actually doing what they say that they're doing.

While these are attempts by this government to look like they're innovative – they're trying new things. They're combining, hopefully, responsible private investment donations and looking for a public good. There may be some cases where that is the case, but this is fraught with peril. I think that, especially in a government that has so clearly mismanaged our long-term public interest and our resources, it's fraught with distrust by many, and this government is going to have a real challenge to convince Albertans as well as, I think, the professionals who work in the field that these investments are going to result in improvements.

It doesn't sound like there's a lot of interest in this debate across the floor. There's lots else to talk about, I guess. Perhaps it's House of Cards that's being talked about actively over there and some of the dark side of politics, but I don't see anybody ready to jump up and challenge me on anything that I've said, so I have to assume . . .

Mr. Eggen: I think it's Game of Thrones more likely.

Dr. Swann: Or a game of thrones that they're involved with.

I have to assume that they're either agreeing with everything I say, or what is more apparent is that they have other interests. Bill 1, their primary bill, their bill that is supposed to be so important that the Premier makes it number one, is clearly not of that much interest on the other side and of not much enthusiasm.

So I'll take my seat and recognize that we will not be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to just make a few more comments in regard to Bill 1 here this evening. Yesterday I was talking about my issue and problems around the social impact bonds, but this evening I would like to point out other issues that I think are deficient in this bill. You know, it's this whole idea of funding for social programs, right? Again, with the Alberta New Democrats, our issue is not that we don't give social services proper funding models; it's that the government underfunds them or doesn't fund them, period. This whole idea of endowments and so forth is a very, I would say, primitive way to actually move forward on financing essential government services, for which this government is responsible.

Many of our social programs currently can point directly to things that have been proven to save the government money down the road – right? – but in fact this PC government refuses to invest in them. Using schools as community hubs is a good example of this, a program that remains unfunded this year but was able to point to savings of more than $4 per dollar invested by increasing high school graduation rates and improving employment opportunities for parents through increased social programming.

My question is why this government feels the need to step outside our publicly funded model into something that will actually cost us more and pay investors a profit that's to be taken from our social programs. There's simply no need when we already have so many underfunded social services at present. If, you know, we were to simply try to cut this bill, I think it doesn't even float then, so really it's just a nonstarter.

As I said before, the social impact bond issue just does not provide innovative social services; government investment in social programs and university research is what actually does. Somehow, this is some strange thing, a growth, I could say, an appendage on core social programs, and I just don't think it's an experiment that we have the luxury to afford ourselves here, at this juncture or really any juncture, Mr. Speaker.

I find it strange because, you know, this government does not have to have an aversion to risk. We can take measured risk and progressively step forward, and we do have room to do so, right? When we do feel risk averse, like an investor we can play it safe and invest in many proven social programs, that this government has left gaps in. Simply put, there's no need to look to the private sector for this kind of innovation in social services because this model that's been put forward in Bill 1 just isn't there.

We see some sort of odd, as I say, obtuse sort of experiments in places like New York City, with jails, and, you know, in England and so forth. In other places, like Massachusetts, it was firmly rejected. The innovative social programs that they talk about, like counselling for inmates and so forth – I mean, this whole idea of investing in those things just doesn't seem logical. It seems vaguely distasteful as well, Mr. Speaker. We don't need to go that way. I know there are people that are actively lobbying for this kind of thing, this kind of structure – maybe that's what was going on tonight; I don't know – but ultimately I don't think that Albertans really need this framework that would suggest that social impact bonds could come forward and be anything useful.

There are so many questions around this, right? You know, how can we be sure that the funds will be paid out appropriately and that endowments aren't just some sort of subsidy in some way? It seems as though we've created this Bill 1 as a way to talk about things that need to be invested and talk about spending public money for essential services but without necessarily having to do anything because it's contingent on the heritage trust fund. The whole idea of sort of mixing in the heritage trust fund with this, again, I find not only vaguely illogical but not a little bit distasteful as well.

Why can't government, as I said, just fund these ministries and programs – right? – in the first place so that we don't have to rely on endowment funds and layers of bureaucracy coming from different sources? I mean, this whole idea of endowments has this taste of, you know, Yale or Harvard or something like that, where you put this money away and might bestow it on the poor or something like that. It has this kind of a feel that just doesn't belong here, really. It obfuscates the fact that this is public money anyway. This is not like something that we store away and, you know, maybe save up in some secret little fund to build something cool or whatever that quote was. Again, just way out there. In fact, this is public money, right? And the public expects that we pay for these social services and we pay for public education. Yes, we pay for social innovation, too, but we don't need someone to bet on it through the stock market, to see how it's going to go and then pay out a 10 per cent return on it. I mean, it's not like we're playing the horses here. These are human beings.

Again, the difficulty in finding people that actually are willing to bid on P3s, I think, is an indicator of the market right now and the changing view on these things, that they're not such a great investment anyway, right? You know, the P3 model only makes sense – and I could extend it to the social impact bond endowment sort of scheme – if you are transferring risk over to the investor, I guess. I mean, I don't really like it anyway, but if you're not transferring that risk over, then it's even more illogical and even more nonsensical. It's the same if you don't have multiple bidders for something. If you run a P3 or a social impact bond or whatever and it's just one person, then, in fact, it turns it upside down and becomes a negative, really. That's what we're seeing here with the sort of bumpy ride that P3s have been getting in the investment world over these last few months.

Again, for all of these reasons I certainly don't see the point here. I mean, it'd be nice to have a flagship bill that perhaps is a bit more inspiring instead of, number one, sort of confusing and, number two, just sort of diverting the obvious debate, which is for us to ensure that we provide the best delivery of public services to ensure the maximum return and benefit for the safety and security and health and edification of all Albertans. That's what our job is here, and I don't see that Bill 1 really fits into that ultimate purpose for us here at the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'd be interested to hear the member's opinion of this use of the heritage fund and how it does or does not serve the long-term interests of our children.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. You know, we all watch with interest the heritage trust fund. In fact, I'm on the committee that oversees part of the heritage trust fund. It's been sort of sitting there dormant and stagnant for so many years. I think that we've used some of the money there over the years. In the initial conception and execution of the heritage trust fund I think it had a real, tangible value, right? We helped to invest in structures and in programs and science and grain cars and so forth that, really, not only helped the diversification of our economy but had demonstrable results for Albertans to see.

This idea now of somehow tying the, I guess, expenditure parts of the heritage fund through an endowment program, again, just confuses. If you try to follow the money or follow the logic and then the execution of that money, you know, it just seems to make it that much more convoluted – right? – hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain. I just really don't see that. You know, I think that with our capacity to not use renewable resources to pay for operations of this government but, rather, to build a royalty structure and a corporate tax structure and a personal tax structure that are in keeping with the rest of the modern industrialized world, then you put the money into that heritage trust fund, and you can just leave it there for longer terms. You can get interest off that and use that.

You know, it's the principle. I'm thinking of other trust funds around the world where they just leave the money there. It's serving the double duty of stabilizing the economy, making it bulletproof to the vagaries of the energy market from whence it came, but you're also stabilizing your economy, right? If the Norwegians didn't put all of those billions of dollars to one side, then they would be at risk of distorting and making the diversity of their economy less possible.

I mean, a good heritage fund serves a lot of purposes, and building this gateway to the money to access that heritage fund, I think, is irresponsible. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Horner: Yeah. I just wanted to ask the hon. member – he has obviously got a dislike for endowments – whether he thought that the Alberta heritage trust fund for medical research had served any useful purpose at all over the last number of years and whether or not that endowment should ever have happened, I guess.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks for that. Certainly, it's been a useful enterprise, right? But, I think that, you know, it's not necessarily a model by which we can have a successful extension of that to these other areas. I think that, as I say, when you make an investment through the heritage trust fund, you seek to find places to make investments in medical research, as you say, or actual physical structure or infrastructure or so forth. You don't necessarily have to tie a limit or paint a fence around that. Those are choices we can make here in the Legislature or choices that you can make as a government.

You know, the endowment model, let's say, with medical research over time – certainly, the idea of investing in medical research has been most useful, and certainly we've created good programs around that, but the physical structure of disseminating that money, I think, is not necessarily best represented or executed through endowments. That's my feeling on that. I mean, let's face it. I think everyone here would like to make sure that we do save for the future more and have ways by which we can make longer term investments. I'm just not so excited about the idea of using the endowments to do so.

I mean, it's not a question of how you spend on that thing, like when you're talking about medical investment or, let's say, social services or rehabilitation of prisoners. Those are all obvious things which we should be responsible for, but it's the physical structure of how we do fund those, whether we use endowments or not, that I find less than . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board to close debate on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I rose on 29(2)(a) to ask the hon. member about the heritage trust fund for medical research because, you know, I was going through a lot of Hansard records from 1976, Premier Lougheed, actually, when the heritage savings trust fund was established and again later when the Alberta heritage trust fund for medical research was established by Premier Lougheed as well. He is also the one that was responsible for establishing, as I understand it, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund.

You know, Premier Klein was the one that did the ingenuity fund. We called it the ingenuity fund, but it was the engineering and science research development fund. In fact, Premier Klein was the one that did the access to the future fund, Mr. Speaker.

These are all endowments that were created so that the money could be set aside and the principal held so that the endowment could kick out a stable amount of money every year for the specific purpose of research, of scholarships for our young people. I heard the hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education the other day talking about how Alberta has more scholarships and bursaries for their students than any other province, as I understand it. That's made possible because we have an endowment, Mr. Speaker.

You know, when you think about the $86 million a year that is kicked out from the heritage savings trust fund for medical research, Edmonton has benefited from that fund in a huge way when you look at the University of Alberta, when you look at MacEwan. Calgary has benefited from that in a huge way, Mr. Speaker. The medical devices that are being developed at the U of C, the virology institute and the research that's being done over at the U of A: much of that has been possible because of a stable funding flow from an endowment not subject to the operational ups and downs of the operating budgets of the government.

Premier Lougheed recognized that Albertans wanted to set money aside, but he also recognized that they wanted it to work for them. Premier Klein knew that Albertans wanted us to continue to set money aside. But he, too, also recognized that it should work for them and it should do things that were directed for the future value of Albertans together.

I guess that the hon. members who spoke this evening opposed to the endowments would have voted against endowments back then, too, and that would have been a shame, Mr. Speaker. It would have been a shame to lose that type of forward-thinking vision, and that's what Bill 1 is all about. It's a forward-thinking, visionary bill that sets up three new endowments being created within the heritage savings trust fund as well as the augmentation of the heritage scholarship fund to support the trades. I mean, we hear this every day. We need to have more support for the trades through scholarships as well as stable long-term sources of funding for strategic investments to help complex social problems. They don't have to be social impact bonds. It could be a whole raft of other things.

I'll tell you, the not-for-profit sector is quite excited about this, Mr. Speaker. They're excited to see where this is going to go and what it could possibly be doing. In the coming months Human Services officials are going to be working with stakeholders and leaders in the field of social innovation to identify those priority areas and the projects with the most potential as well as developing a governance structure, application procedures, eligibility criteria, et cetera, for the new endowments. They're excited about what could be, not concerned about what might not be. They're excited about the future of this province, and we all should be here, too. This is what Bill 1 is all about.

There's been some concern expressed about: my God, you're putting money aside, but now you're spending it all. That's just patently untrue. The total value of Alberta's major savings accounts is projected to grow by almost $3 billion over the next three years, to $26 billion by the end of this current three-year fiscal plan. In the final year, when these three endowments are really cooking, $54 million would be transferred out of the heritage fund in respect to those new endowments. Fifty-four million, Mr. Speaker. By comparison, the heritage fund is expected to generate $1.3 billion in that year. That's $1.3 billion. The $54 million transfer represents only about 4 per cent of the heritage fund's projected net investment income in 2016-17.

So we're balancing what Albertans told us: yes, you've got to save for the future and you've got to set it aside and it can't be touched, portions of it, and you have to tell us what you're saving it for. Make it work for us. Make it be something that people in the future will go, "That was a very, very wise thing to do," just as we can stand here today and we can say that Premier Lougheed did a very wise thing when he established the heritage fund for medical research, when he established the scholarship fund; just as we can stand here today and we can say that Premier Klein did a very wise thing when he established the access to the future fund, when he established what we now call the ingenuity fund, because they were for the future of this province, Mr. Speaker; just as we can say today and they will say 10 years from now that the Premier in 2014 did a very wise thing with Bill 1. That's why we should support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Bill 2 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called for Bill 2.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Bill 3 Securities Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: Is there a speaker? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say a couple of words in regard to Bill 3. This seems to be a means by which to modernize and streamline the security laws for these over-the-counter derivatives, known as OTCs, and to harmonize derivatives in general. I guess one of the issues that this brings to mind for me is just, I think, the importance of us looking for a national regulator for these things and to work with. There is a co-operative framework going in with B.C. and Ontario and the federal government. You know, it just really illustrates the desire and the need to have a national regulator.

I know that we've resisted that here in Alberta in the past, but every time one of these things comes up, the need to regulate derivatives and so forth, we're ultimately going to just be kind of duplicating something that's happening elsewhere anyway, right? The larger benefits of having a national regulator in Alberta participating in the national regulatory system I think just far outweigh any reason that seems to come up every so often here why we resist that. You know, we are one of the leading sort of engines of our national economy here, too, so we have an increasing responsibility on that national stage to set standards and participate in these sorts of things, so it would be nice if we might consider that in the future. I always will bring it up every time this kind of thing is coming forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Kubinec moved, seconded by Mr. McDonald, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anyone that wishes to speak who hasn't spoken before? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and respond formally to the Speech from the Throne His Honour presented last week. It's important that Albertans hear from the Premier and the government in the new year and understand that this sets the tone for the legislative session and potentially the year of activity in the Legislature but also reflects on, hopefully, beyond that year into the distant future. It should entail a clear vision, a sense of values and principles. It should engender enthusiasm and inspiration in the members here seated, and in the population it should set out some concrete goals and steps in getting toward and achieving that vision. Finally, Mr. Speaker, it should be consistent with the past year or two in office and recognize what has been accomplished and what is yet to be accomplished.

Unfortunately, this speech did none of those things, Mr. Speaker, and I don't think it achieved any level of trust with the Legislature. The faces of the government clearly showed very little enthusiasm, very little inspiration around this speech. There wasn't nearly the exuberance that we've heard in the past, and there was a real sense of déjà vu and I would say ennui, or boredom, in much of the rehashed platitudes.

Again, the throne speech really lacked a sense of foresight, a clear look into the future and some of the challenges we're facing in this country and in this world and a willingness to embrace it with humility; the tremendous need for a trust-building engagement process that would be credible and really show an adaptive leadership that is recognizing the new evidence that is before us; longer term investments in people, in the environment, in energy, and a recognition that people within government as well as in our society are demoralized – they're anxious. They see real problems ahead with a government that has continued to have a fairly monolithic view of what this province is all about as a resource-based economy and doesn't yet see the longer term implications of this gross dependency on one product, one resource.

"Adaptive management" is a term that I have learned, and it's used increasingly to distinguish short-term economic focus from longer term global horizons of caring and responsibility. Programs called Leadership Calgary and Leadership Edmonton may be familiar to people. Ken Low initiated it in Calgary, and he has had a tremendous impact on hundreds of young professionals who are seriously interested in looking at the roots of error and ignorance and waste and identifying within themselves and within their culture some of the conditioning that has resulted in poor long-term planning, limited commitment to evidence, and a lack of real foresight and self-critical diligence in planning for a wiser use of resources and capacity building in our population.

Albertans, especially young people, are rightly concerned where this 43-year-old government is going with respect to their future. Where is any indication of a sustainable economy, a diverse and responsible energy future, and an environment that is so prized that it will be independently and scientifically monitored at the highest standards and enforced with rigour and real consequences? More and more of our population, especially young people, recognize that the debts are mounting in this province. Especially the young people are going to be paying those debts in the future, not only in real-dollar terms, where their education and cost of living is acutely being felt, but that there are going to be significantly increased resources needed for seniors' care and new Canadians and the challenges that our environmental liabilities increasingly are going to put upon future generations.

And what of climate change, Mr. Speaker? Nary a mention. The largest challenge facing this generation and perhaps the largest challenge facing the planet in our history, it got no mention at all. What does this mean? It's like we're living in a bubble here in Alberta and dragged into the 21st century only reluctantly, with scientists almost to a man and a woman saying: take this issue seriously. This is not only going to affect us; it is going to affect the most vulnerable around the world, and our children are going to pay a huge price by ignoring this most fundamental threat to survival.

Instead, we see a government countering any criticism of our fossil fuel obsession with more strident and more costly communications. How can people, especially our young people, have trust in a government that still doesn't acknowledge that our groundwater has been contaminated by the oil and gas industry? Not a single water well in this province has the department of environment acknowledged as contaminated by the oil and gas industry.

What does this say about a government that says that it's acting in the public interest and wants and believes in the best of science and evidence? It's an abomination, Mr. Speaker, and it speaks to a very fearful and duplicitous government that does not want to know the truth about what we've been doing in the last hundred years in this province with over 300,000 wells.

Climate change gets mentioned in the same sentence as our pathetic carbon levy, which amounts to about $2.50 a tonne, really, as an intensity target based on a company reducing its emissions per barrel by 12 per cent, not on reducing absolute emissions. Yet the environment minister continues to argue, as she did over the past four years, that we are making progress on carbon reductions.

Another area of loss of trust is in our markets, Mr. Speaker, and that's speaking loudly to this government, if they're willing to hear, about a world that's embracing alternatives and energy conservation and renewable energy alternatives in a serious way. There's not only an economic boon but also a moral commitment to a better future on the planet.

Trust is a reason to vote for a government, and trust will be the reason why Albertans get actively involved in the next election and throw out this tired old government: distrust over wasteful spending, shocking salaries and severances, and the growing inequality of our people, especially our aboriginal people, who continue to be marginalized, neglected, and, unfortunately, continue to be abused and discriminated against in a society that has not yet embraced the reconciliation and real openness of a caring and responsible society.

They continue to languish in squalid conditions, in limbo between federal and provincial jurisdictions, as I heard from the Congress of Aboriginal Peoples last night in their very moving presentations around off-reserve First Nations people struggling to get their lives together in our cities and towns, doubly wounded by the failure of our human services to learn and work from a cultural sensitivity perspective around the deep wounds in a people that have been only nominally consulted as their lands and their livelihoods flee to large development interests and short-term financial gain.

We are blessed with tremendous renewable energy assets and yet continue to increasingly flare gases into the atmosphere and allow countless numbers of old and even newer oil and gas wells to leak methane into our environment, adding to our tremendous carbon emissions in this province, the highest per capita in the world, which many people don't necessarily realize. It's a shock to realize that Alberta has the highest per capita carbon emissions on the planet. Yes, we have a smaller population, but with our science and our amazing opportunity here we need to show leadership in these many areas that demonstrate negligence and actually further damage our primary industry.

If Keystone fails to go through, this government has to take primary responsibility for it, for failing to act on all of the threats in our environment but especially on the very slow and inadequate response to climate change. Positive communications cannot undo these failings, nor can all the visits to Washington or to British Columbia or to Ottawa. Higher standards and honest, independent monitoring and enforcement alone can restore public and international trust and respect.

Young people are awakening to this massive debt – environmental, social, and financial – as they are going to be facing it and somehow managing it. If I were a young person today, I would be anxious about my future.

Lougheed's advice, often touted and recently touted by the Finance minister here, is largely ignored. He talked very passionately about the oil sands, about managing the pace and scale of development there, about ensuring cleanup before you extend the oil sands. No small reflection in this government of an intent to do that.

This throne speech reflects no vision but adherence to the status quo. It gives little assurance that anything has been learned from the gold rush mentality that has dominated Alberta for the past 20 years.

There's been no indication of better management of the scale and pace of development of the oil sands, as I indicated, and the environmental liabilities that mount by the day in the face of lame laments that we can't keep up with population growth. Well, what did we expect when we predicted 3 million barrels a day by 2025? Did we not expect that the population would grow? Where was the money to come from? No plan.

Other countries like Norway are capable of living off the interest of their nonrenewable resource wealth. We don't even approach anything like the leadership that Norway has shown in the public interest. Long-term public interest: that's what we're here for, and that's what we see very little evidence of in this government.

Our crucial human services and education and municipal infrastructure must live with oil price changes instead of assured, stable funding based on a stable revenue stream. We live at the whim of oil prices. What does it say about responsible leadership in the public interest when our most vulnerable, when our hospitals, when our education system depend on the price of oil?

This province continues to plan from election to election. Let us stop resorting to black-white, simplistic thinking on the question of whether this is a government that has a spending problem or a revenue problem. This is a management problem.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there any other speakers?

Hon. Government House Leader, you're moving to adjourn debate?

Mr. Campbell: To adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Let's call it a night, and we'll meet tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:19 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to always know what is true, pure, and just. Enlighten our minds and our hearts with thoughts of peace, respect, and freedom as we fulfill our commitment to serve others. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and, in fact, through you to all members of this august Assembly Deanna Holt. Deanna is a lifelong Calgarian who is currently working in the nonprofit sector for CUPS, an organization that is dedicated to moving individuals and families out of poverty and into independence. Further – and this may surprise you – Deanna is also a testament to the fact that the age of miracles has not passed. How, might you ask. Well, let me tell you. Deanna is also my girlfriend, whom I love very much. She is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask all members of the Assembly to give Deanna our traditional warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of employees from the Provincial Archives of Alberta who are touring the Legislature today. These men and women are some of the fabulous individuals who work day in and day out at the archives to preserve historical documents and make them available to all Albertans. They do the important job of making sure that our past can be remembered and celebrated. I thank them all for their hard work, and I would ask them to please stand as I call their names: Kimberley Main, Sara King, Meghan Leschert, Adam Wisheu, Laurette Miller, Jaelyn Landry, and Lucas Antoniuk. Please welcome them to the Assembly.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of students at law who are articling at the Edmonton courts. They are here to gain an understanding of the law-making process and to explore the jurisdictional boundaries between courts and Legislatures. They met this morning with our Clerk and Law Clerk and director of interparliamentary relations as well as the Chief Legislative Counsel. They will meet with a couple of our members following question period. Some members here may recognize Jennifer Huygen in the group, who is not only articling as a student at law but is a former page. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them all to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you. It's indeed a pleasure of mine to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a leader in my community who is here today on his way to the northern Alberta leaders' summit in Athabasca tomorrow to be a moderator. It is my pleasure to introduce Mr. Don Hnatiuk. He's the president and CEO of the Grande Prairie Regional College, and I'm thrilled he's here today. I'd ask him to stand – I think he's standing already, Mr. Speaker; it's hard to tell – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly four representatives that are directly involved in an exciting upcoming Edmonton concert on Saturday, March 15, which commemorates the 200th anniversary of Taras Shevchenko, Ukrainian national poet, accomplished artist, and hero to the Ukrainian people world-wide. My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names. I would like to welcome this afternoon Mr. Laurence Ewashko from the province of Ontario, a former conductor of the Vienna Boys' Choir, renowned world-wide for his significant contributions to vocal music, who will be directing two choirs at the Shevchenko concert; Mrs. Luba Feduschak, president, Ukrainian Canadian Congress Edmonton branch; Mrs. Luba Boyko-Bell, president, Ukrainian Music Society of Alberta and vice-president Ukrainian Canadian Congress Edmonton branch; and Mr. Michael Bell, member, Ukrainian Music Society of Alberta. I would now ask the Assembly to join me and give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, you had a second introduction?

Mrs. Jablonski: That's correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I have the great privilege today of introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly Diane Gramlich, a young woman for whom I have a great deal of love and respect. Diane Gramlich is here today to hear my member's statement for Marlin Styner, her late husband and one of Alberta's most dedicated citizens. Diane Gramlich is also one of Alberta's most dedicated citizens. Diane is in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five residents of the West Springs, Cougar Ridge, and Aspen communities. These residents, parents all, represent an advocacy group from west Calgary that's sounding the clarion call for new schools in their neighbourhood. Specifically, they need a middle school to help address capacity issues facing schools in their area. Their area currently has four of the top ten priority spots on the CBE plan. There are only three public elementary schools west of Sarcee, no middle school, one high school, all of them near or well over capacity. They have been gathering support for new schools in the area for the past six months from families in the area, and they've been tireless advocates for their communities. I'd ask them to please stand as I call their names: Mrs. Deanna Bradley, Mr. John Pantazopoulos, Mrs. Melanie Derwantz, Mrs. Robyn Plotnikoff, and Mr. Sean Alexander. I would ask them to rise, please, and receive the traditional warm greetings of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you 55 students and their teachers Amanda Fayed and Tandy Atchison from Campbelltown elementary school in Sherwood Park. That's one of the finest schools in Sherwood Park. If they could please stand up, we could show them the warm welcome from the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the MLA for St. Albert it's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from Neil M. Ross elementary school, located in the constituency of St. Albert. Accompanying these bright and energetic students is Mrs. Savoie, Mr. Robertson, and Mr. Arlinghaus. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would thank them for coming in today, and I would ask these guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Sherwood Park, you have a second introduction?

Ms Olesen: I do. I have on my list here that a group from Our Lady of The Prairies school is here. I'm sure they're a mighty fine school, too. If they could please rise, we could show them a warm welcome.

1:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the mayor of Lacombe, Steve Christie. Steve has served on Lacombe council for two years. He was first elected mayor in 2010 and re-elected this past October. Steve and his wife Cheryl live in Lacombe, where they raised two daughters. He is the proud grandfather of Lylah, Lilly, and Jayda. Mayor Christie was one of my opponents in the last provincial election, and I thank him for his ongoing contribution to public service and democracy in this province. I'll ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the House Mr. Devon McDonald and Stephanie Belland. They represent two organizations. The first, Voice for Animals Humane Society, founded in 1997, is an Edmonton-based animal protection advocacy and rescue organization. V4A is dedicated to fighting the abuse and exploitation of all animals through education and lobbying on their behalf. The second: Stephanie Belland represents the Council of Concerned Albertans for Animal Welfare and Public Safety, a group of citizens who believe in active and consistent enforcement of Alberta zoo standards. The two organizations have recently joined forces in addressing the ongoing substandard conditions at Guzoo Animal Farm. Could they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Jamie Post. Jamie is the co-ordination and communications director at the Alberta Disability Workers Association, an organization which is committed to education and training for disability workers in Alberta. One of Jamie's major concerns with this PC government's 2014 budget is the lack of clarity and certainty regarding a commitment to wage increases for front-line PDD workers. I would now ask Jamie to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great group of student advocates that I met with earlier today. Bethany Tynes, Jessica Turowski, Thomas Ridgeway, and Teresa Currie join us from the Alberta Students' Executive Council. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No stranger to this Assembly, a very engaged political voice: I would like to introduce Rory Koopmans in the Legislature today and give him the honourable welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Marlin Styner

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 28, 2014, Alberta lost one of its greatest leaders in the disability community and in the province. Marlin Styner died at the age of 51 years, after filling every day with purpose even after a car crash in 1981, when he sustained a serious spinal cord injury and became a quadriplegic.

With the dedicated support of family, friends, and the community Marlin was able to fulfill one of his life's goals when he received a business administration diploma from Red Deer College. Marlin had a desire to give back to the community, so he became a passionate public speaker and volunteered wherever he could to make a difference. He spoke to over 1 million youth about injury prevention and to thousands of adults about universal design, motivation, and overcoming personal and physical barriers. I can tell you that even though Marlin lived his life in a wheelchair, he walked the talk. He was an inspiration to all who had the privilege of knowing him.

You can read Marlin's biography, and you will be amazed at the number of boards and agencies that he served on, including the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. You will be incredulous at the many awards he received and the many achievement awards named after Marlin. Marlin was an extraordinary person who made this a better world. He taught me and many others about the importance of accessibility and visibility.

In the last 13 years of his life Marlin had an angel by his side: his wife, Diane Gramlich. I can't say enough about the dedication and love that I have seen in Diane's words and actions. Marlin's parents, Roy and Nora Styner, were totally dedicated to their son with their unconditional love and support.

Marlin had many, many friends who loved and appreciated him. Close to 1,000 friends and family attended his celebration of life on Monday.

We will all miss Marlin. We will miss his passion, his words of wisdom, his friendship, his love for others, and his smile.

Please join me in thanking Marlin Styner and Diane Gramlich for their outstanding, passionate, and dedicated service to the people of Alberta. [Standing ovation]

The Deputy Speaker: I'd recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for the next member's statement.

Farm Worker Labour Protection

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Agricultural Safety Week reminds us that agriculture is still one of the most dangerous occupations in Alberta. Over the past 20 years 355 farm workers have died, including four to eight children per year. Unlike nearly all other occupations in Alberta, however, farm workers do not have the benefit of occupational health and safety standards or workers' compensation even in large industrial cattle, hog, dairy, grain, potato, and sugar beet operations: for every death approximately 25 hospital admissions each year, resulting in millions of dollars borne by the public health system instead of employer insurance through WCB. One would think the increasing rates of child deaths would motivate this government to legislate child labour standards also, but no.

Three years ago the Premier promised to address this gross inequity and has done nothing. Recently the minister of jobs initiated an OH and S inspection of ski hills, which resulted in a 60 per cent reduction in infractions from the previous year to protect health. To quote the minister: employers in other high-risk industries should take notice; we're coming to visit them next. End of quote. When will this include industrial farming operations? To quote Dr. Bob Barnetson of Athabasca University: low labour costs reduce the price of food, and cheap food policy meets the needs of both businesses and nonagricultural workers and is a form of state subsidy to the business community. End quote. However, keeping labour costs low results in greater injury to low-income workers and violates their rights to equal treatment in the workplace, including the right to know about hazards and refuse unsafe work conditions.

Farmers exert significant pressure on this government to maintain the status quo because exploiting farm workers helps them cope with the financial pressures they face from agribusiness. Decades of fruitless advocacy led by two courageous former farm workers, Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, have been ignored. It's reprehensible that the only recourse now appears to be a costly constitutional challenge on behalf of those who feed us against the Alberta government to achieve the most basic of worker rights in the 21st century.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

School Construction Needs

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak for the thousands of parents who despite our best efforts still need schools for their children to attend. My riding in particular is in dire need of at least one school to keep young children in their own neighbourhood, properly rested and ready to learn.

Mr. Speaker, you may have noticed news reports of dozens of parents filling the lobby at the Calgary board of education this week to file an appeal. Well, these same parents along with some 4,000 others from the area are signatories on a petition that I will be presenting to this House.

West Springs is home to nearly 8,000 people, with a 36 per cent growth rate over the last five years, and it borders Aspen Woods and Cougar Ridge, where the need for a middle school is also dire. There are 5,200 people living in Aspen Woods, nearly 6,000 in Cougar Ridge, and they have teamed with the West Springs residents to bring a middle school to the area.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Calgary board of education has its own system for assessing need when deciding who gets a school, and heaven forbid that I would intrude on that process, but I also realize that the members opposite have their own system for assessing the need for schools in this province. On February 13 of this year the Member for Airdrie said that he thinks we're going to have enough schools, a statement most school boards would disagree with. Heaven forbid that I would intrude on that process.

Mr. Speaker, I can and do speak to the need to continue with the work that we have been doing for the last year. Building Alberta has already announced the construction of 50 new schools, schools that are needed to keep our province moving forward, but we cannot stop there. The need is too great. Our province must meet the needs of the population, a population that's growing in leaps and bounds. Thirty-six hundred new students entered Calgary's public school system last fall, and the CBE expects another 9,000 new students over the next three years.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Cabinet Travel to Grande Prairie

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier repaid $45,000 for the South Africa trip, and I'd like to congratulate her for finally doing the right thing. However, we know that this is not the only instance of abuse. We now know that the Premier and her cabinet ministers used government aircraft to attend partisan PC fundraisers, as they did on October 25, 2012. The flight manifest lists the reason for the trip as meetings with government officials. To the Transportation minister, who was on that flight that day. The plane landed at 4:32 p.m. The PC fundraiser began at 5:20 p.m. Which government officials did he meet with in those 48 minutes?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. This gives me the opportunity to talk about all the flights I took around Alberta that week. That week I flew to Lethbridge, I flew to Medicine Hat, I flew to Edson, and I flew to High Prairie to announce hospital announcements, and the fifth one in that roll of announcements happened to be in Grande Prairie. I'm glad she gave me the opportunity to stand up and tell the people watching today how this government is building Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The real answer is no one.

Mr. Speaker, it's beyond alarming that these ministers don't know the difference between a government event and a PC Party event, and that's exactly why we're in this mess. Since the Transportation minister can't seem to grasp that difference, let's try the Health minister, who was also on the flight that day. The plane landed at 4:32 p.m. The PC fundraiser began at 5:20 p.m. Which government officials did he meet with in those 48 minutes before the PC fundraiser began and where?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, these questions have been asked and answered several times this week, including a considerable portion of House time that was devoted yesterday to a point of privilege presented against myself that was not upheld by the Speaker. We've answered these questions. We're ready to move on.

Ms Smith: You may be able to take two different accounts and believe they're both true, but we know that the public is not going to believe that.

They say that they had a media event planned that day in Grande Prairie, but no media notices went out. According to the day's ministerial absences neither the Health minister nor the Transportation minister nor the Premier were expected to be absent from this Assembly that day, meaning they were scheduled to be right here when the supposed media event was going to happen. To the Finance minister: will he just admit his colleagues abused the government plane to attend a PC Party fundraiser and get the money back?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this government works every day. This government works in every community across this province. The Premier and ministers travel to parts of the province to meet with Albertans, to talk with Albertans about their issues and their concerns, and to let Albertans know when something exciting is happening in their community that they've been requesting for a long, long time, and that's exactly what happened this day and every other day the opposition complains about. The public of Alberta wants to see their ministers, wants to see their Premier, and wants to talk about the exciting way that we're building Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, your next main question.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they clearly have learned nothing from their recent troubles.

Public Body Executive Travel Expenses

Ms Smith: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler has been raising some very important points about abuse of taxpayer dollars in Travel Alberta, an agency of the government. Many of the worst practices that the opposition works hard at exposing in the government appear to be going on here: expensing tuxedo rentals, expensive bottles of wine, $99 steaks, among other abuses. These employees are government appointees. Will the Premier extend Treasury Board expense rules and oversight to these entities?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear on this issue. While I am very proud of the work that Travel Alberta does and what they have achieved, I am not at all happy about any suggestion of improper expense claims. That's why I've directed Travel Alberta to conduct a full and thorough review of all expenses, and that review is to be conducted by an independent third party. Only by doing this can Albertans be assured that the tourism marketing agency is conducting itself in full accordance with the stated expense policies which are followed by Travel Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Hon. leader, your first supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Member from Drumheller-Stettler has made clear, the senior people at agencies, boards, and commissions deserve increased scrutiny. You may recall that the government sunshine list does not cover the salaries and benefits of those who work for these organizations. To the Premier: when will her government expand the sunshine list to include all of the additional employees who get money from the taxpayer?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's great to have an opportunity to speak about our government's sunshine list. It's been called a big win for taxpayers. It's been called the gold standard example for other jurisdictions to follow. We are looking at the legal framework to expand our policy, and that work is under way.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, all of the very highest paid government employees work for agencies, boards, and commissions. For instance, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, ATB Financial, and the Alberta Electric System Operator all have employees that earn more than $800,000 a year. This means that the sunshine list, far from being transparent and complete and a gold standard, does not disclose the pay and perks for the most expensive people on the government payroll. When will the Premier expand the sunshine list to include all taxpayer-paid employees?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this government is delivering unprecedented transparency. It's something this government promised and something we're delivering. Part of that is our expense disclosure policy. Part of that is the whistle-blower legislation that we delivered. Now we have delivered a sunshine list, and we are looking at ways to expand that, and that work is under way.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, your next main question.

Ms Smith: I guess that answer is still no, Mr. Speaker.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Ms Smith: Yesterday the Premier did the right thing. Earlier in the week the Minister of Municipal Affairs also did the right thing when he announced that the government was firing LandLink. There are reports that in Medicine Hat LandLink was paid $26 million to distribute about $20 million to affected homeowners after the 2010 flood. Now, that clearly can't be right, Mr. Speaker, but Albertans won't know for sure unless the minister releases the terms of their contract. Will the minister release the contract and tell Albertans how many millions of disaster relief dollars LandLink will keep?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I made clear yesterday – and I saw some erroneous news reports yesterday that I'd like to clarify as well. The transition contract with LandLink actually commences at the end of March. The contract that they're currently in ends at the end of March. There's a transition one after that. There are about a dozen DRP files that remain open, where the government of Canada actually still owes Alberta money as well. Some of those files are still quite open.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister committed to closing 90 per cent of the DRP claims in the next 17 days . . .

An Hon. Member: Residential.

Ms Smith: Residential claims – fair enough – 90 per cent of them. . . . despite the fact that minimal progress has been made in the last nine months, as he well knows. We are concerned about how they're going to do this. I'm already hearing reports of homeowners getting file closure letters when their issues have not been resolved. I am predicting that this is going to be a mess. How will the minister deal with the improperly closed cases after LandLink is supposedly done on March 31?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, there is a deliberate attempt here, it would appear, to misrepresent what I have said. What I have said is that LandLink will continue to be responsible through this transition phase to administer the 2013 DRP program. It could take some time to resolve all outstanding files. What I asked the officials to do was to bring me a proposal whereby we could close 90 per cent of the residential files by the end of March. Now, we have . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, your final supplemental.

Ms Smith: It's not quite what the minister said yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

But the minister did say that he wanted to hear from people about their files. Now, my constituency office gets lots of requests for help from families who are desperate for assistance with the disaster recovery program. When people come to us for help with the health system, with workers' compensation, or any other government program, there are defined processes and liaison people we can contact. But if it's a DRP file, there's no one we can speak to, no process to get information, and the information we do manage to get is very often deceitful. How will the minister change that?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. leader would not actually suggest that deceitful is the normal course of business. I can tell you that the process is quite open. In fact, the Premier has appointed three very able associate ministers who work with individuals throughout the province, throughout the areas that have been affected. We've paid out just in the town of High River 2,200 DRP payments as of last Friday. We also have an independent DRP appeals branch to review . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Child Poverty

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has promised to eliminate child poverty by 2017, an extraordinary claim, particularly as we approach the halfway mark of her term, we presume. The former Human Services minister excused the lack of progress by saying that they'd not settled on a definition of child poverty. Now, other jurisdictions have put in place many concrete actions to eliminate child poverty – school breakfast programs, child tax benefits, affordable child care – but so far nothing from this government. To the Human Services minister: after 43 years in power has your government yet defined child poverty? If so, what is it?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, we're working very closely with our stakeholders, and we'll be coming out with an action plan, a strategy on child poverty. Child poverty is something that affects countless Alberta families. There's no question about that. There's no doubt, though, that Alberta's robust economy, Alberta's robust set of opportunities help all families. We know that child poverty can't be alleviated without working specifically with underlying issues and causes of poverty for all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Minister, I'll give you another chance. Have you defined child poverty yet, and if so, what is it? What is the definition of child poverty?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, there are a multitude of different measures in defining poverty – period – a multitude of them. What I'm interested in is how we can help those that are suffering, that don't have all the opportunities that the rest of us may enjoy, how we can help them move on, and how we can help them further advance their opportunities. We're moving forward with initiatives like the youth plan on homelessness. I had a series of meetings yesterday meeting with specific . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, core funding for a single parent with a child in this province is $600 to $1,000 a month. How can anybody take you seriously when you say that you want to address child poverty?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I'm tempted to say: how can anyone take that party over there seriously when they've done the types of things they've done over the past period of time? But that would be silly. That would be below us.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta is a place with great opportunities, but there are those that are, unfortunately, stuck in the continuous cycle of poverty. We have to do everything we can to help them move out of that. That means working very, very closely with all of our partners to make sure we break the cycle, and that's what we're going to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Medical Laboratory Services Contract

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the deadline for the request for proposals closed on the massive privatization of lab services in Edmonton. The request for proposal clearly states that Alberta Health Services can make public the names of those people who have submitted propositions under the RFP. Albertans have a right to this information. To the Minister of Health: will you ensure the release of the list of bidders on that RFP to the public right away, and if not, why not?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have in front of me the details of the RFP to which the hon. member is referring. I'll be pleased to look into that. Certainly, if a commitment has been made and if the rules and procedures governing the RFP allow that information to be made public, it will be.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that. If the minister will tell us when, that would be great.

A number of the companies that are understood to be bidders on this $3 billion privatization contract have repeatedly been accused and convicted in the United States of overcharging state governments for their services. Albertans have a right to know if it is acceptable to this PC government to award a $3 billion contract to a company with a history of illegal activity. Is it, Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member – and I’m sure he knows this – is clearly within the realm of speculation. I’m not going to aid and abet the characterization of any organization that may have chosen to respond to an open tender for proposals, particularly for such an important project in our health care system. He’ll have to make do with that.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, but I’m not going to make do with it, Mr. Speaker.

The question to the minister is: as a matter of government policy does the government award major contracts to companies with a history of illegal activity? Yes or no?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the rules and procedures that govern procurement practices in the government and in Alberta Health Services as an agency of the government of Alberta are clearly spelled out. I’m sure the hon. member can take a few moments to educate himself as to what those rules and procedures would be, and in doing so, he would recognize that this is not a matter of policy. This is a matter of appropriate procurement practice, to which we adhere in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, the time for preambles has passed, so in the next set of questions there will be no preambles after the first opening question.

Educational Curriculum Redesign

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, it’s getting more and more difficult to trust anything that this Education minister says about the discovery learning rewrite of the Alberta curriculum. In this House he stands and says that it’s absolute rubbish that his department is shifting away from traditional learning, but in his own Inspiring Education report he promises to shift education to a process of inquiry and discovery, and as we speak, this is how our kids are being taught. Minister, why are you backing away from your own document, or are you trying to confuse parents, just as you are their kids?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it’s good to finally hear that the Wildrose does not support Inspiring Education. They do not support the initiatives that were in Inspiring Education, and they don’t support that document. That means no dual crediting, no high school flexibility. We would go back to PATs and not the new student learner assessments.

But I’m happy to answer the question that he’s posed. The new curriculum that we’re talking about – and let’s be clear. Curriculum is not just instruction. Curriculum is the what; instruction is the how. So when we’re talking about curriculum redesign, we’re talking about what the outcomes are . . . [interjections] Clearly, they don’t want to hear.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member. First supplemental, with no preamble.

Mr. McAllister: Let’s be clear, Mr. Speaker. What Wildrose supports is listening to parents, teachers, and students.

Given that the words “discover” or “discovery” appear 13 times in this minister’s Inspiring Education report, why does the minister continue pushing this New Age, edubabble-filled report and philosophy on Alberta families when thousands of Alberta parents and teachers are pleading with him to go back to the basics, that have served Alberta kids so well for so long?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the other thing parents want is that they want schools, and they don’t support that either.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with using the word . . . [interjections] There’s nothing wrong with using the word “discovery” in a document. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: I think we’d like to hear the answer, hon. members.

Mr. J. Johnson: I’m happy to give an answer, Mr. Speaker. There’s nothing wrong with using the word “discovery” in a document. It doesn’t mean that we’re moving towards a system that they’ve described, where the student is completely self-directing their learning or where the teacher is simply the partner in education. That is absolutely rubbish. We already use inquiry-based learning. Those are methods . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McAllister: If the minister would stick to one story, he wouldn’t be stuck for an answer when I ask him questions.

Given that Manitoba’s recent experiment with discovery learning came to a screeching halt when that province’s education minister said that there has to be a basic foundation in regard to adding and subtracting and memorizing facts and knowing how to do math at an early age, why is the minister insistent on adopting a model that has failed elsewhere and is clearly failing here in Alberta?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, nothing is further from the truth. Our system is fantastic. He says that it’s on the skids. He has said that our system is on the skids and it’s failing. It’s not. We’re one of the top-performing jurisdictions in the world, but we can do better. It’s not the basics and old school. It’s not rote memorizations or inquiry-based learning or discovery learning. All of those things can happen together. Those are best left up to the professionals in the classroom to decide what methods to use in instruction. We’re talking about curriculum, which is the what, which is the outcome of the system. We’re not talking about the method of instruction. They want to continue to try to confuse Albertans, and hopefully that separates . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Traffic Court Reform Initiative

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. I have heard lots of concerns from my constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods about reforming traffic tickets court. It has been suggested that a new administrative process would be in place that would replace the traditional court system. My question to the minister: why do we have to reform the traffic court in this manner?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Traffic ticket court cases are the most common case in Alberta by a long shot, 1.9 million traffic court cases a year, roughly 300,000 criminal court cases by comparison. It involves a lot of time for police officers but also a lot of time for the public when they deal with long lineups. These lineups are only going to get worse as Alberta keeps attracting more and more people, and having a traffic court in the downtown has also been raised as an issue. We're looking into this because there has to be a better way and a more efficient way to respect the whole issue behind traffic tickets.

Mr. Quadri: To the same minister again: is it true that Albertans will lose their right to fight a traffic ticket?

Mr. Denis: One-word answer: no. I don't believe that it would be constitutional in any way to go and deal with that particular matter.

I think it's more important to have an easier and less intimidating process that serves the needs of all Albertans, knowing that the vast majority of people dealing with traffic tickets do so on their own as self-represented litigants, without a lawyer or traffic ticket agent, even though that is their right.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. I would ask the minister to stand in this House and guarantee that Albertans will not lose their right to fight a traffic ticket.

Mr. Denis: The one thing, Mr. Speaker, that is not on the table with our consultation with respect to traffic court reform is the right to fight a ticket. That will never be infringed, period. You'll always have the right to fight a traffic ticket, full stop.

I want to hear from all Albertans on this. E-mail me at traffic.reform@gov.ab.ca. I want to hear from you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Sherwood Park. [interjections]

Hon. members, please. We'd like to hear the questions and the answers.

Abuse of Seniors in Care

Mrs. Towle: On February 28 the government quietly released the protection for persons in care report on their website, nine months after it was due, alarming since the report found that there were 166 confirmed cases of abuse. Even more alarming is that the report comes on the heels of three health care workers being charged for abusing a senior in care. This isn't the first time this has happened. Sadly, it's not even the second. Wildrose has brought several cases of abuse to this minister's attention, and every time this minister told Albertans that these were one-offs. Minister, how can Albertans have confidence in the safety of their loved ones in care when your own government delays the very reports they rely on?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure neither this minister nor any member of this government ever said that these situations were one-offs. These are matters that we take extremely seriously. I spoke to this after the report was released. In fact, I'm surprised it took the opposition this long to raise the report in the Legislative Assembly. We have very strong protection for persons in care legislation in this province. I have asked my department to go back and look at recommendations that have been made, including the recommendations this year with respect to founded allegations of abuse to ensure those recommendations . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Towle: I'll remind the minister that it was the government's job to release the report in July of last year.

Minister, Albertans cannot comprehend or even imagine a senior being abused, let alone learn from your own report that 22 per cent of the abuses that were founded were of a sexual nature. What is the minister doing to stop this horrific abuse?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the people of this province cannot imagine any member of this Assembly trying to make cheap political points by exploiting these situations.

Mr. Speaker, the responsible position and the position of this government is to do everything we can to make sure that the very strong legislation that we have is enforced. This legislation includes a very broad definition of the term "abuse." Many members of this caucus, including the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, spent the last part of the fall touring the province, making people aware that this legislation exists and how to access it . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your final supplemental. No preamble.

Mrs. Towle: Standing up for Albertans is never considered cheap politics, Minister.

There are 18 founded instances of sexual abuse of seniors in care in your very own report, that you delayed for nine months. Why have Albertans not heard of 18 charges being laid against the alleged abusers?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I've asked the Department of Health to look at all of the founded allegations of abuse, to ensure the recommendations that were made are being implemented, and in addition to look at what else we can do to strengthen the compliance mechanisms. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, I'm at the point where I can't even hear my own answer. I'll conclude by saying that we take the issue extremely seriously. We have loved ones in care as well. There is absolutely no excuse for any instance of abuse in this province, and this legislation is in place to protect Albertans from any such event.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, please. When we ask a question, I would assume we would like to hear the answer and not heckle the minister while he's trying to answer it. [interjections] Please.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Skilled Trades Journeyman Certification

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's strong labour market is a trademark of this province. A key element of this success is the exceptional apprenticeship training programs we have in place. However, it's been brought to my attention that some individuals have experienced significant delays in receiving their Alberta journeyman certificates even after successful completion of their programs. To the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education: can you please identify potential causes for these delays?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an important question. The hon. member is correct. We are experiencing delays in the certification process due to a very high number of applicants. In recognition of the importance of getting these certificates to tradespeople, our ministry has assigned staff temporarily to process the files that are ready for certification and to deal with the backlog as quickly as possible. The review process is significant and necessary to ensure that individuals certified have met all the standards that are expected of a certified tradesperson, but we must do that in an expeditious way, and we will.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that these workers need a physical certificate to complete advanced training in their respective fields and that these certificates sometimes can be delayed for a variety of reasons, has the option of an online certification or proof of completion system been explored?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the official certificate itself is of value to the tradesperson but so is the proof of certification, which could be done more easily, perhaps, online. We are exploring that option so that they can have the proof of their certification in hand on a timely basis so that they can pursue further educational opportunities. Of course, the certification itself doesn't hold up their ability to work or their ability to work at an advanced level as long as they have the proof that they've achieved that status. We're working to do that as quickly as we can.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. Given that there are concerns that trade programs will be overlooked in favour of traditional university programs, can the same minister please identify for the House current initiatives in place that demonstrate a strong commitment to these trade and technical school programs?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is very important. It's very important that as we talk about Albertans advancing their education, we celebrate and encourage every type of education. Trades and apprenticeship programs are a very, very important part of the education system in this province. In fact, we educate 22 per cent of the apprentices across the country. That's much, much higher than the level of our population, obviously. So we take it very seriously, and we encourage it a lot. The new Bill 1, with $200 million going into the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, will actually enhance by $9 million a year the funds that we . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Farm Worker Labour Protection

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For decades this PC government has dodged and ignored the basic 19th century human rights of paid farm workers to have a safe workplace under the guise of, quote, protecting the family farm. End quote.

Somehow Saskatchewan and B.C. have managed to do both. The Premier committed to closing loopholes that allow agriculture to exclude paid farm workers, including children, from occupational health and safety standards and workers' compensation. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: are you going to legislate for paid farm workers, the people that feed us . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister. [interjection] I've recognized the minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. I wanted to make sure I heard the entire question, Mr. Speaker. It is important what the member is saying. Those are the people who feed us, and because of the importance they play in our society not only within Alberta but Canada – actually, Alberta is becoming the breadbasket of the world – we will make sure that we will work with that industry. I have been meeting with stakeholders in the industry. They recognize the importance of keeping their workers and their families safe just like the member and I do. They're Albertans. They share these values. We will get to the point we have to get to in due course.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's about 60 years since we've been talking about this issue in this province.

Why will you not at least order that the deaths of farm workers be investigated? How are we to learn and to prevent these in the future if we will not even investigate them?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I may appear mature beyond my age, but I have not been engaging in this discussion for 60 years. I can tell you that I don't think it's a secret to anyone in this House, in Alberta that I take occupational health and safety very seriously not only because it is my responsibility in this ministry, but it is something that I was engaged in in my life prior to being elected. I can assure this member that the safety of farm workers and their families, who may be engaged in farming, is as important to me as it is to him. I'll also assure him that the industry is taking this very seriously now.

Dr. Swann: Let me ask you directly. Is it you or is it the Premier that's stalling on this legislation?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to weigh in on this. First of all, I'll say that I appreciate the hon. member's question because it is a matter of great concern to us, too. We're very interested in this issue. I would not like him to leave the impression that nothing has been done. There has been a lot of activity. I'm interested, even, in provinces that maybe have legislation. They seem to be focusing on the awareness, the education, and so on as to what really makes the difference. I was reading recently in the Western Producer that that seemed to be the theme. That's something that we're putting a lot of money into. We've got a number of different programs that I could mention.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Legal Challenges to Provincial Legislation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has not been scoring big points with the courts lately. On environmental protection they've said that government action served to "ignore the purposes of the Act as published” and that through their behaviour “the valid object” of the environmental protection act is “hijacked” and also that “it is difficult to envision a more direct apprehension of bias.” To the Attorney General. Now, I know that today of all days it’s a really complicated thing to figure out who’s in charge of what; however, this is your job. Why can’t you get your cabinet colleagues to follow their own laws?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I’m not exactly sure where that question was meandering towards. It’s incumbent upon all of us to follow the laws of the land but also to ask appropriate questions. Maybe for the second question she can be a little bit more clear.

Ms Notley: I think it’s pretty clear.

Given that a more recent judicial decision concluded that the government’s behaviour in relation to Bill 46 “raises the question of whether those negotiations were . . . conducted in good faith” and given that the obligation to negotiate in good faith isn’t discretionary but is actually another statutory obligation, will the Attorney General admit that he doesn’t appear to hold any sway at all when it comes to getting his colleagues to follow their own laws?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there’s one thing that I have no sway over entirely, and that is matters before the courts. I refer this member to Standing Order 23(g), and I will just leave it at that because that matter is before the courts.

Ms Notley: It’s not, actually.

Given that both of these judicial decisions, which concluded that the government actions have been biased, breached the principles of environmental legislation, breached the legal obligation to bargain in good faith, and likely contravened the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and given that it’s your job to make your colleagues respect the rule of law, is the problem that they won’t listen to you, or is it that you agree with the rest of them that your government should be above the law?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, I refer this member to Standing Order 23(g). The matter dealing with Bill 46 is before the courts. No one is above the law, including this member and myself.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After 50 years of failed negotiations this government was finally able to secure a deal for the southwest Calgary ring road. That was a major win for the city and the residents and constituents of Calgary-Shaw. Seeing as this is now a funded project in the government’s capital plan, there should be no hiding from these questions today. This question has been asked by my constituents many times, and I’m hopeful the Minister of Transportation can give us a crystal clear answer. When will the southwest ring road be started, and when will it be completed?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member said, thanks to some good work of my colleague last year, that agreement was reached with the Tsuu T’ina nation, and we have an agreement to have that land, so we can finish the ring road. In the three-year budget there is $1.8 billion budgeted for that project. We all know that isn’t enough money to do that project, but that’s all that’s shown in the three years. This project is going to take seven or eight years to complete, and we’ll work diligently to get it done as soon as possible.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your first supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you can drive on Stoney Trail, the Calgary ring road, from highway 1 all the way to Macleod Trail, a distance of 70 kilometres, without hitting a single traffic light yet you hit two, back to back, once you reach that interchange, will the Minister of Transportation commit to addressing this critical piece of infrastructure as its top priority during construction of the southwest ring road?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, we just improved that intersection. There are setbacks from one approach to another. There are minimum setbacks. In that section there isn’t enough room to build the exact design we’d want just because of the restrictions in distances.

Mr. Wilson: A puzzling answer, but maybe the Infrastructure minister should have taken it.

Given that building out the interchange on McLeod Trail and constructing the planned interchanges at 6th Street SW and James McKeivitt Road, along Stoney Trail, would seem to be a very reasonable first step in the construction of this road and given that there is no need to wait for the completion of a land transfer in order to start these projects, will the minister tell this House when those interchanges will be started and when they will be completed?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, that intersection isn’t necessarily all to do with Alberta Transportation. It’s partly with the city. I can look up specifically the member’s answers, but I can’t know every intersection in the province of Alberta. I’ll seriously take his question and get the answer and get back to him.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for St. Albert, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Youth Emergency Services

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Emergency youth shelters offer food, counselling, support, and life-skills training in a safe and supportive environment for young people who are in need of short-term emergency housing. However, due to the lack of shelter space in St. Albert many of my constituents are forced to go to Edmonton for support and a safe place to stay. St. Albert families have told me that the experience of our youth being placed in shelters in downtown Edmonton often leads to exposure to the very types of dangerous and high-risk activities from which they are seeking solace. To the Minister of Human Services: are there any plans to address the need for youth shelters in St. Albert?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member raises a very, very valid point. It’s actually something that I’ve noticed first-hand. When I’ve been visiting youth shelters in Edmonton, I’ve noticed that there’s a large proportion of youth that come from all over the province. They migrate to the city, and this is where a lot of them end up seeking supports. Notwithstanding that, I’m more than prepared to work with the member to see how we can help provide additional services and supplement some great services that are already in place in St. Albert, like the family resource centres.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: I appreciate that. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. St. Albert youths who require emergency shelter cope with heartbreaking issues like abuse and addiction or cope with complex issues like FASD. Just last month I had a young man, battling addiction, in my office looking for some help. To the same minister: what are you doing to help those in youth shelters transition back to their communities?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, in this year's budget we've got a 17 per cent increase for homeless supports, and some of that money is actually devoted to youth homelessness.

On another note, the member mentioned issues of abuse and trauma, and I've got to say that abuse and trauma are by far the biggest indicators of youth homelessness and youth challenges and developmental challenges later in life. So I've been speaking a lot about our absolute need to get into the root causes. Preventing childhood trauma and abuse is one of the biggest . . .

2:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to working with the minister on this issue.

To the same minister: given that children in need who are of elementary age generally receive more support than those youth in high school, what is your ministry doing to ensure that youth of an older demographic are not shortchanged emergency supports?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a great question. There is a lot of focus on early childhood development, and then there sometimes is not as much focus on the adolescent years, so that's why we're working right now on a plan to end youth homelessness. We've invested dollars in this year's budget to support that as well. This is a really significant issue. I've met with many young people that actually are homeless. They're, unfortunately, homeless because of the really severe issues they face.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's electricity market is a complex system that is stacked against consumers. Every day companies offer to sell their electricity to the grid, but unlike in a normal auction market, the lowest price that companies are willing to accept for their electricity doesn't matter. The market guarantees the company will get paid the highest price regardless of the lowest offer. We know this fills the wallets of industry. How does this system work for Albertans when companies are guaranteed to receive the highest price for the lowest cost electricity?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is focused on protecting Albertan consumers and ensuring a reliable, affordable electricity system. Like in any market, there are rules, and that's why the Market Surveillance Administrator has the power to investigate to make sure the rules are followed. Our government is focused on what is important to Albertans: protecting Alberta consumers and ensuring affordable and reliable electricity that meets the needs of Alberta today and in our growing economy.

Mr. Anglin: The rules are rigged against the customer.

Given the Premier only decided to pay back Albertans after numerous questions, there is hope we might get an answer from the Energy minister to a question that has been asked in this Assembly multiple times. Is it permissible, under Alberta's market rules, for a company to withhold electricity from the market in order to raise prices? Yes or no?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my last answer, there are rules to this system. The Market Surveillance Administrator is able to investigate those rules if there's anything wrong happening in the market. That is their job to do. If they see anything, they then take it to the AUC. But I want to tell you that we have been working very hard as this economy is growing to make sure that Albertans are receiving a good price with the regulated market. On the price: this month's average on our regular rate option is 7.13 cents per kilowatt hour, down, in fact, from last year.

Mr. Anglin: Notice she doesn't mention the wholesale price of $400 a megawatt.

Given that B.C. Hydro conserves its power production at night by buying electricity from Alberta at about 3 cents a kilowatt and given that B.C. Hydro then turns around and sells that electricity, which we just helped them to save, the very next day to Alberta for 6 cents a kilowatt hour, double, will this government do a complete and independent audit of this silly gaming practice and tell us how it came to be that Albertans have been subsidizing B.C. consumers to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars for the last several years?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said to start with, our government is focused on protecting Alberta consumers. That's job one for us. Alberta has been ranked second in North America for residential retail markets for consumer choice. We are doing what's right. We have no long-term debt, no debt. Alberta's prices are good prices, and we are doing everything in Alberta to protect Alberta consumers.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Spring Flood Mitigation

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents in my constituency of Banff-Cochrane have expressed concern regarding spring flood mitigation efforts. Municipalities were funded through the flood recovery erosion control program for short-term mitigation projects; however, residents are not seeing the advancement of some of these programs and are concerned about the readiness for spring. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is being done to ensure that these critical short-term mitigation projects by both municipalities and the government are completed in time for spring runoff?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to thank this hon. member for his very thoughtful question and for the good work he's done on behalf of people throughout southern Alberta as a result after the flood. Obviously, we have recently approved $150 million for the flood recovery erosion control program and streamlined the approval process. You know, we're working very closely with municipalities to make sure that we, both the province and the municipalities, understand what the needs are and that we're in the position to move forward as early as possible.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: but what is the government doing to monitor the progress of these projects and to ensure that municipalities have the capacity to complete them on time?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, we're actually getting projects approved much more quickly, first off. In some cases ESRD has been able to approve projects as quickly as in five days, in some cases 20 days. Then we've also got very skilled task force employees and ESRD employees who are working directly with the impacted municipalities. We're working hard to empower these municipalities to make sure that they get these projects done on time, ready for the spring flood season.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member. Your final supplemental.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. To the same minister: are there plans to have developed a functional early warning system for communities for this spring?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think we learned a lot from last year, and much has been taken on. There's already a system in place through the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. We're working with key partners, most notably the river forecast section within ESRD, to understand and communicate with Albertans as effectively as possible in whatever ways people want to be communicated with. We will continue to invest in this program to make sure that people can be alerted if there are challenges coming at them and that they understand what they can do in order to protect themselves.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sage Grouse Protection Order

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The imposition of the sage grouse protection order has many southern Albertans worried about their economic future and the future of their communities. The restrictive provisions of the protection order risk reduced revenues not only for oil and gas but also for ranchers and municipalities. Meanwhile this government is silent. Can the minister tell me when the province will stand up for ranchers and municipalities, who together are the best local stewards of the land?

The Deputy Speaker: We've got the Minister of ESRD.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. We as a provincial government weren't very happy either with the fact that the federal government put their order in place. As a matter of fact, we weren't very happy that we got the order the afternoon before they did it the next day. But I have had discussions with our counterparts from Saskatchewan, and we are together going to work with the federal minister to see what we can do to make sure that the sage grouse area that is protected is done in a feasible manner and to make sure that there is no economic hardship for people in the southeastern part of this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The PC government's South Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council called for a 4,200-square-kilometre expansion of a conservation area in Cypress-Medicine Hat. Again to the minister: did the province purposely neglect taking action on protecting the sage grouse in order to allow the federal government to establish a conservation area?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be farther from the truth. We understand that the sage grouse was a species at risk. Again, the federal government has SARA, which is federal legislation, and I will say to you that it causes me nothing but angst because we do have areas in this province where we do have species at risk. But it's imperative for us to work with the federal government, to work with stakeholders and landowners all across this province to do what we can. I must also say that, you know, if the hon. member wants to put his anger at some people – I mean, again, things happen in southeastern B.C., for example, and we put nesting for hawks and other raptors down there. These raptors are sitting on these fences and sitting on these power lines, and they're looking down . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Final supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the population of the sage grouse has been declining since the 1960s and knowing that the PCs have had decades in government to produce solutions to help the sage grouse, why do ranchers, oil and gas, and municipalities in the area have to pay for this PC lack of attention?

2:40

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have worked on this for a long time. We have always wanted to have a good relationship with Montana and Saskatchewan. I guess the bottom line is that we appreciate private landowners' rights, and we're not about to trample on them. So that's where we're at today.

Cancer Prevention and Treatment

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, every day 500 Canadians are diagnosed with cancer. Statistics show that an estimated 2 out of every 5 will develop cancer in their lifetime and that an estimated 1 out of 4 will die from it. Changing our future: Alberta's cancer plan to 2030, the Ministry of Health's program, was implemented in order to put into operation effective and sustainable strategies to reduce cancer in the province by 2030. I sure hope that that report is not sitting on a shelf somewhere. To the hon. Minister of Health: what preventative measures will be implemented in the next 10 years?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta cancer plan is very much alive and well. We see the embodiment of the spirit of the cancer plan in efforts that were made such as the hon. member's earlier this week, when he participated in an important fundraising campaign to support kids' cancer care. There are a number of preventative measures already in place. We will see more action as we go forward. So far we've seen some very progressive and far-reaching legislation passed in this House to protect children and youth from tobacco use. We're working with the Canadian partnership against breast cancer to increase screening rates for women no matter where they live. Similar actions are being taken . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dorward: What supports are available to my constituents in Edmonton-Gold Bar and their families in order to deal with the physical and mental toll of this disease when it happens in their lives?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member alluded to, the statistics are indeed startling. Each day in Alberta 45 Albertans are diagnosed with cancer, and 15 people die of cancer in this province every day. There are a number of options for people that are newly diagnosed, including the ongoing supports that allow family members to take time off work to support a loved one, thanks to the efforts of the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, right through to investments being made in radiation and cancer treatment centres across the province in our corridor that stretches from Grande Prairie to Lethbridge.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, cancer does not just exist in the cities. What's happening in rural Alberta to help those Albertans with cancer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the most important initiatives, as I alluded to in the last question, is the establishment of the cancer corridor. With new radiation treatment centres in places such as Red Deer and Medicine Hat and Lethbridge and eventually Grande Prairie people who live in far-reaching parts of the province have to travel a shorter distance in order to receive that sort of treatment. We know that makes a difference for them in terms of their access. We also know it makes a huge difference for families and friends and neighbours and loved ones who support people who are newly diagnosed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I want to congratulate you, hon. members. We got through 17 sets of questions and answers today, and there were no points of order.

In 30 seconds, hon. members, I'll call for the first of the rest of the members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park. Your member's statement.

Sherwood Park Environmental Technology Enterprises

Ms Olesen: Yes. Thank you. I rise today to commend the Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce for their role in promoting environmentally friendly and innovative technologies. Three years ago our chamber established an environment committee to promote and develop environmentally friendly businesses. They have now transitioned that committee to expand the chamber's role in green economies by further emphasizing innovative, sustainable technologies.

Committee members include Clearflow Enviro Systems Group Inc., makers of products to clean water and land, who, incidentally, won the 2013 business leaders of Edmonton award and the 2013 Alberta science and technology award; SepTech Solutions Canada Inc., that has a proprietary technology to remediate septic systems and eliminate the need for vacuum tanks; Christenson Group of Companies, focusing on environmentally friendly construction and technology such as Built Green and LEED; Biogénie, a division of EnGlobe Corp., offering innovative soil treatment and site remediation technologies, enabling onsite rather than hauling solutions, including a patented process to remediate salt impacted sites; Douglas environmental, offering leading technologies for testing and treating air and water issues in commercial and residential buildings; DX3 Enterprises, who design and manufacture solar-powered LED lights that work in 40 below on the shortest days; GSS Integrated Energy, who focus on geothermal heating and electrical cogeneration systems and microgrid utilities.

I salute the Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce for encouraging innovative technology companies to work together. As Jerry Hanna, president of Clearflow, noted, Sherwood Park is really becoming an epicentre for new technology, and I believe more and more innovative ideas will develop out of our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Premier's Travel Expense Repayment

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would everyone in this Assembly please join me in thanking and congratulating the Premier for repaying almost $45,000 for money wasted on her trip to South Africa. [some applause] Come on, folks. You can do better than that. Will everyone please join me in congratulating the Premier. I guess this is what the Premier's definition of real-life leadership is. Frankly, I've seen more leadership, for example, from my niece after she gets in trouble, when she immediately – immediately – gives back her brother's toy.

So just to recap, first, the Premier denied knowing about the cost of the trip. Then she threw her staff under the bus. Then she said that she was disappointed. Then she apologized and in some bizarre world thought that that was being held accountable. This was a Premier backed into a corner and forced to cough up the cash. She didn't pay it back on principle. She didn't pay it back because it was the right thing to do. She paid it back because Albertans demanded it. She only paid it back to save her political skin. Albertans can't trust this Premier. Albertans can't believe a word she says.

Paying back the money for the South Africa trip is only the beginning. This Premier should pay back the money used to fly the government plane to pick her up from vacation in Palm Springs. She and her cabinet should pay back the money used to send the government plane to PC fundraisers over and over and over again.

Some courageous MLAs have spoken out. For the rest of the PC caucus, your continued support of the Premier is an affront to accountability and to all Albertans. Albertans deserve better from their leaders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Paralympic Winter Games Medallists

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to bring news to this House that Alberta athletes have won four medals in the 2014 Paralympic Games in Sochi, including Canada's first gold. I'm extremely proud to say that the medallists are from my constituency of Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Speaker, Brian McKeever took home gold on Monday morning in the visually-impaired men's 20-kilometre classic cross-country ski event and another gold yesterday morning in the men's cross-country skiing one-kilometre sprint. This brings to nine the number of gold medals won by this amazing athlete during his career. On Sunday morning he will try to make it 10. Brian's wins came with the help of two guides from Canmore, Erik Carleton and Graham Nishikawa, and his coach and big brother, Robin. Brian is one of the most accomplished athletes in the history of Paralympic sport and continues to be a shining example of the pursuit of excellence that defines what it means to be an Albertan.

On Saturday afternoon Mark Arendz won Canada's second medal when he won silver in the 7.5-kilometre biathlon, and he won a bronze Tuesday in the men's 12.5-kilometre standing biathlon. Mark is the reigning world champion in the 7.5-kilometre biathlon and was first overall in the 2012-13 World Cup standings.

Mr. Speaker, this government is extremely proud of our support of athletes. Whether it is making sure they have world-class training facilities like the Canmore Nordic Centre or helping them reach their dreams through grant funding like Podium Alberta, the government of Alberta is behind our athletes one hundred per cent.

Alberta is exceptionally proud of all of our Paralympic athletes. They inspire all of us and demonstrate the true meaning of courage. Good luck with the rest of the games to these great athletes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of Bill 6, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2014.

2:50

Introduction of Bills

Bill 203

Childhood Vision Assessment Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Childhood Vision Assessment Act.

Bill 203 would ensure that children of school age are set up for success by requiring a comprehensive vision assessment by grade 1. This could help reduce potential learning and behavioural difficulties that affect children with visual impairments. More than 25 per cent of school-age children have vision problems that can limit their potential in all aspects of learning. Thanks to the work of initiatives like the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, more children are getting their eyes examined. However, still, more than 80 per cent of children in Alberta begin school without a comprehensive eye exam.

Mr. Speaker, you need to read to succeed, and Bill 203 is an important step to ensuring that children in our families and communities across Alberta have the tools to succeed in the classroom and in life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to file the following petition, signed by 4,903 citizens: we the undersigned petition you to "re-evaluate the communities of West Springs, Cougar Ridge, and Aspen Woods to ensure we get [the] much needed schools built within our communities." Now, because this petition is signed only by the supporters of the petition, I am filing it as a document with five copies under our Standing Order 37(3).

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. First, from Dallas Diamond, a Calgary resident whose father experienced very unfortunate care at the urgent care centre in south Calgary, resulting, she feels, in delays and may have resulted in his death. I will table that and the appropriate copies.

Another from Calgary, Honora Thubron, whose husband is in a long-term care setting there. She expresses fears of speaking out because she feels very strongly that the administration has already given her indication that they will not be comfortable with her criticisms being made public. She is advocating for higher staff ratios for seniors.

A third, Mr. Jim Miller from Calgary, who has spent approximately 15 years inspecting farm operations in B.C. and is encouraging the minister of jobs and skills and the Premier herself to meet and talk about ways to improve the occupational health and safety for farm workers in Alberta.

The fourth is a familiar name to most people here. Mr. Harry Chase, who is a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, is writing a lengthy paper in response to the Minister of Human Services' request for suggestions to improve the child care and family care services here. He is advocating very strongly for a more family-centred and more transparent and respectful approach to families in distress.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table 50 of over 4,000 postcards that the office of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has received asking this PC government to restore consistent and reliable funding to postsecondary education in Alberta. The postcards were collected among the thousands by the Non-Academic Staff Association at the U of A. They are clear evidence the government is not listening to the demands of Albertans for a well-funded postsecondary education system that is both accessible and affordable for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there were no points of order today, so the Clerk will move to the next item of business.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 4

Estate Administration Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 4, the Estate Administration Act.

This bill continues the reform of succession laws in Alberta by taking steps to codify and modernize the existing common law governing the administration of estates. As a result, the role and responsibilities of a personal representative will be easily understood, and beneficiaries can be more assured that the wishes of the deceased are being followed.

There are a couple of questions that I would like to address before I close, and one is having to do with grants from the United States. I would like to inform this House that Bill 4 does deal with grants from the U.S., but in that case the applicant applies for an ancillary grant under section 19. While resealing the foreign grants from Commonwealth countries is found in section 18, section 19 deals with ancillary grants, where the deceased was not a resident of a jurisdiction referred to in section 18. In other words, this allows for a process to deal with grants from the United States and in any country where the deceased resides.

There's another point of clarification regarding obligations and/or liabilities of the executor or administrator. The role and the responsibilities of the personal representative already exist in common law. Common law currently holds that a personal representative is a fiduciary. Bill 4 only codifies this and puts these responsibilities into plain, understandable language.

The bill also contains provisions that can assist a personal representative to reduce their risk of liability. These are not new but were carried forward from the prior legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident this legislation will benefit Albertans. Several of the changes contained in the bill were motivated by recommendations from the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and both round-table and online consultations were conducted with Alberta's estate practitioners, the Canadian Bar Association, estate planners and advisers, and experts in estate administration. Their feedback showed wide-ranging support for our efforts. This support shows that the work of the government staff in doing the areas of succession law will serve Albertans well, and I would like to take the opportunity to thank the government staff who worked on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers on the bill, or is someone wishing to adjourn debate?

Ms Kubinec: I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not wanting to upset what is surely to be one of the quietest Thursdays on record and not wanting to miss one second of the spectacular Alberta day that's going on out there, I would like to move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, March 17.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 2:59 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 2nd Session (2014)

Activity to March 13, 2014

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to renew our strength and to replenish our resolve that we may work as hard as we can to help those who entrusted us to represent them. May wisdom, patience, and civility guide our speech and our actions in this regard. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem as led by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Clark.

Thank you, members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you have a visitor today?

Mr. Anderson: I do, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly somebody who's very well known in these parts, a gentleman that I'm sure many of us are friends with. Mr. Brent Rathgeber was a member of this Assembly from 2001 to 2004, representing Edmonton-Calder. He has had a successful legal career and is currently serving his second term as the Member of Parliament for Edmonton-St. Albert. It's great to see him back in the Legislature today. I invite Mr. Rathgeber to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us begin with school groups.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It really is a pleasure to rise today. You know, I've had the privilege of being an MLA for six years, but this is the first time since I became an MLA that a school group from my constituency has visited the Legislature. I am very pleased today to introduce the grade 6 class from Lycée Louis Pasteur, which is the school right across the street from my house, and it's a class of students that I've known since they were three years old. The reason for that is that this group of students have grown up with my daughter, Sarah, who is in this group today. They are up this week to attend the School at the Legislature. I will tell you that while we had many exciting discussions about politics last week, they have been truly excited about being here, being at the Legislature, and learning everything that they can. They're looking forward to the week very much. I'd like to ask them to stand along with their teacher and parent chaperones Stephen Doubt, Franz Plangger, and Mme Reka Lhuillier to receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, did you have a second introduction as well?

Ms Redford: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, I have two more introductions. One is with a group of people that are sitting in your gallery. It is my pleasure today to stand to introduce a great student leader, and that is Michelle Hoover. Michelle Hoover is a grade 12 student from Delia, Alberta. She was named the 2013 4-H Premier award winner for her outstanding dedication to 4-H in Alberta. We visited earlier today. She has been a 4-H member for nine years. She has certainly served in the organization in a number of different positions. She has been active in her community organizing student carnivals, being on the yearbook committee at her school. There are only two people on that committee right now, so her leadership is very important. Minister Olson and I had an opportunity to meet with her and her family earlier today. She is incredibly inspiring. The one question she asked me is: what are we doing as a government to ensure that young people go back to agriculture? We had a very good discussion about that. It's a great question. I am so glad along with everyone here to be able to recognize someone who is such a strong, publicly spirited leader. Congratulations, and good luck with whatever you decide to do next.

The Speaker: Thank you. Your final introduction, please.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the indulgence of the House. There is no doubt that there are many things that I've been very proud to do in this House, but this is my first opportunity in this House to introduce my daughter, Sarah Jermyn, who can stand, please. I think that there are an awful lot of things in our life that we think we are proud of, but there is nothing that I am prouder of in my life than being the mother of this incredible young lady, who is now, actually, officially taller than me and takes great pride in everything that we do as a family. Her father and I are so proud of her. She is my friend. She is my supporter. She is certainly my daughter. She gives me tremendous advice, is actively engaged in politics, in public policy on Facebook and on Twitter. I will say that there is nothing more important to me in the world. Every decision that I make, I make with her in mind. I would like her to rise again and have my love and know how much I love her. I can't say anything more. You're wonderful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's my pleasure to introduce 19 brilliant students from Norwood school in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and they are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Judith Brouwer and Miss Meagan Como. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a bright and enthusiastic group of 36 grade 6 students from Brookside elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. There is nothing more enjoyable in this job than having the opportunity to speak with grade 6 students. What we do today is about tomorrow and the tomorrows after that, and it's about these kids. Having them come to the Legislature and having the opportunity to speak with them is what reminds us of the job that we are doing and what we are doing it for. Accompanying the students are their teachers, Jennifer Hill, Dee Panickar, Miss Hoffman, along with parent helpers Cindy Young, Helen Williams, and Karen Robinson. They are seated in both galleries. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other students to be introduced?

If not, then let us move on to the Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the Associate Minister of IIR.

1:40

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a beautiful day in Alberta and an important month. March is kidney month, and it's an honour to introduce Flavia Robles, from the Kidney Foundation of Canada. I met with her just before question period, and she's a truly inspirational Albertan. Since its creation in 1964 the Kidney Foundation has helped millions of Canadians suffering from kidney failures and other related disorders such as hypertension, diabetes, urinary tract infections, and kidney stones, and it's done so by providing funding, innovative research, and education for kidney-related ailments. It's quite a number: 4,500 Canadians are on organ transplant waiting lists; 80 per cent of those are waiting for kidneys. For people who want to know more and want to help, please visit kidney.ab.ca. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the entire organization for all their dedication and ask Flavia to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary, an organization that helps facilitate a collective voice for 42 ethnocultural community groups in Calgary. They are concerned about the proposed change to Alberta's Human Rights Act and have travelled from Calgary to listen to discussions this evening on Motion 502. Joining us today are 21 individuals, including members of the ECC board and volunteers, eight members of the ethnocultural coalition of Edmonton, students from various institutions as well as representatives from a number of organizations, including Possibilities in Motion, from the Filipino community; Calgary Connecting Seniors Cultural Council; Men Action Network, the aboriginal community; Women's Centre, the aboriginal community; HIV Community Link, African community; Disability Action Hall; and the connecting elders from ethnocultural communities program. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a class of social work students from NorQuest College. They are accompanied by their class instructor, Dorothy Jacques. They represent the diversity of this great province and this great country, young men and women from all walks of the world and all walks of life who want to make a better world, especially for our children and Alberta families. They're here today to express their desire for reforms to family and community support and the child-in-care system and support for Alberta social workers. They are the angels of society, and as representatives of the future front-line workers in the system I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my guests from the Alberta Students' Executive Council. ASEC is an advocacy organization representing the interests of almost 200,000 students across Alberta. My guests today are all student leaders at postsecondary institutions across the province, and they include: from the SAIT Students' Association, Kenneth Taylor; the president of the Grande Prairie Regional College Students' Association, my old alma mater, Lydia Sadiq; Martin Cruz, who's the president of the Students' Association of Red Deer College; Andrew Koning, who's the president of the Concordia Students' Association; Teresa Currie, the ASEC stakeholder relations co-ordinator; and Carol Neuman, the executive director of ASEC. I would like them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Airdrie.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly Kim Ergang and Jason de Vries. Both of these individuals are from my Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville constituency and own and operate Titan Towing. They are here today to raise awareness for tow truck operator safety on Alberta's roads and highways. It's about education and enforcement. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to both rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, I understand your guests are not here yet.

Let's go on to Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Brett Fawcett. Brett is a student at Concordia University and lives in Sherwood Park. He's active in politics at the municipal, provincial, and federal levels. An avid reader, Brett's involvement in politics is motivated by reason and deep thought, something all members should take note of. Brett is seated in the gallery, and I'll ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When your children get married, you do not know if you're going to get any grandchildren. Fortunately, these three that I'm about to introduce have given Janice and I 10. From Salmon Arm, British Columbia, is Jennifer Henrie, a professional mother of five. Nathan Dorward, my son, is a professional accountant and works at Alberta

Pensions Services Corporation, a father of three. And young Spencer, who I think will help us to get maybe five or six more, is a professional accountant and works at a firm that I founded 20 years ago, Dorward & Company Chartered Accountants, a father of two. If they could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to all members of this Assembly it is my pleasure to rise today to introduce possibly two of my favourite constituents from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Now, I don't want to create any extra challenge for the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but I do think that they may also be two of his cutest constituents as well. They are joined today by their mom, Tanya Cooper, and their dad, Nathan Cooper, who works very hard for us as Legislative affairs director in our caucus. I would ask Porter, aged six, and Paxton, aged five, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of representatives from the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary. This group travelled to Edmonton via bus today to meet with me to express their concerns on Motion 502 and to listen to the debate in the House on the motion. My guests today are Thao Vu, Pol Ngeth, Jason Klinck, Len Chan, Henri Giroux, Saltanat Kermalieva, and Joe Espina. They are seated in both galleries, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Thomas Dang and Donald Ademaj. Thomas is a first-year student at the University of Alberta, studying computer science, and he's part of the Edmonton-Calder NDP constituency executive. Donald is a first-year student at the University of Alberta in science, and he also has a keen interest in Alberta politics, starting with his days as a page in this very Chamber two years ago. I would ask them both to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Budget 2014

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak about a recent investment made to support Alberta municipalities. This government recognizes the essential role Alberta's communities play in fuelling our economy and making our province a great place for people to live. We know strategic funding for the province's municipalities contribute to building strong and vibrant communities. Budget 2014 demonstrates the Alberta government's continued investment in municipalities. This budget maintains the government's commitment to invest in families and communities as part of the building Alberta plan.

Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced further details to those budget commitments, which will help our communities thrive and grow to meet the needs of the people who proudly call Alberta home. Over the next three years the Alberta government will invest $5.1 billion in municipal infrastructure. This support will flow through programs such as MSI, GreenTRIP, Alberta community partnership, water for life strategy, and the municipal water and waste-water program.

There will be $162 million more in support for transit over the next three years, and there will be $150 million more available through MSI. Because public services aren't confined to municipal boundaries, the latest budget will enhance support for regional co-operation with $20 million more. Our communities will also benefit from significant support through municipal police grants, family and community support services, and many other programs.

Altogether Budget 2014 provides more than $2 billion in direct funding for municipalities across all ministries. You heard that: $2 billion. Mr. Speaker, this is not simply about dollar figures. This translates into improved quality of life for Albertans. This is what we mean when we say that we are investing in families and communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we start question period, please be reminded that you have up to 35 seconds for your question and up to 35 seconds for your answer, and I'll be strictly enforcing that today. Also, please, let's not have any preambles to supplementary questions after the fifth main question, which is held today by the ND opposition leader.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin, then – start the clock – with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Associate Minister – Family and Community Safety

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the past few days have aired a lot of PC dirty laundry. We have a cabinet minister quitting today, saying that the PCs can't be fixed, and we have an MLA who quit the PC caucus last week because of what he described as bullying. This bullying was on full display on Friday when the minister supposedly responsible for ending bullying made a personal attack against her former colleague. Will any member of the cabinet defend the minister's bullying and dismissive comments?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bullying in any form is abhorrent, and we should all be setting good examples in that respect. Sometimes when a camera or a microphone is put in front of us and in the heat of the moment, you say things that come out the wrong way. I have been the perpetrator of that myself, for which I would like to apologize. The minister to whom the hon. member refers made some comments which were taken a bit out of context.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the minister's comments also dismissed electricians as somehow being less valuable than politicians. Now, I think that if you were to ask Albertans who they value more, electricians or PC cabinet ministers, the electricians would win hands down. I know that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, an electrician for 40 years, might agree with me. Our province is facing a major skilled labour shortage. What will the jobs minister do to ensure that his colleague's denigrating and dismissive comments don't impact our efforts to attract skilled tradespeople?

Mr. Hancock: Two points, Mr. Speaker. First of all, no one is denigrating electricians. The Premier's father is an electrician. Many people are electricians, and tradespeople are represented in this caucus. That was not what the hon. member intended to do, nor should that be taken from her remarks.

What the hon. member said, if you look at the context of her remarks, was that it takes a different temperament to do this job. It was not a denigration of any other job and shouldn't be taken that way. The hon. member apologizes for that remark, and we should move on.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think that's what bullies say.

The antibullying minister must know that her comments were unacceptable and reflect the worst of what this government has come to represent, a bullying and intimidating group who is more concerned about entitlements than issues. The minister now lacks all credibility on the issue of ending bullying. Will the Premier give this important responsibility to another minister who will take the task of ending bullying seriously?

Ms Redford: The minister who's responsible for safe families and communities has certainly apologized for the remarks. It was very important. I made some comments this weekend saying that I think there were a lot of comments made last week that were not actually a very high watermark for political conduct in this province. I think when people's emotions do get the best of them, sometimes unfortunate things are said. The best we can do is to apologize and to move on.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Government Airplane Usage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I've got another PC fundraiser to ask questions about today. During constituency break last year, on Thursday, May 2, the minister of tourism boarded a plane in Lloydminster. That plane first went to Drumheller, and then it arrived in Edmonton at 5:32 p.m., just in time for the Premier's $500-a-plate fundraiser at the Shaw Conference Centre. The minister of tourism was photographed with her on stage. To the minister: what government business did he conduct in the 28 minutes before the PC Party fundraiser that required him to fly a government plane to Edmonton?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. leader for that question. On that particular date, if I have my dates correct, I was with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations in Drumheller discussing a number of different initiatives in terms of our international strategy. At that point the plane returns to Edmonton, which is its home base. That's where I had to be later that day, so I don't see anything particularly unusual. In fact, I started that day in Edmonton assisting with an announcement with regard to our flights. If I'm not mistaken, it was the new direct link to New York City.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations was also on the flight to Edmonton. Now, we have no photos to show that he was at the PC fundraiser, too, but I don't want to assume the worst. In fact, I'd like to give him an opportunity to explain himself, too. So to the IIR minister: what government business did he conduct in Edmonton in the 28 minutes before the PC fundraiser?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister previous has responded. The planes are based out of Edmonton, so when the flights are terminating, it's actually good policy to have the planes come back to Edmonton, where their home base is, so they don't have to deadhead somewhere else.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, judging by these answers, it's apparent that there was no government business that evening in Edmonton. It's just as apparent that the only reason the two ministers boarded the government plane to come to Edmonton was to go to the PC Party fundraiser in Edmonton that night, another example of the taxpayer subsidizing the governing party. To the President of Treasury Board, who controls the air fleet: will he ask the PC Party to reimburse taxpayers for this expense?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as per the hon. member's question the government business wasn't in Edmonton; it was in Drumheller. The plane was coming back to Edmonton because that's where it's based. I'm not exactly sure why anybody would be reimbursing us for getting our own planes back to their own base.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader. Third and final main set of questions.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, last week the Municipal Affairs minister committed to closing 90 per cent of the disaster recovery program claims in the next 17 days despite the fact that minimal progress has been made in the last nine months. I predicted it would be a mess. Well, it's even messier than I thought. When I asked the minister about this on Thursday, he stuck with the goal of 90 per cent of claims closed by the end of March. But then in a press conference on Friday the minister said that the 90 per cent goal would now be for the end of June. Will the minister clarify for Albertans desperately waiting for DRP news: what is the real target?

Mr. Hughes: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, this is a really important topic. I appreciate the hon. member's asking the question, and I'm delighted to share the details. There are actually two goals. The first one is that by the end of March the goal is to have 90 per cent of all eligible residential DRP applications completed. That's about 6,160 applications. That's 90 per cent of the eligible residential DRP applications at the end of January.

The second goal is to finish off 90 per cent of all of the rest of the . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Let me quote from the High River Times. "It's been nine months of confusion, woes and concerns with the beleaguered [disaster recovery program] . . . and now everything is allegedly smooth sailing . . . It's hard to believe until it actually occurs." Every flood-affected resident in Alberta who has had to deal with the disaster recovery program knows it is a mess. The next flood season is already here, Minister. It's flooding in Millarville today. How can Albertans have any confidence that this minister will fix things if he can't even get his story straight day after day?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, my position on this has been quite clear from day one. In December, when I was asked to take on this responsibility, over Christmas, I appointed a group to be the clearing house for those files that were caught in an insurance hold as opposed to going forward into the DRP. Then we set the goal of having 90 per cent of all eligible residential files closed by the end of March and 90 per cent of all other eligible files closed by the end of June. So the message is quite clear.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the minister has been less than clear on this whole mess. Anyone sitting in the Chamber last week was left with the impression that LandLink was fired effective March 31. Then we heard about a transitional contract. Apparently, that transitional contract goes for another 90 days, and it will still not clear all of the files. To the minister: how is LandLink getting paid for this transitional contract, and how many further dollars intended for disaster relief are going to end up in their bank account?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, you need to have somebody administer files. It's either officials of the government of Alberta, of which there are plenty working on this, or officials of the contractor from a contract that was established 20 years ago. It's quite clear that it would be exceedingly disruptive to stop the processing of files that are currently in the system at the end of March just because that's the end of a contract. We need a transitional contract in place in order to ensure that Albertans get the support that they need from the disaster recovery program. They are depending upon it.

Government Policies

Dr. Sherman: Happy St. Paddy's Day, Mr. Speaker. Let's be frank. If there was ever a day when the Premier needed the luck of the Irish, it would be today. After weeks of the Travelgate scandal and defections from caucus, the Premier has been placed on probation by her party. With over 90,000 children living in poverty, many suffering in government care, a crisis in health care access, and not enough schools or teachers for our kids, the Premier has been given a work plan at a time when the government no longer works for Albertans. To the Premier: how can you assure Albertans that your plans have their best interests at heart when your government is working so hard . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important season for Alberta. You'll know that in this Legislature right now we are debating a budget that is the first budget that's been back in the black in five years in Alberta. We know that in Alberta we are creating more than 75 per cent of the jobs that are created in Canada. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business says that this is the best place in the country to start a business. We've seen family income go up. We've seen revenues go up. We've made a $10 billion investment in schools, roads, and hospitals. The future is bright, and that . . .

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, that budget was an over-under budget, where Albertans were overtaxed and underserved by their government.

The Premier likes to talk about the building Alberta plan. One former member of her caucus called it the bullying Alberta plan. Another former member called it the hurting Alberta plan. This government has slashed the seniors' drug plan by 25 per cent, waged war on workers' rights and public service pensions, and spent all our oil wealth in one generation. To the Premier: when will you stop your penny-wise and pound-foolish approach to governing and listen to Albertans who want you to realize that the only cost they want you to cut is your government's extravagance?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in the last election Albertans said: we know that we live in a wonderful province, and we know we're lucky to live here, but what are we doing for the future? I'll tell you that the throne speech and the budget that we set out two weeks ago did that. It funded heritage scholarship funds. It put in place an endowment fund for access to the future. It added an endowment fund for agricultural innovation. It will create a new institute for innovation. That is economic diversification, economic growth, and investing in generations for years to come.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this province and this economy are great despite government policy, and that Speech from the Throne seemed more like a eulogy for a tired, old government.

Another part of the Premier's hurting Alberta plan has left public education severely underfunded. Her government scheme is to build trailer schools and cram as many students and as few teachers as possible into those schools. Alberta Liberals would make schools as community hubs. Teachers, trustees, parents, and students like the idea. To the Premier: why won't you listen to those very Albertans who won you your leadership and election campaigns and make schools as community hubs part of your work plan?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think it's wonderful that the Alberta Liberal Party has adopted the Progressive Conservative education plan. You know, in the last three years we've had communities talking about the fact that schools matter and that schools need to be more than community hubs. In fact, our MLA for Calgary-Bow is working very closely right now with her constituents on exactly that initiative because this is what matters. What's great is that that's what school board trustees want, that's what parents want, that's what the Minister of Education wants, and that's what this Progressive Conservative caucus wants.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Government Effectiveness

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. Mr. Speaker, the province has been transfixed by the drama engulfing the government party and caucus. While internal party affairs cannot be the subject of question period, the effectiveness of government certainly can. I regret having to ask this question, but it must be asked. To the Premier: do you have enough support to keep governing? [some applause]

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can do is thank the hon. member for his question.

Mr. Mason: Nice show of unity there, Tories.

The Premier says that she was given a work plan by the PC executive. If so, Albertans want to know how this plan will influence the actions of the government. To the Premier: will this work plan affect in any way what this government does or how they do it?

Ms Redford: In fact, I am very proud to be the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and to be the Premier of this province as a result of that. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that every single day that we work as a caucus, we work to make things better for Albertans. That's what we do as members of the Progressive Conservative Party, that's what we'll continue to do, and as we continue to work in alignment, that's what allows Alberta to continue to grow.

Mr. Mason: I think we should have another standing ovation, Mr. Speaker. I didn't get a count of all of the ones that stayed in their seats.

This PC government is clearly struggling to govern in the midst of its internal crisis. Sudden reversals by the Premier, snap funding announcements, and an idling legislative agenda are all evidence of paralysis in this government. To the Premier: given the impact of the PC crisis on your government, how will you ensure that the public's business gets done?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the hon. member is talking about in terms of surprise funding announcements. What I'll tell you is that we presented a budget and a go-forward plan for this government, for this province. It's investing in schools; it's investing in hospitals; it's investing in shelters. Those are the announcements we're making today because those are the announcements that Albertans asked us to make to show that we were investing in the future. So if the hon. member is surprised by these, I'd suggest he reads the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Highway 881

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October 2012 this government announced $318 million to be earmarked for improvements to highway 881, including the construction of passing lanes, safety rest areas to accommodate oversized loads, and access to highway 69 for enhanced safety. In 2013 this project was deferred due to fiscal constraints. The government has announced this year that we have a balanced budget and that we have a much rosier financial outlook, yet the project has not been shown in the 2014 budget. To the Minister of Transportation: when will this project be brought back so that the construction. . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is working hard to twin highway 63, a road that parallels this road. We're spending almost a billion dollars on this project that twins this highway. Besides, we're finishing completing the ring roads around Edmonton and a major, substantial ring road in Calgary. This department is building Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the government's priorities are focused on market access and growing revenues, does the minister plan to achieve those objectives by investing in necessary infrastructure such as highway 881?

Mr. Drysdale: Of course, Mr. Speaker. I just listed some of the projects that we're investing in to help this province get our product to market. Highway 881 is an important link in infrastructure, but there are lots of important links in this province, and we'll work diligently to get them all done.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that there's an emerging consensus that an eastern bypass route across the Clearwater River will open up new oil sands opportunities, hence helping us grow revenues while reducing oversized loads and dangerous goods that travel every day through the middle of Fort McMurray, will the minister bring funding to the table to enable this to proceed?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we'll work with all municipalities to help that happen, and I'm sure this hon. member will agree that twinning highway 63 up there will help that progress along. The wide loads will have a better access with a twinned highway.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Misericordia Community Hospital

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Misericordia community hospital in Edmonton is in dire shape: leaky pipes, downed elevators, and an intensive care unit that is only available based on the weather. When it rains, the place leaks and services shut down, patients lie on stretchers and gurneys in the halls, and even renovated bathrooms are not equipped to be barrier free. The Health minister acknowledges that the Misericordia needs to be replaced. In last week's budget nothing was presented in the capital plan to fix the Misericordia. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Why isn't it on the list?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm glad the hon. member is raising this again because it gives me another opportunity to tell the hon. member and all Albertans that we are committed to working with the Misericordia, with Covenant Health to complete critical infrastructure repairs. There is currently over $19 million that has been allocated for these repairs. About $6.2 million has already been spent on things like upgrades to elevators and the electrical system. We've asked Covenant Health for their estimate of what other funding will be needed over the next 3 to 5 years for this. . .

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Minister. Given that the Misericordia was slated for a rebuild or replacement six years ago and given that in 2010 AHS had a $100.1 million approved budget for the Misericordia but placed the project on hold, can the Minister of Infrastructure explain why the project was deferred? Where is that money now?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the member opposite is against us getting the best value for the infrastructure that exists in Alberta. I'm a little perplexed also. They don't seem to like the fact that we're spending $19 million to keep it going and keep it in a good, safe condition for patients and Albertans so that we can continue to get the very best value for Albertans. On one hand, they say: don't spend so much money. On the other hand: it's a spending day; it's a spending day; it's a spending day. When they finally decide what they do want, we'd be happy to hear about it.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, it's about patient safety. That was brought up six years ago.

Given that the Misericordia is now AHS's second most important new project and given that the costs have increased since the minister pulled the hundred million in approved funding, will the minister enlighten us on what the new costs are now to replace the Misericordia?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let's be clear. Alberta Health Services has made a number of high-priority recommendations for renovation and replacement of aging hospitals in this province. The Misericordia is one of those hospitals. What the hon. member doesn't do, of course, today as part of her question is talk about the $1.3 billion that was spent to build the South Health Campus facility in Calgary. As I've said, we are working together as ministries to determine the ongoing hospital capital infrastructure needs for Edmonton and the capital region, and a decision about a new facility . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

School Growth Pressures in Calgary

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary neighbourhoods of West Springs, Aspen Woods, and Cougar Ridge are in desperate need of a new school. Nearly 5,000 parents signed a petition, that I presented in the House last week, advocating for new schools in their neighbourhoods. So my first question is to the Minister of Education. Given the release of the Calgary board of education capital plan list today, putting the West Springs-Cougar Ridge middle school as the number one priority, can the minister tell these 5,000 parents and the House when we can expect an announcement regarding new schools in these neighbourhoods?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend this MLA for being such a great advocate for her community, first of all. She had a whole group of parents in the Legislature last week, and I was happy to meet with those as this MLA requested that, and we had a really good discussion. I know they've done a lot of good work, including lobbying to get this to number one on the CBE's list. Obviously, everyone knows that this government has invested a lot in schools over the last couple of months, I think 10 in Calgary in February and 10 in Calgary in the spring of 2013, but beyond that commitment we're going to look forward and try to get more and more schools on the capital list.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: given that parents have been told that their children cannot be registered in their local West Springs school this September because they cannot count on getting portables by then, would the minister please first confirm that he has approved these portables for this school?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, yeah, I can speak to that. Once again, because of this Premier, instead of having the budget to provide only about 40 portables a year, she's bumped this up so that we can have the budget to provide over a hundred portables a year because we recognize the growth pressures. This is one of the schools that's going to benefit from that. We know that we've got about 16 modules going to Calgary, and my understanding is that two of those are going to the area where she has requested.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. My final question is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure. Can the minister please confirm that these approved portables will arrive for the fall semester and be fully operational?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell the hon. member is that we have a contract with the supplier. [interjections] The contract specifies they're to be delivered in July and completed and ready for students in August because that's the time when we expect that students are going to be there because every September they show up.

So we have a plan. It's part of the building Alberta plan. [interjections] These portables are, as I said, part of that, and we expect them to be delivered and providing the services that Alberta parents and students need.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Please keep the noise level down. Let's go on.

Protection of Persons in Care

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, the latest protection of persons in care report paints an alarming picture. There were 166 complaints of abuse that were founded and involved vulnerable Albertans in care. But these are only the high-level numbers. Albertans don't know the real details. Each of these abuse cases was investigated, which means there are recommendations from each and every one. Again, those are not public. To the Health minister: how can you possibly learn from these horrific cases of abuse when you're concealing the recommendations to improve?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we discussed this issue last week, and as the hon. member knows and as I've said to the House many times, we take all of the complaints that are made under this act very, very seriously. It is true that in 2012-2013 there were 470 reports. A significant number of those were determined to be founded complaints. We're following up very closely on each one of those. As I said, I've directed my ministry to put in place a process to ensure that the recommendations are implemented.

Mrs. Towle: You also delayed the report by nine months, Minister.

Given that the Health minister has shared these reports with the associate ministers and the ministers that are affected, one can assume, and given that those ministers are responsible to protect vulnerable Albertans in care, why has the Minister of Human Services or the associate minister of PDD not acted immediately on those reports and made the recommendations public?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the acting minister for the Minister of Human Services today nothing could be further from the truth. We discuss all of these reports in detail. Ministers, regardless of whether it's my ministry or the Ministry of Human Services, take the recommendations very seriously, and we will ensure and have ensured that those are implemented.

Mrs. Towle: It would be nice if Albertans could see those recommendations so they know where to put their people in care.

Given that the Protection for Persons in Care Act also applies to several individuals in the persons with developmental disabilities programs, what is the associate minister for PDD going to do to ensure that those vulnerable Albertans who fall under his mandate are not subject to the same kind of abuse?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister for persons with developmental disabilities.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Abuse of any kind makes me sick to my stomach. We have taken recommendations from the PPI, and we will be recommending and we will be implementing all of them. It is unfortunate that incident happened. We take that very, very seriously. We are taking every single recommendation, and we will be implementing those recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Athabasca River Water Quality

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. For years and years and years we've said that something is wrong in the Athabasca River, but the government continued to deny, deny, deny that millions of litres of toxic tailings yuck was and is leaking into the groundwater and then into the Athabasca River. The most recent Environment Canada report confirmed this. To the environment minister: why did the government repeatedly ignore calls to look into concerns that these leaks were affecting the environment, wildlife, and people's health?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you. I can say to you that we take very seriously all of our monitoring up in the oil sands area of the province and especially around Fort McMurray, Fort MacKay, and Fort Chipewyan. Mr. Speaker, I can stand and say to you that we are continuing to put more monitoring in place and we'll continue to do so, working with the federal government to make sure that we do a proper job monitoring now and into the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: if the government was so concerned, why didn't it insist that directive 074 be fully implemented; that is, stop creating new tailings ponds and phase out, get rid of, the old ones as conditions for allowing more developmental permits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister responsible.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I say to you that we are working closely with industry, and industry is doing a very good job of putting money into technology and research to make sure that we don't have to develop tailings ponds in the future. I can say to you that I've had very good discussions with industry, and when our tailings ponds framework comes out, I have made it very clear to industry that we are going to expedite the cleanup of our tailings ponds.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, good grief. Not another directive thing.

Okay. To the same minister: how can the government ensure proper environmental data quality when CEMA and other environmental science based agencies are now dependent on funding from industry, especially when we've had the example of industry pulling their funding from CEMA not once but twice?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, industry hasn't pulled their funding from CEMA. As a matter of fact, they're committed to pay for CEMA this year and into next year. I can say to you that when we bring AEMERA into place, which is the Alberta monitoring agency, again, we will have good science. We are engaging with all of our scientists from the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and from around this country to make sure that we get it right. I can say to you that we are committed to making sure we do a good job up in the oil sands region.

Drilling in Urban Areas

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, for years Albertans have watched this PC government bend over backwards to help industry make huge profits at the expense of the environment and community safety. Today 11,000 citizens of Lethbridge, just to name one city, delivered a petition calling on this government to help protect their homes, schools, playgrounds from harmful drilling. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when will you listen to the people of Alberta and their municipal leaders and stop allowing risky drilling in urban areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I want to say that we've been listening very, very carefully to our two MLAs from the area, to the mayor of the community as well, making sure that the environmental concerns from their communities are able to be addressed with me. I've talked to the mayor myself. We're going to meet. We're also looking at an urban drilling policy. We're working on that piece right now. What is important for me is the safety of Albertans, all Albertans.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that there are still no clear rules on drilling in urban areas and given that this PC government has been promising an urban drilling strategy since 2012, when Calgary faced the same threat that Lethbridge does today, to the Minister of Energy: when will we finally get to see this policy, and why has it taken so long?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy again.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we do have policies about drilling in this province, whether they be for urban or rural, and I have made a commitment to look at the policies, review the policies, and bring forward different stakeholders, municipalities and other stakeholders, so that we can look at those policies, first of all, so that everyone is aware what policies we do have in place. Whether we live in rural Alberta or we live in urban Alberta, it's important for all of us to have policies for safe drilling.

Mr. Bilous: Tick-tock, tick-tock, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that without this policy the government and regulators continue to make up rules on the fly in the backroom and given the strong opposition from Albertans, including in Lethbridge the mayor and city council, the chamber of commerce, and both school boards, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will the minister commit that changes to the Municipal Government Act will include a prohibition on drilling in urban areas, and if not, why not?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, again thank you for the question. What's important to note, Mr. Speaker, in this particular case is that there has been no application put forward to the Alberta Energy Regulator, so the citizens are having the opportunity to bring their concerns first and foremost to their two outstanding MLAs – the mayor is able to talk with myself as well – and to be able to talk about those. But, quite frankly, there is no application before the regulator at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cardston Hospital Renovation

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As AHS knows, the Cardston hospital has exceeded its best-by date. The main structure is over 60 years old, and it's been 33 years since the last renovations were done. As the minister may appreciate, since the doctors and the people of Cardston were told in 1999 that they were next in line to receive a new facility, the government's promises lack just a little bit of credibility. What will the minister do to reassure them that this critical new hospital will actually be built?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The Cardston hospital is one of a number of hospitals in Alberta that were built in that particular area that require renovation and in some cases replacement. I think the hon. member knows that this particular project is on the five-year list that Alberta Health Services has established. I recognize the importance of the facility to the community. That is where the project stands at present.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in 1999 it was next in line, so being on the five-year list may not be as reassuring as we'd like it to be.

Given that Cardston is fortunate to have dedicated and skilled doctors, nurses, and support personnel to serve the thousands of people in the town and area as well as about 10,000 people on the largest First Nations reserve in Canada, will the minister tell us when Cardston will be getting this long-promised hospital?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure the hon. member appreciates, we are not living in the 1970s, in an era where in most of Canada and certainly in Alberta we sought to have full-service hospitals with all programs and services in every community across the province. Alberta Health Services is undertaking very detailed planning at the zone level now about what the roles of hospitals will be, and they will all play specialized roles in the future. As the hon. member knows, AHS has recognized the need for physical renovation of the facility and will continue to work toward putting the right project in . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're counting on that, of course, Mr. Minister.

While it seems to make sense that doctors and health care professionals in Cardston would be consulted and that their recommendations would actually be listened to, this hasn't been done so far. What will the minister do to make sure that this actually happens?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm really actually grateful to the hon. member for raising this point. As I've said in this House before, we believe, I believe that there is a greater role that health advisory councils can play in this province in terms of long-term community planning for health infrastructure, providing feedback on services that are provided at the local level. What I am committed to do is to work with Alberta Health Services and those council members to expand their role, to provide them a greater voice in the kind of planning that the hon. member is talking about. I think that's very worth while.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Little Bow.

Municipal Charters

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing and hearing and hearing and hearing and the MLA for Edmonton-Centre has also been asking these kinds of questions surrounding the city charter framework agreement, but we haven't seen any details outside of conversations, in fact, in the media. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can't you at least release a framework of the agreement to the public?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have a very constructive engagement with the mayors of the two big cities in this province. They have a very positive approach to working together with the government of Alberta. I'm very pleased to say that we will be making good progress, and we're a matter of weeks away from demonstrating the progress that all of this good work has accumulated to date.

Mr. Dorward: Well, I'm happy to hear that we're weeks away now. What are the objectives of that agreement? Can you give us some more beef as to that, Minister?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Government Act is also under review, and that's something that municipal officials and other stakeholders around the province are very interested in and are engaging in a very open process throughout the province this spring. That is not unrelated to the working relationship with the two large cities, you know, those cities that have more than three quarters of a million citizens, have greater capacity, have greater ability to do stuff, and have the opportunity to provide leadership for their own respective communities.

Mr. Dorward: Let's cut right to the chase. Can you speak to the concern that affects myself, in that people are talking about new taxation powers being given specifically to Calgary and Edmonton?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it's clear the hon. member is an accountant, and I'm very pleased to have his question. All of us as citizens are focused on the fact that there really is only one taxpayer at the end of the day. This is not a conversation so much about new revenue sources. If there were any, I'd speculate about the need for possibly having a plebiscite about them, but there aren't necessarily any in the works. What we're really talking about is how we ensure that citizens get the services that they are entitled to and that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Bridge Maintenance and Repair

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Transportation has been looking after the local bridge funding program for many years and promised to build infrastructure in this province. They've now decided to pass the costs on to municipalities. Many of these bridges are 50 to 75 years old and need repairs. Downloading the cost to already overstretched municipalities is not fair and also places essential emergency services delivery at risk. Can the Minister of Transportation explain why his government is putting rural Albertans at risk by failing to maintain adequate levels of service for bridge funding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank that member for a good policy question. A year ago we had to make some tough decisions in the budget and save some money, and unfortunately we zero-funded the strategic infrastructure program, which included the bridge funding for municipalities. Being a councillor from a rural municipality I know how important that program is. But we also increased funding to the basic . . .

2:30

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the AAMD and C has called to increase funding "to a level that reflects the needs of the community, agricultural sector and local industry," why will this government not come back to the table, agree to a second round of meetings with the AAMD and C to ensure that rural Albertans are not put at risk by the deteriorating roads and infrastructure in our ridings?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I meet regularly with my colleagues at AAMD and C, and I know the pressures that they've come under. Over the past three years this province has set aside $35 million each year, a total of $105 million, for bridge maintenance and preservation on provincial highways, a vast majority of which are in rural ridings.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of agriculture: given that the recent grain transportation crisis in Alberta affects farmers' access to markets, with even a press release just hours ago promoting what the rail service should now do, is this minister concerned that his government's lack of commitment for essential road infrastructure will complicate more problems for agricultural producers getting their products to market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for the question. Obviously, transportation is very important to agriculture. That's why we've been so active in recent weeks in our advocacy after listening to our producers. Roads are equally important. I have the ear of the Minister of Transportation. We talk regularly. We're also planning a meeting with the AAMD and C, hopefully this week. I would note, though, that the Auditor General's report just a year ago indicated that their finding was that our bridges were safe, so we're not talking about a safety issue. But we still are very . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: I'll try it again if you want.

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. I was distracted. My apologies. Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Tow Truck Driver Safety

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's roads and highways are busy, and tow truck operators are often called in to assist with emergency situations, putting them in harm's way and at a dangerous risk of being struck by passing vehicles. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Given that towing services often work in conjunction with law enforcement, ambulance, and fire crews, what safety measures are in place to ensure that they are protected from roadside incidents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. She always works hard on behalf of her constituents. The safety of motorists and first responders and tow truck drivers is always a top priority for my department. Tow trucks have amber flashing lights to signal to other motorists that they are stopped and working on a vehicle at the roadside and work site. At scenes shared with emergency responders, tow truck operators also have additional protection from emergency vehicles.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: given that tow truck drivers work in these high-risk situations, does your ministry see value in allowing these personnel to have red and blue flashing lights so that they can be better identified on Alberta's highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No. Red and blue flashing lights identify emergency vehicles, and tow trucks are not considered emergency vehicles. It also should be noted that no other jurisdiction in Canada allows tow trucks to have red and blue flashing lights.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. These tow truck operators are not feeling safe, so if red and blue lights are not an option for them, what alternative mechanisms or initiatives could your ministry support to ensure overall driver safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important for tow truck operators to take necessary steps to ensure that their work sites are safe. Part 12 of the occupational health and safety code outlines how signs, lights, barriers, traffic cones, et cetera, should be in place to assist in providing a safer environment for tow truck operators to work. As we continue building Alberta, safety on all work sites and on all provincial highways will be integral.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Continuity in Health Care

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The story of Greg Price is tragic. It was told in vivid detail in December's Health Quality Council report. Greg died two years ago at the age of 31 of testicular cancer. It's tragic because the barriers that Greg faced while trying to access health care were well known by this government. The report notes six surveys over 10 years, each identifying the same fundamental problem, a systematic breakdown in communication. The breakdown prevented Greg from receiving timely care. To the minister. Greg's story is not unique, and it's not new. Why, after a decade of knowing . . .

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really want to thank the hon. member for the question. The story of that young gentleman is indeed very tragic. However, as the hon. member knows, the primary conclusion of the report was not only that there was a failure of communication but that there was a failure at several junctures in the course of Greg's care of physicians to communicate and share information regarding that patient. As a result of that report, we have begun work with the College of Physicians & Surgeons and other health professionals to determine what can be done to ensure that those breakdowns don't occur.

The Speaker: Supplemental, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that a priority in the 2010 five-year health action plan is now also a recommendation in the report following Greg's tragic death and given that the recommendation was to create an e-referral system connected to Netcare that would standardize the referral process, can the minister explain why Albertans are continuing to wait for this government to follow through on a four-year-old promise?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was certainly one of the recommendations, and we are looking at the e-referral system in conjunction with Alberta Health Services. But the primary conclusion of the report is something that I think all of us can benefit from reflecting upon, and that is: first and foremost, physicians have responsibility and accountability for the care that they provide to patients. That includes, as the report demonstrates, communication that occurs when the patient is with the physician and when the patient is referred to another physician.

The Speaker: Hon. member, final sup.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That leads into my next question. Given that the report spoke of doctors not being informed about patient care in emergency, not being informed about care their patients received from specialists, and not being informed about the patients' diagnostic tests or their results, how can Albertans needing health care today be assured that they won't fall through the same cracks as Greg did?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, what patients can rely on is the fact that this government and, I believe, physicians as a community in this province recognize that there is a great deal to be learned from this report. Again, the primary recommendations are around the accountability of physicians for the care that they provide to patients, both the care that they provide directly and the responsibility to share information when they make referrals to other physicians and, when they receive results of tests, to share those with other physicians as well. That is the learning from this very important report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Smoky River Bridge Removal

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of years ago an abandoned railway bridge in my constituency that crossed the Smoky River near Watino gave way during demolition, leaving a large part of this bridge in the river, where it poses a safety threat to navigation. It's been stated that the CNR was the owner of the bridge and, therefore, responsible for the cost of the removal of this bridge from the Smoky River, that the removal would take place by the end of last summer, and that compliance action would be taken if it became necessary. My first question is to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that I share the member's view about the importance of safety on our rivers and especially the Smoky River. We've been working with CN Rail and their contractor in getting the bridge removed from the river. I can tell you that the contractor tried to remove the bridge this summer and this fall but was unable to do so safely. I'm told that as soon as the spring runoff is done and the ice is gone, they'll try to remove the bridge again.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: will you consider taking a compliance action under the Water Act and/or the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to ensure that this work is done as soon as possible?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, CN Rail and the contractor have been working in good faith. I will say to you that if this does change, we will look at enforcement action.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can a deadline be imposed on CNR to ensure the removal of the bridge in a timely manner?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I do share the member's concern, but it's also important that when we do remove the bridge, we do so in a very safe manner. My department will continue to work with CN and the contractor, and we'll ensure that the bridge is removed from the Smoky River sooner rather than later. The company and contractor will try again this spring, as I said, to remove the bridge. It is my hope that they will be successful this time around.

2:40 Education Performance Measures

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, there's been a great deal of hyperbole and debate surrounding the merits of discovery math. I think that what is needed is a balance, and Alberta teachers know how to teach our students and implement a wide variety of individualized learning techniques. What needs to be remembered is that curriculum is one thing; teaching children is another. So whether we're talking about old math or new math, what is clear to me is that teachers need to be empowered. To the Minister of Education: regardless of what your curriculum states, how do you expect teachers to be able to support student learning with 25, 30, or even 40 kids in the classroom?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think we've said repeatedly that, you know, we recognize that the size of the class is an important factor in success, but it's not the only important factor, and it's not the most important factor. Certainly, we know that the younger grades benefit more greatly from investment in smaller class sizes, which is why that's one of the areas of the Education budget that's steadily been increased. So we do agree with the member that we want to invest in those areas, and we do invest in those areas, but it's not the only solution in terms of getting success for our students.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the numbers don't lie. Despite adding 48,000 more students from four years ago, only 106 new teachers have been hired. Keeping the same ratio to students from four years ago, we would have 3,200 more teachers in our classrooms. Instead, we have kids crammed in classrooms with fewer teachers per capita. Clearly, the minister must admit that this is not good for kids.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the hon. member gets his stats from. I'd be quite happy to look at those and look into those more deeply, but the reality is that in Alberta we don't track how many teachers we have in the classrooms. It's probably something that we should do, and maybe that's one thing that will come back from the regulatory review committee; that is, requiring school boards to readily report, to more transparently report how many teachers they actually have doing instruction. Many teachers are involved, as you know, in administration; some are involved in research and other pieces. Those pieces of the budget are areas of the budget that were decreased, not the areas where we're investing in the classroom. We increased the budget in the classroom. We decreased the budgets in transportation and research.

Mr. Hehr: Well, those are some pretty big numbers, so we'll concentrate on some easy ones, the number 50. We know your government promised 50 new schools in the last election. To date you guys have not started building them. Will you just come clean with the Alberta public that none of these 50 new schools will be built by the next election?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always encouraging to see another member from the opposition excited about the building Alberta plan that we're putting in place under the Premier. Last week we heard a member anxious about having a shovel in their hand, and perhaps this hon. member wants a shovel in his hand as well.

As I have said in the past, Mr. Speaker, we have a plan. The first part of building a school, interestingly enough, isn't putting the shovel in the ground. It's putting the planning in place, deciding where it is, working with the school boards, getting the programming in place. We're doing that, and we intend to have those schools in place, 50 and 70, in 2016.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The time for question period has elapsed. Thank you, hon. members, for sticking to the 35-second rule, which was strictly enforced today, as a result of which 18 main questions were asked for a total of 108 questions and answers, a record. I did receive a couple of notes from a couple of members questioning the timing. I will check the log because we keep strict track of all this and just see if our timers were bang on or if they erred by a second or two. I don't think they did, but I will check it and let you know tomorrow.

In the meantime let's take a 30-second break, and then we'll move on.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us begin, then. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Bassano Continuing Care Centre

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Newell Foundation for their hard work in developing a strategy to address the serious need for aging-in-care spaces and developing a comprehensive continuing care framework.

In 2010 it was identified that there were 975 individuals waiting for placement in the community. This project will ensure that the Bassano health centre and its service region, which is three times larger than the town, are properly cared for. The Bassano continuing care centre's intent is to integrate independent living, supportive living, long-term care, primary care, and acute care into a fully functional design that supports a variety of community amenities. The integration of these resources will enhance the financial and building design efficiencies. This model will set the stage as a best-practice demonstration project for future rural facilities.

For the less-intensive dedicated care areas such as resident rooms, health care could be overlaid in a home environment, with AHS providing health services where the resident lives within the facility as much as possible. The health staff would be funded and employed by AHS but have the ability to flex the location of care as needed and as appropriate within the facility. Designed around a crossgenerational model, the centre offers a complete continuum of care and wellness for both young and old.

With the land transfer from the town to the foundation now being finalized, the only step left before breaking ground is to sign a service contract with AHS. I trust the minister shares my gratitude of everyone involved and sees how local decision-making can provide the services communities need.

I'm hopeful that the minister will ensure that AHS makes this project a priority so that seniors across Alberta get the quality health care services they deserve.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Calgary-Cross.

4-H Premier's Award Winner

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to again recognize the 2013 4-H Premier's award winner, Michelle Hoover. Ms Hoover was named the 2013 4-H Premier's award winner for her outstanding and commendable dedication to the organization. She was chosen from amongst the province's top members, who are helping to shape the future of rural Alberta through dedication to their communities. Ms Hoover is an eight-year member of the Delia 4-H Beef Club. She has held various executive positions in her club and district, participated enthusiastically in her beef project, and excelled in her public speaking.

Aside from her 4-H activities Ms Hoover takes giving back to her community to heart through her various volunteer activities. As the 4-H Premier's award recipient Ms Hoover has also been a role model over the past year for other 4-H members by attending events and speaking engagements across our province. 4-H members pledge their heads to clearer thinking, their hearts to greater loyalty, their hands to larger service, and their health to better living for their club, their community, and their country, and Ms Hoover is a great example of these qualities and actions.

Mr. Speaker, 4-H has been a cornerstone in Alberta's agricultural history since its inception in 1917. While 4-H strengthens our ties to agriculture, it also teaches our youth important qualities that can be applied to all aspects of our lives, such as leadership, loyalty, and commitment. With the dedication and innovation exhibited by 4-H youth like Ms Hoover, I can say without a doubt that the future is looking very bright indeed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Greer Black

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to pay tribute to an extraordinary Albertan. Greer Black has had a distinguished 35-year career in health care. He's been an outstanding president and chief executive officer for the Bethany Care Society for over 22 years, and he has been a long-time friend of mine. Greer recently announced that he will be retiring on March 28. He is a strong advocate for seniors and persons with disabilities. Greer ensured that they could live independently with grace and with dignity.

The Bethany Care Society, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is a faith-based, voluntary, not-for-profit organization dedicated to building relationships with the residents and clients they serve. Greer pioneered the way as his strong, steady hands created excellent programs in health, housing, and support services for over 6,500 Bethany clients. His clear vision and guidance created state-of-the-art continuing care facilities, affordable apartments, and community services. Many boards and organizations have benefited from Greer's wisdom and his expertise.

Greer was recently asked, Mr. Speaker, what his greatest success has been, and he stated:

I believe that our challenge has also been our success; I believe that creating a strong, distinctive culture within Bethany has been successful. Bethany's reputation within the province and within the communities we serve . . . has shown that the work done by many to create caring communities has worked. Our integration of spirituality is an integral part of resident care.

My heartfelt thanks and appreciation go to Greer for his strong legacy. He did make a difference in the lives of countless seniors and their families. I invite all members of this Assembly to join me in wishing Greer all the very best in his retirement.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to highlight a few of the many positive projects and funding announcements made in recent weeks. Alberta's population is rapidly expanding, and this growth would not be possible without a robust economy, high quality of life, and support for citizens who need it the most. Alberta is a great place to live and raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, our government has committed to projects which are integral in sustaining this growth while ensuring that our future generations have the tools necessary to sustain our success. Last week we announced $600 million to continue the city of Edmonton's LRT project. Also last week we announced that we will invest $30 million into Grant MacEwan University through the building Alberta plan to achieve their dream of a single, sustainable downtown campus. Simply put, we are building now to ensure that our future is even brighter than today.

However, it is not only massive infrastructure projects and university campuses receiving the support and funding of this government. In a place of immense prosperity and success it's important to take care of the most vulnerable citizens as well. This government has increased the funding to at-risk children and youth, increased funding to persons with disabilities, and continues to invest in homeless support programs. Furthermore, over $350 million has been budgeted for Alberta seniors benefits to ensure that those who have given us so much can be taken care of.

I'm very proud of this government, the work that they have done. We are not even done serving today, and we will make sure that we continue our prosperity and serve our future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Craft Breweries

Mr. Hehr: As today is St. Patrick's Day and Albertans, as we know, are apt to imbibe on this day and occasionally on other days as well, I'd like to make a humble request. It's quite simple, really, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to see the government do more to support the development of a thriving and vibrant craft brewing and distillery industry in Alberta. According to Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission 76 per cent of Albertans consume alcohol. Note to the government: that is a large constituency that it would do well to keep happy.

The new liquor manufacturing policies announced in early December were a good start after years of stagnation, but arguably much still needs to be done and can be done to bring us on par with the likes of other Canadian jurisdictions such as Ontario, British Columbia, and Nova Scotia. The province's focus for many years now has been on ensuring tremendous product choice in beer, wine, and spirits. However, far too often those products have come from other provinces and countries. There is a thirst out there, Mr. Speaker, for greater access to Alberta-made liquor products and craft beer in particular. We lag woefully behind other jurisdictions in this regard, which is incredibly ironic given this government's alleged support of Alberta entrepreneurs.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what we've actually been very good at is supporting the brewing and distillery industries in other provinces and the United States. Our small-brewer tax program, for example, continues to subsidize brewing jobs in the United States and elsewhere. This is a situation that urgently needs to be rectified, and it's one that the government promised to review.

We also need to revisit the volume limits placed on our mid-sized brewers. I'd really like to know what is happening on this front, as I'm sure is also the case for Alberta's small brewers. I'd also really like to encourage the government to continue looking at ways to liberalize the province's archaic liquor laws. I think allowing Alberta's small brewers and microdistillers to sell their wares at local . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bill 204
Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy
(MLA Public Interest Fee Waiver)
Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to introduce for first reading Bill 204, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy (MLA Public Interest Fee Waiver) Amendment Act, 2014.

Implementation of this bill will further the accessibility of public information for all Albertans through all 87 MLAs' ability to conduct four free freedom of information requests annually. These four FOIPs will be done with the Privacy Commissioner's oversight and approval. Annually it will be disclosed which MLAs did which freedom of information requests and at what costs. Essentially, it will be free for each MLA to do four freedom of information requests a year.

I was amazed to discover after being first elected that the costs and waiting times for reimbursement for doing our work were actually slowing us down. This was slowing us down from ensuring that Alberta citizens' and taxpayers' funds were being well spent. Can you imagine the lack of transparency and accountability that many Albertans, nonprofits, and organizations may be prevented from discovering because of their budget constraints?

This bill will encourage Albertans to work with any MLA to increase government accountability and transparency. Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the debate on this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling here of the five requisite copies of a resolution from the AAMD and C for the local bridge program to come back. It's costing municipalities over $50 million a year. That's what they're short right now. There's a $22 million shortfall for that. I'll table these.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the required number of copies for this tabling. It's with regard to the Bassano continuing care centre. It's the October 11, 2013, final report. It's what my member's statement today was about, and I would like to present them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish I didn't read so much. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two documents that I referenced during a question last week on legal aid. The first is produced by the Canadian Bar Association. It's called Reaching Equal Justice Report: An Invitation to Envision and Act, Equal Justice: Balancing the Scales. That's the first one.

The second one is also published by the Canadian Bar Association, and it's called Moving Forward on Legal Aid:

Research on Needs and Innovative Approaches. This one was prepared on June 2010. I missed the date on the other one.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Hughes, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Safety Codes Act the Safety Codes Council annual report 2012; pursuant to the Government Organization Act the 2011-2012 authorized accredited agency summary, the 2012-13 Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association annual report, the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2013.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Insurance Act the Automobile Insurance Rate Board 2013 annual report for the year ended December 31, 2013.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

We had no points of order today, I'm happy to report, so we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 202

Independent Budget Officer Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province is a wonderful place to live and raise a family. It's the economic engine of Canada, with low unemployment and low taxes, but for all the province's wealth, with the government's budgets we're often left scratching our heads. The budgets used to be straightforward, so anyone could understand how the tax dollars were used. Now that's just not the case.

When I entered public office, we had a Premier who walked the walk on accountability, openness, and transparency. His name was Ralph Klein. Under his leadership Alberta balanced its budgets and did so with comprehensive budgets that everyone could understand. Not even the Auditor General can understand our province's budget, and this, quite frankly, needs to change.

Under Ralph's leadership we had the Deficit Elimination Act. We also added some of our surpluses to the sustainability fund. Now we don't have the Deficit Elimination Act, and the sustainability fund has been drained. This is not what the Premier told us when she ran to be the leader of her party or this province. Then she used to say: "Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams." Now she says that debt is hope. Quite frankly, what are Albertans to think?

To remedy this situation, I've put forward the Independent Budget Officer Act. This act will create a provincial budget officer that will be an independent officer of the Legislature. The office would provide independent analysis of the government revenues and expenditures. It would not be like the Auditor General, which examines how money is spent. It would not do policies, programs, or decisions made – this would still be the role of the Legislature – but the PBO would be a source of unbiased information about the government's revenues and expenditures.

A provincial budget officer is necessary because the government's budgets and its assumptions are at times questionable. The key numbers have been politicized. Going into the last election, the Premier tabled what many called the Cinderella budget. The picture painted was so rosy that it must have been a fairy tale. By the time the next budget was tabled, we had moved from a fairy tale, quite frankly, to a nightmare.

Then there was a term no one had ever heard: the bitumen bubble. I say that no one had ever heard of it because we asked Finance and Treasury Board through FOIP about the term. They had no record of it, but I'll bet that if you FOIPed the Premier's office or the Public Affairs Bureau, you'd find all sorts of records. They probably focus tested that, too.

Albertans deserve better than this situation, Mr. Speaker. They deserve real accountability, and they deserve transparency. We've seen this government take some positive steps on expenses as well as salary disclosures. The government likes to talk about all the gold standards it has set, but to me it seems more like fool's gold. The expense gambles haven't stopped. They've continued, and they're getting worse. More troubling is that it always seems to start at the top.

The government loves travelling in first class and billing taxpayers for fancy hotels, but they're shocked when it's pointed out to them. They say that they'll look into it or that they didn't know about it or "How could that happen?" or that it's the staff's fault or that the policy is unclear. This government created the policies less than two years ago. It's their fault. They're out of touch with responsible spending, and they only look into their bad behaviour when the opposition points it out.

This is not a new idea, Mr. Speaker. Ontario is setting up a PBO. The government of Canada has one. Every state in the United States has one, too. It would be simple to set up. The staff that currently works at Finance and Treasury Board would run the PBO. It would be a source of statistics, indicators, and forecasts that the government would use as well as the public. It would be a public asset, not a political asset.

I can tell you right now that our colleges and universities wish for trustworthy budgets. Imagine how professors and students feel after the last few budgets. They believed that the 2012 budget would show that everything was rosy. Nothing to worry about then. Then Budget 2013 was tabled, and now they really have to worry. A planned increase turned into a forced cut. They had the rug pulled out from under them. They had no time to plan for the budgets that they were being handed. Many were laid off. Programs were cut. That was the same situation for those in the PDD programs. Cuts were made that totally blindsided everyone. Vulnerable people in our province deserve better. The great people who run our vital programs need predictability. They deserve better.

Another part of my bill would allow any MLA or committee to request an independent cost analysis of program spending. A major issue my constituents have struggled with is the government's promise to renovate and build new schools. It appears they've made a promise that they just can't keep with respect to 70 modernizations and 50 new schools. This government has stubbornly insisted that it can build every one they promised even though builders aren't bidding on the P3s to make them.

What the government has been great at is building signs. We can trust that as soon as someone had an idea for a building, the sign would be built for thousands of dollars. What we can't trust is the government's ability to follow through. Their numbers can't be trusted. Their budgets can't be trusted.

To avoid further politicization of the budget numbers, my bill would not allow past MLAs to hold a provincial budget office. We've seen too many government offices become politicized, independent or not. If you want to be seen as impartial and beyond reproach, you have to step back from political life. Judges know this. So do other people in the public sector. But the government doesn't seem to care. It seems like they're against it. They want people they can trust, not the public. The word "independent" means free from outside control, but with the government, that is not what they want. They like control. They appoint boards like AHS, but when they don't do what they want, they fire them. They don't like independence; they like dependence. They need to change. We need officers of this Legislature, that are free from government control, to do what's best for Albertans. I think an independent provincial budget officer is exactly what Albertans want and what Albertans need.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when Albertans are asking their elected members to act first and foremost on their behalf, not on behalf of the government or the governing party but to have the wishes of their constituents in mind, this bill provides a great opportunity for that. An independent budget officer would allow members to better represent those who elect them. They would be able to provide their constituents with timely, accurate, and factual information about the state of the province's finances, information free from spin and free from partisan language.

Albertans don't want talking points. They want to know the truth. I'm going to encourage every member of the Assembly to reflect on what they hear today and to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the hon. member is bringing forward something that on the surface sounds like something that everyone should jump behind.

I want to read something, Mr. Speaker.

As an independent legislative... office, our work [would assist] the Legislative Assembly, and in particular... Public Accounts [and MLAs], in holding the government accountable... provide opinions on whether the consolidated financial statements of the province, and the financial statements of every ministry, department, fund and provincial agency, are presented appropriately.

That sounds pretty good.

They would audit the financial statements and the performance measures to ensure that the performance measures are actually dealing with what we said we would be doing in terms of the objectives and that those performance measures in that audit would actually lead to recommendations to the government that are public and reportable back to this House. Mr. Speaker, these recommendations would be "to improve performance reports and the processes the government follows to produce them." An important part of that mandate should be "to examine and report on the government's management control systems."

Many of the concerns the hon. member has just raised based on the concerns that she has, amongst a whole raft of others, Mr. Speaker, this proposed office would not deal with because they're political and they're ideological from the opposition's perspective. And rightly so. They should have that opportunity. They should have the opportunity to tear the budget apart and report back to the constituents on what they like, what they don't like, what they think is right, what they think is wrong, and we encourage them to do that. We're about to go through a very onerous and long process. Every department is going to go through that. In fact, tonight we're going to have three hours on one department alone where the opposition is going to be able to do that.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says that no one understands the budget that we presented, yet I've been across the province talking to chambers, rotary clubs, individuals. I'll be talking to councillors and municipalities tomorrow. Nobody has said to me that they don't understand the budget except the opposition and one other group that is looking for subscriptions and headlines.

Mr. Speaker, I digress a little bit because what I was talking about was a mandate. The hon. member was talking about the mandate of the office. What I just read to you sounds awfully similar to the mandate that is in the proposed budget office, too. The mandate I just read you is actually the Auditor General's mandate. Why would we create an office that does the same thing that the Auditor General's office is mandated to do? The Auditor General is not political. He provides unbiased opportunities for them to take shots at if they wish. He does the recommendations. In fact, he does a lot of recommendations every year.

In fact, we also have an audit committee made up of individuals from the private sector who look over the reports that the Auditor General does and the reports that the government does. That audit committee also has mandates that are similar to what the hon. member talks about with the independent budget officer. Frankly, some of what's in this independent budget office are things that opposition MLAs should be doing as part of their job, but I wouldn't go down that road.

Mr. Speaker, the other piece is that it's unclear the extent of what the budget offices in other jurisdictions do. I mean, we've done a little bit of work on this because one of the chambers of commerce in the province actually recommended we do this, the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. I've had a lot of discussions with the Calgary Chamber of Commerce about what the opportunity might be to look at other ways that we can have vetting, if you will, of the forecast. The hon. member talks about the forecast in her question. I readily agree. In fact, I seem to recall that during my Budget Address in this House I made the comment that the day that we put the forecast, that we had to print, it was probably going to be wrong, and everybody across the House was going to be critical of it. It is amazing that that prediction has come true. That forecast was entirely accurate.

What is difficult, Mr. Speaker, and what no independent budget officer would be able to do either is to predict what the Canadian dollar is going to be three months from now, to predict what oil is going to be six months from now. The hon. member talks about the bitumen bubble. In fact, the press came up with the bitumen bubble. The industry is the one that told us the differential was going to rise based on a glut of production heading into the Bakken that had nowhere to go.

Mr. Speaker, forecasting is a very complicated situation in our province. It's not the same as in other provinces, although this year we did actually do something that B.C. does. They brought in a group of independent forecasters and economists. They do this on a regular basis. They bring them in every year, and they provide the Minister of Finance with recommendations. They also look at the assumptions that are going to be put into the budget and give an indication as to whether or not they think they're in line with where their forecasts are. We had two forecasting summits last year. We brought experts from across Canada, even North America, to talk about forecasting. Those are the forecasts that are in this budget.

I have in my hands, actually, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce budget presentations. I heard the hon. member on some of the media this morning talking about: well, if the chambers of commerce support the budget, which they do, and the chambers of commerce support the format of the budget, which they do, and the chambers of commerce support the fact that the calculation of our consolidated surplus is $1.1 billion, similar to what the federal government does their calculation on and the same way that Premier Klein used to calculate the surplus deficit number – they all agree with this. [interjection] In fact, it is true, hon. member. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is trying to change the rules of accounting, which is rather interesting given that he's the critic.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has not given us an unqualified statement. He's actually said that our financial statements do reflect the true picture of Alberta's finances. It's different, I might say, than what is happening in Saskatchewan, as an example.

Anyway, I have in my hands – and I think that these have been tabled in the House previously; if not, I will get the requisite number of copies at the appropriate opportunity – from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce their submissions to me both from last year and this year in terms of the budget recommendations. If you were to review through here, you would actually find that there is a lot of support for how we're doing the savings plan, operating plan, capital plan. There's a lot of support for what we're doing in terms of how we're going to build capital. There are a lot of very good suggestions, some of which were included in Budget 2013, some of which were included, actually, in Budget 2014. Nowhere in these two documents, Mr. Speaker, does the Alberta Chambers of Commerce call for an independent budget officer.

The Calgary Chamber of Commerce did talk about the creation of a provincial budget office, and I'm actually talking to them about the why. Why are they looking for this? We were having some very good discussions about what they perceived to be a change in how we were doing our accounting and what is the actual fact. It's unfortunate that other forces, if you will, are trying to cloud the issue of what is the public-sector accounting for its principles because they have not changed. The public-sector accounting principles which this province, this government, follows are the same as the principles that are followed in British Columbia. They're the same as the principles that are followed by the federal government. They haven't changed.

Mr. Speaker, what I see here is a political attempt to try to do something to, I guess, add to their political – you know, they talk about how this would be unbiased, but in actual fact the whole reason they're bringing it in is for political gain. This is a duplication of what is an officer of this Legislature already. This would be an added expense. This would be an added process in terms of cost for the taxpayers of Alberta. The government is the one that presents the budget, not an independent person that's been appointed. The government is the one that decides on the priorities of where we're going to be putting our expenditures and where we're going to be investing for the future of Albertans.

I'm just not exactly sure to what extent an independent budget officer would benefit taxpayers or the budget process, Mr. Speaker, because many of the concerns they've raised, they've raised in this House before. They talk about, you know, the fact that we have made a conscious choice to use the capital markets to build the infrastructure that Albertans need today and into the future. We have not made the choice that the opposition leader has made, which is to defer capital and not build that capital, which is not what Albertans told us to do. They told us to build it today.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been very clear that we made the conscious choice to utilize our 50-year lows in interest rates and amortize that over the life of the assets. Frankly, the chambers of commerce agree with that. The financial administrators and planners in this province agree with that. Anyone who has done any type of economics or financial planning or ran a business agrees that you use all the levers at hand to accomplish the tasks you need. Right now, with 105,000 people moving into our province last year, we need infrastructure, and every municipality will agree to that. In fact, every municipality is also doing what we're doing.

Thank you. I will not support this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have Edmonton-Centre, then, presumably, a government member, and then Edmonton-Calder or Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, Mr. Provincial Treasurer, tsk, tsk, tsk. Now who's getting political on whose time?

I've had the great honour, Mr. Speaker, of being here for 18 budget presentations and 19 Public Accounts years. As the Provincial Treasurer well knows, an Auditor General examines past accounts, and a budget officer looks at forward accounts, at the budget, which comes at the front end of the planning process. I'm sure he knows that – I hope he knows that – because he is the Treasurer. There; I just solved that one for you. It was pretty simple.

But what I notice in the budgets that have been presented – and I've mentioned this a number of times during debates on supplementary supplies and interim supplies and budget debates, and I've had a number of hon. colleagues opposite agree with me. The budgets that this government puts forward are harder and harder and harder to understand, to know where the money is coming from and where it's going. The whole transparency is about as clear as a black plastic bag, being able to see what the government intends and how things are going to proceed.

Let me give you just a few examples of that. We end up with the government announcing the same project over and over and over and over again. You think: "I'm pretty sure I heard that. That school was announced or that – oh, wait – children's mental health program. Three of those I've heard announced, at least three." Then you're thinking: "Well, let me go look at the budget. Were there three of them in there or only one of them in there?" That's very hard to tell.

I used to look at budgets that had votes and under that subvotes and under that program votes, so you could actually tell what the programs were that the government was running. You would have vote 11, and it would say: environmental monitoring. Then under that you'd have 11.1, and it would give you more of a breakdown on how we were monitoring the environment, let's say by, you know, soil or air, land, and water. Under each of those there would be a further breakdown that would tell you what programs they were actually running. No, no, no. Not that anymore. We get one vote.

I mean, just think of it. How transparent is it to have one vote for Alberta Health Services under the Health budget? One vote. Is it $19 billion now? I think so. One vote. No subvotes, no program descriptions, but we're supposed to glean out of this one number how transparent and accountable this government is. Really? How can we possibly hold the government and make them be accountable when this whole budgeting process has become such a process of digging out and pulling the threads to see what the government is actually planning to do in a budget? There was so little information given.

The other example I'll give you just very quickly is the old: well, we'll tell you three years in advance. That's the newest one. So we get: "Oh, we're going to give a hundred and fifty million more dollars to the municipalities. Aren't we wonderful?" Well, hmm, over a three-year time period it's actually $50 million a year, and that's not quite so impressive. They roll it together so they can talk about things with a much larger number, and it looks much more impressive. You know, that would even be a good thing if they would follow through with it.

But by the time you get into year 1 and a half of their three-year rollout, they've stopped talking about that program. It's disappeared, and the next time you see a budget, the performance measurement is gone. The indicator is gone. Nobody talks about that anymore. It just disappeared. Where's the accountability in that, Mr. Speaker? They roll all this money out. They promise it to these people. Big, impressive numbers: gone. How transparent and accountable is it to say: "We believe in cities and municipalities, the MSI money, absolutely. We're going to follow through on all our promises?" That is just a falsehood.

They say, "We were going to give $1.6 billion over a three-year plan." They didn't even get close to that. Right from the get-go they ran a three-year program, and they never even got close to giving out that amount of money. Where are we, actually? Well, we're not doing $1.6 billion. We're not doing $1.2 billion. Oh, wait a minute. We're doing $900 million, which is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. I'm not debating that. We're a wealthy province, and we do pretty well. But, really, it's $900 million. Don't try to put a party dress on that and throw some sparkles in your hair and go running out there pretending that it's $1.2 billion because it's not.

Now, if you want to add a little purse to your party outfit, and the purse is worth about 300 and some-odd million dollars, you could say that the whole outfit was $1.2 billion. Nice, huh? That's exactly what they've done. They're still paying $900 million into MSI, and then they have a little purse that's called – I can't even remember what it is now – transit money or something that they've tucked in there as their little sparkly purse, you know, a little clutch, one that you take. Then they can say that it's an outfit worth $1.2 billion. No, it isn't. We still haven't gotten anywhere close to the promise back from 2007 that there was going to be $1.6 billion. Less and less information, less and less transparency, less and less accountability.

Now, the minister talks about that somehow what the Official Opposition has recommended is political and partisan. Oh, Mr. Speaker. Well, coming from this government, it's a little hard to choke down, friends. I've watched this government for a long period of time. I know how political you are, and I know how much you cover those areas of your body that you sit on frequently. I know how political you can be.

You know, by way of an example, the budget is supposed to be passed by the first of April. How many times has the budget been passed by the time we get into the fiscal year? Anybody? Anybody? Pop quiz. I think they've done it once in the time I've been here. Once. What kind of managerial skill and oversight and transparency and accountability does it take for a government to not get its budget done let's call it 17 out of 18 times? Like, wow. That's a pretty bad fail rate. You wouldn't pass that performance measurement.

And wait. We're not even talking about the need to pass the interim supply, which used to be called the special warrant. In order to give yourself money to continue operating, you always like to slide that one through. Wait, there's more. There's more, as they say on the television commercial. For the same $24.99 you are going to get one to two supplementary supply budgets a year. Now, sometimes supplementary supply budgets, in fact, are needed. There have been forest fires. There have been floods. There's actually a need to spend additional money. But let's talk politics, let's talk partisanship because that would be about when they say, "Oh, um, we just budgeted kind of low on the forest fires," which happen every year, then "Oops." They've got to put more money in there when it rolls around. Well, what do you think that's about? That's about delivering a budget to people where they go: "Look at how wonderful we are. We've got a surplus, and we're spending less than we're bringing in, blah, blah, blah." Not true, Mr. Speaker, because they haven't budgeted for a number of things they know will cost more. They deliberately lowball it and then bring it back in.

Are you checking to see whether "blah, blah, blah" is parliamentary, Mr. Speaker? I'm pretty sure it is, but do call me on it if I'm wrong.

We spend less time debating our budgets now. We no longer debate in the Assembly, where there's lots of room for people to come and listen. We're going to stuff everybody into a very small committee room, where they can't hear very well and there isn't enough room for the media and the guests. So do I think this is a good idea?

Oh, I'm sorry. There's one other thing the Provincial Treasurer said. I'm curious about why the Provincial Treasurer thinks that the budget officer would not be able to consult the same – and possibly different, maybe even more – experts for an opinion on the oil crisis in the budget. Surely, this would be an intelligent person. They can easily go and make the same kind of consultation and predictions on the price of oil as the government can. Maybe they'd be more accurate even. That's another political partisan trick this government has played on us for a very, very long time, to lowball the revenue and highball the expenses. Gosh darn, don't they end up with an awesome surplus?

So, Mr. Speaker, all in all, do I think a budget officer is a good idea? Yes, I do. I think it would be very helpful to us here in Alberta because the government has made such a job, such a mandate for itself to cover and obfuscate and disguise and put black plastic bags over things. I think it would be very helpful to put a little sunshine in there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. member, I was just asked by some members if 29(2)(a) was available, and I was just checking the record for that, not about anything that you might have asked about. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is not available for private members' bills, as most of us know, so that stands clarified.

Let us move on now. Is there anyone from the side here?

If not, then let's go over to Edmonton-Strathcona or Edmonton-Calder, whichever one of you. You have a spot here. Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed.

Ms Notley: Oh, okay. Then we're right there already.

Well, this is an interesting piece of legislation that, generally speaking, we are in support of, in that there is a desperate need in this Legislature for some clarity and transparency with respect to how the financial information in this province is reported to Albertans and also to members of this Assembly. From that perspective it's long overdue. It's long overdue because it exists in most other jurisdictions, it's long overdue because it exists federally, it's long overdue because it exists in many other provinces, and it's long overdue because this particular government has a well-documented history of, you know, overestimating revenue when it's politically convenient, underestimating revenue when it's politically convenient. Depending on whatever their particular political agenda is of the day, the expectation with respect to revenue is massaged, shall we say, to support whatever political objective it is that they are pursuing.

Ms Blakeman: Pummelled, maybe.

Ms Notley: Pummelled. The Member for Edmonton-Centre says that the actual numbers are pummelled, that I'm being too polite – me, of all people – to the government when I say that they're being massaged. But in any event, there's no question that those numbers warrant some well-informed, independent, third-party oversight, to which all members of this Assembly would have equal access. I know that's kind of a revolutionary thought, but, you know, it is true.

When we go into the budget lock-up, one of the things that I find very interesting is that we have that brief window of time where we get access to the finance officials who this government have endless access to and to which we have almost no access. For those 45 minutes when they're allowed into that room for us, we're able to sort of pepper them with questions, and it's like Christmas Day for some of us who are actually sort of interested in finding out what's going on in this government.

You know, they're quite good about answering questions. They try to be as straightforward and as transparent as possible. It's amazing. You'll have them tell you something, and it'll take you three weeks to extract it out of a minister in some other forum. It would be so lovely if we had that 45-minute Christmas morning opportunity, for those of us interested in genuine transparency in this province, actually as a matter of right in this House. [interjection] I'm talking about budget lock-up. That is why it would be so fabulous to have that extended to all members of this House.

Now, we definitely support better access to information for Albertans to understand the choices that their government is making and to be able to come to their own conclusions through a very clear and transparent and unspun analysis or, if it's going to be spun, that at least it's spun by everyone on both sides so Albertans get the opportunity to pick their spinner as opposed to being subject to only that which the government would like them to be aware of.

You know, a financial accountability officer would also get a more fulsome picture of the financial impacts of bills or proposals because the legislation would include a consideration of financial benefits as well as costs. I think that this is a very, very good idea.

The only qualification that I would give to that, with the greatest of respect to my colleagues over there in the Official Opposition and the even greater level of respect to my colleagues over there who are currently in government, is that I actually think that this bill was kind of drafted by a government-in-waiting, so it doesn't quite go as far as I think it could to ensure true guarantees of accountability. You know, it's a bill that allows for pretty much the whole purpose of the bill to be undermined through regulation after the fact. As members from the caucus who put this bill forward know, that's something that, generally speaking, we don't want to include in legislation because it means that we're just laying the groundwork to play the same games that the government is, and why would we want to play the same games as the government?

What we want to do is ensure that the bill itself sets the standards very clearly for everyone to understand and that it does not allocate authority to whomever the governing party is to undercut it in the future. That is one of the things that we're a little bit worried about with respect to this bill. Again, the intentions are excellent, and we support them a hundred and fifty per cent, but what we would like to do is really limit the authority that this current bill would delegate to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. We would like to limit the extent of that so that we have a clear understanding.

We also want to make sure that the mandate of the independent budget officer is more clearly delineated. Do we want another partisan patronage appointee following his or her marching orders from the government of the day, or do we want a budget officer with some teeth to provide us with transparent information and allow all Albertans to hold their government accountable? I would suggest that it is the latter that we are seeking. Currently, as the bill is drafted, I don't think that we can be totally sure we've got that clarity. I think that we need to look at giving more definition to the mandate of the independent budgetary officer.

In Ontario, for instance, the Ontario financial accountability officer not only may undertake to estimate the financial costs of bills or proposals; he or she may also undertake research into those costs. So it's a broader mandate which doesn't limit the officer to just adding and subtracting to provide an accounting cost to the public. Instead, the budget officer should be able to undertake whatever research is necessary to get a full analysis of the proposal that's put before him.

We would expand the IBO's mandate, beyond that which is included in this particular bill, to give the officer all of the powers that are necessary to provide a fully complete picture of the financial costs and benefits of any particular government action to the public.

We would also recommend that the independent budgetary officer be given the ability to undertake an analysis on his or her own initiative, and this is important to ensure that nonroutine analysis can be carried out on issues that are important to the province. Otherwise, we end up relying on the Legislative Assembly or a committee to request an analysis from the IBO, which allows political choices to dictate what will and will not be reviewed by the IBO. Again, I think we need to not do that. I think we need to give this independent officer the breadth of authority that he or she needs to really provide that important public service to all Albertans, transparency. So we want to make sure that we're not controlling the independent budget officer.

We should also ensure that there is meaningful input by all parties, regardless of size, in the appointment of the independent budget officer. I'm pretty sure that we would see that happening by way of an all-party committee, but I need to be sure that that's what the legislation prescribes. I think it does, but I'm just going to double-check on that. We want to have an all-party panel so that every party has an equal voice, and frankly I would suggest that we have an all-party panel where it is possible for the opposition to have the majority of the votes. Quite frankly, right now the government gets access to all this information anyway, so this is really about ensuring that this information is shared with all Albertans.

We want to also ensure that we provide in the legislation the necessary protections for the independent budget officer to carry out his or her duties without interference or pressure from the Assembly. In Ontario, for instance, the legislation specifically stipulates that the financial accountability officer shall not do any work that interferes with his or her duties to that office. [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] Already? For goodness' sake.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone else who wishes to participate? Let us go to Airdrie, and then I have Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Shaw unless I have others that wish to intervene.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I'm happy to rise today in support of this Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act. I would preface my comments. You know, often in this Legislature we've heard the Finance minister talk about giving Albertans a choice between building and going into debt and not going into debt and building nothing. Those are the two options that he gives them. I think, Mr. Speaker and hon. minister, that a competent government could do both, could build and balance, could build what we need, could build the infrastructure that we need within the confines of the $44 billion that we're bringing in. I think that's a reasonable request from the people of Alberta. We can do both.

Does that mean that we can build everything we want in the first year or two? No, but we can sure build a heck of a lot with a $44 billion budget. But we have to be practical. We have to be smart about it. We can balance, and we can build. It is possible. A competent government would be able to do that.

I'm thankful for the comments by Edmonton-Centre on the difference between the independent budget officer and the Auditor General. Of course, the Auditor General looks back; the independent budget officer would look more forward. Hopefully, that's now understood by the Finance minister.

I would also point out that, actually, the Finance minister is wrong when he says that the way they did the budgeting for the deficit and so forth is the same as what they did back in Premier Klein's days. Obviously, I wasn't there during Premier Klein's days, but I was there, of course, during Premier Stelmach's days, in the first year there. They used to actually include in the deficit number all grants for school boards, hospital boards, regional health authorities, and so forth, and that was actually included in their consolidated budget number. Now, actually, they've moved those grants out of what they count as the deficit.

Mr. Horner: No, we haven't.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Yes, you have. I can go over the numbers. You have, Minister. It actually does dilute further the budget number. In fact, they made that change just in the last year as part of their moving SUCH-sector assets onto the books, and you should know that, Minister.

Anyway, I'm going to go over some of the pros – and there are many – of this act, of this bill. First off, I believe that this is a great idea because it would be an independent check on government. It would place an independent check on government in their predictions of revenue and expenditures, which would prevent government from essentially fudging the budget numbers.

We saw this, of course, prior to the last election, with the well-known Alice-in-Wonderland budget, as it was often called. The problem with that budget was that there were extremely unreasonable revenues that were projected by this government prior to the election so that they could promise billions and billions in new spending, and of course it was just pie in the sky. Now, everyone knew that, and I'm pretty sure the Premier and the Finance minister knew it, too, but they still went forward with those numbers, and they did so purely for political purposes. Having an independent budget officer would stop this practice so that when we go into a budget, we can actually have a reasonable understanding and confidence in what the budget numbers, in fact, are for revenue and expenditures, specifically for revenue in that example.

Under this, the proposed bill, any MLA or committee would have the ability to request an independent cost estimate of a project. A classic example: the Minister of Infrastructure or of Transportation – I forget which; they switched. Anyway, the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti said, in answer to a question, that the southwest leg of the ring road will cost anywhere between 1 and a half billion dollars and $10 billion. We saw an estimate from the Minister of Infrastructure today saying that it would be more in the $5 billion range. Actually, I think it was from the Finance minister, that it would be more in the $5 billion range.

There's obviously a huge amount – between $1 billion and $10 billion is a lot. It would be nice to have an independent budget officer to kind of put a number value on these big projects and these big initiatives of government so that all the members of the House can debate using a common set of facts instead of the government saying, "Oh, it's going to cost this much; the south-side hospital is going to cost $500 million" when, in fact, no, it didn't cost $500 million. It cost 1 and a half billion dollars and rising. And there are many other examples of that. Or the MLA offices across the way in the federal building, which is now up to almost $400 million when it started as about a $250 million project.

Having that independent officer would help us know these things before the money is spent so that we can debate whether it's proper, whether it's good government, good governance to go ahead with such projects or initiatives. The independence of the office would ensure that Albertans are receiving fair and politically unaltered information regarding the expected financial position of the province. Of course, that goes back to the budgeting and the three different budgeting documents that the government puts out for operational, capital, and saving and how we've had much confusion from the majority of commentators and folks looking at the budget. I've received thousands of letters, e-mails, et cetera, on this issue. Many have CCed the Finance minister, so I know that he's getting a lot of them. People are confused about what the real numbers are, and this would help with that.

Groups like the Chambers of Commerce, of course, would recognize the importance of this, and I think that that's something, certainly, to be noted. All 50 states, Canada's federal government, and an increasing number of provinces have an independent budget officer to ensure this type of transparency and accountability. This is not a new endeavour. It makes sense. It's pretty standard across North America and in the Westminster system.

The cost for establishing the office would be negligible as we would have the staff and expertise essentially move over from the Finance department. This is key. We're not talking about adding new bureaucracy. We're talking about taking what the Finance ministry already does, taking those resources, plopping them into an independent office so that they could do their job independent of any political influence from the Finance minister.

Of course, this demonstrates our commitment in the Wildrose to accountability, since we fully expect this officer to be holding us to account as government, and we very much look forward to having that. I think it's a good tool for government to help us to control our costs, to help us make decisions based on proper input, and to make sure the entire caucus knows what those costs will be so that they can in caucus and in the Legislature make their voices heard and have the facts at their disposal so that they can use those facts to argue for or against certain government initiatives, programs, and building projects, et cetera.

It can also be very difficult for opposition parties and third-party groups to hold government accountable when we don't have access to adequate information. It is truly hard. It's hard to make budget presentations, alternative budgets, and so forth when we don't know what some of these things will cost. Obviously, we don't have the Department of Infrastructure or the Department of Finance to come up with these projections and to come up with these things. This would improve democracy by making sure all opposition parties have access to the proper information to give constructive criticism.

Wildrose, of course, truly wants to change the way government does business, making it more transparent, accountable, and acting on behalf of Albertans, not the government party. To preserve independence, this bill makes it so that no MLA or former MLA can be appointed budget officer. I think that's a good idea. Also, the officer can only be reappointed to one five-year term. In other words, there's a two-term limit. The independent budget officer could be mandated to produce true consolidated budget forecasts that include a consolidated cash-in, cash-out deficit number, and it would prevent the government from playing its current fiscal shell game.

It would prevent the provincial government from politicizing economic indicators like energy prices and the so-called bitumen bubble. The IBO would be the authority on these indicators, so politicians could not over- or underestimate revenues for political gains. It would also be an extra check on government, as we've talked about, for project expenditure estimates and would provide an independent analysis of what government projects are feasible under certain parameters.

The IBO would also be at the disposal of the Legislative committees to aid them in their work when they are needed in assessing different initiatives that they are undertaking to study and so forth. Where the mandate of the Auditor General only allows for after-the-fact analysis of where the money has been poorly spent and how not to repeat poor spending, the work of the IBO could prevent poor spending. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Did I get that right?

Mr. Wilson: You did.

Mr. Anderson: All right. There you go.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I'd like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. No one in this Legislature has seen more bills, more private members' bills, passed in the history of this Legislature than this member. I hope very much that this will just be another notch in her very successful belt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone else here?

Then we'll go to the leader of the Liberal opposition, and then we'll go to Innisfail-Sylvan Lake unless there's someone from the fourth party.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this bill without amendments. The Alberta Liberals seek to build a strong economy and a strong society premised on the facts of fiscal prudence, social and environmental responsibility. If you look at Alberta's current economic situation, this is as good as it gets. We have amongst the highest employment rates on the planet. Our population has grown. We're getting younger. Our incomes are high. The price of oil and gas is quite high. Yet the current Conservative government is taking our province into debt and cutting back the very programs that help build a strong society and a better economy.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre did a wonderful job of schooling the Finance minister. Not only did she undress him, but she just re-dressed him with a nice purse with some trinkets in it. That's exactly what the government does with the current budgeting process. They change the definition of budgeting. On one hand, they're going into debt; on the other hand, they have a surplus; on the other hand, they're picking up money from their bank account, their credit card to put it into their savings account. They have thoroughly confused the whole budgeting process.

Mr. Speaker, we've looked at the government's budgeting and the government's typical reply is: this is going to cost more money and these policies and procedures already exist. It's been highlighted that the Auditor General really analyzes past budgets, when the mistakes have already been made and hundreds of millions and maybe even billions have been wasted. That money could have been used elsewhere. A parliamentary budget officer would analyze the present state of affairs and help all of us legislators. In fact, I believe they would probably help the government make better decisions.

Now, the Alberta Liberals – and we thank the Wildrose. This is a good thing. The Liberals and the Wildrose agree on this. In fact, the former Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had offered an amendment when the government was bringing in this results-based budgeting in 2012. His amendment was about fiscal accountability, responsibility, and it was about adding a parliamentary budget officer so that every political party would have accurate, current, and forward information in order to prepare, to make sure that we all support good fiscal policy. But that amendment was voted down by the government at that time. I thank the hon. members, you know, from the Wildrose for having the bill drawn up and bringing this forward, because the Alberta Liberals supported it then and we support it now regardless of which political party brings it forward.

The concept of an independent budget officer has enjoyed support across the country in federal and provincial governments: the Liberals, the New Democrats, and Conservatives alike. It's an idea with a broad appeal that no one political party claims ownership to but all agree is necessary across the country, whether it's federally or provincially. In Ontario the Liberals and the New Democrats worked on it. In Alberta the Liberals and the Wildrose agree on this concept.

Before the election we called this the fudge-it budget, that the government was taking an overly optimistic approach to their forecast. Guess what happened, Mr. Speaker? The day after the election: oops; we didn't see it coming. We called it the bankrupt budget. Suddenly the government used a whole different level of forecasting as an excuse to break all their promises and to hurt the very programs that built a great province and a strong society.

This budget we call the over-under budget. Over-under is where the government is not quite sure which way they want to go. What we do know is that regular middle-income and lower middle-income Albertans are overtaxed. Yeah, the billionaires are undertaxed. It's an over-under budget because regular middle-class, middle-income, lower middle-income Albertans are underserved by the very government that is elected to serve them when it comes to getting teachers for our children, nurses and family doctors and health staff for the sick and elderly, and the social workers that we need to care for our children in care.

Mr. Speaker, the government has put in its budget a lot of reactionary spending whereas if we actually invested in upstream prevention, we would not only save money; we would actually improve the lives of people. If we critically analyze every dollar of spending and see if that dollar was well spent, we can actually have the resources to make the essential investments into early childhood development; full-day kindergarten; more teachers for our children, to reduce the class sizes; more support for those teachers; to embed social workers, mental health counsellors, nurses, nurse practitioners, police officers, school resource officers into the school system so that we can build our schools as community hubs, so that schools can be used for the whole community. But the government has no money to invest because they have mismanaged and wasted a lot of taxpayer money.

One thing that's very essential is the election of the budget officer, the process of selecting the budget officer. Simply having the office and then having the government appoint – you know, the officer can be a watchdog, or it can be a lapdog. If the government unanimously appoints their own hand-picked individual, they can set it up so that it's just another lapdog. We just elected an electoral officer that was unanimously supported by every political party. That's how the selection should be. It should be unanimous support by all political parties for the individual that is elected to serve in this position, not because one of our political parties has the vast majority of the votes on a committee. If there was an Alberta Liberal government – and my sincere hope is that it is time to have that government in place – we would want every political party here to have equal say on who that individual is.

Mr. Speaker, I simply believe that this province can do better, and it should do better. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward good public policy. Good ideas should be accepted regardless of the source, and they should not be rejected by the government because the source is not within that same government.

Thank you, hon. member. You have the support of the Alberta Liberals on this bill. I believe it's a good bill, and I believe it's a bill that would set this province back onto good fiscal prudence so that we can actually take that extra money that's being wasted right now, mismanaged, to invest in the essential services our children require, our seniors require, and working families require, so that we can actually cut taxes for the middle-income and lower middle-income Albertans and cut school fees and lower tuitions, lower the cost of bills so that we don't see and fine Albertans into poverty. So, hon. member, thank you so much. The Alberta Liberals support prudent fiscal management and support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Then we will go to Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 202 from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I'm speaking today in support of this bill, which is being tabled to protect Albertans against politically motivated misappropriation of their hard-earned tax dollars. Bill 202 is a private member's bill tabled by the hon. MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek. Private member's Bill 202 isn't just an idea; it's a sound structure that provides Albertans with clear parameters before dollars are spent.

This bill has seen support from the Calgary Chamber of Commerce as well as the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. The Calgary Chamber of Commerce has said that it only makes good business sense to operate government in a businesslike manner. The Calgary chamber talked about how their own businesses must operate within their budgets. Why not the PC government? The Calgary chamber has also said that Albertans run their households under budgets, that Albertans must budget for things like groceries, heat, shelter, transportation, saving for their next vehicle, and putting aside for a rainy day. They said that if everyday Albertans can budget, why shouldn't our government?

It makes good business sense to create an office for an independent provincial budget officer, an office free of political influence and tasked to oversee and transparently report on government budgets and expenses. It makes sense for the Auditor General to audit and the independent budget officer to budget. That's how businesses are run.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has over 20 years in the political arena. She learned a long time ago that you listen to the will of the people. We have all learned that this government has not learned from those past mistakes. This government still believes that after 43 years in power they have autocratic rule. This government continues to believe they know better than everyday Albertans and that they in their wisdom have the right to spend tax dollars as they see fit.

Sadly, as we have seen in the last month, that's just not the case. The role of government is to ensure that when they spend even one dollar of taxpayer money, they remember that it's not their money. When you choose to use government resources to attend PC Party fundraisers, pick up your families from vacations, or have a genuine disrespect for those that elected you, then you know that the system has let Albertans down.

That's the beauty of Bill 202. Bill 202 provides for an independent budget officer, whose job would be to report to the Legislature on the estimated finances of the province, to provide a true and accurate picture of the state of Alberta, all of this without the political wrangling or the jargon that explains why this government no longer reports the budget in a way that all Albertans can understand. This officer would provide the government with realistic figures and economic trends and forecasts. This officer would produce the underlying economic data for provincial budgets. This officer would provide Albertans with transparency and accuracy.

The purpose of an independent budget officer is to produce budget estimates that are independent, unbiased, and untainted by political interference or political gain. There will be many members on the other side of this House who may want to support this bill, but they cannot. They may want to speak in favour of it, but they will likely have to oppose it. I remind those members that in a time of political hardship within your own party, you ran on a government for the people and to the people.

I'd like to take it one step further. Let's talk about the comments most recently made the Finance minister. The Minister of Finance talked about the budget coming to the opposition, that the opposition has an opportunity to review the budget. The budget, that time allotted, he talked about being an onerous and long process. However, what the Finance minister forgot to tell Albertans is that they've actually cut the time for budget review, that the government controls one hundred per cent the access that we have to the amount of time that we want to review the budget, and that even in a three-hour allocation of time in reality there is only 30 to 60 minutes in which the opposition can actually question the budget.

What the Finance minister also forgot to mention to Albertans – and I myself and my colleagues experienced this last year, and I'm sure we'll experience it again – is that if the minister doesn't want to answer the questions on the budget, quite frankly, he doesn't have to. Anyone who listens to budget estimates will find that there are many cases in which the minister runs the clock and talks all about the plan for Albertans rather than talking about the questions that actually relate to the budget.

As indicated as well by the Liberal member for the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, she's been here for 18 budget processes, and in 18 budget processes the last few budgets are the ones that no longer have line items and no longer allow us to really drill down into where the money is going.

One other thing the Minister of Finance also indicated is that, essentially, if we dare question how the budget is reported, we're not in line with other provinces or the federal government. The fact of the matter is that this budget is not reported in the same way as the federal government's, and it is not reported in the same way that Albertans expect. He goes on further to sort of insinuate and demean and bully other members who might ask questions about this.

Mr. Horner: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Towle: And he goes on by saying . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the President of Treasury Board has risen on a point of order.

Citation and the point of order, please, hon. member.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the citation is 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. member just insinuated that I am bullying someone. She just insinuated that I am lying to this Assembly. I take great umbrage in that.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, in 2003 the government changed to the expense basis and followed the public-sector accounting standards and the Alberta financial management commission report. So the last four budgets under Premier Klein – 2003, 2004, 2005, and 2006 – were all done the same way. In fact, the public-sector accounting principles are followed by this government, and I would ask that the hon. member refrain from accusing me of bullying anyone on that side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader for a response.

Mr. Anderson: Obviously, this isn't a point of order. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake feels very strongly that the minister is construing the budget in a way that makes it difficult for Albertans to understand and then being very condescending and bullying those who disagree with him. I think that that's a feeling that many people have. He can disagree with that feeling, but she has every right to state that. There is no point of order here, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I was listening, and I was just taking out Bill 202 to see where the member was going with this, to see if somebody was going to rise under Beauchesne 459 for relevance.

Mr. Rodney: Relevance.

The Speaker: Well, no. She was tying it to budget processes and so on.

However, as we know in this House, words sometimes do get used in ways that can be interpreted as being what the hon. President of Treasury Board has said. On the other hand, as the Member for Airdrie just clarified, they can also be used in another way intentionally or unintentionally.

So let's leave this matter as a point of clarification for now, but let's be very careful, hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and all members. Just be respectful of each other. If nothing else, please be respectful of each other.

Let's carry on with your debate. You have four minutes left.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I will go back to the relevance of it.

An independent budget officer would not allow the Minister of Finance to continue to say that anyone who questions the budget is doing it for political gain or politicizing the process. An independent budget officer would remove that armour that he arms himself with every single day.

Bill 202 would also eliminate the ability of the Premier to go on national or provincial TV and indicate that the reason the budget has to change so drastically, the reason they have to cut $42 million from PDD, the reason they reduced the budgets of universities by some 7.2 per cent is because of the bitumen bubble. That wasn't a media presentation. That was actually the Premier saying it herself. An independent budget officer, because the process would be more open and transparent, would actually allow the government to stop misleading Albertans.

The other thing the independent budget officer would go on to allow is forecasting. The Minister of Finance indicated in his response that our province is different than other provinces. I highly doubt that we are any different. The province of Saskatchewan has oil and resource revenue. The province of B.C. has the same. Those provinces have to forecast. They have to do the exact same process as we do, and they have to listen to their constituents. Interestingly enough, the province of Saskatchewan is able to do all of that and stay in a balanced budget.

Many Albertans are small-business owners, and Bill 202 reflects that. Many Albertans are large-business owners. Each and every one of us has to forecast, each and every one of us has to answer to shareholders, and each and every one of us has to answer to the people that work for us. Bill 202 allows Albertans the same opportunity to do what small-business owners do every single day. Every single day we forecast. Every single day we live within our means. Every single day – and the Minister of Finance is right about this – we do leverage every opportunity. The difference between the government and business owners is that you're not using your own money. This government seems to have forgotten that they have no money, that they are using taxpayer money. So when you report to taxpayers, that report should be fulsome, should be complete, should be open, and it should be transparent. Bill 202 would do that.

The minister asked how an independent budget officer would benefit Albertans. Bill 202 would ensure that the government's budgetary process is wholly transparent and accountable. Bill 202 would empower the independent budget officer to review the budget and help the government allocate provincial dollars before they are spent. I know it's a novel idea, but it can be done. This officer would help keep Alberta's budgets on task, balanced, and focused, and that should not be too much to ask from a government who's been in power for 43 years. You would think that at least they could do that.

The officer would also look at creating more complex economic forecasts and providing guidance on how governments should prepare their budgets to better weather Alberta's inevitable boom-and-bust cycles, little things like the bitumen bubble, and, you know, all those rainy-day funds that have apparently blindsided the government for a decade or more. Every person in this room has lived through the boom and bust. Every single person in this room knows that the market goes up, the market comes down, and the market goes up again. Every single time we say that we'll do it differently, and every single time we say that we won't spend as much as we did the last time because we have to save for a rainy day. Well, the rainy day comes every year, whether it's the fire in Slave Lake, whether it's the flooding in High River or a multitude of other events that are detrimental to this province, yet this government continues to underfund that line item in the budget.

Here are two examples of how the minister can understand – understand – how an independent budget officer could benefit Albertans. Let's look at the forecast, suggesting a cap for, say, ministerial meals. On the menu there's a big fat, juicy steak priced at $99 and a very nice chicken cordon bleu meal for $35. One would think you'd make better choices.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to participate in this debate? I see Calgary-Shaw wanting in, so let's hear from Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to support this bill strongly, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this forward. As I'm sure you're well aware, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has a long history of successfully bringing forward and passing private members' bills in this Assembly. She has been a long-time champion for children in this province. She has passed the protection of children involved in prostitution bill. She has passed an organ and tissue donation bill and the mandatory reporting of child pornography bill. She continues today with the tabling, and here we are in second reading of Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act.

You know, Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest honours that I've had serving in this caucus is being able to serve with the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. She exemplifies integrity, and this bill is very much in line and in order with that.

Many of the bills that she put up for debate and that have passed in this House before are about protecting the children in this province, and I'm proud to say that I believe this one is also, in a way, about protecting our children. The reason why many of us over on this side of the House talk about responsible budgeting and debt is because we recognize that essentially what we're doing is intergenerational theft. We are taking from our kids and our grandkids and forcing upon them the repayment of massive amounts of debt financing, that we, quite frankly, just don't believe is an ethical way of operating. So thank you to the hon. member for, again, bringing this forward and having this on our agenda today.

I believe this is necessary because it would allow this government to produce budgets and budget estimates that are unbiased and untainted by political interference. I think it's quite clear that, you know, that does happen in a partisan environment. It's the way the world operates. We accept that. You should accept that, understand that it's true. It is simply that. It's a truth in the world that we live in and operate in.

This would be a resource for all MLAs. It would level the playing field. Opposition would have access to independent analysis of budget numbers. It would be for ourselves currently as the Official Opposition, and the opposition party, the fourth party, and independent members would have access to the exact same information and would be able to hold the government to account at a much higher level than what they are right now because, quite frankly, we have to take the government at its word just based on the documents that they produce. We've seen before that some of the projections that they have are not necessarily, I would say, in line with reality. That, I think, is what some of us have alluded to in the Alice-in-Wonderland budget that we saw back in 2012, pre-election, which allowed this Premier to go all over the province, to tour around, to promise to spend all kinds of money, and to spread and sprinkle pixie dust of 50 new schools and increased MSI funding of $1.6 billion, all in the hope of having, I think, $112-per-barrel oil at the time.

Mr. Anderson: Who knows? It was something like that.

Mr. Wilson: Yeah. It was ridiculously high, anyway.

I think the lesson that was learned was that, clearly, we shouldn't budget that much based on the commodity market.

The bitumen bubble is another reason why we believe strongly that an independent officer being able to look at budget projections and the realities of the money that is being spent or is going to be spent on projects is a critical function that we and many other governments in North America have employed, whether it be the federal government in Canada or all 50 states.

Let's just think for a moment about some of the ideas or some of the projects that we could have independent budget analysis done for, Mr. Speaker. There's the federal building, which started at a couple of hundred million dollars. It seems like every year we hear about another $25 million being spent. You know, we now have a rooftop garden; we have a new suite that's being built up on the top level for, I guess, visiting dignitaries or whomever.

The Calgary South Health Campus, definitely a needed institution, started out as a $500 million project and finished with about $1.3 billion to $1.4 billion spent on that. Again, it just boggles the mind how this government can stand there and say that they're getting these things right and they don't need an independent officer. Well, clearly they do.

The southwest ring road in Calgary is a critical piece of infrastructure, particularly for the residents in Calgary-Shaw, probably Calgary-Lougheed, Calgary-Fish Creek, who absolutely have been waiting for this to happen, waiting for it to become a reality. We have a Transportation minister who can't determine whether or not it's going to cost – I think he said between $1.8 billion and $10 billion. That is a phenomenally large window that he has left himself in terms of constructing this. When you look at other sections of the ring road, whether it be Edmonton or Calgary, in Calgary I believe there were 70 kilometres completed for less than $2 billion. Now we have a 41-kilometre stretch that is going to cost – I guess the Finance minister alluded to perhaps $5 billion at your chamber luncheon last week.

Again, when you do a per-kilometre analysis on that, the math just doesn't quite add up. So here is another perfect example of why an independent officer can look at this and go: that's just not quite right, and here is what the actual projected cost is going to be. Then we as the opposition could hold them to account, have a dialogue in public about these things.

Fifty new schools. Some people think it's going to cost about $2 billion. Originally, in 2012, that was a $2.4 billion promise, including the 70 modernizations as well. In the budget we have $1.2 billion allocated. In some miraculous way they're going to be able to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more, by the next election no less, for only $1.2 billion.

Transmission lines. I know the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre would like nothing more than to be able to stand up here and debate the cost of transmission lines in this province, but an independent budget officer would be able to tell us what that would cost beforehand. It would be nice to have fair and politically unaltered information regarding the financial position of this province.

When you look at some of the other independent offices that exist within our Legislature and in our province, they provide value, Mr. Speaker. The Child and Youth Advocate becoming an independent office was one of the few things that I applaud the Premier for doing when she became the Premier of the province. It was one of the first actions that she took, and it has boded well. The reason for that is because they took an office that was operating under the auspices of Human Services and made it independent. They were no longer, I guess, prone to any sort of government influence and could tell Albertans what it was that they felt was going on in our province without the fear of government repercussions.

The cost of this would be negligible as the work is already being done in the Ministry of Finance. It's just transplanting individuals working in that bureaucracy into an independent office.

Now, one of the Wildrose commitments is to truly be open and transparent, and we recognize, as I think the federal Conservatives did when they instituted their Parliamentary Budget Officer back in 2006 – just for the sake of history, Mr. Speaker, let's go back. In 2006 the Liberal government falls. The Conservative government runs a campaign around accountability, and one of their first acts when they became government with their minority government in '06 was the Federal Accountability Act. One of the reasons why they instituted the PBO was because of countless years of Liberal budgets where they miscalculated or misrepresented the numbers to the tune of billions of dollars. It allowed them to have election campaign spending that was inordinate, or they could go and campaign on a budget that was just not based on fact. Quite frankly, it seems like we're starting to see that here in Alberta. It's not something that's new, but it's something that we've certainly had to deal with.

Now, that Parliamentary Budget Officer wasn't fully independent – I think that was one of the mistakes they made when they created that office, and it did create some problems – but the opposition in Ottawa now refers to the PBO as an essential position. It's a thorn in the side of the government, Mr. Speaker, and that's why it's absolutely no surprise to anyone over here that the Minister of Finance nor anyone else – well, I guess they're not really going to speak to it – wants it on the governing side. It's an extra set of eyes on the books that they're trying to present to Albertans. It's not a surprise to us at all that we're not going to get support on this bill from the government.

But it does go to show the Alberta public the kinds of things that a Wildrose government would do, because we recognize that if we're going to govern this province differently, it starts with us, and it starts with being truly accountable and truly open. Having a second set of eyes on the books, having an independent budget officer is exactly one of the first steps that I believe we should be taking in the event that we do have the opportunity to govern in Alberta.

We've already covered why it's different than the Auditor General. Their current mandate is to look at an after-the-fact analysis of the spending, whereas an independent budget officer would be looking at spending programs that have yet to happen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? Let us move on to Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who wishes to speak.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was good to hear the Minister of Finance get up and defend and yet politicize the budget. This is exactly why this is being brought forward. An independent budget officer doesn't politicize it. It is nonpartisan. It's a process that's not new. It's a process that is actually working in other jurisdictions, and it works because an independent budget officer doesn't have a political agenda. They give economic forecasts. They provide analysis. They do it in the form of reports, testimony, memos, letters, and presentations. It also provides online access to key revenue and spending data for a number of past years.

Now, given what we have been through in our last two budgets – well, our last budget and this one that has yet to be approved – nothing can be clearer than the ongoing analysis at Stanford University looking at how governments present budgets. It's interesting because what the Stanford scholars are saying is that more and more governments are changing their reporting methodologies to hide deficits, and that is absolutely what's going on here. We have a government that has changed the way it reports so they can say that they have a balanced budget while they're actually borrowing money, while they're actually having a deficit, where the total revenue coming in is less than what we're spending, but that's fine because the way we change our reporting is that we're not going to show that deficit, and we're going to tell the public – we're going to put that nice little spin on it – that we actually have a surplus when in reality the numbers just don't add up. It goes on and on and on, dealing with this politicization of how we're spending our money.

Nothing is a better example of a number of these things, this misinformation hitting the public, than this commitment to build schools, throwing up signs to say that we are going to build X number of schools when, in fact, it's just not going to happen in the time frame that this government has said – and the industry has said that – but we presented in the budget that it will be done. To disguise this fact, we get a government who puts up signs and takes credit for schools that were approved under another administration and says, "That's part of our commitment," when, in fact, it wasn't. So you get this kind of misleading responsible government. [interjections] I'm splitting hairs, but if you want to call a point of order, call a point of order. I would be more than happy to defend it. But I don't know any other way to describe it. If you say that you're going to do something and you can't do it and that's verified by the people who are responsible for doing it, which is the construction industry, but you still commit to saying that it's being done, I don't know of any other way to describe it.

If you say that you're not running a deficit but the total income coming in does not match the amount that you're spending, which is far greater, I don't know how you can call that a balanced budget. You're borrowing. We're going into debt, and depending on how we're going into debt and how much we're going into debt, it's something I don't think Albertan's agreed to. I certainly didn't hear, when we campaigned two years ago, that that's what was going to happen, yet given the current trend we're looking at tens of billions of dollars here, and it could be as much as $21 billion by the time we get into the election or more, depending on what our next budget is.

Again, it's how the budget is presented. That's what this bill takes care of. We get an independent officer that's not just in a sense qualified but with the fact that the independent officer himself has no partisan relationship. We've seen this work in other jurisdictions, and this is a jurisdiction that now begs for it, with the behaviour of our current government, to alter the way they report, to present it or spin it in a different way than what is actually happening. So when we look at budgets, how do we match it up with the previous budgets we've had? It's very difficult for the average person in the public to be able to do that because we've changed the whole reporting mechanism by rolling out these three stages of our budget plan.

So we're dealing with this issue on a number of levels, and the Member for Calgary-Shaw actually touched on it. One of the issues we cannot get in this budget, that the typical municipality accomplishes, is: what is our infrastructure priority list? The best answer we can get from the minister is, "Look at the website," which is really nice, but there's nothing on the website that gives us a priority list. When a budget is presented at any municipal level, the infrastructure priority list is prioritized one through whatever, and the budget line is drawn at its appropriate level of what's funded and what is not funded. The argument always is about, right at that funded line, what projects should have a priority over another.

Now, we understand that when you have the natural disasters like the flood of last year, all bets are off. You have an emergency situation that has to be addressed. Certain things that were supposedly funded in the budget will now not get funded as we take care of the emergency. That is something that is commonplace, and the public understands. But without an infrastructure priority list nobody knows where these hospitals that are needed stand in relationship to other communities, nobody knows where our seniors' homes stand in relationship to other communities. So when the budget is reported, we get a sense of: will our projects get built this year, next year, three years down the road? We don't know. We can't even begin to measure that. That's what a budget reporting process is about, and that's where an independent budget officer has a lot of value and a lot of credibility in speaking to the communities and dealing with these budget issues to help these communities identify within the provincial budget where their values, where their programs, where their interests lie, and how they measure that.

It also makes governing, I think, a little bit more efficient. When a mayor of Rocky Mountain House knows that their hospital falls third in line behind two other communities, they can actually watch as one hospital gets built, and they should be moving up on the list. The mayor of that community will know that if some natural disaster were to happen at another hospital – a flood, damage, whatever reason – that money has to go to that repair because of that emergency basis, but they still know that they should keep their priority system, that they're going to be somewhere in that top three, that top two to get those critical-need infrastructure projects funded and eventually started and eventually built.

What we get when we don't have an infrastructure priority list is a hodgepodge situation that affects somewhere like the community of Bentley, where the minister promises that we're going to build a bypass, and we do it budget year after budget year after budget year and never fulfill that promise. Then they plop a sign down this year that says, "building Alberta," dig up the road, and then leave it not capped so that the silt runs off into the river and violates our environmental laws. The community is going to hold a centennial, and they've got a mess left behind by this building Alberta, and the project is now not going forward.

So what happens? What's the answer? How do we take care of it? This is the stuff that independent budget officers can actually help communities deal with and can actually help the government in dealing with a priority list. When the minister or the cabinet or the Treasury Board is contemplating their annual budget, have input from an independent budget officer on how well they managed the last one, without the partisanship, without the spin, to give them honest answers on the transparency and the actual implementation of that budget and how well it worked, how well that performed based on what they constructed that previous year. That is a better tool moving forward.

If we don't have that tool, what we get is this idea that some of our people responsible are believing the spin. When they do that, they can't make well-informed decisions, and we get this hodgepodge of projects around the province. The last thing we can afford to do is waste money. That's what everybody always gets upset about in the political debates. All around Alberta, in every coffee shop, people look at waste.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others who wish to speak to Bill 202? Let us go and recognize, then, Cardston-Taber-Warner.

4:30

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak in support of this well-thought-out bill, much needed, I suggest.

It's been mentioned in this Chamber that the Auditor General performs this kind of function. Well, of course, we all know that auditors are reporting historic events. They can't do anything to prevent the waste that they may identify. They can give advice, suggest changes that ought to be made, follow up on that after the next budget year to see whether it's been acted on, and so on. But Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act, that's been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, is a preventative measure.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It kind of reminds me, being an old trucker, about the wisdom of changing the filter when you're changing the oil to prevent problems that could occur rather than waiting and paying for the expense of the problem subsequent to it happening. What we're seeing here and what I thank the hon. member for doing in bringing this bill forward is something that's preventative. It's way cheaper to change the filter than it is to replace the engine.

We know, too, from experience and business philosophy and wise people that have suggested this truth, that systems are perfectly aligned to achieve the results that they produce, so if we've got a problem, if we're consistently running deficits, as we see that we've been doing over the past number of years – no matter what you call it, if you spend more than you're taking in, you're borrowing, and that's a deficit position. You can redefine it, and you can call black "white," but you're not fooling anybody but your own Kool-Aid drinkers, I believe. We've been getting these kinds of results, and it's time to recognize the truth, that Alberta doesn't have a revenue problem. It has a spending problem.

Bill 202 would result in an independent budget officer who would be free from influence, free from intimidation and bullying. This officer would act in the best interests of all Albertans. He would be able to prevent an increase of debt, which at the current rate is projected to result in interest payments by 2017, just three years down the road, of $840 million a year. Now, I don't know about you, but the people I'm talking to out there in my riding think that's scandalous. They think that it would be far better for us to be using that money to build schools debt free. You can build a lot of schools for $840 million a year, lots of roads. You could hire lots of teachers and nurses and front-line workers with that money, that instead will be going to line the pockets of bankers and lenders.

Budgets are based on assumptions, Mr. Speaker, and a budget or a projection is only as good as the quality of the assumptions themselves. An independent budget officer would help us look at and evaluate the validity of the assumptions that that budget is based on. If the assumptions were faulty, he could point that out. Again, it's a lot better to know ahead of time that something that you're basing a budget on is faulty instead of discovering it later. It's very expensive to find that after the fact. It's much better, much more prudent to anticipate those problems and strengthen the quality of your assumptions.

A hallmark of this government seems to be its desire to be unique and innovative. As they clamour to spend money to achieve this expensive goal, they demonstrate a pride that, I think, too often blinds them to successful solutions that are working elsewhere. My old dad, the grade 10 dropout, said: never be too proud to borrow a good idea. He was credited with several innovations that actually worked, taking somebody else's idea and making it better or just simply using a good idea that he saw somebody else doing that made the work easier or safer or less expensive.

Well, if 50 states, our own federal government, and an increasing number of provinces have adopted the principle of the concept of an independent budget officer, why wouldn't we? Now, I think that's a fair question. Why wouldn't we? Clearly, we wouldn't because it works. It reins in and makes more difficult partisan spending, and that's just what we need to do. We need to stop that. We need to prevent it. It avoids using taxpayers' money for partisan purposes. Remember, Mr. Speaker, governments have no money of their own. It's all taxpayers' money. It's a sacred stewardship that bears the responsibility of the public purse.

Spending royalty receipts instead of saving and investing them, like in Premier Lougheed's visionary creation, the heritage savings trust fund, is foolhardy. The government is selling assets, the assets that all Albertans own: the oil that's in the ground, the natural gas that's in the ground. That's an asset. We're selling it, and we're treating the revenue that's received as if it was income, as if we were doing something that added wealth when, in fact, we're selling an asset. We're disposing of an asset. It's like eating your own seed corn. This government continues to do that, and nobody is holding them to account. [interjection] But the Albertans that I'm talking to, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and anybody else that wishes to interject and interrupt – if you're not listening to your own people, shame on you. Every coffee shop I go into and every conversation I have is: "Can't you stop the government from wasting our money? Can't you get them to save and invest in our future? Why are we saddling our future generations with debt now when if we were more prudent we wouldn't be in this position?"

The hon. member that sits next to me mentioned the fact that when you have these floods and these rainy-day events, then naturally you have to make some adjustments to your budget. Well, you know what? We created a rainy-day fund. But instead of saving that money for the rainy days that inevitably come, we spent it to buy elections, to buy popularity, and it's this partisan spending that an independent budget officer would help prevent.

I believe that all small "c" fiscally conservative members of this House ought to join me in voting in support of Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and speak in support of my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek's bill today, Bill 202. Bill 202 was introduced into the House on the day before the budget was read, and I can assure all the hon. members that the timing of this was no coincidence.

Mr. Speaker, my Wildrose colleagues and I predicted the budget to be full of double-talk, and it was. We predicted that the budget documents would be split apart in an effort to confuse Albertans, and they were. We predicted the budget figures would be hand-picked and spun to look favourable for the government, and they were. This government has put Alberta $5 billion further into debt to deliver a budget that they, incredibly, claim as balanced. Not quite sure how you balance a budget with a deficit number, but this government did it. Bravo.

Mr. Bikman: They changed the definitions.

Mr. Fox: They changed the definitions. That's right. They changed the definition. We know it's not balanced, Mr. Speaker. It's not even close to being balanced. Estimates of the forecast deficit range from $1.8 billion to $3.9 billion, and our budget crunching pegs it at about $2.7 billion. Why is that? It's because we don't actually have access to the same information that the government has access to. This is something that would be rectified by this budget officer, somebody who would actually be independent and would provide all members of this Legislature with the same information.

This is a government-made problem, but it also affects our ability as elected officials to provide our constituents with accurate accounting information of the province's fiscal picture. This type of financial reporting is not only irresponsible, Mr. Speaker, but it's dishonest. Albertans deserve better. Bill 202 seeks to remedy this going forward by providing an opportunity for members and ultimately the public to receive government information and budget estimates through an independent third party that reports directly to this Legislature.

The mandate of the Alberta independent budget officer would be to

- (a) provide independent analysis to the Legislative Assembly about the state of [the province's] finances, including the budget and quarterly updates, and the trends in the provincial and national economies;
- (b) when requested to do so by a committee of the Legislative Assembly, undertake [the] research for that committee into [the province's] finances and economy.

It would also

- (c) when requested to do so by a committee of the Legislative Assembly that is mandated to consider the estimates of the government, undertake research for that committee into those estimates; and
- (d) when requested to do so by a member of the Legislative Assembly or a committee of the Legislative Assembly, estimate the financial cost of any proposal that relates to a matter over which the Legislative Assembly has jurisdiction.

This independent budget officer would provide financial figures, economic trends and forecasts as well as produce the underlying economic data for the provincial budgets, something that we don't see very often in this Legislature. In fact, I don't think we saw it in this past budget.

Mr. Speaker, simply put, the IBO would be responsible for the independent analysis of both the province's revenue and expenditure streams while appropriately leaving the policy and the programming decisions that affect those streams under the purview of the elected officials, where they need to be. The IBO also, more importantly, would be able to independently begin research on items it deems appropriate and report on them to this Legislature. The proposed IBO is not a revolutionary idea, not at all. In fact, most parliaments and Legislatures already have an independent budget office. The United Kingdom, the Parliament of Canada, U.S. Congress, and all 50 Legislatures south of our border have independent budget officers. Why is Alberta so different, Mr. Minister? Why don't we have one here, and why did you stand to speak against this bill, Mr. Minister? An independent budget officer has been long advocated for by organizations like the Calgary Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, both of which have come out in support of this bill.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek once again for putting forward a bill that will help the finances of this province, help Albertans be able to better understand the finances of this province, and have the opposition and Albertans hold this government to account.

Mr. Speaker, today the oft-quoted Mr. Derek Fildebrandt of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation said: "If there is just one piece of legislation MLAs should pass right now, Bill 202 is it. An independent budget officer is badly needed to bring Alberta back to comprehensible financial reporting." I'd have to agree with this statement. It wasn't long ago that Alberta became one of the first jurisdictions to make it mandatory to release consolidated budget updates every quarter. Taking that step was a source of pride for the government. It was a key to rebuilding trust with Albertans after an era of reckless spending. Where are we again? Here we are in another era of reckless spending.

By being open and transparent with the consolidated budget numbers, Albertans were able to see and measure how the government managed their finances. Today's PC government has reversed all of the progress that was made. Where Alberta was once a leader in budget transparency, this PC government repealed the Government Accountability Act and has pulled the wool back over Albertans' eyes. They're obscuring the truth from Albertans, and it needs to stop.

We're not reinventing the wheel with this idea, Mr. Speaker, but what we are doing is proposing a way for all members of this Assembly to better represent their constituents. The Wildrose believes the independent budget officer is an important step towards a more reasonable and accountable government and is another example of how the Wildrose is proposing new ideas that put Albertans first.

As I'd mentioned earlier, last year the government repealed the Government Accountability Act. They did that in Bill 12. When that act was passed, in 1995, Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta was a leader. We were the first province in the country to adopt a publicly recorded, results-based, performance-measured framework into our budgeting process. That act was designed to improve accountability between civil servants, elected officials, the government, and the citizens of Alberta. It was so well-regarded by Canadians that other provinces introduced similar legislation, finally with the federal government following suit in 2006, giving royal assent to the Federal Accountability Act.

It is important, I think, Mr. Speaker, to look back at 1995 and really examine what the Government Accountability Act was all about then. The Premier of that day, Mr. Klein, made quite an impact on how finances were done at the time. He epitomized the era. Knowing that Mr. Klein not only led the charge on eliminating the deficit by 1995, back at a time when a deficit wasn't hope, debt wasn't hope, unlike now, when we have this government telling us that debt is hope, it comes as no surprise that he also coined the phrase "the Alberta advantage." Something else that comes as no surprise is that this government has done away with not only his vision of a debt-free Alberta but also in the same breath is destroying the Alberta advantage, too.

What happened in the Finance minister's Fiscal Management Act is that the PC government seems to have us now in a race to the bottom. Future government budgets need no longer list any of the following requirements from the Government Accountability Act's accepted terms of operation: total revenue from all sources, total expenses with breakdown, accumulated debt, planned payments, reconciliation of expenses and revenues for a deficit or surplus; in other words, a dramatic shift away from the reporting of performance measures that we had in past budgets. Wow, what a policy shift. Here we are, back to where we are today, in debt, not that far away from where we were in 1992. What is it going to be by 2016-17? Twenty-one billion dollars of debt, Mr. Minister? That's quite scary. I don't think that's hopeful for the future. That's fearful. That's fearful for the future.

I also have to question where the accountability minister, the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, is on this piece of legislation. He hasn't stood up to support the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and something that actually would make this government more accountable, more transparent, which is exactly his mandate.

If the government votes down this piece of legislation, where is the commitment to transparency? I don't see it when I look across the aisle here. I don't see it when government members stand up and oppose legislation that is designed to make the books of this province more transparent so that Albertans get a clear understanding of where this province stands.

I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek one more time because this is such an important piece of legislation. This is something that would bring us into line with all the other jurisdictions in North America.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the next speaker, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is always an honour to rise in this House and discuss public policy and to speak on Bill 202 and lend my voice as being in support of this very forward-looking bill.

If you look throughout the direction that many governments have gone, they've gone to bringing in an independent budget officer, which allows them to assess government books and numbers and various practices in an open and forthright way, which has led to a keen sense of both having government understand where the money is going and allowing for great assistance to opposition members to look at government budgets and to look how the money is being spent.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, the independent officer has allowed the average Joe and Jane Citizen to be able to credibly assess spending and revenue streams and the like and assess whether governments of the day are truly getting value for the dollars they have spent.

If we look over the course of time at what we've had here in Alberta, as of late we could really use an independent budget officer. You'll remember, taking us back to Budget 2013, that we had a dramatic change in how the government seemingly managed its accounts. It went from what was considered a very open and transparent fashion, put forward by Mr. Klein and his people, in terms of how much revenue was coming into this province and how much money was spent. It simply allowed individuals to assess in an open and transparent fashion what our true net debt position was.

We see what transpired last year around budget time. The Fiscal Management Act is essentially an act that, in my view, obfuscates the numbers. It allows government to change its accounting practices from what was I think at one time considered a gold standard – I think I've heard that term somewhere before – in terms of financial accounting, and it really was. Don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. I disagree vehemently with many of the things that were done in this province in the '90s and early 2000s, but none of them were that act. That act actually was a change for the better, a change for open and transparent government.

There had long been, I guess, rumours and, actually, almost more of a real acceptance that government books from 1985 through to 1993 were not very good, were not very open, were not very transparent, and that the public didn't have a true sense of what was happening in this province. To my mind, that is happening at this time as we speak. You will note that in 2012, when we all left the budget, no opposition party knew the exact number of what our net deficit or even net debt position was. That, to me, is disappointing.

In any event, you know, I think that the independent budget officer proposed in Bill 202 will help us cut through the government spin, will allow us in this House to do our jobs better, will allow government, both people on the front bench and otherwise, to look at things a little more clearly, and will allow for the Alberta people to get a good handle on where their money has been spent.

I support this bill, and my hope is that we all get behind this move towards openness and transparency in this province. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We just have a few minutes left for another speaker, if need be, and then the hon. member will be able to close.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on second reading of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's private member's bill, Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act. This act would create an independent budget officer to provide consistent and nonpartisan analysis of the province's finances, including quarterly updates and the Alberta budget.

This bill is needed now more than ever. In the past two years what was formerly a clear-cut event based on numbers has become a circus, with multiple guesses on the state of Alberta's finances. The Wildrose determined the deficit at $2.7 billion. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation projected a $3.9 billion deficit. However, the PC government shamelessly tried to pass it off as a surplus.

So what's going on here? Well, for one, the PC government has decided to mask the nature of financial reporting by splitting capital and operating budgets. By not including capital spending, like we'd done for years, the government is trying to pass off a deficit as a surplus. The result has been various means of determining the real deficit and a general sense of confusion for all. While everyone has acknowledged that revenues were better than expected this year, few are buying the government's perspective on this. The lack of financial clarity speaks to the lack of integrity and honesty of a 43-year-old government, not to any one particular person within this PC government.

The reality is that a deficit is a deficit. Albertans deserve clarity on what happens with their tax dollars. Bill 202 will fix this problem and will re-establish transparency in Alberta's financial reporting. It would provide assurance to businesses and taxpayers.

Bill 202 includes several constructive measures to ensure Albertans get the real numbers they deserve.

The new independent budget officer would provide an independent analysis to the Legislative Assembly about the state of the province's finances. The budget officer could undertake research into the province's finances and economy when requested to do so by a committee and could undertake research on budget estimates for a committee if requested.

In short, the independent officer would constitute an important check on government predictions of revenue and expenditures, thus preventing governments from playing games with the numbers. The officer could become a critical tool of government committees doing vital work on budget estimates.

The idea behind Bill 202 already has some substantive endorsements. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation as well as the Calgary Chamber of Commerce have echoed the need for such an office. The chamber noted that budget numbers that are credible and widely trusted help businesses plan to prepare their own business plans without the uncertainty of rising taxes, delayed capital spending, and excessive public borrowing.

That's what's at stake here, the credibility of the provincial government, a government that will not provide the real numbers consistently and cannot maintain the respect of its citizens. Businesses and stakeholders base their plans on the projections of the provincial government, and the inability to provide clear direction hurts industry and business.

Bill 202 will bring back credibility to the government's finances. The expense of creating an independent budget office would be very small. Certainly, it would be an investment in the future, with the potential to clear up misunderstandings and foster a culture of financial honesty in the provincial government. For a minimal cost Albertans would reap the benefits of responsible and transparent financial reporting for generations to come.

Such an office would not be unique to Alberta. In fact, all 50 U.S. states have an independent budget officer as does the government of Canada and the United Kingdom. Ontario is currently working on setting up an independent budget office. We can see that the trend internationally and nationally is to support the creating of an independent budget officer.

I hope all members will support this bill and bring the transparency Albertans deserve. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

If there are no other speakers, I'll invite the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take two seconds and say, you know, that I very, very much appreciate the spirit and the intention of the bill and the excellent work that my colleagues have done on this. Two of the reasons why I did join the Wildrose: one is for the value of free votes – that has been resonating very, very well in my constituency – and the second one is for the value of fiscal responsibility.

I took a look at some of the numbers. There are 29 government ministers and associate ministers, the most in Albertan history. There are at least 250 public commissions, boards, and agencies in Alberta, spanning across all ministries. We have seven advocates . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the time for debate has passed.

I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, if she decides to, to close debate.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and close debate on Bill 202, the Independent Budget Officer Act. I have sat here and listened very intently to the conversation, and I guess what's fascinating to me more than anything is the fact that all of the conversation, all the debate has come from this side of the House, the Official Opposition. You know, you have a government that says that they're open, accountable, and transparent, and they've tried to defend the way they do the budgeting of the books, but we've only had the Provincial Treasurer stand up and speak. Yet we've had comments from members who I have stood up and encouraged to speak.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask for everyone in the Assembly to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:58 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Motion for second reading of Bill 202 lost]

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item of business, could I get your unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie if you would, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a good friend for many, many years – in fact, we've known each other since long before we entered politics – Councillor Amarjeet Sohi. Of course, he's our councillor for ward 12 – Edmonton-Mill Creek, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and Edmonton-Mill Woods are part of it – a good friend of yours, Edmonton-Manning and Edmonton-Mill Woods, and of many other people here, a tireless advocate for human rights.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I wanted to welcome Councillor Sohi as well. But I am particularly impressed and enthused by the number of people that have come here today to hear the debate on Motion 502, and I would like those individuals to please rise and be welcomed by the Assembly. It's nice to have so many.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, for introducing a number of people who belong to Edmonton-Mill Creek, the riding that I'm happy to represent, including hon. Councillor Sohi. Thank you very much.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Alberta Human Rights Act

502. Mr. Saskiw moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to repeal section 3(1)(b) of the Alberta Human Rights Act to restore the freedom of speech of all Albertans.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege to rise today and speak on Motion 502, which encourages the government to repeal the hurt feelings legislation that is currently in force in Alberta; that is, to repeal paragraph 3(1)(b) of the Alberta Human Rights Act. At the outset, nothing in this motion deals with discrimination or racism in employment matters, business matters, et cetera. Those protections still exist in the Alberta Human Rights Act and should stay there. Racism and discrimination should never be tolerated.

Motion 502 deals with free speech and only with that specific clause in the legislation. By passing this motion, we'd be following in the steps of Prime Minister Stephen Harper and his government. Federally we saw free speech championed by the Member of Parliament for Westlock-St. Paul, Brian Storseth, who is actually a constituent of mine. When Brian was speaking on his federal bill, he said:

Truth is no longer a defence. The person would no longer have the right to due process, the right to a speedy trial, or even the right to a lawyer to defend himself or herself. In fact, in 90% of the human rights investigations under the Canadian Human Rights Act under section 13, the defendants do not even have legal advice, because they simply cannot afford it.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the same is true here in Alberta.

Now, I know that this doesn't happen often, but I do want to point out that this is an area of policy and principle where the Premier and I fully agree with each other, and I do want to point out that the Premier is a well-respected human rights lawyer here in Alberta and abroad. During her campaign for the leadership in the summer of 2011 she stated that she'd repeal the clause, and I trust that her party and MLAs will support her call to action on this.

In fact, she specifically stated, and I quote: freedom of expression must be shielded, and section 3 of the Alberta Human Rights Act should be repealed. That is exactly what the purpose of the motion here today is. The Premier rightfully stated in this regard that freedom of expression must be shielded. Even the Minister of Justice and I agree on this, and we have for some time. Now, I know it's not often that three lawyers can agree on something, but I think it is clear how badly this is needed when so many people in this Assembly can all agree.

This is and should be a motion with broad-based, multipartisan support. There has been a lot of talk recently about hate speech, and I want to be abundantly clear. Hate speech is covered in the Criminal Code. Inciting violence is in the Criminal Code. Discrimination with respect to speech is in the Criminal Code. That is where it should be. That is where it should stay. Those laws should be upheld, and those who violate those laws should be prosecuted to the fullest extent possible.

With the Criminal Code the investigations are done by the RCMP, and they have specialization in this area. With the Criminal Code there are real Queen's Bench judges that adjudicate. The accused has rights such as the presumption of innocence, the right to counsel, and the rules of evidence that apply, and of course if someone is convicted, there is serious punishment that can be applied, including jail time. We are not talking about turning a blind eye towards legitimate human rights violations, and we are not talking about allowing discrimination. We are talking about free speech. Simply stated, we have the right to offend one another without being prosecuted by the state for our beliefs or our opinions.

Now, a lot of people asked me why we need this legislation repealed, and I understand why. Some have done a masterful job of telling Albertans and Canadians that civilization is going to end if we allow free speech, if we allow people to have their own beliefs and values, that we don't need to allow free speech because some people might disagree, and that we don't need freedoms because we, everyday folk, won't know how to make our own decisions. Well, I respectfully disagree. Some often quote reports and figures from the United Nations. I think the universal declaration of human rights is pertinent as it states:

Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Alberta has always led the way in advancing the freedoms, liberties, and human rights of our citizens both at home and around the world. We had the first female magistrate in the Commonwealth. We had the first female MLAs. The first MP of the Reform Party was a woman from northeastern Alberta, and she went on to be the first female leader of the federal Official Opposition.

I'm not going to stand here and pretend that my opinion is the only opinion that matters, and I'm not going to stand here and pretend that no one else is entitled to their own opinion. In fact, I stand here to defend every single Albertan's right to express their own opinions and beliefs and to do so without living in fear of persecution. I don't have to agree with them all the time. In fact, I might be offended by what some people say, but I'm okay with being offended. I want us to live and have free public debate, where people can say things that I disagree with. It's a belief that people have fought for and died for, to ensure that we have the right to disagree with one another. It's the foundation of a free and fair and democratic society.

If we repeal paragraph 3(1)(b), we have the opportunity to make Alberta the freest place in Canada. We have the chance to become true defenders of liberty and freedom, and we have the chance to make Alberta and Canada a better place for future generations in years to come. As I mentioned, we would be following in the steps of the federal government by taking action, and the beauty of this is that they have proven that it can be done. It is possible to be a defender of free speech and to have free speech and not have your country fall apart. Last I checked, the sun still rises in the morning, and it still sets at night, and life still goes on.

But what changes is that people are not being called before a state-controlled commission because someone had their feelings hurt. I want you to keep in mind that our justice system is based on the principles of justice and equality, and these state-controlled commissions are not part of our justice system. They do not have to adhere to the rules of evidence, and there are no mechanisms to address vexatious claims. There are no rules of evidence or even of proof. It's just based on what one person says they feel.

This type of clause has no place in Alberta, and it is unconscionable to allow it to continue. I know that we are going to have a lively and fulsome debate this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I want to point out to my colleagues that when I disagree with them, it's okay. The world is not going to end. And if they disagree with me, I will be just fine. Life will go on.

So if the basic principle of equality and justice applies in this Chamber, why should it not apply to all Albertans? We are no better in this House and we are not extra special, so why is it that Albertans should not have the right to free speech that we are enjoying here right now?

With that, Mr. Speaker, I open the floor to debate, and I trust that my hon. colleagues will hold true to the promise made by their leader, the Premier, to defend the rights of all Albertans by repealing this legislation. It's not often that we as politicians have the opportunity to truly walk the walk, but today we do, and I look forward to having the support of my colleagues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very kindly, Mr. Speaker. I first would like to thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for bringing this forward. I want to assure him that he offends me every day.

All kidding aside, I do want to thank several people. To the people in the galleries here, to Councillor Sohi: thank you very much for joining us. I also wanted to thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for shepherding a free vote on this matter. I've always felt that I can speak my mind as part of the PC caucus, and I will express my opinion here today as well.

Long before I was even elected, the Minister of Infrastructure referred to people in his area when he was a city councillor as his bosses, and that's really had a very strong impact upon me as an MLA. You have to represent your constituents first. You represent your bosses. I've had a lot of e-mails from people in my area on this issue, pro and con, but also a lot of church groups have contacted me.

Now, section 3, Mr. Speaker, is a very complex issue. I recall that the Minister of Education, when we were talking about this, advised me on this matter not to be a lawyer. It is difficult sometimes to unlearn your own profession, but I think that was sage advice from him.

Freedom of speech is one of the cornerstones of a free and democratic society. Mr. Speaker, it is guaranteed by section 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which declares that "freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication," is a fundamental freedom. It's also subject, though, to reasonable limitations in a free and democratic society, which is section 1 of the Charter.

It was also suggested to me in discussions that we've had to look at what section 3 actually talks about. It deals with a publication, notice, sign, symbol, emblem . . . that because of . . . race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income, family status or sexual orientation.

(b) is likely to expose a person or a class of persons to hatred or contempt

Now, I can say with a degree of certainty that no one in this Chamber stands for this type of discrimination, including me. When I was looking through this, I had a chat with my mother, Marguerite, on the weekend, and she mentioned to me about my grandfather, Phil, who's unfortunately not with us, and his experience in Abbey, Saskatchewan, in the '40s and '50s. With my family being of German descent, Mr. Speaker, they faced significant discrimination at that time even though many of them were already here and fought overseas with the Allied forces during World War II.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there were atrocities committed by the Nazi regime at that particular time, and what happened is that there was a swastika that was painted on my grandfather's white picket fence. People knew of the service that the family was doing, but it didn't stop the prejudice. I remember him talking to me about that as a kid, and I also remember talking to my uncle Jerome, actually one of the teachers of the minister of jobs. When my uncle Jerome was five years old, two older kids put a noose around his neck and, until adults intervened, were prepared to hang him. This type of hatred in the particular community at that time resulted in my family leaving the particular community.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that we have respect for diversity of all people's backgrounds. I don't think anyone should ever have to leave their community. Alberta should be open for people of all particular backgrounds or walks of life.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why do I bring that particular instance up? Because it goes way beyond the issue of freedom of speech. I go back to this. If I disapprove of what you say, I'll defend to the death your right to say it: that's Voltaire. I would say, along the same lines, that it's far too easy for any of us to trumpet free speech when we agree with it, only to try to run it down when we disagree with it. I would say to you also that the true test of whether you support the principle of freedom of speech is whether you will defend someone's right to do it when you disagree with what they say.

Now, if I have any difference with the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills today, it's that I wanted to just indicate a couple of stats. Section 3 complaints to the Human Rights Commission are relatively rare. In 2012 fewer than 1 per cent cited section 3. In 2011 there were two. In 2010 there was one. In 2009 there were zero. Most of the complaints to the Human Rights Commission deal with employment practices, accommodations, and services, serious violations of human rights. I support the Human Rights Commission's mandate that people should not have to have a lawyer when they're discriminated against to deal with their particular rights.

That being said, section 3 is an issue warranting debate. I will take us to the Lund decision. This began in 2002 with a letter to the Red Deer Advocate. Let me make it clear. I totally and completely disagree with the writer of this letter and the comments that he had particularly made. This went to the courts throughout almost 10 years. The Canadian Civil Liberties Association intervened. Like me, they didn't agree with the views, but they didn't feel that it warranted sanction at all.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs – we were talking about this once – told me that when examining a legislative change, the first question should be why, and I agree with him. One of the strongest arguments for amending section 3 came from the court itself. In this appeal Justice O'Brien condemned the current wording of section 3 for its language, lack of clarity, and even stated that “lack of clarity will cast a chill on the exercise of the fundamental freedoms, such as freedom of expression and religion.” Particularly troubling to me is the word “likely,” which leads to the lack of clarity.

The Court of Appeal in the same decision wrote:

The objective of statutory interpretation is to discern the legislative intent from the language of the legislation, if possible, and to give effect to such intent. This objective becomes difficult to attain when there is conflict, imprecision, or a lack of clarity in the legislation.

It was further stated that the citizens of this Province are entitled to certainty when it comes to exercise of their fundamental rights . . . In my view, it would serve the interests of the citizens of this Province if the Legislature would direct its attention to this objective.

Now, this comment from Justice O'Brien clearly gives good reason for the discussion that we're having here today.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills talked about hate crimes being in the Criminal Code. He's quite correct. They're in sections 318 and 319 of the Criminal Code, and I won't go through that for the sake of time. One thing I will go through is that it says, “Every one who advocates [can be] guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment . . . not exceeding five years,” and it talks about the same groups that we did in section 3. If you look also at the actual case law on it, the Ahenakew decision in 2003 or the Keegstra in 1990, this section is used.

Another topic worth discussing is whether or not having a section like this works against its intended purpose by drawing more attention to the hateful views of an individual than if they had not been prosecuted. I ask this: would we be talking about the Boissoin case today had a complaint not been lodged under this particular section? I'd say: probably not.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association stated in its brief in this case, “Generally, the proper response to speech that is offensive, distasteful, or upsetting is counter-speech,” and I agree.

In many issues I do see the left-right continuum, Mr. Speaker, but not this one. I've had meetings with the Rocky Mountain Civil Liberties Association and the Sheldon Chumir foundation in Calgary, hardly bastions of right-wing thought, and they have advocated for changes to this section. I'd like to quote the Sheldon Chumir foundation in regard to section 3.

Section 3 can also have a chilling effect on discussion of controversial issues of importance to the public. Leaving the current law in place also means that the human rights commission will continue to be distracted by this debate, which has undermined its authority and led to questions about its existence. No government that believes in upholding human rights would allow this situation to continue.

I'd also mention that I'm not the only one that's talked about this. Here's another quote that I completely agree with and that would sum up my entire argument, Mr. Speaker.

I would suggest that there are provisions in our Criminal Code which deal more effectively with freedom of speech and when it borders on hate crime, and we should leave it in the Criminal Code context. I don't believe this is handled well through our human rights boards. What happens is that people are dragged to these committees for publishing and sometimes saying things which may be abhorrent but that, nevertheless, they are allowed to say. There's a place for them to be taken to task, and it's through the Criminal Code.

Those are not my words. Those are the words of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I think they are wise words and sage advice.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, politics is a team sport. Any one of us could bring forward a piece of legislation, but without others you're going to be the only one voting for it. I've been of this opinion, that I've espoused long before I had been elected to this Chamber. I will indicate that I hope that my words have convinced some of my own caucus as well as the opposition as to why I will be supporting this motion. I welcome the comments of everyone in this debate, even those with whom I may disagree.

Remember first that yesterday was St. Finian's Day. Today is St. Patrick's Day. We're all wearing green today. Let's also have a good time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the leader of the Liberal Party.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to get up to participate in the debate around Motion 502. Let me begin by just cleaning up the name of lawyers. I'm the fourth lawyer involved in this debate, and I will now be the lawyer that does not agree with the other three lawyers. I am very much opposed to this motion, and I urge my colleagues in this House to reject this motion.

We've been talking a lot about what the Court of Appeal in Alberta has said. But more recently, in 2013, the Supreme Court of Canada ultimately had to render a decision on similar legislation in Saskatchewan as a result of activities by a fellow named Whatcott, who has also, of course, spread his joy in Alberta. In the course of doing that, the Supreme Court said as follows:

Hate speech may often arise as part of a larger public discourse but it is speech of a restrictive and exclusionary kind. Political expression contributes to our democracy by encouraging the exchange of opposing views. Hate speech is antithetical to this objective in that it shuts down dialogue by making it difficult or impossible for members of the vulnerable group to respond, thereby stifling discourse.

Free speech is important but not to the extent that it infringes on anyone else's ability to feel safe or secure. That is what the Supreme Court of Canada has said about this issue.

Now, let's put this motion coming from our friends over there in the Official Opposition in context. This is the third plank, I would argue, of a three-plank effort thus far, through the combined efforts of this Conservative government and the Wildrose opposition, to undermine human rights in this province.

In 2008-2009 we had the introduction of 11.1, the amendment to the human rights code, which, in my view, continues to be a scar on the human rights code in this province. It is unique in the country. It is discriminatory itself, and only in this province do we have it. That came as a result of folks over there in the Progressive Conservative Party listening to their more extreme factions.

Then right on the eve of the 2012 election we had a debate over whether or not our Education Act could possibly be so offensive to Albertans as to include reference to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in its preamble. On the eve of the election the Progressive Conservative government said: “Oh, that’s outrageous that anyone would object to that. Of course we’re going to put that in.” The Wildrose said, “No, we shouldn’t do that.” Interestingly, after the election the Progressive Conservative government succumbed to the Wildrose, again, those extreme arguments, and agreed: “No. It might be a little offensive to have people in our education system ever feel that they might be needing to follow the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.”

Now we have this. We have this attempt to eliminate section 3(1)(b). Now, I will acknowledge that this section is not without its complexities, that it is not without some difficulties in terms of its interpretation and in terms of its implementation. That may well be true. But the way to deal with that is not to simply sever it and arbitrarily move forward with, I would suggest, empty rationalizations that all of this can be taken care of by the Criminal Code of Canada. Be clear, my friends: it cannot be taken care of by the Criminal Code of Canada.

It’s interesting. The classic example of how this section has been potentially less than effective is the Lund case, which the Justice minister referred to. I found it particularly interesting because people got so involved in that case because of what I would argue were the very extreme opinions put forward on it by Ezra Levant. I’ve got to say, folks: choose your friends wisely, man. I just don’t know that that’s who needs to be driving your public policy decisions. That being said, he has every right to say what he does say, as do we all, but there is a limit on every right. Interestingly, when the Harper government chose to eliminate section 13 from the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Canadian Bar Association came out and said exactly that. You know what? Every right is only meaningful to the extent that it is limited in the appropriate circumstances, and no right in our country is absolute. Indeed, that is what the Supreme Court of Canada has said about the right to free speech. Again, it is important but not to the extent that it infringes on someone else’s ability to feel safe or secure. That’s what this legislation is geared to achieving.

Let’s talk a little bit about whether the removal of this section could be ameliorated by the existence of the hate crime provisions in the Criminal Code of Canada. First of all, no, because the standard that somebody who is the subject of hate speech needs to meet under the Criminal Code of Canada is much higher than the standard that someone who is the victim of hate speech needs to meet through the human rights code or the Human Rights Commission.

Secondly, the Criminal Code of Canada has a very specific remedy, and there’s not a lot of discretion in it. You convict someone of a crime, you come down on their head like a big hammer, and that’s it, whereas the Human Rights Commission, if it’s properly funded, if it’s respected by the government that administers its legislation, which is a whole other issue in this province – nonetheless, if that is done, then the commission has the capacity and the discretion to engage in restorative justice, in mediation, in efforts to work through those problems that often exist, what is most often just a lack of understanding between two different minority groups within our society and within our communities. So that’s another reason.

A third reason why the Criminal Code of Canada won’t work is because that particular mechanism, frankly, my friends, is much, much less accessible. It is something that is engaged upon at the discretion of the police, not by the victim of the hate speech. Again, it doesn’t work for that reason.

Finally, the Calgary police themselves report that, in their estimation, they only hear about 34 per cent of hate crimes and hate speech offences. That’s what they’re hearing about, so is that really the place to go? Are they going to have the time and the resources and the effort to do the work that is necessary to grow inclusion, to grow acceptance, to grow mutual understanding in our province? No. That is not the job of the police, and it is not the job of the Criminal Code of Canada. It is something that should be happening through our human rights code, and that’s why our human rights code needs to continue to be respected and why this provision needs to remain inside our human rights code.

Now, in December 2012 Racism Free Edmonton held public consultations on these issues, and they reached out to people from different minority communities, a broad range of different minority communities. I had this wonderful list of the organizations that are represented here in the galleries today, and, of course, being who I am, I have misplaced it in a pile, which is irritating to me because I wanted to read them out because they are so diverse. They represent ethnic minorities. They represent sexual orientation minorities. They represent gendered minorities. They represent income minorities. They represent a broad range of minorities. Those folks came together, and they concluded that section 3 in our human rights code continues to serve a very, very important purpose in our province and that its removal will result in more discrimination, more discriminatory acts, and fewer opportunities to resolve those issues. That’s what they’ve said, and I think we should listen to them.

That is another point that I’ve come to here. Here we have a motion by the Official Opposition, who think they might get enough support from their right-wing-leaning pals over, you know, in the family. Let’s face it. It’s all a big family between those two. They think they might get enough for this, and then suddenly, boom, if that happens and the government acts on it, we’re just going to eliminate that section of the human rights code.

Now, the fact of the matter is that even though this is a complex issue and even though it’s never easy to balance two rights under our Charter and under our Constitution, where you start that process is by consulting heavily with the interested parties to this. We need to bring in members of all of these community groups on all sides, not even those who are the victims but also sometimes the perpetrators, and that hasn’t been done . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to oppose Motion 502 for a number of reasons. I agree with many of the points that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has brought up. We are a country of immigrants, people from all over the world, who came to this new land in search of freedom and opportunities to escape places where life wasn’t just and fair.

In coming to this new land, I’d like to offer the other members a perspective of somebody who wasn’t born here. Mr. Speaker, it wasn’t that nice coming here in the ’70s. Yes, I loved the snow, and I loved the mountains, and I loved the lakes and rivers in British Columbia. My mother had all of her children get a black eye the first week they came to this country. Many people, new immigrants can experience violence, hatred – as a child five kids beat me up – because of the colour of their skin, because they look different.

Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that the physical violence was actually okay. It was the words. These words may be unparliamentary, but they need to be heard. I’ve been called a
