Speech from the Throne

His Honour: My fellow Albertans, welcome to the Third Session of the 28th Alberta Legislature. It is my honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor.

Today we are in the midst of Metis Week. So I begin with a special greeting to Albertans of Métis descent. I invite all Albertans to learn about and celebrate the many contributions of Métis Albertans to our province.

We come here together to serve the people of Alberta, a province that has been blessed beyond all measure with the gifts of abundant natural resources, rich soil that sustains our agriculture and forestry sectors, and the beautiful forests and prairies, lakes and rivers, mountains and foothills that are our natural heritage.

But we value most what Albertans themselves bring to our province: an entrepreneurial spirit, hard work and innovation, a commitment to excellence, and the ethics of compassion and service to others. All these things make Alberta a place of promise and opportunity like no other.

As the elected representatives of the people of Alberta we all share a great responsibility: to capture that promise and seize the opportunity so that future Albertans, whether they are born here or are among the tens of thousands of newcomers who join our province every year, will have the best quality of life possible.

Ladies and gentlemen, your government will do exactly this. Nine weeks ago we put Alberta under new management. Our new government understands that we will be challenged like never before to balance strong fiscal stewardship and accountability with meeting the needs of a growing province. Today we are home to just over 4 million people. By 2040, in a little more than a generation, we will be home to more than 6 million. The decisions we make in the next five years must lay the foundation for our prosperity and success for today and for all those future Albertans.

This government is focused on the clear priorities of Albertans, reflecting Albertans' values and ambitions for today while ensuring that a strong foundation is set for future generations. Five key principles underline our efforts: a focused commitment to sound, conservative fiscal principles; ending entitlements and restoring public trust; maximizing the value of our natural resources and respecting property rights; establishing our province as an environmental leader; and increasing Albertans' quality of life by being a leader in the areas of health, education, seniors' care, and skills training.

We will deliver good, prudent government, characterized by accountability and transparency. We will work tirelessly to earn and keep Albertans' trust. We will serve Albertans with the honour and respect they deserve. We will keep our province on a firm fiscal foundation, characterized by balanced budgets, a small cabinet and a small government, low taxes and no sales tax, a responsible program of capital investment, and a disciplined savings plan.

And we will deliver excellence in all the things Albertans want and need: top quality health care; education and skills training; safe, respectful care for our seniors; modern, efficient roads and infrastructure; vibrant cities and inclusive communities; and a clean, healthy environment.

The government's priorities will be those set by Albertans themselves, and the government's actions will reflect Albertans' values. We will always remember that we are here to serve the people of this province.

A Focused Commitment to Sound, Conservative Fiscal Principles

Albertans rightly expect their government to use taxpayer dollars wisely and to achieve the best possible outcomes for money spent. This government will deliver in a manner that is both transparent and accountable to Albertans.

Our province was built on solid, conservative fiscal principles that have served Albertans well. However, a budget tied to volatile energy prices imperils our fiscal resilience over the long term. We must align spending with a realistic assessment of the financial capacity we can sustain responsibly, without risking the prosperity of our children and grandchildren. Your government will be cautious in budgeting, prudent in spending, and diligent in saving.

At the same time Alberta's tremendous population and economic growth have shown us the peril of failing to maintain what we have and the importance of investing in what we need. To ensure fiscal prudence and discipline, your government will continue to use conservative revenue forecasts for budget purposes.

The results-based budgeting review will be completed with a focus on more efficient and effective program delivery. The rate of increase on spending for government operations will be kept below the rate of population growth and inflation.

At the same time we will protect what is most important to Albertans. Government will maintain a contingency fund to protect priority programs from revenue volatility and to respond to emergencies like flood mitigation. New emphasis will be placed on better maintaining our assets and on investing to extend the life, use, and cost of what we have.

We will pursue opportunities for more innovative delivery of needed provincial capital infrastructure. We will only borrow for capital purposes, never for operations, and only with a clear debt repayment plan in place. We will introduce a straightforward budget presentation to ensure that Albertans have a clearer understanding of the province's finances and where and how their taxpayer dollars are being used. And we will issue a semi-annual update on Alberta's savings plan to report to the people of Alberta on the performance of their savings.

Ending Entitlements and Restoring the Public Trust

Public service is a privilege, and the actions of public servants must be guided by this fundamental principle. Your government pledges to honour the trust Albertans have placed in their elected representatives and respect those it serves in everything we do.

A review has already begun of agencies, boards, and commissions, to ensure they are performing to the maximum benefit of Albertans. New accountability legislation and complementary Treasury Board directives will begin to reshape the legislative framework governing ethical standards and accountability measures for those who serve Albertans. Actions here will strengthen conflict-of-interest guidelines for political staff, extend cooling-off periods for political staff and senior civil servants, eliminate excessive severance packages for political staff, eliminate sole-sourced contracts in all but exceptional circumstances, and clarify the distinction between the role of registered lobbyists and government consultants.

Maximizing the Value of Our Natural Resources and Respecting Property Rights

Our province's natural resources are the cornerstone of the strongest and best performing economy in Canada. In addition to conventional resources like oil, natural gas, and coal, Alberta is rich in renewable resources, including biomass, wind, hydro, and solar resources. And our natural conditions come together with human ingenuity to make our province a world leader in agricultural production and forestry.

Many people come to Alberta in search of opportunity. And they find it here, in an economy that runs on entrepreneurialism, innovation, and hard work. Albertans are truly global citizens with aspirations and abilities that extend far beyond our province's borders.

But limited access to global markets restricts Alberta's potential and costs Albertans and Canadians billions of dollars every year, limiting our prosperity and ability to control our economic destiny.

Your government will focus on enhancing market access for all our exports so we can diversify our client base, capture global prices, and open Alberta to the widest range of emerging opportunities.

Alberta will focus its efforts on the Asia Pacific region, which holds the greatest potential for growth in exports. Much focused work has been done here, including through the Asia Advisory Council, which considered opportunities to expand economic, research, education, and cultural opportunities between Alberta and Asia.

There are also emerging opportunities in our traditional market, the United States, and in Europe, where the conclusion of negotiations on the Canada-EU free trade agreement, once ratified, will further open the world's largest market for Alberta's products and services.

Government will develop a focused regional strategy to expand Alberta's presence in key markets, ensure the right supports are in place for exporters, and build the relationships that will underpin long-term, mutually beneficial trade partnerships.

Our success in the 21st century will depend on how well we seize the opportunities that exist in the Asia Pacific region. That is why we will continue to work closely within the New West Partnership, a powerful partnership across British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan, representing a market of nearly 10 million people and economies worth half a trillion dollars, to drive national focus toward the urgency of ensuring that Canada's market access challenges are addressed.

Yet we have a 20th-century export infrastructure preventing Alberta and Canada from realizing its full economic potential. There is a lack of pipeline infrastructure to move energy products to tidewater. There is a shortage of rail capacity to move agriculture, energy, and forest products to export terminals.

Despite sustained advocacy and multiple World Trade Organization rulings in our favour mandatory country of origin labelling requirements in the United States continue to be a significant barrier to beef and pork exports into that country.

Your government will continue to work in partnership with other Canadian provinces, territories, and the federal government. These efforts will include advocating for expanded export and transportation capacity, whether by truck, air, pipeline, or rail, to improve access to all markets, including Atlantic Canada, the west coast, the Gulf coast, and others. Alberta will also seek a fundamental renewal of the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade in order to achieve a broad, comprehensive agreement that will eliminate trade barriers within our country and create an open, efficient, and stable domestic market.

Alberta is also taking steps to support innovation in the development of new products, including value-added opportunities in the resource sector. Our province already produces high-quality food products while demonstrating leadership in environmental stewardship, animal welfare, plant health, and food safety. We will make annual investments to enhance agricultural research and innovation and further develop the food processing industry. Government has introduced the rural economic development action plan and is continuing to implement the Rural Alberta Business Centre to support continued economic growth in rural Alberta.

We are also making investments to support economic growth all over Alberta, beginning with our transportation infrastructure. Every day Albertans rely on our provincial highway network to get them to school and work safely. As a province we also rely on this network to develop our natural resources and get products to market. With over 28,000 kilometres of paved highway and more than 4,000 bridges we know that proper maintenance and renewal are essential to ensuring that Albertans have safe, reliable travel.

In addition to completing major projects like highway 63 and the ring roads, we must focus more on rehabilitation, intersection improvement, and bridge maintenance and repair, especially across rural Alberta. Investment now means improved safety for the travelling public and less spent replacing aging infrastructure later.

Work continues on the development of a long-term transportation strategy, reflecting public consultations last spring, including the importance of public transit, the need for more free-flow highway corridors, and the desire to reduce our environmental footprint.

Market access, product innovation, and investments in infrastructure are all key elements of a thriving free-market economy. But its foundation must be the recognition and protection of private property. Private ownership of land is a fundamental and essential principle of our democracy and our economy. This government respects the property rights of Albertans and has heard the strong recommendations provided through the Property Rights Task Force. The introduction of Bill 1 today will begin to foster a culture of respect by acting on what landowners have told us already. Bill 1 signals the beginning of government's commitment to rebuild relationships with property owners in Alberta.

Other steps that will be taken to strengthen Alberta's economy include new supports for small businesses and exploring how government can continue to deliver public land titles services in new ways that provide enhanced access for Albertans.

Alberta will also work in partnership with employers, municipalities, and the government of Canada to integrate labour force strategies that provide durable solutions to the challenges of people without jobs and jobs without people. These will include tackling the mismatch between some of the educational paths Albertans follow and where the jobs are, removing barriers to labour mobility, and recognizing that local, national, and international workers are crucial to the success of our province. We will also continue to provide supports for those who are looking for work or who are underrepresented in the workforce, including people with disabilities.

Establishing Alberta as an Environmental Leader

If we talk about being a leader in the energy, agriculture, or forestry business, then we are in the environment business. Our customers expect this, and Albertans themselves demand it. Clean air, fresh water, and thriving biodiversity are part of our identity as Albertans and Canadians, something which Alberta shares with visitors from around the world through our exceptional tourism industry.

But we cannot just spread the word on the steps we have already taken. Alberta must take meaningful, effective action to show we are as serious about the environment business as we are about the energy business. This includes ongoing work with stakeholders and industry on the development of a new tailings management framework and taking action to protect the Athabasca River and its neighbouring ecosystems.

Alberta must build on the leadership that made us the first jurisdiction in North America to regulate greenhouse gas emissions and among the first to put a price on carbon. We will bring all parties – industry, environmental groups, aboriginal groups, and all affected Albertans – to the table to find common ground on environmental, economic, and social priorities.

In the year ahead our work will expand through the development of a new climate change framework that will outline strategies to drive emissions reductions. This means moving increasingly towards lower emissions sources, including natural gas and renewables. It means ensuring Alberta communities are more resilient to the impacts of a changing climate. It includes advancing efforts to monitor, measure, and report on our progress. It means pursuing local and global partnerships and alliances to maximize our results. We will ensure that Alberta industry remains competitive, and we will meet the challenge of demonstrating real environmental leadership through meaningful action.

Enhancing Albertans' Quality of Life

Every effort of your government is focused on the fundamental goal of ensuring Albertans have the best quality of life possible. Albertans want to know that there will be schools for their children, supportive care and services for aging parents, and access to high-quality health care for everyone. They want to know that even while we deliver on fiscal promises, we are focused on ensuring our health and education systems, our communities, and cities will be able to meet the needs of our province as it grows to become a home for 6 million Albertans. They want to see smart investment and system improvement, getting full value for the money we do invest, reflected in system improvement across all areas of government.

Nowhere is this need more urgent than in the delivery of their health care. Albertans want a system that is patient focused and sustainable. They want to see outcomes improve. We know there is tremendous local knowledge in our communities and great expertise in our front-line health care workers. We want to empower health care providers to have more input into decision-making at the local level. This will take shape through refined relationships with health advisory councils and through a renewed focus on clinical standards, with input from medical professionals and key stakeholders.

Your government is focused on improving flow into and through the health system through multiple, integrated initiatives. This includes the continuing care capacity plan that will open 464 existing continuing care spaces and create more than 1,500 new spaces. This is in addition to the 1,400 spaces already set to open between 2016 and 2018. New continuing care spaces will ensure that seniors and others with complex needs receive the care they need in safe, comfortable, and appropriate settings while freeing up beds in hospital wards and emergency departments. Your government is committed to providing the right kind of care and housing options for seniors, at the right time, and as close to home as possible.

Additional work is also under way to address specific challenges within the health system, including patient access, waiting times, the need to speed up the transfer of patients from ambulances, the challenges of rural and remote communities, the availability of mental health supports for Alberta's children, and the need to develop a wellness strategy for Albertans.

A good education is the first step to a productive, fulfilling life. Albertans rightly expect excellence in education. Government must focus on providing students with the quality education they will need to thrive in the future. The recent announcement of 75 school projects brings the three-phase plan for Alberta's school infrastructure to 230 capital projects, creating more than 78,000 new spaces. This is the largest school construction project in Canadian history, and it is essential to keep pace with 10 years of record growth in Alberta's student population.

We are also committed to improving the way we teach and support our students and teachers. This government will work to ensure that the basics of literacy and numeracy are the foundation for all student learning from kindergarten through grade 12. We will also work to ensure students have opportunities to acquire 21st-century competencies such as innovation, communication, and collaboration.

We are working with education partners to deliver innovative learning opportunities such as dual-credit programming, which allows high school students to develop high-demand skills and get a head start on postsecondary learning or workplace training through one of the many institutions under the Campus Alberta umbrella. Your government will work with postsecondary institutions to meet our province's need for skilled entrepreneurs, professionals, researchers, and workers. We are exploring new ways to strengthen the system that will allow all learners to access and transfer within Campus Alberta. Innovation investments will be aligned to better support and encourage innovative thinking and revenue generation within the Campus Alberta system.

We will also target supports for apprentices, low-income, northern, and aboriginal learners, all of whom have a vital role to play in meeting the growing need for skilled workers across Alberta.

Excelling in health, education, seniors' care, and skills training means investing in the structures these systems need. Government is broadening the planning horizon for its capital plan with the development of a five-year intermediate plan and a 25-year long-term plan. These will ensure priority needs will be met in an orderly and cost-effective way.

We also recognize the need to take care of the infrastructure that is already in place and have begun to deal with the maintenance backlog using a planned and deliberate approach. To ensure transparency and accountability, your government will introduce regular, twice-yearly report cards on the status of infrastructure projects across the province. The first will be tabled in the Legislature during this session.

Strong, modern, culturally vibrant cities and municipalities are at the heart of our province. Your government will provide Alberta municipalities with a solid foundation for growth. We will continue to provide significant, predictable funding to support local infrastructure and services through the municipal sustainability initiative. We will review the Municipal Government Act, working in partnership with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, all of our other municipal partners, and other stakeholders. And we will build on the recent signing of the framework agreement with Edmonton and Calgary and work with both municipalities to achieve the key milestones in the framework by spring of 2016.

Your government is also focused on being better partners to aboriginal communities, including those living in urban Alberta. Aboriginal people have important contributions to make to our cities, but sometimes the transition from rural or isolated communities to urban centres can be challenging. Your government will work directly with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities along with urban aboriginal organizations and federal and municipal governments to develop and support initiatives to ease transitions to urban centres and into new opportunities. We will devote new energy to addressing the unacceptable gaps in education achievement between aboriginal and nonaboriginal students by building partnerships and support for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people to use their skills, knowledge, and perspectives in the workforce.

In addition, a new bill will be introduced to improve protection for condo owners and buyers, improve transparency and accountability of condo boards, and create a faster, more affordable dispute resolution system.

Your government will work with the Premier's Council on Culture to develop a culture plan to promote sustainability and long-term growth across Alberta's vibrant arts and culture sector.

And work on a new volunteerism strategy will commence to ensure that our province's nonprofit and voluntary sector, comprising almost 25,000 charities and organizations, remains strong in its exceptional contributions to Albertans' quality of life.

Your government is also working to ensure children, low-income Albertans, and others who are vulnerable are protected. Changes in the justice system will put the needs of children and families first through reforms focusing on early and final resolution of disputes and by improving the efficiency of the maintenance enforcement program. Legal aid funding is being increased to allow more low-income Albertans, including AISH recipients, to access the justice system.

From prenatal to young adult, plans are under way to support young Albertans by tackling youth homelessness under the 10-year plan to end homelessness and through the early years strategy. They will provide important supports for Alberta's children and youth, helping them transition between community systems and support services to healthy adulthood.

Finally, for the many Alberta communities that are still recovering from the 2013 flooding, government is taking immediate action to resolve outstanding disaster recovery program appeals before the end of this year. A comprehensive flood mitigation plan will include the construction of a south diversion of the Highwood River and a dry reservoir near Springbank. These are components of a program that ensures Alberta communities are better protected from future flooding through solutions that are affordable, environmentally defensible, and quickly actionable.

Conclusion

Ladies and gentlemen, this is your government's plan for Alberta. It begins with the understanding that government's role is to serve Albertans honourably, respectfully, and ethically. Government's priorities must be those set by Albertans themselves.

It follows that our province must remain on a firm fiscal foundation, characterized by the sound, conservative fiscal principles that have served Alberta well. We must make the most of the many natural gifts bestowed on Alberta and through wise management and hard work turn the blessings we have been given into long-lasting security and prosperity. We must act now and act together to conserve our greatest gift of all, the natural splendour, majesty, and beauty of Alberta.

And we must work together thoughtfully and deliberately to preserve and enhance the tremendous quality of life enjoyed by Albertans. This is a precious legacy handed down to us from those who built our province. And it is our most solemn duty, in turn, to bestow what we received on our own children and grandchildren and everyone who will one day call this great province home.

This is your government's commitment to this Assembly and to all Albertans.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Robert Clark, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion of our singing.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,

God save The Queen!

Send her victorious,

happy and glorious,

long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Thank you.
Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, today we welcomed four new members to our Legislative Assembly. As we know, Alberta became a province on September 1, 1905. Since that time there have been 28 general elections in Alberta and 104 by-elections, the most recent of which were held on October 27.

The 1905 federal statute establishing Alberta as a province and the Legislative Assembly of Alberta was the Alberta Act. It specified that the Legislative Assembly would be comprised of 25 members. The first official census of our newly created province was held in 1906, and it determined that our population was then 185,412 people. Accordingly, at that time there was 1 elected member per 7,416 residents.

In 1909 during the Fourth Session of the First Legislature the members of the Assembly passed the Legislative Assembly Act. That act increased the number of elected members in the Assembly to 41. The population of our province was of course growing at an astounding pace. This fact was borne out by the next official census, in 1911, when our population totalled 374,663 people, more than double the population of 1906. Therefore, there was now 1 member for every 9,138 residents.

Over the years the number of elected members has grown, just to keep pace with the burgeoning population of Alberta, as follows: in 1913 there were 56 members, in 1930 63 members, in 1957 65 members, in 1970 75 members, in 1985 83 members, and as of our last adjustment back in 2012 there are now 87 members. Today, according to the latest estimates, our population now boasts a resounding 4,121,692 people, which means we now have 1 elected member for every 47,376 residents. Quite a jump.

In 2008 the Legislature Library undertook a project to establish definitively how many individuals have been honoured by being elected to this Assembly since 1905. Once elected, each member takes a special oath, signs the oath of allegiance book on the day he or she is sworn in, and begins his or her duties. The stats and numbers that I mentioned earlier reflect on our place in the illustrious history of the province of Alberta, and as members get elected to this Assembly, each of them gets a number. Let me recite three of them for you. Member 1, of course, was our first Premier, the hon. Alexander C. Rutherford. Member 46 was R.B. Bennett, who served as an MLA from 1909 to 1911, then as Prime Minister of Canada from 1930 to 1935. Member 93 was Louise McKinney, who was also the first woman elected to this Assembly and, of course, helped champion the cause of having women become recognized as persons. Through the aforementioned 28 general elections and 104 by-elections a total of only 833 individuals have taken their place in this Assembly as an elected member.

We take our responsibilities very seriously. We all believe strongly in the work we do here. We all believe strongly in the democratic process, we all believe in the healthy legislative debate in which we engage in this Chamber, and we are reminded of the events that just took place on Parliament Hill, which in turn remind all of us of just how precious those rights and freedoms are to each and every one of us as contributing members of society and that all of us, each and every one of us, has a role to play, be it great or be it small, in ensuring those rights and freedoms are maintained and used for the greater good of us all.

Thank you.

Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the honour now to table a copy of the speech graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Bill 1 Respecting Property Rights Act

Mr. Prentice: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 1, the Respecting Property Rights Act.

It is a great honour to rise today and introduce our new government's first piece of legislation, Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act. Mr. Speaker, I am passionate about property rights, and during the leadership race this summer I made a commitment to restore trust with landowners and introduce legislation to ensure Albertans' property rights are respected. Bill 1 is the first step to accomplishing this.

We reviewed the existing legislation and listened to the concerns of Albertans. By repealing the Land Assembly Project Area Act, we are responding to Albertans' concerns. Further, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the Property Rights Advocate Act the 2012 and 2013 Property Rights Advocate's reports will be referred to committee for review during this fall session. We look forward to hearing from the committee following their review.

Property rights are a bedrock and a foundation of this province, so much so that we as a province incorporated the protection of property rights into the Alberta Bill of Rights. I am standing up today in defence of the property rights of Albertans, as I have my entire life. It is the responsibility of this government to find a balance between individual rights on the one hand and the rights of the public and the province as a whole on the other. By introducing Bill 1 today, this government is keeping its commitment to the people of Alberta to ensure a balanced approach to property rights. It's our commitment to a clear and fair process, Mr. Speaker, a process that respects this Legislative Assembly and respects the input of members of this Assembly in that process.

It gives me great pleasure to stand today to introduce this bill to address landowners' concerns and uphold their rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I move that the speech of His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration on Tuesday, November 18, 2014.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move that the Assembly stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 18, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:14 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, as we begin this first week of work in this Assembly, help us to proceed with the respect and honour that our institution deserves, and fill our hearts and minds with wisdom and determination to always do what is right for our constituents, for our province, and indeed for our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who have shared the burdens connected to public office and public service.

Today I would like to welcome members and/or representatives of the Stevens family, the Hutton family, and the Diachuk family, all of whom I will introduce to you a bit later. In addition, I would also like to acknowledge the Alexander family, with whom we have been in contact but none of whom were able to join us in person today. Nonetheless, we know they are here with us in spirit.

Mr. Ronald Gordon Stevens, QC
September 17, 1949, to May 13, 2014

The Speaker: In 1997 Mr. Ron Stevens was elected to serve as the Member for Calgary-Glenmore in this Assembly. Prior to his election he had a successful career as a civil litigation lawyer and was appointed Queen's Counsel in 1996. He served in this Assembly for 12 years and held the positions of minister of gaming, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, and Deputy Premier from 2007 through 2009. With his strong work ethic and keen intellect, Mr. Stevens made many contributions to our province through this Assembly. Of particular note, he sponsored the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. He also introduced the private member's bill which ultimately gave us our official dress tartan. Mr. Stevens resigned in May of 2009 to continue to serve Albertans as a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Mr. Drew Hutton
October 8, 1953, to August 18, 2014

The Speaker: Mr. Drew Hutton served as the Member for Edmonton-Glenora from 2001 until 2004. Prior to being elected, he was the executive director of the Glenrose Foundation from 1998 to 2000 and held various roles within the Alberta civil service for almost 20 years. Mr. Hutton believed in giving back to the community and worked with many charities and organizations, including the Kidney Foundation and the United Way. He was an accomplished Masters runner and volunteered with the Edmonton Festival Marathon Society and with the Edmonton 2001 ITU triathlon championship committee. Most recently Mr. Hutton was serving as the director of U.S.A. trade and investment in the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Bill Wasyl Diachuk
October 8, 1929, to October 17, 2014

The Speaker: Mr. Bill Diachuk served as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly from 1971 until 1986. In his first term he was elected as Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees and served in that role until 1975. In 1979 he was appointed minister responsible for workers' health, safety, and compensation and held that position for seven years.

Throughout his life Mr. Diachuk was actively involved in the community. He served as a separate school trustee, volunteered with numerous organizations and associations, assisted farmers as far away as Brazil to set up sustainable herbal tea crops, and helped build a children's park and a lung clinic in Lviv, Ukraine. Over the years Mr. Diachuk received many honours, including the Michael Luchkovich award, the Shevchenko medal, the Stars of Alberta award, and was made an officer brother within the Order of St. John.

Mr. Robert Keith Alexander
July 23, 1930, to November 12, 2014

The Speaker: Born in Vulcan, Alberta, Mr. Keith Alexander was elected as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud on November 2, 1982, and served until November 5, 1985. In 1,100 days of service in the 20th Legislature Mr. Alexander made his presence known by chairing the committee on regulatory reform and by sitting on numerous other committees. Mr. Alexander was a former champion amateur golfer whose many victories secured him a place in both the Canadian Golf Hall of Fame in 1985 and in the Alberta sports hall of fame in 1986. Of particular note was the invitation, which he honoured, to play in the Masters alongside Byron Nelson.

In a moment of silent prayer I would ask you to remember Mr. Stevens, Mr. Hutton, Mr. Diachuk, and Mr. Alexander as you may have known them. Please rise.

O Lord, grant rest eternal unto each of them, and let light perpetual shine ever upon them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, continuing onward, we have with us today members and/or representatives from the Stevens, Hutton, and Diachuk families, and I would ask that they rise and remain standing as I call their names, and then we can welcome them all at the end with our thanks through our applause.

Representing the Stevens family is Jeremy Chorney, long-time family friend of the family, of course, and of former member Ron Stevens.

Representing the Hutton family are Marcy Hutton, wife of former member Drew Hutton; Mackenzie Hutton, daughter of Mr. Hutton; Jordan Schell, nephew of Mr. Hutton; Stacy Schell, niece of Mr. Hutton; Jodi Schell, sister-in-law of Mr. Hutton; and Andrew Keats, family friend of Mr. Hutton.

Representing the Diachuk family are Ollie Diachuk, wife of former member Bill Diachuk; Teresa Diachuk, daughter of Mr. Diachuk; and Brenda Diachuk, daughter of Mr. Diachuk.

We also want to reach out to the Alexander family, whom I referred to earlier, none of whom, unfortunately, were able to join us today. Nonetheless, please know that our thoughts and prayers are with you and with all.

Please join me in welcoming and thanking our guests. [applause]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: We have school groups, that are traditionally first, and I think we have the hon. Minister of Health ready to make an introduction, followed by Sherwood Park.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of 37 grade 6 students from Monsignor William Irwin Catholic school in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, who are seated in the public gallery. These students are here this week to participate in the Legislature school. Their teacher, Mr. Nick Freeman, and a parent, Mike Smith, are joining them. I ask the students and their teacher from Monsignor William Irwin elementary school to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 58 grade 6 students, very bright and talented grade 6 students, from St. Theresa Catholic middle school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Kurt Davison and Ms Stefanie Kaiser, and by Cathy Kennard, Trinity Senuk, and Vanessa Jans. I ask that the group from St. Theresa Catholic school please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on to the next category of important friends, guests, and acquaintances and begin with the hon. Premier, who, I believe, has an introduction to make.

Mr. Prentice: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also acknowledge the family and friends of Ron Stevens, Drew Hutton, Bill Diachuk, and Keith Alexander together with the other guests.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you Mrs. Karen Prentice. Mrs. Prentice is my spouse of 31 years, as you may have guessed. She is a successful personal lawyer in her own right. She has succeeded, while I have been occupied with other matters, in raising three daughters and is now providing the same leadership to raising two grandchildren. She also sits on a number of charitable boards in Alberta and, indeed, across the country. I would ask Karen to please rise – I would not be here without her – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. Would you like me to do them one right after the other?

My first introduction. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly Charlene Preston. Charlene is my constituency assistant in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. She's a friend, she's an adviser, and honestly I could not do as good a job as I do without her help. If Charlene could stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it truly is an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House three very special members of my own family: our daughter Jessica, who is here and has taught me more about kindness than I will ever know; our daughter Madison, who is an amazing spirit and a member of the seventh squadron Penhold air cadets and who won the top cadet at summer camp this summer before Penhold closed; and, of course, my mom, Bertha, who has always stood beside me in hard times, good times, knows I'm not perfect and that I make lots of mistakes but who has always been proud of me and makes me want to work harder each and every day. I would ask all of you to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, followed by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be associated with a great group of people who work in my department. They're very outward looking, and they deal with Albertans every day. They are trained by a group of people within my department who are here today, 16 people from my ag-industry extension and training branch. I'd like to call their names, and they can rise as I call them and stay standing. They are Lois Hameister, Susan Lacombe, Chris Onciul, Karen Carle, Eugene Balogh, Stephanie Irvine, Deb Ratcliff, Charles Young, Mark Kelly, John Gillmore, Lee Harper, Caitlynn Reesor, Barb Shackel-Hardman, Lori McRae, Sharon Stollery, and Cameron Horner. These people do great work for the people of the province of Alberta and our department. I'd like to thank them and welcome them here today. I'd ask my colleagues to join in welcome with the traditional welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very important people in my life. In fact, if it weren't for them, I don't think I would be here. I'd like to introduce my parents, Brian and Gay Fawcett, who have come here for the throne speech and to watch question period today. They successfully raised three boys – I don't know how they did it sometimes – with a tremendous amount of sacrifice, compassion, and understanding. I know that we don't always say it enough, but, Mom and Dad, I love you and thank you for being here. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Alberta Liberals I would like to thank the families of Drew Hutton, Ron Stevens, Bill Diachuk, and Mr. Alexander for sharing them with the province of Alberta. Our thoughts and prayers are with you, and you have our sincerest condolences.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mark Hercina and Trudy Ng. Mark and Trudy are correctional peace officers from Red Deer. Mark sits on the pension committee with AUPE and is a member of local 3. Trudy is a secretary for local 3, chapter 12. Mark and Trudy are hard-working employees of this great province. As AUPE members they represent the thousands of employees that keep our province safe. Their focus on pension rights illustrates their commitment to serving this province. On behalf of the Alberta Liberals of the Legislature I would ask Mark and Trudy to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my very special guests, Ray Martin and Raj Pannu. It's a great honour for me to have both Ray and Raj here today to show their support during my first question period as leader of Alberta's NDP. No pressure there at all. Of course, my guests are no strangers to this House. Ray Martin was leader of our party from 1984 to 1994, with Raj leading the charge from 2000 to 2004. Just like my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, they have both left tremendous legacies for me to follow. I'm grateful to have three former leaders as my friends and mentors to help me settle into my new role. I would now like both Ray and Raj to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my guests, Mr. Ron Liepert and Ms Lisa Davis. Former Alberta Finance minister and former Calgary-West representative Mr. Liepert is no stranger to this Assembly and will be continuing his political career as the Conservative candidate for the new riding of Calgary Signal Hill in the next federal election. Ms Davis managed my by-election campaign and is a recognized community leader and a strong advocate for school infrastructure in Calgary-West. My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you two gentlemen who are visiting all the way from Faisalabad, Pakistan: the physician Dr. Najaf Gill, followed by his nephew who is a local entrepreneur. I would request that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

1:50 Statement by the Speaker

Rotation for Questions and Members' Statements Questions to Members Other than Ministers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the clock reads 1:50. That means we have to start question period. However, before we proceed with the daily Routine and the first question period of this session, I'm obliged to make a brief statement about changes in the rotation for Oral Question Period and for Members' Statements and the role of legislative secretaries in this Assembly. This statement is further to my November 10, 2014, memo to all members, which included the projected sitting days calendar and the Oral Question Period and Members' Statements rotations for the Third Session of the 28th Legislature. I note that my office has not received a House leaders' agreement varying the rotations outlined in the attachments to that memo, so we will proceed on the basis of those rotations.

The change to the rotations since last session is made necessary by the changes in caucus membership. The only difference from the standings when the House leaders' agreement on rotations was reached in May 2012 is that there is one independent member, who was formerly a member of the Wildrose caucus. In keeping with the practice of an independent member being entitled to ask one question per sitting week, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will be able to ask the sixth question on day 4 of the rotation, which will be Monday, November 24, as today is officially day 1 in the rotation.

The Official Opposition is entitled to the first three questions each day, the Liberal caucus is entitled to the fourth question, and the ND caucus is entitled to the fifth question. The Official Opposition may ask the sixth question each day except for day 4 in the rotation, when it will be the turn of the aforementioned Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. The Official Opposition will be entitled to ask the eighth, 12th, 14th, and 16th questions each day. Members of the government caucus will be entitled to ask the ninth, 13th, 15th, and 17th questions each day. The Liberal caucus may ask the 10th question each day, and the ND caucus the 11th question. The 18th question will rotate, with the Official Opposition entitled to ask it on days 1 and 3 of the rotation – that would be today and Thursday – with the government caucus asking it on day 2, and the Liberal caucus being entitled to the 18th question on day 4 of the rotation.

With respect to the rotation for Members' Statements this has also been modified to provide for one statement for the independent member every three weeks. This is reflected on the projected sitting days calendar that I sent to you under cover of my November 10, 2014, memo.

I should also point out that there is a motion on the Order Paper for the sitting to be extended past December 4, 2014. If this motion passes, there will be a new projected sitting days calendar issued and sent to everyone.

Another difference from the last time the Assembly met is that there are now four legislative secretaries and one special adviser, who have been appointed by the government. I want to reaffirm past Speakers' rulings that have been made on the role of legislative secretaries and/or similar positions. Essentially, as the occupants of these offices are not members of the Executive Council, they are not entitled to respond to questions during Oral Question Period on matters of government policy.

As my predecessor Speaker Kowalski said on April 16, 2008, at page 13 of Alberta Hansard for that day, "Without detracting from the work they perform, for the purposes of the Assembly members occupying these positions are considered private members as opposed to the government." The point of Oral Question Period is to hold the government to account. Legislative secretaries are not members of Executive Council and therefore cannot respond to questions on behalf of the government. Speaker Schumacher made the same point, and you can find that at page 2854 of Alberta Hansard for November 7, 1994.

If members have any questions about the rotations or any other matters, for that matter, regarding things in this statement that I've just said, I would encourage you to contact my office as soon as possible.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I hope you'll indulge me with a few extra seconds on the clock to first congratulate the Premier on winning the leadership of his party and securing his seat.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Smith: The Premier claims that we are now under new management, so I will keep this simple and ask him the first question that I asked in the Assembly to the member who was the head of the old management. With oil heading towards $70 a barrel, this government will have a multibillion-dollar hole in its budget. How will the Premier get out of this budget hole? Will it be by increasing the deficit, by raising our taxes, or by wiping out what's left of our savings?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Prentice: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me just respond by thanking the hon. member for her warm and generous welcome. We have all as members of the Assembly arrived here in different ways, on different personal journeys, but we all are here to serve the interests of Albertans. I look very much forward to working with the hon. member and indeed all members of the House. As we've seen in the throne speech, this government tends to be very focused on the desires and wishes of Albertans, and I look forward to working together to achieve exactly that.

If you might indulge me, then, Mr. Speaker, to respond to the question, Albertans are already the lowest taxed people in the country by far. This is an enormous advantage, which we intend to maintain.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I just want a little more clarity on that answer because the pundits are speculating that the Premier is considering new revenue streams. That is code for new taxes. As his party has indicated, they believe Albertans should be paying for all sorts of new things like driving down a highway. Will the Premier assure Albertans that he won't create any new taxes or raise any of our current taxes to pay for his spending promises?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, what I have said publicly and will continue to say is that $75-per-barrel oil represents a low-price environment, that every single family and businessperson in this province is well aware of. This is not business as usual. This will require some tough decisions on the part of the government. Our government will bring forward an update specifically on the finances of the province relative to this position in the current fiscal year. That will be done by the Minister of Finance in the week ahead. It will provide Albertans with a very clear picture of the current fiscal situation. It is a time for prudence and caution.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, you see that he didn't say no when I asked that question.

There were also a lot of spending promises in the by-elections as well as yesterday's throne speech. However, the throne speech did say that the government will maintain the sustainability fund, which, of course, suggests that they won't be dipping into our savings. So it's either going to be higher taxes or more debt or both. Now, the Premier used to be a senior banker. Will he tell us how much debt he thinks it would be prudent for Albertans to take on?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for her question. I think the best authority on matters relating to banking is probably Moody's Investors Service, which today actually issued a report concerning the creditworthiness of our province and made the very specific observation that even prices as low as $60 per barrel for west Texas intermediate crude carried through for the entire year of 2015-2016, as a hypothetical, would not impair the triple-A credit rating of the province of Alberta. That's fiscal strength. We intend to maintain that through prudence and discipline.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I can summarize that, Mr. Speaker. I guess I would say that it's yes to both more taxes and more debt.

Property Rights

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, all summer we heard the Premier declare that he truly understands property rights and that he would fix this government's past mistakes. Just yesterday he rose in this Assembly and made the same promises, and we were hopeful. Albertans were hopeful. Then we saw the seven-word sentence which is the text of Bill 1. Does the Premier actually believe that one act, that has never even been proclaimed, is the totality of what this government needs to do to fix and protect Albertans' property rights?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for her question. This hon. member does believe that the land assembly act is a piece of legislation that is overreaching and should be repealed. Of course, that is the effect of Bill 1.

More than that, however, Mr. Speaker, as this matter proceeds to committee, the two reports of Alberta's Property Rights Advocate from 2012 and 2013 will be referred to the committee. I would expect the committee and indeed all of the parliamentarians who are assembled here to work together to arrive at solutions that respect the process that the government has been through but also the process that the Property Rights Advocate has recommended.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that when this government thinks that your property rights might get in the way of what they want to do, they write legislation that allows the cabinet to take away your rights without due process and without full, fair, and timely compensation. They did that with the bills commonly known as Bill 50, Bill 36, Bill 24, and Bill 2, among others. Why isn't the Premier addressing the real issues now that he has the chance?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to fair and just and timely compensation, as one who practised law in this area for over 20 years would observe, it really is the provisions of Alberta's Expropriation Act and the Surface Rights Act which require examination. This is what the Property Rights Advocate has recommended. This is certainly what I have heard over the course of the summer in this province. Those are two pieces of legislation where very specific recommendations will be before the committee relative to how to move forward. That's the essence of Bill 1, to arrive carefully, with the work of everyone in this Legislature, at how to deal with property rights in our province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Bill 36 overrides those acts, and as a lawyer the Premier should know that.

On property rights it is clear that the Premier has overpromised and underdelivered, but it's not too late. My colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka will be introducing a private member's motion that would enshrine property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms for Alberta. If it passes, a similar motion will be debated in Ottawa. If the Premier is sincere about protecting property rights in Alberta, he can declare his support for this constitutional change right now. So how about it, Premier? Are you sincere?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is, as the hon. member has observed, my first day in this parliamentary session; however, I have been in other parliamentary sessions. I would observe that it's good practice to actually comment in this Chamber upon legislation once it's introduced, and I intend to do that once it's put forward. My record over the course of a lifetime in advocating on behalf of landowners and property rights, dealing with the legislative framework that we have in this province is very clear. That is a path that I continue to pursue and pursue as leader of this government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader for her third and final set of main questions.

Ms Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The motion has been introduced; it's on the Order Paper today.

School Construction

Ms Smith: In his very first speech this Premier asked Albertans to judge his government on the progress it will make. To help the Premier, I will regularly ask him about his progress, so let me start with schools. So far they've built only 18 of Premier Stelmach's 22 promised schools. Only one of Premier Redford's 50 promised schools is actually under construction, and this Premier has now promised another 55 schools. Can the Premier tell us how his new management team will actually get schools built when the same managers haven't been able to get the job done?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, firstly, as the Premier of this province I have very strong views about the need to build schools and to properly educate our children and to ensure that we have classroom space. So I have spoken very definitively to this, and one need only look at the throne speech of the government to get a sense of the commitments which the government has made and intends to stand by. The ministers of my government have been instructed to proceed on that path. At this point in time across the province we are engaged in the largest construction project relative to public schools in Canadian history. It is a challenging job. We have excellent ministers, that are hands-on, that are dealing with this.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has promised to have nearly all of the new schools announced by Premiers Redford and Stelmach ready for the 2016 school year. Now, that's on top of all of the major renovations that were also promised, but this government has only succeeded in actually building 18 of those schools in the last four years. Can the Premier tell us exactly how his new management team is going to complete the remaining 49 schools in just 23 months?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the hon. member to watch and learn from the process. In the hands of very capable ministers, including the Minister of Infrastructure, the Minister of Education, and other ministers, we will be well along. There are innovations that are being made, and these schools will be constructed in the way that has been projected.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I seem to recall Premier Redford saying exactly the same thing.

If you peruse the list of promised school projects on Alberta Infrastructure's website, you'll see that most of these promised 49 schools don't specify the construction or design method. Most haven't been designed. Only a few are at the tender stage, and only one is under construction although there have been several sod turnings. Isn't the Premier afraid that when Albertans judge his progress on schools, they will find that he has overpromised and underdelivered?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I trust in the judgment of Albertans always, as I did in the recent by-elections, and the hon. member can do the same. We've struck a very specific cabinet committee that will supervise the construction of these school projects. Nothing is more important to all of us who sit in this Legislative Assembly than ensuring that we have classrooms for our children. We'll be moving ahead with the construction projects which have been put forward. I trust the ministers to execute on this; I know that they will do so effectively. Over the course of the next several years 78,000 new classroom spaces will be opened.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to be back. Congratulations and welcome to the Premier and the newly elected government members.

Government Policies

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier talks a lot about ending entitlements and sweetheart contracts, restoring public trust, and making appointments based on merit, yet his very first act as Premier was to appoint his buddies as emissaries to Saskatchewan, Washington, and Hong Kong. To the Premier: given your recent record how can you expect Albertans to believe that this talk of new management is anything more than just slick Tory talk all over again?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, if I might just speak firstly of Mr. Merrifield, who is Alberta's representative in Washington, there is a critical vote taking place on the Keystone pipeline at 3:30 today, Mountain Standard Time. This is a vote which is critical to our province. It may or may not be the end of that process, but it is critical to the future of Alberta. Mr. Merrifield is infinitely capable as the most expert person in terms of these affairs in Washington. He agreed to set aside his life and serve Albertans in that position and, frankly, is doing an exceptional job.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, apparently only friends can make critical decisions.

The Premier said that his decisions would be based on sound conservative fiscal principles. When plans for a diversion canal and a dry reservoir west of Calgary were announced, the government said that it would wait for a robust economic appraisal by engineers before deciding if it would proceed, yet just three days before the by-election the Premier jumped the gun and announced that the project was a go. To the Premier: why didn't you wait until you had all the facts before you made this huge decision? Was this sound fiscal planning or just a by-election tactic?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps because of changes to our climate, perhaps climatic circumstances, the weather has changed, and we are seeing more risk of flooding in southern Alberta, particularly in spring with the thaw. What's important in the river basins which we're speaking of – the Bow basin, the Elbow basin, and the Highwood basin – is that we undertake flood mitigation projects which are environmentally defensible, which are cost-effective, and which can be actioned quickly because on my watch as Premier I do not want to see another flood in any of the communities that were affected in 2013. That's the purpose of these projects.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, nobody in this building wants to see another flood, and we all want to make the right decision.

Recently, the Calgary board of education put out a top 10 list of their modular school projects, yet the then unelected Minister of Education used his position to announce the approval of two modular classrooms in the very riding that he was running for public office in. The folks charged with running the education system, the CBE, were not even aware of it and ranked six other projects as higher needs. To the Premier: how does this decision reflect on your promise to do things differently? Isn't this the same sort of political trickery that characterized previous PC governments?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member opposite for the question. This government is concerned and listens to the priorities of Albertans. That is the value that drives the decisions that we make, whether it comes to building new schools, whether it comes to modular programs for our school boards, whether it comes to maintenance funding for schools that need attention. That's my priority as Minister of Education, to ensure that we're responding to the needs of parents.

The Speaker: The hon. new leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join other members in offering my congratulations to the Premier on his new post.

However, I would also like to remind him that his authority today depends entirely on the election of his caucus on a very clear set of promises, not the least of which was a commitment to end child poverty, a subject which was ignored in yesterday's throne speech. This government has broken an unending list of commitments to Alberta families, and thus far it looks like the record will continue. So my question to the Premier is this. The old management broke promises, and now this management is breaking promises. How is that new management?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I similarly welcome the hon. member to this Legislative Assembly in her current role.

Child poverty is of concern to all of us and certainly of concern to myself as Premier, and this is something that we intend to deal with. Now, this was a matter that I touched upon in terms of aboriginal issues in the throne speech. We are very concerned about the circumstances of aboriginal children, particularly in an urban context. I think the throne speech could not have been clearer about the importance of dealing with those issues, the importance of education for aboriginal children but also making sure that these issues are . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Ms Notley: The throne speech was clear on not talking about the plan to end child poverty in five years. That's what was clear.

Now, two and a half years ago Albertans voted for 50 new schools; not one has been built. They voted for more access to postsecondary education and, instead, got much less. They voted for 5,000 seniors places and will get about half of that. My question to the Premier: do you or do you not believe that you are responsible for implementing the platform your caucus was elected on?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that the throne speech was very clear on the five priorities that this government is focused on: a focused commitment to ensuring that we have sound conservative fiscal principles, to ensuring that we restore public trust, end entitlements, to a focus on our natural resources, to a focus as well on being an environmental leader, but most importantly and significantly to a focus upon the people's priorities, and they include education, they include health care, and they include the living circumstances of people in our urban communities.

Ms Notley: So it appears to me the answer is no.

After promising not to be your father's PC Party, it looks like dad is back in charge. Albertans need to decrease their expectations. They shouldn't count on PC promises of the past, and after 43 years in government no one could ever have predicted that oil prices might fluctuate. This story is as old as the hills, almost as old as this government. Why should Albertans believe anything coming from this government when breaking promises is just business as usual?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, over the course of the past six months I have criss-crossed this province, firstly campaigning for the leadership of my party, more recently in the by-elections, which I would also refer this hon. member to. Over the course of that time the priorities of Albertans have been made very clear to me. We have been listening to Albertans. The throne speech, which we tabled yesterday, could not have been clearer that we are responding directly to the priorities of Albertans when it comes to the issues that concern them relative to their quality of life: education, health care, attending to senior citizens, and the quality of our life in urban and rural Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you. Thank you for observing the 35-second rule.

We'll now proceed to question 6. No preambles after this, please. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Hospital Occupancy Rates

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February of 2012 the Health Quality Council released a report on emergency department overcrowding. It said clearly: reduce hospital occupancy rates to below 85 per cent, or you're putting patients at risk. Back then the government accepted this recommendation, and they pledged action, yet hospitals across this province today routinely run at 110 per cent capacity, emergency departments are jammed, and surgeries are being cancelled. To the Minister of Health: why is patient safety still at risk two and a half years after Albertans were promised action?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, recently the government of Alberta issued applications for new long-term care facilities, which allowed us to look at how we're using acute-care beds in hospitals. We're moving people from there into long-term care beds. This will allow us to open up facilities for those individuals that are dealing with the concerns of emergency facilities. Those emergency departments will then have 20 per cent set aside so that people can move into the departments in a way that they'll be properly taken care of.

Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: No, Minister.

Well, even the CEO of Alberta Health Services doubts that your plan will work. Given that the day after your announcement she said, and I'm going to quote: truly, I don't think we'll ever get to the 85 per cent occupancy rate, but if we can smooth it out where we have 98 per cent occupancy and then there's an occasional blip where we have too many patients, well, that would be better. Minister, are jammed hospitals and blips in the system really the best Albertans can hope for from an $18 billion health care system?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that was an accurate quote of what the head of Alberta Health Services said. She has always indicated that 95 per cent would be a proper number to search for within our system.

Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'll be sure to send that quote to the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the two-and-a-half-year-old Health Quality Council report spells out the solutions for you – reduce occupancy rates by accurately estimating the number of acute and long-term care beds required now and over the next decade – has this estimate been done, Minister, and will you table it so Albertans know what's happening?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we're in the process of valuating the long-term implications of the need for acute-care beds. We've recently set up a program where we've been able to move 750 people out of acute care into long-term care beds. The start of that process will continue as we move down the process in order to create more acute-care beds as a result of the development of long-term care facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Keystone Pipeline Project

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Premier on behalf of the people of Calgary-West. We know that market access is critical for this province because it's important to get our oil to customers who need it. One of those opportunities is the Keystone pipeline in the United States. What has your government done to advocate for this important project given that it faces a critical vote in the U.S. Senate today?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, our prosperity in this province depends very much upon our access to the most integrated energy marketplace in the world. And I would just say that there will be a vote today at 3:30 in the U.S. Senate on Keystone. The results are uncertain as we speak at this point in time.

We have been working together with members of the American legislative branch. Specifically, I spoke yesterday with Senator Heidi Heitkamp, who is a Democrat senator and a cosponsor of the bill, and also with Senator Hoeven, who is a cosponsor of the bill, which is in the Senate. We remain hopeful and optimistic, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. My first supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is again to the Premier. If the Keystone vote in the Senate is successful today, what are your next steps to get Alberta oil to market?

The Speaker: Mr. Premier, it's a hypothetical question, but proceed.

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, this is a project which is certainly in the interests of our province and our country. It's also a project which is in the interests, I would submit, of the United States of America since under the free trade agreement our prosperity is based upon this project and our integrated energy system.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that we have other allies in the United States: Governor Christie. Of course, the governor of New Jersey will be coming to Alberta on December 4. I'll be meeting with him. We'll continue to work in a constructive way with senators, governors, and representatives in the United States.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental is again to the Premier. If the Keystone vote is not successful in the Senate today, what are your next steps to get Alberta bitumen to U.S. refineries?

The Speaker: Again, there's some hypothesis in there, but please proceed with your answer anyway.

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, market forces have of course continued to be inexorable. Canadian oil, Alberta oil, indeed, is making its way through to the Gulf coast by rail, and this will continue to be the case. The real debate in the context of the Keystone pipeline is not whether Canadian oil will be carried by market forces to the Gulf coast but whether it will be carried in the most safe and efficient mechanism possible, which is by pipeline.

So we remain optimistic. We will see what happens in the days ahead, but we remain cautiously optimistic, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Education minister. Might I start by congratulating the minister on his election victory and welcoming him to the Chamber.

Mr. McAllister: Since the last election, Mr. Speaker, this government has promised to build 105 new schools in the province: 50 from the former Premier, 55 from the current Premier. I'd like to ask the Education minister: of those specific 105 schools announced since 2012, how many of them are under construction, not in the planning stage but under construction, and is that cause for concern?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member opposite for his important question. One of the things that this government has said is a top priority is to ensure that we are responding to the growing enrolment pressures that Alberta is facing as we have 40,000 new people moving to our province every year, and that equates to 18,000 children and 25 new schools that we need every year going forward. So we have made a commitment, Mr. Speaker, to respond to the pressures that are before us, and we will continue to do that in the years ahead.

Mr. McAllister: The number is somewhere around zero, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the price of oil is now south of $75 a barrel, a lot of people are skeptical of this government's promises. In fact, their own members are skeptical, given that when the Premier made the school announcements, the now jobs minister said, and I quote: he's acting like a candy man handing out so many promises. Will the minister go on record today, then, and guarantee Albertans that these 105 schools will be built and open for our kids in September of 2016 as they promised?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the parents and residents in Cochrane and in Airdrie, where we just turned sod on three new schools, believe that we are moving in the right direction, and so do the parents and the teachers and the students in the many other communities across our province that are going to be receiving new schools in the next few years. That is our commitment. We'll continue to build. We'll continue to ensure that every community that needs a school is going to get a school. That's our priority.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, the minister is doing a lot of shovelling, but I don't think it's sod that he's turning.

During the by-election campaign he approved modulars for a school in his riding even though that school was way down the list, at number 7 on the priority list for the Calgary board of education. Albertans are cynical, calling it blatant electioneering. Boards are elected to make these decisions. Does the minister recognize that this was wrong? Will he apologize for this misuse of power and assure us that he won't do this thing going forward?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, my commitment is to ensure that we are responding to the priorities of Albertans. Now, Albertans said very clearly, "We need new schools; we need new infrastructure; we need modulars for those schools that are experiencing student enrolment pressures," and as minister I am committed to ensuring that we are responding to the priorities to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to congratulate the Minister of Health on his election and appointment to cabinet.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Amery: Now the question. Mr. Minister, during the recent by-election campaigns in Calgary and Edmonton, health care was the number one issue on voters' minds. They told us that we do have an excellent health care system provided that they get through emergency departments. We had issues with wait times in emergency rooms when our Health budget was $3 billion; we are still having problems with a budget of over $18 billion. What are the minister's plans to improve the situation in our emergency rooms?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the steps we are going to take in the city of Edmonton. We've put in some transition beds, which allow ambulances to come to the facility, drop off their patients, have proper care. They'll go into transition beds so they don't have to back up the emergency departments. We're looking at contracting the delivery of transfer systems in rural areas, which allows us to have more ambulances available.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Family care clinics were supposed to alleviate hospital emergency wait times. However, this doesn't seem to be the case. What is the minister's plan for the family care clinics?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government approved three family care clinics, and we're in the process of dealing with nine other ones. We made a decision that the professionals within the health care industry do not support family care clinics. We believe that primary care clinics are the way to go, and that's what we're going to focus on.

The Speaker: The hon. member, second supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, since many of our constituents blame the long wait times on the shortage of doctors, is the minister planning to accelerate the accreditation of foreign trained medical doctors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The College of Physicians & Surgeons is the one that accredits various physicians. We are dealing with them and trying to encourage them to bring more people in, but there is a three-month study period. It takes time, and they are the ones that approve it.

School Infrastructure Priorities

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, in the dying days of the by-election the Minister of Education circumvented the normal process of allowing school boards to set priorities for their local community and ordered two new modular classrooms to be put up at William Reid school, this despite the fact that the Calgary board of education had an extensive list of schools that needed modular classrooms ahead of William Reid, coincidentally located in Calgary-Elbow. Can the minister tell me why he made this decision that directly undercuts local autonomy of school boards?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated in the House today on a couple of occasions, a great priority of ours is to respond to the needs of Albertans, to listen carefully, to hear what they have to say, and then to ensure that we're providing the school capital infrastructure that we need, whether that's new schools, modulars, or maintenance upgrades. That's my commitment as minister, to continue to do that in collaboration with school boards across the province.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister listens to the question this time. He's seemingly having trouble hearing today. William Reid needed modulars, but you know let's delve a little deeper. There were 16 school projects that needed modulars ahead of William Reid school, again located in Calgary-Elbow. Why was the decision made, and are you going to continue . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, over the last number of weeks we as a government have responded to numerous capital needs for schools and school boards across the province. Many of those have come to me as Minister of Education. In consultation with my cabinet colleagues, we have made the decision to respond to those that are urgent, that are critical. And we'll continue to do that, whether it's modulars, as I have indicated, whether it's new schools that need to be built, whether it's upgrades, maintenance, infrastructure renewal. We'll continue to make that our priority in the days to come.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is categorically false. The only decision he has made is to provide two modular classrooms to William Reid school.

What other decisions have you made as Minister of Education besides that that directly saw those modular classrooms go to the Calgary-Elbow riding?

Mr. Dirks: Well, I thank the member opposite for his supplemental. If he had been carefully watching what had been happening, he would know that there have been a number of announcements that have been made providing infrastructure for a variety of school boards across the province, and that includes jurisdictions like Rocky View and Calgary and others that we've been working with. Wherever there are priorities when it comes to education infrastructure, this minister and this government will be listening and will be responding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. And I add my congratulations to the Premier and other members who have been recently elected to this Assembly.

Postsecondary Tuition Market Modification

Mr. Mason: Since the 1990s tuition in Alberta has nearly tripled while this province continues to have the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the country. Alberta's young people are being priced out of their own advanced education system. The government put a cap on tuition in 2006, but they are again leaving the door open to even more increases through so-called market modifiers. My question is to the Premier. Will you commit to enforcing a real cap on tuition by rejecting these proposed increases, or is this just another broken promise from this PC government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. And thank you for the question. Our goal in Alberta is to have an excellent post-secondary education system, and that's exactly what we're achieving. A top-quality postsecondary education system gives our graduates the skills that they need to excel in Alberta's economy. An individual learner's education is a shared investment between taxpayers and students. Market modifiers are one tool that is used to ensure that our programs remain competitive with other top-quality programs across the country. The market modifier applications are currently under review.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that non answer. The question is this. You put in place a cap on tuition. The post-secondary institutions are approaching you with so-called market modifiers that will jack up tuition for students at the U of A, in some cases by more than $5,000 a year. Are you going to stick to the cap that you promised Albertans and keep the freeze on tuition, or are you going to allow the U of A and other institutions to jack up tuition to make education unaffordable for the kids of this province?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, our goal is to have a quality education system in Alberta. That's got to be the goal of Alberta's post-secondary education system. I spent the last few months travelling across Alberta. I've heard that from both students and from the institutions. They want to make sure that our education system maintains its quality and excels at its educational goals. One point that I want my friend to realize is that we also have a great system of funding postsecondary students. We have a great system that lets them access the money that they need so that they can get a great education in Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we're getting quite an education here today from this minister, I'll tell you that.

This government cancelled the remission program, so student debts are higher than ever. It's clear that many Albertans can no longer afford to attend the universities and colleges that they and their parents pay taxes for, and that's just wrong, Mr. Minister. So will you take a clear stand against further tuition increases and reject these market modifier proposals? Yes or no?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, our government invests in scholarships, bursaries, grants, and student aid to make postsecondary education accessible to those facing barriers. Once again, I'm going to repeat: we need to make sure that we have a quality education system in Alberta. That's got to be the goal. We want our students to continue to enter the workforce so that we are providing the workers that our economy needs for tomorrow, and we're going to continue that work. We have received applications for tuition modifications. Those are going to be considered carefully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Anderson: Congratulations to the Finance minister as well on his new role.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Anderson: As you know, my Wildrose colleagues and I have repeatedly, almost daily, warned your government about the budget predicament we would be in if oil fell to the $75 range. We said that the waste and mismanagement had to stop or we would be facing tens of billions in debt. Well, that day is now here, and we are staring at structural deficits that will in just a couple of years from now result in the highest provincial debt in our history. Minister, your government is responsible for putting us in this mess. How are you going to get us out?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you Mr. Speaker. Let me start off by saying that we will balance the budget this year. Let me say that my mandate from the Premier is to make sure that we return to fiscally prudent, conservative principles in budgeting, and we'll do that.

Mr. Anderson: Sorry, Minister, but you and your government have been giving that same platitude for five years now. We need action.

Let's start with this. I brought a bill forward last year on behalf of the Wildrose that would cap severance for all government employees, not just political staffers, at $100,000 for less than five years of work to a maximum of $200,000 for anything over five years. It is a simple, common-sense solution that will save Alberta millions of dollars each year. Will you agree to implement that policy?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say that right now we are in the process of looking at different efficiencies throughout the government of Alberta, and we'll continue to work on that plan. It's a plan in progress. I would suggest that the member stay tuned for our fiscal update on November 26. We'll continue to work to make sure that we have a balanced budget moving forward and that we'll have a balanced budget for 2015 and 2016.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Oil is at $70 a barrel. You need $110 oil just to not go further into debt and balance the budget. This is a simple and straightforward way to save a lot of money without affecting front-line services. Given this Premier's commitment to ending the culture of PC entitlement, will you take the first step in doing so and commit right now to ending obscene severance packages for all government employees, including senior AHS officials and other quasi-government agencies, and not just for a few dozen political staffers? Surely you know this is the right thing.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I can't be any more clear that we are now looking at efficiencies within government. We will have a fiscal update next week, and we'll continue to work toward balancing our budget for 2015-16.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Education System

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The relationship over the past year between teachers and their association and our Education ministry can perhaps be best described as challenging. Can the Minister of Education tell us what actions he plans to take to restore a positive and mutually beneficial relationship with teachers and their professional association?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to ensuring a bright future for all of our children. After parents teachers are, of course, the single most important contributor to student success, and I value the excellent work our teachers do each day across the thousands of classrooms in our province. Working with education stakeholders is a very significant priority for me. I've already met with a number of them in the past weeks, and I will continue to engage with our teachers and with their representative organization to ensure that we secure a positive future for all kids.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that hopes were very high for progress in meeting the needs of special-needs students after the high profile special-needs review and given that there has since been wide disappointment amongst many parents and teachers, what will the minister do to fulfill the promise of developing the full potential of students with special needs?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. Every student in Alberta deserves a high-quality education, and as a national leader in education funding our commitment is strong in this regard to ensure that we are providing the kind of education we need for special-needs children. Total funding this fiscal year for special needs is over $400 million. We trust our school boards to make the very best decisions to meet the special-needs education requirements for our children, and parents who have concerns about special-needs programming are encouraged to work with their school boards to address those issues.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the Premier and minister have made public commitments to build substantial numbers of new schools, what steps will the minister take to ensure that school boards have the necessary financial resources to make sure that these new schools have appropriate levels of staffing?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. One of our government's top priorities certainly is education and preparing our kids for the future. We will continue to invest in schools and students. We have been tasked with coming up with a long-term, stable, predictable funding plan for education. We know this is the right approach. We are a national leader in education funding. Government invests nearly $40 million every day for our students in our schools. We'll continue to ensure that all of our new schools are appropriately staffed and that every student in those schools receives the high-quality education that they deserve.

Medical Laboratory Services in Medicine Hat

Mr. Barnes: The Medicine Hat Diagnostic Laboratory has been providing high-quality local care in Medicine Hat and Brooks for decades. This government's decision to end lab testing in this centre shows that the new PC regime still supports the same failed centralized planning methods in health care. I have a petition with 11,605 signatures, which I will be tabling later, from people upset that this centre, which serves up to a thousand patients per day, will be closing. To the minister: why have you decided to ignore the needs of more than 11,000 Albertans and move diagnostic testing in Medicine Hat?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we've invested a great deal in new facilities in the Medicine Hat hospital, and we think that that's a place where we can make sure that proper care is taken.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government incorrectly believes the decision to centralize diagnostic services in Medicine Hat may save $5 million after start-up costs but has assigned no dollar value to these start-up costs or what could be very, very expensive re-establishing collection services throughout Forty Mile, throughout Cypress county and Medicine Hat, does the minister have a business plan to ensure his planned savings don't disappear after the costs of re-establishing collection take effect, or is he just throwing our taxpayer money away?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the operation of the health care system is under the guise of Alberta Health Services. They are the ones that are in control of making sure that these investments are made in areas to ensure that they're done in an effective, efficient manner.

Mr. Barnes: Given that even Alberta Health Services has stated that the Medicine Hat Diagnostic Lab provided excellent, high-quality service and there doesn't seem to be a plan and given that the minister campaigned on a health care system that provided more regional control and access, will the minister really do something new, keep an election promise, and stop shutting down professional local providers in favour of more centralization?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Premier has been quite clear in his direction to myself that we are to look at how we can decentralize the system, to be able to put more services in local areas, ensure that each community has input into the system. We will continue to do that. It's my hope that we will over the next little while begin to look at how we can work with local communities to deliver greater services so that at the end of the day they feel more comfortable and more passionate about their health care system. This government is committed to community health care support. We will continue to do that. I truly believe the answer is working with communities to solve problems.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Special-needs Assistance for Seniors

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My office has been hearing from seniors who are experiencing considerable delays under programs for lower income seniors in the province. These are the special-needs assistance program and the Alberta aids to daily living program. One senior was told that consideration of assistance to replace a hot water tank would take approximately 12 weeks, then in October he was told that the program was catching up on applications from the end of July. My first two questions are for the Minister of Seniors. Why are some seniors waiting so long for decisions on their applications for special-needs assistance?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for his question. It's a good question, and I commend him on being such a great advocate for his constituents and for seniors across the province. The special-needs assistance is a great program. It's there to provide financial assistance to eligible low-income seniors, for assistance with purchasing things in their homes like hot water tanks or other things. I am advised that the process applications were taking a little bit longer throughout the summer. It generally takes three to four weeks. However, between July and October we've had heavier demand. Unfortunately, it has been taking 12 weeks, which is unacceptable, and we're taking steps to deal with that.

Dr. Brown: Hon. minister, what can be done to speed up the consideration of those applications and to make sure that those essential payments go out in a timely manner?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd agree that that's very important. We've made changes to speed up the application process, which includes hiring additional staff. We also prioritize the applications so that we can get some of them through faster that are more critical, things like a roof replacement or a pending utility disconnection. Some of those things have a higher priority than other items that are in the queue. But, like I said, we've added staff, and we want to get the timeline to get these applications through down to a more manageable and reasonable time frame.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental is for the Minister of Health. What guidelines, Mr. Minister, exist for the timeliness of decisions to be made on the Alberta aids to daily living program and the payment from them?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the aids to daily living program provides medical equipment to Albertans with disabilities and chronic illnesses. The program has a variety of clients with special needs. The problem with the program is that these clients have special needs, and therefore it's difficult to quantify each individual, so we do that on an individual basis. For example, those with hearing aids could be done in one day, while other problems might take longer, so it's really a matter of the individual and how we can put the program to deal with their challenges.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we concluded all the introductions that were on my sheet at least. If there are any others, we could revert. Does anyone object to reverting to Introduction of Guests quickly?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you have an introduction?

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you some great public servants, the trustees from the Calgary board of education. With us here today I think we have Joy Bowen-Eyre, the chair of the committee. We also have Lynn Ferguson, Amber Stewart, Trina Hurdman, and Pamela King. Also with them is Judy Hehr, vice-chair. While doing that job, she also serves as my mother, and she is also a grandmother to three great boys. Please rise and accept the warm applause from this House. Thank you for standing up for public education.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? No others?

Calgary-Hawkwood, we noted that you were listed to speak and introduce some guests. For the record do you want to mention who they were? I know they've left.

Mr. Luan: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate that.

I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two hard-working and committed businessmen in Calgary's Chinatown. They both are community leaders, too. Both are well known to a number of my colleagues in this House. The first one is Mr. Peter Pat, who is the owner of the famous Peking Garden restaurant in Calgary and also the former president of the Chinese business chamber of commerce. Mr. Pat travels frequently between Shanghai and Calgary promoting business and trade between China and our province.

The second guest is Mr. Peter Lau, who is also a famous feng shui master. For those who know, that's fortune-telling. He continuously is blessing all of us in this House, working hard and making the best decisions for Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to acknowledge them. Because of a last-minute incident they couldn't make it here, but they appreciate the warm welcome from this House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us proceed with Members' Statements. Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Addictions Awareness

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We live in a breathtakingly beautiful province blessed with incredible, invaluable opportunities, but with this come growing pains, pitfalls, and problems. As past chair of AADAC and in the portfolio of wellness I learned first-hand of the horrors of addiction. However, we also witnessed Alberta's evolving and life-saving treatment, education, and prevention programs. I rise today to mark National Addictions Awareness Week, the focus of which is youth substance abuse prevention.

Our teenage and adult years are a crucial time of growth, change, and brain development, and substance abuse during these years can result in addictions, mental health problems, and chronic disease. Despite warnings of dangers 15- to 24-year-olds report the highest past-year use of illicit substances and are five times more likely than older adults to report harm due to drug use.

Substance abuse also costs Canadians many billions of dollars in direct health care costs every year. Thankfully, Creating Connections: Alberta's Addiction and Mental Health Strategy guides the government's actions in addressing addiction and mental health issues, and our provincial wellness framework, Health for All, Wellness for Life, is also a leader in this respect. These strategies enhance the ability of the government to work closely with families, schools, and community partners towards reducing the impacts of addiction and mental illness.

Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to advancing care and services for addiction and mental illness needs while reducing and preventing substance abuse in the first place, and I encourage all Albertans to utilize the online resources of the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse and to join in the conversation during National Addictions Awareness Week as we consider how in the past, present, and future we prevent substance abuse amongst our precious young Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Shaw, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Official Opposition Achievements

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 we in the Wildrose were asked by Albertans to serve as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and we have been diligent, focused, and principled in our service. We have done what an Official Opposition is supposed to do. We have opposed, exposed, and proposed. We have opposed on behalf of Albertans but not simply for the sake of opposing, we have exposed on behalf of Albertans what historically will be considered some of the most egregious examples of waste and mismanagement this province has ever seen, and we have proposed on behalf of Albertans, with well over 100 amendments to government legislation and through positive policies, ideas, and solutions that put Albertans first.

Recently we have seen many of our policies and good ideas put into place, implemented with great success and public appreciation. Whether it is the lunacy around the government fleet, the pettiness of the licence plate debate, or the reversal of the cold-hearted closure of the Michener Centre, it seems that this government may just be listening for the first time.

Following another Wildrose lead, we see the promise of new schools and new long-term beds. One can hope, for the betterment of all Albertans, that these are real, genuine promises that will result in real, genuine schools and real, genuine beds. These are big commitments, and I would remind the Premier that we will continue to represent all Albertans, regardless of whom they voted for, as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, holding this government to account.

Now, it is clear that the governing party is no fan of the opposition. The Premier himself seemed to question the need for an opposition at all, calling opposition seats in this House misrepresented, a startling reminder of just how arrogant this government can be, which is odd on so many levels given the fact that without this opposition, where would the governing party be? Certainly not under new management. Albertans deserve good government, and, Mr. Premier, they also deserve good opposition. We've done our job. We're waiting to see if you can do yours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Fort McMurray Northern Kickoff Game

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2014 Grey Cup game is just around the corner, and while some of us are taking out the old chili pots, I'm extremely pleased to introduce yet another CFL game that's quickly approaching us. On Saturday, June 13, Fort McMurray will host the 2015 northern kickoff game. As part of the grand opening of Shell place, the Edmonton Eskimos and Saskatchewan Roughriders will take to the field for a head-to-head showdown in what will prove to be an exciting rematch of this previous Sunday's western semi-final game. This preseason exhibition game will be the most northern CFL game ever played, and it's just the kickoff to a full schedule of community events over a four-day period.

This October we were delighted to see the completed installation of the field turf on the SMS equipment stadium. Once that green turf was down and the white lines were painted, you could really see what a beautiful accomplishment this will be for our city. Shell place is a forward-thinking facility designed for a growing and vibrant community. Facilities like the shared social profit space, a hub for community organizations to operate affordably, has been designed to showcase the creative and collaborative values that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo has become known for.

The Nexen stage, partner to the SMS stadium, is characterized by a striking curved canopy structure designed to mimic the northern lights and will become the main stage for endless possibilities of sporting events, concerts, festivals, and community events.

Fort McMurray is buzzing, Mr. Speaker, and I invite all of my fellow colleagues to mark June 13 in their calendars and come up to Fort McMurray to experience this energy for themselves. We already anticipate that the northern kickoff game will be sold out, and the beautiful amenities at Shell place should not be left to the imagination. Fort McMurray is not only a great place to do business, but it's also a great place to live, raise a family, and make lasting memories. I don't mind saying it again because it's the truth: community is at the heart of Wood Buffalo.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

School Wellness Initiatives

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've long been an advocate of wellness as a fundamental plank in the delivery of our health care services. Currently more than half of adult Albertans and nearly one-third of Canadian youth are overweight or obese. The health risks associated with obesity such as diabetes, heart attacks, cancer, and strokes cost Albertans an estimated $1.27 billion – that's billion – a year.

Alberta's suicide rate is the second highest in Canada, suicide being the leading cause of death among males 10 to 49. I firmly believe, Mr. Speaker, that if we can instill a culture of physical, mental, and social wellness in our youth, these statistics will decrease.

I'm pleased to say that in the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont and across the province dedicated people are working towards this goal. The ministries of Health and Education are part of a joint initiative with the University of Alberta in the Alberta healthy school community wellness fund. The wellness fund enables school districts to infuse this into schools by focusing on healthy eating, active living, positive social environments, mental health, and healthy relationships. To date the wellness fund has provided support for 239 projects.

I'm very proud to say that within my constituency Black Gold regional schools has been a leader in promoting health and wellness in our youth. Starting with the healthy hearts initiative in 2004, they were recognized in 2013 with an award of distinction from the healthy school communities award program. Their Healthy Schools Committee, created in 2008, continues to instill this mantra. I'm very pleased to say, Mr. Speaker, that this culture of wellness has taken a foothold in schools in my community and many others. It is my hope that this attitude will continue to infect all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Before we continue on, I'm going to recognize quickly the Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask for unanimous consent of this Assembly that we waive rule 7(7) so we can continue with the Routine past 3 p.m.

The Speaker: Let us move on with the next speaker, Edmonton-Manning, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, I would like to congratulate the Premier and my colleagues the hon. Minister of Health, the hon. Minister of Education, and the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

School Growth Pressures in Edmonton-Manning

Mr. Sandhu: I rise today to speak on the issues of education spaces in my riding of Edmonton-Manning. Last month's schools announcement did address the need for new school spaces, out of which one school, Pilot Sound, is in my riding, which is one of the fastest growing communities in our province.

We are aware of the shortages of schools within northeast Edmonton as we have a growing community. Working with school trustees and city councillors, we have spent many hours debating how to reduce enrolment pressures. As a group we know it is time for a new way of thinking. We also know we need to involve all community groups, including government, developers, leagues, parents, and residents, to encourage input on a shared-use space for everyone in the community.

The benefits of a joint-use agreement for schools between both the public and Catholic school boards must be considered. These joint ventures would allow for the sharing of facility space, including libraries, gyms, playgrounds, transportation services, community meeting spaces, and even daycare spaces, Mr. Speaker, yet each school board could still keep their own individual learning spaces separate.

Mr. Speaker, sharing resources means savings in terms of cost and tax dollars, land, and manpower. Sharing resources builds trust, teamwork, and strong communities, which brings a new way to build the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

New Premier

Mrs. Towle: Under the old management we saw a government that was removed from everyday Albertans, often dismissing advice from opposition, front-line workers, and Albertans who did not fall in line with the PCs. It created a government that looked old and tired. The Premier talks a lot about being under new management, saying that things would be different, and we all had high hopes that it would be different, respecting elected officials and working together to move Alberta forward.

Sadly, the new management is looking a lot like the old management. This past weekend the Premier called ridings that were not Progressive Conservative misrepresented. It's the same kind of language Premier Redford used when she called ridings orphaned or when Premier Getty called the opposition un-Albertan.

Perhaps the Premier has forgotten his own time in the House of Commons, when voters elected him to misrepresent the federal riding of Calgary Centre-North as an opposition MP from 2004 to 2006. One of the things that Albertans found so off-putting about the PC government was arrogance. This Premier has chosen not to learn the lessons of the past and to attack Albertans at their core, their right to democracy.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier may want to talk to the almost 725,000 Albertans who did not vote for a PC government in the last election, the same Albertans that exercised their right to vote for change. Insulting them and democracy is not a respectful start to show the PCs are under new management.

The Wildrose believes we need a new generation of leaders that focuses on the future, doing what is right, doing what is fair, and putting Albertans first. We believe that all of our colleagues are public servants, voted to be here by Albertans from across our great province. There is so much we can do in this province by working together, by once again focusing on principled and caring government. In the days when we see people giving up their lives for the right to vote, the right to choose, and the right to democracy, no leader should question those freedoms.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report dated November 2014 regarding the committee's review of the draft publication ban (court applications and orders) regulation. This review fulfilled requirements found in section 131.1 of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and was undertaken following a request by the Minister of Human Services.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all members of the committee for their contributions to the review process. I would also like to thank the staff from Alberta Human Services who shared their expertise with the committee and the LAO staff for their support throughout the review process. Finally, I would like to thank all the stakeholders who contributed their ideas and opinions to the review.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had on November 12 sent you a letter notifying you that I intended to raise a point of privilege under Standing Order 15(2) at the earliest opportunity when the House reconvenes. I will give you notice now that I intend to raise that point of privilege at the appropriate time following Routine, and I will hand over to the pages the notices that can be handed out to everyone else.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce Bill 3, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014.

This bill will authorize a trade union to collect, use, and disclose personal information about an individual if related to a matter under a labour relations dispute. This amendment to PIPA addresses the Supreme Court of Canada's ruling that if PIPA restricts collection for legitimate labour relations purposes, it is in breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I believe that with this bill this government will be protecting Albertans' personal information while balancing a trade union right of freedom of expression.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move pursuant to Standing Order 75 that Bill 3 be moved to the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014.

The proposed changes will strengthen Horse Racing Alberta's governance structure. They are in line with the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. They also support the Premier's commitment to strong public agency board governance and increased accountability and transparency.

The proposed amendments will decrease the total board membership from 12 members to 11 members. This new board structure will also see an increase in public members from three to six, including the board chair. It will consist of five industry-nominated members. It is also important to note, Mr. Speaker, that all appointments to HRA's board will be based on merit and experience as promised by the hon. Premier.

Affirmatively, these modest changes to HRA's governance structure strike the right balance between public accountability and industry representation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Securities Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 5, Securities Amendment Act, 2014.

As you know, the regular review of amendments to Alberta's Securities Act is required to keep pace with changes in technology, new products, and market innovations and to support the ongoing reform of the system. The amendments being proposed in Bill 5 will ensure the Securities Act is improved where inefficiencies or other impediments to the effective regulation of Alberta's capital markets have been identified.

The amendments are related to a variety of topics, including continued harmonization of general derivatives provisions, incorporation of representatives of registered brokers and advisers, enhanced enforcement provisions, recognition of oversight of the Canadian Public Accountability Board as an auditor oversight organization, fee study provisions, and consequential amendments to related legislation.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want a security regulatory system that balances the need to protect investors with the need to operate our capital market efficiently to help grow our economy. They also expect provincial security commissions to work co-operatively for the good of investors across Canada. These amendments support both of these objectives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 6, Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2).

The bill brings together minor and housekeeping amendments to a number of acts under three different ministries. The amendments are intended to streamline and provide efficiency, clarity, and consistency for the individuals and businesses who are affected by the acts. The acts included are: from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs changes to the Safety Codes Act; from the Ministry of Jobs, Skills Training and Labour changes to the Workers' Compensation Act; and from my ministry, the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development, housekeeping amendments to combine the Farm

Implement Act with the Farm Implement Dealerships Act and repeal of the omnibus Dairy Industry Act of 2002.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Southwest, I understand you have two tablings.

Mr. Jeneroux: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'd like to table five copies of each of the following reports. In accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act the report by the Auditor General titled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta, October 2014. Copies of this report were distributed to members previously.

In accordance with section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act the report by the Chief Electoral Officer entitled 2013 Annual Report of the Chief Electoral Officer: The Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act for the 2013 Calendar Year. Copies of this report were also previously distributed to members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you. That completes that.
Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today with the appropriate number of copies. The first is the 2015-16 modular classroom plan passed by the Calgary board of education, which clearly shows William Reid way down the list of those schools that need modulars.

I have an open letter from the by-election from the Minister of Education to parents of Elbow Park and William Reid and Earl Grey schools describing the process he went through to come to that decision.

Those are my tablings.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today on various topics. The first is from a father who was very concerned about the treatment of his severely autistic son during repeated visits to the Stollery centre this summer. It looks like four visits in all.

The second is a letter that was forwarded to the constituency of Edmonton-Centre from the federal constituency office. Delphine Buhr would like her issue brought to attention in that the amount that is granted to diabetics for testing strips, needles, and syringes is only $600 and it has been that for the last 10 years. She's finding that a great strain.

Finally, near and dear to my heart, this is directed towards all members of the Assembly. It's produced by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees pay equity committee. It just talks about what we have failed to do around the issue of pay equity in this Assembly and affecting all Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table a follow-up to the question that I asked the Minister of Health when I said it was clearly said about the 85 per cent versus the 95 per cent, and I'm pleased to table the comments that were made by the CEO at the time, Vickie Kaminski.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an article that was in Calgary Metro entitled Promises, Promises, five things the Premier would do should he become Premier. I referenced it in the questions; probably appropriate that I table it. The one sentence that I referred to, where the then leadership candidate, now minister of jobs, wondered if it'd be possible, given the province's financial situation, to build the schools, says that the now Premier was acting like a candy man, is here in the Metro, and I'd like to table five copies.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If there are no others, then I'll table something as well. Hon. members, it's my pleasure to in fact table five copies of the Property Rights Advocate's annual report, which was distributed to members electronically and was also deposited with the Clerk as an intersessional tabling on June 2, 2014, all in accordance with section 5(3) of the Property Rights Advocate Act. Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Olson, Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report, 2013-14.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Human Services, responses to written questions 42 and 43, asked for by Mr. Wilson on December 2, 2013. Written Question 42: "From May 1, 2009, to May 1, 2013, how many individuals were trained to complete supports intensity scaled interviews, and what specific training is required in order to qualify them to administer the interview?" Written Question 43: "From May 1, 2012, to May 1, 2013, how many clients did the persons with developmental disabilities programs serve, and how many completed the supports intensity scale interview process?"

The Speaker: Thank you.

We have no points of order, but we do have a point of privilege. Let me recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to you and to speak to members of the House regarding the point of privilege that I'm raising. Specifically, in referencing the letter that I sent giving notice – I do hope that I managed to send this on to every member that was in fact part of the point of privilege; I certainly tried to do that.

Specifically, on March 11, 12, and 13 members for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Spruce Grove-St. Albert interfered with the ability of all members of the Assembly to fulfill their duties, specifically the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the third party in that they specifically questioned on this issue. What is at question here is a trip to Grande Prairie, Alberta, on October 25, 2012, where no government business was scheduled or took place.

Let me give a brief context, Mr. Speaker, of what happened. The Premier or other Executive Council books a plane for use by members of the government for October 25, 2012. This was a trip to Grande Prairie. There were no media events scheduled. There were no events scheduled at all except for a partisan event. The plane also carried the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, among others. I can refer to the manifest as to who was on the flights, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you have access to this, but I'm happy to table it if you'd like. I will make sure that copies are tabled, and I will supply you with a copy of it.

Now, on March 11, 2014, on page 164 of Alberta Hansard, a question was asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition, and in the response the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, "I was one of the cabinet ministers that was present with the Premier in Grande Prairie at that time. We made an announcement, as the hon. members should know, with respect to the expansion of the Grande Prairie hospital." Later he says, "This is one example of the important government business that we do using the aircraft that are funded by the taxpayers of [Alberta]."

Mr. Speaker, on page 203, which takes place on March 12, 2014, in Alberta Hansard, we have the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert saying, "As the Deputy Premier has been saying, we do separate out the party business from the government business, and this is a clear case of that, actually." He goes on to say, "The members who were on the plane going up to Grande Prairie were on government business."

I continue on, Mr. Speaker, to page 239 – oh, no, I've missed one, sorry. I know I've missed one. I did. On page 204 of Alberta Hansard, also spoken in the Assembly on March 12, 2014, the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert said, "The flight in question was for members who were on government duty." Later he says – and let me quote the whole sentence here – "Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there were a number of items that were scheduled to happen that day in Grande Prairie."

On page 239 of Alberta Hansard, on March 13, 2014, we have the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti making the statement that:

This gives me the opportunity to talk about all the flights I took around Alberta that week. That week I flew to Lethbridge, I flew to Medicine Hat, I flew to Edson, I flew to High Prairie to announce hospital announcements, and the fifth one in that roll of announcements happened to be in Grande Prairie.

And there is one other one that I have misplaced, and I apologize to you for that.

Those were the statements that were made in this House, I think very clearly demonstrating those members saying that they had gone to Grande Prairie on a government plane to do government business.

Now, with the benefit of the report of the Auditor General released in August 2014, the Special Duty Report on the Expenses of the Office of Premier Redford and Alberta's Air Transportation Services Program, we, in fact, do find on page 27 a very helpful chart and additional information, in which it noticed that for the event, the northern Alberta leaders' dinner, taking place on October 25, 2012, in Grande Prairie, in answering the question of whether government business was also conducted at the location, the answer is no. So the Auditor General has said: no; there was no government business conducted at this location. He does make a note that on three of the dates in the table multiple government aircraft flew to the same destination as a partisan event, and he includes that particular example. No question, there was no government business that took place, Mr. Speaker.

Now, they took this government plane to a partisan event, which was, as I said, a northern Alberta leaders' dinner, with no scheduled or actual government business taking place. The Auditor General did investigate and states that no government business took place. There was no government event. There was no media notice. There was nothing on the Premier's schedule. There was a press release that came out, but it had nothing. It had no media availability that went along with it. There was no indication that there would be someone speaking to it in person or responding, appearing in public, appearing before the media in any way, shape at all.

I will point out that there was a partisan media event that was held in the lobby of the venue in which the fundraising event was taking place. I will look for the description, but it was something along the lines of a typical media event that takes place introducing members of caucus when they are doing a fundraising event in a given location. So the only media event that happened, Mr. Speaker, was a partisan media event.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have three ministers involved at the time, some of them not, so I'm referring to everyone by their constituency name. But I will note the three departments that are involved: Executive Council, Treasury Board, and International and Intergovernmental Relations. The Auditor General on page 17 of his report notes that enforcing the policy that was brought forward in October of 2012 is the responsibility of the department of Treasury Board and Finance and that the ministries of Executive Council and IIR are responsible for approving expenses incurred by the Premier and office staff, but I'm assuming that also extends to other ministers and ministries. Then it goes through the guiding principles, and I'll give you three out the six. "Travel, meal, hospitality and other expenses must support government business objectives." Another one. "Prior approval to incur expenses is obtained where appropriate," and "claims should be able to withstand scrutiny by the auditor general of Alberta and members of the public; be properly explained and documented, reasonable and appropriate."

Those are three of the six policies that are to be followed and are overseen and okayed by the three departments that I have mentioned. So one way or another these three departments book, co-ordinate, or pay for the use of the government planes.

So, Mr. Speaker, when we go to see why this is a point of privilege in particular, I go to the House of Commons Debates. Points of privilege exist in this book anywhere between pages 88 and 139, but it seems to me that the two privileges that are granted to us that have been interfered with are the ability to do one's duty, which is obstruction, and also freedom of speech. In particular, I want to draw the Speaker's attention to page 98, where it talks about how important it is that members are prudent and careful with that privilege of freedom of speech and don't abuse it and about why there are long-standing practices and traditions observed in the House to counter the potential for abuse. Speaker Parent is quoted that he expects "that members would always bear in mind the possible effects of their statements and hence be prudent in their tone and choice of words."

So we have, as mentioned at other times, a test, and the test is three points. One, was there a misleading statement? Two, can it be established that the member knew that it was a misleading statement? Three, did the member intend to mislead the House? I would argue that all three of those tests have been met in this case.

Certainly, it was a misleading statement, and I've given you the statements that were actually made in the House according to Hansard. They are very clearly stating that the government plane was used for government business. I've also given you the references to go and look up in the Auditor General's report in which he says: no; there wasn't. Now, I will note that the Auditor General makes a note on page 1 of his report, in which he says that he had access to schedules, reports, staff, bookings, and a number of other things, which he was able to use to ascertain that in fact there was no government business that took place there, and that does indeed appear on page 1 of his report: "interviewed employees of the Ministry of IIR," records from Treasury Board, records and meetings with staff. He names a number of other places he went to look for expertise.

As for the question of whether the members knew that this was an inaccurate statement, a misleading statement, I would argue that I don't know how they could not have known. All members in this House are busy. I've never heard an MLA say that they weren't busy. I've always heard about how busy they are. Therefore, we live by schedules, Mr. Speaker, all the time. Our schedules are done by our staff, but we know there's a schedule, and we're constantly checking it to see what we do next.

Now, in this particular case, with all of these highly scheduled people and with the backup of the Auditor General having looked at all of these records, schedules, and reports from these three, including, Mr. Speaker, on page 26, where the Auditor General makes notice that, in fact, "office staff told us that the dates for Progressive Conservative Party fundraising dinners held throughout the province are well known in advance," the members certainly knew that they had a partisan fundraising event that day. There was nothing else scheduled, so when those members made those statements in the House, they had to have known they had a partisan event scheduled and they had no other events scheduled.

What's the other reason that you — against the fact that they thought that they were going to do some media and therefore this trip was okay. Well, I know that this particular government has a platoon of aides to help them with media. I think that at one point they had more than George Bush's entire staff working for the Public Affairs Bureau. There is no lack of people to assist them with media, and in fact that is done all the time. You cannot go to a media event without there being many staff there to assist these people. In fact, no one was assigned to help anyone do media that day, so I would argue that the ministers know when they have media, and there was no in-person media availability for government that day, and they knew it. They knew that saying that they were there for government business was a misleading statement.

All right then, final question. Did they intend to mislead the House? Mr. Speaker, I think their own words give that. There are quite a few examples in Hansard on the dates and pages that I gave to people in which there are other examples of how to answer the questions that were asked without giving a misleading statement saying: I was on government business. I would say that the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert was the superstar there. He can sidestep like nobody's business. You know, here's one of the answers that he gave, appearing on page 164 on March 11 of Alberta Hansard.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, we care a great deal about what the taxpayer is charged for travel around the province. We also care about getting to other areas of the province that cabinet ministers are expected to get to. Yes . . . cabinet ministers use our planes. That's what they're for, for us to get us around to meet with Albertans and greet Albertans.

Lots of talk. That was his answer to the question. Never once did he say: "I went to this place. I went to Grande Prairie on this date for government business." So, clearly, members are able to get around to pivot, to redirect, to misdirect the attention and the understanding of people using other ways to talk about this.

There are lots of very fine examples. This government is practised at it. If I had to give them a gold star for something, it would be for their ability not to answer questions. They are very, very practised at it. So there are examples here of where they answered the same questions even in the same sequence, Mr. Speaker, from the same people without making misleading statements. I argue to you that if they could do it without saying those statements, they knew when they made those statements that they were misleading the House because they knew there were other ways to say this.

When they said things like, "I was one of cabinet ministers that was present with the Premier in Grande Prairie at that time. We made an announcement, as the hon. member should know," — a little bit of sarcasm in there — "with respect to the expansion of the Grande Prairie hospital," well, they didn't. I believe that these members knew. For three days they answered questions in this House, and they knew that stating that there was government business that was done on October 25, 2012, was an incorrect statement.

I ask you to find that there is a prima facie case of privilege, specifically against the Members for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Grande Prairie-Wapiti, on the reasoning that they misled the House and interfered with members' ability to fulfill their duties, specifically the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the third party.

Dr. Swann: Calgary-Varsity apologized.

Ms Blakeman: Calgary-Varsity apologized? Oh, yes. I know what you're saying. Yes, indeed, one of the other members that was involved with a return plane trip, also not on government business, did declare publicly that she should have done better homework as to whether it was for government purposes or not. Given that, Mpr. Speaker, I would ask you to find this case of privilege.

I would sincerely hope that the members are able to apologize to the House. I hope that can be an outcome from this, but I will wait for your decision on this issue. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Standing Order 15. My colleague from the Liberal opposition has dealt with much of the law on this, but I do have some comments that I would like you to respectfully consider. The matter for debate today is whether or not the House was in fact misled by the members in question. The term "misled," as you know, is a prohibited term in debate, particularly in question period. It is one of the items listed in Beauchesne's, one of the items you can't say in normal circumstances. I do agree with the member that this is a serious matter and that this type of decorum, of course, must always be kept in this particular Chamber.

To succeed, though, on this point of order, Mr. Speaker, requires the member opposite to demonstrate indisputably not only that members misled the House but that they also intended to do so, as she has indicated, thus members in question would have had to have made statements in the House which they knew at that time — the key, again, is "at that time" — to have been incorrect.

The details surrounding the particular events in question, of course, Mr. Speaker, have been the topic of much discussion over recent months, both within these walls and beyond, and it's important to know that over the course of the new discussion, new information has emerged. As stated in the letter to you from my colleague in the Liberal opposition, the new information that became available for the Auditor General's report was released on August 7, 2014, months after the statements in question were made. Of course, there is an active investigation under way into this matter, and I will speak no further about that for obvious reasons.

I will point out that this report, as suggested by the member herself, became available months after statements were made in the Assembly, and at no point in the Auditor General's report is there even a suggestion that any of these three members knew any different than the statements that they made in the House. It stands to reason, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that if there were discrepancies between the information presented by the members on the dates in question and the information revealed by the report, these are differences of perception, and there was not an intent to mislead the House on the dates in question.

I have done a bit of research on this, Mr. Speaker. According to Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, third edition, there are three elements to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt by reason of a statement that the member has made: the statement must, in fact, have been misleading; it must have been established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect; and, in making it, the member must have intended to mislead the House.

It is, therefore, this government's respectful position that these three conditions have not been met in this case and, therefore, that the alleged point of privilege should not succeed.

I would further suggest that if there is a disagreement between the members of the House, according to Beauchesne's 31(1), as is often stated in this Chamber, "A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege." I would also ask you to consider, Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne's 494, which states, "It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted." Moving forward a bit, "On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident." I believe, Mr. Speaker, that what we have here would be appropriate for a point of clarification rather than a point of privilege.

Those are my submissions, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for your time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, I rose on a point of privilege on March 12, 2014, where I submitted that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had misled the House, based on the circumstances that we were aware of at the time. I will not take up the time of the Assembly by returning to the facts of October 12, 2012, since they are in Hansard and have been well summarized by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, but I would like to offer a few points.

On March 12, 2014, Mr. Speaker, your ruling referred to two concepts, the role of the Speaker and the necessity for the House to accept two contradictory accounts. Beauchesne, second edition, paragraph 494 says:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

I appreciate the Government House Leader's reference to that same statement. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the reason why he did have that in his statement – and I'm going to refer to a statement that you made in your ruling, sir – is that "as such, we must accept that the members who spoke, spoke, I hope, with honour and with their own conviction and their own belief." Now, of course, at the time you couldn't have known.

You know, the Government House Leader also suggests that there is new information that changes the facts. Well, the AG report should not be what is required for someone to understand the facts of their own life. It just shouldn't. You don't need to find a report later on. Not only that, that report, for the reasons he referenced, may not have mentioned the other members in question in this point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. That report was based on our former Premier alone, not on the other members. That was his mandate.

I will continue. The ruling you made also referenced the Speaker's role as established by House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. "The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions."

There was some discussion at the time about the use of flights by several members of the governing party. The question was: did they fly to Grande Prairie intending to conduct government business, or was the purpose of the trip solely to attend to the business of a partisan nature? For this point of privilege, when they repeatedly made statements in the House to the contrary, did the members know that the purpose of the trip was partisan, and did they purposely make statements to hide the fact?

On March 12, 2014, there were various accounts from members of this House about the nature of that trip, which made a ruling on the question impossible at the time. This is no longer the case because of the Auditor General's special report in August and the response to it. The significance is that what may have seemed to be two legitimate accounts of the same thing when this matter was last before the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, is now clearly and broadly recognized as a flight taken for partisan purposes. So whether these government flights could plausibly be thought to be for government business is no longer in question. The Auditor General issued a report that made it clear that they were not. Further, almost immediately the governing party publicly admitted that they were not and promised to repay the funds. As a result, it is clear that the statements made in this Assembly on March 11, 12, and 13 were misleading.

Now we must determine the following: did the members know that the statements they were making were misleading when they made them and in doing so intend to mislead the House? The members in question repeatedly claimed over three days that the flights were for government business. There is a very clear motive for doing so. There was a great deal of scrutiny of the government fleet at the time, and admitting misuse of the fleet would have meant significant political damage to both those involved and to their besieged party leader, who was also involved. If any of these members did know there was only party business but insisted otherwise, the motive would obviously be to mislead the House into thinking that use of the government aircraft was justified.

When making the case for contempt the first time, as the Speaker is aware, we cited numerous facts that demonstrated the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, in particular, had been briefed on the issue and had multiple opportunities to admit his error but continued to make statements that would lead the House to believe that there was government business that day in Grande Prairie. He and the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti were also the main individuals involved with the announcement that day. If it was not clear before they got onto the plane on October 25, it should have become abundantly clear by the evening, when all they had done was a scrum outside the party fundraiser, that they conducted no government business despite taking the government plane.

Other information we provided, however, makes it pretty clear that they did know even before getting on the plane because they had no absences scheduled for question period that day. There were no media notified about a government announcement, and the closest thing to government business was a 4 p.m. press release that went out while they were in the air.

It has become increasingly clear that these two members were indeed aware of the truth and had prepared their defence, and based on paragraph 494 of Beauchesne's, I understand, Mr. Speaker, you had to take them at their word. When making your ruling, I would ask the Speaker to consider that this matter has not been dealt with during the original point of privilege I raised on March 12 given that the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti in his response in defence of that very point of privilege said the following, and I quote according to page 214 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, just briefly, as I don't want to drag this out. I'm not a lawyer, and I feel like I'm on trial here. You can say what you want, you can call me a liar, but I was at the news conference with a whole roomful of media people. I can probably name some, but going back two years, they may not remember. I can guarantee you there was a media announcement there that day with the Premier and with the minister, and I can stand up in here as an eyewitness and confirm that. You can call me a liar if you like. I was there.

I get no joy out of highlighting this for you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it pains me. I am fully aware of just how serious an allegation of misleading this House is, and it is due to the grave and serious nature of this allegation that I believe it must be addressed.

Given the revelations of the Auditor General report in August confirming there was no government business that day in Grande Prairie, there is only one conclusion we can reasonably draw. As a result of this, Mr. Speaker, I would support the point of privilege by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I believe there is sufficient evidence to justify the Speaker's rule as such and to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The House leader for the ND, briefly, if you would, please.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm rising as well to support this Standing Order 15 by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. We're discussing the most serious breach of privilege that there can be, in my mind. As we know, the concept of breach of privilege is predicated on the idea that the Members of the Legislative Assembly must be free to carry out their duties and perform their functions as elected representatives. Certainly, the ministers knowingly making untrue statements in the House constitutes a grave attack on the dignity of the Assembly.

Particularly troubling in this case is that there are so many untrue statements that were made in response during Oral Question Period. Question period is one of the most fundamentally important forms of our parliamentary democracy, and it has been compromised here. Opposition members are elected in this House to hold the government to account and to represent concerns of constituents. Oral Question Period is one of the only opportunities we have, as well. If government ministers do not approach question period with the same commitment and respect, the ability of opposition members to carry out their duties is compromised.

First and foremost, the point of privilege must be brought forth at the first available opportunity. I think this was made abundantly clear by the previous opposition speakers. At the time of the independent officer's report's release the New Democrats first raised the issue that the Auditor General's findings indicated a clear case of prima facie breach of privilege based on the statements of the minister in question here, so we're glad to support and to discuss this point of privilege today, the first day back at the Legislature.

To be clear, the Speaker of this House on November 7, 2007 – and this can be found in Hansard on page 1860 and 1861 – confirmed the principle that a point of privilege, misleading the House, can be raised about statements made several months prior, when the misleading nature of the comments was not yet confirmed or discovered at the time that they were made. Also, I'd like to note that in a previous ruling on a point of privilege from November 7, 2007, page 1860 in Hansard, the Speaker also said: "These purported questions of privilege allow members to allege that someone is deliberately misleading the Assembly, which is something they could not say in the ordinary course of debate under [the] rules of debate." Mr. Speaker, the previous rulings on points of privilege related to deliberately misleading the House, for example. Again on November 7, 2007, Speakers have confirmed that there are tests that need to be met, and I think that the tests clearly have been outlined already.

The case before us has been made so straightforward by the Auditor General's findings and was so well canvassed by the members for Calgary-Shaw and Edmonton-Strathcona on March 12, 2014, that I only need to briefly repeat how the situation meets all of the elements of this test. The Auditor General himself confirmed that by claiming that these people were in Grande Prairie on October 25, 2012, for government business, the members for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Spruce Grove-St. Albert did in fact make untrue statements. I have to note that the Member for Calgary-Acadia on March 12 incorrectly agreed on the record that these members were being truthful when they made these statements as well. Clearly, the members knew that these were not true when they made them. The supposed government business never did transpire, nor were the members involved in such business in their time in Grande Prairie.

We now have further confirmation from the Auditor General that this supposed government business, in fact, never happened. We do know that we have a case that is not just a mere difference of opinion or a question of interpretation. The Auditor General's report constitutes a clear finding of a fact that there was no government business in Grande Prairie on October 25, 2012. There are clear statements on the record from the members in question that they were conducting government business, and there are direct quotes, in fact, that you can find in Hansard. It seems reasonably clear that this, in fact, was a deliberate misrepresentation of the truth.

In other words, is there sufficient grounds on the face of it to conclude that the effect of their statements was that the House was misled and that there was a consequent impediment to the ability of opposition members to carry out their duties? If the answer is yes – in my mind, it clearly is – then the question of privilege merits further consideration by a committee of the Legislative Assembly. It is for this committee to wade through the evidence and for the Legislative Assembly itself to make a final determination.

We know that there are parallel investigations that are taking place in regard to the use of government airplanes. We know that there is an RCMP investigation in a parallel case of misuse of government airplanes. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this adds some import of weight to the debate and the deliberations that you must undertake today. Number two, of course, the Auditor General, an officer of the Legislature, has made clear determinations on this issue as well.

We certainly believe that there is a clear case of breach of privilege, and I welcome your deliberations here today, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, about 35 or 36 minutes of debate have already occurred on this particular point. However, I would extend the courtesy to any other members, particularly those who may have been named, should they wish to make a comment at this time. If they do, I would welcome that, and if not, we will move forward. Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very, very briefly because, yes, I had been named in this point of privilege. I take the accusations very, very seriously. It is a very significant event to be accused of such things in this House. In the 14 years that I've been privileged to spend in this Assembly, I have never, nor do I know of any of my colleagues who have, ever intentionally misled this Assembly and did not do so in 2012-2013 or even up till today. This is something that our honour and integrity are based upon, and I would not and I know that my colleagues would not intentionally mislead this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and we'll let the record show Spruce Grove-St. Albert. Thank you for correcting that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity, and I will be brief as well. Like my colleague from Spruce Grove-St. Albert, I would want to take the opportunity once again, as I did when the earlier point of privilege was raised, to confirm for this House and for all of my colleagues that I certainly did not mislead nor did I intend to mislead this House in response to any of the questions that were asked of me with respect to this particular matter.

I think that in the previous point of privilege you graciously allowed the opportunity to explain a number of the circumstances surrounding that trip that were particularly poignant to the question of whether or not the House was misled or there was an intent to mislead the House specifically on my behalf. I have and I will continue to conduct myself with the utmost integrity and respect for the House, Mr. Speaker, and that includes, first and foremost, the commitment to be truthful and forthright in answering questions that are put to me.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I stated last time, I'm not going to go into a lot of detail here. I guess my integrity is called into question. The guys have accused me of lying in the House. I do have a newspaper article I'd like to table that was actually written just on August 14 of this year, 2014. It's from the editor of the Grande Prairie Herald-Tribune, the newspaper that was there. She states that they were at the press conference that we did and that we did make announcements, and she totally says in this article that Drysdale was telling the truth. I was there; this editor was there. None of those people were there. So I guess: who do you believe? I'll table this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. A lot of points have been raised here, and I do recall having heard a similar point of order or point of privilege – I can't recall; I think it was a point of privilege – which Calgary-Shaw correctly identified as having occurred back in the spring. So I'm going to review that. I'm also going to review the tabling which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre provided to all of us – and I just received my copy of that – regarding some flight manifests. I want to go through that as well. Similarly, I'm going to go through all of the references that were just put on the record with respect to issues that the Auditor General raised in his report, and I want to review the context within which they were used to argue today's points. I will also review other documents that were referenced by other speakers, and I'm going to carefully review every word that was put down today into Hansard.

That being said, with more than 35, 40 minutes of time on this, there's a lot to still consider. I want to be very diligent because as all of you know, a point of privilege is the most serious charge that one member can make against another here. As such, I will take one day or more to deliberate, consider, and then write the appropriate ruling. So that ends the discussion on that matter for today.

Mr. Clerk, you can proceed to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: While I have the floor, let me just make the notation here that normally these should be presented one at a time. However, I did acknowledge the Government House Leader because they were all nondebatable, so we proceeded on that basis. Nonetheless, they will be recorded as having been voted individually.

So let us proceed.

The Speaker: Thank you. This motion is debatable.

Seeing no speakers, let us move on then. Hon. Government House Leader, you have the opportunity to close debate.

Mr. Denis: I would ask to close debate.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

Constituency Week

8. Mr. Denis moved:
Be it resolved that Standing Order 3(6), which provides for one constituency week for every three sitting weeks, not apply to the 2014 fall sitting.

The Speaker: Thank you.

This motion is also debatable. Are there any speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this motion, which I disagree with. I do not think that we should be carrying on to the point of exhaustion making important laws for the public. I think that we should retain the standing orders. It was something that was passed with great wisdom by this House and I think something that should be retained with respect to the physical and mental health of members and also the staff that have to be here as well.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

If not, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Denis: Close debate, Mr. Speaker. We're following a commitment here that was made to allow the Assembly to meet for the same number of days as originally scheduled for the 2014 fall sitting. I would respectfully remind this House that this change is specifically only for the 2014 fall sitting, owing to the unique circumstances of having to delay the start to accommodate for four by-elections. We're committed to having constituency weeks in the spring.

Government members are also impacted by this motion as they also appreciate the ability to meet with constituents. However, we all have to make some sacrifices to ensure the Assembly has the max amount of time available to conduct its business. One final point to consider is that between October 27, the day we originally scheduled to come here, and December 18, MLAs will have the same total weeks in and out of the Assembly as outlined in the sessional calendar that was published on January 15: three weeks in their constituencies, five weeks in the Assembly.

The Speaker: That closes debate.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Respecting Property Rights Act

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in second reading on Bill 1, the Respecting Property Rights Act, on behalf of the Premier.

As the Premier has often stated, Alberta is under new management. Our government is focused on the priorities of Albertans, and we're working hard to reflect Alberta values in the direction that we have set and in the bills that we will pass in this House. In keeping with this, Mr. Speaker, our Premier has given a clear direction on providing Albertans with a government based on respect, accountability, and a common-sense, conservative perspective.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully cannot think of anything that is more common sense than respecting Albertans' property rights, and that is what Bill 1 achieves. Bill 1 marks the beginning of a new relationship between this government and Alberta's farmers, ranchers, acreage owners, and others who play a fundamental role in the economic future of this province.

Bill 1 includes a preamble to establish the importance of property rights to this government and the repeal of the Land Assembly Project Area Act. In the review of the existing legislation and listening to the concerns of Albertans, it had become clear that this act, otherwise known as Bill 19, does not meet the expectations of Albertans and their individual property rights. By repealing this act, we are responding to Albertans' concerns.

This was an act that was not proclaimed and not ever used but continued to be a cause of concern to those who had a vested interest in property, which, Mr. Speaker, is many people. By immediately repealing this bill, we have demonstrated that we have listened to Albertans and have acted out on our first available opportunity.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, this bill has a preamble which demonstrates this government's philosophy and commitment to property rights. It affirms that private ownership of land is a fundamental element of a parliamentary democracy in Alberta. It looks to the Alberta Bill of Rights, which recognizes and declares the rights of the individual to the enjoyment of their property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law.

Further, Mr. Speaker, it also commits our government to consulting with Albertans on legislation that impacts private property ownership. This preamble sets out the parameters of how this government will treat property owners and what they can expect with our government going forward. Expectations play a significant role for private investors in making investments into land and businesses. My message to the investors and all Albertans is that their property rights are and always will be protected in Alberta under the leadership of this Premier and this government.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a moment to comment on the Progressive Conservative record on property rights dating back to the days of Peter Lougheed. Peter Lougheed knew that property rights are the bedrock of this province, so much that the protections of property rights were incorporated into the Alberta Bill of Rights. Peter Lougheed also stood up against the Trudeau government, who tried to take property rights out of provincial jurisdiction and centralize them in the hands of federal judges and the federal government in eastern Canada. It is through Lougheed's example and actions that we are here today, renewing our commitment to protecting and standing up for Albertans' interests, and that includes the interests in their own private property.

Our Premier's commitment to private property rights has been a matter of public record for decades. He has made it clear that he intends to apply the same kind of common-sense, conservative approach and responsibility and balance to this issue that he has already demonstrated on many key files.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 is a clear statement in support of property rights. It begins to address landowners' concerns, and it upholds their rights, but we won't be stopping there. Pursuant to the Property Rights Advocate Act and the 2012 and 2013 Property Rights Advocate reports these will be referred to a committee for review during the fall session. We will also look forward to hearing from the committee, following their review, to see if there are ways that we can further protect Albertans' property rights. It is our commitment to a clear and fair process that respects the Legislative Assembly and respects the input of members of this Assembly in that process.

Mr. Speaker, today I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 1 and to stand in support of property rights. I also would ask all hon. members to stand in support of this bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Fenske moved, seconded by Mr. Ellis, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to open the debate in consideration of the Speech from the Throne. I wish to begin by thanking His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta, for his speech. It is my privilege to stand in these historic Chambers and not only honour the traditions of the past but look forward to the remarkable opportunities that are ours because we are Albertans.

I want to thank the Premier for honouring me and the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville in asking us to open debate on this very important speech, that ushers in the dawning of a new era and positions Alberta for future economic prosperity. The fact that Alberta is a key player in the global economy is evident in the constituency I serve. World-scale industrial sites, immensely productive agriculture and ag-related operations, innovative research, and our greatest asset, people, proudly choose to call the counties, the hamlets, villages, towns, or the city that is located in the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville their home. We are doing our part in this constituency to propel Alberta along its path to a vibrant future.

Alberta's Industrial Heartland is a partnership of five municipalities that is attracting international initiatives that add value to our energy resources. This is the largest petrochemical production region in all of Canada, and it is a major driver of Alberta's economic viability: 582 square miles, investment that exceeds $20 billion, with the potential for far more. We can turn natural gas into plastics and textile, and we can turn bitumen into diesel. We employ people, thousands of people. We care about their health, and we care about the health of the environment.

We take a regional approach to managing our environmental impacts because we know that to be competitive on a world scale, our environmental record must be second to none. Fort Air Partnership, one of our partners, is responsible for monitoring an area 4,500 square kilometres in size, and their work is very well respected by local residents. The Northeast Capital Industrial Association has designed and is piloting a regional approach to managing industrial noise.

We are on the move in this constituency, and we require the economic infrastructure that will get our people safely to and from their work sites and get our goods to market. Better roads, improved rail crossings, additional pipeline capacity, and another bridge across the North Saskatchewan River are desperately needed in this, Alberta's second largest and growing economic region.

Expanding value-added here would quickly create an additional $650 million per year in provincial corporate income taxes. However, the window for global investment for new petrochemical and hydrocarbon processing is limited. A natural gas strategy is needed now to maximize and support innovation in the development of new products and opportunities in this sector. So, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that our government has made maximizing the value of our natural resources a priority and realizes that a robust transportation plan is essential.

Adding value to our products and getting them to market is just as important to our agricultural community as it is to our petrochemical industries. As we enter a future where within 15 years we will be one of six countries in the entire world that will produce more food than our citizens consume, we know that environmental protection, efficient uses of our resources of land and water, food processing, and transportation networks will ensure that in Alberta agriculture remains the bedrock of our society. It will be here long after other industries are gone, and the Speech from the Throne clearly recognizes this. Our ag producers are resourceful. They seize economic opportunities. They are innovative and bold in their decisions. They have to be to meet the challenge of feeding the world.

Now, you'd expect to find beef, fruits, vegetables, bison, and grain grown in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and you would, but did you know that research at Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures in Vegreville has resulted in diversification of crops such as flax and hemp to meet the demands of the construction industry? The biochar project at AITF will unleash value in agriculture and forest residues which were once considered waste but will now contribute toward a strong bioeconomy that produces carbon-rich soil. Our government recognizes the significant value of a research-based economy and is expanding our agricultural research capacity.

Yes, in big blue sky Alberta anything is possible, but there are and will be and will continue to be challenges ahead. Over 4.1 million people call Alberta home today, and that number is expected to rise to 5 million by 2025. Now, I've heard from thousands of Albertans, some who have chosen Alberta as their home and others like me, who were born here, that there is no better province to live in, there is no better province to do business in or to raise a family. We found a place to call home that is the envy of the world. We are blessed by boundless opportunities to grow, succeed, and thrive, but we can always do better. Listening to the people of Alberta, this government, led by this Premier, has heard that we must do better when it comes to ensuring that Albertans have a health care system that addresses the challenges such as patient access, wait times, rural health care issues, and the availability of mental health supports for children, and we want our local health care providers to have input in health care decision-making. The Speech from the Throne clearly outlines that we will be moving in this direction, the direction that Albertans asked us to move in.

As a former teacher I know first-hand how the pressures of growth and an ever-changing world affect our educational system. Working with education partners, we can deliver innovative learning opportunities which will allow high school students to develop high-demand skills and 21st-century competencies to succeed, and we can do this in classrooms instead of hallways because this government is building schools for our children.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you personally how thrilled I am that our government will be developing a long-term strategy to develop growth in Alberta's arts and culture because I believe a province that boasts a dynamic arts community will ensure that it flourishes on the world stage.

Albertans are expecting to be listened to, to be engaged, and to be respected. This government has listened and will begin its work by focusing on five priorities: one, sound conservative fiscal principles; two, ending entitlement and restoring public trust; three, maximizing value of our natural resources and respecting property rights; four, establishing our province as an environmental leader; and fifth and probably most importantly, in my opinion, increasing Albertans' quality of life by becoming leaders in health care, education, and skills training. This Premier has committed this government to action.

Now I leave you with these thoughts, Mr. Speaker. Hard work, foresight, and good fortune created this province we are so proud of. Ingenuity, determination, and good government will ensure that our great grandchildren will be equally proud to call her home. There is an optimistic spirit in Alberta that is unparalleled anywhere else in North America. That optimism abounds in the hearts of the constituents I am honoured to serve.

On behalf of the constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville it is my honour and privilege to move that a humble address be presented to His Honour thanking him for his most gracious speech. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour, with great humility, that I be given the opportunity to second the motion moved by my hon. colleague the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. I want to thank the Premier for the opportunity of seconding this motion and for allowing me the chance to address this House for the first time as the representative and servant of the constituency of Calgary West. [some applause] Thank you.

As I stand before you today, it is important that I acknowledge that democracy is the cornerstone of our society and its values, and it is through our democratic tradition that I have the privilege of being here with you all now. I am lifted up and borne aloft on the shoulders of those that came before me from Calgary-West: Elaine McCoy, Karen Kryczka, Ron Leipert, Ken Hughes, and, of course, Peter Lougheed. I can see a distant shore, a shore that is the future of the great province, Mr. Speaker, and it is because of the foundation that was laid for me by generations past, a foundation laid by the determined effort and perseverance of people both in the past and present. And it is to these people that I express today my gratitude and thanks. It is the people of Calgary-West to whom I owe this truly great honour, and I see it as my humble duty to fulfill this mandate to the best of my ability.

The past influences the future, but the future is yet to be, and unlike the past the future can be changed by what we think and do in this moment in this session of the Legislature. There is a golden thread in our past, and that thread runs through each of us, yet while each thread is as individual and as unique as each person assembled here today, Mr. Speaker, these threads, while independent, are woven into the fabric we call community. Our individual threads working together make up a tapestry that we today call Alberta. These individual threads that started our provincial tapestry came from mavericks, men and women who were adventurous, hard working, and spirited. These men and women are the past generations that broke the soil and tamed this land.

Our ancestors toiled, and they worked this land, creating farms and ranches, building communities. And when they were defeated and broken, they got up, they dusted themselves off, and they started over. This Albertan trait was never more evidently displayed than in the recent floods that affected a great portion of our province, including the community of Calgary-West. That is the Alberta spirit: a pride in our past, our strengths, and our cultural diversity. When times are tough, Albertans roll up their sleeves, and they get to work. We have the strength to view the future not as a problem but as a joyous task, a labour to embrace. It is the same independent, free spirit that shaped our past which will guide our province towards the future and the change that the future brings.

It is said that Alberta was built by mavericks. These mavericks were unique characters. They were inspired and determined risk takers, forward-looking individuals, creative and eager for change. Their collected efforts propelled Alberta in a new direction. They changed the landscape of what was into what is. Were these mavericks great men and women? Some of them, yes. Most of them, nay, the majority of them were regular people. They were and are people of our communities, our neighbours, and our constituents. Alberta was built by these hard-working people.

I often wondered what brought these people to Alberta. I think that it was not only the Canadian government's program to settle the west, but it was the unique and diverse land itself: the boreal forests to the north; the Rockies, that framed the west lands; the aspen forests and farmlands of central Alberta; and the grass rangelands of the south. Whatever the reasons, they came and then made Alberta home, and they set down roots and families. Mr. Speaker, they were our founding families. They make up the colourful portrait that is our past. They are the foundations of Alberta heritage.

I say "foundation" because today's Albertans continue to build the history of this great province. Alberta is very much a work-in-progress. Alberta started a new chapter, one that is fundamentally built on solid principles of integrity, responsibility, and accountability. Although these values were borne in the past by our forefathers and in strengthening government by Calgary-West past representative the hon. Premier Peter Lougheed, I believe this new era will be one that will allow our province to be blessed with continued growth and prosperity.

Our early tapestry was one of cultural diversity. Our present is made up of the same wonderfully diverse thoughts and ideals, races, and creeds. I'm here to represent every Albertan, not just those who voted for and supported me. I will to the best of my ability ensure that all of your voices are heard. To those that did not vote for me, please allow me the chance to earn your trust. Once again I must stress that Albertans have entrusted all members of this House with a tremendous amount of responsibility, which we should hold in the highest esteem. The government of Alberta, your government, will be ushering in a confident and constructive era that will focus on supporting and strengthening communities and families. I am sure that this sentiment is shared by all hon. members of this House.

I was once asked what a true Albertan was, and that was something that made me think: was I one? I live in Alberta. I was born and raised in Alberta. I married, and my wife and I are raising our children in Alberta. I make my living in Alberta, and I reside in Alberta. But does all of this make me an Albertan? I believe it does. But I also know that I came from stock that immigrated to Alberta, like the majority of Albertans, some time in the past. It is that cultural diversity that makes Alberta strong. It is that very cultural diversity that makes up Calgary-West.

Our duty as elected officials is not to be taken lightly. We are all here to serve all the people of Alberta. This is the duty that is particularly near and dear to my heart. My history as a police officer serving in the Calgary Police Service allowed me to serve Albertans and support the community. I see this role no differently. In both positions I have been chosen to serve Albertans and have their best interests at heart. I would like to thank and recognize all my brothers and sisters in law enforcement throughout Alberta as they put their lives on the line every day they put on their uniforms.

I come from a long history of dedicated public servants on my father's side, with over four generations dedicated to service in the military and law enforcement. It began when my great-grandfather Corporal Albert Ellis fought in World War I and survived the slaughter of Vimy Ridge 100 years ago. The Canadian victory at Vimy Ridge is considered by many as a defining moment for Canada. This was the moment in time Canada became a nation. It continued with my grandfather Corporal Frank Ellis, who was a World War II veteran, and through to my father, George Ellis, who was a police officer and a major in the Canadian military. The Ellis family has given to this community, this province, and this country for four generations, and we will continue to give.

My mother Doreen Chobzay's side has deep roots in the coal mining communities of Canmore and East Coulee, Alberta. [some applause] Thank you. My great-grandfather Michael Chobzay was a hard-working coal miner, and my great-grandmother Mary Chobzay along with her two daughters, Doreen and my grandmother Jean, spent their time feeding the miners. What exemplified my coal mining family the most and exemplified the rooted values of truly being an Albertan was during World War II, when my great-grandmother not only fed the miners but also fed the young boys heading off to war. My family was not rich, but what little extra they had they gave to those less fortunate.

These young Alberta boys who were going off to war, Mr. Speaker, were impoverished, never knowing when or where their next meal would come. They did not resort to crime but instead embraced the values of being an Albertan. When the country of Canada called upon them to serve, these Alberta boys without hesitation were the first to sign up and defend our freedom and our right to sit in this very Assembly today. Although we may never know their names, we must remember them for what they did for each and every one of us.

I can safely say that I am rooted here. I can safely answer that previous question: I am an Albertan. My family has proudly served and taken part in working hard to build this province. My family was among the mavericks, and they worked hard to create Alberta as we know it today. I will work hard for every Albertan to ensure that Alberta remains the resilient home that we know it to be. As a Calgarian and, most importantly, as a devoted Albertan I have taken a vested interest in serving my community by doing what is right. I believe that is truly what being an Albertan is, and I know that I am not the only one who shares this view. An appreciation for family, community, a consideration for generations to come make a person appreciate the duty, the bound necessity of making one's home and community better for future generations.

This realization played a crucial role in my choice to pursue a career with the Calgary Police Service. The value system within the Calgary Police Service very much resonates with me. I have dedicated my life to serving others. I feel that this is extremely important, and I have tremendous respect for public servants.

While in the police service I became a victims' advocate. I believe in protecting victims and their rights by ensuring that there's accountability while considering the overall situation and the individual's rights.

I was the only law enforcement officer who was ever a part of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. Sadly, today homelessness is not just reserved for individuals; it now represents families, and we still have work to do, Mr. Speaker. When you push people to the edge of society by not allowing them a place within it, you marginalize them. They are put into a powerless position just outside society. Is this the choice that Albertans are comfortable with?

My choices speak for themselves. I am a working man. I always have been, and I always will be. I am here to serve my community in whatever way I am able. Under the leadership of our Premier I feel that I am able to continue to serve others under his plan for Alberta.

The constituency of Calgary-West is rich with history, and I recognize this and honour those that have come before me. The electoral riding of Calgary-West is one of the two original Calgary ridings of the seven that have survived from the 1959 redistribution of the Calgary ridings. The other riding is Calgary-Glenmore. Calgary-West's population increased by 151.3 per cent between 1994 and 2012 compared to a 44.3 per cent increase for Alberta. The riding is made up of 14 communities, which hold 32,198 homes and a population of at least 80,870 people, and it is still growing. This tremendous growth, Mr. Speaker, has brought infrastructure issues to light. A prime concern of the riding's constituents is ready access to schools and health care and the development of the Calgary ring road.

I look forward to continue serving this community, that has had a remarkable impact on me. Community is the cornerstone in both my life and my value system, and I am happy to have my family be a part of the community of Calgary-West. I thank my beautiful wife, Hollie, and my three children – Simone, aged 10; Keaton, aged six; and Mason, aged two – for reminding me every day how important it is to work for Albertans to ensure that they are protected and are able to grow and build an even more resilient Alberta. Family and a sense of community values teach you the importance of building a better future in a way that nothing else really can, yet building for the future does not come without hard work and determination. My family's military and coal mining roots have made this very clear to me.

They have also made clear to me that in a province like Alberta anyone with determination can make a brighter future for himself and those around him. It is important that every Albertan deserves an equal opportunity to pursue the best possible future for oneself. At the end of the day is that not why we are all here today, to ensure that Albertans are given an opportunity and the best possible environment to succeed? Is this not what the past generations have committed to providing us? We have all made an important commitment to our constituents. Our communities, our friends, and our neighbours have passed us a torch, a torch of hope and a torch of trust. This torch represents their dreams and their tomorrows. We have collectively as an Assembly been entrusted with a sacred commitment to building a brighter future, not just for a select few but for all Albertans.

I promise to bring ethics, honesty, integrity, accountability, and respect to everything I do in my capacity as a servant not only for my constituents' interests but for all Albertans' and colleagues'. These values are integral to who I am and what I stand for in all aspects of my life, and in my view they are values shared by all Albertans as well. It is with these values in mind that I decided to take my part in the province's moment of renewal under the new management of our new Premier. The Premier has laid out a sensible plan that has resonated with me and has clearly resonated with Albertans: a focused commitment to conservative fiscal principles, an end to entitlements and a restoration of public trust, maximizing the value of our resources while respecting property rights, establishing Alberta as a leader in environmental practices, and, of course, continuing the effort to establish ourselves as a leader in education, health, and skills training.

The new – and I repeat: new – management team of this province, with their reasonable, common-sense approach to decision-making, is well poised to chart a course into the future by continuing to serve Albertans and strengthen communities across this province. Mr. Speaker, it is time for our golden threads to be added to the tapestry that is Alberta.

Thank you, sir, and God bless.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, just before I recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition, I would like to bring to your attention that we have seven new pages joining us today. Raise your hand, new pages, those of you who are new. Some are in, and some are out, but there they are. Please thank them.

Number two, I'm going to recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition in a moment, and pursuant to Standing Order 29(1)(a)(ii) she will have up to 90 minutes to speak. Following her speech there will be a five-minute question-and-comment period offered under 29(2)(a), and since no lists have been given to me yet about who wishes to speak thereafter, I would encourage you to send me that list so that we can then proceed in the alternating fashion. However, it is common tradition to recognize one speaker from the Liberal Party first and then one speaker from the NDs and then to do the alternating. If you want to get onto the list after those next three speakers, please send me a note, and we'll develop it accordingly.

Let me recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak in response to the Speech from the Throne. I should put everyone at ease because I did hear a few groans when you reminded people I have 90 minutes. I will not use the full 90 minutes. [some applause] Yes, I figured I'd get at least some consensus and a round of applause on that.

It is always a pleasure for me to hear His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor deliver the Speech from the Throne. It always is so hopeful, and it should be no surprise that in the throne speech we, and I in particular, once again found many things to support and be hopeful for.

One of the things I liked in particular was the recognition that we need to build better relations with our First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities. I was very, very pleased to see in multiple levels throughout the entire throne speech that that's going to be a priority for this government. As you know, Mr. Speaker, these issues, that are near and dear to my heart, are the reason why I am the Aboriginal Relations critic for my party. I believe it's foundational for our province to make sure that as we go forward, we go forward in partnership with our friends in our First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities to make sure that they are able to share in the incredible prosperity that we know this province has and will continue to enjoy. So to see that we are going to see partnerships in social areas, education, labour force, environment, energy as well as in health care I think is vitally important for us.

I have in the past asked for some accountability around the number of dollars that flow through to us from our federal government for urban aboriginal housing as well as urban aboriginal health initiatives, and I've been unsuccessful in being able to get answers to those questions. With the renewed focus in this throne speech on making sure that we do everything that we can to ensure the integration of urban aboriginals, I'm hopeful that I'll have a better answer to that question when I ask it again in the future.

The other area that, again, it's hard to find fault with, because it sounds very similar to my own leadership campaign bid back five and a half years ago, when I was running for leader of the Wildrose Party, is to see the five core principles that have been identified as areas that this government intends to work on. Of course, listed on page 2 of the throne speech: a focused commitment to sound, conservative fiscal principles. Who can disagree with that? Ending entitlements and restoring the public trust: again, who could possibly disagree? Maximizing the value of our natural resources and respecting property rights: protecting private property rights is one of the reasons why I decided to run for provincial public office. Establishing our province as an environmental leader and increasing Albertans' quality of life by being a leader in the areas of health, education, seniors' care, and skills training: in all of that my colleagues in their critic roles, I think, have distinguished themselves in advocating for some changes in that regard. Also, accountability and transparency, one of the core principles that I think every one of the opposition parties has been asking for over the last number of years that I've been in the Legislature.

Other things that I was pleased to see and that, I'm sure, my colleague for Little Bow was pleased to see since he's been such a champion: getting a program in place for proper bridge maintenance and repair. I'm very pleased to see that that was referenced in the throne speech. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be lots of questions asked on that as a progress report as we go forward over the coming months leading up to the next election.

In addition, I'm sure that my colleague the MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat was pleased to see that there are now going to be biannual reports. Two times a year they're going to have report cards on the progress of infrastructure projects. My colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat has been tireless in putting forward a number of studies and suggestions about how to better manage infrastructure. He's now moving on to the environment portfolio, but I think he can be gratified that the government has appeared to listen to him in that regard as well.

In addition, my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has been a champion, as have other members of the opposition, on making sure that legal aid is expanded for those on AISH in particular, so I was pleased to see that that is a commitment that was made in this throne speech.

I would like to give the government the benefit of the doubt that they are actually going to implement the agenda that was outlined in this throne speech. Sadly, we don't have much in the way of a record that would demonstrate that we should have that level of confidence. I go back to the 2012 Speech from the Throne: 10 key priorities, two of them now apparently completely repudiated. We heard, of course, the Health minister today say that the issue of family care clinics is completely off the table, and if you go back and look at that 2012 speech, there are very few areas where the government made meaningful progress, and in some cases they're walking away from it altogether.

In 2014, once again, there was actually a laundry list of things that the government intended to accomplish – five key areas, 34 different priorities – and virtually none of them has had any meaningful progress on them. Unfortunately, looking at past practice, the problem is not the ideas and the vision that are laid out. The problem is that the government has a very difficult time actually meeting any of its commitments.

We also look at the list of priorities in this new throne speech. It's demonstrating a lot of recycled promises from the past. The question is whether or not they are going to actually deliver.

It's with great sadness that I noted a few minutes ago that the Senate has failed to pass a provision that would have seen the Keystone pipeline get approved. [some applause] I know that my friends in the New Democrat opposition may be pleased to see that, but the rest of us are very unhappy to see that.

I would point out, of course, that this is something the Premier said today as a justification for why he had to appoint his friend to the position rather than have an open competition, that he thought that he had the best chance of being able to get this project approved in the Senate. Well, it failed. I'm very hopeful and will be very supportive of the Premier and this government in their aspirations to extend market access, whether it's Energy East or Gateway or Trans Mountain or some other proposal, but I have to say that this is certainly a setback right at the beginning of the Premier's term.

The laundry list of problems that are identified in the throne speech that need a solution: I guess it's pretty clear to me that we have to be mindful of the fact that the reason there are those problems is because of the members opposite and the successive years and decades of government that have brought us to a point where we have so many problems that require so many solutions. It's also part of the reason why we're skeptical at some of the approaches that they appear to be taking. There are a number of areas where they appear to be going right back into the same area of difficulty that we saw with the previous Premier. This is a government that did not get a mandate to borrow for capital purposes. They have been desperately trying over the last two and a half years to try to convince Albertans that they voted for something other than what they voted for.

I think we all remember pretty clearly that the mandate of this government was to be able to manage our finances without going into debt, yet here we have in the throne speech once again an affirmation that there's going to be borrowing for capital purposes only. The problem with that is that it seems to imply that this government has had a history of running operational deficits. There was only one year that this government in recent political history ran an operational deficit, and that was in 2008, when we had a global financial crisis. We've virtually always had an operational surplus. It's certainly not a bar to strive for to say that you're going to do something that you've always done.

The problem that we have is that we now have a government that doesn't seemingly have any intention of ever getting out of debt financing, and I don't think that this is something that Albertans want to see. They've admitted in the throne speech in multiple places that we're a province of 4 million people, growing to 6 million people by 2040. We may be at 8 million people by the end of my lifetime. So if we're going to see a 50 per cent increase in the number of people in this province – if you look at Stats Canada, they talk about how it's going to increasingly be a younger generation of individuals coming here, who will bring with them, of course, their young families, who require schools as well as medical attention – we're going to need 50 per cent more of everything. We're going to need 50 per cent more schools, 50 per cent more hospitals, 50 per cent more long-term care beds, 50 per cent more transportation infrastructure.

So at what point does this government think we're going to be able to just wipe our hands and say, "Hey, we're done building; now we can start paying that debt back"? The fact of the matter is that we are going to constantly have to invest every single year in infrastructure. They have an unsustainable plan because their plan relies on them borrowing to be able to build this capital as opposed to budgeting for it properly every single year without going into debt.

My colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat put forward a five-year, $50 billion, debt-free capital plan. We are going to continue to press the government to find a way to make sure that we can build our priority infrastructure without going into debt because we've seen what happens in other jurisdictions when they decide that it's okay to borrow for capital purposes. The amount of borrowing continues to go up, the amount of finance charges continues to go up, and you never ever see them making any strides toward paying the money back.

There is lip service paid in the throne speech, of course, to only borrowing with a clear debt repayment plan. Well, of course, the former Finance minister argued that that's what he had in place. If you look at the amount of money he was setting aside, it was nowhere near enough to be able to get us to a point where we would have the balloon payment available when those bonds came due. In fact, I think it would have taken 80 years to pay off the current level of borrowing with the amount of repayment plan that the previous Finance minister had set aside. I'll be looking to see whether or not that changes in the next budget, but I have to say that I'm not hopeful.

The other areas where it seems like the government is saying one thing but, I suspect, are going to do another: they talk about moving away from a five-year plan to a 25-year plan. I have to say, based on their history, that this may sound visionary when they say it and put it on paper, but when you look at their history and their record, it sounds absurd that a government that has been completely incapable of building the schools that were promised two and a half years ago would somehow be able to foresee into the future what the 25-year capital plan would be. I'll be interested in seeing what is on that list. But I have to tell you that I'm very skeptical, if they haven't been able to meet the demands that we have currently, that we can actually look at a 25-year plan with anything other than raised eyebrows and skepticism.

They talk about keeping taxes low and say that they're going to have no sales tax, but I think that underlying that message and certainly from the answers the Premier gave me today, it appears that other taxes will certainly be on the table. The fact that he was unable to give an unequivocal answer to the question of whether or not he would raise any existing taxes or bring in new ones suggests to me very strongly that Albertans are looking in the upcoming budgets at a government that is going to throw away the Alberta advantage and start looking at ways of increasing taxes rather than taking the advice, that we've been giving them for years, of getting their spending under control.

They talk about having a straightforward budget presentation, but here we have it once again. They're not going back to the Klein-Dinning gold standard of how budgets should be presented: total dollars in, total dollars out, and what do you have left over, a surplus or a deficit? In fact, to say in a statement that you're going to have balanced budgets and clear fiscal budget presentation but you're still going to go into debt shows me that it's completely incongruous. We're going to continue to see the amount of debt go up.

They talk about ending excessive severances for political staff. Of course, when this promise was first delivered, it talked about ending excessive severance packages for all staff. Now, the fact that they've narrowed it down to just a handful of top political staffers suggests to me that there isn't a level of seriousness about addressing this issue. It was only two weeks ago that we heard that Allaudin Merali has walked away with a $900,000 severance payment, which is an absolute slap in the face to our front-line workers. How many LPNs could that have hired rather than continuing hand over fist to give money to these individuals who have excessive severance packages along with their excessive compensation packages.

They talk about ending sole-source contracts – but here's the fine print – in all but exceptional circumstances. Let's call this the Navigator clause because we certainly know the argument in the Legislature about why Navigator was hired on a sole-source communications contract was that it was because of exceptional circumstances. I have to wonder which contracts are going to be able to get a fast track because of that couched language.

They also have a very interesting line in the throne speech that I'll be keeping an eye on. They want to make a further distinction between registered lobbyists and government consultants. I'll tell you what I'm reading in between the lines there. What I'm reading in between the lines there is that there are certain people who are going to be recategorized from being lobbyists, who have to register and so be transparent about the work that they're doing, to being government consultants, who don't have to register and therefore don't have to be accountable and transparent about the work that they do. I think we need to keep an eye on how that is going to end up turning out.

There's a statement about greenhouse gases, "advancing efforts to monitor, measure, and report on our progress," but what I find very interesting once again is that it doesn't actually talk about achieving any targets. This is fundamentally the problem with the government's plan and its approach to market access. We will not get market access for our product until we start making meaningful and achievable actual reductions in greenhouse gases and other measures to improve our air, land, and water. Unfortunately, effort is not the same as achievement. It's a lesson that this government still has not learned.

The biggest disappointment is that there is no realistic plan to deal with health care. There are lots of platitudes. There is lots of language around giving more respect to health advisory councils, talking about continuing care beds and how that's going to somehow magically solve the emergency room crisis. But you do very much get the sense that this government believes that under their new management they're just going to be better central planners than what was happening under the previous Health minister. There's no real change in direction, no real change in approach.

They certainly have not learned the lessons that Dr. Paul Parks has indicated, that the only real way that we're going to free up capacity in our emergency rooms and be able to start making a dent in reducing the amount of surgeries and procedures is by building long-term care nursing beds as well as having transition beds so that you can stabilize patients and move them into an area where they can get 24-hour care.

It is very clear when you talk to emergency room doctors that if somebody is going to be released from hospital and they're not going to be able to get that 24-hour care, they won't release them. As a result, you end up having somewhere between 400 to 700 people who are in inappropriate care, costing $1,650 a day, when they would be more comfortable in a proper long-term care nursing facility, getting the 24-hour care they need at $150 a day. I see no evidence that the government recognizes that that is at the heart of their solution, and they demonstrated once again in the throne speech that they don't know the difference between continuing care beds, long-term care nursing beds, and the impact of building the wrong type of bed as opposed to the kind that we actually need.

On the issue of school construction my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View went through it in some detail today, as did I. They've only built 18 schools since 2011. They're projecting that they're somehow going to manage to get things together to build 49 schools in the next 23 months when none of them are even started. Most of them are just barely in the design phase. I have to say that this is another example where the aspirations laid out in the throne speech are very unlikely to be delivered on.

Then, of course, the disaster recovery program. I'm very hopeful that there is going to be a resolution of the appeals by the end of the year, but this is, again, one more area where I fear a political announcement was made to aid a by-election as opposed to a realistic announcement because of the assessment of the situation. There are thousands of individuals, not only in my riding but also in the riding of the hon. Education minister, the representative for Calgary-Elbow, who have not even begun the appeal process, who have felt revictimized by the mismanagement of the disaster recovery program.

The fact that there are still so few individuals internal to the department working on these files leaves me very unsettled, not only because I fear that these individuals are going to have to wait years before they get resolution, as has happened in previous flood incidents in Medicine Hat. But what happens in the event of another flood or another fire or some other major disaster? The government has made absolutely no progress on being able to create a disaster recovery program that works. It's certainly not working for the people who have had the misery of having to deal with it for the last 18 months. We are going to continue to press the government to make sure that they make some real progress on that.

As for the flood mitigation issue, it was already discussed earlier today, the fact that projects were announced without consultation and buy-in from the city of Calgary. I think that's just one more example of seeing a government that does business under the new management the same way they did under the old management, making decisions without making sure that you've got the individuals at the table who are most impacted, brought onboard, and have the buy-in.

The biggest disappointment, though, is Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act. Madam Speaker, it is instructive and symbolic that this entire throne speech is anchored by a bill, Bill 1, that has a mere seven words to describe what the government is going to do. It shows how much the government is long on spin but short on understanding. Let me quote the press release attached to the throne speech. It says this: "Bill 1, focused on respecting property rights, was introduced by [the Premier] and will be the foundation of a new relationship between government and property owners."

Now, the Premier likes to trumpet his expertise on property rights, and his statements on property rights have hinted at an actual understanding of these issues. But what happens when he gets a chance to put his actual words into action? We get a one-sentence bill that repeals only one piece of legislation that we know has been causing problems for our landowners for the last number of years, a piece of legislation, incidentally, Madam Speaker, that was so bad that even this PC government, with its long track record of stomping all over property rights, lacked the resolve to actually proclaim. Now it's being repealed. The government's actions did not live up to the talk. Really, no property rights expert, certainly no lawyer who claims to understand property rights and property rights legislation, can believe that the unproclaimed former Bill 19 is all that's wrong with property rights in Alberta.

But, really, the weakness and tone deafness of Bill 1 is symbolic of what's wrong with this entire throne speech, Mr. Speaker. Throne speeches are supposed to set an agenda for government. They are supposed to be a way for the Premier and the cabinet to signal to Albertans and the civil service what is important, what to expect, what will come. Albertans who are looking to have a forward-looking agenda that would prepare Alberta for the future and deal with the big issues we are facing will undoubtedly be deeply disappointed in this throne speech. The Premier likes to claim that the province is under new management, but the throne speech makes it clear that the new management has no strategic or operational plans. If this were a business, the market would be expressing deep concerns about how the new management has such a poor grasp of the fundamentals.

Now, let me tell you what I think should have been in the throne speech. What we saw in this throne speech offered very little departure in policy from the previous Premier. We didn't get a new strategic plan for the future of Alberta. All we really received was recycled campaign promises but no real details on how those promises will be kept or, most importantly, how they will be paid for with the price of oil now heading towards, at the very least, $70 a barrel.

The PC government is continuing on its policy to borrow billions of dollars to pay for basic infrastructure. There is no plan for how to pay for these promises with targeted spending or actual improvements in performance of core government services. That leaves only new taxes and new fees, and I am sure that Albertans will have already noted that the PC Party and the Premier are already hedging on those two issues. This matters because the Premier made a lot of expensive promises during the campaign, but Albertans not only want promises. They want a plan for how to achieve them, and they want to understand how these will be paid for.

The Wildrose has very clear differences with the governing party. The Wildrose believes that the budget should be balanced, really balanced, every year and that the books should be an honest reflection of the money coming in and the money going out and the amount being spent on debt. The governing party will have racked up $20 billion worth of debt by 2016. At this rate they will have $40 billion worth of debt by 2020, or $60 billion worth of debt by 2024, costing us billions upon billions of dollars in annual interest charges.

We believe low taxes, streamlined regulation, and a level playing field is the best way to support families, attract new investment, and diversify the economy. PCs continue to pick winners and losers.

We believe our energy business needs a stable, predictable environment to operate under. The governing party hasn't provided stability. We've seen arbitrary changes to royalty rates. We've seen cancelled leases up in the oil sands and elsewhere, and we've seen increasing red tape that's undermined investor confidence.

We believe we need stable, low-cost electricity to fuel our continued growth and protect consumers. The governing party continues to build transmission lines that we don't need. They make consumers pay the full cost for the amount of cost overruns, and they seemingly have no ability to moderate excessive and extreme price spikes.

We believe we need to improve our reputation on the environment, and to do that, we need to make real and measurable progress on improving the quality of our air, water, and land and reducing greenhouse gases. I've already mentioned that the government has no plan to actually achieve any of its targets, but there certainly is a lot of PR around what they intend to tell the international community that they're doing without making progress.

We believe we need a new relationship with our municipalities that treats our municipal partners as another order of government and flows through a stable, growing number of dollars in a permanent transfer program with no strings attached. The governing party has created a begging model for our municipalities, where our cities and towns have to guess where they are on the priority list of projects and then also hire special staff to fill in application forms and lobby for grants.

We believe our heritage savings trust fund should grow from about $15 billion to about $150 billion and that future generations should be able to share in our resource wealth. If this government had even begun to manage our resource wealth properly, just reinvesting the dollars from the heritage savings trust fund back into the account, it would already be worth $150 billion today. Instead, it not only racked up new debt, but they blew through almost $17 billion worth of savings that were in the sustainability fund, and they continue to spend every last dollar of resource revenue every single year and are not setting enough money aside to pay the debt back when it comes due.

We believe health care should be decentralized to the local level, with day-to-day decisions for staffing and surgeries and procedures made by hospital administrators with their own budgets overseen by local hospital boards. The governing party: they've centralized our $18 billion health system into the office of the Health minister, they have centralized EMS services, they have centralized home care, they have centralized lab services, and they have no real plan, as I have mentioned, to be able to clear up the problem that we have in our emergency rooms or build enough 24-hour long-term care nursing beds.

We believe that parents have a fundamental right to choose the kind of education they want for their kids. The governing party continues to introduce fads in the education curriculum that are impacting our students' international performance, continues to believe in fuzzy math, fuzzy report cards. In the meantime school boards are forced to charge fees to make up shortfalls. They promise schools, then they don't build them, and then they make political decisions on which projects do ultimately get approved.

We believe in free votes in the Legislature so that every single citizen can know that they will be represented on the issues that matter to them. The governing party simply doesn't.

We believe we need a return to ethical behaviour in government: no first-class flights, no five-star hotels, no lavish salaries and six-figure severance packages, no sole-source contracts, no special deals for cronies, no dumping failed politicians and political staffers into top jobs in the civil service, no buying elections with shady, last-minute spending announcements. In short, we need clean government.

Albertans are looking for a new generation of leadership with innovative ideas about how to move Alberta forward, and in looking at this throne speech, they would be disappointed. With resource revenues in steady decline, the Premier needs to do a better job explaining how his major promises can be kept while improving the outcomes for government services. Sooner or later the Premier is going to have to come to terms with reality and realize that governing is more than recycling old campaign promises or trying to distance himself from the mistakes of the last three Premiers. Albertans deserve a government ready to meet the challenges of our province head-on and to be honest enough with them about how they're going to achieve it. They didn't get that sort of government out of this throne speech.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available should anyone wish to take advantage of that.

I see none, so let us move on to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Alberta Liberals it's my pleasure to reply to this year's second Speech from the Throne. First and foremost, we must all give thanks to the Treaty 6 peoples and the First Nations of our country for giving us the opportunity to live in the best place in the world. We must give thanks to those who build and maintain our roads and bridges and buildings, and those who care for and teach our children, and those who care for our sick and elderly, and the civil servants who help run our government and our public services. We must also remember that the safety we all enjoy is because of the men and women of our armed forces – past, present, and future – as well as our front-line responders, who lay their lives on the line to protect and serve us 24 hours a day.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals want to build a strong economy and a strong society. Liberals believe in fiscal, social, and environmental responsibility. Liberals believe in equality of opportunity, personal freedoms, and consideration for future generations. Liberals believe the decisions that we make today should be made through the lens of what is best for our children. Liberals believe in building a strong middle class because we believe that when more of us do better, more of us do better; we will actually have a stronger society. Liberals believe that after 43 years it really is time for new management with a new government.

Today there are a lot of good things happening in Alberta. We have a good economy and an abundance of natural resources, with more than 4 million people, hard-working, industrial people, who were either born and raised here or arrived here in search of prosperity and opportunity and to build a better life. But there are a lot of things that are substandard and must be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve the truth from elected officials, however inconvenient it may be. Once we are honest with ourselves and acknowledge that we have problems, we can get down to the business of fixing them. We have a province with a lack of sustainable, predictable, adequate funding for vital public services, funding that our municipalities desperately require.

This has resulted in delayed and crumbling infrastructure, a severely underresourced K to 12 education system, with classrooms bursting at the seams. Drastic cuts to postsecondary education and programs have led to amongst the highest tuition and fees in our country and the lowest postsecondary participation rates. Our seniors and disabled are neglected and too often languish in hospital hallways, which directly leads to the acute-care health care crisis, despite having a big-spending health care system.

Mr. Speaker, today we have more than 90,000 children living in poverty, and poor kids come from poor families. We have a lack of protection for our LGBTQ youth. Our remand centres and prisons are full of folks with mental health, addiction, or poverty issues. Inadequate family and community supports have led to a record number of children in government care dying. One child has died in care every week for 14 years in the wealthiest place in the world, all at a time when regular hard-working Albertans struggle to get by and make ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, we must improve the lives of our First Nations, our Métis, and Inuit. We must make this a priority, and I'm glad to see that in the Speech from the Throne.

However, Mr. Speaker, we've got to ask ourselves a question. Are we better off today than we were 10 years ago? Many would say no. To top off the fact that we don't have the infrastructure we need or the public services our citizens need, this province has taken on record debt like we have never seen before. This is what happens when a government has a broken fiscal structure and ties our vital public services to the price of a barrel of oil.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve a strong economy and a strong society and a few hundred billion dollars in the bank. The problem lies in the fact that we have been under new management far too many times in the past few years, with the same old 43-year-old Conservative government, with the same MLAs and the same ministers at the helm, with the same old ideas and the same policies that have gotten us into this mess.

This week's throne speech talks about new management. Well, what's really new is only four members, who aren't that new, and 75 per cent of the cabinet ministers comprised the last new management team. The speech promises the world to Albertans from all walks of life. It talks about saving money, paying down debt, no new taxes, with conservative principles and the Wildrose policy of capping spending at population growth and inflation, with $75 oil and no plan to pay for this, no real details.

Mr. Speaker, this week's throne speech, unlike many recent throne speeches, also talks about accountability, which is a very good thing since they've been lacking accountability on the PC government side for far too long. But so far they show every indication of continuing the PC tradition of denying, delaying, and declining the opportunity to take truly progressive steps forward. The Premier has made it very clear that he's going to take very conservative steps forward.

The government needs to demonstrate a true commitment to accountability and will need to follow some Alberta Liberal solutions. Liberal solutions to true accountability are to support gay and straight alliances in every school where students want them. Liberal solutions to accountability are to phase out coal-fired electricity generation, reduce greenhouse gas emissions so we can improve our reputation on the international stage and get our pipelines to market. Alberta Liberal solutions call for public inquiries into the deaths of children in government care and missing and murdered aboriginal women.

Alberta Liberal solutions to true accountability mean improving access to information, fixing flawed whistle-blower legislation, and having an open and transparent public hiring and contract tendering system. Liberal solutions to accountability mean imposing stricter environmental monitoring and stiffer penalties for polluters, which will improve our environmental reputation.

Liberal solutions mean giving municipalities the tools they need to responsibly serve citizens in urban areas, where the majority of Albertans now live and almost all Albertans eventually congregate, and it includes more respect and more revenue and a shared responsibility. Liberal solutions to accountability mean delivering the right kind of health care to the right patient at the right time. And, yes, that includes committing to rebuilding the Misericordia hospital, that will benefit not only the whole capital city but the whole health system.

Liberal solutions to accountability mean forensic audits of our expenditures to ensure that Albertans are getting value for their money, and forensic audits of our royalties to ensure that Albertans are collecting what they should be collecting for the resources that belong to the people. Liberal solutions to accountability also mean that we must fix the broken fiscal structure to pay for this. We must stop the overreliance on volatile resource revenue to pay the daily bills for essential public services and talk of tax fairness. We must put the word “progressive” back in this province by bringing in progressive income tax.

Mr. Speaker, despite $75 oil, our province is still playing catch-up and still growing. This is not a time to cut back vital public services, delay projects, nickel and dime regular working Albertans and businesses, or rack up massive public debt. It's a time to keep building our province, getting the essential public services, and paying for today's bills today, not passing the bill to the next generation. These are the things the government needs to do. They are things we've asked them to do, and they are things the government still refuses to do.

You know, suddenly, true accountability looks like real work, doesn't it? It's not as easy as simply promising to sin no more. Accountability actually requires good evidence-based policies that allow for the repair and strengthening of vital public services and our budgeting practices as well as Alberta's poor environmental reputation. It also requires a commitment to justice, fairness, and the public good.

Mr. Speaker, Liberals believe we need accountability grounded in the understanding that a strong society is just as important as a strong economy. For example, Liberals understand that true accountability means fixing a public health system that is severely and chronically underfunded and literally bursting at the seams.

We need to get rid of school fees. We need to hire enough teachers and get those teachers the support that they need to educate our children, who are the future of our province. Our schools need to be built as community hubs, with affordable, high-quality, low-cost child care as well as the wraparound services – the school nurses, the mental health counsellors, the addiction counsellors, the social workers – to give our children the care and support they need and the teachers the support they need so that they can actually invest their time, spend their time, teaching. That will require probably one of the largest investments in Alberta history into funding and running our education system, not only building the buildings but also on the operational side of things.

Liberals believe that true accountability also means making amends for broken promises and betrayals such as last year's savage cuts to postsecondary institutions, which made an already severe lack of funding even worse. Our postsecondary students need lower tuition and fees. They need more grants and more bursaries. They need a chance to pay off their student loans if they live and pay taxes in Alberta. They also need more professors and teachers and more choice of programs. Mr. Speaker, innovation, technology, and research and development are absolutely essential to building a strong economy. The University of Alberta contributes 5 per cent of the GDP to our province, which is $12 billion to $15 billion. Societies that out-educate us today will outperform us tomorrow. It's time to invest massively in postsecondary education.

Liberals believe their government must take responsibility for this province's chronic and acute health care access crisis. The PC government broke the health system, Mr. Speaker. Nobody else broke it; they did. Along with other front-line staff, I'd be happy to help by providing insights and solutions. Let's admit we have a broken system. Let's make sure we bring in world-class, nonprofit, community-based home care, subacute care, palliative care, hospice care, and long-term care. Let's stop privatizing community services. Let's get every Albertan a family doctor that works with a team of health professionals and nurse practitioners to keep people out of the system and bring in real accountability measures. And let's stop changing managers. Let's just fix the system.

Mr. Speaker, Liberals believe that true accountability also requires that the government deals fairly with cash-starved municipal governments. Alberta cities and towns need sustainable, predictable, adequate funding, and municipalities must be treated as equal partners and be given the respect, revenue, and shared responsibility in the MGA review.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Liberals believe that true accountability means standing up for students who find themselves bullied in the schools because of their sexuality. Discrimination against LGBTQ students is wrong, it's hurtful, and too often deadly. I hope this government's concept of accountability extends to voting for the protections contained in Liberal Bill 202 from the hon. member for the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. The Premier must stand up to the social conservative elements in his party and his base. Accountability sometimes entails courage, and we'll see if they have it.

Alberta Liberals are going to be talking a lot about accountability this session in order to teach this old PC government what it really means to be accountable. Accountability isn't just about stopping ignoring rules or stopping wasting tax dollars after being busted for repeated lapses in ethics and judgment. Accountability is more than that. It's more than: we shall not do what is wrong. Accountability is also, more importantly, about: we shall do what is right. And that, Mr. Speaker, is what is missing in the throne speech. So congratulations to the government on promising to sin no more, but what Albertans really need is for this government to truly embrace accountability by addressing the myriad crises created by their myriad mistakes and to truly focus, first, foremost, and finally, on what is public good.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Liberals look forward until the next election to working with the government on supporting what makes sense, on offering amendments to things that they intend to do well but aren't fully thought of, and to fight hard on behalf of Albertans when the government is totally wrong. You can count on the Alberta Liberals to fight to build a better Alberta and a strong society and a strong economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see no takers.

Let us move to the next speaker, then, to an hon. representative from the government side. Anyone?

If not, then let us move on to the NDs. No one on the ND side right now?

Okay. Let's move on to Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a while since I got up to such a warm audience all the time. On behalf of the constituents of Little Bow it's nice to get up and do a reply to the Speech from the Throne. I guess, like everything else, I'm always happy to see some things in writing here that we've been working on for a little while.

We'll start off with the highlighted areas I went through, about improvements on intersections. In my own particular riding, in Coalhurst, for instance, and Nobleford, I've been working fairly diligently with the Minister of Transportation on some solutions there. It's nice to see that we can work on getting some improvements done there to help the constituents of Little Bow and also the people that travel through it.

Bridge funding, as the Leader of the Official Opposition had brought up, had been cut for a little while. It's about $75 million when you guys do jump into budget considerations. At least you put it in here that you want to help out with the repairs in rural Alberta. It's about $75 million a year that's needed for the next 10 years just to get them up to date from where they're at. In my riding alone we have just about 20 per cent of the bridges in this province due to the large irrigation going across those. I think it's a huge economic driver.

Also, one of the counties that's in my riding is Lethbridge county, which is the only county that has over $1 billion in cash receipts a year. That was off the 2013 numbers, I guess. If you look at that – I mean, we look at falling oil prices. I think this is a prime time to sit here and figure out where we can reinvest into agriculture. Agriculture is the largest renewable resource we have in this province, and it's always a good place that we could be reinvesting into. I do give that to the minister of agriculture, who has always been good to work with, and to his department for always getting information back so that we can work positively to get solutions and things that we can do in this province.

One of the things I'd be remiss in not touching on: the little point of the bridge on 547. I was with the minister last week at the opening of that. I was very glad to see the bridge get up and going again. The sad part was that originally it only took a year to build that bridge, just over a hundred years ago, with the modern technology of horses and pulleys and stuff like that, but due to some great engineering and stuff we banged that back together in almost 16 months. We didn't quite rebuild the whole thing. But, you know, my constituents are happy to at least be able to travel across it. Sometimes you're just happy with what you get. I can tell you that a lot of constituents were disappointed that either the bridge wasn't totally rebuilt or that it wasn't rebuilt within a timely fashion. But, either way, it's going.

One of the things in this province that we need to do – and we talk about it in the throne speech – is that we'll make annual investments to enhance agricultural research and innovation and work on food processing. One of the things there is temporary foreign workers. This is something that we need to get together on. I think all parties in this House and even our independent member will come together as a group and say that we need to somehow press the federal government into solving this problem. I know the previous Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour – some days it changes around here – the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, was always a strong advocate on it, and I believe the Member for Calgary-Hays, the new minister, is also. These are key things that keep this province rolling.

I'm really hoping that the new Premier, with his past political ties federally, will somehow be able to pull this through and get something that's going to work. This isn't just something that affects Tim Hortons and McDonald's. Rural Alberta is getting crushed by this, whether it's small businesses in the hometown I'm from, Mossleigh, in the restaurant there alone, or the feedlots down by Lethbridge, which has the largest area for feedlot feeding in Alberta. We're short-staffed. We're short of people that want to work. We've have greenhouses. These are all things that need to be done. I had a good conversation with a feedlot owner down there last week, and he said to me, "Ian, I don't care how it gets done." I said to him, "Provincially we're working on that." He goes, "That's nice to hear, but that doesn't help the four feed trucks that I have parked every day because I don't have people to sit in them."

We're struggling there. We have Cargill, which is one of the large food processors, and also JBS. We're short-staffed. We're running at about 70, 80 per cent there for staffing because we just don't have enough skilled labour or unskilled labour that want to work there. That's a huge economic driver in our whole province. Again, we look at things like the falling oil prices. I've got some fairly simple solutions: let's reinvest in rural Alberta. I think that the Premier in his throne speech has touched on some of that, which is good to see.

Market access, product innovation, and investment: those are key things also. When we're in a province that exports just about all of the things that we grow, whether it be meat, whichever meat it is – chicken, pork, or cattle – or grain, we need to be able to always find markets. That's something that I hope the government continues to carry on, finding some more markets, and I think that they have been looking into that.

One of the things we also need to touch on is the feeder associations loan guarantees. Now, in the Speech from the Throne the government has introduced a rural economic development action plan. Part of that is that they decided to raise the limit from $500,000 individually to a million individually for people to get money from the Feeder Associations loans. Now, with the price of cattle going up to probably record highs right now, this is key, and it sounded like a great concept. The problem is that we still need to raise the loan guarantee from the province. I believe the province provides about $750 million right now in loan guarantees.

These are key things to our cattle feeding market right now. I really hope that at some point either the minister or the Premier would take this as something that needs to be dealt with immediately. Right now current legislation allows for the President of Treasury Board to increase the amount of the loan guarantees just through an order in council. I don't think that there's a negative effect by doing this. We need to do it right away.

People always sit there and ask – it's not a handout; it's a loan guarantee. In over 77 years the loan-to-loss ratio has remained constant at .01 per cent. Now, if anybody in here was following the stock market, you're almost guaranteed not a loss on that. I'd definitely be more than happy to be active to work in any way, shape, or form to find a solution on that for our cattle feeding market. To put the extra money in there to jump it up to a million dollars per individual sounded great, but we're cutting the other side. There's just not as much money there for that.

I guess that if we want to look at rural beds and long-term care, I'm very happy to say that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has been in my riding and been doing lots of work with my constituents and talking about how to solve that.

Now, some of us might remember that back when we first got into this, in 2012, for me anyway, there was a little place called Carmangay that had a great long-term care centre. It got closed. Now, in case anybody has forgotten that – it was a nice way for me to learn how politics worked – since that time that building has been kept heated, kept air conditioned. A person checks on it once a day. There are almost 30 beds there; I think there are 27 or 29 beds. You could have it active almost immediately, within, I'd say, 30 days. Most of the staff are still in the area. If we want to start looking into things that we can do to help rural Alberta and help our aging-in-place people, that's a prime place there. They've got a whole block there. You could add on to it. There are quite a few things there.

I think that as we went through that whole process, we all learned that sometimes politics keeps things open and that sometimes politics gets things closed. I'm not sure; I think it was a bit of both in that one in that they didn't keep it open. But I think this is a prime example that we can figure out. We can move forward and solve what happened before on that, and if we want to actually help out all Albertans that are aging and aging in place, this is probably a prime place we could do that at.

I'd hate to not put in a little plug for the Vulcan hospital also. There are some innovative people there that have figured out some sources for funding that would work with the government. They are more than happy to work with government and, again, have met with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, who's come out and talked to them a couple of times and went a long way to roll out what we could do better together on that.

The throne speech touched on a couple of other things; you know, how to innovate and move forward on our high-quality food products. This summer a lot of people that were on some committees met over Fusarium. It's definitely a heated issue between northern and southern Alberta. For those that don't know, Fusarium is a fungus on seed. It's contentious, but at the end of the day in my riding it's a huge economic driver. There are a lot of seed growers down there. Now, for pedigree seed growers that's where you're going to grow your foundation seed, and then that gets cleaned and shipped across the province or into other provinces. The challenge is that we have a zero per cent Fusarium allowance right now. We're in a spot right now where a lot of the larger seed companies won't invest that money into Alberta because they can't legally sell that seed if there's a trace of Fusarium.

Now, actually, it was a private member's bill. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, now the hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism, had brought it up. It definitely split the province. We had I don't know how many hours of meetings over this. My colleague from Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley and I could agree to disagree respectfully on what should be done. I think it's one that we can still tackle, and if this Premier is serious about getting the province pulled together, I think this is a key one.

It's a large economic driver, and when seed companies are pulling out from our province because they're scared because they can't do that, I think it's a pretty simple program if we can let the buyers decide what they want to do and through best management practices. I think that's something that in rural Alberta is, again, a driver that will help most people if we can come up with a positive solution. The problem with proroguing the Legislature like we did is that that was going to committee to come back, and now it's lost in the nether lands someplace. It's just – poof – gone. I'm hoping we can deal with that sooner rather than later. There's been a Fusarium Action Committee, since probably before I could shave, that's been in action, and nothing has ever really gotten rolling on it. I'm hoping that would be a key thing we can work on there.

You know, somewhat in closing here, I'm hoping that the new Premier – I guess we've got a new captain on the Titanic. It looks like he can steer it back around. I think everybody on the other side maybe saw the iceberg, and this was maybe the one time they ran back down and told him to hang a hard left or a hard right. [interjections] Hey, I'll give him credit. He's figured it out.

For a lot of the members on that side – we can all have a little fun in here; we've got to have a little fun at this job – at the end of the day you took quite a few pages out of our book, which is good. As a taxpayer in this province I'm happy that we figured out that we didn't need to replace licence plates, that we didn't need to do a lot of things, that we could probably get rid of the jets, our practice on how to account for the planes. [interjection] I never got to go on them. I didn't know what they actually looked like. Sorry about that.

We're going back to a simple finance program. I can distinctly remember sitting in here after a couple of the budgets – I'm just a farmer from Mossleigh, and I'm not real great with numbers – and the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert at the time, as the Treasury Board chairman, always liked to explain how we needed to have a couple of sets of books. I remember it didn't work really well for Enron. You can't do that, and I'm glad to see that the new Premier figured out that that's maybe not the best management practice we should have. We should have one set of books. So I'm congratulating everybody on that side for figuring out to keep it back the way it maybe should be done. On saying that, I guess we'll see.

You know, Bill 1 sounded good coming out. I'm hoping he's open to a lot of amendments on it because I think we can add quite a few things to that and do good things for Albertans with it. Other than that, I guess we'll see how the cards play out on this as the rest of the session rolls through.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, I'll recognize Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a difference a day makes in politics. It's amazing. A few months ago we were dealing with the government in a most difficult time. Public confidence was waning considerably. If it wasn't at an all-time low, it was certainly heading to that point. A few months ago the Official Opposition was riding a wave of popularity as one scandal after another scandal plagued the government. Fast-forward to today, and what a change. After four by-elections the Official Opposition . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but I neglected to catch a note here from the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Might we briefly revert to the introduction of guests before they leave the gallery?

The Speaker: Hon. member, my sincere apologies to you and your guests. Please proceed. Thank you, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, for your understanding.

Introduction of Guests

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, colleague. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the House visitors from the MD of Foothills. We have with us Reeve Larry Spilak, Councillor Suzanne Oel, Delilah Miller, Jason Parker, Rick Percifield, Ron Chase, and, from the organization itself, Ryan Payne and Harry Riva-Cambrin. These individuals are residents of Highwood and Livingstone-Macleod. I ask that they receive the warm traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, and thank you, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, for your co-operation in this regard and to all members. Please proceed with your speech, and our apologies for the interruption.

Ms Fenske moved, seconded by Mr. Ellis, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to talk about a couple of points that were raised in the Speech from the Throne. Most importantly, I want to really focus on the environment and property rights, which are pretty much some of the highlights that I focused on. There are many other issues that I'm sure some other members will pick up on later and comment on, but in particular the issue of the environment.

Coming up with a climate change strategy and promising to deliver on a climate change framework: this is to me absolutely paramount. It is a double-edged sword that provides good on both sides of that sword. One is that it is paramount in the sense that it's good for all Albertans to have clean air, to have clean water, to have an environment that improves their quality of life.

The other side of that sword is access to international markets. Whether we like it or not, the international markets are dictating that we have to do something to lead in our environmental rules, regulations, and demonstrate that we are a leader in the world. The beauty behind this is that our industries have the technology. They have the expertise. What we need is the leadership to bring that forward to make that work because when you even look at these pipelines that we struggle to get built, what prevents that, what is the argument that has always been the obstacle that we had to overcome is the fact that our environmental record was there to obstruct. We have that ability.

So for this Premier to step up and say that we are under new management and we are going to tackle that, there is something that came to mind. It's actually interesting because you've heard it, and you'll probably hear it again. What is different from this government than any other previous government? It's a valid question. Albertans want an answer to that, and it's not an answer you can give verbally. It's an answer that you have to demonstrate that you're actually going to do that. So the test is: will this government act? What is good to know is simply this. What the opposition has been complaining about, this government has now acted on.

They complained about the licence plate. Done. Check mark. It's gone. They complained about the airlines. Done. Check mark. It's gone. They complained about fiscal management, and boy I'm going to talk about the opposition and their fiscal management policies in a second. Stay tuned because this is going to be entertaining because the hypocrisy of how this takes place is beyond me. [interjections]

Now, see, the beauty is, Mr. Speaker, that I actually have three cease-and-desist orders against me from the Wildrose. I'm not allowed to speak up, but I'm free from that now. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: Get a lawyer.

Mr. Anglin: No. I don't need a lawyer. I'm free. I'm free. I'm not allowed to talk about the nepotism in the party. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon members, we're about to conclude a historic day here of some of the highest level of decorum, and it all starts with giving a bait and taking a bait. For heaven's sake. The hon. member has the floor. Let him have it. Let him have it all. Please, no more interjections.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I'm not allowed to talk about the nepotism in my former party, and I won't talk about the nepotism. I'll stay with that cease-and-desist order. I'm not allowed to talk about how criticism of a party would force you out of that party or how criticism of the way they manage themselves would somehow silence you.

I've heard this before, Mr. Speaker, where these PC MLAs were criticized for not standing up and speaking out against some of the policies. What we do know from the history of this Chamber is that some of them actually did come over here and sit as independents as an objection or as a protest, whatever they personally decided. It was directed at governance, how this government is going to act with integrity or with credibility. How are you going to demonstrate that? That is the key test for this new government, for this new Premier. It's really important that they stay on this because when I hear the criticism about fiscal management, I think it's a valid criticism. It is important for all Albertans that this be transparent, that there be accountability. It's nice to know we have an act, but I will tell you that it's hard to take when it comes from a party that takes and spends its own money on what I would call a legal slush fund. I would wonder if Elections Alberta would take exception to it.

Mr. Wilson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Wilson: I rise on Standing Order 23(b)(i). The member is speaking to matters other than the question under discussion. Clearly, he is responding or attempting to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'm not sure of anywhere in there where internal party matters and/or the view of the Official Opposition are noted, and I would ask that you remind the member to keep his comments relevant at such time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw. I had just, seconds before, in fact raised the motion and flagged it for the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who was speaking, and I was about to stand up and say: please make your speech relevant to the motion of the throne speech; otherwise, I'd have to rule you out of order and ask someone else to take your place speaking. With that in mind, please be reminded of relevance and continue on now with that train of thought.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anglin: Oh, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The relevance is in the context and the contrast of dealing with fiscal management. I know the member doesn't like it, but I'm not here to be liked or disliked. What I'm here for is to bring truth to the contrast of fiscal management. It has to happen because if you're going to criticize somebody for not spending money properly, then you have to take into context that when you put money into a fund and you pressure people to put money into a fund and you don't even provide those people with accountability – and that goes to the accountability of the throne speech – and you give money so that it influences a political reality or a political perception to your advantage, I tell you, it is an interesting contrast. When the government brings up an issue of transparency, what I would say is that those who criticize the government should also exercise transparency, and I don't see that, actually. I mean, there has to be a balance.

The government is forced to balance that, and we should all be forced to balance that. When we talk about government, granted, we're talking about the cabinet, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is that we're all part of that government. When we are the opposition, when we are the backbenchers our job is to hold them accountable. It doesn't mean that we act differently and try to hold them to a different standard.

I will tell you this, Mr. Speaker. I have not yet seen anyone on that side actually speak up against their government and then be underhandedly thrown out via a rigged election process. No one has ever stood up and told me they've had one of those, but I would tell you that that would be absurd. I wouldn't expect that from over there. I'm not sure how that accountability measures out. What I'm looking for from this government is credibility. I would want this government to demonstrate exactly what it says. Now we're at a point in time which I think is a turning point.

When I see this government get accused of picking the low-hanging fruit, I say: yes, they did. They fixed a couple of things that the opposition said: please fix. And what I heard from the opposition was: yeah, but they did it. That's what we asked them to do.

Now there are some major points coming along. I will tell you that when the Premier brings out a property rights bill and heralds that property rights bill and that property rights bill is going to repeal Bill 19 – we refer to it as Bill 19, but it's the Land Assembly Project Area Act. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I travelled around this province before I was elected, the last two years. I travelled to 91 communities. I held 266 town hall meetings. I spoke about Bill 19. The minister of agriculture was at some of these meetings. More than one minister was there. I discussed it, and I debated it. And when I hear the opposition say that it wasn't good enough, I'm here to tell you that it's great. It's outstanding. I want the thousands of Wildrose Party members that I signed up at my meetings to know that that is a good bill.

I fought against that Bill 19, and I debated against that Bill 19, and to have them repeal that Bill 19, that is just. That is a prime example of taking action. Is it enough? Never. I agree. We always want more. I don't want this government to be perfect. I want this government to strive for perfection. That's all I'm asking. When I travelled around this province and I spoke to thousands of Albertans, what I did find out from those thousands of Albertans, Mr. Speaker: they had some uncommon sense of fairness, and it was a common virtue. They understand due process of law. They understood the argument about property rights. So to have this Premier step up and say, "We're going to start dealing with it," to me that is a good start. To have the opposition, who rode that on my back and on the backs of thousands of other Albertans, saying that they were opposed to Bill 19, stand up and say that now, all of a sudden, they're not – I don't understand that.

I am definitely going to support that bill when it comes along, and I'm going to ask them to do more. I want the thousands of Albertans that I spoke to, who supported me and supported the Wildrose in fighting this bill, to take note of that. That is really, really important in the progress of restoring property rights in this province. I commend the government for bringing that forward in the throne speech, and I commend the government for following through.

I don't tolerate hypocrisy. No one has even been able to shut me up on the issue of hypocrisy. I doubt it ever happens. But I am not going to talk about the nepotism that I got the cease-and-desist order on.

So with that I want to talk about the environment.

Dr. Brown: You've got parliamentary privilege here, Joe.

Mr. Anglin: Well, fiscal prudence is really important. Yes. I will stay with fiscal prudence. But I will tell you that there is humour behind it, Mr. Speaker. When a member of the opposition hires an image consultant and it doesn't work out too great, that's a waste of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, if I may.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, I presume you're rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Wilson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, again rising on 23(b)(i). I have no idea how this hon. member is trying to tie his comments to the response from the Speech from the Throne, and I would again ask you to remind him to keep his comments relevant.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Once again, seconds before the Calgary-Shaw member rose, I had just lifted up and indicated to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to please make your comments relevant to certain sections of the throne speech. I realize that we give a lot of latitude, more than perhaps any other legislation, when replies to throne speeches are being given. Truly, we do give a lot of latitude. However, even I'm finding that stretch a little bit difficult today. So if you could zoom in on the throne speech, which part in particular you're commenting on, that would be helpful. The point is well made by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Point well taken. I will zoom in. But as it has been said here in this Chamber, have fun. I will cease to have fun at the moment, and I'll get a little bit more serious. But I'll be back to "fun" later, and then you'll have to wade again.

What I want to talk about is the seriousness of the issue of climate. The Premier did bring up in the throne speech issues of flood and flood mitigation, and what I want to say is that it is important. Some of the things the government has done in this area have helped. We are flood mapping. That is important. But what we also have to do is that we have to study the logging in the high country. To ask a very simple question: is that affecting the flooding? I have to tell you that it's a valid question. We do need to study it. We need to look at that because some of these floods, the flash floods in particular – it's only logical to make an assumption that there is a connection, but we can't make the connection unless we study it. That has to fit into this flood mitigation system somehow, someday. That is absolutely important.

But going back to the credibility of our environmental policies, I will tell you this. The environmental rules and regulations in this province are good. What we lack is in the enforceability, and this government needs to look at that to make the system work better. We cannot – we cannot – have a track record where we say: our policies are good, our laws are good, but we're not getting the job done because we're not enforcing. That is a weak spot that this government needs to look at when it wants to set up a track record of environmental stewardship.

We're not in a position where we can follow. Because of our industry, because of our economy we are in a position where we must lead. We have no other choice in this matter. We must lead in this category if we're to be successful. That's where this government needs to strive. We need to have clean water, we need to have clean air, and we need to have enforcement.

We need a fair playing field. The carbon offset system in this province is a clear example of that. It is a playing field that needs a lot of attention by this government because the audits being conducted in that industry are not adding up. When companies can sell offsets for more CO₂ than they produce, something is wrong. Somebody needs to look into it and to make the system work or to deal with it in a more constructive way.

All I can tell you is that it is good, Mr. Speaker, that this is recorded by Hansard, because I'm not recording it. [interjections] I did say I'd come back and have fun. I apologize.

The Speaker: Order, please. Order.

I can hardly wait to make this offer. Does anyone wish to take up 29(2)(a)? We will go to the hon. Government House Leader, under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Denis: Thanks for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre what experience he has with flood mapping.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, if you wish to reply.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, flood mapping is new to me as I'm watching the government roll it out. Thank you to the minister of environment for notifying me of the flood mapping – I would call it an open house – in Sundre. It is the most important constituency location for me dealing with floods. So we had Environment and SRD people and the contractors down there with all the different flood maps, explaining to the public how they did it, answering questions. It was extremely important, because we had a very large turnout, and it's a huge issue.

There are other issues that are really important. I'm hoping this government will expand upon them: to look at not just the flood mapping but to go beyond that and look into causes of floods as far as what I said earlier, what the logging does, what development does along those waterways. That's extremely important to keep this under control.

Again, Mr. Speaker, like everything else, my biggest criticisms of previous PC governments all had to do with process, due process, having a process that was fair and just. You don't always get the decision you want, but at least there's a process. That's important. The opposition could take a lesson from process, but they don't hear that just yet.

Anyway, it is the same in property rights, absolutely. If you take a look at what's being repealed in Bill 1, if you look at the processes there, they actually took those out of section 15 of the Government Organization Act, so when we repeal that bill, we'll go back to the Government Organization Act. Those processes there, in my view, are far fairer and just for landowners who are affected by any type of expropriation, and that's why I am so supportive of the bill as one of the best starts in dealing with this issue.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down. Thanks.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, did you have a point that you wanted to make or a question to ask under 29(2)(a), or are you satisfied?

Mr. Lukaszuk: No. I think I've heard enough, Mr. Speaker.

Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, let us move on then to Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For some reason something comes to mind about why people go to NASCAR races, to see the car wrecks. I think we've just had an example of that.

This is an interesting time in the history of our province, Mr. Speaker. The third different governing Premier presented a Speech from the Throne, over a six-year period without a change in reigning party. That's got to be some kind of record. To paraphrase P.T. Barnum, who was obviously wrong, apparently you can fool all the people all the time or at least enough of them to form a majority government.

But all kidding aside I think we can feel the sense of relief here in Alberta and in this House. The Wildrose helped expose a number of embarrassing facts that proved the necessity of a new leader across the floor. I know that all Albertans are grateful to us; they just have a funny way of showing it in by-elections. Seriously, though, we all know that things couldn't carry on the way they were, with the significant waste, entitlement, and disconnect between the government and the taxpayers.

We know that no matter how red a Tory your leader may be, it has to be a whole lot better than what we've endured over the past six years. Alberta couldn't really wait till the next general election to have some of these serious issues of waste and mismanagement addressed. In his first action our new Premier demonstrated his willingness to think outside the PC box and borrowed some good ideas from the Wildrose playbook. The government air fleet is gone, and the associated waste and misuse has ended.

The Premier acknowledged that we still live in Wild Rose Country, saving millions on unnecessarily removing that pesky reminder and free advertising of the Official Opposition on every licensed vehicle in our province. [interjections] You don't think that was a factor? I'm sure I wasn't the only one who was glad for many reasons that the Alberta Party wasn't the Official Opposition, or the over-the-hill, out-of-touch gang may have suggested removing the name of our own province from the licence plates.

In an acknowledgment of the burden of bureaucracy our new Premier set up another layer of it to help small-business people figure out which department is making their lives the most miserable, under the guise of: "Hi. I'm from the government, and I'm here to help you." I wonder: were existing personnel redeployed or new ones hired? Was someone promoted to become the manager? Does she or he have a secretary and an assistant?

I'm sure we can expect to see other Wildrose ideas borrowed, repackaged, and claimed as original. But we're okay with that because it's not about who gets the credit; it's about doing what's right for all Albertans, and that's what Wildrose is all about.

We see now a new bill addressing the issue of property rights, one of the three core universal rights, a right that was stunningly left out of the repatriated Constitution. Criticism has already befallen this new Premier's Bill 1. Hopefully, he will support and implement Motion 501 from my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka. It will in concurrence with Lethbridge MP Jim Hillyer's private member's bill in our federal Parliament amend the Constitution for Alberta and entrench property rights.

This right has been a protected, cherished right and acknowledged in common law as inalienable since 1215, at the signing of the Magna Carta, a right that has been legislatively trampled on by iterations of our government with full knowledge and little respect: Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act; Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act; and more recently Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act.

Let's take a few moments to consider just a few of the costs and problems of this calculated regulatory taking. Under Bill 19, now scheduled and announced to be gone, the government gave itself the right to freeze Albertans' land indefinitely, restricting rightful owners even from building a garage on their own property. I commend the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for his tireless efforts in lobbying against that bill.

Under Bill 24 the government stripped Albertans of the historic right to control the pore space under their soil, which can be a major source of revenue for those who lease their underground for gas storage, for example.

Although Bill 50 was repealed, it was too late. Damage had already been done under this nightmare legislation to the tune of $16 billion plus and counting, and new power lines, many of them believed to be unnecessary, went through with no public hearings or needs assessment.

Bill 36, the worst of all, tells Albertans loudly and clearly that the government has no issue with tearing up water licences, grazing leases, natural resource leases, and much more simply because the minister may feel like it.

Of course, all this comes without the right to compensation or appeal for Albertans who are victims of these terrible policies and with no access to courts. Let me illustrate. Keith Wilson uses the example of a dairy farm owned by a family who holds the title to the land; a confined feeding operation, approval issued by the Natural Resources Conservation Board; and a water licence. Bill 36 calls the latter two rights statutory consents. It used to be the case that confined feeding operation approvals could only be rescinded under certain circumstances such as the surrender of the approval or the sale or the abandonment of the land. Well, the government argues that by rescinding these statutory consents, this family's title to the land is not affected. It's obvious that that farming operation will no longer be viable without them, which violates the exploitation component of property rights. Without the protection of statutory consents there cannot be a functional economy.

According to Mr. Wilson under the new land-use framework the government can decide what Albertans can and cannot do on private land in a way that has never been seen before in Alberta and possibly in any parliamentary democracy. It used to be that Albertans, like most people in free societies, were able to do whatever they wanted on their land as long as no activities were generally harmful. Now Albertans may only conduct activities on their land that achieve specific outcomes determined by cabinet, and even if that overturns something the government had explicitly permitted, either yesterday or generations ago, you have no guarantees for compensation.

Let me tell you about my friend Sharon Unger. She and her husband built a lovely home overlooking a picturesque valley with an unobstructed view of the Rocky Mountains. A couple of years ago they were in a position where they needed to sell their house. They had received a market value offer, but it was withdrawn when the purchasers discovered something that they themselves didn't know. AltaLink was considering the construction of transmission lines right across the valley and their beautiful view. Attempts to get a definitive answer from AltaLink on which of the three possible routes being considered was the one fell on deaf ears. She was desperate. The Property Rights Advocate was unable to help. To this day this injustice remains unresolved. This multibillion-dollar company, guaranteed a 9-plus per cent return on all its costs by this government, could have bought this house with petty cash and added it to the expenses and boosted its own profits.

Why is this right fundamental to all Albertans, no matter where they live or how they earn a living? What is property? Everything you own. You worked hard for your money. It's a tangible representation of the value society and the free market placed on your time, talents, and energy. You use it to purchase food, clothing, shelter, transportation, entertainment, escape, whatever. Whose stuff is all that? Easy answer – duh – it's yours.

Should you be allowed to enjoy the fruits of your labours? Should there be restrictions on your use and enjoyment? Well, no matter what the speedometer on your car says, for safety's sake, yours and others, there are some limits.

But what about real property? Well, you can't build your house too close to your neighbours or the sidewalk or have view-obstructing trees or fences on a corner lot, and so on. Maybe the style is restricted by the community or neighbourhood association. But these rules are all in place, or if changes are contemplated, you have a right to a say about it or the courts for redress or appeal.

What if the government said you could no longer access water or sewer lines? Would that affect your use and enjoyment?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House now must stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Holy and Great Creator, guide us in our discussions, our deliberations, and in our actions that they might exemplify what a democratic system looks like in its finest hour. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parenthetically, I'd like to complain about the e-mail distribution centre that had only me getting the "wear native full costume" e-mail today. But thanks anyway.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I'm very, very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of my guests. I'll start with the guests that are seated in the Speaker's gallery, but if you wish, I can go on to those that are also seated in the – we'll go with the Speaker's gallery first.

Mr. Speaker, it's my very great pleasure today to introduce, here to support my statement on the 25th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall, the honorary consul for the Federal Republic of Germany from the Calgary office, Herr Hubertus Liebrecht, and his son Alexander. I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you. Others will be introduced shortly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin now with school groups, starting with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you 48 students from Julia Kiniski elementary school, located in your constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Dale Mandryk and Ms Suzi Vladimirov, and parent helpers Mr. Doug Herbert, Mrs. Melissa Poppe, and Mrs. Cindy Dunphy. They are sitting in the members' gallery. I ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two school groups to introduce. The first one is from St. James Catholic elementary school. There are about 35 visitors here, I believe in both galleries. Amongst the teaching assistants and also the teachers and parents are Mr. Robert Harris, Mrs. Sheila Janki, Mr. Raymond Bradshaw, and Ms Jacqueline Fabian. I wonder if those students and visitors from St. James could stand up and receive a welcome from the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition – I appreciate that, doing two – from St. Gabriel school, a school that is about four blocks away from my home, we have Mr. Guy Knight and Miss Louise Kermath with 19 St. Gabriel school students as well. I wonder if they could stand and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other school groups?

If not, let us revert to Introduction of Visitors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jim McPherson. Jim was elected as an MLA for the constituency of Red Deer in 1982, which was the last election in which Red Deer was represented by a single MLA. Jim jokes that it now takes two of us to keep up with the work that he was doing. Jim continues to be a champion for our community and in 2012 was named the city of Red Deer citizen of the year. A chartered life underwriter, chartered financial consultant, and chartered financial planner, Jim is here today with the group from Advocis, meeting with members of this Assembly. Jim has obviously risen. Please provide the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

The Speaker: Let us move on. I guess we're back to Vermilion-Lloydminster for the continuation of your guests.

Dr. Starke : Yes. Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you several members of Alberta's German community who have joined us here today to provide support to my member's statement on the fall of the Berlin Wall. You'll notice they did get the memo, so this is just great. I'd like to first of all introduce Oswald Serlach, the prince, and Joan Armstrong, the princess, of the Mardi Gras Carnival festival put on by the Blauen Funken. I'd also like to introduce Ole Berger, the president of the Blauen Funken, and a long-time member of the Blauen Funken, Harald Bodenberger, who was born in the city of Berlin.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, it's my very great pleasure to introduce Karl Weidle, the president of the Victoria Soccer Club, 1st DFC, a long-time dominant club in club soccer, and I think Mr. Weidle has been president of that club for over 25 years; a good friend to many in the Assembly, Arnim Joop, the publisher of the Albertaner, the German-language newspaper; Arnim is behind me – excellent – and Karl as well; and other members of the German community that I'll ask to rise as I say their names: Horst Fleischhauer, Sylvia Kiel, Marvin Schaaf, Reiss Kruger, Elaine Monk, Wolfgang Haupt, Nadja Kunze, and Madeleine Streich.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all members join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests Soraya Zaki Hafez and Maria Syed from the Canadian Council of Muslim Women. The CCMW is a national organization started 32 years ago in Edmonton by the late Dr. Lila Fahlman. She travelled across Canada to promote the idea of empowering Canadian Muslim women and giving them the tools to be active members of Canadian society.

Sitting with my guests from the CCMW is Ms Zarqa Nawaz, who was the producer and director of the CBC series Little Mosque on the Prairie. She's recently released a book entitled Laughing All the Way to the Mosque.

I would like to ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm blessed in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar to have Metro college's English as a second language program very close to my constituency office. I wanted to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of students from Metro college accompanied by their instructor and teacher, Cheryl Thomas, who is always very engaged in the community with these students. I believe they're seated in both galleries, and I would like to have those students and Cheryl Thomas stand up and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, please.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly three guests here in recognition of the flags of remembrance initiative, developed and hosted by Veterans Voices of Canada. On October 25, 2014, Veterans Voices of Canada provided Albertans with an opportunity to pay tribute and recognize the strength and sacrifice of Canadian armed forces men and women. One hundred and sixteen Canadian flags were displayed along highway 11 east of Sylvan Lake, and each one represented over 1,000 Canadian soldiers.

With pride I would like to ask my guests, who are seated in the members' gallery, to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names: Mr. Allan Cameron, founding CEO and president, Veterans Voices of Canada; my military hero, who I sponsored for the flags of remembrance, Warrant Officer (Retired) John Hofman, Canadian Army regular force and Canadian Army reserve force; Mrs. Josephine Hofman, married to Warrant Officer (Retired) John Hofman for 39 years. Heartfelt thanks and best wishes to these outstanding Albertans. Lest we forget. I would now ask the Assembly to please join me in providing the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am an Albertan, and I am proud of it. I am proud that we routinely lead the nation in economic growth, I am proud that we as a people volunteer more time and donate more dollars to charity than any other province in Canada, and I am proud that we have the lowest tax regime in the entire country. We have no sales tax, no payroll tax, no capital tax, and no health premiums. That is indeed something to be proud of.

It puts us a cut above the rest of the country and indeed most of the world in economic freedom and opportunity.

The funny thing, Mr. Speaker, is that despite this wonderfully low tax environment Alberta collects more tax revenue from its citizens on a per capita basis than any other province in Canada, and there's a reason for this. Low taxes drive economic growth and job creation, which, in turn, leads to more people paying taxes.

I want to reiterate what the Wildrose has always stood by, that our low tax environment is our single greatest competitive edge and that it must be preserved at all costs. However, once again it appears that that competitive edge is under threat. With oil diving towards $70 a barrel, there's all kinds of speculation that our new Premier is in the market for more money. It seems there is a belief that if the government only had more money to spend, everything would be all right.

Now, the Premier wasn't around for this, but his government couldn't pay for everything it did when oil was at $100 a barrel without going into debt. I think he needs to consider that perhaps more revenue isn't the answer. Mr. Speaker, it's time for us to ditch the tax talk and start living within our considerable means. That means not reflexively spending every dollar that we happen to come into possession of, that means setting annual spending limits and prioritizing those funds accordingly, and it means identifying areas of wasteful spending and eliminating them. That's the Wildrose plan, and it's the plan that's right for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Energy Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the U.S. Senate rejected the approval of the Keystone XL pipeline. Though there will be inevitably another vote on the matter, with a new Republican majority in the Senate, early next year, such a bill is likely to be vetoed by President Obama.

The government is clearly disappointed in this development, but it provides an opportunity to rethink the policy of exporting unprocessed bitumen and consider adopting a value-added strategy for our resources. We need to refine and upgrade products right here in Alberta instead of shipping raw resources and the jobs that go with them down pipelines to Texas. Pipelines and extraction produce relatively few good, long-term jobs. Upgrading and refining, by contrast, produce lots of high-paying and permanent jobs. A recent feasibility study concluded that upgrading bitumen in Alberta could increase the province's GDP by $6 billion a year and create 18,000 new jobs.

Peter Lougheed challenged Albertans to think like owners. That means not only adding value but ensuring that we receive a fair share of royalties for the resources which we all own together. Under Lougheed Alberta set a goal of receiving 30 per cent of the value of the resources in royalties and taxes and sometimes exceeded that. The PC government is currently collecting 9 per cent, which is less than under the Social Credit government.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, since the days of Ralph Klein we have been warning that unless Alberta took its environmental obligations seriously, it would become increasingly difficult to find markets for our energy products. If this government is serious about improving Alberta's access to markets, Alberta needs environmental strategies that are more than just press releases and trips to Washington. Words need to be followed by real actions.

Like Premier Lougheed, New Democrats stand for adding value, making sure we get our fair share, and high standards of environmental stewardship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Fall of the Berlin Wall 25th Anniversary

Dr. Starke: [Remarks in German] Most honoured Mr. Speaker of the Assembly, 10 days ago, on the 9th of November, the entire world marked one of the most important and unforgettable events in our world history, the destruction of the Berlin Wall.

To the world the wall was the most obvious symbol of the tension between East and West during the Cold War, but for Germans and people of German ancestry it meant even more for the wall was a false border, a chasm that cruelly divided friends and families. Through high-risk escape attempts thousands managed to reach freedom in the West. About 200 lost their lives in the attempt.

For 28 years the wall stood, abhorred and mute testimony of the oppression of eastern Europe. For this reason, the whole world celebrated the destruction of the wall but nowhere more so than in Berlin.

Thousands of Germans, including my parents in the '50s, emigrated to Alberta. They sought freedom, peace, and freedom from fear and found it here. Many Albertans of German heritage have made significant contributions to our province: Horst Schmid, Reinhard Mühlenfeld, and former Premiers William Aberhart and Ralph Klein. Widely known as people who promote a love of life and friendliness, we celebrate festivals like Carnival and Oktoberfest, and we are especially proud and prominent when we cheer on the German team during their frequent successes at the World Cup of soccer.

Mr. Speaker, the fall of the Berlin Wall was a genuine triumph not just for Germans but for the collective world humanity. It is a great honour for me to deliver this statement fully in German. To you and to my colleagues for their forbearance, I say a heartfelt thank you. [As submitted]

The Speaker: [Remarks in German] Thank you sincerely, and welcome, everyone. [As submitted]

Thank you for providing the English translation, which will appear in Hansard so that everyone can grasp the full gravity of that comment.

We'll move on to the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognized at least six of those words.

Value-added Energy Industries

Mr. Quest: It's an honour to rise and recognize today Alberta's Industrial Heartland. Alberta has been blessed with an abundance of natural resources, attracting global investors.

In 2013 the energy sector accounted for 74 per cent of Alberta's exports, producing nearly a quarter of the province's GDP. This translates into over $82 billion for Alberta. The royalties we earn from the energy sector, of course, support the many programs and services that we enjoy here in Alberta and contribute greatly to the overall high quality of life that we enjoy.

The petrochemical and refining sector is a major component of Alberta's economy and our second-largest export product.

Exporting products that are further up the value chain offers Albertans improved resource royalties, a larger tax base, increased skilled jobs, and a better proportion of higher value product exports.

Despite this, crude oil currently makes up 62 per cent of our province's energy exports. In order to maximize the value from our natural resources, it's essential that we produce value-added exports, and this is best achieved through the use of integrated hydrocarbon processing clusters. Comprised of interconnected businesses, suppliers, and institutions, a processing cluster provides improved synergies, reduced capital and operation costs, and a stable labour force over the long term.

Alberta has been a real model for implementing successful value-added policies that make sense, from Peter Lougheed's original programs to the recent incremental ethane extraction program, that has resulted in over $3.5 billion in new investment in our province. These developments fuel a strong and diversified economy. Developments like the North West upgrader will help maximize the value of Alberta's bitumen resources by a range of cleaner, high-value products such as ultra-low-sulphur diesel and diluents.

We do face stiff competition in a very competitive market from all over the globe. Mr. Speaker, we just need to be aware and make sure that we continue to support in our policies value-added industry in Alberta.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First main set of questions. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I began the Premier's first question period by asking him the first question I asked Premier Redford. Unfortunately for Albertans, the new management is no better on fiscal matters than the old management. Let's see if the Premier has a clearer answer now that he's had a night to think about it. To the Premier: how will his government get out of the budget hole caused by oil heading down to $70 a barrel? Will we see more debt, more taxes, or both?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member's statement applauding the fiscal and competitive position of Alberta and the incredible achievements in terms of our tax advantages and competitive advantages, and I agree with her entirely. So I certainly assure her that in the week ahead she will see a fiscal update from the Minister of Finance which maintains that tradition, and I hope that she will be equally enthusiastic in supporting the ongoing work of this government.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier also made the point that Albertans have overall low taxes, but the implication seems to be that he has room to increase them. That's troubling. Since he's giving Albertans all sorts of mixed signals on this, I think some clarity is in order. Does the Premier believe his government has a spending problem that requires more discipline or a revenue problem that requires more taxes?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only confusion on this matter, I think, is from the side opposite. Albertans are already the lowest-taxed citizens in this country. As the hon. member said herself in her opening statement, this is a subject of enormous pride to all of us as Albertans. Our low taxes put us at an incredible competitive advantage. We'll continue to invest, as we have promised, in the priorities of Albertans – that includes health, it includes taking care of senior citizens, and it includes the construction of new schools – but we will maintain our low tax advantage and no sales tax in this province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, clarity does not seem to be the Premier's strong suit. Albertans are proud of the tax structure we have in Alberta. Here in Alberta a dollar is a dollar and is taxed like a dollar and at a reasonable 10 per cent single rate of tax. It is one of the ways in which Alberta leads. It is, in fact, what has resulted in allowing us to have more per capita revenue from personal income tax than any other province. Here is an easy question for the Premier. Will he commit right here, right now that his government will keep the 10 per cent single rate for personal income tax?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government's fiscal update will be delivered next week. The government's commitment relative to this fiscal year is very clear, and the government is on target in terms of achieving the fiscal expectations that have been put forward to Albertans. Albertans, as I say, expect prudence. They expect discipline. They expect spending discipline from their government. Every single Albertan understands that we are in a low-price environment for oil, $75 per barrel or thereabouts. They expect discipline from their government in these circumstances, and they will see that.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition leader.

Ms Smith: I guess we'll try to get a clearer answer tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

School Modular Construction in Calgary-Elbow

Ms Smith: Yesterday I asked the Premier about progress as well. You see, he declared that Albertans should judge his government on the progress it made. He also declared that Albertans should judge his government on integrity. Last month the Education minister used his position to fast-track modular schools in the constituency that he was seeking a seat in. Even his campaign manager admitted it was done to win the seat. Does the Premier think that this is an act worthy of his high standards of integrity?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is simply wrong in her assertions. The minister has been responding to the needs of Albertans in the clearest of terms. He has been listening to Albertans. He was listening to individuals in a number of constituencies relative to the need for modular schools and other school construction in communities that need them. The hon. member should simply look to the response from stakeholders across this province about the progress that has been made in terms of listening by this minister.

Ms Smith: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Education minister was hardly forthcoming on how that decision was made. He dutifully stuck to his talking points, no doubt provided to him by the Premier's office, when he was asked tough questions. But Albertans deserve more than canned answers. They deserve the truth. To the Education minister: how did he decide that modulars for a school in the constituency where he was seeking a seat was a higher priority than the six other projects ahead of it on the priority list?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, we are responding to the interests and the concerns of parents. One of the member's colleagues sitting behind her wrote me a letter in the middle of the election campaign asking for support for modulars to be approved in his particular riding for the particular school that he was concerned about. It was for the same reason that modulars were approved for that school. When parents had a desperate need, they were approved for the school that the member opposite mentioned and every other school that we've approved modulars for.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. leader, final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was asking about the constituency of Calgary-Elbow, and I don't think I got an answer to that question.

In the throne speech we were told that the role of government is to serve Albertans honourably, respectfully, and ethically. I think Albertans will be hard-pressed to view the Education minister's actions with regard to these particular modulars as honourable, respectful, and ethical. The Premier said that Albertans should judge his government by the integrity it has shown. To the Premier: is this the kind of government he's going to run, where projects only get built when there are elections to be won?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is simply wrong. We are responding to what parents are saying are priorities for their children. The member opposite's colleague wrote this particular letter and in the letter said, "I am writing to request information and action to address the . . . badly needed portables in this province." That's exactly what the parents in Calgary were asking for, the members of Rocky View were asking for, the parents across the province have been asking for, and that's exactly what we have been responding to.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for her third and final set of questions.

Ms Smith: That's another question we'll have to go back to again tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Landowner Property Rights Legislation

Ms Smith: Yesterday we saw that Bill 1, which was supposed to be a landmark bill, is really just a half-hearted attempt to placate landowners that doesn't get to the real issues of legal recourse and compensation. Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, is a bad law. It should go. But I'm a little perplexed because the Premier has claimed that nobody understands this issue better than he does, having spoken with so many Albertans during the summer about it. My question is a simple one: Did Albertans really tell the Premier that getting rid of just one bad law was enough to protect property rights in this province?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, firstly, speaking of listening to Albertans, I think that letter should be tabled in front of the Legislature.

But let's deal with property rights, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do not want the hon. member opposite to be perplexed, so I certainly hope that they will find their way clear to support Bill 1. If they do so, it will be the end of the land assembly act, which in their own assertions has been an overreaching piece of legislation that is tantamount to de facto expropriation. It's for that reason that Bill 1 has been brought forward, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: The Premier said yesterday that Albertans need not worry about full, fair, and timely compensation when the government takes their property because such matters are regulated by the Alberta Expropriation Act and the Surface Rights Act. Is the Premier aware that his government has passed several laws such as the Land Stewardship Act that override the compensation provisions of these two laws and that that is precisely why property rights need more protection in this province?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the most extreme circumstances in which a landowner can be deprived of their property rights is, in fact, the land assembly act, which is a resuscitation of provisions which were taken out of the Department of the Environment Act many years ago, quite properly so, that amounted to constructive expropriation or de facto expropriation. It's for that reason that the land assembly act is being removed.

In terms of the Land Stewardship Act it actually confers rights upon a landowner which are supplementary to the rights that a landowner has under the Expropriation Act, and I would not have repealed it on that basis.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly not how landowners see it, and I'm sure they'll be telling the Premier so.

I asked the Premier to demonstrate his sincerity on this issue by supporting the motion of the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka which would entrench property rights in the Constitution and guarantee full, fair, and timely compensation. As I pointed out yesterday, this motion is on the Order Paper. Surely by now the Premier has had time to read it. Will he support it?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll certainly speak to that motion when it is put forward in the House and we have an opportunity to examine it and examine all of the specific recommendations that have been made relative to the Expropriation Act and to the Constitution.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Menthol Cigarettes

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Medical Association now supports including menthol in the ban on flavoured tobacco. The Health minister says that they're entitled to their opinion. Well, their opinion is also shared by the World Health Organization, the Canadian Medical Association, the Heart and Stroke Foundation, the Canadian Cancer Society, Action on Smoking and Health, and even this Assembly, which approved Bill 206 in the first place. To the Premier: whom do you agree with, these expert organizations or your novice Minister of Health, who refuses to include menthol in the ban?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have two priorities when it comes to tobacco: first of all, protecting children – and we've done that by eliminating a variety of smoking in cars, sizes of packages, various flavoured tobaccos – as well as making sure that we align ourselves with the rest of the country.

Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: I guess they want to lead by following again, Mr. Speaker.

If the opinion of experts wasn't enough, I question why this supposedly new management team is also ignoring the advice of its own Health ministry, Alberta Health Services, chief medical officer of health as well as the former Health minister and the associate minister of wellness, all of whom recommended a complete ban on all flavoured tobacco, including menthol cigarettes. The minister is still looking for a second opinion, apparently. To the Health minister: the facts are in. Who else do you need to consult?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, when we reviewed these particular regulations, we looked at the possibility of banning a variety of other products. The fact of the matter is that tobacco is a legal product, people do have the right to use menthol, and we believe public rights do prevail on this issue.

Dr. Sherman: And the majority of the old management team actually voted to ban it.

Mr. Speaker, they say that birds of a feather flock together. The Health minister's former campaign manager and his former chief of staff, who's now the Premier's principal secretary, both have close ties to tobacco lobbyists, yet the minister claims that he's never met them. Clearly, health policy is being set by lobbyists and not health experts. To the Minister of Health: whom is the Minister of Health working for, our children or big tobacco?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we're working for children.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we rose last spring, this government over there had a problem with integrity, so much so that we have a bill coming forward to deal with it. But that bill will not address a problem that arises from the spectre of an Education minister who queue-jumps for political reasons on a decisions around modularity. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier understand that by his failure to deal with his Education minister's conduct during the by-elections, his caucus's integrity problem is now his integrity problem?

Mr. Dirks: I fundamentally disagree with the member opposite. The concern of Albertans is that we respond to the needs of parents in our fast-growing communities and in particular in areas of our cities. Whether it's Calgary, whether it's Westgate school, whether it's William Reid school, whether it's in Rocky View at East Lake school, all of these communities need additional modularity to respond to growing enrolment pressures. That's exactly what parents want the Education minister to respond to, and that's exactly what we've done, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba and Saskatchewan both have election laws that would prohibit the kind of government spending that went on during the by-elections, that was done by your Education minister. My question to the Premier is: to regain integrity and trust with Alberta voters, will he commit to amending our elections law so that this can't ever happen again, and if he won't commit to it, why won't he?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can certainly understand why with the member opposite the by-elections are a sore topic.

Moving forward, Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear in terms of ethics and ethical accountability. I've indicated that we will be bringing forward ethics legislation in this House that will deal with accountability, entitlements, and will make very specific provisions relative to the matters that people have been concerned about in this province.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Education. He talks about receiving letters from families around the province. Well, the fact of the matter is that families around the province have been writing to this government over and over and over about how they don't have modulars and portables where they need them, yet only Calgary-Elbow received the by-election bonus. So why will you not explain to this Assembly how you made that decision? Alberta voters deserve to hear the explanation.

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the second time I have to say that the member opposite is entirely wrong. Portables have been approved for a number of schools in Calgary – William Reid, Westgate – and Rocky View. Across the province we have been responding to the growing enrolment pressures and the capital needs that parents expect us to respond to. Ensuring that we have a quality education system is on the top of the marquee of our priorities for this government, and we're going to continue to respond as Albertans would wish us to.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Those are the first five main questions. I'd appreciate your cooperation to please curtail any preambles to supplementals from here on in so we can get more members up with their important questions.

Let's start with Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-North West.

Municipal Charter Framework Agreement

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has taken cities on a roller coaster ride over the past few years. They've had four – four – ministers of Municipal Affairs in the past year alone, and they've signed not one but two MOUs promising to deliver a big-city charter. Now, the second MOU does offer a bit more clarity, specifically around revenue sources, stating, "A key element going forward will be consideration of the adequacy and form of current revenue streams." To the Premier: everyone knows a revenue stream is simply a code for a tax, so what new revenue streams are being considered?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on this. We're very happy to have very early, within 21 days, in our mandate with our new Premier and under new management signed a charter framework with both Edmonton and Calgary that, I have to say, they are very happy about. This brings us to be able to move forward with the charter and into three different phases. I'm sure we'll have another question, and I'll be able to explain those phases for the hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: And I look forward to hearing the talking points that the Premier's office provided her.

The most recent MOU also states that this relationship will ensure that the cities are provided with new and/or enhanced economic tools: more code for taxes. Can the Premier clarify what this means if it isn't referring to more taxes for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The two big-city mayors have really been very happy to see us signing this city framework. Phase 1 will address matters specific to the two cities and Municipal Affairs by the spring of 2015. In phase 2 we will address matters between the two cities, Municipal Affairs, and any other GOA ministry that we want to chat about with them. Then and only then phase 3 will address the development of a new fiscal framework for the two cities by 2016.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're all adults here. Mr. Premier, can you just stand up and tell this House one way or the other: will the new city charter framework, that you proudly claim to have signed with our cities, involve new taxation powers for Calgary and Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we have three different phases. You won't know what that will look like until we've actually gone through the consultation, the respectful consultation we'll have with our two big-city mayors on the phases that they've talked about, phases 1 and 2, making sure that they have the chance to talk crossministerially, and then, finally, as they brought forward these phases in order, which those two big cities did, we'll look at revenue or fiscal framework, but not until then.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

School Construction

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I was so excited to hear about news of a middle school that was going to be built in the community of Royal Oak in Calgary-North West. I often actually drive by that site and say: I can't wait. But I do wait and wait. I'm wondering if I can pose this question to the Minister of Infrastructure. How much longer am I and the people who live in Calgary-North West going to have to wait for that middle school?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Upon becoming the Minister of Infrastructure, I was actually quite surprised to learn that the first year to year and a half of the time that it takes to construct a school is actually doing things like design work and permitting. Those are things that I choose to change. We want to close the time frame. We want to get that work done sooner, but we need work and consultation with our school board partners, with our municipalities. I don't think it's acceptable to have five-, six-, eight-month delays for building permits, and we're going to work to address this issue.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I'm just wondering if the minister can help me a little bit with the math. First of all, how many schools were promised, and how many bums are in seats right now?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, of the 35 schools that were promised in 2011, 31 of those students occupy today. Of the four remaining schools one of them had issues with respect to the Calgary flood, two of them had site problems and environmental challenges that had to be rectified, and the last one is a school being used by two jurisdictions and one college, and therefore they required more time to work on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Minister.

Ms Jansen: Finally, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I'm just wondering, and I think that the people of Calgary-North West would like to know this: at what stage are we in the development of the schools? Considering the schools like mine, we still have empty plots of land. Have the designs been done? Are the bulldozers ready? Where are we?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that at present, of our 230 school projects, as I said, 31 of them are complete. Of phase 2 we have 11 schools that are under construction today, 78 in the planning stage, 52 undergoing the design work, and 56 that have gone out to tender. So we still expect that these schools in phase 2 will be complete by 2016. For some of the high schools it takes six to eight months longer to construct, so in 2017 they will be done.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Small-business Regulations

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most common request we receive in our constituency offices is for help navigating the halls of bureaucracy, whether it's AHS, with its eight layers of management, or finding someone willing and able to provide clear, honest answers to a request about the prioritized status of a promised project. The government completed a study on reducing regulations and red tape, but we've seen little positive action. Will the minister please advise us when we may expect this to improve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister – which minister are you going toward, please?

Mr. Bikman: Whoever is supposed to be doing this. Probably nobody.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. The province is very dynamic in delivering its services. As a result of that, buildings are built, they're renovated, they're changed, and it takes time to put programs in place. As a result of that, I can't give the hon. member any specifics about what's happening in his particular area, but we are trying as of now to reduce the red tape in Alberta Health Services so that we can deal with the people of his constituency and all the other ones in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The absence of someone responsible for doing this is an answer itself, isn't it?

Given that it's been nearly three years since the report came out, can someone advise us on just how many fewer regulations we now have, remembering to include all the ones that have been added since the report was written?

The Speaker: Hon. member, it is customary to direct your question to a specific person although any front-bencher can answer.

Mr. Bikman: Well, it would be nice to know who.

The Speaker: Is there someone who wishes to answer? The Premier, please.

Mr. Prentice: Certainly. The hon. member may have missed this, but in fact there was a very important announcement made about five weeks, six weeks ago relative to the small-business strategy by the minister of innovation and myself that dealt quite specifically with red tape, the reduction of red tape, introducing a new portal that would allow small businesses in this province to deal with exactly the problem that the hon. member is raising, which is accessing readily government information, avoiding red tape, and getting quickly to the bottom line, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bikman: I read and received that, Mr. Speaker, and thought it was good news, but I have some questions about it. Given that if just half of the unnecessary and redundant rules were torched, I suspect we'd have a three-alarm fire, does anyone over there have a goal and a timeline for meaningful, substantive reductions in regulations and red tape, and if so, where can we find the list of the rules and regulations that are headed for the shredder?

Mr. Scott: Thank you for the question. I think you need to get your facts right. We are in fact working with Albertans to make sure that they have the best access to information. The small-business strategy was a perfect example of that. Any Albertan can go and within three clicks get the information they need. That's why Alberta is such a great place to run a small business. That's the kind of work that we on this side of the House are doing, and we are going to continue to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Calgary Area Flood Mitigation

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three flood mitigation projects are currently under consideration by our government to protect the city of Calgary from flooding in the future. The status of these projects is of particular importance to the residents of Banff-Cochrane, particularly Bragg Creek, who suffered the devastating effects of the 2013 flooding of the Elbow River. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: is it your department's intention to proceed with the Springbank room for the river project on a priority basis, and if so, what was the rationale?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for that question. We are moving on the Springbank room for the river project after 17 months of consideration of different projects. We are moving under the leadership of this Premier on this project because at this point in time it is the most actionable project that we have looked at over the last 17 months to provide the necessary and sufficient protection for Calgary communities from flooding.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why was the McLean Creek project not given priority as it would have mitigated the flood risk of Bragg Creek and Redwood Meadows as well as the city of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. While we continue to do a more in-depth review of the environmental implications of that project, preliminary indications have shown us that there are significant environmental challenges with that project, which would really increase the timeline it would take to actually implement that project. Our Premier was very clear. He wanted us to move to protect the communities of Calgary, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if McLean Creek does not proceed, then what is the long-term plan to protect Bragg Creek and Redwood Meadows?

Mr. Fawcett: Well, Mr. Speaker, again a very good question. Our flood mitigation strategy has multiple layers of protection for communities, one of which is that we're working with Rocky View county to follow up on recommendations made by AMEC, who was the consultant that worked on that watershed, to build about $6 million worth of dykes and berms in that community. We've provided them a grant of $880,000 to do that, and we will be providing the money for those projects, when that study is complete, through the Alberta community resiliency program.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The government has for years given the excuse that they can't do anything more to reduce greenhouse gas emissions because it would make Alberta less competitive with the U.S., and putting out a media release today reannouncing a program that's been in place since 2009 is a perfect example. Well, now both U.S. and China have signed a joint agreement to curb and reduce carbon emissions, so the ball is in our court. To the environment minister: has this joint agreement made any difference in the specifics or timelines for Alberta reducing greenhouse gas emissions, anything at all?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the matter of greenhouse gas emissions reduction is important to all of us. It's certainly important to a province such as ours which is in the energy business and which produced in excess of 2.6 million barrels of oil per day over the course of this year. So we need to be careful that we balance protecting the environment, on the one hand, with our economy, on the other. Certainly, the government is very focused on environmental action, on being a leader with respect to these issues. We are reviewing the agreement that's been reached between the Americans and the Chinese with interest, and at this point the timelines and the goals and objectives are clear but not the specifics.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, back to either the Premier or the environment minister. I mean, given that this government loves to talk about instituting the first carbon levy, but first isn't best anymore, and given that talk about a 40 per cent or $40 plan went the way of the sky palace and given that the government has already said that there will be no movement on intensity of emissions or the levy, is there anything new for climate change under this new management, under this new Premier?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly encourage the hon. member opposite to take more pride in the policies that we have in Alberta. She refers to the first carbon levy. In fact, the architecture of the industrial emitters policy that we have in the province of Alberta has been emulated in the province of British Columbia with respect to their carbon policies for their new LNG projects. It's also being followed in Saskatchewan. In fact, if you talk to Americans, they are looking at the specific architecture that we have in our province as a model.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, but BC's is actually a carbon tax, and everyone pays it. We're not looking very good on that side.

So back to the Premier or the environment minister: I mean, really, does this government, this minister not understand that Alberta's lack of success in finding access to markets for our oil is a direct result of their inaction on climate change and reducing greenhouse gas emissions? It has an effect.

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct. I'm not talking about a consumer carbon tax; that's the province of that particular party. I'll let them deal with that. From my perspective I am speaking about industrial carbon levies. The carbon levy that we assess in Alberta has become the model for the LNG policy that's being followed by the government of British Columbia and also the government of Saskatchewan. So in terms of large industrial emitters Alberta has been leading the way for many years. The policies that we've put in place are being adhered to and followed across North America.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this week is National Bullying Awareness Week, and there's much talk about creating safe spaces. It's time for action. Gay-straight alliances, or GSAs, are student-driven, school-based groups that promote welcoming, caring, respectful, safe, and inclusive learning environments for sexual and gender minority students and their allies. To the Minister of Education: will you commit to ensuring that students who wish to form a GSA in their school will not be prevented by schools or their administrators?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, we are deeply committed to, certainly, the safe, respectable learning environments in our schooling system. There is no room for intolerance in our education system. The hon. member is obviously referring to the private member's bill that will be brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. We look forward to seeing that bill. I fully support gay-straight alliances in our schools. We are also respectful and mindful of the particular constitutional jurisdiction of school boards in this province.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that generic antibullying clubs don't go far enough to protect LGBTQ students and ensure that schools are safe spaces and given that there are schools in Alberta that have codes of conduct which discriminate against students based on their sexual orientation and which do not allow students to form GSAs, will the minister stop school boards from having a no-GSA policy?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, we certainly look forward to reviewing the bill that has been put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I understand it's on the Order Paper. Clearly, there is no room for intolerance in our education system. The Minister of Education himself has been extremely clear about this. We advocate, we support, and we will fight for at every corner respectful, safe learning environments in our schools.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that students in schools without GSAs are more likely to report low grades, drink alcohol or use drugs, become victims of violence, or seriously consider suicide and given that the evidence proves that GSAs increase self-esteem, school attendance, mental health, and literally save lives, will the minister commit to supporting GSAs in every school where students want them? Yes or no?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, in the clearest of terms, we will commit to safe, dignified, and respectful educational institutions, and that is to ensure that we have no room for intolerance in our school systems, including bullying towards gay and lesbian children. We are fully supportive of gay-straight alliances in our schools, we are mindful of the complexities of this, and we look forward to seeing the specific bill that is put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Feeder Association Loan Guarantee Program

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 28 the Premier released his rural economic development action plan changes to the feeder association loan guarantee program, which will double the maximum individual loan limit to $1 million per feeder. With the increased operating costs this will help with greater capital, but the government has failed to increase the total amount of the guarantee program. Can the minister of agriculture please explain why they have not increased the total loan amount guaranteed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. This feeder association program has a great and grand history in Alberta. It's over 77 years old. It was born in the depths of the Depression, when people needed some help to buy cattle. It has lasted for a long time and has been very successful and very effective in helping our beef producers. It has adapted from time to time, and that's something that we were trying to do when we made the announcement regarding the rural economic development action plan to double up on the individual loan limits.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that over 77 years the ratio has been only .01 per cent for loss versus loan and given that these are not handouts or guarantees, why did the government not increase the total amount of the loan guarantee to help out? Otherwise, we're just cutting into half the people that can get it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would challenge the hon. member. It is, in fact, a guarantee. I spent 30 years as a lawyer counselling people about guarantees. A guarantee is not something that's just symbolic and without legal effect. The person who gives the guarantee, in this case the government of Alberta, is on the hook even though it's not writing the cheque at that time. Being fiscally conservative, we're being very careful about taking on additional obligations like that. This program has been very successful, and it has adapted as it's gone along. We're not at this time ready to increase the guarantee.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, given that the throne speech talked about putting money back in rural Alberta and helping agriculture, I'd really hoped that through some process the President of Treasury Board could increase the guarantee through an order in council. We've seen it happen before. I don't see where the problem would be. Will the Minister of Finance commit to at least an urgent review of this as the end of the year is coming up and this is when most of the cattle sales are?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we are constantly reviewing this. As a matter of fact, the changes that were announced just several weeks ago are the result of consultations with the feeder association. They told us that they wanted more flexibility in their program, and that's what we've provided them. I would also mention that financial institutions who would actually provide the loans to the feeder association have it within their power to also increase their flexibility. We've taken a step in that direction, and we'd certainly like to see financial institutions consider it, but we are continuing in our discussions and our review of this program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Maternal Health Services

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we're all aware, Alberta's population is growing significantly. My constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has certainly experienced that growth at an amplified rate. On average we are now seeing approximately 150 to 160 babies born every month in our single hospital. Recently the MaternityCare Consumers of Alberta Network released a report which outlined several major concerns based on the experiences of more than 1,200 individuals that were surveyed. Given these concerns my question is to the Minister of Health. Given the significant population growth has your ministry measured that impact on the births in our province?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the population of Alberta is growing in an incredibly rapid way, and for babies it's no different. In 2013 we had 53,000 births in the province of Alberta versus 10 years before when we had just barely 40,000. Birth rates in Fort McMurray and Northern Lights have doubled over the last year, and it's making a big difference in the community up there. We need as a province to develop province-wide programs that deal with maternal-infant health plans that are focusing on ensuring that our mothers and their infants are taken care of in an effective way. We will be doing that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Allen: To the same minister: what is the government doing to accommodate that growth in terms of recruiting doctors and hospital capacity?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we are doing that. We're improving the number with a 33 per cent increase in midwives through the rural physician action plan. We're encouraging doctors to get out in the rural areas and encouraging them to participate in programs in northern Alberta. We even had last May midwives start off in La Crête and High Level, so they have their own services now for midwifery. We're trying everything we can.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That leads to my final supplemental. To the same minister: can we actually make more use of midwives; for example, by using community-based birthing centres?

Mr. Mandel: Yes, we can, and I think we need to do everything possible in all areas of the province to make sure that we use all the birthing opportunities we can have with midwives and other opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Hospital Occupancy Rates

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CEO of AHS is on record saying that the best that Albertans can expect are hospitals that are 98 per cent full. The Health Quality Council says that it should never be more than 85 per cent to protect patient safety. To the Minister of Health. This is a serious discrepancy. Continually running hospitals so dangerously close to capacity puts patients, staff, and the entire health care system at risk. What further actions are you going to take to reduce hospital occupancy to levels deemed safe by the Health Quality Council?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago the province of Alberta put in place a program to free up 750 acute-care beds in co-operation with the Minister of Seniors by beginning to build 1,500 new long-term care and continuing care beds. We've also found 446 beds within the system that we can move our acute-care people into. This will open up opportunities within our system to have a greater degree of opportunity for beds for our acute-care needs.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Speaker. Minister, given that ambulances are regularly being told to stay away from the Rockyview hospital in Calgary due to lack of beds even after your so-called emergency measures were implemented, will the minister acknowledge that his plan is not working, and when will you do something to immediately alleviate the severe overcrowding of hospitals across this province?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the program we are putting in place with freeing up the 750 beds will begin to do that. We're looking right now at the acute-care beds and the way we can move patients from emergency rooms into the hospitals. We're looking at a variety of different options. I think that as time progresses, we'll begin to put in place transition beds, which are one way to free up some of the emergency space so that people can get into the hospitals.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, we're weeks away from the peak of a flu season and the pressure it brings, and already the Rockyview is full. The eight beds opened last month are already full. It's at 110 per cent capacity. Patients are being placed in the hallways, patients are being placed in patient lounges, and they're being placed wherever you can stack them. Soon we'll be bringing bunk beds in. Minister, do you understand that overcapacity puts huge pressure on our dedicated health care professionals? What are you going to do to fix it now?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would encourage everybody to get a flu shot. Second of all, we're looking at a variety of ways to invest in hospitals. This is a problem that's been in existence for quite a while. It will not be fixed overnight. We need to work with hospitals like Rockyview and all over the province to increase the number of acute-care beds. We'll be doing that with our plan as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Westgate School Modular Construction

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently this government has responded to overcrowding issues that impact Calgary-Currie. Westgate elementary is to receive eight modulars as students await an alternate site for its Spanish bilingual program. While this is reassuring to know, that this government has committed to investing in new schools and modernizations, some Westgate parents are also concerned that rather than mitigate a current problem, modulars are destined to become a long-term solution. To the Minister of Education: what can you tell the parents of Westgate about the rationale for these eight portables when their worry is that this is simply a Band-Aid solution to a rapidly . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member behind me for the question. Westgate is really a great success story in Calgary. Wonderful programs, bilingual programs there. Growing enrolments, unprecedented growth in that school and across Alberta, ballooning school enrolments. We have had no option but to respond to those, and in consultation with the school board we did provide them with facilities through portables that would respond to those particular needs. We leave it up to the school board to determine best how to use those.

Ms Cusanelli: Again to the same minister: given the transitional nature of modulars as solutions to enrolment pressures, what is the expectation of Westgate modulars once the new site for the Spanish bilingual program is available? Will they remain at Westgate, thereby not alleviating the principal issue of schools in my constituency being over capacity?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the supplemental question. As I indicated, at the Calgary board of education's request we provided these eight modulars for students at Westgate. It's important for students not to be relocated multiple times over a four-year period, and that's why the portables were provided. That being said, it's up to the school board to decide the makeup and the programming at Westgate school. Just how many modular classrooms will remain there at some point in the future remains for the school board to decide. We trust them to make the decision that's in the best interests of those children.

Ms Cusanelli: Lastly, to the Minister of Education: would you be open to decreasing the utilization rate to a lower figure in order to indicate high areas of enrolment sooner?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the question. I'm pleased to say, Mr. Speaker, that work is actively under way to implement a new approach to determining the utilization rate in our schools. This is an important matter for parents and school boards. The new formula focuses on usable space, takes into account nontraditional and emerging school designs. The formula was approved late last year, and since then school jurisdictions' education staff have been working together to examine the smaller scale plans of every school and recalculate their capacities. Work should be completed by January. We'll have more accurate, reliable data that we can use for capital planning then.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Water for Life Program in Central Alberta

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are telling us that this government is failing to meet the water needs of our growing municipalities. For example, the water for life program was established to manage our province's water resources to benefit all Albertans, but due to this government's inability to prioritize the waste-water portion of this program, it has fallen behind in central Alberta. To the Minister of Transportation: what is this government going to do to ensure that the water for life program in central Alberta is brought back on schedule?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to ensuring that all Albertans have access to clean water and reliable drinking water. Budget 2014 allocates a total of $75 million contributing to water for life projects in Alberta, but that budget is way oversubscribed. There are always more requests than there is money.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans are telling us that the government has failed to advance many of these turnkey regional transmission and treatment projects, when will this government start to take seriously the immense growth pressures in central Alberta and work to advance the water for life projects like the central Alberta regional waste-water commission north leg?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, as I said, there are many valuable projects across this province for water and waste-water projects. Right now an AAMD and C convention is going on and meeting with some 20 municipalities. Lots of those municipalities have requests for water, sewer systems. We've granted a couple of new water lines here in the last few weeks, and we'll continue to look at the priorities and balance the requests with the number of dollars we have in our budget.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans in the constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka want to know what other solutions the province can offer now because they are facing issues now. Noting that in most of these areas the preliminary upgrades have already been completed based on your government's promise, when is the government going to fulfill its commitment to this waste-water project?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have met several times with the leaders in the municipalities from Lacombe-Ponoka, and I very much support their efforts in getting that done, but, as I've said, we have limited dollars. There's a balance between the number of dollars and the projects we have. That's a very important project. I'm very hopeful that we'll be able to divert some of the building Canada fund money to the waste-water and the water for life projects, and if we're successful in doing that, we'll be able to complete some of these projects.

Statement by the Speaker

Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. That concludes Oral Question Period.

We'll move on with Members' Statements in a moment, but just two advisories. One, could you please ensure that your supplemental questions are in fact properly phrased questions from the standpoint of being sequitur questions. Yesterday some members wrote to me asking about whether or not some of the sups offered during question period were non sequitur. I ask you all to just bear that in mind. I know you all know that. Also, please curtail the preambles to supplementals. We left several people who had questions today on the altar. They didn't get a chance to get up. That would speed things up as well.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Let's go on to Lethbridge-West, followed by Drumheller-Stettler, for private members' statements.

University of Lethbridge Achievements Medicine Hat Regional Hospital Anniversary

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was studying at the University of Lethbridge some 40 years ago, I honestly could never have imagined that this brand new school would someday be ranked amongst the top three institutions of its size in all of Canada, let alone three years in a row.

I rise today to recognize the passion and effort of the faculty and staff at the U of L who work so hard to create one of the top university experiences in this country. This has been proven time and again, most recently by Maclean's magazine, where the U of L achieved a first-place ranking in terms of average size and number of peer-adjudicated research grants. Basically, this means students have unprecedented access to leading faculty members and their research programs. The U of L is also ranked fourth of 19 primarily undergraduate universities in all of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we recognize and honour the achievements of everyone involved in these milestone achievements by the University of Lethbridge.

Another milestone in southern Alberta recently is the 125th anniversary of the Medicine Hat regional hospital, and it's my honour to thank the dedicated staff and health professionals who have provided exceptional care and comfort to Albertans from Medicine Hat and surrounding areas throughout the decades. Today a new chapter is being written as the hospital undergoes a major $220 million redevelopment and expansion project. This redevelopment will provide people in Medicine Hat with improved access to specialized care; emergency, surgical, outpatient, maternal/newborn services; and a six-storey addition to the hospital that will add 23,000 square metres. Mr. Speaker, this is the size of three CFL football fields. This expansion of Medicine Hat regional hospital is one of the many major health capital projects under way in our province as the Alberta government continues to invest wisely in health infrastructure to meet the needs of Albertans today and in the future.

On behalf of all Albertans and in the Alberta spirit congratulations to the staff and health professionals at the Medicine Hat regional hospital and everyone in the community who has played a part in the hospital's past and bright future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to Drumheller-Stettler, we have a request for unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

The Speaker: Hon. President of Treasury Board, would you proceed, please.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House members of Advocis, the Financial Advisors Association of Canada. For more than 100 years Advocis members have delivered financial security and peace of mind through high ethical and professional standards. Small-business professional financial advisers are critical to Alberta's economy as this industry represents $2.4 billion in annual GDP and supports 22,000 jobs. Advocis is hosting a reception for members this evening at the Royal Glenora Club, and I hope you will be able to attend. On behalf of all members of the Legislative Assembly I would ask the members of Advocis to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, Drumheller-Stettler, for co-operating with that brief intro. Now let's hear your private member's statement.

Canadian Election Observation Mission to Ukraine

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about democracy and the promotion of Alberta's democratic values abroad. This past October my legislative assistant volunteered and was chosen as a long-term elections observer with the Canadian election observation mission in Ukraine for the early parliamentary elections in that country. He spent five weeks there to observe Ukraine's move towards a true democracy after years of corrupt governance by a thug, who fled to Russia when his people decided that they had had enough.

Former Wildrose candidate Paul Nemetchek and Drumheller mayor Terry Yemen also joined the observation mission. With our large Ukrainian-Canadian population here in Alberta, including you, Mr. Speaker, we should all be grateful to the government of Canada for funding a Canadian observation mission to Ukraine. Our brave Canadian observers were the only observation mission to deploy to the Ukrainian oblasts, close to the conflict area, where the Russian military has invaded parts of eastern Ukraine with the aid of separatist terrorist extremists.

Unlike the stolen election Canadians observed in 2012, the Canadian election observation mission's main conclusions found that the democratic will of the people was reflected in these 2014 results in accordance with the laws of Ukraine and international laws and standards.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the people of Ukraine and the new people's rada for a free, open, and transparent election. May Ukraine continue down its path to freedom. Slava Ukraini.

The Speaker: The response would be Herojam Slava. Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the government's response to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future report on the feasibility of high-speed rail in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have 10 tablings today in relation to menthol and tobacco. This government has said that they want to serve children, but 39,000 children between the ages of grade 6 and grade 12 are already hooked on tobacco.

The first tabling is Flavoured Tobacco Use among Canadian Youth, evidence from the 2012-13 youth survey. It denotes that 35 per cent of grades 9 to 12 kids that smoke use menthol. But that's just one opinion, Mr. Speaker.

The second tabling has to do with a strategic brief, A Comprehensive Tobacco Flavour Additive Ban Is Needed to Prevent and Reduce Youth Tobacco Use, produced by Alberta Health Services. You may have heard of them. It was dated November 15, 2012, and recommends a comprehensive tobacco flavour additive ban. But that's just another opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Third is the President's Letter from the Alberta Medical Association dated November 18, 2014. Dr. Johnston expresses his disappointment since the AMA strongly supports the inclusion of menthol as a banned substance and it was not included. Another opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Next, the Canadian Medical Association policy on tobacco control, updated 2008. The policy says that the government "should exercise its legislative power to regulate the content of tobacco products," including banning flavouring such as menthol. Again, just another opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Number 5, Partial Guidelines for Implementation of Articles 9 and 10 of the WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control, stating that from the perspective of public health there's no justification for permitting such ingredients as flavouring agents, including menthol. Again, just another opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Number 6 is an editorial here in the Edmonton Journal dated November 15, 2014. Ms Simons calls the minister's decision "illogical and hypocritical." She continues to say that we need to educate youth on "how Big Tobacco specifically uses menthol to entrap teens and minorities." One more opinion, Mr. Speaker.

The seventh has to do with copies of an article from the Edmonton Sun where "Alberta touts legislation to ban flavoured smokes" but the minister states that "the legislation is about public health, not money." Just another opinion on what this act is all about.

Number 8, copies of Smoke-Free Alberta's web page on tobacco flavourings. This is a coalition including the Canadian Cancer Society, the Alberta public coalition on cancer prevention, the Lung Association, the Heart and Stroke Foundation, the Alberta

Public Health Association, and Action on Smoking and Health. They recommend a ban on all flavourings, including menthol. Another opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Number 9, copies of a news release from the Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta dated October 20, 2014. In it Angeline Webb with the Canadian Cancer Society states that exempting menthol from the ban will leave thousands of children without protection. Another opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Number 10 is copies of Alberta Registered Lobbyists – Tobacco/Smoking, dated March 2014. Here is a list of 26 individuals, including Hal Danchilla, a friend of the minister, lobbying to keep the status quo on tobacco regulations. Finally, an opinion the minister agrees with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Minister of Education, you have something quickly? Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, earlier today in question period I mentioned a letter that I had received during the month of October from a member of the Assembly referencing the need for urgent action by the government on portables in our schools. I'd like to table five copies of that letter.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period I mentioned 11,605 signatures that were gained online and in person in about a month in Cypress-Medicine Hat over concern that a medical laboratory that has been servicing us very, very well for approximately 50 years is being closed by the government with no business plan and no proper testing procedures in place that will actually serve the citizens of Medicine Hat better. Eleven thousand signatures in about a month.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of the manifest that I referenced yesterday during my point of order. All the other references are already part of the public record.

The second tabling is a copy of an e-mail from one of my constituents to the then Minister of Health raising the point that vaccinations for hepatitis A and hepatitis B are not covered if you are on a barriers to employment program. He makes the point that the most vulnerable and the most likely to be on those programs are people that are incarcerated or recently released from incarceration and that they would be making the choice between paying for a vaccination or paying for food, and he asked the government to work together to try and relieve that problem.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, I have one tabling myself. If you'll permit me, I'd like to table five copies of the Child and Youth Advocate annual report 2013-14 in accordance with section 21(2) of the Child and Youth Advocate Act.

Thank you.

We have no points of order today, and we're still reviewing the point of privilege, so we will move on.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Fenske moved, seconded by Mr. Ellis, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned November 18: Mr. Bikman speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have six minutes left in your speaking time.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was speaking, when the time expired, about reasonable restrictions on property and mentioned some examples. For example, I mentioned that you can't build your house too close to your neighbour's or the sidewalk or have view-obstructing fences or trees on a corner lot and so on. Maybe the style is restricted by the community or neighbourhood association, but these rules are in place. If changes are contemplated, you have a right to a say or to the courts for redress or appeal.

But what if the government said that you could no longer access water or sewer lines in your home? Would that affect your use and enjoyment? No showers or hot tubs, no toilets: what would happen to the value of what for most of us is our largest investment? Do you think you could find a buyer if he knew he could never use the bathroom? You'd hope that you could get the courts to straighten this out, wouldn't you?

Imagine how you'd feel if you found out that your provincial government, the one that had been looking after you for over 40 years, unbelievably passed a law that said that you no longer had the right to go to court. Would you be upset? Would you hire a lawyer to look into this for you? Would you be calling your MLA, like my friend Sharon Unger did, to ask: what's up? Would you be calling the media to say, "Hey, this isn't fair or ethical or honourable; you need to make this a headline event"?

Well, urban dwellers, there are laws like this that have been passed in recent years. That they haven't affected you yet and may not any time soon does not mean that you should ignore them. Property right laws aren't just relevant to farmers and ranchers. Mrs. Unger isn't a farmer. She just happened to live outside of a town. These laws are affecting the folks who raise the beef you eat as steaks, roasts, and hamburgers or grow the grains and vegetables used to make your salads, your breads and rolls, and even some of the beverages you drink. These people and some who work in the city and live in the country risk having the value of their property decline and in some cases become unsalable. When they've gone to the courts for redress, they've been told: "You don't have a right to legal correction of this problem. Your provincial government has written clauses into legislation that prevent you from getting any relief." You thought you lived in a free country, where rule of law protected you. Well, it used to throughout history until bills like 19, 24, 36, 50, and 2 were passed by the government you voted for or didn't vote for.

To his credit, our new Premier has promised action to correct this unjust, unconscionable action. With fanfare the Premier introduced Bill 1 to an eager, informed group of thousands of Albertans, but all it does is repeal Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. It's a bill that hadn't even ever been proclaimed. This isn't enough. It's a start, and we appreciate it, but there's lots of work left to do. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Premier for this important first step.

We want to help the Premier. We believe he's serious and self-aware enough to realize help and good solutions are available from other sources like the Wildrose Official Opposition. When we spoke Monday, he told me that he knew his party didn't have a monopoly on good ideas. That's humility, and that's encouraging. Bill 1 is a beginning. Passing and implementing Motion 501 is the next step in entrenching Alberta property rights into the Constitution through section 43 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We have one or two more ideas we'd like to share with the new Premier. They'll help him be the man of honour and integrity all Albertans want him to be, a pleasant change in that position, and that we're sure he intends being. Motion 501 will put flesh on the skeleton of Bill 1 and make it a living, enduring correction and protection. It will make this and all future governments respect private property, and when that property is needed for the greater good, the Albertans affected will have to be fairly and justly compensated for any action that impacts their use and enjoyment or reduces its value and their ability to sell it.

Welcome to Wild Rose Country, Mr. Premier. We're all MLAs, and we really are here to help you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, let's move on to the hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne. You know, Monday's Speech from the Throne was the first throne speech of a new Premier, a Premier who has been put in place by his political party, not by the people of this province. The Premier is in his position as a result of an internal leadership process and as a result of the selection of the people of Calgary-Foothills, and for that I congratulate him. However, that in and of itself does not create the authority to completely abandon a very clear change in direction that had been committed to Albertans by this PC government.

In the last election Albertans voted for a platform that focused on increased funding for education, increased access to postsecondary education, a commitment to eliminating child poverty, and improved access to public health care through 140 family care clinics. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, what they voted for was a government that promised to invest in public services, to build schools, and not to be the things that they scared Albertans with about the Wildrose Party. But thus far it's clear that this Premier is pursuing a direction that is an absolute repudiation of the vision put forward by his own party in the last election. In fact, it appears to me so far that he's kind of trying to be the Wildrose – you know, more power to him – but that's not what they ran on.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, this was and is the Premier's first throne speech, and one might have expected the Premier to have put forward a more clear and innovative vision. What we got instead was legalese with a less than compelling dose of bureaucratese sprinkled with lots of verbiage that clearly lacked definitions and timelines and a plan. There was no vision. There was no true plan to implement the promises that the PCs have put forward in the past. Rather, we've been given an agenda that, in my mind, is mostly about trying to undo the many, many, many mistakes that this government made over the course of the last two and a half years.

Really, in my view, Alberta is not actually looking for new management; I think that Alberta is looking for new leadership, completely new leadership. New leadership would answer the questions that I heard repeatedly throughout my leadership campaign this summer. We travelled the province from Fort McMurray to Red Deer to southern Alberta to the Peace Country and everywhere in between. Albertans told me that they're frustrated with being told by their government to expect less. Albertans are hard working and optimistic. They understand that they live in a province that has been blessed with natural resource wealth and a beautiful natural environment, but they don't understand why their government can't convert that to a stable, equitable, successful way of life for all citizens. They don't understand why more and more of them have less, why they struggle so much to pay their bills, why this province is falling behind in our health care, our education, and our care for vulnerable Albertans.

Albertans are young, Mr. Speaker, they're diverse, and they have incredible hope and potential. But by failing to deliver affordable and accessible postsecondary education, by letting the size of our kids' classrooms balloon, by allowing too many kids to go to school hungry, by standing by and watching as they commute for far too long to and from their schools, by underfunding schools to the point where school fees start to look like school tuition, this government is letting Albertans down. In the last election they promised a 2 per cent increase every year for education as a bare minimum, which would have gone a long way to solving some of the problems I've just outlined. However, they didn't come through with that. Albertans just don't understand why we would not want to invest more in our schools to improve the educational opportunities for young Albertans.

The other thing that's going on, of course, is that Alberta families are concerned about what happens as they age. Their parents are aging, and they're also planning for their own retirement, and they're also worried about their future and their ability to secure affordable long-term care for themselves and their loved ones. Now, in the last election the PCs promised 5,000 more spaces in continuing care. We don't argue with the need for more spaces for seniors; we do think that they should be publicly funded, publicly delivered. They should be affordable. But we also believe that continuing care is not the right answer, that, in fact, we need to be talking about long-term care or nursing care or nursing homes because long-term care is the difference between being asked to pay for health care out of your pocket, as you would with continuing care, versus enjoying the benefits of our much-treasured system of medicare.

Not too long ago, Mr. Speaker, I spoke with a paramedic who told me about attending a resident in a continuing care facility. He assured the staffperson that there was no immediate need to take the patient to the ER but said that every few hours the patient's vitals should be monitored. He was shocked to be told about how that would require roughly $40 per assessment of the monitoring. That's the difference between long-term care and continuing care, my friends, and as more and more Albertans learn about that difference, they become increasingly suspicious of a government that intentionally maintains a strategy of misleading Albertans about what their plan is for seniors care going forward. But now not only is this government failing to deliver on public long-term care; they're only delivering on half of the spaces that they promised in the last election.

The long-term care that we do have is also in crisis, and the government is failing to fund that properly. A couple of months ago I met with constituents who were worried about the care that her mother and his wife received. They described being called to a publicly administered long-term care facility repeatedly in the middle of the night because there weren't enough staff there to keep their mother safe. They talked about the staff telling them how there's a tremendous increase in the number of fall injuries in long-term care after a certain time of day because the number of staff on shift goes down.

They said that the only way they could be sure that their mother or their wife would be safe would be if they hired somebody themselves to come in and watch over them during the night. A very helpful caregiver pointed them to several other families and said: "See that person there? That person isn't paid by us; that person is paid by the family. See that person over there? That person is not paid by us; they're paid by the family." They're paid privately to come into publicly run long-term care because we no longer fund that to provide the service that is necessary to keep aging Albertans safe and secure and healthy in the way we all expect. This is what our Conservative government is doing to our health care system.

While Alberta's economy has continued to thrive, Albertans themselves are falling behind. There is a rapidly growing level of inequality in our province. We've heard just recently about a troubling increase in the number of Alberta families who are relying on food banks, and indeed the rate of food bank usage is growing faster in Alberta than in any other part of the country. On top of that, we hear about a shortage of affordable housing, and we hear about how in homeless shelters in Calgary almost half the people are actually working full time but can't find a place to live. Then again, we also know statistically that almost half a million Albertans are paid a wage that prevents them from earning a living wage as defined by people who look at the bare minimum that people require to put a roof over their heads, to raise their kids, and to feed them healthy food.

This is what's happening in our province, and this is not a vision that Albertans are telling me that they understand given the prosperity that we have in this province. Rather, this is a picture of a government that is failing, failing in a repeated number of areas.

We have a government, of course, that got elected by talking about a plan to eliminate child poverty in five years. Yesterday the Premier kind of acknowledged that his throne speech failed to deal with that issue at all and said: well, we're talking about indigenous Albertans, so we're kind of dealing with poverty. Well, that's kind of true, but it's really not. The fact of the matter is that a comprehensive antipoverty program, one on which this government engaged many Albertans across the province over the last two or three years, has many elements to it, many components, and none of those components will be addressed through the paltry reference to the issue that was included in the throne speech by our new Premier. So what it says to me is that they have abandoned that fundamental and very symbolic promise and commitment that they made to Albertans and their families in the last election.

These broken promises on health care and on education and on equality are not the kind of future and don't provide for the kind of opportunity that Albertans anticipate and expect in a province as wealthy as ours. Instead, what we saw in the throne speech was warnings about how what we needed to do was to be ready to sacrifice some more and to compromise some more and to pull back our expectations some more because, heaven forbid, you know, we're not actually a province that has the greatest nonrenewable resource wealth of pretty much any jurisdiction in the world. We're not, apparently. Instead, we are a province that needs to tamp down our expectations and ensure that we don't have any great hopes for the ability of our kids or our kids' kids to enjoy true equality of opportunity in the future.

And why is that? Why is it that we have a new Premier who is quietly warning us that we should temper our expectations and that we shouldn't expect all Albertans to take part in our prosperity? Well, the reason for that is that we are sacrificing these ideas of ensuring that everybody shares in our prosperity. We are sacrificing these things for the value of pursuing low taxes for the very wealthy and for multinational oil companies in our province. That's what it comes down to. It is a choice. Every day this government makes a choice. Do they ask Albertans to pay their fair share based on the level of wealth they enjoy, or do we cut back on education, cut back on health care, reduce people's expectations so that we can be sure that the very, very wealthy pay the lowest, lowest taxes? That's a choice, and this government is clearly making the latter choice. But I would argue that most Albertans don't agree with that choice anymore. They have a much more innovative, hopeful view of the way our province can go forward.

What do Albertans want, and what should we be seeing? Well, Albertans deserve better than more broken promises because, at the end of the day, it's not just about the, quote, unquote, province doing well. It's about kids, about seniors, about families, and about communities, about them doing well. Albertans believe in opportunity, innovation, diversity, and optimism, and that's what they want their government to focus on, too. They want their children to grow up in a province where they're given a chance to attend university or pursue a trade regardless of who their parents are and how much they earn. Albertans want opportunities for good, permanent, well-paid jobs, and they know that the government has a role to play in both of those objectives.

An NDP government would pursue a value-added strategy to ensure that our resources are upgraded more here in the province because we know that that's how you build long-term, sustainable employment opportunities for Albertans going forward. We want to work towards increasing the amount of upgrading that happens in this province because we know that that would go a long way to ensuring the future prosperity of this province.

Albertans are also innovative and hard-working people, and they believe in tackling challenges head-on with new strategies and new ways of thinking. We're forward looking. We're hopeful about the future. That's who we are, and that's why an NDP government in Alberta would embrace innovative technologies and new ways of doing things, because we know that there is a huge untapped potential for clean jobs and renewable energy in this province. But we know that we also need a government that prioritizes it.

We're not that far, Mr. Speaker, from being able to move away from the dirty, outdated fuels of the past, and we know that we need to do it. An Alberta NDP government would stop lagging behind the rest of the country, and instead we would genuinely lead the country in those kinds of strategies by taking real action as opposed to simply putting out press releases with descriptions of vague action or, in more cases than not, inaction.

The other thing we know, Mr. Speaker, about our province is that the values of many Albertans are moving well beyond the values that are held and reflected in this House by many of the conservative members of this Assembly. In particular, Albertans support diversity and inclusion, and Albertans are frustrated and losing patience with a government and an Official Opposition which appear unwilling to take the steps that are necessary to truly embrace people from all communities and all minority groups, including and especially Albertans who are members of sexual minority groups. It is time for us to move into, dare I say it, the 21st century. Well, let's try the 20th because, really, many of us were there in the 20th.

But even if we go with the 21st, it's time for the rest of the folks here to join us and to take real action to ensure that we genuinely protect the rights of these Albertans in every public institution that we can, which includes every school in the province which receives public dollars from this Assembly. No school should be allowed to prevent those initiatives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a)? There have been no take-ups.

We'll go to Calgary-Buffalo next and then to Medicine Hat. Carry on, please, Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to respond to the throne speech, and I'd like to start by congratulating the hon. Premier and the new members – the Minister of Health, the Minister of Education, and the Member for Calgary-West – on their by-election victories. I will note that I was particularly moved by the Member for Calgary-West's maiden speech, shall we say, which noted public service and commitment to a sense of community and a sense of building Alberta. It was an excellent job and one that I was very moved by.

But if we look at the throne speech, there's no doubt that we are, I guess, being told that we are under new management, yet the same problems exist here in Alberta for this government and, actually, for a population that existed under the old management. These problems have not magically gone away or disappeared or been made less important than they were under the leadership of our former Premier and the like.

If we look at the throne speech, it seems to concentrate on five different areas: focused commitment to sound, conservative fiscal principles; ending entitlements and restoring public trust; maximizing the value of our natural resources; respecting property rights; establishing our province as an environmental leader; and increasing Albertans' quality of life by being a leader in the areas of health, education, seniors' care, and skills training.

That and, I guess, $1.86 gets you a cup of coffee at Tim Hortons, because throne speeches, although nice and long on rhetoric, don't appear to be offering many solutions, and I can't seem to find any contained in this document or any solutions that have been presented on the Order Paper to date that actually address the fundamental concerns that face everyday Albertans, from children going to our school system and young adults going to postsecondary to seniors needing long-term care in this province. None of these things have been addressed in any real, substantial manner that we will make people's lives better today or into the future.

But let's just talk about this, a focused commitment to sound, conservative fiscal principles. To be honest, from this side of the House, I am befuddled by what this actually means. At one time in my life in this Legislature it was that the party across the aisle believed that we will never go in debt again. In fact, I believe they passed a law on this, and that was supposed to be sound conservative principles. Now we get to a place in 2012 where sound conservative principles are taking on a large amount of debt to build Alberta going forward and dividing things out in that way.

To be honest with you, I guess "fiscally responsible" should be the word that we actually go forward with. In my view, being fiscally responsible is paying for what you use in taxes. I think that is a generally accepted definition by political parties and economists as a reasonable way to go forward. Now, we use debt instruments from time to time to build things that matter to Albertans and to other people, but that doesn't get away from the basic principle of fiscal responsibility, paying for what you use in taxes.

We in Alberta here have taken the easy way out. We don't tax anybody, and we spend all the oil wealth in one generation, which I think – so would anyone if they spend two minutes thinking about that as a public policy position to base this province on – is simply lunacy. I'll repeat that. The principles that we're currently governing under on our fiscal management are lunacy. Not taxing anyone and spending all of the oil wealth in one generation is not a plan for success. We can see that. A reasonable position would be whether you want small government or large government, to have your citizens pay for what you use in taxes, and save the oil wealth for future generations.

Well, that principle has not been followed through on. In fact, if we haven't learned that by now, that what we have done here in this province is simply silly, I do not know when we will learn that lesson. No one sitting in this Legislature can look at what has transpired over the last 25 years and say that this has been a reasonable, prudent fiscal plan going forward.

I'll remind everyone where we are and what this society needs, and I think it was laid out very well in the Progressive Conservative election platform, one that I was, frankly, quite hopeful about, one that I hope your government would be still trying to fulfill, which doesn't seem to be the case, looking at this throne speech. The needs addressed in that platform were the needs that needed covering. You know, we can go forward and look at it.

We needed 50 new schools. In fact, we probably needed 87 just to keep up with population growth. Where are we on that promise? Well, not very far, Mr. Speaker. From what I've seen here since we've been back in the Legislature under new management, it is no further along. We will not see these schools until long after 2016. By the way, people are still moving to this province in droves, and the problem doesn't get better. It only exacerbates. The longer we wait, the longer kids are going to have to be jammed into classrooms that are full, bused for hours across the way, and the like. We're not moving forward on this; we're treading water.

I know this government sees a magical payday happening in 2018, when oil sands projects reach payout and the like, but remember what you've done here since '08. You have essentially sacrificed the opportunity of little kids to get the education they need going forward, in light of some magical payday that may be coming in 2018, because that's the only way your numbers work and that you can build anything. I think we all know that. The fiscal structure is broken. Simply put, you haven't addressed that, and maybe we haven't addressed it for a long time in this province. But those problems are still there that were outlined in the platform in 2012.

Look, there were some other good things in that platform, and the hon. leader of the New Democrats brought them up. Eliminating child poverty in five years: well, that was a pretty good start. Right now in this province we have over 90,000 children who are living in poverty. We have not made one iota of progress on that file since it was promised in the last election, and we heard very little of what we're going to do for those families in this throne speech.

You know, to exacerbate where our fiscal structure has gotten us, we look at how to support families that are truly in need. We have the lowest welfare payments in Canada, okay? How is it that a single mom with two kids can make a go of it when we have the lowest rates in Canada? Is this fair to those children? Is it fair to providing them some opportunity for success in the future? I don't know. It doesn't seem like a good way to go. For me, it's actually empowering people to try to succeed, allowing their kids some decency and some semblance of being able to go forward. It doesn't appear that that is a way forward, to me.

If we look to further issues that are going on in this province, not only in education but in postsecondary, we have the lowest university participation rate in the nation. That, to me, does not seem like a good long-term trend to be going on. In fact, only 17 per cent of Alberta's youth go to our postsecondary system right now, compared to Ontario, that has roughly 25 per cent of their population engaged in some sort of postsecondary education. Is that a good long-term trend, Mr. Speaker? I don't think so.

The clearest path to economic success for individuals and students and, in fact, for our society is a knowledge-based economy. For those students who get postsecondary degrees, the statistics bear out that they receive higher incomes, contribute more to the public good, and lead more successful lives. Why do we have the lowest university participation rate in the nation? It's because we don't have the university spaces for them to go to. It is the direct responsibility of this government for not fixing a fiscal structure that has long been broken. These are the facts.

If we look further down where we are going and we look at our long-term care spaces, there is a tremendous need, and it has been built up over the course of some time now. We have not invested in public spaces for people to go to get the care they need. Instead, we have gone down the path of a complicated system of four different levels of privatized care, that either you can afford or you can't afford, which simply goes against the principle that we have followed in this country since 1967, that health care would be made available to you on a timely basis based on your need, not on the amount of money you have in your bank account.

We have many seniors now who have reached that age that simply can't afford $1,800 a month at a continuing care space or something to that effect. We need to go back and revisit whether this policy we have followed truly enables Albertans to age in a reasonable, legitimate fashion and what actually makes sense for our society going forward. In fact, if you look at other provinces that have not gone down the path of Alberta, their outcomes on seniors' care are less costly and actually enable seniors to, I guess, age in a more reasonable fashion. We have to look at these systems we've put in in Alberta and assess whether we're truly doing what's in our best interests for the long run.

Hey, you guys might have the politics right, you know. You guys may have the politics right with being the lowest taxed jurisdiction by a country mile and not building schools, not building long-term care spaces, not moving on things like full-day kindergarten, which are necessary in this province, not moving on to an early childhood care system that actually embraces and frees up families to do what they need to do to succeed, and the like. I think we need some of that thinking here in Alberta as to what can actually move more people to the middle-class lifestyle.

We also look at what's happening out there in Alberta. I think we've reached a crisis point with where we are in our affordable housing situation. Yes, we did institute a 10-year plan to end homelessness, but it's simply not moving the ball forward as much as we can. I think it's time for us to revisit what many MLAs in this Legislature did in 2006 and 2007, when they came up with a good framework of 72 recommendations, that went to the then Premier, on how to really have an affordable housing strategy. I would encourage people to look into that. It was a whole comprehensive list of various things that would have actually moved the meter and alleviated many of the problems we have now.

Instead, we chose the low-hanging fruit from that list of 72 and instituted things that I think supported the existing framework of the building community and served their needs but didn't address the fundamental root causes of where we need to go on an affordable housing strategy. If we would have done the politically difficult thing at that time and instituted those 72 things, my goodness, we would not be where we are now.

Oftentimes the solutions are not necessarily innovative; you just have to look at what actually works. Sometimes bringing in revenue to pay for the services that Albertans use, need, and, in fact, want would be a reasonable place to succeed. Right now if we can't figure out that our fiscal structure is broken when we can't build schools, when we can't get long-term care spaces, if we spend all the oil wealth in one generation, my goodness, when are we going to act? When are we going to put this province's future first instead of our political bacon?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one wishing to take it up.

Let's move on to Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-McCall, followed by Medicine Hat, and there will be others after that.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to add my congratulations to the Premier and the Members for Edmonton-Whitemud, Calgary-West, and Calgary-Elbow on their recent by-election victories.

The Premier's first throne speech is somewhere around the 44th throne speech of this PC government. Who knows how many. I guess I just want to say that my overwhelming feeling is disappointed, very, very disappointed that in a province of 4 million hard-working people, in a province so rich in commodities, so rich in natural beauty, with so many things going for it, on the edge of being such a leader in Canada that our new Premier and our 44-year government didn't have a stronger vision, a stronger idea that would encompass some new ideas, some individualism, some chances to work together, some chances to grow together.

There were three things I did like about it, though. First of all, somewhere on the last or the second-last page it mentioned a new volunteerism strategy. My goodness, is this overdue. Alberta and Cypress-Medicine Hat are absolutely full of capable, hard-working, caring Albertans who do so much for their neighbours, for their communities, their friends.

The Wildrose in the full campaign two and a half years ago had an idea to increase the tax credit for volunteerism. Totally optional. If somebody wanted to do it out of the goodness of their heart or if somebody didn't feel it was necessary, totally optional. But what a great way to expand the opportunity for people who needed to do more that needed a little bit of help. What a great opportunity to take care of a family member or take care of a neighbour, to do some work in the community, make our community stronger on a very efficient, caring basis. I hope this government will actually do something with that in the next year or so.

Hey, I found the words "no sales tax" in there. Very nice to see that. Medicine Hat and Cypress-Medicine Hat, we're very conscious of the fact that we pay our share through royalties on natural gas, Albertans having the highest average income tax, but we're also very, very conscious of the fact that on Saturdays and Sundays our mall parking lots, our downtown parking lots are full of cars with green-and-white licence plates. It's partly because of the sales tax. Glad to see it in writing, but in two and a half years I've seen the PC Party across the floor break several promises, right back to two and a half years ago: campaigned on the left and then, possibly because of good ideas of the Wildrose opposition, decided to govern more on the right, breaking all their promises, leading to six months off in here, anyway, as a new Premier was selected. So I'm a little concerned about the no-sales-tax promise.

I've recently heard about the new Premier talking about looking into a progressive tax. Again, we pay the highest average income tax. Albertans already pay the most tax. And, of course, a month or so ago the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations openly mused about how members opposite were looking at all taxes. Couple this with the broken promises I've seen, and we'll see where we go. I hope Albertans will hold you accountable for it.

The third part I liked, again a Wildrose idea, a Wildrose platform, in education: a return to the education basics of literacy and numeracy. We've seen this gallery full of people with the same ideas. We've all had several phone calls, e-mails, and letters from constituents, parents, grandparents, concerned Albertans about what new education policies did to cause a decline in our kids' scores and ability. The saving grace was how good our professionals were, how caring Albertans were to immediately step in and make sure something was done.

Like the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I too thought there were five themes. The first two I clearly remember from two Premiers ago, the throne speech a year ago: reducing interprovincial trade barriers. I bet if we dug that one up, it might be on all 44 of them, so it makes me wonder how seriously our government means this or if it is just politics. As we've heard time and time again, Alberta's bureaucracy is onerous. It slows business down. It slows the movement of money and the creation of wealth and the creation of jobs. I was reminded on the weekend about a guy who has a ranch in the Rocky Mountain House area who needed to get hay into B.C., and the easiest way to do it was to take it down to Montana and up around that way. I'm thinking: "My goodness, this is progress? This is how a country with this commodity base, with its hard-working people base works?" I hope the government really means that, and I hope they do something about it.

Number two, again in the throne speech two Premiers ago, a year or so ago, access to markets for oil and gas. As a matter of fact, I think this Premier said that 16 months from now we could hold him accountable on access to markets for oil and gas because of his past experience and past background. I hope he makes it. I hope he makes it. It's good for Alberta to get this access that we need to have more markets for our valuable commodities, to have more wealth and more markets for the hard work that Albertans do. I hope this new hire that he was bragging about yesterday after the vote didn't work out can explain what happened, be held accountable, do a better job in the future.

The Premier today mentioned that we had the balance right between the environment's rules and regulations and the tremendous value of Alberta's commodities while, once again, the lack of progress on Keystone, the zero progress on Gateway. Line 9 and Energy East don't seem to be moving too quickly either. I would hope that real, legitimate work be done on this. Let's remind Canadians, let's remind the world how important, how valuable cheap energy for the whole world is and the tremendous wealth and opportunities for all Albertans and all Canadians that our commodities in this province can provide. Let's all do what we can to tell the world the great work that these companies do and to increase the wealth opportunities.

The third theme I saw in the throne speech was schools: build schools, build schools, build schools. A year and a half ago we had 19 schools that were going to be built. It looked like Alberta Infrastructure did nothing but plan 19 schools for a year. My goodness, I don't know what it would cost to have Alberta Infrastructure just do that for a year. Even though the government was told at the outset that it couldn't happen, that the industry didn't have the capacity, that it wouldn't happen, that all went ahead, and not a single one of those schools was built. I think it was the last two Premiers, certainly was the last two Infrastructure ministers, as they flip-flopped and flip-flopped and everybody got moved around, that stood up and said: "We'll make it. We'll make it. We'll have them done." Well, that turned quick to none of them done.

My understanding is that 50 schools are supposed to be due by September 2016, which means that they have to be done by June 2016 for teachers and maintenance people and the final touches to be put on through the summer of 2016. Guys, I'm hearing loud and clear from the industry: "You can't make it. You can't do the design. You can't build it. You won't have the 50 schools." I hope you don't stand up and insult Albertans' intelligence in the next year and a half telling us they're going to be done when it's clear that the answer is there that they can't be. Let's build schools when and where we need them, let's build them in an efficient manner, and let's try to have the Alberta government return to be a preferred client in the eyes of Alberta Infrastructure and construction companies so the taxpayer can get the most value, so the taxpayer can get the most schools.

Sorry that I have to bring it up: $375 million on the federal building. How much on the suite that was there, isn't there, still is there? It's just furnished with office furniture instead of bedroom furniture and household furniture. I'm sorry I brought it up, but, guys, that's 20 schools.

Another thing in the throne speech that caught my eye that I liked: the government is going to hold the rate of increase on spending for government operations. It will be kept below population growth and the rate of inflation. Marvellous. I hope you do it. It makes total sense. And partly it makes total sense – I want to reference an excellent report that Mark Milke from the Fraser Institute put out called Alberta's $22-billion Lost Opportunity.

I'll just quickly give you a summary. Since 2005-2006 the PC Alberta government has spent 54 per cent more – 54 per cent more – on operating and programs than inflation and population growth warranted or would have suggested or whatever the right word is. So from 2005-2006 that's $22 billion that has been spent on operating and programs from the baseline in '05, adding inflation and adding population growth, $22 billion dollars that could have gone to infrastructure, could have gone to the heritage trust fund, could have prevented the $10 billion in debt that your government has added to our next generation's tax problem, or could have gone to reduce our current tax, a $22 billion lost opportunity. Even though the new Premier in this government's sentence seems to refer only to government operations and not program spending, it is very, very much a step in the right direction.

The fourth theme I want to talk about is property rights. The new Premier said: it is so important that it'll be the first bill; I understand the importance of property rights; I understand that the earlier PC government crossed the line and things have to be changed. There are 28 words in the throne speech that talk about what your government is going to do for property rights. Bill 1, the one we were all waiting for since the PC leadership, is seven words.

Repealing Bill 19, which was never proclaimed and leaves a big, big rural base – and I think maybe someday the urban base will understand how infringement on property rights will affect them, whether it's the right to work, the right to earn, intellectual property rights, all of these things that are so comprised in the individuality that I cherish and that many people in Cypress-Medicine Hat cherish in life. It wasn't touched at all. It's going to a committee, I think, even though it's been four or five years in the making.

Statutory consents that make up the value of property, statutory consents that include water licences, feedlot operations, the right to grazing leases, can still be removed by cabinet, can still be removed without access to courts, can still be removed without fair, timely compensation. Incredible. I recall from some of the meetings before the last election that no other western democracy anywhere has this.

If our new Premier, our new reset on the government's first look at changing property rights, is eliminating a bill that was never proclaimed and two Premiers ago had some significant changes done to it – guys, I think you're going to have to keep going. You're going to have to keep going to win back the hearts and the votes of rural voters, never mind the regulatory takings that I want to talk about next.

I want to take a second to talk about Cypress-Medicine Hat. I am so fortunate to represent Cypress-Medicine Hat.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Let's go to Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so curious as to why this member is so proud to represent Cypress-Medicine Hat.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you very much. People are wonderful; quality of life is great. The scenery is beautiful: the Cypress Hills, the wide-open spaces, ranches that are a township or bigger. The great, great stewardship that these ranchers and landowners have. They don't overgraze. Environmentally they take care of things for the next generation. I think that this Assembly needs to know, though, that our city is not growing. Our economy is not good. Unfortunately, our community foundation just put out a vital statistics report that showed we have the highest percentage of minimum wage and people working beneath the poverty line in all of Alberta.

We love our individualism. We love our economy; at times we rode very high. But I just want to remind everybody about two things that this government has done that have drastically hurt us. The 2008 royalty review drove countless service companies out of our area, drove countless jobs out of our area. Yeah, then the price of natural gas corrected, and maybe it wasn't totally the PC government's fault, but it certainly was a factor. Be careful what you do with rules and regulations.

Speaking of that, the federal government through the Species at Risk Act slapped a sage grouse protection order on the area in February. The federal government right now is doing a review of the horned lizard in the same area. The sage grouse protection order could have totally been prevented if the government of Alberta would have put in a provincial protection order. Ten out of 11 states that have the sage grouse have done this because they know it's better to protect the sage grouse, they know it's better to protect ranching, and they know it's better to protect the economy. We could have done the same and still can. Please work on it for us.

I was also surprised how little the throne speech talked about health care. My goodness, no specific promises, just that additional work is under way to address patient access, waiting times, the need to speed up, stuff we've heard for years and years; $19 billion, 44 per cent of our budget, and hardly mentioned. As a matter of fact, in my constituency office the two calls I get the most are from people who have gone to Kalispell or Great Falls and paid $23,000 to $29,000 for a knee or a hip because they got tired of waiting three years in Alberta for a similar procedure. It doesn't seem right. We are a lot richer jurisdiction, lots of room for improvement.

A Medicine Hat emergency doctor, a very strong advocate for public health, Dr. Paul Parks, has talked time and time again that this government had dropped the ball on long-term beds, how each long-term bed saves $1,000 to $1,200 instead of having them in acute-care beds. It seems like such a no-brainer to build the proper number of long-term beds and save that $1,000 to $1,200 per patient per day in an acute bed and free up those beds for those that really need them.

The last thing I'd say is democratic accountability. If you really want to walk the walk or talk the talk, whatever the saying is, make the election laws that we just saw – make it so that during a by-election, like in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, you can't make spending promises. One of your ministers has now started off on the wrong foot. He has started off where people are concerned about things that were number seven on their priority list being done and done first. Four million Albertans deserve better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Seeing no one to take that up, let's move on to Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak on the throne speech that we had here on Monday. Certainly, it's a great opportunity for Albertans to begin to re-engage in the political process. We haven't been using this Chamber for many months, so I think Albertans are very anxious to see action on so many different issues that concern them and concern their families.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I would like to just offer my congratulations, before I begin my reply to the throne speech, to the four by-election winners. Certainly, it is a difficult thing to win any seat. Just a friendly reminder that it is a provisional issue when we do by-elections. Certainly, we as Alberta New Democrats engaged and found a lot of very interesting things to learn as well, particularly in Edmonton-Whitemud. We only had four weeks to organize and to come through, and we managed to increase our results by 13 percentage points, so we like to think that maybe we didn't lose the seat, really, but just ran out of time. Certainly, we'd look forward to doing that again soon. Dr. Turner was a very, very good candidate, and I think he engaged the political process very, very well.

As I said before, the Speech from the Throne was being awaited with bated breath by so many thousands of Albertans who were looking for direction on urgent issues that concern them and their families. While I certainly found some reason to be optimistic or to look for some points of interest in the speech, I really look at it more from the things that are absent in the throne speech rather than what is being said.

Certainly, we know from going through many elections and through polling and from what Albertans tell us anecdotally time and time again that they're most concerned about their economic well-being, their capacity to look after themselves and their families, the security that comes with being able to look after their families. They're concerned about the things that we own together, those things that are entrusted to us here in the Legislature to ensure that there's a public health system there when we need it for ourselves and our families and that that is a publicly delivered health system that is available to us. We look to education to ensure that everyone has an equal opportunity to get the very best education for themselves and for their children, both from K to 12 and through postsecondary. Finally, we look to build the infrastructure that's necessary to meet the needs of a very quickly growing economy and a very quickly growing population as well.

When I was listening to the throne speech here on Monday, I think a key sentence really jumped out at me, and that is that the government makes a commitment to keep government expenditures below the rate of population and below the rate of inflation. I realize that we have some philosophical differences about this, but certainly we cannot deny the fact that this commitment to keeping spending below the growth of population and the economy essentially means cuts to essential government services. You simply cannot pay for the needs of more than 4 million people – their public health concerns, their education concerns, and their infrastructure concerns – if you are in fact cutting or not meeting the needs of population growth.

Mr. Speaker, that's the reason, really, that this Legislature and this level of government exists in the first place. It's to look after those essential public needs and interests. If we choose to cut those, then, in fact, not only are we just not meeting those responsibilities, but we're not looking at reality squarely in the face. The fact is that the population is growing. We have more Alberta citizens, and the economy is still growing, too.

With that in mind, certainly I've seen not just a number of throne speeches in my tenure here in the Legislature but a number of budgets that come from this sort of attitude. While people say, "Oh, well, it'll be perhaps a flat budget," if you don't meet the needs of the growth of the economy and the population, then it effectively becomes a cut.

I find it interesting as well that built into this throne speech there seems to be some latent anxiety or a sort of paranoia, I think, that comes with this government. I know that they like to have this shingle, under new management, somehow tentatively nailed somewhere on the new government, but it seems as though they are still looking over their shoulder with this throne speech more than looking forward. I must say that this throne speech and the legislative agenda that I see before us, Mr. Speaker, could very easily have been brought forward by the Official Opposition, the Wildrose. I think that they would have buttressed, perhaps, Bill 1 in terms of property rights. They might have done some few minor adjustments, but really this throne speech and this legislative agenda before us is fully interchangeable, in my mind, to what we might have seen from the Official Opposition Wildrose if they'd had an opportunity to present both a throne speech and a budget.

You know, I don't see that as new management, really. I see that as politics and watching over one's shoulder with the idea that they can hear footsteps coming to get them. When you do choose to make a new direction, Mr. Speaker, I would think that you would go more to a wider vision of governance that looks to expand and strengthen public health care, looks to expand and strengthen our postsecondary education, and so forth. Rather, I see quite the opposite, and ultimately I feel disappointed and a little bit hurt as well, I must say. You know, when people make promises, you know that it's probably not true, but you get all sort of teased by the possibility, and then, sure enough, inevitability – right, Member for Calgary-Mountain View? – we do in fact ultimately get disappointed.

Now, I mean, I realize that a throne speech is sort of setting broader strokes, but then we can only judge a government by its actions. What I'm looking at through the legislative agenda, which is the action that we would actually see on specific issues: again, very large gaps that make me really wonder exactly where we're going with the future of this province. I'm concerned about the inherent cuts that that might imply.

The absence in the throne speech and the legislative agenda of real, meaningful commitment to strengthening health care I think is one of the biggest concerns that I have. Certainly, in my own constituency of Edmonton-Calder I've been receiving a lot of specific information about individuals that are having a hard time accessing compassionate care. I've had several complaints from my constituents in Edmonton-Calder about not getting the adequate support, looking for compassionate care for family members – this is palliative care, where people are gravely ill – and not getting the care that they need. People want to stay in their homes, but they need another level of support in order to do so. On a number of occasions I see that compassionate palliative care simply fails people at the very most crucial, vulnerable moments of their lives, really.

Another issue which is very interesting is that people, again in my constituency, are always concerned about security and the capacity for police to provide that security. I know that's a direct municipal responsibility, but we see these things filter down very easily. I think that the current Minister of Health knows this very well. The municipal level of government has its hands tied to meet some of these needs because the provincial government collects so much more revenue and has so much more indirect influence on how things such as crime and policing can be actually delivered in this province.

I find it very interesting on a very, very local level that we used to have a community neighbourhood empowerment team that had very specific interrelationships with community-based police officers, yet the municipality has cut this program. The municipality tells me, my councilors tell me that that's because of inadequate provincial funding globally for large municipalities. Each thing has a cause and effect, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, my own constituency and I think that many urban constituencies around the province are feeling less secure because of the lack of adequate provincial funding that goes to things such as community police officers and, like I said, such innovative programs as the community neighbourhood empowerment team that we had but don't have anymore in Edmonton-Calder.

Another issue that is very close, I think, to many people's hearts around the province is just the high cost of monthly expenses here in the province of Alberta, that our rents, mortgage rates are inordinately high for regular working people to afford. They're paying much more of their monthly income for accommodation. Again, an absence in the throne speech and in substantive legislation to what might protect individuals from inordinate rental increases and so forth I think is a very obvious gap in this throne speech and in this legislative session as well.

Another issue that really, I think, is coming home to hit very hard in these winter months is the cost of utilities. Again, my constituency office in Edmonton-Calder has many, many, many anecdotal complaints about the high cost of utilities and the lack of regulation and transparency around the billing of those utilities, too. We know that we can, in fact, in this legislative body enact regulation and laws that could make, at the very least, utility bills more transparent so that people can see where their money is going and how much they're spending per month.

Also, I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility in this Legislature to look for ways to make essential home heating and electricity bills more affordable for Albertans on a month-to-month basis. Certainly, by deregulating the electricity market, we've blown open and exposed individuals to inordinately high monthly power costs. So, too, I would say that we should consider the converse, which is to bring those prices back to something that people can more afford. If you don't even have your electricity on, people still have a substantial bill from line charges and other sorts of miscellaneous things that are neither clear nor fair, I would suggest, as monthly expenses put onto each family that requires electricity. And everybody does. It's not as though we have a choice to heat our homes or to have some power in our homes.

Education. Again, this is a very interesting issue for K to 12 infrastructure. My constituency, Edmonton-Caldwell, is like a cross-section of the history of the city of Edmonton. We have neighbourhoods close to the airport and so forth that are a hundred years old, and we are moving outwards to the very edge of the ring road, the Henday, where literally the houses are just being built today. All through that cross-section of concentric circles of the building of the city of Edmonton you see schools either not being utilized properly or utilized in the widest way possible or the absence of schools entirely as you move out towards the ring road to the Henday. Again, I reflect my constituents' frustration in not seeing the schools that should've been built and could've been built and will be built in a reasonable time for new neighbourhoods and the creative utilization of established schools as we move closer to the centre of the city.

You know, talk is cheap, right? We see this throne speech talking vaguely about schools, this government making, I think, unrealistic promises around schools. Let's not just build it into the vagaries of politics and the price of a barrel of oil; let's have a long-term, sustained plan to ensure that public schools are built where we need them, when we need them, on a timely basis, not just over the next couple of years but over the coming decades as well.

Again, Mr. Speaker, just in summary, then, I choose to define an individual and a government by their actions, and I certainly see vague intentions in this throne speech.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As with any Speech from the Throne it is indeed an honour and privilege to speak on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-McCall. Let me begin first by thanking all of my constituents in Calgary-McCall, who have continued to place their trust, confidence, and respect in me as their MLA. As their voice in this Assembly I am forever proud to represent them each and every day.

Alberta truly is a wonderful place to live, work, and raise a family, Mr. Speaker. I love to tell about when I came to Calgary in 1970. I was waiting at the bus stop – I've told this story before – and an older gentleman approached me and said, "Where are you from?" I said, "I'm from India." And he said, "Are you a student?" I said, "No, I'm not a student." He said, "Are you a doctor?" I said, "No, I'm not a doctor." He said, "Are you a teacher?" I said: "No, I'm not a teacher. I just got here." And he said: "Welcome to Canada, God's country. Welcome to Alberta, the land of milk and honey." The gentleman was indeed correct. At the time I didn't know what he meant, but as time went along, I realized what he meant.

However, Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Speech from the Throne, I couldn't help but ask myself the question: how have things changed? I represent a fast-growing, dynamic, multicultural, and multilingual riding. My staff works tirelessly for my constituents, always delivering the best services and helping when required. But it is getting tougher. There are so many new Canadians, new Albertans, and most certainly new Calgarians. We need more from this government.

Mr. Speaker, I have had countless visitors to my office experiencing challenges with AINP, or the Alberta immigrant nominee program. This program is vital to our future. We are a country of immigrants. Canada was built by immigrants seeking the best and the brightest the world has to offer, yet we can't even help those who want to stay here legally and willingly. Thousands of temporary foreign workers have lost their chance to stay here permanently. Thousands. I can tell you how badly change is needed both in government policy and in programs such as AINP. Where was this mentioned in the Speech from the Throne? I didn't see it anywhere.

Our economy, Mr. Speaker, is only as strong as our workforce is. This, I feel, drastically needs improvement. Another big issue is temporary foreign workers. Lots of those temporary foreign workers' work visas are expiring, and employers cannot renew their work visas because they cannot get the LMOs. Lots of small businesses in Calgary have approached my office: "How are we going to survive? How are we going to grow? How are we going to run our businesses if these temporary foreign workers go back to their respective countries?"

Whether it is those applying under the AINP program or students trying hard to make ends meet, especially while dealing with ridiculous postsecondary tuition rates and graduating with enormous amounts of debt, Mr. Speaker, how are we helping our postsecondary education and those students who are graduating? We need a government that will work for all Albertans, not just the rich, the elite, or a favoured few. We need to support our students, not raise tuition, invest in postsecondary education, and give our next generation all the tools, skills, and resources to literally kick butt in life and in our economy. These young men and women are our future. Why not invest in them now, not tomorrow but today?

Mr. Speaker, I know the Speech from the Throne also mentioned infrastructure. For our growing province I cannot agree more. In Calgary-McCall I was the only MLA to fight for the airport tunnel. No other hon. member fought for this vital piece of infrastructure. With a newly expanded airport and a booming economy, businesses, visitors, and residents need the infrastructure to get the job done. The benefits of the airport tunnel are already being realized, which leads me to another point. The vast majority of Albertans live in urban areas. Whether they live in Calgary or Edmonton or in a suburban community nearby, they need the ability to get to and from work, school, and family activities. Albertans demand and, I would argue, deserve high-quality, modern infrastructure. Whether we are the province that invests in urban transit, ring roads, or one day even high-speed rail, we need the infrastructure in place to set up for the needs of the future. But this is not occurring.

Take, for example, the fast-growing community of Cochrane. The province and by extension this government has been promising residents and businesses alike for over 16 years that important improvements to highway 22X and highway 1A are needed, but all that residents and businesses have heard about is delay after delay. The fastest growing communities such as Airdrie, Cochrane, Chestermere – you name it – SkyView, Redstone in Calgary need investments by this government in critical infrastructure, not Building Alberta signs, Mr. Speaker.

Actions speak louder than words, but in the end, for a government that claims to be under new management, we see the same members, the same party in power. All we see is a new Premier. As history will show us, keeping the PC brand alive is, first and foremost, their top priority.

Mr. Speaker, democracy is fragile. Every day as elected members of this Assembly we are here to represent our constituents and lead our great province of Alberta, but most importantly, we need leadership, new ideas, new direction. Sadly, despite having a new Premier and some new ministers changing portfolios, I remain unconvinced. Unconvinced.

Alberta is an amazing province, but we need a government that demonstrates leadership and starts treating all Albertans equally. We can't have second-class citizens. We need to invest today in education, social services, key infrastructure, health care, transportation needs. Mr. Speaker, programs facing massive backlogs such as AINP need proper funding and staffing. Communities like Cochrane desperately need highway improvements. Most importantly, we need a government that respects taxpayers and hard-working Albertans.

With the price of oil in decline, what is this government's plan to table a balanced budget? We heard before that the operational budget will be balanced, and I don't think that is a balanced budget. A balanced budget is money coming in, money going out, and if you have anything left over, that's surplus. If you're in deficit, that's a deficit. That is the budget. It is not a balanced budget if you have an operational budget imbalance. Then the other budget is not balanced.

The Premier, Mr. Speaker, has already ruled out a sales tax, but he has remained quiet on other means of taxation. Will this government hike user fees? Will it return to the pre-Klein days of progressive income tax? That remains to be seen. Most importantly, will this government be open, transparent, and honest with their citizens? Albertans are a tough lot. We work hard, play hard, and enjoy giving back to our community, but we need a government that is focused on diversifying our economy and saving for our future.

You can forgive me, Mr. Speaker, for raising doubts about the plan moving forward from this government. Although the PCs have elected a new leader and the constituents of Calgary-Foothills voted for the hon. member, have things really changed? It remains to be seen.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I wish to leave but one final thought for our new Premier and his recycled government. The city of Calgary is growing by over 40,000 residents a year. Our municipal government needs support and assistance from this government, but they can't do it alone. They need stable, predictable funding from the province. Our next generation is counting on the actions of this government. Do not let them down. Together let us show all Albertans that great things are possible, but we need real, committed, accountable leadership to accomplish all of this.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-McCall and to all my colleagues in this Assembly, thank you very much. I remain steadfast in my love for, admiration of, and dedication to this wonderful province. Together I still believe we can accomplish many great things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. First, though, I'd like to welcome the four new members, the Premier and the other three members that are new to the Legislature. Welcome, and good luck with your new duties.

Typically the government uses a throne speech as a reset or as a tool to set a new direction or course and to announce new ideas, new plans, and new programs that are going to help move Alberta forward. I feel I'm pretty similar to most Albertans. I was never involved in politics before the last election, and I never want to be a career politician. We are a proud and hopeful society, hard working and caring, always looking for the best in ourselves, our friends, and our neighbours. We want our government to do the same.

Instead, we see an old and tired PC government that never ceases to amaze me with how much verbiage can be used, how many pages of paper can be consumed, and how much opportunity can be wasted all in the effort of saying nothing at all. No substance. No vision. No specific plans or ideas. It's just more of the same from this old and tired PC government.

This 43-year-old government likes to say that the province is under new management. Well, everyone, meet the new boss. He's just like the old boss. I guess we can add "new management" to the other PC phrases made infamous through their unending use. New management can be placed on the shelf right beside such beauties as the bitumen bubble and the gold standard. Don't forget the sky palace either. Saying "new management" over and over won't make it true, but actions can be the gauge of whether this reincarnation of the PC government can achieve their very important stated goals.

Mr. McAllister: I like the "bitumen bubble."

Mr. Pedersen: Yeah. It's pretty good.

While there are promises to follow a number of similar Wildrose policies like fiscal responsibility, ending entitlements, maximizing value of natural resources while strengthening environmental protections, protecting property rights, and addressing problems in health care, education, seniors' care, and skills and training, there are still no clear plans. If the new management wants some help with how to implement these Wildrose ideas, just let us know. We won't even ask for a bonus or a private plane. We'll do it for free.

What is obvious when one reads this throne speech is the incredible amount of backtracking the new Premier has done on previous PC policy and actions that were taken and supported wholeheartedly by almost every current PC MLA. It's the same crew with the same old ideas. How uncomfortable it must be to be sitting in the Legislature at this moment.

During the by-elections promises were made to all Albertans for what could easily be viewed as buying votes. Even our new Education minister used his appointed, unelected position to reward his own constituents with modulars for a school in the riding that he was running in. To be fair, these modulars were a need in Calgary-Elbow, but they were only seventh on the list for all of Calgary.

For a new Premier touting a new government under new management, with an emphasis on accountability and transparency, this is a huge fail for him personally as well as his now-elected Education minister. The trust has already been broken, even before either sat a single day in the Legislature, trust that the Premier vowed the PC party was determined to earn back.

With actions like this early in the new management mandate, why should any other promise mentioned in the throne speech be taken seriously? The job of the government has now been made harder with Albertans' trust broken. Take the statement around operational budget spending being held below the rate of population growth and inflation. This will be the classic robbing of Peter to pay Paul, except Peter is almost broke. This expense and probable debt will be downloaded into the infrastructure portion of the budget, and the current savings plans will again be drained to cover this spending.

These debts will be borne and carried by generations to come, and since the need for infrastructure will not end, this government policy of borrowing has no plan of ending, leaving Albertans facing an increasing debt load. This debt, growing on a daily basis, will take away increasing amounts of operational spending just in order to service the debt, operational money that could fund programs across the spectrum from health to culture, funding that will never meet the growing needs of Albertans but will instead be allocated for projects already built. Better yet, maybe we could stop spending so much money and pay off the debt.

We in the Wildrose are always challenged on what we wouldn't build if we were in government, but with skyrocketing debt and so many promises we really have to wonder: what is it that the PCs are not going to build? Are they not going to pay off debt, are they not going to balance the budget, are they not going to build every school they're promising, or are they going to take the easy way out and raise taxes?

Property rights are raised. Bill 1 addresses the PC version of correction of bad legislation but does not go far enough to correct past indiscretions to those affected. Wildrose Motion 501 takes the appropriate steps to entrench property rights for the benefit of all owners in Alberta. I know the Premier says that he's committed to protecting property rights, and if that's the case, then I do look forward to him voting in favour of the motion brought forward by my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka.

I appreciate the identification that there are educational challenges in K to 12, which do roll over into postsecondary, and I do look forward to working with the new Innovation and Advanced Education minister in bringing forward positive changes for students, whether young or older adults; parents; educators; institutions; and Alberta taxpayers.

The environment is of utmost importance to all Albertans, and it ties directly not only to their quality of life but to those across Canada and around the world. Our environment is theirs and theirs is ours in a global economy, and we need to be the best stewards possible. I hope Alberta gets there sooner rather than later. We have brought forward concrete ideas to protect the environment, and I hope this government follows suit.

Identifying First Nations, the Métis, and Inuit is another great step forward, but this can't be another olive branch held out without a true desire to right past wrongs, to be left unaddressed for the next Premier and cabinet to deal with. It's not enough for the Premier to just mention them in a speech, and it's not enough for him to meet with them and then fly back home. The Premier needs to fix the issues that are facing our First Nations communities, and he needs to work with our Métis neighbours and friends as equal partners.

There are still many issues from the floods of 2013. The way the DRP and LandLink were allowed to function through this as well as the 2010 floods was and is an embarrassment to this government, and everything should be done to resolve all open files and appeals for the individuals affected. This is still an issue in Medicine Hat, and I know it's an issue elsewhere.

There are concerns around the Premier's announcement of flood mitigation projects that have not been soundly studied and evaluated for efficiency, environmentalism, and financially, and these types of decisions almost never work out the way they were intended. I do hope that the Premier and his government review this decision so that a full assessment is done before moving forward without guidance, direction, or sound advice.

I do take great pride as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition as it is and has been our job to hold the government to account. If what we have contributed to the process of opposing, exposing, and proposing has been in any way an improvement to the way Alberta is governed, then we have all done our jobs as elected officials in being accountable to the people who have sent us here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the throne speech of 2014. My congratulations also to the new members of the Legislature and the new Premier.

You'll have to forgive me that after four Premiers in 10 years and eight throne speeches I'm left a little jaded hearing much the same messages rewarmed for this particular event – good ideas, high-sounding principles, and statements of intent – while I've seen in the last 10 years in the Legislature a government that plays catch-up and crisis management in one of the most challenging times of our history, with the recognition that we are a boom-bust economy.

And we still don't seem to have learned the lessons of what a boom-bust economy must do to plan better and provide for stable, dependable funding so that we're not hiring nurses one year and firing them the next, hiring teachers one year and firing them the next, establishing new programs for monitoring the oil sands one year and disbanding them the next, and, most recently, this climate change strategy of setting up a new program to support municipalities in their climate change attempts when we just disbanded Climate Change Central last year, a sterling organization that was doing good work both for communities and municipalities, also for individuals, to help them to reduce their carbon impacts. I look forward to the time when this government will stop creating change for change's sake and honour some of the commitments to the long-term well-being of the province.

It was a typical throne speech, I guess I would say, and nothing could be said about the good sentiments that were expressed. It would have been a little more believable if it was truly a new government, but in truth it is the same old government that happens to have a new Premier and a few new cabinet ministers and that new backbench individual all elected in the by-elections. But we spell by-elections "buy-elections." These elections in some ways were bought, as has been talked about repeatedly in this House, by announcements that were timed and, clearly, in a very cynical way meant to influence voters and that succeeded as they often do in our society.

This, of course, is contrary to other provinces' election rulings where there is a law, in fact, that there can be no new spending announcements. There can be no budgetary announcements during a writ period. Unfortunately, this is another deficit in our democracy where you can announce all you want in a writ period because we have no law to limit that. That along with very high donations from corporations and unions enables a very wealthy governing party to sustain its very strong campaign spending. Unfortunately, we see the result of that with a 43-year-old government that has been in power, with lots of resources to deal with, as a result of this continuing cycle of advantage and monies, giving us the best democracy money can buy, Mr. Speaker.

The vast majority of the government caucus are people elected under the previous Premier, and they made many of the mistakes and scandals that we continue to deal with and will continue over this next year to address. I would have hoped not so much for a government under new management as for new leadership, real leadership, leadership that reflects on doing the right things as opposed to management, which is focused on doing things right. Leadership has to deal with doing both, doing the right things and doing them in the most cost-effective and efficient way.

People in my constituency of Calgary-Mountain View, including those from the corporate boardrooms of Calgary, have raised a number of issues calling for a larger vision for Alberta, a more diverse economy, and a stronger commitment to renewables, to alternate energy and clean technology, to energy conservation, to policies that incent both retrofits in our commercial and residential buildings but also encourage the development of entrepreneurial investments in renewable energy that in many other countries are actually returning on the investment and providing profits to the producers of renewable energy.

We continue to see a government that's struggling with a revenue stream that is inadequate to the demands of our current population. The level of commitment to improving the care of especially our most vulnerable people in this province is lacking.

Alberta could bring in $10 billion more in revenue a year and still be the lowest taxing province in the country. It could provide for those independent and strong monitoring systems that the world is watching for in our environment. It could provide for our disabled populations, that are still getting marginal care at best, our seniors who are struggling with inadequate care both in terms of quality and affordability. It could help with hungry kids going to school. It could help with many of the demands that, obviously, a four-million-population province is going to need with the kind of growth that we've had over the past decade.

The fear of taxes, the fear of the Wildrose continue to stymie this government and hold it in a decade-old stalemate, trying to say: we can do more with less. Well, we've done a lot more with too little, and many people are suffering in this province as a result: single parents; some of our most vulnerable kids, who need learning and behavioural and emotional help; or mental health challenges that we hear about frequently not only from the health professions but from the criminal justice system.

Some of us spent the morning hearing from some in the safe and caring schools, that they're dealing with a tremendous number of young people who are feeling discriminated against, bullied, and needing help with some of their emotional and social needs. All of these could be prevented with early intervention, appropriate professional supports, family supports, actually getting at root causes of social and poverty issues. It's ironic that this government continues to talk about its social policy framework but has failed to deliver even a definition of poverty that we can actually work with and then hold ourselves accountable for making progress on.

There's a lot to be expected from this government, especially a government that calls itself under new management. Well, new isn't good enough, and change for change's sake isn't good enough. Where is the vision? Where is the real commitment to the long-term public interest as opposed to short-term crisis management, and where is the funding to provide for the kind of province we deserve and that we want for our children?

In that respect it's still not clear how much commitment this government does have to future generations when we are going to be passing on not only financial debt in terms of very high tuitions and financial debt in relation to the many infrastructure projects that are needed, but we are also talking about significant environmental debt with a potential for stranded assets and a failure or inability of some companies to clean up their particular developments, especially the tailings ponds, should they go under financially.

We have not taken in nearly the protective bond that's needed to ensure that we can reclaim and restore much of the northern community to any kind of viable state, and it's unconscionable that we should be leaving that to future generations instead of requiring of industry a substantial amount that would guarantee that we can clean up, not at the public expense but at the corporate expense, the impacts that they've had up there.

Alberta Liberals believe in both a strong economy and a strong society, with an environment that supports both. The government once again pitches the economy as the trade-off with the environment instead of seeing strong standards and enforcement as the cost of doing business, essential to our responsibility for habitat and species protection as well as honouring our future generations. That's not to mention our international reputation, which is now impacting our ability to sell our product internationally. How is that leadership? How is that showing Albertans that we care about the long-term well-being of this province?

Our rich agricultural heritage continues to be threatened as well by the failure of this government to enact a land-use framework, conserve rich farmland, including the chernozem soil that surrounds Edmonton and continues to be gobbled up through industrial and residential activity. Clear-cut forestry continues to threaten our eastern slopes notwithstanding Peter Lougheed's commitment to an eastern slopes policy that would ensure that our watersheds and our headwaters get the best of protection, because the true lifeblood of this province surely is our water. We're not protecting those eastern slopes, whether it be from industrial development or deforesting, and this is only going to add risk in terms of future flooding.

We need that kind of leadership that speaks not to short-term economic gains from such things as oil and gas development and clear-cut forestry on our eastern slopes but to the longer term well-being of our watershed and our sustainable surface water. How can we continue in good conscience to allow companies to inject our fresh water deep underground, never to come again, especially in southeastern Alberta, where we have no new water to provide licences for? We have maxed out our demands on our surface water in southeastern Alberta, including Calgary, yet we allow oil companies to use surface water and inject it out of the reach of our hydrological cycle. This is not leadership.

My constituents want to hear more from this government on a stronger commitment to the 3,400 homeless people in the city and the 35,000 individuals, including First Nations and seniors, who are at risk of losing their homes, that they're living in, or are unable to sustain the current levels of monthly rent fees, creating tremendous insecurity and stress that end up either on the streets or in the health care system or in the criminal justice system. Again, it doesn't speak of a government that sees the future and invests in early intervention, prevention, supports for people that actually would allow them to reach their potential and contribute back to society as they wish to do.

Child poverty was not even an afterthought in this throne speech. Again, many of us are looking to this government for more than words but actions with hungry kids – affordable child care, full-day kindergarten – as being a tremendous investment in our people, in the long-term well-being of not only them as citizens but in their ability to enhance the community and contribute back in the future with good jobs and their own tax commitment.

Seniors' care continues to be mediocre due to the lack of real standards, the real commitment to monitoring those standards, and the lack of any kind of enforcement of standards in our seniors' care.

I was very pleased to hear the Premier commit to a stronger agenda for First Nations. I thought that was one of the most unique and important commitments this government has made. I look forward to seeing what's going to happen in our education system with respect to the curriculum on some of the First Nations experience with residential schools and the profound need in this province for honoring and reconciling with our First Nations people on the basis of knowledge, not just on the basis of rhetoric or sympathy, and providing the kind of resources that are going to be needed to help many of our First Nations people make the shift out of their inadequate housing and living standards and educational processes to those that will really work for them and allow them to succeed and be active and proud contributors to our culture and to their own, in some cases, on reserve.

When you drill down to some of the details within the throne speech, there are some warning flags. The speech indicates that spending "will be kept below the rate of population growth and inflation." This clearly can be code for two things. One is cutting government services, and the other is that we will continue the kinds of emergency funding and crisis management that will not serve the long-term interests of Albertans. There is also a mention of low taxes and no sales tax, which again reminds me that this government has not made a commitment to stable, dependable funding.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, but the time has run by.

Now we have to go to 29(2)(a). Is there anyone who wishes to take advantage of 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Eggen: Certainly, I've always admired and am interested in listening to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View carry on with his analysis.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member.

There is, again, a commitment to low taxes and no sales tax, which again raises questions about whether we're going to be cutting services or continuing crisis management in this province and limping along with half measures for seniors, those in poverty, the disabled, and some of our First Nations priorities, which again I applaud but need to see some ability to address. Without new funding, without new staffing, without a new circle of commitment including First Nations, I don't see the deliverables. I think we need to hold ourselves accountable for those kinds of commitments made in the glory of a throne speech but, as I've said over the last 10 years, few of them delivered.

Another important statement, that Alberta will be an environmental leader, again begs the question: how? With no new funding, with a very weak environment department that is responding to complaints, and without the real commitment to independent monitoring, it's very difficult to imagine that our environmental monitoring and our environmental reputation are not only going to serve us and our children with a better environmental condition in the future but that our international markets will respect and really enthusiastically embrace our products. We need to do better. And that, Mr. Speaker, is what I think Albertans call leadership, not management. Again, management is doing things right. Leadership is doing the right things right.

There is a vague mention in the speech about a new tailings management framework, that was talked about two years ago, new commitments made on how we're going to manage our tailings and what was going to be the consequence if companies did not manage their tailings ponds in a more progressive way. No clear accountability there.

Many interesting and important statements, vague commitments with no details and no timelines, and that is part of the problem that we as legislators have. If we fail to put in definitions, timelines, deliverables, we cannot be held accountable. I would like to encourage the government to actually put themselves out and ensure that both in the social and environmental and even the economic fields we set some timelines, some accountabilities, some deliverables and hold ourselves accountable if you want to build credibility and rebuild any sense of confidence in our democratic process, which I would argue is at an all-time low in Alberta.

The kind of turnout at the by-elections and the measures of engagement in our culture suggest that people are pretty cynical about the democratic process. I would argue that there are many things this government could do to help restore some confidence, some trust, and some legitimacy to our democratic process, including, for example, a review of the kind of first past the post voting system. I would challenge the government to think about what we used to have in Alberta, which was a proportional representation voting system, which was removed back in the late '50s and would encourage many people to realize the true impact of their vote by seeing proportions of voters resulting in proportions of legislators. At the current time it's one more thing that discourages people from participating either in the voting process or in the political and party system specifically.

We'll have to wait and see how much of this throne speech is a mirage and how much of it is actually going to be delivered upon. We must try to keep cynicism at bay. We must at the same time be skeptical of everything this government continues to say that they're committed to, and we must try to hold ourselves in a respectful dialogue around what needs to be done in this very critical time of our history to provide the kind of leadership, foresight, planning, and investments for the long-term well-being of Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. Five seconds remain should anyone wish to take them. No?

Let's move on, then. We're going to Lacombe-Ponoka next, please.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and share my thoughts on the recent Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor. His Honour is truly a figure all Albertans are proud of. I certainly share in the sentiment.

Firstly, I'd like to thank the citizens of Lacombe-Ponoka for the honour and privilege of continuing to represent them in this Assembly. I will now give my response to the throne speech.

Albertans wanted the government to make a strong stance on addressing property rights here in Alberta, but sadly Bill 1 missed the point. I have heard from Albertans that the legislation should have been committed to addressing the issues in the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and other controversial pieces of legislation that impact their property rights, but it doesn't. Albertans have asked the government to show their commitment to recognizing and protecting property rights in Alberta, and this can be done.

It can be done through Motion 501. Albertans don't want the half measures of Bill 1, but I've heard loud and clear that what Albertans do want is to support the entrenchment of property rights in the federal Constitution and Charter. Motion 501 will do more for property rights protection in Alberta than any other amendment or bill. That is because it will entrench landowner rights, Albertans' rights, in Canada's highest law, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and will help this government fulfill the promise that it made to property owners in the throne speech.

Unlike Bill 1, Albertans know that Motion 501, if passed, would constitute Alberta's request that the Constitution be amended so that Albertans would have their property rights protected against any actions and laws passed by any future Alberta governments. The result of this motion would see property rights in Alberta enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Constitution. Consequently, this government would no longer have to bring forward legislation piece by piece to try and amend the mistakes that have been made in the past. As I said before, Albertans want to help this government. They want to help, and I want to help you keep this commitment that you made to Albertans on property rights in your throne speech.

Albertans know that strengthened property rights are a realistic possibility here in the province. Section 43 of the Constitution will allow this to happen. If this motion, Motion 501, goes forward and a similar motion in Ottawa passes in both the Alberta Legislature and the Houses of Parliament, we will have entrenched property rights here in the province of Alberta.

Some people might try to convince you that the section 43 formula only works for language; however, this is not the case. For example, in 1993 there was a constitutional amendment to allow a bridge to replace a ferry system in Prince Edward Island. In 2011 section 43 was used to modify the formula for apportioning seats in the House of Commons, apportioning the seats of the representatives who represent all Canadians. This is a powerful portion of our Constitution. It allows each province to put forward what they need for their province.

In one swift move if Motion 501 is adopted, we can have property rights in the province of Alberta. In one swift move we can tailor the legislative framework that has for a number of years now heavily impinged on landowner rights in Alberta. I urge you all to vote in favour of Motion 501 and see enshrined the protection of property rights for all Albertans. That's a legacy that we can all share in this Legislature. I want to share that with you; Albertans want to share that with you.

As the MLA for Lacombe-Ponoka I'm most excited to hold this government's feet to the fire on behalf of all Albertans and make sure that this government will keep their promise of building schools for Albertans. On September 23, 2014, I issued a press release on the problem of classrooms that were bursting at the seams in central Alberta. In 2012 the government promised a badly needed K to 6 school in Blackfalds, but at the time of the press release there still wasn't a shovel in the ground, and today there still isn't a shovel in the ground. During the by-election campaign many new schools were promised, one of these in my riding. I thank the government for doing this. Thank you. Thank you for recognizing that Blackfalds needs schools.

This province is in desperate need of new schools, not just in Lacombe-Ponoka but throughout the province. I thank the government for saying that these schools will be built; however, saying is not doing. Albertans need to see a real plan that shows just how the government plans to achieve this. I'd like to say that I will put my hand up and say to the government that I am going to work with you on behalf of Lacombe-Ponoka and all Albertans to achieve this. I will do this in my role in the opposition to make sure that that critical infrastructure is built. There's no room for political maneuvering in the building-of-schools business. Students need these, Albertans need these, teachers need these. Canada needs this. It's not just the province of Alberta. We are the economic engine of Canada. Canada needs us to build our schools.

For two and a half years all Albertans have been waiting to see shovels in the ground on these new schools, and so far the only shovels in the ground that we've seen are the sod turnings. This isn't acceptable. We need to get to work on these schools. What is most important is the future generation of leaders and outstanding citizens that Alberta schools produce. The youth of today are those who will lead tomorrow. Albertans demand that the government make sure that we have these schools to educate, train, nurture, and equip our children with the skills to prepare them for the life ahead, and it begins with building schools.

Wildrose and I stand alongside Albertans on this mission to get construction happening. We have to speed up the tendering and design phases. You may have read about this in my colleague Drew Barnes' infrastructure policy paper that was published last week, titled On Time and On Budget: Addressing Alberta's Infrastructure Needs. Because at this moment only one – one – out of 50 schools that have been promised under this government by the previous Premier has begun its construction phase, that's a hard number to swallow: two and a half years, one school.

We have ideas given to us by Albertans, and we over here are willing to share our ideas with you. We will lend these to the government to make sure these schools are built as soon as possible. You know, it really is encouraging to watch our entire policy document be adopted by the government on the other side of the aisle. It means that the people on this side of the Legislature have been doing their jobs. They've been doing the work that Albertans have requested of them. I can stand here, and I can smile and say thank you to all of my colleagues and to all of you for adopting what Albertans have asked you for.

Lacombe-Ponoka is facing rapid growth challenges. The services that will provide the community with the necessities of water and waste management must be met with appropriate funding. You heard me ask this question earlier. The town of Blackfalds and the city of Lacombe are feeling this, and it is crucial – it is crucial – that the government fulfill its promise that it made to these communities. The north leg project of the central Alberta regional waste-water commission is crucial to seeing the needs met in these very rapidly growing communities. Albertans need the Water for Life project to be more responsive to the needs of extremely fast-growing communities here in the province of Alberta, and nowhere is that identified more than in the town of Blackfalds and the city of Lacombe.

Albertans want to see a government that is concerned about these issues not just within the riding of Lacombe-Ponoka but in all areas of this province. Albertans are relying on this government to include them in their big picture, in your big picture, the one that was put out in the throne speech and not to get lost in politics, in this government's policy.

Albertans hope this government is fully committed to ending waste and to prioritizing projects that affect all Albertans. I've spoken of two of these in my comments so far, the north wastewater leg for Lacombe and Blackfalds and the schools. I realize that it's not just my constituency that faces these challenges, but we need to make sure that the government is working on behalf of all Albertans and that those needs are being addressed.

This government has promised to build what the people need and to start planning for the long term, in fact, 25 years out. Albertans hope to see this government stick to the promises that they have made in this most recent throne speech because it is clearly spelled out that there is a lot of work to be done. Unfortunately, all of that infrastructure work over the last two and a half years that should have been done on schools – well, that time has been wasted.

Now, I really hope – I really hope – that we start to see shovels in the ground. It's unfortunate that we've missed another building season because I can tell you that it does add costs. It adds costs when we start trying to put shovels in the ground in January. The ground is frozen. You know, you've got to clear away the snow. It's hard to put utilities in at that point in time. So it pushes these back even further. We need these projects. Albertans need these projects today, not tomorrow but today. It's unfortunate that we've waited two and a half years for these schools to even begin construction.

The bright side is that we've got time ahead yet. If we start today and we work together today and you take the ideas that Albertans are giving to you through us, though the Official Opposition, we will start to move forward on some of these issues. I see the promises in your throne speech. I love that you've taken them from our policy documents. I just hope that you implement them in the way that we would have implemented them, and if you don't, I will be here along with my colleagues to make sure that those promises are implemented in the way that Albertans conveyed them to us.

Thank you very much for this time. Thank you again to the constituents in Lacombe-Ponoka for my ability to represent them and present this speech to you in this hallowed Chamber.

The Speaker: Hon. members, section 29(2)(a) is available at this time.

If not – I see no one wanting to take it up – let's move on to the next speaker. Are there any other speakers? The hon. House leader for the opposition.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand and say a few words about the Speech from the Throne. I thought it was a very interesting document. I think there were a lot of good things in there, a lot of good words, good ideas. There were some things that I thought were a little bit vague, but hopefully we can put some meat on the bones a little bit as we go forward.

With regard to fiscal management I was happy to see that a large portion of the throne speech dealt with fiscal management and clearly was written in a way that used a lot of the language that the Wildrose over here has been using for a very long time with regard to budgets, with regard to debt, with regard to controlling our spending. I'm very optimistic about that. I think that that's good to see.

I think that we need to do more in this House to work together, especially right now, Mr. Speaker, because we do have a situation where, quite frankly, we do have a bit of a fiscal crisis developing. If oil bumps up tomorrow to $100 or $95, we can avoid it. But the fact of the matter is that if oil remains at $70 to $75, in that range, below or slightly above, we have a real problem on our hands.

We're going to have to learn to work together to do what's right for this province because there's too much at stake. It's one thing to carry, you know, $10 billion, $15 billion, or $20 billion in debt, which is probably what we'll be taking on by 2016, but it's quite another if those numbers start popping up into the $30 billion, $40 billion, or $50 billion range. If we do not get our fiscal house in order, that is what we will be looking at in the long term should oil prices remain where they are or near where they are right now.

So this is a very serious situation, and we need to treat it seriously and, hopefully, use this as a time to recalibrate the way we deal with finances in this province so that in future years when oil falls to these levels, we aren't left scrambling. That is, I think, a key development in our province's future. We need to make sure that we get this right and that we don't fall into this trap again of overspending so much that we put ourselves and our kids in this kind of predicament. Hopefully, we can work together in that regard.

I think that as the throne speech stated, keeping spending in line with inflation plus population growth is a good first step. It's very important not just operationally to do that but also with regard to capital. You've got to remember that capital is not just a one-time expense in most cases. Schools, roads, infrastructure, health facilities: they all have to be staffed. That's operational. They all have to be maintained. That's operational. These are real costs, so it's not just a one-off.

We have to make sure that as we move forward and we build, when we build infrastructure projects, we keep an eye out for what that's going to cost operationally going forward so that we can maintain spending increases to inflation plus population growth. I was very happy to see that in there, and I hope that we can work together to make that happen.

With regard to debt, you know, I didn't see enough in there. I would have liked to see more specifics with regard to controlling our debt. We are going to be in the $20 billion range by the end of the 2016 budget cycle according to the government's documents, $21 billion, actually. We need to rein that in. We need to at least have a repayment plan, a specific plan that's going to put a specific timeline in place that will show a way forward to repaying this debt and getting to the point where we don't have to take out more debt for capital. Is this going to happen overnight? No, not at $75 oil. It's not. But we need to start thinking a little bit more long term and think about: what is the end goal here? What is the plan going to be to stop going into debt, as a first step, and then, after that, to get out of debt in a way that, of course, makes sense. Obviously, we don't want to be paying penalty charges and things like that. To put a plan in place to stop the debt and then eventually pay it off I think is very important. I didn't see too much in there about that, and I would like to see more going forward on that.

With regard to savings, again, I have been happy with some of the developments recently with regard to that. It seems like we're refocusing the purpose of our heritage trust fund more into savings. Now, of course, we don't have much money to save right now because of our predicament with the price of oil as well as our spending issues, but that is something I am happy to see. There is at least an indication that we're going to get back to the original purpose of the heritage fund, which was that we would put enough away in these times of plenty so that eventually, down the road, when oil and gas revenues decline, we would be in a situation where we could use interest from the heritage fund to replace those revenues and replace our reliance on oil and natural gas so that we didn't have to grossly increase taxes and make ourselves uncompetitive, which, of course, would lead to fewer jobs, to people leaving the province, to becoming a have-not province. We want to avoid that, obviously, in the future.

Economic diversification is a part of that, but we have to realize that economic diversification completely away from oil and gas is not a realistic goal in the short term or even the medium term. We can work towards it, we can try to diversify as much as possible – that's important – but to say that we're going to completely replace the oil and gas economy and the revenues stemming therefrom with new industries, and so forth, that are completely unrelated to oil and gas: again, a great goal, a great initiative. Let's push that way, but it's not going to be possible in the short or medium term to do that. We need to therefore prepare to replace those revenues from oil and natural gas, and the best way to do that is through the heritage fund and through a very careful and consistent savings program. I'm happy to see that that is still a goal. It's obviously going to be slowed down somewhat because of our financial situation at this time, but long term I am very excited to see that.

I'm very curious to see Bill 2. Obviously, there are some things in Bill 2, the Alberta Accountability Act, that sound promising. I'm prepared to look at these bills – the same with Bill 1 – as first steps. I mean, I'm going to support Bill 1. I'm probably going to support Bill 2. I haven't seen it yet, obviously. But there will be proposals and amendments made to both of those bills, particularly Bill 2, regarding ways that we can cut down on the size of government, frankly, and that culture of entitlement. I'm not convinced that it's been taken care of in the last month. I think that there's still work to do there.

One of those things that I really would like to see in Bill 2 or an amendment to Bill 2 would be a cap on severance and bonuses for all government employees. I put forward a bill last session that would cap severance at $100,000 for under five years of service and $200,000 for over five years of service. I think that's reasonable. I still think that's very generous, actually. We have to put that in place so that on a go-forward these ridiculous severance allowances that have happened in the past – yes, it has been in the past. We've got to make sure that we don't repeat the mistakes of the past and the issues we've had with million dollar severances, massive payouts, and people collecting severance and then moving into another department, leaving and collecting another severance, as we saw in the case of Mrs. Weatherill. These things are just complete wastes of money, so we need to put this policy in place, and it needs to expand to the entire government, not just political staffers. I hope that we can do that.

With AHS, in particular, the Health minister I think is going to find that there's a lot of stuff to clean up over there, and I wish him well in doing that. There is a culture that's permeated over there for far too long, and I sure hope that the Health minister will work towards cleaning that up. He has a fresh slate, a blank slate, so I'm going to support him in his efforts to do that.

With regard to other things that we can do to get our budget and spending under control without affecting front-line services, I do think we need to look at – I understand from the throne speech there's a review being undertaken of our agencies, and so forth. I think that's a great idea. I hope it's a review with teeth and that we're not afraid to combine, amalgamate, and even in some cases get rid of certain boards and agencies in our province that, frankly, we could either do without or certainly where we could have one board have responsibility for more than what they're doing now. These costs add up, and our government has just simply gotten too fat and bloated. We need to shrink the size of the administration to one that at least is somewhat resembling the rest of Canada on the average instead of by far, as it is today, being the largest bureaucracy in the entire country, including the federal government, on a per capita basis. I hope that that review will go well.

The results-based budgeting process: I have not seen results from that process yet that have led to any kind of real, substantial savings. I'm hopeful that it will at some point do that, but I'm still waiting, and hopefully we'll see that soon.

Those were the things I wanted to talk about, mostly, with regard to the throne speech. Basically, those are mostly fiscal issues given that that's my critic portfolio, but, you know, there are other issues, obviously. I look forward to seeing more decentralization of health care. That means a ton to me as the representative from Airdrie, but I truly feel that our local people, our local health professionals and locally elected leaders, are the ones that should be making the most decisions with regard to patient care and the allocation of our health dollars. You know, I think it's a great deal for AHS and the Health minister as well. It's less to do if they decentralize. It's fewer decisions that they have to make about situations that they probably have no idea about or very little idea about because they're not on the ground. It's not their fault; it's just a matter of location. Decentralizing that decision-making to the local level I think is absolutely critical, and again I like the language around that.

Obviously, I would like to see more meat on the bones here, but it's a good start. We've heard a lot of good words before in this Assembly. You know, jeppers, I've only been here six years, and this is the fourth Premier we've had. I believe this is the seventh Finance minister I've had as Finance critic.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. I don't know if that's a compliment or a real indictment. Regardless, it is what it is.

5:10

An Hon. Member: You're bad luck.

Mr. Anderson: I must be bad luck. That's right.

I hope that we're moving forward with this Premier, and I hope we're moving forward with this Health minister and Finance minister and Education minister, and so forth. We need to put our thinking caps on, reach out across the aisle, and work together because we are in a situation that is quite critical. We have too many people depending on us to do the right thing and get our house in order.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

If not, I'd be pleased to recognize any other speakers or perhaps a motion to adjourn debate at this time.

Mr. Oberle: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move that we adjourn consideration of the motion before the House at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In consideration of progress that we've made today and in consideration of the opposition's wishes to participate in debate, I move that we now call it 6 o'clock and adjourn till 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:12 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 20, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Heavenly Father and Great Creator, as we conclude our work for this week in this Assembly, guide us that we may all return safely to our constituencies, where we will continue our work for the Albertans whom we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with some school groups, starting with Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former teacher there's always a class that holds a very special place in your heart. Today I'd like to introduce to you a class from Mundare school, who will soon be moving into their new school. These students were part of the School at the Legislature. They are accompanied here today by their teacher, Mrs. Adrienne Mills, and two parent volunteers, Mrs. Joanne McNiven and Mrs. Arlette Budinski. They are seated in the members' gallery and the public gallery as well. We are looking forward to having the Premier come out and visit when we cut the ribbon on that new school soon. Please stand.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three classes of students from the Wye school in my constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park. They are accompanied by teachers Amy Israelson, Tanya Jorden, Danielle Kent, and Miss Powley and a very lengthy list of parent helpers. There's a lot of parent help at the Wye school: Debbie Buxton, Leigh-Ann Ball, Karen Jones, Jackie Mill, Kirsty Woodman, Joan Kaminskas, Norm Cameron, Erin Stephen, Cathy Jones, Christine Martens, Greg Abercrombie, Marlene Crippin, and Amy Butterfield. They are seated, understandably, in both galleries, and I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood-Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 26 bright and enthusiastic grade 9 students from Archbishop Jordan Catholic high school from my constituency of Sherwood Park. They are accompanied today by their teacher Mr. Tim Murawsky. I'd ask that the group from Archbishop Jordan high please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups here yet?

Let us continue then. Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three notable guests from the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, which I'll be doing a member's statement on later today. Firstly, James Cumming, the president and CEO of the chamber, is a long-time Edmontonian and businessman as well as the federal Conservative candidate for Edmonton-Centre. Max Frank is the vice-president, member experience, at the Edmonton chamber and a lifelong Edmontonian and entrepreneur. Bobbi Menard is the manager of communications for the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce. She moved to Alberta two years ago, like so many others in search of the Alberta opportunity. All three of these individuals with the Chamber of Commerce have had an integral part in stewarding the continued growth of Edmonton into the amazing city we have today. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions; if I can, I'll do them both together. Today it's an honour for me to rise in the House to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my four children. Melissa McQueen is joining me here today. She's taking her bachelor of arts in Red Deer. She wants to be a high school social teacher. She's very interested in politics and has been involved in all of my campaigns when I was mayor and when I was running here provincially. It's a real honour to ask Melissa to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Also, joining Melissa today is my outstanding staff from my office, Mr. Speaker. I have six people joining us here today, and I'd ask them to rise as they're being introduced. With us today are Laura Lupul; Duncan Webster; Matthew Grant; my press secretary, Brittney Timperley; my chief of staff, Amy Prins; and my outstanding scheduler, Kim Kennard, without whom I could not manage my job. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Stacey Buga, Sarah Hall, and Leah Elzinga, seated in the public gallery. Sarah Hall is the chair of the Morinville Public School Council. Stacey and Leah are members of the Morinville school parent delegation. They're here today because there is currently no public junior or senior high school in the town of Morinville, and these ambitious ladies are fighting to have one there.

My second introduction. It's a great pleasure to have Mr. Doug Dickson right up here from the constituency of Calgary-Buffalo. Doug is often in the constituency at the local coffee shops, at both grocery stores, and all over the place, and he's quick to point out the errors of my ways as he is a long-time Conservative in this province. Nevertheless, we do have a great time discussing things, and we get in our shots both ways. It's a great honour to have him here.

Would they all please rise so we can give them a warm welcome from everyone in this Assembly.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three very proud guests here in recognition of the 40th anniversary of Dickinsfield Amity House, a not-for-profit organization located in the wonderful community neighbourhood of Evansdale, which is in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names.

Mrs. Carrie Thuesen, chairman of the board, Dickinsfield Amity House; Ms Tracy Patience, executive director, Dickinsfield Amity House; Mr. Ian St. Dennis, avid volunteer who assists with low-income tax filings at Dickinsfield Amity House. I would now ask the Assembly to provide the traditional warm welcome to my guests this afternoon. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a long-time friend and a constituent from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, Mr. Sheldon Murphy. Mr. Murphy is the president of the Fort McMurray Fish and Game Association and a hard-working Albertan who makes his living as a heavy-equipment technician with Syncrude. I understand from Mr. Murphy's own words that it's always been a strong dream to visit what he considers the most prestigious building in Alberta. This week, while in the capital city with his daughter to go to the Mötley Crüe concert, he has a chance to make that true. Mr. Murphy is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that he rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a young man by the name of Andrew Tidswell. Andrew is a recent graduate from Dalhousie University, majoring in political science. Born and raised in Calgary, a good Alberta boy, Andrew is really interested in politics and is happy to be present today. Perhaps one day Andrew will be an MLA in the Legislature right here. I'd ask Andrew to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

Dickinsfield Amity House 40th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to rise today to help commemorate the 40th anniversary of Dickinsfield Amity House. The Edmonton-Decore constituency is truly blessed to have in the heart of the Evansdale community Dickinsfield Amity House.

In 1972 Dickinsfield was a new subdivision in Edmonton, and to improve the quality of life of the residents in the area, a number of professionals established the Professionals for Progress group. In 1973 this ambitious group successfully garnered support from the Edmonton Housing Authority to open the We Care Centre, which provided co-op babysitting and after school programming. In 1974 We Care registered as a society, received funding from the city of Edmonton preventive social services, now known as Family and Community Support Services Association of Alberta, and in 1977 changed its name to Dickinsfield Amity House. The moniker "Amity," a Cree word for friendship, especially between nations, exemplifies the esprit de corps of this not-for-profit organization. Dickinsfield Amity House is a welcoming, strong, and vibrant family and community resource centre where allied professionals and volunteers build relationships and provide a wide range of support services and programs in direct response to community needs.

Mr. Speaker, special thanks to the enormous leadership of this fine organization. Also, my heartfelt gratitude to the many volunteers whose relentless commitment, dedication, energy, and efforts have transformed so many lives at Dickinsfield Amity House. Together their steadfast effort and support ensure that generations of children, youth, families, and people in the community are offered vital programs and services for all age groups. This is a living example of the Alberta spirit. Thank you for adding immeasurably to our great city and province.

Once again, congratulations and best wishes to Dickinsfield Amity House as you celebrate your 40th anniversary.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

LGBTQ Student Supports

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I will move first reading of Bill 202, the Safe and Inclusive Schools Statutes Amendment Act 2014. I came into politics to change the world, and I have in some big ways. Today I'm trying to change it in small ways, but it will be a big deal to those who will now be included. I have been really struck by how, as we move forward as a province and as a nation, we open up institutions, we include. But the new Education Act didn't include sexual minority gay and lesbian students in section 33(2), the safe and caring policy to reduce bullying.

As we well know, bullying can have terrible effects, and the group with the highest suicide rate is sexual minority youth. So I go looking and find that gay-straight peer support groups have been proven to reduce suicide in our gay youth. Well, hot damn, I can support those students by adding to the Education Act policy to allow gay-straight alliances without taking away from anyone else. And no euphemisms; if students want to call them gay-straight alliances, they can.

And while I'm at it, we can include references to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act in the Education Act – perfect – including our commitment to rights and freedoms and responsibilities and obligations. And, hey, I'm on a roll. Section 11.1 of the Human Rights Act should be gone. Done. In section 58 of the Education Act the parental opt-out clause can be expanded beyond religious and patriotic instruction to have sexual health education added in. So parents can in advance opt their kids out of instruction on religion, patriotic duty, and sexual health education.

It sounds like big changes, but really it's just opening up to include some kids that weren't included before. Not so hard. I hope you can support Bill 202.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Edmonton-McClung Constituency Priorities

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is under new management, and with a new management comes updated priorities. The five priorities laid out in the throne speech are exactly what this province needs. I would like to take this opportunity to talk about the two priorities that relate most to what I have heard from my constituents in Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Speaker, having a focused commitment to sound conservative fiscal principles is the vital priority to ensuring that Alberta remains the economic leader of this country. Albertans elected their government to use taxpayer dollars sensibly and efficiently. I would like to thank my colleagues for their teamwork and dedication to this commitment. Together we are making these promises realities, and we are on our way to a better Alberta. Alberta is growing at a very fast pace, and we need to be prepared, and preparation is exactly what this new government offers.

The other issue I care deeply about, Mr. Speaker, which was addressed in the government's priorities, is seniors' care. This government worked very quickly to manage the needs of seniors. It gives me great pleasure to recognize the seniors in my community of Edmonton-McClung, who remind us of the important contributions that Alberta's seniors continue to make to our society and our families. About 8 per cent of my constituency of Edmonton-McClung is comprised of seniors, and they have made their priorities clear. I would like to assure my constituents and all citizens of Alberta that our government will work diligently on your behalf to preserve the priorities we were elected to uphold.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Edmonton Long-term Development

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since its inception in 1889 this organization that I rise to speak about today has consistently presented a long-term visionary strategy to create important commercially sustainable opportunities in the capital region, including my own constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. Today, over 125 years later, the Chamber of Commerce boasts nearly 3,000 corporate business members.

Within Edmonton and the capital region there is an excitement, a buzz, if you will, which is being spearheaded by a number of commercial leaders in our city, both new and long-standing members of the chamber. Our city's plan to vitalize Edmonton's downtown core has been received with optimism and enthusiasm. These are now characterized by activities of community, commerce, sport, and entertainment. Mr. Speaker, one would be hard-pressed to find a spot on the calendar without a festival or major event in this city.

This isn't just growth; it is quality of life in a dynamic city. This will without doubt create greater opportunities for business development and community development. The two initiatives that have helped propel this success are the CRL and the municipal sustainability initiative as well as partnerships in all levels of government.

I would also like to highlight the tremendous impact our postsecondary institutions have had in helping our city's cosmopolitan vision for the future through leading-edge, world-class research and the cornerstone of the knowledge-based economy.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the feeling of excitement currently being felt in Edmonton and the capital region is one that is bursting with anticipation, and it is only the beginning. I commend the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce for being able to set a clear path for our city's long-term development. Without their forward-thinking priorities our city would definitely be at a loss and not what it is today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Calgary-East.

Rural Health Services

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every member of this House wants to see our health care system fixed. This desire crosses party lines and brings co-operation where it's not often seen. Our broken health care system affects each and every one of us, our friends, and our families. Under our former Health minister's watch the issues in rural ambulance dispatch have gone from bad to worse to a full-on crisis, with emergency wait times edging as high as an hour in some parts of the province. For our friends and families in rural and remote communities this can mean the difference between life and death.

EMS personnel, health care experts, and the opposition sounded the alarm over scarce emergency resources being flexed on nonemergency interfacility transfers on numerous occasions. Finally, last year, after immense pressure, the minister finally admitted there was a problem and launched a review, but according to southern Alberta EMS responders absolutely nothing has changed. As it stands, ambulances still flex from region to region on nonemergency calls, leaving entire corridors of the province dark.

The former minister and his associate had all year to fix this, but instead they spent time campaigning this summer with the Premier. It's time to turn the page. Today we have a different Health minister, a self-described expert. The minister said that he wants to focus on this issue, and that's great. The people he needs to talk to aren't hard to find. Some of them are sitting in this room. We in the opposition have been ready, willing, and able to work on this file for over a year. Now the question is: is the minister ready to work, too?

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, you're reminded that you have a 35-second limit to ask your question and a 35-second limit to answer it.

Let us begin with the first main set of questions. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Premier if he believed his government has a spending problem that requires more discipline or a revenue problem that requires more taxes. He avoided the question. I gave him an opportunity to commit to keeping the 10 per cent single rate of tax, that Albertans are so proud of. He didn't. Afterwards he admitted to the media that tax increases are on his agenda. Can the Premier explain to Albertans, who already pay the most per capita income tax in the entire country, why he wants to raise their taxes?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with the premise of the question or some of the statistics that were cited. My responsibility as Premier of this province is to operate the government of Alberta and its public finances in a manner which is prudent, which is cautious, which is balanced, and, specifically, to balance the budget in this fiscal year, which we are currently in, the 2014-2015 budget. We are into the second half of the year, dealing with circumstances beyond anyone's control relative to low energy prices. We are very focused on balancing the budget and stand by that commitment to Albertans.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, our low tax rates and our simple tax structure are Alberta's single greatest competitive edge. It has led to a strong economy and plentiful, well-paying jobs. It's resulted in Albertans paying the most income taxes on a per capita basis. I can provide the reports on Monday, when we table it. Our government doesn't work. It couldn't balance the budget at $100 oil. We have a real spending problem there. Why is the Premier telling Albertans that the answer for his government's spending problem is to increase taxes on everyone?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. Albertans are already the lowest taxed people in Canada by a very, very wide margin. I look forward to the statistics that the hon. member puts forward. We have the lowest effective personal income tax rates in the country. We have the highest personal exemptions. We have the lowest combined federal-provincial income tax in the country. We have no sales tax. We have the lowest gasoline tax. This government is committed to ensuring that we maintain that competitive advantage, and I will look forward to the hon. member opposite supporting us.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we pay the lowest rates, and that's why it generates the most tax revenue.

I can see that the absence of clarity is quickly becoming this Premier's hallmark. The Premier needs to come clean with Albertans. All week I've been asking him if higher debt and higher taxes are in the future for Albertans. In this place he avoids answering. But now we know, just as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar blurted out this fall, that every kind of tax increase is on the table. Why won't this Premier simply tell Albertans the truth, that he plans to raise their taxes?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, the responsibility that I have as Premier is to ensure that this province is operated in the black ink, in a fiscally responsible way. We are in the second half of the current year, dealing with $75 oil prices. We'll continue to manage our way through that. The Minister of Finance and I and our entire government are very focused on spending: on containing spending, on prudence, on discipline, on managing our way through these circumstances. That is what Albertans expect of us, and I certainly hope that the Leader of the Opposition and her party will be supportive of that fiscal responsibility.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say it very clearly: Wildrose does not support new taxes.

Ethics and Privacy Issues

Ms Smith: Yesterday I asked the Premier about integrity, specifically the lack of integrity of the Education minister's decision to queue-jump a request for modulars for a school in the riding he was running in. The Premier and the minister say that they were just listening to parents when they approved modulars for William Reid ahead of six other schools with higher needs. "Just listening to parents," they said. Why did the government ignore the pleas of the parents from Cranston, Evergreen, Louis Riel, Coventry Hills, Radisson Park, and MidSun schools, which were ranked higher on the priority list?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just need to remind you of something. I've been advised that a matter like this, I believe, may have been referred to the Ethics Commissioner by yourself. I wonder if you could please just confirm whether or not that is the case, because if it is the case, then, of course, subject to the Conflicts of Interest Act, section 24(6), we're on dangerously thin ground. So, Opposition Leader, may I ask you to please comment on whether or not that is the case.

Ms Smith: It is the case.

The Speaker: That is the case. If you could just, going forward . . . Please have a seat, Airdrie.

Hon. Leader of the Opposition, if, going forward, you could just recraft your question to be a matter of policy or a matter of service or a matter of government program, then the question would be in order.

I'll ask the hon. Education minister if he wishes to make a comment. If not, we'll move to the first sup, recrafted.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will switch gears, then, and ask another question.

Sticking with the topic of integrity, this summer Albertans witnessed the spectacle of ministerial expense documents being leaked by someone in this government. The media was sent the cellphone bills of cabinet ministers. In the process an innocent person's identity was stolen, and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act was broken. A police investigation began. Premier Hancock also ordered an internal investigation. Can the Premier update us on the status of either of those investigations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the best of my knowledge, that matter is under investigation by law enforcement, and I would decline to comment further.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we've been told that the new Premier cancelled the internal investigation. We also understand that the Calgary police have ended their investigation before even interviewing the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, whose information was illegally leaked. They also didn't interview any of the civil servants who were supposed to protect this information. It seems to me that the Premier might have an integrity problem in his government. Will the Premier call in the Privacy Commissioner to independently investigate this serious matter?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'm going to ask the Minister of Justice to clarify whether this matter is under investigation by a source other than the Ethics Commissioner, is it sub judice, or neither of the two?

Mr. Denis: My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that the Calgary Police Service have an active investigation in this matter. I have not checked in the last couple of weeks, but that remains my understanding.

The Speaker: So the question stands, and the clarification has been accepted.

Do you wish to comment further on the question?

If not, let us move on to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for your third and final main set of questions.

Misericordia Community Hospital

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the third time in just over a year the Misericordia hospital in Edmonton is flooded. This time it's really bad. The emergency room is closed, and patients are being turned away. This government has known for some time that the Mis is in bad shape and needs immediate action, but the government's refusal to act has once again caused patients to suffer. To the Minister of Health: how can he explain his government's failure to ensure that patients at the Misericordia are safe?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the government of the province of Alberta has invested $25 million in trying to ensure that the Misericordia hospital continues to deliver the services to the citizens of the west end of the city of Edmonton. This particular issue was very concerning to all of us. They're working very diligently right now to ensure that all patients are kept safe.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has well over half a billion dollars in deferred maintenance in health care facilities. Today is a sobering reminder of what that means for patients. The Misericordia hospital is literally falling apart. It has flooded now three times over the last year. To the Minister of Health. He has two choices: fix the hospital or build a new one. What's it going to be?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we've taken a direction to invest $25 million over a period of time to try to ensure that this hospital continues to operate in an effective way. We're also looking at: how do we build new acute-care facilities across the province? We're doing that throughout the province now, with new facilities in Grande Prairie and other places. We'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, the roof may literally cave in at this hospital.

Now, I'll cut the minister a little bit of slack because he's pretty new on this job, but I won't be forgiving of all of those who are sitting around him. This is on them. They've ignored these issues for too long. To the Premier. This has been a priority for Alberta Health Services for years. We cannot wait for more delays or more reviews. What is he going to do about it right now?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is doing all we can at this point in time by ensuring that the current situation is taken care of. The people at the location are ensuring that all steps are being taken to make sure that patients are taken care of and that the conditions will be reinstated as soon as possible.

2:00 Education Rights in Morinville

Mr. Hehr: The Premier pontificated that the Alberta constitution may somehow tie his hands when it comes to allowing Alberta kids to establish gay-straight alliances. Now, he may be playing fast and loose with that interpretation, but one thing that is clear is that under the Alberta Act of 1905 all communities are entitled to a public school. Morinville, a community of 10,000 people, a vast majority of whom are non-Catholic, has no access to a public option past grade 7. Why isn't the Premier fulfilling this government's obligation to provide a public school for these parents and kids?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member opposite for the question. It's a very important one. The local MLAs in that area, working with our government, of course, recognize the growing enrolment pressures that we have on some of our schools. Recently government organized a value scoping exercise along with officials from the Sturgeon school division, the parents, and community members to explore public school options for Morinville. We're working closely with the community to determine the best approach to providing public education in Morinville. We look forward to a proposal coming forward to us.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'd ask the Minister of Education this. It is a constitutional obligation of your government to provide public schools for children in the Morinville community. Why is it not following through on these constitutional obligations mandated by the foundation of this province?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously our responsibility to provide quality education for all students in our province. The value scoping exercise I mentioned has provided an opportunity to ensure the community has the information and transparency needed to come forward with an informed decision on the best approach. Community members participated in preparing options. Those will go to the school board, and the board will then submit its proposal to the government. We look forward to receiving that proposal.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'd ask the minister how any of that answer provides any restitution for the people in Morinville on having their constitutional mandate fulfilled of having a public school option for their children in that community.

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, as a province we've embarked on the most expansive school infrastructure project in Canadian history to address school shortages. We're going to continue to invest in schools right across the province. Sturgeon school division's requirements, once they're confirmed by the board, will be considered seriously as we move forward investing in school infrastructure for the future.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has been demanding action to repair and replace the Misericordia hospital for several years now. The government has dismissed our concerns along with the concerns of front-line health care providers, patients, and their families. Well, today we understand that the cafeteria roof in the Misericordia, which has been leaking for years, has collapsed. To the Premier: why has his government, through their incompetence and their grossly negligent behaviour, been allowed to put the health and safety of Albertans at risk?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we have tried to make sure that the Misericordia hospital is operating as well as possible by supplying $25 million to it to ensure that it will continue to operate in an effective way.

Ms Notley: I am quite concerned by the failure of either the Premier or the Health minister to take this issue seriously. Twenty-five million dollars is not relevant. What's relevant is that a roof collapsed, west Edmonton has no ER, and there are no diagnostic services right now. Meanwhile we have a minister who thinks this issue requires more study. To the Premier: do you really think your minister's judgment that this requires still more study really warrants the faith and trust of Albertans for him in his role?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously the issues at Misericordia hospital as well as any hospital throughout the province of Alberta. We will make sure we do all things to ensure these hospitals are managed properly and they're taken care of properly.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Wow. Well, Mr. Speaker, years of Tory neglect both here in the House and generally in doing their job have come home to roost. West Edmonton has no emergency room, no diagnostics, and a collapsed roof in its cafeteria. To the Premier: what are you going to do to ensure that members of your government are held accountable for this profoundly irresponsible level of neglect?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, as I've already said, we're doing all we can at this time. We also know there's a need for acute-care improvements across the province of Alberta. We continue to look at that, and we'll continue to do that.

Landowner Property Rights Legislation

Mr. Barnes: Yesterday, the environment minister said that property rights are, and I quote, well protected under current legislation, suggesting he doesn't understand either property rights or his government's legislation. For instance, Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, prevents any person with a cause of action from bringing an application before the court, when access to the judicial system is a basic hallmark of western democracy. To the Premier: your promised first bill was to re-establish property rights for Albertans, not kick the can down the road. Does your government really believe landowners shouldn't have an opportunity. . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. The 35 seconds has expired.

Let's go to the minister of environment.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government introduced a few years ago the Alberta Land Stewardship Act to bring sense and planning to a very rapidly growing province. Subsequent to that, there were a number of amendments made based on consultation with landowners that dealt with some issues within that original legislation to improve the rights of landowners in respect to that legislation.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: No compensation, no court.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the sweeping draconian nature of Bill 36 suppresses a landowner's right to fair compensation and access to the courts and states that the act will prevail in all matters of dispute over the landowners you're pretending to protect, does your government have plans to do the right thing by all Albertans, stop this charade, and repeal Bill 36?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, no, we will not repeal Bill 36. This is a piece of legislation that is very, very important to our integrated resource management system, that will allow us to develop our resources and our economy in a very responsible manner. What the Premier has introduced is a bill that addresses some of the concerns of landowners, Bill 1, as well as to ask the all-party committee to look at the recommendations brought forward by the Property Rights Advocate, and we will undertake that work.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the government's decision to repeal Bill 19 is welcome, it's a moot point because it doesn't change the fact that it was never enacted. And Bill 36, which is significantly more unfair in matters of compensation and appeal, trumps it anyway. Given this, do you stand by your comments that Bill 36 sufficiently protects the rights of landowners to access the courts and compensation when this bill can be used as a big stick in negotiations and binds landowners to this government's incompetency, or would you like to take this opportunity to clarify?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, any time under Bill 36 and any time with respect to any legislation in this province that landowners are asked to give up their property rights for the overall good of the province and the public, they will have access to appropriate mechanisms such as access to compensation and access to the courts. It's something that this government takes very seriously. We will stand behind that, and we will let the all-party committee do its work and see what we come up with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Rural Issues

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today at the AAMD and C fall conference we heard loud and clear from our rural counterparts on the need and the growth that we're having in rural Alberta. The question that I have here today is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that we've heard so loud and clear from our rural libraries, what is the minister going to be doing to help fund the growth that we're seeing in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his question. First, I'd like to say that I've had a great three days at AAMD and C. I want to thank Bob Barss, our president of AAMD and C, for his work and congratulate the incoming president, Al, as well.

Mr. Speaker, I spent a number of years on the board of the Yellowhead regional library. I'm a very strong supporter, as is our government, with regard to our libraries. We currently are providing $26 million this year and an additional $4 million to support IT in advancement. We are proud of the over 300 libraries we have in our province, and this government will continue to support them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second item that we heard loud and clear today was on high-speed Internet. High-speed Internet is very prevalent in the major urban areas, but rural Alberta still suffers on high-speed Internet, especially in our business communities that are out working in the oil fields. To the same minister: could you give us some clarification on when you're going to invest in rural Alberta?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for this important question. As he identifies, not only is high-speed Internet a crucial business tool for rural development; high-speed Internet has become a crucial component just for quality of life for all Albertans, including those in rural Alberta. That's why the Premier has made access to and expanding of high-speed Internet the number one issue on my mandate letter. That's why I've been busy working with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, and I continue to work with our stakeholders in the corporate and municipal sectors to deliver high-speed Internet to Alberta.

The Speaker: The final supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one is for my colleague the Transportation minister. It's something that I think he heard quite clearly today, but I'd just like to reaffirm his commitment to the roads and bridges files in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we did hear very loud and clear this morning from our AAMD and C partners. You know, I met with several of them over the last couple of days and had the same message that roads and bridges are one of their top priorities. I agree a hundred per cent with that. This year we've invested more than $735 million in road rehabilitation for our existing infrastructure. Much of this is going to rural Alberta. We'll continue to work with our municipalities as well as industry to find innovative partnerships that will bridge that funding gap.

The Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Wheatland County Roads

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Transportation minister is going to hear it again. Residents in the Wheatland and Newell counties are driving on highways with growing potholes and shrinking embankments. It's dangerous and is sparking outrage. I know the Transportation minister recently met with these folks, but without a clear priority list for maintenance projects or a firm commitment from the government we have no timeline when these highways will get fixed. With the safety of Albertans at risk can the minister give commuters a firm timeline when these troubling highways will be fixed?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, as I said, I met with lots of municipalities, and every member in this House in their constituencies have road priorities. Every Albertan probably has road priorities. Safety is number one. When we look at all the priorities from across the province, we evaluate them, and safety is number one. We have a good technical evaluation process that measures the roughness and the condition of the road. Also, budget has a lot to do with which roads get built and the priority.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it took over two years for the government to fix highway 841 after half the highway slid down the bank and given that highway 569 has still not received any care, will the minister meet the requests of Wheatland county and devolve the responsibilities to the local experts so Albertans can use these highways safely?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I met specifically with Wheatland county, and I know their concerns. But every municipality has concerns with roads, and we have a responsibility to balance the budget of this province with the priorities. I'd like to rebuild every road in the province of Alberta, but we know that isn't possible given the fiscal situation. I can't understand the members across. One minute they're saying that we should cut spending; the next minute they're wanting us to spend more.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, we're worried about saving the lives of our constituents that are going to fall off these beaten-up roads.

Given that highway 876 serves as a crucial access point from highway 1 to one of Alberta's most popular provincial parks, Dinosaur provincial park, and given the mix of industrial trucks and family vehicles travelling on highway 876, which is dangerous and barely passable after a rain, when will the minister ensure that this highway is fixed or cost share the project with a very willing county of Newell?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's the same question. We work with all of them. There are priorities. I am working with the county there, and we're working in partnerships, but like I said, we've got to stack all the priorities of everybody in the province up. We do the most we can with the money we're given. Be assured that I take safety very seriously. Safety is number one, and we look after that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Northland School Division

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An inquiry was conducted at Northland school division, and an engagement committee report was completed in January 2011. Included in the report were five priority recommendations to improve education for over 2,700 students. To the Minister of Education: given that it is now 2014 and my peeps are getting more and more restless, when can they expect a detailed position and response from the minister on the recommendations?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question. All students in Alberta deserve a quality education, and certainly those in Northland school division are no exception. We're working with the school division and with local communities on improving student learning, ensuring effective governance of schools in the region. A number of the recommendations in the Northland inquiry team report, which I've had the opportunity to read through, have been implemented. We're starting to see some great successes; for example, we've taken steps to address teacher and principal recruitment and retention, and we're now seeing some improvements in those areas.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to see that at least this minister is reading the report. The people have been waiting, waiting, waiting. It's a waiting game. To the same minister. My constituents have been waiting for so long. When can we see action, direction, and implementation of all the recommendations?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, a number of the recommendations, I believe 12 of them, have been implemented already, and the others are under consideration. We have started seeing some good successes. Another example over the last few years: the number of students dropping out of high school has decreased. The number of students completing their high school program, transitioning to postsecondary, and writing provincial diploma exams has also increased. A good-news story.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: will there finally be an executive school board put back in place so that the people with Northland school division can also exercise the same democratic right that all other school jurisdictions in Alberta enjoy and be able to determine their own educational future?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, a very important issue raised by the member. We're going to continue listening to the local community and work in partnership to ensure that we get the changes that need to be put in place right. In order to address some of the issues around governance, we need to amend the Northland School Division Act, and we'll be engaging in community conversations to develop principles, visions, and values for an amended piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Child Care Supports

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is Universal Children's Day, and in light of no action on child poverty by this government and in light of the Health minister's recent decision in favour of big tobacco, it's fitting that we question the PC government's commitment to putting children first. The Public Interest Alberta report released today shows more families struggling to find and pay for daycare, with the cost per child at $900 per month, full-day kindergarten cheaper, at $750 per month. To the Minister of Human Services: when will this government keep its promise for full-day kindergarten . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt, but 35 seconds has gone by.

Let's go to the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed international day of the child. We know in Human Services that children are our focus. We also know that with the supports we provide, where they're for child care, parents do have the choice. We know that there are 2,300 licensed child daycare programs here in Alberta. In 2013 families received the full subsidy of $268 per month.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given the scarcity of safe and affordable child care in Alberta the Liberals have also been calling on the government to ensure that more of these child spaces are available and affordable, subsidized. Will the minister please help release the burden on high-cost child care by supporting the Alberta call for the creation of a universal low-cost child care program in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year we increased the spaces by about 4,700 child care spaces, for a total of over 100,000 spaces across Alberta. We know that many people are coming to Alberta, but we also know that we need to give parents a choice as to where they put their children, whether it's in a day home or a daycare. At the end of the day, for me, it's something that I'm looking at very carefully. Again, top of mind. Children always will come first.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the Education minister. Given that in the past five years the renowned early childhood mapping project has assisted government and communities in addressing thousands of children with developmental delays, learning problems, behaviour disorders, and mental health issues, why is the minister cutting this important work?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member opposite for the question. I'm new in the role, of course, so I'm still getting up to speed on all of the issues. My colleague might be able to respond to this issue better than I might, but I will certainly take the member's question under advisement.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government was elected by promising to eliminate child poverty and to bring more low-income Albertans into the workforce. Those in the know understand that comprehensive, affordable, high-quality child care is fundamental to meeting those goals. Unfortunately, a new report proves that this government is failing Alberta families on child care. To the Premier: is your government going to be remaining lost in this Leave It to Beaver understanding of modern families, or will you finally commit to a meaningful child care plan that our province needs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to address this question again. I think it's important to note that of over 80,000 children that are enrolled in child care programs, 25,000 children receive a full or partial care subsidy, and that's very important to this ministry. Again, helping low-income families with some of the issues that they have, whether it's through the parent link centres or providing supports like that through Human Services, is what we will be doing.

Mr. Eggen: Given that on Tuesday the Ontario Legislature endorsed a federal NDP plan for a $15 per day child care plan and given that in this province we invest less than all but one other province, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. We have a child care crisis here in the province of Alberta, but the issue does not even warrant a mention in your throne speech. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really important that we focus on helping low-income families find quality child care. That's the focus we're going to take, and that's what I'll be working on, especially when we look at the early years strategy and look at the issues of child poverty as well.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that there is a crisis-level shortage of child care spaces, especially for infants and special-needs kids, not just low income, Mr. Speaker, and that when you do find a space, the average cost is about a thousand dollars per month per child and that even the safety is not guaranteed for all people, not just low income, to the Premier again. You need to take action on this issue. When will you do so, sir?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's about parents having the choice where they need to put their children. We know that it's very important to support the families on lower incomes, but again, it's having families access some of the other supports that we provide through Human Services, some of the many supports through parent link centres, and some of the other aspects that we do to support families.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary Area Flood Mitigation

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, a short time ago the government made an announcement on flood mitigation, and it probably wasn't coincidental that that came on the eve of a by-election. Of three potential projects they propose a giant dry reservoir in Springbank. Many of us, even the mayor of Calgary, sounded the alarm, saying that we have yet to see any proposals or engineering projects. Now, surely the government wouldn't proceed with a project of this magnitude without those, so I ask the environment minister today: have you completed these, and will you make them public?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There has been substantial work looking at a number of options when it comes to flood mitigation along the Elbow River, and what we've done is that we're taking a look at what the environmental impacts of all of them are, what the impacts to landowners are, what the financial impacts of these projects are. At this point in time, with all of the information that we've been able to gather, we've decided that the best one to move forward on right now is the room for the river concept in Springbank.

Mr. McAllister: If you're keeping track in your programs, the answer is: no, we have not.

Mr. Speaker, upstream of Springbank is the community of Bragg Creek. It suffered tremendous damage. They're still rebuilding from the last flood. The community of Redwood Meadows, through God's grace and a Herculean effort, survived. The McLean Creek project is upstream of these communities. It would make sense to build this project. Given that it is on Crown land, residents and community leaders want to know: why are you steamrolling over the rights of landowners in Springbank when this option exists and it hasn't been explored?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, there's so much wrong with the preamble in that question. What we are doing is working with Rocky View county there to develop a number of flood protection options that they can implement. We provided them with a grant to do the engineering on that. That community will be protected, and we're committed to that.

Mr. McAllister: The only thing wrong is that you shot before aiming.

Given that landowners understandably don't have a lot of trust in this government when it comes to property rights, understanding that community leaders and residents feel that you have completely left them out of the process, Minister, will you table the engineering reports and studies showing why you chose this project, along with the financial estimates, including the estimated cost of land acquisition, or are you clearly telling Albertans that you have not done due diligence?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, it's been about 17, 18 months since the floods of 2013. Our government committed shortly after that to make sure that we improve and implement a number of flood mitigation projects, and we've done substantial work on that. You know, we would be more than happy to sit down with the member and show him all of the work that we've done. We have gotten to a point where we've been able to move forward with the project, that is going to provide significant protection to the big communities of Calgary from a flood of this nature again in the future, and we must do that right now. We don't have the time to wait like the hon. member suggests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by Medicine Hat.

Seniors' Housing in Red Deer

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta owns two surplus long-term care sites in Red Deer that are now no longer suitable to be used for long-term care due to their age and condition. As I understand it, these buildings are due to be demolished. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What is the timeline to have these sites cleared for use by other government departments?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At present we're looking at other potential uses for these sites, and I believe we'll be able to move forward in a very swift manner.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my supplemental questions are to the Minister of Seniors. Once these sites are cleared, is the minister planning to utilize these sites to provide much-needed affordable housing, lodges, or assisted living for Red Deer residents and seniors?

The Speaker: The Seniors minister.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question from the hon. member. I can tell you that one of my very first meetings when I became Seniors minister was set up by him, with the mayor of the city of Red Deer and the Member for Red Deer-South, to look at their housing situation. We're working with the Minister of Infrastructure. I can tell you that my staff will be on-site next week or by the end of the month, having to look at the appropriateness of these sites. These are taxpayer assets. If there is any way that we can put them to work in future plans to help seniors, we have a great appetite to do that.

Mr. Dallas: Well, that's good news, Mr. Speaker, but in the meantime – and it takes some time to develop these – what other options has the minister got for seniors in Red Deer in terms of housing options?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the government is committed to providing safe, affordable, quality housing that meets the diverse needs of all our seniors, and in Red Deer there are various options. We know that there are challenges because of tighter supplies, but one of the great mandates we have from the Premier is to develop a provincial housing strategy and look at all of our assets. We also had the recent announcements, which you know about. But most seniors in that community and others should work with their regional housing management bodies, that are supported by this province to do affordable housing. I can also give you the good news that there are about 120 supportive living projects, or units, in Red Deer under construction right now or with the sod ready to be turned.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-West.

Medical Laboratory Services in Medicine Hat

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AHS has announced their plans to close a Medicine Hat diagnostics lab and centralize all of the testing at the Medicine Hat regional hospital. Not only is this bad news for patients, but it means layoffs for hard-working front-line staff. Even worse, this was done without compassion. The staff had to find out through the media. Now, I know that the minister is new on the job, but he is responsible for AHS, so can he explain this new strategy of announcing dangerous centralization plans, layoffs, and closures through the media?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This was a step taken in order to reduce the costs of lab work in Medicine Hat and was done to be more fiscally prudent.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister said that moving testing from the diagnostic lab to the regional hospital was planned all along, he's either not telling the truth, or he's completely misinformed. It's never been in the plans. How does he intend to ensure that these services are still accessible, there are no lapses in testing, and the patients of Medicine Hat don't have to see their health put at risk?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, there's no intent to put anybody at risk. The procedures will continue. Tests will be taken and given at a better facility.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that AHS has done a cost analysis and stated that there will be $5 million saved over five years, can the minister please explain how many job losses and reduced services there will be to create these cost savings?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I've been informed that there will be no job losses and that there will be substantial savings. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Calgary Ring Road Completion

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last fall this government signed a historic land transfer agreement with the Tsuu T'ina First Nation that will see 421 hectares of land transferred to the government for the completion of the Stoney Trail ring road in Calgary. This agreement has now been in place for over a year. Can the Minister of Transportation please give this House an update on the construction schedule for this project?

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. I know he'll do a great job to advocate for the people of Calgary-West. Mr. Speaker, construction can't begin on the final leg of the Calgary ring road until the land transfer agreement with the Tsuu T'ina First Nation is complete. My department continues to work with our partners in the federal government and the Tsuu T'ina nation to complete the agreement. We expect the agreement to be completed by 2015, and in the meantime we continue to move forward with detailed engineering design and an environmental impact assessment.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calgarians are also concerned about the overall cost of these final two sections of the ring road and that reports indicate costs in the neighbourhood of $5 billion, can the minister please explain this unusually high price tag and detail any measures his department is taking to ensure Albertans receive the best value for their tax dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be frank, it's much too early to begin serious talk about cost estimates. The ballpark estimate that's been circulating is just that, a ballpark. We have yet to determine if the project will be delivered using a P3 model or through a more traditional tendering model. This will affect the overall cost. We will make this decision based on which delivery method will provide the best overall value for Albertans. I'm confident that we can get good value for our money, and I'm committed to delivering this project in a financially responsible manner.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. My final question is to the same minister. Given that my constituents in Calgary-West have expressed concerns that noise from the road will negatively impact their quality of life, are there contingencies in place to ensure that all the communities bordering the ring road will not be affected by traffic noise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department has strict noise guidelines that state that we must consider sound barriers for noise levels that exceed 65 decibels on average over a 24-hour period. If once construction is complete and the road is open to traffic the noise levels exceed this threshold at any location along the route, we'll take steps to address the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Rural Physician Recruitment

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Screen Award winning film called The Grand Seduction described the very real problem of rural Canadian communities like mine which struggle to recruit doctors. Many towns are forced to offer massive incentives and beg on our hands and knees not only to recruit doctors but to have them stay. No matter what part of the province you live in, you should never have to drive hours to receive a checkup or treatment. It's clear that the Alberta rural physician action plan isn't working in my riding and many others. What is the Health minister going to do to fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very concerned about rural Alberta, ensuring that they do have adequate support from their physician community. This is a challenge, and we have developed a rural action plan. That is helping. Also, we've invested a tremendous amount more money in other programs and will continue to support rural Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it is very difficult for rural Alberta to compete with larger communities in attracting doctors to their communities and given that rural residents who are trained in Alberta are more likely to return to rural Alberta to practise medicine, what is this Health minister going to do to ensure that we are training more doctors in our own backyards?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, there are programs out of the University of Calgary medical school that are looking to implement places within rural Alberta to train physicians, and we're encouraging that. We think that the more that can be trained in rural Alberta, the more will stay in rural Alberta, and we think that's a very positive step.

Mr. Rowe: Given the fact that we cannot train enough doctors locally quick enough to meet the needs of today and the limited success of the rural Alberta physician action plan, what will this Health minister do to encourage the college of physicians to reduce barriers for internationally trained doctors to come to rural Alberta?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we hope that through a process of encouraging doctors to come to the province of Alberta from around the world and making sure that that process allows them to move through the system quickly, they will choose rural Alberta but choose in the way of choice rather than of obligation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Forestry Industry

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The forest industry is firing on all cylinders, whether it's in Alberta or many jurisdictions across North America. I'm proud to come from a forest community, you know. The single biggest threat to our healthy forests is the pine beetle. To the Minister of ESRD: are you confirmed and committed to the pine beetle strategy in this province?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, obviously, having a healthy forest is a very important aspect of a healthy forestry industry and in making sure that it's economically viable. This government has committed about $40 million this year to continue our fight against the mountain pine beetle. We have done a very good job of holding it off and making sure that it doesn't spread. We will continue to be committed to that as the forestry sector is very, very important to many of the communities in our province, as the member said.

Mr. VanderBurg: To the Treasurer. Lumber prices today are exceeding $375 U.S. per thousand, predicted to be over $500 per thousand. Is this going to help your shortfall in the budget?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're always happy to see the forestry industry do well although with oil at $75 a barrel it won't help us considerably. More importantly, the forestry industry pays some of the highest wages anywhere in the province, and more than 50 communities in rural Alberta depend on forestry to be sustainable. So good forest prices and the fact that we're selling lumber across North America and the rest of the world is good for Alberta.

Mr. VanderBurg: The next question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Building codes prevent the use of more Alberta wood products in our structures, especially those greater than three storeys. This is an opportunity for Alberta. Would you support the changes in regulations to use more wood products in structures greater than three storeys?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That member has had three excellent questions. Like this hon. member, I am an MLA with forestry in my constituency as well. I have had the opportunity, like this member, to go to other provinces that have built wood structures higher than three storeys. Absolutely, if a piece of legislation came through, we would support this. It's outstanding for the forest industry. Great question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: I'm not sure I can follow that, Mr. Speaker.

Regional Dialysis Service

Mr. Saskiw: Lac La Biche was promised a dialysis bus; then it was delayed. We finally got a dialysis bus, but there was no staff to run it. Then the bus broke down. It might actually be funny if it wasn't a matter of life and death. Now with winter coming, the bus just sits in front of the hospital. This leaves me wondering: why aren't the dialysis units being permanently moved from the bus into the hospital?

Mr. Mandel: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. I've had an opportunity to meet with the community of Lac La Biche, and we're looking into that as we speak right now.

Mr. Saskiw: Given that there are other communities such as Athabasca that could use a dialysis bus, why doesn't the government simply move the dialysis units from the bus into the Lac La Biche hospital to free up the bus so that it could be used elsewhere, in places like Athabasca?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, there are well over 2,000 people in the province of Alberta that have to go through dialysis. We need to find ways in which as many people as possible can have access to dialysis, and the hon. member has given a good suggestion. We'll see what happens.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that northern Albertans who require dialysis must travel up to four hours each way to receive treatment, doesn't the minister care that many people are being forced to move away from their homes, communities, and their loved ones?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we have added dialysis machines to Westlock, Fort McMurray, and other areas around the province. We're very concerned about people and making sure they get dialysis as close as they can to their particular communities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

The bell has rung, so that means that question period time has expired. However, you should know that as a result of fairly short answers, mostly, and some short questions we had 102 questions and answers offered today. One hundred and two. We haven't reached that mark in a long time. Those of you who were co-operating, with decorum and good order, I thank very much because it allowed a few more questions to get up today.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Secondly, on the issue of preambles I did note yesterday and today that a lot of people went beyond the rule, so to speak, that preambles should not accompany or be in front of the supplementals. However, I always use the words “should not” in conjunction with some temperance, and if the preambles were of a high level, then I tended to let them go because “should not” has a lot of wiggle room, as you know. So if you’re in agreement with that, I’ll try to do the same thing come next week.

The big winner today was a whole week with no points of order. Let us hope that continues.

My final point is to mention that I just do my best to enforce the rules; I don’t set them. So to those of you who sent me notes about the Conflicts of Interest Act, it’s section 24(6), and it reads as follows: “Where a matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner under subsection (1), (3) or (4), neither the Legislative Assembly nor a committee of the Assembly shall inquire into the matter.” So I hope that suffices for those of you who wrote to me on that issue.

Bullying Awareness and Prevention

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge an important awareness campaign currently going on. November 16 to 22 marks National Bullying Awareness Week, now in its 12th year. Its goal is to increase our awareness and understanding of the horrific impacts of bullying and promote prevention of bullying behaviour.

Each year the government of Alberta is proud to take part in National Bullying Awareness Week. This week, Mr. Speaker, serves as a great opportunity to address this issue with local communities. A recent Ipsos-Reid study in 2014 revealed that 1 in 3 Albertans believe bullying is a normal part of growing up. That belief is most prevalent among 16- to 34-year-old males. Providing more cause for concern is that the number continues to rise, increasing 6 per cent since 2012. Initiatives such as National Bullying Awareness Week are important because they work to counteract upward trends like this.

Bullying is in no way, Mr. Speaker, a normal part of growing up. It takes a tremendous toll on individuals’ confidence and self-esteem, affects their school or workplace performance, and undermines the strength of our communities. We must continue to change the perception that bullying is an acceptable behaviour. One way we can change that is by participating and leading events as part of National Bullying Awareness Week.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to encourage my colleagues to take part in one of the many bullying prevention events happening this week. A list of events around the province of Alberta can be found at humanservices.alberta.ca/bullying.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Bill 201

Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, there won’t be a point of order on this one.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014.

The purpose of the bill is to increase transparency in billing, but more importantly, it proposes to standardize consumer utility bills so that retail consumers can be better informed about market options. Hopefully, the new standardized variable market rate on this utility bill should help expand competition as consumers become better informed and better equipped to compare prices and market options.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Bill 202

Safe and Inclusive Schools Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m very pleased to introduce Bill 202, Safe and Inclusive Schools Statutes Amendment Act, 2014.

This bill proposes three small additions to the Education Act and one deletion from the Human Rights Act. It deletes section 11.1 from the Human Rights Act but strengthens and widens section 58 of the Education Act, which is the existing parental opt-out section for religion and patriotic exercise, by adding in sexual health. Parents can still opt their kids out if they don’t want their kids in sex ed.

In the Education Act’s section 33(2) on welcoming, caring, and safe environments to reduce bullying, it adds in that the policy must accommodate students who want to lead organizations that are gay-straight alliances, and they may call them by that name.

Finally, like two previous versions of the Education Act, there will be a clause that references the Charter and the Alberta Human Rights Act as reflective of our values.

So, a parental opt-out on sexual health, accommodation of GSAs, referencing the Charter and human rights, and deleting section 11.1.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

The Speaker: Just before we go on, could we have unanimous consent to briefly revert to introductions? Does anyone object? If you do, please say so now.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank colleagues for their indulgence. I'm pleased to make an introduction on behalf of the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of grade 10 high school students from R.F. Staples secondary school in Westlock. Now, unfortunately, they've come and gone. They're otherwise busy in a neighbouring building right now, but I did want to get their presence on the record. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Kelly Lehman, and a parent adviser, Colleen Chapotelle. This group of students, I understand, brought treats. I haven't seen them, but I expect that they may be somewhere around, so colleagues can keep an eye open in case anything shows up in any of our respective rooms. I thank them for their presence and wish them luck and thank colleagues for their indulgence.

The Speaker: Thank you.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Let us continue. The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of Aboriginal Relations I'm pleased to rise today and table the requisite number of copies of the Northern Alberta Development Council 2013-2014 annual report and note that that's led by the MLA for Lesser Slave Lake and thank her for her service on that committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Fawcett, Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, a response to Written Question 23, asked for by Ms Blakeman on April 14, 2014: "In relation to the June 2013 flood, how many hours' notice did the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development give to each of the affected municipalities that flooding was either possible or imminent?"

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Dirks, Minister of Education, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the Fiscal Management Act the Education annual report update 2013-14.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Human Services, responses to written questions 4, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, and 28, all asked for by Dr. Swann on April 14, 2014. Written Question 4: "As of January 1, 2014, how many licensed child care program spaces and approved family day home spaces are there in each of Edmonton, Calgary, and the rest of Alberta?" Written Question 19: "What criteria does the Government use to classify children as living in poverty?" Written Question 20: "What is the Government's estimate of how many Alberta children are living in poverty as of January 1, 2014?" Written Question 21: "What criteria does the Government use to determine whether a child has escaped poverty?" Written Question 22: "What is the Government's projection of how much money it will need to invest to eliminate child poverty in five years, in connection with Together We Raise Tomorrow, Alberta's Poverty Reduction Strategy, announced in June 2013, and to which programs, services, and community resources will this funding be allocated?" Written Question 27: "What is the projected net financial result of dissolving the Child and Family Services Authorities and Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Boards, establishing family and community engagement councils, and transferring responsibility for service delivery to the Ministry of Human Services?" Written Question 28: "How much have caseloads for Alberta Works decreased or increased from April 1, 2008, to April 1, 2013?"

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, as I've already said, we made history today. Never in my time has an entire week of business of the Assembly occurred with not one single point of order in question period, and I just want to thank and congratulate members on both sides of the House for elevating the level of decorum. I did let you burn off a little bit of steam there in the last set of questions because I could sense that things were pent up inside you for the whole week, but it didn't result in a point of order, and for that we're all grateful. There are no other points of order, so we will move on with the question of privilege.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm prepared to make this ruling on the purported question of privilege that was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Centre on Tuesday, November 18, 2014. The debate on this matter can be found at pages 23 to 28 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

With respect to the formalities my office received notice from the Member for Edmonton-Centre on November 12, 2014, at 2:53 p.m. regarding her intention to raise a question of privilege under Standing Order 15 when the House reconvened this session. The member has satisfied the requirement in Standing Order 15(2) for notice to be given to the Speaker at least two hours before the opening of the sitting. The notice to the Speaker also indicated that those persons whose conduct might be called into question would be copied on the notice as is also required, if practicable, under Standing Order 15(2).

As indicated, the Member for Edmonton-Centre raised her purported question of privilege on Tuesday, November 18, in the Assembly, which was the first day of ordinary business for this session. The member indicated that her purported question of privilege is based on matters contained in the Auditor General's report dated August 2014 and titled Special Duty Report on the Expenses of the Office of Premier Redford and Alberta's Air Transportation Services Program. This report was released on August 7, 2014, and was filed at that time as an intersessional deposit, known as Sessional Paper 309/2014, while the Assembly was adjourned. The Assembly did not sit from the time that the report was released until the commencement of the Third Session of the Legislature on Monday, November 17, 2014. Accordingly, I find that the application under Standing Order 15 was raised at the earliest opportunity.

I'll have more to say about a previous purported question on the same subject, decided back in March of this year, in a moment. That was during the Second Session of the Legislature.

Now, before continuing with the substance of my ruling, I would like to draw members' attention to the notice provided by the Member for Edmonton-Centre during Notices of Motions in Tuesday's daily Routine. The notice referenced four members of this Assembly: the members for Calgary-Acadia, Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Spruce Grove-St. Albert, but Calgary-Acadia was struck out. I have confirmed with the Member for Edmonton-Centre that she has raised this question of privilege with respect to only three of those four members and that the striking out of Calgary-Acadia in her written notice was intentional and that she herself had stricken it out.

The purported question of privilege before us today resurrected the question of privilege raised by the Member for Calgary-Shaw last session. Members can certainly read his arguments in the March 12, 2014, Alberta Hansard at pages 212 and 213. His purported question of privilege was similar to the one raised by the Member for Edmonton-Centre on Tuesday this week; namely, that there were statements made in this Assembly that allegedly interfered with the ability of members to perform their duties. Another way of articulating this point is to suggest that a member made a statement in this Assembly that was deliberately misleading and accordingly constituted a contempt of this Assembly.

For the benefit of the new members in particular but also for those who may not recall the proceedings on this point last March, Erskine May's Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 24th edition, at page 254 states with respect to the United Kingdom: "The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt." As well, and as I pointed out in my rulings on November 29 and December 3, 2012, at pages 1190 and 1206 of Alberta Hansard respectively, it is understood that a form of contempt that is treated as a question of privilege is just that, as enunciated earlier.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre is raising essentially the same purported question of privilege but distinguishes her argument on the basis of the information contained in the aforementioned Auditor General's special duty report of August 2014. As everyone knows, that report dealt solely with the expenses incurred by the Premier's office. Let me be clear. We're talking about the former Premier.

To clarify the scope of the report, it states at page 2: "This was an audit of the expenses of Premier Redford and her office. It would be wrong for anyone to extrapolate our findings and conclusions to the public service of Alberta as a whole."

The Auditor General states at page 27 of the report:

We found that, on October 25, 2012, Premier Redford flew on a government aircraft to Grande Prairie to attend the Northern Alberta Leader's Dinner. We reviewed Premier Redford's schedule for that day and did not identify any government business scheduled in Grande Prairie.

Clearly, the Auditor General's reference states that there was nothing in Premier Redford's schedule to suggest that she had any government business printed in the schedule he reviewed.

The chair would also note that two days ago, on November 18, 2014, the Minister of Transportation tabled an August 13, 2014, newspaper article from the Daily Herald-Tribune, known as Sessional Paper 14/2014, wherein the editor of that newspaper confirms that a funding announcement that was made about the Grande Prairie regional hospital on October 25, 2012, was in fact made at the TEC Centre in Grande Prairie. In other words, some government business obviously did occur during this trip in question.*

Now, it's important to note that the test for deliberately misleading the Assembly or the House is found in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2nd edition, at page 86, where the three-part test articulated by former Clerk of the New Zealand House of Assembly David McGee in the 3rd edition of his book Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand at pages 653 and 654 is cited. As indicated several times in this Assembly, the three parts of the test are:

One, it must be proven that the statement was misleading; two, it must be established that the Member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was incorrect; and three, that in making the statement, the Member intended to mislead the House.

The specifics of the flights and the activities of members of the government caucus were extensively covered in March of this year, both in question period and during discussion of the Member for Calgary-Shaw's purported question of privilege at that time. Also at that time the members in question explained the circumstances surrounding their travel on the day in question, including how travel plans were affected by the tragic accident that occurred in St. Paul.

The ruling that there was no prima facie question of privilege can be found at page 215 of Alberta Hansard for March 12, 2014. Additional information regarding the flights, of course, was provided by the Member for Edmonton-Centre when yesterday she tabled the passenger manifest for the flights to and from Grande Prairie on October 25, 2012, as Sessional Paper 28/2014.

It is not in keeping with parliamentary tradition to raise a matter that has already been decided. If this were a court, it is my understanding that to raise the same issues that have already been adjudicated would be an abuse of process or subject to the Latin term res judicata, which means already subject to judicial determination; in other words, the matter has already been decided.

However, two days ago the Member for Edmonton-Centre argued that the determinations in the Auditor General's special duty report offered some proof, some new information perhaps that, in her opinion, deliberately misleading statements were made by some members in this Assembly. The three members referred to in the purported question of privilege all denied that they had any intention to mislead the Assembly, and, as already mentioned, the Minister of Transportation tabled a newspaper article substantiating his argument that, in fact, a government announcement was made in Grande Prairie during the time in question. The report by the Auditor General clearly focused on the activities of the former Premier, not on every member of the government.

With respect to the esteemed officer of the Legislature, there is nothing in his report that directly contradicts the statements made by the three members in the Assembly on Tuesday, November 18, 2014, at page 28 of Alberta Hansard. While the statements were short, they did not move away from their earlier statements in the Assembly which they made last March.

I indicated that I would look at other jurisdictions in formulating this ruling. A 2002 ruling by former Ontario Speaker Carr nicely summarized the issue surrounding allegations of meeting the test of deliberately misleading the Assembly and also the role of the Speaker in adjudicating such purported questions of privilege.

On June 17, 2002, at page 996 of Ontario Hansard for that day Speaker Carr said the following:

The threshold for finding a prima facie case of contempt against a member of the Legislature on the basis of deliberately misleading the House is therefore set quite high and is very uncommon. It must involve a proved finding of an overt attempt to intentionally mislead the Legislature. In the absence of an admission from the member accused of the conduct, or of tangible confirmation of the conduct independently proved, a Speaker must assume that no honourable member would engage in such behaviour or that, at most, inconsistent statements were the result of inadvertence or honest mistake.

In light of the comments made by the members, I would find this to be more a case of disagreement among members over facts, as stated in Beauchesne's paragraph 494. Speaker Scheer of the Canadian House of Commons had occasion to rule on an allegation of deliberately misleading the House on April 30 of this year, 2014. At page 4753 of Commons Debates for that day he quoted former House of Commons Speaker Jerome, who said on June 4, 1975, that "a dispute as to facts, a dispute as to opinions and a dispute as to conclusions to be drawn from an allegation of fact is a matter of debate and not a question of privilege."

Accordingly, as was the case on March 12, 2014, I find that a prima facie case of privilege has not been made out. Accordingly, there will be no more proceedings on this matter because this matter is now concluded.

With that, we will move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 3, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014.

This bill will authorize a trade union to collect, use, and disclose an individual's personal information in a specific circumstance if it's related to a matter under a labour relations dispute. Under the amendments the trade union can collect, use, and disclose personal information without consent "for the purpose of informing or persuading the public about a matter of significant public interest or importance" relating to the dispute; if the collection, use, and disclosure are reasonably necessary; or if it is reasonable to collect, use, and disclose the information having regard to the nature and sensitivity of the information in the circumstances.

PIPA is aimed to protect Albertans' personal information with respect to the collection, use, and disclosure by the trade union in the following manner. The legislation clarifies authorized circumstances where the collection, use, and disclosure of information in connection with the labour relations dispute is appropriate. The OIPC oversees how the personal information is collected, used, and disclosed by the private-sector organizations in the province. Additionally, the office investigates, resolves, and, where necessary, orders the remedy for those Albertans whose personal information has been compromised. If a person commits an offence under PIPA, they are potentially subject to a maximum fine of $10,000 in the case of an individual, a maximum fine of $100,000 in the case of a person other than an individual such as organizations, and to damages for loss or injury suffered by individuals as a result of this breach.

In the event those amendments to PIPA are not passed, the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information by private-sector organizations will be governed by the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act. Under the federal legislation the following limitations exist. The federal legislation does not include PIPA's mandatory breach reporting provision for affected individuals, thereby limiting current access and the privacy protection for Albertans, the federal legislation does not include the access to protection rights for the employees of businesses that are offered under PIPA, and there will be no provincial oversight to assess the privacy responsibility of the private sector. The function will instead fall to the federal Privacy Commissioner.

In summary, these amendments will ensure that trade unions may collect, use, and disclose personal information of an individual in a manner relating to a labour relations dispute without compromising appropriate protection and oversight of the personal information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Now I move to adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 4, the Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014.

Under the Horse Racing Alberta Act HRA has a mandate to regulate, manage, and promote horse racing throughout Alberta, and this will still be the case even with these proposed amendments. Horse Racing Alberta currently has a 12-member board of directors, consisting of one chair, eight industry-nominated representatives, and three members of the public. All board appointments are currently determined by a board vote.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislative amendments to the Horse Racing Alberta Act will decrease the board members from 12 members to 11 and increase the number of public members to six, up from the three it currently has. These changes will provide more public representation on the board and will strengthen HRA's governance structure. The board will also have five industry-nominated members: a thoroughbred representative, a standardbred representative, one other breeds/quarter horse representative, an A-level race track representative, and a B-level race track representative. All public members would be selected from an open competition and screened for their relevant experience and expertise. The appointments will be made by order in council.

Mr. Speaker, with these proposed changes, more than half of the board would be public members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and one of those non-industry members would be designated as chair of the board.

In summary, the proposed legislative changes are part of our commitment to strong public agency board governance. I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move to adjourn debate on Bill 4.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:10

Bill 5

Securities Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 5, the Securities Amendment Act, 2014.

As I mentioned at first reading, the government is proposing amendments to the Securities Act to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws. The amendments before you today support the ongoing reform of the Canadian securities regulatory system and assist Canada in meeting its international commitments.

The amendments relate to a variety of topics, including continued harmonization of general derivative provisions; incorporation of representatives of registered brokers and advisers; enhanced enforcement provisions; recognition and oversight of the Canadian Public Accountability Board as an auditor oversight organization; fee-setting provisions for the Alberta Securities Commission; and other housekeeping amendments to the Securities Act, with consequential amendments to related legislation.

I'd like to take a few minutes to walk you through the proposed amendments. The Securities Act was last amended during the 2014 spring session, when over-the-counter derivative amendments were enacted to help manage and mitigate risks and improve transparency. As you may recall, this type of financial instrument was cited as a contributing factor in the 2008 global financial crisis. This harmonization initiative will take several years to complete, and these amendments allow that work to continue.

Moving on to the next topic, incorporation of individual representatives, industry groups have long wanted a level playing field providing representatives of registered dealers and advisers across Canada with the option of providing securities-related services to their clients through a professional corporation. The proposed amendments will establish a statutory framework permitting representatives of registered dealers and advisers to provide services to clients through a professional corporation. This will be done under the supervision of the registered firm. The proposed incorporation model is a voluntary/optional business structure intended to provide individual representatives with additional flexibility and choice of the most effective structure for their business activities. In May 2012 Saskatchewan passed but has not yet proclaimed similar amendments. Harmonized provisions are expected to be passed across Canada shortly.

Bill 5 establishes a statutory regime to provide the Canadian Public Accountability Board, or CPAB, with the powers and protections necessary to fulfill its mandate to ensure the integrity of financial reporting by public companies in Canada. CPAB was created in 2003 to provide independent oversight of auditors of public companies in Canada following the auditing scandals involving Enron and WorldCom in the United States. The auditor oversight function is essentially a regulatory function designed to help ensure the quality and reliability of audited financial statements. It involves the information in documents that a public company has disclosed to its auditors, some of which may be subject to solicitor-client privilege.

The Alberta CPAB amendments will follow the approach taken in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick of providing CPAB with access to privileged information and audit working papers only with the consent of the client. In a very practical sense this is already happening as all Canadian audit firms regardless of size now use a standard form of engagement letter. This letter provides notice of the audit firm's obligations to provide CPAB with access to the audit working file and requires the client's consent.

Mr. Speaker, effective enforcement and compliance are essential to advancing investor protection and fostering fair and efficient capital markets. The enforcement-related amendments contained in Bill 5 were designed to improve the Alberta Securities Commission's enforcement capacity as well as respond to recent court and commission decisions and to the introduction of the new Alberta Rules of Court in 2010. The commission is proposing to update the list of entities they share information with by adding trade repositories, clearing agencies, alternative trading systems, and credit-rating agencies.

The amended act also permits the commission to issue automatic reciprocal enforcement orders without the need to take any additional steps. Currently a hearing must be held before a reciprocal order based on enforcement proceedings or settlements in other jurisdictions can be granted and requires evidence of cross-border misconduct putting Alberta investors at risk.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Securities Commission and its counterparts across Canada are upgrading their IT systems and have replaced their systems operator. The new systems operator has taken over the hosting, operation, and maintenance of the three national filing systems. This requires the embedding of the requirement to pay fees for the use of these filing systems in a harmonized fee rule and has led to the need for the commission to be able to set its own fees. The amendment would permit the commission to set its own fees, including fees related to the operation of these IT systems, just as both the British Columbia and Ontario securities commissions have authority to do so. However, ASC fee changes would require the prior approval of the minister, and the commission would still have to publish fee proposals for comment under the commission's rule-making requirements.

There are several other housekeeping amendments of a technical or housekeeping nature. The intent of these amendments is to improve or clarify existing provisions of the Securities Act: for example, repealing a requirement to send a confirmation of trade that has been moved into the regulations, therefore making the Securities Act confirmation provision redundant; extending the requirement to file a personal information form to apply to promoters; and clarifying how to effect service of documents on the commission.

In addition, there are also some consequential amendments to other statutes, including the Cooperatives Act and the Business Corporations Act. For example, the requirements of the executive director of the commission to be notified of applications for approvals of plans of arrangement under the Cooperatives Act and the Business Corporations Act will be repealed. This is because these plans of arrangement are already subject to court and shareholder approval before they can proceed and the executive director has not taken a position when provided with notice.

The ministries responsible for the administration of the above statutes are in agreement with the proposed amendments.

To sum up, the proposed amendments will ensure that Alberta honours its commitment under the 2004 memorandum of understanding to ongoing reform. Further, these amendments support international commitments made by Canada. The net result is a better functioning regulatory system that provides additional protection to investors while ensuring the efficient operations of our capital markets.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 5.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6 Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move second reading of the Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No.2), Bill 6.

This bill brings together a number of small amendments to a number of acts under three different ministries. The amendments are intended to streamline and provide efficiency, clarity, and consistency between acts for those affected by these acts. These amendments have been brought as a single omnibus bill to deal with a number of small items in an encompassing amendment act for the effective use of time of members of the Assembly.

The first set of amendments are from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. They're seeking amendments to the Safety Codes Act. Mr. Speaker, these amendments will allow qualified safety officers to approve pressure vessel designs, which will reduce delays for applicants. As well, the amendments will remove a phrase that could be seen to transfer the owners' safety responsibility to the administrator. These changes will help streamline the process by reducing delays without relaxing standards or safety. The pressure equipment industry will be most impacted as they submit designs for review and registration in order to operate and construct this equipment in their plants.

The first amendment will address a gap and allow for qualified safety codes officers employed by the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, also known as ABSA, to review and register the pressure vessel designs. As it is currently worded, the legislation reads that only the administrator can register pressure vessel designs. ABSA employs safety codes officers who review the pressure vessel designs and make recommendations to the administrator before the administrator registers them. However, this year ABSA will receive approximately 11,000 designs for boilers, pressure vessels, fittings, pressure piping systems, thermal liquid heating systems, welding procedures, complex repair procedures, and alteration procedures.

Mr. Speaker, allowing safety codes officers to review and register these designs will increase efficiency and reduce the delays to owners for the registration of their pressure vessels with ABSA. Once the amendments are made, the safety codes officers who have the appropriate technical qualifications will be designated with the authority to register designs. Currently, ABSA employs approximately 90 safety codes officers, and out of those there are 22 who have the technical qualifications to review and approve designs. There are no risks associated with this proposed change. Safety codes officers are able to effectively perform this function.

Mr. Speaker, the second proposed amendment dealing with the Safety Codes Act would delete specific wording from the act that is considered confusing. The phrase may suggest a transfer of owners' obligation of responsibility for compliance to the administrator, which is contrary to sections 5 and 6 of the act. Therefore, under section 40(1) specific wording has been removed which could place an unintended burden on the administrator to take steps for the design's safety beyond meeting requirements of the act. This proposed legislative amendment would ensure that owners' responsibilities are clear and that there is no perceived conflict with the responsibilities section of the act between the administrator and the designer.

The third proposed change would delete the word "obsolete." The term "obsolete" is unnecessary. An obsolete design may mean that it is outdated, but it could still be safe and meet the requirements of the Safety Codes Act. If the administrator, in his or her reasonable opinion, considers an obsolete design unsafe or that it does not meet the requirements of the act, the administrator has the full authority of the act to deregister the design. A design that does not meet the requirements of the act is in breach of the act. The design would be deregistered, and the owner would be required to take the unsafe equipment out of service.

It is important to note that the proposed amendments will not have any financial impact, and there is no additional training or costs as these safety codes officers exist and already have the necessary training.

Mr. Speaker, the second ministry requesting amendments is Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. They're seeking amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act that will clarify the WCB's authority to disclose information to the Appeals Commission. The proposed amendments are intended for clarification purposes and to increase efficiency and effectiveness in the appeals process. In several recent decisions adjudicators from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner have interpreted the act differently than the Workers' Compensation Board and the Appeals Commissions, specifically regarding the authority of the WCB to disclose information to the Appeals Commission.

Workers and employers involved in appeals will not see any changes in the process. Staff from the WCB, the Appeals Commission, and Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour met with staff from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to discuss these proposed amendments, and no further concerns were raised. Passing these amendments this fall will help ensure that the WCB, the Appeals Commission, and the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner have a common interpretation of the act. The Workers' Compensation Board of directors, which includes representatives of the interests of employers and workers, is supportive of the proposed amendments to the WCB Act as they stand.

Mr. Speaker, the third ministry seeking amendments is my Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development. We're proposing amendments to combine the Farm Implement Act and the Farm Implement Dealerships Act and repeal the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act of 2002. The Farm Implement Act provides Alberta farmers with warranty protection, legal guidelines on the length of warranty, assurance that replacement parts will be available for at least 10 years after they purchase a new implement, and minimum stated requirements for sales contracts.

The Farm Implement Dealerships Act also provides protection for consumers and dealers of farm implements. Certain requirements are placed upon distributors of farm implements such as prohibiting distributors from terminating an agreement with a dealership without cause, without an order of the court, or without complying with the court order; permitting agreements between distributors and dealers to be terminated by mutual agreement; and preventing distributors from discriminating against dealers in respect of contractual requirements or prices for farm implements of similar grade or quality or for dealing in the products of competitors.

Mr. Speaker, both acts are administered by the office of the Farmers' Advocate of Alberta. It's proposed that these acts be consolidated into a single farm implement and dealerships act to streamline the legislation and provide greater ease of reference for stakeholders to whom the acts apply.

The amendments will also align Alberta's legislation with similar legislation in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario; clarify that all implements purchased at auction are strictly buyer beware; enable the minister to publish information received through notices of failure to perform in order to better protect consumers; clarify roles and responsibilities during a repair or repurchase of a farm implement that fails to perform satisfactorily; expand buyback provisions to include required supplementary materials such as signage and computer hardware and software; repeal transitional provisions that are no longer required; and increase the penalty for any person who contravenes the Farm Implement Dealerships Act from a maximum of $50,000 to a maximum of $100,000. Certainly, when you consider that farm implements can cost well over $500,000, the fines are needed to reflect the fiscal implications of the items involved.

Mr. Speaker, we're also proposing a repeal of the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002. This act was proclaimed as part of the transfer of governance responsibility for dairy production and marketing from the provincial dairy board to Alberta Milk. Over 10 years have passed since the transition, and these provisions are no longer required for Alberta Milk. In fact, Alberta Milk supports the repeal of this act.

The amendments before you today are largely housekeeping in nature, updating details to align with similar legislation and current needs. As well, they will provide greater clarity and efficiency in providing services to Albertans. I ask all members to support this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move to adjourn debate on Bill 6.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Fenske moved, seconded by Mr. Ellis, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate November 19: Mr. Oberle]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the following list, subject to any changes: the Minister of Education, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Calder, and Calgary-Shaw.

Please proceed, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise today in this Assembly as the newly elected Member for Calgary-Elbow and address members present in response to the Speech from the Throne. I do want, first, to congratulate the new members for Calgary-Foothills and Calgary-West and Edmonton-Whitemud in their impressive by-election victories. To be chosen by our constituents to represent and serve as their member in this Legislative Assembly and to advocate for their interests is a humbling privilege and a momentous responsibility.

Andrew Oliver, the 16th century public official, rightly said that in many respects elected public service can be a hazardous profession, but he went on to say that politics is still the noblest career any man can choose. Few people will have the opportunity to deliberate and serve the common good in this distinguished Chamber, and I'm deeply humbled by the honour bestowed upon me to represent the great constituency of Calgary-Elbow.

Since 1905 some 58 individuals have represented this geographic region, located in the heart of Calgary, and included in this number are such notable individuals as Premiers Aberhart, Manning, Lougheed, Klein, Redford, future Prime Minister R.B. Bennett, Lieutenant Governor Grant MacEwan, Sheldon Chumir, and Art Dixon, the longest-serving Speaker of this Assembly. To follow in the footsteps of such distinguished legislators who have represented Calgary-Elbow is, needless to say, both humbling and daunting.

As I'm sure all members here will attest to, success in public life is rarely, if ever, a solo affair, so today with a deep sense of gratitude I pay special tribute to my dear wife, Evangeline Joy. Without her unwavering support and encouragement throughout my years of public service and during the strenuous by-election, I would not be standing here today. Political enterprise is, first and foremost, about people, and the effectiveness of our democratic system of governance is inextricably bound up with the lives and contributions of thousands of volunteers at the local constituency level across our great province. So today I want to recognize and to express my deep gratitude to the over 300 dedicated volunteers who linked arms with me in the recent Calgary-Elbow by-election and who worked tirelessly in support of my election campaign.

Calgary-Elbow is a vibrant and diverse constituency of over 44,000 residents, and as I talked with thousands of constituents during the by-election, I was struck, Mr. Speaker, by two key observations. First, I was deeply impressed by the decency and civility of the good voters of Calgary-Elbow. Rarely was an unkind or disrespectful word spoken to me at their doorsteps. In contrast, many are the regions of the world where elections are dangerous affairs and where the threat of intimidation, violence, and persecution are endemic to public life. So to be able to conduct our common political life with civil discourse on streets that are safe underscores the robust health of Alberta's democracy and is a blessing to be richly treasured.

Then, whether I was speaking with single professionals or younger parents with growing families or retired seniors, whether my conversations were with educators, small-business people, nurses, or oil patch executives, I was struck by the essential commonality of interests and aspirations of Calgary-Elbow residents when it comes to their government. Throughout the recent by-elections Albertans made it very clear that they want their elected officials to govern with a laser focus that is grounded in their priorities, which respects their tax dollars. During this by-election Albertans were explicit about what they expect from their government, and I share their sentiments.

In the constituency of Calgary-Elbow here's what they said. They said: protect our communities and our great city of Calgary from future devastating floods. With one voice they said: strengthen our core public services of health care and education and provide our seniors with the long-term care facilities they need in order to live with dignity in and near their communities. They issued a loud call to government to manage the public purse in a fiscally prudent way that balances the operating budget, that invests in future infrastructure, that pays down debt and saves for the future.

Albertans know that their future well-being is tied to our collective ability to market Alberta's energy, forestry, and agriculture resources to the world, so they said: put market access for Alberta's resources at the top of your agenda, and don't waver in working co-operatively with British Columbia and with Saskatchewan, our great neighbour provinces, and with the federal government and with aboriginal communities to secure our future economic well-being. But they also said: while you're maximizing the value of our resources, do so in a way that respects and protects our fundamental Alberta values of environmental conservation and the protection of property rights.

Finally, they said: we need you to help restore public trust and end the days of entitlement.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that from day one these five priorities have been and will continue to be the essential hallmark of this new government. Therefore, it's no exaggeration to say that Alberta has entered a new era, with a new government, under new management, grounded in the people's priorities. The steps our Premier and our government have taken over the past 60 days and the government's visionary agenda set forth in the Speech from the Throne have made it abundantly clear that a new day has indeed dawned in Alberta. Guided by prudence, accountability, trust, decency, and respect, our government has begun to deliver on these five fundamental priorities of Albertans.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to focus on just two of these priorities. It is difficult if not impossible to fully calibrate the devastation which the people of Calgary-Elbow and other residents of Calgary and High River and our aboriginal communities suffered in the flood of 2013. As I stood at the front doors and sat at the dining-room tables of many Calgary-Elbow residents, I was deeply moved to hear the gut-wrenching stories of how their lives and their families, their businesses, and their communities were turned upside down by the devastating flood.

Mr. Speaker, the first task of government is to protect its citizens. Never again should Calgarians and Albertans live in fear because of our vulnerability to future devastating floods, and that is why one of the first decisions of our Premier and our government was to green-light flood mitigation projects to protect Calgary and High River, two of the hardest hit regions in the province. We also directed a tripling of staff in order to complete disaster recovery program appeals as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Education I also want to underscore our government's commitment to continue to secure the future health of our public education system across Alberta. Our province has an outstanding record of providing world-class education for children, and this government has every intention of continuing to make the provision of quality education for Alberta students a marquee priority.

One of the ways we are doing that is by aggressively moving forward, Mr. Speaker, with the largest capital investment in new and renovated school facilities in the history of Alberta and indeed of our country. Alberta is Canada's fastest growing jurisdiction by population, and we need to ensure that we are equipped to give every Alberta student the very best education facilities possible.

Our three-phase program of building and securing Alberta's school infrastructure future now includes over 240 school projects that have recently opened or are under construction or are in the permitting or planning stages. Just this past week, along with my colleague the Minister of Infrastructure, sod was turned on three new school projects in Cochrane and Airdrie, and we look forward to seeing the doors open for kids in these and many other schools in the years to come. That's what Albertans expect, and that's what good government does, Mr. Speaker.

Our government is also committed to ensuring that our K to 12 curriculum focuses on foundational skills of literacy and numeracy while incorporating 21st century skills such as communication and creativity and collaboration. We want to ensure that our grading and reporting approaches across the province are coherent and easily understood by parents.

As Minister of Education I'm committed to ensuring that we help our students become ethical citizens and engaged thinkers with an entrepreneurial mindset. We need to strengthen our focus on individualizing learning as well as placing a high priority on second-language instruction to prepare our students for the new social, cultural, and economic shifts under way in our province and in our world.

To help our students become ethical citizens and engaged thinkers with an entrepreneurial mindset, we need to ensure that we are supporting and coaching teachers and doing all we can to ensure stable, long-term, predictable funding for our school boards. And we need to make sure that every student is taught and nurtured in a safe, caring, and respectful environment because the human dignity of our students and the well-being of our public education system call for safety and security for each and every student.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans spoke decisively during the recent by-elections. They want and Albertans deserve a government that first listens and then acts decisively on the people's priorities. Alberta's new government is doing just that. Each and every day the people's priorities are resonating with this government as we move into a new era in the history of Alberta's public life.

Mr. Speaker, I am sincerely humbled to serve the people of Calgary-Elbow as their member in this Legislative Assembly. With deep sincerity I pledge to work vigorously to represent the interests of the residents of Calgary-Elbow in this Legislature and to ensure that the people's priorities as articulated in this Speech from the Throne remain the enduring focus of my work as MLA and as Minister of Education in the months and years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. Does anyone wish to rise under 29(2)(a)?

If not, let us move on to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. But just before we do, I should let you know that there was some time remaining at the top of this particular section for the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to take up six more minutes of the speaking time that he had or something along that line. Maybe he had more time left. However, he waived that, and that's why we went straight to the Minister of Education. For those of you who were asking me that question, that's the answer.

Secondly, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, in fact, will be in the fifth spot today unless otherwise noted, not Edmonton-Calder.

Let's go on to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, please.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne and his relaying of the government's intentions for this session. I found his speech very interesting although in many respects hard to agree with. I'd like to outline some of the concerns I have.

First, I wanted to say a few things about my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I'm very proud to represent that area. I have represented it now for 14 years – it was previously Edmonton-Highlands, then was amalgamated with the Edmonton-Norwood constituency when that was eliminated due to a redistribution – and have represented that area both on city council and here for 25 years now. [some applause] Thank you very much. I know the people and the area very well.

It is primarily a low-income area. It has some of the lowest incomes in the province of Alberta. It has tremendous people, a tremendous sense of community, and a great variety of types of communities, a very interesting area. It includes not only some of the very poorest parts of the city – in the Boyle Street area, the downtown area – but it includes Chinatown, it includes Little Italy, and it includes Alberta Avenue, with a very vibrant arts scene that has been developing there, and I would like to express some appreciation to the Minister of Health in his former position as mayor for the contribution that he made sure took place on the part of the city of Edmonton to develop that area. I always try to say something nice about them when they come, Mr. Speaker, and something nice about them when they leave. In between it's not quite the same.

But it has made a difference, Mr. Speaker, and it's an exciting area that's really beginning to take off and attract people from not only the rest of the city but from other parts of the province as well with some of the wonderful festivals, the arts festivals and so on, that are taking place there as well as the communities of Highlands, which is a long-established neighbourhood, as well as Newton and Montrose. It is something I'm very proud of, to have represented that area for so long.

It has some issues, and it has some needs, Mr. Speaker. Community revitalization is very important to it, and one aspect that I'd like to touch on with respect to that is the importance of schools and retaining schools in some of the older neighbourhoods. It is an issue that I've worked on in conjunction with other MLAs, with school trustees, and with city councillors in order to do that. We recognize very much the need and the pressure on the government to provide new schools in growing areas, but we also need policies that encourage people to remain in older communities near the core of the city so that the existing schools as well as parks as well as libraries and other important facilities get the full use that they need.

I want to talk a little bit now about some of the aspects of the speech and the five main principles that have been established by the government under the new Premier.

A focused commitment to sound, conservative fiscal principles; ending entitlements and restoring public trust; maximizing the value of our natural resources and respecting property rights; establishing our province as an environmental leader; and increasing Albertans' quality of life by being a leader in the areas of health, education, seniors' care, and skills training.

I'd like to take some of those things in turn.

I notice in the Speech from the Throne that the government says that it "will be cautious in budgeting, prudent in spending, and diligent in saving." Mr. Speaker, it may come as a surprise to some members of this House that I find no basis for disagreement with those principles. It makes sense entirely to me that you should be cautious in budgeting and not spend more money than you have and that you should be saving for the future. That's not something with which I disagree. The question is how it's done and what the intention is in doing so, and this is where I do disagree with the government.

In another statement on the same page of the speech it says, "the rate of increase on spending for government operations will be kept below the rate of population growth and inflation." Even the Wildrose says that spending should keep pace with the rate of population growth and inflation. Now, if you don't do that, Mr. Speaker, what happens, of course, is that you have cuts. You have reductions in spending. You have, really, programs that are eliminated or reduced. You can't meet the needs of the public.

Mr. Speaker, it's always the lower income people and the programs they depend on that get cut first. They don't cut, you know, programs that benefit corporations or oil companies; they get drilling incentives. Other people get aboriginal education programs cut or low-income housing cut. Those are the kinds of things that the government comes for when it tries to reduce spending below the rate of population growth and inflation. That, I think, is really where we're going to have a major difference. It's important that we improve our spending and our programs for low-income people in this province and for average Alberta families.

In fact, many of these things can be seen as investments that will save money in the longer term. If you do targeted social investments in programs to combat poverty, to combat homelessness, to combat hunger, you actually will save money in terms of courts, police, and so on. In many cases these kinds of investments are actually the fiscally responsible course of action to take.

Now, the government is also talking about ending entitlements and restoring public trust, and some of these things, I think, are not bad things. The question is whether they will go far enough, and I believe that they will probably not. The question that I think is most important in this is about the cozy relationship that has developed over the years between the PC Party, the PC government, and the oil industry. It's very, very close. It's very, very cozy. The lack of regulation in terms of environmental protection with respect to new programs, I think, is the consequence of that.

In terms of maximizing the value of our natural resources, that is something we've been talking about for a long time. Peter Lougheed established a number of principles for the development of the oil and gas industry in this province, that I think were seminal. In fact, they'd been adopted by Norway in the development of policy with respect to their industry and put to very good use. Unfortunately, here in Alberta the government has walked away from Peter Lougheed's principles. It no longer thinks like an owner. It thinks more like a doormat, Mr. Speaker, and lets the oil and gas industry basically write its own ticket.

Peter Lougheed talked about adding value. He talked about getting fair value on the resources that we own. He set a target, Mr. Speaker, that the province would collect 30 per cent of the total value of the natural resources of this province, that belong to every citizen. He achieved that, and in some years he actually exceeded it, but now, far from being 30 per cent, the province of Alberta is collecting just 9 per cent of the value of those natural resources, which is less than was achieved by the Social Credit government in the 1950s and the 1960s. It is unacceptable.

While Norway has a $600 billion fund from their oil and gas revenue and has raised the level of standard of living of their people, raised the level of services that the people of Norway receive, here in Alberta we're still involved in boom-and-bust cycles, and we've managed to scrape together not much more than Peter Lougheed put together during his term. The rest of it is gone. It's been spent. It's slipped through our fingers. It's gone to Houston. It's gone to Chicago. It's just gone, Mr. Speaker. I think that we really will have a lot of explaining to do to our grandchildren when they ask what happened to the wealth of this province, that was squandered and wasted and not saved for future generations.

I remember when former Premier Ed Stelmach put together a blue-chip economic panel to talk about the major challenges facing the province. I attended the release of their report. That was in 2007. One of their primary recommendations was that Alberta should reduce its dependence on very volatile royalty revenue as a source of income for program expenditures. They identified that 30 per cent of Alberta's program expenditures are paid for by nonrenewable and highly volatile royalty revenues. That hasn't changed, Mr. Speaker, seven years later. The government still talks about it in throne speeches and does nothing.

It's important, in our view, that the royalty revenue be retained for future generations. It doesn't just belong to us, Mr. Speaker. The oil and gas in the ground is the heritage of all Albertans, not just Albertans of this generation. If we spend it on our current needs, to fund our health care system, our education system, our roads, whatever, then we are really stealing from future generations of this province, and that money should be saved and retained, but it means that there has to be some revenue reform, because under former Premier Klein Alberta's income tax system was gutted.

I was there. I watched Steve West, when he was the Provincial Treasurer, talk about reducing corporate income tax from 15 and a half per cent down to 8 per cent. They have systematically reduced corporate income tax – and this is paid just on profits. They're not taxing companies that are struggling. They're just taxing their profits. It's gone now from 15 to 10 per cent, and billions of dollars of revenue is no longer available to us. We've become more dependent on royalty revenue.

Just before that, when Stockwell Day was the Provincial Treasurer, he brought in the flat tax. The flat tax gave a massive tax holiday to the very wealthiest in our province, and at the same time it raised taxes on middle-income people. Do you know that someone earning $70,000 a year will pay more in income tax in Alberta than they will in B.C. or Ontario? It's been an increase on the middle class and a windfall for millionaires and billionaires in our province. It also costs us billions of dollars a year, so we're even more dependent on oil prices.

Oil prices. Guess what, Mr. Speaker? Who could have predicted that they go up and down? I don't understand, you know. This is a big surprise to the government every time. I don't know. Once again, we're in a period of low oil prices, and it's going to last, apparently, a couple of years according to the business press.

There was an interesting article in the Globe and Mail Report on Business a few weeks ago indicating that because of successes internationally in reducing dependence on fossil fuels, the lower prices may in fact be permanent. I don't know if that's true or not, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is that this government has had plenty of warning about the imperative necessity of eliminating its dependence on royalty revenue for program spending, and it has done precisely nothing. Now they're talking about it in the throne speech again. Well, I like to learn from history, and I've learned that oil prices go up and down. I've also learned that the government talks about changing things and never does. So I'm just going to have to hold my breath.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anybody who wishes. Let's go with Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and then we'll go from there to Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard a lot of talk about all of the things this government was going to do in the throne speech but very little on the 10-year plan to end homelessness. As you were discussing, your riding is probably directly affected as many of our ridings are. I'm just wondering if you can walk me through some of the challenges facing your riding and many of the urban ridings in the 10-year plan to end homelessness given that we're five years in and we don't seem to be actually anywhere near a plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that when the government initiated this, they actually were sincere about trying to do something about it, but they took money from affordable housing programs and put it into programs to end homelessness, so they just really moved the problem. There wasn't new money that was made available for this. There was some initial progress, but now homeless numbers are rising again, and you can see it. It's not just individuals who are homeless now but entire families that are homeless. I don't think that the province has been nearly as effective or proactive or serious about this as some of our municipalities that have taken action. We could do a lot more if the province would actually get onboard with the municipalities and work with them to do this.

I want to make one more point, and that is that shelters are not homes. Mr. Speaker, they get people out of the cold, they get them out of potentially dangerous situations, but they're not giving them a home. It's a fundamental thing. If you want to tackle the other problems, you know, other difficulties you may have, with child poverty or addictions or things like that, the first place to start is to make sure that every Albertan has a home.

I'll just segue from that a little bit to talk about the absence of any talk in this throne speech about ending child poverty. As people will remember, that was a major promise of Alison Redford in the election that elected all of the government members that are sitting here today except for the last four. Everybody else was elected on a promise, among many other promises, most of which have not been kept, to end child poverty. Yet I can't recall a single mention of child poverty as a priority for this government in any throne speech since, including this one, and I think that that is something that is very much a shame.

I know that schools struggle to raise money from private sources to put on hot lunch programs because there's no systematic approach to deal with that and no assistance from this government. The government doesn't do anything to assist and make sure every child is learning on a full stomach. It's left to people to go begging to private sources and for funds that are available for that purpose. It's not something that the government sees as a priority. I think that's very, very unfortunate.

I will make one last point, Mr. Speaker, before my time is up. It seems that fundamental things that the government needs to do, such as health care and education, are almost add-ons in this speech. They're a subpart of the fifth point, or the fifth priority, of the government. In our view, they should be front and centre as the major priorities of this government. That is one of the fundamental things that a provincial government in the Canadian system is responsible for, the provision of public health care and public education. To have them almost as appendices, add-ons at the end of the speech, really indicates where they sit in terms of the priorities of this government. It's not good enough.

We've seen today the result of the mismanagement and the neglect of our health care system with this disaster at the Misericordia hospital, something that we've been asking about and demanding answers on for several years now. I think that it's an indication of the very low priority with which this government treats important social services, primarily health care and education. I think we can do better, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I will do my best to intersperse speakers from all four parties based on the requests I receive. At the moment I have Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise and speak to the throne speech that was delivered on Monday by our new Premier.

You know, it's interesting. In the two and a half years that I've been elected as a brand new MLA, coming into this wonderful organization and this Legislature on April 23, 2012 – I'd like to walk you through some of the things that I've heard so far.

One of the things is that in two and a half years we've heard three throne speeches. We've heard from three different Premiers. We've had three different visions of government and three different versions of what Albertans want at the door. This is what's important to understand. In all of that, each throne speech throws out a lot of promises, and each throne speech throws out a lot of where we'll focus on and the direction of government. So far we've seen promises made to teachers, $107 million. We saw family care clinics being the priority of this government in the previous throne speech. We saw the previous throne speech address multiple different avenues about debt, about borrowing, about infrastructure, about not borrowing, about not taking on debt, and they all kind of mismatch together.

We also heard last year from the previous Premier about the bitumen bubble. Funny; that's missing in this one. It's worded slightly differently, but the bitumen bubble is in this new throne speech. It's just kind of worded a little bit more polished. The reason this is important, as my friendly colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said, is that these promises matter because each and every member in this House, other than the four that were just newly elected, was elected on those very promises. So this new throne speech throws all of that out, just like the baby with the bathwater, and starts fresh and basically says that they have a new mandate from Albertans based on four by-elections.

That's an interesting way to go about it, but, you know, each to their own. We saw the previous Premier go about it, and we saw that she hit a high when she was first elected, and everybody praised her throne speech. We heard all of the members of the party of the day stand up and praise that previous Premier about family care clinics. They all went to the wall. Edmonton-Gold Bar was very vocal in his support of the previous Premier and constantly heckled and chatted all the time about how important the previous Premier's vision for Alberta was. Now we're hearing that the previous Premier's vision for Alberta isn't actually quite what they meant, and we're kind of glad she's gone because that was a bit of a disaster for them. So now they're trying to come all under the nice little tent that the new Premier has created.

Let's talk about the new Premier's five priorities. He talks about "a focused commitment to sound, conservative fiscal principles." I agree with that, as does the hon. member who was just speaking. I think this is fantastic. Unfortunately, the previous Premier also said that. As we know, it's a little bit difficult for these Premiers and this party to kind of keep their word. As we're seeing already, we're getting a little nuanced in our language. They talk about: oh, we're going to have a balanced budget, but it's not a balanced consolidated budget; it's going to be a consolidated operational only, and we'll sort of fudge the numbers on the debt side. They don't tell people that when we take on $20 billion in debt, they're going to be paying almost $800 million in interest payments. I think we can all guess what $800 million could get us in this wonderful province for all of those needy programs that so many Albertans really require.

Now, this next one. I'm going to take a few minutes because it says, "Ending entitlements and restoring public trust." Well, let's start there. Let's talk about ending entitlements and restoring public trust. They talked about strengthened conflict-of-interest guidelines for political staff. Oh, well, that's interesting. Only political staff? I'm pretty sure this government and Alberta Health Services just paid out or is about to pay out $900,000 to Mr.

Merali in a severance package, that the previous Health minister assured us could never happen. He actually fired the board over it. He said that it could not possibly happen that these severance packages could be paid out, that these contracts are in the best interests of Albertans.

This new Premier is once again going to ignore the problem of severance packages, bonuses, and special perks for everybody except for political staff. While political staff are certainly a problem, he's certainly overlooking the vast majority of the problem in the additional staff outside of that. One of the biggest ministries, the Ministry of Health, has probably one of the biggest areas where these bonuses and perks have really caused this government a great amount of black eyes.

One of the things that we don't see is any mention of an Alberta Health Services sunshine list yet, another promise of the previous Premier that was mentioned in her throne speech, yet it applies to everybody except for Alberta Health Services. One has to wonder what the government is worried about there. Why not disclose salaries of Alberta Health Services employees and of your boards and commissions? But, you know, they don't want Albertans to really have transparency and to really have a way to actually force them to end the entitlements. So there's that one.

Restoring public trust. Well, this sort of hits right at home because restoring public trust means that you don't queue-jump awarding of schools in ridings that are under a by-election. Restoring public trust says that you will treat every riding the exact same regardless of who is representing that riding and regardless of whether or not a cabinet minister is running there in a by-election. There were six other schools that were prioritized higher than Calgary-Elbow modulars, yet conveniently they decided to restore public trust on the day of the election by awarding the modulars in the very riding that had a failed Premier and that needed a solid win. That's not very trustful.

The third one on restoring public trust – and the Premier probably did the right thing as soon as he could. He kind of had to. He sort of had to get rid of those planes. They were really dogging you guys. In restoring the public trust, that was a good one. He had to get rid of the planes because, as the Auditor General has identified, they were being used and abused for partisan purposes. Regardless of how members in this House feel, the Auditor General is an independent, third-party officer of the Legislature, who was very clear that government planes shouldn't be used for partisan business, and they were in the case of Grande Prairie and in others. Many of the members that currently sit today that are part of this government took full advantage of that opportunity, and the Auditor General identified that.

Mr. Mason: They should have a frequent flyer program.

Mrs. Towle: They should. They absolutely should have frequent flyer miles on that.

That creates a real problem for restoring public trust. That's a low-hanging fruit. We get rid of that, but that doesn't necessarily restore anything because you kind of offset it by then turning around and making by-election promises that totally go against everything about integrity and restoring public trust and ending entitlements. I'm happy to award schools. There are multiple schools in this province that are needed. I'm happy to have that infrastructure. I think lots of communities would be happy to have that infrastructure. Lots of communities are waiting. Fifty schools have been announced and lots of sod-turnings have happened, but none have been built. Conveniently, Calgary-Elbow is on the winners list. Good for them.

"Maximizing the value of our natural resources and respecting property rights." Well, the reality of this one is huge for us in the Wildrose. We certainly campaigned loud and proud on that issue in 2012, as did Albertans. Albertans were very clear that they want restoration of property rights when bills 19, 36, 50, and Bill 2, which came in after you were elected, came in and removed the public interest and did not restore property rights. This Premier talks a lot in the throne speech about how he has, you know, spent 20 years dedicated to property rights and how he's going to hear the voices of Albertans and how he is going to restore property rights. Unfortunately, we saw Bill 1. It contained about seven words, and it didn't do anything except retreat on Bill 19, which was never proclaimed.

Now, we also heard the environment minister stand up and tout the efforts and say that everything is fine but also mention that they will not be repealing Bill 36, which overrides all of the acts that the Premier said protect property rights. It does not bring in fair and timely compensation when your land is taken away from you. That should be a fundamental right for all Albertans, not being able to take your land and not pay you for it and give you fair and timely compensation.

Now we're going to go into the last one and probably one of the most important ones, "increasing Albertans' quality of life by being a leader in the areas of health, education, seniors' care, and skills training." This is fundamental to this province, and it's desperately needed. There is no question that our health care system and our seniors' care system are in a crisis. We have heard from doctors, front-line workers, health care professionals, everyday Albertans, members in this House – opposition has certainly pounded the desk loudly on this issue – about the continuing crisis of emergency rooms and acute-care beds that are being used inappropriately by people who are not able to get care outside of an acute-care setting.

We have also heard story after story of seniors suffering in substandard conditions in government care. We know that the recent CIHI, the Canadian Institute for Health Information, report came out and showed that this government spends 19 per cent less than the national average on long-term care. That means that all of the other provinces in Canada are spending more than us on long-term care. We are the richest province in this country, and we as the richest province should be leaders in long-term care. Some people wonder: well, what does that mean if we spend 19 per cent less on long-term care? It means a lot of things. The first one is that it means that our front-line health care professionals are overworked and unable to provide the quality of care required by some of our most vulnerable citizens.

Many of you know my story. I won't go into it fully, but I can tell you that as a caregiver for a 32-year-old young man who goes into a long-term care centre and can't get the care he needs when he's given two years to live and dies two years and four months later and on average could not get a bath a week could not get home-cooked food – if it hadn't been for my mother and volunteers and other paid staff that we brought in, he probably would have died much earlier.

An Hon. Member: We've heard that speech.

Mrs. Towle: Yeah, you have heard that speech, and it's a good speech for you to hear every single day because those are everyday Albertans. I'm sorry if it's offensive to you on the other side to have it reiterated to you that everyday Albertans go into long-term care facilities and don't get the care they need. I'm sorry if it's offensive to you to hear another long, drawn-out story about a 32-year-old young man who has Huntington's. I'm sorry if it's offensive to you that people get involved in politics because it's important to them to push these issues so that you will make changes. I hope you do, and if you do, I'm happy to applaud you. The last thing that I would ever want, whether I'm in opposition or not in opposition, is to take the position that we would want to keep people in substandard care in the richest province in this country just because you had to hear one more story about somebody who's dying in care.

I get that it's uncomfortable for you because you own it. I don't own that. I did my part. My family did our part. We had to do our part because the long-term care Alberta Health Services facility that he was in, like for many seniors and many other people in this province, wasn't doing its part, and the government wasn't funding them appropriately to make sure that our front-line health care professionals could do the hard work that they do every day.

I would remind this government that while you're sitting over there so proudly and heckling that you've heard these stories before and don't really care, the government actually spent $10 million less on continuing care last year than it did in the previous year. That is not something to be proud of. Spending $10 million less on continuing care last year than you did in the previous year is not a proud moment for you, not when you stand up every day and talk about how this province is growing. Reducing the cost and the resources going into continuing care and long-term care is not a proud moment as our province is growing.

I would also remind you that 77 of the beds that were closed last year at Rouleau house in Calgary were long-term care beds. At the time the government said that they had to be closed due to the flood and they couldn't be reopened because of safety issues. That wasn't true. They had a permit from the city. They had been given the good to go. The city had deemed it safe and ready to reopen. We asked the government about this. This was 77 long-term care nursing beds that were desperately needed while people were sitting in acute-care beds at a cost of $1,500 a day. They could have very easily been moved over to Rouleau house at a cost of $200 a day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Calgary-Shaw, you were on your feet quickly, so let's go to you.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Thanks to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for her comments. There's been a lot of discussion about the difference between long-term care and continuing care. I note that in the throne speech the words "long-term care" don't appear, but continuing care does. I'm wondering, considering that the Minister of Health is in the room today, if you'd be so kind as to explain the difference.

Mrs. Towle: I'd be happy to. There's a vast difference between long-term care nursing beds and continuing care beds, and fundamentally it is this. For everyday Albertans, this is what it means. Long-term care nursing beds are the responsibility traditionally of the government. A person who goes into a long-term care nursing bed gets 24-hour nursing care. They are funded differently, and when they go in there, their medications and their 24-hour nursing care are covered. You cannot extra-bill or should not extra-bill for that.

Continuing care beds are nowhere near that. Continuing care beds are for people who require a slightly higher level of care but don't necessarily need 24-hour care. They fall under the accommodation act. Luckily enough, by falling under the accommodation act, what are they allowed to do? They're allowed to extra-bill like crazy. [interjection] That's right. I think it's built into their business plan. Their business plan allows them to charge for medication assistance. It allows them to charge for feeding assistance. It allows them to charge for bathing assistance. It allows them to pretty much charge for everything.

What is happening with this government and what we saw was this government last year trying to close almost 1,379 long-term care beds. What they were doing was forcing people needing a higher level of care into the lower level of care, into continuing care beds. What that meant to the government is that they saved a whack-load of money. They didn't have to cover all those things anymore. What it meant to everyday Albertans is that they got lower levels of care. They didn't get the 24-hour nursing care that they required. They didn't get bathing. They didn't get feeding assistance, they didn't get medication assistance, and their medications were now being charged back to them.

This can make a dramatic impact on the person being cared for but also on the costs that that person sees. More importantly, what ends up happening when they go into continuing care beds and they actually have long-term care needs – guess where they go when that facility can't take care of them? They call the ambulance, and that facility promptly sends them off to the emergency room. The emergency room can't manage them because they don't have the resources, so they take up space in an acute-care bed, and then the acute-care bed has to house them because every single continuing care facility won't take them back because they're too high a level of care.

This, Mr. Speaker, is our fundamental problem in Alberta today. We have 758 people sitting in acute-care beds awaiting mostly long-term care nursing beds, not continuing care. The throne speech identifies that they're going to build 464 continuing care spaces. That's great, except that these are not new beds. These are simply the spaces that will reopen, all the ones you closed hastily last year. You're not getting into new beds. You closed those beds, and now you have to reopen them. They're not new. Let's just walk that theory through a little bit more: 464 beds, but you have 758 people waiting, so it doesn't really matter because you're not going to be able to solve that problem, and it doesn't address the problem that you have today, that more people are coming into care every single day.

More importantly, though, is the continual closure of long-term care beds. As they close long-term care beds – you can build a thousand or 2,000 continuing care beds, but you are not going to be able to give the clients what they need because they're not the right level of care.

Again, I would go back to the previous Premier's throne speech, under which you were all elected except for the four, and the promise of 1,000 long-term care nursing beds – her policy platform actually said 1,000 long-term care beds, not continuing care – every year for five years. That is an absolute failure. You haven't built any more beds. You've actually closed more beds. You are nowhere near, and even with 464, even if we're generous – let's just say that you're actually going to get to the whole 1,400 continuing care spaces by 2018. Let's just say that you can do that. You weren't able to do it last year, you weren't able to do it the year before, and I don't think your four new folks are miracle workers. The four new folks aren't going to be able to do it in the years coming up either, and you're going to have a crisis because, as you admit yourself, this government says everyday about how many people are coming here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I may not be a miracle worker, but I would like to move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

The Speaker: We'd have to adjourn debate first.

Mr. Denis: Sorry. I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: I will adjourn the House in just a moment.

I would like to make one point of clarification. During my ruling on privilege today I indicated that some government business obviously did occur during the trip in question, and I neglected to add the words "by one or more members of cabinet," which is the subject of some notes that have been coming back and forth. So that matter now stands corrected.*

We will move on and adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

Mr. Denis: If it pleases you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It does please me a lot. Thank you.

The House does stand adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:22 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Statement by the Speaker

10th Anniversary of Elected Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, last Saturday marked the 10th anniversary of service by six members of this Assembly who were elected on November 22, 2004. On that date the following members were elected and have served their constituents for the last 10 years.

Before I name them, I want to prepare the pages with the presentations. I'll ask each member to stand and wait until the page arrives and presents them with their 10-year pin. Why don't the rest of us wait until they've all been presented, and then we can give them thunderous applause for their outstanding service.

Would the following members please rise: the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and the hon. Minister of Energy. Let us thank our colleagues for their outstanding service to and for Albertans and to this Assembly.

Congratulations, hon. members, on reaching this important milestone. We hope that you will wear that pin loudly and proudly.

Let us move on.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a good friend whom I've known all his life. He grew up in Stirling just two doors down from us. He's a true Albertan and a statesman. His rural roots show in his common-sense approach to rules and regulations. He's a friend to all Albertans and is helping us fulfill the Premier's promise to strengthen property rights, specifically through Motion 501. The hon. Jim Hillyer, Member of Parliament for Lethbridge, is here with his lovely wife, Livi, and I now ask that they stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with the introduction of school groups. The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to introduce through you and to you some students from St. Pius X elementary school in Edmonton-Glenora, with teachers Rasa McCormack and Diana Lefebvre. I believe they are at School at the Leg. for this week, having a fantastic time. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 56 grade 6 students from the Fort Saskatchewan elementary school in my great constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. These students are here today and have had the challenging opportunity to debate by participating in their very own mock Legislature activity. They are accompanied today by teachers Mr. Tyler Nyznyk and Miss Kristine Bowden as well as EAs and parent volunteers Mrs. Nicole Hammel, Mrs. Joanne Gaudet, Mr. Jim Dietrich, Mrs. Lorraine Kochanuk, Mrs. Amanda Fraser, Mrs. Elizabeth Masterman, and M. Claude Campeau. They are seated in both the public and the members' galleries, and I would like them to rise now and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 24 grade 6 students and their chaperones from Millarville community school in the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. They are seated above, in the public gallery, as I've already indicated, and are here this week to participate in the legislative school program. Their teacher, Ms Serena Sanders, who I've met and worked with in the past, is leading this wonderful group of young Albertans today. I'd ask the students and their teacher to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us move on with the introduction of other important guests. Calgary-Bow, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three members of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, called SACA. I will be tabling the SACA 2013-2014 annual report in the House later today. Reverend Dan Van Alstine was appointed to SACA in May 2013 and has been an ordained minister of the Anglican church for 35 years. Reverend Dan resides in Edmonton and received the province of Alberta volunteer service award in 1988 as well as the McClung award in 2006 for all the work he's done and continues to do in his community and church.

Roger Laing is the executive director of the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton; it's called SAGE. Mr. Laing was instrumental in establishing the Edmonton Seniors Coordinating Council, ESCC, and the Alberta Association of Seniors Centres, both organizations that work to enhance the quality of life for seniors in Edmonton.

Luanne Whitmarsh is the CEO of the Kerby Centre in Calgary. A registered social worker and a certified professional consultant on aging, Luanne's background and credentials offer a unique voice to SACA, and she is a valued member of the team.

My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege to introduce five students from a University of Alberta Canadian public policy class which I recently had the opportunity to speak to. Now, my lesson was quite comprehensive, and I like to think that I told them all they need to know about the Alberta Legislature. But I challenged them to come here and see if they could learn anything – anything – from the rest of my hon. colleagues. However, they have yet to show up, so that may be a sign. Regardless, please welcome Holly Strang, Jennifer Yurkiw, Ashley Williamson, Alyssa Siggelkow, and Yuqiang Feng.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. leader of the ND opposition, I understand that you have two presentations. Please proceed, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first set of introductions. I am honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of artists, musicians, and volunteers, all of whom participated in my yearly community art gallery, called Art from the Unknown, in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. Originally started under former MLA Raj Pannu, Art from the Unknown has been running for nearly two decades. In that time we've offered gallery space to more than 500 emerging community artists. Year after year artists, musicians, and volunteers in our community have come together to make this event a success. I ask them now, all of them if possible, to stand and remain standing as I read their names: Brad Johnson, Margaret Clark, Michael Conforti, Joanne Wojtysiak, Krista Acheson, Ariana Brophy, Trevor McNealy, Sabrina Hanson, Svetlana Troitskaia, Evelyn Ritch, Anna Kattryan, Paul Thorne, Eleanor Ruth Logan, Sherien Lo, Bruce Mitchell. Oh, and Brent Kelly. There you are over there; sorry. I hope that the Assembly can join me in welcoming these great artists to our Assembly. You can be seated now.

Just to let you know, in November of every year if anyone is looking for good art, you can always check out Art from the Unknown.

Anyway, the second introduction that I'm honoured to provide to and through you, Mr. Speaker, is Estefania Cortes-Vargas. Estefania has a passion for human services that was instilled by her parents. During high school Estefania founded the first

Colombian youth group that facilitated a safe place for immigrant youth involved in at-risk behaviours. She's currently volunteering with families with children with disabilities as a tae kwon do coach and an educational assistant. She's currently at the MacEwan University social work placement program, and I'm happy that she's chosen to come and work in my constituency office. She's accompanied by my constituency assistant Brent Kelly. I would now ask both Brent and Estefania to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a hard-working young businessman from Calgary. Mr. Chang Liu is chief financial officer and co-founder of GL Petroleum Corporation, a private Calgary-based oil and gas exploration and development company which is representing a growing number of Chinese investment energy companies in our great province. What's made it even more special today is that we can be so proud that our province not only attracts foreign investment but keeps young talent. Mr. Liu worked over 10 years in New York and has recently returned to Calgary to take on a leadership role in this company. Now I would like to ask my colleagues to extend our warm traditional welcome to Mr. Liu. He sits in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

Freedom and Democracy

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to speak about two little words, "freedom" and "democracy." To each of us these words have many different connotations. For me these words speak to the genius of our Canadian system of parliamentary democracy, based on the unequaled Westminster model. They also speak to our freedoms of conscience and religion: freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression, including freedom of the press, freedom of assembly and association, and freedom from discrimination.

For me those words are also intimately and irrevocably connected to Canada's armed forces and those who have served our country now and in the past. Canada has a long and proud tradition of stepping onto the world stage in defence of our values of freedom and democracy. Mr. Speaker, my grandfather Tom Brown served in our country's army during World War I, in which he was gravely wounded by an enemy bullet in the Battle of the Somme. My father, A.K. Brown, served as a pilot officer during the Second World War, during which he made a forced landing and escaped from behind enemy lines, while my mother, Irene Shaw, served in the Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service on our west coast. Mr. Speaker, I could add Korea, Kosovo, Afghanistan, and numerous other peacekeeping missions where Canadian armed forces have stood tall in the defence of our values of freedom and democracy. Today Canadian men and women of our armed forces are serving abroad in a fight against a monstrous and barbaric group in the Middle East who are committing rape, murder, and genocide and who threaten the stability of the region and pose a present danger to all freedom-loving people of the world, including those of us within the borders of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that I speak for all members of this Assembly in saluting all of the members our Canadian armed forces – our army, navy, and air force – who are serving here at home and abroad.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Disaster Recovery Program

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, last June the flood waters rushed through southern Alberta and disrupted the lives of thousands. The flood brought out the best in Albertans, and I still get choked up when I think of the countless volunteers who showed up to clean up homes and basements. However, some of the government's efforts have fallen short. The disaster recovery program has itself been a disaster. Slow, imperious, tone-deaf, fickle, and even occasionally vindictive: those were the phrases used to describe the DRP and its administrator, LandLink.

Last spring the government acknowledged this and ended its relationship with LandLink. The government also introduced further appeals processes and promised that we would see a dramatic improvement by the summer. Later today I will ask questions based on the experiences of two different homeowners in my riding. They continue to be victimized by the DRP in different ways.

Rita Girlings's home will need to be demolished. The flood did that much damage. Since the flood she's been working to get help, but it's been a painfully slow process. She has finally been told that she'll get $225,000 to build a house. Now, Rita has particular medical needs, so that won't be enough, and the DRP told her to get help from a charity to build the house. Now they've told her that they are going to deduct the small amount she got from insurance from her DRP settlement. She has already spent some of that money to live on. No one at the DRP offices is returning her phone calls. It's disheartening.

Then there is Montrose Murals townhouse condos. The flood did quite a bit of damage, but insurance covered most of it. There is also an outstanding file for the items that are supposed to be covered by the DRP. Their insurance was recently cancelled. At the last minute they found new insurance but for five times the premium and with a deductible that is 10 times larger. By law the condo board can't make any more special assessments this year, and if they don't get their DRP money soon, they don't know what they are going to do.

The DRP has let down both of these homeowners and so many more, and this government doesn't seem to care. That, Mr. Speaker, is not good enough.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Sexual Harassment

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address the serious issue of sexual harassment and bullying in Alberta workplaces. This issue spans beyond the borders of my constituency, affecting both men and women globally. The consequences of workplace harassment are real, and they're significant and, until recently, a secret kept by many.

Media attention during the past few weeks has brought a spotlight on these actions, centring on high-profile incidents of sexual harassment and assault, some in the context of workplaces and others in private life. It is a deep secret too often harboured by victims, both men and women, who have felt shame and intimidation. Recently open conversations have prompted many more victims to come forward and tell their own story and ask for help. The brave openness of these individuals has taken the conversation away from the shadows and into the clear light of day. Every employer, every employee, and members of our communities all have a personal responsibility to create a comfortable and respectful workplace, and everyone deserves to feel safe at work and in their community.

I'm proud that Alberta has a number of regulations, laws, and support services in place to help victims, but we can also do more as Albertans to ensure that everyone is safe and respected. First, we must understand the severe impact on victims. They experience fear, shame, and anger, which can lead to depression, an inability to work, and a diminished quality of life. Next, we must end victim blaming. No one asks for and no one deserves to be objectified, demeaned, and disrespected. By pledging to believe and support those who report, we're changing societal attitudes for the better. Albertans see themselves as leaders, and leadership starts here.

If someone you care about has experienced sexual assault or harassment, please support them through the healing process. If you see harassment happening, if you hear inappropriate, sexualized, abusive comments . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but the time has lapsed for private members' statements.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin. Remember that you have 35 seconds in which to pose your question, and you have 35 seconds within which to answer. Let's start with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Investigation into Release of Information

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, back to the topic of integrity. Last week I asked the Premier about the leak of a cabinet member's cellphone bills by government insiders. An innocent person's identity was stolen, and the privacy act was breached. Now, the Calgary Police Service has confirmed to us that they have dropped the criminal investigation, but Premier Hancock was so concerned that he ordered an internal investigation. Now we've been told that the new Premier cancelled that investigation. Why?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, no such investigation was cancelled at any time by me. There have never been any instructions given to that effect or anything that could be construed as such direction under any circumstances. I look forward to hearing the results of the investigation.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Premier Hancock was deeply concerned about this leak and launched an internal investigation. Someone, either a senior political staffer or a senior civil servant or possibly an elected official, leaked confidential documents to damage the Premier's opponents. It's distasteful, and it may also be illegal. A rigorous internal investigation is the least the Premier can do. If the Premier is serious about integrity in his government, will he commit to getting to the bottom of this matter?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've always said that we need to get to the bottom of this matter, and there is a rigorous investigation under way. To correct the Leader of the Opposition, there's never been any suggestion by anyone in my office or myself that that investigation won't carry through to completion.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there are legitimate ways for information to be released. Our privacy act is often cumbersome, but it generally works, as this government is well aware. This information was not released legitimately. This confidential information of at least one cabinet minister's cellphone records was mailed illegally to a journalist. This is wrong. Will the Premier ask the Privacy Commissioner to step in to investigate?

Mr. Prentice: Well, I think that as the hon. member has pointed out in her previous question, the former Premier of the province of Alberta launched a rigorous investigation into this. I certainly look forward to receiving the results of that, and we'll deal with it in due course when that's received.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Infrastructure and co-chair of the Premier's leadership campaign was shopping this leaked information to our staff and to other MLAs this spring just as the PC leadership race began. Of course, the information was quite useful to the Premier as it dealt specifically with one of his opponents. If he and his cabinet did nothing wrong, you'd think they'd want to clear the air and they'd want to clear it quickly. Does the Premier want to know who done it?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the allegations that the hon. member opposite makes are very serious. I hope that she will co-operate with all of the authorities in terms of getting to the bottom of this. That is certainly what I want to see on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: Let's be careful not to delve too deeply into anything that would even remotely resemble internal party matters.

Ms Smith: We're talking about a cabinet leak, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, do you have your first supplemental?

Ms Smith: Yeah. We're talking about a cabinet leak of private documents, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I understand.

Ms Smith: The Calgary Police Service conducted and ended their investigation without ever interviewing the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, whose cellphone bill was leaked. They also didn't interview the senior political staff, elected officials, and civil servants who are supposed to protect and safeguard this information. It appears the privacy act was breached to benefit the Premier's leadership campaign, and no one really wants to get serious about investigating this and get to the bottom of it. Surely the Premier is concerned about the appearance of impropriety.

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't really hear a question there, but if the hon. member opposite is seriously impugning the credibility and the integrity of the city of Calgary police department, she should put that on the record.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is not off to a great start on integrity. We can't ask questions to the Education minister because he started his mandate under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner. Now we find out that he himself has delayed the internal investigation into a breach of the privacy act and the fact that the Calgary Police Service has prematurely ended their investigation into the same matter. Can the Premier call in the Privacy Commissioner to independently investigate this breach and clear the air once and for all?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the matter is being investigated in exactly the manner that the hon. member has referred to, which was initiated by the former Premier of the province of Alberta. We trust the judgment and the integrity of the authorities respectively to deal with this. Again, if the hon. member is impugning the integrity of the city of Calgary police department, she should put that on the record both in this Chamber and outside.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Hospital Infrastructure

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The third flood in over a year at the Misericordia meant closed emergency rooms, a roof caving in, and a closed cafeteria. Well, a closed cafeteria may not seem like much, but patients and families go there for solace. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when are you going to fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Myself, the Minister of Health, and our Premier have said that deferred maintenance is a very important priority in our government. We're spending over $1.6 billion over our current three-year capital plan and will be working with the Minister of Health and Alberta Health Services to ensure that the needs of Albertans at that hospital are met.

Mrs. Forsyth: The kitchen at the Foothills hospital is stuffed with mould and asbestos and has had an infestation of mice. It has been receiving public health citations for years. Minister, when are you going to fix it?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, there's currently $222 million in our capital plan for deferred maintenance funding with Alberta Health Services. We have made a commitment to ensuring that deferred maintenance is something we catch up on. It's something we mentioned in our throne speech, and it'll be something that the members will look forward to seeing addressed further.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, I can't tell you how many years this has been on your infrastructure priority list.

The Wainwright hospital has serious problems with its sewage system. It's deteriorated to the point that the entire facility is at risk of closure, and you've known about it for years. When are you going to fix it?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, once again, we have $222 million allocated to Alberta Health Services, who then decide what specific programs and projects they provide maintenance on. That's $222 million that we're spending to ensure that Alberta's health facilities are in good shape, and 96 per cent of Alberta's health facilities are rated to be in fair and good condition. As I've said before, this is a priority for the government, and we'll see more action coming.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Health Care System

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The results are in from an Alberta Liberal FOIP of AHS performance, and they're terrible. Emergency wait times: fail. Surgery wait times: fail. Community placement wait times: fail. Hospital staff engagement: fail. Hospital infection rates, you guessed it: fail. The PC government is failing our health system in almost every measurable way, and Albertans are suffering. To the Premier: unlike your predecessors, will this new management finally admit that continued PC privatization and mismanagement is causing these failures?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously the health of all Albertans. Recently we have put in place a program in order to move people into long-term care from acute care to open up beds to create opportunities for Albertans to have the kind of care in hospitals they need. We are very serious about ensuring that all Albertans get the kind of care they need in the right kind of environment, and we'll continue to do that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the same private care that has caused the failures we have today. By the way, I hear that this will be the last public report.

Mr. Speaker, the PCs blame Alberta's growing population and seniors for out-of-control health spending and poor results, but the facts say differently. PC spending on health care has increased 40 per cent over the last five years while the population has only grown by 11.1 per cent, and Alberta is getting younger every day. The PCs are spending more money and getting worse results. To the Health minister: why aren't Albertans getting better results from a health system, and why will you no longer report this comprehensive report?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The care of Albertans throughout our system is vitally important to all of us. We realize that as our population has grown immensely over the last number of years, there have been pressures placed upon our system. We're working very, very hard to develop more facilities so that Albertans can get the care they need. If you look across the province of Alberta, we've built and improved a number of hospitals and constantly make efforts to ensure that Albertans get the kind of care they need. This government is committed to ensuring that we get the necessary care like everybody in this country.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer is that waste and mismanagement has caused the problem.

Talking about hospitals, Mr. Speaker, another Liberal FOIP has uncovered over $630 million in deferred health infrastructure maintenance, maintenance delays that have led to a leaky and rundown Misericordia hospital. Yet the PC government annually wastes at least half a billion dollars on consultants, AHS management changes, warehousing seniors in hospitals, and expensive Band-Aids on the system. With that amount of money we could already have fixed all the hospitals and built a new Misericordia hospital, fixed facilities for care. To the Health minister. My constituents want to know: when will you stop wasting time and money and build a new . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, on Friday morning, after the event that happened at the Misericordia on Thursday, I went by the hospital. What I would like to say is that the people at the Misericordia worked incredibly hard to make sure that hospital was back in operation the next day. The people worked so hard. It was unbelievable. But the cause of that leak wasn't the hospital's fault.

There is construction going on on the second and third floors to improve the facility. As a result of that, an error was made by the contractor. He punctured a waterline, and that waterline ended up flooding the area. But they took care of it very quickly. I think credit has to go to the people at Covenant Health for doing that kind of work, to clean that up quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to give credit to the front-line workers, who are constantly cleaning up after these folks' mistakes.

Child Poverty

Ms Notley: Twenty-five years ago today Ed Broadbent, the NDP federal leader, orchestrated the unanimous approval of MPs to end child poverty in Canada by the year 2000. Two and a half years ago this government's caucus committed to Albertans that they would eliminate child poverty in five years. Today a report has been released which reveals that we have 143,200 children in Alberta living in poverty. Halfway through your mandate nothing has been done. What are you going to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government takes very seriously our responsibility to look after vulnerable children and families as well. I think we need to clarify that Statistics Canada tells us that 8.2 per cent of Alberta's children under the age of 18 live in poverty. I think we need to have this conversation, but it concerns me when information is put out that is not correct.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have more faith in the people that wrote that report than I do in this caucus or that government.

The solution to 143,200 Alberta kids living in poverty reads like a top-10 list of this government's failures: rejecting the idea of a child tax benefit; spending less on child care than any other province in the country; and keeping the second-lowest minimum wage in the country unless, of course, you're a waitress, very likely a woman, in which case it's dead last. To the Premier: how can you continue to maintain these regressive policies of your grandpa's PC Party while 143,200 children are living in poverty . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I need to give our top-10 of all the great things we're doing here in Human Services, including the family employment tax credit; the $170 million in child care subsidies; the 4,700 child care spaces that we opened up this last year, bringing it to over a hundred thousand. We have free parenting and play programs for families through parent link centres in more than 180 Alberta communities. We've also accredited more child care workers and support child care workers in the child care system this year and invested $1.8 million as well.

Ms Notley: One hundred and forty-three thousand two hundred Alberta children living in poverty.

One of the most critical planks for reducing Alberta's nation-leading levels of inequality and our unacceptable level of child poverty is the introduction of a fair tax system. Today's reports call for the elimination of our flat tax, which benefits only the very wealthy at the expense of the food and housing security of too many Alberta children. Again my question is to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: will you bring in a progressive tax system, or will you continue to let 143,200 Alberta children pay the price for this failure?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to understand that in Alberta we have a widespread income advantage and incomes are higher than the national average across occupations, industries, and educational levels. But, more importantly, in Alberta not just high-income earners are seeing an increase in their real incomes. The share of Alberta's population made up of low-income earners is below the national average and has continued to decrease.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll start with question 6, and please curtail your preambles to any supplementals.

Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-South East.

Carbon Offsetting

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2011 the Auditor General reported that this government was failing to properly police energy in agricultural greenhouse gas reductions. The AG said that not one of the agricultural carbon offset credits it checked could be sufficiently verified. Since this AG's report what measures has this government taken to improve the transparency of Alberta's carbon offset system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General brought up some very good points. We have responded by accepting all of his recommendations. We are working towards trying to provide more clarity around these. There is work going on on several of the offset credit programs, and we hope to complete that work sometime in the near future.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the AG cited inadequate supporting documentation as one of the main reasons for this failing grade, what verifiable documentation can this ministry provide to this Assembly as credible proof that Alberta's carbon offset system is actually reducing greenhouse gases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General did identify an area that is problematic. We must be doing a better job in making sure that we are verifying the greenhouse gas emissions from our programs. This matters to Albertans. It matters to the world. It matters to our customers. We are investing a lot in our climate change strategy. The international community is watching us, so we must make sure we tell our story.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is a farm advisory warning farmers not to sign contracts with nefarious carbon offset companies like Failsafe Canada and Carbon Merchants, why are these companies still listed on a government website as approved agents to sell carbon offsets, and how does this help improve our credibility?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I think that carbon offsets are one tool that will allow us to meet our climate change objectives. However, I will take that question under advisement from the member. If you could provide my office with some information, we will certainly look into it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Highwood.

Education System

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without belabouring the point, we know Alberta is facing extreme growth pressures. In Calgary-South East we feel this acutely as one of the fastest growing constituencies in Alberta. This government has been addressing our expanding needs by announcing 13 new school projects in our community, and for this we're incredibly grateful. The buildings are important, but they're just bricks and mortar. Alberta's greatest resource, our children, must be educated and cared for in these buildings, and we must address this as our principal concern. My first question is to the Minister of Education. What is your plan to ensure that we are funding our children's education appropriately in terms of student per capita funding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to investing in education so that our children have every opportunity to reach their full potential. Over the past decade our investment in Alberta's education system has increased by a significant 65 per cent while during the same period student enrolments increased by 13.6 per cent. We continue to put students first, and we are staying well ahead of the curve.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister: given that money is not always the answer to our challenges, what is your ministry and department doing to meet the needs of our children with special needs?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, every student in Alberta deserves a very high-quality education. As a national leader in education our commitment is strong. We do invest over $400 million annually to support inclusive education and help meet the needs of all of our students, including those who may have special needs. Working to implement an inclusive education system in Alberta is a priority. It's embedded right throughout our ministry. Thanks to the supports that are in place, students with special needs are getting the help they need to achieve the outcomes of the curriculum and have shown improvement in high school completion rates, diploma exam results . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Again to the same minister: given that educators face the same growth pressures in terms of class sizes and an increasing number of children with special needs, how do your plans accommodate for this increased workload on our educators as well as for parents' concerns that this may affect their children's quality of instruction?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, under Budget 2014 we provided a 2 per cent grant increase for inclusive education. School boards do have the authority, the responsibility, and the flexibility to determine how funding should be spent to meet the needs of each and every student, and we trust school boards to make responsible decisions. Schools across Alberta have embraced inclusion. They're working to ensure that each and every student has the very best opportunity to learn in a safe and welcoming environment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Disaster Recovery Program

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the disaster recovery program continues to victimize those who lost their homes to the flood. The former Minister of Municipal Affairs committed last spring to having almost everything resolved by the summer. Well, it's almost December, and flood victims are still frustrated. Rita Girlings of High River had been promised help by the DRP for her destroyed home from the very beginning. Every time she talks to a DRP officer, the story changes and it gets worse. What does the Premier want to tell victims like Rita, who feel like they've been lied to over and over and over again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My heart and our hearts go out to all of the victims from the 2013 floods. Over 80 per cent of the files have been completed. This is the largest disaster, as we know, that has happened in Canada. Over 10,500 applications were put forward. We've dealt with 80 per cent of those. We have committed to be there until we have dealt with every single file.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, after appeals and delays Rita was told that she would get $225,000 and that she should ask Habitat for Humanity for help in building a new house with that money. Now she's been told that the cheque will be delayed and that it will be $40,000 smaller. No one from DRP will return Rita's calls. Is the Premier proud of how his government is treating Rita and so many others like her?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have committed under the leadership of this Premier from day one when he came in to triple the amount of appeals officers. The majority of those appeals have been committed to and have been gone through. We had 900 appeals, and we are down to less than 344, and that is because of the leadership of this Premier making sure that we are tripling that staff. We have put over $3 billion into this program and over $100 million for individuals, and we'll continue to be there for them.

Ms Smith: Really, Mr. Speaker? From six staff to 18 staff?

Montrose Murals condos are also suffering from DRP delays. The flood damaged the complex, and some of it was covered by insurance, some by DRP. Now they're struggling to find affordable insurance. They've done a special assessment to cover a 500 per cent increase in their premiums, and if they don't get their DRP money soon, there's going to be another massive cash call. Adding a mere 12 people to the DRP appeals staff is not nearly good enough. Why won't the Premier do more?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, within a couple of weeks of being sworn into this ministry, I had an invite from the mayor and council and their team to come into their community and view it. What I got from them was a thank you, a thank you to this Premier and a thank you to this party and a thank you to all the emergency people, including those in High River and those in the province of Alberta, for the incredible job they are doing. There has been no disaster like this in the entire nation. People have been doing a great job. Are all the files complete? No, they're not. But we are going to be there until they are complete.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Influenza Immunization

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans simply need to look around their workplace, classroom, or community to know that we're in the middle of that dreaded annual influenza season, and with emergency rooms already strained, we simply cannot afford an additional health crisis. For many the flu is something that's inconvenient – it comes and goes without major consequences – but for some it can be very serious. My first question is to the Minister of Health. How many Albertans have been hospitalized so far this year due to the flu, and how many have actually died?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I much appreciate the question. Influenza season, the flu season, is really a very, very difficult time for so many people in Alberta. With great regret I'd like to say that, unfortunately, 69 people have been hospitalized and seven have passed away as a result of influenza. That's a horrible, horrible number. You know, each of these cases, when they go to the hospital, costs us about $17,000 a person. It's very expensive. All we have to do is to take the time to go to one of the many, many clinics or pharmacists in the province of Alberta to get immunized, and it will help to stop that in our province.

Mr. Rodney: Many Albertans do everything they can to get their flu shots at the earliest opportunity as an important component of their complete health and wellness plan, but for various reasons some Albertans still refuse to get the flu shot. To what degree can the minister assure Albertans that this year's flu shot actually covers the correct strains for this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yes. Mr. Speaker, many people comment about their concern about whether or not the vaccine will cover this season's particular strains. I can assure you that the people at Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services work diligently with the necessary groups of people to ensure that what strains we have this year will be covered by the vaccine this year.

Also, it's important to remember that, you know, vaccines don't happen overnight. You need to spend some time. It takes two weeks for them to take over and make sure that you're immunized. I would encourage people again to go out and get that immunization, and they'll be protected.

Mr. Rodney: To the same minister. In the past, including during the early days of H1N1, Albertans experienced a certain degree of chaos, truth be told, in getting their shot due to planning challenges in supply and distribution of flu vaccines. How has the minister's department budgeted for this year? How many doses?

How much confidence does he have that we have sufficient supply for this year?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, there have been 2.1 million doses of the vaccine ordered. We hope to raise the number to 45 per cent of Albertans being vaccinated. Last year it was 27 per cent. Again, we'd encourage as many people to come out as possible to make sure that they do get vaccinated. You know something? By going to one of the many clinics – and on the weekend, beside my office there was a constant flow of people going into one of the Alberta Health Services clinics, so people were getting immunized. We encourage people to do it. It's all over the city. Get out, get immunized, and you won't have a problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Poverty Reduction

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has spent years consulting with poverty groups and making plans to reduce child poverty as the numbers continue to rise, now over 140,000 – 140,000 – based on the low-income measure. The social policy framework includes a commitment to reduce inequality even as Alberta has become the most unequal province in the country. Homeless families have doubled in Calgary while this government has failed to provide its share of family and community support services funding for the past six years. To the Minister of Human Services: what new resources . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The 35 seconds has lapsed.

Let's move on to the minister's response.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the report was released on the 24th. I think what's very clear to be said is that we know that there is a good system in place. The report admits that, and we need to maintain that. Again, moving forward, we talk about some of the things that Human Services is doing, including the recent family community supports safety program, which is going to provide $20 million to communities, agencies for innovative solutions, and to the root causes of poverty. The other area that Human Services is looking at is in helping individuals upgrade their skills so they can stay in the workforce.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Partnerships are meaningless when the government ignores its own commitment to the 80-20 relationship between municipalities and the provincial government. Will you return to the balanced, shared FCSS funding?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I actually went to the FCSS AGM and spoke to everyone in the room, all the hard-working front-line individuals delivering services across Alberta. We know that local matters, and we know that's important. So I'll be having a conversation with them and talking about the challenges they're facing and looking at innovative ways of providing services and linking them to some of the things that we're already doing in Human Services.

Dr. Swann: I'll take that as a no, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure the communities will be very interested to hear that.

Why won't the government at least follow other provinces and implement a proven measure, a child benefit based on family income?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, just so the hon. member doesn't create the impression that we're doing a worse job in Alberta than nation-wide, I mean, if he looks at the statistics, he'll find that in the 20 years between 1991 and 2011 the percentage of low-income people in this province went from 11 per cent down to 8.5 per cent. At the same time nation-wide it has actually increased, from 11 percent to 12.5 per cent. Alberta is doing a better job, frankly, of keeping people out of poverty than anyone in the country.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pipelines and extraction produce relatively few good-paying long-term jobs. Upgrading and refining, by contrast, produce plenty of high-paying permanent jobs. Yet in spite of study after study that shows that Alberta loses out on good jobs when we ship raw bitumen, the Premier still thinks that Alberta needs to, quote, build pipelines in every direction. To the Premier: why won't this Premier commit to refining and upgrading products right here in Alberta instead of shipping raw resources and the jobs that come with them down the pipeline?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it is, in fact, very important that we build pipelines in all directions to ensure that we get our products to world markets and we get world prices for our Alberta products. But I'll agree with the hon. member that it is indeed very important that we upgrade products right here in Alberta. He may know the incremental ethane extraction program, for example, that's built an ethane value chain right here in Alberta. He may also know that we've used the BRIK program to incent the construction of an upgrader right here in Alberta. He probably won't know that we're also working on other initiatives right at the moment.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's too bad that the Premier can't be bothered to answer questions that are put to him.

Given that the bitumen royalty in kind program only involves 70,000 barrels per day of raw bitumen, a very small portion of the over 1.7 million barrels produced each day in this province, and given that the North West upgrader has a similarly small capacity relative to the amount of production in the province and requires a massive and growing subsidy from the province, to the Premier: will you admit that the BRIK program is entirely inadequate and insufficient in ensuring that we are adding value and keeping the good-paying long-term jobs that result?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, on the one hand, we should incent upgrading; on the other hand, we'll be criticized when we do incent upgrading. The current upgrader under construction is appropriately sized. We are looking for other opportunities, and we'll continue to do so. It's absolutely key that Albertans get the most value out of the resource that we can.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier is beginning to show a real pattern of disdain for the opposition by refusing to answer questions put to him.

Given that over the last 20 years this government has become increasingly cozy with the oil and gas industry, who largely financed the PC Party's election campaigns, and given that exporting bitumen to Texas and China may be good for the bottom line of the big oil companies but it sacrifices good jobs for Albertans, to the Premier: why won't the Premier admit that his government has sacrificed the interests of the people of this province in favour of the bottom lines of their friends in big oil?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I reject the premise of that question outright. We're doing everything that we can to ensure that there's value-added done here in our province, to expand the profile of value-added that's done here already, to ensure that the most value for our resources is captured right here in Alberta, and that there are good-paying jobs for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Feeder Association Loan Guarantee Program

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the end of the calf sale season is drawing to a close, there's mounting pressure on this government to rectify a mistake made in the rural action plan. Recent changes to the cattle feeders loan guarantee program saw the individual loan maximum double, which is good, but failed to increase the program's total guarantee. The end result is that fewer Albertans will now have access to monies for the purchase of cattle, leaving the stock available for sale to the U.S. To the minister of agriculture: will you increase the total amount to ensure that Alberta feeders have access to continually provide the great meat we see in Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister responsible for agriculture.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. I answered this question a couple of days ago, and I'll just repeat for the hon. member that this program is a 77-year-old program born in the depths of the Depression, so back in the mid-30s, when it was very difficult for any farmer to buy anything. We're now in a scenario where we have record cattle prices. That has caused some stresses, but I would also explain to the member that the changes that were made were as a result of consultation that's been going on for the last year.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that this year the total cattle exports to the U.S. are already 17 per cent higher than the previous year and are on their way to reaching a total of 1.2 million cattle exported to the U.S. this year and given that the average plant in Alberta, such as the one in my riding, processes approximately 1.2 million cattle in a year, can the minister see that without this guarantee increase, more cattle will be shipped down to the U.S. and it will hurt our processors, feeders, and agricultural industry as a whole?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a question of how far the government needs to go in terms of taking responsibility for providing guarantees. Right now the guarantee is at $55 million. We recognize the issue. The question is: how much further financial responsibility should a government take when we have record prices in this industry, some 65 per cent over prices just a year ago? That is something that we need to get our heads around. We're certainly talking about it, but that is an issue because it creates a precedent for many other sectors as well.

Mr. Hale: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the cattle industry is still reeling from the BSE change and the other issues that we've seen in the marketplace – this is the first year we've had record increases, which is great for the cattle industry, but we're still trying to recover from years gone by – will the minister take the next step to ensure the viability of our cattle and agriculture industries and increase the total amount guaranteed?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, again I thank the member for the question. I wouldn't want him to have the impression that our government is not doing a lot of things for the beef industry and for other sectors of the industry. We provide significant support in many areas. We're also working very hard on mandatory country of origin labelling. We're starting to see maybe some signs that there will be a possibility of a relook at that in the United States with the changes through the mid-term elections. We have a long list of very significant programs that are being used to support the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Signs of Safety Program

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know everyone will agree that the protection of children is a fundamental duty of society and of this government. For that reason, I was greatly encouraged by the decision to implement a new framework for child intervention casework called signs of safety. Signs of safety is a positive reinforcement approach that has shown positive results by building the strengths of the family and collaborating with the family to build a safe environment for children. To the Minister of Human Services: where are we in the process of implementing the signs of safety framework?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Signs of safety is a tool that helps workers focus on family strengths and resources to reduce the risks to the safety and well-being of children and to promote a healthier home while empowering them and assisting them with keeping their children. It's an internationally recognized program. We have seen a 12 per cent decrease in the number of children receiving child intervention services from April to September this year thanks to the hard work of our front-line staff using signs of safety and other approaches.

Ms DeLong: To the same minister: what has been the response to this implementation from front-line child intervention caseworkers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed the only North American jurisdiction that is using the signs of safety program. The feedback from both staff and families has been very positive because of the impact it's having on the children, the youth, the families, and the social workers themselves. Family members are fully included in the process and fully engaged, and that helps build positive relationships. We are investing $2 million this year to support signs of safety.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: when will there be a follow-up done to evaluate the success of this implementation?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll be conducting an evaluation of all the casework approaches, including signs of safety and the other approaches, beginning in April 2015. At the end of the day, the government's goal is to keep all children healthy and to keep children with their families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

2:30 Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The continuum of care often begins with EMS having first contact as the patient is taken to a hospital. The current organizational structure has fostered a positive, effective working relationship between EMS and hospitals. Albertans have benefited, with the arrangement showing great promise, especially in rural areas where EMS becomes part of the team that works in and out of the hospital. Will this government continue allowing and encouraging this relationship?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I've had an opportunity to meet with a number of communities throughout the province in dealing with their challenges and concerns about EMS. What I've been most pleased about in rural areas is how pleased they have been with the system. We have to tweak some things and change things to make it more adjustable to the kinds of things that they might need, but I will assure that we will continue doing what we're doing but hopefully improve it so that we can get better service to everyone throughout the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that local volunteer ambulance services continue providing excellent service to their communities, complementing that supplied by AHS EMS, will local ambulance services continue to be part of the emergency response in their communities and be allowed to work in a complementary fashion with EMS?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. There has been a real sense of co-operation between those communities that have the fire service separate from EMS, and we will continue to work with them. The challenge is to make sure that we get to the accident in the most expeditious way, and whoever can get there first should be the ones who can deliver some service. We really appreciate that the fire service and the volunteer areas work so hard to make sure that they can deliver the service they need. We really appreciate the co-operation and will continue to work with them.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has recognized the importance of provincial standards and has also realized that this is best achieved with relationships and decisions being made at the local level, will EMS continue to be part of the organizational structure that functions in each region in spite of comments recently made to get it out from underneath political control?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has definitely given me direction that we should make sure we do all we can at the local level to work with our communities to make sure that they have the kind of service they think they need and they're passionate about, and we will continue to do that. EMS service is one of those really, really important services. We're looking at a variety of ways to work with communities to make sure that they get the service that they want, and we'll continue to do that.

We thank the member for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Highways in Northeast Alberta

Ms Fenske: Thank you. I appreciate the Premier's recognition of the need for highway improvements in northeast Alberta and welcome him to my world of highways 16, 45, 15, and 29. These are all major economic corridors in need of maintenance to preserve existing infrastructure as well as new investment such as a bridge across the North Saskatchewan River. To the Minister of Transportation. Highways 16 and 45 have been on the three-year plan for several years and have been scheduled for an overlay. When can we expect to see these projects commence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for her question. She's a great advocate for her constituents. I'm pleased to tell this House that paving work on highway 45 has been tendered and will be completed in 2015. Also, two paving projects on highway 16 will soon be tendered, with completion for 2015, and four more projects in various stages of engineering, design, and construction will proceed when funding allows. In all we have 40 kilometres of overlay on highway 16 in our current three-year . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. The time is up.
First supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: what's the plan and timeline to ensure that our agricultural producers can haul 100 per cent loads year-round on highway 29?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I understand how important it is for agricultural producers to be able to use these roads without restrictions, but sometimes bans are necessary to protect the roads in soft conditions, specifically in the spring and summer months. My department completed significant patchwork on highway 29 last summer, and I'm hopeful that, you know, we won't have to ban these roads in the future.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Minister. That would be appreciated.

My final question to the same minister: with respect to heartland infrastructure what are the steps to seeing additional twinning of highway 15 and the new bridge?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department has completed functional planning for twinning between the existing portion of 15 and 831 in Lamont and will proceed as budget allows. In the meantime we'll proceed with improvements at the intersections of highways 15, 37, and 28 to improve the safety for motorists. We also know that the Capital Region Board has identified the need for a bridge at this crossing, and we're currently working on a long-term plan with them to proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Acute Health Care in Consort

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been three years' worth of reviews and assessments showing a need for more acute-care beds in Consort. Now, under the rural physical action plan, AHS is launching yet another review into something we already know Consort needs. To the Health minister: when will you stop these reviews and deliver the acute-care beds Consort needs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Starke has been going across the province and working with some incredibly hard-working people throughout rural Alberta to bring forward ideas of what communities like Consort might need. His report will be coming out soon. We will act upon that. We are very pleased with what he's doing. I attended a meeting on Saturday. There was tremendous passion. We look to move forward as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: Just a reminder. There is a custom and tradition to not name members who are elected in this Assembly by their first or last names.

Let's move on to the first supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. The minister is spending taxpayer money on these reviews when three years of reviews have already shown that Consort needs these beds. Does he think this is a good use of taxpayers' dollars?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this isn't just about Consort. It's about a variety of communities throughout this province who are in need of support in a variety of different ways. This report will work towards making sure that communities throughout Alberta are taken care of, including Consort, we hope.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is here to change the way AHS works, will he consider publishing, then, an AHS infrastructure priority list so that there can be definitive timelines that these communities can work with?

The Speaker: The hon. Mr. Minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are working through capital investments and capital programs as we speak, and we'd be more than glad to talk about them at that point in time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Dental Services in Northern Alberta

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The McLennan dental training program is an important institution in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. Beyond serving over 5,000 patients in our community, it produces professionals trained within a smaller community who may come back to the area to work, something that is vital to our rural regions. Cutting funding to the clinic while waiting on government to develop a plan to provide those same services seems, at best, arbitrary. The same is also happening in High Level and La Crête. To the Minister of Health: can you provide the reasoning behind why such valuable resources for our communities are being cut out?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to confirm that these will continue. The province of Alberta is committed to having facilities like this throughout Alberta, and having the University of Alberta participate in this makes it even more successful. We know that McLennan and La Crête are two very important parts of our province, and we will continue to support them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that each community has distinct needs, what kinds of assurances can you give to the municipalities affected that they will be involved in the process of finding a long-term solution? You've agreed that they are to stay open but, I understand, only for a short while.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, rural Alberta and especially northern Alberta are very, very important to this government. We'll continue to work with the communities for Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services to deliver the services they need. Dental care to these communities is vitally important because it's not available in many other ways. We will continue to support the communities and will work with the hon. member in order to meet the needs.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I need to emphasize to the same minister that many of our community members who use these services live in remote areas, where services are limited, while many are financially disadvantaged and lacking third-party insurance. We need assurances from the minister that the same level of services will be maintained.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. High Level, McLennan, and La Crête are very, very important to the province of Alberta. Individuals in those communities who are in need, who we must support, will continue to get that service. You know something? It's vitally important to this government and to this Premier that we continue to work with communities so that the services they expect to get they will continue to get. This is one of those very, very important programs. Some of the confusion is that oftentimes we'd be accused that it's been shifted from Alberta Health to Alberta Health Services. We'll continue to work with the community to make sure that it continues to work so that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Home Renovation Contractors

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent bankruptcy of the Remodelers, a well-known Calgary renovation company with its own TV show, raises serious questions about Service Alberta's licensing and oversight of prepaid contractors. In the case of the Remodelers some two dozen homeowners say that they gave the company money up front for renovations that were never completed. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why did his ministry fail to see the red flags . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. The time has lapsed.

Let's go to the Minister of Service Alberta. Hopefully, you picked up something there.

Mr. Khan: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his question. Our department is very much aware of the issue with the Remodelers. We're currently undergoing an assessment of this situation. We're taking this situation very seriously. Consumer advocacy is a big part of our ministry, and we're going to be working very hard on the Remodelers issue.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. One of the homeowners paid a deposit of $300,000, yet Service Alberta only required the company to post a surety bond of $25,000. That just doesn't make sense. How is the minister going to fix the process so that the surety bonds more accurately reflect deposit amounts and victimized homeowners will be able to recover more than just pennies on the dollar?

The Speaker: I heard a question there. The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Khan: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again I thank the hon. member for his question. As the hon. members says, we at Service Alberta take this issue of contractors and how they deal with the public very seriously. This issue that he raises, the Remodelers, is an issue that we're currently working on in terms of assessment. We're working with the Calgary Police Service, and we do take this issue very seriously. If the hon. member has some information he'd like to share with my office, we'd be very happy to work with him on this issue.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now to the minister of culture. Is the province going to accept some degree of responsibility for the mess since the Alberta media fund was used to help support the Remodelers' TV show, which ultimately convinced many unsuspecting homeowners that this was a reputable company?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of culture.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very serious issue, and we are working with my colleague's department to try and get to the bottom of it.

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister of Culture and Tourism. My apologies for leaving out the Tourism part.

Hon. members, today we recognized 17 different members for a total of 102 questions and answers, and that is a record for quite some time. Congratulations to all of you, and thank you.

The Speaker: Let us carry on with private members making statements, starting with Calgary-Fort, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Remembrance Day Observances in Calgary.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a ceremony I attended in Calgary earlier this month. If you travel along Memorial Drive in Calgary from November 1 to 11, you will notice a very special park that is lined with about 3,000 crosses. Each cross carries the name, rank, regiment, age, and date of a soldier from southern Alberta who died in military action. This annual memorial field of crosses is a testament to our Canadian soldiers who have paid the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom. From November 1 to 11 there is a flag-raising ceremony at sunrise that includes a bugler and a piper, and at the sunset ceremony the flags will be lowered.

These ceremonies are open to the public, who are encouraged to visit the site at any time and can lay flowers at their loved ones' memorials. This memorial helps us to remember that freedom comes with a very high personal price. The memorial project was started with initiative from the Murray McCann family in co-ordination with the late George Bittman of the Calgary poppy fund and numerous volunteers.

Another major event is Valour Canada's Calgary Flame of Remembrance, another symbol of remembrance in the city. This event began on the evening of November 10, initiated by the Valour Canada organization and featuring Royal Canadian Navy Captain William Wilson, who lit the Flame of Remembrance on the Calgary Tower. This year marked the second annual lighting of the Flame of Remembrance on top of the Calgary Tower.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Kananaskis Country

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 22, 1978, Premier Peter Lougheed officially dedicated Kananaskis Country. This 4,200 square kilometre recreation area quickly became a cherished location for Albertans to connect with the environment and spend time with friends and family, to hike, climb, and be active on the eastern slopes of the Rockies.

Mr. Speaker, Kananaskis Country is much more than just a park. It's a unique multi-use area where the needs of industry, ranching, and tourism are balanced with a mandate to maintain a healthy ecosystem. Within Kananaskis Country you will see a variety of commercial activities occurring on public lands outside of parks. Recreational activities take place in both the parks and the multi-use public lands of Kananaskis Country. Nearly two-thirds of the area is protected as either park, ecological reserve, or recreation area, nearly all of which is located in my constituency of Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Speaker, the plan to protect the Kananaskis area was not just the dream of Peter Lougheed. Former Banff-Cochrane MLA the late Clarence Copithorne recognized the need to provide managed recreational opportunities for a growing population in the Calgary area. Serving as minister of transportation, he played a major role in the development of Kananaskis Country.

Mr. Speaker, Kananaskis Country is a great example of managing use of public lands in a way that is respectful of the environment while at the same time meeting the needs of recreationalists and industry. Faced with the unprecedented growth of Alberta's population, the challenges of use on public lands are greater than ever before. With the recent approval of the South Saskatchewan regional plan and the success of Kananaskis Country I'm ever hopeful that we can find solutions for land use throughout the eastern slopes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Child Poverty

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's an emergency in Alberta that continues to be talked about without meaningful action. For 43 years this PC government has watched the numbers grow, the families broken by learning, health, and social problems associated with poverty. Each day children in our midst are sick, hungry, frustrated, and despairing at the unequal opportunity because of lack of income. First Nations, now increasingly looking for success in urban centres, are doubly challenged by such disadvantage, discrimination, and denial of success and well-being. This represents not only a violation of rights as citizens but a profound loss of human potential and civic contribution.

It's been 25 years since Canada vowed to end child poverty, and an increase to 143,000 children in poverty now exists in Alberta today according to a 2012 joint report of Public Interest Alberta, Edmonton Social Planning Council, and the Alberta College of Social Workers. This PC government has spent years consulting with poverty groups and pledging to reduce child poverty, including in its social policy framework a commitment to reduce inequality even as Alberta has become the most unequal province in the country.

This government likes to talk about partnerships and working together. FCSS, an 80-20 provincial-municipal partnership to prevent the social chaos resulting from inadequate basic needs, has been starved of a provincial share for the past six years. Partnerships are meaningless when one party to the agreement refuses to keep its commitment.

Alberta Liberals believe a progressive tax would enable all levels of government to produce the kinds of benefits that Albertans need and establish a basic child benefit program for children, proven in other provinces to benefit everyone. It's so basic, and it's so essential. If we are serious about this profound failure of PC governance in the 21st century, we must see change, real action. All Albertans, especially those in desperate straits, recognize this as an emergency. We need to save the lives and well-being of 140,000 children, our children.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The time has lapsed.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the Government House Leader to give oral notice of Government Motion 9.

Be it resolved that, one, the 2013 annual report of the Property Rights Advocate office be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship for the purpose of conducting a review of the recommendations outlined in the report; two, that the committee also review the 2012 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate office; three, the committee may, without leave of the Assembly, sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued; and four, in accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act the committee shall report back to the Legislative Assembly within 60 days of the report being referred to it if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Seniors to table the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, or SACA, 2013-2014 annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark or someone on behalf of. Perhaps later? Okay. Let's move on then.

Are there any other tablings? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is the press release of Grassroots Alberta, a property rights-landowners conglomerate. A number of groups belong to this organization, and what they have done is that they have submitted, I think, to every member of this Assembly via e-mail their proposals on what needs to be done to correct the property rights issue in Alberta. So I have both of these for the Assembly here today.

The Speaker: Is that it, hon. member? Yes? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from constituent Maurice Shank, who notes – and he's writing about Bill 202 – that as a gay individual he would have benefited greatly from a GSA when he was in junior or senior high school.

Second is another e-mail from another constituent of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, Christie Traff, who is writing to note that in 1987 her younger sister Carol committed suicide and that she felt that her sexuality was a big part of this and that she knows that getting GSAs would help other children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mandel, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Combined Laboratory and X-Ray Technologists 2013 annual report, the Alberta Dental Association and College 2013 annual report, the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta 2012-2013 annual report, and pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act the Alberta Health Services 2013-2014 annual report.

The Speaker: Thank you.

There are no points of order today. Let us move on, then.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Court Delay Costs

Q1. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted.
What were the estimated costs to the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General for the 2013-2014 fiscal year as a result of court delays associated with self-represented litigants?

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move Written Question 1 standing on the Order Paper under my name. The government has kindly allowed it to come up today which, by the way, is allowing it to come up earlier than normal. Usually they would sit on the Order Paper for another two weeks. So thank you very much to the House for accommodating me.

No surprise: this is about legal aid and the financial restrictions that Legal Aid has found itself under because of the funding it receives from the government. So I have a number of questions that are related to that, and I'm hoping that I'm going to get the information I'm looking for about the estimated costs from the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for this question. Unfortunately, I do have to reject it. Currently the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General does not collect data specific to court delays associated with self-represented litigants. However, Alberta Justice and Solicitor General has undertaken to research a number of these issues pertaining to court delays and has implemented numerous measures to enhance access to justice in this province.

First of all, the department is a partner with the cost of justice research project. The goal of the project is to "develop methods to measure what our civil justice system costs, who it serves, whether it is meeting the needs of its users and the price of failing to do so." The cost of justice project seeks to meet the need for information about the costs and benefits of pursuing justice through various dispute resolution pathways, and this project will provide an understanding of the cost of justice and a foundation for policy, practice, and programs that improve access to legal services and resources. I would suggest that the hon. member take a look at the website, www.cfcj-fcjc.org/cost-of-justice, for more information.

Also, Mr. Speaker, research is being undertaken in Alberta looking specifically at the costs of family disputes, and we are examining the costs of research in other provinces for its applicability here in Alberta. This research is the building of a foundation of an evidence-based approach to make sure that the justice system is more accessible and sustainable. We need to find ways to reduce the cost and complexity of resolving these legal issues.

Individuals have the right to represent themselves in court. This is a well-recognized common-law principle across the common-law democracies. They also have the right to do so for many reasons, of which cost is only one.

Justice and Solicitor General is committed to increasing access to justice for Albertans by making the system more efficient and simplifying the process where appropriate. We are in the process of implementing recommendations of the civil claims review project. As I've indicated before in this House, Mr. Speaker, the Provincial Court of Alberta recently increased its monetary jurisdiction over civil claims matters to $50,000 – previously it was $25,000 – allowing more Albertans to make use of the straightforward and affordable process of Provincial Court, which is colloquially known as small claims court. In addition, draft versions of the regulated forms have been developed, designed to provide options for the most common claims and intended to be more straightforward for self-represented litigants.

As of December 18, 2014, there will be case management offices in 14 locations across the province.

Mr. Speaker, we do not have specific data pertaining to the hon. member's question. Justice and Solicitor General recognizes the issue around self-represented litigants and is taking meaningful action to enhance access to justice for these individuals as well as all Albertans and will continue to make progress in this area.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Centre, I'll recognize you later, but if I recognize you now, that closes debate.

Cypress-Medicine Hat, did you wish to add a comment?

Mr. Barnes: Just to add a comment, I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Centre bringing this forward, and I, too, would like to see the government work harder at improving transparency and openness. There's a business principle that in order to manage something, you need to be able to measure it. I think that the idea behind here is to see what this is costing our system, and costs in opportunities for people to be involved in the process on a more full basis with more choice are a detriment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I guess at this point I can recognize Edmonton-Centre to close debate, then.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much. I'm not surprised, but I'm disappointed that the department has not kept any kind of statistics on the estimated costs of court delays specifically associated with unrepresented litigants because I suspect that if they had, we might have been able to resolve the issue with legal aid a little faster than it happened. We are seeing far more unrepresented litigants in court because they're just finding it too expensive either to take it out of their own pockets, or they don't qualify for legal aid.

This is a much larger issue. I hope the Minister of Justice didn't blow his whole wad on that one question because there's a bunch more coming. Mind you, I've never known him to be short of things to say, so I suppose I can look forward to the rest of it.

Really, the issue of access to justice is complex and is serious in this day and age. What kind of a society are we if we can't help people get access to justice? I think that case management, while an interesting idea, is not going to help the people that are most disadvantaged. They, overwhelmingly, tend to be people that are of low income, women, and often dealing with a physical or a mental disability. Many people that end up in the remand centre end up in there because they fulfill one of those conditions and find it very difficult to find representation. I think this is a significant cost, and I think it's too bad that these weren't kept. Mind you, I suppose it's a good thing for the government because it would have shown that you knew all along how much this was costing you.

I do urge caution as to how the minister is expecting to go forward in reducing other access to court costs. I have a great concern that some of the other considerations that he has in front of him are not going to be in the best interests of people that are trying to access the courts, mostly because what I see is him taking the courts away, so there's nothing to access. In that, I'm briefly referencing the traffic court situation, where he wants to appoint an adjudicator.

But on we go, Mr. Speaker. Let's have a vote on this one and move on to the next one.

[Written Question 1 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Legal Aid Recipients' Income

Q2. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted.
What was the median income of legal aid recipients for the 2013-2014 fiscal year?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Now, I expect this one the minister shall be able to answer in that he has the contract with Legal Aid through his department and they are surely able to supply him with the information, or he is collecting it separately to be able to tell us what that median income was from legal aid recipients for the year that I have set out.

I do move this motion, and I'm looking forward to a positive response from the minister.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rejecting Written Question 2, on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, as posed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre and as set out in the Order Paper of November 24, 2014.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, Legal Aid Alberta operates independently of the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General. Alberta Justice and Solicitor General doesn't keep information specific to the median income of legal aid recipients. Legal Aid Alberta may have this information, but their records are not within the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General's control.

However, I remind this member that we promised Albertans that if we could not get a commitment from the federal government for more funding for Legal Aid Alberta, we would examine all of our options. Though we will continue the discussion with the federal government to find ways to improve the legal aid funding model, it was imperative we take action now. That is why we have worked with Legal Aid Alberta to increase the financial eligibility guidelines to allow more applicants, including individuals receiving AISH, greater access to legal aid services.

The Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General looks forward to continuing to work with Legal Aid Alberta to improve access to justice for vulnerable Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I respond to that statement with a raised eyebrow. I find it very difficult to believe that the very government department that has a contract with Legal Aid outlining exactly what they're supposed to be providing and outlining the terms of the contract – the time length of the contract, the amount of money that is going to be handed over and at what schedule – is unable to get the pretty simple information that I asked for.

Yes, indeed, Legal Aid does operate as an independent body except that 100 per cent of their funding, or darn near, comes from the government. Their reason for being is coming from the government by way of the contract. So I find it really odd that the government can't just phone them up and say: hey, what are the answers to that? It should be pretty easy to get that, so I'm really surprised that the government is unable to do that. That makes me start to wonder if maybe they just don't want to ask because they don't want other people to have that kind of information because that might tell us a whole bunch of other things.

There's also a level of sort of a cavalier attitude to this whole thing. You know, I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the time that I've been in this Assembly, getting information is harder and harder and harder and harder to do. The last time it got to this pitch of difficulty, there was a meeting with the Premier in the Public Accounts Committee meeting in which we were trying to get information out of him.

But, really, I ask a simple question. I can't get it from written questions and motions for returns. I've written letters to ministers, and I don't even get a response ever, which, to me, is pretty shoddy. I mean, I know that I hold your feet to the fire. I know you don't always like me. Some days I know that I'm amazing, but most days you don't like me. Fair enough. But there's absolutely no reason that I can see that would result in not even a letter being forthcoming answering my letter.

I'm trying to do work for my constituents right now. I can't get through and often don't get a phone call back when I try and give one. I try and resolve a situation outside of this House so that I'm not embarrassing ministers in question period; I can't get anyone to call me back. There is just such an attitude of secrecy and never letting one peep of information out in any way, shape, or form that it's like a brick wall over there. As a result, we just get angrier and angrier, the public gets angrier and angrier, and somewhere in there is going to be a little aneurysm that's going to happen that is going to pop that information out.

For those of you that were around on that day in 2004, you'll remember that that was the beginning of the end for a Premier several back because of that secrecy and the unwillingness to release information.

So this is not a good sign. It's certainly not a good sign for a new Premier that says that he's all about accountability and transparency. It just puts the lie to it, Mr. Speaker. It just means that that doesn't mean anything. It means: oh, yeah, accountability and transparency, but we're not going to give you any information whatsoever even when we can easily get it. That's telling me something else.

Thanks very much.

[Written Question 2 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Legal Aid Denial Due to AISH

Q3. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted.
How many letters, e-mails, and phone calls did the government receive between March 1, 2012, and October 31, 2014, from individuals denied legal aid due to receipt of income from assured income for the severely handicapped benefits?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Now, I know this government logs every phone call, every e-mail, and every letter that comes in, so this one I'm sure they have the information on, and I look forward to receiving it. This should be fun.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to assure this member that I do not dislike her. In fact, just the opposite. I appreciate her service to this Chamber even though we may not always agree on every particular item.

Mr. Mason: Or on anything.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is chirping away, and he is quite correct. I don't agree with him on anything. He's quite correct about that.

As I've stated before, Legal Aid Alberta operates independently of the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, as it should, frankly.

In terms of the phone calls received by the government pertaining to individuals denied legal aid due to receipt of income from assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH, benefits, we don't cover that kind of information. We do track specific information related to people's income level and source. However, this member could contact Legal Aid Alberta as they may have that information directly.

As I've indicated, we have worked with Legal Aid Alberta to increase the financial eligibility guidelines to allow more applicants, including more individuals receiving AISH, greater access to legal aid services, providing an additional 5 and a half million dollars in this year's budget. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is our desire that that goes to dealing with the eligibility requirement and not just to increasing legal fees, not that paying lawyers is a bad thing.

We look forward to continuing to work with Legal Aid Alberta to improve access to justice for vulnerable Albertans, and I thank this member for her inquiry.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I do want to just indicate that with respect to the last few questions, that the government has rejected, I'm a little bit dismayed. The government keeps trying to tell us that they're open, that they're transparent. I know they don't have a minister of transparency anymore, but that is no big loss. This is not the gold standard of transparency, in particular not being willing to share the median income of legal aid recipients or how many people are denied legal aid and contact the government.

The question is not: how many people contact Legal Aid about these problems? It's: how many people contact the government? The government has that information, but they're choosing not to share it. I'm quite sure that they also have the answer to the median income of legal aid recipients, and again they're refusing to share that information. You see, legal aid is set up to help people that can't afford a lawyer, so income is a huge issue, and it needs to be measured, and if the government is not measuring it, then it is making just another disastrous omission.

I'm quite sure that the government isn't as bad as that. It's pretty bad, but the fact that it would not even gather information on the income of legal aid recipients would simply be more negligence. I'm quite sure that they have this information, but they've chosen not to give it to the opposition. Why? Because we've been making a fairly effective case that legal aid in this province is failing many, many people. These are people who can't afford a lawyer. They're being taken to court, and they're suffering consequences, whether it's a financial consequence or a consequence of incarceration. They may be innocent. They may have benefited greatly from proper legal representation, but they don't get it in Alberta. That's a point we're trying to make. That's a point that's perfectly legitimate for the opposition to make, and the government is throwing up obstacles and preventing us from having the information that we need to make the case.

That's just putting their interests – the government's interests, their political interests, protecting their own hide – ahead of the interests of people who may be denied legal representation when they need it. That really is, I think, a very, very disappointing attitude on the part of any government, that it would actually put its own interests, its own political interests, ahead of the interests of people that it's supposed to be representing by denying the opposition the information that it needs to do its job. That's what's happening here, Mr. Speaker, and it's unacceptable.

Is this what the new Premier means by putting Alberta under new management? If it is, Mr. Speaker, it's very much like the old management, and I don't see how things are improving, at least in the functioning of this place. I see the Premier refusing to take questions from party leaders other than the Leader of the Official Opposition. It just represents a contempt for this place and for the role of the opposition that I find very, very disappointing given the promises and assurances that he made during his leadership race, during the recent by-elections, and subsequently. His actions do not match his rhetoric, and I think that that's going to become increasingly apparent to Albertans.

I'm very disappointed to see this continuation of the attitude. This is old management, and Albertans deserve better, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to raise some issues about this question that's being posed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I think it's tied to what we've actually seen happen, the consequence of not sharing this information. We've actually had judges make an issue of this in court proceedings where individuals who are typically, you know, sometimes on AISH are a lot of times challenged in even understanding why they're being brought before the courts. So when a judge has to get involved in the legal process to make sure that somebody is duly and properly represented, I think that's a key issue of identifying where the system is failing. This could be supplemented by caseworkers being able to share information with all members of the government as to how many individuals on AISH may be going to court, trying to represent themselves and not even understanding why they're being called to do that.

I would definitely call upon the government to consider this written question, consider making sure that this information is collected and that there is a measurable outcome that can be brought forward that is beneficial not only to the individuals on AISH but to those who are receiving the legal aid as well as the justice system itself.

I thank the member for bringing this forward. I really appreciate that. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm sensing a pattern here. I think that pattern has to do with not sharing information. And you know what they say when you're a kid: you're supposed to share; it's not a good thing not to share. That's what I'm seeing here.

The second thing that I'm seeing is – you know, transparency means you can see right through something, which is what this government wants us to think they're doing. But more recently I started to think: I don't know; I'm not seeing any transparency. I can't see through any of this. I'm not getting any information at all despite how nice I am or how not nice I am. So I thought: you know, it's not really transparent; it's translucent. Light comes through, but you can't actually see anything.

I've now reached the point, Mr. Speaker, where I can't even say it's translucent. We have reached the point of opaqueness. Let me just give you a definition of that. It says: not transparent or translucent, not shining or bright, hard to understand, dull or unintelligent. Oh dear. Sorry. You didn't need the last bit. But it does make the point that there's no light coming through. There's no information coming through. It's just a brick wall.

I remember that before this session was prorogued in the spring, I was starting to hear a lot of muttering about: "You guys have got to quit doing so many FOIPs. We're just drowning in FOIPs here. It takes so much time. Stop doing that." Well, guess what, folks? We wouldn't have to do them if you just gave us the darn information in the first place, nicely, you know, in response to the first request that comes by a nice letter. Then we get to the point where, in fact, it's a whole FOIP process: it's costing you more money; it's costing us staff time to have to go through this; there are appeals; you want to charge us tens of thousands of dollars for a piece of paper; and we have to figure out exactly how to ask for it or you dump all these useless bits of whited-out paper on us. Not a happy process for anybody.

All we want is some pretty simple information: how many people complained to the government about not being able to get legal aid? They know it. I know they do because they record every single phone call that comes in. Now, having called a couple of times to complain, I don't know that they always stay on the line long enough to get the total specificity and detail from me of what I'm complaining about, but they get the gist of it.

So we're seeing something else from some pretty innocent questions here. We're building a case for some not-so-nice things. I'm very disappointed in the government.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 3 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Legal Aid Denial Due to Employment

Q4. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted. How many letters, e-mails, and phone calls did the government receive between March 1, 2012, and October 31, 2014, from individuals denied legal aid because they receive income from full-time minimum wage employment?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. This is essentially the same question. In other words, these are the working poor. They are working, but they're being paid minimum wage, which puts them under the poverty line, but it also puts them as too high of a wage earner to be able to qualify for minimum wage. Once again, I know the government's got it because I've sometimes seen their records. I know they record all of this stuff, so I guess the real question now has become: why won't you share it?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, in listening attentively to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, I recall a few years ago an exchange between the Member for Calgary-McCall and the former Minister of Transportation, Luke Ouellette, when he said: I keep getting the same question, and I keep giving the same answer. Unfortunately, I do have to give a very similar answer.

Let's go to the phone lines here. In terms of the phone calls received by the government pertaining to individuals denied legal aid due to receipt of income from AISH, we do not ask the people information related to their income level and their source of income. It is important to remember that Legal Aid Alberta provides many services beyond full representation as well as providing some services without financial qualification. Indeed, there are many things that lawyers can do for society.

As with all clients, AISH recipients are encouraged to contact Legal Aid Alberta to discuss the support that is available in their specific situation. Again, Mr. Speaker, we look forward to working with Legal Aid Alberta to improve access to justice for vulnerable Albertans. If the Member for Edmonton-Centre has any specific questions pertaining to Legal Aid Alberta, I would suggest, respectfully, that she contact them directly. I may be an only child, and only children sometimes have difficulty sharing, but, again, I have to have information that I am able to share, and unfortunately I do not with this written question either.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It comes down to, again, open and transparent government. All we are asking for is information. It doesn't take rocket science to provide the information. My office has been getting lots of phone calls from people who have been denied legal aid because they did not qualify. Even for people with good jobs, I think that the way their lives are so expensive, they can't even afford a lawyer. Lots of people are going without any legal representation before the judge, and sometimes the judge had to step in to force the government to provide more money for legal aid. There should be more money put in, and more people should qualify for legal aid. We're not asking for much. Here we are asking for information so we can all work together to improve the legal aid system in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'll just remind the minister that I didn't ask – these last two questions were not about information that Legal Aid held. It's about information the government held. I know they hold it, so they just decided not to share. But that leads to the other information I gave about increasing FOIPs.

I urge the government members to break rank. It's private members' day. Go wild. Vote in support of Written Question 4. Thank you.

Legal Aid Recipient Satisfaction

Q7. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted. In each of the 2011-2012, 2012-2013, and 2013-2014 fiscal years what percentage of legal aid clients reported being "satisfied" or "very satisfied" with the service they received?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to advise that we are rejecting Written Question 7 posed by the Member for Edmonton-

Centre and as set out on the Order Paper on November 24, 2014. The Department of Justice and Solicitor General does not have the information for the years in question.

I can tell the hon. member that Legal Aid Alberta continually works to improve their services and respond to client needs. Legal Aid Alberta has recently improved its services by providing duty counsel at all courthouses in the province, by increasing the number of courthouse services by the criminal resolution office, and by making a legal services officer available at the Edmonton and Calgary provincial criminal adult and youth courts, Mr. Speaker. We are working with Alberta Legal Aid to find ways that together we can support low-income and vulnerable Albertans and ensure a predictable and long-term plan for the delivery of legal aid services, Mr. Speaker.

However, I would remind the member opposite that the federal government also has a role in helping to ensure that Albertans have an accessible justice system, indeed all Canadians. We were disappointed that we could not get a commitment on increased federal funding for legal aid, but the federal government has said that they remain open to further discussions. Mr. Speaker, legal aid funding is a shared responsibility between the province and the federal government, yet more than 80 per cent of the annual government funding is provided by Alberta at this point. Since 2005 Alberta has more than doubled its funding to legal aid. Federal government funding has stayed about the same in that period.

We recognize that the long-term sustainability of legal aid must be addressed. We will continue working with Legal Aid Alberta to find ways that together we can provide the best services that we can in order to support Albertans' access to justice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask everyone in the House to join in supporting the Member for Edmonton-Centre's Question 4. There are four elements of it that I think are particularly important, four elements that I would like to discuss.

First of all, the openness and the transparency. The new Premier has campaigned on being open, has campaigned on the transparency that 4 million Albertans deserve. After all, it is their tax money that, you know, allows government to be involved in things. Time and time again it's impossible for them to get the information.

I'm noticing a little bit of a push-back. I had a chance to read one of our daily newspapers today, and two of the letters to the editor were all about how modular schools jumped the queue on the priority list, from seven to one. The nature of the letters was that two people wanted information, wanted to know what would have warranted their going from seven to one, or whatever the numbers were, more than just a by-election that someone needed to win, more than just buying promises from taxpayers with their own money.

So to everyone in the House, guys and gals, there's a legitimate desire for Albertans to be involved in how their tax money is being spent. There's a legitimate need and a legitimate desire for this information to be shared. After all, it's their tax money. It's their information.

An earlier speaker had a good point about FOIPs. In today's technology world, where information is easily gathered, where information is easily kept, where information is easily disseminated from there, it's absolutely incredible that we're charged thousands of dollars, wait a year and a half, and 85 or 90 per cent of it comes blacked out. So we go fishing. What else are we supposed to do? Wouldn't it be a better situation for a government to legitimately provide this information, Albertans' information and taxpayers' information, in an easy and open manner?

The fourth thing that greatly concerns me. It's like, again, this government doesn't care about what kind of value the taxpayer is getting for the money they are providing. Whether it's enough money or too much money, we can debate that forever. Those are the political issues that divide us, that make us think of different ways to spend taxpayers' money. But not measuring the success, not measuring the outcomes of where taxpayers' money is going is totally wrong. We've seen this in buildings and infrastructure being rated as poor or being rated as good and still having leaky roofs. We've seen this in billions and billions of dollars being poured into health care without monitoring the outcomes. Something as basic as helping a segment of Albertans that greatly deserve help from time to time and not making sure that it's effective, that the outcomes are proper, is inexcusable.

I would ask that you support this request.

If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Written Question 7 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Transportation of Inmates

Q8. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted.

What was the total cost to the province of transporting inmates from the new Edmonton Remand Centre to Alberta courthouses between March 19, 2012, and March 31, 2014?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. You gotta know this one: "What was the total cost to the province of transporting inmates from the new Edmonton Remand Centre to Alberta courthouses between March 19, 2012, and March 31, 2014?" You gotta know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Government House Leader to advise the House that I'm rejecting Written Question 8, posed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre as set out in the Order Paper November 24, 2014.

Mr. Speaker, the format in which our sheriffs branch tracks transport and escort costs does not capture the data in a manner which matches the request. Thus, we're unable to provide an answer to the request as worded.

Mr. Speaker, all inmate transport – i.e., the moving of inmates, and escorts; i.e., accompanying and supervising inmates, including court security – regardless of the purpose for the movement and/or the escort, are recorded in one master account. There are no subcategories. This includes inmate transfers between facilities, trips to court, inmate pickups from police services, et cetera.

However, Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Member for Edmonton-Centre that for the fiscal year 2013-14 sheriffs conducted 71,950 prisoner escorts throughout the province. For the fiscal year 2013-14 sheriffs travelled over 2,800,000 kilometres to conduct prisoner transports. Sheriffs had no escapes from custody in 2013-14. The costs for court security and prisoner transports are combined in the branch budgets as sheriffs provide both prisoner transports and court security, and we don't track those costs individually for these separate duties. The court security and prisoner transport section spent $38,384,000 while conducting their duties in 2013-14.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to address how the new Edmonton Remand Centre is set up to use closed-circuit TV. The Edmonton Remand Centre officially opened on March 19, 2013, at a construction cost of $580 million. The state-of-the-art facility was built based on our commitment to provide safe communities for Albertans. It's the largest, most technologically advanced correctional centre in Canada. Part of that technology is for the use of CCTV, or closed-circuit television. I can inform the member opposite that the number of inmates who are now appearing by CCTV has gone up dramatically from when the centre had first opened. Appearances by CCTV save taxpayers money and reduce opportunities for inmates to escape.

Fifty-five video court booths service 21 provincial court locations and as of October 2014 include Queen's Bench and immigration hearings. In June 2013 there was an average of 112 inmates appearing daily, 560 weekly. In October 2014 this increased to an average of 136 inmates daily, 680 weekly. An estimated average of 20 inmates are transported daily for in-person court appearances. Since January 2014 there has been an estimated 724,000 kilometres of travel saved by having inmates appear via CCTV.

I thank the hon. member for interest in this matter, and I ask for her support in our common-sense, conservative approach to justice in Alberta.

The Speaker: I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, but before we go there, could we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Visitors? Does anyone object?

The Speaker: Hearing no objections, let us revert, then, and recognize Edmonton-South West.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, my guests did show up, and they're here to learn a lot about public policy. Please welcome Holly Strang, Jennifer Yurkiw, Ashley Williamson, Alyssa Siggelkow, and Yuqiang Feng. If I've mistaken any of those names, I apologize. Please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Written Questions

The Speaker: Let us carry on with Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of brief comments on this request for information. It seems fairly self-evident that the information does exist. In fact, when the member was giving us a very extensive selection of information around transportation and kilometres and trips and so forth, well, it seemed to me that you could break out that information fairly easily and find out what actually was spent during these very crucial months between March 19, 2012, and March 31, 2014. Certainly, we know that there have been so many very, very difficult circumstances around the new remand centre, that the transportation, the level of security, the management of this facility at the very highest level was not well done. Certainly, we as a public body need to be able to demonstrate how public monies are being spent and to demonstrate whether something is effective or not, quite frankly.

We know that events around the remand centre were a particular low point in the history of both labour relations here in the province of Alberta and in terms of public security and the public's perception of security here in the province of Alberta. We are having to do many months and years of work to try to repair that damage that took place. Certainly, we know that the information is there. Through the global numbers that the hon. member just presented here, I could easily see that within that the individual numbers for transportation do exist. Why don't you give them to us, please?

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Anyone else?

If not, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: How curious, Mr. Speaker. I think we've got a very good civil service, and I think they work very hard. It must be a strain some days to serve government. I certainly couldn't do it, so I have all the more admiration for them. But it strikes me that one of the key management tools is analysis, and I am really surprised that the government claims not to keep that information. How on earth would you know that having videos is in fact less expensive if you didn't keep the amounts and break it out in the way that I asked for it.

I have the member, who actually is the minister of something . . . [interjection] Sorry. The Minister of Energy.

An Hon. Member: They've changed so much. It's hard to keep track.

Ms Blakeman: It is hard to keep track.

The Minister of Energy is claiming that, you know, they've saved a certain number of kilometres because they haven't been transporting people. He even gave an amount of money for the number of kilometres that they haven't driven, I think. So, you know, is it possible that the political masters are telling good managers, good civil servants not to collect this information or analyze it? I find that very hard to believe. How could you possibly know you were saving money?

If there's one thing this bunch likes to do, it's to spin those numbers so it'll look like they're saving money, you know, things like recycling press releases. If you can recycle a press release more than three times, I think there's some kind of prize they get over there. Or with sod-turning on schools – what? – is it the same shovel or different backgrounds? I mean, how many times can you possibly announce that and still nothing rises from the ground?

So I know you're good at recycling, but what I want to know is why you would not be using a management tool that's a pretty obvious management tool to use, which is being able to put those numbers together and go: all right; this is how much it's costing us doing it this way, and this is how much it costs us this way. It tells me something about this government. It would be a lot easier to snow you guys than it looks like.

All righty. Thank you.

Medical Student Loans

Q14. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

What is the average amount of total federal and provincial loans provided to a medical student enrolled in an Alberta university who began repayment in 2013-2014?

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this information is very important to us on the opposition side. As everyone is well aware, we have some of the lowest university enrolments in the nation, if not the lowest. One of the things we're concerned about is access to postsecondary and, in particular, how we do need medical doctors in this province. We've needed them for a long time.

We have tremendous capacity issues, especially in our rural communities, and if we can find ways to get Alberta students to university in a reasonable fashion, well, my goodness, I don't think we'd have to look all around the world to find ways to bring physicians over here. I think a much better strategy is to get young adults the opportunities they need here in our university system.

Again, you know, the cost of education keeps going up. Whether this is an impediment, we need to find out, and having these numbers and having access to this information is very important from our side. That's the information we'd like to receive from the government. If they're willing to provide it to us, I think that would be of assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, who is also the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education, and advise the House that I'm rejecting Written Question 14, posed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The question asked what the average amount of total federal and provincial loans provided to a medical student is for those enrolled in an Alberta university. Well, I'd suggest that the proper avenue for obtaining information about federal government programming, including the total amount of federal loans provided to a medical student at an Alberta university, would be from the federal government itself.

I can say that the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education is very focused on student aid and student loans in Alberta, and I'm glad that the member has asked about student assistance in Alberta because, of course, we want to ensure that our system is accessible to Albertans. Accessibility is indeed a priority for this government, and we're proud of that record, Mr. Speaker. We invest $234 million in student aid supports. That includes scholarships, bursaries, grants, debt management programs. There is approximately $234 million available for student aid supports, including $74 million in scholarships, $69 million in bursaries and grants, $45 million for debt management programs, $34 million for program support, and $11 million to support the Alberta centennial education savings plan.

Further, Mr. Speaker, we have $408 million in student loans available to Albertans. Alberta learners are successful, and they're successful in paying back their loans. We expect that 90 per cent of Alberta student loan dollars issued this year will be repaid. Any Albertan who is eligible for a loan gets a loan and can further their education. In the past several years we have supported an increasing number of students.

To make it easier for Albertans to get the funding they need to pursue their education, we've been making significant improvements to student aid, Mr. Speaker. We've streamlined the processes, relaxed eligibility requirements, and created grants to support low-income learners. I can also add that the Alberta government supports more than 900 scholarships, which are available to apprentices and occupational trainees each year through the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board family of scholarships. Beginning in 2015-16 $9 million in new scholarships and awards will be available for apprentices out of earnings from the Alberta heritage scholarship fund. We're also exploring ways to better support Albertans that may face barriers to education, particularly low-income, rural, and aboriginal learners.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some members in this House sometimes talk about affordability, accessibility, and how those terms relate to tuition. It's important to note that despite a variety of cost pressures tuition in Alberta increased by a mere 1 per cent in '14-15. This represents the second-lowest increase in all of Canada. Alberta's average undergraduate tuition is below the national average. The latest numbers also show that Alberta has the third-highest expenditures per full-time student in the country.

Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Innovation and Advanced Education has a lot of information up on their website, and members can see that at studentaid.alberta.ca. While the federal government is the best source of data for their own student loans, this government recognizes the importance of student loans and student aids to Alberta learners, and we thank the hon. member for his question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to also thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this question to the government. It's interesting that the hon. deputy House leader was talking about the question not being quite accurate in asking for "federal and provincial," but he then went on and on about all these great programs that the government offers. I do appreciate that, but when we're asking for specific information, it would be quite fine if you say: we can't supply the federal information; you need to go elsewhere. But we're asking for specifics through this question. It's amazing how that's dodged all the time, but the broader general numbers are brought out as in a big fanfare or a parade. In the time that it took for the deputy House leader to do that, he could have simply addressed the question on the provincial side.

The information that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has asked for could be very, very beneficial, and it would go a long way to show how many medical students have actually found work in Alberta, or did they have to go elsewhere? He's asking: how many students began repayment in the 2013 year? I think that's indicative of: are we meeting the needs of local students? Are we attracting and retaining individuals? Are we making an environment here in Alberta for medical students to actually stay here, choose Alberta, find work, or are they finding work in another province or possibly in another country?

Also, something else that this question may provide us information on is: why not share the yearly debt load for one area of postsecondary education that is in high demand? We do know that the medical field is in high demand across this province, as it is around Canada and around the world, but it's what we do with our resources in our own backyard that's most important. I think, again, if this information was made available, it would be a great way to track it and, I guess, identify: are we meeting those needs? Are we missing anywhere? Can we adjust programs to improve on the results? I think that's what we're all here for.

Also, you know, to be a medical student, it's not your average tuition costs. Obviously, these individuals face higher tuition than the average person, and they also face a longer number of years in postsecondary. To be able to track how much is available to these students and how much they are graduating with as a debt, again, would be very beneficial for all Albertans to know, especially when you're talking about parents of children who want to become a medical student. I think the more information that we can provide to them to make qualified decisions in their career path is, again, only beneficial to Albertans.

Finally, I think it goes to the point of something that the minister talked about. I think Alberta is very good in providing financial support, and it is appreciated throughout the province by students and parents. But I think one thing is: is it enough right now with the cost of education going up? I know the minister across, the deputy House leader, was talking about that tuition has only gone up about 1 per cent, but it is still an increase. Are the student financial aids keeping up? I think that's one thing that we need to consider when we're looking at gathering information. At the end of the day, we do want to have a strong postsecondary education system. We want to have students that are coming out with as little debt as possible, also with the supports that best support them through their venture to whatever their goal is, this one being a medical student.

With that, I'd like to say thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to ask this House to support the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's question. An answer to this I think has tremendous value to the taxpayer and the citizens of Alberta. In addition to all the good reasons for openness and transparency that I have already talked about a couple of times as well as members of the opposition of this House, the reasons that Albertans need to know where their tax money is going and the reasons that transparency would go a long, long way to get people more involved, I really think that this question is of particular importance: "total federal and provincial loans provided to a medical student enrolled in an Alberta university who began repayment in 2013-2014."

Why do I think it's particularly important? In Medicine Hat it's estimated that we are some side of 20 or 30 family doctors short. Redcliff, with 7,000 people on the edge of Medicine Hat, has now gone three years without a family doctor. I was shocked. I was shocked to discover when I was first elected that this province is growing at 70,000, 80,000, 100,000 people a year, and of course these people don't bring their schools, they don't bring their roads, and they don't bring their hospitals. Well, guess what? They don't bring their doctors either. I remember one of the first things that I discovered was that the U of C and the U of A medical schools used to admit 200 new entrants per year. That was reduced for some reason to 185 even though the population is going up.

It absolutely, again, makes me question what the outcomes are or what outcomes the government in the province of Alberta tries to measure. Is it part of a rationing strategy? Is it part of a desire not to care? And then it hit home again this year. One of my son's friends, 22 years old, called me. I've known this young man since he was 12 or 13 years old. I've never known this young man not to be an absolute leader in the community, an absolutely top-notch person, and I've never known a time when my oldest son has come home and said that his young friend hasn't got 100 per cent marks in absolutely everything all through junior high, all through high school, and all through, now, four years of university. This young man was turned down for the second time to get into one of our two medical schools.

Of course, I am wondering: what the heck does it take to train qualified young Albertans that are, like so many others, some of our best, that want to help Albertans, that want to stay in Alberta? I'm thinking that the answer to this question could go a long, long way for those without the means, possibly, but certainly with the desire and the ability. This could really, really shine some light on what we need to do to get that number of spots increased, to get young people that deserve a chance into our medical schools so they can help us all.

Again, I wonder if it's about rationing. I wonder if it's about not caring and certainly not responding to a fairly basic question that relates directly back to the taxpayer, the 4 million of us that are providing the money for the opportunity for fellow Albertans, I think a provision that we're all happy to make. I wonder why the government won't provide something that appears so basic, that appears like it could go a long, long way to solving a problem that's at the heart of so many of our communities, especially our mid-size communities, especially our rural communities, especially our rural areas.

In closing, I commend the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for an excellent question, an excellent idea, something that could go a long, long way to make Alberta stronger for our seniors, our workers, our families, and our next generation. I ask you to support his question.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to belabour this any further. Many good reasons have been given. I am going to say that that's one answer, saying: go to the federal government to get their information. But we should have a global understanding here in Alberta what the combined totals are. Are those programs that run together, and are our students facing those challenges of both components of federal and provincial loans? The answer I got wasn't really an answer. It should be information the ministry can provide, and it should be something that we have access to on the opposition side of things.

In any event, I'll leave it where it is and go from there.

[Written Question 14 lost]

Student Debt

Q23. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 2010-2011 to 2013-2014 what was the average amount of net debt for a postsecondary graduate following the six-month grace period?

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, this is important for many obvious reasons. I stated earlier that we have the lowest university participation rate in the nation. We have to look at: what are the reasons for this? Of course, one is that, well, we don't provide as many seats as other provinces do, but we also have to look at whether there are root causes, whether we are actually doing enough on the provision of student loans and looking at the debt here in this province that young Albertans are graduating with and to see whether that's impacting.

Of course, Alberta is a very expensive place to live for housing and other things that are not necessarily factored into our student loan provisions. I think that has to be looked at in a global sense as to what is actually happening here in Alberta. It's not a direct comparison when we just compare what our funding levels are compared to other provinces' and the like. We have a unique set of challenges here that face our graduates, and we need that information to do our jobs properly on this side of the House. I think the government has every ability to provide us with this information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, who is also the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education, I wish to advise the House I'm rejecting Written Question 23, posed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo asked for the average amount of net debt for a postsecondary graduate following the six-month grace period. That's the substance of the written question. In his remarks he talked about contributions to student loans. That's not what the question asked.

I expect the hon. member doesn't appreciate that all Alberta student loans aren't accessed by all students. In fact, we only serve about 1 in 3 students. For example, many students from Alberta don't utilize the government's student loan system at all, and many other graduates are international students and aren't accessing our student loan programs.

We're rejecting the question because, clearly, the member should understand that the Ministry of Innovation and Advanced Education does not collect financial data on all graduates of postsecondary institutions, Mr. Speaker, so we couldn't speak to their net debt level. However, the Ministry of Innovation and Advanced Education certainly focuses on ensuring our students are successful and receive a great return on their education. Tuition in Alberta is a shared investment. An individual learner's education is a shared investment between taxpayers, students, institutions, and their donors. It's a balance and one that our government as a steward of Alberta's tax dollars will get right.

It costs approximately $22,500 per year, on average, for a student to earn an undergraduate degree in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. The student pays approximately 25 per cent, or $5,625 per year. The remaining cost is the responsibility of taxpayers and institutions. Most of the cost, around 60 to 65 per cent for an undergraduate degree, is covered by the Alberta government.

The type of question posed here by the hon. member often speaks of affordability, accessibility, and the price of tuition. It's important to note that Alberta's average undergraduate tuition is below the national average. Despite a variety of cost pressures tuition in Alberta increased by a mere 1 per cent in 2014-15. This represents the second-lowest increase in all of Canada. The latest numbers also show that Alberta has the third-highest expenditures per full-time student in the country.

After graduation, Mr. Speaker, we work with graduates to repay their loans. If graduates are having difficulty, the department also provides the repayment assistance plan, or RAP. The repayment assistance plan is available for both Alberta and Canada student loans. If a student is eligible, an affordable payment will be calculated based on family size and income. Some borrowers will not need to make any monthly payments; others will make an affordable monthly payment. If you need to continue receiving repayment assistance, you have to reapply for RAP every six months. You could be eligible for RAP if you are currently repaying an Alberta or Canada student loan. If your student loans are in good standing and you're having difficulty making your payments, use the estimator tool on the CanLearn website to see if you're eligible.

Mr. Speaker, if you look at the question as worded, it isn't data that the department of Innovation and Advanced Education would have available. We do not know the net debt for all postsecondary graduates and therefore don't have the data for the hon. member's question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for again bringing a question forward for the government to not answer, and I do appreciate the response by the Deputy Government House Leader.

I found it interesting that the timeline the Member for Calgary-Buffalo was referencing, 2010-2011 going until the 2013-2014 fiscal year, covers a time frame when we had some pretty good years – income was good for the government; revenue was up, so then budgets were also up – but it also covers a time frame when revenue was down. There were some fiscal challenges. Budgets, therefore, went down, and there were some financial decisions to be made as to how funding went to postsecondary institutions. I think what's really relevant is: how did this affect the students? Students are one of the revenue streams of postsecondary education institutions, so if the institution is losing funding on the government side, how else do they offset some of their budgetary challenges? I think we all know that the cost of going to postsecondary is rising. It may only be 1 per cent overall – again, that's an average – but I think that this would help to determine what the differences were based upon those time frames as to what a student was facing at that time as well.

Again, I think that this is great information that could help students and their parents when they want to make a long-term decision because it does give them some insight as to what their potential long-term debt may be and also the opportunities that parents and students have for obtaining financial assistance through the government programs, whether they be provincial or federal. It does bear the question: what is government doing to make sure that education is going to stay affordable for students?

We also think that students do need to have skin in the game – we don't think that education should be free – but at some point, you know, there should be something that's very clearly defined as to: what are the expectations of the student for the cost of their education? What is the expectation, clearly defined, for the province? Those are the two main revenue streams that make these institutions viable and functional. I think that until we actually get to that point of discussion, this issue will probably be discussed over and over again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll ask the Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should be a concern to everyone in this House that we have the lowest university participation rate in the nation right here in this province. Primarily it's because we don't make enough seats available for our students to attend, yet we have to look at whether there's an opportunity for kids to go to university and whether or not the debt that they are leaving university with is too high to allow them to contemplate going. If this is not information the ministry has, maybe it should be tracking this, and maybe it should be looking at whether it is actually impeding Alberta students from attending postsecondary. But if they don't have the information, I understand that.

I guess that with that, we'll close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Written Question 23 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Legal Aid Funding

Q30. Ms Blakeman asked that the following question be accepted.
How many applications for legal aid funding have been granted by the Alberta courts between January 1, 2014, and October 31, 2014?

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really interested in what the answer is here because – yeah, I'll just let it go at that, and I'll see what the answer is.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to advise the House we are rejecting Written Question 30, posed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre as set out in the Order Paper for November 24, 2014. The reason we're rejecting this question is based on the dates that the hon. member has requested in the question. The ministry began tracking these requests in February 2014, when changes to legal aid rules resulted in a greater number of low-income Albertans no longer being eligible to receive legal aid. Individuals who have been denied legal aid can make an application, called a Rowbotham application, requesting that counsel be ordered by a court. Since that time, being February 2014, the number of Rowbotham orders made by the courts is 159.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Then I'll recognize and offer the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre the opportunity to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, that's what I was waiting for, just to see whether, when I knew they had the information, they would give it out. In fact, the Minister of Justice gave out at a press conference on October 30, 2014, that they had between 60 and 70 Rowbotham applications or decisions at that time. I'm glad to see that they would at least give that information out. Good catch, because I sure would have caught you.

I'm also noticing that there's a couple of things going on here. I'm very aware that there's a private member with a bill that he wants to get up, and I will try and hustle this along. But I'm also very interested to see the amount of time that the government is taking to do private commercials on behalf of what they believe they want to get out to the public. They can't answer our question, can't give us any information except that they can manage to give a whole bunch of other information not specific to the question but as a sort of televised commercial about what they think they are doing. Times have certainly changed, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much for the information. Looking forward to receiving it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Written Question 30 lost]

Motions for Returns

Legal Aid and Self-represented Litigants

M1. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any studies or briefing notes prepared for the government between January 1, 2012, and October 31, 2014, regarding legal aid or self-represented litigants in Alberta.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to advise that we're rejecting this motion for return based on the question that's being asked. The minister wishes to advise that the ministry does not keep track of every document it receives that mentions legal aid or self-represented litigants. I would remind the member opposite that Legal Aid Alberta operates independently of this government. It may have the information that this member would like to obtain, but their records are not within the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General's control.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Are there others?

Mr. Mason: I'd just like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the question doesn't ask for information within the possession of Legal Aid; it asks for information within the possession of the government. The minister is responding on behalf of the government in a rather disingenuous fashion, I would say.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Then I'd offer the Member for Edmonton-Centre the opportunity to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion for a Return 1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Centre.

Energy Regulator Incident List Omissions

M2. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of records of any spills omitted from the field surveillance incident inspection list used by the Alberta Energy Regulator.

Ms Blakeman: I think we can step this up, Mr. Speaker, because I think it's pretty clear I'm not going to get one – one – of these to pass. They're going to reject every single one, which is why they are on the Order Paper today. How clever of you all.

All right. Motion for Return 2: be careful because I know what I'm looking for here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the hon. member for the motion for return. I'll point out that Motion for Return 2 requests copies of records of any spills omitted from the field surveillance incident list used by the Alberta Energy Regulator. I'm advised as late as today that all reportable incidents that the AER is involved with are included in the incident reporting spreadsheet maintained on their website. The AER does not omit any incidents. The only information not presented on their spreadsheet would be incidents under active investigation, where there would be a need to preserve evidence for judicial proceedings.

The field surveillance inspection list the member opposite references is a product that can be ordered from the AER's Products and Services Catalogue, which is why she says that she knows what she's talking about, probably. This is data available for purchase about incidents reported to the AER from 1975 to the current date. As before, the AER does not omit any reported incidents.

I recommend rejecting this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Are there others speaking to the motion?

If not, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, would you care to close debate?

Ms Blakeman: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

Wildlife Casualties at Cold Lake Air Weapons Range

M4. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of lists of all wildlife found dead and in rehabilitation as of October 31, 2014, due to the continuing bitumen emulsion at the Cold Lake air weapons range.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Motion for Return 4. This is a situation that is still under investigation by the Alberta Energy Regulator . . .

Ms Blakeman: And why is that?

The Deputy Speaker: The minister has the floor.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government respects the due processes set out by the Alberta Energy Regulator to do a full and complete investigation. As the Energy minister just made a comment on, particularly when there are investigations where there may be a charge laid in accordance with legislation, it's important for the investigation to keep its integrity. The integrity of that evidence is key to their investigation. In fact, releasing this information would actually undermine the integrity of the regulator, and that would be something that would be far more damaging than anything that we could provide to the public at this point in time.

I do want to direct the hon. member to the Alberta Energy Regulator website, aer.ca, which has an update on some of the actions that have been undertaken since the environmental protection order was issued as a result of this incident, including an investigation status. At last update the AER expects that CNRL and the independent panel will complete their reports by December 2014, and shortly afterwards the reports will be made public. At that time, then, you know, certainly there would be the possibility of entertaining the release of any information in regard to these investigations.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? I recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and speak to this motion for a return. As the Energy critic I work very diligently with the parties involved in this. The oil company, CNRL: we talked many times, and I think they did a good job. The AER came out and, you know, had a lot of information. They could have maybe had a little bit more information from Alberta Environment, but that was in that transition phase where they were combining both ministries, so I think there might have been a little confusion on what roles each one of them takes.

You know, CNRL on their website have a lot of great information regarding this incident. They did updates to their website once they had a handle on the situation. They did what they could to inform the public. Sometimes a little bit of information maybe wasn't shared. It could be looked at as a good thing because you don't want to start a panic across the whole oil and gas industry. You want to speak with facts, not theories and fiction. As far as I'm concerned, the CNRL company did a good job. They put on their website what they can, and, working with the regulator, they're continually monitoring and working to find solutions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to add support for this Motion for a Return 4. It's so nice to see the Member for Edmonton-Centre as concerned as we are in the Wildrose about clean air, clean land, clean water, and getting the right balance between the environment and the economy.

I asked to be our ESRD critic about a week or so ago. You know, from time to time I'm discovering that the government hasn't always had the monitoring, hasn't always had the rules and regulations. Our industry, who, as our Energy critic just said, so often takes the leadership in providing jobs, providing wealth, providing cheap energy for all Alberta, for all Canada, and for all the world, is unsure and unclear as to what the rules and regulations are, the balance that we need to maintain between the environment for our generation and future generations and a strong economy so that we can have the lifestyle and the quality programs that Albertans deserve. We saw in all the earlier questions a reluctance from this 43-year-old government to provide openness and transparency on so many of the questions that Albertans and Alberta taxpayers deserve. I would encourage the government to be as open and transparent as possible to help ensure that the balance between the economy and the environment is obtained.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to rise in support of this motion for a return also, not for the reason that the Official Opposition just said but for just the opposite reason. I didn't think that CNRL behaved very well at all. I think the only time they actually fell within the guidelines that Alberta Environment required them to was when they were forced to. Actually, if I had any criticism, I think Alberta Environment should have earlier demanded more so that we could have gotten the accurate information sooner rather than later.

I find it somewhat disingenuous that the Wildrose would say that they are for the environment and in favour of the environment since when I was the environment critic and I tried to put out a press release on this very issue, CNRL actually was given the authority to approve my press release. That's a very bizarre thing, to have industry control what the opposition actually says. Now, that may be a shock to some people, but I don't think that should happen in our democratic process. We should have freedom not only of expression but freedom to look at a situation and actually make a comment based on the best possible information, not a company controlling an opposition, what they will say.

So I disagree with the opposition, but I will agree with them that we should have this information. Hopefully, the minister will give this information for the right reasons: the reasons to protect the environment, the reasons for transparency, and the reasons that the public needs to have faith in the system.

Our laws are good. What we need to do is hold some of these companies accountable when they act poorly. In the case of this bill CNRL acted poorly, and they needed to be held accountable. Those are just the facts of the matter.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Then the Member for Edmonton-Centre has the opportunity to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: What a revealing exchange, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you for opening the door to talk about investigations because I think there is a difference in investigations. [interjection] Oh, yeah, that gave you a little to swallow, didn't it?

I think there's a difference between doing a good investigation and dragging your feet. Right now on CNRL we've been waiting for almost a year and a half or just over a year and a half, and now I'm being told it's another month, so a year and three quarters or whatever, and we're over a year on the Obed, which is the next question I've got. I am really seriously beginning to wonder if there isn't just an enormous amount of foot-dragging going on here, and then by the end the minister says that maybe we'll get the information. At the end of it all. That's not appropriate.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This is our land. It's not yours. It's our land, and if we have a company that is going to spew gunk all over the place that kills wildlife, trees, any kind of vegetation, we have a right to know about that, and you should be producing the report ASAP for all of us.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

Wildlife Casualties at Obed Coal Mine

M5. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of lists of all wildlife found dead and in rehabilitation as of October 31, 2014, due to the October 31, 2013, rupture of Sherritt International's Obed coal mine containment pond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sherritt International's Obed coal mine containment pond: the definition of gunk, if I may be so bold. I'll be really interested to see – I'll bet we're going to get the same answer, don't you think, Mr. Speaker? Cut loose, Mr. Minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Motion for a Return 5 for very much the same reasons. This is an incident that is still under investigation by the Alberta Energy Regulator. It is a very complex investigation, and it is very important for the integrity of this investigation that this information not be released at this point in time. You know, it is actually quite sad, truthfully, that the hon. member even wants to suggest that anybody over on this side of the House or the other side of the House doesn't care about what happens on our land, as she likes to speak. We take that very seriously, and that's why the integrity of this process is very, very important.

I can understand the level of frustration. Any time I hear on TV or the media of an ongoing criminal investigation of something that's happened in our community and, you know, law enforcement officers don't necessarily release all of the information, we're clamouring to find out what happened, what was going on, but we understand that they don't do that because there is an ongoing investigation, and by releasing that information, you could compromise that investigation. What is very, very important, if this member honestly cares about protecting our environment, is that we maintain the integrity of the Alberta Energy Regulator. Yes, sometimes it takes time to investigate some of these incidents, and sometimes it is important to allow that investigation to come to completion before releasing results.

Again, I want to point out to this member that it's not like the government or the company has been withholding information. As part of the environmental protection order, if you go to the website obed.ca, you will find weekly and monthly update reports that are part of the environmental protection order. Clause 39 of that order states:

In addition to any other reporting required by this Order, the Parties shall submit to the Director on the first day of each month, commencing on December 1, 2013, a status report in writing that contains a summary of all activities undertaken in accordance with this Order in the previous month, and all activities that are planned for the next month.

Then clause 40 states:

The Monthly Status Reports shall be submitted to the Director until the Director advises otherwise.

Again, all of this information is available. There is an ongoing investigation, and we will make sure that that investigation comes to completion and that appropriate actions that will result from that investigation based on the facts of the situation will inform our next steps.

The last thing we need, Mr. Speaker, is a bunch of innuendo and assertions and false conclusions about what has happened and what hasn't happened there. A great example of this is when the member stands up and says that these companies have spewed "gunk" all over the environment. And while that is a very, very unfortunate incident that no doubt has had some environmental impacts, I don't believe "gunk" is a technical term for anything that's being investigated.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actions taken by the government make me want to ask everybody in this House to support this motion for a return. Of course, anything that affects the environment for future generations is of great concern to all of us. When this first occurred, I recall the government coming right away and suggesting that by the spring of 2014, which, of course, has come and gone, we would have the information in the public domain as to where we were with this and what we could do to prevent it and ensure, you know, where the baseline testing was.

In two and a half years I've seen, as in the earlier questions today, where the government is reluctant, tries sometimes to never release the information, takes FOIPs, takes years, takes thousands of dollars. We have to prove it is in the public interest to get that money back. After a promise was made that this information would be in the public domain five or six months ago and when information is hard to get, is it any wonder that people are questioning as to the job the regulator is doing, as to the job the minister is doing, as to the job the government is doing to ensure that we have clean air, clean land, and clean water?

The hon. member is asking for aerial photographs, lists, documentation. Again, as I said earlier, it's so important to get the balance right between our strong economy, our good leaders, our business leaders – the two very, very much want to generate jobs, generate wealth, and generate cheap energy for all of Alberta, all of Canada, and the world but are unsure of where the government is at with rules, regulations, and information.

I look forward to time in the House over the next month and into the spring, when we could actually talk about – not talk about photographs, lists, and aerial documentation that they're never going to provide anyway, but let's talk about a better framework for practice, something that will actually help our industry leaders understand better where they need to go so we can continue with a strong economy and continue to protect our environment for the next generation.

With that, again, I think it's important for 4 million Albertans to understand how our government is protecting our environment. I think it's important for world leaders to understand what we're doing. I would ask that you support our colleague from Edmonton-Centre, her Motion for a Return 5.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I read this motion for a return, it just says: copies of lists of wildlife found dead and in rehabilitation between a time frame. Now, no one wants to obstruct an investigation. I would agree with the minister in that regard, that if an investigation is on the way, the last thing you want to do is interfere or obstruct an investigation. That's true. But I'm not sure how a list of dead animals or those in rehabilitation would interfere or obstruct. We're talking about something that took place a year ago. This is information now that should be finalized.

The investigation, in my understanding, should be about the actual breach of the dike, the actual breach at the mine site. The damage done is the damage done, and I think that not just the members of this House but the public has a right to know about the effects that have happened as a direct result of the spill. Clearly, the wildlife found dead is something that I think is of importance to the public interest, to know this a year after the fact so we can make some sort of assessment or evaluation.

Now, I would love to see a detailed finding, the finalized report. I would like to see that tomorrow. But if I have to wait a month or two months, what I want to see is a complete and comprehensive finding so we know exactly how this happened, how it came about, the damage that was done, and how we can make sure this never happens again. Asking for a list of the wildlife found and that wildlife that would be in rehabilitation a year after the fact, I fail to see how this would compromise or obstruct an investigation. What we want are facts and not hearsay. We want to know exactly what the government knows in this regard and what the investigators know so we can make an assessment also on how this thing is progressing and what is the state of the water, what is the state of the river. That is important in evaluating the policies of this government.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, let me recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This has just been an interesting, revealing day.

You know, we've already got photographs. These were released in October, I think, from Alberta Environment and the company and somebody else, so it's not as though there's nothing around. I just think that if we're going to see these, we should be able to see some of the other ones. Given that, you know, at least one of these operations is still running, I would think that these investigations could have gone a little faster, but evidently not.

At this point I would just ask that we go to the vote on this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Disturbances at Obed Coal Mine

M9. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of photographs of all soil and vegetation disturbances as of October 31, 2014, due to the October 31, 2013, rupture of Sherritt International's Obed coal mine containment pond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the same reasons I mentioned before, we will be rejecting Motion for a Return 9. This is an ongoing investigation that hasn't come to completion yet; therefore, it would be not responsible to release this information at this point in time, and we will leave it at that.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate, please.

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Motion for a Return 9 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Disturbances at Cold Lake Air Weapons Range

M10. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of photographs of soil and vegetation disturbances as of October 31, 2014, due to the continuing bitumen emulsion at the Cold Lake air weapons range.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion for a Return 10 on the Order Paper under my name: are you sensing a theme?
Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Motion for a Return 10 for the same reasons as stated before in regard to this particular incident, that is still under investigation.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Motion for a Return 10 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Wildlife Casualties at Obed Coal Mine

M11. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of photographs of all wildlife found dead and in rehabilitation as of October 31, 2014, due to the October 31, 2013, rupture of Sherritt International's Obed coal mine containment pond.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, we'll be rejecting Motion for a Return 11, that I believe we're on, for the same reasons as before. This is an ongoing investigation, and to maintain the integrity of the investigation, this information will not be released at this time.

The Speaker: Are there others?
Seeing none, hon. member, do you wish to close debate?

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Motion for a Return 11 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Obed Coal Mine Pond Rupture

M13. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of aerial photographs taken between October 31, 2013, and October 31, 2014, showing the effects of the October 31, 2013, rupture of Sherritt International's Obed coal mine containment pond.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I know you've got these ones.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, we'll be rejecting Motion for a Return 13 for the same reasons as mentioned in previous motions. This is an ongoing incident that's under investigation by the Alberta Energy Regulator, and to maintain the integrity of the investigation, we will not be releasing this information at this time.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Motion for a Return 13 lost]

Bitumen Emulsion at Cold Lake Air Weapons Range

M14. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of aerial photographs taken between June 1, 2013, and October 31, 2014, showing the effects of the ongoing bitumen emulsion at the Cold Lake air weapons range.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I'm just wondering: do you think it's the rejection jig or the rejection polka or the rejection mambo, maybe, seeing as we're now . . .

An Hon. Member: How about the twist?

Ms Blakeman: The rejection twist? Yeah. This is a cute game. You know, we ask questions because we're trying to get information, and the government thinks it's tee-hee funny to go through an entire afternoon rejecting every single one of them.
Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, that's unfair. Obviously, the hon. member has seen my dancing skills.

We will be rejecting Motion for a Return 14, again, for the comments made under previous motions. This is an ongoing investigation by the Alberta Energy Regulator, and to maintain the integrity of the investigation, we'll not be providing this information at this time.

4:40

The Speaker: Are there others?
Seeing none, do you wish to close debate?

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Motion for a Return 14 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014. I move the bill . . .

Ms Blakeman: In second reading.

Mr. Anglin: . . . for second reading. I was getting there. I'm there. It's interesting because we refer to it as the deregulated electricity system, but there's nothing deregulated about it. It is very much a restructured system that is complex. What this bill proposes is something very simple in nature, but behind that it is actually quite complex. That's why in this bill I have asked that the commission itself report back within six months to the minister to come up with a standardized bill because when you go out into the public and you ask people about some of the complaints that they have around these utility bills, one of the things that is absolutely clear: people don't understand the bills.

One of the dilemmas of this government to make this restructured market work is to allow the providers access to compete, and if customers and the consumers don't understand, it makes it that much more difficult for the competition to get off the ground; hence, we still have about 60 per cent of all Albertans on the regulated rate option. If those members in the House remember, last year the Minister of Energy was asked: what option do you have? He said: well, I'm on the regulated rate option because I don't understand what's going on. That's true. That's true of the average consumer out there. So something has to be done, and that's where it starts to get complex.

The bill does not dictate what is going to actually happen. What it does is that it goes back to the authority that should be making this decision on how we come up with a standardized bill so consumers have information at their hands to make informed decisions on what is best that meets their needs dealing with electricity bills.

Now, there are all sorts of side benefits, but I want to talk about some of the complex issues that have confused consumers. In our restructured market system transmission facility owners are fully regulated companies. Distribution facility owners, called DFOs, are fully regulated companies. Retail companies, of course, are deregulated, and of course the generators are deregulated and are free to compete. From that it then gets really complex because there are all sorts of regulations around how electricity is generated, and there are all sorts of regulations dealing even in the retail market on how these companies can market and sell their information. When you add in the DFOs, the distribution facility owners, they make these billing invoices difficult – some retailers would say deliberately – but for lack of evidence let's just say inadvertently complex.

If you ask the consumer, "Who are you buying your electricity from?", many don't even know unless they have a fixed contract. Even then, when they have an issue with their bills, they don't know whom to call, and they get the runaround. If they have an issue with an outage, they may not call Fortis. They may not call EPCOR, Enmax, or ATCO. They may call their billing company. So there are lots of complexities dealing with this whole issue of transparency and clarity in the billing.

Now, I've been in conversations with some of the members in this House, and I think there are some amendments that are going to come forward to help make this better. I hope that they do come forward. But there is also an opportunity here to lower the cost of regulation. One of the things that happens when we deal with the regulated portions of this bill is that we have what are called rate-based hearings. It's not included in this bill, but it is a by-product that we may obtain if we have a standardized bill, which is: should we just have one regulated rate-based hearing maybe every quarter versus multiple hearings for different companies on how we're going to bill for these regulated charges?

That is an open-ended question. But it's costly every time the Alberta Utilities Commission holds a hearing. It costs millions of dollars, basically, to hold these hearings, and we have numerous hearings ongoing all the time. So should there be one rate-based hearing for all of the transmission companies? Should there be one rate-based hearing for all of the distribution facility companies to come up with a universal charge so that people could compare bills? That is something that is open ended.

What this bill proposes to do is to just put onto the commission the mandate that they need to come forward with a standardized bill so that it is clear and concise and consumers can actually understand how they're being charged and, most importantly, so that they can compare. If any member here were to actually go out and take a bill, say, from the Edmonton area and try to compare that to a bill, say, from the Calgary area or some rural area dealing with a co-op, you would have three different bills showing three different mechanisms on how people are charged. It's just absolutely confusing to try to put together why one bill has one charge for transmission and another bill has three charges for transmission, why one bill has two charges for distribution and another bill only has one charge for distribution. Trying to figure out how those charges are actually compiled or calculated is a near impossibility.

As you can see, creating a standardized bill is simple to state, but it's far more complex, and it needs the expertise of the Alberta Utilities Commission to think about it, to possibly even hold a hearing if that's what they think is something that they need from the providers so that they can come up with a report to submit to the minister so we can actually move forward in the sense of giving consumers the information they need to make decisions. That's all this bill is striving to achieve. With all of the issues dealing around electricity, if we can just accomplish this, if we can just get consumers more informed to make better decisions, just possibly the system could work.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we're going to now proceed in an alternating fashion, so we can start with the government side – let me just get my road map here – the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

After that, could I suggest, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that you speak with the Wildrose opposition and the Liberal opposition to see if they'll grant you the permission you're seeking to go next. We understand the importance of an event you have to attend shortly, so if you could speak to them.

In the meantime let us go to Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise in support of Bill 201, Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014, brought forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. In our opinion, Bill 201 builds on and actually reinforces the relationship between the Alberta Utilities Commission and the Minister of Energy, calling on the commission, as the member suggested, to provide a report on transparency in billing. We believe this report will recommend improvements to the billing and formatting of electricity bills, which is a good thing for consumers.

Mr. Speaker, as you may know and as I was very interested to learn during my brief tenure as associate minister of electricity and renewable energy, Alberta has a very competitive market-based electricity system. And let me admit to you that I'm a bit of an energy geek. My sons actually chide me for talking about electricity at the dinner table. I truly believe that if more Albertans understood how our electricity works in Alberta, they too would embrace this sense of excitement.

Alberta restructured its electricity system in 1996, leading to the deregulated market we now have. This move to a market-based electricity system, with investor-owned, not government-owned electricity generation, opened the door to competition and encouraged efficiencies and innovation in the sector. I believe this bill moves in the same direction.

Our deregulated market is able to provide consumers with a reliable supply of electricity at a consistent and fair cost even as our economy and our population have grown. Healthy competition in our electricity market avails retail customers in Alberta with a range of choices. For example, consumers in my constituency of Calgary-Varsity, indeed across the province, can choose green energy if that's their personal preference. In a competitive marketplace consumers get to decide. Of course, like any commodity, electricity prices can fluctuate. The existence of healthy competition in electricity generation helps to ensure that the prices for end-users are likewise competitive.

But for some consumers market volatility can be uncomfortable. To manage this sensitivity, we have retail service agreements, as the member has mentioned, for electricity agreements that offer flat rates. Again, in our marketplace consumers have choices. They can choose to accept market fluctuations in the price of their delivered electricity, or they can choose a default payment for electricity, called a regulated rate option. As the member has talked about, the RRO is calculated based on analysis and forecasting of the overall average electricity market in Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we have market-based electricity generation and a competitive retail market which sets the conditions for competitive and safe generation and sale of electricity. We also have checks and balances in place, including a strong regulatory role and the oversight responsibilities of the Alberta Utilities Commission to protect the interests of consumers. Bill 201 reinforces and strengthens the ability of the Alberta Utilities Commission to assure protection for electricity consumers here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, not only am I an energy geek; I'm also a governance geek. It's kind of a double whammy. So I want to dig a little deeper into the implications of this proposed bill on governance of our electricity system here in Alberta. The AUC is an independent agency mandated to ensure that Albertans receive safe and reliable utilities at fair and reasonable prices. People often ask about the relationship between the AUC and the government of Alberta's Ministry of Energy. To reiterate, the AUC is a quasi-judicial, independent agent of the government of Alberta. Decisions made by the AUC are not to be influenced in any way by the Minister of Energy.

Based on my first-hand observation of this relationship I can attest to the ferociousness with which the AUC protects its independence. I personally applaud and support this governance approach. Decision-making within the AUC must be free of government influence and focused on what is best for Alberta's electricity consumers. The distance between the minister and the commission ensures this consumer protection. Incidentally, this separation of government and regulator in our electricity system here in Alberta is quite unique. In many jurisdictions there is little or no separation.

In the hon. member's bill it is proposed that we utilize the benefit of the AUC's independence and empower the commission to research and prepare a report on how to create even more transparency and consistency in billing. In this AUC report standardized electricity bills would be proposed to clearly communicate fixed and variable costs for customers. Mr. Speaker, I hope many people in this Legislature and many Albertans spend a little time to look closely at their electricity bills to understand the elements that are included and the ultimate price to be paid to receive a safe supply of electricity, that invisible energy, on a reliable basis.

Bill 201 would empower the AUC to build on the work already done in Alberta to educate electricity consumers and would build on the levels of transparency in billing and other emerging standards of practice within our utilities sector. People may ask: "How would the AUC prepare this report? Are they qualified?" Again, based on first-hand observations the AUC's analysis of energy markets, market rules, and reliability standards perfectly positions them to prepare this report. The AUC is chock full of economists, engineers, and even a few lawyers with specific knowledge and experience. They know how to do research, and they are primed to stay abreast of innovation and changes in this sector that could positively or negatively affect Albertans.

The AUC's role necessitates their ongoing engagement with stakeholder groups, regulated entities, and regulatory agencies. They need to keep a hand on the pulse of this sector at all times, and their research doesn't stop at the Alberta borders. They must look beyond our provincial borders to proactively anticipate change and innovation. On the basis of this mandate and their expertise, the AUC is perfectly positioned to make wise choices for the benefit of all Alberta utility consumers.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has proposed a bill that would be of great value to consumers and that builds on the strengths and expertise that already exist in the regulation and governance of our electricity system. With this bill in place Albertans will reap the benefits of the independence and expertise of the AUC and their ability to recommend how to improve transparency in electricity bills for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this bill, and I look forward to this bill being further debated in the House. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, as you know, 29(2)(a) is not available at this time for this type of bill.

However, I would ask your indulgence to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests. Does anyone object to giving unanimous consent?

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, please proceed with your introduction.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my brother Jason Fox. I am pleased that he's here today. We've been together through the turbulence of life, and there's a lot of turbulence left to go, but I am ecstatic today that I get to welcome him back to the province of Alberta as he's just moved back to this wonderful province from Dawson City, Yukon. Jason, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Bill 201

Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing)

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood given the agreement to allow him to proceed. You have three minutes left on the clock, and we'll see where it goes.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Three minutes? Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to support this bill even though I don't think it really tackles the basic problem with our electricity system, which is that it's completely chaotic. It was a well-organized, regulated system before. It's not anymore. The government has added middlemen.

They've added all kinds of uncertainty in terms of trying to make a market work where a market can't work. We've seen that the big power producers in particular have repeatedly attempted to game the system in order to drive up prices. TransAlta, for example, has been found responsible for that by the regulator in the past. They either export power when we need to import power or they shut down generators for maintenance and create a shortage. Because you can't store electricity, then that shortage produces a very pronounced spike in prices, so consumers in Alberta are paying way too much.

They've introduced middlemen. Somebody buys the power from the producer, who used to sell it to you directly, and then they resell it to you. Of course, they take a cut. They have their own profits to make, and they have their own bureaucracy to pay, so it adds cost to the system. That kind of confusion and multiple – what's the word I'm looking for?

An Hon. Member: Layers of bureaucracy.

Mr. Mason: The layers of bureaucracy and profit takers are reflected in a confusing bill. You have got the people that produce the electricity, then it gets distributed, then it gets bought by a retailer, and then it's resold to you. All of these costs are then reflected in the bill, and the bill itself becomes very complex because it is reflecting the system that's very complex.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre may actually simplify the bill somewhat, but the fact of the matter is that the basic problem remains. We have an unnecessarily complex, bureaucratic, and highly regulated system that goes by the misnomer of deregulated electricity.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just tell the House that when this was first brought in, I asked one of the pages to go to the library and bring me every regulation and law of this province that dealt with the previous regulated system. It consisted of three documents, and it was about this high. Then I asked the page to go to the library and get every regulation and piece of legislation in the library that related to the so-called deregulated system. It took a poor page – she came in with her hands down here, and the paper came up to her chin. And that's the deregulated system, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I regret having to interrupt you, but it is 5 o'clock, and the time for consideration of those matters is now over.

We'll move forward.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Version Française

L'Assemblée législative a résolu d'autoriser qu'une modification soit apportée à la Constitution du Canada par une proclamation de Son Excellence le Gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, conforme à l'annexe ci-après:

Annexe

Modification de la Constitution du Canada

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 est modifiée par adjonction, après l'article 7, de ce qui suit:

7.1 (1) Chacun a le droit de ne pas être privé du titre de propriété ou de l'utilisation ou de la jouissance d'un bien immeuble, ni des droits se rattachant à un tel bien ou des améliorations qui y sont apportées, sauf conformément à la loi et moyennant une indemnisation financière intégrale, équitable et en temps opportun.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) s'applique uniquement à la législature et au gouvernement de l'Alberta, pour tous les domaines qui relèvent de la compétence de la législature de l'Alberta.

2. Titre de la présente modification: Modification constitutionnelle de [année de la proclamation] (expropriation interdite en Alberta sans indemnisation).

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great exuberance that I rise today to introduce Motion 501. My colleague from Drumheller-Stettler has a saying: history is easier read than made. My friends, that is where we are today. One way or the other, today we will make history in Alberta on behalf of all Albertans.

Why do Albertans believe that there is a need for this? Let's look back at our history. In 1972 the Alberta Bill of Rights was enacted. In that bill we have the enshrining of "the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law." What is not mentioned and is unfortunate is that the law has a limited scope as it can and has been overridden by this Alberta Legislature.

One form of expropriation is where the public authority pursuant to its statutory powers may regulate the use of land or restrict other property rights of the owner, and though the title of the property is unaffected, that landowner may feel the impact of the regulation as if the property had been taken. This is what's called a regulatory taking. These have the same effect as stripping the land of its value.

An example of this would be a dairy farm owned by a family who holds the title to the land. A confined feeding operation approval would be issued by the Natural Resources Conservation Board, and there would also be a water licence. The Land Stewardship Act calls the latter two rights statutory consents. It used to be the case that confined feeding operation approvals could only be rescinded under certain circumstances such as the surrender of the approval or the sale or abandonment of the land. Well, the government argues that by rescinding these statutory consents, the family's title to that land is not affected, but it is obvious that the farming operation will no longer be able to continue to operate without them. This violates the expropriation component of property rights.

Without the protection of statutory consents there cannot be a functional economy. Under the new land-use framework the government can decide what Albertans can and cannot do on private land in a way that has never been seen before in the province of Alberta and possibly in any other parliamentary democracy in the world. It used to be that Albertans, like most people in free societies, were able to do whatever they wanted on their land as long as no activities were generally harmful. Now Albertans may only conduct activities on their lands that achieve specific outcomes determined by this cabinet even if that overturns something that the government had explicitly permitted either yesterday or generations ago. You have no guarantees for compensation in Alberta.

Now, there is no tradition in Canadian common law of protecting these. It is currently the view in Canada that there is no expropriation in the country of Canada unless the government acquires the title to the land from its owner. The Supreme Court reiterated this view in 2006 in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway versus the city of Vancouver.

Hon. members, Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that Bill 1 doesn't go far enough. When the Premier toured this province over the past summer seeking the leadership of the PC Party, he spoke repeatedly about property rights and the need to address legislation from successive PC governments. Last week Albertans got to see the Premier's Bill 1. The body of that legislation is literally one sentence long and has less than 10 words in it. It says that Bill 19, the Alberta land assembly act, is repealed. The land assembly act is the least controversial of the five laws that have been advanced and/or defended by the Premier's predecessor, Premier Alison Redford. Each of these five laws took a knife to the property rights of Albertans, yet these laws remain and hang like daggers around the necks of Albertans.

The Premier should be bringing all of these anti-property-rights laws out into the open in order to slay them in the same way that he has done for Bill 19, the Alberta land assembly act. The additional grave markers should read: here lies Bill 24, the law that took away underground property rights from all Albertans; here lies Bill 36, the law that gave cabinet the power to deny people access to the courts and compensation while cabinet tore up legal agreements and contracts, that enabled it to control what people could and could not do on private property; and here lies Bill 2, the law that extinguished a landowner's statutory right to a hearing and the right to notification when the government approves an energy project on private property.

Even if these laws are deep-sixed, the Premier must yet reach further if he is to follow through on his promise. His promise wasn't just to repeal existing unproclaimed legislation; his promise was to establish legal protection for property rights here in Alberta. He can do this. He can do this today. You all can do this today by supporting Motion 501. We all know that the surest way to protect Albertans' rights is through a constitutional amendment.

Some people may not realize that the amending formula for the Constitution clearly indicates that if one province wants a constitutional protection for property rights, all it has to do is request that the House of Commons and Senate act upon a request from the provincial Legislature – no other province needs to be consulted because no other province is going to be affected – under section 43 of the amending formulas in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Only the placement of property rights in the Canadian Charter can achieve this kind of ironclad protection for property rights here in the province of Alberta. The Official Opposition on behalf of all Albertans has advanced a carefully worded proposal that can be passed here today in the Legislature and then submitted to Ottawa for passage in the House of Commons and the Senate.

If the Premier does not follow through with his promise, opposition members will be calling on the Premier to attach a single question to the ballot paper during the next provincial election asking every voter in Alberta if he or she would be in favour of constitutional protection of property in our province.

Hon. members, not only does Motion 501 recognize what has happened to Alberta property owners in the past, but it will strengthen future property rights for all Albertans by enshrining them in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, our nation's highest law, forever protecting Albertans' ability to own and be compensated for their property. Fellow members, I ask you to show your equal support to all Albertans, for all Albertans by supporting Motion 501 and enshrining property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise today to support the motion of my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka and to say how wonderful it is – I'm exuberant, just as he is – to be talking about property rights, which is one of the reasons why I decided to run for provincial office. When I came back from working a year as an intern at the Fraser Institute, the very first job I had was as the managing director of the Canadian Property Rights Research Institute, which I ran for a couple of years before getting into politics and then into the media.

At the time the issues that we had were with federal legislation that was coming through, the Species at Risk Act and the concern we had that it was not going to give adequate compensation. Of course, we had issues with the federal long gun registry, and we had issues with the Canadian Wheat Board, all of which under the new federal government of Mr. Harper have been addressed. We still have some issues, obviously, with some of the federal orders coming through in certain areas under the Species at Risk Act, but the repeal of the long gun registry and the repeal of the Canadian Wheat Board, allowing for dual marketing, were two really important promises that our federal government kept to western Canadian farmers.

The problem that we've seen over recent years, though, is that we've had a number of pieces of legislation that have passed at the provincial level. As much as I started into property rights advocacy because I was worried about federal powers, as it turned out, it was our provincial government that we had the most to fear from. We saw multiple examples of this. Bill 50, I think, was the first example, when it came through. I can tell you that when they came through with a process that would allow them to put in two new transmission lines without giving proper notification, proper hearings, and proper input from landowners about what the route was, we heard all kinds of stories from individuals whose property values were impacted.

Once you pass these kinds of projects and you're impacting people's property value without a provision for compensation, it can be a huge financial hardship. I remember going to a business owner's place up in northern Alberta. They owned a pumpkin field and a pumpkin maze, and every year they brought the kids in. But the Bill 50 lines would have had one of the lines going right through the pumpkin fields, destroying the value of their business and in such a callous way, without any compensation or any appropriate amount of consultation. Those are the reasons why Bill 50 was fought against so hard.

I'm hopeful that they'll continue with the process of doing better consultation and won't do this type of approach in the future, but that kind of callousness – we can do what we want because we've got the power of the provincial government behind us – is exactly the reason why we need to have property rights protection.

Of course, we have Bill 19, which my colleague mentioned. The fact that they would be able to freeze land into green zones for up to 30 years, pending approval of what sorts of development they wanted to do in future, was a huge infringement on people's property rights. We're glad that it's being finally repealed. If the government wants to take land, they should do it through the Expropriation Act and make sure that they're compensating landowners for all 19 heads of compensation that they're eligible for. The Land Assembly Project Area Act was, once again, an act that they brought through thinking that they could just force it through without having to deal with the issues of property rights because they weren't protected in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Bill 36 remains a problem. This is why we were so disappointed when the Premier did not take the opportunity to address this in his opening bill. We have numerous problems with Bill 36 that impact individual property rights. Section 11 outlines the right of cabinet to rescind rights. When we're talking about rights, we're not just talking about deeded land; we're talking about all sorts of statutory consents. When individuals have the ability to have a grazing lease or a forest management agreement or a mineral licence or a permit or a land development agreement, all of these things go to the value of their business or the value of their operations, yet we still have an act that allows them to be able to rescind those rights.

Section 19 restricts the right to compensation for landowners. Section 13 withholds a landowner's right to the courts unless cabinet allows it. Section 15(1) binds municipalities, regulators, and all Albertans to that bill. Section 15(3) withholds a landowner's right to make a claim against the government. Section 15(4) limits the role of the courts. Section 17(4) stipulates that the bill trumps all other acts.

There are huge, huge problems that remain with Bill 36 even though they've gone back and tried to revise it once before. We had rather hoped that we were going to be able to see that change come through in Bill 1.

The nice part, though, about passing the motion tonight, that's been put forward by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, is that it gives our landowners recourse to be able to go and attack these bills in the courts to get proper compensation when the government has refused to rewrite them.

Bill 24 is another act that allowed the government to expropriate all the pore space between the surface landowner's holdings. In the past you used to be able to own from the surface all the way to the centre of the earth, excepting certain mines and minerals. By coming through and expropriating the pore space without compensation for the ill-fated carbon capture and storage scheme, which still does not have any viable projects, they took away landowner value without compensation.

Then, of course, Bill 2. We continue to have a problem with Bill 2. My colleague from Strathmore-Brooks tried to put in proper provisions to ensure that landowners had proper consent to be able to proceed, that there was proper notification, and that there was a proper appeals process. Unfortunately, the government did not accept the amendments that were put forward, and we continue to hear problems about that today.

There are still numerous bills on the books that have an impact on the real property that individuals own, which is why the motion that my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka is putting forward is so important today.

What I was excited to learn about – I had always thought that to entrench property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, you had to go through and use the full amending process, that you had to get seven out of 10 provinces representing 50 per cent of the population to be able to agree, that otherwise you wouldn't be able to get it into the Charter. That seemed like an impossible task. I think we all know the fatigue that the country has in trying to do constitutional talks. They haven't given it a try again since the 1990s.

What I so admire about the approach that's been taken here and with our colleague from Lethbridge at the federal level is the ability to use section 43 to be able to get a specific amendment for Alberta, which would mean that there would be no laws that could be passed in this province that would deprive a person of "the title, use or enjoyment of real property or [the] improvement made to such property, or any right connected with such property, except in accordance with the law and for full, just and timely . . . compensation."

I think that this is the type of clause that we would like to see apply across the entire country, but, barring that, why can't Alberta show a little bit of leadership? Why can't we demonstrate, by passing this motion and also getting our federal counterpart to pass the same, that we can amend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that we can ensure that not only can these bad bills that have been passed in Alberta before have an avenue to be able to be addressed and corrected but that we would be able to make sure that every new piece of legislation coming through would have to be examined through the lens of this guaranteed Charter right?

To me, having these kinds of protections is the greatest assurance that we're not going to have sloppy legislation pass, like the bills that we've had before. Let's look at the government's history. They passed Bill 50 then had to come back and amend it. They passed Bill 36 then had to come back and amend it. They passed Bill 19. Then they had to come back and amend it, and now they're coming back and repealing it. We haven't made much progress yet on Bill 2 and Bill 24, but I have no doubt that amendments are coming to those bills as well.

The solution is to make sure that you're crafting good laws in the first place. There is a way to be able to have public use provisions. We all recognize that the government has the ability to take land for public use if they can justify it, but the main key is that there has to be full, fair, and timely compensation so that any individual person is not at risk of suffering unduly as a result of government action. If the public is going to benefit as a result of government action or zoning agreements or restrictions on development, then it's the public that should pay for it through full, fair, and timely compensation.

I recognize that we do have some protections at the provincial level through the Expropriation Act and through the Surface Rights Act, and I know that the Premier has mentioned those two before. I think the biggest tragedy is that we started off with such a strong foundation for how we balance rights through the Surface Rights Act. It's the way that we balance access to mineral leases with the surface landowner to make sure that not only can those resources be developed but that when they are, the surface landowner or leaseholder is fairly compensated. It's an excellent system.

There are multiple ways in which individuals can be compensated under the Surface Rights Act. The same with the Expropriation Act: we have always had the ability for our municipal governments and our provincial government, if they do need to take land for a highway or some other public works project, to be able to have a process where they can go through and do that and ensure that the property owner is given full, fair, and timely compensation, with multiple levels of compensation and considerations given.

That, I think, is the reason why we were so alarmed by the fact that these five bills have been passed in the last few years. There's been a fundamental change in the way that the government has been approaching its land-use decisions. It seems like whenever landowner rights or leaseholder rights get in the way of what they want to do, they just pass a new piece of legislation to override it. We think that's not right. We don't think that's the Alberta way. It's certainly not the Alberta heritage.

We know that Bill 1 falls well short of correcting the mistakes of the past, and the only way to be able to truly correct the mistakes of the past to make sure that they don't happen again in the future is by passing the motion that has been put forward by my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka to make sure that we have property rights entrenched in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms applying to the province of Alberta. I can only hope that if we're able to get this passed here and if it's passed in the House of Commons and the Senate, then other provinces will look at Alberta as the leader on this, and we'll be able to see other provinces take a similar type of approach. Ultimately, the goal would be that we would have property rights entrenched in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms for all provinces and applying to federal legislation as well.

But as I look at this motion, realizing that it is not a perfect step in all of the protection that we want to have but a good first step in getting us to where I think we need to go as a province and also as a country and correcting the oversight that happened back in 1982, when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was first passed into law and made into our Constitution, I have to say that there can be no reason to vote against this. I urge all of my colleagues in the Legislature to vote in favour of this motion so that we can make sure that we have property rights protected in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by a member from either of the two other caucuses.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to speak to Motion 501, being sponsored by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, which proposes to entrench certain property rights in the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the property rights of individuals and those of the Crown, which represent the greater good of the public at large, must always be kept in balance. The basic principles of these are ancient, and they're entrenched in our common law here in Canada. They were started under the Magna Carta of 1215 and the great charter of 1225. In a nutshell, those documents provided that no free man should be "stripped of his rights or possessions . . . except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land."

Since that time we've had a lot of refinements, and protections of private property rights have been introduced over the years, including, as the hon. leader mentioned, the Expropriation Act, the Surface Rights Act, and the various processes that were established under them – the Land Compensation Board and the Surface Rights Board – and by a number of other provincial statutes.

Now, refinements to the balance between individual rights and the rights of the public at large are always to be made, as they need to be, from time to time. There have to be adjustments to legislation, and right now we have a bill before the House, Bill 1, which does exactly that. We also have the Premier's commitment to take into consideration the suggestions of the Property Rights Advocate and any suggestions which might flow from the all-party Committee on Resource Stewardship.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the specific proposal of Motion 501, brought forward by the hon. member, to entrench certain property rights in the Canadian Constitution, I must oppose this motion most vigorously. Under the Constitution Act of 1982 the provisions of the BNA Act of 1867 were preserved as to the distribution of powers, and section 92.13 of that BNA Act stipulates that laws pertaining to property and civil rights in the province are within the exclusive power of the provinces.

In negotiations leading up to the Constitution Act of 1982, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and his Liberal government attempted to do what the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka would have us do now and that some of his Official Opposition colleagues, I guess, would have us do now as well; namely, to insert the protection for property rights into the Constitution.

Now, that move was vigorously and successfully opposed by all of the Premiers, including Alberta's Premier of the day, Premier Peter Lougheed. Mr. Speaker, there is an old adage that states that politics makes strange bedfellows, but I am sure that many Albertans would be surprised to see members like the hon. members for Lacombe-Ponoka, Highwood, Strathmore-Brooks, and Drumheller-Stettler align themselves with the policies of Pierre Trudeau and against those conservative principles espoused by former Premier Lougheed and the other provincial Premiers.

Make no mistake about it. The effective entrenchment in the Constitution proposed by Motion 501 would be to give up some of our provincial constitutional powers and to weaken the democratic powers of this House. It should be strenuously opposed by all members of this House. The effect of transferring powers accorded to our Legislature into the Constitution would be to transfer additional powers to unelected judges, who are the final arbiters of what is or isn't in accord with the Constitution of Canada. More judge-made laws equal fewer powers accorded to the democratically elected representatives of the people and of this House.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, Motion 501 is antidemocratic. It would derogate from the province's constitutional powers, it would weaken this Legislative Assembly, and it would subject Albertans to more judge-made law. Accordingly, I urge all hon. members to join me in defeating it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest in speaking to Motion 501. The motion, as far as I can see, calls for the insertion of property rights protections into the Constitution Act of 1982 but only as it applies to Alberta. The current section 7 reads that "everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice." This motion seems like it won't change that text but add a section 7.1, which just applies to Alberta.

Certainly, the Alberta New Democrats agree with the basic idea that a person is not to be deprived of their property without the due process of law and compensation and, to be clear as well, that it is already well established and well protected in common law here, which governs the country in which we live and the province of Alberta, too.

The interpretation of section 7 has also been expanded further and further by the courts in recent years to include stronger protections around government actions that deprive people of their rights in a manner that violates the principles of fundamental justice. Both the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Alberta Bill of Rights recognize this as well, as does common law, Mr. Speaker, which is incorporated into the Charter by virtue of section 26.

There are at least, I think, in my view, a couple of problems with this motion, not the least of which is that it seeks to protect something that's already quite well protected, not just in the Canadian Constitution but in almost a thousand years of common law jurisprudence that has shaped our government and set our law and that continues to be the law of the land here today. Yes, there may have been some notable exceptions here in the province of Alberta recently, but I would venture to say that the problem here is with this PC government, that demonstrates over and over again that they have no respect for the rights of ordinary Albertans. They trample over the Constitution whenever it seems to suit them.

Take, for example, Bill 45 from almost exactly a year ago, which violates sections 2(b) and 2(d) of the Charter, or their refusal, as another example, to uphold section 15 of the equality rights of our schools by keeping a very offensive section, 11.1, of the human rights code on the books and by allowing schools to impose morality clauses on their students. Or another one, the unwillingness to improve the justice system to ensure that all Albertans receive a fair trial, which is our right under sections 7 through 14 of the Charter. The problem is not that property rights are not being protected – on paper they are – but the problem is that we have a government that fundamentally does not respect the rights of its own citizens. Some specific issues include that there is no accepted definition of property in Canadian law or what the enjoyment of property might entail.

Passing a motion like this tangles up the courts and our governments in inconsistent applications of the law and creates uncertainty throughout the system. Most lawyers are taught that property is a bundle of rights and that it is therefore not a distinct right in and of itself. This makes it quite distinct from the kinds of fundamental rights that the Charter is designed to protect, rights that are universal, interdependent, and inherent in all people and needed for their ability to participate in society.

To equate property rights with fundamental civil and political rights that belong to everyone is the definition of overreaching, I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker. Yes, they do deserve protection, and they are protected. But the rights currently included in the Charter are there because they apply equally to everyone. If you don't believe that, then alongside equality rights and freedom of speech and the freedom of association there should stand a protection that benefits wealthier people more so than ordinary people and vastly more so than disadvantaged people. By definition, this is not something that belongs in the Charter.

Not to mention as well, Mr. Speaker, that including property rights in the Charter creates confusion and uncertainty in other areas of law. It affects such things as municipal zoning laws, indigenous land claims, pollution regulations, and a spouse's right to property on the dissolution of a marriage. Enshrining property rights in the Charter in this manner will also interfere with the ability of the provincial government to legislate and regulate for the needs and the good of Albertans in many areas of its jurisdiction; for example, land-use planning and municipal laws, real and personal property laws, environmental laws, and health and safety laws.

An entrenched right to property might affect the ability of provinces to enact laws to protect the environment or to control uses of private lands for legitimate reasons. Some of the recent legislation from this PC government has attempted to control private lands for illegitimate reasons, to be sure. This motion, I think, oversteps the necessary solution and response to those issues, which should be to repeal or amend the offending legislation and elect a government that would respect constitutional obligations and the constitutional rights of all Albertans.

Both the Supreme Court of Canada and the Alberta Court of Appeal have stated that laws must be written to balance the legitimate aims of planned, orderly development and land conservation within the rights of property owners. The courts have been clear that landowners have important property rights, which must be protected in all but the most pressing and substantial of government plans.

In 2002 Alberta Court of Appeal Chief Justice Catherine Fraser said that the respect for individual property rights was a principle firmly entrenched in the Legislature planning scheme in effect in Alberta and that it follows that encroachments on individual rights, especially by private parties, should be strictly construed. It's clear that property rights are well protected in law and that Alberta courts do understand their purpose.

So, Mr. Speaker, certainly, I appreciate the sentiment of the member who did bring forward this motion, and certainly watching the history of this government overstepping the boundaries of the government and interfering with individual rights, it does bring cause that we should react and find some way to counteract. But, certainly, the motion, as it's described here, is difficult, and though I respect the sentiment that had bred the motion in the first place, I must say that I can't vote for it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I support the premise of some sort of constitutional right of property. I support the idea that we need to position ourselves to make sure bad laws don't deprive us of property. I fully understand that. Property rights are not in the Charter although they are in the Canadian Bill of Rights. But when I look at this amendment and I hear the Wildrose minimize Bill 19 as not being in effect or proclaimed and a moot point, as some members have said, it tells me, then, that they don't understand the issue.

The issue here is: how do we protect property rights? When I look at this motion, it falls way short of the work that individuals put into Grassroots Alberta in dealing with the issue of property rights, where they talked about tangible and intangible in the statutory consents that are embedded in property rights. This motion only speaks of real property, so it limits it right there. But, more than that, this motion from the Wildrose is duplicitous in pretending to give a right when they include the ability of the government to take that right away and by including the clause, "except in accordance with the law."

As you pass a bill like Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, or the Land Stewardship Act – by the way, that's law – you would have met the provisions of this amendment, and your right is now removed. What this amendment to the Constitution states is: we're going to give you a right, but as long as you pass a law, bad law or good law – it doesn't matter – you can take that right away. Basically, this motion is nothing more than a Trojan Horse.

Under the Charter of Rights, rights as generally set out in sections 2 to 23, they do not speak about the law except perhaps in section 15, which in 15(2) allows for affirmative action programs. They are all about rights. The law which is able to override the rights is usually dealt with in section 1 of the Charter. In section 1 of the Charter, in order to override a right, the law has to "be demonstrably justified."

To show that the law is justified, the Legislature will have to show that there is a pressing and substantial objective for the law, which means that the Legislature has to have a proportional objective that is balanced between the legislative benefits and the reduced benefits to the public or the effect that it has on the property rights itself. By putting this in section 7, where it says, "except in accordance with the law," the question now posed is: do the section 1 rights now apply, where it has to be demonstrable? This motion doesn't say that it has to be demonstrable, so already we're going to have a constitutional challenge.

Now, the problem is that if you take out "except in accordance with the law," every time a community wants to raise taxes, every time the ERCB, the Surface Rights Board wants to deal with something or property, they will have to demonstrate a constitutional reason, which would basically make constitutional lawyers very happy but doesn't accomplish anything. The question for constitutional lawyers now is: if this amendment were to pass, does that override your rights in section 1, where laws have to be demonstrably justifiable? The answer I'm hearing is that that's a valid argument. So this was not well thought out at all on the federal level.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is an issue that I support in principle, but I cannot support this motion. It falls way short of dealing with the idea of how we're going to protect property rights. When the members from the Wildrose stand up and say that it would prevent something like the Alberta Land Stewardship Act or that it would prevent something like Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, from coming forward – no, it does not. It doesn't prevent that at all. There's a clause in there that says, "except in accordance with the law".

I have sat in the appeals court of Alberta. One of the best judgments I've ever witnessed was a judgment, actually, against our side of the case. The way it worked was very simple. The judge looked across the lawyers in the appeals court and said: "I know what you want, but your remedy is not here. Your remedy is in the Legislature." I understood exactly what that justice was saying. I knew we were right in principle, but we didn't have a law to support us. What we had was a bad law that needed to be changed. This motion still allows for that to happen. It does not protect property rights as intended. It misses the target. As much as I really have a high regard for the Charter of Rights, as I think everyone does, it is not something we should ever propose to change lightly. It has to be changed with a lot of thought.

The idea that provinces can have separate rights within the Charter has always bothered me. At what point do we now have: we're not going to go by that Charter right; we will make our own. That is something that I think would really obstruct our freedoms across this country, if we start dicing up the Charter of Rights specifically for various provinces. I know there are exceptions that we deal with, but the fact is that to rely on rights and to force laws to be demonstrably justified is important. To go into section 7 and to miss that point, to usurp the rights in section 1 is dangerous, and it should never be taken that lightly.

So I support the principle of protecting property rights. I have always demonstrated that in my actions, but I realize, looking at this, that it missed the target. I wish the members had listened more to the Grassroots Alberta people who made a proposal. Hopefully, this government has this proposal. We'll bring it up, I think, in committee, how we can possibly best protect the rights of Albertans, particularly with regard to property.

I cannot support this. It doesn't give a right to protect property. It actually lessens those rights when I look at the full context of the Charter of Rights, and I will not subscribe to or support this motion.

Thank you very much.

5:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with very great exuberance that I stand to address this Motion 501, the amendment to the Constitution Act, and I'd like to start by thanking the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for putting this motion forward.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of property rights in Alberta is one that elicits a lot of attention. People feel passionate about it, and they approach it with great veracity. Because of this Alberta is the only province in Canada that has included property rights in our Bill of Rights, through the Bill of Rights act, and the act enshrines "the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law." Improving on property rights underrecognized under common law was a priority for Albertans, and this is why we are the only province to enact additional property rights legislations.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes there are clear, necessary reasons as to why the Crown must expropriate land belonging to an Albertan, rural or urban, and in those cases it's of importance to provide a transparent process and fair and just value. These rules governing expropriation are laid out in our Expropriation Act, and if a landowner doesn't agree with the compensation or the reasons, then they are able to appeal the decision.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the province's first Property Rights Advocate, established in 2012, has a mandate to provide detailed, impartial advice to parties looking for independent information about their options. Cases can be settled by an impartial, quasi-judicial Land Compensation Board or in some cases by the courts. Landowners are given opportunities to voice their opinions and objections and pursue fair value.

Mr. Speaker, this government and every MLA in this room knows what property rights mean to Albertans, and as a Calgary-based urban MLA I must clearly state that this is not just an issue for rural Albertans, nor is it an issue that only rural MLAs care about. As I've shared with this House before, I grew up on a farm, a beef feedlot operation in southwestern Ontario. My parents, my siblings, and my extended family continue to farm in that area today, just as our grandparents had. As many hon. members know, for families like ours, a farm is not just a piece of land, a livelihood, or an economic asset; it's a legacy that passes down from one generation to the next. It's a very real part of our family's history and our identity.

While I was in law school, many years ago, our family farm was expropriated by then Ontario Hydro to construct a 500-kV power line from the Bruce Peninsula to southern Ontario. Yes, there was consultation, access to courts, and, ultimately, fair compensation, but the impact of losing that barn with the family name on it still lingers. I share this with you, Mr. Speaker, so that hon. members here will understand that when I speak of property rights, it's not theoretical or legal. I'm speaking as someone who has lived through the experience of expropriation, as someone who understands the emotional value land has far beyond its value on a balance sheet.

What I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that I care as much as any Albertan about the value of property rights. I care that landowners and property rights holders have effective notice, genuine consultation, and fair compensation. I know at a cellular level that expropriation of property should never be done lightly and only when it's absolutely necessary.

But, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all those feelings and that experience, there are times when expropriation is essential for the benefit of all Albertans, and I must reject this motion on the basis that it would inappropriately distort that essential balance and would distort how these decisions were made here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I was in law school when the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was declared. In fact, I actually did a lot of research on section 15, the equality clause, and as I recall with vivid clarity, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms purposefully omitted any mention of property rights. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Part of the reason is because authority for property rights was given to the provinces in the Constitution Act, 1867, as my colleague from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has already pointed out. Giving authority for property rights to the provinces was part of the system of checks and balances between the provinces and the federal government upon which our country was created. If that power and authority over property rights was to be handed over by Albertans to the federal government and enshrined in our Constitution, this decision would not only be difficult; it would trigger outcomes that would not necessarily serve Albertans.

Let's look at the process. First, a constitutional amendment requires adherence to a very specific process. We would need three resolutions calling for the amendment: resolution of the House of Commons, resolution of the Senate, and resolution of the provincial Legislative Assembly. Before we could pass a resolution here as a Legislative Assembly, we'd need a referendum. To constitutionally enshrine property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is no simple matter. Significant issues would require thorough discussion by Albertans, and the practical consequences of such a decision would have to be fully understood. For example, moving property rights into the Charter would shift some aspects of decision-making with respect to Alberta's economic matters from elected officials to appointed judiciary. To many that would simply be undemocratic. Most Albertans I know do not want property rights determined by judges.

Mr. Speaker, this isn't the first time this issue has raised its head in Canada. In 1972 who was concerned about the inclusion of property rights in our Constitution? Women's groups, aboriginal groups, environmental organizations, and the provincial governments: a pretty fundamental list of stakeholders. Then, as my colleague has mentioned, in the 1980s the Lougheed and Getty governments from the province of Alberta opposed the constitutional entrenchment of property rights because of Albertans' concerns about loss of provincial control, erosion of our property rights, judicial activism, and on the basis that the protections were already provided in our Alberta Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans command the respect of their government, and we are responsible to provide a government that can make responsive and timely decisions on issues most important to them. This motion is asking us to give up that mandate and capacity and offer it up instead to the federal government and to the courts. Giving up provincial authority and transferring power to the federal government, we would be failing the citizens of Alberta and future Albertans. We need to be able to work with Albertans in Alberta on the issues that matter to them most. Based on the implications for Albertans we must deny this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you, honestly, that I'm quite appalled, shocked, in fact. The arguments that have been made against this motion have been based on false premises. Nobody is saying, certainly not our party or this motion, that bills like 50, 36, 24, 19, 2 couldn't be passed. What it's saying, of course, is that they couldn't be passed with clauses or covenants within those acts that would make it possible for cabinet to take away the right to appeal to the court for valuations or for being deprived of the use and enjoyment of your property.

Sure. Naturally, we acknowledge – my esteemed colleague did so in his opening remarks when he introduced the motion – that there are occasions when properties need to be expropriated, and there is an act that governs that. But it's currently overruled in terms of its effectiveness as a protection to property owners by the clauses that are in those very bills that are so objectionable. In fact, they are just completely wrong. Those bills in terms of property rights make Alberta have more in common with eastern European countries than with democratically constituted governments like we supposedly have.

We need to have access to the courts. We can't just merely have access to some quasi-judicial body. We need the full protection of the courts. There have been judges already who have said to people who have come appealing decisions of the cabinet to deprive them through a regulatory taking in some form or other: you don't have the right to redress through the court for that issue because that bill specifically allows the government to do that and without you having that right.

When you can put clauses into bills that take away the use and enjoyment of your property – in the case that was mentioned, the very personal case, heartfelt, for sure, by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, of the feelings that she still has for the farm that's no longer theirs, she was careful to mention the fact that her family was able to make sure that they got market value by being able to appeal that decision or go to the courts for redress. Under the bills that we specifically have talked about, the good parts of those bills could still remain. We understand that for good government and the greater good of the population you sometimes have to take property away from the rightful owners, but they need to be justly compensated based on market evaluations, not based on some arbitrary decision by a cabinet minister or a bureaucrat under his or her direction. That's just not right.

Democracy is not a convenient form of government, but as Churchill said: democracy is the worst form of government except all the others that have been tried. We're trying to circumvent democracy in its truest and purest form by denying Albertans the opportunity to have complete and full access to the courts when they are wrongly deprived of the use and enjoyment of their property. It's just unconscionable. It's unbelievable to me that people as intelligent as the group that is here, with the legal minds that you have to not just win a case and make your point by selectively choosing certain aspects to emphasize, deny the reality that those bills contain clauses that give the government the right to deprive people of redress for wrong-headed actions by the government in the name of the greater good. It's just not fair, and it's not right.

There's a saying that good fences make good neighbours. Well, I am here to say that good covenants and clauses consistent with universal laws and truths make good laws. We need to come together on this, folks. You don't want to abandon rural Alberta, and you are. It's these bills that are the reason we have this loyal opposition. These bills have produced in the PC government a shift closer to the right instead of to the left as you've historically been going. It's true that all ruling parties end up moving towards the loudest voices in opposition. Historically that's been those of left persuasion, those that favour central government in control. We can see the result. You folks are here, having won four by-elections, because you've moved back to the right, kind of harkening to the loudest voice in this House in opposition to the wrong-headedness of some of your actions.

To deny this motion, to defeat this motion, you'll be putting yourselves on notice as being the party that is, in fact, against property rights and be, really, conceding to us the rest of the province of Alberta. Now, we know that your actions are focused on Calgary and Edmonton. That's been made abundantly clear. Those are important cities, and the citizens of those communities are an important part of Alberta, but their rights can't take priority over other people's rights, universal rights, logically recognized. We need to recognize that all people need to have equal rights. Without them, it's just a travesty.

Please let's put partisan politics aside and do what's right. Support this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to join debate on Motion 501, the amendment to the Constitution. The motion discusses property rights in Alberta and proposes that the Legislative Assembly authorize His Excellency the Governor General to issue a proclamation amending the Canadian Constitution. I'd like to begin by thanking my colleague the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for bringing forward this motion.

Mr. Speaker, as it stands today, Alberta is the only jurisdiction within Canada that has passed specific property rights protection. Property rights can be a contentious and highly debated issue as we have seen here today. It is one we want to see stay in the jurisdiction of Alberta so we can quickly. . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I regret having to interrupt, but the mover has the floor now for the five minutes of closing debate because we must stop at 6:00.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka to close debate.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all who stood to speak to this motion here in the Legislature today. It's been a wonderful debate with you.

Now, let's think about where some of this came from. This came from a few offending pieces of legislation, specifically those that override the Alberta – what was it? Oh, I can't remember the name of the piece of legislation.

An Hon. Member: The Land Stewardship Act?

Mr. Fox: No, not the Land Stewardship Act. The one in 1972. I guess it doesn't matter that much. The Alberta Bill of Rights, when it was enacted in 1972. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act actually overrides that piece of legislation, which is rather unfortunate that the government fails to realize that since they wrote the legislation under Bill 36. That particular piece of legislation is actually what is offending so many Albertans here in the province.

Now, with that piece of legislation what happened was that section 11 outlined the right of cabinet to rescind Albertans' rights. Section 19 of that particular piece of legislation restricts the right to compensation for landowners. Section 13 withholds a landowner's right to the courts unless cabinet allows it. Section 15 of that particular piece of legislation binds municipalities, regulators, and all Albertans to that bill. Again, section 15 of the Land Stewardship Act withholds a landowner's right to make claim against the government. Section 15 limits the role of the courts. Section 17 stipulates that the bill trumps all other acts legislated by the Legislature of Alberta.

This is why this motion has come forward. This motion has come forward to give Albertans back access to the courts, to make sure they are getting full, fair, and timely compensation when land is expropriated. It doesn't take away the right of expropriation.

With that, I would strenuously – strenuously – ask you to vote in favour of Motion 501.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Anderson: Just a quick point. I would ask for unanimous consent of the House, since we all want to get to our supper and so forth, that we could shorten the bells if there is a division vote. Would that be okay with the opposite side, or do you want to stay here an extra ten minutes?

The Speaker: Our common interpretation of what's just been enunciated is to shorten the interval between bells to one minute. That's our common interpretation. If anyone objects to that, please say so now.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: I hear no objections, so in the event that the division bell should ring, that will be our procedure.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has moved closure of debate on this particular motion.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 501 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 24, 2014

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening, everyone. Please be seated.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Fenske moved, seconded by Mr. Ellis, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Denis]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne.

I want to start out by talking just a little bit about how amazing I think this province is and about what incredible opportunity we have. I know I often end up speaking – mind you, you give me so many opportunities – critically of the government, and that seems like I'm speaking critically of the province, and I'm not. I just cannot speak highly enough of the people that live here, of their integrity, their work ethic, their commitment to family and to the land and to community. A pretty cool place to be born and a pretty cool place to choose to move to or to immigrate to.

Okay. That was it. [interjections] Well, you give me so much to go on. [interjections] You know, the government has just been in too long, Madam Speaker.

You know, people asked me to describe this throne speech, and I said that it was really reflective of the new Premier. It was very suave, very dignified, very reserved, very secretive. [interjections] Yeah, playing those cards so close to his chest, they were somewhere incised into his skin. Just this afternoon I asked some really simple questions: no, no, no, all the way down the line. He wouldn't even give me a teeny little bit of information.

What really frustrates me about this government is that you've got too much money, and it takes away your drive to be innovative, your drive to need to find other solutions. That makes me crazy because this is a creative, innovative province, and I know we can do better.

An Hon. Member: But the Liberals want to raise taxes.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I do want to raise taxes. That's exactly right. I want to see fair, progressive taxes in this province because that 10 per cent flat tax has killed us.

This government chooses to spend 30 cents out of every dollar from nonrenewable resource revenue. You took it out of the ground yesterday, and today you're spending it on operational budgets. That is wrong in so many ways. That's like selling the back 40 to pay your Visa. It has no horizon to it, no clear thinking to it, no planning to it whatsoever. It's incredibly insulting to the people that live here. So, yeah, you make me crazy. You made my hair go red. You see? It got more red over the weekend.

What I want to talk about is what's not in the throne speech. You know, I'm not a mushy kind of person. I'm not a children, family, social services kind of gal. I just am not. Has anybody noticed the portfolios I have not been critic for? Agriculture and children's services and Human Services. I'm just not a gushy kind of gal. But this throne speech had no reference to the social policy framework, and that is a policy that is worked on so hard by so many people in the not-for-profit area, by municipalities. It had buy-in from stakeholders all over the place.

I don't know how many ministers they went through, and every time that committee came back and presented it all over again. Not a g.d. word in here about that. Did you dump it? Is it gone forever? Why would you abandon something that so many people have worked on so hard, that was such a buy-in from so many people? A lot of other people have talked about poverty and children; I'm not a mushy kind of gal. But it is about those social determinants of health, and it is about the fact: how can we possibly have over 140,000 children living in poverty in this province, where we have had multibillion-dollar surpluses in my time in this Assembly, $6 billion, $8 billion, $9 billion in surpluses? Where is it? Where is that money?

Today we have over 140,000 people in poverty, children in poverty. Remember, folks, that children are not Cabbage Patch dolls. They don't sprout out of the ground by themselves. Poor children are coming from poor families, and what are you doing about it? Where is the social policy framework? Pfft. Gone. I'm so angry with you for that. It's such a waste of everybody's resource, and it's such a waste of taxpayer money. Like, how many times do you guys have to be given the studies and the facts and the numbers that show you that an investment in social policy pays off over and over and over again? But, no, you guys want to have more police and more ambulance workers and more prisons, because that's where everybody ends up, when you could be investing on the front end: in children, in Success by 6, in hot lunch programs.

You know, some of the city of Edmonton councillors, God bless them, went and did the hunger thing, where you didn't get anything to eat or you had to live on $1.25 a day or something. They were having, like, dry oatmeal for breakfast and all kinds of weird stuff. But I'll tell you that every one of those people came back and complained that by midmorning they could not concentrate. They were cranky and argumentative, and they could not hang on to the information that was in front of them. That is what we do in this province with so much money every day. How could that be?

Okay. Social policy framework: I'm a little ticked about that. Poverty and children: I'm a little ticked about that. I'm a little ticked that you've walked away from the housing, the affordable housing, that housing commission that members of this Assembly were participating in. You know, there were 72-some recommendations. If we had implemented those recommendations when they did it, we wouldn't be where we are today, which is once again going: "Oh, gee. Yeah, it's bad. We'll do something." Why did you have people spend all that time going around the province doing stakeholder consultations if you weren't going to do it? Why? Is this a make-work project so that people don't get into – what? – trouble somewhere? I don't know.

Okay. Social determinants of health: poverty, housing, family and peer support, access to education, access to food and food security. You know, I just don't get it. We are not going to change this stuff in 10 years. This is not going to happen in 10 years. This is a generational change. We need to understand that it's a generational change and that we're going to have to work on this. If we want to be in a different place, we're going to have to try and be in this different place 25 years from now, but it means we're going to have to go through that generational change to get there in 25 years. To be completely different in that generational change, we've got to start now and follow those pegs down the road to get there. But all I see is, "Oh, gee, you know," and nothing happens.

Okay. Environment. All hat, no cattle. Sorry, folks. All talk, no action. Once upon a time we had one of you – unless you're gone now? One of you was talking about a 40 per cent reduction with a $40 levy. Well, that went nowhere. We're still sitting there with a $15 levy, which everybody on that side likes to pump and say: "Aren't we wonderful? We were first." You guys, that's embarrassing. We were first 15 years ago. This is embarrassing. B.C. is, like, way ahead of us, and they're doing it at the pump, so everyone is involved, and everyone feels they've got a piece of this. Here we put it on intensity of emissions. Oh, come on. Only when they're allowed to pollute so much and only when they pollute above and beyond that are we going to assign them a levy? Really? You can do better than that. You can. We can in this province.

There's too much to say about environment. You know, there's monitoring, AEMERA. We've got oil spills that continue to pump out of the ground. The environment minister was upset when I called it gunk. Well, what do you want me to call it? Oil-induced crap? What is it? It's sludge that is pouring across our land and kills everything in front of it, including the wildlife. So, yeah, I want pictures because I want to show you the pictures so that you understand that the choices you're making have resulted in this.

We've got the AG talking about – oh, I love this; I can't read my own writing – old versus new records. I think you're abandoning things because we can't even keep track of what we're doing. He was saying that we don't know how we're doing on climate change because we've never measured it appropriately, and we didn't know what we were measuring it against. So we can't tell how we're doing on any of the climate change measurements we've made, and now we're speaking so far ahead in climate change that it's incomprehensible. When we start talking 2040, I mean, a number of us in here will be dead, and a lot more of us will be really old. So why are we thinking about making changes that far ahead in what we're doing? Crazy.

Fear, intimidation, and loathing in Alberta. You know, one of the things that I'm noticing in the environment sector is that there's a chill on people that even come forward with diagnostics and results about reporting what's happening from people that are being tested, that are turning up with strange things in their blood, or they're finding things in the soil or cumulative effects. They don't even want to talk about it because they're afraid of what's going to happen to them.

Urban drilling policy: you have to be kidding me. If we can't understand about an urban drilling policy and how close we're going to allow people to drill to people's homes – that's not in here.

Water is a public good. I'm very keen on that, and you'll continue to hear from me about that because I think it positions water where it should be, where we understand that this is a public good, and it has to be handled that way. It can't be sold or divvied out or given to people or rented in the way that's being considered by the government.

The way we're treating animals: caribou and wolverines and grizzlies. You know, we know that the way we're going to save those caribou herds is by having undisturbed habitat, and what do we do? Give out more leases to go and do drilling. You cannot fool around with Mother Nature. You cannot. Yet what are we doing? Well, we're not doing well with the caribou, and we won't give them more habitat, so, great, let's shoot the wolves that are going to prey on the caribou. Make that one work for me.

Or – wait – don't work with the trappers. Don't work with the guys that actually could do this in a way they know how to do it and maybe make a little bit of money on the side. No. Let's have helicopters and shoot them from helicopters. Great idea. Or let's take fresh kill and poison the carcass, and – oh, yeah – only the wolves will eat that poisoned food, right? Everybody knows that. There won't be any wolverines or any crows or anything else eat that poison. Yes, of course they do.

What else wasn't in here? Well, things like mental health. I'm still waiting for the children's mental health strategy, which I've heard announced three times. I think they were different strategies, but I could be wrong. I'm still not seeing it. I'm still not seeing the mental health supports in the community. I'm still not seeing the support for the municipalities, who are increasingly taking over the burden of the work. Now you have a number of experts because I know that the previous mayor of Edmonton is not the only municipal person with experience that's sitting in government that could be giving the government some really good advice on what kind of assistance the municipalities have.

I heard somebody here complaining about the reverse, the government complaining that they weren't getting the federal government's fair share on legal aid. It's supposed to be 80-20: 80 for the feds, 20 for the province. Well, suck it up, Sunshine, because that's exactly what you're doing to FCSS. The municipalities have been shouldering the burden of 80 per cent of the cost of those programs for I don't know how long. You know, not that I would wish that back upon you, because I don't think that's what should be happening, but understand that that's what you're doing to the municipalities, and it shows every day.

Municipalities are the ones that are supplying the front-line services. In most cases they're picking up where you guys are leaving off and where you have dropped the ball on things. Think about a new way to give them some revenue sources, think about some way to give them some autonomy, and, for God's sake, give them their own bloody charter. Quit treating the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary like the blessed places of Claresholm and Camrose and Tofield. They are not the same thing. They need their own piece of legislation to work by.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This has been such a joy.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have five minutes of question and comment under Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members that would like to question or comment?

Seeing none, we will move on to our next speaker to the throne speech, and that is the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to address the motion and reply to the speech from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I'd like to say that I've been a resident of this wonderful city and this province for 40 years, which makes me a transplant, which makes me part of the tens of thousands of people that have moved here from around this country to make Edmonton their home. My wife, Lynn, and I have raised our two children, Rachel and Adam, in this wonderful city, this wonderful province. Two years ago we were graced by our grandson, Chase, who really is the light of my life, like all grandchildren are to their grandparents.

After 30 years in business I entered politics. I spent 12 years in elected office prior to my election as the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud. I'm honoured to have been elected. I'd like to speak about why I entered provincial politics. This is not an easy job. As all of you know, you work long hours. You take on the concerns of the people you represent, and you work with them and for them to make an idea, an initiative, a goal, a policy come to fruition. In no other line of work do you have the opportunity to impact so much and so many people.

If you ask Canadians what defines their country, most will say one thing that defines us most, which is our public health care system. The public health care system has allowed Canadians peace of mind. It has given them a fundamental security that allows citizens to prosper and our economy to flourish. Without that publicly accessible system, in my opinion, that sense of security would be lost.

In my time as mayor of the city of Edmonton I became well acquainted with the socioeconomic factors that impact our health system: homelessness, poverty, addictions, mental health, family violence, plus so many others that drive people away from success and into the arms of health care and the social services system. As Health minister I am proud to take on the responsibility to ensure that those without a strong voice will be taken care of. Our most vulnerable must be treated with respect and compassion.

The delivery of our system rests in the hands of Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health plus untold individuals: physicians, nurses, pharmacists, optometrists, psychologists, front-line workers, maintenance people, and so many more. Their spirit and commitment make the system work. We all should thank them for the passion they have for the health care system.

Yes, our system has some challenges. Our costs are higher than other jurisdictions, but cost reduction is not the only way to improve our system. Better governance, increased accountability, more decentralization, listening to clinicians, and, yes, surprisingly enough, listening to Albertans: those together will make our system more responsive and, hopefully, more cost effective. To help with that process we brought together new leadership to investigate the board structure and cost analysis. We have worked with many rural communities to get their input so that our rural communities feel part of the solutions and the great opportunities for our province.

We also have challenges in emergency departments and acute-care beds, especially in our two largest cities. We must be proactive in dealing with the realities of these problems. Innovation and creativity will only take us so far. Capital investment is needed. Recent problems of overcrowding at the Rockyview, the challenge at the Misericordia hospital, the need for cancer facility upgrades in both Edmonton and Calgary, and the overcrowding situation at the Royal Alexandra hospital, the Peter Lougheed hospital, the Foothills, and the University hospital – we are such a growing province. We should make sure our cities are adequately prepared for that growth and our citizens taken care of in their facilities.

None of us would be here today without our electorate's support. I'm truly honoured to represent Edmonton-Whitemud. The community is out in force when it comes to supporting a number of events from community projects to fun runs, to playground design, to construction, to recs and advocacy, to arts and culture. This is a cosmopolitan, multicultural, dynamic community. I'm truly blessed and lucky and thrilled to represent such a wonderful, passionate community.

I'm proud to represent the people of Alberta as Health minister. Albertans have high expectations because we've been taught that our health care system should be the best and nothing less, and they see their health care system as fundamental to their quality of life. We want Albertans to live not only a healthy life but with a focus on wellness in their lives so that they can have the kind of life that makes it such a good place to live.

Most of all, I'm proud to represent Alberta, this government, and be part of leaving a positive legacy for our children and our grandchildren.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who would like to comment or question the Minister of Health? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do appreciate the opportunity. Congratulations to the member on his election as the representative from Edmonton-Whitemud.

I would like to ask the hon. member if he would care to comment on his time as the mayor of Edmonton and his relationship with some of the rural counties around the city of Edmonton, how his role now as the representative for Edmonton-Whitemud is going to be impacted by some of that history and how he'd like to see the government of Alberta move forward with some of the rural counties who neighbour this capital city.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That's a great question. During my tenure as mayor of Edmonton there were two substantial groups of people that we interacted with. There were northern mayors and reeves, which was a group of people from all over northern Alberta. There were counties and cities that came together quarterly. We got together to discuss opportunities and options for their communities and how we could work together. It was a wonderful group of people that brought to the table a tremendous perspective on all different issues of northern Alberta: the challenge of growth, the challenge of needing more physicians, the challenge of the problems of just dealing with growth in a community that has not the kinds of facilities they should have to meet those needs.

In the city of Edmonton in our capital region I was also part of a capital region caucus. We felt that that was a vitally important part of how we could grow and how we could come together. You know something? It was a great experience. There were 26 of us who were estranged from each other in the beginning but over a period of time began to work together. Yes, we had some differences, and we didn't always see eye to eye, but at the end of the day, for the most part, our region was moving forward, moving forward together because collectively we saw that as a region we were much stronger together. Weakness came when we started fighting and arguing over issues that really no one cared about. So as a result of our Capital Region Board and the commitment of the provincial government working with us, we created ties together that will allow us to move forward as a region in a much more effective way.

As the Minister of Health I believe I understand many of the challenges that are faced within our region and within northern Alberta as well as the other parts of Alberta that I've had an opportunity to visit in the last several weeks. We have a lot of challenges in our province because of growth. We have a lot of needs in our province. We do have restrictions on how much money we can spend on any one issue. We need to work hard to meet the needs of our province, to meet the needs of each of our counties and smaller municipalities in our region, but by working together, we can find solutions. I'm very excited that my experience in both northern Alberta and with our capital region will serve me well in dealing with the issues that I'm being faced with as the Minister of Health.

I hope that answers your question.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

There are still two minutes left. Is there anyone else that would like to ask a question?

Seeing none, we'll move on to our next response to the throne speech. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour and privilege today to rise and give my response to the Speech from the Throne. I'm going to go through and highlight several of the issues that were raised in the Speech from the Throne, but I just wanted to comment briefly on my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

This has really been a landmark year for the constituency. As members might recall, in the spring I brought in guests from the Beverly historical society because this year Beverly celebrated its centennial year, celebrating 100 years of being an incorporated community, which is quite significant. The community really came together around a number of events, Madam Speaker. I mean, there was an incredible street parade with over 54 entries. I can tell you that I participated in that parade, and it was incredible to see the streets packed several rows deep with people all out to celebrate the community and its history. There was a street concert, a family picnic, educational activities, and an interpretive centre, all empowered by volunteers, which is fantastic. I've been a huge advocate of the community and working toward revitalizing our community and showing that Beverly is an incredible place to live, to work, to raise your family. So I'm quite honoured to represent that community.

I just want to mention briefly the fact that Beverly was selected this year as the community to receive a replacement school. Now, you know, unfortunately, the deal was to trade three schools for a replacement school, which, with a heavy heart, means letting go of community schools. I'm a very big fan of children having the ability to walk to school, getting to know their neighbours, living and participating in their community.

I do want to say, Madam Speaker, that this is the first new school since about 1967 that the community of Beverly is getting. I think it's only fair that not only do our new, flourishing communities receive new facilities but that we also remember and respect our mature neighbourhoods. I'm very happy to have played a small role in that as far as promoting the public meetings and community participation. You know, I am quite thrilled that the community was selected, and I look forward to working with Infrastructure, with Edmonton public schools, and all the community partners. I must say, though, that the one tiny concern, that's already been raised, is that the original timeline of fall of 2016 has already been bumped to January of 2017, but we'll keep watching that with a diligent eye.

The second part of that, Madam Speaker, is the fact that we will have three empty schools in the community, or three empty facilities, and I've had a number of constituents, community groups, cultural groups all in desperate need of space. So I am going to take a second just to lobby on behalf of my constituents. The fact is that we have these buildings that exist. They may need some repurposing, but I would very much like to see them serve the community in the best way possible. I had a meeting with the Minister of Infrastructure, which I'm very grateful for, and raised those points in really ensuring that our facilities serve the needs of our communities and how to best do that. I'm looking forward to that discussion and those discussions moving forward.

I do want to raise one of the concerns, and I'm glad to see the Minister of Education here to relay the point that, unfortunately, right now in some of the Catholic schools they're still waiting on modulars, modulars that were promised back in September, which have yet to be delivered. I can tell the minister first-hand that one school at least, Anne Fitzgerald, has been having to have classes held in makeshift classrooms. They've had to use the gym and other places to teach because there simply isn't enough space. To reiterate, these modulars were promised to be delivered in September, and they are still not delivered, so something to be aware of.

The last issue within my constituency at the moment, again quite exciting. The Clareview rec centre has been getting an addition put on and some renovations, which is fantastic to see. But I do need to share some of the concern I'm hearing from my constituents, and that is accessibility and affordability to this revitalized facility. That's because at the moment the Clareview rec centre is designated as a tier 1 facility because of its size. Now, the concern and the challenge, Madam Speaker, is that means that the user fee is at the top tier to be able to access this facility. I will urge members on the other side to be aware of the different incomes that many of the families have who live in the area. Charging top tier to access this community facility will quite simply be out of reach for some families. So although I'm thrilled the government has invested in Clareview, I would like to bring that issue forward and hope that they will be aware that this may be a barrier for some families.

Madam Speaker, moving on to the Speech from the Throne. You know, something that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona brought up, which is a point that I think needs to be reiterated, is the fact that the Premier was elected through a by-election – on that note, I do wish to pass my congratulations on to the Premier, the Minister of Health, the Minister of Education, and the Member for Calgary-West on their victories in the by-elections – and the reason the Premier is the Premier and not the leader of an opposition party is because of a platform that his party put forward in 2012. Unfortunately, as many Albertans have seen, most of the promises that were made in 2012 have in fact been broken. Those of us on this side of the House are still waiting for some of those commitments to come forward. I mean, really, there's a laundry list from full-day K to, I believe, 140 family care clinics, which were promised but have been squashed, along with we're still waiting for the deliverables when it comes to education.

I appreciate the Premier and the Minister of Education promising new schools and more schools. Albertans are eagerly anticipating them. I do want to remind members of the House that part of the reason, and a large part of the reason, we're in the predicament we're in is because of a failure to invest in new schools for many, many years and the fact that our population continued to grow and this government dragged its feet on investing in infrastructure.

You know, a reminder is what just occurred at the Misericordia, which is a hospital that is ready to fall down for numerous reasons. Opposition members, including my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who has been a tireless advocate, were calling on the government to act before some kind of catastrophe happened. That did in fact happen, and there have been numerous examples of issues with the Misericordia and other hospitals and infrastructures around the province.

It just needs to be stated that the Premier has a mandate that was given to him or passed down to him from Albertans in the 2012 election. That cannot be ignored, Madam Speaker, and there are many promises that need to be fulfilled. Our leader, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, has been at the forefront, advocating on behalf of children, on children in care, on holding this government's feet to the fire when it comes to acting on reducing child poverty. We saw a report that came out today that was quite disheartening, quite frankly. You know what? For too long Albertans have heard promises of action and seen committees struck and consultation yet little action.

Something just to segue into the Speech from the Throne: nothing to address the fact that there is a shortage of affordable housing. When this government struck the plan to end homelessness, they played a shell game with dollars that got moved from housing to the initiative for homelessness. Because of it, there has not been enough housing that's been built. Again, the population of Edmonton, the population of Alberta is swelling. You know, we have numbers passed around of around a hundred thousand people moving to the province. We need to invest in infrastructure. We needed to invest in infrastructure 20 years ago, so we're playing the game of catch-up. The irony is that when you put it off for 20 years, your costs continue to go up, where schools, roads, and hospitals would have been much cheaper 20 years ago because of inflation, wages, and the cost of materials. But according to this government that's neither here nor there.

Something that I find interesting out of the Speech from the Throne – I've kind of broken mine into five different categories, and I'm going to have to move a little quicker here. The first one was a commitment that the Premier made to maximizing the value of our natural resources. Now, that sounds really great, and I love the phraseology of that. But when we actually dissect it, you know, it's the Alberta NDP who have been the most vocal advocates of adding value to our resources. We're talking about upgrading and refining much of the bitumen that's extracted in this province, and that is a way to ensure that the quality jobs stay in this province. Building pipelines provides short-term, temporary jobs and ships all the quality jobs down to the refineries and upgraders elsewhere. I would think that the government of Alberta should be acting in the best interests of Albertans, but clearly this PC government is not, so shipping jobs is the way to go. This is where I disagree with the Premier.

I can say that, you know, in the Alberta NDP we aren't opposed to diversifying our markets. We recognize that when you have one buyer, you don't set the price; the buyer does. What we would do as government is ensure that we're upgrading more of our unprocessed bitumen here in Alberta. I completely recognize that we don't have the capacity to upgrade everything that is extracted, and that's not where we're going. But, again, we're looking at extremes right now. We're upgrading a pittance and shipping more raw bitumen than any other jurisdiction in North America. Madam Speaker, quite simply, we are selling ourselves out. Clearly, this government seems unconcerned by it or is just too far into the pockets of the industry that benefits the most from upgrading in other jurisdictions.

I do want to mention as well that the NDP recognizes that small business is the largest economic driver in our province. We were the only party in the last election who proposed a small-business tax cut, proposing a tax cut by one-third. Again, we realize the value that small businesses contribute to our economy.

When we talk about some of the ways that we would fund some of the social programs, infrastructure, etc., where I get frustrated, Madam Speaker, is the fact that this government absolutely refuses to have a discussion on the second half of the coin. We've got spending on one side of the coin; we have revenue on the other side of the coin. Many Albertans that I've talked to – and I'm not talking about just my constituency but around the province – understand why they pay taxes, understand the value of taxes.

Infrastructure doesn't fall from the sky. Hospitals don't poof into existence, and neither do schools. They cost dollars. But Albertans want to see their dollars working for them. So the issue of a progressive income tax is not something that the majority of Albertans are opposed to. Again, a progressive income tax can be scaled so that, you know, whether you're looking at a small tax increase for households earning over $200,000 a year, for example, we're actually talking about saving dollars for middle-income families, where in Alberta they actually pay more than other jurisdictions when you do comparables.

We're looking, again, at having a competitive royalty regime and a competitive corporate tax rate. Right now Alberta undercuts itself so much. You could adjust our corporate tax rate and our royalty rate modestly so that we are still a competitive jurisdiction with other parts of Canada yet the government would bring in a few billion more.

I see I am running out of time shortly. I do want to touch on education, our cities, and health, so if I do get cut off, we'll see if I have opportunity to pop up again.

As far as education, again, like I mentioned, I'm glad to see we're starting to make promises to build schools. We still haven't fulfilled Premier Stelmach's promises from 2011. We are far from fulfilling former Premier Redford's promises in 2013.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to ask the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview a quick question. I'm wondering, regarding the modulars in your constituency that you brought up earlier on in your speech, if you've told the parents impacted by the lack of action on those modulars that perhaps they should write a letter or two to the Minister of Education to perhaps get some action.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw for that question. Yeah, it's something that we've been, you know, advocating on behalf of. Quite frankly – and it may shock many members of this House – up until maybe two months ago there were actually 54 fully built modulars sitting in a field waiting to get shipped to schools. When asked – it wasn't on the company; they fulfilled their contract with Alberta Infrastructure – the government played the blame game on the school boards: "Well, that's their fault. They need to transport this to their own schools."

I found that very disingenuous. I found that quite frustrating, that we have classrooms and teachers teaching in broom closets, on stages, in libraries, in staff rooms because there is simply not enough space, and here you had 54 modulars built, and very well built – I toured them myself – and sitting in a field and not being delivered because the government passed the buck and said: well, that's not our responsibility to deliver. It's shameful. The buck stops with the province of Alberta. They are responsible for education in this province.

Keeping on the theme of education, a message to the members on the other side. Again, I'm happy to hear promises of infrastructure, of buildings being built, but please recognize that school boards will need the dollars to staff these schools. There is a shortage of staffing. We're talking about, you know, classrooms that are more diverse than they've ever been. We've got English language learners. We've got new immigrants, new Canadians, kids coming over whose command of the English language is not at the same level as their colleagues at the same age, in the same grade. We have children with special needs. We have lots of different challenges that teachers and other students face, and if we do not adequately resource our classrooms, we are doing a disservice to our students and they will not be able to compete in our global context.

As I've said before, you know, the people of this province are our greatest asset, and we need to invest in them. The best way to do that is ensuring that our children have the best education possible. I would argue – and I've said this to teachers before – that the reason that Alberta has the best education system is because of the teachers and the workers who work in our system. It is not because of this government. They work despite the barriers and obstacles that are put up in front of them. You want to talk about teacher workload? You want to talk about class sizes? It is unbelievable, hon. members, that 25 per cent of teachers in the first five years leave the profession. I hope that number causes some of you to raise an alarm and to ask: why is it that one-quarter of teachers in the first five years leave the profession? It's an alarming statistic, and that shouldn't be the case.

In my last couple of minutes I want to talk about the fact that, you know, the Alberta NDP has a vision for our cities to be vibrant cities and vibrant communities. Time and time again Edmonton and Calgary have asked for a specific big-city charter. All that they've gotten in this document, this Speech from the Throne, is a framework agreement. We need to recognize that the issues and challenges facing Edmonton and Calgary are very different from those of a hamlet somewhere or a summer village, yet at the moment all 349 municipalities have the same tools at their disposal to provide for differing needs of service. That is shameful, especially on the other side with the former mayor of Edmonton being in the front bench, and this should be acknowledged. We're past the time for talking, and action is here.

We talk about stable, predictable funding, the fact that MSI should be expanded and continued. Transportation: cities are looking for new dollars. I would love to see a GreenTRIP 2.0 come out from this government. Again, I talked about housing. We look at child care. The fact that Albertans pay more than most other provinces for child care is shameful. That would encourage people to get into the workforce. Now you have more income being made, which means that the government gets more revenue from taxes. The fact that we need to acknowledge... [Mr. Bilous's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to reply to the throne speech? The hon. member for...

Mr. Dorward: Just a quick question: what else...

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry; 29(2)(a) is done. He used up his five minutes, sir.

I'm looking for any other members who wish to respond to the throne speech. The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Respecting Property Rights Act

[Adjourned debate November 19: Mr. Denis]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 1 in second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act. Bill 1 would repeal the Land Assembly Project Area Act, which was never proclaimed and came to the House in 2009, as many will remember. It's interesting that this would automatically be repealed next year if it hadn't been proclaimed, by virtue of a previous enactment, as will the Land Stewardship Act if we do not see that altered as well.

The original Bill 19 aimed to designate corridors for infrastructure projects such as transportation utility corridors – and who could argue with that? – but protecting property rights has become the central theme of a major debate in Alberta since Bill 19 was brought forward. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has become famous and infamous for his rallying around Bill 19 and the constituents who stood up against what was felt to be a draconian and unresponsive bill with respect to compensation appeal mechanisms for land confiscation. It would have placed unlimited and indefinite restrictions on landowners' rights, with serious fines and potential prison time as penalties for failing to comply.

At the same time, however, the Liberal caucus has concerns around another bill that relates to this, and that is the Responsible Energy Development Act, which created the Alberta Energy Regulator. Although the Responsible Energy Development Act is outside the scope of Bill 1, the Liberal caucus's concerns could have been incorporated into the Premier's premier bill.

The Liberal caucus is concerned about who is granted standing in hearings on proposed development projects, where only those "directly and adversely affected" get to participate. This is specifically sections 32, 34, and 36. If the regulator determines that no one filing a statement of concern is directly and adversely affected, there is no hearing. This ignores the property rights of landowners who are indirectly and adversely affected, and it ignores, obviously, the concerns around public lands and groups such as the Alberta Wilderness Association and their concerns about developments on public lands, whether in the north or in the south. Restriction also creates First Nations consultation issues, particularly if traditional land is at issue. The Premier could have addressed the Responsible Energy Development Act in terms of property rights and First Nations, but so far he has chosen not to.

Starting in 2016, the Statutes Repeal Act, as I mentioned, will start a process of repeal with any unproclaimed legislation, and we're concerned that that may affect what was a very positive direction in terms of the Land Stewardship Act, which we almost unanimously supported in this House and still is not in full force.

Our position hasn't really changed on Bill 19. We're pleased to see it being repealed since it failed to address some of those key concerns around compensation and appeal process. Clearly, there must be a guarantee that a landowner get fully compensated and that the appellant – there should be appellants – can take the government to court to get full compensation in the event that it appears and is in reality unfair.

With respect to the Responsible Energy Development Act what the minister failed to do is to recognize that individuals and groups don't necessarily live in direct proximity to developments and can still be significantly impacted. We find it short sighted when environmental issues are confined to an artificial neighbourhood boundary where the impact of an oil spill not only affects that community but downstream communities as well.

It appears that the government again is working in favour of development and in favour of an expedited application process and denying meaningful public participation in this way, which is part of our international and national loss of reputation. It's absolutely essential for Alberta to improve its credibility on the environment if our primary energy industry is going to develop the credibility and marketability beyond our borders. We're seeing the results of that failure today.

The Alberta Energy Regulator has already denied public hearings on an application by CNRL and its Kirby expansion based on statements of concern filed by nine different parties, including First Nations groups. Clearly, this cannot go on. Alberta Liberals are therefore calling on the government to amend section 32 of the act to make these hearings truly open and accessible to all Albertans.

Again, that relates to the opportunity that's before us, Madam Speaker, in addressing the repeal of Bill 19, and I look forward to this government taking on a real leadership role in terms of property rights and environmental rights, ensuring respect for not only those indirectly affected but also, obviously, including our First Nations.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) doesn't kick in at this point in time. We wait till the third speaker. So if you have a 29(2)(a), you'll have to wait till the next speaker to address that issue.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Since 2010 the erosion of property rights under various bills passed by the PC government has been a major issue in rural Alberta. We talked about that earlier today. After promising during his leadership race to resolve this in his first piece of legislation, Bill 1 came forward. It repeals Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, in its entirety. This act, amended under political pressure in 2011, allowed the government to plan for future expropriations by placing restrictions on development of land it might want to expropriate in the future. It was controversial because of the potential to radically undermine the value and use of large tracts of land without any guarantees that the land would ever be used for public purposes. Additionally, it granted significant discretion to cabinet, which was only partially ameliorated in the 2011 amendment act.

Bill 1 says nothing about any of the other controversial bills, in particular Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. This act, like others, did not offer adequate compensation options to affected landowners. The bill was never proclaimed, never mind used. As with Bill 50, while it may take significant political damage before repealing a bad law, eventually the PC government sometimes does the right thing. Surprising, I know, but we're grateful. We always encourage the government to take our lead. Evidence once again that Wildrose is where real leadership is in Alberta. The cons of this are that by only repealing this act that the government has never used and not amending the far more significant ALSA, this act is actually a bit of an insult to property rights.

At least the government could have repealed the other offensive act that they never used, Bill 24, by which the government claimed ownership of pore spaces and gave itself powers to control when and who had access to pump CO₂ under the land of rural Albertans. ALSA has numerous amendments that it needs.

The Responsible Energy Development Act has a couple of amendments that it also needs.

This act, Bill 1, addresses virtually none of the property rights concerns of Grassroots Alberta, that thought they were making some progress by the comments that the Premier had made and by his receiving their suggestions.

The government really hasn't fixed the Land Stewardship Act in response to property rights concerns, just partially but only after a long grassroots political campaign. Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, in particular still gives cabinet the power to rescind water licences, grazing leases, oil leases, and many more rights and permissions without guarantees of compensation or the right to appeal the compensation offered. The bill stipulates that if a designated minister determines a particular action necessary, the bureaucracy must initiate a management response. This is referred to as a Henry VIII clause, which effectively shifts the law-making power from the Assembly to the cabinet.

My colleague that moved Motion 501 earlier today outlined some of the specific clauses that still remain that really do undermine property rights. Do we support it? Of course, because it's a step in the right direction. It's the beginning of repealing the first of the draconian bills that have been referred to numerous times in here. We can only hope for more.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Now we have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members interested in asking a question or making a comment?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the second reading of Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act. I'd like to say at the onset that the Alberta NDP and myself, obviously, support Bill 1 and its repeal of the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

Now, when this act was first introduced, the NDP opposed it because initially, you know, the act was a very heavy-handed approach to land assembly. Although we recognize that large amounts of land are, obviously, necessary for infrastructure projects, the bill put government convenience over the rights of landowners. It also allowed the government to limit the development that was allowed on someone's land without a timeline for when the project the land was being saved for would begin or without requirements for compensation for the prohibition of the development of the land which the owner owned.

Now, though it was amended in 2011, Madam Speaker, it wasn't sufficient to address all the concerns that were raised. The amendments improved on areas of concern such as compensation and access to the courts; however, there remained concerns about the consultation process, and many of those details were left to the regulations. The bill still concentrated power within the hands of the government, which, as you know, has been a major concern of my caucus ever since I was elected in 2012. Many of the bills that we've seen in the last two and a half years are moving power into the hands of cabinet, the ministry to make sweeping decisions without consulting the very stakeholders that are involved in these decisions. The Land Assembly Project Area Act is an example of the arrogance of this current government as they prioritized their own convenience and blatantly disregarded the property rights of Albertans. Today Bill 1 attempts to remedy some of the previous PC government's problems or the problems that this PC government created.

Now, we support this bill as we opposed the Land Assembly Project Area Act when it passed in 2009. Madam Speaker, I just want to make a point here that although we're supporting this current piece of legislation, it is clear that Bill 1 is another example of PC broken promises. I'll remind members of the House that throughout his campaign for leadership the Premier committed himself and his party to addressing the limits on property rights that have been put in place by previous PC governments.

On the leadership campaign trail the Premier appealed to his background as a property rights lawyer, saying that he had negotiated fair settlements and respected property rights. He promised to restore balance between the rights of landowners and the interests of industry. In the Speech from the Throne, Madam Speaker, the Premier highlighted private ownership of land as a fundamental and essential principle of our democracy. These are the very promises Bill 1 fails to meet.

It does not adequately address the problems with property rights created by previous PC governments. It only addresses one of three controversial pieces of legislation, which some of my colleagues on this side of House have raised and which we'll raise again so that members on the other side of the House will fully understand the issues and the challenges that we have with the current piece of legislation. Three pieces of legislation that it does not address: the first is Bill 19, Land Assembly Project Area Act; the second is Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, which created seven regional plans that trumped all other legislation and concentrated the power to do this in the hands of the cabinet; and Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, which allowed the cabinet to define what was considered essential infrastructure.

Now, we don't believe that this bill goes far enough. Many of the commitments our party made regarding land rights five years ago remain unaddressed. We're especially disappointed that the Electric Statutes Act, amended by the controversial Bill 50 in 2009, has not been addressed. By failing to address this bill, the government continues to prioritize the interests of industry, in this example electricity, over the rights of Alberta landowners. Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, allowed cabinet to define what was considered essential transmission infrastructure. This cut out the Alberta Utilities Commission, which, along with other organizations, developed a process for project assessment decisions in order to ensure they were done in a fair and scientific manner. These processes have now been bypassed, and the power to make a decision rests with cabinet.

We sounded the alarm bells years ago, Madam Speaker, of the dangers of putting this much power into the hands of a few. Again, to this day we see that the power doesn't rest in the masses, in Albertans, which is where it should be. The fact is that you have a cabinet, a handful of individuals, that is making decisions that affect millions of Albertans but hundreds if not thousands of landowners.

When introduced, we opposed this bill because it failed to protect consumers from the overbuilding of unnecessary transmission lines, the cost of which would be passed on to Albertans. We also opposed this decision because it resulted in a reduced voice for consumers and for Albertans, consumers who, as a result of massive overbuilding of transmission lines, would be paying for the very decisions they had no say in.

In response to Bill 50 we made the following commitments: all utility projects would be subject to full public scrutiny and a full regulatory process, power customers must not be required to fund utility projects by for-profit companies, and the protection of power consumers' interests and an end to electricity deregulation.

This government many years ago promised that deregulation would pass savings on to Albertans. Well, that's quite funny, Madam Speaker, because the opposite happened, where Alberta went from one of the most competitive jurisdictions for electricity rates to one of the most expensive through privatization and decentralizing our electricity.

Since the passage of Bill 50 it's become clear that many of the issues we feared would occur as a result of the legislation are coming to fruition. Again, as I said, costs have been rising in Alberta. Between 2002 and 2011 there was a 384 per cent increase in transmission prices for consumers. Over a two-month period in 2011, between September and November, transmission prices rose by a whopping 42 per cent. In 2011 Edmonton and Calgary had the highest electricity bills of all major Canadian cities. In April 2011 a monthly bill for 1,000 kilowatts a month was over $250 before tax. In Edmonton it was approximately $240. In 2011 Albertans paid $60 more for 659 kilowatts in 30 days than people in Saskatchewan and Ontario and almost $100 more than in B.C. As you can see from these examples, we've yet to see the advantage to the deregulation and privatization of our electrical grid.

On March 20, 2012, the NDP tabled a document recounting the struggles of Albertan families to pay their mounting and in many cases extremely high electricity bills. Well, here's something interesting, Madam Speaker, just a nice little juxtaposition. While Albertan families struggled to pay for their electricity bills, the CEOs of Enbridge and EPCOR made millions. Here's an example. In 2012 Enbridge's CEO made over $12 million, in 2012 TransAlta's CEO made $5.6 million, and in 2009 EPCOR's CEO made $2.6 million.

In 2012 two companies applied for approval to export energy to the U.S. Alberta was already planning on spending over $16 billion on transmission, $11 billion more than Ontario and $12 billion more than B.C., despite having a smaller population and lower electricity generation.

So, Madam Speaker, there's evidence that overbuilding of transmission lines is occurring, and this can be tied directly to Bill 50, which this PC government has continued to fail to address. We've seen the effects of the deregulation of electricity and the overbuilding of transmission lines done through this act and many others on electricity bills in Alberta.

The bill represents more broken PC promises. Despite considerable commitments made by the Premier during his leadership campaign and the Speech from the Throne, Bill 1 only begins to scratch the surface of issues pertaining to property rights that previous PC governments created. By failing to address other property rights issues like Bill 50, this PC government's new management continues to put their corporate friends ahead of Albertan families. For us, again, Madam Speaker, this bill, although a step in the right direction, is far from adequate in addressing some of the failed pieces of legislation which, to be honest, have an enormous impact on Albertan families, on the cost of electricity on their monthly bills.

It's for those reasons that very reluctantly will I support Bill 1. I believe that there will be amendments coming forward to try to strengthen this and address some of the other bills that, quite honestly, Madam Speaker, have utterly failed Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members interested in questioning or commenting?

Seeing none, I'll move to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. I'm not going to marginalize the necessity and the importance of this bill and how thrilled I am that this government now has brought this bill forward. This is a good bill. It is a just bill.

I want to make it absolutely clear that probably 15 out of the 17 Wildrose Party MLAs that were elected in 2012 were elected on a kill Bill 19, kill Bill 36, kill Bill 50 platform. You can still go out in some of those ridings today and see the signs: kill Bill 19, 36, and 50. You can go down to Medicine Hat and see those signs in the rural areas. You can go out into the various corners of this province, and you will see those signs. So to stand up here and say, "that's not good": I can't agree with that. That, to me, is disingenuous. I travelled this province on "kill Bill 19," and I'm going to explain in a minute what it means.

The other members have been bringing up a number of different bills, particularly the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I'm going to tell you something. When that member voted for Bill 2, that member voted to remove a landowner's right to notification. He voted to remove the landowners' right to be informed and have an opportunity to get the relevant information from an applicant doing oil and gas drilling on their property. He also voted in that same bill to remove a landowner's right to cross-examine and to remove a landowner's right to a hearing, never mind that the public interest test had been removed from legislation in that bill. Thank you very much. So when that member stands up and says that he stands up for property rights, I don't agree. I think you missed the boat.

But I will tell you that these members who say that somehow Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, overrides this don't understand how these bills work or what these bills were designed to do. Let me explain. There were two bills that actually caused some harm. Maybe only one bill. That would be the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, when we overbuilt the electricity system. All consumers are now paying more. That's an issue unto itself.

The other bill is Bill 24, the carbon capture and sequestration. That is an interesting bill because it categorically just removed all the pore space below the surface of all lands and gave that ownership to government. Now, did that cause harm to any property owners? That's a debatable issue. The fact is that what should happen is that if we are going to go through with carbon capture and storage, which I disagree with, then we should take issue with how we're going to do it and take it case by case versus this arbitrary bill that just took ownership of all the pore space below everybody's land.

I'll talk about that bill later if somebody asks me questions, but what I want to talk about is why Bill 19 is important. This idea that it was not proclaimed is moot, is a ridiculous argument. This government has no record right now of abusing anybody with these bills other than the overcharging for Bill 50. Even the Land Stewardship Act. What we know about the Land Stewardship Act is that the government cancelled some oil leases. But what we don't know and what we don't have any evidence of is: were those companies justly paid for losing those leases? We don't know. What we do know when we look at Bill 19 and Bill 36 is that they gave the government the power to abuse. The fact that the bill had not been proclaimed is a moot point in the sense that that bill is law. Just because the government had not put it into force yet doesn't change anything. It had to go.

This bill, Bill 1, makes that now a moot point. It is gone. That is a good thing for landowners, and landowners can take some sort of comfort that that bill now is gone.

Now, let's explain what was actually in that bill. What did Bill 19 do? Well, actually, what it was creating was utility corridors. I'm actually in favour of utility corridors, but that bill went so far overboard as far as I was concerned. I went around this province. I debated the Minister of Energy. I debated the Minister of Transportation. I debated the Minister of Municipal Affairs and many other ministers who are not here today on this very bill. Kill Bill 19.

So what did it do? Why should the public have been concerned about it? Well, what it did is that Bill 19 usurped or overrode section 5 of the Government Organization Act, something that dealt with restricted development areas. It was already in law. They were called RDAs. What those RDAs did is that they took land in the public interest. When the government took responsibility for those restricted development areas, there was a mandate – and it still is in law right now – that the government had to protect the aquifer, that the government had to protect the natural state of the land, that the government had to protect deterioration of the property. So there were all these protections built into this section 5 of the Government Organization Act when the government implemented restricted development areas.

Bill 19 was introduced, and what it did is basically say that for the purpose of this act – and this is in interesting definition, Madam Speaker – a project is a public project if the project is "designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council as a public project." That thing just goes around in a circle, around and around and around. It's like: what the heck are we talking about?

Basically, what happened is that they took the various sections of that restricted development area in the Government Organization Act, and no longer did the government have a mandate to protect the land. What the government actually did by twisting a few words around was that it said that it could control, restrict, prohibit, or approve any kind of use on a land. It said that it could control, restrict, prohibit, or exercise any kind of power referred to in regulations. It said that it could control, restrict, prohibit, or approve the dumping, deposit, or emission of any substance, a complete change over the language of the restricted development areas. That is significant on landowner rights and protecting their land if their property is taken for a utility corridor.

More importantly, what happened in that bill is that property owners lost the ability to be notified. That got removed from the act under Bill 19, and more importantly the government gave themselves the authority to act as if it was the Queen's Bench. Where it once had to take an enforcement order to court, it no longer had to do that. It could issue an enforcement order as if it were a judgment of the Queen's Bench, and that enforcement order could carry with it a $100,000 fine and two years in jail. The interesting thing about the act is that it specifically stated initially that the Expropriation Act will not apply.

Now, all these various sections are very similar to the various sections you would find in the Land Stewardship Act, but as the government has stated, when we go to committee, we are going to be able now to address some of these issues because that is what the Property Rights Advocate has asked the government to do in its report. So hopefully, we are actually on the right track. I've got no evidence to suggest that we are not at this very moment in time. The best thing that can happen for property owners is that Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, is finally killed. Bill 1 kills it. That is a good thing, and the thousands of Wildrose Party members that signed up to the Wildrose Party for this very reason need to know that, that this new Premier has finally listened, has finally heard, and has finally acted. I have to tell you that after so many years up there arguing against Bill 19, after just two years in here arguing about Bill 19 and these many other acts, I do not marginalize this. This is a good thing for property rights. I'm going to support this bill, and I'm going to vote yes for this bill each time it comes up for a reading, and I'm not going to be hypocritical about it whatsoever.

When we get down into talking about the Electric Statutes Amendments Act and what that has done, I will tell you something here right now. They know nothing about it like most people in this Assembly know nothing about it. It is an act that caused us serious pain as far as the rates we're paying, but it is a complicated piece of legislation in what it did technically.

With that, I fully hope that when we get into committee, we deal with Bill 24 and the carbon sequestration. I think it is absolutely possible for the minister and for the Premier to actually kill that bill also because, one, I really don't think carbon capture is going to get off the ground. When you actually take a look at the amount of money we're going to spend on that, I just don't think that's worth half the money that we're going to spend. What we need to do is actually reduce our CO₂ emissions, verifiable reductions to make some sort of statement to the world, and when we do that, what we should do is take a look at this overreaching project and say: "You know what? That is really not worth it." There are other ways that are far more effective, that are cheaper, that cost a whole lot less, that can do what we need to do, and if we can have a policy that gets us into renewable energies, we don't need that act whatsoever. That is one act that can be removed.

Unfortunately, the Land Stewardship Act cannot be repealed without causing great harm to the public, I believe, right now. Just like we repealed Bill 50, but the lines are built. Unfortunately, we're going to pay for that. The money has been spent. So to tear down those towers today would just be adding on to the waste. To repeal Bill 36, the Land Stewardship Act, today would cause tremendous complications because we have created the land-use framework and we have applied the Land Stewardship Act to bring that into force, and there are so many factors and so many other bills that have been amended as a result. The only possible, feasible thing to do with the Land Stewardship Act is to revisit the various sections of the act that absolutely need to be changed to give something very simple that the public wants, due process. This is all about process.

Landowners understand that property will be taken for various public interest projects. Nobody wants to give up their property to a power line. Nobody wants to give up their property to a road. But people with common sense – and a whole bunch of Albertans have common sense – understand the necessity in the public interest. What they want is a fair and just process, that they are treated and compensated in a just manner. That's it. They need that process.

If we have the opportunity to look at Bill 36 and amend section 9(2), to amend section 11(1), to basically repeal section 13, to amend sections 15(1), 15(3), 15(4), 17(4), 19, and 26 of that bill, that party will have taken the wind out of that party and taken back the rural areas. That's something that I hope you will pay attention to because the Premier has said that he wants to take property rights and make that a fundamental shift and a fundamental change. This is the map on how to do it. Address these bills, address the inconsistency in these bills. Give property owners due process. Give them a fair process. Make them whole if their property is taken. That's all they want. They want to see it in law. If you give that to them, you will have them supporting you. That's how it works. Killing Bill 19 starts that process right now, today.

I am going to stand up, and I am going to vote loud for this bill. I will tell you this. There can be giggles in here, but I've spoken to thousands of Albertans – and I mean thousands of Albertans, Madam Speaker – and I have seen the halls line up with people buying Wildrose Party memberships as a direct result of talking about this bill. Now this is going to be gone when we finally get done third reading, and these people and all Albertans need to know that this is a major step forward in turning this government around. I'd like to think the opposition had a lot to do with it. I think we did have a lot to do with it. But it's absolutely clear to me that when this new Premier came in, this new Premier was listening to Albertans. He did hear Albertans talk about this, and he's acting about this.

An Hon. Member: They're not going to take you.

Mr. Anglin: You know, I can take the jiving from the Wildrose, but I will tell you something . . . [interjections]. Thank you very much. Well, nobody recorded my meetings out there, I don't think. Otherwise I'd be showing them.

The fact is that this bill is not a small step. It is a major step. I understand how the process works. I know members over there supported this bill, and they voted for it. But I also know that two Wildrose Party members were over there when they voted on this and supported it. I also know the history of who voted for what and who actually stood up for property rights. There were many nights out there that we discussed this bill.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Anglin: How much? I'll tell you how much. In the two years prior to the Wildrose getting elected, I spoke in 91 communities and I did 266 town hall meetings, and that doesn't even count the years before that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who wish to make a comment or ask questions to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 1 in second reading?

Mr. Oberle: I call the question, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In consideration of the hour and the progress made this evening, I'm happy to move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:55 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to always do the right thing as we journey through this maze of life for we are but servants chosen by others to bear the duties, the challenges, and the burdens of public life. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three special visitors from the vibrant Ukrainian community of our great province. They are in Edmonton at the Legislature to commemorate the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act. Seated in the Speaker's gallery is Dr. Walter Zaryckyj, executive director for the Center for US-Ukrainian Relations, who is here from New York and our guest from the ceremony this afternoon. Also here are Olesia Luci-Andryjowycz, president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council, and Slavka Shulakewych, the provincial co-ordinator of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress. I would ask them all to rise now and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. It's an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you members of the Punjabi Media Association of Alberta. Sitting in your gallery are Mr. Gursharan Buttar, newly minted president of the association; Rajwinder Klair, member; Kulmit Sangha, vice-president of the association; Gurbhinder Sandhu, general secretary of the association; Parduman Gill, member of the association; Navtej Bains, member; Ranjit Power, also a member. I would also like to applaud them for raising $65,000 and tons of food for Edmonton's Food Bank. This was done as part of the birthday celebration of our first Sikh guru, Guru Nanak Dev Ji, and his teachings of work, worship, and donating to charities. I would like to send a huge thank you to the Sikh community for their generous support. To witness this celebration, Mr. Speaker, were yourself and the members for Edmonton-Manning and Edmonton-Mill Woods. They have all risen. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Let us go on with school groups, starting with the hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to welcome from St. Theresa Catholic middle school in my constituency of Sherwood Park 55 visitors in both galleries, and they are accompanied today by their teachers, Luba Eshenko, Cynthia Metzger, Mike Miskiw, Theresa Walker, and their helpers, Mr. Curtis Danilak, Mr. Brent McEwan, Ms Kelsey Tucker. Our good friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake's baby sister teaches at this school as well, which should be noted. Anyway, if you could please rise, and the Assembly will give you the warm traditional welcome. Thanks for being here today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you 15 students from NAIT, including Ms Lamya Asiff, Dylan Wolfinger, Mike Gough, Cayla Ellsworth, Kennedy Pawluk, Jeff Elkerbout, Chris Mullen, Joel Barlund, Jayson Shermack, Taylor Braat, Alyssa Petryshyn, Kalie MacIntosh, Brett Bohl, and Marika Friesen. If they could all stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 15 members of the Lung Association of Alberta and Northwest Territories. November is Lung Awareness Month, and 2014 marks the 75th anniversary of the Lung Association of Alberta and Northwest Territories. Representing the association, they are here today to bring awareness to respiratory illness and lung disease. Earlier today they demonstrated a spirometry test here in the Legislature, which I think I failed, for the benefit of educating me and others present about the Lung Association. I ask that each individual rise when I call their name and receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly: Leigh Allard, Gina Ibach, Nina Snyder, Jeff Cummings, Kristin Matthews, Dr. Marc Bibeau, Dr. Mohit Bhutani, Dr. Mark Anselmo, Dr. Mike Stickland, Darlene Gallant, Joan Branscombe, Alfred Branscombe, Tim Penstone, Susan Penstone, and Katelyn Penstone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health, your second introduction.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of visitors from the strategic policy branch of Alberta Health. The strategic policy branch creates strategic policy capacity within the department through policy development, policy co-ordination, and other corporate functions to support department priorities and activities and drive out work under the department's strategic directions. The branch also co-ordinates and facilitates Alberta Health's activities and engagements with intergovernmental partners to advance strategic priorities and influence pan-Canadian discussions on health care issues. Please give them the customary Assembly warm welcome as I call out their names. Joining us here today are Meghann Eagle, Jeanie Casault, Sue Gadag, Brenna Smith, Rhianne McKay, Karen Lamminen, and James Biggs.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce 18 individuals who this morning graduated from peace officer training. These new occupational health and safety peace officers will join their colleagues in enforcing this province's workplace safety rules. Their work helps to ensure that Albertans return home safely at the end of every workday. Five officers from today's graduating class have joined us, and I ask that they rise and remain standing as I introduce them to you and through you to all members of this Assembly: Mitch Bourgeault, Shirley Green, Carol Southwood, Randy Gauthier, Rob LeRouzic. I'm pleased to introduce them to you, and I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly some Albertans making a difference in the fight against multiple sclerosis in Alberta. Today I am pleased to introduce Mrs. Julie Kelndorfer, her son Joshua, and Mr. Neil Pierce, representing the MS Society, Alberta and Northwest Territories division. Mrs. Kelndorfer is an Albertan living with MS, and on November 5 I was honoured to share the podium with her and announce our government's support for a $1.4 million MS research fund. At that announcement Julie spoke with passion not about how MS affects her but about how it impacts her loved ones, especially her son Joshua. She is the director of government and community relations for the MS Society of Canada. With her today is Mr. Neil Pierce, president of the MS Society, Alberta and Northwest Territories division. He played an important role in contributing to our government's Way Forward plan for addressing MS in Alberta. I ask my guests to rise and for all the members of this Assembly to give them the traditional warm greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Mark Scholz. Mark is president of the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, an association that represents all of the land-based drilling operations in Canada and 98 per cent of the service rig operations. Their mission is to be the unified voice of the Canadian drilling and service rig industry, promoting safer and more efficient operations through advocacy, communications, products, and services. I look forward to meeting with the association later today to discuss the 2015 drilling forecast and how together we can move this critical industry forward. Mr. Scholz is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that he rise and that we give him the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Young: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five passionate advocates for seniors in our province and members of the Elder Advocates of Alberta. I would like to thank Ruth Adria, founder of Elder Advocates, as well as four other members of her organization – Mary Pelech, Kerry Modin, Barry Snell, and Shauna McHarg – for all the work they do for seniors in this province. I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you. It's a privilege to introduce an extraordinary and gutsy constituent of Edmonton-South West, probably one of the most positive girls I've ever met. Now, Mr. Speaker, she's overcome a lot to have this positive attitude. When she was five years old she started having symptoms of Crohn's disease. However, she wasn't diagnosed until her family took her to the Stollery hospital emergency room on Christmas Eve of 2012. This began a year of blood work, vitamins, trying different medications, and steroids.

This may stop many girls in their tracks; however, not this girl. She has incredible determination and spirit. She has since done everything from raising money for Crohn's with a lemonade stand with her brother to being honorary chair of the Gutsy Walk, which took place June 8 in Rundle park and raised close to $160,000. She is aware of the struggles ahead of her and asks questions about her disease daily, but she's been able to bounce back into activities like soccer and swimming with the same vigour she once had, and nothing makes her happier. Mr. Speaker, this girl is Grace Whitfield, and it is my absolute honour to call her a fighter and a friend. I ask her and her father, Wade; mother, Christa; and brother Tyler to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, did you have another introduction? Perhaps later? Okay. Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees pay and social equity committee. This committee focuses on the crucial task of lobbying the government to enact legislation which will force employers to pay equal salaries for equal work. Many of the classifications that are undervalued and underpaid are traditionally women's work – for example, house-keeping, secretarial, and child care – leading to an ever-growing pay gap in Alberta. Pay inequality leads to social inequality, as we have seen. I would like to ask my guests to rise as I call their names: LeeAnn Boudreau, Rhonda Chatman, Phyllis Faulkner, Terry Nicholson-Knudson, Val Whelen, and Ginger Woeppel. I'd like my colleagues in the Assembly to join me in welcoming them to our Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta and Ukraine have ties that are held firm by blood, history, and culture. There are communities throughout our great province that have a proud Ukrainian heritage, and Alberta has a large Ukrainian population that is proud to share their culture with us as they embrace their Albertan identity.

I myself am a Ukrainian-Albertan, and it is a true honour for me to acknowledge the sixth anniversary of the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act. Passed unanimously in 2008, the act commemorates and remembers the millions of Ukrainian men, women, and children who were forced into starvation and death between 1932 and 1933 by the barbaric and brutal man-made famine of Joseph Stalin's Soviet regime.

Known as Holodomor, which means extermination by means of starvation in Ukrainian, this forced famine cannot be called anything but an act of genocide. The stories are horrifying. Farmers, citizens of villages and towns were forced to fill unrealistic and exorbitant government quotas, that left them without food to feed themselves and their families. Those who refused saw their crops, livestock, food, and homes confiscated.

Those that attempted to hold anything back, whether it was a handful of grain or a stalk of wheat, were arrested, exiled, or even executed. People starved to death, dying in the streets and in their homes. Through it all soldiers patrolled the borders, ensuring that no one could search for food elsewhere. A little-known chapter of human history, this dark and evil act must never be repeated and must always be remembered.

In Alberta the fourth Saturday of every November is known as Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day. On this day we remember the fallen victims and those who survived. I urge every member here and all Albertans to remember this important day. Doing so will remind us of our great fortune to be granted such freedom in Canada, with a powerful respect for human rights and multiculturalism. In remembering this tragedy, we can ensure a bright and fully accepting future for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Misericordia Community Hospital

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A chicken sandwich, a warm bowl of soup, a bag of chips, a chance to feel normal: this is what a visit to the cafeteria means for patients either strung to a hospital bed for days or weeks or filled with anxiety awaiting treatment in the emergency room. I've seen it first-hand. On more than one instance I've stared into the eyes of a friend or a loved one, their eyes exhausted from all the checkups, the pokes, the prodding, and all the questions. Having the opportunity to escape the sounds of a busy hospital floor and retreat to the normalcy of the cafeteria room, fondly referred to as the kitchen table, where they can order food and see families gather around them, has proven to be nothing more than therapeutic.

That's why when the ceiling was literally falling in on the cafeteria at the Misericordia hospital, it meant more than just a day free of comfort food. The third floor in over a year did more than just close off sections of the hospital and impact the emergency room; it pulled away a critical resource for family members, patients, and front-line workers. While doctors and nurses were pushed to the brink, patients were forced to stay away, and families were stuck in the hospital watching a building literally bursting at the seams.

With a billion dollars spent on sole-source contracts and $250 million spent on consultants for things like executive coaching, the fact that this government has left almost $50 million on the table in deferred maintenance costs at the Misericordia is nothing more than disgraceful, and it's hurting patients. Alberta Health Services has listed this as a priority, but for some reason it still hasn't been addressed. Mr. Speaker, more inaction on the Misericordia is nothing short of irresponsible. The patients are exhausted, scared, and looking for relief, and they deserve more than this.

The Speaker: I understand we're going to Calgary-West next, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Moosehide Campaign

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women we mark the start of an initiative to address and prevent violence against aboriginal women and children in Alberta. Today the Alberta government in partnership with the Alberta Native Friendship Centres Association announced the Alberta launch of the Moosehide campaign.

The campaign asks aboriginal and nonaboriginal men alike to wear swatches of moosehide as a demonstration of their commitment to end violence toward aboriginal women and children. As a father of a Métis daughter I am moved and proud to stand here today and see my colleagues wearing these swatches. These swatches pledge to make Alberta a safer place for not only aboriginal women and children but for women and children in every community.

Our government has announced a $75,000 grant to support the Moosehide campaign. This will expand Ontario's I Am a Kind Man project into our local communities. I Am a Kind Man is a First Nations run program that works with community members to help instill traditional aboriginal values among men and boys. The vast majority of offenders who commit acts of violence on women are men. We as men need to emphasize our positive and active role in both addressing this important issue and how we are working hard to eliminate violence against women. Aboriginal women are three times more likely to experience violence than other women. Stats provided by the Native Women's Association of Canada show that although these women make up 4 per cent of the population, they make up 16 per cent of all murdered women on record, and this is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Today our government has asked Alberta to take action and join the Moosehide campaign. Together we can make Alberta a safer place, where aboriginal women and children can thrive and live fulfilling lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Sonshine House

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sonshine house in Calgary-Currie is a second-stage shelter that provides a one-year residential and counselling program for women and children that are fleeing domestic violence and abuse. Sonshine house ensures that women and their children are kept safe from life-threatening, abusive situations. A second-stage shelter differs from our province's emergency shelters and transitional shelters in that a second-stage shelter provides long-term residence and counselling that aims at assisting women end that cycle of violence and reintegrate into their communities before becoming a domestic homicide statistic.

Unlike emergency shelters, Sonshine is funded independent of government. In 2004 donors came forward and helped Sonshine purchase and renovate a residential shelter. In 2007 a 24-unit, fully furnished suite facility was opened. Sonshine is currently working diligently to raise the remaining $200,000 in order to complete a child therapy program, the only program in our province that deals solely with trauma associated with children who experience violence in the home.

Mr. Speaker, the only way we will break the inheritance of the cycle of violence is to treat the psychological consequences that mark our children. We know that children who have been exposed to family violence are more vulnerable to delinquency and social, emotional, psychological, and cognitive problems that have long-term effects on not only our children but on our society, which leads me to an important point. Second-stage shelters are an important part of ending domestic violence in our province because they not only remove women and children from dangerous and violent situations; they allow them to move past these situations completely. So I am committing myself to encouraging a shift in prioritizing second-stage shelters and wholeheartedly join those at Sonshine in this quest.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank them for the work that they do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Health System Administration

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has asked Albertans to judge his government on its progress. Well, Alberta Health Services was in front of the Public Accounts Committee today. What they said was enough to make Albertans queasy. There has been no progress at AHS. Wildrose has for years pointed out that the senior layers of management at AHS are bloated with executives. AHS said that they'd fix it. They announced that 70 VPs were being let go. Well, today we learned that they were just retitled. It seems that management has spent more time in the last year dreaming up new job titles than fixing the system. Does the Premier think that's progress?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the government is committed to a patient-focused health care system. It's for that reason that we have a new minister who is very hands on, who has the courage and the vision to move forward to deal with some of the issues that we face and the challenges that we face in terms of the existing health care delivery system. I have full confidence in this minister. He's on top of his portfolio, he knows exactly what he's doing, and he'll deal with these issues.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've never heard that before.

The senior management layers at AHS are a mess. Former CEOs Chris Eagle and Duncan Campbell were paid as advisers, but there's no evidence that they did any work. Former CFO Allaudin Merali was the proverbial fox looking after the financial henhouse. Between them these failed execs took home almost $2.3 million this year. Today we also learned that Covenant Health is restructuring and laying off five front-line long-term care workers. Is the Premier proud that the health system is better at paying executives to do nothing than looking after our seniors?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, it's very important to understand that Covenant Health is an independent organization that delivers tremendous health care to Albertans, whether it's in continued care or acute care. They're doing all they can to make sure they run an efficient, effective operation. I think they're allowed to operate their business the way they think they should. We support that.

Thank you.

Ms Smith: I think the Health minister misses the point. AHS management is a mess. We were promised efficiency; we've gotten everything but. There's been a revolving door at the top, and a lack of progress shows it. In its 2013 business plan AHS promised that they would keep staff growth to an absolute minimum, zero, in fact. Well, the 2014 AHS annual report shows that this year AHS managed to add a thousand new employees. Does the Health minister have any idea how many of these new workers were doctors and nurses and how many were just more bureaucrats?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services is committed to delivering the best health service in this country. Our province is growing by a hundred thousand people per year. We need to make sure that we have adequate service in all our various facilities across the province. This is a very difficult task as it's hard to find a variety of new people to do those jobs as our province is growing so quickly. We will do all we can to ensure that every Albertan is taken care of in an effective way. Our health care system is the best.

The Speaker: Second set of main questions.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this Premier asked Albertans to judge its government on its progress, once again, so it's now time for some progress questions on seniors' care. Wildrose has repeatedly called this government to account for its divorce by nursing home policy. This government takes married seniors in long-term care and forces them into separate nursing homes up to a hundred kilometres away from their home. This is devastating for seniors and for their families. The government keeps promising to end this callous practice. Has there been any actual progress made?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that Albertans have been very clear that they want a stronger emphasis on seniors and seniors' care in this province, and we've got a Premier and a government that's listening. [interjection] If anyone is paying attention, they would see that even at the time that the Premier was reducing the size of cabinet by 30 per cent, he created a stand-alone Seniors ministry and gave that Seniors ministry purview over the housing portfolio from Municipal Affairs and from the affordable supportive living initiative. [interjections] Through the work that we're going to do with those entities and with Health Services, we're going to be able to do some great things on this file.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's customary to give the person who has the floor your full attention without interruptions. I didn't hear any interruptions when the hon. leader was asking the question. It would be very nice if we had no interruptions when someone is trying to answer it.

First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's like it's the first time we ever asked this question. We keep hearing the government say that they've made progress on the divorce by nursing home issue, but we get letters that show that this is clearly not the case. All over Alberta there is either a 100-kilometre rule or an 80-kilometre rule. Surely, one of our several hundred AHS bureaucrats can figure out how to keep couples together. This isn't rocket science. Why hasn't the government made any progress on this simple management task?

Mr. J. Johnson: My understanding is that there is progress being made. There is more progress to be made, no question about that. AHS has eliminated the 100-mile rule with respect to allocation of seniors. Mr. Speaker, if you look at some of the things we've accomplished just in the last two months, including the $180 million for 1,500 ASLI beds and long-term care beds; the $70 million for safety with respect to our seniors' facilities; Willow Square, the $20 million announcement that we just made; the $160 million announcement for rural lodge renewals – this is exactly one of the issues that the Premier has asked us to try to tackle. We're doing exactly that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, he's not answering the question because they haven't changed the policy.

Wildrose also first pointed out that our seniors in long-term care only get one bath a week. Convicted murderers are treated better than that. The government has promised to change this. Apparently the new standard is supposed to be two times a week, but it's not enforced, Mr. Speaker. Can someone over there tell us how many seniors are actually getting their second bath or shower in a week? Has there been any progress?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of things with respect to progress.

You know, back to the previous question, one of the main issues that we need to tackle is the space. We need more supply. We need more places so that seniors can age with their spouses in the community that they helped build and with the families that they've raised. That's one of the reasons we're making such great investments in seniors' space, and I'd hope that the opposition would join us in helping move that forward.

With respect to the other issue, obviously, it's one that we want to tackle, and we'll tackle that with the space.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, third and final set of main questions.

Ms Smith: The question was on baths, Mr. Speaker, where you get washed with water.

Long-term and Continuing Care

Ms Smith: This government is long on talk but short on progress. The Premier and the Health minister promised 194 new continuing care spaces in the middle of the by-elections. The problem is that almost three-quarters of those spaces weren't actually new. It was all election posturing. The government has now promised that in three years there will be 6,400 more seniors' beds than there were in 2010. Now, I find this very hard to believe. Can the Premier tell us how he will achieve this, when his team so far has failed so miserably?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the hon. member to consider the facts as opposed to the rhetoric surrounding this. I mean, there is a new Seniors minister.

In addition, in the time since I've become the Premier, we have put out a proposal call for 1,500 new continuing care beds under the ASLI program. In the time since I have become the Premier, we have invested an additional $160 million in rural lodges. In the same time there have been investments in the rural lodges, to ensure that they're safe and meet fire code, of an additional $70 million dollars. This government is acting on the priorities of seniors.

Ms Smith: Speaking of confusing rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, the Premier and the Health minister have been using the terms "long-term care" nursing beds and "continuing care" beds interchangeably, but they must know that these terms have very different meanings under the law. Long-term care nursing beds require round-the-clock nursing care provided by LPNs and RNs; continuing care beds don't. Are they using these terms interchangeably to hide the fact that they know they won't make any progress on building long-term care spaces?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that the Premier has us doing is planning for the future. As we allocate funding, and as we announce these beds, and as we invite proposals to build these beds, all these beds and these units are being built to the B2 standards so that that room, that physical room, can be used as a long-term care room. [interjections] It's the care that will change over time depending on what the client needs. So we are in effect building long-term care beds, although Health will decide how the beds get funded and what health care actually gets delivered in that room. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, especially over here, do you find it so necessary to interject all the time? I thought we were setting a new example and a new tone. I see it happening on this side of the House, which is very refreshing – thank you – and I don't see it happening over there. If you want, I'll name names and I'll take further actions. [interjections]

Please. Please, Edmonton-Calder. If you persist, I'm going to invite you to do it outside. [interjection]

Hon. Member for Airdrie, any more out of you, and you'll be out too. [interjection] You're darn right you will.

Now, let's return this to some semblance of decorum like we have had in the past several days. We got lots of business done. Let's continue on.

Final supplemental, hon. leader.

Long-term and Continuing Care (continued)

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds to me like the minister needs to look up the definitions in the legislation. These issues matter because having long-term care nursing patients in acute-care hospitals costs our health system $400 million a year. The Canadian Institute for Health Information has pointed out that Alberta has underinvested in long-term nursing care and that that has caused us to have the highest acute-care costs in Canada. Getting this right would be good for our seniors, for their families, and for our fiscal situation. Why isn't the Premier making any progress at all on this?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, our Premier took action immediately upon noticing and finding out that there were so many people in acute-care beds that should be in long-term care. We have put in place a program to move 740 people from acute care into long-term care. We're investing, as the minister said, $180 million. We are committed to ensuring that people are in the right kind of care, and we're also ensuring that we meet all standards of care for everyone in long-term care with proper RN and LPN care. This government is committed to making sure our seniors are taken care of in the proper way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Public Appointment Process

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new PC Premier isn't the first to appoint his buddies to plum patronage positions, but he could do the right thing and be the last if he answers the Liberal call for the establishment of an independent appointments commission. The Premier should be familiar with this concept as he was a cabinet minister when the Conservatives brought it in federally in 2006. To the Premier: will you do the right thing and support the creation of an independent appointments commission as you did before, or will you keep the power to yourself with your inner-circle PC cabinet?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a Public Service Commissioner that fulfills a very important role in terms of the quality of appointments that we have at the government.

But I would take issue with the intimation by my hon. friend about the quality of people. People that we have appointed to positions are absolute high-quality people. I refer, for example, to the government's senior representative in the Asia-Pacific, someone who has been a distinguished Canadian diplomat who has served this country with distinction and is now serving the people of Alberta, fulfilling the responsibility to govern our offices across the Asia-Pacific. Those are the kind of people that we're looking for, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Premier should listen better. Nobody talked about the quality of the people, just the quality of the appointment process.

As part of his plan to erase all traces of the sins and excesses of the previous PC administration, the Premier said that all future public appointments – that's after the three political ones he made – will be made based on merit. That's a nice sentiment. The PCs have a long history of making these types of promises publicly and then doing whatever they want in private. To the Premier: will you take real steps to prevent patronage by letting an independent commission manage the public appointments process in Alberta? Yes or no?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I say, we have a Public Service Commissioner, who is an excellent person, that fills that role with real dignity.

I would point out to the hon. member that I've also struck a Premier's advisory committee on the civil service. There are two very well-respected Albertans, Mr. Ian Brodie and Oryssia Lennie, who have agreed to co-chair that. Discussions are under way now about the other panel members, and they will be focused on the quality of our civil service, renewal of the civil service, and making sure that here in Alberta we have an absolute top-flight civil service serving Albertans.

Dr. Sherman: I guess the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's former boss, Prime Minister Harper, said that a public appointments commission was an important step towards a more open, honest, and accountable government for Canadians. True to form, the Tories made nice speeches about accountability, but when it came time to keep their promises, they scrapped the whole thing. To the Premier: Actions speak louder than words. Do you still believe in the importance of an independent appointments commission? If so, will you adopt it as part of your much-delayed accountability act?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe in a high-quality public service. I believe in renewal of that service. It is for this reason that we have struck a Premier's advisory council on the civil service. Also, it's for this reason that Mr. Richard Dicerri was recruited to be the most senior civil servant in the province of Alberta, someone with more than five years' experience as a federal deputy minister, more than five years' experience as a deputy minister in other provinces, someone who has distinguished himself in the professionalism of the civil service that he has led. That's why he has been brought to bring leadership to our province.

Sexual Orientation and Human Rights

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this morning the Member for Little Bow explained to CBC listeners that he'd crossed the floor to the PC caucus because they are more socially conservative than the Wildrose. In the last provincial election the PC caucus ran on a platform of defending Alberta's LGBTQ community from the lake-of-fire Wildrosers. My question is to the Premier. For the sake of clarification for those Albertans concerned with protecting human rights, does this mean the Premier's new management is now pro lake of fire?

The Speaker: Does anyone care to try and answer?

Hon. ND leader, would you like to move on to your next question, please?

Ms Notley: All righty, then. I see the responsiveness commitment is going the way of the dodo bird, but anyway.

The Premier's record will only be defined by his actions. His cabinet selection is one such action. Now, the labour ministry deals with human rights in Alberta workplaces every day, but the Premier decided to appoint a minister who was recently forced to apologize for association with a group that describes sexual minority Albertans and their supporters as servants of Satan. To assure Albertans that this troubling record is not relevant to the Premier's willingness to defend LGBTQ rights, will he today commit to his support for Bill 202?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the most part those seem to be gratuitous attacks on the character of ministers of the Crown, which I don't think are warranted and befitting this Chamber. My record as somebody who has stood for the rights of gay and lesbian people in this country is very clear, and it is long standing. It is of 10 years' duration. It goes back many years, and I don't think I need to defend that in this Chamber.

Ms Notley: Albertans need to hear about your record here, not your record from a decade ago.

The Premier also had to decide who would be in charge of ensuring the education of Alberta's kids. In that case, he's appointed an Education minister who led a private college with a morality clause that discriminates against homosexuals and who was a leader within a church which equates bestiality with being in a same-sex relationship. So the welcoming home the Premier is providing to many extreme social Conservatives is troubling to many Albertans committed to protecting LGBTQ rights. Back again to the Premier: will you or will you not support Bill 202?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been very clear that we do not believe in intolerance in our education system and that we are supportive of the gay and lesbian community. We support safe, dignified, and respectful educational settings.

Once again, I think that the personal attacks which the member has offered are unfortunate. I don't think they're befitting of this province and of this Chamber, certainly. The Minister of Education has a long and distinguished career as someone who has been committed to public education in this province, Mr. Speaker, and I stand by him.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We're going to move on to Question 6, so please curtail and/or avoid totally any preambles to your supplementals. Let's go with Calgary-Fish Creek.

Alberta Health Services Executive Compensation

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last year Alberta Health Services awarded over $7 million in severances, and it's not just severances we have to worry about. Today we learned that when Dr. Chris Eagle left his post as CEO in October 2013, he was retitled as a special adviser, at the same bloated salary of $650,000. He didn't leave this position until last month, but according to health officials this morning, Dr. Eagle produced – and I'm going to quote – no deliverables that we could find his handprints on. To the minister: is the severance workaround an appropriate use of health care dollars?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I need to reiterate that the new CEO of Alberta Health Services has been very clear that dealing with severances will be done in the normal course of business, done properly in a way that she feels is effective, following along the model that this government and our Premier have set. Severance will be something that is done in a way that is done in other organizations, in a way that's respectful to Alberta Health Services and the citizens of Alberta.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that another former CEO of AHS, Mr. Duncan Campbell, was employed in that role for just one month before he was given a paid leave for the rest of the year, collecting a whopping $1 million in pay and severance for his one month at the helm of AHS, does this minister think this is an appropriate use of taxpayers' dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to reiterate that our new head of Alberta Health Services has put in place programs to ensure that Albertans get full value for all the people that work for us. We want to make sure that people are treated properly and effectively and Alberta citizens are taken care of the way they need to be taken care of.

Mrs. Forsyth: Will the minister commit today, along with the new CEO of Alberta Health Services, that there will be no more $1 million severances, no more sabbaticals, and no more golden handshakes?

Mr. Mandel: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Airdrie.

Violence against Aboriginal Women

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Violence has threatened the lives of our most vulnerable members of our communities: our mothers, our daughters, our aunts, our grandmothers, your wives. Alberta has the second-highest rate of self-reported spousal violence among the provinces, and aboriginal women are three times more likely to have acts of violence committed against them than other women. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Why is this government not moving beyond reporting statistics so that we can help stop the violence and actually show we care for my sisters?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for her distinguished career and for her advocacy on behalf of her people. I wear the moosehide swatch today because of my passion and my concern as well for these issues, which are long standing. We are focused on what we can do to improve the circumstances of aboriginal women. We are aware of the higher rates of poverty, the difficulties in terms of addiction and mental illness, the challenges of the lack of vocational opportunities, the lack of educational opportunities. These are matters which we can have an influence on, and this government is focused on doing exactly that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so glad that everybody has a swatch on today. I know it smells, but it'll disappear in a while.

My first supplemental, then, is to the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Awareness is great, but what other supports are there for women to get themselves out of the cycle of violence and, of course, the cycle of poverty?

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud as well to stand against violence that is perpetrated towards aboriginal women today, and I thank the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for that question. Maskwacis, for example, has a violence unit that is dealing with families that have had violence in their families. Ka Goola' in the Dene Tha' First Nation is a domestic violence program that's happening. Second Chance for Young Moms is in Enoch Cree Nation, just very close to Edmonton. There are many programs. There will be more as we get this awareness going.

Thank you.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's so great to see that the Aboriginal Relations department is doing a great job.

My second supplemental, then, is for the Minister of Human Services. What is your ministry doing to support aboriginal women who really, actually need help?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that immediate outreach is vital to women and children to keep them safe. The family violence information line is available any time, toll-free, province-wide in more than a 170 languages, including Blackfoot and Cree. There are also resources in Cree as well. We also have the safety net shelters in place that provide safe accommodations for women and children, and we have agreements in place with five First Nations on-reserve emergency shelters to serve off-reserve women and children.

Bethany Airdrie Care Centre Funding

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, while this government is running around pretending like the last five years just never happened, there are seniors across this province that are suffering and dying, in some cases, because of gross mismanagement. In Airdrie a series of draconian cuts to staffing for dementia and Alzheimer's patients at the Bethany care centre has resulted in many seniors not receiving regular baths and developing life-threatening bedsores because of it. This is third-world stuff, Premier. Third-world stuff. When are you going to restore the funding for staff back to the Bethany?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, Airdrie is a very important community. The facility itself needs to have some supports. We understand that there are some issues. We've asked Alberta Health Services to look into it, and we'll be able to report back in due time.

Mr. Anderson: Alberta seniors and their families, Mr. Speaker, don't want to hear any more empty rhetoric on this. We can't just sit idly by and watch seniors suffer and get sick and die prematurely because of some ridiculous new bureaucratic funding formula. I want a commitment, and I want it now. Are you going to restore the funding that was cut to the Bethany in Airdrie for these vulnerable seniors? Yes or no?

Mr. Mandel: As I've said before, Mr. Speaker, we'll keep that under advisement and will get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Minister, I have pictures of seniors with festering, open bedsores sitting on my desk right now. I don't want to, but with their families' permission I will table them in here. It is not pleasant to look at, and it is happening over and over and over again. They deserve an answer now, Mr. Speaker. Will you or will you not restore funding for the staffing cuts at Bethany, or are we going to have to do this the hard way?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I have great empathy and sympathy for the people that the hon. member has described. We believe that we'll do all we can to ensure that everyone in that facility will be taken care of properly. We've indicated that we will look into it and will under advisement find out the answer for him. We'll find out very quickly. We'll get back to the hon. member right away.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. COOL is a requirement by which all fresh meat entering the U.S. must indicate its country of origin. This subjects our products to unfair competition within that market as regulatory costs increase. This barrier has cost our livestock producers, including those from my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, hundreds of millions of dollars. Recently the WTO again ruled that COOL is inconsistent with U.S. trade obligations. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: despite this ruling, what can we expect from the U.S. which will serve to further stall an already . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

2:20

Mr. Olson: Thank you to the hon. member for the question, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question for our producers. We are becoming frustrated. We have now won three times at the World Trade Organization, and we're now waiting for the American trade representative to say whether they're going to appeal. They have till the end of this week to do that. Based on past experience, we're expecting that they will appeal, and that'll take us into yet another round of the process before we get to the endgame, which would be retaliation.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that for the third time, as you indicated, the World Trade Organization has sided with Canada on COOL and that things seem to be stalled, what are we doing as a province in order to move this forward?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we've been very active on this for the last several years. We've made numerous trips to the United States. We've been working with people on the American side because there are interests there who are also very frustrated; in fact, some are suing the U.S. Department of Agriculture over these rules. So we've been very active, and we continue to do that advocacy. This is now costing Canadian beef and pork producers over a billion dollars a year, and as I said, they are becoming very frustrated. Our representative in Washington, Rob Merrifield, is doing excellent advocacy work for us down there as well, and we're just going to continue with that.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the U.S. track record for complying with the World Trade Organization's rulings on this matter has been incredibly poor, what actions are we prepared to take in order to ensure that Alberta has a fair trade relationship?

Mr. Olson: Well, obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is an arrangement between countries, so Mexico and Canada are both working together on this. We're working very closely with our federal government, and we are nearing the point where we will be talking about retaliation. The Americans have been put on notice that this is what we will do. Some would say that they don't really believe that Canadians would do that, but we're telling them in no uncertain terms that we are encouraging our federal government to take retaliatory measures if this isn't resolved very soon.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Hehr: The more things change; the more things stay the same. I say this because despite this government's recognition that there was an affordable housing crisis in 2006, little has happened on the file. Homelessness is up in Edmonton, youth homelessness up 17 per cent. There are no places to rent. Fifty per cent of people in our shelters have full-time jobs. To the Minister of Seniors: why has there been so little progress on affordable housing? Please do not use the excuse that people keep moving here. They've been doing that since 1905.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there have been some good developments happen within the affordable housing file. I can tell you that since 2003 we've developed 17,000 units, at a cost of about 1 and a half billion dollars. Beyond that, we continue to work with all of the stakeholders and with the Ministry of Human Services on the homelessness file. One thing I would point out, which is in my mandate letter and should be encouraging to those that are interested and to all our municipalities, is that the Premier has set out as a priority for this province to develop a provincial housing strategy. That's one thing that is needed. We recognize that, and we're going to set forward on doing just that.

Mr. Hehr: Yet more people are homeless today than in 2006.

On March 19, 2007, the province released a report, completed by an all-party committee, titled Housing First, and 72 recommendations were included, like establishing a homeless and eviction prevention fund, increasing rent supplement programs, establishing an Alberta home ownership program, and ensuring adequate release of Crown land to municipalities. To the same minister: why has this government ignored the good work of the committee and failed to take reasonable measures to get a handle on this issue?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad he brought those up because some of those things have been done, and there has been progress made on that. In particular, you could take the Crown land release in Fort McMurray, and you could point to the announcement that we made here just this week, with the great leadership of the Premier and the Prime Minister, with respect to affordable housing and seniors' affordable housing in Fort McMurray in co-operation with CMHC and the Willow Square project there. There have been great efforts made in this area. We recognize that we have more to do, but in co-operation with our stakeholders on the ground, with Human Services, and under the direction of the Premier we're going to do it.

Mr. Hehr: Other measures included implementing a principle of inclusionary zoning to allow a broader mix of Albertans to the live in a neighbourhood and working with municipalities to legalize secondary suites. Instead of implementing this report, the government sat on its hands and failed to act, and we're at the same place, if not worse, that we were at in 2006. Will this minister commit to implementing the 72 recommendations in the report so that we can finally get a handle on the affordable housing issues facing this province?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that every Albertan has an opportunity to be in safe affordable housing right across the province, whether they're seniors or not. I'm happy to have another look at that report, but I can assure you that as part of the provincial housing strategy that we will be building under the mandate and the direction of the Premier, that will be one of the things that we'll look at along with many others. I think that coming forward in the new year, you'll see some plans to develop that provincial housing strategy, and I hope this member will support us in building that.

Missing and Murdered Aboriginal Women

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, today is the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. There have been repeated calls from Alberta's indigenous leaders for the Premier to support a national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women. The inquiry would investigate the disproportionate number of indigenous women who are missing or murdered and provide recommendations to deal with the problem. To the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations: will you stand with Alberta's indigenous leaders and support a national inquiry?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are focused on what we can do here in Alberta to deal with the plight of aboriginal women, with the matters that we referred to earlier in this House: poverty, the lack of educational opportunity, the lack of vocational advancement, educational outcomes, and, as well, addiction issues. These are the matters that we can control within our province, that we can work on in a collaborative way along with First Nations. That should be our focus, and that is exactly what we are doing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no reason you can't call for it, Mr. Premier.

Given that the RCMP has stated that the number of missing and murdered indigenous women is indicative of a much broader societal challenge and given that a national inquiry would place recommendations for solutions to this issue as well as allow indigenous communities to tell their stories and perhaps find closure in the losses of their loved ones, to the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations: how can you continue to say that there is no value in supporting indigenous communities across Canada in their call for an inquiry?

Mr. Prentice: No one has said any such thing, Mr. Speaker. Today represents an important step forward in terms of the Moosehide campaign, the swatch which I wear. We should all personally take a stand against violence against aboriginal women in our society. This is a problem in Alberta that we need to address. That's why we are supporting this grassroots campaign, something that we are doing in conjunction with the friendship centres, which began the campaign. It's important that we all take stands individually and that men and women stand up against violence against aboriginal women.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wearing a swatch is not enough.

Given that this government has claimed – claimed – to be committed to working with indigenous groups and listening to their chiefs and leaders and given that all 48 of Alberta's chiefs supported a motion that calls for a national inquiry and that all 48 have asked the Premier to reconsider his position, do you really believe that you know better than Alberta's First Nations leaders on First Nations issues?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, no one would suggest that wearing a swatch is all that any one of us should do, and the hon. member should know, if he looks at my past history working on these issues over the course of a lifetime, that I have beliefs about what needs to be done. We will continue to work together. I am haunted always by a statistic that I learned when I was Canada's aboriginal affairs minister, and that is that an aboriginal woman, a First Nation woman who does not complete high school will make less than $100,000 in her entire lifetime. That's what we need to address. It's poverty; it's educational advancement for aboriginal women.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Rutherford.

Calgary Ring Road Completion

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest portion of the Calgary ring road is a very important piece of infrastructure for my constituents in Calgary-Shaw and remains top of mind for many. I understand that the next step towards the completion is finalizing the land transfer agreement with the Tsuu T'ina Nation. One of the questions I often receive about the land transfer, which is expected to take place early next year, is about the timing and why it is taking so long for that agreement to be put into place. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the delay?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working on the completion of the Calgary ring road. We signed a major agreement just over a year ago with the Tsuu T'ina Nation. We're working with the Tsuu T'ina Nation and the federal government to get the land transferred to the Alberta government. Until that happens, we can't begin building the road.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ministry has suggested it will start the RFQ and RFP process only after the land transfer agreement has been finalized. To the same minister: given that the majority of the design work is complete, can you explain why the RFQ, RFP process cannot begin now so that we do not lose the 2015 construction season?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, we continue to consult with the people, and we continue to move forward with the design and, you know, working with the people and consulting with them on our project there. The design is almost complete, but we can't put out the RFP or bid it till we own the land. That will happen in due course. Any time you're dealing with the federal government, there's a process to go through, and we have to do that.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spring the minister was adamant that the ring road would be completed using a P3 funding model and last week stated in this House, "We have yet to determine if the project will be delivered using a P3 model or through a more traditional tendering model. This will affect the overall cost." Well, it seems like quite a departure and a clear adoption of the Wildrose position on building infrastructure. So, Minister, what changed?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I could say that we were ever adamant. We always look at procuring the project for the best value for taxpayers' money. All the rest of the ring roads have been completed using the P3 model, and we've shown tremendous savings for the taxpayers of Alberta in doing that, so of course we're going to look at that going forward. But to say at this point that that's exactly what we're going to do would be premature. We need to weigh and look at all options.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I think most members of the House know, 1 in 4 Canadians will experience a mental health issue in their lifetime. Many of these people are postsecondary students, including the 273,000 in our own province. My questions today are for the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. I'd specifically like to ask the minister what his ministry is doing to ensure that we get to students early and that we get to them effectively when they present with mental health needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. He has been a tremendous advocate for postsecondary students. I recognize the need to address post-secondary mental health. The Alberta government has provided $13 million a year directly to the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge to expand mental health services and develop models of care that can be used on campuses across Alberta. Another $2 million has been provided to the Alberta Students' Executive Council to focus on mental health. I will be working with the Minister of Health to develop a strategy to deal with these very real challenges across campus.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the minister: given that we know it is very important to get to students or anyone with a mental health need early and that not all students will come forward to ask for help directly, what is the minister doing specifically to ensure that students who do not ask for help get the help that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker, I'm very concerned about mental health throughout Campus Alberta. Student leaders raised this issue with me whenever I have talked to them. Funding has been provided to the Alberta Students' Executive Council to let student associations run outreach activities that they know will work. Twelve student associations have run awareness campaigns. Several of them brought in guest speakers and offered peer support, and many organized activities to allow students to learn about the resources that are available. I'm pleased to say that these activities have reached 60,000 students across Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the leadership that we've seen from postsecondary student leaders across the province and given that the government has in the last few years just begun to invest targeted dollars in supporting mental health services in postsecondary institutions, how can this House know that government will continue to stand by these students with more than just words?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I'm going to continue to stand by the students on this issue. I spent a substantial amount of time in postsecondary education, and I understand the stresses that can accompany a postsecondary education. Students should know that I will continue to support them on this issue going forward. Likewise, I know the Minister of Health is of the same mind and is making the same commitment. I will be working closely with my colleague to tackle mental health issues for students. In my last answer I mentioned that our investment levels are for a three-year commitment; we aren't walking away from anything.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Stony Plain.

Suffield Elk Herd

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent years the Suffield elk herd has grown exponentially. Fifteen years ago 200 elk were introduced to the Canadian Forces base by the province of Alberta. Now its population is at least 8,000, with a reproduction rate of 35 per cent per year. To the environment minister: what is the government doing to control this growing herd at a time when its impacts are being felt more and more by local ranchers, local residents, and travellers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a significant problem. It is our objective to ensure that we get that elk population to a number that's sustainable and manageable in that area. There are a number of complicating factors, including having to work with a federal agency there, the CFB Suffield. I've tasked my department to come back to me with a plan with some clear targets of what a manageable population is and over what period of time, with some key strategies working with stakeholders in the area to achieve that.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the main problem is getting this department to act. The hunting licence issue this year resulted in fewer than 500 elk being harvested. Mathematically this is not the level of control that we need to responsibly protect and manage the Suffield elk herd. Again to the same minister: does the government have a real plan in place that will monitor the environmental impact of this herd and bring its size back to something that's manageable?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, we have put some strategies in place that are attempting to make sure that the problem doesn't get any worse before we come up with a long-term solution. So we have increased the number of licences that hunters are allowed, and I believe the CFB Suffield has tried to work with hunters to allow access onto the base for hunting. We do know that we need to come up with a better long-term plan to make sure that we reduce the population to a number that is manageable.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The original target was 800. Well, we're way, way past that. I'm not sure that this government understands the damage an invasive elk herd can cause to a fragile ecosystem, landowners, and highway traffic. Again to the same minister: what is this government's strategy if disease appears and spreads to neighbouring cattle ranches, causing ecosystem contamination, loss of livestock, and loss of tens of millions of dollars of financial impact?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, we clearly understand that this is a significant problem and one that we are taking action to deal with. Like I said, we have provided some short-term measures to ensure that the problem doesn't grow while we work with the stakeholders in the area, including property owners, farmers, ranchers, and the federal agency there, to come up with a plan that deals with this problem over the long term. I have taken action. I've asked my department to provide a strategy to us that will include clear timelines and clear targets of numbers and the strategies to achieve them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few years Alberta has been growing faster than any province in Canada. The benefits of that growth have been immense, but so have the challenges. This is particularly evident for our municipal partners, who are seeing greater use and wear on the roads, water systems, sewer networks, and recreational infrastructure. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: with over a hundred thousand new people coming into municipalities like Parkland county, the town of Stony Plain, and the village of Wabamun every year, what is the government doing to ensure that Alberta's infrastructure has accessible and sustainable funding to meet these new challenges?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. I know that as a former mayor of Stony Plain he understands these issues very well. The government of Alberta is very committed to supporting municipalities. Currently we support almost $1 billion in MSI funding every year and in addition to that $350 million in the basic municipal transportation grant and $40 million in the Alberta community partnership funding. In addition to that, we have just signed with the federal government the gas tax fund, which is $2.7 billion over the next 10 years.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Some Alberta municipalities have found it difficult to obtain MSI funding. What strings are attached that inhibit municipalities from accessing them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This funding, hon. member, has very open criteria and funds many different kinds of projects, from roads to water/waste-water to transit projects to recreation. We have this so that municipalities and their communities can pick the priorities that are important to them. But there are some reporting requirements, as with any granting of monies, because we want to also be accountable for taxpayers' dollars.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Some of the smaller municipalities have expressed concern that operating dollars for their municipalities through MSI are being eliminated. What are you doing to address the concerns of smaller municipalities specifically?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much. That is a great question, Mr. Speaker. I have met with the members at both AUMA and AAMD and C, and smaller communities have raised this issue to me. I have told them we will look at the MSI operating to make sure that we're meeting their needs. It's also very important for them that they also want the Alberta community partnership. What I've told them is that we will review MSI operating and ACP to make sure that it works for our small communities and, indeed, all communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Government Policies

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 Wildrose was elected to hold this out-of-touch government to account. Over 440,000 Albertans picked principled MLAs committed to ending waste, restoring real property rights, and stopping gross overpayment with golden severance packages to all public servants. We've made a heck of a start, but new PC management may only be cosmetic surgery, a smooth talker borrowing good ideas. Mr. Premier, is our work done? If Bill 1 is just the start of property rights protection, what's next: more silver-tongued oration or real restoration?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member sitting where he is should not be talking about cosmetic surgery. From my perspective, dealing very specifically with the issue of property rights, the appeal of the land assembly legislation will effectively ensure that we do not have situations of constructive expropriation and de facto expropriation in this province, and that's why it's important that the hon. members support it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we see no indication that government employees, both political as well as within organizations like AHS, are really going to be paid and severed at market rates, will the Premier tell us when a truly complete sunshine list will be released and when all pay packages will be brought in line with the private sector? Albertans deserve to know this.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that one. The sunshine list is a list that came out last year. It releases all of the information on our public services, public servants. The hon. member raises a good issue. We'll continue to work on this issue and make sure that we release that information when it's available.

Mr. Bikman: We'll look forward to that.

Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans expect the government to end political interference in infrastructure decisions, like putting school portables where votes are sought rather than where locally elected boards say that they're more critical, and provide honest answers regarding tax increases, when can we expect to see substantive changes and get those answers?

Mr. Bhullar: We're building on the very critical infrastructure that's needed in this province, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier has made a commitment to it and will ensure that we build the schools, the road infrastructure, and the hospitals that are needed.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we continue on with private members' statements, could we have your unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: Let's go to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some individuals who have played very important roles in developing Bill 7, which I hope to introduce later today.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that representatives from all three existing organizations as well as the unification agency are here, and I'd ask that they rise and remain standing as I introduce them: John Carpenter, CEO of the unification agency; Rachel Miller, CEO of ICAA; Curtis Palichuk, FCA, co-chair of the unification agency; Darrell Jones, FCMA, co-chair of the unification agency; Barth Bradley, chair of ICAA; and Derrek Wong, chair of CMA Alberta. Many other members, who I unfortunately do not have the time to introduce by name, nonetheless have put a lot of time and effort into this process. I'm very pleased to introduce them to you today and have them here to witness the introduction of Bill 7, and I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Lung Disease Awareness

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Canada November is recognized as lung awareness month. Today patients living with lung disease, their supporters, representatives of the Lung Association, Alberta and Northwest Territories, and pulmonary specialists are here to raise awareness about the prevalence of lung disease in Alberta.

Approximately 600,000 Albertans are living with lung disease, and that number is continuing to grow. There are over 40 lung diseases, including asthma, COPD, lung cancer, TB, cystic fibrosis, and idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis. These and numerous other diseases impact the lives of Albertans of all ages, cultures, and backgrounds and are fatal for 1 in 7. This number is continuing to grow as many respiratory diseases are tied to an aging population. In addition to the human costs, respiratory diseases exert a significant economic impact on the Canadian health care system as a whole.

Celebrating a remarkable 75 years, the Lung Association, Alberta and Northwest Territories' goal is to create a world free of lung disease. Today, along with Leigh Allard, president of the Lung Association, Alberta and Northwest Territories and also a constituent of mine, pulmonary specialists, and patient advocates suffering from lung disease are here at the Alberta Legislature to educate MLAs about lung disease and continue to build on the positive partnership the association has had with the government to date.

I'd like to welcome all members of the Lung Association's delegation to the Alberta Legislature and thank them for their tireless work and continued leadership on this important issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Official Opposition Achievements

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-one months ago over 440,000 Albertans asked Wildrose MLAs to battle for truth, justice, and the Alberta way. Among other things, they were fed up with an entrenched sense of entitlement, bloated pay and severance packages, erosion of property rights, projects coming in late and at multiples of cost estimates – our Premier didn't even pretend to care what they cost – bloated bureaucracy, over-regulation, red-tape, broken promises, politically motivated infrastructure, health care wait times.

Since then we've exposed the most corrupt, entitled, wasteful, out-of-touch, arrogant Premier in the history of the province. All Albertans were relieved, including 59 across the floor. You're welcome. Got the abused, misused air fleet sold. You're welcome. Advocated for property rights; Bill 1 is just a start. You're welcome. Removed a draconian clause in the MGA that threatened locally elected municipal leaders with $10,000 fines and up to a year in jail. You're welcome. Prevented bills 45 and 46 from removing rights contained in legal contracts. You're welcome. Got a partial sunshine list passed that lets Albertans know who's earning over $100,000 a year. You're welcome. Challenged the government to cut overhead expenses but maintain and improve resources to the front lines in health care and education, a workin-progress, we hope. You're welcome. Brought instances of red tape to the attention of this government, resulting in the Premier forming a group to help businesses navigate the halls of bureaucracy. You're welcome. Continue advocating for prioritized infrastructure lists so that everyone knows where their project is on it and when it's scheduled to start. This would make it harder for government to jump portable classrooms up the queue to help candidates get elected. Clearly, that battle isn't over; is it, Education minister? You're welcome.

As you can see, Albertans, there's still a lot left for us to do for you. Don't fool yourself into thinking it'll happen without pressure from us. We'll not abandon your cause or our principles.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm sorry; the time has lapsed, hon. member.

2:50

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Bill 7

Chartered Professional Accountants Act

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, Bill 7, being the Chartered Professional Accountants Act.

Mr. Speaker, it's an act to basically bring three organizations together: the CMAs, the CGAs, and the CAs. It's a bill that we brought forward in co-operation with and as a result of the request of the three organizations. The intent is to make sure that accountants in Alberta have labour mobility, that they are up to date with the national and world standards, and that we can continue to attract the best and the brightest not only from across Canada but from around the world to come here to live, work, and be accountants in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Bill 8

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce first reading of Bill 8, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2014.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's justice system needs to be continually evolving, and it's imperative that our laws reflect those changes. Bill 8 proposes amendments to update several justice-related acts to ensure that the provincial legislation is clear and that it's consistent. These amendments will also help to make the province's justice system more efficient so that it can serve Albertans better.

The bill includes amendments to a very long list of acts, including the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Estate Administration Act, the Family Law Act, the Limitations Act, the Notaries and Commissioners Act, the Oaths of Office Act, the Perpetuities Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Wills and Succession Act, and minor housekeeping changes to several other acts.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments in Bill 8 follow consultation with judiciary, Alberta's legal community, and members of the public, and these stakeholders support the changes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 75 I move that Bill 8, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2014, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are we on tablings? Then I have something to table. Absolutely. It is a letter from the Farmworkers Union of Alberta. They are identifying the lack of effort to deal with injuries and deaths in the agricultural industry. They've included a copy of a Calgary Herald editorial from November 13 dealing with the failure of the new Premier and his government to deal with this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the Q1 Monitoring Measurement report 2014-15, prepared by data integration, measurement and reporting, on health measures.

The second one is Alberta Health Services' deferred maintenance project list, the maintenance projects originally planned to be implemented prior to 2013-14 that have not commenced.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, do you have a tabling?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In order to augment my question from this afternoon, I'm tabling the Housing First report done by the all-party committee back in 2007. I think that if we had implemented the recommendations from that report, we'd be a long way to ending homelessness instead of the place where we are today. I'd encourage all members to take a look at that and get serious about ending this problem before it continues to exacerbate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mandel, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors 2013-14 annual report; the College and Association of Respiratory Therapists of Alberta annual report 2014; the College of Alberta Psychologists annual report April 1, 2013, to March 31, 2014; the College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta annual report 2014; the College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta annual report 2013-14.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Kubinec, Minister of Culture and Tourism, pursuant to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts Act the Alberta Foundation for the Arts 2013-14 annual report; pursuant to the Historical Resources Act the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation 2013-14 annual report; pursuant to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation annual report 2013-14; pursuant to the Wild Rose Foundation Act the Wild Rose Foundation annual report 2013-14.

The Speaker: Thank you.

There are no points of order, so let us move on.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Fenske moved, seconded by Mr. Ellis, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mrs. Klimchuk]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Human Services, did you wish to continue?

Then I'd be happy to recognize the hon. Premier.

Mr. Prentice: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to respond to the Speech from the Throne, which was delivered last week by the Honourable Donald Ethell, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta. I'd also like to thank my hon. colleagues on both sides of the Legislature for attending today as I deliver this which would be my maiden speech in this legislative Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, before getting into much detail, let me take a few moments to congratulate the Calgary Stampeders on their victory on Sunday in the CFL western final. It is, of course, always fraught with political risk for a Premier of this province to take sides in any battle of Alberta, especially one in which the stakes are so high, so in the interests of provincial unity, let me say that while I was in attendance in the stands at McMahon Stadium on Sunday, I'd like to reassure members that I was passionate about my neutrality and, in fact, took a great deal of ribbing for wearing my neutral Premier of Alberta jersey. Now that that's behind us, I hope that we can come together as a Legislative Assembly, as a House, and in a rare show of unanimity go on to support the Alberta team in the Grey Cup this coming weekend.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour not just for me but I think for every single one of us in this Chamber to be asked to represent our constituents in the Chamber. This is the first time I rise on behalf of the citizens of Calgary-Foothills, who put their faith and trust in me in the recent by-election to work on their behalf on the issues that matter to them in our free and democratic society. As I begin, I would like to thank them for their support and assure them that I will at all times work diligently on their behalf to advocate for their interests in this Chamber. I know there are several other hon. members in a similar circumstance, and none of us take those obligations lightly.

Let me say that as a newly elected Member of the Legislative Assembly and as Premier of the province I intend to uphold the standards that Albertans expect of us in the conduct of our legislative work. Albertans rightly expect that we conduct business in this place in a respectful way, in a professional way, in a businesslike way. Certainly, debates in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, can be emotional. They can strike directly at political values and principles that each of us holds dearly, often in different ways, or matters which intersect with our personal beliefs or matters of conscience. But regardless of the levels of emotion or passion our debates can and should remain civil in this place. They should, I hope, reflect the mutual respect that we have as colleagues amongst ourselves.

Although we may slip from time to time, it will remain my goal as Premier to set the appropriate tone in this Assembly, which is the tone that our constituents asked for and deserve and which I think all of us, perhaps on all sides of the Chamber, who door-knocked in the recent by-elections would have heard loudly and clearly from Albertans in their own words.

Our debates in this place are passionate because each of us is guided by a set of principles that guide our decision-making. Throughout our history Alberta legislators and leaders have come to this Assembly to transform these principles into action, really, Mr. Speaker, to build a province which is second to none, literally the best place in the world, I would submit, to live, to work, and to raise a family. So, yes, we are fortunate.

For more than 100 years, Mr. Speaker, we have taken advantage of the natural resources that we possess as Albertans, that dot our landscape and rest beneath our soil, to create economic opportunity and prosperity. But I would in this speech make the point today that good fortune is never enough. The Alberta we live in and enjoy today is the result not just of being lucky but the result of ingenuity and our work ethic, our openness to trade, our embrace of sound economic policies as well as our embrace of sound fiscal policies, and, of course, our embrace of a society that values tolerance and diversity and which welcomes newcomers to this province and to this country.

It is for these things that Alberta is truly world-renowned. These are the traits that attract newcomers, that drive investment, and that elevate our quality of life in every corner of the province. In addition, Mr. Speaker, these are the same values that drive us to ensure, as we heard today in question period, the social advancement of First Nations and aboriginal people in this province, who were here long before others arrived, to ensure that they are equal and meaningful partners in the advancement of this province.

Mr. Speaker, these values and the people who live here that reflect them keep Alberta growing, and our challenge, really, in the circumstances that we are in today is to ensure that as we grow as a province, we preserve what we have built, and that we build upon it to construct a brighter future for those who will come after. I think all of us in this House are mindful of our obligations to our children and our grandchildren to leave this place better than we found it and to do work in this House which will accomplish that.

Mr. Speaker, in that respect, I do hope that the throne speech has provided a useful roadmap in terms of the best way forward. It reflects the commitments that I personally have made to the people of the province, initially over the course of this summer during the leadership campaign, during which time I campaigned the length and breadth of our province to become the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, again hearing it at the same time over the course of this fall in the by-elections, certainly the by-election in Calgary-Foothills but also in Calgary-West, in Edmonton-Whitemud, and in Calgary-Elbow.

Our government is a government that is focused on the people's priorities in this province, Mr. Speaker and colleagues: a focused commitment, firstly, to sound, conservative fiscal principles; secondly, to ending entitlements and restoring public trust in this province; thirdly, to maximizing the value of our natural resources and at the same time respecting and advancing and protecting property rights in Alberta; in addition, establishing our province as an environmental leader; and, finally, turning to enhancing and protecting the quality of life that we enjoy in this place we call Alberta, whether we speak of health, whether we speak of education, whether we speak of the care of our senior citizens. These are the matters that are the people's priorities in this province. They have spoken clearly, singularly actually, over the course of this fall and, I would suggest, over the summer.

So, Mr. Speaker, these are our priorities. They are our priorities because they are the priorities of Albertans. We did not select them because they fit on a bumper sticker. Frankly, they do not. But these are the priorities that Albertans have spoken to us about, that reflect their passion for this province and where we're going. Albertans have high expectations of their government. I think that is very clear and rightly so.

Firstly, dealing with our fiscal responsibilities, when it comes to the way government manages money, Albertans have told not just us but generations of politicians, generations of men and women who have been privileged to serve in this Chamber, that they have very high expectations. They expect us, frankly, to understand that every dollar that comes into the hands of the government of Alberta comes from their pockets, directly or indirectly, and every dollar that we borrow will need to be paid back, either by them, by their children, or by their grandchildren. There is probably no other jurisdiction in North America which is more mindful of those responsibilities and more articulate about them and more passionate about them than the people of our province.

So our duty is to spend those dollars wisely on the things that matter to the citizens of our province: roads; bridges; schools; senior citizens' facilities; hospitals; planning for emergencies; supporting our first responders; serving our children, our seniors, and our aboriginal population, Mr. Speaker. These are the front lines, the bread and butter of government, where Albertans expect to see results and where they expect progress from this government in the days ahead. Our government will deliver on the people's priorities over the course of the coming months and years.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that none of that means that money is unlimited. As was noted in the Speech from the Throne, our province was built on sound, conservative fiscal principles, and the government will carry on with that tradition, demonstrating fiscal prudence and caution in the management of Alberta's public finances.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important today. Let me discuss a little bit about what that means in today's context. Last week – this has attracted some attention and has been mentioned in this House – Moody's delivered an authoritative message about the state of Alberta's finances. They concluded that despite recent drops in world energy prices and even if we face depressed prices for as much as a year to come, our province is strong enough to weather this storm and manage to maintain our sterling, triple-A credit rating, and we will. That is something that we are proud of and that every Albertan should be proud of.

There is no jurisdiction in North America that is in as strong a fiscal position as the province of Alberta. There is arguably no jurisdiction in North America which is in a net asset position in the manner in which the province of Alberta is. This is something that people in Alberta value and respect, and it is something that they do not take for granted and which they do not want their government to ever take for granted. Any government that takes this for granted, Mr. Speaker, will not long be the government of this province.

The challenges of oil prices that are hovering in the mid-70 dollar per barrel range are very real, and they cannot be ignored. Earlier in question period the Minister of Finance passed me a note reflecting that oil prices today, the WTI price, was, in fact, lower than $75 per barrel. So there will be effects on our provincial revenues in the form of reduced royalties. These are very significant impacts. The resource industry, despite its entrepreneurial spirit, despite its fiscal strength, its financial strength and resilience, will also be forced to adjust, and this will have a bearing on investment decisions that are made in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point – and I've said it repeatedly before – that this is distinctly not business as usual. For this government that means it cannot be business as usual, and it comes to how we will carry out our fiscal planning. Tomorrow my colleague the hon. Minister of Finance will provide Albertans with an update on our second-quarter financial results, and it will be a thorough update, a transparent update on exactly where we are as a province. They will show that we remain on track for a surplus this fiscal year even in the face of falling oil prices this quarter.

As we enter the next fiscal year, we must, however, recognize that it will be incumbent upon us to continue to safeguard our hard-earned financial strength, and I will let the Minister of Finance deal more specifically with what he's going to cover tomorrow. But if we are going to be fiscally prudent as we move forward in a low-price environment, we must rethink our assumptions and plan with more modest, more conservative revenue forecasts in our provincial budget, Mr. Speaker. This is the only safe way forward.

Lower revenues, of course, will mean that our spending must be restrained to ensure continued operating surpluses, but restraint will not come, Mr. Speaker, at the expense of results, so we must redouble our efforts to ensure services are delivered efficiently and that they are delivered effectively and that we are a province that is characterized by innovation in the delivery of government services. Albertans rely on those services, and we owe it to them to meet the standards that they expect.

We owe it to Albertans to meet the standards that they have set for themselves managing their own family finances, managing their own business finances, growing our savings, paying down debt, and setting aside money for emergencies, which will inevitably arise. This is the manner in which Albertans conduct themselves. That is why we are such an entrepreneurial province, that leads North America in terms of economic growth and that leads, frankly, the world in terms of many of the things that we do in this province and excel at. But we must be fiscally responsible if we're going to continue to preserve our capacity to be innovative and to be world leading, Mr. Speaker. We'll do this in a way that is clear and transparent and easy for Albertans to understand.

Accountability is, of course, the second element of the throne speech. Mr. Speaker, when governments and politics are at their best, when citizens are engaged, when debates are lively and meaningful, it's when those that we elect to positions of trust and people that we represent conduct themselves in an accountable manner. We refer to one another in this Chamber as hon. members. We do that for a reason, a very clear reason that has tradition in our democracy. We do it because our very democracy depends on the will of the people being faithfully carried out by those who are elected, working for their interests and only for their interests.

I have said before and I will say in this Chamber that to engage in public service is to be a servant of the people of Alberta. That is what it means, and that must be the responsibility that each of us carries with us into office. We are assumed to be honourable, assumed to be committed to upholding the trust our constituents have placed in us. Serious harm can be done to our democratic institutions when that trust is seen to be violated. I can tell the House that under this government and as Premier the trust of the public is paramount, and I will endeavour at all times to uphold those responsibilities and show Albertans that when they look to their Premier, they will see the kind of conduct that they expect, which displays accountability and shows the values of public service, Mr. Speaker.

This, Mr. Speaker, is one of the reasons that I made a commitment and our government has made a commitment to bring forward sensible accountability legislation early in this session of the Assembly.

The bill is now on the notice paper, and it will be introduced over the next several days. In it we will take several concrete steps to rebuild public trust in government and in those who are serving within it. These will not be mere guidelines; these will be the law of the land. We will strengthen the rules regarding lobbying and conflict of interest. We will restrain severance provisions for political staff. We will ensure that government contracts are awarded on a more open, a more competitive, and a more transparent basis. Mr. Speaker, legislation like this is important, not only to strengthen the rules but also to send a signal to those who have elected us that we are here always on their behalf, reflecting their values, working in their best interests, and meeting the standards that they expect from us each and every day.

Dealing with our resources, Mr. Speaker, as we move forward upon a rebuilt foundation of trust, this Assembly and this government have a great deal of other important work to do, particularly as we look to our economic future. Albertans are looking to the government to continue to do what government is responsible for, not to be in business but to create the conditions necessary for good, high-paying jobs across all sectors of our economy.

Alberta has stepped, I would submit, comfortably into the role of being not only a driver of national economic growth but also an international player, a province that has international aspirations in terms of our connection to the global economy, bringing our world-class goods and world-class services – our energy, our forest products, our agricultural products – to countries in every corner of the globe. We are a free-trading country, and no province displays that value more clearly and credibly than the province of Alberta. But our leadership position in that respect is not a given, especially when forces outside of our border threaten to stifle our continued growth and diversification of markets for our products.

So, Mr. Speaker, working to maintain our position of national and international economic leadership will be a hallmark of this government in the days ahead. We will take to heart the entrepreneurial spirit and the creativity of Albertans and apply those ideals to our work in expanding access to markets for all of Alberta's products, in the resource industry and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, in that regard, I will personally be doing everything that I can to ensure that Alberta's voice is heard amongst those who, at least in part, hold the keys to unlocking markets where products must be allowed to flow more freely. We are, as I have cautioned people from time to time, the largest producer of energy in the world that is landlocked, so our future, inextricably connected to international markets, involves pipelines. It involves other jurisdictions with whom we must partner. So, for instance, next week I will meet with New Jersey Governor Chris Christie as he pays a visit to our country and to our province. Governor

Christie is an ally in our battle for Canadian access to more global markets, with a public position in favour of greater pipeline growth across North America, in particular the Keystone XL pipeline.

I believe we must always engage with our allies and form united fronts in favour of projects such as the Keystone project that make economic sense, that make environmental sense, and which are good for Alberta, good for Canada, and indeed good for the entire continent. But it's equally important, I would say, Mr. Speaker, to engage with those who may for their own reasons act as road-blocks to our ambition. So government ministers, senior public officials, and myself will continue to press our case for market access with our counterparts south of the border, including state governments, the U.S. Congress, and the White House. We are ably assisted by Mr. Merrifield, who is working with us as our envoy in Washington.

As a Premier I've also spoken to members of the U.S. House of Representatives. I've spoken with members of the U.S. Senate to advocate for our energy industry. I will be making my first trip to Washington as Premier in the new year, and there I will meet with legislators from all parties to build further momentum. It is important that we embrace bipartisan support in the United States when it comes to the Keystone pipeline and other initiatives, Mr. Speaker, so we will be respectful of the U.S. democratic system, and we will work on a bipartisan basis with players in the U.S. political system.

Mr. Speaker, while our efforts and the headlines also tend to focus on the challenges of market access for our energy products, Alberta must also continue to be a leader in agriculture, in agrifood, and in the export of our protein and other products. Our government recognizes the invaluable contribution that agriculture makes to our economy and to the Alberta way of life. Our farmers and our ranchers, through good times and bad, have been the economic and the cultural bedrock of Alberta's rural communities since long before the discovery of oil in the Turner Valley field. They can count on this government to stand by them because agriculture and our rural communities will continue under this government to be a bedrock foundation of Alberta.

We will invest in smart-focus programs that help bring innovation to agriculture, and in the rural areas, where agriculture is the economic lifeblood, we will invest in the transportation infrastructure required to keep people and products moving. This is why, in addition, Mr. Speaker, recently, together with the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Premier of British Columbia, we, through the New West Partnership, agreed to advance the interests of building transportation infrastructure in partnership with the federal government that will allow us to get our agricultural products from the farm gate through into the Asia Pacific basin to the markets that want what we produce.

Here at home this will include not only the construction of new infrastructure but also working to eliminate the maintenance backlog, which concerns me. It fits, I think, with the fiscal discipline of which we speak, the importance of maintaining the assets that you have so that you maximize their economic life, Mr. Speaker. This applies to the transportation infrastructure that we have in this province and the need to make investments to maintain these assets so that they are of long duration. Our transportation infrastructure investments will also extend to our largest cities, Edmonton and Calgary, and to our smaller urban communities as well. As Alberta grows, our commitment remains steadfast to work with our municipal partners to build better, more efficient public infrastructure and transportation, which includes public transit.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to turn this House's attention to another subject which I know is fundamental to members of this Chamber and their constituents and which has been an important part of my career in terms of work that I've done, and that is the subject of property rights. In the Speech from the Throne this government recognized that the foundation of a thriving free-market economy must be the recognition and protection of private property rights, and that is why the protection of private properties is enshrined in our Alberta Bill of Rights, which it is not in every province. So we immediately followed through with a piece of legislation that takes an important first step – and it is a first step – the first step in rebuilding trust between the government and property owners in Alberta.

As we move forward, we will be respectful as a province of the letter and the spirit of the laws protecting property in this province, including the Alberta Bill of Rights. We will be respectful and will work together with the Property Rights Advocate, and I look forward to hearing back from the legislative committee on his specific recommendations as to the changes that are needed to the Expropriation Act and the Surface Rights Act, which are, in fact, Mr. Speaker, from a legal point of view, the engine by which property rights are protected in this province.

I know that this is a different approach than the Official Opposition advocates. They have put forward a property rights motion that would amend the federal Constitution, taking this critical responsibility out of the hands of Alberta and handing it over to federal jurisdiction. Now, Mr. Speaker, we agree on many things with the current federal government – perhaps we don't agree on everything, but we agree on many things – but that does not mean that we should abdicate our duty to protect property rights here in Alberta, because federal governments in the future may not be so friendly to this province.

A generation ago in this very Chamber in which we sit – I was a young man at the time, but I do remember the debate – Peter Lougheed fought against putting property rights in the Constitution in the 1980s. Pierre Trudeau's philosophy was that property rights should be the purview only of Ottawa and the courts, and the Premier at that time fought against this. Mr. Speaker, this will not be a government that sets back the cause of property rights in our province by over 30 years. Mr. Lougheed was right then, and he would be right today. So we will do the right thing in Alberta. We will be vigilant in protecting property rights. That is why we have repealed the land assembly act. It is why we will be vigilant in terms of protecting landowners from constructive and de facto expropriations.

Let me come to the subject of the environment, because Peter Lougheed was also thinking about the future when he introduced at that time some of the most advanced environmental legislation on behalf of Albertans. It's incumbent upon us as a government to, I think, adopt the same forward-looking approach in terms of all of the matters within our responsibility, and nowhere is this more critical, Mr. Speaker, I would submit, than in the work we do to ensure a clean, safe environment for our children and our grandchildren. We are all conservationists in this province. We all care about the heritage that we have inherited. We all care about the condition in which we leave it to our children and our grandchildren. I have never met a farmer or a rancher in this province that is not fundamentally conservation minded and passionate about this very topic.

The steps that we take now on behalf of Albertans to ensure clean air, clean water, and protection of our landscape will have a profound effect on future generations in this province. We owe it to these future generations, the people that Teddy Roosevelt once called the citizens unborn, to pass on our pristine natural heritage.

Make no mistake, I would say, Mr. Speaker; the eyes of the world are also upon us because for Alberta, as we emerge as a wealthy jurisdiction that is producing in excess of 3 million barrels of oil per day, there is an expectation that we will be an energy leader and that we will be an environmental leader as well. So as we develop our energy sector, seek expanded markets, we must have unmistakable resolve to do our best in terms of protecting the environment and being a constructive partner in terms of the global effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

It is, of course, entirely fair to ask why we as a province have received scant credit for the excellent work which has been done to this point. Alberta has shown extraordinary environmental leadership in so many ways. This was the first jurisdiction in North America to regulate industrial greenhouse gas emissions and amongst the first to put a price on carbon, and while there are critics who would question whether the price of carbon is adequate or not, Mr. Speaker, the real test is that other jurisdictions, including the province of British Columbia, with their most recent framework for LNG, as well as the province of Saskatchewan, have adopted what is, substantially, the Alberta model in terms of the best way forward for those jurisdictions. What we are doing in Alberta has also attracted attention internationally in terms of the model that we've set for regulating emissions of industrial carbon.

The Speech from the Throne reminded us – and I look forward to reminding our potential customers of this as well – that we have been a leader, and when it comes to subjects like carbon capture and storage, the citizens of Alberta, the taxpayers of this province, have invested more in the science of carbon capture and storage than anyone on the planet, Mr. Speaker. There are initiatives such as COSIA, where there is significant progress being made in our province, where industrial players have come together, set aside their intellectual property rights, and fought to advance environmental causes.

True leadership builds on historical success, aims higher, and challenges others to do the same. As it was pledged in the Speech from the Throne, in the weeks ahead this government will bring forward a new climate change framework that will build on our past successes and show the way forward in the future. It will in particular work towards partnerships: partnerships within Canada, continentally, and internationally. Within it all stakeholders – industry, aboriginal and environmental groups, and others – will have a role to play in demonstrating that Alberta is serious about being in the environment business and that we are here to stay, Mr. Speaker.

A strong, growing economy generating good, high-paying jobs; a clean, healthy environment; sustainable public finances: together these form the basis of a high quality of life for our citizens. Mr. Speaker, to Albertans' immense credit as a rule we don't define our quality of life as a measure of what government does for us. That is not the Alberta way, it has never been the Alberta way, and I hope that it will never be the way that we define ourselves as Albertans. It is not what we take from government; it is, rather, a shared value as Albertans that leads us to not look to government first for the solutions to our challenges.

Self-reliance coupled with support from family, from friends, from our communities, and from our faith communities has throughout our history been our touchstone. It is what has made us strong as a province. Meanwhile our success as a province has drawn newcomers from across Canada and around the globe who have been welcomed here with that same spirit, that same spirit of innovation, that same spirit that has drawn people here from all over the world.

But as Albertans have grown, so, too, have the needs that we must appropriately meet as a government. So our province has built a world-class education system. I don't think that that is seriously in dispute. We've established a publicly funded health care system that looks out for everyone in need of care regardless of their individual means. We ensure that the seniors, our parents and our grandparents who have helped build this province, receive the services they need as they age so that they are able to do so with dignity. We've helped put young people to work with skills training, matching people with jobs and jobs with people. All of this is the important job of government.

It is important that we focus the range and quality of social services on offer to Albertans, and the needs have never been greater. The needs of our society as our province heads toward 5 million people have never been more demanding. Pressures on the system remain. Our government has committed to address those pressures with smart planning and efficient and effective spending. But let it be said, Mr. Speaker, that no other jurisdiction in North America is facing the growth pressures that we are in this province at this point in time, illustrated perhaps most clearly by the fact that across Alberta there are over 230 school projects in various stages of design, preparation for construction, construction, and commissioning.

We do this because it is necessary that we do this. We do this because we need to open in excess of 78,000 new spaces for students because the children are here, Mr. Speaker, and they need schools. We make these investments where they are acutely needed, with an eye on the results that we are expected to deliver. We will work directly with those on the front lines of service delivery to ensure that the systems that are in place to do their jobs are working as well as they possibly can and reaching every person who needs them.

In our Alberta, Mr. Speaker, there are no second-class citizens. Whether you are urban or rural, our children, our seniors, First Nation and Métis, those on low income, and those who are homeless, all aspire to receive quality services from the province of Alberta.

While we improve our systems, we will also increase capacity in our services, working closely with our municipal partners to build more schools, to build more continuing care spaces, to create more spaces for senior citizen housing needs, to improve the condition of the existing stock of senior citizen housing that we need. At all times we will treat every dollar we spend or contemplate spending as a matter of trust between the government and the people who we serve and the taxpayers who provide those dollars to us.

As I conclude my comments, Mr. Speaker, Albertans do have high standards. They have high standards. They want to stand tall at home. They want to stand tall abroad, proud of what we've accomplished and hopeful about what is yet to come for our province. Albertans have a right to feel let down when we fall short of those standards.

Mr. Speaker, I'm incredibly optimistic about the future. Like so many Albertans, I've lived through the difficult times in this province, but I've also had the good fortune to see Alberta at its finest. I've seen our province put its immense talents on display and stack up with the best in the world. Economically, socially, culturally, environmentally: I've seen our province everywhere it goes as a leader, aspiring to be a leader.

We have so much to be proud of and so much more that we can achieve working together. Our government understands the role that it can play in those achievements. We will be there to demonstrate accountability to Albertans when they demand it, and we will be there to support Albertans when they need it and to sing their praises across the country and around the world, indeed, as we often do, because we deserve it in many respects.

Mr. Speaker, this government and this Premier are getting to work. This is Alberta under new management. Thank you. [some applause]

I now move to adjourn the debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, I believe I heard you move to adjourn debate. Did I hear that correctly?

Mr. Prentice: There was a bit of a clamour at the end, Mr. Speaker, for which I apologize. I now move to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: I couldn't tell – the applause started so quickly – but thank you for clarifying that.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, under 29(2)(a) are we allowed to ask questions?

The Speaker: The motion is to adjourn debate, and I just clarified that with the Premier. My understanding is that the motion should now be voted on, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Could we then come back to 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: The Premier has 90 minutes within which to speak. He used about 47 or so. So he may choose to come back and speak, and then you'd be entitled to 29(2)(a) at that point.

Mr. Mason: Oh, at that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has moved that we adjourn debate on the throne speech replies.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

In accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act the committee shall report back to the Legislative Assembly within 60 days of the report being referred to it if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess we could take a bit of an Alberta break here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is debatable. Is there anyone who wishes to speak?

If not, would you like to close debate, hon. Government House Leader?

Mr. Denis: I think we're concluded.

The Speaker: The question has been called, then.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

3:40 Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 3
Personal Information Protection
Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Quadri]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, you have 17 minutes left to speak. Do you wish to take up that opportunity?

If not, are there others?

Seeing no others, then, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Bill 4
Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Campbell]

The Speaker: We are going to resume with the hon. President of Treasury Board. Should he wish, he'd have 19 minutes left to speak.

If not, I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have reasonable grounds to declare a conflict of interest, so I would like to ask to remove myself from any discussion or debate on this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The member who has just spoken, from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, wishes to recuse herself from the debate, which, if you want to know more about, you'd be wise to visit the Conflicts of Interest Act, obligations of members, part 2.

Thank you. You are excused, hon. member.

Let us carry on, then. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 4, the Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014. I do have the privilege of having a few horse breeders, some stables, and some training race tracks in my constituency. Growing up in an agricultural-based family, horses have been a huge part of our lives, chasing our cows around and, you know, trying to raise a few, sell a few, and make the odd buck.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It's a great industry, the horse-racing industry. It employs a lot of people. It gives, you know, people who may not have had access to being around horses the opportunity to go and have some entertainment. Of course, with any type of gambling we want to make sure that people are gambling responsibly, and we don't like to see anybody have any gambling issues. That's always a concern.

Specifically with Bill 4, I have contacted many stakeholders, and they've had some questions. I have some questions for the hon. minister. I guess the first question I would like answered is: who brought about the changes to this bill? Why was this bill brought forward at this time to be changed? Was it brought forward by members of the horse-racing community, was it brought forward by the board, or was it specifically brought forward by the government? And, I guess, why did they want to see these changes?

I guess the biggest change that I see in this bill is that the government, the cabinet basically, will be appointing six members of the general public, and one of those will be the chair. Now, that brings some concern. Who are they going to appoint? We see with many of the bills that they've brought forward that cabinet gets to appoint board members. There have been quite a few issues with the appointing of board members. [interjection] I'm not sure what was going on there. I thought maybe the hon. Premier was coming to sit with the Wildrose. It's very nice to see you on this side, hon. Premier. I wasn't sure what was going on there. Back to the bill. You rattled me there for a minute.

Mr. Anderson: He can't sit here.

Mr. Hale: The Premier can sit where he wants. Let's get back to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Please continue, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Stay on the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, you do have the floor.

Mr. Hale: Yes, thank you. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I apologize for the distraction.

Mr. Hale: So, it is a concern, how cabinet is going to appoint these members of the board and who is going to be on the board. I would be interested to see whom they appoint. I know that there is, you know, only one person from the level-A race track when previously there were two. There is one person from the B track, which mainly is quarter horse racing, which pretty much stays the same.

The Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association of Alberta now does not have a person at the board. I would like to know why they have been left off as a specific member of the board. It's important that a board like this encompasses all the members of the horse-racing family, especially them. I think they're important.

Basically, overall, I will be supporting the intent of the bill. I will be providing one amendment when we get to Committee of the Whole, which I think will enhance the bill and will allow the Alberta public and this Chamber to ensure that the new board, appointed by cabinet through orders in council and through their various workings, I guess, are held accountable. There are millions and millions of dollars of public money put into Horse Racing Alberta through the lottery. We need to ensure that these board members are acting and using that money accordingly. But at this time I look forward to the hon. minister's answers to some of my questions and continued debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have a couple of concerns on Bill 4, the Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014, and section 7, where the Fiscal Management Act doesn't apply to Horse Racing Alberta. The corporation will be permitted to continue to run operation deficits. It also doesn't fall under the Auditor General.

The proposed changes to the governance structure of Horse Racing Alberta would allow the board to be more accountable. Not applying the Fiscal Management Act to HRA would allow the corporation to continue running operational deficits. In addition to other horse racing commissions in other provinces across Canada, Mr. Speaker, they are subject to audits either by the Auditor General or an independent auditor appointed by the cabinet.

The horse-racing industry has been subsidized big time, and those subsidies could be better spent on the K to 12 education system or provide support for school nutrition programs, Mr. Speaker. That is my concern.

Horse racing in British Columbia is governed by the Horse Racing Act, 1993. Under the legislation the British Columbia Racing Commission is composed of not fewer than three members that are appointed by the cabinet. Appointment of the members by the cabinet is also a concern in Saskatchewan. The Saskatchewan Liquor and Gaming Authority is responsible for licensing and regulating horse racing. In Manitoba, as well, the Horse Racing Commission Act stipulates that at least three members of the commission are appointed by the cabinet. The accounts of the commission are audited by the Auditor General or another auditor as appointed by the cabinet. So there should be some checks and balances in place here.

Those are the concerns I have with the bill, and I think they should be addressed.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has questions or comments for the member.

Seeing none, I'll look for the next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to indicate that the New Democratic Party does not support this bill. Some of the changes introduced were necessary in order to increase transparency. There still remain considerable issues with the act as it is proposed. We want to be clear, once again, of our continued opposition to the subsidization of the horse-racing industry in this province.

The changes made in this bill with regard to remuneration and payment of expenses to board members was necessary. We do agree that the ability of the board to determine their own rate of remuneration and payment of expenses needed to be changed; however, the proposed change isn't much better. It keeps the decisions regarding remuneration and payment of expenses behind closed doors, and this is not transparent, nor is it accountable to the people of Alberta. Not only is this secretive; I think it's out of touch with Albertans.

The bill does not end the subsidies given to the horse-racing industry. Now, industry insiders claim there are no subsidies for this industry. The Alberta Standardbred Horse Association states in a document about slot revenue and horse racing in Alberta: "Let's be very clear; horse racing in Alberta is not subsidized by the Provincial Government." Mr. Speaker, I was around at the time, just very early in my time here, when the Auditor General found that the horse-racing industry was effectively receiving subsidies because they were getting considerably higher revenues on the slot machines and VLTs than were being allowed to private operators of, for example, hotels and so on. In order to make that okay, they had to change some legislation, change some rules, to allow that to occur, because it was a clear violation of the regulations around VLTs at the time.

The annual report shows that more than 50 per cent of revenue from slots goes to Horse Racing Alberta and not into the lottery fund. That's compared to 70 per cent of casino slot revenue and 85 per cent of VLT revenue which goes to the Alberta lottery fund. So we still have a situation where the horse-racing industry takes a bigger share of the revenues from VLTs than is allowed to other people who operate those machines. If a full 70 per cent of the revenue of the slots at racing tracks had gone to the Alberta lottery fund, it would have amounted to an increase of more than $8 million in 2012 and more than seven and a half million dollars more in 2013. That's a pretty big subsidy, Mr. Speaker.

Now, not only is the industry benefiting from their ability to keep more of the revenue generated by slot machines than casinos do; they're also benefiting through the exception that allows them to have these slot machines in the first place. In 1996 the government allowed horse-racing tracks to have slot machines, going against previous government policy, which stated that casinos were the only place where slot machines were allowed. This program gave the same 15 per cent of revenue that they give to casino owners to the tracks. However, the rest of the profit, most of which normally goes to charity, in this industry is largely kept in the industry. This is by as much as 51.7 per cent. In 2008 $35 million from slot revenue at Alberta's three tracks went to the horse-racing industry. In 2012 it was $22 million, in 2013 it was $21 million, and between 2001 and 2011 over $260 million have gone to this industry through the sharing of slot revenue. So it's clear that the industry is indeed being subsidized.

Now, this is by a government that stands on the principle that the government shouldn't pick winners and losers, the government shouldn't be involved in business, the government should not be subsidizing one sector of the private economy over others. But notwithstanding this subsidy, Mr. Speaker, Horse Racing Alberta continues to struggle, consistently posting annual deficits. In '09 their deficit was almost three quarters of a million dollars, in 2012 their deficit was $150,000, in 2013 their deficit was $970,000, and in 2013 their cumulative deficit was over $320,000 dollars. Despite these subsidies horse racing in Alberta continues to struggle, posting considerable deficits in the three years between 2009 and 2013. It is a struggling industry, and they are continuing to close tracks in the province.

We first raised concern about subsidies to this industry when this legislation was debated. When the Horse Racing Alberta Act was introduced in 2002 through Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002, the MLA introducing it explained that it intended to assist the industry and Alberta's agricultural community in their efforts to revitalize this proud tradition. We raised questions about why this industry was being subsidized when the Klein government had built its reputation based on the respect of free-market principles, but I think that there are continuing questions about this. For example, every Alberta newspaper in the province has critiqued the government subsidies to this industry practically every year since it was passed, and it goes on. I don't think I need to read you the editorials and so on that have spoken out against this.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, since this policy was introduced, the world has gone through a major financial crisis. Governments, including this one, have instituted massive cuts, and in 2013 this very government instituted heavy cuts to postsecondary education, to PDD, and to seniors' care, and they have since broken their promise and cancelled plans for 131 of the promised 140 family care clinics. These cuts did not include an end to the subsidies to the horse-racing industry. So the government is clearly putting their friends raising thoroughbreds on those beautiful ranches with all those beautiful white wooden fences ahead of children, seniors, education, health care, and all of the things that are important to the vast majority of Albertans.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we're concerned about the amount of time the Assembly has spent discussing the size and composition of this board. In 2002 the Assembly debated the change of the size of the board from six to 12. Now it's being changed from 12 to 11. With the impending crisis regarding Alberta's crumbling hospitals, overflowing classrooms, and the terrible conditions in seniors' care, how much time do we have to spend debating this board while we fail to address the more serious issues affecting this province?

So, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that while there are some modifications to the board and how it's composed, to the status of the corporation as a provincial agency and so on and various, I guess, lesser issues, the basic fact of the matter is that we don't believe that the provincial government should be continuing its subsidization of this industry. It is in many respects a dying industry, and there are fewer and fewer tracks simply because other forms of entertainment and other forms of gaming have emerged, that have cut very much into its market share. We believe that we need to respect the choice of the people who make their entertainment choices, their gaming choices, if that's what they want to do, and not be picking winners and losers and using a skewed formula for allocation of gambling revenues in order to continue subsidization of this industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

Hon. minister, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Campbell: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few quick words. First of all, we now understand why the member from the fourth party will never win a seat in rural Alberta; he doesn't understand rural Alberta. Horse racing provides jobs in rural Alberta, and it's something that we have to do to continue to make sure that we create those opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I think, you know, that these are modest changes to the Horse Racing Alberta Act, but I think they're important changes. Number one, the proposed changes will bring into line more public representation on the board and are in line with Alberta's Public Agencies Governance Act. Our Premier has made it very clear that we'll have more transparency on our boards, and this will do that.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to make sure that people understand that public members will be selected from an open competition and screened for their relevant experience and expertise, and all board appointments, both public and industry nominated, will be made by order in council, and this will ensure consistency in the appointment process for all board members.

Mr. Speaker, also, as far as remuneration for board members, it's important to understand that that will be determined by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and there is a schedule out so that all of us in the House know what board members are paid for, whether it's under four hours, under eight hours, eight hours a day. Again, that's nothing new.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to make it clear to this House that negotiations continue between the government of Alberta and Horse Racing Alberta for a renewed funding agreement. The current funding agreement expires on March 31, 2016, so I hope to bring forward a new agreement here sometime in the new year as to the agreement that we reached between Horse Racing Alberta and the government of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, again, these are part of the Premier's commitments to openness, transparency, and board accountability. The Premier has made it very clear that we will be putting people on boards based on their merit and their experience, and so far the Premier has lived up to his word. We will continue to move forward in a transparent manner.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members of the House to support the Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 5

Securities Amendment Act, 2014

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Campbell]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose will be supporting Bill 5. It is a continued effort to harmonize general derivatives provisions with the federal government. It includes incorporation of representatives, registered brokers, and advisers. It enhances enforcement provisions, which is, obviously, important given what we've just gone through in the last several years in that market. It also gives recognition of oversight of the Canadian Public Accountability Board as an auditor oversight organization, and there are other issues. We have no issues with this bill, and we'll be supporting it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals will also be supporting Bill 5, Securities Amendment Act, 2014. It will permit the continued harmonization of regulation of derivatives across Canada in accordance with Alberta's ongoing commitment to harmonization, and it goes on to incorporation of individual representation, the Canadian Public Accountability Board, and enforcement and all that. Canada, unlike most countries, has a decentralized securities regulation regime, and as such, it must rely on its provincial governments to enact legislation supporting the ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system.

The changes proposed in Bill 5 are part of a national effort to harmonize securities rules and mirror those being made in many Canadian jurisdictions, Bill 5 and earlier regulatory changes that our caucus supported in the 2014 spring session. As a province and a country we need to be doing everything possible to protect investors and maintain the integrity of our capital markets. If the 2008 global financial crisis taught us anything, it is that to be complacent in the lack of regulatory vigilance could have catastrophic effects, Mr. Speaker. No country or jurisdiction is immune to the effects of a market collapse. Therefore, it is important that we do our part to support the health and stability of the world financial system. Alberta Liberals acknowledge that the proposed changes are a necessity for Alberta to be able to honour its national and international commitments to improving securities regulation.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't realize the member from the NDP was trying to stand up.

The independent caucus will be supporting this bill also, and should the Premier ever come back on this side, he will need to bring his own chair. I have no chair for him.

Anyway, other than that, a lot has already been said about it. I don't need to repeat what has already been said.

Again, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre from the independent caucus.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for that independent member?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and speak to Bill 5, the Securities Amendment Act, 2014. The Constitution of Canada provides that the regulation of securities is a provincial jurisdiction. Of course, that document was formulated in the mid-19th century, the later middle of the 19th century, so a few things have changed since then.

I don't think leaving securities regulation in the hands of 10 different provincial governments serves the role of investment in the economy, nor does it well serve the investor. I think we need to move towards a more modern system, and I know that this has been a problem for the government, not wanting to cede this constitutional jurisdiction to the federal government, that is anxious to take it over, but at the same time trying to find some way forward, where we can have a more unified national standard for the regulation of stock trading and so on.

The problem is that 10 different jurisdictions in the modern world is a rather parochial solution that's no longer really tenable. What we've said in the past is that we shouldn't have the federal government impose its securities regulation but that we should have a national regulator and that the provinces need to come together to negotiate that so that we have a national regulator. I know that there are some provinces that don't agree with that. I think the federal government is proceeding to move unilaterally, and I think this bill is perhaps a response to that, Mr. Speaker, but it is clear to us that in this particular case, even though the Constitution hasn't been amended, it's been superseded by technology and the fast-paced movement.

This particular Securities Amendment Act focuses on the incorporation of individual representatives, and it allows individual representatives of registered dealers and advisers to provide services through a professional corporation. It provides for the recognition of the Canadian Public Accountability Board as auditor oversight. It clarifies enforcement rules and creates a mechanism for issuing automatic reciprocal enforcement orders in Alberta against securities violators. It allows the Alberta Securities Commission to set its own fees, as Ontario and B.C. already do.

Now, there's a general derivatives harmonization, which was the main focus of Bill 3 in the last session, which was another Securities Amendment Act. It made the language clear around derivatives but leaves the exemptions in the hands of the commission.

Mr. Speaker, currently many derivatives are traded over the counter in private exchanges, not in the public exchanges like the Toronto Stock Exchange or the New York Stock Exchange, that we're all familiar with. Until recently they were unrecorded and unregulated. In October 2012 the Alberta Securities Commission brought in regulations around over-the-counter derivative trades.

I think that securities governance is an area of provincial jurisdiction, as I mentioned. The federal government is pushing forward with a federal regulator. So far it will only be Ontario and B.C., and we've been reluctant to join because of, as I mentioned, the concerns over a loss of jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, I think the act is perhaps a good step in many respects to harmonize our laws with the rest of the provinces and to provide some increased protection for investors, but just like these Securities Act amendment bills get repetitive, it also gets repetitive for us to point out that we wouldn't need to waste valuable time and resources amending the Securities Act every few months if we would just join the other provinces in supporting a national regulator. Now, it would be preferable, from our point of view, if the provinces could get together and agree on a common approach, but I think that that seems to be very, very unlikely.

I have a few questions that I was interested in asking. I know that our federal counterparts in Ottawa, the federal New Democrats, are saying that the Harper Conservatives should not be moving ahead with a national securities regulator without the support of all the provinces. I think that this is something we need to take into account. We know that the Wildrose wants a stronger provincial regulator and have called the current protections: breeding for the wild, wild west of securities laws. Did you guys really say that? Okay. I think that they'd be reluctant to hand over the keys to the federal regulator.

We have called for a national as opposed to a federal government regulator in the past, as I mentioned. You know, I would like some answers to a question, perhaps in the committee stage, for the bill sponsor. We'd like to know why the government is willing to see Alberta left behind as other provinces are joining the call for a national regulator. What is the end result of that going to be for our province?

Mr. Speaker, I await further debate with respect to this bill. I look forward to some of the questions and possibly amendments in the committee stage and thank members for their kind attention.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

Hon. Minister and President of Treasury Board, do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Campbell: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1 Respecting Property Rights Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Chair. The Wildrose will be supporting the passage of this bill in order to repeal Bill 19, which was obviously not a very good act, as the Premier himself said. It is far overreaching with regard to property rights. That's something that we fought very hard in this Legislature for. I remember a lot of late nights in that regard as a member of the opposition defending the rights of property owners from that bill. We were told that we were fearmongering and overreaching and all that sort of stuff, and it turns out that their new leader agrees with us a hundred per cent on that. And that's good. That's obviously something that we can agree on.

I will take the Premier at his word although, I mean, I've got to be a little bit cynical – I wouldn't be doing my job if I wasn't – with regard to this being a first step. Given the record of this government over the last five years on property rights one is a little bit cynical that perhaps this is just window dressing. The fact is that Bill 19 was never actually proclaimed, never actually used, well, for several reasons. One of the biggest reasons, in my view, is that Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, already empowers the government to do essentially anything Bill 19 had in it.

You know, it's obviously a good overture, and our caucus will be supporting it, but we would like to see more. We would like to see more reforms to property rights legislation in this province. Obviously, the Premier's plan to look at what the Property Rights Advocate says and recommends is a good step as well. I've seen some of the recommendations of the advocate, and there are some good things in there for sure. So that's a good thing.

However, there's much more that needs to be done, particularly with regard to Bill 36. There are some issues with Bill 36. I still stand by the fact that I don't believe Bill 36 is a responsible piece of legislation. I believe we can do proper land planning, proper regional co-operation, and we can do that without the hammer of Bill 36. It's been done for years, and there's no reason why we can't do it without the help of a very, I think, harsh bill with regard to the tools that it employs and the lack of guarantees for fair, timely compensation for landowners who have their land designated in a certain zone that detracts from its value, et cetera.

So I think a lot of work needs to be done on Bill 36, and I would urge the Premier to have a review of Bill 36 both internally and perhaps, even better, a review by a standing committee to have some folks there see how we can improve Bill 36 to make it a bill that respects property rights. I don't feel that it does right now.

For example, section 11 in Bill 36 outlines the right of cabinet to rescind rights. Section 19 restricts the right to compensation for landowners. Section 13 withholds a landowner's right to the courts unless cabinet allows for it. Section 15 binds municipalities, regulators, and all Albertans to the bill. Section 15(3) withholds a landowner's right to make a claim against the government. Section 15(4) limits the role of the courts, and 17(4) stipulates that the bill trumps all other acts, including the Expropriation Act.

These are all troubling sections. They all need to be reviewed. They all go too far.

Also, I would encourage with regard to property rights going forward that we do not force communities. You know, this Premier again has talked a lot about respecting local autonomy. He talks about decentralizing health care. Of course, these are things the Wildrose has been talking about for six years, but that's what he is saying, and if he's sincere about that – and I certainly hope that he is – I think it's absolutely important that he respects the rights of communities to represent their constituents and grow their communities in the way they feel is best.

We have issues right now with the Calgary Regional Partnership and the Calgary metropolitan plan coming out of there, that are simmering underneath the surface. Airdrie in a lot of ways, frankly, is being extorted in saying that if they want water going forward, they need to absolutely sign on. It's not by this government. The provincial government isn't using that language of extortion and so forth, but some folks in the city are, and it is putting Airdrie in an extremely difficult position. I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is aware of that, having talked with the mayor. But I think that it's something to really give pause, that when you force communities to do things and you give these plans binding legislative authority, you're really taking away from the autonomy of those communities.

What's happening, frankly, with regard to the CRP and the CMP and Airdrie right now is untoward and it's un-Albertan, and I support our council and our mayor a hundred per cent in any effort to secure our city's autonomy and it being able to grow. Our community is now 55,000 people. It's on its way to 100,000 in the next 10 to 15 years. We need to have autonomy to grow in the way that's best for our community members, and that may be slightly different from Calgary.

This goes to the argument that Bill 36, which has created the South Saskatchewan regional plan, is essentially and directly causing this hardship, because the folks that are pushing the CMP are, frankly, using the South Saskatchewan regional plan in Bill 36 and saying: "Look. If you don't sign on, we will use this as a hammer. We'll get it legislated, and you will have no other choice."

Not only can Bill 36 be strengthened to protect property rights, but it could be strengthened to protect the rights of local law-makers, locally elected officials. I hope that the provincial government, if they believe in local autonomy, believes in property rights and will take a long look to fix Bill 36. It's something I will always be pushing for.

There are other issues with property rights, of course. I have to respectfully disagree with the Premier on how constitutionally enshrining the amendment, that was produced by our Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, to the Constitution protecting property rights would somehow send authority for those property rights over to the federal government. That's actually legally incorrect. I don't know what advice or who is telling him that, but it's factually incorrect. That's not what it would do at all.

The Constitution is very clear. It sets out that property rights are the purview of the provincial government. It couldn't be clearer in our Constitution that that's the case. Simply making it a Charter right that landowners will not be deprived of their land unfairly without due compensation, timely compensation would in no way accede authority to the federal government from the provinces regarding property rights. It just wouldn't do it any more than, you know, the fact that the provincial government enforces criminal law somehow makes the provinces responsible for creating criminal law, which is clearly a federal power. Just because we have policing here and they do criminal law there – you can have the courts protect something and see them as a Charter right, and that doesn't mean that you're ceding it to the federal government to look over.

We have many laws that guard rights and freedoms that are in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I mean, look at human rights commissions. There's an example. Those are all rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms – well, most of them are – yet they're enforced practically on the ground here. That doesn't mean that, you know, the federal government is ceding power to the province or vice versa. It just means that it's a Charter right, that a province or the federal government cannot pass a law that would take away from a landowner's right to fair and timely compensation. That's all that it would do. So I'm not sure why the use of that rhetoric. It's just not accurate. I hope that there will be reconsideration.

Premier Lougheed didn't ask for that to be in the Charter, but if you talk with Preston Manning, who also had a lot of insight into how that process unfolded, he will tell you that it had nothing to do with ceding rights in that regard. It's nonsensical to claim, frankly, that passing property rights into the Charter would somehow be the province giving up those rights to legislate over property rights. It's just not true. Hopefully, we can in the future come back to that. I really do hope so.

There are other issues. Bill 36, really, is the big one. Bill 50, of course, has been rescinded, but it already did its damage. You know, we've just had the lines go up over the highway over Crossfield. I was delayed for about an hour and a half as they put them up because they had a helicopter bringing the big lines over with the big power lines. It was quite something.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. We have a beautiful landscape in and around Brooks.

Mr. Anderson: There you go. A big moonscape. It's fantastic.

Anyway, those power lines were totally unnecessary. We could have been promoting local natural gas production in and around Calgary to service the Calgary area, to service local communities without the use of those power lines. We've got buckets of natural gas when we need it, yet we decided to run massive, expensive power lines down from coal-producing plants in the north down to Calgary and southern Alberta. We did not need those lines, and we're now all paying for it. If you've looked at your utility bills lately, we're all paying for it, and it's a whole lot more than what was claimed at the beginning.

Now, I hope that if this Premier had been in charge and not Mr. Stelmach at the time, he would not have passed or produced such a draconian piece of legislation, such a wasteful piece of legislation. But, you know, I don't know. I hope that's the case. I'll give him the benefit of the doubt on that.

It just shows how important property rights are not just to rural landowners but that they affect urban communities as well and people from urban communities. People in Calgary have to pay for those power lines that Bill 50 was used to build. They have to pay for them. We all have to pay for them no matter where we are. It does affect us. It is not just a rural issue. It is an urban issue. Property rights do matter, you know, and it's sad what's happened over the last few years.

But if this is a first step by the Premier, as he says, towards getting that balance back to where it should be, then we welcome it, and we support it. But we hope that it is just a first small step and that there are many, many more steps with regard to Bill 36, with regard to constitutionally enshrining property rights in the Charter. I think that would be just fantastic if we could leave here at the end of this term with these property rights properly enforced for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. We do not have any amendments for this bill.

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to this bill in Committee of the Whole. Of course, what this bill did not deal with was Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, which was the major bill that caused the vast majority of contention with rural landowners throughout the entire province.

There were three main issues with that bill. The first one was the idea of regional planning. That's where cabinet could pass regional plans that would supersede any local plans within a municipality. Of course, central planning hasn't worked in places like eastern Europe, and most people that I've talked to felt that we shouldn't be bringing that type of planning here to Alberta. Of course, the regional plans would deal with every single public and private use of every single piece of property throughout the province.

The second aspect was the idea of no compensation clauses in the bill. One example was when the lower Athabasca regional plan was passed, and there were a bunch of oil sands leases that were cancelled. There is no compensation mechanism for those companies that had their oil sands leases cancelled. Many question that if an oil sands company cannot obtain compensation when a regional plan extinguishes those rights, what chance does the average landowner, the average farmer have?

The third aspect is the lack of an appeal right to a court. What was placed in Bill 36 was the most all-encompassing privative clause that I've ever seen – essentially that's a clause that prevents an individual from seeking recourse in the courts – and this privative clause was widely discussed by constitutional experts across the province as exceptionally all-encompassing and essentially prohibiting any type of appeal right that someone otherwise would have had.

Of course, it's good that the government is repealing Bill 19, but it is important for there to be these types of amendments to actually repeal laws that have significantly affected landowners and property rights.

Of course, there was the opportunity to entrench property rights in our Constitution. My understanding is that under section 43 of the Constitution's amending formulas a motion passed by a simple majority in the Legislature would have then been conveyed to Parliament, and then thereby, if there was a simple majority vote in Parliament that wanted to entrench property rights, that would have been done, which would have entrenched property rights solely in the jurisdiction of Alberta. It's unfortunate that that was voted down because it would have been nice to see that equivalent motion debated and hopefully passed in Parliament.

We don't have any amendments on this bill. Thank you for the opportunity for speaking.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair, and I will offer some amendments to Bill 1 later, but I would like to speak about a few points relative to this at the moment.

Now, the hon. Member for Airdrie talked about the opposition fighting Bill 19, and that was in 2009. My recollection is that at that time the hon. Member for Airdrie was still part of the government caucus – am I right? – because I know that it was the NDP that stood up and fought against this bill and defended the rights of property owners. We talked about the importance of basic principles, that needed to be protected, that this bill trampled on. They included a number of things. First of all, there has to be a pressing public need if you're going to take somebody's land away. Secondly, there has to be full and fair compensation. Thirdly, there has to be some sort of right of appeal. I think that those are the principles that we need to continue to operate by, and Bill 19 didn't do that.

I don't know if in the next little while we'll have a Wildrose Party standing up for rural property owners' rights, but if not, the NDP will do it. We'll continue to stand up to protect that. Now, it's not that we don't think there are sometimes good public reasons why the province or a municipality might need to acquire some land in order to do things, but it has to be done according to a set of principles.

Now, Airdrie has also talked about the effect of putting the protection of private property in the Constitution, and the Premier said: well, it would transfer the authority over this jurisdiction to the federal government. That's not what the province wants, that's not what Peter Lougheed wanted, and that's not been accepted by Airdrie, and I tend to agree with him. But what it does do is to transfer the jurisdiction to the courts, and it means then that any piece of legislation with respect to this that's introduced in the province of Alberta can be overridden by the courts because the protection is enshrined in the Constitution. So I think Airdrie has missed that point, and I think the Premier missed that point. The real point is whether or not you want to put that into the courts as a fundamental right.

Of course, we believe that it's an important right, but it needs to be carefully balanced with the public good and with the ability of various orders of government being able to proceed with important public projects. So finding the right balance, I think, is what we need to do. Needless to say, Mr. Chairman, we will support this.

There were some other bills, of course, that were very problematic, that were introduced at the time, and not just Bill 19.

I want to just mention that we think that while we're supporting the bill, it's clear that it's another example of PC broken promises. Throughout his leadership campaign the Premier committed himself and his party to addressing the limits on property rights that had been put in place by previous PC governments. He appealed to his background as a property rights lawyer, saying that he negotiated fair settlements with respect to people's property rights. He promised to restore the balance. He also highlighted that private ownership of land is a fundamental right.

I want to just talk a little bit about some of the other bills at the time. Now, Bill 36, the Land Stewardship Act, created seven regional plans that trumped other legislation and concentrated the power to do this in the hands of the cabinet, and that's why we were opposed to Bill 36. We still think that there's too much centralization of authority in terms of planning matters in the federal cabinet. Municipalities need to be able to make plans, and we can't tell them, you know, that they can't develop a plan and say that this type of land in this area will be used for a certain use and this land over here will be used for something else because it's important that we keep – for example, you don't want to have a chemical plant next to a residential area with schools, and so on. There is an important planning role that needs to be exercised, but it should be exercised not necessarily by the cabinet but by locally elected and accountable municipalities. So that's a problem with Bill 36.

Now, Bill 50 was the third one in this troika of trampling of rights of property owners, and it was designed to put through these massive power lines that the province is building all over the place, which do nothing for the beautiful views along many of our roads and highways in the province right now. It allowed the cabinet to define essential transmission infrastructure, which cut out the Alberta Utilities Commission, and it cut out as well other organizations that were part of a process for project assessment decisions.

When this was introduced, we opposed the bill because it failed to protect consumers from the overbuilding of unnecessary transmission lines, the cost of which is going to be passed on to consumers. Now, we said a number of things about Bill 50: all utility projects should be subject to full public scrutiny and a full regulatory process, power customers must not be required to fund utility projects for for-profit companies, and the protection of consumers' interests was paramount. Since then, of course, we know that there have been big increases in power bills, and these costs are all going to be added to the bills of the consumers.

It's a very interesting thing, Bill 1, because I think it fits in very much with the government strategy that we're seeing unfold now, which is that the government is very much all about chasing Wildrose voters, and this was an issue that the Wildrose made considerable hay on.

I think that we need to make a number of steps to go further. I guess, for me, just removing Bill 19 is not enough. We need to be clear in a positive way what we're going to do with respect to the issue of the balance between the public requirement for land in order to build the province and to make sure that progress continues to happen on the one hand and the rights of landowners on the other.

So with that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat, and if there are no other speakers, then maybe you can come back to me.

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's also a great pleasure and honour to speak to Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act. In 2009 the Alberta Liberal caucus had rigorously opposed Bill 19, and we opposed bills 36 and 50, and we fought tooth and nail opposing those bills. Bill 1 is going to repeal the land assembly project act, which was never proclaimed. It came to the House in 2009. The Land Assembly Project Area Act, which never came into force, will be repealed with this bill.

Protecting property rights was in the Premier's leadership campaign all summer; however, the only legislative action within Bill 1 is to repeal the unproclaimed Land Assembly Project Area Act, Mr. Chair. When the Land Assembly Project Area Act was introduced and passed in the spring of 2009, it did so with much controversy from the property owners, and the Alberta Liberal caucus was fighting for the rights of the property owners at the time. The original bill aimed to designate corridors for infrastructure projects such as transportation and utility corridors, and the bill's key impact would have been placing unlimited and indefinite restrictions on landowners' rights on their property, with serious fines and potentially prison as penalties.

At the same time, however, the Liberal caucus had concerns surrounding another law concerning property rights, the Responsible Energy Development Act, which created the Alberta Energy Regulator, Mr. Chair. Although the Responsible Energy Development Act is outside the scope of Bill 1, the Liberal caucus concerns could have been incorporated into the bill.

The Liberal caucus is also concerned about who is granted standing for the hearings on proposed oil, gas, and oil sands projects, Mr. Chair. Only those directly and adversely affected get to participate. This is specifically sections 32, 34, and 36. If the regulator determines that no one filing a statement of concern is directly and adversely affected, there's no hearing. This ignores the property rights of landowners who are indirectly and adversely affected such as landowners who live a distance away from the proposed project. When the proposed project is on public land such as the Cold Lake air weapons range, no one is able to intervene to look after the property rights of the public.

So this restriction also creates First Nations consultation issues, particularly if traditional land is at issue, Mr. Chair. The Premier said that he would address the Responsible Energy Development Act in terms of property rights and First Nations aspects, but no proposal has been released to date. Under the Statutes Repeal Act the Land Assembly Project Area Act would have been repealed in 2016. Starting in 2016, the Statutes Repeal Act will start a process to repeal any unclaimed legislation that has been expired for at least five years. In other words, if the government did nothing, the Land Assembly Project Area Act would have been repealed. So I think this seems like just window dressing, Mr. Chair. But, you know, we are still concerned in the Alberta Liberal caucus. We have a big concern regarding the outstanding property rights concern in Alberta. We will support this bill, you know, but holding our nose. The Alberta Liberal caucus position was against the Land Assembly Project Area Act, and this has not changed, Mr. Chair.

With those comments, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to be brief here. I think it's important as the representative from Drumheller-Stettler that I, too, speak to the Respecting Property Rights Act because I think it's significant, particularly for this constituency, because the repealing of Bill 19 is reminiscent of a previous day in the Legislature here. I think it needs to be put on the record that Bill 19 was sponsored by the previous representative from Drumheller-Stettler, and I find it kind of interesting that the first act of this Legislature would be to repeal an unproclaimed piece of legislation that a previous member of a similar government brought forward.

It's a good start. I'm somewhat dismayed that possibly there should be more changes brought forward. The Premier had made great fanfare of this in his pre-election tours, and even in the presentation of this in the House it was made to be a great fanfare. To be something of only 10 words or less in the handout provided to us by the pages was somewhat disappointing. There are many pieces of legislation specifically relating to Bill 36 that would be far more significant than this, and possibly that will be demonstrated to us in the future. I look forward to that taking place.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have several amendments to Bill 1.

The Chair: If you'd just send it with the pages, hon. member, with the original . . .

Mr. Mason: Yes, I will.

The Chair: . . . and then you can speak to it.

We'll refer to this as amendment A1, hon. member. I think you can start speaking to it.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. Well, I'll move that Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act, be amended in the preamble in the fifth recital by adding "as a preliminary measure," after "Land Assembly Project Area Act." This is because we feel that this is incomplete and that there are many more steps to go, but the bill doesn't anticipate that.

I have another amendment, which I'll move, which completes this.

The Chair: Hon. member, why don't we deal with this one? Then we'll go to the next one and deal with it.

4:50

Mr. Mason: Yeah. I just wanted to point out that there's a connection between this one and the next one. The two amendments are designed to point out that the following bills remain on the books: Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act; Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; and Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act. We think that these things need to be dealt with as well. I think that that's one of the things that I wanted to mention. I think that we want to indicate that it doesn't go far enough, and the commitment by our party regarding land rights five years ago remains unaddressed. We're especially disappointed that the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, amended by a controversial Bill 50 in 2009, has not been addressed. By failing to address that bill, the government continues to prioritize the interests of industry, in this example electricity, over landowners and Alberta families.

We want to indicate by this amendment that there are further changes coming and that this bill, in and of itself, does not accomplish the things that are set out in its preamble. It is only a step towards accomplishing those things, particularly the first and second elements of the preamble: "is a fundamental element of Parliamentary democracy." I don't know how ownership of land is a fundamental element of democracy. It confuses democracy with rights, in my view. That's the first thing.

Secondly, "The Alberta Bill of Rights recognizes and declares the right of the individual to the enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law," and "The Government is committed to consulting with Albertans on legislation."

In my view, Mr. Chair, this is an incomplete bill, which does not satisfy the objectives set out in the preamble. Thank you.

The Chair: Speaking to amendment A1, any speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I've got another one, Mr. Chair. On behalf of my colleague – well, I'll move it in just a second.

The Chair: This is amendment A2. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I will move that Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act, be amended in the preamble in the fifth recital by adding “part of” after “reaffirms.” So it would read: reaffirms part of the government’s commitment to respect individual property rights. I just think it makes more sense to admit that this does not completely do that, that it’s just a first step.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any questions or comments on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We’re back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I have the last one here.

An Hon. Member: Aw.

Mr. Mason: It’s going quickly. Don’t worry.

The Chair: Hon. member, this will be amendment A3. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act, be amended in the preamble by adding the following after the third recital: “Whereas the Government wants to begin to resolve any ambiguity about its position on property rights.” That would mean that the government wants to begin to resolve ambiguity, which is, I think, what they’ve created. They want to do that. They haven’t accomplished that yet. That’s, as far as I know, the purpose of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any speakers to amendment A3?

Seeing none, we’ll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill.

An Hon. Member: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 3 Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The Chair: Any questions or comments on the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah. It’s an honour to rise and speak to Bill 3, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014. My understanding is that this piece of legislation merely codifies a directive that was issued by the Supreme Court of Canada. You know, this could have been an opportunity to do a more broad and comprehensive review of this legislation, but in light of the explicit ruling of the Supreme Court, this amendment just appears to comply with that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Bill 3 is a remedy for a judicial review that ultimately resulted in the Personal Information Protection Act being declared unconstitutional and struck down. This bill is intended to make PIPA compliant with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and nothing else.

In practice this will make filming individuals crossing a picket line during a strike legal, regardless of individuals’ consent, along with its internal use and disclosure. According to the bill this will be “for the purpose of informing or persuading the public about a matter of significant public interest or importance relating to a labour relations dispute [with] the trade union.” Bill 3 appears to satisfy the Charter’s requirements regarding free expression during a legal strike.

Although the Alberta Information and Privacy Commissioner is satisfied with Bill 3, the union took PIPA to the Supreme Court, and the United Food and Commercial Workers local 401 is still concerned that the bill’s scope is too narrow, Mr. Chair. That’s the only concern there. I think it’s still a step in the right direction, but those concerns should have been addressed in the bill. We will be supporting the bill but with those concerns from the union.

Thank you very much.

5:00

The Chair: Are there others to speak to the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 5 Securities Amendment Act, 2014

The Chair: Any questions?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 4Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is my honour to rise again and talk on Bill 4, the Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014, in Committee of the Whole. As I stated in my second reading comments, I did have some questions and stated that I would have an amendment, so at this time I would like to propose and bring forward the amendment. I will discuss it after it has been handed out.

The Chair: Hon. members, we have an amendment, which will be amendment A1, to Bill 4. As that's being circulated, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, you may speak to it.

Mr. Hale: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will read into the record my amendment. It states:

Mr. Hale to move that Bill 4, Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014, be amended in section 4, in the proposed section 7, by striking out “, the Fiscal Management Act and the Auditor General Act” and substituting “and the Fiscal Management Act.”

As I stated in my preliminary comments in second reading, there is a large portion of public funds that are put into Horse Racing Alberta. That was also reiterated by the hon. minister and his staff at the bill briefing. That was part of the reason why they wanted an appointed board to look after Horse Racing Alberta, because there were lots of public funds that were put into it. In their quest and our quest to hold the government to account and to be transparent and accountable to the people of Alberta, I feel that it's important to allow the Auditor General to have some authority to go in and see how the money is being spent and to hold the board, which is put in place through orders in council, to account on how they're spending our money.

It says under section 7:

Status as a Provincial agency

7 The Corporation is not a Provincial agency for the purposes of the Financial Administration Act, the Fiscal Management Act and the Auditor General Act.

To me, when I read that, it's saying that the corporation is not going to be looked at under the Auditor General. We may hear statements that the Auditor General still can look at it, but if this is law, then the Auditor General is not an agency under the Auditor General Act. I feel we need to take that statement out so that there is no confusion, there is no chance that the Auditor General has his hands tied and is not able to look into this Horse Racing Alberta.

The Auditor General does great work. We've seen it many times. He's shown ways that money is maybe not being spent right, is wrongly allocated, and he needs the opportunity in the full breadth of his work to be able to look into Horse Racing Alberta.

As I stated before, Horse Racing Alberta is great for the province of Alberta. It's great for the horse breeders in Alberta and great for the general public. It provides entertainment; it provides jobs. It's a part of our culture, being a western province. You look at a lot of the major cities, Edmonton and Calgary, and lots of horses have been used in the earlier days. The Calgary Stampede is based on agriculture, and horses have had so much to do with our history and our past. It's great to see that it's stayed alive, the horse-racing industry in Alberta.

I just think it is very, very important that the Auditor General be allowed to look into this act, into this board that is ultimately appointed by the cabinet. Having his title in it, that the Auditor General Act does not apply to this portion – I think it needs to be taken out and the Auditor General given every opportunity to look into this act.

I hope the members on both sides of the House will support my amendment. Thank you.

5:10

The Chair: Anyone to speak to the amendment? The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I actually thank the member for the questions. He raises some good questions.

Mr. Chairman, the reason to exclude the corporation from the Auditor General Act is the same as the reason for excluding it from the Financial Administration Act and the Fiscal Management Act. The corporation does not function as an instrument of the government; that is, unlike other corporations such as AIMCo or Alberta pension services, it is not an agency established to carry out or facilitate the work of the government. Rather, the HRA is, in essence, a body for industry self-regulation, more akin in terms of function to the Law Society of Alberta or the Alberta Association of Architects, neither of which are provincial corporations.

Since HRA, for practical purposes, functions outside the government, it would not be logical, Mr. Chairman, for the Auditor General to be the auditor of the corporation. Of course, the Auditor General can still audit the grant funding provided by the government, but that is more limited and a more suitable interface.

Since HRA does not function as an instrument of government, it has been excluded from the responsibilities and controls that apply to provincial corporations under the FAA or the FMA. It is true that Horse Racing Alberta receives the majority of its revenues through grant funding from the government, but it is the funding agreement that should be the control mechanism that ensures productive use of that funding. Further, the funding agreement should, if it doesn't already, enable either the department or the Auditor General to inspect records of the corporation as necessary to ensure compliance with the provisions with the funding agreement.

Probably the more pertinent question, Mr. Chairman, is perhaps why directors of this particular corporation should be appointed by the government, which is what, but for the express exception, would trigger the categorization of provincial corporation and thus the application of the AGA, the FAA, and the FMA. The answer is governance.

The corporation represents and governs multiple stakeholders within the industry, and this has led to governance issues. Appointing a majority of directors who will not come from any particular stakeholder is a device to address the governance issues. Further, application of the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act will also bring further discipline, that should improve governance.

As for why the government cares about the governance of HRA, the circumstance that the corporation receives the majority of its revenues through grant funding from the government answers that question. Moreover, the government has a legitimate interest in the effectiveness of self-regulation of any industry.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that we vote down this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others speaking to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the bill.

Any more speakers on the bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: It's my understanding that I'm expecting an amendment from a member this evening. Pursuant to that, I would like to move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: The committee shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 1, Bill 3, and Bill 5. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 6
Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Olson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. It's my honour and privilege to stand and talk to Bill 6, the Statutes Amendment Act. I know that the agriculture minister did brief members of our caucus and our staff on this bill. I guess, basically, it talks about some changes in Municipal Affairs, the Safety Codes Act, the Ministry of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, some changes to the Workers' Compensation Act, and the Farm Implement Act.

I can see from looking at the bill that my first thoughts are that it's going to help our farm implement dealers. I hear from some of my colleagues and friends that are buying farm equipment that, you know, when they deal with the dealers, a lot of money is changing hands with the cost of our machinery these days. The farms are getting larger, and the equipment needs to get larger, too. It seems that everybody has less and less time to get their work done, so we need bigger equipment. This just protects the dealerships from equipment that's bought at auctions, public auctions. This gives them a little bit more security, I guess, that the equipment that they have to stand up for and cover under warranty is – the equipment is something they have to deal with, and they need to have the opportunity to stay competitive in today's market, and from what I've been told, this is something that our implement dealers are in favour of.

With that, I will take my seat and listen to the other members speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers on Bill 6?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

The hon. minister of agriculture has moved second reading of Bill 6.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would propose that we adjourn until tonight at 7:30.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has moved that the House stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good evening, everyone. I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4 Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. What a great honour and privilege it is to be here this evening. It's my understanding that many of us were called back here tonight because of little old me, and I thank you, all, for going above and beyond the call of duty to hear my scintillating comments on the bill and to hear my minor amendment, that I think will go a long way to increasing openness and transparency and be a reasonable fiscal management tool for Horse Racing Alberta going forward.

If we look at this bill in the main, I have to ask myself – and I start from the starting point, you know – about Alberta horse racing: do we necessarily need to be in the business of fundamentally supporting this sport? I ask that because, in my view, there are lots of opportunities now in this province to go and bet on horses and to take part in it. They're called local pubs. I see people at those places all the time, like at Schanks in Calgary and other places, where, in fact, most of the people actually go to place bets – okay? – if they're interested in the actual sport of horse racing. You've seen a large portion of the Alberta population move with their feet, and they go, in fact, to these locations. That's where they do their betting. That's where they enjoy their horse racing because . . .

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member.

Can I ask the Assembly to keep the level of chatter down? It's very hard to hear the member. I'm sure he's prepared some really good words for us to listen to.

Thank you, hon. member. Carry on.

Mr. Hehr: Like I was saying, many of Alberta's horse-racing aficionados, shall we call them, have decided to move with their feet and vote with their feet. They do. They go to pubs around this great province where they are able to bet on horse racing. You see that at the casinos in Calgary and other locations. You go in there, and they have the races from all across North America playing there, whether they're in California or Kentucky or the like. All the big races are there. That's where it seems to be that the majority of people these days are now going to enjoy their horse-betting experience.

So back to my point: is it necessary to prop up Horse Racing Alberta in the fashion that we do, where we have allowed for this organization – the only one, in my view, in Alberta that gets this special treatment – to have a unique arrangement with the Alberta lottery foundation and this government as to how they organize and are able to run their operations? They essentially have access to video lottery terminals that are placed at their sites across Alberta. I don't think there are very many left, three or four tracks around this province that are still existing. This money that flows through from the video lottery terminals goes through to support Horse Racing Alberta.

Essentially, it's my understanding that this goes to support both the breeding of animals as well as to having bigger purses for the people who win the said races. You have two groups of people benefiting from this. Largely, they're the same people: one, the people who breed horses – they're the people who put horses into races – and then the people who win the races. So it's the 40 or so people in this province who run horse racing that this unique structure has come about and has been put in place for.

It's different than any other organization, and I have to almost question why we are bending over backwards to do this. It's my understanding that at one time this government wasn't in the business of being in business. Now, I'm not sure whether this government knows from day to day what their stance is anymore on that proposition or the like, but this appears to be, at least on the surface, something that is keeping Horse Racing Alberta afloat.

I will point out, Madam Speaker, that currently the organization has a large amount of debt outstanding on their balance sheet, that even with this unique arrangement with the funds provided by Alberta gaming, it is having a difficult way forward, and maybe – I don't even think maybe. I think it is dying a natural death in this province.

Now, I don't want the horse-racing industry to go away, nor did I really want the buggy and the wagon to go away, Madam Chair, but sometimes the population just isn't interested anymore, and they find other things. I heard they now have this MMA wrestling or, you know, battling on TV and the like that all the cool kids are going to see Friday nights and not necessarily going to their local track.

It's akin to: why would we bend over backwards for this industry when, it seems to me, we do nothing for bingos? My understanding is that the bingo parlours are not necessarily chugging along on all cylinders, you know, and we haven't allowed for that organization to put in video lottery terminals or other measures to increase their bottom line because I think, like the horse-racing industry, they may be dying a natural death. The cool kids just don't want to go play bingo anymore. I don't know why, Madam Chair – you get a dauber out; you start knocking away at those numbers; my goodness, I've had some fun times doing that – but it just seems to be the zeitgeist of the time.

I question as to why we're involved in this unique funding mechanism for this unique product at this time in Alberta, and our party has always questioned whether or not this is the right thing for the Alberta government to be involved in. It seems to be that if people were going to go to video lottery terminals, well, they would go anyway regardless of whether it was horse racing or not. Those funds would come back to the provincial coffers and then could be used to support some charitable opportunities for the homeless, some for the sick or the poor, or things of that nature that may be better served than us propping up our breeder associations and the like. It just seems to be a more rational way to treat our operations. Treat all the charitable organizations and gaming organizations alike. Let's not carve out a unique opportunity for a group that has a long-standing relationship with this government, who, just for the sake of running the operations, continue doing that. I question the whole mechanism of the program, ma'am.

With respect to the actual changes to the bill there are a few of them, actually, that are a good thing. I think that moving the appointment from 12 to 11 members is a better thing because then, you know, there are no tie votes. It's, obviously, important, from an organizational structure, to do those things.

It also increases the members of the public on the board from three to six. I think this is a good thing, too. The six members from the public at large can be people who are interested in horse racing, interested in just the accountability, interested in how we're using our lottery terminals, if that's what they're interested in, and can apply and be named to this committee. That's a move in the right direction and one that I would support.

Largely, what concerns me in this bill, despite my standing by the fact that I don't think this government should be involved in this business, is the fact that for some reason it is protected from the purview of the Fiscal Management Act. It is protected, then, from the Auditor General going in and looking at how this organization uses public funds. Although these funds are raised at their local operations, video lottery terminals are run by this province.

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member.

Hon. members, the noise level is reaching a very high point. I know that each one of you is having a quiet conversation, but when 35 of you are all having quiet conversations, there is a very high noise level. Can we try to please keep it down.

Thanks very much.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Madam Chair. If we look at that unique structure, you know, we're wondering as to whether or not the viability – at least having some public members on that board, who are not from an industry association or a breeding association, I think is a positive thing for this bill.

But like I said – now I'm getting back to my point – I cannot for the life of me see why this organization is not subject to the Fiscal Management Act and the Auditor General Act. These are public funds. Although they're derived from horse-racing operations and the money they raise from the lottery terminals on their property during the events, the government is in charge of these terminals, and the government is in charge of the use and operation of those funds, so my goodness it should be subject to the act.

Therein lies the rub, and I'll cut back to it. Maybe this organization needs the eyes of the Auditor General upon it. Like I said, their books are not necessarily in that good a shape. The Auditor General could look into the practices and understand whether this unique set of circumstances in fact is in the public interest and whether we're getting public value out of it. That's why we have an Auditor General, and that's why I think it would behoove us to take that statute out.

On that note, I would like to move an amendment that does exactly that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you have copies of the amendment?

Mr. Hehr: Yes, I believe I do. They are all here on my desk ready to go or the like.

The Deputy Chair: We'll take a moment until they get distributed to all the members, please. This amendment will be known as A2.

Hon. member, I think you can go ahead and read the amendment while we're waiting for it to be distributed, and then we can proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. I move that Bill 4, Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014, be amended by striking out section 4. If we look at the bill, this would take out the portion of the act that takes away the Auditor General's power and the Fiscal Management Act's power to investigate what is happening with this organization.

Like I stated earlier, the sole reason for the Auditor General existing is to look into the use of public funds and whether they're truly being used in a reasonable and rational fashion and whether they truly serve the best interests of the Alberta public. Are we gaining substantially by this investment as a province? It is the Auditor General's sworn responsibility to do so.

I for the life of me can't understand why Horse Racing Alberta gets the unique position of being unauditably by this organization. We're allowed to audit every government department. We're allowed to audit Alberta Health Services. We're allowed to audit WCB. We're allowed to audit universities and the like. So why is it that this organization deserves the privilege of being excluded? I, for the life of me, don't understand this. Maybe the minister responsible could explain to me why it needs this unique status. Maybe there's a good reason. I, for the life of me, have thought about it long and hard, and I just simply don't understand it. It may be easy for the minister responsible to do so. If we look at where this bill is and what it needs for openness and transparency, which this government repeatedly claims it's all about, then this amendment should happen.

So on that note, I'd like to invite the members to vote for the amendment and proceed from there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We are debating amendment A2. Are there any other members who wish to comment on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the chance to make a couple of comments in regard to this very reasonable amendment. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for pointing out section 4. I confess that I was just reading the overall bill and didn't look at this one. It stands out considerably because, of course, it excludes the board from the Financial Administration Act.

Considering, Madam Chair, the amount of monies that Horse Racing Alberta does receive from our Legislature here, from our budget, I think it's incumbent upon us to ensure that we use all the means which we have available to us to audit and administer the funds going to boards and agencies which we are responsible for. We debate the money that goes to Horse Racing Alberta. I can't remember how much it was last year, but I remember a number of $40 million. [interjection] Yeah, that has been historically the amount, and considering the extraordinary financial arrangement that Horse Racing Alberta has as well by which they are collecting more of their VLT money than other equivalent bodies, then with that gambling element I think it's incumbent upon us to ensure that we are auditing and using all of the tools, especially the Financial Administration Act, to ensure that there is transparency there.

Globally, certainly, I don't believe that this subsidy to the horse-racing industry should continue anyway. I mean, historically we know the evolution of the tracks in Alberta. Really, there's only one main track left, and that's here in Edmonton. Attendance is down. You know, they have been making a go of it, and I wish them the best. Certainly, it's a very interesting and historical sport. I certainly followed it in my own family for many years and the track in Calgary, too. But $40 million for an industry: I think a lot of Albertans are kind of surprised that we even do that. Certainly, at the very least, I would support the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's amendment here but with the provision that I also in a more global sense don't approve of our subsidy of the horse-racing industry in this province, period.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would just urge hon. members to vote against this amendment because, in essence, it's the same as the amendment brought forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, which essentially takes it away from the Auditor General Act and the Fiscal Management Act. As was articulated by the Minister of Finance earlier, there is no reason for us to amend this bill in this way. So I would urge all hon. members to vote against this amendment based on what the Minister of Finance said earlier this afternoon.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, shall I call the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the bill now. You have some time left, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Well, Madam Chair, I'm surprised at that. It would have indeed gone a long way for openness and transparency and for allowing us to look at how an organization runs its finances. As we well know, this has a unique arrangement in the realm of Alberta government operations. Horse Racing Alberta benefits from a large contribution of taxpayer dollars in the form of revenue generated from our VLTs. I think it would be important for us to have the Auditor General able to look at this arrangement, at whether it's serving our best interest, whether we are doing everything possible to deal with problem gambling and the like, everything associated with horse racing and VLTs. We cannot have an eye on what is happening at these tracks without the Auditor General taking a look at it. So I'm surprised that we continue on this practice.

To close, in the main I'm wondering why we're involved in this industry in the first place. It seems like a government subsidy set up in a unique set of circumstances by possibly a unique set of insiders who are very close to this government and who have long-standing ties. In my view, it's something we should get out of and look at, actually, how our entire lottery industry is set up and whether it's serving the best interests of Albertans in terms of both revenue generation and problem gambling and balance those priorities with what's in the best interest for all of our futures.

On that note, I'd urge all members to vote against this bill, in particular since we voted down the amendment here and the amendment of my friends from the Wildrose that were seeking more clarity and more reasonableness and the fact that having the Auditor General look at things is usually considered a good thing for the Alberta public.

In any event, those are my comments, Madam Chair, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who have any questions or comments or amendments for Bill 4, Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 4?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, could you ask us to do that for Bill 4, please.

Mr. Denis: For Bill 4. Mea culpa.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, I need you to say that you'd like us to rise and report Bill 4.

Mr. Denis: Okay. Madam Chair, I would move that we rise and report Bill 4. Mea culpa.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As it is very late and I know the Member for Airdrie is tired, I would like to move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 7:56 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Holy and great Creator, guide us this day and every day. Since millions of Albertans have put their trust and faith into our hands as lawmakers, help us to do our very best to not disappoint them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, starting with the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a very large contingent of students from Spruce Grove Woodhaven middle school. We have 134 visitors in both galleries. I had an opportunity to have a chat with them down in the rotunda as they were there for their pictures. They passed a law, just as we do, in their parliament that would require mandatory French as second-language schooling in Alberta, which I thought was quite interesting. A vigorous debate was had by all, but I guess it passed. They are accompanied by teachers Rob Peet, Mark Bradshaw, Jayna Butler, Mary St. Amand, and Hazel Wolfert, and parents Jerry Russell, Carie Purdy, and Cory Sinclair. As I said, they are in both galleries. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

If not, let us move on with other important guests, starting with Edmonton-Decore, followed by Sherwood Park.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly seven guests here in recognition of the Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Foundation CTO project, where 100 memorial plaques were unveiled across Canada on August 22, 2014, to mark the 100th anniversary of the implementation of the War Measures Act. One of the memorial plaques was unveiled in Edmonton-Decore at the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex.

My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Mr. Taras Podilsky, chair, Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex unveiling committee and activist in recognition of the internment operations; Mr. Emil Yereniuk, chair, Ukrainian Canadian Congress internment and assisted to co-ordinate the Canada plaque project; Mr. Jerry Bayrak, internee descendant of Mary Hancharuk Bayrak – she was the last survivor of all the camps across Canada; Mr. Eugene Harasymiw, posthumous; Mrs. Natalie Harasymiw, wife of Eugene Harasymiw; Mr. Adrian Harasymiw, son of Eugene Harasymiw; Mr. Andriy Harasymiw, president of the Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Foundation and son of Eugene Harasymiw; and Mr. Andrew Hladyshesky, QC, lead negotiator of the federal internment redress agreement. Also, unable to attend from Calgary were Ms Halya “Helen” Wilson and Mr. Borys Sydoruk. Both were activists in recognition of the internment operations. I would now ask the Assembly to please provide the traditional warm welcome to my guests.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by the leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents from my constituency of Sherwood Park, Jayme Paccagnan and Derek Fettback. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, leader of the ND opposition, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests, Debbie Arcand and Rodney Kusiek. Debbie and Rodney are both executive members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees local 47, which represents continuing care employees in the private sector in central and northern Alberta. The Alberta NDP is extremely proud to stand with local 47 to fight for an increase in funding for seniors' housing across the province. I'd like to ask my guests to rise, which they've already done, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Chris and Mrs. Carol Robertson. The Robertsons are constituents from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and we're very proud to have them here today. Mr. Robertson is the first and only person in history to travel from the bottom of mainland Canada to the top under his own power, on his bicycle. He has authored a book entitled To the Top Canada and has spoken to over 5 million Canadians, challenging Canadians with just one question: what will you do to make Canada a better country than you found it? I would like them both to rise – they're seated in the members' gallery – and I ask for the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce five students from the University of Alberta. I spoke to their class recently about my compassionate care bill and what it means for Albertans. They're now interested to see the inner workings of the Chamber, so I'm very happy to have them here today. They're looking very studious up there as well. I ask Maria Dolores Irizar Carrillo, Kristen Huggett, Sandra Langat, Erin Cherlet, and Carla Cichowska to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, two minutes each, please.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the message in today's fiscal update couldn't be clearer. There is an emerging fiscal crisis developing in this province, that we need to address immediately. We have a systemic budget deficit. What does this mean? It means that in order to avoid having to borrow money to pay for government infrastructure and services, the oil price needs to be roughly $110 per barrel, but it isn't. Instead, oil prices are set to be in the $60 to $80 range for an extended period of time, which means billions upon billions in new debt every single year. Our provincial financial health is literally in the hands of oil tycoons in the Middle East. It's upsetting, and it's disturbing.

Now, I could stand here and rail against this government for putting us in this position. The Wildrose has been sounding the alarm on this exact set of circumstances for the last five years, and our suggestions, including many that the government is now actively considering, were regularly mocked and called extreme. The fact is that I don't really care whose fault it is anymore. I just know that if we in this House truly care about our kids and the future of our grandkids, the future of our amazing province, we need to come together and fix this problem. We need to ask ourselves: what are we leaving to our children? A bunch of debt? Schools, hospitals and roads that they can't afford to staff or maintain because they are drowning in debt finance charges? What kind of legacy is that?

We still have time to get this right, but we must start now. Our window of opportunity is shrinking daily. It is my hope that all of us in this House can come together and agree to a new, multiyear fiscal plan that will balance the budget at $80 oil, eliminate the need for additional debt, and save for the future. We are at a critical, critical crossroads. We owe it to all Albertans to get it right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The second-quarter fiscal update delivered today by the Finance minister reflects the provincial government's continuing dependence on oil and gas royalty revenue to fund public programs. His job, as he put it, was to finish the fiscal year in the black. Hard choices lie ahead, so he said. Hard choices indeed. A large drop in royalty revenue with no increase from other sources means only one thing: more cuts are coming, layoffs and hiring freezes are coming, waiting lists will grow, and user fees will rise.

The Premier said that lower oil prices mean that it won't be business as usual for the government, but for this PC government, cuts when oil prices fall is business as usual. This government has promised for years to get off the royalty roller coaster, but here we are once again coming over the top of the rickety track, about to plunge down amid screams and white knuckles. We've been on this ride too long, Mr. Speaker, and it's time the government got serious about getting off it.

In the early 2000s the Klein government, its coffers brimming from sky-high natural gas royalties, offered two major tax cuts, ironically, to the people who needed them least. The first was the flat tax, and the second was a massive cut in corporate income taxes. Both of these initiatives cost the provincial treasury billions of dollars. Now with gas prices down and oil prices right behind, this PC government is poised to cut health care and education and other public programs yet again.

Mr. Speaker, there is a price to be paid for rock-bottom tax rates for the wealthy and the corporate sector. That price is paid by low- and middle-income Albertans, who depend on the government programs, including access to our health care system and a high-quality, accessible education for our kids. It's paid by seniors who receive inadequate care in nursing homes and by young people who can't afford a postsecondary education.

Mr. Speaker, there is something we can do. A good start would be to axe the flat tax, a practical step. In that way we can take one concrete step to ensuring that when the price of oil drops, we are not yet again laying off teachers and nurses. Every other province in this country has a progressive income tax. It's time Alberta did as well.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Patriotic Acts

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our society was rocked when Warrant Officer Patrice Vincent and Corporal Nathan Cirillo were killed on Canadian soil. Prior to this many of us thought that we were immune to such horrid acts of terrorism in Canada. It seemed that we all stopped and took a collective breath, and during that breath we took stock of the many rights and privileges we enjoy. Our children have the freedom to attend school, and in Alberta we even have many educational choices. We have the right to assemble, to move about freely. We have the right to practise our chosen religion. The list is lengthy, and we should give thanks each and every day for those opportunities and for the men and the women who wear the uniform to protect our country.

Throughout the province acts of patriotism sprang forth. Some people sang O Canada just a little louder. Many more people attended Remembrance Day ceremonies, and in Fort Saskatchewan one man, Chris Robertson, got up extra early, grabbed the enormous flag he had from his national unity ride from March 1997 to January 1998, stood on the corner of highways 15 and 21 in our early Fort Saskatchewan rush hour, which, by the way, is just as congested as any large city rush hour, and proudly waved the flag. He wanted motorists to share the pride he had for his great country and to share the message. They responded. They honked their horns. Soldiers, their families, and industrial workers stopped and thanked him and brought him a lot of coffee, by the way. Coverage of this small act spread across the world. The message: we will not be silenced.

Chris Robertson, seated with his wife, Carol, in the members' gallery today, moved to Alberta from Ontario less than a month before his flag-waving stand. He followed his children here, and he loves his adopted province. He rode from Point Pelee to Tuktoyaktuk to take a stand for national unity, and he challenges all Albertans to ask themselves what they can do to make Canada a better place than they found it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Foundation CTO 100 Project

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, Canada may be renowned for its tolerance, multiculturalism, and respect, and it may pride itself on the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but enacting the 1914 War Measures Act was a dark moment in our nation's history. This was a piece of legislation which permitted the Canadian government to establish a national internment operation. From 1914 to 1920 in excess of 8,500 Ukrainian and other European immigrant men, women, and children who were unconnected with the conflict of the First World War were imprisoned at 24 internment camps throughout Canada.

The apprehended immigrants, who had come from what were seen as enemy countries, had their movements controlled, their properties and valuables confiscated, and anyone thought to be an enemy sympathizer could be arrested and kept in interment without trial. These were immigrants who chose our great country in response to the Canadian government's first concentrated policy to promote immigration. They came seeking opportunity only to become prisoners in the Canadian promised land. This was not a proud moment, Mr. Speaker, in Canadian history, and it is very difficult to comprehend the unjust policy mistakes of the past. As a fourth-generation Ukrainian it is with a heavy heart that I am reminded of the price paid by our forebears. The damaging effects and crippling impact of an internment experience are incomprehensible.

Mr. Speaker, on Friday, August 22, 2014, at 11 o'clock local time the Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Foundation CTO project unveiled 100 memorial plaques across Canada to commemorate the 100th anniversary since the War Measures Act was initiated. The Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex in Edmonton-Decore was one of the 100 sites to unveil a memorial plaque. Special thanks to the Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Foundation, the Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Descendants of the Ukrainian Canadian Internee Victims Association, and the Canadian First World War internment recognition fund. Together their steadfast efforts will ensure that the generations will be vigilant to keep alive the memory of those who have suffered.*

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Medicine Hat.

Strathcona Community Hospital

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recently opened Strathcona community hospital is an excellent example of the health care services that we enjoy in this province. Albertans want to receive the care they need close to home, and the opening of the Strathcona community hospital ensures that residents have access to the quality health care they need in their community.

The hospital provides a seniors' clinic and an ambulatory home-care clinic, ensuring that community seniors are taken care of, houses the community mental health facility, providing county residents with comprehensive mental health services, and offers rehabilitation services and chronic disease education classes. It has a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week emergency department, which means that people can receive emergency care in our community instead of being sent to Edmonton, and features 27 stretcher beds suitable for an overnight stay if necessary.

On average only 3.6 per cent of emergency department visits have required transfer to another facility to meet complex medical needs. That means more than 96 per cent of emergency cases are able to be dealt with by the Strathcona community hospital. The hospital responded to nearly 19,000 visits between the time it opened this spring and the end of October, around 125 patients per day. For the last 30 days on average the wait time from triage to being seen by a physician is 1.2 hours.

The success of the Strathcona community hospital shows that your government is committed to providing Albertans with a patient-focused, efficient, effective, and sustainable health care delivery system. I'd like to congratulate the community hospital on their opening and their successful delivery of health care services in Strathcona county in the last few months. With partners like the staff and physicians at the Strathcona community hospital we'll be able to continue to provide Albertans with quality health care services that meet their needs in their community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Housing Initiatives in Medicine Hat

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to share with all Albertans a real success story. The Medicine Hat Community Housing Society is on the verge of ending homelessness within its five-year goal, five years ahead of the provincial goal. Ending homelessness means that no one in our community will have to live in an emergency shelter or sleep rough for more than 10 days before they have access to stable housing and the wraparound supports needed to maintain that status. This has been achieved through engagement of community partners and local stakeholders in addressing the complexity of affordable housing and homelessness.

This collaboration takes a systems approach to change the status quo in Medicine Hat in order to effect meaningful and lasting change. In 2001 Medicine Hat was the first in Alberta to implement the housing stability program, which focused on increasing housing stability for social housing tenants to reduce the risk of homelessness. Since April 1, 2009, 489 homeless adults plus 253 children have been housed. Like other communities, we do have a variety of factors that cause homelessness, and the key is working with local partners to address those issues and tackle them head-on.

In Medicine Hat it is estimated that homelessness costs between $66,000 and $120,000 per person annually while providing housing with wraparound supports is estimated at $13,000 to $34,000 per person annually. There is an estimated 51 per cent reduction in days spent in the hospital, a 41 per cent reduction in the use of emergency rooms, plus a 48 per cent reduction in the number of days spent in jail. To meet the final goal of ending homelessness in Medicine Hat, there is a request to the provincial government for additional funding of $12.6 million.

Medicine Hat had similar per capita numbers to Edmonton's and Calgary's and yet found a path to success. If Medicine Hat has found a solution that works in the real world, then it can be shared and the lessons learned can be implemented elsewhere. I want to congratulate all the Medicine Hat partners in reaching this lofty goal by facing this challenge head-on with the true intent of success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, 35 seconds for each question, 35 seconds for each answer, maximum. Let us begin with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Budget

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the second-quarter financials are in, and I couldn't help but notice that the new managers are using the same budgeting tricks that got the old managers into so much trouble. Instead of counting money in and money out and reporting the difference the way any normal Albertan would understand it, they continue to pretend that some spending isn't really spending. Apparently, you can take in $44 billion, spend $47 billion, borrow $3 billion, and still claim that you have a surplus. Imagine that. To the Premier: why does he continue to claim a surplus when he knows he is going deeper into debt?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, in response to the direct question I would encourage the hon. member to spend some time with the Auditor General to clarify her understanding of public-sector accounting rules, which the Auditor General, I'm sure, will be happy to do, because the premise of her question is entirely incorrect. But I do welcome the focus upon the public finances of the government of Alberta. The Finance minister spoke about this today. This is a time that warrants prudence, caution, and discipline in terms of public expenditures.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would encourage the Premier to return to the consolidated budgeting that we used to have under Klein and Dinning.

This government couldn't actually balance our books when oil was around $100 a barrel, but since then oil has fallen to the $70s. The hole in our budget will be massive if this continues. Good fiscal management once had Alberta with no debt and $17 billion in savings, but during an economic boom this government nearly wiped out our savings and took us into debt. Will the Premier tell us how far into debt he is willing to go?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we have the lowest tax rates in Canada, we have the highest income in Canada, we are arguably the only jurisdiction in North America that is in a net asset position. This is all something that Albertans should be proud of, and at the hands of this government we'll continue to manage the finances of this province in a responsible way. But I would again encourage the hon. member to meet with people from the accounting profession, from the public sector – the Auditor General is a good source of information – because her understanding of public-sector accounting is wrong.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans were also proud to be debt free.

Speaking of debt, Mr. Speaker, this government likes to pretend that debt doesn't have a cost. They borrow billions and tell us that it must be done, but then they don't tell us the downside. Here are the facts. By the end of this year Alberta taxpayers will be forking over $700 million to service our debt. That's $700 million that won't be available to pay for education or to look after our seniors. To the Premier: doesn't he see that his government's debt policy has long-term dire consequences?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, very clearly, we have a fiscal advantage in this province. We have a competitive advantage relative to all other jurisdictions in North America. It's important that we maintain that. As I've said to the hon. member, our province is in a net asset position. You only need to look at the heritage savings trust fund, at the assets that we have relative to the debt that we have to understand that. We are the lowest taxed people in the country by a very wide margin, and this is a source of enormous competitive advantage to our province. We have no sales tax. We have the lowest effective personal income taxes. These are advantages that this government is intent on maintaining.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: For the record, Mr. Speaker, we'll have $20 billion worth of debt by the time we go into the next election in 2016, and that's not acceptable.

Alberta Health Services Executive Compensation

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Public Accounts Committee yesterday made it clear just how badly managed Alberta Health Services is. One of their most senior executives was proud to explain how AHS retitled their executive layers. You see, she used to be an executive vice-president, but now she is a vice-president. What she couldn't tell the committee was if any money was saved by taxpayers when positions like hers were renamed. So can the Premier assure us that when AHS did its retitling process, Albertans actually saved money?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services made a tremendous effort to reduce the number of executives in the organization by about 80 different people. They've rejigged the situation. They've created opportunities to have people do other jobs. I think that it's very important that they're trying to make sure the organization still is run properly with people who have great talents.

Ms Smith: Well, that was quite a dance, Mr. Speaker. Rejigged, indeed.

Mr. Speaker, at Public Accounts we asked what work former AHS CEO Chris Eagle did for the $650,000 he was paid when he went from being CEO to special adviser. The answer was unsatisfactory, to say the least. Any normal person would conclude that he was given a phantom job as a way for the government to pretend that they weren't actually paying him a severance package. Will the Premier ban the practice of creating phantom jobs for failed executives?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this Premier has been very clear about the role, that we must ensure that people get proper value for their money in Alberta. Those things will not happen under my watch. To be very clear, the current head of Alberta Health Services also said that proper contracts will be done in a proper way. People will not get the kind of severance that happened in the past. This is a new regime, a new time, a new leader.

Ms Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but they're still rejigging the VPs rather than getting rid of them.

Alberta Health Services management is a mess. Allaudin Merali's expense scandal at Capital health should have been shocking, except that this government then appointed Merali to be the chief bean-counter for the entire government, and AHS then stole him for themselves. By the time this is over, Merali will have collected millions of dollars in severances and executive pensions from the taxpayer. Can the Premier tell us the total cost to the taxpayer for the legal fees they've paid to settle this severance circus?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this was an arrangement that was settled through an action – that was a previous Premier. This is a new government, a new way to do things. This Premier makes sure that contracts are done in a way that meets the standards which Albertans expect. We will not do that anymore. But it's also very important that the member realize that there are people at Alberta Health Services who work very hard, and to say disparaging words about the people there is not fair or reasonable.

Student Assessment

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, we have some troubling news regarding education in Alberta, and I believe that we need to address it. A new report from the CBE shows that the grades for Calgary public school kids on their PATs are declining significantly. Now, it's no secret that the past few ministers of Education have been pushing a dramatic shift in the education system. They proudly announced that they are changing everything. It is not working. To the Minister of Education: why are you phasing out PATs at a time when achievement is declining so? Are you trying to cover up poor performance?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, Alberta students are performing very well on the international stage and on the national stage. We recently had test results which indicate that students here in Alberta have the highest science test results across the country. That's something that we can be very proud of. Student assessments are very important, and we will continue to ensure that we have the very best student assessment system that we can in our province.

Mr. McAllister: The CBE is also proudly telling Albertans that it is getting rid of percentage grades for K to 9 students. Now, this flies in the face of the Premier's mandate letter calling for coherent grades – and for the record, quite frankly, I support the majority of the direction of that mandate letter; I believe it was very good – so to the Premier: will you do the right thing for our kids and intervene, or will you do what many have done before you and follow the lead of the educators?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to see that the member opposite is in tune with lining up and embracing the mandate for education of this particular government and this particular minister. We're going to ensure that we have a coherent grading system that parents understand, that is in the best interests of students, and that moves forward our education system in the direction of the mandate letter that has been given to me.

Mr. McAllister: I would certainly support it if you'd put it into action, Minister. There's no question.

Mr. Speaker, we're hearing from teachers that the new SLAs are a complete disaster. Now, we know that the PATs weren't perfect, but we need continuity, and we need accountability in the education system. Right now we don't have it. We need it for the betterment of our kids, and we need it for the system, also. To the Premier or the minister: will you undo yet another mistake by the former Premier and revisit the issue of PATs?

2:00

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans expect us to ensure that the needs of students are at the heart of our education system and to ensure that parents and students have the ability to identify students' strengths at the beginning of the year so that they can move on improvement right through the rest of the school year. We are very pleased to be phasing in our new student learning assessments. We are piloting with the grade 3s at this particular point in time. Administrators, students, parents have been responding positively to the pilot. We're going to continue to ensure that we have the very best assessment system . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The results of the second-quarter fiscal update are out, and just like in health care, they're not good. Despite a booming economy we have broken roads, packed classrooms, a lack of quality seniors' care, underfunded municipalities, less savings, and more provincial debt. The Premier states that the new PC government is focused on sound conservative fiscal principles. That's just code for more of the same without the extravagances of the previous regime. To the Premier: what, if anything, have the Conservatives really conserved?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's nice to hear the rhetoric from across the floor, but the reality is that we do have one of the strongest financial positions in North America, and despite the recent downturn in oil prices we're still on track to run a surplus this year. This is a great economy. We're doing well in the forestry sector. We're doing well in the agricultural sector. Our housing starts lead the country. We are going to have a plan in place to make sure that we control our spending. We're going to make sure that we look at efficiencies, that we contain costs, and that we are very productive as a government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, being the best of a bad bunch is nothing to brag about.

Like his predecessors, the Premier has made many promises. However, our children, families, and seniors can expect to bear the burden of failed PC policy. Today we have over 140,000 children living in poverty, more inequality in our society than ever. Mr. Speaker, we need better public services now. We must pay for them today and not continuously pass the blame to the previous leaders and pass the buck to the next generation. To the Premier: how are you going to keep these promises and build our province, with declining oil revenue, with your current fiscal policies?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's obvious the member didn't hear the answer I just gave. We have a great economy. The Premier has made it very clear that we are going to manage the growth we have in this province, which is unprecedented anywhere in North America. We're going to look after our core services in health care, education, seniors, and our most vulnerable, and we are going to control our spending and make sure that Albertans are proud of this government moving forward.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the two previous Premiers tried to control spending, and we're in this mess today.

In 2001 this Conservative government gave the largest tax cut to large corporations and the wealthiest and tied the delivery of our essential public services to the price of a barrel of oil, leaving no wiggle room when nonrenewable resource revenues dropped like today. The regressive flat tax was actually a tax increase on middle- and lower middle-income Albertans and a massive tax cut for top earners, which brought $1.5 billion less into the treasury. To the Premier: will you now fix this inequality and bring in a fair and progressive income tax?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a fair tax system in this province, and it's shown by the hundreds of thousands of people who come to this province every year because they see the advantage of being in Alberta and they see the opportunities. We have the highest wage income earners anywhere in Canada and the lowest tax regime, and we're going to continue to have that.

Hospital Infrastructure Maintenance

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, AHS has two lists it uses to track deferred hospital maintenance. One list is the must-have-it-yesterday list, and there the Mis needs about $43 million. AHS also has a preservation list, which describes the current work necessary to maintain the hospital over time, and by that measure the Misericordia needs $110 million. My question is to the Premier: your Minister of Health talks about $25 million, but in the face of ongoing deterioration at the Mis should Albertans be accepting $25 million out of the necessary $110 million as good enough?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member: my understanding is that we've committed $40 million to the Misericordia hospital, the first $25 million being in the first few years. The Misericordia hospital is now getting the second and third floors reworked and rebuilt so that they can be put back into use. I think this government is making every effort to make sure the Misericordia hospital delivers the services it needs to for the citizens of west Edmonton. There are challenges there, but the challenges are being met by this government.

Ms Notley: Well actually, Mr. Speaker, the government has two choices. It can continue to dither over replacing the Mis, in which case the $110 million is required for its preservation, or it can commit to a new Mis and invest the $43 million that is required today to meet the most emergent repair obligations now. Either way, $25 million doesn't get the job done. So to the minister: won't you admit that fact, secure the needs of the people in west Edmonton, and actually invest what's necessary?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this government cares deeply about the residents of the west end of the city of Edmonton. Our commitment is to make sure the Misericordia hospital operates in as effective a way as possible. There are many patients in that hospital. We have to find a balance of what we're renovating, what we're using, and make sure the hospital still functions in an effective way. Investing $25 million today is the first step. We will continue to invest in a facility that ensures Albertans have the kind of health care they need in Edmonton.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the province-wide must-have-yesterday maintenance list, this government is over $400 million short. But this PC neglect isn't just about numbers. It's actually about a lack of emergency services when they're needed, it's about delays in diagnostic testing, it's about compromised infection control, and the list goes on. To the Minister of Health: will you fully fund the urgent needs of all Alberta's hospitals now, or will we see the kind of deterioration we see at the Mis spreading throughout the province?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. member would look at the investment that this government made across this province, whether it's in Grande Prairie or Fort McMurray or Medicine Hat or any other number of cities in this province, we've made a tremendous effort to rebuild and invest in the infrastructure in this province. We'll continue to do that. We'll also continue to invest in the operation of these facilities by ensuring that they have the financial support so that they can deliver the services they need for their communities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's proceed, and please avoid or curtail any preambles to supplementals so we can get the most members up who want to ask questions.

Let us start with Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Red Deer-South.

Health Care Wait Times

Mrs. Forsyth: The Premier asked Albertans to judge this government on its progress, so let's talk progress. In September 2013 Albertans waited an average of 38 weeks for shoulder surgery. In September 2014 the average wait was 43 weeks. In September 2013 the average wait time for back surgery sat at an extraordinary 40 weeks, in September 2014 still 40 weeks. In September 2013 Albertans waited 32 weeks for cataract surgery. A year later that wait time has not changed either. To the minister: is this progress?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this government takes very seriously its desire to make sure that Albertans have excellent access to our system. We've invested in long-term care. Home care is up 26 per cent. We've invested new dollars in a variety of other programs to ensure that emergency wards are taken care of. You know, the challenge is that when a hundred thousand new people are coming into the province, it puts great pressure on the system. This government is doing all it can to ensure that wait times are under control.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that in May of this year wait times for a knee replacement sat at 42 weeks and that by September it had grown to 45 weeks, Minister, is this progress?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, wait times can be a variety of things, and numbers can be numbers. But let's just quote. Wait times for radiation therapy for cancer were three weeks last year and 5.3 weeks four years ago. Cataract surgery: the wait was 31 weeks last year, 41 weeks four years ago. Knee replacement surgery was 42 weeks last year, down from 49 weeks. Colorectal cancer screening: 57 per cent last year, 36 per cent in 2008. This government is making steps to do the kind of things necessary so that waiting time is decreased.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that in May of this year Albertans waited 37 weeks for a hip replacement, and in September it's still 37 weeks, Minister, progress has been slow. Yes, there has been some improvement and progress, but what are you going to do so that people don't have to wait this incredibly long time?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member: we are very concerned about wait times. We want to make sure that Albertans have access to the kind of service they need as soon as possible. We're investing billions of dollars in the health care system. We'll continue to try to improve wait-lists. But you know something? One of the big things we have is our PCNs, our primary care networks, which give Albertans access to their own doctors, and 80 per cent of Albertans are accessing their own family doctors, which gives them an opportunity to get into the system. I think this is a policy that is really one of the best in this country, and the PCN is a way in which we can deliver the kind of service necessary.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, with the Q2 results released today, we've all seen how things can change in just a couple of short months and the subsequent impact to Alberta's fiscal situation. My questions are for the Minister of Finance, President of Treasury Board. What, Minister, are we doing right today to ensure that this province doesn't plummet into a deficit position by year-end?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, while Alberta's finances are on track to balance the budget at the end of this fiscal year, there's no question that with declining oil prices we need to be fiscally prudent and responsible, and business can't be as usual. So we're going to look at, as I said earlier, efficiencies, containing costs, and increasing productivity. Across government we've made it very clear to our ministers and our departments that we will look for ways and bring forward actions so that we can contain our spending while maintaining our core services.

Mr. Dallas: Well, that sounds good, Minister, but our fiscal situation was much different in September, and based on this, we committed to build hundreds of new continuing care beds and the most expansive school infrastructure program in Alberta's history. How can we accomplish this without taking on new debt or pushing back delivery timelines?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a capital plan, and our Minister of Infrastructure will bring that forward in the next little while. We know that we have two challenges. One is to control the spending within government and our operations, which we're going to do, but we also have to make sure that we look after the unprecedented growth in this province. If we look at a hundred thousand people, that's 15,000 children, and that's 28 schools. We need to make sure we have spaces for our children in education, we need to make sure we have spaces for our people in long-term care facilities, and we'll make sure that happens.

Mr. Dallas: Well, my final question to the same minister. Once again we find ourselves at the mercy of volatile resource revenues, which we know we cannot control. I know that the Premier is working hard to open up new markets for oil, but what are we doing as a province to reduce that reliance on one revenue source and to build a more resilient economy?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was very clear this morning that we need to get off the roller coaster of oil prices and we need to look at diversification and innovation in all sectors, which will be key to addressing the issues, whether they be agriculture, tourism, or the tech industry. Forestry, for example, has made significant investments in the technologies used in the mills across the province, including facilities in my own riding of West Yellowhead, in both Edson and Hinton. These investments allow us to compete on the world stage, which will keep Albertans employed, strengthen communities, and contribute to our economy and our provincial revenue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Child and Youth Advocate Recommendations

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The annual report of the Child and Youth Advocate came out last week, and it highlights a shocking trend. It notes that the Ministry of Human Services often does not address his office's recommendations and that there has been minimal action taken on most of the recommendations. Given the history of this file and how just last year the outcome of your ministry's unwillingness to address and implement the advocate's recommendations was front-page news almost daily, to the Minister of Human Services: can you please explain this appalling lack of action?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Working with the Child and Youth Advocate, Mr. Graff – I've had my first meeting with Mr. Graff – I think it's really important to talk about these recommendations and to see how we can improve the child care system. We know the child care system is not static; it's always being adapted. Working with communities, taking into account all the needs that we have, cultural sensitivity, research, and current best practices: that's what I'll continue to do with him.

Mr. Wilson: Weak sauce, Minister.

The fatal care series prompted your ministry to take serious action and announce a five-point plan to address your government's failures, one of which was appointing a team of professionals to accelerate required action on recommendations from previous reviews. Now, were you just hoping that this problem would go away, or can you demonstrate to Albertans that you take it seriously and tell us how you will fix this problem before we have more kids dying unnecessarily in your government's care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is talking about the oversight committee, so ably chaired by Mr. Tim Richter. We know the work that the oversight committee did in looking at the recommendations and in looking for solutions on how to solve some of the problems we have. Any recommendations we look at, we need to learn from and not place blame but support the children and youth and families with the help they need.

Mr. Wilson: The advocate himself is suggesting that you're not following or implementing his recommendations. He can't make it any clearer.

Another report came out today with three more recommendations to improve services for our kids and prevent future tragedies. What assurances can the minister provide to Albertans that these recommendations will not be cast aside as so many others have? Frankly, given this government's history, why should we believe you at all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one feels the passing away of this troubled young man more than the young man's aboriginal community. My thoughts go out to his family, friends, caregivers, and loved ones.

We know the Premier and this government are committed to working closely with First Nation and Métis leaders to develop solutions. I also know that we are making a difference in that we've seen an 11 per cent decrease in the number of aboriginal children in care in the second quarter of this year. We will continue to work with the designated First Nations on a regular basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Workforce Integration of Veterans

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that men and women serving in our nation's military work hard and put their lives on the line for our freedom, so it is only right that they have their field experience recognized upon returning to civilian life. Unfortunately, I have a constituent who told me that he served as a mechanic in the military, but his credentials were not recognized when returning home. My question is to the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. How can a veteran of the military remain in the trades and more effectively integrate into the workforce?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for standing up for men and women in uniform. It's important that we recognize their service and sacrifice made throughout the years, and it's important that we help them get back into the workforce after they've served.

The Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board recognizes a long list of military trade qualifications as equivalent to Alberta trade certificates. I invite the hon. member to give me the details on his constituent so that we can see how we can fit that in and get your constituent help. All of the members of the Canadian armed forces that hold trade qualifications . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister. You mentioned some programs available for veterans to advance their skills so they can secure jobs. I would like to see that. If there's a list of such, we would love to have it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important that we get this particular case dealt with. I invite the hon. member to get the details, because I do know that if the Department of National Defence gives a trade certificate, we recognize that. So we need to look into this particular case.

We have several other programs to assist veterans. Again, I invite the hon. member to get together with our ministry and with your constituent, and we will address the situation as best as we can.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. That is very good news that there's a program as such for integrating veterans into our workforce. But what about any funding coming up for that as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have several programs that work with veterans. One is called the base-to-business program, which helps to increase the capacity of employers to hire and retain military veterans and transition them into the civilian workplace. We also work with our federal partners, with Canada's helmets to hard hats program, which assists retired military members transition specifically into the trades. So we are doing that on an ongoing basis, and I want the hon. member to know that we're in contact with those programs to look at ways to enhance them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Hehr: Today's financial update reinforces the fact that Alberta's fiscal structure is broken and does not let the province do what it needs to do today: build schools, hire teachers, reduce homelessness, ensure a vibrant middle class, and provide dignity and hope to those living in poverty. If the government couldn't fulfill promises like these when oil prices were considerably higher, how does the Premier expect to do it now?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said earlier, we will balance our operating budget, and we will continue to build the necessities that we have to as far as infrastructure to look after our children that need new schools, to look after our seniors that need new spaces in continuing care.

Mr. Hehr: What we should have learned over the course of the last 25 years is that having the lowest tax jurisdiction by a country mile leads to two things, spending all of the oil wealth in one generation and leaving the province unable to build schools in neighbourhoods where kids live. To highlight this, not one of the 50 schools promised in the last election has been constructed. Why persist in employing a broken fiscal structure that leaves this province perpetually short in both good times and bad?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of the 50 schools that were committed to in phase 2, the vast majority of them are actually in the tendering process as we speak. Construction for the vast majority will be starting early next spring, and children will be in classrooms for the vast majority of those schools in the fall of 2016 as promised.

Mr. Hehr: To the minister of the treasury. Every PC Finance minister who has retired from politics has stated that we have a revenue problem. Further, economists from all sides of the political equation have confirmed as much. Why won't this government ensure schools are built, teachers are in classrooms, and seniors get the care they need by returning to at least a progressive income tax, like all other provinces, to bring in some fiscal sanity?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we have the highest wage and income earners anywhere in Canada, and we have the lowest tax regime. We will continue to build schools, we will make sure that we have teachers to put into those schools, and we will make sure our kids get the best education possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Child and Youth Advocate Recommendations

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Child and Youth Advocate released another heartbreaking report into the death of a young man in provincial care. Last week the advocate said that the government's responses to his recommendations show that "there has actually been minimal action taken on most of the Advocate's recommendations." This is absolutely unacceptable. Can this Minister of Human Services explain why her department is failing to take action on recommendations meant to protect Alberta's most vulnerable children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I said previously, a death of any child is a tragedy, especially a child in care. My thoughts again go out to the family, the caregivers, the loved ones, and friends who tried to help this troubled young man.

We know that in working with the aboriginal community we're doing many, many things, including developing cultural plans, working with the elders, the community and family connections, and, as well, the signs of safety program, which we have begun to implement, that has shown great success. Finally, there are mental health supports that we are providing, including supports to the caregivers as well.

Mr. Eggen: Well, again today we see the results of this government's neglect. Given that this report shows clearly that despite this young man being an obvious suicide risk, there was no plan put in place to prevent his death and given that the advocate identified that this government has repeatedly failed to take action on this officer's recommendations, that could have prevented this death, will the minister commit to responding to the advocate's recommendation in regard to suicide prevention within 60 days?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, working with the Child and Youth Advocate with this unfortunate passing, we know that the supports that we have in place that we did to help this young man were – some of the mental health supports that we needed to put in place were there. At the end of the day it was all of the staff that were there doing the best they could. The recommendations that have come forward are something that we'll be looking at.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that today's report and last week's report and last year's report show the harm that is done to children in care when they are bounced around from place to place and given that the advocate once again is recommending that this government take action on transitions, will this minister commit to implementing the advocate's recommendations with 60 days?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recommendations that have come forward with respect to a cultural plan, the suicide risk intervention, and the information sharing are something that we're looking at in the ministry. Information sharing is something that is of deep concern to me, especially when individuals go between provinces, those things, so I will be looking at that very carefully. I look forward to having the conversation with the Child and Youth Advocate on the good work he is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Chronic Disease Management

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To quote from the September Auditor General's report on chronic disease management:

AHS does not have meaningful indicators for its CDM performance . . . [It] is not able to determine readily on a province-wide basis how much it spends on CDM services, how many patients or which ones attend, what its waiting lists are, or whether the services are effective.

To the Minister of Health: how can you provide meaningful health outcomes when you're not measuring chronic disease management effectively?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we're making every effort to ensure that there are a variety of measures. Alberta Health Services does do a lot of measurement right now, and we're endeavouring to put those in a more broad-based way so they can have more meaning for the citizens of Alberta. Measuring chronic illness is vitally important, and making sure people have the understanding of what we can do for them depends upon how we can measure what outcomes are needed. We'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Auditor General also states that "a unified clinical information and electronic medical record system in Alberta is one of the greatest potential areas for improvement in CDM and health care as a whole" and given that the government has spent hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars on developing the electronic medical records over the years, why are we still left without a unified system that would allow chronic diseases to be managed more effectively, Minister?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a very important point. In Alberta right now we have a variety of e-medical records systems. We need to create one record system. Right now we're looking at Calgary as a very good system. We're looking at trying to take that across the province. They've done a great job down there. We think that's an opportunity to do something which is affordable and reasonable but will deliver the kind of information both for the clinicians and the researchers. We've got a group going right now with Service Alberta. We're trying to make sure that we move forward on that. It's vitally important.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that family care clinics were offered up as the made-in-Alberta solution to this team-based health care and invested in heavily for three years by this government before this minister pulled the plug, Albertans want to know what this minister is proposing as a primary health care alternative that will address the complex needs of chronic disease patients here in Alberta.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we do have a wonderful system right now, called the primary care networks, which is being used throughout the province. We did support those family care clinics which were started and were ongoing. We think they have value. We're not trying to define what has to be in communities. We want to talk to communities to see what they need. We're going to a variety of communities across the province of Alberta to develop the kinds of programs they need not just for the community but for those who deliver the services. We need to listen to the doctors and the various other people in the system so that we can make sure that we get it right. Family care clinics had some benefit, but they really didn't meet the need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

School Construction in Southwest Edmonton

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many Albertans, I'm thrilled that this government is under new management. However, we still have a mighty task ahead of us. As we all know, our student population continues to grow. In my own constituency of Edmonton-South West Southbrook school, a K to 6 public, is put out to tender. Allard, a K to 9 public; Desrochers, a K to 9 Catholic; Windermere, a K to 9 Catholic; Ambleside, a K to 9 public; Windermere, a K to 9 public, are all in the planning stages. Minister of Infrastructure, we're incredibly grateful to see these seven new schools, but the parents of Edmonton-South West want to know when can we expect . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right. This is a mighty task, and that's why the people of Edmonton-South West are lucky to have a mighty MLA representing them. I can confirm that Heritage Valley, which was tendered on September 19, actually closes tomorrow. Windermere and Ambleside, which went to tender on October 2, close December 19. Construction will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm sure we'll hear more.
First supplemental.

2:30

Mr. Jeneroux: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I may be mighty, but he's bigger than me.

Given that Johnny Bright school, Monsignor Fee Otterson school, Bessie Nichols school, and Sister Annata Brockman school are all P3-model school builds, what role will P3 contracts play in the construction of these seven new schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some might say that we've had mighty significant savings by using the P3 process in the past. In fact, $245 million have been saved using the P3 process for schools. At present we are working with our partners in various school jurisdictions to focus on having schools open in the fall of 2016, as soon as possible, and we'll look at a variety of methods of delivering those.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that we have a mighty model of schools built in partnerships with our communities, an example being George P. Nicholson school, with a YMCA daycare and an AHS health clinic, what role will we be able to see community partnerships play in these seven new schools?

An Hon. Member: Don't say it.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, if I might . . . [interjections]

Community partners, Mr. Speaker, are very, very integral to the construction of our schools. In fact, in many new communities school infrastructure is perhaps the only public infrastructure available. I promote these partnerships but not at the expense of delays. Children deserve to be in schools close to their homes as soon as possible, so I encourage all to work on those partnerships long before construction starts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

North West Upgrader Project

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The North West upgrader is the only refinery out of eight that hasn't been cancelled and has been consistently plagued with delays and cost overruns. Last January the PC government committed Alberta taxpayers to a financial black hole by giving $300 million in corporate handouts to the financially risky project. According to the former PC Energy minister Ted Morton this commitment has resulted in the $26 billion liability, up from the $19 billion already committed. To the Minister of Energy: will you commit to get out of the business of picking winners and losers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. An interesting question. It's been clear on all sides of this House that not only is access to international markets important to Albertans, but upgrading is important as well so that we get maximum value for the natural resources that we have in our province. We have reviewed from a number of angles the North West Upgrading project. It is under construction. It will be built, it will deliver, and it will expand the suite of products that we offer to international markets.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that Morton points out that "the province is now on the hook for $26 billion in processing payments . . . which translates into a processing cost of $63 a barrel, making it even less likely that the investment will ever break even" and given that we are bound by contract to these commitments, can the minister explain what steps are being taken to ensure taxpayers won't be left on the hook for this government's corporate handout?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, there are no corporate handouts involved here. We've incented the construction of a merchant upgrader by using our BRIK barrels, and we'll pay an upgrading toll on those barrels, and then we'll get the revenue from the sale of that upgraded product. The full product review is available on the website. There's nothing secret. There are no corporate handouts. It's a project that's met many reviews, and we're quite pleased with the progress.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, $300 million of debt in cash that they're giving them: I call that a handout.

Mr. Speaker, given that this project is increasing government liability in the form of guarantees and grants to the tune of $26 billion and given the government's outright refusal to increase the total guarantee to the cattle feeders' program, which only receives the $55 million guarantee, can the minister explain why this government's policy has so blatantly placed PC-chosen corporate interests ahead of hard-working Albertans such as the cattle feeders?

Mr. Oberle: We're putting the interests of Albertans and their interest in getting the maximum value for our resources at the forefront, and we're not putting anybody else's interests in front of those. This House has repeatedly and Albertans have repeatedly talked about the need to upgrade in our province. We're delivering, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Medicine Hat.

Services for Seniors

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government continues to address the changing needs of Alberta's growing seniors population. Residents of Calgary-Glenmore are pleased with the Premier's decision to create a stand-alone Seniors ministry; however, Health still plays a major role in providing for seniors' needs. My first question is for the Minister of Health. Given that most seniors prefer to stay in their own homes, what health services is your department providing to support their desires?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we all know that if we can keep our senior citizens living in their homes, it's a much, much better way for their lives and their families as well as for the province of Alberta. Home-care spending has increased 26 per cent over the last couple of years, to over $500 million a year. That's a commitment. The 2014 budget dedicated additional funding to home care and rehabilitation services like the destination home program, which helps people return home quickly after hospital visits, which is vitally important.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is for the Minister of Seniors. Given that seniors in Calgary-Glenmore are active and are staying in their homes, how is your ministry supporting with nonhealth supports?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a very good question. This MLA does a great job advocating for her constituents and for her seniors. You know, seniors have become a big priority under this Premier and this government. While there are many initiatives going across several ministries, the ones that are unique to mine are the property tax deferral program, the Alberta seniors' benefit, and the special needs assistance. The special needs assistance is a program that provides lump sums to help seniors pay for repairs and things, some of the soft services within their homes. The property tax deferral allows them to tap into the equity in their homes to pay utility costs or whatever they need to put that money towards so that they can remain independent.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you. That was a mighty fine answer, Mr. Minister.

Given that the affordable supportive living initiative program, or ASLI, has moved from Health to your ministry, how is this initiative helping to meet the growing needs of Alberta seniors?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the good-news projects of this government to date. It's our goal to provide the absolute best care to seniors at the right place in the most appropriate manner. Many will notice that there was a large announcement with respect to the affordable supportive living initiative: 1,500 spaces, $180 million. We issued the RFP last month – it closes December 19 – and we expect to be looking at those and making decisions in the new year. Those facilities will be built to the higher standards so that seniors can age in place. We expect this increased volume that we'll add to the 1,400 units will be coming on to help seniors age . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of recent reports we know that there is more work to be done on the 10-year plan to end homelessness. Thousands of Albertans spend every night on the streets or in shelters, and this PC government continues to let them down. In Calgary alone there are over 3,500 homeless men, women, and children. We know that the government has verbally committed to ending homelessness, but we've seen little progress year over year. Why doesn't this PC government care about these at-risk Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most recent homeless count showed a decrease of 16 per cent province-wide since the launch of our plan. In Edmonton homelessness was 27 per cent lower, in Lethbridge it was 45 per cent, Wood Buffalo saw a 49 per cent drop, and that's despite the population growth by more than a hundred thousand people a year.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that operating on a housing first principle is important and given that this is the model that the government says is being implemented, can the minister responsible tell us if it is a lack of funding that is causing this inaction, or is it government inaction that is leaving so many Albertans sleeping on the streets every night?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that there's the interagency housing committee and there are seven cities that are working very hard on the issue, including folks from Medicine Hat. We know that housing first is the model we need to pursue. We also know that there is a need for that, and that's something that we need to discuss further. But we also know that nearly 10,000 people were provided housing and supports since the launch of our plan and 3,200 have graduated from the housing first programs. We know they're working.

2:40

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Medicine Hat Community Housing Society and its partners have been leading the charge in ending homelessness in five years, not the 10 years the province has set out, why can't this government follow this successful model used in Medicine Hat, take some action, and finally address the issues facing the homeless Albertans across this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know the importance of the discussions the seven cities are having, including Medicine Hat. It's going to help the other cities solve the problems of homelessness and make sure people get into the housing first program versus temporary shelters. I look forward to further conversations with this committee, and I know we need to continue working on this important issue.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Bill 203 Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014. The bill proposes to amend the Safety Codes Act to allow buildings of wood construction to be built to a maximum of six storeys, or 18 metres. The bill will ensure a commitment to safe, sound, and affordable infrastructure development. It will contribute to the growth and prosperity of municipalities and communities across Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has moved first reading of Bill 203, Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, I understand you have two tablings. Proceed, please.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act I am pleased to table the 2014-15 first- and second-quarter report on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

The Speaker: That was two and one, I gather?

Mr. Casey: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta 2014 annual report and the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta 2014 annual report, possibly the final reports subject to the passing of Bill 7.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a text sent by a student to our gay-straight alliance hotline. In this text message the anonymous student describes how he intended to start a GSA at his school but was shut down by the school board. It's one of the many messages we've received which prove that Bill 202 is necessary and support for GSAs by school boards needs to be mandatory.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of the Ontario Bill 38, which recently passed first reading and will ban the use of menthol as a flavouring in tobacco products next year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a section of the list of AHS preservation infrastructure maintenance project needs for a five-year period as of June 25, 2014. What this shows is a troubling $103 million needed in projects and funding to maintain and preserve the Mis. This is well above the $43 million in deferred maintenance costs that we already know the Mis has requested for urgent needs to keep, oh, say, the roof from falling in. What the document illustrates is a major failure of the government to do even the bare minimum for the Mis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings from constituents. The first is from Mary Mumert, and Mary is writing to tell me that her rent has now gone up to $795, so almost $800 per month, which she knows is just over half of her AISH. She's asking for some kind of help because everybody is feeling the pinch, and she's worried that it's going to continue to go up and her AISH payment is not.

The second tabling is an e-mail, actually quite a lengthy e-mail, from Dawn Lindboe, also a constituent, who's making the point about how frustrating it is now with an infestation of bedbugs and cockroaches. Living in an apartment building, she has now gone through and been sprayed four times in seven weeks and never got a response from Alberta Health when she complained. You have to wrap all of your belongings up and rewrap them, and it's just a really frustrating position to be in. She's looking for some improvements in the way this is dealt with.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to be tabling the requisite number of copies relating to a question that I asked some time ago about three roads in the constituency that I represent of Strathmore-Brooks, in the county of Wheatland and the county of Newell, provincial highways 569, 841, and 876, some pictures of these roads, and some letters to the hon. Minister of Transportation regarding their condition.

Also, the required number of copies referring to the question that I asked today. It says, "Morton: Upgrading bitumen is risky gamble for government," dated September 15, 2014, in the Calgary Herald.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Fawcett, Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the environmental protection security fund annual report April 1, 2013, to March 31, 2014.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, there are no points of order, so we can march right along and go to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 6 Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2)

The Chair: I'll recognize the first speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: God, I hope other people are going to speak to this. [interjections] Okay. Good. Because this bill is – well, in the old days, Mr. Chair, which was two years ago, statutes amendment acts like this that came forward with amendments to multistatutes were called miscellaneous statutes, but they involved a certain amount of negotiation with the opposition members, and the Official Opposition, in fact, had the veto power to pull bills out if they felt they weren't minor changes to the bills. But, ever clever, this government decided not to allow that process anymore, so now they're just called statutes acts.

When this originally was talked about, it had 16 different statutes that were being discussed in one act, and I pointed out that as fast as I can speak, I couldn't speak fast enough to cover every bill that was being included in this in the amount of time that I'm allowed to speak to it. It's incredibly unfair, and I hate being made to do a poor job on something. I hate being put in this position.

You know, I'd need another couple of weeks to be able to really understand what's in this bill. The advice that I received and always took from Nick Taylor was that if you're not absolutely sure about what's in a bill or you're not absolutely sure that you support it, don't vote for it because there'll be something in there that you didn't understand or you didn't read that'll come back to haunt you. So I'm in a funny position with this, you know, because the staff have had a briefing. It seems to be okay. But what does that mean? I haven't read every word in this. Has anybody else?

Mr. Hale: Bill 1?

Ms Blakeman: Bill 6.

Just wait. I'll read it out to you, and you'll see why my hair is changing colour again. This statute is amending the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002, the Farm Implement Act – that's two – the Safety Codes Act, and the Workers' Compensation Act. That's four. So it's changing four different acts at the same time, Mr. Chair, and it ain't just, you know, a name change. It's not just a typo correction. There is stuff that is being actually changed here.

It's really frustrating when the government does something like this because we'd all like to do a good job, and it's hard to do it. Now, the government has been co-operative in giving us briefings, with 24 hours' notice, mind you, which makes it a little hard to spin on a dime. For those of us that are in small caucuses, this isn't easy to do, but I do appreciate the opportunity to get technical briefings on this.

This is the one that's coming under the broad classification of agriculture because all of the acts that are being changed can be generally clustered under that. The only one that I'm really questioning is the Workers' Compensation Act. Of course, I was hoping that I would see compensation and coverage for nonfamily farm workers, which has been something that my caucus has worked on for a very long time, but it seems to be that it's about disclosure of personal information that would be continued to be governed by section 40 of FOIP and subject to a rigorous review and a redaction process to ensure only necessary information is disclosed. Well, under general circumstances I'm not going to agree with that. You know, I'm the avenging angel of making sure that people's personal information is protected, but the reverse of that is that the government gives out the information that it should be giving out. So on the face of it I'm not going to object to that.

You know what? I'm going to let some other people speak to this, and maybe I'll get a chance to stand up later, once I have an opportunity to listen to a few other people lay out their reasons for supporting it or for not supporting it because I just don't feel well enough prepared.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll look for the next speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 6, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2). Oh, yes, of course, because we split it in half. That was very good.

Actually, that brings up the first sort of categorical comment that I wanted to make here this afternoon, and that is that I'm seeing this disturbing trend of pulling together a large volume of statutes amendments. This used to be sort of a tradition, I believe, with miscellaneous statutes amendments that would be agreed upon between the House leaders before the Legislature went forward so that we knew that it was an innocuous package of, perhaps, bureaucratic or timely adjustments that needed to be made for the sake of the public service and for changing laws, maybe, in other provinces and so forth.

Now we are seeing, Mr. Chair, these statutes being put together, but then inside of them we're finding some individual changes that are not really miscellaneous changes at all, nor would we have agreed to them if we did sit down and have a meeting with the House leaders before to decide if this package of miscellaneous statutes amendments would be okay. As some provision to that, at least, we managed to split this in two, I believe, which showed some sign of negotiation.

Always, you know, when you are trying to make the House work, it's very important that you do carry something in your pocket to negotiate with. Certainly, we only have limited tools available to us as opposition to negotiate the conduct of the House and the passage of bills and so forth in the House. But I would suggest that the government should always remember that they should bring something to the table as well because in the spirit of good governance and making good laws, ultimately, we do want to use the time in the best possible way.

Let's say that yesterday I found that by not following the agreed proposed business order that we had set forth, that we get every morning – as a House leader, I get it as an e-mail. By deviating from that in such a radical sort of way so that we shot forward, it's like growing lettuce or kale in your garden. I'm sure that you've probably seen this – right? – where everything becomes very edible and lush for a minute, and then after a couple of days it shoots up and the whole plant becomes bitter and you can't eat it. Similarly, as a metaphor, Mr. Chair, I would suggest that we saw the same kind of thing happen yesterday.

I would just like to make sure that we know that not just the Order Paper but the agreed-upon proposed business order is followed or, if it is not followed, that we have a discussion about that before the afternoon or the evening proceeds because now we're in a position where some bills came forward, including this one, before we even got our amendments from Parliamentary Counsel and the briefing notes from our dedicated staff put together. You know, I just find that very disturbing.

The reason that this is relevant, of course, is that Bill 6 was brought up on the Order Paper yesterday even though it was not agreed upon nor did we have the capacity to even provide the amendments or to debate it properly. You know, that just doesn't work, Mr. Chair, because ultimately we provide our amendments and our discussions in the interests of best practice to create good laws. If that gets compromised, then the whole proceedings of the House get compromised as well.

That's just the first thing I wanted to say. I hope everyone understands that. I mean, we don't have that many tools available to us as opposition, but one of the things that we can do, certainly, is alter the way time passes here in the House, just to let you know that in case you are surprised during the course of this afternoon.

Bill 6, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2), has updates and clarifications and changes to five different existing acts. You know, most of them seem to be okay. Certainly, the amendments to the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act of 2002 make changes to perhaps make the supply and management of the Dairy Control Board to – well, it became Alberta Milk, changing that organization, and in itself that seems okay. Certainly, the Dairy Control Board is something that I think maybe we need to revisit in the future someday. It certainly did provide a good service and stable governance of the industry, but that's not for us to discuss here today because, of course, the amendment is just to do with the governance of Alberta Milk, which seems fairly straightforward, I think.

The second section is dealing with two different acts, the Farm Implement Act and the Farm Implement Dealerships Act, which will combine to create the most utilitarian and practical title of Farm Implement and Dealership Act. This section of this bill certainly seems okay. It seems to be in alignment with other provinces such as Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario, so that really doesn't have a great deal of problems as well.

The third section of the bill deals with the Safety Codes Act, which I believe falls under the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. This seems to be something to do with ensuring fire protection and the building code as well. The bill seems to be dealing with registering designs and registering the safety of designs. I guess there's only one administrator that could approve those designs in the past, and this might allow for a multiplicity of people to be able to deal with those designs. Again, that seems okay.

The fourth section of the bill is the one that we find to be a problem, and this is amending the Workers' Compensation Act. Mr. Chair, I'm sure that as an MLA as well as the chair here in the Legislature you know that the Workers' Compensation Board is a great source of controversy and problems for many thousands of Albertans around the province. We know that there are lots of problems with the timely delivery of services that are insured under the Workers' Compensation Act and the delivery of those services under the board. Apparently, this amendment in Bill 6 is designed to allow WCB to disclose information related to a worker's claim or his or her appeal of a decision of the board to other entities directly concerned such as employers, doctors, and so forth.

The government seems to be insisting that this is just a codification of an existing practice, but I just immediately had some alarm bells flare up in my mind when I heard this, because, of course, like I said, the WCB in general is a source of great anxiety and controversy amongst people right across the province and because ensuring the sanctity and the privacy of information, the very most personal information of people, I think is very important, especially in this day and age of electronic records and so forth. Right away I thought, based on those two things, that we should investigate here further. Sure enough, these things in this section of the larger bill are the areas where we have concern.

You know, we're here to help, of course. That's why we're elected here and placed on this Earth. So we have some amendments that can help make this a better bill and a better place, which we will get to as soon as we get them delivered. Like I said from the beginning of my speech, we were caught out yesterday by Bill 6 appearing somehow on the Order Paper when it wasn't meant to, and the timely execution of Parliamentary Counsel and so forth just made it impossible that we would have the amendments available to us before. So we will be seeing those this afternoon sometime, I'm sure, in due course.

Certainly, we oppose this lack of consultation, first and foremost, that came up with this WCB portion of this omnibus bill. You know, like I said before, we would be happy to package these things to make sure that the Legislature is functioning in a smooth and operative place. But when we sort of have these things foisted on us, then, you know, I'm concerned. I've watched omnibus practices in the United States and in the federal government. Right? Calgary-Buffalo, you should be thinking about this, you know, these big omnibus bills. They are a tool that the federal Conservatives have been using now for a number of years, and it's quite odious and offensive, really. We know that it's a way by which you can put a little package of maybe bills that you agree with and bills that are necessary and that people really need and then tuck some offensive neoliberal, sort of right-wing thing in the corner somewhere that you can't accept. It creates this dilemma, Mr. Chair, for honest, hard-working MLAs like ourselves over here in the NDP. We have this sword hanging over us.

That's kind of what we're presented with here today with the WCB section of this larger bill. So, yeah, it makes it hard for us to, you know, support a larger thing, including dairy and farm implements and all this other stuff that might be very necessary, because suddenly you have this WCB thing tagged onto the end of it, which is not acceptable.

The changes to the Workers' Compensation Act. We noticed that there wasn't a great deal of consultation going on, so we did it really fast in the last 48 hours, using our amazing powers of telephone and electronic media and the connections we have to shop this around and say: "You know, we're suspicious. What is this thing?" We've talked to a number of people. One individual told me that these changes decrease the transparency of the WC process in regard to how and to whom the WCB can transmit information about a claim. Okay? This person who advocates for WC claimants as a business also said that under these proposed amendments there are fewer safeguards to ensure that employers don't see irrelevant details about an employee's claim like their medical history, medications, or claims they've made previously in other jurisdictions, as suggested in section 147(4).

I mean, this is a fundamental problem, right? If an employer has access to different aspects of an individual's medical file, they can exert prejudice over that individual by maybe knowing that they have a pre-existing condition, either physical or mental or both, that might compromise their capacity to do the job or their capacity to be promoted or exert any other sort of powers that an employer has over an employee. You know that this is something that raises a red flag amongst all working people and especially us as the New Democrats.

Under existing occupational rulings in the previous legislation the Workers' Compensation Board is not allowed to divulge claimant information to an employer if the employee files an appeal to an Appeals Commission. So while personal information might still be governed by freedom of information laws, FOIP, there still will continue to be a redaction of certain information – there should be anyway – no longer a two-step redaction process when things are sent to an Appeals Commission. Again, a serious problem. Can you imagine yourself in this situation? It's a compromise of your personal security.

Also, Workers' Compensation Board claimants should be entitled to privacy from their employers just like any other Albertan. Why would we diverge from that basic human right when someone has to make a claim to the WCB? The power imbalance between employer and employee, which is a chronic issue – right? – that is so often tipped in favour of the employer here in this province, is heightened somehow by the filing of a claim. The rights of an employee need to be given special consideration, I believe, in this situation because they are in a compromised circumstance. It's not like you are just moving along freely with your job and your life. You've run into a physical or other compromising situation that requires you to file a claim with WCB. So that, by definition, should be a person that we would defend and look after more through regulation, not less.

The workers' compensation process, Mr. Chair, needs to be a transparent process, first and foremost – right? – so that employees understand what's being done on their behalf and their rights are not being trivialized merely because they have decided to make a claim against their employer. It's a basic and, I think, unassailable position to start with.

The Privacy Commissioner, who's an officer of the Legislature here, rejects this claim that the WCB would be providing personal information to an employer as a fundamental component of the system. So, again, we hire and carefully pick these officers of the Legislature to ensure a third-party objective analysis of what we do in this Legislature. In this case I think the Privacy Commissioner makes it clear that providing personal information to an employer is a fundamental component. The current practice is not enough to merit these changes. The Privacy Commissioner notes that the WCB seems to make it a habit to disclose claim files to employers after they've only completed two forms, neither of which explicitly requests the claim file or makes a reasoned argument why it's needed.

So, Mr. Chair, you know, it seems pretty clear to me that the relevance of this larger bill, first of all, like I said before, brings forward the problem of grouping together miscellaneous statutes and then changes that have more substance to them. You know, we should refrain from that practice, and I think everybody would be the better for it.

Two, it's very important that we ensure and maintain clear communication between all parties in the Legislature to know that if we are moving faster or slower through different points of legislation, we sort of agree to do that. Right? I mean, like I said, this is something that if you just picked it up and said, "We're just going to change the dairy board or Farm Implement Board," we'd say, "Hey; that sounds great." But after another six or seven hours we realize that there is a substantive problematic piece of this bill that requires further examination.

So that's kind of what I would like to just open with, and I welcome other people's analysis and comments.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I recognize the next speaker, could I just ask that we keep the side conversations down to a softer roar? Thank you.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 6, Statutes Amendment Act, 2014. As others have mentioned, this has been a whirlwind, with this bill being so late and things moving so quickly, so it does give us pause.

There's so much that we have to get up to speed on that it's with reservation that we have to approach such a large omnibus bill, which was, I gather, cut in half at the request of our House leader and still has four bills and amendments within it, including the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, with transitional provisions repealed; the Farm Implement Act, combining the Farm Implement Dealerships Act, which is repealed, with maximum fines doubling to $100,000; the Safety Codes Act, to increase the workload efficiency of the administrator by allowing safety codes officers to register designs and remove burden from the administrator to determine safety that is beyond the requirements of the act; and then, finally, the Workers' Compensation Act, which itself is such a large and complex bill, with huge implications for many workers in this province, the general purpose here being to clarify the workers' compensation authority to disclose information, improve flow, and resolve natural justice issues along with operational issues. According to the government the amendments are supported by the appeals tribunal and the Appeals Commission. These amendments address recent decisions by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner which questioned the authority of the WCB to disclose information deemed necessary to conduct its business.

Well, that raises not a few concerns with not only workers but also with workers' agents, and as I will identify in the next bit, I will be recommending two amendments to try to ensure that, especially in the Workers' Compensation Act, we are addressing some of the concerns about workers' agents and the appeal process itself.

Under the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act the sections were transitional provisions when Alberta Milk took over the production quotas from the dairy board. The board was a government board that oversaw the quotas and inspection. The ministry kept the inspections, and Alberta Milk obtained the quota. So, clearly, not a great concern to this caucus, especially since Alberta Milk is a producer-run organization.

The second act, the Farm Implement Act, also seems to be progress. I met with the minister and his researchers, and it seemed quite sensible that maximum fines could be increased to $100,000 from $50,000 when someone has been jilted in relation to a farm implement sale or the repair of a warrantied item.

Section 30.3(3) requires the distributor of the implements to purchase from the dealer any and all unused equipment, parts, and supplies in the event the agreement between the two is terminated or expires. This section denotes the rate of the returned items, the due date of the payment, and the provisions for court appeals.

Section 30.4 requires the distributor, on the request of the minister, to provide to the minister a copy of an agreement between them and the dealer, particulars of an unwritten agreement with any and all dealers, and a copy of written or unwritten agreements with any or all dealers with respect to the return of implements or parts to the distributor.

Section 30.5 denotes the provisions that must be included in an agreement between a dealer and a distributor. These provisions are who pays for the replacement costs for a substitute farm implement to be provided to the farmer and, number 2, how farmers will be notified if a part or implement cannot be provided and how the substitute implement cost will be covered by the dealer and the distributor.

This act, The Farm Implement Act, also adjusts regulatory powers under section 30.3(4), which allows for interest to be charged on amounts owing to the dealer by the distributor. The Lieutenant Governor in Council may set the interest rate. The Lieutenant Governor in Council may also set any regulations governing any matter in connection with the incidentals to section 30.3, the repurchase of implements, and 30.4, the minister requesting copies of agreements or provisions between distributors and dealers. All the other regulatory powers remain the same.

Those are some of the issues that we have very little difficulty with. Some of the concerns, as I mentioned, relating to the Workers' Compensation Act are somewhat different and will be addressed in amendments.

With your permission, Mr. Chair, I will put forward an amendment to the Workers' Compensation Act.

The Chair: Do you have an amendment ready to go, hon. member?

Dr. Swann: Yes.

3:20

The Chair: Okay. The pages will circulate that if you just pause for a brief moment, and then I'll invite you to speak to it.

This being the first amendment, hon. member, we will deem that to be amendment A1. If you'd send me the original, I'd really appreciate it. Thank you.

I think you can start speaking to the amendment, hon. member, amendment A1.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. This is an amendment to Bill 6, Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2), that it be amended in section 4(4) in the proposed section 147(3)(a) by adding "including the worker or the worker's agent" after "directly concerned." This was raised to us by concerned individuals who've been involved with the Workers' Compensation Act for a number of years. We don't have any trouble with sharing more information with both the worker and the Appeals Commission but also want it to be accessible to the worker's agent. We don't see any reason why that should be withheld from someone who's acting in the interests of the worker, including a lawyer or an advocate. It would simply make clear that withholding that kind of information from the worker's agent would be either deliberately or incidentally ignoring the importance of that agent on behalf of the worker to seek justice or to seek appeal of decisions that were not in the worker's best interest.

I look forward to the discussion, Mr. Chairman. I think it's a common-sense decision that simply includes the phrase "or the worker's agent" in the sharing of information around an appeal in relation to the worker's compensation.

The Chair: Speaking, then, to amendment A1, are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the amendment that's been made by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, and I very much understand the intention. This bill will allow the disclosure of otherwise confidential information of a workers' compensation recipient to maybe his medical people or to his employer. The hon. member, as I understand it, wants to make sure that the workers' compensation recipient themselves or their agent also has access to the information, and I appreciate that.

The difficulty that I have with respect to this – and we have some amendments of our own with regard to this – is that we don't think that section 147(3) should actually exist in the sense that we don't accept that the employer, for example, should have access to confidential workers' compensation files about their employees. So we're actually going in the other direction. We're wanting to get rid of this as opposed to adding to it.

Now, if it's going to be there – and I can't imagine that the government would vote down an NDP amendment to a bill, but if that should happen, Mr. Chairman, then this would strengthen a section that we would really rather just get rid of. As we're speaking, we're trying to come to some decision with respect to this. We're in a bit of a conundrum about it because our amendments will just basically punt the section in general. [interjection] I guess we can strengthen the section and still vote against it in the end. I think that makes sense.

Okay. Mr. Chairman, I'm speaking in favour of this amendment, and I appreciate the hon. member helping me clarify the strategy with respect to this. As the hon. member has moved that the proposed section 147(3)(a) will be improved by adding "including the worker or the worker's agent" after "directly concerned," on that basis we will support strengthening this very weak section before we support getting rid of the section altogether, and when you put it like that, it makes perfect sense to me.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others speaking to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the hon. member's amendment to this act. I'd like to speak, you know, in generalities for a moment about this act.

First of all, we find ourselves facing yet another omnibus bill, which I find to be fairly problematic for a couple of different reasons, Mr. Chairman. One, when we start amending – and I know the government likes to downplay the act and refer to it as minor housekeeping types of changes – the reality is that we've seen time and time again this PC government, the same government that was elected in 2012, that hasn't changed, try to slip through other pieces of legislation that are not just mere housekeeping but that have a significant impact on many Albertans.

Part of it was going through this act – and I'm not going to lie. I mean, some of these sections, particularly the one that this amendment deals with, I find quite problematic. You know, it's interesting. As my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has just stated, we do have a couple of amendments to try to improve this bill. Again, it's going to be a long shot of an attempt to improve the bill because of, especially, section 4, that is quite challenging.

I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View's attempt to improve this section. We're talking about ensuring that we are proposing legislation which serves the interests and the best interests of our greatest resource here in the province, which is its people. We're talking about trying to improve access to and make it easier for those that need to access workers' compensation. We know that there are many Albertans who are frustrated and get frustrated by the system and the bureaucracy that they have to work through. In this section we're talking about protecting our workers and ensuring that they're not going to be exposed and that that information will remain confidential.

I think it's interesting, you know, that this amendment is trying to provide a worker with another option. We're talking about the worker or the worker's agent. I think I have a pretty good idea of where the member is going with this. I mean, there are a lot of people who are in the Alberta workforce who may have service providers that help them, so this is ensuring that if there are people who are care workers or workers that are designated to provide assistance, they will be privy to this information so that they can properly advocate on behalf of the worker and help them navigate through the system.

I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that I can think of direct examples of this. In my former capacity as a high school teacher in the inner city we did have a number of students that regularly needed help navigating through the systems of bureaucracy, that often are interpreted as – or one gets the impression that they are – barriers and walls that are put up by this government in order to make the system less accessible. Whether it's talking about dollars or rights that people have, it seems like they're intentionally set out to frustrate and discourage someone from accessing what they are legally entitled to and what their rights are as an Albertan and as a citizen. There have been many times when I have actually played the role of an advocate on behalf of my students and acted in a capacity of helping them navigate through some very challenging systems.

Now, maybe they didn't always apply to WCB. Maybe they applied more to accessing dollars for school, for grants, for housing. But the point is that I played a pretty crucial role, as did many of the staff that I will give a shout-out to, not only staff at Inner City but staff throughout the province that are advocates for their clients, that are there because they feel a sense of compassion and wanting to ensure that the rights of all Albertans are not only protected but that Albertans have a voice.

As we know, Mr. Chair, there are a growing number of people that are fitting into or falling into this growing disparity gap, you know, a disparity between the wealthy and a growing number of people that are struggling to make ends meet. I see that this amendment would provide additional support for those Albertans that, again, struggle to advocate on their own behalf.

You know, to put this into the context of my position today as the representative for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, my office regularly gets calls and letters and visits from folks who are trying to navigate through the system of WCB and who get quite frustrated. Now, obviously, my staff do a phenomenal job. I'm extremely grateful for the work that they do advocating for my constituents and advocating on behalf of my constituents. One of the largest numbers or sources of calls that come in do relate to WCB.

It's my understanding of this amendment that this would provide, again, the tool or the ability to inform workers. As we know, Mr. Chair, you know, we're trying to ensure that Alberta is as inclusive as possible. We're encouraging people to join the workforce and to work, and there are people who sometimes need additional assistance or, again, need a voice or an advocate on their behalf. This amendment does deal with that and provides workers an opportunity to ensure that their advocates are part of the process and that they have that information.

You know, in a few minutes, Mr. Chair, I will be speaking to, I believe, an amendment that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood will be bringing forward. Now, that deals with the whole of section 4, really, of this act. So in an attempt to try to improve a subsection of section 4, I am speaking in favour of this amendment. I will urge all of my colleagues of this House to support this amendment, making this system a little more accessible and, again, ensuring that all Albertans have the opportunity to have representation or assistance or an advocate working with them, which I think is a very good idea.

With that, I will thank the member for moving this amendment and encourage all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw on amendment A1.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. What I'm wondering is if there is anyone on the government benches who can clarify for the House that the way the amended bill is looking to be read is: any person "directly concerned," but the amendment is just clarifying with "including the worker or the worker's agent." I'm wondering if someone from the government bench can tell me if they would define someone "directly concerned" as the worker or the worker's agent, thus making the amendment somewhat redundant?

Thank you.

The Chair: We might be able to get to that a little later, hon. member.

Meanwhile, I'll recognize another speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the chance to speak on this amendment. It almost feels telepathic. I don't know how the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was perhaps seeing what we were seeing in such a clear sort of way.

Mr. Mason: He's clairvoyant.

Mr. Eggen: Clairvoyant maybe. Maybe our first names are the same. I don't know.

It certainly does focus specifically on section 4(4), which, as I outlined in my original comments, was the problem with the section of Bill 6 that I had spoken about in my first go-round here. So I just want to look at that again because, you know, we want to make sure that we fix this, right? I mean, it's not as though we're trying to create any obfuscation here at all. We want to make sure that we get the job done here.

Sections 147(3) and 147(4) talk about fewer safeguards to ensure that employers don't see irrelevant details about employees' claims like their medical history, like other jurisdictions did, okay? I mean, this is the essence of, really, what part of one of our amendments is as well. The section talks about transparency of the process and protection of privacy rights of workers who are forced to file claims with the WCB or decisions through the Appeals Commission.

You know, it's a defence of current practice that I don't think, Mr. Chair, is good enough, really, to merit changes. It's not just like: "Oh, well. This is the way we've been doing it for so many years, you know. Let's codify it." Well, maybe what we were doing for so many years is not the best thing to do, right? It could be that people were just simply backsliding into the practice of sharing this information, which, in fact, was detrimental to, maybe, some of these people whose files were passed around.

The Privacy Commissioner notes this as well, and notes that the WCB is starting to make a habit of disclosing claim files to employers after they complete only two forms – right? – which it explicitly requests the claim file or makes a reasoned argument as to why it might be needed. The amendment that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View did bring forward here is to add "including the worker or the worker's agent" after "directly concerned." You know, I guess I'm going to play it both ways here in case this one maybe doesn't get voted with an overwhelming majority. I'm certainly going to support his amendment, and then I can always have a backup one in case I need to.

You know, it's really important that we show some solidarity with the workers who actually are compelled to make claims to the WCB because, of course, like I said before, they are in a compromised situation to begin with. It's not as though you are with your full health and faculties when you are in the midst of a claim process with the WCB. You're more likely to be, in fact, quite the opposite. With that in mind, I think it's incumbent upon all of us to ensure that there's some sense of protection of an individual's rights and not anything less than that.

Mr. Chair, I certainly do support the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's amendment. I wish and encourage everybody to support that amendment. We can only expect that if not, I might have one that I can pull out of the hat as well.

The amendments to Bill 6, because of its voluminous sort of collection of statutes, I guess, from the beginning make it not a miscellaneous statute but really some form of the American-style omnibus bill that is a plague on democracy both in the United States and in our federal government. You might have innocuous statutes about milk and so forth, but then you have within there the Workers' Compensation Act, and the section that is a little bit less than palatable.

That's why we certainly feel like we want to just pull that out, right? If we amend it, that's great. If we change the language, that's good, too. Then just as a backstop, an extra little bit of safety, I have another idea in my pocket to perhaps fix this.

You know, I really encourage all members not to just vote for Calgary-Mountain View's amendment but to express themselves a little bit about it, too, because I always find that when I talk things out, I feel better. I'm feeling, obviously, really good now, and I can only imagine that I'm going to feel excellent by 6 o'clock.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm privileged to be able to rise today and begin discussions on Bill 6, which as . . .

The Chair: Specifically to the amendment, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Yes. Right. Sorry. The amendment to Bill 6. So in discussing the merits of the amendment, it's possible I might touch on Bill 6; in particular, the section of Bill 6 which relates to amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act and, in particular, amendments in Bill 6 relating to the Workers' Compensation Act which talk about confidentiality of information.

I'm glad that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View chose to raise this issue. We, too, have very significant concerns, frankly, about all of section 147. I think this is a good opportunity to look a little bit into how Calgary-Mountain View proposes to fix the problems in section 147. I think, certainly, his proposal does help a little bit, so in principle I do appreciate that it's helping in the kind of way that I would like to see help. The only, I guess, concern that I would have is that I do believe it's possible that we're going to come forward afterwards and attempt to eliminate this section altogether. But in so doing, we're doing it for a number of the same reasons that Calgary-Mountain View has proposed his amendment.

Essentially, what he is talking about here is ensuring that the worker or the worker's agent is very clearly included in the list of people who would receive information that the board considers necessary to carry out the purposes of the act. I think that's a really important issue because I certainly spent a good deal of time in my career before I was elected working in the area of workers' rights. I was an advocate that way and spent a lot of time dealing with health and safety issues and representing workers when they had concerns relating to their entitlement to workers' compensation.

I will say that, generally speaking, this is a system in Alberta that troubles me deeply. The overarching record of our Workers' Compensation Board has not been balanced, and it has not achieved the objective of assisting workers who are injured in the workplace so that they suffer no loss of income arising from the injury they received in the workplace. As many people in this room I'm sure know, you know, workers' compensation is the product of what's often known as a historic compromise.

The historic compromise was one where a little after the turn of the century, back a century in the early 1900s, people noticed that a lot of workers were getting killed and very, very seriously injured at work. Then what would happen is that their families would be incredibly destitute as, you know, maybe 1 out of every 50 of them would navigate all the hurdles between them, their poverty, and the court system in order to be able to sue the employer for what was invariably a multiplicity of negligent actions, in order to receive some kind of compensation for the injury which occurred at the hands of the employer, who, as many people here I'm sure know, legally is seen to be in control of the workplace. Anyway, that was the historic compromise.

So what happened was that, on one hand, workers more often than not were not getting any kind of compensation, nor were their families. On the other hand, even as it went from, say, 1 out of every 10 workers getting compensation and then 2 out of every 10 and then 3 out of every 10, employers started to get worried that those insurance costs were getting out of control and this might actually become too expensive for them, having workers having the right to sue them. Indeed, that's what has happened in the U.S.

All that being said, as a result, then, there was a negotiation that occurred legislatively, essentially between workers and employers, where workers gave up the right to sue the employer, and in return the employer replaced the workers' income, so they suffered no loss of income as a result of their injury. They never got any pain and suffering compensation, they never got anything for a loss of pension, they never got anything for the impact on their family, none of that kind of stuff, but at least they didn't lose their income.

That was the theory, and WCB was to be this objective, fair, neutral arbitrator, taking the place of a judge, actually, in this dispute between workers and employers. What has evolved in Alberta, unfortunately, is that WCB does not function as an objective, neutral arbiter or judge between workers and employers. WCB functions as a tool of the employer, through the work of this government, as a means primarily of saving employers money. So they are basically a very, very cheap form of insurance to employers. They measure their success by how little benefits they have to pay out, and they measure their success by how few premiums they ask Alberta employers to pay.

For instance, employers in Alberta pay about half the national average of what is paid to injured workers as a result of injury, and that happens at the same time that we have some of the worst injury statistics in the country. What that means, in fact, is that our so-called neutral arbitrator between the interests of employers and workers is actually tipping the balance very aggressively on one side in favour of employers and at the expense of working people and their families once they've been injured. That's a long-standing process that's been going on in this province.

So, then, this section suggests that we can somehow rely on this theoretically objective and neutral board to decide what confidential medical information of the injured worker should be given to any number of people for any purpose, and that's what this legislation would do. It would give that massive, broad authority to the WCB. The presumption is: oh, we can trust them because they're a neutral arbitrator. Well, my friends, I will tell you that they are not, and they have not been for years.

People in this province also suffer from another disparity, which is that we have amongst the lowest funding for legal aid in the country and that almost no Albertan can gain access to legal aid support to hire a lawyer to help them in their legal contests vis-à-vis the WCB. Since there's no access to the courts, there's no way to pull the WCB back towards the centre of what should be a neutral, objective adjudication role, and in the absence of the courts doing that and holding them accountable, it doesn't happen. So the only people that take the WCB to court in Alberta are employers. Workers never do.

This goes directly to this issue because the issue here is that this section without the amendment basically gives the board the discretion to decide whom should get that information. What the member from Calgary-Mountain View is trying to achieve here is to ensure that, at the very least, the worker or their agent – and just to be clear, it's not their counsel; they can't afford counsel 99 times out of a 100 – would at least be aware and receive the same information that is distributed to other parties.

It is an effort, therefore, to insert a little bit of specific balance to what is otherwise a very unbalanced process. Given the way I introduced our position on this amendment, you can imagine that, really, it's more likely the case that we would be proposing that we just punt the amendment to section 147; I guess it's section 4(4). That's actually what we would probably choose to eliminate altogether.

But I certainly appreciate the intent of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I think his intent comes from a similar place as the rationale that I'm just describing. It's very possible that I will vote in favour of it, but I have to say that we may still feel compelled to then suggest that the whole darn thing has to go. But in case we lose that one, I'll certainly make every effort to win this one, because it would certainly be an improvement in that regard.

I look forward to having a chance to talk more generally about section 4(4) and the replacement or the substitution of section 147 once we're no longer speaking about the amendment, and I certainly will be doing that.

I do appreciate the opportunity to talk about my support for the amendment that is proposed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Oh, yes. It's my honour, Mr. Chair, to get up and speak again to this. I think the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was quite eloquent in her speech. I always find it fascinating to listen to her arguments. You can definitely see her background as far as coming from a background of law and being very meticulous in her evaluation and assessment of a bill, which is greatly appreciated and, I think, adds great value to the discussion that we have here in the House and to the points that my caucus, the Alberta NDP, are able to bring forward.

I'll keep my comments fairly short. Most members heard, when I spoke a little while ago, about the value of this amendment. Now, I'm speaking to the value of this amendment in, again, improving the ability that Alberta workers have, through an agent on behalf of the worker, to be included in the discussions and to be aware and to have information, not restricting them or being excluded from getting all the information. Again, if we're talking about either caregivers or those that are there to provide support, then it makes sense that they are entitled to understanding the process of a claim or of a person who's working through that. I think it's very important that we consider this.

Now, I mean, it's interesting. We do have a couple of amendments, to attempt to strengthen this section of the bill. When I move those in a few moments here, I will speak, again, more broadly to concerns that I have with omnibus bills and bills that deal with multiple acts and multiple sections of acts. It makes it very challenging to have a thorough and rigorous debate in this House, where different amendments to acts really deserve the time to be a stand-alone piece of legislation, to have that kind of thorough debate. Part of it comes down to the courtesy that the government should be extending to the opposition as far as giving us as much time as possible to work through a bill and its process.

I think, you know, something that's very interesting about this House is the process of how the opposition acquires the bill, obviously after the first reading, but the time seems, at least this week, the speed at which we are blasting through pieces of legislation – I'd like to remind all the members of the Assembly that we're enacting laws that affect this year more than 4 million people. Down the road – I mean, we're expanding very quickly here in the province. We should be taking the time to go through this and have a thorough debate. I don't think rushing legislation does anyone any favours.

I'm happy to remind members of this House of when Bill 28 was first introduced and the fact that it was our caucus that sounded the alarm bells on Bill 28. For those of you who can't remember, that was the discussion of locking up and incarcerating mayors of municipalities, you know, which was – I'm not sure where that idea came from. I really have serious questions for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and whoever authored that. But my point, Mr. Chair, is that there were many amendments that the Alberta NDP brought forward at that time. Those amendments, unfortunately, were voted down by the government, the PC Party. Lo and behold, six months later an amending piece of legislation came back, and there were numerous amendments that we put forward that were in the government's amendment to their own bill. At the end of the day, that's time that we debated those, that could have been resolved a year prior.

You know, when we look at wasting 87 members' time, your time, Mr. Chair, the Clerk, the Legislative offices staff, if we're going to bring forward legislation, then let's take the time to get it right, get it right the first time, and have fulsome debate. Now, I know that there are members of this Assembly who seem to think that, you know, I don't know, an hour or two hours is fulsome debate on a bill. I disagree. I think we need to provide the opportunity and to move at a pace that ensures that members, who, again, are speaking not just for themselves, on behalf of their 40,000 to 50,000 constituents or so, are heard and that their opinions are expressed.

You know, Mr. Chair, I'll remind you that at times it takes time from the first reading, when the bill is accessible and gets into our hands, for us to consult with stakeholders. I know that the government loves to use the term "consultation." I'm not going to lie; it causes me to get a bit of a twitch because it seems that their definition of consultation is completely different than when you talk to municipalities, First Nations, other stakeholder groups, environmental groups. You know, the definition of consultation changes drastically.

My point, though, is that, you know, we like to speak with our stakeholders, our members, engage Albertans as well. When a bill zips from first reading to third reading in the span of 24 hours, as have many of the bills that are on the Order Paper, Mr. Chair, it makes it very challenging for the opposition to read through the bill, interpret, and then offer amendments which are, for the most part, meant to strengthen and improve a bill. They might be ideas that the government hasn't thought of. They might be ideas coming directly from stakeholders. There is real value – again, we live and work in a multiparty parliamentary system that values the opinions of different perspectives. Quite frankly, that's why I'm here, to provide perspective. If we value the input of all parties in this Legislature and all members of the Legislature, then they need to be given the opportunity with which to have debate and share their ideas.

You know, getting back to this amendment, I'm happy that we've had as much debate as we've had. I'm sure the member that moved this amendment is quite content with the discussion that we've had. I look forward to further discussion. I hope members opposite will speak to some of the amendments that we're going to be bringing forward. I will urge members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

4:00

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to, first of all, thank all members who have taken part in the discussion, the debate on this amendment. I would like to just provide a little bit of context, some of which was already in my comments in moving second reading, so some of this may be repetitive. In terms of context I would just say that this amendment really does stem from some practical experiences that have been noted by the Workers' Compensation Board, which, I might point out, is obviously made up of representatives of both employers and employees and the general public. Comments have come from the Appeals Commission and also in conversations with the office of the Privacy Commissioner. In fact, there have been a number of discussions back and forth between these parties in coming up with these amendments.

I think the result that we have here is a practical solution to some issues that were on the horizon, because the Privacy Commissioner had taken a certain view of the way some of this information should be flowing. What we have here today as a result in terms of this amendment, not the amendment from Calgary-Mountain View but the bill itself, is something that will respect privacy, make for efficient movement of information when it's going up from the Workers' Compensation Board to the Appeals Commission, and, I think, serve Albertans generally and, certainly, serve workers and employers on both sides of the issue.

I don't feel that I can support the amendment from Calgary-Mountain View. I don't think it's necessary. I think it's redundant because we already have a system where the worker can sign a consent for information to be shared. Also, in speaking to the Workers' Compensation Board and in the briefings both that I've received and that have been available to the members opposite, it's been noted that the Workers' Compensation Board was uncomfortable with having to filter and screen whatever would go to the Appeals Commission before they made their decision. So for the purposes of natural justice we thought that it was important that that information be available to the Appeals Commission. They still are subject to all of the FOIP requirements and the FOIP laws.

It should be noted, too, that at this point in time something like a million pages of information are being copied and passed to the Appeals Commission. We are trying to move and I know that the WCB and the Appeals Commission are trying to move to a system that will be electronic. It'll be much quicker. It'll serve the interests of everybody because the information will be more readily available.

While I respect the comments of the members opposite and have taken note of their comments, I can't support the amendment that's being offered because I do think that it is redundant. It's already available. The passage of that information is already available to people who are acting as agents and so on. I would encourage members to not support this particular amendment, and I look forward to further discussion and debate from all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers to amendment A1?

If not, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much again, Mr. Chairman. I'm disappointed that that amendment was shot down because it certainly didn't add any threat to the bill and would have given some comfort to workers that nothing would be withheld.

To go to a second amendment, I will be moving, on Bill 6, Statutes Amendment Act, 2014, that it be amended by striking out section 4(3) and substituting the following . . .

The Chair: Sure. Okay. If the pages would distribute that amendment. Just pause for a brief moment, hon. member.

We'll call this one amendment A2, hon. member, and you can speak to it.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is an issue that has to do with the appeal process and the very short timeline that workers have to appeal a decision of the board in relation to compensation. It's a very problematic and frustrating and demoralizing issue for many workers who are not able to provide appeal information based on all the consultations that they may have made with doctors or various health workers and consultants around their injury.

They have to have this all together within one year to appeal. Many provinces in the country don't put any limit on the appeal period, but in Alberta we put a one-year limit on appealing, which in some cases has actually left people with serious injuries, especially head injuries where they have cognitive problems, emotional problems, out in the cold because they didn't get their appeals in within 12 months. The only reason that I can see that the WCB would want to limit the appeal period to one year would be to reduce their liability. This body, the WCB, is supposed to be there to fairly and adequately compensate workers regardless of how long it takes for them to get all of the information from their specialists or consultants or counsellors.

The essence of this amendment is to extend the appeal period from one year to 10 years, to allow workers, especially those who are severely injured, who take months and months, in some cases, to get in to see their specialists, who may get contradictory reports from different specialists, who may need further surgery, who may need other aspects of their care, including mental health issues, dealt with – this unfairly excludes people when they haven't managed to get through the appeal process within one year, when you think about how long it takes to get in to see specialists, how long it takes to get in to surgery at times, when you think about the seriousness of the impacts on individuals' mental health and their families. It seems draconian and seriously unfair to limit people on the basis that they didn't get an appeal in within 12 months when they're dealing with financial issues, family issues, trauma, posttraumatic stress, and in some cases tremendous delays within the health system.

All we're saying, I think, in this amendment is that by striking out "one year" in subsection (8) and substituting "ten years," we are giving workers who are injured in the workplace a fair opportunity to appeal what they perceive as unfair decisions. If they don't have the evidence, if they don't have the support from various health specialists or psychologists to sustain their appeal, it will be thrown out. There's no reason to limit workers to a one-year appeal period unless it's simply to remove liability from the WCB, and that is not the purpose of the WCB. The WCB is really there to act on behalf of injured workers and try and make sure that they have a fair restitution of their rightfully due compensation.

I would really strongly encourage members here to consider this amendment as a vote in favour of fairness, justice, and requiring the WCB to do its due diligence and extend, in some cases, the appeal process beyond one year, which is impossible in some cases for the worker to do for the reasons I've given.

Now, the WCB will come back and say: well, we have the discretion; we could extend the period of appeal if we see that there are extended periods. But it never happens. Why does it never happen? Because they want to limit their liability. They want to reduce payments in some cases instead of letting natural justice do its job.

I feel very passionately about this. I've had a number of people in my office who have had various reasons – for some of them it's simply lack an awareness on the worker's part; for some of them it's because they've had brain injuries; for some of them it's because of their family dynamics, the loss of their house, whatever – interfere with their judgment or their ability or their timely appeal. Whatever the reasons there is absolutely no reason to limit a person's appeal if they have just cause for compensation. There is no reason to limit their appeal period to one year. In many other provinces in Canada there is no limit on appeals.

In the interests of being and being seen to be a fair government, we can implement what is a minor change on paper, from a one-year to a 10-year appeal period, but which has a huge impact on a number of workers. Thousands of workers over the last 50 years in Alberta have been excluded from reasonable compensation just because they didn't meet that very narrow, one-year period.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others, to the amendment?

Ms Notley: Well, I want to begin by truly thanking the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for this amendment. I want to congratulate him and/or his staff on the ingenuity of injecting this issue into today's discussion, because this is a really important issue, and it addresses a profound injustice which happens very regularly in this province. This is an absolutely excellent proposed amendment, and I absolutely support it.

Why do we want to change the appeal period from one year? Let me count the many, many ways. Let's begin by noting that it's a relatively recent decision by this government to inject the statutory limit on the amount of time a worker has to appeal. It was a decision that I believe was heartless, and it was a decision that displayed a profound level of being out of touch with the realities of working people who find themselves unable to attend work and unable to earn an income. Maybe folks over on that side are used to having, you know, five years of salary cushion between their time of working and when they start to get into trouble if they don't have an income, but regular working people certainly do not.

This issue of whether they are entitled to compensation when they are unable to work due to their injury is profoundly – profoundly – important to them. This one-year limit to an appeal restricts their rights more than would be the case for somebody exercising a number of different rights within our court system. Were I, say, for instance, Daryl Katz, I could wait six years to start a legal action about a breach of contract. So say, you know, that I'm a hugely wealthy developer and somebody breaches a contract and I think that I've lost hundreds of millions of dollars, I can wait six years before I go into court with that one.

But no, no, no. If I'm the injured worker who's been told that your back injury from being required to lift a patient on your own – and you're lifting that patient on your own because the other five people who might have been working with you that night have been fired or laid off or no longer exist. So you lift that patient, and you permanently injure your back in the course of doing that. Well, you are going to be told that that's because you're old and your spine is deteriorating and that it has nothing to do with that lifting action. Then you're going to be told that you don't have any income, and you have no ability to go to work to do the job anymore. Then you're going to be told that your employer has no obligation to accommodate you because, of course, employers in this province are about 30 years behind the rest of the country when it comes down to implementing their human rights obligations under the human rights code.

So that's what is going to happen to those people, and those folks are told that they only get one year to appeal. Wealthy, wealthy developers suing under breach of contract: six years. Injured woman, caregiver who helps patients and has her back injured at work: one year. Does that sound fair to you? I'll say what I think it sounds like. I think it sounds like beating up on some of our most vulnerable yet important members of our society. So that's just to start.

That being said, let's just talk about other reasons why a worker may not be able to file an appeal within one year. The first one has already been identified by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. That is that the injury experienced by the worker may actually have implications for their mental and emotional state. It may be a form of PTSD. It may be a brain injury. It may be an excruciatingly painful back injury, which ultimately generates an addiction and an incapacity to sort of think clearly; that happens, too. So any of those things could be the nature of the injury, and the very nature of the injury then interferes with the worker's ability to file their appeal on time.

To review, that worker doesn't have a lawyer because in Alberta we have pretty much the worst legal aid system in the country, and there's no way on the planet that any injured worker in Alberta is going to get legal aid support to help them appeal. So they're on their own. If they've been injured in a way that impacts their ability to function emotionally and cognitively, then they're very likely to struggle to read those documents to file their appeal on time. So that's the first problem.

The second problem arises when the injury itself is not static within that one-year period. Anyone who's ever been involved in a car accident or anything like that knows that the permanence of the injury and the degree to which that injury impairs you is not crystallized within a 12-month period. So WCB says: oh, you don't have an issue that warrants your being off work because you're not really that disabled, so we're going to deny your claim for lost-time benefits. And you think: "Well, all right. Okay. Well, it seems to be kind of getting better." You go back to work and you carry on, and you realize after about three or four months that even though it's not quite the same as it once was, it is, actually, still impairing you, and you may be out of time to appeal the decision.

Now, the third thing which is problematic with that one-year limitation to appeal is the fact that, as we've talked about many times in this Assembly, our access to health care in this province is profoundly delayed. Oftentimes the very foundation for an appeal that a worker will do – and I now speak as a lawyer who used to do these kinds of appeals – stems from the medical opinion of the doctor. Well, how many examples have we heard about how long it takes to get in to see a doctor in Alberta? How many people can get in to a doctor, a specialist, that will have a sufficient gravitas to counter the written-on-a-notepad-out-of-their-back-pocket opinion of the paid WCB medical adviser, who's never actually met the worker.

So you've got that evidence in there saying: "Oh, no. It's not a compensable injury. I am a medical adviser. I've never met the worker, but I've decided the injury is not related to work." In order to counter that, you actually have to go see a doctor who's a specialist in the area because your evidence has to be better than the WCB's evidence. Then you have to wait to get an appointment to see that doctor. And guess what? That's if you know right away that that's what you've got to do and it doesn't take you six months to get advice on how to do that. Then, lo and behold, you're filing appeals when maybe you don't actually have a case, but you have to file the appeal because you don't know if you're ever going to see the doctor in time. It's just ridiculous. There's just no good reason for this one-year limit.

Now the issue of whether or not the WCB has discretion to extend the limit. Well, I've been on that side of that issue as well, and let me say this. I have made representations on behalf of injured workers who have done everything a reasonable person would do to ensure that that appeal is filed, and when the appeal is not filed on time, it is not their fault. It's because someone that was helping them told them they were doing it but didn't do it. For instance, right there. Like, that is an excellent reason why an extension of the time to appeal would be made, yet that, which is a classic case of a reason for extending the time of appeal, is rejected.

Then I've also in my time, sitting as an appeals commissioner, in different contexts looked at the question of whether or not one can extend the time to appeal a decision. I've looked at cases where it's very clear on the record that the person never actually received notification that the decision was made, yet no, we're not going to go ahead with that extension. We get to assume on the basis of our policy that that person received the decision even though it's clear on the record of it that the address that it was mailed to is no longer this person's permanent address. I mean, really simple, basic, natural justice questions like this are repeatedly and regularly ignored by the Workers' Compensation Board in the administration of these claims. That happens and will continue to happen, and it will happen more and more when you're looking at a one-year time limit.

Personal injury claims: two years. Contract breach claims: six years. Vulnerable injured workers without legal representation: one year. You know, folks, really? I mean, when you look at the profile of the people that are accessing each of those different windows within which to appeal, it becomes very obvious very quickly that the ones who have all the time in the world are the most entitled, and the ones who have the least time in the world are the least entitled.

The Workers' Compensation Board, just to be clear, in the representations in the submissions that I've already made in the past, does not have a record that warrants them being characterized as entirely objective and neutral in terms of how they deal with workers and workers' appeals.

Another thing that's interesting, another example that I've come across – and I'll mention it when we talk about this section in more general terms as well, but it's also applicable to this. The Member from Calgary-Mountain View says: well, we need to extend the one year because we can't count on the WCB to exercise its discretion fairly. One of the interesting cases where I've seen the WCB not exercise its discretion fairly is where the WCB is both adjudicator and employer. You imagine: oh, they can't possibly be both adjudicator and employer. Well, yeah. Guess what? They are. They are in this province. With their own staff they exercise their discretion in a way which is just brutal. It is absolutely brutal. It's beyond the pale of acceptability, and it is absolutely not neutral. So for all those people who are actually employed by the Workers' Compensation Board, God forbid that they miss an appeal deadline, perhaps because of a brain injury, and they have to rely on the WCB, who is both employer and adjudicator, to make a decision in their discretion that would allow the person to still pursue their claim. I've seen it. I've seen that exact case.

Let me tell you that the record does not reveal a record of a professional, objective organization, for sure. All in all, there are a number of different reasons: when you consider that the appeal process itself with respect to the Workers' Compensation Board is extremely complicated and complex; when you pair that with the fact that much of the evidence that is collected and used when the merits of a worker's claim is considered is medical in nature, very professional in nature, and again, very complex; when you consider the issues around work-relatedness – for instance, does this lung condition typically arise when you are working with that chemical in the workplace?

Again, I've done a lot of WCB claims. I've done claims for firefighters, for pipefitters, for X-ray technologists where significant lung capacity issues have arisen as a result of exposure to chemicals. In all those cases, getting just the general research on those chemicals, what kind of injuries they typically are understood to cause and how that manifests itself in terms of the symptoms in the person who's exposed to them – that information is very complicated. It requires a lot of research. I can't even begin to tell you how many hours well into the night I have spent poring over those.

I think there was a website back in the day when I was doing this, about a decade ago, called PubMed. You'd just enter stuff, and you'd read medical journal report after medical journal report after medical journal report, trying to decipher what actually supported the notion of a causal relationship between a particular chemical and a particular injury. That's very complex.

Then there's the issue of securing the medical reports. I think we have more than one medical doctor. We have two medical doctors in the Liberal caucus. I can't remember if we have more medical doctors over on that side or not. I'm having a blank.

An Hon. Member: We've got a veterinarian.

Ms Notley: A veterinarian absolutely works because it's even harder to become a veterinarian than a doctor, I'm pretty sure.

In any event, the point is that they will know that when they are approached to write medical legal opinions, it's not something they love to do. It takes a while for the appointment to be made. They often don't know how to write them. They charge lots of money for the medical legal opinions. When they do finally write the medical legal opinions, they take a long time to be written because it's not a doctor's happy place to be writing medical legal opinions. Most doctors' happy places are to not write medical legal opinions, so they delay it.

So you've got to badger your doctor to get a medical legal opinion. You've got to coach your doctor on how to write a relevant medical legal opinion. You've got to do the scientific research on the causation. You've got to do all that kind of stuff, and you've got to do all of it without a lawyer because, to review, you're not getting access to a lawyer if you don't have income, and you're not getting access to a lawyer through legal aid. So you're doing all of this on your own, and you've got to do it within a year. Well, that's just not reasonable. That's absolutely not reasonable. That's why this one-year appeal process has really hurt a lot of people.

Another thing that I found in my travels doing this kind of work is that oftentimes people won't realize that the injury or the symptoms they experience are actually related to work. The classic case is, of course, repetitive strain injury. Classic case. You know, you're typing in an awkward office set-up, and you have a new boss come in, and suddenly the amount that you're typing triples. You start doing that, and about eight months later you start to feel a little bit sore, so you file a WCB claim. WCB says: "No, not related. This is your own kind of achiness because you're a diabetic or you're a woman over 50." All the various and sundry explanations that they love to use to say that these kinds of things aren't related to your work. So you keep it up, and then your employer ups how much you've got to type yet again, and about a year later you're going to see the doctor. Now you're wearing wrist braces, and you're being scheduled for carpal tunnel surgery. Now you might even lose time. Of course, you filed your claim 14, 15 months ago. WCB was very fast in rejecting it, and it took another 14, 15 months for the symptoms to slowly grow to the point that you're now losing time off work. And guess what? You no longer have the right to appeal the decision because it's the same mechanism of injury as what originally started, and it actually took two years for it to grow from being a painful annoyance to being a job-ending condition.

Those are just some of the examples of how people are (a) repeatedly, over and over and over and over, having their rights overlooked by this process and (b) how they also suffer. Their families suffer. Their income is lost. Their families are stressed out, and they struggle to put food on the table for their kids. Generally speaking, you're creating more opportunities for poverty. To be clear, this person is injured, so they are not able to work. The way that's supposed to be fixed is workers' compensation, but unfortunately workers' compensation is denied to them by these incredibly oppressive and restrictive limitations, which, I will just remind people once again, are not applied to people who sue for breach of contract. Just to be clear, the profile of the folks suing for breach of contract: these are not workers living from paycheque to paycheque. These are multimillionaire/developer business types. They get the six-year window. Our people or people that are more vulnerable get one.

That's what I have to say. That's why I'm very, very pleased that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has made the decision to bring forward this motion. I'm glad that we've been able to talk about it because it really, really raises a profoundly important inequality that exists with respect to our workers' compensation system.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you, hon. member.

I'm going to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll thank my colleague from Edmonton-Calder for allowing me to speak in front of him. We both have some interesting points to make on this amendment.

Mr. Chair, there was a bit of a question circulating briefly or recently about the validity of this amendment. It's my understanding that Parliamentary Counsel has in fact declared that this amendment meets the parliamentary requirements to be a legitimate amendment.

You know, I have heard – and I'm sure that the minister will . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, if I may, just for the record the question was whether or not this amendment was attempting to amend the WCB act itself or this section as it refers to it in this bill. The clarification has been received from Parliamentary Counsel that it, in fact, speaks to this section of this bill and is therefore in order, so you can proceed to speak to it.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you for that clarification, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank Parliamentary Counsel because this is, as my colleague stated, a very good amendment. I'm glad to hear that it is in order.

I've heard that the minister is claiming that this deals with the WCB act and not the omnibus bill that is currently being debated in the House here. You know what, Mr. Chair? That raises serious concerns. This is one of the points that the Alberta NDP has made regularly when it comes to omnibus bills and the challenge that we face in that this piece of legislation, that is going to amend a few different acts, is getting brought forward as one bill. You know, this is the time for us to bring forward amendments and to improve this one section, which deals with the Workers' Compensation Act. However, I find it interesting and maybe disappointing that the minister is advocating or trying to assert that this amendment deals with the act and not this bill.

I guess he's highlighting the fact that this is one of the challenges that occurs when you bring forward an omnibus bill as opposed to dealing with pieces of legislation that amend a specific act, one act at a time. Again, I'm very grateful that we can in fact debate this amendment. I do agree with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that this is an important amendment. As I've alluded to before, Mr. Chair, we do have a couple of amendments to try to improve this section of the act as well. We have a few opportunities here to make some progress on a bill, again, that covers, really, a variety of bills.

You know, a point that my colleague brought up, which is really important, is ensuring that when we're looking at appealing decisions made by the Appeals Commission, there is adequate time to be able to collect and organize documentation in order to make an appeal and to present a proper case. As the act currently reads, there's only a one-year period for this to occur. Quite frankly, Mr. Chair, there are examples of where it's been very challenging for claimants to be able to organize everything they need within a one-year period, so it seems quite reasonable to me that we expand this window to a period of 10 years.

Again, folks who have to make claims through workers' compensation – I mean, the effects of whether it's an accident or what happens at work often affect them for life. It seems at odds that they have a very tiny window to be able to make an appeal as opposed to ensuring that Albertans have due process, that they have the ability to be heard and to appeal decisions if they feel that they are unjust.

This really does provide another tool for Albertans, you know, who are injured and trying to deal with claims. I mean, I can appreciate the level of stress, anxiety, difficulty, and duress that these folks are already under, and providing a very limited time frame for them to appeal a decision that's probably already taken a significant amount of time to get to the place that they're at – this provides them with a broader window to be able to appeal and to right a wrong, for lack of a better way of framing this, Mr. Chair.

You know, I wished on this amendment that I could speak as eloquently as my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. She definitely has quite a bit of background knowledge and experience when it comes to working with the bill that deals with WCB claims and appeals, coming from, you know, a background of law. But the point here, Mr. Chair, is that this is an amendment that would greatly strengthen this section of Bill 6, and I'm hoping for and am very curious to hear the points and arguments that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Calder is going to make on this. I'm curious to hear his interpretation and will urge all members of the Assembly to give him their undivided attention.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the brevity of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and his spry capacity to jump ahead of me. I don't know what that means, if it's an unconscious action that he's making there, you know, to demonstrate his youth and vigour. I don't know what it is.

Anyway, certainly, I'm interested in the Member for Calgary-Mountain View bringing forward quite a substantial amendment to Bill 6. It's, again, no surprise that it focuses specifically on the WCB part of this bill. You know, it's interesting that we would have any controversy, really, or that the essence of the controversy is on why we would be dwelling on WCB issues and WCB legislation so extensively here. Well, that's, ironically, exactly the essence of what I have a problem with, this using miscellaneous statutes structure to start to create something that resembles an omnibus bill. It's just like keeping Alberta rat free. You want to make sure that we draw the line somewhere between Saskatchewan and B.C. and keep the rats out. Well, I stand here today to make my claim to keep Alberta omnibus bill free as well.

We see the blight of the omnibus bill rampaging across the United States. You hear about it as this clever tactic that exists in all state Legislatures and national bodies in Washington, and it's become almost like an animal unto itself, right? It's given a life of its own, and it combines good ideas with bad ideas, it combines politically nefarious ideas with innocuous amendments, and the whole heady brew can be toxic, quite frankly. You know, I just don't find any use for it here in Alberta, where we're straight-shooting sons of guns and men and women who cannot descend to using large pieces of legislation that don't have any relativity to each other just for the sake of – I don't know – a combination of expediency and maybe some other less than . . .

Mr. Bilous: To confuse, to hide.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. You know, not really the best of intentions.

Again, we go back to the way that we do do this. Sometimes, the odd time here, we agree and sit down around a table and make a miscellaneous statutes agreement, shake hands, and everybody feels good. But we didn't do that with this one – right? – so the legislation gets hung up a little bit. Again, just to remind you, everybody gets hung up as well if we don't talk about how we're going to run our afternoons and evenings.

If Bill 6 had come through in a timely manner and I was given the mechanism by which to know exactly when it's going to be and to have my critics in place to debate not just Bill 6 but Bill 3 as well and other ones, then, you know, everything would have been smooth. It would have been like driving on fresh asphalt here. It would have been like a trip to the mountains, right? Instead, we're kind of stuck here.

Mr. Mason: We're going off road.

Mr. Eggen: We're going off road – that's right – driving in circles.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I think, is showing some ingenuity here in building this amendment for Bill 6, speaking very specifically about the Appeals Commission, about the records of individuals and how they may or may not be shared. You know, there's a difference between natural justice, I would venture to say, and just continuing on with a habit that may be really not in the best interests of individuals. While it may have been common procedure to share files on individuals over the last number of years, it doesn't mean, necessarily, that it was the best practice or in the best interests of people that are actually filing. I just find that to be something that we need to be concerned about here in the Legislature.

I find it interesting that once you start talking about the Workers' Compensation Board, it's like opening a can of wasps, Mr. Chair, because you find that so many people have not done well by the way that the WCB functions. Certainly, I've learned a very practical and hard lesson with reviewing literally hundreds of cases of WCB claims that have come through my constituency office over the last number of years and just this tale of woe.

You know, so much of it could be easily fixed if we really did employ a sense of natural justice about looking to work in the best practice or the best interest of the individual filing the claim rather than trying to presume that someone is trying to exaggerate or somehow misrepresent their claim. By just simply approaching WCB claims backwards, I think philosophically we've created a sort of negative environment that is a little bit reflected in this part of the bill here, which is the sharing of information in regard to a person's medical faculties when they're filing a claim with the Workers' Compensation Board. Certainly, I find it interesting that we have to kind of work through that here. I think that for the sake of saving the other parts of this bill, which I believe to be quite regular and normal – there are certain populist sections here talking about the farm implements, and so forth, that are very useful for people in this province. By striking out or amending the sections here on the WCB, I think that gives us food for thought.

You know, I spoke to a number of people who advocate for WCB claimants here in the province, and they definitely made no bones about how we should strengthen the privacy of individuals' medical files and not pass that information around helter-skelter, that people really are in a compromised situation when they are before the Appeals Commission or just filing the claim with the WCB. Again, if we make that presumption of innocence and presumption of best intentions the first premise by which we approach each individual case, then I think we'd go a long way to promoting goodwill – right? – because right now the adversarial environment that the WCB has created for themselves has just compromised that somehow.

Yeah. Good for the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for coming up with this innovative amendment. You know, I'm feeling really good about this one passing, but just in case, I think we might have something that can fix the problem as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm just glad to again talk a little bit more about this issue because it really is very close to my heart. I want to just talk about a couple of examples of people that I've dealt with in the past who were victims of the one-year limitation period in terms of appealing their case. I want to tell a little bit of their story, obviously with no names being released or anything like that.

One example for me was a corrections officer who I met back in the early '90s, when I worked for the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. It was a young woman who had been attacked by an inmate at the remand centre and had in fact been isolated and sort of in a bit of a kidnapping situation for several hours with her life under threat until such time as the rest of the remand police were able to come in and save her from that situation.

Now, as it turned out in that case, she suffered physical injuries, so she applied to the WCB for compensation as a result of those physical injuries, and she received some compensation during that period of time. That's all great. Eventually her physical injuries resolved, and she was told that she had to go back to work. The letter was written, and a decision was made that she had to go back to work. That decision crystallized at a certain point. "Here's your decision. You've got to go back to work. You're super cool. Off we go."

Meanwhile, while she had been receiving treatment for her physical injuries, she also started getting treatment for growing, increasingly apparent psychological injuries. Those injuries slowly developed. By the time she was told that she had to go back to work, those psychological injuries had grown to the point that she was not in any state to read the fine print about appealing that issue. So she didn't appeal it when the decision letter was written that she was fine and she was ready to go back to work.

What happened was that she just didn't go back to work. A number of things occurred, issues related to whether she was allowed to be away from work, whether she had abandoned her position. Ultimately, she used her sick time instead of workers' comp time. Then she ran out of sick time, and then she started applying for LTD benefits. Meanwhile her condition deteriorated, and issues developed: substance abuse issues, family issues, lack of sleep, all the kinds of things that are often associated with PTSD. Anyway, eventually her family unit broke down. She ran out of sick leave. She was in tremendous crisis, and that sort of reached a pinnacle at about two years after she had originally been told that her injury was over and she was done.

Now, as it turned out in that case – that was, as I said, back in the 1990s – it was before the WCB introduced the one-year rule. So in that case we were able to do an appeal for her, and we were able at that time to go out and get the information that was necessary, send her to all the specialists, yada, yada, yada. To be fair, in that case once all that information was collected on her behalf by someone who understood the workers' compensation system – and, of course, it took her almost two years to get somebody, to finally pick up the phone and contact somebody that knew something about the issue. As soon as we heard her story, we went: "Oh, well, this is outrageous. I mean, you're suffering from PTSD. This is exactly, completely related to that initial incident from that point, you know, three years earlier." We sent her off to the doctors, and we contacted her treating professionals. We made the case, and we did the appeal. Of course, she ultimately received compensation, and she got her sick time back, and she got her job back, and yada, yada, yada. It all ended up brilliantly.

Of course, there are two differences between her position and many other people's position. First, of course, she was a member of a union. Ultimately, when things absolutely crumbled to the final extent and she reached out to her union, she was actually able to enjoy the benefits that so many Albertans don't enjoy, and she got the benefit of legal representation, that is not available to the vast majority of Albertans, who are not members of unions, in these situations. She also benefited from the fact, as I said before, that the one-year time limit was not in place. Now, of course, even with all the assistance that she could get through her union, she still would be potentially living on the street because that one-year time limit would have stopped her ability to appeal.

This is what happens with injury a lot, and anybody who knows anything about disability law knows that these kinds of issues are not clearly laid out within a year. That is often the case. And that is particularly the case when injuries gradually occur, when the condition itself gradually occurs, or when you're dealing with mental health issues. Those people are particularly vulnerable to not getting appropriate compensation.

I find that there are actually a lot of places in our regime of periodically, in a scattered sort of way, providing support to disabled Albertans where our system actually quite actively discriminates against people with mental health or cognitive or emotional illness. It's not limited to WCB. I will say that. But one of the places that you definitely see our system very exhaustively and effectively discriminate against people with mental health issues is in the WCB, and one of the ways that happens is where you have a time limit of exactly one year within which to assert your rights. So that is an issue that really needs to be changed.

Really, you know, if we could change this with the WCB and then also look at how we manage our AISH system and income supports systems and all those other ones – oh, I could go on forever about how we find a way to discriminate against the people with disabilities. We discriminate against those with mental health or cognitive or emotional issues because the very system we set up to establish their eligibility discriminates against people whose capacity to navigate that system is impaired by the very condition which contributes to their eligibility. So it's a circular problem.

I truly believe one of the first things I'm going to do if I ever get a chance to retire, which I will say that I do think about more longingly every day, is a systemic human rights complaint on the AISH process that we have in place on behalf of people with mental health issues.

Mr. Mason: Have a roast.

Ms Notley: After Brian organizes a roast, yeah.

Mr. Mason: And a Christmas video.

Ms Notley: And a Christmas video.

Anyway, that being said, I think I've had an opportunity to really lay out for my colleagues in the Assembly why the change that was made – I don't know, now; I'd say that it would be five to 10 years ago – that reduced the period of time within which a worker could appeal a decision made against them to one year, why that decision was such a bad, unfair, hurtful decision. And I hope I've given some description of why that hurts people. To be clear, we don't have legal representation. The issues are complex. People are usually in crisis, and that crisis can in fact be exacerbated by the very condition which would otherwise render them eligible for these benefits, and were they not workers injured by their employer, if they were a wealthy developer driving the street and hit by a stranger, they would have two years, and if they were a wealthy businessman suing somebody on a contract, they would have six years. But if they are an injured worker, they only have one. So that is all I'm going to talk about on that particular issue today.

I do once again need to provide my tremendous gratitude to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for providing an ingenious opportunity for us to discuss this important issue today in the House. For those members who are annoyed by the fact that we get to talk about this issue in what was supposed to be a very simple miscellaneous statutes amendment act, this, to me, would be a cautionary tale to the government against the practice of lumping a whole bunch of issues together into a miscellaneous statutes amendment act and suggesting that they're all really merely administrative in nature and don't warrant their own separate pieces of legislation. This is what happens because the substance and the merits of said miscellaneous statutes amendment act can sometimes have far-reaching consequences, so something which should sail through reasonably quickly does not. Frankly, it ought not to because we're all elected here to do exactly what we're doing.

Dr. Swann: Is this part of what happens with an omnibus bill?

Ms Notley: These are exactly the kinds of problems and/or challenges and/or opportunities, I suppose, which occur when the government of the day chooses to replicate the rather anti-democratic practices of the Harper government and to bring them into our Assembly by creating larger and larger and larger omnibus bills entirely dedicated to the task of reducing legislative oversight.

I mean, at least in Parliament they sit I think at least 200 or 250 days a year versus here, where we're: not so much. I think that Prince Edward Island is the only province in the country which sits less frequently than we do, and of course it is roughly – I don't know – one-thirtieth our size or something like that. We're only a just a few days more than them, just to be clear; we're not 30 times more than them.

The Chair: You're still on the amendment, hon. member?

Ms Notley: I am. Thank you for that reminder, Mr. Chair. You're quite right.

Anyway, all that is to say that even though it is buried in a miscellaneous statutes amendment act, it is a very important one. Frankly, the Workers' Compensation Act as a whole is one that deserves thorough and extensive review by an all-party committee for a very long time because there are so many injustices that occur every day to workers in Alberta as a result of decisions which are authorized by the legislation for which we are responsible.

Dr. Swann: Not to mention farm workers.

Ms Notley: Not to mention the fact that we don't even deal with farm workers. I know that's not what we're talking about in this amendment, so I won't go on about it for too, too long, although let me just say that it is really quite egregious that farm workers have no right to any kind of compensation. Again, I guess they can sue, but you've got to find yourself a lawyer. That's your first thing.

Mr. Mason: You're a lawyer.

Ms Notley: I'm a lawyer, but I tend not to do legal work anymore, so that just won't work. Anyway, all that being said, I've been distracted by the comments from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. It's very easy for me to be distracted.

All righty. Anyway, I'm going to once again end by thanking the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for this wonderful amendment. I completely support it without reservation, and I look forward to hearing further comments on it by my colleagues.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move at this time that we rise and report progress.

The Chair: The Deputy Government House Leader has moved that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: The committee shall now rise and report progress on Bill 6.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 6. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in that report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Speaker: Any opposed? Thank you. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 Respecting Property Rights Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow to move third reading.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 1, Respecting Property Rights Act, on behalf of the Premier.

Bill 1 will repeal the land assembly project act and will also include the preamble to establish the importance of property rights to this government. I appreciated the comments during the second reading and the Committee of the Whole from the members who spoke to the legislation. It is clear that property rights are very important to all Albertans and to members of this Legislature.

Several hon. members spoke to the dissatisfaction Albertans have had with the Land Assembly Project Area Act, also known as Bill 19. This government has listened to Albertans and is repealing the Alberta assembly project act as part of Bill 1 as it does not meet the expectations of Albertans and their individual property rights. By immediately repealing the Alberta assembly project area act, we have demonstrated that we are here to listen. We have listened to all Albertans, and this government has acted at the first available opportunity.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, this bill demonstrates this government's commitment to property rights. It affirms that private ownership of land is of fundamental importance to this government. The preamble sets out the parameters of how this government will treat property owners and what they can expect from our government going forward.

I was pleased to see several hon. members express their support for Bill 1. Some hon. members voiced concerns that more needs to be done to protect property rights beyond Bill 1, but, Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 is clearly a statement of support for property rights. It begins to address landowners' concerns and upholds their rights, and this government is not stopping there.

Mr. Mason: What government?

Mr. Donovan: This government.

Pursuant to the Property Rights Advocate Act the 2012 and 2013 Property Rights Advocate reports have been referred to committee for review. We will look forward to hearing from the committee and following their review to see if there are any ways we can better protect Alberta property rights. This government is committed to a clear and fair process that respects the Legislative Assembly and respects the input from the members of the Assembly in this process.

Mr. Speaker, our Premier's commitment to property rights has been a matter of public record for decades. He has made clear his intent to apply the same kind of common sense, responsibility, and balance to this issue that he has already demonstrated in many other files. I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 1 and to support the property rights for Albertans. I urge all members to support Bill 1.

Thank you.

5:10

The Speaker: Hon. members, our convention is to go to the Official Opposition – we have one speaker there – and then to the Liberal opposition, then to the ND, and then we'll alternate after that.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to talk about Bill 1 as well. Of course, any step forward on improving property rights will be supported by the Wildrose caucus and our hard-working MLAs, our commitment for the last two and a half years, even the year and a half before the election, of supporting town halls, whether, in my case, it was several town hall meetings, sometimes with 200, 300 people at them, always – always – very, very amazed at a government that claimed to be conservative, that would remove statutory consents without access to the courts, without access to full and fair compensation.

Of course, I'm very, very disappointed that Bill 1, the bill that the Premier, when he was running for the leadership and wanted to be leader of the PC Party and be the Premier of our great province, said was his most important act, ended up being seven words long. So disappointing. It's disappointing that it didn't at least tackle the huge infringements in Bill 36, where they can take a landowner's statutory consents away, take them away without access to the courts, without full and fair compensation to the landowner. Our MLA from Drumheller-Stettler has explained it very, very adequately to me this way. It's like you have a truck, and you use your truck every day. The government doesn't have to take your truck away to stop you from driving; all they have to do is take away your driver's licence. That's what the parts of Bill 36 do.

Possibly it's fair to suggest that because the Wildrose received 440,000 votes and became the Official Opposition, it stalled the government's desire to enact parts of Bill 36, that it slowed things down, which is a nice reward for all the people that voted for our MLAs in all the constituencies. Bill 36 still looms, with its draconian power, in the only western democracy where property rights, the driver's licence, can be taken away without full, fair, and timely compensation, without access to the courts.

Bill 24 still looms over us, where they can pump carbon into the pore space underneath our land without paying compensation.

We weren't in here for about six months, from I think some side of May 12 until a week or so ago as the PC leadership race went on, and I saw three people work quite hard at it around the province.

So it's very, very disappointing to see Bill 1, seven words long. There are other aspects to it, and it's why my MLA associate from Lacombe-Ponoka worked so hard on Motion 501, the idea of elevating – elevating – the importance of individuality, the idea of government knowing better where government ends and individual rights start.

True, Alberta has been a leader in Canada economically, growthwise, partly because of our ability to balance a budget, which for seven years now has been thrown away, partly because of no debt. We're somewhere around $11 billion or $12 billion now, headed towards $20 billion, headed towards $700 million or $800 million a year in interest. The government still presents budgets that aren't consolidated. Now we're headed towards property rights. I use the phrase "kick the can down the road." Off to the committees. I don't know. When will the committees sit? When will the committees look at this?

I rise to support Bill 1. Yeah, it's a small baby step in the right direction when this government, this Premier, this new Premier, this reset, this fourth Premier in six years or whatever it is, said that it was his main thing, his main focus. Needless to say, I'm very, very disappointed in the efforts of Bill 1, although I guess that's better than Bill 2. We still haven't seen that one. That was also very, very important. So if property rights in Bill 1 was seven words long, integrity and accountability in Bill 2 might be three and a half words long.

So I rise to support Bill 1, which totally removes Bill 19, which two Premiers ago was hollowed out anyway, never proclaimed, never acted on. Like many other Albertans, especially rural Albertans, I am very, very disappointed that this is all of the action we've received so far.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the independent Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really glad that I am going to get this chance to speak to any part of Bill 1. This bill has just whipped through so fast. It's Wednesday afternoon, and it's in third reading. So if I hadn't come in extra to do this, I wouldn't have been able to speak to this bill at all.

In many ways this was a good choice as the first bill, the flagship bill, for the new Premier because there's support for it pretty much through every party, for different reasons, interestingly enough, but there is support. Why am I supporting it? Why does my caucus support it? Well, because we were very much against the bill that is being repealed, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, which came through in 2009. I don't remember the number of it; Bill 19, maybe.

At that time it seemed like overkill. There were processes in place already. So if the government wanted to assemble land, to put through something that was going to be for the public good, for the common good, transmission lines or railways or high-speed rail links or any number of things that you would want to assemble a lot of land in a straight line for, you know, we have the Expropriation Act. We had other acts that were already allowing us to do this. So it seemed really over the top, kind of hysterical, if you will, that this act was so draconian.

It wasn't only that we're going to mark your land for the future, but we're going to mark your land for the future, and you can't do anything with it because if you do something with it, we're not going to pay you for it. So if you're on a farm and you're a pig farmer, don't bother putting up that new barn to expand your operation because come 25 years down the road, when we decide we're actually going to take this land from you, we're not going to compensate you for the new pig barn that you built. It just seemed: whoa; calm down. But, no, that's what happened here. Of course, lots of other people have talked about the number of bills that link together to further what the government was trying to do at the time.

What I find really interesting is that this act was never proclaimed, and now they're taking it off the books. Why now, you say? Why now? Because with the statutes review process that we have coming by in 2016, anything that hadn't been proclaimed, like this bill, the land assembly act, would have been wiped off. So if they just did nothing, it would have disappeared in another year and two months, right? So why did they bring it forward now? I mean, if I had to guess, the government had to be seen to be doing something, and property rights is a big, big point of contention. Certainly, it's a big point of contention between the government and the Official Opposition, represented by a number of my colleagues from the Wildrose Party. So it was something the government could be seen to be doing that might cause some problems over here. I don't know.

But what I was really taken by was that during the Premier's comments he talked about re-establishing trust, and this was to re-establish trust. Oh, sorry. I got a little off on a tangent. Boy, I do that a lot.

The purpose of the bill at the time was to assemble all of this land. Yes, indeed, but at that point we were talking about a very large electricity transmission company that happened to want land that was assembled for them. Lo and behold, here we are five years later, and that project has now been completed. Maybe that's why we have the timing for this bill. They no longer need to put it all together for that particular large electrical distribution company because it's been accomplished. Now they can wipe that bill off the books, and who knows? Maybe in a couple of years nobody will even notice.

Now to talk about the Premier's comments about wanting to rebuild trust. I was really taken with that because, like everybody else in Alberta, I'm watching this new Premier. I'm going: okay; do I think he's, you know, representative of me and my values and what I want to see happen in Alberta? Maybe. Maybe not. So I'm watching for what he believes in. I understand that the Premier thinks that this bill is step one in rebuilding trust with Albertans, but I think there are a couple of other steps that he needs to be taking, Mr. Speaker.

Here are a couple of them, things that the Premier needs to do to rebuild trust with Albertans. Well, I think for starters he could rebuild pride in the civil service. These are the people that work very hard to make us look good in the House. They work very hard to implement the policies that we're passing here. They work very hard on behalf of Albertans. They choose to go into the public service rather than going into the private sector, where the advantage would be gained by the company they work for, or perhaps they are the boss, and it's going into their own pocket. I'd like to see us back at a place where being a civil servant would be regarded as something that you're proud of, something that you would move towards as a younger person because there's a career in public service or at least a longer period of time than what we've been seeing.

The second thing is that I think the government could stop taking advantage of the not-for-profit organizations, the non-government organizations in this province because, boy, the government owes a lot to these agencies. So many of them have agreed to take contracts to provide services that the government used to provide but not on the same amount of money. The government only gives them the line amount for the money but not all the additional administration that goes around it. So you now have these groups out there in the community raising money to subsidize their delivery of a program that used to be a government program. All we hear is: let's get more volunteers. That's what we heard in the throne speech. Well, great. Let's get more volunteers doing stuff for free. Well, yeah, a lot of people like to do that, but the point of it is not to give the government free service. They do it for quite other reasons. I think if the Premier wants to be rebuilding trust, then he could be working to rebuild capacity and resilience with those communities.

I'd like to see this government quit playing games with the environment, monitoring, protecting the environment from greenhouse gases. Quit playing games. I mean, it's silly. It's embarrassing now, you know, to talk about a carbon levy that actually incents a change in activity. Right now it's just cheaper for those companies to pay, but it's not incenting any change at all. So what's the purpose of this? It's a money raiser, then? No. I think that has broken a lot of faith and a lot of trust with people. If he wants to rebuild trust with people, then let's look at some incentives to actually use that additional money generated by the carbon levy to incent people to move to solar and wind.

It'd be really nice if this government could rebuild trust with people. If they would stop killing our animals, that would be great. If we could manage to convince the government to leave the caribou alone instead of continually giving away licences that crowd into their space — we know it kills them, yet we keep doing this.

As the Premier said when he was bringing this bill forward, this is step one to rebuild trust with Albertans. Okay. Well, let me give you a couple of other ideas, then. Let's look at forest practices, where they're logging to the edge of waterways. That shouldn't happen. You could rebuild trust with a lot of us by stopping that. You could actually protect protected lands and not allow for additional licences to be granted for drilling and exploration.

The government could score a lot of points with people if they could manage to actually fund municipalities. I mean, hearing them talk yet again about: oh, we give every municipality MSI money. Yeah, well, the government never managed to achieve its first goal for how much money was supposed to be distributed through MSI funds. It didn't. They were supposed to come up to $1.7 billion. They haven't even made it that far yet, and we're in the second iteration of the MSI funding. They happily allow the municipalities to be shouldering the load in providing the services directly to people.

If the Premier wants to rebuild trust with people by doing something like Bill 1 and repealing the land assembly act, okay, that's one step, but there's a lot of other things that can be done. It'd be nice if we could see the government and the Premier quit disrespecting the Legislative Assembly, quit disrespecting the opposition by playing silly games. You know, other people see this, and they phone us and they write us and they say: "What's going on? What is the problem here?" And we have to say: "Well, you know, they're playing silly buggers because they think it's amusing. Tee hee. Isn't that funny." Well, it's juvenile, frankly, and it's not respectful of the Legislative Assembly. So if the Premier wants to rebuild trust with Albertans, I'd like to see what he's going to do to make this a better place to work and to have it be more respectful.

You know, allowing private members to have their own time to be able to put current issues on the floor, like is done in the federal government: now, there's a concept. Right now we get polled during a lottery process in the summer, and our bills generally would come up the following spring, almost a year later, so they're no longer current, they're not up to date all the time. But we even have a situation now where the government is trying to make sure, by fooling around with stuff, that the bill I'm bringing forward and the bill ahead of me aren't even going to see debate. I mean, really? Really? I'm no threat to anybody. Heck, no. But it sure seems like it for the amount of activity that's going on over there to try and make sure that my simple little bill doesn't come to the floor. I mean, really, Mr. Speaker, that's building trust with Albertans? I'm finding that hard to believe.

If the Premier is really interested in – actually, there are a number of things. They could restore the speaking times. They could quit doing these multistatute bills, where we've got 16 bills going through. Oh, well, with some co-operation we managed to break that into two, I think a seven and a nine or something. But just trying to get through those bills and get a handle around them, you know, who's got the time to do that, especially when the government is racing through things? Why would they need to get out of this Assembly so fast? I thought we were scheduled to be here until the 18th of December. I'm more than happy to be here until the 18th of December, but it looks like we're going to be out of here by the 4th, if not sooner, at the rate we're going here. So, you know, take a deep breath. Settle down. Now, why would it be that the government, maybe even the Official Opposition, needs to be out of here so quickly? Well, I have a couple of theories on that, Mr. Speaker.

5:30

Anyway, I think what's important is that the Premier has said that he wants to rebuild trust. He believes he's going to be able to do it, move a step forward by repealing the Land Assembly Project Area Act. When it's gone, we still have, as I started with, the acts that were there before. Really, if these acts are that bad, if the Expropriation Act is that terrible, why don't you work within the confines of the Expropriation Act?

There are some ferocious hand signals going on over there. Is he all right?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think somebody is trying to call somebody else out for a little chat. That's all. It's nothing to do with you. Apologies for the intrusion.

Ms Blakeman: With flags it would have been a really amazing semaphore demonstration.

Did he manage to get the person he was looking for?

Mr. Bilous: He did, yeah.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. There you go.

I'm encouraged that the Premier would want to take a step towards restoring trust with Albertans. I think that's an admirable thing to do. I think this is a good first step. Boy, I've finished my 15 minutes here, but I could use a lot more than 15 minutes to make suggestions on how this Premier and this government could restore trust with Albertans because they have done a lot to destroy it. And they're not bad people. These are not bad people. They all came here with an intent to do good things. Why, when you get them all in a room together, they manage to do stuff that is so bizarre I will never understand. Maybe it's the room – I don't know – the air they pump through it or something.

Anyway, I'm pleased to see that there is a commitment from the Premier.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing no one, I will recognize Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak to the third reading of Bill 1. I feel fortunate that I was able to speak to the second reading of this bill. But I think it is worth noting that it seems we're trying to move at a breakneck pace with legislation here, where, you know, several bills have moved from second reading, through committee, and into third within a 24-hour period. I would contend, again, that if we want to ensure there's adequate debate on these bills, we slow down the pace a little bit. I can appreciate that folks may be getting excited for the holiday season coming up. However, I think it is important, as representatives of the over 4 million people that live in this great province of ours, that we do take the appropriate and adequate time on each of these bills and recognize the trust that was given to us and the responsibility that we have as elected members.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that I have the opportunity to speak to Bill 1. You know, it should be noted right at the outset that I will be supporting this bill. I believe my caucus will be supporting this bill as well. And there are some positives, the fact that it's repealing, I believe, Bill 19. That's positive. However, as some of my other colleagues have pointed out, I dare say that this bill doesn't go far enough. If we truly want to act in the best interests of landowners, of the rights of Albertans, then we need to have a serious conversation about several other pieces of legislation.

I know my colleague from Edmonton-Calder was on the road travelling the province and meeting with thousands of Albertans in community halls, in town halls, in community centres, in agricomms and met with some very outraged Albertans that this government was proposing at the time I believe it was Bill 36, the Alberta

Land Stewardship Act, and Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act. You know, at that time as well there apparently were some folks that were instructed to attend some of these meetings in order to share some information as far as what was going on with the PC Party, and that, obviously, caused a considerable amount of outrage.

This bill, again, is repealing the Land Assembly Project Area Act. Now, you know, we'll just take a quick trip back in time here to when that bill, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, was introduced. My colleagues in the Alberta NDP argued against it right from day one. Arguments were made that, quite simply, it was heavy handed.

Part of the other issue here – and we'll be the first to acknowledge that – is that there are large amounts of land necessary for infrastructure projects that are going to serve the public good and are necessary for Albertans. But the challenge with the Land Assembly Project Area Act is that that bill put the government's own convenience ahead of property rights and the rights of Alberta landowners. That's something that we have an issue with. When we're talking about convenience, that shouldn't be the driving factor here, Mr. Speaker. It should be: what is in the best interests? Quite frankly, that section of the bill, you know, fell very short of actually being necessary for Albertans and for public infrastructure projects.

The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that it also allowed the government to limit development that was allowed on someone's land. Part of the issue with that, you know, is that there was no provision for a timeline on when the project that the land was being saved for would begin. Furthermore, there were no requirements for compensation for the prohibition of development on the land for the owner. You know, for a party that frequently claims that they are in favour of and are advocates of the rule of law and property ownership, it's pretty rich and somewhat ironic that they'd bring forward legislation that basically railroads property owners' rights and the rights of landowners, that they don't provide adequate timelines, that they don't provide compensation. For those reasons not only our caucus but, I believe, most of the opposition was quite opposed to the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

Furthermore, it is worth noting, Mr. Speaker – my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood reminded me because this was before my time in the House – that the Alberta NDP really led the charge against Bill 19 and, I would argue, against bills 36 and 50 as well. I remember, you know, attending rallies – there were many Albertans quite upset about this – and listening to my colleagues speak at these rallies and standing up for Albertans, for landowners.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, it was amended in 2011 but not adequately enough to address the concerns that we raised. You know, for those that were listening earlier, I spoke about the pattern that this PC government seems to have where they charge out with legislation, then hit the brakes and realize, "Oh, we actually haven't consulted with the very people who the legislation is affecting, and we've ignored and voted against most of the amendments the opposition has put forward," which are often quite reasonable. They'd vote them down, and then later on, whether it's months or years later, they'd come back and introduce amendments to an act that they earlier introduced that contain many of the amendments and recommendations that the opposition put forward.

You know, I don't know if it's because they have a really hard time playing with others. I don't know if maybe this goes back to some kind of childhood trauma or something, the fact that we have to continue to revisit legislation whereas, had this current government actually acted on their word – during elections we often hear grandiose promises about working with the opposition, and then we come into the House and see that actions speak louder than words and that that rarely happens.

Interestingly, in 2011 the Land Assembly Project Area Act was actually amended. They tried to make some changes. Some of the changes that they made didn't go far enough, in our opinion, but were based on some of the recommendations and amendments that we put forward years prior. Yet here we are now, in 2014, and they've realized, you know, they just couldn't fix the bill, so we need to now get rid of it. We've gone through this very interesting cycle over the last few years that could have been avoided. This is one of those moments where the opposition could quite easily say, "I told you so," but we won't do that.

Bill 1 is trying to remedy some of the problems that they created. Again, as I said, this doesn't quite go far enough. The concern that I have and that I share with my colleagues is that we have two other pieces of legislation, that are still on the books and exist, which desperately need to be repealed as well. I think I have the agreement of my colleagues from the Liberal caucus and the Wildrose caucus that those two bills should have been repealed as well.

Let's talk a little bit about Bill 50, and I'm sure that my colleague from Edmonton-Calder will be more than happy to share some of the stories and experiences that he had when he went around the province consulting and meeting with Albertans to get first-hand their ideas and feedback on this piece of legislation.

You know, we were disappointed that Bill 50 amended, back in 2009, the Electric Statutes Act. Now, I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona both spoke in 2009 on this bill. The challenge and the problem with it not being addressed today in Bill 1 is that, clearly, this PC government continues to prioritize the interests of industry over Alberta families and individual landowners. We clearly see that one hand helps the other, and unfortunately who pays the price for this? Well, it's Albertans throughout the province, individuals and families.

Bill 50, just as a reminder for those who weren't in the House back in 2009 – and there are quite a few of us – allowed the cabinet to define what's considered as essential transmission infrastructure. Now, I'm reluctant and nervous when we get very prescriptive bills that give sweeping powers to cabinet and to the government. You know, it places unnecessary authority in their own hands and takes it out of the hands of the public and takes away mechanisms that are put in place to ensure that there's adequate feedback and adequate representation and basically concentrates that in the hands of a few, a few who, I may say, as we've seen over the last couple of years, have made grandiose promises regarding many things, I would argue everything under the sun, yet have fallen quite short on fulfilling those very promises.

To jump back – I digress, Mr. Speaker – to what was considered essential transmission infrastructure, basically what this did was that it cut out the Alberta Utilities Commission, which, along with other organizations, developed a process, again, for project assessment decisions, right? That was crucial because they decided that decisions that were made were done in a fair and scientific manner, weren't done on a whim, weren't done because they were offering favours to insiders, to industry, to friends.

You know, again, we're talking about a process that really did reflect openness and transparency and ensured that projects had criteria or that the AUC used criteria in order to select and approve projects, which makes sense to me. Unfortunately, those processes now have been, because of Bill 50, bypassed, and the power to make a decision goes back to the hands of cabinet.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm not saying that the cabinet is evil. I mean, you know, I'm sure we could argue that there is a good person or a couple over there that wouldn't take advantage of the situation that they're in or the power that they have, but the concern is that there may be some that aren't going to act in the best interests of Albertans. As soon as you take away these processes, we're flirting with something that's very, very dangerous as far as ensuring that there is due process and that the public good is served first and foremost above individual interests or the interests of friends, funders, or anyone else who stands to benefit from it.

Now, when Bill 50 was introduced, we opposed it because it failed to protect consumers from the overbuilding of unnecessary transmission lines where the cost would be transferred onto Albertans. You know, that was one of the issues that . . .

Dr. Brown: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have a citation, hon. member, for the point of order?

Dr. Brown: The citation would be O'Brien and Bosc, page 788. The content of third reading should be confined to the final . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please. Our convention is to cite a citation based on our standing orders as to what is being breached by the hon. member, and you may quote Beauchesne or some other to back up your point. Did I hear you say 23(h) or (i) or (d)? Do you have some such citation? Is there such a provision that you want to reference, hon. member?

Dr. Brown: It's relevance.

The Deputy Speaker: Relevance. So, hon. member, you're asking that the member be relevant in his comments relative to the bill? Is that all you're asking, hon. member?

Dr. Brown: Yes. Exactly. The member is talking about a completely different bill. He's talking about electric transmission. He's talking about Bill 50. He is not talking about the bill that's before the House, which is Bill 1. Debate at the stage of third reading has to be confined to "the final form of the bill."

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. member has 11 seconds to go. On your behalf I would ask him to confine his remarks to the relevance of the bill. I would hope that that would suffice, hon. member?

Dr. Brown: That would be fine.

The Deputy Speaker: That would suffice.

Hon. member, would you proceed? You have 11 seconds to conclude your comments.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bilous: Wonderful. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the end I will support this bill. Clearly, it doesn't go far enough. I'd love to tell you more about it, but we'll have to have that discussion some other time.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time, in consideration of the time, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. O Holy Creator, as we conclude our work for this week in this Assembly, let us renew our energies as we return home in order to serve our constituents directly in our communities. Guide us there safely during this extraordinary snowfall today. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Minister of agriculture, you have some hall of famers to introduce.

Mr. Olson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's inductee into the 4-H Alberta Hall of Fame. Charlie Gould is a resident of Rosalind, and he was inspired to become involved in 4-H by his father, Stan, who was also inducted into the hall of fame, in 1977. For 35 years Charlie has served as a 4-H leader for his local beef club, encouraged youth to get involved in the 4-H program, and taught life skills to the next generation of Albertans. We thank Mr. Gould for his outstanding dedication to his community and for serving youth as a mentor.

He's joined here today by Janet Kerr, the 4-H specialist from the east-west central region, who also happens to be his cousin. They're seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us move on to school groups, starting with Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the brightest, sharpest, most intelligent 44 students from the Grace Martin elementary school in Edmonton-Mill Woods. Despite the weather their commitment to visit the Alberta Leg. brought them here. I would request that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let's move on to other important guests, starting with the Minister of Transportation, followed by the ND House leader.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of Alberta Transportation employees from our deputy minister's office and the communication branch. These bright young public servants help provide me and my office with information and the support needed to address a wide range of transportation issues across the province, communicate effectively with the public, and ultimately achieve the mandate given to me by the hon. Premier. What's more, for all but one of these individuals it's their first time in question period here today in the Alberta Legislature. I'd ask each of them to stand as I read their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Erin Gregg, Jamie Friesen, Melanie Nolan, Carrie Sancartier, Tina Stewart, and Lyndsay Karges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests from the Alberta Federation of Labour. My guests have been meeting with MLAs to lobby for affordable, accessible, high-quality public child care. I know it's some tough nuts to crack, but I'm sure that they convinced you all. I would like to ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Juanita O'Reilly, Darcy Thiessen, Cori Longo, Natasha Simons, Bruce Fafard, Siobhán Vipond. I also see Brad Lafortune there. You can stand up, too; don't be shy. If you can all give them a very warm Assembly welcome.

The Speaker: The Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, followed by the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Anne Lydia Sekandi and Robert Muhumuza. Anne is a private-sector partnership specialist at UNICEF Uganda. She has worked for UNICEF since March 2004. When asked what she thought of the weather today, she said that life is 20 per cent what happens and 80 per cent what you make of it. I hope the weather is better in New York. Anne is in Edmonton visiting Robert, and this is her first time visiting the Legislative Assembly. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise to receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had a wonderful meeting just now with the president of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters and also the executive director and former mayor Jan Reimer today, joined by members of the six on-reserve women's shelters from across the province. I learned a lot as a result of that meeting. I wanted to introduce, as well as Brenda Brochu and Jan, Janet Gladue from Bigstone, Darlene Lightning-Mattson from Sucker Creek, Delia Poucette from Eagle's Nest and Morley, and also Dennis Callihoo from Ermineskin, who joined them. Also, I wanted to recognize Sandra Ermineskin from Ermineskin, Doris Sweet Grass from Kainai, and Mary Lepine from Fort Chipewyan, who are unable to be here because of the weather. If they could please stand and be recognized by the Assembly through you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Just before I call on the Clerk to go to the next item of business, please note that it's so cold out that even our clock inside the building here is frozen, so don't be taking your cues off there, please.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us begin. Two minutes each, please.

Mental Health

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, we don't talk about mental health very much in our communities. It's not exactly taboo, but we just don't know how to talk about the issue. Mental health can be the proverbial elephant in the room. The Brentwood murders in March of this year were horrifying. People still tear up when they talk about the loss of these young people, but this horrible tragedy has one silver lining. In our constituency we now talk just a little bit more openly about mental health.

Early in 2015 our Calgary-Varsity constituency office is hosting a town hall to share the positives about what's happening with mental health in our community. We have a long way to go in this journey, but there is some heartening progress. We plan to invite the Alberta Children's hospital to share their research on brain health and to talk about how construction of the fourth wing of this hospital will help move mental health patients out of the basement. We plan to invite the University of Calgary to talk about the new initiative they launched this fall with community support to focus not only on the academic performance of students but on their overall well-being. We plan to invite the chamber of commerce to talk about how they're embedding mental health discussions in our workplace. We plan to invite researchers and experts on dementia and Alzheimer's to share what they're learning about how to strengthen brain health in our seniors, and of course we plan to invite our Minister of Health and his staff to share with us Alberta's plans to tackle these issues in the coming years.

Mental health affects all ages – children, teens, young people, adults, and seniors – and this government must continue to rise up and meet the challenges faced by my constituents and by all Albertans affected by mental health and by brain health. The issues and the solutions aren't the same, but progress is being made, and that, Mr. Speaker, is something to talk about.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Bill 202

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, a week ago I introduced a little bill called Bill 202, Safe and Inclusive Schools Statutes Amendment Act, 2014. Gee whiz. Well, that little pragmatic bill was, I hoped, going to help some sexual minority students to be able to ask their schools and have the school accommodate them in organizing a gay-straight alliance. I wanted to include the reference to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Education Act, and I wanted to take section 11.1 out of the Human Rights Act.

Well, yikes, Mr. Speaker. My goodness, what a fuss. What I have seen in the week that has passed is the government doing almost anything they can in order to stop Bill 202. There have been attempts to delay it by pushing it off timewise. Now we're going to have the government bring forward a bill – I wonder if it's written yet – that is going to purport to do the same thing except that it doesn't.

So I'm going to call this one as I see it if you'll allow me. I think that what we are seeing here is a group of people who are trying to impose their will on someone else's, yet that very will itself is enshrined with protection under both the Charter and the Human Rights Act. What I am not seeing is an answer to the question: how would a peer support group for sexual minorities in schools affect anything else? How does a peer support group in a school affect parental discretion or choice or home-schooling or anything else? How does the Charter get affected by that?

Thanks very much.

The Speaker: Thank you. I regret that your time is up.

Let's move on to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Century Farm and Ranch Awards

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Century farm and ranch award salutes those families who have continuously owned and actively operated the same land in Alberta for a minimum of 100 years. That's a minimum of 100 years. Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development manages the award. From a personal experience of dairy farming for many, many years I can certainly echo their words that farming and ranching consist of hard work and sacrifice combined with a healthy dose of energy and unrelenting faith.

The opportunity of new land combined with limitless spirit and vision are what brought our forefathers to Alberta. They homesteaded the land to build a family farm or ranch, the same land that many families continue to call home today. Courage and determination were what our parents and grandparents had, and they had plenty of it. Marked by the same spirit of steadfast determination, it is not surprising that second, third, and fourth generations continue to build this rich heritage of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, today I wish to recognize all Albertan recipients of the Alberta Century farm and ranch award, in particular the two dozen families alone from my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley who received the Alberta Century farm and ranch award this year. Agriculture is a heritage to be proud of and is reflected by the personal sacrifices, perseverance, and commitment to a family way of life. It is a legacy that can be passed on to Alberta's children for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

4-H Hall of Fame Inductee

Ms Fenske: Thank you. Today I rise to recognize National 4-H Month and this year's inductee into the 4-H Hall of Fame, Charlie Gould from Rosalind, seated in your gallery. Mr. Speaker, 4-H Month is an opportunity to recognize the important contribution the 4-H program makes in our communities as Alberta's largest youth organization, with more than 250,000 alumni, two of which are my very own children, who are alumni of the light horse club program.

Established in Alberta in 1917, 4-H strengthens our communities' connection to agriculture and passes important life skills on to our youth. It not only teaches its members agriculture-related skills; it also focuses on leadership, public speaking, and has evolved to include everything from beef and horses to computers and performing arts. Graduates of the program learn the importance of being active and engaged community members and leaders.

It's a proud heritage, Mr. Speaker, and Charlie Gould is further proof of that. He became involved in the 4-H program as a young child under the guidance of his father, Stan, who was inducted into the hall of fame in 1977. For 35 years Charlie has been a leader in the 4-H club, hosting workshops on his farm, promoting the program, and representing it on district and regional levels. While guiding the next generations in the ways of leadership and agriculture, he has also found time to volunteer with the ag society, various local fundraisers, and St. Elizabeth church. In fact, I think it's safe to say that if you had a cause you needed help fighting or an event you needed help setting up for or a church property that you needed help maintaining, Charlie Gould would be the first in line to lend you a hand. Our 4-H program would not be possible without the selfless dedication of a group of very passionate volunteers, and Charlie Gould stands as a testament to that as well as an example of how generations of Albertans have been a part of the 4-H program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Home Renovation Contractors

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Alberta homeowners were put on notice to ensure that they do their homework before prepaying any contractors for home remodelling or renovations. Over the course of several years and from over 20 homeowners one home renovating firm collected well over $3 million in advance payments for projects which were either unfinished or never started. To everyone's dismay, the owner has now declared bankruptcy, with $5.8 million in liabilities and only $1.4 million in assets. Now these Albertans are left with the financial burden of paying for something that was never even started.

Mr. Speaker, this problem is not new and is a problem this Legislature needs to address. Currently contractors undertaking remodelling projects are required to maintain a security fund that can be applied to refunds for cancelled or unfinished work. However, the amount of funds required is not specified in either legislation or regulation, leaving the amount to the discretion of Service Alberta officials.

Furthermore, there is a concern that some contractors are taking advantage of these homeowners by simply collecting the cash, declaring bankruptcy, and opening a new company under a new name. This is an area where this Assembly needs to take the necessary steps to protect Albertans. As reported in the Calgary Herald, Service Alberta typically sets bonds in the $25,000 to $75,000 range, which is far too low for large-scale projects with estimated costs at well over $100,000. In a letter sent to my office, a young family chronicles their experience dealing with the bankruptcy of their contractor and how they paid $300,000 as a deposit to the company, who only had a bond set at $25,000.

While an important balance must be struck between protecting homeowners and creating onerous regulations for business, it is clear that something needs to be done.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Rural Seniors' Lodges

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think my fellow members would agree that Alberta is the best place to live, work, raise a family, and retire. We owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to the individuals whose contributions throughout the years have helped make our province the incredible place it is today. Of course, I'm referring to Alberta's seniors.

Our Premier recognizes the contributions and the ongoing needs of our seniors and has created a new Seniors ministry to address their specific issues. Currently there are almost half a million seniors living in Alberta, and that number is expected to double by 2030, meaning that 1 in 5 Albertans will be a senior.

The growth of our seniors population means we will need more places for seniors to live and age with dignity, close to their families and friends. That's why my constituents were so pleased to hear our Premier commit $160 million over four years to expand, upgrade, and replace seniors' lodges throughout rural Alberta. Nearly 70 per cent of all seniors' lodges in Alberta are outside of large cities. In rural regions distances are greater, and services may be more limited, often leaving seniors with no choice but to move when a space opens up somewhere else. They can end up lonely and isolated in a new environment, and that's not acceptable or healthy. Enabling older Albertans to stay in familiar surroundings is the key to keeping them engaged, happy, and healthy as they age. This investment in rural seniors' lodges will help provide our seniors with safe and affordable accommodation options close to the communities that they helped build.

This is just one of the many recent commitments our government has made to improve the lives of seniors across Alberta. The new Seniors ministry has been in operation for 73 days, and already our government has shown Alberta's seniors that they are a priority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is exactly 1:50 p.m., time for Oral Question Period. Please, when we get to question 6, restrict your preambles so that more time will be allowed for more members to ask more questions.

Let us begin with the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil and Gas Revenues

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, OPEC met in Vienna today, and it wasn't a good meeting for Alberta. West Texas intermediate is around $69 and may fall further. The hole in next year's budget will be billions deep if this continues, and all indications are that it will. The fact is that based on this government's spending, they would need $110 oil to actually balance the budget. They will either have to get a grip on wasteful spending, or we are headed very, very deep into debt. How far into debt is this Premier willing to go?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that all Albertans are concerned about the OPEC meeting, and based on what transpired today, OPEC apparently will continue to produce in excess of 30 million barrels of oil per day, putting us into a low-price environment. This should be a cause of concern for all Albertans. It's certainly a cause of concern for the government. However, it is not time to panic. I would make two points. One is that this government will continue to be prudent in the administration of the finances of this province, and secondly, Albertans will be tough and resilient, and we will get through this.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government is trying to convince Albertans that this is not business as usual, but other than for a brief period in 2008 and the last few years oil has always been around where it is today or lower. In other words, business as usual is exactly where we're at today. It was the price spikes that were the aberrations. A responsible government would have planned for surpluses during the boom so that we wouldn't be faced with what we're looking at today. Instead, this government took us deeper into debt when revenues were never higher. What is the Premier going to do now?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I have been the Premier of this province at this point for less than three months. I can assure yourself and Albertans of one thing, and that is that in the low-price environment which we are in, we will be disciplined, we will be prudent, and we will be cautious. We are focused on balancing the budget in the fiscal year which we are currently in. I've made it very clear to Albertans that this is not business as usual. We'll press on. We will deal with this. This province is tough and resilient. We have seen low price cycles before, and we will get through this.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, he certainly knew the record of the party he was running for when he chose to run for leader.

Everyone who has been in Alberta for a while remembers the bumper sticker: please, God, give us another oil boom; I promise not to fritter it all away next time. This government just refuses to learn. For them every boom is an opportunity to fritter away more money. Alberta keeps going through ups and downs of energy prices, and they never get it right. What is the Premier going to do now that energy revenues seem to be returning to their normal levels?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, energy prices are certainly not at their normal levels. This is a low point in the price cycle. We will deal with that. This province is in a strong fiscal position. At this point we are in a strong position to weather this, but weather this we must. It's going to take the support of all Albertans to do so. I hope that we will have the support of the opposition. We have the lowest tax rates in Canada. We have a competitive advantage in this province, both a fiscal advantage and a tax advantage. We will aspire to maintain that, and we ask the opposition to support us.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. Official Opposition leader.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have asked this government for a real plan to actually build 24-hour long-term care nursing beds. These are not the same as continuing care beds. Some patients need round-the-clock care. If they don't get it, terrible things can happen like festering wounds that lead to deadly infections. Today I'm tabling a picture of a dementia patient in continuing care in Fort McMurray whose daughter found her with a horrible fungus growing on her hand, smelling of urine, and left in feces. Isn't anyone over there distressed by this?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, that issue happened in a particular place in the province of Alberta. They were on that issue immediately. They found out about it on Friday night. Saturday morning Alberta Health Services were on top of that issue. They worked very diligently. They worked with the people to ensure that the individual was taken care of. It's a very, very difficult situation. It's a real travesty. We don't like it to happen, but in a system sometimes things go awry. We apologize for it. At the same time, Alberta Health Services was on top of it, and they did everything they possibly could.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it never should have happened in the first place.

Some things have to be priorities. Dr. Paul Parks says that the government wastes $400 million a year by having long-term care patients in acute-care beds in hospitals. If we build the right beds and we staff them right, we can look after our seniors better and save money. Alberta is the richest jurisdiction in the richest country in the world. Surely, we can run a system where vulnerable seniors do not have to suffer horrific wounds while in care. When will the government do something about this?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, a few months ago this government under this leader made decisions to build 300 long-term care beds in conjunction with 1,200 continuing care beds. We also made arrangements to move 750 people from acute-care beds into these long-term care beds, of which 464 will be moved over the next six to nine months. We are taking every step possible to ensure that access to the acute-care beds is made available by operating more long-term care beds. This government is acting.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we know it's not going to be enough. This government has money for phantom jobs for failed executives and fired political staffers. It has money for sky palaces. It has money for communications consultants and executive coaches. It has money for severances and for fake airplane passengers. We have shown the government that they can improve care for our seniors and save money. Why can't this government understand that looking after our vulnerable seniors is their priority?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, looking after seniors is everyone's priority. No one in this country or in this province cares more about seniors than this government and, I'm sure, everybody on that side of the table. All of us care deeply about making sure our seniors have the best care possible. This government is committed to that. We're building long-term care beds, continuing care beds, assisted and supportive living beds. We are committed to doing all we can to ensure that our seniors are properly cared for. That is a vitally important part of my ministry, the Seniors ministry, and this Premier's vision for this province.

The Speaker: Third and final main question. The Official Opposition leader.

Feeder Association Loan Guarantee Program

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, several Wildrose caucus members have been asking the government about the feeder association loan guarantee program, and the answers have not been good. This program has a long history, and it's been an overwhelming success. It has helped our beef industry and, in so doing, has been good for ranchers, consumers, and the Alberta economy. Recent government changes have resulted in only half the number of feeders who used to get loans actually getting them. Will the minister do the right thing and double the guarantee to the feeder association loan guarantee program?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, we've dealt with this question several times, and I'll repeat the answer again. We are at a time of all-time highs in the cattle industry. It's a very vibrant and buoyant industry right now. People have more equity than they had before. I'd ask the member to remember that the origins of this industry were during the Depression, when people had no money to buy cattle, and we have people who, I think, do have the ability to borrow. This isn't the only program through which you can borrow money, and I'd also invite the banks to be a little bit more flexible in their lending as well.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, people are still recovering from the BSE crisis. This has been one good year, Minister.

I ask this question because major employers in southern Alberta like JBS in Brooks and Cargill in my riding are starting to be concerned about the long-term availability of cattle. Cattle exports to the U.S., particularly calf exports, are at an all-time high. The feeder association loan guarantee program has a very low default rate. Doubling the guarantee will have next to no effect on provincial coffers, but hurting the beef industry definitely will. Why won't the minister just double the guarantee?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, as I've mentioned before also, we are fiscal conservatives over here on this side. I'd like the hon. member to understand that a guarantee means legal liability, and we are just simply asking the industry at a time of very buoyant prices to also take some responsibility. I have certainly been asked by industry members to double up on the guarantee. There are more ways of doing it than just doubling up on the guarantee, and we are looking at innovative ways to assist, but the industry needs to take responsibility, too.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Seriously, Mr. Speaker? They've given a $26 billion loan guarantee to the North West upgrader but won't help every-day, regular farmers?

The default rate on this guarantee is tiny. In 77 years there have been only 17 defaults on this program, around one one-hundredth of a percentage of the amount guaranteed. If our beef plants shut down because of a lack of cattle, the impact will be huge. Increasing the guarantee promotes raising and feeding more cattle in Alberta. If something isn't done, there is a risk that consumers will lose, packing plants will lose, their employees will lose, and ranchers will lose. Why won't this minister do the right thing?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that this is coming up now. We spent a year – we had a committee that reviewed the whole program with Feeder Associations. We came up with some things to create more flexibility such as doubling up on individual loan amounts, creating other types of flexibility. This wasn't one of the issues that was being specifically asked for at the time. What has happened in recent months has been that we've got cattle prices that are 65 percent, even 75 per cent higher than they were a year ago. It could be a short-term thing. I'm also having people in the industry telling me that we should not be increasing.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. GSAs save kids' lives, plain and simple. They save kids' lives in the public school system, and they would save kids' lives in the Catholic school system, and they would save kids' lives in the private system. So let me ask the Premier: how does accommodating gay-straight alliances requested by students for schools contravene anyone else's rights and freedoms?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, there's no room for intolerance in our education system, and this government has been very clear. This is a commonly held value, evidently. We wish to promote safe, respectful learning environments for our children. The rights in question involve the rights of our children not to be discriminated against based on their sexual orientation, the rights of parents to have a say in the education of their children, and the rights of school boards, who are elected to administer these education systems. We will balance those rights in a way that Albertans expect.

Ms Blakeman: Couldn't seem to answer that.

Well, next question to the Premier: will the Premier be allowing a free vote for his government bill in the same way that he allowed it for Bill 202?

The Speaker: This calls for some opinion, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Prentice: Yes.

Ms Blakeman: That was easy. All righty.

Well, back to the same Premier, or the Premier; sorry. Given that section 11.1 is a thinly disguised approval to discriminate against people based on sexual orientation or gender identity, why is this government planning to reinforce this by leaving it as is after it moves it to the Education Act?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that she need only deal with this Premier moving forward. There is no room for intolerance in our education system. We are agreed on that. We need to deal with the rights of parents, the rights of our children, and the constitutionally embedded rights of school boards in this province. That's precisely what we will do. This involves a balancing of rights. These are complex issues that matter greatly in terms of the protection and the education of our children, and we will strike the right balance.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, unending amounts of research conclude that gay-straight alliances provide much needed support to the lives of LGBTQ kids and their friends when they are bullied. You've just announced that school boards will be allowed to say no to them. To the Premier: when the school board says no to a group of kids, would you recommend that they (a) just suck it up, (b) leave the school, or (c) perhaps just turn the other cheek?

Mr. Prentice: As I have said, we support a tolerant, safe environment for children. We support an environment in which children are able to come forward and pursue diversity clubs and the protection of sexual orientation differences within the school environment. There are rights that need to be balanced in terms of the education system, in terms of parental rights. These are complex questions that need to have a balance, and that's precisely where this government stands. We will not pit Albertans against each other.

Ms Notley: It's too late for that, Mr. Speaker. He's already done it, and he's made sure that it's going to happen for a long time to come.

With this law, that allows school boards to prohibit GSAs, this Premier has shown himself to be as socially conservative as any lake-of-fire candidate. Indeed, it's as though he's consciously trying to move Alberta back in time. [interjections] I'm sorry. You may not like this, but this is real.

To the Premier: why have you caved in to intolerance and bigotry and failed to support GLBTQ students, who are trying to protect only themselves and their friends from bullying?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, you don't raise your own reputation by trying to lower others'. I have fought my entire life in this province to protect religious freedoms – my record is clear – to advance parental rights for children in the education system, and to stand up in defence of the rights of gay and lesbian people in this country.

Ms Notley: Well, the Premier continuously tries to suggest this is about balancing rights. I will admit that I'm not intimately familiar with the arguments of those social conservatives who are offended by GSAs, so perhaps the Premier can explain to me now: how does the existence of a voluntary extracurricular GSA infringe on the rights of anyone else?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I would again encourage the hon. member to consider our Constitution, to consider the position of separate school boards under our Constitution. I would encourage her to consider the Alberta Bill of Rights. I would encourage her to consider the Charter relative to the right not to be discriminated against based on sexual orientation, and I would invite her to consider and to look across the country at parental rights, which involve the rights of parents to be involved in making decisions relative to the education of their children. These are rights that are the cornerstone of who we are as Albertans. There are strongly held views. They need to be balanced.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Long-term Care Beds

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The difference between continuing care and long-term care nursing beds is significant. Before my mum passed away, she was in continuing care, and her health eventually deteriorated. Her doctor made it very clear to us that she needed to go to a long-term care nursing bed, or she would have to stay in a hospital bed. Minister, there were no long-term care beds available. My mum was what you have referred to as a bed blocker. How many long-term care nursing beds do we have now, and how many long-term care nursing beds will we have next year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I inadvertently used that term once, and I apologize for it. It was an improper term, and it shouldn't be used here as well.

This Premier has made every effort to create as many long-term beds as possible. We have committed to delivering 750 beds immediately. It's going to take us a bit of time – 446 of those beds will be ready within the next six to nine months; the other ones will have to be built – but we are searching through the system to see if we can find more. We're working with every supplier in the province to try to find ways to use the facilities they might have to increase the opportunity for long-term care beds. We're committed to it.

Mrs. Forsyth: So, Minister, let's talk about your suppliers, then. Given that seniors' care providers were completely caught off guard by your suggestion that they would suddenly turn their existing supportive living care beds into long-term care beds – the spokesman from AgeCare said that they actually haven't had any requests from AHS to do this – where are the beds going to come from?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we work through Alberta Health Services, and they've committed to making sure that the program will be completed. There's a very clear list. It's made public. We will have a certain number of beds ready in three months, in six months, in nine months, and then we'll have to build some. I don't know what the hon. member is speaking about, but my understanding is that we're moving ahead on schedule. It will be difficult, but we're committed to doing it.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, I'll provide you with that information.

Minister, not one of your new continuing care beds would have helped my mum or helped hundreds of other patients facing the exact same problem across this province. Given that last year alone you closed 200 long-term care beds and that, in the most recent stats we have, you have 571 seniors waiting for long-term care nursing beds, not continuing care, your numbers don't add up. You closed 200 this year. You indicated earlier that you were adding 300. Where are you going to put the rest of the seniors?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, let's not forget that the Minister of Seniors has also announced an additional 1,200 beds on top of the 300 they've allocated for long-term care beds. In his group there will also be long-term care beds. My allocation is the extra 300. We realize that there are other people who are going to need long-term care support on the continuum, so we will continue to work with the Minister of Seniors to develop programs so that we can have the beds needed. This is not going to be an easy process. We have also done everything we possibly can to ensure that beds are moved ahead as quick as possible, in co-operation with the Minister of Seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Oil and Gas Prices

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking on behalf of the many industries and residents in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, many of whom depend on the petrochemical industry. Volatility in oil prices, though, impacts all Albertans. To the Minister of Energy: what action will you be taking to respond to this development in crude?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I would ask her to note that as exporters we are price-takers, not price-makers. There are certain things that we can't control in the world markets. There are things, however, that we can control, and we're certainly doing that. First, of course, is access to world markets. It's imperative that we get access to world markets so that we get world prices for our products. In addition to that, we're continuing on our development of upgrading and refining capacity in the province. Today we produce about 2.1 million barrels of bitumen. Over half of that is upgraded, and just under half of that is further refined in our province. We're going to continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. We applaud value-added.

Given that yesterday's price was $75 for oil, some suggest that today we are in a crisis situation. Are you confident, Minister of Finance, that your predictions for the other sectors are solid?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, again, the prices are low today because of the decisions by OPEC, but as I've said before in this House and as I've said publicly, we budget our oil on a yearly basis. We do have some concerns that it's low right now and with the fact that OPEC is not going to cut the production. But we're going to be very fiscally prudent in our spending for the rest of this year to make sure that we balance the budget. We will be sitting down with our ministers in cabinet, as I said yesterday in the House, to look at next year's budget.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: given the volatility of oil prices over the past year and their continuing change in pricing, how can the minister be confident that we are accurately forecasting our oil prices, philosophically speaking?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I'm not a very philosophical person, but I will give you some comments based on the fact that we consult with a number of experts, like economists, we talk to banks, we talk to the energy industry. Their insights help us actually adjust our forecast on a quarterly basis as we look at changing trends throughout the year. Next week I'll be meeting with the leading chief economists across the country to get their thoughts. As a government we have always been very conservative in our forecasting. We've never taken the high that the experts have told us to take; we've never taken the low. So as this year shows, we've had a very good first six months, and we're going to have a very good last six months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Electricity Cogeneration

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cogeneration electricity is another example of innovation being done by industry in the oil sands. It's cleaner, friendlier for the environment, and it's growing. Considering that we've seen this government strip the rights of landowners and skip the independent approval process to build billions of dollars in transmission lines, the lack of partnerships with our industry on this is puzzling. Can the minister explain what is being done to ensure that clean, cheap, and reliable energy can be better accessed by the rest of the province?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. First of all, to point out that the premise of his question is entirely wrong, we've stripped no one of their landowner rights. Second of all, the thing that we need to do to ensure that cogeneration is available to the whole province is to build transmission.

Mr. Hale: It's to build transmission in Fort McMurray, not in southeast Alberta.

Given that the federal phase-out of coal will begin in 2020 and leave a sizable gap in our generation capacity and given that according to AESO's own projections cogeneration electricity produced in the oil sands will be providing more electricity to the grid, why did this government plow through building unnecessary lines from coal plants and ignore the infrastructure needed to bring more power onto the grid from Fort McMurray?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the hon. member's constituents will be concerned to learn that he doesn't think that they need electricity, but we think they do. That's why we built a transmission grid across this province.

In early 2015 the production of electricity by natural gas, including cogeneration, will exceed that of coal in our province.

The backbone of this province, its transmission system, is ready to receive it.

Mr. Hale: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the government did rescind the part of Bill 50 that gave them the opportunity to tell where the lines are needed because they didn't have the authority to do that and given that the Bill 50 lines have been described as the Cadillac of transmission lines and given that the coal phase-out is only five short years away and no discernible progress has been made on the Fort McMurray lines, will the minister explain what steps his department is taking to ensure that cogen operators in Fort McMurray have access to the grid?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're building a transmission system by a competitive process. The bids are in. The successful proponent will be announced shortly. That's something that I thought they wanted, too. Apparently not. We're building the backbone. It will be ready.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

School Infrastructure Decision-making

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents in Calgary-Varsity support critical infrastructure spending, but they also care about fiscal prudence. Decisions are currently being made in my community about the construction of education facilities, and people are worried that decisions are being made in silos. To the Minister of Education. The reconstruction of Christine Meikle school is supported by our community, yet constituents are noticing that the facilities for medically fragile students are also needed by other local facilities. How can you ensure that these decisions about infrastructure are made with a local community lens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Albertans have told us to trust local school jurisdictions to make decisions that are in the best interests of children in their particular areas. It's the local municipality and school boards that decide where schools are going to be built and decide the makeup of the program that's going to go to the school. We certainly encourage school jurisdictions to communicate and consult with their communities when they're making those location decisions. I recently was in contact with the Calgary board of education, and they've indicated to me that they want to improve their consultation process with communities as they make these school location decisions.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: That's good news, Mr. Minister.

How will you support a community-focused approach and efficiencies to the modernization or the reconstruction of the Foundations for the Future charter school presently being planned in the Montgomery community?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite right in saying that planning for the Foundations for the Future modernization project is currently under way. As I indicated previously, we support the local school jurisdiction, which is responsible for determining the programming and the makeup of the school. We encourage them to establish partnerships with the local community associations, and we monitor to see whether that, indeed, does happen.

2:20

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Now to the mighty Minister of Infrastructure. What other policy changes, incentives, penalties, carrots and sticks, can be adopted within your ministry to discourage silo thinking in decisions about infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is really an issue that doesn't take might as much as it takes co-operation. We have 78 schools in the planning process across the province right now. Now is the time to get school boards, local municipalities, and nonprofits around the table to make decisions very quickly. I see no reason why gyms in our schools, libraries in our schools cannot be constructed in a way that they can provide very valuable community resources outside of school hours. Now's the time to have those conversations, to move swiftly to ensure that the infrastructure that we build serves our communities around the clock.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Conservative claims that they are keeping up the funding of core programs like our K through 12 education system are a complete and utter fallacy, and let me point out how. Forty-five thousand kids have started school in the last four years, yet if we were truly concerned about education funding, with the growth of student population we would have seen at least 2,500 more teachers. To the minister: how do you expect to maximize the potential of Alberta kids when you're shortchanging them on having teachers in classrooms?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member opposite for his question. If there's anything that we're concerned about, Mr. Speaker, as government and my ministry, it's ensuring that we provide quality education for all children in our schools. We have injected considerable increases in funding in recent years, overall 2 per cent last year, and we will continue to ensure that we are providing the teacher resources in the classrooms that are needed to make sure that all children have a quality education.

Mr. Hehr: Well, that's simply not true, Mr. Speaker. The grants that they used to give to school boards – statistics don't lie – show how this government has abandoned children. You can look at the student-teacher ratio. From five short years ago the average class size in our kindergarten through grade 3 classes has shot up now by 10 per cent. High schools are reporting classes with over 40 students. Alberta parents have stated time and time again that they want smaller class sizes. If we're not shortchanging education funding, why do the numbers continue to get worse?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, the notion that we are abandoning children is nonsensical. The truth is that we are ensuring that all of our children in all of our schools are adequately supported and that our teachers have the resources that they need to teach our children in a fashion that's going to prepare them for the 21st century. School boards receive a significant sum of money from the provincial purse, and we leave it up to the local jurisdiction to determine what their priorities are as to where they're going to allocate their funds. We know that they allocate properly for the needs of their children.

Mr. Hehr: Just before the by-election the government, in a frenzy to make it look like they were going to build schools, announced eight starter schools for both Calgary and Edmonton public, yet we learned today that the school boards do not want starter schools. Instead, they prefer complete schools to be built when the province is able to provide the funds. Did the minister bother consulting with any of these duly elected school boards prior to the announcement of these starter schools, which, by the way, they don't want?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, if school jurisdictions want to change a proposal for a particular type of school, whether it's a starter school or a fully built-out school, that's their prerogative, and we certainly would receive proposals from them. If that's what they wished to do, we would evaluate them appropriately and then make a determination based on their recommendation to us and our review of the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Royal Alexandra Hospital Acute-care Tower

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the NDP released documents to show that PC neglect of the Royal Alexandra acute-care tower means that now a completely new structure is required in order to reduce infection rates. Cross-contamination risks are high because too many patients are in each room. The ventilation system cannot meet the bare minimum infection-control standards. To the Minister of Health: why has your government ignored these serious hazards, that threaten the health of patients, for so long, and what are you going to do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point out that just recently, in 2010, the government of Alberta invested over $170 million to build the new Lois Hole hospital for women, which is really one of the finest facilities in the country. Recently they had 94,000 ambulatory patients come in and, what's quite wonderful, 6,500 births last year.

To the hon. member's question, the Royal Alexandra hospital is old. The tower is old, and it does need some work, but let's give credit to the people that work there. Their infection rates are better than anywhere else in this country. Alberta is one of the best in this country, and they're right there with it.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, given that the workers have to compensate for poor planning over a long period of time, they do a great job because this government did a very poor job in building the hospital and in maintaining the hospital as well. To the Minister of Health again. Planning implies forward thinking. How can you possibly plan for the future when you've neglected everything well past the expiry date of this hospital?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the Royal Alexandra tower is a very, very precious part of the Royal Alexandra hospital, which is key to health care in the centre of the city of Edmonton. This government is putting together a plan, to come out some time in the middle of next year, to look at what we need to do with the tower at the Royal Alexandra hospital. We're committed to fixing it, and we will do all we can. You know, this hospital means a great deal to the people in our city. We have to maintain it. We are maintaining it. There's incredible care given by the men and women who deliver it at that hospital.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that these documents released today also review that this government is considering building a Royal Alex tower through a P3 model – Auditors General in both Ontario and Quebec have panned the idea of P3s for hospitals, and this summer your government had to abandon P3 models for schools that did not get built. To the Minister of Health: would you commit today that your government will reject the P3 model for the Royal Alex tower, and if not, will you explain why you're going to put both public money and public health at risk when our health care system is already in crisis?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, we have one of the most aggressive capital builds in North America taking place here in Alberta. We will look for the most cost-effective, solutions-oriented ways to build our capital infrastructure, whether that be schools, seniors' homes, or hospitals, because what Albertans want is a focus on the services they need, and that's what we'll deliver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Environmental Monitoring

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Responsible monitoring of oil sands development is critical to keeping our economy strong, protecting our environment, and securing pipeline deals, but the Auditor General's October report said that this government's monitoring information is 15 months old and lacking clarity, this at the very moment that critical pipeline projects hang in the balance. To the Premier. The world is watching. We need to do better. Why is this happening?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, we clearly must place a priority on successful monitoring and on having world-leading standards. The AEMERA process is a good process resulting from collaboration between this provincial government and the federal government. To be fair, the report that the hon. member refers to was referring to the transitional period when AEMERA was set up. AEMERA is in good hands. Dr. Lorne Taylor and Dr. Greg Taylor are responsible for AEMERA. They're doing an excellent job of getting it up and running and achieving the standards that are expected by Albertans.

The Speaker: Supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has shown no accountability toward monitoring sustainable resource development and the Auditor General's report proves that, again to the Premier: with oil prices free-falling, inefficiencies and delays mounting, First Nations groups walking away, and critical pipeline projects hanging in the balance, what is your plan to fix your broken monitoring system and deliver responsible resource management for future generations?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a dark picture indeed, which I don't subscribe to. Certainly, we are in a low-price environment; we've spoken about that earlier in question period. But in terms of environmental monitoring, clearly this government and, I hope, everyone in the House aspires to have a world-class system of monitoring. That's a national objective, and it's a provincial objective. What the Auditor General's report shows more than anything else is that we are in transition in terms of arriving at that process and achieving a monitoring system which we can all be proud of.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General highlighted ineffective project management, not making timelines, and not meeting their objectives. How can this Premier and this minister expect to build the energy infrastructure when clearly there's no plan to do what's needed?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, clearly, there is a plan. As I say, the Auditor General's report – I acknowledge his work. His work is important. His work was done at a time when we were in transition from the old monitoring regime to the new. The report says quite clearly, if you read it, that he's talking about the transitional period and that we need to make progress. There are good hands in charge of the monitoring process. They have the right objectives. We'll get this done, and we'll do it in a way that Albertans can be proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Seniors' Housing in Fort McMurray

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, last Friday was a mighty great day in Fort McMurray. After many years of struggling to acquire the land that's known as Willow Square, the government finally announced that this land transfer is complete. Now, as fantastic as that news is, we still have many of my constituents that are worried about the timelines on this development. To the Minister of Seniors: what are the plans for this site, and what are the timelines of the transfer?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it was a great day. A lot of people worked very hard on this, including the two MLAs from Fort McMurray, the great mayor they have up there, and many seniors. For technical and logistical reasons it took some time. But thanks to the leadership of this Premier and the Prime Minister, once they had their first meeting, it was one of the first issues they discussed. I'm very happy to say that the government has acquired a hundred per cent of the land from the federal government, and we will be transferring $3 million as well as a $17 million site as per the request of the municipality. I'm advised that that transfer is going to the Wood Buffalo housing authority, and I'm advised that the final details of that transfer will be finalized in the next two to three weeks. So it's good news.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the seniors in my constituency have expressed a need for seniors' housing, what assurances can you give them that there will be provisions made for seniors' accommodations at Willow Square?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. My understanding is that there are some concerns in the community. But I want to assure seniors and folks in Fort McMurray that there are expectations and, indeed, conditions to this grant. Firstly, Wood Buffalo housing will engage in extensive consultation with community stakeholders, including the Fort McMurray Seniors Advisory Council, to ensure that those diverse needs of the community are met. Secondly, the transfer and this grant have been with the understanding and the expectation that the site will be used substantively for seniors and affordable housing. This government wants to enable and empower the local community to build the vision that they have created, and these are the tools they needed to do it. This is what the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Wood Buffalo has been waiting a very long time for a real continuing care facility, and we have one planned at Parsons Creek. When will we see a shovel in the ground?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The tender will be hitting the streets in January, and my expectation is that construction will be starting next construction season. This is a very important project, a hundred beds, very significant for the community. The tender will be hitting the streets within, as I said, about a month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-West.

X-ray Services in Vilna and Saddle Lake

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether it's for a broken bone or for preventative medicine, many of us need an X-ray at one time or another. The residents of Vilna and Saddle Lake are no different, but due to a decision by AHS they must now travel upwards of an hour each way on highway 28, the road the Premier has called the worst in the entire province, to receive the same services that were once available right at home. It's unacceptable. Does the new minister agree with the decision made by AHS?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, they're constantly arguing whether or not AHS spends too much money or they're spending it not in the right ways. AHS has the ability to make decisions about what projects they support and don't support, what equipment they keep or don't keep in order to supply services to communities. I think in this particular instance the machine was old and was decommissioned. We'll look now at what we can do to replace it to help the community. But they took the steps in order to deal with what it was.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He brings up money. Given that the local firefighters' association has expressed their willingness to raise money to ensure their friends and neighbours receive the health care they need and given that AHS has told them in no uncertain terms they won't allow the local community leaders to raise the money, can the minister explain why AHS believes the residents of Vilna shouldn't receive the health care they need?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we very, very much appreciate the firefighters or any philanthropic organization making efforts to raise money to help with the health care system. It's done throughout the province. But that's the capital side; there's an operating side. So whenever we do something, we have to realize the machine must operate, there must be people to operate it, and that costs money and has to have a budget. In order to do that, we need to make sure that that money is available, and we'd be glad to look into that.

Mr. Saskiw: You should just let them know the amount.

Given that this is a critical need for the residents of Vilna and Saddle Lake and given that the community is willing to raise money for this vital piece of health care infrastructure, will the minister commit today, right now, to allowing the residents of Vilna to get their X-ray machine back?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we will not commit to anything today. We believe that Alberta Health Services investigated what was needed. What we will commit to is to look into what happened and let this House know how we might be able to be of help to that community. We are looking at our rural health strategy. Rural Alberta is vitally important to this government, and we'll continue to work with them. We'll be glad to look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Homelessness

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week seven major municipalities across Alberta released preliminary data from a co-ordinated homeless point-in-time count. The cities conducted counts in October to find out that there are over 6,600 Albertans without a place to call home. To the Minister of Human Services. The province's 10-year plan to end homelessness is in its sixth year, and there are still thousands of Albertans without a home. Is this plan working, or has it failed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most recent homeless count, as I said the other day, has shown a decrease of 16 per cent province-wide since the launch of our plan. We know the population has grown by 100,000 people a year, but in Edmonton homelessness is 27 per cent lower; Lethbridge, 45 per cent; Wood Buffalo, 49 per cent. We've also invested up to $83 million this year alone. Nearly 10,000 people have been provided housing and support since the launch of this plan. While these results are impressive, we know we have more work to do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The point-in-time counts reveal that in large municipalities such as Calgary, there is an increase in family and youth homelessness. Is anything being done to address supports for some of the most vulnerable in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of youth homelessness is very much indeed on this government's mind. Alberta was the first in Canada to adopt the point-in-time count province-wide and also to work with all of the community partners to target outreach programs that meet local needs like youth. For example, in Edmonton we have Nova house, that provides approximately 20 beds to youth through the Edmonton John Howard Society, and the Boys & Girls Club infinity project, which helps youth with financial and other supports as well.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. We know winters in Alberta can be brutal, such as today, and media reports say that emergency shelters are often over capacity. How will the current homeless population be supported during the upcoming winter months?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the winter storm is upon us. I know that our community partners in the seven major centres are working hard to deliver their emergency plans to ensure homeless individuals have a safe and warm place to be. We are supporting these plans with $1.6 million from our government and $1.6 million from the federal government as well. This is going to help add 320 more bed spaces as well as warming centres and emergency shuttle services. This is in addition to the $39 million the province has already invested in the operation of 3,200 spaces across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Funding for Smaller Municipalities

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties asked this government to set aside one-third of the small communities fund from the new building Canada fund, or approximately $31 million over 10 years, for communities with populations of 10,000 or less. To the Minister of Infrastructure: having heard the AAMD and C concerns and given that 33 per cent of Albertans live in communities with populations of 10,000 or less, will you now meet the request of the AAMD and C and provide adequate funding for these communities?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question, a very important question that came from AAMD and C. The small communities funding out of the building Canada fund is to Alberta, and it's designated for communities under 100,000 in population. That is the criteria that is set out by the federal government. Those dollars will be flowing through our Ministry of Municipal Affairs, and as soon as they start flowing to us, we'll get them out to the communities.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Yes. This time to the Transportation minister. Considering that program received no new funding in this current budget and in the next budget receives only $75 million for previously submitted applications, can communities instead use the new building Canada fund and the small communities fund specifically as an alternative funding source for waste-water projects?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, that might be a great idea. They would have to apply to it and be successful. But I've also asked for an increase in my budget for water and waste water as well, and we've asked to have some of the building Canada fund moved into the water/waste-water components. Either way, hopefully, we can get some more money. If the small communities want to use it for that, that would be great.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, last week the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka raised a question of water for life funding in the town of Blackfalds. This program has not met the needs of this community and others either. To the Transportation minister again: will this government, then, commit to reinstate and enhance funding for the Alberta municipalities water/waste-water partnership, the water for life program, in the 2015 provincial budget?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've already said, this is a very important program for all Alberta municipalities, and I support it very much. I think there's lots that we need to do there, and I agree with the member. I've asked for that. I think he's asking the question to the wrong minister. Maybe next time he could ask it to the President of Treasury Board.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Oral Question Period has concluded.

I'm going to ask to revert to Introduction of Guests in just a moment, but before I do, I have three quick observations to make. I want to share with you as I've shared with all caucuses now that the last few days I've received the most phone calls ever of a positive nature about the conduct of all members of this House. You have elevated the level of decorum significantly, and that has spread amongst all four parties, including the independent. So congratulations, and thank you on behalf of Albertans.

Number two, please note that a record number of members were able to be recognized for their questions, I think directly as a result of what I just said. We've had up to 16, 17, and, on Monday, 18 different members, which set a record for this particular group.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: The final point is just exactly that. Two weeks have gone by now and not one single point of order, which sets a record for this Assembly. So please know that you are all part of history, in the most positive way, from my perspective.

Could we now revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us proceed with the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just noticed that somebody who is very much a leader in his community has just joined us for the remaining moments of question period, and I did want to draw the attention of our members. I introduce to you and through you Mr. Dan St. Pierre, who is the director of operations and communications for the Metis Settlements General Council. Dan is definitely a fine contributor to his community and somebody that I think many of us here recognize, so we would like to say hello and offer you a warm welcome today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three items for which to provide notice to the House today. First, I would like to give oral notice of the intention to introduce Bill 10, An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children, which will be sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to provide oral notice of intention to introduce Bill 11, the Savings Management Repeal Act, which will be sponsored by the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to give oral notice of Government Motion 10.

Be it resolved that the following changes to, one, Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved, that Mr. Hale replace Mrs. Towle; two, that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be approved, that Mr. McAllister replace Mr. Amery; and three, that the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be approved, that Mrs. Towle replace Mr. Lemke.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, do you have a tabling today?

Mr. Bilous: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. We're moving along quite quickly today. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter written by Eric Musekamp of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta. Eric writes about another needless farm worker fatality in Alberta. On November 4 60-year-old Charles Stauffer, husband, father of two, and grandfather of six, died while working on a feedlot near Raymond. The Farmworkers Union of Alberta is asking this PC government to "support and endorse OHS legislation and mandatory WCB for our agricultural workers to help prevent this tragedy from befalling another innocent Alberta family."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

If not, hon. members, I'd like to take the liberty to rise and table five copies of the biographies of our pages. As you know, we have seven brand new pages, and each of them has a very interesting story to tell, albeit said ever so briefly in the biographies. Please take a moment to read these and get to know our wonderful pages.

Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Sorry about that, Mr. Speaker. I do have a tabling, five copies of a letter from a constituent that the hon. opposition leader referred to earlier in regard to the picture of the infection that the senior had and that she was describing in her question.

The Speaker: Thank you. We will be careful when we're doing speeches and referring to things we present as a tabling to not use them as a prop. It's a fine line. I didn't see anything too incorrect with the procedure just handled, and I'm grateful for the tabling. Thank you.

Hon. members, we have no points of order, as I have just mentioned, so we can proceed onward.

Orders of the Day

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, given the treacherous roads that we have – in fact, I've just learned of a serious accident in Red Deer where a sheriff has been injured – I would like to propose that we stand adjourned until Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 2:48 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, as we labour diligently on behalf of those whom we serve, let us act and speak courageously in support of those who are unable to do so for themselves. Amen.

Please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem. Today we're very pleased to welcome our leader in that regard, Ms Colleen Vogel, who works for visitor services. Let's join in and participate in the language of our choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Thank you, Ms Vogel. Please be seated.

Hon. members, as you know, it is the tradition of the House to pay tribute to current or former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met and to do so at the very first opportunity. Therefore, it is with deep sorrow that I rise to advise you of the passing of Mr. Henry Woo. However, we have not yet had a response back from his family as to when they might be able to join us. We anticipate doing a tribute for Mr. Woo later this week on some given day, so please stand attentive on that point.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some home-schoolers from Wetaskiwin: 16 visitors, students and their leaders. The leaders today are Mrs. Melanie Krause, Mrs. Maria Chrunik, Mrs. Thérèse Klopfenstein, and Mrs. Corrie Vande Burgt. I would like to invite them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 48 talented grade 6 students from Centennial elementary school and their chaperones: Michelle Leong, Marnie Trapp, Sonya Johnston, Christine Oleksiw, and Angel Giovanni. I ask all the students and their chaperones from Centennial school to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, my wife, Janice Dorward, graduated grade 6 from Forest Heights elementary school in my constituency, and we're welcoming them to the Assembly this week through the school. They're here with their teacher Frau Marion Fritz and Fräulein Jessica Arzt. We have 26 students, and I would like them to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. They're in the members' gallery. Please stand up.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on with other important guests.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you a group of medical students from the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. Each year a group of medical students from both programs visit the Legislature to meet MLAs and share their concerns about health care with elected officials. This year they're hoping to meet with some of the members regarding tanning beds and minors. I ask that the students rise as I call their names and receive the customary warm welcome from this Assembly: Raheem Suleman, chair of the Political Advocacy Committee; Justin Khunkhun; Justine Hames; Jennifer Yan Fei Chen; Kirsten Sjonnesen; Samuel Quan; Sarah Hanafi; Patrick Vallance; Jeremy Christensen; Michelle Huie; Brandon Christensen; Nicole Mensik. And from the University of Calgary: Michael Arget, a senior chair of the Political Advocacy Committee; John Van Tuyl, a junior chair of the Political Advocacy Committee; Adam Burgess; Emily Macphail; Christina Harzan; Eric Campbell; Mimi Tran; Nicholas Monfires.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed by the Minister of Service Alberta.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Elder Walter Bonaire and Mr. Blaine Knott. Walter is a Cree singer and Elder from Little Pine, Saskatchewan. He's travelled across Canada performing traditional Cree songs and dance, many of which have passed through generations. Walter is the author of Listening to Elders Telling Stories Sitting in a Circle and the resident Elder of NAIT and a lecturer at the University of Alberta and the University of Manitoba. Blaine is a member of the Peguis First Nation in Manitoba and has spent several years visiting First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities. I'd like to thank Elder Bonaire and Mr. Knott for infusing us with a greater understanding of aboriginal culture in all sectors of society and ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Khan: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very important individuals that have been instrumental in the completion of the Condominium Property Act. From my ministry – and I'll ask them to rise as I say their names – we have Beth Jenkins, Kelly Refah, Mark Ammann, and Brent Kornack. All of these people have worked tirelessly through stakeholder consultations that span years to develop the best possible legislation for both condominium consumers and the developers across this province. Condo living is becoming an increasingly attractive option for people of this province, and it's because of the hard work of these valuable folks here that Albertans are able to have confidence in their choice of condo living.

I would also like to introduce three people from the developer side who have come together with the common goal of making the Condominium Property Act as strong as it can be. We have from the Canadian Home Builders' Association Jim Rivait, and I'll ask him to rise as well. We have Nicholas Carels of Streetside Development, and we have the president of the Canadian Home Builders' Association and also representing the Daytona Group of Companies, Tally Hutchinson, who, Mr. Speaker, is also a valuable member in St. Albert and a tremendous citizen involved in the community in St. Albert. It's these folks who have been consistently involved in the consultations between government and industry with the common goal to create the appropriate framework for the industry to thrive and to produce the best results possible for the consumer. All seven of these folks, as you can see, are in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask all members to provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Red Deer-South.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests Joel and Sapphira Lewin. Unfortunately, Joel's spouse, Jennie, is at home today taking care of Vienna, who's feeling under the weather. Sapphira is in grade 6 and learning about democracy in her school, so she wanted to see first-hand what goes on in this building. Jennie and Joel are also both strong advocates for inclusive education in Alberta, and I'd like to thank them for their dedication and hard work on this. The Lewins, like myself, are proud to call Beverly home, and I'd now like to ask Joel and Sapphira to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the president of Ports-to-Plains Alliance, Michael Reeves. Alberta joined the Ports-to-Plains Alliance in 2009, the first Canadian member of the alliance, and since then Mr. Reeves has been a great friend and ally for Alberta. This unique nonprofit, nonpartisan, community-driven advocacy group, led by Mr. Reeves, is made up of representatives from Alberta as well as Colorado, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, and Wyoming. Mr. Reeves has been and continues to be a great supporter of Alberta's position on mandatory country of origin labelling and has helped ensure that the facts about Alberta's responsible and sustainable energy development practices are presented. We thank him for his continued support of our province. Michael is joined today by Elvira Smid, who is also the executive director of the eastern Alberta trade corridor. I'd like to ask Mr. Reeves and Ms Smid to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really delighted to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a new staff member in my fabulous constituency office of Edmonton-Centre. Angelika Matson is joining us in the public gallery. Angelika, I'd ask you to rise. She has joined the staff there as the new social media person helping me out. You can imagine, when she started 10 days ago, how deep into the deep end she was thrown, and she is doing the front crawl very nicely, thank you. Please join me in welcoming her.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a special lady who has been helping us to grow our family tree and the Alberta population, of course. She has given us our first grandchild, Dylan. She is Mimi Tran, my precious daughter-in-law. Mimi is here with a group of medical students, her colleagues, to keep us informed of the danger of skin cancer among our youth due to the usage of tanning machines. Now I would like to ask Mimi to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In the members' gallery is a particularly passionate young medical student, who is passionate about prevention. She is here with a number of other medical students, as mentioned by the Health minister, calling on the government to show leadership in prevention. Tanning beds contribute substantially to melanoma, sometimes a fatal condition among our population, and are banned in most other provinces in the country. I'd ask Michelle Huie to stand and be recognized.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Karina Pillay. Karina is a second-year medical student and also came to talk to us about the dangers of using tanning beds, especially amongst youth. But very special to me is that Karina is a former mayor of Slave Lake. She was the mayor of Slave Lake when we had the devastating fires that went through, and she's the lady that all of us worked with to ensure a great recovery for that community. I would like everyone from this Assembly to extend our warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: A reminder that you have two minutes to offer your statements. Let's start with Calgary-North West and follow up with Chestermere-Rocky View.

Calgary Sexual Health

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize one of the important organizations providing instruction and education to the youth of our province. Calgary Sexual Health has been offering services to Calgary schools for 42 years now, and our kids are all the better for it. Why is sexual health education so important? Health Canada says: sexual health education is a major part of personal health and healthy living; it should be available to all Canadians as an important part of health promotion programs and services. The positive outcomes of quality sexual health education are self-esteem, respect for themselves and others, nonexploitive sexual relations, informed reproductive choices, and a reduction of disease and unintended pregnancy: all good things, I think we can agree.

So what makes a good sexual health program? It has to be inclusive of the population it targets, it has to be evidence based and evaluated, and it must be a co-ordinated effort between Health, Education, Human Services, and all the other public and nonprofit groups at all levels of government. Calgary Sexual Health is at the forefront of this work, providing school-based education programs, community education, and counselling. They've been providing comprehensive sexual health education programs for 40 years, reaching 8,000 students every year. Their WiseGuyz program teaches young men the importance of challenging stereotypes about masculinity, bullying and homophobia, and intimate partner violence. It is groundbreaking and transformative.

One of my very favourite things about Calgary Sexual Health is that they helped found Camp fYrefly Calgary, Canada's only national leadership retreat for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transidentified, two-spirited, intersexed, queer, questioning, and allied youth. You cannot visit this camp and not come away a profoundly changed person, educated and more compassionate about these issues.

Mr. Speaker, I want to applaud Calgary Sexual Health and its courageous staff for everything they do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Infrastructure Capital Planning

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, this morning a damning infrastructure report was released about the state of Alberta's health facilities. While facilities are given a priority rating, there isn't much of a link between a building's rating and the choice about which ones get money for repairs. Now, we know what this means, sadly: favouritism and political decision-making. It's clear that this government has grossly overspent and misprioritized in the past and is now sleeping in the bed that it made for itself.

As the Education advocate, Mr. Speaker, I have asked many questions about school infrastructure in this Chamber. Since last election this government has promised 105 new schools for communities all over this province. But in this Chamber when I asked the question, "How many of these schools are currently under construction?" as simple a question as that seems to be, the minister offers no answer. Well, do some research, and you'll sadly learn that the number is somewhere around zero.

Modular classrooms are yet another problem. During the by-elections the Minister of Education announced two portable classrooms for a school in his own riding. This particular school was at number seven on the CBE priority list. Undoubtedly, the queue was jumped to help secure support in the middle of a by-election. Now, we hear promises about a new era of integrity, of management, and trust. This is not integrity.

Wildrose has called and pleaded for a public prioritized list for infrastructure projects. The purpose is so simple yet so crucial. We need to take the politics out of school infrastructure decision-making. We need schools, we need modulars, and we need them now. We must allocate them in a fair and transparent way. Adopt the Wildrose plan for infrastructure and take politics out of the equation. Don't just talk the talk on it; walk the walk. And while you're at it, give some clear, concise answers from the front bench that Albertans expect and deserve.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation for Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's 1:50, and we must begin Oral Question Period, but before we do so today, I want to advise you of some adjustments that will be made to the Oral Question Period and to Members' Statements rotations resulting from the recent changes in caucus membership. The House leaders for the government and the Official Opposition caucuses provided my office today with a memo dated November 27, 2014, that encloses a revised Oral Question Period rotation, affecting only those positions held by those two caucuses in the rotation.

On days 2 and 4 of the Oral Question Period rotation question 16 will now be asked by a private member from the government caucus in the positions formerly held by the Official Opposition. Members should note that this change will affect the questions scheduled for today, which is day 4 in the rotation.

The House leaders' agreement provided to me earlier today is silent with respect to the Members' Statements rotation. Accordingly, I have tried to preserve the intent of the May 2012 House leaders' agreement but have made an adjustment that takes into account the change in caucus composition. It is, of course, open to House leaders to propose an alternative if they wish by way of an agreement concerning Members' Statements.

In the Members' Statements rotation for week 4 on Wednesday the final Members' Statements position will be held by the government caucus, and the Official Opposition will now have only one statement on that day. The current week is week 3 in the Members' Statements rotation, and as a result, this change will not affect the schedule of Members' Statements outlined in the projected sitting days calendar until Wednesday, December 10, assuming I do not hear from the House leaders before that date.

These changes to the rotations are in addition to the changes I announced on Tuesday, November 18, 2014, at page 11 of Hansard, changes that were to accommodate the independent member at that time.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin. Thirty-five seconds max for the question; 35 seconds max for the answer.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, world oil prices are crashing through the floor, and we're seeing just how poorly this government has prepared us for what's to come. When energy revenues were never higher, they blew through every penny and then some, racking up $11 billion in debt in the process. That's like winning the lottery, spending it all, and maxing out the line of credit all at once. To the Finance minister: if his government couldn't manage the budget when oil was $100, what's going to happen when it gets below $70?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just gave the second-quarter update, and we're looking right now at a surplus of $933 million on our operating budget. We said that we'll balance the budget for the rest of this year, and we will. We'll be working towards balancing the budget for '15-16.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're going to be borrowing more than $2 billion, and that's with oil averaging $90 a barrel.

Not only is this government lousy at dealing with ups and downs in oil prices; it can't seem to get its own message straight. On Wednesday the Finance minister's fiscal update pegged oil at $75 between now and April. Forty-eight hours later the Premier issued a revision, saying that oil would actually be between $65 and $75 for the rest of the fiscal year. To the Finance minister: how can Albertans trust his government to manage us through this budget crisis when it can't even get its message straight from day to day?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said in the House before, the price of oil is very volatile. When we came out with our second-quarter update, we looked at $75 oil. It was down as low as $65; it's now at $70. So I'm not going to sit here and try and decide what the price of oil is going to be. We're going to budget on a prudent number and make sure that we balance the budget and provide the services Albertans need and deserve.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government's words and actions over the last week hardly inspire confidence. They can't decide how to budget for oil prices. They won't acknowledge the debt hole they've put us in. They haven't come clean on which election promises they're willing to break to keep the budget from completely falling apart. About the only thing they're clear on is that they want to raise taxes. To the Finance minister: when is there going to be a moment of honesty, when he'll tell Albertans what is actually going on?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I've answered this question numerous times in the House. I have said that we are going to make sure that we have our spending under control. We've asked all our departments to look at their budgets to make sure that we cut any waste out of those budgets. We are going to provide the core services that Albertans need and deserve, that being health care, education, seniors, and the most vulnerable, and we'll work towards that end for the rest of this year and next year.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition leader. Second main set of questions.

Hospital Infrastructure Capital Planning

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of health care, Wildrose has been asking about the government's mishandling of hospital infrastructure for years. We have asked about mouldy kitchens, sewer backups, mice infestations, and leaky roofs. We have asked about a billion dollars' worth of deferred maintenance. We have asked why hospital infrastructure spending decisions don't seem to be based on objective criteria. We have asked why hospitals with the necessary equipment and staff are mothballed when they could help deal with wait times. Will the Health minister admit that these conditions are absolutely unacceptable for Canada's wealthiest province?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, our hospitals are safe, well run, and well managed. We will spend $220 million on the maintenance of our facilities over a three-year period. Yes, we have an infrastructure deficit. But you know something? These are substantial costs to build brand new facilities, which we're doing. We're trying to balance expenditures on repairing older facilities with building new ones because the demand in this province is so great. This is a growing province, a province where hundreds of thousands of people have come in the last few years. We have to make sure that we find a balance between those communities that are growing and those that are staying a little quieter.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, how can the Health minister say that they're well managed when it costs 25 per cent more to run a hospital in Alberta than the average in the rest of the country?

A media report from this weekend highlights what Wildrose has been talking about for years. This government's infrastructure decisions are highly politicized and have no basis in priority. AHS spends millions rating our hospital infrastructure and deciding on priority lists only to have the government make purely political decisions on which projects get funded. This is wasteful, unethical, and it doesn't put patients first. Will the minister agree to publish a public, prioritized project list for health infrastructure?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, each year Alberta Health Services puts together a priority list, a list of projects that we'd like to try to do, but it is not an unlimited budget. As our Finance minister indicated, we're projecting oil to be under $75 a barrel; hopefully, somewhat more. As a result of that, projects are planned, and we hope to do them, but sometimes they have to be delayed because of the challenges we face with funding.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's about setting priorities, doing it objectively, and actually following the plan.

Albertans spend more per capita on health than just about any other province, but our results don't show it. Our waiting lists are unacceptable. There are solutions like using the extra capacity in rural hospitals. My own home town of High River has an effective, full-service hospital that performs hernia procedures, which takes pressure off the Calgary hospitals, but this model is ignored elsewhere. Last year I visited a rural hospital which uses its operating room for storage. Why won't this government use our rural hospitals to make Alberta's health system work?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We value our rural hospitals and what they can supply. We're just going through a process of evaluating what options we have in order to increase opportunities. We've got to make sure that the right staff is there and ensure that these facilities can deliver the kind of services they're expected to deliver to the people of their area. You know, health care is a very complicated business. As a result of that, it takes a great deal of planning in order to use a variety of facilities to deliver those programs.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government has been hollowing out services in rural Alberta for years now.

The Speaker: Third and final main question.

School Construction Funding

Ms Smith: When it comes to new schools, it seems that the Premier has written cheques that can't be cashed. In the middle of an election in which both he and his Education minister were seeking seats, the Premier slapped together a commitment for 55 new schools and 20 modernizations. The timing was curious although the news was welcome. Today, however, the Calgary board of education says that it needs an additional $200 million to meet the Premier's commitment on just 10 of those projects, this while the Premier is talking about belt tightening. To the Education minister: what does he say to parents now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have an unprecedented capital build for school infrastructure in this province. We continue to press ahead to build these schools. We have been in discussions with many school boards to see how, in fact, we can expedite the process to build those 55 new schools that were announced just a number of months ago. Our intention is to build them and to build them as soon as possible for the children of this province.

Ms Smith: Well, I can see why the former chair of the Calgary board of education doesn't want to answer the question, but I hardly think that that answer is going to be of much comfort, Mr. Speaker.

The announcement on October 8 is looking less and less like a serious commitment to build schools and more and more like a crass political ploy to win votes. The government has committed a fraction of what it actually needs to get these projects built in the communities that need them, but they did get the headline that they needed in a hotly contested by-election. To the Education minister: why is his government playing politics with our children's future again?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, the last thing we're going to do is play politics with the future of our children. I can tell you that during the by-election and during the leadership race the Premier heard very clearly, our government heard very clearly that the number one thing that Albertans want their government to do is to listen to their priorities and to respond to them. Building new schools is exactly what people across the province want us to do, and we're committed to follow through to do just that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the October 8 school announcement appears intended to achieve one objective and one objective only: to get the Premier and his Education minister their seats in the Assembly. Albertans are tired of this government manipulating them during elections only to be kicked to the curb after the votes are counted. There are only two ways to look at this. Either the government failed to account for how they'd actually deliver on the promise of new schools or they never had any intention of keeping their promise in the first place. To the Education minister: which is it?

Mr. Dirks: Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that one thing Albertans are tired of is negativity. One thing Albertans want this government to do is to respond to their priorities. Two hundred and thirty school projects are presently either being built, have already been opened, are in the planning stages, or are in the permitting stages, and we will follow through on every one of them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A Liberal government will fix Alberta's broken health system. For over 40 years this PC government has been great at building hospitals to buy votes, but their record at maintaining, staffing, and running them is appalling. Our hospitals are crumbling, and Albertans are suffering. Today an Edmonton Journal story says that decisions about where funding for hospitals should go is arbitrary, secretive, and political, sort of like the school decision in the Calgary-Elbow by-election. To the Health minister: when will this tired, old government stop making decisions based on political gain and start doing what's best for the health of Albertans?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we've invested in hospital infrastructure: 42 major health capital projects are under development; the three-year Health capital plan 2014 to 2017 is $2.6 billion; maintenance, $225 million over three years; South Health Campus in Calgary; Kaye Edmonton clinic; cancer centres in Lethbridge and Red Deer; new major upgrades in Lethbridge, Edson, High Prairie, Medicine Hat, and Grande Prairie. I'm not sure what else we could do. We are doing a lot in this province.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, that's interesting. According to the Edmonton Journal story, in the last five years of the 38 projects that AHS listed as its most urgent priorities – the Royal Alexandra, University of Alberta, Foothills, and, hey, even the Misericordia hospital would be amongst the top – only a third have received government approval. It's time for this government to come clean, tell Albertans which hospitals are going to get fixed, which are going to get replaced, and in what order. The public has a right to know. To the Health minister: will you publish a priority list for the renovation or replacement of Alberta's rundown health facilities?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that some of our facilities need work, and we've done that. The Misericordia hospital: investing $25 million. I was over at the Royal Alex the other day and went through it. Yes, there's need of work, but we've given them some money to do some planning to see what we need to do there. There is investment in all kinds of projects across this province, and we will continue to do that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, two-thirds of AHS's priority list is yet to be approved. AHS is an organization that minister is responsible for.

According to the Edmonton Journal AHS's deferred maintenance stands at over $1 billion. It is clear that this PC government has created this problem and has placed the lives of Albertans at risk. To the Minister of Health: when will your Conservative government take action on this issue and follow the Liberal lead and commit to spending the $1 billion federal health transfer on the billion-dollar maintenance problem your government created?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we're investing 220 million plus dollars on maintenance and projects. Yes, there is deferred maintenance, and we'll try to catch up. But, you know, there are responsibilities we have all over the province to make sure we improve places throughout Alberta. I realize there is a challenge in Edmonton with the Misericordia and the Royal Alex, but I know there are other issues we need to deal with. That's why we're spending $220 million. We'll continue to do that to make sure all hospitals across the province are treated equally.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday this government announced it will be introducing its own version of Bill 202, claiming that their bill will balance parental rights with student rights. Now, the PC version of this bill ensures that school boards that choose to block gay-straight alliances can continue to do so even if students want them. Now, I asked the Premier this question last week, and he didn't answer, so to the Minister of Human Services: will you explain to this Assembly how a voluntary extracurricular club set up to form friendships and create a safe, supportive peer group infringes on the rights of anyone else who chooses not to participate?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll ask the Minister of Justice to comment shortly, but let's be very careful to not deal with the actual contents of a bill that is anticipated to be up for debate later today.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Pardon my voice; I'm a little bit sick.

That is exactly what I was going to say, in fact, that this bill will be introduced this afternoon by the Member for Calgary-North West. I would invite this member to actually join in the debate on this. You know, Mr. Speaker, we will be having a free vote in this caucus. How about the fourth party?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure you know, it hasn't been tabled, so the rule does not apply here.

Now, students who are victims of bullying are far more likely to drop out and find themselves in at-risk situations. Studies show that up to 40 per cent of Alberta youth living on the street identify as LGBTQ. Surely you understand that the failure to provide the kind of peer support found in GSAs has real and painful consequences. To the minister in charge of child protection: how can you claim to be protecting children when your government puts pandering to social conservatives ahead of child and youth safety?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve to be treated with respect and to feel welcome in any community and have healthy relationships. One of the things we recently released was Alberta's plan for promoting healthy relationships and preventing bullying. We released that last week. It's a conversation we need to have so Albertans can live, learn, work, and play, and be supported in all of their communities.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister claims that all Albertans deserve an inclusive and tolerant learning environment, yet they plan to single out LGBTQ students by permitting school boards to ban GSAs. Other clubs aimed at supporting marginalized kids are allowed. I'm pretty sure not one single Albertan would publicly defend the notion of banning an antiracism club. To the Minister of Human Services: bullying based on homophobia and bullying based on racism are equally offensive, so why is your government treating them differently?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to note again that it's about promoting healthy relationships everywhere so Albertans can live, learn, work, and play in environments that are very safe and caring. We know there are issues with individuals that need support, and Human Services and this government will continue to support Albertans who need support. Again, it's about public awareness. It's about conversations. It's encouraging our children and youth to have safe places to be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

AltaLink Sale

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Berkshire Hathaway received approval to purchase AltaLink. They will now control 80 per cent of the flow of electricity over Alberta's 21,000 kilometres of transmission lines. Given that Berkshire Hathaway already controls 300,000 kilometres of transmission lines and 28,000 megawatts of generation in the western United States, how does adding to Berkshire Hathaway's market dominance over both transmission and generation advance Alberta's competitive electricity market?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Indeed, the Alberta Utilities Commission has reviewed the sale of AltaLink to Berkshire Hathaway. Prior to that, the federal government reviewed the sale and determined it would likely be in the public interest. Alberta reviewed it from the point of view of the protection of consumers. They determined there would be no harm. I'm grateful that there's a process in place. The process was followed. I'm also grateful that Alberta's electrical system and our energy system are under such scrutiny and are so welcoming to foreign investors.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What assurances can this ministry provide that Berkshire Hathaway will not legally manipulate electricity prices to the disadvantage of Alberta's ratepayers?

2:10

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the day before the sale transmission is a regulated business; the day after the sale it will be, too. We have excellent processes in place to ensure that Alberta consumers are protected, and they will remain in place.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Anglin: Thanks. Given that Alberta's Utilities Commission has no authority or jurisdiction to review or monitor the electricity market in the United States, knowing that Berkshire has no authority or jurisdiction to review or monitor the electricity market in Alberta, what rules and regulations are in place to stop Berkshire Hathaway from legally adjusting the flow or supply in one jurisdiction only to raise the price of electricity in the next, or the other, jurisdiction?

Mr. Oberle: We're in hypothetical territory here, Mr. Speaker, and I can't answer the question. We certainly don't regulate the electrical system in the United States. We do in Canada. In Alberta we have the Market Surveillance Administrator. We have an excellent process, and we have excellent rules in place. They will be enforced.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Inclusive Activities in Schools

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago school boards across Alberta were asked to provide information on antibullying clubs, diversity clubs, and gay-straight alliances in Alberta school jurisdictions. My question is for the Minister of Education. Can you tell us what you have heard from school boards with respect to antibullying clubs, diversity clubs, and gay-straight alliances in Alberta schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did ask Alberta school jurisdictions if they could report on the number of antibullying clubs, diversity clubs, and gay-straight alliances. I'm pleased to inform you that a hundred per cent of jurisdictions did respond. They have multiple initiatives to support kids in our schools. Based on the combined responses, in Alberta schools what I have at present are 637 antibullying clubs, 665 diversity clubs, and 94 gay-straight alliances, so almost 1,400 clubs in our schools. I'll be tabling this information later.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member. First supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Your reply indicates that not all schools have clubs identified as GSAs. How does this information provide you with a level of confidence that schools are supporting all vulnerable students?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've said a number of times in the Assembly, there is no room for intolerance in our education system, and we continue to make the promotion of safe and dignified and respectful environments a priority. Schools are supporting students, as I've just mentioned, through a wide variety of clubs – antibullying clubs, diversity clubs, gay-straight alliances – and there will be other types as well, hundreds of clubs across Alberta. They may go by different names, but they're all there to support our students.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will this information inform future policies to support students who want to organize a club or GSA in their school?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the question. The information is helpful, Mr. Speaker, in telling us how school boards are supporting students in their schools. As we've just heard, there are many different, diverse approaches that school boards use to support students. I fully support and our government fully supports gay-straight alliances and other kinds of school clubs as well, but we also respect the rights of school boards to make decisions about what is going to be appropriate in their jurisdiction according to their priorities to make sure we have safe and caring environments for all students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Infrastructure Capital Planning

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A five-month investigative report by the Edmonton Journal today, which I'll be tabling later, has uncovered a number of disturbing details about the state of Alberta's hospital infrastructure. That report blames years of PC political manipulation for crumbling facilities, empty departments, secret funding, and a deferred maintenance bill of over a billion dollars. To the Minister of Infrastructure. This situation is reaching a crisis point for communities across Alberta. What is your plan to fix this mess?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. In fact, our Premier has said that we will take a very planned and deliberate approach and make deferred maintenance a priority of this government. I would say that in the last number of months we have increased school board infrastructure maintenance funding by $100 million, over $150 million in the area of seniors' lodges, and I would say we're looking forward to making additional changes as we develop the budget.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that one of the biggest issues this report underlines is this government's use of infrastructure for political manipulation and gain and given that this minister clearly hasn't improved, as evidenced by the recent sod-turnings for untendered projects and queue-jumping of schools, Minister, will you do the right thing and publish a full, public, prioritized infrastructure list like the Wildrose has been asking for for years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're spending $2.6 billion in health facilities in our current capital plan – $2.6 billion – and $222 million of that is being allocated directly to Alberta Health Services for maintenance projects. Guess who makes the decisions on those projects. It's Alberta Health Services that determines which projects are to be finished at what time.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That same report says that Alberta Infrastructure's method of rating health facilities is ineffective and physical evaluations by private consultants are often manipulated or even rejected by this government in favour of political decision-making. Once again to the minister. Albertans need a health care system that works. Will you start making funding decisions based on need and stop playing politics with our hospitals?

Mr. Bhullar: Once again, Mr. Speaker, we have $222 million that is being allocated in the current capital plan for maintenance projects with Alberta Health Services. That money is allocated to Alberta Health Services, who then determines which projects they need to fund in which order. That's what we do with our educational funding as well as our postsecondary funding. We allow them to make the decisions on their priorities. That's what prudent governments do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Calgary Buffalo.

Education System Efficiency

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this Assembly is aware, I've taught children for 36 years. In that time and since then a universal complaint of teachers was the amount of work that our educators are forced to put in outside of the classroom, in particular into administrative work such as report cards and IPPs.

Teachers spend hours on report cards and IPPs, and it takes them away from planning lessons and curriculum. This question is to the Minister of Education. Who decides the structure of report cards and how often teachers have to meet with parents for IPPs, the province or the school board?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, local school authorities in Alberta are responsible for report cards. School authorities have policies related to student assessment. They're responsible for engaging parents and guardians regarding student performance. I have a mandate to look at ways of ensuring that our report cards and other grades are coherent and easily understood for Albertans. Going forward, we make our decisions based on what is best for higher achievement, what research says, and what best practices in student assessment would be.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister: given that teachers are being forced to spend a large amount of time outside the classroom on administrative work, what is being done to alleviate the pressures on teachers to prevent them from spending so much time and effort on duties outside their calling as educators?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that by supporting teachers and doing whatever we can in whatever ways to address their workload issues, Alberta's students will continue to benefit from a world-class education. As part of our current agreement with teachers we're committed to a review of workload concerns, and we're in the midst of a third-party study in that regard. I look forward to continuing a productive relationship with the Alberta Teachers' Association to ensure that all students have continuing access to our high-quality education system.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I'm also looking forward to that report.

To the same minister. Often differing school jurisdictions such as public, Catholic, and francophone will send multiple buses to the same area. Given that finances are tight and the staffing difficulty when it comes to busing, should we be encouraging co-ordination of busing to make it more efficient?

Mr. Dirks: Well, the simple answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is yes, we should. Student transportation is a valuable part of our education system here in Alberta. We appreciate the work of school boards and our bus operators to ensure students are transported safely. We've tasked school boards to look for efficiencies in student transportation operations, including co-operative agreements with neighbouring jurisdictions, and currently two-thirds of our school boards do indeed have co-operative transportation partnerships.

2:20 Gay-straight Alliances in Schools (continued)

Mr. Hehr: The hon. Education minister referenced that there are all sorts of clubs that children are able to join at school – sports clubs, 4-H clubs, and the like – but we continue to hear from our LGBTQ students that they don't have a safe place to discuss issues that are important to them. To the Minister of Education: how many gay-straight alliances, not just diversity clubs, exist in our rural areas and our Catholic and private school systems?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we are absolutely committed to ensuring that all of our students are provided with a safe, caring, and respectful school environment. There are multiple – multiple – as I just mentioned, hundreds, indeed almost a thousand different clubs that exist in our schools across the province, including gay-straight alliances and antibullying initiatives and diversity clubs. These are all going to be beneficial for students right across our province.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the information we've received shows that gay-straight alliances are not in our rural areas, are not in our Catholic schools, and are not in our private schools. Does the Minister of Education believe there is simply no need for them in our Catholic system, in our private schools, or elsewhere in this province where they're currently not at?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier in the House, our side here, our government and myself as Minister of Education, we strongly support gay-straight alliances in our schools and will continue to do so. Albertans expect and it's important that we balance the rights of students, of parents, of school boards. That's exactly what we have done and we continue to do.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Education support mandatory gay-straight alliances at every school where students request them, or is he going to continue to bow down to some argument on parental rights or nonsense like that instead of doing what's right?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. I support and our government supports ensuring that we have safe, caring environments for every student in our province. Full stop.

The Speaker: Now the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Electricity Marketing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This week TransAlta will be brought in front of the Market Surveillance Administrator to answer for a case of price-fixing that resulted from the withholding of electricity from the market in order to drive up prices. The most disturbing thing in all of this is that the practice of economic withholding is supported by this government and its predecessors to, quote, increase investment. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Why does the Alberta government and its regulatory authorities give a green light to power companies to create artificial shortages, driving up prices and allowing consumers to be gouged?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, actually, TransAlta is appearing before the Alberta Utilities Commission this week on an application made by the Market Surveillance Administrator. The MSA alleges certain practices on behalf of TransAlta. That's the topic of the hearing. It's a quasi-judicial process. I'm going to let that process unfold.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Hon. member, first sup.

Mr. Mason: Oh, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very nice dodge, Mr. Minister, but those rules don't apply to something before the AUC.

Given that in November 2010 TransAlta exported power from the province to create an artificial shortage and increase the price it could get for its product and given that the market was manipulated by power corporations staging so-called discretionary shutdowns of generation during peak periods in 2010 and '11, costing consumers over $40 million while boosting corporate profits by millions, to the minister: does the minister see a pattern of power companies . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister for a response.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the pattern that I see is that activities, alleged or not, are fully understood, they're public, they're discussed, and they're brought before the Alberta Utilities Commission for due process. As I said, I'm going to let that process unfold. I believe in it.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that electric power is an essential service for Alberta families and businesses and given that the current deregulated system leads to price gouging, power shortages, and a power rate roller coaster, to the Minister of Energy: will he finally admit that electricity deregulation has put consumers at the mercy of big power companies and bring deregulation to an end once and for all?

Mr. Oberle: I'll admit no such thing, Mr. Speaker. The deregulated power system in Alberta has served Albertans very well. When there are issues, they're investigated and prosecuted if need be. In the meantime the member fails to acknowledge that we've had amongst the lowest power prices for the last months that we've seen for months and months. I'm confident in the system and the checks and balances in place.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Health Facility Capital Planning

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few years ago AHS ranked the refurbishment and the replacement of long-term care facilities as their top infrastructure need. They even calculated that they would need $140 million for new capacity and a billion to replace old facilities. In the latest AHS priority list long-term care has mysteriously dropped to seventh place, but last week the Health minister and the Seniors minister said that long-term care is their top priority. Why is it that AHS and this government can never agree on what matters?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has got us squarely agreeing on what matters here, and that's the seniors of this province and providing for them and their families. We've made some fantastic announcements here recently. Maybe the member has noticed that the Minister of Health and the Premier announced opening up about 750 beds in continuing care, including long-term care beds. We've announced that 1,500 ASLI beds are going to be opened up. At least 300 of those are long-term care beds. All that put together is a significant investment and will help us create space going forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Announcing is not opening.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election Whitecourt was promised a new hospital. AHS has not assigned a priority ranking to it except to say that it might come in the next two to five years. Given that Beaverlodge has also been assigned the same ranking to replace its much older hospital and given that the town of Beaverlodge has even selected a site and invested in site services for the new facility, who will the minister choose? Does the chief government whip or the Transportation minister have more clout with this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, Alberta is a very robust province, has a growing population. We're spending $19.2 billion in our current capital plan. This is a very significant investment. Of that, over $2 billion is going to health projects specifically. We have major projects going on in places like Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. We have projects going on in Grande Prairie, in Edson, in High Prairie. Because that's what the public of Alberta deserves.

Mr. Fox: Yet they'd rather play politics than put out a prioritized list.

Mr. Speaker, given that AHS ranks the new Whitecourt hospital at the same level as the Northern Lights regional health centre redevelopment project in Fort McMurray, will the minister please tell us which of these projects is more important, the one for the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education's riding or the one for the chief government whip's riding?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, our Premier has been very clear. In Alberta there's one type of Albertan, there's one class of Albertan. We do not pit people against one another: urban-rural, north-south, east-west, young-old. We are making the investments for all Albertans: schools and hospitals and seniors' homes. We're doing what the people of Alberta deserve.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Chronic Disease Management

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General's latest report indicates that chronic disease accounts for more than 75 per cent of the direct patient costs of Alberta's health care system. However, there's a troublesome reference in the same report that the Minister of Health currently does not have a strategy to adopt best practices in this area. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health. As a core member of the Alberta under new management team will you champion a comprehensive chronic disease management strategy to make a difference?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chronic disease is a major priority for this government. One of the important ways to deal with some of the challenges these people face is through the PCNs, our primary care networks. It's this group of people who can work with the chronic care individual in order to give them the kind of support they need within their home and within their facilities, and we really believe that this is one step. Another step, as the Auditor General said, is about dealing with a better record system. I really think we need to make some investments into a better record system in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Luan: To the same minister: given that the same report referenced a local best practice, which happens to be in my Calgary-Hawkwood constituency, called Crowfoot Village Family Practice, which uses team-based care, shared electronic records, and measured health outcomes, will you promote this model and advance it across the whole province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, the Crowfoot Village Family Practice belongs to the Calgary Foothills primary care network. We're using the best practice from this Calgary practice and all of Alberta's 42 PCNs as we move forward with the next step in their evolution. Now, PCN evolution in the coming weeks and months includes enhanced services such as extended hours and same-day or next-day patient access. The PCN network is really the answer to some of the challenges we face in the province of Alberta. We encourage people to use it.

Mr. Luan: To the same minister: given that abundant research has shown that nontraditional treatments like yoga, acupuncture, traditional Chinese herbs are effective ways of treating chronic diseases, will you consider those outside-the-box solutions as you consider strategies moving forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, Albertans are free to use the treatment options that they choose. However, alternative services such as naturopathy, reflexology, massage therapy, and acupuncture are not covered under the Canada health insurance plan, so we have to be careful. But I have had an opportunity to speak to many of these organizations and look forward to meeting with them to talk about what they can add to the system in order to deliver the services that so many Albertans need. Many of the services they supply are really of great value. We look forward to meeting with them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is regarding bureaucratic bungling by the Alberta immigrant nominee program regarding a rural doctor in Drumheller-Stettler. Dr. Walters is a long-time resident of Hanna, but thanks to bureaucrats at the Alberta immigrant nominee program, that may no longer be the case after they decided to revoke his status because of a bureaucratic snafu. We need Dr. Walters as a rural physician, and Albertans need more rural physicians. Will the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour intervene and fix this immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, there was no snafu. The staff there have been diligent on this file and are making decisions both in the best interests of Albertans but consistent with the program that we have available. We'll continue to do that. Immigration is important. Getting doctors into Alberta is important, and we'll continue to work hard on that very important issue.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that provincial bureaucrats have now taken away the rights of a desperately needed rural doctor to practise medicine here in Alberta, will the minister overturn this so-called final decision, add an appeal process, and get Dr. Walters back to serving patients across rural Alberta, a job he has been doing for nine years?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, on this particular file there are some rules. The good doctor I think identified at some point that he was a resident of British Columbia rather than Alberta. I don't know what the background is on that. But it certainly makes it more complicated for us to approve him as an Alberta resident when the person has self-identified as living somewhere else. If the hon. member has different information than that, I would invite him to bring it forward.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will forward that information.

Given that the director of operations at AHS has expressed a deep concern about the possibility of losing a doctor who has served rural communities for almost a decade and given the desperation of rural communities to retain and recruit these doctors, will the Minister for Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour agree to immediately fix this bureaucracy-made injustice and reinstate Dr. Walters' AINP status so he can go back to practising in rural Alberta?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I understand that rural Alberta and all of Alberta needs more doctors, and we are doing everything that we can. But the one thing about it is that if somebody wants to be recognized as an Alberta immigrant, they actually have to identify as living in Alberta. As I said in my previous answer, I would be happy to take this up with the hon. member and see if we can get to the bottom of this, and obviously if there's any . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Hunting Regulation Enforcement

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky we're having an increasing number of complaints from property owners where hunters are driving by, shooting animals on private property, and then trespassing to retrieve their trophies. To the Minister of Justice: what are you doing to make sure that regulations in these areas are being followed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our fish and wildlife offices are very active. In fact, there are roughly 40,000 enforcement-related actions through this level of law enforcement. That being said, just like any other level of law enforcement, a lot of it is largely complaint driven, and if this member or anybody else sees something going on, I encourage them to call the 24-hour Report a Poacher line at 1.800.642.3800.

Mr. McDonald: Well, again to the same minister: when is your ministry going to increase the penalties for these indiscretions? I do believe that these are being reported, and I think the penalties need to be severe enough that, you know, there is action taken.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter that we do take seriously at Alberta Justice. Currently the violation that this member talks about has a $50,000 fine and/or a one-year jail term. That's a one-year jail term even just for a first offence. We are not currently looking at increasing these penalties, but I would not rule out that possibility sometime in the future.

Mr. McDonald: Just to the same minister: we are still continuing to hear about not enough members in our communities, so does the minister have any priorities as to hiring to make sure that we're populating rural areas with officers?

The Speaker: Mr. Minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. So far this year we've hired an additional 11 fish and wildlife officers, and there's additional recruitment under way to hire an additional 10 fish and wildlife officers. This is something we do take very seriously, and I thank the member for his inquiry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Stony Plain.

Supports for Postsecondary Students

Mr. Jeneroux: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. We can all appreciate the strain that college and university can put on students. As such, mental health is a prevalent concern on postsecondary campuses. A Stats Canada report found suicide to be the ninth-leading cause of death for all Canadians, but that figure brought it to a disturbing second-leading cause of death for Canadians of postsecondary age. Given that the three-year commitment to supporting mental health in postsecondary institutions will be up soon, are there future plans to introduce a standard across postsecondary institutions for mental health strategies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for being such a passionate advocate for Alberta's postsecondary students. The funding that the member speaks of is a $12 million commitment over three years, and it's a very important issue. It's something that I've been talking to students all across Alberta about. They have confirmed what the member has said, that they want to see more and expanded mental health services. I will be working going forward with the Minister of Health to develop a long-term strategy.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: That sounds like great news.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that closer to home 5,000 Alberta students were interviewed last year and that it was revealed that a staggering 8 per cent had considered suicide and that in a 2011 survey over 460 students at the U of A alone said that they attempted suicide the previous year, what is being done to reach out to these students proactively?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Students' Executive Council received $2 million over three years to provide education and preventative outreach. Some examples of the programs include mentorship programs at the University of Lethbridge, stress-free zones at NAIT to give students a break, a Mad Hatter's Tea Party at Keyano College to reduce the stigma of mental illness. While we know efforts have reached more than 60,000 students across Campus Alberta, we know more work needs to be done, and I'm committed to doing it.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now to the associate minister of persons with disabilities: what is your ministry doing to help students with disabilities access services like these, that they need, within our postsecondary institutions?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, this government is focused on ensuring that Albertans have the best quality of life, and education is one of the key ingredients for that. Our inclusive postsecondary education program with disabilities: we have 97 students in 18 of our postsecondary institutions right across this province. The graduates from these programs are having great success at finding jobs, and this program is doing exactly what it's intended to do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Shingles Immunization

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors in my constituency of Stony Plain have raised concerns regarding health services. More specifically, a number of constituents are concerned about the varicella zoster virus that causes shingles and the cost to get vaccinated. To the Minister of Health: why are the shingles vaccinations not covered for seniors when the cost of vaccination is so low compared to in-patient hospital treatment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I want to echo my colleague in expressing concern for those who contract the shingles virus. I know my colleague to my left and myself both got the vaccine. We know it's an incredibly painful and difficult disease. We know that the rates for shingles increases with age, and for the general population we see fewer than 5 cases out of 100,000 people. For people between the ages of 80 and 84 we see 13 cases for every 1,000 people. So it's a vaccine that we believe will not be effective across . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is there any way the cost of shingles vaccinations could be reduced for low-income groups such as seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will do all we can to make sure that those who are in need of vaccinations will get them. It's important that Albertans have access to the health care they need, and we will ensure they get that.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: would the ministry consider, at least, waiving the fees for shingles vaccinations if it leads to reduced hospital costs?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we have an immunization committee. They do not recommend waiving the fees or that it be publicly funded. You know, it's one of those things. We can cover everything in the world, but sometimes we have to draw a line. This is where we did.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Speaker: The continuation shall ensue now of Members' Statements, two minutes each, starting with Red Deer-North, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Michener Centre

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, on September 19, 2014, our Premier announced his decision to keep Michener Centre in Red Deer open. When he announced his decision to the world at a press conference, he received a standing ovation. On that day our Premier touched the hearts of the residents, the families, and many of the citizens of Red Deer and Alberta. I can't begin to express the thanks and the appreciation of those positively affected by this decision.

The first time I walked into Michener Centre over 30 years ago to take my young children swimming at the rec centre, I was surprised by the people who acted differently and who would walk right up to you and say in a very innocent way, "Hi." It didn't take too long for us to learn that Michener was the home of people with developmental disabilities and that, like the rest of us, they just wanted to say hi and have a little chat. Over the years I became friends with some of the residents. Little did I know that one day I would become their MLA and represent them in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Michener has undergone many changes since it first opened over 100 years ago as the Alberta Ladies' College, considered to be one of western Canada's finest residential colleges at the time. In 1916 the provincial government converted the college into a psychiatric hospital for physically and mentally wounded soldiers suffering from what was then called shell shock. Today we call it posttraumatic stress disorder. It was in 1923 that it became the provincial training school for people with mental disabilities. Today it functions as Michener Services, a residential care facility for persons with development disabilities.

Although Michener went through some controversial times and there are those who dislike Michener because it is considered an institution, Michener is an award-winning facility that provides excellent care for its residents. In fact, it's more than that. It's a well-loved home, a home for almost 50 years for some and a home where the residents are cared for and loved and where they want to live for the rest of their lives.

To these residents and their families, who have chosen to be with Michener: rest assured that the promise made to you in 2008 and in 2014 . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Major Sporting Events in Alberta

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The eyes of Canada and the world have been on Alberta, watching as our province plays host to one world-class sport event after another.

In 2014 Alberta hosted events like the under-20 FIFA Women's World Cup and the ITU world grand finals. This weekend Lake Louise hosted the Alpine Ski World Cup, where Alberta's own Jan Hudec had a very exciting run in the super-G event, finishing ninth overall. On Wednesday the Canada Cup of Curling begins in Camrose, and even now the excitement is building in Red Deer as they are preparing to host the 2019 Canada Winter Games.

And 2015 is shaping up to be as impressive, with the FIFA Women's World Cup, the Tim Hortons Brier, the 2015 Track and Field Championships, the International Biathlon Union cup races, and so much more ready to go.

Through these major sporting events we are putting Alberta at the centre stage of sports, and the benefits of this attention are felt across the province. Sport tourism is one of the fastest growing segments of the Canadian tourism industry, with domestic travellers spending about $3.6 billion a year. Perhaps more importantly, our continued presence as a world-class event host contributes to a more vibrant and healthy way of life for Albertans. Hosting both small and large events can inspire generations of Albertans to fall in love with recreation and sport, and that love can lead to more active Albertans through participation, planning, volunteering, or just spectating.

Mr. Speaker, when you take our legacy of hosting successful sporting events at our world-class facilities and venues, our strong volunteer base, and the number of attractive destinations as a backdrop, the undeniable conclusion is that Alberta is a perfect place to host any major sporting event, and I hope we can do so into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to draw to the House's attention a historic event that occurred just over a year ago, on November 27, 2013. On that day an agreement was signed between the province of Alberta and the Tsuu T'ina Nation to allow for the completion of the Calgary ring road network.

Now, this was not an overnight success story. In fact, it was in 1955 that the provincial highways minister first suggested a southwest bypass be planned for Calgary, and in 1956 the roadway first appeared on planning documents prepared by the city.

Mr. Speaker, the completion of the southwest Calgary ring road has been the most important concern of my constituents from before I was elected and continues today. I want to acknowledge their efforts and hard work in learning about and expressing their observations about the project and its impact on their neighbourhoods. As their MLA I've learned about cut and fill bridge design, how to review hydrologists' reports, how paving materials have an impact on the traffic noise levels, and much more.

The southwest Calgary ring road is an important project for both the province and the city of Calgary. Once open, the roadway will also provide relief to urban freeways and feeder roads that are already under stress within the region. This highway will change traffic patterns in Calgary-Glenmore and neighbouring constituencies. I will continue to work with all involved to address their concerns.

Mr. Speaker, it took a lot of hard work and determination to achieve the agreement signed last year. I would like to thank the Tsuu T'ina Nation for their willingness to partner with the government of Alberta on this project. I honour their historic decision. Also to my colleagues the Member for Calgary-Hays and the former Member for Calgary-Elbow: thank you. To the Minister of Transportation, his office, and his department: your willingness to answer and address the numerous questions of my constituents has been excellent and is greatly appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Hehr: December 3 is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. There are 1 billion people living in the world with some form of disability. Around the globe persons with disabilities not only face physical barriers but also social, economic, and attitudinal barriers. Furthermore, disabilities are associated with 20 per cent of global poverty.

Mr. Speaker, we have work to do right here in Alberta. Oftentimes to be disabled in this province means you are most likely to be poor; you will face barriers to find affordable, accessible housing; you will have lessened opportunities in the workforce; and you may not get the support you need to go to school.

StatsCan notes that at any time 50 per cent of the people who receive Alberta Works benefits are likely to have some form of disability. Alberta has the lowest monetary support for individuals who find themselves in the difficult position of being unemployed. There was some talk from this government of actually investigating why Alberta has the lowest supports in the land when it comes to giving people a hand up when they're unable to find work, but despite this rhetoric, we've seen no movement.

That being said, we do have many reasons to celebrate. Albertans with disabilities, despite the institutional barriers, are struggling against all odds to create change. Take the MoMo Dance Theatre, a group of disabled Albertans who are changing the cultural landscape by incorporating all forms of disabilities into a vibrant dance ensemble that everyone enjoys. Organizations like the Champions Career Centre are working hard to find Albertans with disabilities opportunities in the workforce. Citizens like Nabeel Ramji are organizing the disabled community around accessibility issues and educating the public and government on the concept of visitability, making every structure barrier free.

On a final note, Mr. Speaker, in my view, it's time for Alberta to strike out a bold path on truly getting serious about eliminating barriers. We have to look at inaccessibility and inequality, work opportunities and social engagement, and how to get our citizens with disabilities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Denis: I'm providing oral notice for three government motions.

Motion 11.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 10, An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time any question necessary for the disposal of the bill at that stage shall be put forthwith.

Second, Government Motion 12.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 10, An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time each question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Finally, Motion 13.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 10, An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time each question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Bill 9

Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2014

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce Bill 9, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2014.

The bill before you today is built upon the over 50 amendments to the act originally introduced in May 2014 through Bill 13. It reflects the considerable feedback we have received from a very diverse range of stakeholders, including owners, developers, condo board members, condo managers, and legal experts in the condominium industry. Amendments include improved transparency and accountability for boards and developers, enhanced inspection and enforcement sections, rules respecting the regulation of condominium managers, and the legislative framework for a new tribunal system whose focus will be to hear and settle a variety of condominium disputes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a significant step forward to ensure Albertans that condominium legislation is modernized and effective. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move pursuant to Standing Order 75 that Bill 9, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2014, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Bill 10
An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 10, An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children.

This legislation makes amendments to the Alberta Bill of Rights, the Alberta Human Rights Act, the Education Act, and the School Act. This legislation supports the government's zero-tolerance attitude towards bullying, which is unacceptable. It is unacceptable whether it's related to sexual orientation, race, religion, or any other factor. It also ensures parents' rights are respected, enshrining them into the Alberta Bill of Rights. With this legislation students will have a clear recourse should their request to establish antidiscrimination clubs, including gay-straight alliances, be denied. This bill also proposes a package of tough and thorough antibullying provisions. With this legislation, Mr. Speaker, we are advancing the rights of the LGBTQ community, protecting children, and respecting the roles of parents and school boards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 75 I move that Bill 10, An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children, be moved to the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go on with this, noting how close we are to 3 o'clock, let me recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Yes. I'd like to waive rule 7(7) so we can continue this past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Let us move on.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Asia Pacific Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the Asia Advisory Council annual report 2013-14. I've had the distinct honour of chairing the council since my appointment in June of 2012, and I've been extremely fortunate to work alongside talented and dedicated Albertans who are passionate about enhancing Alberta's connections with the Asia Pacific regions. The document that I am tabling today shares how the council has been gathering information and consulting with stakeholders to explore ways to improve relations between Alberta and Asia. Here are the five reports for the tabling.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of letters of support that the government has received for Bill 7, the Chartered Professional Accountants Act, from the three currently existing accounting bodies: the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta, the Certified Management Accountants Association of Alberta, and the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta. I am pleased to note that the government has received support from all of these associations for Bill 7.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Given that unanimous consent was not given, I am going to take the last 30 seconds to do two important tablings myself, the first of which is five copies of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta's 2013-14 annual report pursuant to section 63(2) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Thank you.

The second is five copies of a memo dated November 27, 2014, from the Government House Leader to the Speaker, which was referenced in my statement earlier today, and it outlines an agreement that has been reached between the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader regarding the Oral Question Period rotation since it is only those two caucuses who are affected by that regulation.

Noting that it is now 3 p.m., we shall move on. There were no points of order, just for the record, so we can go on.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than

Second Reading

Bill 201

Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing)
Amendment Act, 2014

[Debate adjourned November 24: Mr. Mason speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have seven minutes left should you wish to take it. If not, we will move on.

I have the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

3:00

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014.

Mr. McAllister: Easy for you to say.

Mr. Hale: Easy for me to say. Not quite so.

Quite often in my constituency one of the major concerns I get is on electricity bills. The cost of electricity is a huge issue. There are many, many low-income seniors that are having trouble with the costs that we see. I do feel in reading this bill – and I look forward to the member's comments on closing second reading – that it is important that these bills are more understandable, and I think this goes a ways in helping that.

One of the issues he is trying to fix in this is when we talk about the regulated rate option. Now, when you think of regulations, you think those are fixed costs, but they're not. I think there is some confusion that if you don't take the regulated rate and you sign a contract, those costs are fixed, but in the regulated rate it's the default. So you get whatever the market is in that time frame. His choice to change it to a variable market rate, I think, is a step in the right direction. It shows that if you don't sign a fixed contract, if you go to the regulated rate, which is the default option, then you get charged the rate at the time. And those will fluctuate. I think a lot of people that hear “regulated rate option” think that, you know, they’re fixed, that that’s what they’re going to be charged. Then when they get their bill, it is confusing.

One of the concerns I do have with this bill is that when we list out all the charges that are going to be incurred on these bills, it’s going to cause more confusion because in transmission there’s a variable cost, which fluctuates, plus there’s a fixed cost, that stays the same. So from one bill to the next your transmission costs are going to fluctuate a bit in that variable section of it. Distribution also has a variable rate and a fixed rate, so from bill to bill the variable rate has a possibility of fluctuating. Also, the taxes on that bill are going to be different because of your consumption rate of electricity, the more you consume or the less you consume. It’s going to affect your taxes. Also, in some cities there are consent and access fees. Those may be different.

So when we want the bills to all look the same, they’re not all going to look the same because there are different charges on the bills. I think the theory behind Bill 201 is correct in making them easier to understand, but in this process I’m not so sure that they’re going to be easier to understand. There might be lines and lines and lines of numbers that will be confusing to some people.

Mr. McAllister: Like the new math?

Mr. Hale: Kind of like the new math. Yes, hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on a point of order. Citation?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Anglin: Yes. Mr. Speaker, 23(b), questions under discussion here. We’re not talking about the Education Act or education; we’re talking about billing. So if you could direct the member to the subject of billing and the transparency of billing, I would appreciate that.

The Speaker: Thank you. It’s a point of relevance then, is it?

Mr. Anderson: I would just like to note the unbelievable irony of this member pointing out that we need to stay on point and remain relevant to the subject matter of the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Hi. I was listening to the member, and he was talking about billing, so I don’t quite understand why there is a protest from the sponsoring member. But I would like to hear the rest of what the particular member is talking about.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I was actually sending a note around to a few people to just trim down the noise because I was having a little trouble hearing him. But I didn’t see anything totally out of order.

So why don’t you continue on, hon. member, and note the concerns that have been expressed?

Debate Continued

Mr. Hale: We were just talking about the addition of all the different lines on the power bills, so I’m just going to carry on. I’m just going to carry on. I am speaking in favour of the member’s bill, so I’m not sure why he would want to stop me when I’m actually supporting what he’s put forward.

As I continue on talking about the lines on the bills, it’s going to come down to the AUC and working with the minister to figure out what to put on these bills, how to make them look the same. You know, that might be quite a bit to ask. Are we now going to be telling companies what they can print and what they can’t print and how they have to run their business? That is a bit of concern to me.

You know, when we are talking about transmission and the costs associated – I’ve been meeting with quite a few of the companies – we’ve heard lots in the last few years about the Bill 50 power lines and the transmission and the transmission costs that are going to be passed on to the consumer. I was actually happy to hear that there’s one projected line up north that they’re taking bids on, and that will be a one-time bid. In saying that, I mean that when the company puts the bid in, that’s what they’re going to get paid. I think that’s been a huge problem with the lines we’ve seen being constructed in the province, that there are no cost-control measures put in there. I’ve mentioned that to some of the transmission companies.

I think there need to be some measures put in place so that the costs stay within. We realize that there’s going to be some fluctuation, but to see some of the huge charges to the province and to the ratepayers on these lines, you know, billions of dollars extra – every company wants to make money. That’s what makes the world go around. But we have to be diligent, and we have to ensure that when we’re giving the authority to someone to charge ratepayers, they walk within a certain bounds. To not have any measurement in place is not good. I think we definitely need to see some cost control in these contracts, and we need to ensure that there are needs assessments done.

The AUC and AESO. I mean, when they’re making these decisions where these power lines go now that the government has taken that power away from themselves – you know, I think it was Bill 8 that they passed a while ago saying that cabinet can’t make those decisions. That was a good step. We need to leave it to the experts.

One of the questions I asked last week was on the cogeneration lines up north. We see in my area especially, the constituency of Strathmore-Brooks, and heading into Cypress-Medicine Hat that there are massive power lines. I actually had a meeting with the Property Rights Advocate last year, and one of the questions he asked me was if I was still getting concerns over these power lines that are getting built. My answer was that I’m still receiving huge concerns. People are upset that we have these huge lines. I’m not saying that lines aren’t needed.

Mr. Anglin: Point of order again, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on a point of order. Citation, please?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Anglin: Standing Order 23(b). Mr. Speaker, again it goes to relevance. We’re not talking about property rights here. We’re not talking about Bill 50 and transmission lines. We’re talking about transparency in billing. If the member could keep his statements to transparency in billing, particularly when it comes to things like cogeneration, which is a ridiculous argument. The cogeneration is already connected to the transmission grid. I'm not sure what that does to transparency in billing. So that is my objection.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I duly note the member's commitment to keeping discussion relevant in this Chamber. That's fantastic. I think that the subject matter that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has been dealing with so far actually is relevant to the bill. In order to understand this bill and understand why it's needed or not needed, you kind of have to understand some of the facts surrounding the electricity industry and the transmission industry, so I think that it is relevant.

I would also ask, Mr. Speaker, if I could get a point of clarification. Are these points of order that are being called in any way taking away from the time that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has? He's being interrupted. I'm assuming not. You know, hopefully, he can get through the rest of his remarks without being interrupted on such grounds.

The Speaker: Quickly on the point of order and the question you raise for clarification, please note that when a point of order starts, the clock stops. The member will get his full time.

I'm going to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Page 438 of the 24th edition, 2011, of Erskine May points out there under relevance in debate, "The precise relevance of an argument may not always be perceptible." It is expected that the person would have enough time to develop the argument before you could be calling them on relevance merely because they mentioned another topic in the sense of a sentence.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: What page number was that, hon. member? I just missed it. Did you close it?

Ms Blakeman: Page 438.

The Speaker: Page 438. Thank you.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to weigh in here. I recognize that relevance is not particularly clear always and that a person may need to venture afield in order to make an argument. At least the member, I guess, has confined his remarks to the electrical system, which is encouraging.

But I would argue under (j) and (k) that if a member does venture afield that he should at least be factual in doing so; otherwise, it builds the base for an incorrect argument. In this case to talk about the fact that we have a transmission system build that has, in the member's words, absolutely no cost oversight is factually incorrect, and it's not helpful to the debate in here and is likely to create some disorder if he persists in the argument. It's not true. There is a cost oversight management system. There are rate hearings that determine which costs are allowable and which ones aren't. There is cost oversight, and that's a simple fact.

I would argue that it's probably best to build our argument going forward based upon fact, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, the point of order is on you. Just let me hear your argument briefly.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. I'm going to speak to the hon. minister's comments about this point of order. When there is a cost overrun on these transmission lines – and there is a cost overrun on the lines – that goes to the AESO. The AESO says: okay; there's a cost overrun. They take it to the AUC to get it approved, and the AUC generally approves the cost overrun.

So I don't know. I would have actually liked – you know, the minister and I could meet after and talk about this, but if he could show me any areas where any of these cost overruns were denied by the AESO or AUC, I would actually appreciate that. Then I would make some corrections in my statements. But from what I know, from what I've seen, and from what I've read and learned, any of the cost overruns are automatically approved. Please correct me if I'm wrong.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Perhaps you could follow that up on your own time with the Minister of Energy. In the meantime let me just say, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, that I did find you straying a little bit from the main subject, but you were clever in bringing it back and being relevant, so I didn't see a need to intervene. However, this is the second reminder, so please refresh your memory on what it is that you really want to say about this particular bill, and let us move on.

Mr. Hale: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be very clever right now, and I'm going to talk about transmission lines. I'm going to talk about cogeneration. I'm going to talk about the costs of transmissions lines. I'm going to talk about generation. And it all comes down to what's on your power bill. Every one of those points is included on your power bill. That is what the member wants to have listed line by line for the people to see. I'm speaking about the costs, which will be on these power bills. Hopefully, I can deter the member from bringing up any more points of order on my roundabout talks on his bill.

I was speaking about the costs that are projected on our bills and how they want to be broken down. I was speaking about the power lines in my area and the costs of those power lines. I've met with many companies up in Fort McMurray who are going to be looking at doing expansions, and they want to put in cogeneration. They want to put in their boiler units that will, you know, in turn provide electricity for the province. It's great. It lowers carbon emissions, it helps reach our goal of what we want to get, but the infrastructure isn't there. They need the assurance that the infrastructure is going to be there, and that infrastructure costs money. There have been some questions: where do we build it?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I show the following three speakers: Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Let us start with Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 201, Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I would like to begin by thanking the hon. member for his work in bringing this bill forward on behalf of his constituents and all Albertans.

The Alberta Utilities Commission regulates the utilities sector to ensure that Albertans receive safe and reliable service at reasonable rates. Bill 201 would ask the AUC to provide a report on two things: first, transparency in billing, and second, the format of bills sent to customers. The AUC would also be asked to consider "replacement of the term 'regulated rate' with 'variable market rate'." Bill 201 would then compel the minister to implement the recommendations put forward by the AUC within six months from the day the report is provided or take the steps necessary to implement these recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, let us remember that the AUC has many roles, including establishing mandatory requirements and standards of practice for the retail electric and natural gas markets. This is accomplished with procedures involving a consultative process with stakeholders and interested parties. In summary, the AUC makes certain that Alberta's utility providers provide a fair and high-quality service to Alberta's public. A part of providing a quality service is ensuring that consumers understand clearly how they are being charged. The government of Alberta has provided Albertans with tools to help understand their utility bills, and our government remains committed to a high level of transparency in billing.

Mr. Speaker, utility bills contain a lot of information. In fact, my household bill is four pages long. A Calgary residential energy and utility statement has several lines in the electricity section alone, detailing the energy charge, the administration charge, the delivery charge, the distribution charge, the transmission charge, the balancing pool allocation, rate riders, and the local access fee. In the case of Calgary Enmax customers there's even more information on the bill, with the water, the waste-water and drainage, the waste and recycling billing sections.

So, Mr. Speaker, in our quest to assist Albertans, are there other models out there? We can consider the federal government, which has legislation that directs regulatory authorities to clearly explain aspects of bills to their consumers. Section 4 of the User Fees Act states that regulatory authorities must "explain to clients clearly how the user fee is determined and identify the cost and revenue elements of the user fee." This must be done before a regulating authority can expand the application of fixes or increases. They must "take reasonable measures to notify clients, and other regulating authorities with a similar clientele of the user fee proposed to be fixed, increased, expanded in application or increased in duration." Federal regulatory authorities must "give all clients or service users a reasonable opportunity to provide ideas or proposals for ways to improve the services to which the user fee relates." Furthermore, they must "establish an independent advisory panel to address a complaint submitted by a client regarding the user fee or change." From these few regulations we can see that it is possible to have measures in place to promote transparency.

Mr. Speaker, let us return to the Alberta situation. In our legislation, bill formatting is not specifically addressed in this act. It is important that all fees be explained clearly so that Albertans can easily understand the charges and take action against false or mistaken billings. Bill 201 aims to simplify electricity bills to better assist Alberta consumers. We are proud to see a diverse and expansive deregulated market-based electricity market in Alberta and will do our best to support both producers and consumers in our province.

The language used on utility bills can be incredibly complex. We must ensure that the language is simplified whenever possible. The Alberta government has taken steps with the Electric Utilities Act. It outlines how a bill prepared for a customer must indicate the amount charged by the retailer for electric energy in dollars, the amount charged by the retailer for administration of the customer's account, the amount paid to the owner's distribution tariff for the account of the customer in dollars, and under the heading Local Access Fee any amount levied under section 45 of the Municipal Government Act or schedule 1, section 21, of the Metis Settlements Act or by bylaw under the Indian Act.

The Alberta government has provided Albertans various resources located at the Ministry of Energy website that can help assist Albertans in reading their utility bills. This website helps consumers understand the administration fee, transmission charge, distribution charge, and local access fee. At energy.alberta.ca there are even more resources available to help with understanding the language of your electricity bill. There is also information on measuring usage, charges from your retailer, and charges from your distributor.

Another matter for our Legislature to consider is reviews made by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission of cellphone bills. Their reviews have brought about significant changes and provide evidence of the impact commission reviews can have on bill transparency. Alberta utility providers also hold themselves to the highest standard of integrity, and it is prudent for a commission to review processes.

Mr. Speaker, periodic reviews of an industry by a commission often lead to real and positive change. In 1983 the CRTC announced a public process to review and where appropriate revise the general regulations for four telephone companies: Bell Canada, British Columbia Telephone Company, Northwestel Inc., and Terra Nova Telecommunications. In fact, on September 8, 1983, the commission published a document entitled Review of the General Regulations of the Federally Regulated Telephone Companies discussion paper. The commission then required that single-line billing be implemented monthly and that detailed itemized billing be required at least once per year or after an install or change of service.

Mr. Speaker, the CRTC since then has taken additional steps to improve transparency in telecommunications billing. In 2002 the commission noted various policies in regards to billing frequencies amongst local exchange carriers. The CRTC then directed companies to show cause as to why they should not provide monthly itemized billing. This is an example of how a commission can regulate an industry to engage in more transparent practices.

When companies are able to hide behind complicated language or infrequent itemized billing, consumers lose. Changes to our billing processes and statements will not happen overnight, but transparency slowly gets better over time and is continuing to evolve. Bill 201 will help build upon the strategies already in motion. The province of Alberta has had a number of strategies implemented to help Albertans clearly understand their bills. However, as we have seen with the CRTC rulings, the processes are ongoing and can be improved upon. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is prepared to adapt to changing challenges. We are proud to offer unparalleled service to all Albertans.

Thank you to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for your hard work on the bill, and I look forward to supporting it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by either Edmonton-Calder or Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to this private member's bill. I have reviewed it, and for many of the reasons given by the former speaker, I think this goes a long way to increasing our openness and transparency when it comes to electricity bills. When Albertans receive their bill in the mail, they often have a convoluted assessment of various rate charges – what programs there are, how much the electricity costs, how much the administration costs, and the like – and we have to try and simplify the process in order that Albertans can make informed decisions about the electricity packages that they are purchasing and whether, in fact, they are getting the best value for their dollar.

If we look at the energy market and the energy that people are receiving at their homes, oftentimes, you know, we Albertans have just simply chosen to go on the regulated rate option. I've been informed that oftentimes this may not be the best choice, that people should be looking at other options like the spot energy price and those types of mechanisms that can actually reduce people's monthly bill and would allow them to save on their energy. If we look at how the bill is presented and if they get some clear direction on what energy actually costs – what they're paying and what their providers are bringing into their homes and at what price – I think that would go a long way to ensuring that Albertans are making the proper choices to get the energy that they need at a reasonable price.

So not to belabour it any further, I will be supporting the hon. member's motion. I think it goes a long way to assisting people with some clarity on their electricity bills.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments fairly brief, other than I'd like to rise and show my support for Bill 201. I think it's very important for Albertans to understand their bills. This bill, Bill 201 – I'm being redundant here – simplifies their bills and makes it a lot easier for Albertans to see exactly what fees and costs are associated with their electricity bills.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that, you know, the cost of electricity in Alberta has gone up significantly since this PC government decided to deregulate our electricity system. I think it's important for Albertans to understand where their dollars are going and how they're being applied within a bill. I find it fascinating that even if there are folks who use zero electricity in a month, they still face a significant bill. It's, you know, put under the category of either administrative fees or however else the companies decide to hide certain fees or to show fees on a bill. Providing some clarity and transparency to this, I think, is a step in the right direction.

I'm not sure if this bill goes far enough as far as protecting Albertans from gouging, from high prices of electricity, and from spikes. You know, it would've been nice to see the bill go further, but as a baby step in the right direction – I think this bill takes that, and therefore I will be supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We're going to follow a strict rotation for this particular bill. I have Wildrose next, followed by a government member, followed by a Liberal member, followed by an ND member, if you wish. I have numerous notes and some speaking lists to abide by.

Let's move on to the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

3:30

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Thank you very much. I, too, rise in support of Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014, and I commend and congratulate my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for introducing a bill that is going to improve transparency, is going to improve clarity. Our province of 4 million Albertans is continually looking for the opportunity to understand better how their $45 billion a year of taxpayers' money is being spent, so I relish the chance to have the greater transparency.

I've heard some of the members of the House talk about how there's different taxation and, of course, generation is not regulated but distribution and transmission are, so it's going to lead to some situations where it may be a bit hard to have an actual standardized consumer utility bill that's exactly the same. I think that's why it's a good reason to give the Alberta Utilities Commission six months to have a look at this. I think it's especially important in part of the constituency I represent, Medicine Hat. Of course, Medicine Hat has its own utility department, providing tremendous low-cost utilities to the citizens of Medicine Hat for a hundred years now plus a dividend for our taxpayers and our ratepayers to, you know, have this money spent on other quality services.

The importance of transparency, the importance of an electrical system that has clarity really hit home to me about a year ago. I was looking at a bill from Montana, from Hill county in Montana. The ranch was about a township. The utility bill was $650 for a month, and only $35 of that was for what we call our ancillary charges. Of course, in Alberta, unfortunately, as the Member for Strathmore-Brooks was alluding to, the costs of transmission, the costs of Bill 50 without a needs assessment, the costs initiated somewhere at $16 billion possibly going to $30 billion: these costs are going to be borne by Alberta ratepayers.

Mr. Anglin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on a point of order. Which citation are you citing, please?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Anglin: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's on 23(b). It goes to the relevance. Here we are back talking Bill 50 and transmission lines and $16 billion of infrastructure. It's got nothing to do with Bill 201 that's being brought forward today that deals with transparency in retail billing.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we've been dealing with this off and on throughout the afternoon, and I've therefore refreshed my memory with Bill 201. What we should be talking about is what Bill 201 contains: issues to do with the Alberta Utilities Commission; the Electric Utilities Act; specifically, improving transparency, the billing of customers, the format of bills, fixed and variable costs related thereto, regulated rates, variable market rates, and so on.

Perhaps, Cypress-Medicine Hat, you could bring the point around to that because I'm sure that's where you were going.

Debate Continued

Mr. Barnes: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Clearly, if we're going to come up with a standardized bill that outlines the costs of electricity, the regulated rate option becoming the variable market option I think is a very, very good idea. The regulated rate option, I think, is misleading in the terminology, in the words, and makes people think that, in fact, electric generation is regulated when we all know it is the element of Alberta's electric system that's not. So calling it a variable market rate will go some distance.

Mr. Speaker, my point when it comes to the transmission lines was, again, around a standardized bill. Let's fully outline these costs. Let's fully outline these costs for all Alberta ratepayers, for all 4 million Albertans, as to what the costs of our electrical system are. I heard it argued here on a point of clarification and a point of order that there was a cost oversight process and there wasn't a cost oversight process. Well, my goodness. What better way to get Albertans involved than to put it on their bill or at least to give them the option of seeing where their hard-earned tax dollars are going.

So I would suggest to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that possibly we look at how this $16 billion to $30 billion of transmission lines that our government is forcing onto the ratepayers of Alberta – let's put it on the bill, too. Let's look at a situation where it's clear as to what we're all paying for, and Albertans can decide on their own if it's worth the value.

Again, back to the bill in Hill county out of Montana. It was absolutely clear that only $35 of this was ancillary charges, and the rest of it was absolutely clear as to where the fees were, the usage, the cost. Instead of the case in Alberta, where if you have $600 of electric, you're going to have at least $600 of ancillary charges, it was nice to see, first of all, a jurisdiction that honours, you know, low-cost, competitive, stable electric prices to build their ranching and their irrigated industries and the fact that the bill was so nice and clear. Electricity is an important element in industry, in agriculture. We do exist in a competitive world. We compete with our neighbouring provinces. We compete with our neighbouring states.

Again, back to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the idea to have a bill that's more standardized, that has a lot more clarity, that's more transparent will go a long, long way to help Albertans understand what they're paying for, will go a long, long way to help Albertans understand if their government is making the right decision for them.

It was interesting. In one of the debates that I had back before the election, members in the crowd actually brought up that on their bills they'd like to see an understanding of why they were hearing stories about how suppliers of products and men and equipment and commodities on the transmission lines – they were hearing this rumour that they were actually being asked to increase their bills, that their bills were too low. They were hearing stories that sometimes trucks were hauling gravel 300 miles or more when gravel was available a lot closer. One of the defining moments for me in that debate was when the PC MLA admitted that there wasn't a competitive bid process for the Bill 50 transmission lines, spending $16 billion. That was incredible.

Again, I like what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is doing here. I support the bill and the idea that we can have a standardized bill or at least the option of a standardized bill with a lot more clarity. Be interesting to see in the next six months what the Alberta Utilities Commission comes up with that can make this, you know, work for everybody.

In Medicine Hat, again, it's an interesting situation, owning our own utility company down there. I always kind of wondered if we were subject to the ancillary charges that go with the Bill 50 lines. I'm told that initially we weren't, before only a small portion, and now we're going to be subject to them to give us the opportunity to sell into the grid. I'm thinking of the 61,000 people in Medicine Hat, the 17,000 or 18,000 that I represent. My goodness. Wouldn't it be great to have that amount on the bill so that they could clearly see if the elected officials in Alberta, if the elected officials in Medicine Hat have made the right decision for them to do this?

Electricity. It's crucial that a province like Alberta has stable, predictable electric costs to grow our agriculture, to grow our industry. As we saw in the uproar over the modular schools being moved from seven to one and the push-back that that has caused, the unfairness in the by-election and the unfairness of not having their priority list . . .

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have a point of order again?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Anglin: Again, Mr. Speaker, 23(b). Here we are talking about modular schools. It's not in the bill. I mean, I know what's going on. I just would like it, if they're going to speak to the bill, that they speak to the topic of the bill. I'm not against any leeway or flexibility that you might provide. But, clearly, speaking to schools, modular schools, and the funding of modular schools is just not part of this private member's bill.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would agree with you to a point.

Now, Cypress-Medicine Hat, unless you're using these other external points to make a point relative to the bill, I would ask you to please refrain from straying too far away here.

3:40

We do allow considerable liberties in this House, but this is the fourth point of order already, so let's get on with the proper debate on this. I don't want to hear any more points of order, and I don't want to hear any more arguments right now. Let's just finish off. Let the member finish off his point, please. If it's necessary, then I'll come back to Strathmore-Brooks who wants to speak, I'll come back to the Deputy Government House Leader who wants to speak, and others. But in the meantime let's narrow this down to the bill itself, please, or I'll be the next one interfering.

Debate Continued

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is where I was headed, to narrow it down. I swear. [interjections] Yeah, and it's just wasting my time.

In the two and a half years since I've been elected, I've had at least 20 or 30 people, mostly seniors, walk in with their utility bills in their hands and say: "I can't understand this, but I can understand that I can't afford it. Please help me." So, again, I like what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is doing. This will go a long way.

My point with the schools was that when I opened up the Edmonton Journal a week ago, two letters to the editor were clearly – they wanted to know why the priority jumped from seven to one. It's Albertans wanting to know what we're paying for. It's Albertans wanting to be more involved in our system.

When you look at only 28 per cent voting sometimes, it makes you wonder why. And, guys, maybe this is the reason why. Not having a clear, transparent utility bill with clarity, maybe it's driving business away. Maybe it's driving people away from moving to our great province. We know we're at a disadvantage already in some respects when we don't have the cheap hydro that other provinces have. It's important, I believe – one thing about Albertans is 4 million intelligent, educated people, and I think the more information that we can provide them on a clear, transparent basis will go a long, long way to their involvement in our process, whether it's electricity or government or voting. It will go a long, long way in our process as to how we spend their hard-earned tax dollars. It seems like we forget that so easily.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'm going to go to Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Fenske: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is an honour to be able to rise today in debate for Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014, brought forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, I'd like to personally thank the hon. member for bringing forward this bill because by doing so, he is encouraging the House to consider the matter of electrical utilities billing, something of wide-ranging interest. Indeed, this topic is important for Albertans across this great province. Homeowners and renters alike pay electricity bills, so I'm sure interest on this bill, as I said, is very widespread.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on to the bill specifically. Bill 201 is intended to call on the Alberta Utilities Commission to draft and put forward a report on billing transparency. This report would be submitted to the Minister of Energy. Furthermore, it would contain a proposal for a standardized bill for utility customers.

Now, I listened as my counterpart the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore was going through her bill. She lives, of course, in an urban area. I have, I would say, the great advantage of being a member of an REA, a rural electrification association. In looking at her bill, she cited it is four pages. My bill, of course, is just one page double sided. So I know that there is a discrepancy throughout the province with respect to how people have their bills presented.

The new proposed bill format would list all variable and fixed costs. So upon receiving this proposal, the minister would then implement the commission's recommendations, and this would occur within six months from the date on which the report is provided.

In addition, the minister could also introduce amendments in the Legislative Assembly here on the process of implementing those particular recommendations.

Finally, the commission would implement the standardized bill as initially proposed in its report to the minister. This is, of course, the essence of Bill 201, Mr. Speaker. I applaud this member for representing the interests of Albertans in trying to ensure that their utility bills are presented as clearly as possible because if we can clearly understand, it certainly helps us as a more educated consumer to make some decisions on our part. And, happily, this government also has an initiative in place to ensure that Albertans are able to read their utility bills accurately. So we're all on the same page here.

The commission regulates the utilities sector, including the markets for natural gas and electricity. Its aim is to look out for Alberta's economic, environmental, and social interests in order to cover any gaps left open by the forces of the competitive market, which, of course, we've been discussing here, that some of my colleagues earlier this afternoon have been bringing forward. It is the commission that is responsible for establishing mandatory requirements and best standards of practice for retail natural gas and electricity markets. By engaging in a consultative process with stakeholders, the commission sets practices that reflect the interests of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to note that existing legislation also pertains to how these bills are reported. The billing regulation from 2003 under the Electric Utilities Act has a direct bearing on this. Section 4 of the act states: "A bill prepared by a retailer" – and we are talking about the retail electrical market – "or an owner for a customer must indicate separately" four different sets or types of charges. Now, these four categories of charges are:

- (i) the amount charged by the retailer for electric energy, [given] in dollars;
- (ii) the amount charged by the retailer for administration of the customer's account;
- (iii) the amount paid to the owner under the owner's distribution tariff for the account of the customer [again given] in dollars;
- (iv) under the heading "local access fee" any amount levied under section 45 of the Municipal Government Act . . .

I believe that my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore also brought that up.

. . . or Schedule 1, section 21 of the Metis Settlements Act or by bylaw under the [federal] Indian Act.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Then clause (b) of section 4 requires that the customer's bill

- (b) include the customer's site identification number or numbers as specified in the ISO Rules for load settlement, but if the retailer and customer agree, the site identification number or numbers may be provided in electronic format to the customer when the bill is sent . . .
- (c) specify the customer's consumption of electric energy . . .
- (d) specify the period for which each of the amounts referred to in clause (a) is calculated, and [finally]
- (e) indicate the name and telephone number of the owner, or a person authorized by the owner to act on its behalf, to answer customer inquiries about distribution access service.

Thus, we see in the original legislation that there are stringent requirements governing how information on these bills must be reported to customers.

We have since taken measures to strengthen this. In the interests of electricity consumers the government undertook an effort in 2013 to reduce the volatility of electricity prices from one month to another.

I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have a copy of one of my electrical bills here, that I was going to table earlier today, but I certainly will table it tomorrow. We, of course, had to make a decision on how we wanted to have our bill, if we were going to just be on a demand or if we were going to go for a contract. So we as a family sat down and made some decisions, and we think that we have a very reasonable contract of 8 cents a kilowatt hour. I see on this particular bill that if people were not on a contract for September – this is an October bill, by the way, so this was for energy consumed in September. If you were not on a contract under my REA, your RRO rate for September would have been .0882 per kilowatt hour. So I would say that we made a very good decision in choosing to go on a contract.

I know that with the family business that we had when this all rolled out and people were looking at contract prices, we were a little leery at first. I have to say that that's a decision that was made with a great deal of thought, and we accepted a contract. So now as farm customers – I guess that's what we would be – we have been on a contract for at least two years, maybe even longer. Time seems to fly. Anyhow, that helps reduce our volatility from one month to another.

This was done with an aim of empowering consumers to make more informed retail choices. While not bearing directly on the reporting format for customers' bills, these measures did improve predictability and helped to minimize surprises for Albertans paying their utility bills.

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that this government has endeavoured to assist Albertans in understanding the contents of their bill. In particular, the Ministry of Energy has made resources available online in order to make this as clear as possible for anyone who may be unclear about the information on their bill. Information from this online guide covers a number of categories about which people may have questions. It tells you that your energy fee is based on the rate you are charged in cents per kilowatt hour multiplied by the amount of electricity used. The rate you are charged is either the default or regulated rate, which you have agreed to with your retail supplier, which I explained just a little earlier. The regulated rate is calculated in advance for each month and is approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission.

It also explains the administration fee to customers. As the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre explained, that is part of what he wants to make absolutely clear. This fee is charged by your electricity retailer to cover the costs of billing and other customer services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Following the rotation, I would have a Liberal member, an ND member, and a Wildrose member. So where shall we go? We'll go, then, to who I see on their feet. Let's go to Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 201, and I thank the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for helping to edify us around billing. Certainly, the billing is sort of the access point, or the gateway, by which we can see where our consumer bills are. Of course, the vast majority of the bills that are issued by power companies are for individual consumers. I know that every month, especially in the wintertime, people open these bills and are struck with at least two different feelings: first of all, confusion and then often anger at the electricity rates, that are so inordinately high, that we pay here in the province of Alberta.

Confusion, though, is the part that I think this bill is trying to address, and I do support that idea. Of course, at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, then you end up making a more transparent, more clear bill that shows you exactly how you're being gouged. I think that's going to be the end result of this. So if that does help to educate people about how, in fact, we pay more than we should here for consumer electricity and for commercial and industrial electricity, too, then perhaps the end result of this long and winding road is that we will in fact move back to a more regulated way of distributing electricity here in the province and get on with giving people a fair price for an essential service, right? It's not as though you choose to use electricity either for your own personal or for commercial or industrial or agricultural use. It's a necessary part of a modern industrial society. So it's incumbent upon us, for things that are mandatory and essential, to ensure that there is a price that meets the capacity for people to pay – right? – here in the province of Alberta. We're not doing that now.

We've seen all kinds of tricks and subterfuge around billing. Of course, the allusion around deregulation was that we would have a more competitive system with more players and more generators and so forth. But, you know, exactly the opposite happened. We still end up with the main five major producers of power that were around before deregulation, and they just come up with innovative ways to gouge us even more. Try shutting your electricity off, even – let's say you have a cabin or another place – and lo and behold you still end up with a substantial bill every month, right? You know, in a place like, let's say, an older neighbourhood, where you've been paying for those lines and all of those service charges, you've paid for those lines several times over in your own lifetime and probably even more so over time by the previous owners and so forth. This whole notion of deregulation to create a more competitive environment in sort of a fixed thing, an essential service like electricity, is patently absurd.

I appreciate, you know, that if we shine a light on a consumer or an industrial commercial bill and people can see with utter transparency what that bill is going to be, maybe it'll lead eventually to a more reasonable regulated electricity rate that we can count on. The irony of debating this on Monday when on Friday we had a huge sale of our electricity transmission network to one of the wealthiest people in the world, Berkshire Hathaway – it's no coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that they announced that sale approval at 4 o'clock on a Friday afternoon, hoping: oh, well, Albertans won't notice that we just sold off a major chunk of essential line service to an American corporation. Of course we noticed it, and we'll notice it on our subsequent bills that will come forward in the coming weeks and months.

Mr. Oberle: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has risen on a point of order.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I allowed earlier that under relevance, clause (b), we're going to allow some latitude about where a member goes in order to build a case, but I don't allow that we should be allowed to just state a complete misfact in a manner that I find insulting. I let it go just a moment ago when he said that we have only five retailers. We have 25 retailers offering 40 different contracts in Alberta today. That's a matter of fact, and it's right on the website.

Right now what we're talking about is that we're impugning the proceedings of a quasi-judicial body in Alberta, and he's questioning when they did their news release because they apparently did it for some sneaky reason. That's a creation of our government, of this Legislature, and I don't think that kind of language should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Speaker, if he has anything factual to add to the argument, I invite him to go ahead and do so.

Mr. Anderson: I don't even necessarily disagree with anything that the Deputy Government House Leader said in this regard; however, I think we do need to realize that this is a debate. Who's the judge of what's true or not true? The public is the judge of that. There can be disagreement on facts. Maybe he was referring to five major retailers instead of 25.

I mean, we've got to have some latitude in this House to have a discussion. We're not going to agree on all the principles, but we can't be standing up and calling everything irrelevant. Obviously, I disagree with, you know, 99 per cent of the things that member says over there, but I will die for his right to say them. I think that it's important that we accord each other that respect.

Also, on questioning quasi-judicial bodies, Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day one of the jobs of opposition is – obviously, we don't want to impugn the people on the those judicial bodies unless there is great cause to do so, but we can disagree with their decisions. If we feel that they're becoming too much of a rubber stamp, as potentially is the case right now with some decisions that have been made, I think that it's not only the right but the responsibility of opposition to bring that up and to say: "Look, this is looking like a bit of a rubber-stamp process. Perhaps we should take a look at it." I think that's part of our role. I don't think we're impugning the people on it. We're just saying that, obviously, it needs to be improved and strengthened because it's becoming a rubber stamp.

Let's give each other some latitude in this House to have a good debate moving forward and not clutter our House with points of order on relevancy and so forth.

The Speaker: First we have Rimbey-Rocky Mountain-House-Sundre. Do you wish to chime in? Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Anglin: Just one point, Mr. Speaker: it is prudent to have a difference of opinion around the debate, but where I disagree with the member is that no one is entitled to a different set of facts. The facts are the facts, and that's what we should be debating. Misrepresentation – it doesn't matter whether it's erroneous or whether its deliberate – has to be corrected to have an intelligent debate.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you wish to clarify the point that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader has been making?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate both the comments from the hon. member from across the way and others. Certainly, I'd have to look back on the Blues, perhaps, to see whether – I don't usually say the word retailer even. I'm thinking that I was talking about producers of electricity – right? – major producers. If I did say it incorrectly, then certainly I would change it. What do you do when you go back on the thing that you did? Retract it.

Otherwise, certainly, it's important for us to cast a light on what is happening, and that's kind of the theme of this private member's bill, to cast a light, more transparency, on the actual bill that people receive. All things flow into, you know, creating that bill and creating the price point that someone has to pay. I believe that there's a problem with our electricity generation and the prices that we pay through deregulation. I'll have to look back and see exactly what I had said in regard to five major producers, which is what I usually say when I'm talking about it, not retailers.

Anyway, thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, there are two very long and well-known traditions of this House. One is to allow the maximum amount of latitude during debate, and the second thing is for the Speaker to oftentimes have to accept two different versions of the same account. Now, I'm going to have to review what was said there as well because I've received a flurry of notes up here during your comments, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. I'm going to review those and see if there's any need to follow this up further.

In the meantime let us zoom in on the bill itself, please. Bill 201 is what we're debating. Carry on with your debate. You have five minutes and 38 seconds left.

Debate Continued

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I can, in sum, rest my case by saying that I'm interested in voting for this private member's bill. Once again I thank the hon. member for bringing this forward.

The Speaker: We're going next to the Wildrose, followed by a government member, and that means the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is next.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and support Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014. I'm really going to try and get through this bill without having some interjections from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, whom I actually like, and, hopefully, from the Minister of Energy, whom I also actually quite like. I'm going to really try and... [interjection]

Mr. Anderson: Whoa. Wait a second, Frank.

He is pretty debonair. You've got to give it to him.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor, so let's give it to her, okay?

Carry on.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, the nice thing, if there's anything nice about being hearing impaired, is that you miss all the conversation that's going on around you. I, quite frankly, can't hear it unless I'm wired in.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, if I may, on Bill 201 I am going to stand up in support of it for many reasons. I just want to start with – the member talks about the purpose for the bill, which is to increase transparency in billing, but more importantly it proposes to standardize consumer utility bills so that retail consumers can be better informed about market options. I think that's something that, quite frankly, in the year 2014, December 1, actually needs to be done. I think the public is sometimes confused about determining the difference between fixed rates and variable rates, and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville started talking about trying to explain the difference between the fixed rates and the variable rates. You know, I'm not exactly sure, if we went out and spoke to Albertans, how many of them could really determine the difference between fixed and variable rates and why it's important to know what you're doing.

What I like about this bill is the report on transparency in billing.

Within 6 months from the day this section comes into force, the Commission shall provide a report to the Minister that contains recommendations to improve transparency in the billing of customers and the format of bills sent to customers.

The bill will certainly make electricity bills across the province look the same regardless of the company. The Electric Utilities Act will be amended under Bill 201 so that six months from the amendments coming into force the Alberta Utilities Commission will provide a report to the minister that contains the recommendations for the improvement to the transparency in the billing of customers and the format of electricity bills sent to customers.

I don't think there's an MLA in this Legislature that hasn't had a constituent come in and talk to them about questions that they have when they receive their bills monthly and the complications that arise, especially when we're talking with seniors who are on fixed incomes, low-income earners that are on fixed incomes and not understanding all of these different billings that are on the particular bill that we're trying to decipher.

I as the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek have struggled through trying to explain to people that have come in to see me the difference between fixed rates and variable rates. One of the things that I've learned over a period of time – the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre sat down and explained to me all of the differences between fixed rates and variable rates. He also talked to me a lot about the market price for electricity and how the markets fluctuate depending on how the electricity prices are influenced by supply and demand and how Albertans will see an increase as the population increases. Of course, electricity increases because of the demand. We talked about the regulated rate option, or the acronym RRO, for regulated electricity rates, that is available to everyone. I just think that what he's trying to do and what he's proposing in this bill, in what I consider a very short bill, is something that truly needs to be done.

He talks about:

(2) The report of the Commission shall include, not may but “shall,” and there's a great difference when we talk about shall and may in legislation, which I've learned,

- (a) a proposed standardized bill for customers that lists all fixed and variable costs, and
- (b) proposed amendments to this Act and any related enactment, including the Regulated Rate Option Regulation, Alta. Reg. AR 262/2005, which I referred to just briefly, which shall include the replacement of the term “regulated rate” with “variable market rate”.

Then that tells you that the variable rate plan allows your electrical rate to change from month to month based on the fluctuations of the market. Because of the market, it will show that your bill fluctuates every month.

I think that what he's proposed in this bill is quite simple, actually, for a very complicated process that's out there, and I would like to say on record as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek that I will be supporting this bill and will be looking forward to the conversation as we proceed further.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and then we'll see where we go for other opposition parties or back to the government side.

4:10

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got an opinion on mobiles for schools, but I'll try and keep on the topic here.

It is my honour to rise to speak to Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Before I begin, I would like to recognize the hon. member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House during an exciting session at the Legislature.

Prior to 1996 Alberta had a Crown electrical utility company in place. Following the privatization of this sector, a handful of companies developed to provide consumers with more choice. Currently the Alberta Utilities Commission, or the AUC, regulates the utilities sector in Alberta. They do so by creating mandatory requirements, the standards for electricity and natural gas markets; furthermore, the AUC engages in consultative processes that allow them to speak with stakeholders and interested parties about these standards.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 asks for a commission to provide a report to the Minister of Energy on transparency in billing for customers. The commission would be specifically asked to include proposals for standardized billing for fixed and variable costs. When the commission tables their report in the House, Bill 201 would require the minister to implement the recommendations contained in the report within six months. It would also require the minister to introduce any amendments that might have arisen from the report. The legislation could follow on the heels of previous government policies intended to protect and inform consumers.

In 2013 the government took action to protect Albertans by increasing the scrutiny of transmission costs, reducing volatility in month-to-month electricity prices. They did this after consulting the Retail Market Review Committee. This committee put forward two key recommendations: scrutinizing a regulated rate option and extending the regulated rate option from 45 to 120 days. These steps made it easier for consumers to exercise better judgment in their retail choices.

However, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are not the only people worried about their electricity prices. Doing a little environmental scan on this issue, countries like the United Kingdom have begun to utilize alternative methods of reporting as well. In the U.K., similar to Alberta in that there are several companies that compete for consumers, their government has recently passed legislation that would ensure that these providers follow a more accountable and transparent reporting process.

Similar to the AUC in Alberta, the U.K. has an organization known as the office of gas and electricity markets. An acronym that doesn't really ring, it's called Ofgem. This organization is considered a nonministerial government department and is an independent national regulator. This organization is independent from government, industry, and stakeholders and operates within the mandate of several pieces of legislation. Ofgem recovers its costs through licensed companies that it regulates. The organization is run by a governing body known as the Gas Electricity Markets Authority. The governing body is comprised of experts who are appointed by the secretary of the state from the Department of Energy and Climate Change.

Ofgem differs from the AUC in that it focuses specifically on the interests of gas consumers. Four points make up their key focus: promoting value for money; promoting security of supply and sustainability for present and future generations of consumers, domestic and industrial users; the supervision and the development of markets in competition as well as the regulation and delivery of government schemes.

Mr. Speaker, the first point is most relevant to our discussion today on Bill 201. The value for money refers to the costs that consumers pay for electricity. Ofgem does not control the end-consumer energy price. Instead, they regulate the specific charges that can be passed on to the consumer. Ofgem works to create clarity for end users, allowing them to know what they are buying much like the hon. member's bill intends to do. This regulation enables consumers to be more diligent and mindful about the choices they make. It protects them from hidden costs, which help consumers know exactly what they are purchasing. For families this is of key importance because it allows them to properly set expectations of their bills. Surprise is not a good thing.

Ofgem has conducted numerous reviews of their electricity market so that new regulations can be created to make it more simple, clear, and fair for consumers. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, consumers must be duly notified when electricity prices change. This includes any changes to the market that may undermine consumers. Ofgem has proposed to further protect consumers by conducting a review of domestic automatic rollovers and contract renewals.

After discussion with stakeholders this project is currently undergoing revision but would promote the following: an estimate of the consumer's annual consumption. It would require consumers to give no more than 30 days' notice to leave the end of a contract. Finally, it would require a receipt of termination notice within five working days. Rules like these allow Ofgem to appropriately consult both industry and consumers. At the present time they are not banned from automatic renewals but are attempting to prevent hidden costs from showing up when their contract is automatically renewed.

Ofgem has been able to take other steps to protect consumers from the practice of what is referred to as misselling. This is a practice of misleading a consumer about the price of their bill and levying higher fees after they have purchased. However, Mr. Speaker, Ofgem does not currently have any way of forcing companies to reimburse consumers for wrongdoing. Instead, it has created an $8.89 million fund to help reimburse those who have fallen victim to hidden fees, overcharging, and misselling.

Ofgem promotes consumer rights rather than limiting the competitive nature of the company. However, it also recognizes that companies cannot serve the needs of individuals without some regulation. In doing so, it provides clarity and consistency to consumers. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be beneficial to examine and investigate practices like these to see if there are ideas that will pose benefit to our system.

Bill 201 appears to share many similarities with the current U.K. strategy in that it asks for a more in-depth look at how these companies are regulated. In doing so, it protects customers and lets them know what they are purchasing. Mr. Speaker, a review of this nature could align with the work that we've already done and can help us better understand how to help Albertans. As exemplified by the United Kingdom, there have been moves towards more transparency, clarification of prices for these electricity consumers. In 2013 the Alberta government followed a similar action, leading the way for consumers to better access information.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is an important part of the debate surrounding our electrical sector, and I encourage all members to take part.

Finally, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for all his hard work and tireless efforts to promote focus on this issue, transparency for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, anyone from the third party or the fourth party wishing to speak?

If not, let me move on to a government member, Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I'm sorry. We'll go to Airdrie. My apologies for not catching you quicker.

Mr. Anderson: No worries.

The Speaker: Airdrie, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and support Bill 201 and my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I think that this bill does something that I believe is something we should be striving for in a whole bunch of areas, and that is increased transparency. Giving consumers information so that they have it at their disposal so they can make informed decisions and understand what they're paying for, whether that be in their utility bill or whether that be in their taxes or anything else, frankly, I think is a good thing.

You have to obviously do this carefully and step-by-step. You don't want to make, you know, the burdens of paperwork and increased bureaucracy by doing that, but I think this is a relatively small change that would help consumers understand what they're paying for when they pay their utility bills. I think that's very important.

Obviously, Bill 50 is essentially water under the bridge right now. It's done. It's been repealed. Obviously, the damage was done prior to it being repealed. I think that we all understand here the process whereby a needs assessment was skipped and that these transmission lines were built and therefore in a lot of situations, I would say, without need. Certainly, there were other alternatives that would have been much cheaper. This, of course, has caused a great increase in the cost of our electricity bills, as was predicted by the Wildrose and other parties in this Legislature at the time. I don't think that's in any doubt, and I think that there are, obviously, regrets when you talk with people in the industry, when you talk with people in the government. They certainly even heard these same things from the current Premier, that mistakes were made, and there's no doubt of that.

I think we have to separate the two issues a little bit in that, you know, we have these extra charges on our bills that weren't there before because of Bill 50. Going forward, consumers still need to understand what they are paying for, and they need to understand it clearly. I think that doing so will allow them to – I think that when they make decisions with regard to the electricity costs, it will be a little bit more clear for them on how to make those decisions.

The other piece is that they can hold the government accountable for their decisions on electricity and whether they are agreeing with the current state of affairs with regard to electricity deregulation or if it could be improved. I think that just giving people more information will help them make that decision, and I know some information is already available out there. I mean, I look at my bill every month, and there are some things in there that, obviously, separate out different aspects of the bill, but I think that this would go further in achieving that end.

I think it's important, too, that we understand, you know, that with these property rights bills that we often talk about – the one that kind of, I believe, indirectly relates to this one is Bill 50 – this is certainly not just a rural issue. I think some people like to think that all those bills and the big fights and wars that were waged in this Assembly over those bills were just about the rural folks and that we were just people in rural Alberta, in 12 constituencies, who were just really ticked off because people were building power lines through our constituencies. It was so much deeper than that, Mr. Speaker. It's an issue that doesn't just affect our rural constituents in Alberta. It affected literally every single person that pays a utility bill in the province of Alberta. In fact, it affected way more urbanites than it did folks that live in rural Alberta, and I think that sometimes that was a bit lost in the discussion because this wasn't about NIMBY.

Obviously, part of it was that we don't like to build ugly power lines through pristine landscapes – that's obviously one part of it – but I actually think that was actually, you know, a pretty minor part. Another part was the way it was done, the way the land was chosen, without adequate feedback and consultation. I think a bigger issue, in fact I think by far 95 per cent of the issue, was the fact that all of our constituents now have charges on their bill that could have been easily avoided or decreased, could be a lot less today if we had built the least possible number of additional transmission lines, just the ones that were needed rather than the ones that were asked for by the transmission companies.

Of course, it was a sole-source contract, which I understand is, hopefully, being addressed going forward by this administration. I hope so. I've heard those words before, but my hope is that that will be addressed. We just heard a little bit from the Minister of Energy, and he's right to say that we do need to place confidence in some of these quasi-judicial bodies, but, Mr. Speaker, that was just the point of why Bill 50 was so egregious, because we completely circumvented that process with regard to assessing which lines were needed and which ones were not. That, to me, was the ultimate disrespect for our quasi-judicial agencies and tribunals that we have to regulate electricity. The name has been changed so much that we'll just call it the electricity board. It changes every few months or so, it seems. So that's a big issue.

With regard to this bill I think that anything that will improve transparency, specifically with regard to an issue as complicated as transmission and electricity generation, is something that we as a House, you know, need to look to support. It doesn't make a whole lot of sense, in my view, to not support that in this regard.

Now, this is certainly a good bill, and I will support it. I hope that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will – I mean, he was, obviously, a member of our party for a while and has communicated a lot of different things that need changing in the electrical system and the transmission system. I would like to see more bills like this come forward but maybe ones that are even more substantive as it pertains to lowering the costs of electricity for Albertans. I know it's something that he feels passionate about, and I certainly feel passionate about it. Are there ways we can deal, you know, with some of the price spikes that we experience in this province on a fairly regular basis? Is there a way we can do that that will help consumers while still maintaining the spirit of a free-market system and the market signals that are there? Are there ways we can control that?

Some of the spikes that occur: you know, I don't think they're reasonable, especially when there seem to be some questionable decisions regarding the timing of taking plants on- and offline and so forth that lead to these spikes, which, of course, have been widely reported in the news. How much of that is factual and how much of that is speculation I don't know, but I would like to see a way, going forward, that we can limit these spikes for consumers.

Also, on transmission in the future I would like to see, you know, some ideas from the member on recovering some of the costs of the transmission lines for power that is going to flow through to the United States. Perhaps there should be some rules with regard to that and some things put in place to recover some of those costs. I understand there are some rules in that regard, but it's pretty murky, and I'd like to understand that better and see if there are ways that we can deal with that transmission, with recouping some of those transmission costs, and to take some of those costs that are on our power bills under transmission and decrease them.

So there are all sorts of things. I think a deregulated system certainly has some merit. It has, I think, done more good than harm, but I think there are some things wrong with it, and we've gone through enough years now where those need to be corrected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I have Strathcona-Sherwood Park next.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014. I'd like to also thank the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for all of the work that he's put into this bill. I would also like to thank him for not raising a point of order yet at this point, 30 seconds in.

I've also heard from my constituents, as many of us have, that simply don't understand the utility bill, Mr. Speaker. I think also that many of us have had a look at it and all the ancillary charges and bits and pieces that we don't fully understand, and I think it does need to be simplified. I think of all our seniors in Alberta, half a million seniors, many of which are homeowners, that have talked to many of us. They also don't understand their utility bill and what they're really paying for and what the value is or isn't. I know some are even talking about reregulation of the industry in Alberta.

But we're fortunate in this province. We've got deregulated electricity prices, and they actually have fallen significantly since the regulated rates that we had in 2008. I think the difficulty is that we don't fully understand what these charges are, and that takes us back to, I think, the importance of supporting this bill.

Currently we've got the Alberta Electric System Operator, the AESO, that does the planning for our electrical system in Alberta, and there's a whole process that goes into that. I know some have raised questions about that, but it does require extensive consultation before any applications are even submitted for a transmission project in the province. So the consultation with AESO, and AESO is responsible for the safe and reliable and economic planning of Alberta's interconnected electricity system and the wholesale electricity market, which is extremely complicated.

I was listening to the hon. Member for Airdrie earlier here talking about power being exported to the United States. Now, it's my understanding that Alberta is actually a net importer of electricity, although I know that a number of other provinces, including British Columbia, where there are significant amounts of hydro generation, certainly, are in a position where they can afford to export electricity to the United States. My understanding is that with co-fired generation and natural gas generation and very, very limited hydro in the province of Alberta our cost of power generation is too high, in fact, for us to export.

Just talking about British Columbia, there are a few jurisdictional comparisons perhaps I could talk about with respect to their billing procedures. Specifically, getting back to British Columbia – and then, time permitting, I'll talk about Ontario – today protecting the interests of British Columbians is the B.C. Utilities Commission, BCUC. They're another independent regulatory agency, somewhat similar to the AUC in Alberta, and they're administered under their Utilities Commission Act. Their responsibility is also the regulation of their natural gas and electric utilities market. So that particular body, Mr. Speaker, is responsive to the need for energy across the province. They're also responsible for the needs determination as the AUC is here. Their responsibility is also to protect B.C. utility customers and all of their stakeholders.

Bill 201 would also protect its customers and stakeholders by allowing for transparency in their electricity bills and just ensuring that there are no hidden costs, not just hidden costs but explanations for what the other costs are or, I think ideally, essentially like a bill we get for a number of other utilities like water, which in most cases is somewhat simpler depending on the municipality that you live in and the supplier of your water.

The BCUC regulates a variety of different interdependent activities, including integrated resource planning, construction and expansion of power facilities, utility revenue requirements, rate design, and then also contracts for supply. The regulated utility companies operating in B.C. are B.C. Hydro; the British Columbia Transmission Corporation, BCTC; and, a familiar name to us, FortisBC.

Mr. Speaker, in an article released earlier this year, it was stated that deregulation of the retail electricity markets in Alberta has been strikingly successful. I know many would dispute that. Consumers now have the power to choose between a number of retailers and contracts. I believe the hon. Minister of Energy referred to about 25 different options that consumers now have. I think that choice is extremely important. I think choice definitely, just by market forces, would have kept our electricity costs down. But the point is: how do you know when you don't actually understand your bill?

British Columbians have also enjoyed some of the cheapest electricity rates in North America just because of, as I mentioned earlier, their low historic cost of hydroelectric generation. Hopefully, the river runs all the time and the turbines run all the time. That's got to be a good thing. I don't think there's really much of an off switch in hydro generation, as I understand it, so the more, the better. Because of that, people in British Columbia and, I believe, in a lot of the northwestern United States, customers, have certainly benefited from that. Again, they have benefited from deregulation as we as Albertans have benefited from deregulation.

Now, the regulated electricity rates in Alberta, as I've mentioned before, were consistently higher than the deregulated ones, as cost of production, as I understand it, was earlier. Of course, going back to those market forces, there simply was no competition. The bill was the bill. You had no place to go unless, of course, you decided that you didn't want to use any electricity or you put a generator in your yard or a windmill or whatever it happened to be. So you didn't really have a choice.

B.C. has this low cost of heritage resources. I know there's a lot of electricity trading that goes on, that I had mentioned, and a lot of kind of energy efficient projects that they've been working on also. Their competitive process allows them to require new supplies, that are used in the conservation of power, and that helps them to also preserve their competitive rate advantage. The greatest advantage in British Columbia is, again, that they've been able to generate significant revenue from the export of electricity. As I've mentioned, over the past decade their generation facilities, their hydro, their grid, which, of course, allows them to sell to us and, I would assume, other provinces as well as into the United States, has certainly been a considerable benefit to them because of their flexible hydroelectric system.

Their electricity sector also contributes revenue to the provincial treasury: property taxes, school taxes, grants, and . . .

Mr. Anglin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the bell just rang at that time, so we're going to move on in the interest of time.

I would recognize anyone from the third or fourth parties at this time. If not, someone from the Official Opposition, and if not, then let's move on to the next speaker.

Seeing no one else, I am going to Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to participate in the debate on Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014, brought forth by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I can't tell you over the last number of years how many constituents of Edmonton-Decore have come forward trying to interpret their electricity utility bills, so I am very pleased that this hon. member has brought forward this very important issue with the reason that it is on the minds of many Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 speaks to a number of strong principles which are foundational items for any government institution or quasi-public or private business organization, namely transparency, which promotes accountability and public disclosure. In our modern society these are pillars of democratic governance which are very critical for the efficient and effective functioning of a modern economy and for fostering openness and public trust. For example, in regard to public organizations like the government many powers are delegated to our public authority, and assurance must then be provided to the delegators – that is, society at large – that this transfer of power is not only effective but also not abused. Transparency ensures that information is available that can be used to measure the authority's performance and to guard against any possible misuse of powers. In that sense transparency serves to achieve accountability, which means that authorities can be held responsible for their actions.

Mr. Speaker, without transparency and accountability trust will be lacking between government and those whom it governs. The result would be social instability and an environment that is less than conducive to economic growth. Today there appears to be an increased commitment by organizations to undertake reforms aimed at enhancing transparency, which, as mentioned, promotes accountability. Also, it allows for stakeholders and citizens to garner information, to have a clearer understanding about the activities of an organization, and at the same time makes the organization more accountable for its activities. It has been suggested that opening a window to the internal workings on the inside creates a greater level of trust. Truth be told, many might say that you won't be trusted unless you are transparent.

Many governments, quasi-public organizations, and private organizations are taking appropriate actions very consistent with law- and policy-making to disclose information in forms that the public can readily find and use. Further, new technologies are being developed to put information about operations and decisions online and readily available to the public. For example, on June 25, 2013, the Rt. Hon. Francis Maude, Minister of Cabinet Office and paymaster general in the United Kingdom, indicated in his speech that the United Kingdom's government in 2013 had the largest data resource web portal in the world, with over 40,000 data files available to the public; further, that the U.K. government's plan is an ambitious one which is committed to working with the public to publish more data sets.

With specific reference to Bill 201 the hon. member is asking the Alberta Utilities Commission to provide a report on transparency and billing to the Minister of Energy. Further, Bill 201 asks the minister to implement the recommendations of the Alberta Utilities Commission within six months of the day the report is provided or to take the necessary steps to implement those recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, engaging parliamentarians on these issues is especially important. I support initiatives which increase transparency, whether it pertains to government or quasi-public or private organizations because, quite frankly, that's what the public expects. Furthermore, I support addressing that utility corporations be required to provide transparent information to their customers as it pertains to all sections of a utility bill. Alberta consumers deserve to receive utility bills that are transparent in category and meaning and easily understood. Alberta consumers need a radical change regarding the information provided, and they need reassurance that the charges being levied by the utility corporations are not excessive.

Mr. Speaker, in 2003 the Electric Utilities Act was amended under the billing regulation to increase the proper standardization of bills prepared by a retailer or an owner for distribution to a customer. Amounts charged to clients are to be displayed in dollars, with little room for ambiguities. In 2013 the government further protected consumers by establishing new regulations where the onus would be placed on electricity transmission companies to provide that the cost of transmission lines is reasonable. Also, the power of scrutiny for transmission projects would be placed under the authority of the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Utilities Commission operates independently and is committed to ensuring that every Albertan whose rights may be directly and adversely affected by the proposed utility application to the Alberta Utilities Commission is informed and has the opportunity to have their concerns heard, understood, and considered in the review process. The Alberta Utilities Commission is a trusted and valued commissioning body, and the people of Alberta can be assured that their best interests are a guiding force in the decision-making process of this organization. Under the watchful eye of this commission Albertans are assured that they are not and will not be paying for unqualified costs associated with building additional transmission lines. Transmission lines are to be built with a high and reasonable standard of due process.

I believe that this speaks to the lengths our government will go to for the people of our province. Transparency is critical for the effective functioning of our modern economy, and as Alberta grows in population, Mr. Speaker, and in opportunities, this becomes more important than ever before for all Albertans. That is why this government has continued to function under transparency initiatives and will do so moving forward.

Bill 201 will include a proposed standardized bill for customers that lists all fixed and variable costs, which could in fact add value to the utility billing process as it pertains to transparency, accountability, and public disclosure.

Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that the information that is available to consumers regarding their utility bills, as highlighted by those hon. members before yours truly in this debate, includes an explanation on charges to buy electricity, administrative fees, transmission charges, distribution charges, local access fees, and rate riders. In addition, information can also be found on how Albertans can measure their electricity usage. This information is provided by the Ministry of Energy, outlining their priority of fair and just pricing and utility bill understanding.

The Alberta Utilities Commission, as the Ministry of Energy has done, also provides a transparent resource on how Albertans can better understand their utility bill. The Alberta Utilities Commission explains that while Albertans may choose their retailer, they are not able to choose their distributor, who delivers the energy commodity to their home. This explanation is easy to understand and fairly straightforward. Albertans are advised that distributors have separate charges from the retailer and are identified separately on their utility bill. Retailers have terms and conditions, Mr. Speaker, regarding their service that are approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission, which provides guidelines and rules for billing practices.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I highlight this for you today is to point out that the Alberta Utilities Commission and the government are continually serving the best interests of Albertans by providing information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Opposition members?

Seeing none, let us move on to the next speaker, then. Vermilion-Lloydminster, you're next.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014, that was brought forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, a member who certainly in his time here in the House can be described in many ways: at times incorrigible, perhaps at times impertinent, and at times irascible. But one thing we can always say about him is that he is indefatigable about the issue that we're talking about today.

Mr. Speaker, transparency in billing is truly important to all Albertans, but it is also important to the people of Vermilion-Lloydminster. As was just mentioned by the previous speaker, we receive many inquiries in my office in the constituency asking for an explanation with regard to power bills, and it is indeed important that consumers understand completely what they are being charged for. My own personal experience in professional life is that if you present someone with a bill and they don't understand it, they're less likely to be happy about paying it. Especially when we're dealing with something that is an essential need of all Albertans, electrical power, we really can't be in a position where people in any way don't understand what it is they're paying for or why they're paying for it.

Now, various methodologies have been used to try to increase the understanding that Albertans have of their electrical bills, but unfortunately there remains an information gap between what people understand about their bill and what, in fact, the bill is trying to explain. So I'm certainly in favour of Bill 201 in terms of its attempt to make electrical billings more clear, more transparent, and more understandable to the consumer. I think these are important initiatives that are being undertaken by this bill, and I do applaud the member for bringing this forward.

I think that what he's doing, essentially, here is allowing consumers a better understanding of what it is they need to understand to be responsible consumers. Certainly, when I was in professional life, that was something that we encouraged amongst the consumers about the services we provided, and I'm pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt your speech; however, under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to 5 minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I am now obligated to invite the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to close debate at this stage on Bill 201.

The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I would like to say as an ex-Wildrose Party member is that real men wear pink in support of the next bill that is going to be presented here to this Assembly, and I want to make sure it's known, no matter how angry the Member for Edmonton-Centre may be at me. I will get to some of the facts and the misrepresentations that have been made in response to this bill. First off, the clarity of the bill, the idea that the bill should provide clarity to fixed and variable costs. As the Member for Strathmore-Brooks brought out, he finds it difficult because variable costs change; hence, the name “variable cost.” They do change – that’s why they’re called variable – but the standardization is quite simple. If you know how the costs are calculated and if you know what they’re based on, if you know that they are based, or premised, on the cost of electricity or some other factor, then you as a consumer can manage that knowing the information that you have at your fingertips.

If you were to compare electricity bills today, particularly from the three major retailers of electricity, the formula for incorporating some of these variable costs is not clear. The formula, or the cost on how they’re broken out, is not clear. I presented this when I introduced this bill, that the variable cost for line loss – depending on whether you’re an EPCOR or an Enmax or an ATCO customer, you could have one charge for line loss, or you could have two charges for line loss or three charges and not understand what that means when you’re comparing bills.

I’d like to point out that the Market Surveillance Administrator just published a report called State of the Market 2014: The Residential Retail Markets for Electricity and Natural Gas. That report came out on November 27. What the Market Surveillance Administrator said is that retail competition is not uniform across the province because some customers clearly lack the ability to choose, and that’s based on information. So to have some sort of standardized bill so consumers can make a choice is absolutely paramount to a functioning system.

The Member for Medicine Hat was kind of interesting to me when he mentioned the comparison between utility bills in the market-based system to the utility bills in Medicine Hat. Medicine Hat is a fully regulated, city-owned utility and has no competition. It has a complete monopoly. It is apples and oranges. There is no comparison. When he makes the comparison to the Montana utility, which is a fully regulated, monopolized co-operative, again, there is absolutely no comparison – it is apples and oranges – unless the member wants to go to a fully regulated system again. I haven’t heard that, so I don’t understand the comparison. [interjection] To the Member for Airdrie: I didn’t quite hear that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please address your comments to and through the chair.

Carry on. You have precious little time left.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Market Surveillance Administrator in the same report referred to the barriers to competition in the retail market because of the lack of information that’s available. That’s what this bill is intended to do. It is intended to standardize the reporting of variable- and fixed-rate costs, how they are shown on these electric bills, particularly in regard to the regulated rate option or what’s referred to as the DFOs, or distribution facility owners. That’s your default rate. You ask customers: “Where do you get your electricity from? Who are you buying your electricity from?” Many don’t know.

When you get to the default rate and you’re dealing with the RRO, there is a merging or a bleeding over per se between the distribution facility owner and the retailer. It’s called cobranding in the electricity industry, and it’s interfering with the competitive market.

Again, when the members from the Wildrose Party brought up this issue, they didn’t understand this aspect. The point is simply this. The distribution facility owners have a competitive advantage to misrepresent and whether intentionally or unintentionally, it doesn’t matter.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

The Speaker: We have some members rising for a division.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it was already read into the record.

The Speaker: I’m sorry. I did not see them rise at the time.

Clerk, had you already started your speech by the time they rose? Did somebody notice?

Well, in any event, I saw members rise, so that usually calls for a division. It’s not the first time that it’s been a split-hair second late. Summon the bells, I guess.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:58 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I’d invite you to take your spots quickly, please. Thank you.

A division has been called, requiring a standing vote for second reading of Bill 201, the Electric Utilities (Transparency in Billing) Amendment Act, 2014. [interjections] Hon. members, please. We have a very serious aspect occurring right now, so drop the conversations, and let the table continue on with the official recognition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Boat Inspection and Cleaning

503. Mrs. Leskiw moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce mandatory inspections and cleaning of boats entering Alberta in order to protect our lakes from harmful and invasive organisms.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and privilege to rise today and open debate on Motion 503. This province is so fortunate to contain some of the most majestic natural wonders. Alberta is crossed by rivers, dotted with countless lakes, has one of the most spectacular mountain ranges in the world. That also means that we play host to a rich and diverse set of flora and fauna that inhabit these spaces. Embracing nature has always been a core element to Albertans and our communities. This province has gotten to where we are now by harnessing what we have been provided with, tending to farmland, nurturing vast fields of livestock, and fishing in our lakes and rivers.

One factor that plays a large part in our being able to maintain this relationship with nature for such a length of time is our ability to maintain a balance. This often involves limiting the use of our resources in various ways in order to ensure that we do not harm or destroy these natural assets. It is vital that stability is preserved so that future generations are not negatively impacted by actions taken now. However, overuse of our natural resources is not the only dynamic that causes shift in this balance. With an ever-increasing population and one that is highly mobile, Alberta has more people travelling in and out of our province than ever before. This enhances our lives greatly as we're constantly taking in new individuals, new ideas, and proving how incredibly accommodating and welcoming Albertans are.

Unfortunately, these same factors have also greatly increased the risk of this province being overrun by a variety of less welcome guests. Invasive aquatic species can have a devastating effect both environmentally and economically. Once an invasive species is introduced into our natural habitat, it can be nearly impossible to reverse. Invasive species compete with native species for the resources that they need to survive. They can seriously degrade water quality by increasing the concentration of toxins, altering nutrient flows in the food web, reducing the oxygen levels, and increasing its turbidity, or, in essence, its cloudiness.

The impact from this can be widespread in an invasive species altered environment, putting pressure on native species, that are often ill adapted to cope with them. Native species are pushed out of their natural habitat, lose food sources, and are exposed to new bacteria and organisms that can be harmful to sensitive species.

The impact is not confined to environment. Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development estimates it could cost Albertans up to $75 million annually if the invasive aquatic species were to establish itself in our province. They clog irrigation lines and water infrastructure, hurt tourism, fish, and many other industries that rely on our aquatic spaces.

The time to act is now, before the infestation actually happens. It is vital that everyone travelling in and out of our province is properly educated on this issue. Education is the key. The primary means by which invasive species enter this province is on recreational aquatic vehicles and trailers. Boaters need to be aware of the proper procedure for inspecting, cleaning, and drying their water vehicles as well as of the potential impact of failing to do so.

Currently all boat inspections are voluntary. ESRD and ARD monitor several lakes, irrigation districts, and water bodies throughout the province, but this is woefully inadequate in offering such assurance that we can prevent an invasive aquatic species outbreak. The fact remains that without organized and enforced protocols and procedures and without a more comprehensive invasive aquatic species strategy, we are at a much greater risk of taking in an unwelcome guest that we can never get rid of.

Mr. Speaker, I am greatly encouraged by the increased awareness surrounding this issue that we have produced as of late, but I also think this still falls short of what needs to be done in order to offer some reassurance that we are fully prepared. It cannot be understated that once an outbreak happens, it can be all but impossible to eradicate any invasive aquatic species. The time to act is before this takes place. That is why I am asking all my colleagues to join the fight against invasive species by supporting my Motion 503.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you. It is my pleasure to stand and speak to the member's motion to "introduce mandatory inspections and cleaning of boats entering Alberta in order to protect our lakes from harmful and invasive organisms." This is a huge concern all over Alberta, especially in southern Alberta and the area I represent, Strathmore-Brooks. We have two huge irrigation districts, the Eastern irrigation district and the Western irrigation district, who have spent a lot of time learning about these invasive species. I was at a seminar put on by ESRD in Brooks during the EID's annual general meeting. A lady came down and gave a very good explanation of what is happening and what needs to happen.

I think it's so important. You know, I was talking with my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. They have Chestermere Lake, a beautiful lake. It feeds the WID irrigation. Along with many other of the irrigation lakes and reservoirs in my riding, they have lots of recreation. They are dual purpose. They allow the farmers and ranchers to irrigate; plus, they allow recreational users to bring their boats for fishing.

The member who proposed this motion stated that the annual cost would be about $75 million if we allow these mussels and species to enter our waterways. I don't really know if that's enough. I think it could have the potential to be more than that. They're very, very hard to control. Once they get in, they just take over. The ecosystem in our lakes will be devastated. The cost is not only to the government to look after these issues, but it's also the cost to the individuals.

You know, I'm an irrigation farmer. I've got a couple of pivots that irrigate grass and crops. Man, if my pipes all of a sudden get all clogged up with these mussels, I've got hundreds and hundreds of metres of main line that I've got to rip out of the ground and replace.

It's something that will be tough to get a handle on and make sure that boats coming in – I think education is huge. We have to continually educate the recreational users bringing their boats in and out of the province. I listened to a video clip this morning, that, actually, I shared with caucus, about one of the lakes – I think it was in Minnesota – that they had. They showed underwater pictures of the bottom of the lake, and it was solid mussels. They just said: you know, we can't control them. The girl that came to Brooks to the EID AGM had pictures of a shopping cart they pulled out of the lake. You could kind of tell it was a shopping cart. It was totally covered. I mean, they just stick to everything.

You know, I support this motion. I think it's something that we all have to advocate for. I hope the government takes this one step further and implements some sort of inspection stations. I think they had four this past summer, and they were voluntary inspections. I know they have dogs trained that can smell the boats and tell if they have these mussels. It's so important.

The cost: you know, that's something we're going to have to look at, if there are user fees or some sort of cost control measures. It may enhance people looking after it themselves before they leave a lake if they know: okay; if we go through an inspection, it's going to cost us to have our boat cleaned if it isn't clean. That's something that we can definitely work on together with the government and all the different agencies in Alberta that are affected by this.

In closing, I'd just thank the member for bringing this forward. It's a huge, huge issue. If you don't know much about it, I suggest you do a lot of research and find out how bad they actually are and how important it is to keep them out of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

To the fourth party. Let's go the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is a necessary motion. It's a problem that we're seeing move across the country and move across the continent, really. I mean, of course, these species or any organisms don't necessarily respect national boundaries or provincial boundaries. The zebra mussels are moving east and north and south at the same time, I suppose, and there is a direct economic and environmental impact because this is an invasive species, that is not native to most of or, really, any of North America. A lack of predator control makes it pretty obvious. Of course, it does plug up your infrastructure in regard to water pipes and so forth and creates levels of toxicity in lakes and other bodies of water, so it's pretty obvious.

I think that we can work to perhaps combat these invasive species like zebra mussels in conjunction with other invasive species as well such as the more long-standing problem of the Eurasian water milfoil. We know that this has been a problem in other parts of the country longer and in the province to a certain extent. It's clear that washing boats really does make a difference. Most people don't necessarily do that. Of course, I think that we need to make sure that we provide a way by which people can do this, right? It's one thing to make a law, and then it's something else to actually have a mechanism by which people can actually follow the law and wash their boats and remove invasive species or seeds and/or remnants of organisms that can get into the next lake.

As New Democrats we certainly are supporters of environmental protection, and we know that there is an ongoing problem with things such as algae blooms in this province right now. I mean, we hate to correct the hon. member that introduced this bill, but we don't have countless lakes. We have a very limited number of lakes, and you can't presume that without stringent protection they will just remain as good as they were before, right? I mean, that's important to consider. We know that, let's say, the blue-green algae problem is growing, and it's not just from invasive species, Mr. Speaker, but from fertilizer and from animals adjacent to lakes as well.

Certainly, this is an issue that needs to be dealt with. We have to make sure that we do put people into actually enforcing this motion, but in the balance certainly I do support this motion, and so do the Alberta New Democrats.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I first of all would like to thank the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing forward this motion. I think it's a very appropriate motion at this point in time as there is certainly some work that we've been doing in Environment and Sustainable Resource Development that follows along this line, particularly knowing that this is a particular issue that has been getting closer and closer to our borders and is something that we must all be aware of and that we must on behalf of Albertans take action on. That action would be aiming to protect our aquatic environments and infrastructure from invasive species like these particular mussels.

What happens, Mr. Speaker – I'll just go through a brief overview of why this is a problem – is that when these mussels become introduced into our aquatic ecosystems, they start competing with the native wildlife in the ecosystem. They start to filter out vital nutrients, they start to clog infrastructure such as irrigation and municipal water systems, and they are linked to toxic algae blooms. Essentially, these types of experiences have caused billions and billions of dollars in damage across the world up to this point, and this is something that is a significant financial risk to this province and something that we must do everything within our means to avoid.

As I mentioned, jurisdictions outside of our borders have already been experiencing negative onsets of invasive species in their aquatic ecosystems for years now, and it's estimated that that financial risk to this province is about $75 million per year, again something that I don't think the Alberta taxpayers are particularly interested in footing the bill for if we can possibly prevent it.

As I said, jurisdictions closer to our borders have recently experienced the invasion of these species into their lakes and water systems. It was in October of 2013 that zebra mussels were identified in Lake Winnipeg. This was the first time invasive mussels have been found in a prairie province, and, Mr. Speaker, once an infestation begins, it can be almost impossible to stop. The potential solutions can have their own environmental trade-offs. This is why we are working hard as a province on preventing invasive species from crossing our borders.

Part of this work is public education, Mr. Speaker; that is, encouraging boaters to clean, drain, and dry their boats every time that they remove them from the water. These simple steps are critical to ensuring these particular species are not present in Alberta's lakes and infrastructures.

Another step that we are taking is the monitoring for invasive species and encouraging Albertans to report to our hotline any evidence of mussels that they might see, and we have a particular number. I want to highlight that. It's 1.855.336.BOAT. That's 1.855.336.2628. Perhaps one of the most important tools, though, Mr. Speaker, that we can bring to bear on this issue is about inspections, which is of the nature of this particular motion from the hon. member.

Last year between the month of June and the end of August we completed 2,500 inspections of boats entering into Alberta. As a result, there were two boats that were headed for Alberta's lakes that were found to have zebra mussels attached to them. One of the contaminated boat owners admitted and expressed extreme thankfulness for the inspection because they didn't want to be the person responsible that would bring these mussels into an Alberta lake. There were another 99 boats of the 2,500 that were deemed high risk, and by high risk we mean those that were coming from states that have had infestations of mussels or they were coming from states or provinces where there were no inspection or monitoring programs in place.

To help strengthen this program, one of the things that we've started to utilize is sniffer dogs. These are highly trained dogs that are able to sniff out zebra and quagga mussels that are attached to the boats. These mussels, in fact, at times are so small that you can't even see them, and these highly trained animals can actually sniff them out. Of course, all of the actions that we've taken at this point around inspection have been voluntary, Mr. Speaker, and with only about half of the boaters stopping to have their watercraft inspected last summer, we are thinking that stricter measures may be necessary to protect our waterways.

Today's motion asks our government to implement even greater proactive measures to prevent invasive species from getting a foothold in Alberta. I'm proud to say that our government is giving consideration to a number of improvements to these preventative actions, including making boat checks mandatory. Aquatic invasive species are a serious matter that must be dealt with in a proactive manner, and if Alberta were to make boat checks mandatory, we would be the first province to do so.

Since Manitoba discovered mussels in Lake Winnipeg, they have outlined early detection and rapid response as critical priorities for saving habitats from invasive species. You know, upon early detection in Manitoba species are placed in one of two categories that outline minimum management criteria used to begin steps of action. If feasible, eradication is the first option if species are detected. A lead agency is quickly formed, and a management committee develops an eradication strategy. Education and awareness initiatives are also implemented there so that the public are able to become proactive leaders in assisting with the containment, detection, and extermination of these species.

In 2012 Ontario established an invasive species strategic plan. The current threats posed by invasive species in Ontario are significant, Mr. Speaker. Compared to other provinces, the number of invasive species in Ontario is actually the highest, with Quebec and British Columbia trailing only slightly behind. The Ontario government has been able to utilize a national program that provides a strategic invasive species framework under which provincial plans can be developed. It's the Ontario ministry of natural resources that has taken a lead on this. The objective of their strategic plan is to prevent new invaders from arriving and surviving in the province of Ontario and to slow and, where possible, reverse the spread of existing invasive species. The steps of the action founded in Ontario's strategic plan are: one, to prevent; two, to detect; three, to respond; four, to manage; and, five, to adapt.

I want to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this motion because in doing so, we can prevent and detect and do those first two action steps and, hopefully, never have to get to the last three: respond, manage, and adapt.

Ontario's strategic plan also highlights the importance of working with neighbouring jurisdictions and the federal government, specifically on research, monitoring, and enforcement. [interjection] One more minute. Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I believe today's debate speaks to these relationships and urges our province to become a clear leader in preventing invasive mussels. Certainly, this is something that I brought up with the Minister of Environment from Saskatchewan, who I've had the opportunity to chat with. This is something that interests both of our provinces. They've been very helpful in working towards our strategy in holding back the mountain pine beetle because they have a very keen interest to ensure that it doesn't move eastward. I think we have the same interest in ensuring that invasive mussels don't move westward. So working with other jurisdictions is very, very important.

Again, I'd like to thank the hon. member for her leadership with this motion. This is something that our department is taking very seriously. We must act now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

A member from the Wildrose? Yes. Cypress-Medicine Hat, please.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take a brief minute and, first of all, thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for her motion. I thank the ESRD minister for his words and his understanding around the situation. I, too, very, very much support the motion for all the reasons that everyone mentioned, how invasive these species are. The cost, I think, is $75 million. It could be underestimated if our lakes had a huge problem or our irrigation pipes all clogged up.

I just wanted to stand and, you know, reiterate my support. The costs around it: I'm glad to hear that you're going to be having some discussion on that. After all, we are a rat-free province, and the costs of keeping us rat free are usually accepted. That's okay from the taxpayers' standpoint. I'm not sure if boating would fall into the same category or if a user fee would be more in line. It seems to be.

I think that this motion is well on the way to handling what we have to handle, to make sure that this invasive species doesn't cost our economy millions of dollars. I, too, will support it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Third and fourth parties? Anyone wishing?

If not, let me move on to the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to just make a few comments on Motion 503, which I plan to support. I'll keep it brief because a lot of it has been said. I think that there's no way to underestimate the risk that these invasive species could mean to our waterways. I thank the member for bringing this forward. I know that she has a lot of pristine lakes and so on in her part of the world as we do throughout the province. Strathmore-Brooks, of course, mentioned the catastrophic impact it could have on irrigation systems in southern Alberta. I think it's good that the member has brought this forward to profile it up, and I thank the hon. minister of environment for his comments.

I think my only question or concern would be how the inspection process would work. I understand that coming across the international border from the United States, there's obviously a very thorough process for dealing with traffic. The traffic coming in from our neighbouring provinces and territory to the north: I'm not quite sure how we will catch that. But those are things that can all be dealt with between the environment ministry and, I would think, the Solicitor General, Transportation, and others, so we'll leave that up to them.

I fully plan to support the motion and would encourage all of the other members here to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Any other opposition members?

If not, then let me move on to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to get to say a few words relating to Motion 503, which states: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce mandatory inspections and cleaning of boats entering Alberta in order to protect our lakes from harmful and invasive organisms." I also want to acknowledge and thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this forward. This is a very important issue, and it's very important that we raise the awareness of all Albertans about it.

I would like to speak for a minute or two regarding the agricultural context to which this applies. This is not a theoretical issue. It is something that is of great importance to our agricultural industry, which is the second-largest industry in Alberta. I'll just provide you with a few facts, Mr. Speaker. My comments are going to be focused on our irrigation infrastructure.

Irrigation in southern Alberta supplies water to some million acres of land and 50 reservoirs. We have infrastructure that includes 8,000 kilometres of canals and pipelines, and they're worth an estimated $3.5 billion. Each year my department provides grants to irrigation districts in southern Alberta, which then partner with them the money that they raise. The contribution of government at this point is around $20 million, $21 million a year. I also would say that a figure like $75 million in costs to us seems light when one thinks about the devastating effect that damage to our irrigation infrastructure could have.

It should also be noted that Alberta has about 70 per cent of the national irrigation infrastructure, and those acres support 55 different crops, a very diverse collection of crops, many of which people don't really even think of when they think of agriculture in Alberta, and some of them are very high value. As a matter of fact, 20 per cent of the total food production in Alberta comes from these irrigated areas. Also, as has already been mentioned, it's not just for agricultural production, but it's also for recreation and the life of many rural communities. Some 50 rural communities rely on irrigation infrastructure.

I was in Lethbridge some time ago, and one of our staff in my department showed me some cutaway pipes and what they look like once they've been affected by these invasive species such as mussels. It really is a powerful thing to see when you see a pipe that's completely closed off, and one can imagine the concern that our agricultural producers and many people who live in the irrigated areas have when they contemplate the kind of damage that could be done.

I want to acknowledge the work that's being done by my colleague the Minister of ESRD and his department for the work that they are doing. He has mentioned the voluntary inspections that have already been undertaken. We can see, I think, clearly that preventative action is what is so important here. We can't wait for it to hit us and then try to react. I suppose the challenge will be to come up with things that we can do that are practical in their application. As has already been mentioned, that may be easier in some parts of the province than in others, but I think this is a very valuable conversation for us to have. It will lead us towards a greater awareness, greater education, and also some more effective steps that can be taken to prevent very significant damage to Alberta and its infrastructure.

Once again, thanks to the hon. member for bringing it forward, and I look forward to hearing further debate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have Calgary-Bow, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Ms DeLong: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to thank the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this forward. As Canadian vice-president of PNWER, Pacific NorthWest Economic Region, this is something that we have been working on for a few years. The Pacific NorthWest Economic Region is five states and five provinces and territories that are the only part of North America that is not infected by the quagga and zebra mussels. Pretty well the whole rest of North America is infected.

Now, they came from Russia decades ago, actually, into the Great Lakes and have since spread from there. Where they come from has very low calcium in the water, so back there they are not especially a problem. But here we tend to have high calcium. The sedimentary basin that we live in produces an awful lot of calcium coming through. Because of that we are especially vulnerable to these.

They are wonderful creatures. They take the water, which, you know, looks a little bit murky maybe because of all the stuff in it, and totally clean it. Totally clean it. You have beautiful water. You can see down 20 feet, 50 feet. Unfortunately, nothing else can live there because, essentially, the mussels eat everything except for blue-green algae. They will not eat blue-green algae, unfortunately. If it gets into a lake, you end up with the mussels everywhere, these sharp mussels so that you can't, especially, walk in bare feet. So your lakes are rather yucky around the outside. But the blue-green algae just wonderfully blooms there. So they are really bad. You know, we've already talked about effects on agriculture.

By the way, we are looking right now at control measures that cost $1 million, $2 million, $3 million, but the actual cost once they come is about $50 million per year – per year – to try to control them. Now, they used to be – our biggest vulnerability actually was Lake Mead down in California, and it's totally infected. So the idea was to protect our southern border, and that's what we were working with in PNWER, protecting the southern border, but then we got the infection in Lake Winnipeg. Now, we sort of had this hope – this hope – that massive doses of fertilizer might kill them off. That was the idea. What we did was that we put potash in there, and we put enormous amounts of potash just in the bays where they had found them. Unfortunately, it didn't work. There has been in the world – they have not yet found a way of controlling them. Essentially, all you can do is put a border around them, and we've been working on the outer border, but of course that is not good enough. We need to work also on our border, on the Alberta border.

So I urge you to support this motion, and hopefully we can up our game a little bit and make sure that they never do come here. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to offer some perspective from the point of view of my experience as a veterinarian and also from the point of view of animal disease control. I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this motion. It is a very important issue. The potential damage has already been well laid out by my colleagues on both sides of the House. My comments don't mean to minimize this in any way, but I do want to state that control of this particular organism, of these two species of mussels, is going to be a lot harder than I think we realize.

From an epidemiological standpoint – epidemiology is the study of disease patterns, and we really have to consider these organisms as disease organisms. We've already talked a little bit about the hardness of these mussels: their ability to spread, their ability to survive outside of water, their ability to escape detection because, in fact, they reproduce through veligers, which are a tiny larval form, which are microscopic; they can't be seen. The work that the hon. Minister of ESRD described with regard to dogs that can actually smell these mussels is incredible work, and these are incredibly sophisticated dogs. Nonetheless, the control of this organism through visual means alone is inadequate.

Really, it was mentioned in the hon. mover's motion that education is the key, and she is right. Truthfully, to rely only on an enforcement mechanism to prevent this mussel from entering into our province is, I would suggest to you, doomed to failure. Our border simply cannot be guarded in a way that is practical when you consider that a good chunk of our Alberta-Saskatchewan border has crossings every two miles.

Mandatory inspection, while it sounds like a good idea, would truly require that all watercraft be funneled into specific inspection stations along the Alberta-Saskatchewan border. This year we had voluntary inspection at the Vermilion weigh scale, for example, and in fact one of the two cases that the minister mentioned was actually determined at the Vermilion weigh scale. But the Vermilion weigh scale is 60 kilometres into Alberta, and there are a lot of places where people driving watercraft can drive in on highway 16 and then drive either north or south before they ever reach the Vermilion weigh scale. So if we're going to be realistic about controlling this organism and preventing its relocation into the province of Alberta, we have to set up these inspection stations right at the border or, even better, talk to the Saskatchewan government and establish them in Saskatchewan.

The truth of the matter is that when you're talking about disease control and when you're talking about, you know, making sure that organisms don't get into our province, we are dealing with a very, very difficult situation given the mobility of populations and given the multiple routes that you can go through. In fact, when we talk about disease control from a point of view of other diseases that we have to watch out for from an animal health standpoint, if the province of Saskatchewan is infected, the province of Alberta is essentially considered as infected as well. Diseases like foot-and-mouth, rinderpest, bluetongue, anaplasmosis, or any of the other foreign, reportable diseases that we have to be worried about that would have an equal or greater economic impact as zebra and quagga mussels: Alberta would already be considered as an infected area.

So while, again, I applaud the member for raising the awareness of this – and it is extremely important for anyone who is involved with any sort of aquatic recreation. In fact, it's not just boaters. Scuba divers, your scuba equipment can be a mechanical vector for these organisms. Fisherman, if you use live bait and transfer live bait from one body of water to another, they can act as a mechanical vector for these organisms.

There is a lot of additional information we need, and when we say rinse, clean, and dry your boats, in fact, you should be rinsing the boats with high-pressure sprayers, with 200 psi sprayers, or you should be soaking them with over 40 degrees Celsius water. That's how you have to kill these organisms. They are extremely tough. They are extremely hardy. So with the investment that we have to make, I would suggest, in some form of mandatory inspection, while I understand the desire for that, I will tell you that from a practical standpoint, quite frankly, I don't think it will work.

I think our best investment and our best way to summon our resources to try to prevent this is to provide as high a level of public education as we possibly can as to the gravity and the consequences of introducing these organisms into our province and to let recreational watercraft owners and other people who frequent lakes outside of the province of Alberta that might be infected with these organisms know the kind of measures that they have to take to make sure that they aren't the ones to bring this organism into Alberta.

The consequences are devastating. There is no question about that. That has been well covered by other colleagues, but I will tell you that a mandatory inspection program alone, without a thorough education program, will not work. I'm supportive of this motion because I'm supportive of the direction in restricting these organisms from getting into our province, but, Mr. Speaker, a mandatory inspection program alone, in my opinion and based on my experience in terms of health control of foreign diseases in our country, would not work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all my colleagues for speaking on this very important motion. Doing nothing is not an option. We need to do something. Doing nothing, we're going to devastate this province, and education is a start, and just by bringing this motion forward, we in this room are already a little bit more educated than we were before this motion was even introduced. I live in an area that is the Lakeland area. If this got into our lakes, that's a lot of our bread and butter for tourism, for our beauty, and so on.

The only thing that I have to say is that I trust that our Ministry of ESRD will bring some sort of measure forward to help protect this. I agree with the minister there, that we need to educate. We need to educate our boaters, our fishermen on the devastation of this. I urge all my colleagues to vote for it if for nothing else than to bring this topic forward and to educate the Alberta public about it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until the evening session, which starts at 7:30 tonight. Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 3

Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today at third reading to discuss amendments to the Personal Information Protection Act. The proposed changes will ensure that the Personal Information Protection Act authorizes trade unions to collect, use, and disclose personal information for matters related to labour relation disputes. Those amendments will address a trade union's right of freedom of expression under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms while maintaining key protection for Albertans' personal information under the act. For this reason I have no hesitation in supporting the proposed amendments.

With that, I move third reading of Bill 3, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the first speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly very interested in rising to speak about Bill 3. This is something that we've been watching for for quite some time. You know, we were very pleased, in fact, when it first came forward that this was going to be in the fall session of this year's legislation. Indeed, I just got back from the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, speaking to the Privacy Commissioner. Again, she expressed her sense of urgency about ensuring that these amendments were made to the Personal Information Protection Act. I think that everyone knows that the Supreme Court ruled on the constitutional inadequacy of our legislation here in the province of Alberta, so we were watching and hoping that, of course, we would meet the deadline, which I guess we technically have, to ensure that we follow the order and the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada in regard to fixing our PIPA legislation.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we were quite disappointed when we actually saw Bill 3. It's a bare minimum sort of bill, that I don't think necessarily even achieves the most important objective, which is to make Alberta's personal information legislation constitutionally compliant. I think, you know, that we need to check back on that because, of course, if we're building something here that maybe the Supreme Court will hit back to us, then we are really not doing the job. I think that the Supreme Court made it fairly clear in their ruling last year that there are far too restrictive problems with our current legislation to pursue a fair and legitimate objective.

We're seeing a number of problems that we would like to, I guess, point out here. First of all, the Supreme Court was fairly clear that the problems with PIPA extended far beyond the restrictions on freedom of expression by the union in the midst of a particular strike, that only apply to that strike. Rather, PIPA represents much wider, far-reaching infringements on the rights to free expression by everybody. In fact, the court saw fit to strike down the entire piece of legislation instead of just severing this one part that prevented unions from collecting, using, and disclosing information in the midst of a strike.

So it seems fairly clear that by only addressing that narrow issue, Bill 3, in fact, does not improve PIPA in a meaningful way but actually ignores the findings and the spirit of the Supreme Court ruling, which leaves us, Mr. Speaker, with a piece of legislation that's ripe for future conflicts and future challenges of the Charter, using government and court resources to deal with litigation that will arise for many, many segments of society that are affected by expansive restrictions on free speech. That's what the essence of our concerns are around, free speech and restrictions placed on that.

The basic idea that a union has the right of freedom of expression, communicating with the public, trying to persuade them is a fundamental and general principle of the objectives of the collective bargaining. The court hardly ever even needed to reiterate this, right? Paragraph 17 of the Supreme Court ruling:

... the Adjudicator's finding that none of these exemptions applied to allow the Union to collect, use and disclose personal information for the purpose of advancing its interests in a labour dispute, we conclude without difficulty that it restricts freedom of expression.

I mean, I don't think it can be any more unequivocal than that, Mr. Speaker, the ruling of the Supreme Court.

As we know, for unions to be effective in protecting the rights, interests, and well-being of their members, they need to use a number of measures to represent those interests. Amongst those, communication – in other words, the ability to express themselves freely – is one of the most important elements. For example, the unions need to be able to communicate with the public or the government about unsafe workplaces. They need to communicate with the public in order to influence pressure and public opinion in the context of labour disputes and negotiation processes as well. We know that this is a fundamental exercise that takes place in the midst of a legal strike, and we know that it's essential to communicate your position both to your members and to the general public as well.

The Supreme Court also saw the same thing, certainly, and was unequivocal in stating:

PIPA imposes restrictions on a union's ability to communicate and persuade the public of its cause, impairing its ability to use one of its most effective bargaining strategies in the course of a lawful strike.

That's paragraph 37 of their ruling.

Further, Mr. Speaker, in paragraph 29 they say:

This Court has long recognized the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in the context of labour disputes . . . "For employees, freedom of expression becomes not only an important but an essential component of labour relations."

The court has also been clear over the years that picketing is a legitimate form of expression, not just in cases of lawful strikes, which is the only narrow exception that seems to be carved out in this particular draft of legislation that we have here today. Certainly, picketing is important. Communicating what is taking place on a picket line is absolutely essential, and a union or individuals should not be restricted from that. We know that to be the case, and the Supreme Court has reiterated that loud and clear.

Again, picketing is far from the only important communication method that unions use. Take, say, for example, the tainted beef scandal at XL Foods in 2012. The union raised concerns publicly about the issues in the plant that were leading to contaminated meat. That's a case where the union was engaged in expressive activity not just for the purposes of a strike but for food safety issues and workplace health and safety issues. Bill 3 does nothing to address those potential restrictions on these types of activities by unions or by anyone, really. Certainly, in the case of XL Foods the UFCW was actually doing a great public service to both expose poor practices in the slaughterhouse processing plant but also to forward an agenda that actually helped to clean up the issue, which was good not just for public health and public safety but for the meat industry in general here in the province of Alberta.

We still are recovering from that, but we are still feeling the positive effects of that action, too. If we restrict the capacity of individuals or of unions to point out health and safety issues, then, of course, we are doing that same situation a disservice, right? These rights of expression, Mr. Speaker, don't just benefit unions. As I said, the major purpose is to address political and social issues of the day and then work for social justice for all Albertans. So the specific work that a union might do to, as I said before, express and talk about health and safety issues but also workplace standards, wages, and so forth indirectly and directly affects positively the larger society as well. Anyway, by denying a key right necessary for individuals or unions to communicate and achieve these objectives, this bill is too restrictive, and we think that the well-being of all Albertans and, in fact, democracy is adversely affected as well.

It's interesting that the power imbalance between an employee and an employer was cited as a reason for excepting the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information from the typical prohibition in the context of the employment relationship. Since the employer needs the information and the employee might not feel that it is truly voluntary, the act allows for the collection, use, and disclosure of information without consent. They also noted that it would be inefficient and impractical to require consent in all cases.

So it seems that on one hand that this PC government understands the practicalities of a power imbalance in an employment relationship when it's convenient for them but not when it comes to the need of unions to engage in advocacy and in public discussion as well. Certainly, while we saw the historical need and, in fact, the immediacy and urgency for Bill 3 to come forward here in this fall session, it ends up falling short for the purposes that it was subscribed for. We certainly are not in favour of the bill as a result.

Thank you. We'll have more discussion on it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 3, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014. Now, this bill became necessary as a remedy to a judicial review that ultimately resulted in the Personal Information Protection Act being declared unconstitutional and struck down. The bill is intended to make PIPA compliant with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Bill 3 will hopefully make PIPA compliant with the two sections of the Charter of Rights and fundamental freedoms respecting freedom of expression.

If we look at the situation that was arising, this bill came before the Supreme Court as a result of a labour dispute here in this province. It went to court, and on November 15 the court struck down the Personal Information Protection Act in its entirety and granted a 12-month stay to the Alberta government and an opportunity to replace the law. The Charter application resulted from a 305-day strike at the Gateway casino in West Edmonton Mall, which started in 2006. What was utilized there was the collection of information by the union where it was trying to express its opinion on what was happening at the work site. They were trying to utilize this information to get out to the general public what was happening at the location, what the strike was about, what their workers were faced with and were trying to send that information out to the public.

The Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Appeal, and the Supreme Court of Canada all declared PIPA to be unconstitutional because it was too restrictive on freedom of expression in the context of a legal strike. In fact, in their decision the Supreme Court stated:

But the Act does not include any mechanisms by which a union's constitutional right to freedom of expression may be balanced with the interests protected by the legislation. This Court has long recognized the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in the context of labour disputes. PIPA prohibits the . . . expressive purposes related to labour relations. Picketing represents a particularly crucial form of expression with strong historical roots. PIPA imposes restrictions on a union's ability to communicate and persuade the public of its cause, impairing its ability to use one of its most effective bargaining strategies in the course of a lawful strike.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court found:

This infringement of the right to freedom of expression is disproportionate to the government's objective of providing individuals with control over the personal information that they expose by crossing a picketline. It is therefore not justified under s. 1 of the Charter.

At the end of the day, the court was balancing rights. They understood that what a union is supposed to do is to organize their workers, to get information out to the public for them to understand their position, and that the employer uses the same opportunity to do so for their cause. Also, the union recognized the power imbalance that exists between employers and unions in the way they go about their business and understood that in order for us to have freedom of association and to give it some real teeth, the ability of people to join a trade union or a workplace union is paramount under our Constitution. In order to give that any meaning, it has to have respectful ways for it to get its message across. That is also balanced with the freedom of expression. The unions are allowed to use their information and use the ability to get their information out to the press.

We also understand that there's a second component to this, that the current amendments may – and I stress “may” – be able to meet the requirements of the Supreme Court. It appears that they are also still infringing on what the unions' obligations are to the rest of society and to situations that may be outside of a direct legal strike. While these amendments speak to the right of unions to collect information in the service of their freedom of expression during a strike, it ignores the vital role that unions play in speaking out against social injustices. More generally, this is the role that the Supreme Court referenced in delivering much of its commentary in the decision about it in the first place.

There is no doubt that trade unions have made many public service announcements, whether that's in regard to workplace conditions, whether that's in regard to inequality, whether that's in regard to other instances that happen in society. In my view, it is important that they be allowed to adequately comment on issues that are of concern both to them and to society in general.

We look at other cases where an expanding exemption could have been useful, and that would have been the 2012 tainted beef scandal with XL Foods in Brooks, Alberta. You know, we can look at a whole lot of situations where we could have an ability to allow really constructive social commentary on what we're doing and whether it's in the best interests of our society going forward. I think the union movement deserves that right and that ability to be able to go forward on that front.

If you look at this, I believe we're keeping in a minimalist mode here in Alberta, only protecting what we need to do for the temporary time being. I think we should have expanded it more broadly to enable trade unions to be able to promote different aspects of society that may be in our best general protection and to go from there.

In the main, I think that the government has done some good here by putting forward these amendments to get basic compliance with the Personal Information Protection Act. It remains to be seen whether these amendments, which appear to be of a bare-minimum nature, will hold up in a court should they be tested and the like. We may have to see another lengthy legal debate as to whether we in Alberta are holding up our end of the bargain when it comes to constitutional protections and fairness and the balancing of freedom of association and freedom of expression because we understand that we have these abilities and nothing is clear.

There is no doubt that both of these elements have reasonable limits in a free and democratic society, yet erring on the side that would protect society and allow people to have as large a voice as possible, in my view, is in the best interests of our society. When we try to shut down expression, shut down people's ability to communicate legitimate concerns on the way society is formed, is shaped, is running, in my view that's counterintuitive to the way we would want information to be received by the public.

The more information the public gets, Mr. Speaker, the more ability they have to gauge and dissect the information for themselves and make an informed opinion. I think this is something we should try to strive for, getting the public more information from various sources, whether they be from an employer, a trade union, government front benches, or opposition parties. This should be deemed a good thing, and we should try to expand that in all cases where it is warranted and where it is legitimate and where it is moved for reasonable purposes. In my view, you know, the government has had first crack at it, and we'll see whether it goes far enough to recognize the fundamental importance of balancing historical rights and obligations going forward in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Those are my comments to this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to third reading of PIPA. I appreciate the previous two speakers sharing some of the background with the members in the House here on the relevance of this legislation and where it's coming from. Knowing our history is very, very important before we move forward.

Before I get into the legislation, I just want to mention my frustration with the fact that we are already in third reading. I think it does need to be iterated, you know, that the government has a tradition of following what they put on the Order Paper as far as Orders of the Day and government business and what we do, and unfortunately Bill 3 was not on the Order Paper to go through Committee of the Whole when it did. We actually had amendments with Parliamentary Counsel on this bill, but because the government broke with tradition and decided to force it through, our amendments got stuck at Parliamentary Counsel's desk.

I think it's really important to note this, that, again, as members know, Committee of the Whole is the opportunity for opposition parties to put forward amendments to try to strengthen a bill. Our abilities are severely limited when the government moves forward when we're waiting for approval from Parliamentary Counsel on amendments. I found that to be extremely disrespectful on the side of the government, trying to rush forward legislation, as we often see in this House, and ramming it through, again without acknowledging consequences that come with that. There are 87 elected members of this House. We represent roughly 4 million Albertans from all over the province. When you shut out or disallow, through whatever means, members from getting up and speaking or adding amendments and having a robust conversation, we're seriously infringing on the democratic rights of not just the members of this House but the people that we represent.

Having said that, now I will move into my interpretation of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Now, as the previous two speakers have said, you know, part of where PIPA and this conversation are going – our original intention was to support the bill. But once we had some time to go through it, seeing that there are significant challenges that I have with this bill – I mean, the original act of PIPA all spawns from 2006 at the Palace Casino strike line. The UFCW were filming people crossing the picketing lines and using that in their information. Basically, the adjudicator first found UFCW had contravened PIPA but that its collection, use, disclosure of the personal information was an expressive purpose, which are some of the functions of a labour union.

The Privacy Commissioner can't make findings on constitutional issues, and the case instead proceeded to a judicial review and up the courts, all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada. Now, the Supreme Court of Canada didn't just overturn the ruling of the adjudicator; it actually threw the whole act out. It ruled that sections in question violated the UFCW's freedom of expression and that other sections of the act were more restrictive than necessary, and the act needed to be struck down in its entirety, Mr. Speaker.

You know, what members of the House need to know and acknowledge is that picketing is an important form of expression for unions and therefore part of their freedom of expression and part of their right to collective bargaining and informing the public, and I'll talk in a little bit about the duty of unions to go beyond just informing their members about issues to informing the public and therefore serving the public interest.

Specifically on PIPA here, as I said, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court ruled PIPA unconstitutional and struck it down. Now, this bill currently, as it's written, is problematic for the fact that the way it's written, we've already got issues or concerns with future court challenges, future Charter challenges. You know, as many members of the House may realize, what it does when there are court challenges: it gets tied up in the courts; it costs a lot of money; it wastes time.

As you're going to see, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to recommend that members vote against this bill so that we can get it right. There is a desire to get it right. We acknowledge that there are time restraints and that it's time sensitive. However, I think that just passing a poorly written piece of legislation that's going to be challenged is irresponsible, quite frankly.

The background on this freedom of expression is that, again, unions have a right to freedom of expression by communicating with the public in their efforts to persuade the public. You know, when we look at the example from the Supreme Court, specifically at paragraph 17, given the Adjudicator's finding that none of these exemptions applied to allow the Union to collect, use and disclose personal information for the purpose of advancing its interests in a labour dispute, [they concluded] without difficulty that it restricts freedom of expression.

I mean, basically, Mr. Speaker, unions need to be able to communicate with the public or the government about unsafe workplaces. They need to be able to communicate in order to influence and pressure public opinion in the context of labour disputes and negotiation processes. The Supreme Court was unequivocal in saying that "PIPA imposes restrictions on a union's ability to communicate and persuade the public of its cause, impairing its ability to use one of its most effective bargaining strategies in the course of a lawful strike," which came from paragraph 37 of the Supreme Court's ruling.

Very, very important, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-Calder pointed out, is the example of the tainted beef at XL Foods back in 2012. There you had an example of a union raising concerns publicly about the issues in the plant that were leading to contaminated meat. You know, I remember speaking in this House when we had a different piece of legislation in front of us, and that's when we talked about the whistle-blower legislation. One of the concerns that the Alberta NDP had was that it didn't extend to the private sector. When we look at everything that happened because of the tainted meat back in 2012 — from the amount of revenue that was lost, the amount of meat that was wasted, folks that were laid off when the plant shut down — much of that could have been avoided if the private-sector workers were protected in blowing the whistle.

You know, we had dialogues with folks who worked at that plant who said that there were some unsanitary practices going on, but none of them were willing to blow the whistle because they were scared of losing their jobs and they were scared of other ramifications as well. Many of the workers are temporary foreign workers who are afraid of being deported back to their home country. Here's a case in point where when you give and allow individuals and labour unions the ability to act on behalf of the public interest and in the public interest, and they are protected and given the proper tools to do so, it benefits everyone, and that would have saved many, many dollars, that would have saved time, that would have saved, well, all of the wasted meat and product that occurred, Mr. Speaker.

By denying unions a key right necessary for them to communicate to the public, to their members in order to achieve their objectives, this bill as it's currently written, Mr. Speaker, is quite restrictive, and it's going to affect the well-being not just of those directly involved but, I would argue, of all Albertans.

You know, Mr. Speaker, what's interesting when I look at a case between local 558 and Pepsi-Cola Canada, free expression provides "an avenue for unions to promote collective bargaining issues as public ones to be played out in civic society, rather than being confined to a narrow realm of individualized economic disputes." Now, Bill 3 as it's written, unfortunately, is creating a lot of limitations and narrow exceptions. It doesn't do anything as it's currently written to extend and improve the rights to freedom of expression for most Albertans. In fact, it actually restricts it, especially when we talk about public safety and workplace safety.

You need to consider, Mr. Speaker and all members of the House, that strikes are not the only part of a labour negotiation process — and we've explained this many times, that actually a strike is usually the last resort that unions will go to in order to settle a dispute — but that process requires freedom of expression for unions to advocate on behalf of their members. Again, I would argue that much of that advocacy work goes beyond the scope of just, you know, their own union members and serves the public good.

From the beginning of the process to the end unions need to be able to communicate freely in order to advance their interests and, as I've said, also to advocate on behalf of the public good. By extending the right to collect, use, and disclose personal information only in the context of a labour dispute, which is how Bill 3 is currently written, Mr. Speaker, it flies in the face of the Supreme Court findings and advice because of that restriction to gather information only when there is a labour dispute and not when, obviously, there isn't one.

Now, the Supreme Court wrote very clearly that freedom of expression is crucial in all parts of the labour context, not just in the event of a lawful strike. So this narrow interpretation of this bill that the government has taken actually contravenes or goes against what the Supreme Court had ruled just a few years ago. You know, we very much would like to have seen the scope broadened a lot more. As I mentioned earlier, we had amendments that would have done that, but again sometimes I guess courtesy is not being displayed. The way it's currently written it doesn't deal with the underlying nature of PIPA that the Supreme Court found unconstitutional — okay? — that PIPA unreasonably restricts the free expression of many parties in legitimate contexts.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta NDP realizes the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in democracy and the need for all government legislation to restrict it as little as possible and preferably not at all, but I would argue not just in legislation but also for all members of this Assembly. I won't bring up what occurred before the break. All constitutionally protected activity, including the rights besides freedom of expression — like freedom of association, for example — should be exempted from the restrictions that are currently contained in PIPA.

Another issue of concern here, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill adds the ability, when we're talking about privacy and information law, to adjudicate matters that are essential questions of labour law and labour relations. So it's taking the ability of the Labour Relations Board, which is more appropriate when dealing with concerns, and moving it over to the desk of the Privacy Commissioner.

Now, I found it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that just this evening in the committee the Member for Edmonton-Calder informed me that there were proposals to cut the Privacy Commissioner's budget. That, in addition to adding more work and responsibility onto the Privacy Commissioner's plate, is . . .

Mr. Mason: A typical Tory move.

Mr. Bilous: Well, it seems to be something very typical of this PC government. Unfortunately, you're adding more work and cutting a budget and adding more responsibility. Clearly, that's not going to work, Mr. Speaker.

I can tell you that our concern with moving this to the Privacy Commissioner's desk from the Labour Relations Board is that it's going to lead to less than ideal applications of the law, which may lead, in turn, to inconsistencies in interpretation and application and, ultimately, stifle freedom of expression in the context of labour relations. Last time I checked, I don't know . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I would like to ask my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview if he can elaborate a little bit on some of the reasons that he's put forward on why this is perhaps too narrow in scope and continue his most excellent and enlightening speech.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, let's allow him to do that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for his question. I was just getting to the final points of my arguments. Needless to say, with the Privacy Commissioner not ideal to be handling these disputes, they're better left in the hands of the Labour Relations Board, which to my knowledge is one of their purposes of being, really, to look at settling labour disputes.

Mr. Speaker, what we need is more of a balance. Again, I find this bill a little too restrictive, partly because it does the bare minimum to allow a union and only a union on strike to collect, use, and disclose personal information for expressive purposes but only in the context of a strike – and that's where it is extremely limited – as opposed to collecting and using information in a broader context, maybe for the public good, maybe for an educational campaign, maybe to teach new employees, maybe to teach future workers. But this is being very, very limited, and as well it limits the bill as it's currently written. This isn't applicable to other unions that may not be on strike but may be also working at serving the public interest or expanding the scope of their information, and therefore it could stifle other unions' ability to participate.

I'm going to wrap up shortly here, but I just wanted to read something very briefly, and I'm looking for it as we speak. Regarding the Supreme Court of Canada's decision not only did it declare PIPA unconstitutional, the legislation's prohibition on the collection, use, and disclosure of information violates freedom of expression as protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. With respect to unions, Mr. Speaker, the court noted the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in the labour context and that, again, picketing is a crucial form of expression with strong historical roots. By restricting the union's ability to communicate about the strike and persuade the public to support its cause, the legislation impairs the union's use of its most effective bargaining strategies. That's an excerpt taken from the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on November 15, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that I've been able to explain the reasoning behind my position on this bill, that we should not pass it through. It needs to be broadened. It should come off the Order Paper. Let's get it right. Let's write it up and get it right the first time before we pass this through in the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak for the first time to Bill 3. I was also stunned that we're already in committee on this bill . . .

Some Hon. Members: Third reading.

Dr. Swann: Third reading. Sorry.

. . . and how quickly it advanced, notwithstanding the plans and our legislative agenda, which left many of us scrambling to get both the materials we needed to speak intelligently to it and to anticipate the speed at which it moved.

We recognized back in November 2013, after the Supreme Court struck down the Personal Information Protection Act governing the protection of personal information by private companies, that there was a huge gap left in our legislation. This was certainly affirmed by the Privacy Commissioner, who was, in fact, quite agitated when in the last couple of months there was still no clear direction on this important bill on privacy information and its protection. It took the Supreme Court to take action and call on Alberta to amend its privacy information protection act, which was in violation of the Charter. Things have been at a virtual standstill since that time until we finally got the bill after the change of leadership here.

Our own Member for Edmonton-Centre wrote to the commissioner to confirm that, among other things, Albertans' privacy protections would now be governed by the federal Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, far weaker and lacking the protection required for companies to inform individuals that their personal information might be compromised. That was an important element to our getting engaged.

I also wanted to raise some of the questions that Doug O'Halloran, the president of the UFCW, raised about the current amendments. It, I guess, adds to the concerns about the narrowness of this particular bill. He was concerned, as he is now, that the proposed amendment was narrow and failed to properly address the criticism levelled by both the union and the Supreme Court. While it spoke to the right of unions to collect information in service of freedom of expression, it ignored the vital role that unions play in speaking out against more broad issues of social justice and health and safety in some workplaces, a role vital to PIPA in the first place.

I was particularly interested in the origin of this and watched as the contention between the casino group and the government played out, with both accusing each other of violating information and privacy. Indeed, it took the Supreme Court to identify that the law needed to change here in Alberta to be compliant with the national values and principles of our Charter.

In connection with some of the issues that the United Food and Commercial Workers raised, I had a particular connection with XL Foods in Brooks and serious concerns about the ongoing challenges they were facing with contaminated meat and the limitations on some of the employees in speaking out on these issues. Obviously, it takes sometimes more than a little courage to identify some of the problems that are occurring in some workplaces that threaten not only individual workers but also the public at large. I have some sympathy, I guess, for both the UFCW and others who are saying that there needs to be much stronger support for the broader rights of workers and citizens in general to collect information of a visual nature and to present it when it represents a health and safety threat to the public or to the workers themselves.

These are somewhat common-sense issues, but they needed to be spelled out. Although this bill goes some way in enabling the kinds of information that can be shared during a strike, as is indicated, it fails, I think, in terms of the broader purpose of this bill. I understand that this will be reviewed in 2015. At least, that's the commitment that the minister has made, to have a full review of this bill and ensure that we do get at some issues relating to the spirit, not just the letter, of the act.

I'm not sure exactly how we'll vote on this. It's clearly moving in the right direction. It doesn't go far enough, but I'm hopeful that the 2015 review will allow us a much broader and in-depth opportunity to discuss some of the important dimensions of the social and political context.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to finally get a chance to get up and speak to this bill. I know a couple of other members of our caucus have mentioned this already, but it truly does bear repeating. I was until very recently the House leader for our caucus, since 2008, and I can tell you without hesitation that the standard practice and agreement between House leaders has been that every morning a note is sent to House leaders which outlines the projected business for that day. That's done so that members of every caucus can organize their critics and also organize their shifts because it's not always the case that everybody is in this House throughout all the debate every day. Based on the projected business schedule of the 24-hour period, we co-ordinate people to be in the House at different times.

Last week we were told that Bill 3 would go through second reading in the afternoon but that it would be back in the evening, Tuesday evening, for Committee of the Whole. We, of course, looked forward to that because we had a number of amendments that we wanted to make to Bill 3 because, as my colleagues have already outlined, there are some significant concerns that exist with this government's haphazard attempt to fix the Supreme Court of Canada's direction that the bill is otherwise entirely unconstitutional and won't continue. We wanted to have a debate and have a chance to put forward our amendments because, you know, that's what we're actually paid to do.

Unfortunately, what happened was that notwithstanding the agreement between the House leaders and the information that we received about the projected government business, the matter moved on to Committee of the Whole in the afternoon, which is entirely reasonable. That happens if there aren't enough people to speak to things. Then, of course, because the direction in the agreement had been that it would be coming back in the evening as part of the projected government business in Committee of the Whole, what should have happened is that it should have been adjourned, not voted. Instead it was voted through in the afternoon, contrary to the information that the House leader had put forward to our House leader and through him to our whole caucus. Of course, that raises some very serious concerns about our ability to rely on the Government House Leader's assurances and statements to us because we did rely on them very much to our detriment and to the detriment of those Albertans who also have serious concerns about the way this bill is currently drafted.

So here we are in third reading attempting to deal with a number of issues that we would have had a chance to deal with in Committee of the Whole had the Government House Leader stayed true to the assurances that he had given to our House leader and other party House leaders. We are here instead attempting to debate this as thoroughly as we possibly can very, very late in the day. Let me just say as a former House leader that that is not a standard of behaviour that normally contributes to functional relationships between the parties in the House, and it's certainly not a good indication of the new regime or the new management's respect for our democratic process, Mr. Speaker. That being said, I'm sure, then, that my colleagues will understand why it is we are going to take a bit more time than they might have anticipated on this issue, because that's what happens when House leaders fail to live up to their personal promises.

Bill 3, as others have outlined, is a piece of legislation that was made necessary as a result of the Supreme Court of Canada reviewing our PIPA legislation and concluding that it breached the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, in particular, the right of freedom of expression. As many people know and as has already been mentioned, this case came to the Supreme Court of Canada because there was a strike at a place called Palace Casino out in west Edmonton in West Edmonton Mall. The union in the course of that strike – it was a long strike – was communicating information about members of theirs who were crossing the picket line. A complaint was made with respect to whether or not that amounted to a violation of PIPA.

Now, it's interesting because, you know, I will say that this was a bit of a storied picket line. It was a picket line which occurred, actually, within the mall itself, and that actually raised another legal issue at the time, the whole issue of whether it was appropriate to have a picket line around a business which existed within the mall and whether the mall was allowed to prohibit people from engaging in the picket line.

It was interesting because I actually remember going there at one point, to that picket line, to offer my personal support to the picketers, and with me was the former leader of Canada's NDP, the hon. Jack Layton. We were on our way to the picket line, and he was asking: well, was there ever any problem with the picket happening inside the mall? I said: well, I think they actually did have to have a legal fight about that because the mall tried to avoid having their picket line inside the mall, and they won. And he said to me with much pleasure, "Well, you know why they did? It's because of a case called R. versus Layton," which was actually all about him. It established the right of picketers to picket businesses that were otherwise occupied within other commercial institutions. He was very pleased to go and to exercise the rights that he had won as an activist about 15 years earlier in Toronto, and I was very proud to be able to be there with him when he did it. Needless to say, the picketers at the time were overjoyed to have him come and provide support to the picket line which they had in place. A little bit of digression there.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was there, too, as the leader at the time of the provincial NDP. So there was a plethora of NDP supporters there that evening.

Going back to the point, though, the complaint was made about the union's communications around who was crossing the picket lines. It ultimately went to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Supreme Court of Canada said: this section of PIPA is really far too limiting, and it limits the right to freedom of expression that unions need and deserve. In the course of it the Supreme Court of Canada said: you know, it's not really just about this section; the fact of the matter is that the act as a whole is far too limiting on the right to freedom of expression and with a number of different organizations.

It's interesting, really, to me – I have a personal interest in this – the decision that the Supreme Court of Canada made. I was actually asked by a couple of different unions way back in early 2000 to do an analysis of PIPA when it was just coming in and to tell them what it would mean for their internal operations. It was a very interesting project that I was engaged in because it became very clear to me that PIPA was a bill that had been expanded by this PC government to include organizations that were not originally intended to be covered by this kind of legislation.

Historically this notion of protecting personal information and privacy was a need that arose from a number of commercial organizations and institutions exploiting personal information for the purposes of enhancing marketing and commercial benefits. That's essentially what PIPEDA, which is PIPA's federal counterpart, is geared towards achieving: this idea of protecting the exploitation of people's personal information for the purposes of commercial interest. But when this government got their hands on that issue, they decided to expand it and to also protect people from community groups and member-based advocacy organizations, and that, of course, included unions.

Mr. Mason: What about corporations?

Ms Notley: Well, interestingly, it doesn't. I mean, it certainly applies to corporations in terms of their ability to use people's information to market to them. Corporations, when they advocate, though, have a tendency to just use money to advocate whereas more community-based advocacy organizations tend to communicate with people more in the course of their advocacy, and they tend to engage in a more grassroots form of organization. So that's sort of what a more grassroots, community-based advocacy is.

Corporate advocacy tends to involve high-paid lobbyists, you know, like the folks that have such a close relationship with our Health minister. Tobacco companies, for instance, will pay high-paid lobbyists to work with the Health minister to rewrite tobacco legislation whereas community health groups are more likely to use a member-based approach to write letters to the Health minister to say: jeez, it sure would be nice if you would focus on the individual health of citizens. They do it by way of letter campaigns.

Unfortunately, PIPA has a disproportionate effect. Those corporations which lobby through high-paid lobbyists are not necessarily limited because they don't rely on that grassroots form of advocacy. Less financially incentivized groups that are more community based and member based end up having their advocacy efforts limited by some of the provisions that exist within PIPA. And then, of course, unions are the perfect example of the kind of organization that is – it's like putting a square block into a circular hole. It's just not really designed for this legislation.

Really, that was kind of the point that the Supreme Court of Canada was trying to make to some extent. They said that the whole piece of legislation was very awkwardly and inappropriately limiting the freedom of expression and the freedom of communication of, in this case, unions and not just in the one section that came before the Supreme Court of Canada. In fact, they did a holistic evaluation and said: really, there are a lot of parts of this legislation that are problematic. This just goes back to the kind of thing that I saw way back in the early 2000s, when I was doing an analysis of this very piece of legislation and trying to advise a couple of unions about how to continue to ensure the health of their grassroots, member-based communication while still respecting the objectives of the act.

Anyway, then the difficulty that arises from that is that Bill 3 takes an exceptionally narrow and limited approach to correcting the problems that were identified by the Supreme Court of Canada, and that is why we here today have a concern with this proposal, because it really just doesn't go far enough. The fact of the matter is that the same concerns that were identified by the Supreme Court of Canada continue to exist within the act, and it's just a matter of time before further challenges are taken to – we won't even have to go to the Supreme Court of Canada, I suspect, before it's ruled unconstitutional. So that's why we're saying that this proposal really is not adequate for the task at hand, which is to correct the problems within PIPA, to revive the legislation from its having been rendered inapplicable by the Supreme Court of Canada's evaluation of its impact on some very fundamental constitutional rights.

With that, because I don't want to run out of time, I feel that it's really important, then, that we refer this matter to committee so that it can be considered in more detail. I am going to move a motion that this Bill 3 be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 3, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be not now read a third time because the Legislative Assembly believes that the bill does not reflect the spirit and advice of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in order to render the Personal Information Protection Act constitutionally compliant.

A reasoned amendment is what I am proposing.

If you'd like me to stop for a moment.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll just pause and distribute that amendment, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Sure. You bet.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is a reasoned amendment, and we will label this amendment RA1.

We'll start over with the speakers again. Anyone that would like to speak to this amendment can speak to the amendment. We'll deal with the amendment, and then we'll come back to the bill as amended or not.

Ms Notley: Can I speak on the amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. You can be the first speaker, hon. member. You'll just continue with your time. You have 45 seconds, hon. member.

Ms Notley: All right. Oh, 45 seconds. Okay. Well, I will just quickly note, then, a couple of the reasons why this is too limited. It talks about a lawful strike, and since we know that public-sector unions in this province aren't allowed to lawfully strike, for instance, the exception that is currently contained within this attempt to fix PIPA is too narrow. We know that a lot of unions are never going to be engaged in a lawful strike notwithstanding that they will be communicating with both the public as well as their members on issues related to the negotiations of a contract. I would suggest that that communication would be as protected under the Constitution as would those who are engaged in a lawful strike.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to amendment RA1, the first speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and leader of the New Democrat opposition in Alberta for her reasoned amendment. I think that it's worthwhile for us to consider carefully whether or not this amendment is actually the best course for the Assembly to proceed in. I submit that it is, in fact, a very good move. Here's why.

The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the Personal Information Protection Act was relatively broad. Often the courts will confine themselves to very narrow decisions affecting very specific sections or even specific words. In this case the Supreme Court did not do that. The Supreme Court took the step of striking down the entire act, and they commented in their decision that, in fact, this was not just something that related specifically to the freedom of expression in a specific case, for example a strike, but it was much broader. The court found that the legislation was unconstitutional, and the legislation's prohibition on the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information violates freedom of expression as protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

With respect to unions the court noted the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in the labour context and that picketing is a crucial form of expression with very strong historical roots. By restricting the union's ability to communicate about the strike and persuade the public to support its cause, the legislation impaired the union's use of one of its most effective bargaining strategies.

Mr. Speaker, it's in this context that we need to consider the reasoned amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. She says in her motion that it not now be read a third time "because the Legislative Assembly believes that the bill does not reflect the spirit and advice of the Supreme Court of Canada" in its decision to render the Personal Information Protection Act constitutionally invalid. That, I think, is at the heart of why we need to pass this reasoned amendment.

Now, I also was present on that picket line, not once or twice but a number of times, and there were really two phases to that strike. Initially picketers weren't allowed inside the mall, and it was the middle of winter, very much like it is now, with snow and very, very cold temperatures. Picketers were confined to a small tent with, you know, one of those sort of barrel burners in the middle of the parking lot, and that was all they had. They had no washroom facilities. They were locked out of the building. They were very, very cold.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that many members in the conservative parties present in this house don't have a lot of sympathies with unions or, frankly, anybody that's a bit different, but that's a debate for another day. But in this particular case I do believe that without labour organizations and their ability to negotiate on behalf of their members and, if necessary, withdraw their services, the standard of living for many Albertans would be much lower than it is today and many rights that we have today would not exist.

Certainly, the equality of women and minorities has been advanced tremendously by the actions of labour unions in their collective bargaining and also in other ways through appeals to the Charter, and many social issues have been advanced a long way. For example, it was labour movements that advanced public pensions in this country. Health care, health and safety legislation: if you go back and look at what health and safety legislation looked like 30 or 40 years ago, you'll find that it's almost nonexistent. There was no workers' compensation. If you were injured at work, you could lose your home and your family. They've done a great deal to advance the cause of everyone, whether or not they're union members.

This right has been recognized and protected under the Charter by the Supreme Court, not just in this instance but in a number of other cases. The fact that it is distasteful to some members of this House is no reason to restrict it unduly or, in fact, even to fear it. I think that the Supreme Court of Canada was wise.

Now, eventually the union in that strike won the fight to be able to picket inside. I'm referencing, of course, the case that the hon. leader has mentioned that involved our former leader federally, Jack Layton. I was also there the evening that Jack visited the picket line, and I watched how union members conducted themselves. What they did was to talk to people going into the casino who were prepared to cross their picket line. They didn't do that in an aggressive way, but they wanted to talk to them about what was at stake for them. Many of these union members that were on strike were single parents with kids at home. They didn't earn very much money. They were able to talk about that. They were able to talk about the struggles that they had as working parents and as people who worked, essentially, for very low wages.

You know, it was interesting, Mr. Speaker, because a lot of the regular customers of the casino knew these people. They knew them, and they had a relationship in the casino with them, a friendly relationship. Many people were persuaded that by crossing the picket line they were actually hurting the livelihood of their friends and the people that were working in the casino and that they were not advancing exorbitant demands but were simply trying to make ends meet in their family budget. That's really what it was all about, Mr. Speaker.

Now, some people were rude and dismissive and so on, but many of the regular customers were persuaded, and that's really, I think, at the heart of why employers don't want this to happen. If people won't cross the picket line, if the customers won't cross the picket line, then the strike has a better chance of being successful and the employer may well be compelled to make some sort of compromise. Let's not forget . . . [interjection] Hon. member, did you want to go on the record? No, I didn't think so.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. members, please. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor.

Continue, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to compose myself and carry on.

Mr. Speaker, it was, in fact, fairly moving to see this interaction, and I was really quite pleased. But, of course, employers would rather just carry on business as usual, bring in replacement workers, and just leave their former employees out in the cold trying to find some new job.

In this society that we've built, there are many components. There are many, many different types of activities and people from different walks of life and different perspectives, but certainly the role that the labour movement has played goes beyond just arguing for narrow advances in their own paycheck.

to a broad range of benefits for them and their families to important social programs in this country that they fought for and won.

I bet, Mr. Speaker, that one victory of the labour movement that every member of this House appreciates and may not know came from the labour movement may in fact enlighten some members of this House with respect to how the labour movement has touched their lives. One of the shining achievements of the labour movement is the weekend, and I will bet you a nickel that almost every member of this House has enjoyed that benefit at some time in their lives and probably is looking forward to the next weekend after this week because it's going to be kind of a mean week, I think.

I don't know what would happen if we had to operate this place seven days a week, Mr. Speaker, without taking a weekend. I mean, we actually get three days because of a constituency day as well, and I know we're all busy doing things in our constituencies all of that time, but it's still a break from this place. If we had to work here seven days a week, 12 hours a day, I don't think many of us would still be living because I think, you know, we would kill each other. [interjections] We would not kill each other; I was making a joke, Mr. Speaker. But I think we would not get along in such a jolly fashion as we do if, in fact, we had to work in this place seven days a week.

Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear to me that this bill as it is written attempts to get around the Supreme Court decision in the most narrow way. It attempts to circumvent the spirit of the Supreme Court decision, and as such it opens us up to another challenge. I think that that is why it is a prudent and wise course that's been suggested by the hon. leader of the NDP. It will save the province litigation and whatever damages there might be, the trampling of people's rights, in the meantime.

I think that we should give very careful consideration to actually supporting this reasoned amendment, particularly in light of the unsavoury move of the House leaders on the other side in bringing forward this bill through committee when the agreed-upon business had it finishing at second reading, particularly when we weren't prepared with our amendments because they were still under consideration by Parliamentary Counsel. It took away our right as an opposition party, as members, individual members, to attempt to influence the legislation in a way that would reflect our constituents' views. I think that that has been in the past a subject of points of privilege but has not been found to be valid by the chair, so there's no point at this stage, then, to proceed with it as a point of principle.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a great privilege, actually, to speak to this reasoned amendment put forth by the leader of the fourth party. It says: Bill 3, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be not now read a third time because the Legislative Assembly believes that the bill does not reflect the spirit and advice of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in order to render the Personal Information Protection Act constitutionally compliant.

I would say at this time that this is a very reasonable amendment, that I would urge all members to support given the context in which we receive these amendments. I think it's important to note that the Supreme Court of Canada in their decision in this case didn't just knock out certain lines and provisions of the Alberta act. Instead, it went through the entire exercise of rendering the entire act nugatory, and as a result it was sent back to this government to fix what, in fact, was broken.

If we look at the situation as it arises, we are dealing with some fundamental rights under our Charter of Rights and Freedoms: the freedom of expression dovetailing with freedom of association, the ability of people to actively organize and collectively bargain and to go ahead and be able to strike in a reasonable fashion, where they promote their aims, their objectives, their goals. We also recognize from the context of the Supreme Court decision that this is not a narrow right that unions hold only in times of striking. In fact, unions should and probably do have the right to comment on a whole range of activities happening in our society, with an ability to try and improve the status of working people, the status of public health, the status of health care, and the status of other things.

We note that unions across this province are doing that on a daily basis. You see unions like the Alberta Teachers' Association advocating on behalf of the teaching profession, on behalf of better results for our students. We see the other associations bringing forth health concerns and how to make our health system better and, you know, workers all across this province bringing forth information on government's running of various bills and amendments that go through this House and others. I don't think we should limit those opportunities for trade unions to speak up about issues that they believe are important, that may be in the public domain and may actually help this province become a better place.

I, too, note the decision that was written November 15, 2013, by the Supreme Court, where it said:

This Court has long recognized the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in . . . labour disputes. PIPA prohibits the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information for many legitimate, expressive purposes related to labour relations. Picketing represents a particularly crucial form of expression with strong historical roots. PIPA imposes restrictions on a union's ability to communicate and persuade the public of its cause, impairing its ability to use one of its most effective bargaining strategies in the course of a lawful strike. This infringement of the right to freedom of expression is disproportionate to the government's objective of providing individuals with control over the personal information that they expose by crossing a picketline. It is therefore not justified under [section] 1 of the Charter.

If we look at one of the key phrases not only in that passage I just read but throughout many of the decisions made by the Supreme Court and other bodies, it recognized the historical role unions have played. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood went through it very well: the implementation of safe workplaces, the implementation of reasonable work hours, the role of unions in providing, I guess, more of a role for women in our society and recognizing pay inequality in this country, the historical role unions have played in moving public health care forward. In fact, they in no small way were responsible for many of the changes in the way we deliver health care in this country that were positive movements for our society at large. They continue to do that work today. If you read these court cases and the body of material that courts across this land have talked about, it's the ability of trade unions to comment fairly on values and roles that they believe are important to the citizenry.

In my view, this would be a good time for us to assess whether or not the narrow amendments we have made here to the PIPA legislation actually correspond with the decisions that have been rendered across this country in regard to freedom of association – the right to join trade unions and the right for trade unions to do their work and reflect adequately on issues facing society – balancing that with freedom of expression and how they're able to communicate this information to the public.

In my view, this is an eminently reasonable amendment. Why would we want, again, to pass this bill and then have it challenged in court, have the ongoing litigation go up the food chain from Queen's Bench to Court of Appeal to Supreme Court only to have it come back to this government and have the Supreme Court say, "No; you guys have messed this up again, and you have not complied with recognizing the need or the ability to have a broadened context and a broadened recognition of what trade unions and their role is in our society"? It would behoove us, I think, to follow this advice. I think that given what has transpired in regard to this bill and the fact that we didn't get an opportunity as opposition parties to comment fully and fulsomely on the bill, to offer our amendments that would have made this bill stronger, would have allowed us to more diligently get to the bottom of the issues we are now discussing, it would be doubly important for us to get to that point.

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, it seems like there has been a rush to close debate on this issue like we have in other cases both this week and going on next week, where we won't have an opportunity to discuss things that are important to the Alberta people, and that is unfortunate. On this note I think this is an eminently reasonable amendment, one that I would support, and I would urge all members of this House to follow suit and vote in favour of it. It's a good time for us to take this opportunity given to us and to reflect on this, and there is adequate ability for us to do that at this time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

My apologies, hon. members. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available in this segment if anyone would like to offer questions or comments to the member.

If not, then I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't present myself as an expert on this legislation. Thankfully, we have one of those. We have the Information and Privacy Commissioner here. She's an independent officer of this Legislature, and I'm going to share with this House the comments that she made via press release, which I will table tomorrow, regarding Bill 3. She says:

I am pleased the government brought these amendments to the legislature quickly as the importance of private sector privacy legislation in Alberta cannot be overstated. I believe the amendments address the issues raised by the Supreme Court while, at the same time, balancing the need to protect the privacy interests of individuals.

It doesn't get any clearer than that. This is why we have the expert.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleagues to my left may be interested to know that PIPA has in itself, written into the act, a mandatory review by a select special committee that is supposed to take place next year. That committee, based on the legislation, needs to be struck by July 1, 2015. And the reality is that failure to pass Bill 3 now or as soon as possible jeopardizes the exact reason why we're having this debate in the first place, which was to advance this bill, get it in line with the Supreme Court decision, and ensure that we are able to continue to operate under Alberta-made legislation as opposed to federal.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members of this Assembly to vote against this amendment, and I would also request that the question be called as soon as humanly possible. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, then I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and certainly I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that Bill 3 not be read for a third time. It's interesting to see how she did not reflect the advice of the Supreme Court of Canada. Respectfully, certainly, the Member for Calgary-Shaw . . .

Mr. Wilson: I was just reading the Privacy Commissioner's . . .

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, yeah. For sure. There is a level of expertise there. But, I mean, I would defer personally to the expertise of the Supreme Court of Canada – right? – who made it very unequivocal that we needed to enforce this in a much more broad sort of way. So, you know, we're just trying to do a public service here, to give people the sense that, you know, if something's not going to be challenged almost immediately – and we do have the provision for a review in 2015, so I think we're kind of laying the groundwork for the review here as well so that we make sure that we don't move further in the wrong direction. That's all.

You know, it's also interesting that the Privacy Commissioner wrote a letter on this issue and did express similar, in a more circumspect way because, of course, she needs to make sure that she's getting this level of legislation in place – but her letter and advice were also critical of the same areas that we are expressing here today, too. Everybody's got a role, of course, in the Legislature, inside and out and each of the offices and so forth. So it's important for us to make sure that this element of this decision is brought forward in the most clear possible way.

You know, I do have the third and fourth and fifth page of that same letter, where she does describe these sections that are controversial: sections 14, 17, and 20. And, certainly, she and the Privacy Commissioner's office do a great job. We know that this ruling and any subsequent indiscretions around this legislation will end up mostly on her lap, and the Privacy Commissioner's office will have to deal with challenges that come forward. So it's very important and incumbent upon us to make sure that, perhaps, we get it right, not read this a third time, and build a proper budget for the office for the Privacy Commissioner, too, I would suggest. I'm kind of alarmed to hear that, you know, people want to go after the capacity for that office to function at the very time when their workload and the amount of cases coming forward are increasing 125 per cent over the last three years. I found that to be striking, Mr. Speaker, and certainly a lot of it from the freedom of information and PIPA generates more work for that office.

The issue, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to just talk about here a little bit more – people haven't really expressed it fully – is the issue of Bill 3 creating very narrow exceptions for the scope by which information can be revealed. You know, it's not just people in the midst of a strike because, as my colleague here from Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, there are many unionized workers that, in fact, are not even allowed to strike. We must not preclude their use of information and communication with the public, with their members, and so forth simply because they can't enter that narrow confine that's defined here in this particular bill. We don't need to do that. We shouldn't do that, and – you know what? – the Supreme Court said that we shouldn't do that either. I mean, that's fairly obvious.

Another area that I was thinking about was in regard to groups of workers that are seeking their first contracts and, again, employing exactly the same parameters of communication. In fact, the communication in the first contract is even more critical to the members and to the general public and so forth, so for us to narrow their scope and capacity to use information, again, really gets in the way of best practices for good labour relations.

So yes, I certainly encourage everyone to support this amendment. The personal information amendment brought forward I would encourage everyone to read it very carefully and support it wholeheartedly and enthusiastically.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite happy that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has brought forward this reasoned amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is calling for this bill to now not be read a third time because we don't believe it reflects the spirit and advice of the Supreme Court's decision. I will try to keep my comments to that point, and there are a few points to make.

Having, you know, spoken with various groups that either were involved in the Supreme Court decision or others that have studied that case, again, Mr. Speaker, you can appreciate the fact that when a case does work its way all the way up to the Supreme Court and there is a ruling, it is really a landmark case and one that sets a precedent which future cases will be compared to and used as a point of judgment.

You know, I want to mention the fact, Mr. Speaker, that back in 2013 the Supreme Court of Canada did declare PIPA unconstitutional. This is very, very significant. Basically, that legislation prohibited the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information, which violated the freedom of expression as protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, again, one of the highest pieces of legislation, which all others need to ensure that they don't contravene, these great pieces of building blocks or fundamental rights that all Canadians enjoy.

Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, the issues that this piece of legislation brings forward may be – I mean, they're going to be challenged, I believe, as far as their consistency with the Supreme Court decisions. But what needs to be recognized, first and foremost, is that this bill, as it's currently written, is inconsistent with the spirit of the Supreme Court's decision. Just to reiterate, the court noted the sweeping nature of PIPA's restrictions and their impact within the labour context and not just their impact during a labour dispute, which, to me, seems as though should this legislation continue to move forward, it will be challenged. As I've mentioned earlier, not the best use of tax dollars, of our time, having a piece of legislation that's going to be challenged and challenged probably all of the way up, wasting dollars and time of many folks.

I think, you know, this current piece of legislation will perpetuate PIPA's inconsistency with the federal counterpart, PIPEDA, which, to remind members, only applies to personal information collected, used, and/or disclosed for a commercial purpose. The unconstitutionality of this legislation stems from its application to all personal information regardless of the organization's purpose in using such information.

This piece of legislation may also invite more litigation from unions, political or social groups whose freedom of expression this current bill will continue to infringe upon.

The other part, Mr. Speaker, is that it will involve the Privacy Commissioner in labour disputes rather than leaving those issues regarding such disputes to be resolved by the Labour Relations Board, which is an expert tribunal on such matters and where, quite frankly, those decisions should remain. I mean, those reasons to me seem quite clear and logical as to why this bill should be referred.

I'll just mention a few other points here, Mr. Speaker, if I can find them quickly enough. You know, I think that the theme of the concern that myself and my colleagues have tried to share with the House is, again, the fact that the current legislation as it is written is quite myopic in scope. It's quite narrow and restrictive and doesn't allow for freedom of expression by unions in a larger, broader context.

As my colleagues have so eloquently described, examples of successes that unions have had which have been shared by all Albertans, regardless of if a person has been employed with a workforce that was unionized or not, examples from, you know, having the weekend off, an eight-hour workday, paid overtime, as far as safety legislation: these have all been front and centre for labour unions in our history. The reason that we have such laws to protect individuals, the right to collective bargaining, et cetera, comes from unions and, if we want the long explanation, really was born out of the Industrial Revolution, when we had numerous examples of abhorrent conditions that predominately children and women worked in. From that was born the labour movement as far as defending the rights of individuals and of workers, one of my more preferred topics to teach when I taught social studies, Mr. Speaker.

I did want to mention that, again, the reason why I am supporting this amendment of mine and encouraging all members to support it is for the simple fact that PIPA imposes restrictions on the union's ability to communicate, persuade the public of its cause, which effectively impairs its ability to use one of its most effective tools, Mr. Speaker, and that's effective bargaining strategies in the course of a lawful strike.

Now, this infringement on the right to freedom of expression is quite disproportionate to the government's objective of providing individuals with control over personal information that they expose by crossing a picket line. You know, I think there's much to be learned from the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. It's a fairly lengthy document that they've put forward explaining their rationale for their decision. But, as we can see, the current legislation as it's written is quite narrow in scope, and my concern is, Mr. Speaker, among many things, that there will be numerous challenges should this bill go forward. Therefore, I'm supporting this amendment to refer this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We're now back to the bill.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it might be appropriate at this time that I rise and request unanimous consent of the House to waive for the remainder of the evening Standing Order 32(2) and shorten the length of time between division bells from 10 minutes to one minute.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Speaker: We are now back to third reading of the bill. The next speaker, who hasn't spoken already, is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When the Government House Leader violates an understanding about which bills will be debated at which time and leaves a small opposition party with amendments that they can't bring forward to a bill, then they trample on the rights of the minority in this House, and there needs to be some sort of price exacted for that kind of disrespect for the democratic rights of the members of a minority party in this House. I just want to make that crystal clear for the hon. members who may be wondering at our vote on that last piece.

I am going to speak to Bill 3, and I'm going to talk a little bit about the importance of changes that need to be made. Now, the court in its decision when it struck down Alberta's legislation said that it was restricting a union's ability to communicate about the strike and to persuade the public to support its cause and that the legislation impaired the union's use of its most effective bargaining strategies. I've commented on that in terms of the labour context, Mr. Speaker; that is to say, in my comments to the previous amendment, when I talked about the ability of union members on strike on the picket line to persuade patrons of the casino not to cross the picket line because they came to an understanding that, in doing so, they would hurt the interests of people whom they knew and had some sympathy and empathy for. So that's one piece of it.

Mr. Speaker, I think the court is also talking about other activities of unions. Unions do not just restrict themselves to collective bargaining on behalf of their members. They also represent their members on broader issues, and we've talked a little bit in this House about the role that unions have in terms of bringing about many of the changes in society. Many of the programs and social benefits that we all enjoy have been won by unions and not necessarily by unions negotiating directly with an employer for the provision of certain benefits but benefits that are provided by the federal government or by a provincial government in order to provide some universal benefit for all Albertans or all Canadians. Public health care and the medicare system would be a very good example of that, as would pensions or workers' compensation.

Now, those are not things that they won at the negotiating table. Those are things that they won by representing their members politically to various levels of government and advocating on behalf of not only their members but also non-union members, who also benefit from those things. So to restrict this just to specific union activity by just the union that might be involved in the labour activity, as this bill does, flies in the face of what the Supreme Court has said and what it's talking about. It's talking about the right more broadly of unions to engage with the public on a variety of social, economic, and political activities, and that's a right – a right of freedom of expression, freedom of speech, if you will – that is afforded to unions as it's afforded to other citizens and groups of citizens.

In this particular case I think that the bill is far, far too narrow in its definition of what it's going to allow. It is, in our view – and we have obtained legal advice with respect to this bill, Mr. Speaker – inconsistent with the spirit of the Supreme Court's decision. The court noted the sweeping nature of PIPA's restrictions and their impact in the labour context, not just their impact during a labour dispute.

As well, PIPA's sweeping provisions negatively impact other political and social organizations, not just unions. What would we say, then, for example, if organizations representing GLBTQ youth wanted to picket at a Progressive Conservative policy convention, for example? This may strike other people as far-fetched, but after today I think that it's increasingly likely that things like this are going to start to happen. It may be unpleasant and uncomfortable for Progressive Conservative MLAs and party members. To that I say, Mr. Speaker: good. But I also say that whether it makes someone uncomfortable or they wish they would just go away, if they're exercising their free speech, their right of assembly, their freedom of expression, those are guaranteed under the Charter, whether it's an individual or whether it's an organization, and we ought not to be restricting these kinds of things unduly.

So it's pretty clear – and I'll quote from this – that the sweeping provisions negatively impact other political and social organizations, not just unions. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this bill will perpetuate PIPA's inconsistency with the federal Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, or PIPEDA, which only applies to personal information collected, used, and/or later disclosed for a commercial purpose. The unconstitutionality of Alberta's legislation stems from its application to all personal information regardless of the organization's purpose in using such information.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the federal legislation is aimed specifically at protecting people's personal information relative to commercial purposes. So a company operating, for example, may collect information about you in order to market their goods to you. The Internet is probably one of the best examples of this. We see that every time we open up Facebook. But it's pretty clear that there are restrictions and necessary restrictions on the use of people's personal information under the federal legislation for commercial purposes whereas Alberta's legislation is much more sweeping than that. It's much broader than that, and it attempts to restrict the ability of organizations, for political or social purposes, for example, to collect information.

The Supreme Court has said that that's wrong, yet that's not addressed in this act. That's why we fear that there's very likely going to be another successful legal challenge to this particular act because the provincial government, unfortunately – I know this almost never happens – haven't been listening very well, and they aren't listening in this case to the Supreme Court. That's a little different, a little more serious than not listening to public organizations or the opposition. In the end, I think that we will all be the poorer for it.

The unconstitutionality of Alberta's legislation stems, again, from its application to all personal information regardless of the organization's purpose in using such information and, therefore, contravenes the Charter, Mr. Speaker. Furthermore, this will invite more litigation from unions and political and social groups whose freedom of expression the legislation will continue to infringe upon. That is where we're going to go if we pass this legislation. We'll be back in court, and the government may yet have to face its legislation being struck down by the courts and come back a third time to this House cap in hand with yet another attempt to rewrite the legislation.

Finally, according to our opinion, Mr. Speaker, this will involve the Privacy Commissioner in labour disputes rather than leaving issues regarding such disputes to be resolved by the Labour Relations Board, which is the expert tribunal on such matters. In other words, it's really going to muddy the waters. It's going to be bringing in two commissions now, not just the Labour Relations Board. Now the Privacy Commissioner will be drawn into various political as well as labour disputes, and I think it's going to create all sorts of confusion.

For those reasons and a number of others that I haven't had time to enumerate, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move on behalf of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Calder that the motion for third reading of Bill 3, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 3, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence." I have the requisite number of copies, Mr. Speaker, which I can send to the table.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We'll just pause while we distribute that. That's a hoist amendment, so we'll call that H1 and give just a few moments so that we can get that distributed.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have three minutes and 55 seconds. You may speak to your amendment.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of reasons to support this amendment. I certainly think that six months from now is probably a better time, and particularly since the House won't be sitting, then we can make this silly bill just go poof and go away.

I think that there are other more serious reasons why we ought to do this, and I've enumerated them. We don't think that it's consistent with the Supreme Court decision in a number of ways. We think the legislation was struck down for a number of reasons, many of which are not addressed by the current bill that is before us. We think that there are serious issues affecting the rights under the Charter of organizations and individuals to freedom of expression. We certainly agree with the Supreme Court of Canada with regard to that point, Mr. Speaker.

I do believe that the hoist is an opportunity to dispose of the bill while the government reconsiders what the Supreme Court has said and to give serious thought, instead of trying to restrict the rights of organizations and groups of citizens and unions and other organizations with whom it doesn't necessarily agree, that it wants to do as Voltaire talked about, and that is protect and defend the rights of the freedom of speech of people with whom they disagree. There's a famous quote. I'm not going to do it an injustice by grossly misquoting it here, but it is, in fact, an important concept that it's important for governments to fight for the rights of people with whom it does not agree. We haven't seen that from this government, not in the least; in fact, quite the contrary.

So it would be refreshing, then, if hon. members would actually stand with us and vote against this bill by supporting the hoist amendment that we have just put forward. I encourage all hon. members opposite to do so, Mr. Speaker. It would be good for the soul, and it could exorcise many demons, I'm sure, that are bothering some members opposite tonight.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared to take my place and encourage all members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Other speakers to the amendment? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'm pleased to be able to speak to this amendment because the amendment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder is a good one. As rightly described, were it to be successful, then Bill 3 would fail, and pending this government's more comprehensive and thoughtful remediation of the problems that exist with PIPA, we would be governed by PIPEDA, the federal legislation. So just to be clear, it doesn't mean that we then are no longer governed by private-interest privacy legislation. We would be. We would be governed by the federal act, which becomes applicable in the absence of the provincial act.

I've been asked: well, isn't the provincial act better? In some ways the provincial act is better, but in other ways the provincial act is not better. This is one of those ways. The provincial act has always been an act which has been more aggressive in terms of limiting and impacting in a very sweeping way the activities of other political and social organizations, not just unions but other organizations of the sort. Hence, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's reference to members of one of those rare gay-straight alliances picketing in front of a Conservative Party convention, for instance. That would be another social organization whose activities could be constrained, and the freedom of expression could be constrained by the same kinds of problems that were identified by the Supreme Court of Canada in their review of PIPA. That's what we're concerned about, that this government is taking an exceptionally narrow attempt to fix the legislation and not dealing with the broader issues.

Now, one of the members took the time to highlight the arguments and the submissions that were made by the Privacy Commissioner in favour of the recommendations which we find in Bill 3. But I think that in one way, as much as I have tremendous respect for the work of our Privacy Commissioner – and I believe that our commissioner has been very effective in her role, and I'm very pleased with the contributions she's made to public debate on these issues in a lot of different areas over the term of her tenure.

But in this particular area I think that perhaps the concern that we would have around this legislation, in fact, is arguably revealed in the letter to the Minister of Justice that was prepared by the office of the Privacy Commissioner. In that, particularly on page 3, the commissioner reviews the particular components of Bill 3 and argues that that is the best balance between, on one hand, the freedom of expression of the union and, on the other hand, the privacy rights of individual Albertans. As has already been noted, this legislation and the language in Bill 3 really allows for a great deal of discretion and deliberation on the part of the Privacy Commissioner as to what is a reasonable limitation in the circumstances and all that kind of stuff. So there's a great deal of discretion being used by the Privacy Commissioner.

But even in this letter the Privacy Commissioner refers to the issue of how, you know, there is a need to strike a balance. On one hand, what they're doing is striking a balance with respect to the union's freedom of expression during the course of a lawful strike. Again, as others have stated, one of the points of not having the Privacy Commissioner be the person that deliberates on this question is: does the Privacy Commissioner really bring that expertise of labour relations to the table in order to be able to properly adjudicate in this particular case on what is a reasonable balance?

In the letter itself the Privacy Commissioner refers to this notion of a lawful strike, yet as I started to talk about before I ran out of time when I last had a chance to speak about this issue, we know that there are a number of unions certified under the Labour Relations Code and the public-sector employee relations code in Alberta that don't have a lawful right to strike and never have a lawful right to strike. Does that mean that in the course of working collectively, because they are a collective organization, to advocate for the rights of their members in terms of their bargaining and their terms and conditions of employment, they are not entitled to have that balancing act applied in the course of working to achieve those objectives, that only a union that's entitled to lawfully strike gets to participate in that balancing act, and that a union that has no capacity to lawfully strike then must simply become subordinate to the very private interests which feature repeatedly throughout PIPA?

PIPA is a set of rights that's very individualistic in its articulation, which is fine, but there are organizations and traditions and institutions within our society that don't arise from an individualistic conception of rights, that, in fact, function very effectively, I might add, through the development and the evolution of a collective sense of rights. It's not just unions to which I'm referring. I mean, quite frankly, many would argue that a number of indigenous groups also operate in that way, that their conception of rights is, in fact, collective and that the collective right takes precedence in some cases over the individual right.

There is a balancing act that needs to take place here, but in this particular case we have the Privacy Commissioner engaging in that balancing act and suggesting that using lawful strike as the parameter for that exception is the appropriate way to do that. Yet inherent in that recommendation appears to be a failure to understand that probably 40 per cent of the people who are members of unions in Alberta actually don't enjoy a lawful right to strike because we are Alberta, and we've long since decided to ignore the UN convention on the rights of workers. We have decided to simply not allow a significant number of Alberta's citizens to have the lawful right to strike.

Given that inherent in her very letter there appears to be potentially a failure to understand that for that union to achieve its very, very primary purpose, which is to bargain and advocate on behalf of its members to secure the most favourable working conditions possible, in that objective not every union has the right to lawfully strike. They may still have rights to picket, but, again, based on the language in this legislation, even though they might have a right to picket, that right would be subordinate to the provisions in PIPA because the picketing is not occurring in conjunction with a lawful strike.

Of course, there are lots of times that pickets are appropriate even though they're not a part of a lawful strike. For instance, just a month and a half ago I was at a picket line that was associated with a decision of a private or nonprofit – I can't remember if it was a private or nonprofit – care provider, at the sort of economic behest of this government, to contract out a bunch of the work done by unionized employees to a multinational company, that would theoretically do it cheaper for lower wages and probably to lower standards as well. Those members of the union were picketing because they were about to lose their jobs, but they weren't on strike. They hadn't withdrawn their labour, but they were still picketing to make the point that their work had been contracted out and that it was going to compromise the health and safety of the residents within that place as well as the government's ability to ensure the highest standard of care within that particular institution.

So they were picketing, but under this very limited section which occurs in this piece of legislation, that picketing and any sharing of information that would have occurred within the context of that picketing would not be protected and would not be part of that balancing exercise because it is so artificially limited. Again, I would suggest that it's artificially limited because the Privacy Commissioner, although an expert in issues of privacy law, is not an expert in labour relations. Really, probably it was not the best place to come up with the language that would circumscribe the exceptions to the particular provision which is under discussion, initially in the Supreme Court of Canada case and subsequently in Bill 3.

So that's why, then, with the greatest of respect to the Privacy Commissioner I would suggest that the submissions that are offered, while helpful – very helpful – and worthy of consideration in a more comprehensive deliberation of how to deal with these issues in rewriting PIPA, are perhaps not as effective in terms of coming up with this particular section.

You know, at one point somebody over there was sort of rolling their eyes, saying: "Oh, yeah. You guys are just standing up for the union. Blah, blah, blah. That's all you're really here to do." I mean, it is true. I had the fabulous opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to slip home between this afternoon's session and tonight just to quickly have dinner with my family and to touch base with my son, who's in the middle of working on an essay on the Industrial Revolution in Manchester and what happened to the quality of life for regular, common folk in Manchester during the 19th century. It was interesting, reading through that historical stuff with him to help him with his essay, just being reminded of the degree to which the labour movement significantly improved the quality of life enjoyed or not enjoyed, as the case may be, by the vast majority of citizens in Manchester in the 19th century. A lot of money flowing in, but a lot of folks were having their rights breached repeatedly. There was child labour and a massive fatality rate in the workplace. It reminded me a little bit of the last week here in Alberta. It was just generally speaking not a great place to be, and it was thanks to the labour movement that that trend started to reverse so that regular working folks could start to get the benefit of all the money that was being made as a result of the Industrial Revolution.

Anyway, I digress, so I will go back to my previous points. I just think that at the end of the day what's really important is to make sure that we get this issue right. My concern is that by accepting what is, in our view, a limited and short-sighted correction to the act as required by the Supreme Court of Canada, we will not devote an adequate amount of time to a more comprehensive review when it comes time for this matter to be reviewed in committee this summer. Whereas if we were to simply not pass this bill and have PIPEDA be the governing legislation for a period of time, there might actually be more motivation for members opposite to engage in a more meaningful way when we engage in the committee review of this legislation.

I've been sorely disappointed over the last eight or nine months at the way in which all-party committees have been functioning. You know, there's been really very little interest in engaging in a comprehensive analysis of the legislation that's put in front of us or asking Albertans to submit their positions or listening to those submissions when they are actually submitted or, heaven forbid, deliberating on what some of the issues were that Albertans raised. That has been kind of lacking from the work of our all-party committees more recently. Rather, they've just sort of been marching in, and the chairs have been given their scripts to read, and everyone votes when told to, and then nothing is really discussed. We all leave the committee really early, and things carry on the same way.

If we were to actually create a motivation to have a made-in-Alberta privacy legislation that meets the needs of the Supreme Court of Canada . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the intent of the motion put forward by the New Democrat caucus. I do have some concerns with voting in favour of this motion at this time.

Now, I do realize that I did vote in favour of the last amendment because hypothetically we could have gotten this to an all-party committee, where we would discuss this, come up with an adequate discussion, look at the relevant context of the bill, add to it the provisions that may make us more in line with those decisions, and have an Alberta act ready and on the go for, hopefully, sometime in the very near future.

If you look at this act in its entirety, it's simply keeping us from moving forward on the Personal Information Protection Act in this province. What this would entail would be for members on this side to believe that the government on its own is going to go away and do this work and come up with a new bill and implement something at some future date that would more adequately reflect some of the concerns we brought up in this House. And, in my view, that is not reality.

Accordingly, I think that given that the Supreme Court of Canada has sent it back to us, given that I think it's important for this province to at least have some law on the bill, even though it may be a flawed law, it is important for us to go forward.

Furthermore – and I've brought up some points consistently in the debate here tonight – in my view if you look at much of the case law surrounding the context of what brought this issue before the Supreme Court, what caused them to strike down our entire legislation was the fact that our legislation was narrow. It didn't understand the right of unions to be able to adequately and effectively engage in legal strikes, but also there was much rhetoric in that case and, in fact, other cases about unions' ability to comment on social issues, and much has been made about the contributions of trade organizations and unions to the betterment of our society. No doubt we see that, from national health care to reasonable working standards to the weekend of all things, which you and I both enjoy, and I'm glad that the union movement led the charge on this.

But at this time I think that moving to this would be not in the best interest of our province. With at least the passing of this legislation I think there would be an opportunity to then have it on the record, on the books. Then should some trade union or other interested body actually wish to challenge it, it can start the process of going down the path to eventually get us to a place where it is heard by the Supreme Court of Canada and actually gets back to this Legislature so we can actually make a law that fundamentally would reflect those goals attributed in that Supreme Court decision.

I think this motion is misguided in the fact that not having a law on the books is simply not going to happen at this time; that reflects that the government go away and decide something differently than it has. So given that reality, it's better for us to pass this legislation, to have it go ahead, and to allow us to evaluate it, then, in future court cases.

I will also note that although the Privacy Commissioner has made comments along the way, in various degrees saying that this bill may not go far enough, that they may not be able to actually square all the circles and the like, I think it's important to note that she did support the actual passing of this bill at least to get us a start on where we need to go in this province.

In my view this is redundant, and it will not actually serve the best interests going forward. We need to get legislation on the books so that our trade unions and other people know what their effective rights are in this province. The sooner that's on the books, the sooner we can get to evaluating whether it fits within our court structure.

I'll be urging members to vote against this hoist amendment. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)? No?

Okay. Then I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak to this bill. It's likely the last chance I'll get to speak to Bill 3, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2014. I just wanted to clarify really briefly that I believe I was a little incorrect earlier when I spoke in that I mentioned that when this bill was in Committee of the Whole, it wasn't actually on the Order Paper. It, in fact, was – my hon. colleague reminded me – but it wasn't on the projected business of the day. So I confused those two, and I apologize for that.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, it is a long-standing tradition in this House, Mr. Speaker, that when the House leaders speak and the Government House Leader decides what the business of the day will be, it is understood and respected between all of the parties. Especially with the fact that when there are numerous pieces of legislation coming forward, for the smaller parties it is sometimes a challenge, as you can imagine, but we do want to ensure that we're doing the best job possible. It's very restrictive if bills or readings are moved forward when opposition parties aren't ready for them.

In this case we had gone through the legislation, and we had amendments with Parliamentary Counsel that hadn't yet been returned. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that it's important to note that in my short two and half years here as a member in the House never have I seen the government move forward when there are amendments waiting to be approved. It's not that we had said, "Yes, they're coming," and government had no idea. It's that there were several amendments waiting for approval from Parliamentary Counsel, and the bill was rushed through. I mean, that I do take issue with in that it does inhibit or restrict severely the ability of opposition members in this House to do our job.

Now, as has been said a couple of times, the reason I'm speaking in favour of this amendment that the bill be not now read a third time but six months hence and therefore be removed is because we foresee the challenges that lie ahead should we pass this PIPA legislation today. There are going to be court challenges. Likely it's going to be ruled unconstitutional just because it's not constitutionally compliant. In our view we will see that very, very soon, Mr. Speaker. We'd rather get it right.

The good news is that despite what some members in the House may think, that we have to get this PIPA legislation through right now – yes, the Privacy Commissioner did put a timeline on this – the fact of the matter is that if Alberta didn't put forward its own PIPA legislation at this point in time, we would still fit under the umbrella of the federal legislation, PIPEDA. So we're not in as much of a bind as we may think we are. You know, I've always been of the mindset of: let's do it once, let's do it right, and let's get it right the first time as opposed to passing through poor legislation and then having to come back with a series of amendments and waste people's time and the resources of the Alberta treasury.

Mr. Speaker, just to go over some of the points here, you know, talking about the restriction that Bill 3 has on our freedom of expression, the principle that unions have the right to freedom of expression by communicating with the public, not just their own union, in trying to persuade them is so fundamental in general and in particular so fundamental to the objectives of collective bargaining that even the Supreme Court in its decision reiterated this.

Now, as we know, Mr. Speaker, for unions to be effective in protecting the rights, interests, and well-being of their members, they need to use a number of measures to represent those interests. Among these, communication – in other words, the ability to express themselves freely – is one of the most important tools that they have at their disposal. For example, unions need to be able to communicate with the public or the government, as I mentioned earlier, about unsafe workplaces. They need to be able to communicate with the public in order to influence pressure and public opinion in the context of labour disputes and negotiations processes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court was unequivocal in saying: "PIPA imposes restrictions on a union's ability to communicate and persuade the public of its cause, impairing its ability to use one of its most effective bargaining strategies in the course of a lawful strike." That came from paragraph 37 of the Supreme Court's ruling.

Furthermore, at paragraph 29 the Supreme Court says:

This Court has long recognized the fundamental importance of freedom of expression in the context of labour disputes . . . "[f]or employees, freedom of expression becomes not only an important but an essential component of labour relations."

The court has also been clear, Mr. Speaker, over the years that picketing is a legitimate form of expression, not just in cases of lawful strikes, I might add, which is the only narrow exception carved out by Bill 3. Again, picketing is far from the only important communication tool available to unions. I brought forward the example of XL Foods, that took place in Brooks, Alberta, in 2012, and the fact that much of that could have been averted and the fact that, you know, the union raised concerns publicly about the issues in the plant that were leading to contaminated meat.

I just want to say that Bill 3 does nothing to address the potential restrictions of these types of communication activities by unions or anyone, and these rights to free expression don't just benefit unions. I mean, this is the important component for members to grasp here. Obviously, a major purpose of unions is to address the political and social issues of the day but also to work for social justice for all Albertans. So by denying them a key right necessary for them to communicate and achieve these objectives, this bill is so restrictive to the well-being of all Albertans and our democracy, which is affected.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill 3 exceptions are narrow in that it applies to a union that's engaged in a lawful strike, not even other unions or affiliates or those with an interest in the matter, which greatly restricts many different organizations. It does nothing to extend and improve the right to freedom of expression for most Albertans outside of the scope of the individual union that it applies to.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's consider the fact that strikes are not the only part of the labour negotiation process, which requires freedom of expression for unions to advocate for their members. From the beginning of the process until the end these organizations need to be able to communicate freely to advance their interests and to make up for the inherent power imbalance between employer and employee. By carving out such a narrow exception, that it only applies to strikes, Bill 3 leaves all restrictions on all of these other forms of expression, which are crucial in the labour negotiation process.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, by extending the right to collect, use, and disclose personal information only in the context of a labour dispute, this bill flies in the face of the Supreme Court's findings and their advice. The Supreme Court directly advised against this, broadening the definition, and they wrote very clearly in their decision that freedom of expression is crucial in all parts of the labour context, not just in the event of a strike. So this limited definition here does not serve and actually goes counter to the decision the Supreme Court made.

When this bill, should it pass through third reading, gets challenged in the courts and works its way back to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court is going to see that they've already ruled on this and that this bill never should have passed through this Assembly. We as members have a responsibility to look at past legislation, look at precedent-setting legislation, and determine if something is going to meet the criteria of past decisions. From numerous examples this piece of legislation does not do that, Mr. Speaker. For those reasons, you know, likely this bill will be challenged and will be thrown out, and I see a need for not wasting this Assembly's time or the court's time.

Now, what I want to mention, Mr. Speaker, is that, you know, the Alberta NDP supports necessary limits to protect individual privacy, so we do support the basic objectives of PIPA. But, similar to the Supreme Court, it seems that it's overbearing and it goes too far in denying Albertans their right to freedom of speech.

We understand the need to strike the right balance between protecting personal information and privacy and the fundamental rights of freedom of speech. Again, PIPEDA, the federal legislation, addresses this balance by restricting the collection, use, and disclosure of information only when it's being used for commercial purposes. PIPA, on the other hand, applies to all personal information no matter what the purpose or context of its collection. As the Supreme Court points out, PIPA prohibits the collection, use, and disclosure of information without distinguishing the nature of the information; the purpose for which it's collected, used, or disclosed; or the situation or context.

Bill 3 does nothing to change these flaws in the legislation, Mr. Speaker. The exception is so narrow that in the vast majority of cases the collection, use, or disclosure of information will remain prohibited. This doesn't address the issue of unconstitutional restrictions on freedom of expression, nor does it address the spirit of the Supreme Court ruling, which was to broaden and better protect constitutionally protected rights.

Mr. Speaker, it's for those reasons that I will strongly urge members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. Let's rewrite this legislation. Let's get it right the first time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers? The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to be very brief in closing. This is my referral. Certainly, I recognize all of the arguments that have been made here this evening. Just, you know, quickly an overview. It's very important that we don't duplicate services and ways by which we can negotiate both information and labour in general. The way that things have been kind of set up here now, I'm just concerned about putting undue pressure on the Privacy Commissioner and having that office adjudicate things that should really be dealt with in the realm of the labour board. I mean, that's one issue that I think bears a reason to review this in the future. Let's not forget that we do have this provision for 2015. I think my referral is very similar to that.

As well, we must always be careful at every juncture that we don't in this Legislature step on people's capacity to express themselves in groups. It's very important that we recognize the means and the terms by which individuals and organizations can in fact communicate with the public to further their endeavours, regardless of what they happen to be up to, within the realms of the law. To communicate, especially in a labour dispute, is probably the best way to dissipate and to seek resolution – right? – as information is usually one of the stumbling blocks in a labour dispute. So if you in fact do have an opportunity to express more information, then the chances are that we end up with more labour stability in the end and fewer strikes and other forms of labour strife.

Certainly, the privacy office has offered us some interesting perspective on this, but, you know, we have to go right back to the reason that we are debating this here in the first place, which is that the Supreme Court made a very specific ruling on this. It was unequivocal, and it was a very strong ruling as well. I think that always should give us pause as legislators. When the judicial arm of government gives us a direction, we should take it and move through it in the most thorough and complete sort of way possible.

I'm concerned about the narrowness of the legislation that we've formed here today in regard to when there's just a strike on. Right? I mean, as we've said very clearly before, there are many groups that don't strike. They can't strike, it's against the law to strike, maybe they're just seeking first contract, and so forth. We don't want to exclude that either. Ultimately, we want to build legislation that is organic and that can be serving changes in our society and changes to how information is disseminated and communications are performed over time. Let's not try to restrict ourselves too much.

Mr. Speaker, it's been a very interesting process here, and I do recommend and encourage everyone to vote for my referral if you don't mind.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 7

Chartered Professional Accountants Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 7, the Chartered Professional Accountants Act, 2014. Before us today is a set of proposed legislative changes related to the accounting profession in Alberta. Please let me give you a little bit of background. For the last year our government has been working with three self-regulating accounting professions in Alberta as they approached us to move forward on their desire to merge into one association offering a single professional designation.

Currently we have three separate associations offering their own professional designations. They are the chartered accountants, or CAs, represented by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta; the certified management accountants, or CMAs, represented by the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta; and the certified general accountants, or CGAs, represented by the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta.

To be clear, Mr. Speaker, they all do a great job. However, they have said that the time has come for a merger. It's a part of a national and international movement in the accounting profession. The new association would be known as the chartered professional accountants of Alberta. It would issue just one professional accounting designation, the chartered professional accountant, or CPA.

What we have before us is a series of proposed changes repealing the Regulated Accounting Profession Act, the existing overarching legislation that governs all three accounting bodies. The most significant change proposed is the dissolution of the existing three accounting organizations and their merger into one unified association.

As I mentioned a moment ago, unification in the accounting profession is a growing national and international trend. Mr. Speaker, this proposed merger respects the democratic will of Alberta's professional accounting regulatory bodies and their combined 24,500 members. As you can imagine, merging three organizations that previously competed for membership is no easy task, yet all three recognize the benefits of creating one organization with one designation. To make this major change happen, the three associations formed a unification agency, which went to work to design what a single organization would look like, how it would be governed, and, most importantly, set the rules in place for issuing the new CPA designation.

Geographically you should know that the consolidation of accounting professions began last year at the national level with the merger of two governing bodies, creating a new Canadian designation of chartered professional accountant under CPA Canada. Today every province and territory is working toward the necessary legislative and regulatory changes to enable unification. In fact, more than 50 per cent of Canada's professional accountants are already using the CPA designation.

If passed, the CPA Act will bring Alberta in line with Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, and Prince Edward Island, where accountants are already using the CPA designation. Saskatchewan and New Brunswick recently have proclaimed their legislation, and several other provinces are expected to introduce similar unifying legislation this fall. Mr. Speaker, this legislation, if passed, will ensure that Alberta accountants remain competitive and have improved professional mobility.

The unified profession's vision is "to be the preeminent, internationally recognized Canadian accounting designation and business credential that best protects and serves the public interest." I wholeheartedly support this vision. By having a single designation and by being onside with our Canadian neighbours, this merger will help Alberta to continue to attract and retain the best and brightest accountants from across this country.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, with a single governing body and a single designation, these amendments support crossjurisdictional consistency, national labour mobility, and effective streamlined use of resources under one educational program. I believe the introduction of a single professional designation marks a step forward for the accounting profession in Alberta. The proposed CPA Act will keep our province in step with the rest of Canada and the world so that Albertans can continue to benefit from the highest standard of accounting services. I'm proud to carry Bill 7, the Chartered Professional Accountants Act, 2014, and I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 8

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak on behalf of Bill 8, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2014. This is a lawyer's bill. It amends several pieces of legislation: the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Estate Administration Act, the Family Law Act, Limitations Act, Notaries and Commissioners Act, the Oaths of Office Act, the Perpetuities Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Wills and Succession Act, and effects minor housekeeping changes to several other acts. These are amendments to update several justice-related acts to ensure provincial legislation is clear, consistent, and efficient.

I will now provide some details about the proposed changes, the most significant of which are to the Family Law Act. The amendments to the Family Law Act are specific to the child support recalculation program. The program helps separated and divorced parents update their court-ordered child support amounts to reflect changes in their income. It gives Albertans a low-cost and convenient way to ensure their child support amounts are kept current without continually having to go to court.

The child support recalculation program is a separate program from the maintenance enforcement program, known as MEP, although the two programs do work closely together. MEP collects or enforces child support court orders while the recalculation program adjusts child support amounts. Just to note, the recalculation program has nothing to do with withholding drivers', hunting, or fishing licences from those who don't pay their court-ordered support. Those are MEP sanctions.

Since the recalculation program began in 2010, it has helped many Alberta families avoid having to go back to court, reducing pressure on parents and on the court system. While the program has been successful, there are many opportunities to improve it to help more vulnerable Albertans, enhance client service, and further increase access to justice. Under Bill 8 there are four proposed amendments, which are supported by feedback from clients, lawyers, and judges in response to consultations earlier this year.

First, a mandatory clause will be required in all future child support orders to specifically indicate whether or not the support may be recalculated by the recalculation program. This requirement will create more awareness of the recalculation service so parents understand they have an option to update child support without having to go to court.

The second amendment will allow the recalculation program to always recalculate child support based on the anniversary date of the court order rather than the date specified by a judge or counsel. This will ensure recalculation work is spread over the course of the calendar year. As a result, the program will continue to be available for eligible parents who wish to register their court orders.

The third amendment provides further incentive to parents to disclose their income tax returns to the program. It sets a minimum income for nondisclosing parents based on that parent working 40 hours a week for minimum wage. The recalculation program needs parents to provide their tax returns and notices of assessment so staff can adjust the parent's child support. Currently if a parent doesn't provide their tax information, the program can deem the nondisclosing parent's income to have increased between 10 to 25 per cent the longer it has been since the person's income was last set.

The current percentage formula works well in most cases as a way to deal with parents who don't want to share their income tax information except when the recalculation program is dealing with incomes that are set at a very low level; for example, when the parent was a student or between jobs. These individuals were found in the past to earn an income between zero and $19,000 per year. Currently these parents have no incentive to provide income disclosure when their earnings improve, so some choose to thwart the recalculation program by withholding their income tax information.

To close this loophole, the proposed amendment will create a minimum level of income based on minimum wage earnings that would be attributed to a parent who does not provide their income tax information. It's important to remember that the new minimum wage income will only be applied to people who don't provide income disclosure and whose current guideline income is extremely low. For the vast majority of cases the recalculation program would continue to use the percentage increases that currently exist and have been effective. This new proposal is an additional tool to manage a very small number of previously low-income clients by bringing them into an earnings bracket where child support would be required.

The fourth amendment clarifies the information a parent must submit to a judge in their court application if they're objecting to a recalculation decision.

I will now move on to the Provincial Court Act. The proposed amendments to this act include streamlining the process for renewing judicial appointments. These amendments are supported by the Chief Justice of the Provincial Court.

Another act relating to courts is also being amended. The Court of Queen's Bench Act will formally recognize case management counsel as officers of the court. It gives the Chief Justice authority to assign duties to them, which will enhance their ability to assist in moving actions to early resolution. Other proposed changes to this act will streamline the process for renewing masters' appointments. Again, these amendments are supported by the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Next, numerous acts are being amended to ensure consistent language with the statutes and the Alberta Rules of Court. Included is an amendment providing the authority to make omnibus amendments to regulations to ensure consistent language within the regulations and the Alberta Rules of Court. The other ministries affected by this act have been informed of the amendments, and there are no concerns.

Next, following a recommendation from the Alberta Law Reform Institute a housekeeping amendment is being made to the Oaths of Office Act to make it more consistent with other legislation.

Next is the Notaries and Commissioners Act. Passed in 2013, it updates and modernizes the Notaries Public Act and the Commissioners for Oaths Act. Before it can be proclaimed into force, it requires two minor amendments so the act meets its original intent. Both the Canadian Bar Association and the Law Society of Alberta support these amendments.

Next, housekeeping amendments are required to the Wills and Succession Act and the Estate Administration Act to ensure the two are consistent. A number of minor amendments will also be made, including clarifying the current law that a will revoked under the prior legislation remains revoked under the current act. The Wills and Succession Act provisions apply only to a marriage or divorce occurring on or after February 1, 2012, when the act came into force. In addition, persons who are required to be served with notice of a family maintenance application will be allowed to obtain disclosure of the same financial information available to a family member or the personal representative. The Canadian Bar Association was consulted to identify amendments to the Wills and Succession Act.

Next, the Limitations Act will confirm the time period during which court actions can be started for contribution claims. A discussion paper on the proposed limitation period was posted online earlier this year. Feedback was received from a number of stakeholder groups, including the Law Society of Alberta, the Canadian Bar Association, the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and others. All the responses were supportive.

Lastly, the Perpetuities Act codifies the rules against perpetuities in Alberta. Under this act qualifying environmental trusts, which are special trusts for funding environmental reclamation at the end of a development project's life, are likely to be subject to the rule against perpetuities. The proposed amendments will exempt qualifying environmental trusts and remove an impediment to the funding of environmental reclamation. If passed, the exemption will apply to trusts entered into in 2014 and later to enable pipeline companies to establish trusts in Alberta without special provisions. The amendments were requested by the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association on behalf of pipeline companies. The act is also supported by Treasury Board and Finance, Energy, and Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments will help ensure our legislation is up to date and reflects the changes in our province. Albertans expect and deserve clarity and consistency, and Bill 8 will help achieve that.

Mr. Speaker, I now move to adjourn debate.

Bill 1

Respecting Property Rights Act

[Adjourned debate November 26: Mr. Oberle]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this bill, and I've been waiting six years for this day. What you need to know is that when this bill was first announced, long before it was introduced, I was travelling out in the public opposing this bill with every ounce of energy I could bring to bear. So, for me, this is a pivotal moment, and I will not allow this moment to go unannounced. This minister, this Premier have done more in one hour for property rights than the previous two Premiers did in their whole tenure. I will give credit where credit is due, and I will not tolerate the Wildrose marginalizing this bill and minimizing what this bill has done.

This bill has come forward, as far as I'm concerned, at precisely the right time as more and more people stood up and were finally heard. The Wildrose actually ran on this bill. They ran on a platform to kill Bill 19, kill Bill 50, kill Bill 36. Those signs are still out in the public today. You can travel to Cypress-Medicine Hat and you can find those signs out in the rural areas. Those signs are out in the rural areas all around southern Alberta still today – Kill Bill 19, Kill Bill 36, Kill Bill 50 – yet I'm hearing that this is not good enough for the people who ran on this. In fact, when you look at what has happened and the progress we are now finally making, somebody has to stand up and say that we're finally making ground. For this Premier to go out into the public and hear this issue and act on it, I think this is a great thing, and I want to commend the party and the Premier for doing this. But I'm going to show some of the inconsistencies and the hypocrisy of the Wildrose, the so-called protectors of property rights, who think that somehow they are the sole guardians, yet they leave this issue behind when they say that this is not good enough.

This is the right step, and I'm going to show this. I'm not going to speak of these other laws, but what I will do is that I will speak in the context of the bill numbers. All they are is contextual, and we need to understand that. You look at things like Bill 50. We've heard a lot about that. Heck, I stood up today and even brought up two points of order on Bill 50. The fact is that when you look at who supported and who did not, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, if I remember correctly, tabled a letter from one of his constituents very concerned about the cost of those transmission lines and what it would do to the industry. He stood up and he brought those concerns forward in this Assembly.

I will have you know, Mr. Speaker, that two members of the Wildrose voted for the bill when they were on that side. That's an interesting contextual comparison in the fact that one member on that side stood up, and two members on this side who claim that they ran on this actually voted in support of the bill. It's pretty interesting. Yet you still get these members – the Member for Strathmore-Brooks stood up and talked about: why aren't they building the transmission lines for the cogeneration up in Fort McMurray? I can't forget that question because that's a Bill 50 transmission line. It didn't make sense on the property rights issue.

Regardless of that, Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Member for Calgary-Shaw, when he stood up on property rights, claimed that this was not enough. I made note of the fact that he put on his website that he voted to eliminate a landowner's or property owner's right for a notice of an application, a reasonable opportunity for a landowner to learn the facts. He voted against the landowner having a reasonable opportunity to file a statement of concern, and he also voted against the landowner having a reasonable opportunity to cross-examine evidence. He voted against a landowner's right to a hearing plus for the removing of the public interest test on the property rights issue.

But that's not even the great tragedy here. You heard from every member when they stood up and they spoke about this bill. They all referenced how incredibly bad – how incredibly bad – the Land Assembly Project Area Act is and how that is the most crucial bill. And I will tell you this. They referred to it as Bill 36, but I'm going to quote right out of Hansard, Mr. Speaker, from the House leader of the Wildrose when he stood up to support this bill. What he said was: "I am very excited to see this bill proceed. I support it, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support it as well." Now, it is a conflict or straight hypocrisy when somebody says that this is the most egregious bill that they possibly know, yet the member right there that is making these assertions actually voted for it. By the way, he also went on to say, "It is an unprecedented victory for the rights of landowners in this province." Well, you never heard me say that, but some over there apparently have.

Clearly, when it comes to the issue of property rights, they are not the only champions of property rights or the only advocates of property rights. The fact is that it is the duty of everybody in here, and the fact is that finally – finally – we have a Premier that has heard property rights issues from landowners and has taken the first step. He has also indicated that they are taking further steps, and we have a committee that has now been tasked with taking a look at this issue further along, but I want to point out what are some of the major, major issues and why it is important that this bill be passed.

The Land Assembly Project Area Act has been passed into law. No, it has not been proclaimed, but this government could proclaim it at any point in time. They just have not proclaimed it, which is a good thing. I can't show you anyone that has been violated by Bill 36 or Bill 19, but I will tell you that the whole price of Bill 50, in my view, is a price that the public is paying. We don't know if there's a price on that Bill 24. We just know that the government did expropriate four spaces unilaterally across the province. What's the price of that? I don't know. No one knows. If the government actually addresses those issues, then they will have covered the full gamut, the full gamut of the property rights issues that have affected and concerned most property owners.

With Bill 19 what is absolutely important is this. It's the power that the government gave itself. It wasn't that the government abused anyone. It was the power that the government gave itself to abuse. That's why this bill was necessary today, Bill 1, to remove this legislation so that that power to abuse is no longer in existence on this particular issue dealing with utility corridors, and that's really important.

I want to point out a couple of things in this bill that are absolutely essential. In section 7 of the Land Assembly Project Area Act what it said is that if in the opinion of the minister it appears that a person has done, is doing, or is about to do something, then the minister could issue an enforcement order, and that enforcement order would carry the effect of a judgment of the Queen's Bench, and it could carry a $100,000 fine in penalties or two years in jail. Now, you think about that in the context of the way it was written. Basically, if you've not done anything but the minister was of the opinion you were going to do something, the minister could issue an enforcement order to tell you to stop doing what you have not yet done, and if you didn't behave and do what the minister told you to do, you could be looking at two years in jail or a $100,000 fine. It was an absolutely ludicrous piece of legislation, and that's why it is so important that it be removed. [interjection] We'll get the Education minister under control in a second. Don't worry. He's excited about the bill. I know he is.

The whole issue of dealing with utility corridors is now back into the realm of dealing with restricted development areas in schedule 5 of the Government Organization Act, and that's where it belongs. Now, if the government decides it wants to move it elsewhere again, so be it, but what's most important, the biggest single issue for all property owners, is one word: process. That's it: process. What they want is a fair and just process, that they can be heard and that if land is taken, if property is taken, it is taken for a legitimate public interest and that the property owners themselves would be made whole. That's it. They want that consistent process, that they can be heard when property is taken. Once this government achieves it, it will have succeeded in dealing with this issue. That is the most important aspect of what is transpiring here today with the start of restoring property owners' rights. In my view, eliminating the Land Assembly Project Area Act is the right thing to do.

What I would ask the government to do as they say they're moving forward is to revisit the Land Stewardship Act because it cannot be repealed right now because of so many different things that have taken place, but there are provisions in that act that can be adjusted to restore process, a fair process to make property owners whole.

The other issue that needs to be addressed is glaring. It's the whole issue of carbon capture and sequestration, where the government unilaterally expropriated all the pore spaces under everybody's property. What they should do is rescind that and deal with each property owner as required should this technology move forward. I will tell you that I still don't believe that CCS will move forward. I really believe that we need to do something different to reduce our carbon emissions and to show the world that we're going to be a leader in the environment versus just pumping it underground.

With that, I want to point out one last sort of curious contradiction. If you are the so-called advocate, defender, or friend of property rights – we had an incident here, right in our own Assembly, where a member had their coffee cup, personal property, destroyed by the so-called advocates of property rights. That is a terrible thing when you think about the assault on property rights. Granted it's a $3 cup, but I will tell you this, Mr. Speaker. When they come for my coffee cup, in the words of Kikki Planet: we will make the Vietnam War look like a tailgate party. I will fight to the last coffee bean. They will never get my coffee cup. I'll defend that. I was dying to say that, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I will sit down, and hopefully we can vote on this.

10:50

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, it's always hard to get up on stage after a performance like that, but I just wanted to say a couple of words in regard to Bill 1. We certainly are supporting the bill. It was an interesting about-face that we saw this government do. We knew from the beginning that it was a chance for the PC government here to move to the right and try to absorb some of the lost votes that they had almost five or six years ago now. It was a way by which the Wildrose really built their rural base. Something, I think, had to be done, but it's more of a political move, Mr. Speaker, I believe, than an actual substantial commitment to property rights.

You know, the repeal of Bill 19 is all fine and good, but there's a whole suite of bills that I think really were onerous to the landowners in rural areas and in urban areas, too. It seems as though this was a way to signal not a new management, really, but signal the government's intentions to move to the right. We certainly saw another manifestation of that today. It wasn't pretty, and I think that Albertans will be watching with skepticism as to how really new these PCs are because, in fact, this feels a lot more like 1974 than 2014 with many of these things that we've seen recently.

Yeah, I mean, we're certainly supporting this bill, and it's an interesting part of the political drama more than it is of substantial legislation that actually affects things here in the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, shall be brief. This is speaking on the Respecting Property Rights Act, brought in by the new Premier. I tend to agree with the hon. House leader for the New Democratic Party that this is really a bill more about politics rather than substance. If you look at the Land Assembly Project Area Act, it was never proclaimed when it came before the House in 2009. Nevertheless, the bill, I guess, serves the government's purposes, at least rhetoric on acknowledging property rights in some form and fashion.

I will also note that there were a series of bills that did come through which, at least for a time, had coalesced, I guess, power in the government's hands, to not put too fine of a point on it, and it caused a great deal of concern. I know our party voted against numerous bills that were passed by the government in this House as we saw similar concerns that these powers had devolved to a cabinet decision-making process rather than doing it in an open and transparent fashion and the like.

We still have some concerns out there if you're actually talking about people's ability to be heard under the new regulator. Under our new energy regulator act there's no ability for people directly adversely affected to be heard at a hearing, and it narrows the scope of that. Those types of issues are still out there that allow for Albertans to have a public forum.

Nevertheless, you know, it is what it is. The politics of the day dictated that the government do something. This appears to be their attempt, anyway, to do something even though it's largely symbolic. I think we've always had the ability to do things for the public good when it has come to property as long as fair compensation was given. That's always been provided for under the Expropriation Act. I think that once it's clarified to people how the Expropriation Act works, how it is in the mix and how it, hopefully, goes forward – I think that's more important than this current political posturing, anything to that effect.

Those are my comments. I appreciate the theatre and the like surrounding this as it is always a great deal of fun and games, but whether it has actually changed anything, I'm not so sure.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing none, the question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Bill 4

Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 4, Horse Racing Alberta Amendment Act, 2014.

Bill 4 proposes changes to the composition of Horse Racing Alberta's board of directors to provide greater public representation on the board. These changes are in line with the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. The Premier has committed to merit-based appointments in all government organizations. This ensures that the right people are in the right jobs, and Horse Racing Alberta will be no exception. This bill is part of the Premier's commitment to a stronger public agency board governance, and it will further support the board's accountability and transparency.

I'd like to share a few facts about horse racing in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, horse racing has a long history in the province, and the industry supports over 8,000 Albertans. Studies indicate that the racing sector is connected to nearly $400 million in annual direct, indirect, and induced economic benefits in Alberta. The horse-racing industry delivers a positive economic impact from gaming revenues at racing entertainment centres as well as from related agricultural activities. The horse-racing industry also benefits rural communities where breeding and raising racing horses is of great significance.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks for agreeing with us that the horse-racing industry is important to Alberta. He and others will be happy to know that one of the key reasons we would like more public representation in the sport is to increase the accountability of the board with regard to taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislative amendment to the Horse Racing Alberta Act will decrease the HRA's board of directors from 12 members to 11 and increase the number of public members from 3 to 6. These changes will strengthen HRA's governance structure. In consultation with HRA all public members will be selected from an open competition and screened for the relevant experience and expertise. The board will also have five industry-nominated members. These members will be nominated by their respective industry groups. All board appointments, both public and industry-nominated, will be made by an order in council.

Mr. Speaker, with these proposed changes, more than half of the board will be public members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and one of these non-industry members will be designated as chair of the board. These changes strike the right balance between public accountability and industry representation. Furthermore, remuneration for board members will be determined by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and the community remuneration order will apply.

In closing, I would like to reiterate that these legislative changes are part of our commitment to strong policy on agency board governance. I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has moved to adjourn debate on third reading of Bill 4.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Sorry. I take that back.

The Deputy Speaker: That wasn't quite what I heard?

Mrs. Klimchuk: I take it back. I just want to move it, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. I'll look for other speakers.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will attempt to keep my comments fairly brief. I'm going to speak on behalf of my whole caucus here with my comments. I'm going to go through a bit of history. I apologize because I'm starting to get a bit of sore throat, as are other members in the Assembly. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I and the New Democrat caucus do not support this bill. I recognize that some of the changes introduced are necessary in order to increase transparency, but there remain considerable issues with the act as it is proposed. You know, the biggest opposition that I have to this bill and that we've had since 2002 and even before then – and I'll go through the history. We oppose the continued subsidization of the horse-racing industry in this province.

The change made in this bill in regard to remuneration, the payment of expenses to board members, we recognize was necessary. We do agree that the ability of the board to determine their own rate of remuneration and payment of expenses needed to be changed. However, the proposed change is not much better. It keeps decisions regarding the remuneration and payment of expenses behind closed doors. For a government that loves to talk about transparency and openness, the proof is in the legislation when it actually does the opposite. This is neither transparent nor accountable for the people of Alberta.

Not only is the government secretive, clearly, by allowing remuneration payment of expenses to be debated and decided behind closed doors, which is quite opaque, the government is showing that it's quite out of touch with the reality of many Albertans in the fact that the bill doesn't end subsidies given to the horse-racing industry.

Now, industry insiders will claim that there are no subsidies for this industry. The Alberta Standardbred Horse Association states in a document about slot revenue in Horse Racing Alberta: "Let's be very clear; horse racing in Alberta is not subsidized by the Provincial Government." However, the annual report of Horse Racing Alberta, the board in question in the bill, shows that more than 50 per cent of revenue from slots goes to Horse Racing Alberta, not the lottery fund. This is compared to 70 per cent of casino slot revenue and 85 per cent of the VLT revenue, which goes to the Alberta lottery fund. Had 70 per cent of the revenue of slots at race tracks gone to the Alberta lottery fund, it would have amounted to an increase of more than $8 million more in 2012 and more than $7.5 million more in 2013. Not only is the horse-racing industry benefiting from their ability to keep more of the revenue generated by slot machines than casinos do, they're also benefiting through the exception that allows them to have these slot machines in the first place, Mr. Speaker.

In 1996 the government allowed horse-racing tracks to have slot machines, going against previous government policy, which stated that casinos were the only place slot machines were allowed. The program gave the same 15 per cent of revenue that they gave to casino owners to the tracks; however, it is the rest of the profit, most of which normally goes to charity, in this industry that is largely kept by the industry.

In 2008, Mr. Speaker, $35 million from slot revenue at Alberta's three race tracks went to the horse-racing industry; in 2012, more than $22 million; in 2013, more than $21 million. Between 2001 and 2011, in that 10-year span, over $260 million has gone to the industry through shared slot revenue. So it's clear that the industry is being subsidized.

However, what is also clear is that even with the subsidies provided by the government, Horse Racing Alberta continues to struggle, consistently posting annual deficits. In 2009 their deficit was almost $750,000, in 2012 a deficit of over $150,000, in 2013 their deficit was $970,000, and in 2013 their cumulative deficit was over $320,000. Clearly, despite the subsidies this industry, horse racing in Alberta, continues to struggle, posting considerable deficits in three years between 2009 and 2013. Almost 20 years since receiving slot machines, this government continues to subsidize an industry that is still struggling.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I mean, I can tell you that that is our biggest objection to this, the fact that, you know, the minister stands up and speaks about openness and transparency, which there isn't in this nor in this bill. My frustration is that we continue to subsidize an industry that is losing money, that only benefits select Albertans. This isn't improving the general well-being of all Albertans. Again, had much of the profits from the slot machines gone into the general Alberta lottery fund, which does fund a lot of great projects and programs throughout the province, there would've been millions more dollars gone toward services and programs that Albertans need and rely on.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we cannot support this bill. It is our contention that Horse Racing Alberta should not continue to be subsidized by the Alberta treasury and by Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus I, too, will be voicing our opinion as to why this bill should not go forward. Largely, it's very similar to those presented and which we made in second reading here in this House. But, you know, we as a caucus cannot see why we continue to subsidize the horse-racing industry.

It is clear from the arrangement that has been made with this government that Horse Racing Alberta enjoys a unique position of deriving profits from video lottery terminals. That is different than other organizations that are across this province. It has become clear that because of their unique ability to have slot machines at their race tracks that pay out at different rates to this one unique group at the expense of all other groups combined, it is, to me, one of those things that I really can't believe is still happening in this province. It's happened for a long time, Mr. Speaker. I think the numbers were that over $200 million has gone into this industry. Really, is it time that this ends? Well, we've said long ago that it should never have started. Really, it should be ending today, but it doesn't look like that's going to happen.

If we're looking at some of the contentious points of the bill, really, there's been no openness and transparency here. We're not able to look into what the expenses are, what the structure is doing. In fact, what bothers me very much so about this bill is the fact that the Auditor General can't even look at what is happening in this organization. Somehow it has stayed out of the financial management act. When everything else is involved in this province, the Auditor General can look at it to make recommendations, to look at whether it's serving the Alberta people, whether we're getting value for money for the investments being made, and the like. I think the simple fact of the matter that this government bends over backwards to keep it out of this act speaks volumes as to, you know, the lack of openness and transparency with this unique group.

I can also say that I can't see that it is really moving the betterment of society forward. It serves a narrow group of interest. In fact, if we look at whether this revenue would go back into the lottery fund as it, in my view, should, you'd have $8 million, which would do more for the public good. As indicated, there are lots of good charities supported by the Alberta lottery fund that could use our support, that deserve our support, and the like, and we ought to be maximizing revenue streams towards those groups.

I can say that despite this subsidy that is going to this association that looks like it's struggling financially, one wonders whether it's dying a slow death despite the propping up of it. I don't know whether it's diversifying the economy. I don't know whether gamblers are even choosing this as a method of entertainment anymore. You know, you can go to off-track betting throughout this province, and it's all over the place. Maybe they have been deciding with their feet where they wish to go to make their gambling choices, and that's just the simple fact of the matter. I guess there is some minor lipstick. I think the move to have more public members is a small step in the right direction.

For the simple fact that this government should not be involved in subsidizing this industry, our caucus will be voting against this, and we'd urge all members or urge the government at some point in time to really evaluate whether this is in our best interests for the long run, what this group actually does that is uniquely different from all others in this province to deserve this sweetheart deal. I pointed out in my first comments, you know, that bingos appear to be dying a slow death, yet we haven't reached out and done some magical VLT deal with them. So, you know, there doesn't seem to be precedent around whether these are actually good things, and I would put forward that they're not.

It's time for us to look at whether this is in fact reasonable, and for all the reasons that I said, we will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, hon. Deputy Government House Leader, do you wish to close?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Bill 5 Securities Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 5, the Securities Amendment Act, 2014.

As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood pointed out, securities regulation is a provincial jurisdiction, but this law has changed since the division of powers was set out in the Constitution Act, 1867, and the change keeps coming now and into the future. That's why Alberta along with other provinces and territories continue to amend their securities legislation to keep pace with changes in technology, new products, and market innovations and to support the ongoing reform of the system. The changes proposed in Bill 5 further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws and support the ongoing reform of Canada's securities regulatory system and help Canada in meeting its international commitments.

As I mentioned earlier, the amendments relate to several aspects of securities regulation. In addition to allowing for the continuing harmonization of general derivatives provisions, Bill 5 also supports recognition and oversight of the Canadian Public Accountability Board as an auditor oversight organization, incorporation of representatives of registered brokers and advisers, enhanced enforcement provisions, fee-setting provisions for the Alberta Securities Commission, and other housekeeping amendments to the Securities Act and consequential amendments to related legislation.

You're all aware of the federal government's efforts to establish a co-operative capital markets regulator. Some of you might be wondering why we don't wait to see what happens with that before updating our legislation. The reality is this. We do not definitely know if or when the federal government's proposed system will proceed. The federal government anticipates that it will be operational in fall 2015, but the timelines continue to change. There's no guarantee that this milestone will be met. Five provinces have joined, but five have not.

The trading of securities does not stop to wait for governments to sort out their differences. Taking a wait-and-see approach will compromise our efforts to maintain up-to-date and responsive securities regulation in an environment that is more complex, more sophisticated, more international in scope, and more driven by technology than ever before. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is committed to continuous improvement of our securities regulatory system and ensuring that it is operating as efficiently and effectively as possible while protecting Alberta's investors and maintaining Canada's reputation as a highly regarded leader in securities regulation. Bill 5 supports that commitment.

In this spirit I move third reading and ask that all members of the Legislature support this bill so this important work can continue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the main our caucus supports this bill. It goes some measure in trying to bring about some protection for investors in this province. Largely it's a result of the 2008 market collapse, which was largely attributed to derivatives trading.

I would be remiss if I didn't note that, you know, a large part of the reason why we in this country were spared some of the calamity of others, in the United States and around the world, was that we resisted many of the changes to banking laws that were made in the United States and other places, that saw a merger of both the securities and the lending arms of banks and that were actually being proposed up here by, I guess, the federal Conservatives at one point in time, that thought this was a good move. At that time I'm glad it was resisted by then Prime Minister Chrétien and Finance minister Paul Martin. It saved us from a lot of the problems that we would have had, and it was recognized that Canada's banking system, as a result of resisting these changes, was able to hold up fairly well in comparison to the rest of the world when markets were crumbling and the like.

I think it's important to note that oftentimes the profit motive doesn't always lead to individuals or companies or the like going forward in the most open and honest ways, so we must ensure that we have structures in place that make the market system efficient and fair, that investors are protected from these unknowns in the marketplace, and that we put people in power to figure out and to ensure that there are no underhanded dealings going on. This is ongoing work, and we should always be diligent in ensuring that investors are getting an open, honest, and fair bill of goods when they are making purchases and the like.

I think, you know, that this move is working with the decentralized securities regulatory regime, and provincial governments must keep acting in co-ordination together to try and balance this protection given that under property and civil rights the securities industry is a provincial responsibility. It's a delicate balance of how we can keep it within Alberta's jurisdiction as well as work with our other Canadian counterparts to ensure that we have fair markets that reflect adequately investor protection, banking system protection, and the like.

So as I stated, in the main we're supportive of these changes, and we hope that the government continues to provide for fair markets with reasonable penalties for violators and to ensure that we are looking out for the best interests in the long run, not necessarily short market-making opportunities that may improve the bottom line temporarily but leave people hung out to dry when stuff hits the fan, if you know what I'm saying, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: No. That's after you.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep these comments fairly brief. I rise today to speak to Bill 5, Securities Amendment Act, 2014. I'll start off by saying that this act is a good step in many respects to harmonize our laws with the rest of the provinces and to provide some increased investor protection, but just like these security amendment bills get repetitive, it gets repetitive for us to point out to the government that we wouldn't need to waste valuable time and resources amending the Securities Act every few months if we would just join the other provinces in supporting a national regulator.

Moving on to auditor oversight, we're happy to see better oversight of auditors as well, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Public Accountability Board, or CPAB, needs the powers and protections necessary to improve financial reporting by public companies in Canada. All we need to do is look at Enron and WorldCom, in the early 2000s, to know that auditor oversight is very important to protect not just individual investors but also to protect the entire global market.

We also approve of bringing our laws closer to those in other provinces, though it's worth repeating that these repetitive security amendment bills wouldn't be necessary if Alberta would agree to discuss a national regulator, which is the case for most other jurisdictions, most other countries around the world. Of those which regulate securities, interestingly, Mr. Speaker, Bosnia and Herzegovina is the only other country in the world besides Canada without a national securities regulator, so that puts us in a very interesting category.

Calls for a national regulator date back to 1935 and include the 1964 Porter Commission, a 1979 study by the department of consumer and corporate affairs, the 1994 memorandum of understanding between the Atlantic provinces and the federal government, the 2003 Wise Persons' Committee report, and the 2006 Crawford panel. As it stands, Mr. Speaker, B.C. and Ontario and the federal government are going to be entering into a co-operative regulatory system, and Alberta will be left out.

The need for this legislation perfectly illustrates the absurdity of continuing on without a national regulator. We have to keep wasting government time and resources or those of the ASC in updating legislation and harmonizing it with other jurisdictions across the country as opposed to joining the national regulator. We wouldn't have to continue to do this every few months. Mr. Speaker. Another point is that all of the time and resources that are being expended on this and coming back to the Legislature to update the legislation could be better spent on enforcement and investigation to better protect Alberta's investors.

Capital markets are increasingly integrated, and so is our global market, so it's inefficient and in many cases impossible for a provincial regulator to handle these complexities. In other words, a provincial regulator would have to work with a national regulator regardless, so there is a duplication and a waste of services and dollars here. You know, a system of 13 different territorial and province regulators also leaves us vulnerable to fraud or simply just increased regulatory failure.

Another point, Mr. Speaker: Canada's financial services industry and indeed all industry is less competitive without a national securities regulator. There are significant costs to companies and investors when they need to research 13 different sets of laws and rules applied through the 13 different security commissions for each deal or investment. You know, we talk about wanting to attract investment in this province. Well, having separate securities regulators is going to detract investment and be very timely and inefficient costwise for investors. The lack of a national regulator also places a significant regulatory burden on small and emerging companies, who don't have the resources of major companies to deal with regulators' filing fees and requirements. So the frustration here for us is that money could be better spent, time better used if we had one national securities regulator.

Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians as a whole lose billions of dollars a year to securities fraud? You know, it is our contention that you would have less securities fraud if we had one national regulator and the money that we spend on updating this legislation went into enforcement and protection of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I will close by actually saying that, yes, it seems that I have very little choice but to support this bill because it is necessary, but I do urge this government to consider becoming part of a national securities regulator, which most other countries – I believe we're the only G-7 country that doesn't have one. It seems like we're not putting the best interests of Albertans and Canadians first by refusing to join a national regulator and insisting that we have individual ones for each province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.
Seeing none, are there other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 6 Statutes Amendment Act, 2014 (No. 2)

The Chair: We are on amendment A2. Speakers to amendment A2?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the bill. Speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks a lot, Mr. Chair. Certainly, I just want to maybe briefly remind people about the overall more global problem with Bill 6, which is that it creeps into this territory that I really don't want to see here in this Legislature, which is the omnibus bill – right? – that has many different sort of tentacles reaching out to cover things that need to be dealt with here in a housekeeping sort of way. But if we insert some elements of more substantive legislation into that sort of miscellaneous statutes bill, then it changes its character. It moves from something that's benign to something that can be a real problem.

You know, I've said it before, and I'll say it again: let's say no to omnibus bills. Right? Let's keep Alberta omnibus bill free, and let's debate these things on an individual basis or come to a consensus agreement through the House leaders if that's the route that we need to or choose to go.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I, too, would like to reiterate the point that we have a whole series of amendments that are incorporated into one bill. In the main we should try to avoid that practice.

There is a very contentious issue when it comes to WCB and the merits that that change made, that would have been better purported to be on its own. It just makes it easier, more clean, and gives the ability to discuss issues on their merits and allows opposition parties to look at the issues more closely and to in fact get a better briefing from the minister and things of that nature.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

11:30

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be brief. The WCB example is really why we need to pass this bill. The Privacy Commissioner has asked for changes, and the changes only really enable us to keep sharing information with the Appeals Commission so that they can hear appeals. There are thousands of Albertans that need the service of WCB, thousands that have appeals crop up over the course of the year, and of course we need to be able to share the information with the appeals commissioner in order to have that happen.

Mr. Chair, this very much is housekeeping based on requests from the Privacy Commissioner, and I urge all members of the House to vote in favour of this important piece of legislation.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know what? I just want to clarify for the minister that this isn't just housekeeping. Under the proposed amendments there are fewer safeguards to ensure that employers don't see irrelevant details about an employee's claim like their medical history, medications, or claims made previously in other jurisdictions. You know, WCB claimants should be entitled to privacy from their employers just like any other Albertan. When the power and balance between employer and employee is heightened by the filing of a claim, the rights of the employee need to be given special consideration in these circumstances. This process needs to be transparent so that employees understand what's being done on their behalf and their rights are not being trivialized merely because they've decided to make a claim against their employer.

It's for these reasons predominantly, Mr. Chair, that I will not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

The question has been called.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I would like to move at this point that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 6. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In consideration of the hour and the considerable progress made this evening, I'd now like to move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:35 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 2, 2014

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we strive to do our best for the generations that will follow, let us be mindful of and reflect upon the accomplishments of those who came before us. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, you may recall me mentioning yesterday in the House that I would pay tribute to a former member of this Assembly who passed away earlier, in fact on November 24, 2014.

Mr. Henry Woo

March 18, 1929, to November 24, 2014

The Speaker: Mr. Henry Woo, March 18, 1929, to November 24, 2014, served two terms as the Member for Edmonton-Sherwood Park, from 1979 to 1986. Born in Lethbridge Mr. Woo had a varied career, including serving in the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve, the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the RCMP. His background and unique mix of skills led him to become an executive assistant to various ministers in the Alberta government before his own election to this Assembly. With his interest in breaking down barriers between different communities and cultures, he played a critical role in the expansion of Alberta's trade with the Pacific Rim. He was invested as a member of the Order of Canada in 1990 and received the Queen Elizabeth II diamond jubilee medal in 2012. During his terms of office Mr. Woo served on numerous committees, including the Select Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, on Private Bills, on Public Accounts, and on Public Affairs.

In a moment of silent prayer I would ask you to rise and please remember Mr. Woo as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon him.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have today two members of Mr. Woo's family. Allow me to introduce them, and after I have, I would ask you to join me in welcoming them. I would ask them to each remain standing as we pay tribute to them. Ms Sheri Woo is the daughter of former member Henry Woo. She is accompanied here today by her husband, Mr. Blair Stuparek, son-in-law of Mr. Woo. I would also like to reach out with this statement to Mr. Richard Woo, son of former member Henry Woo, who, unfortunately, was not able to join us today. We all know what our families do to help support us, and in this case we are so grateful to have two members of Mr. Woo's family, whom we know both gave him great support during the time they had together. Please join me in saying thank you.

Thank you so much, Sheri and Blair, for being here with us today.
[applause]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, starting with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that our guests are actually in the gallery right now. They're from Maskwacis, in my constituency, 16 young people and their leaders. I would ask, in case they are within earshot, that my colleagues offer them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's give me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 27 bright young minds from Beacon Heights school. I just want to say that I had the pleasure of reading to this class during reading week in October, and the students loved – or at least it was my impression that they loved it – the story of Mouseland, that I read to them, and they asked very thought-provoking questions. Accompanying the students today are Ms Meryl Roberts, Mrs. Orianna Klotz, and three parents with the class: Shyla Masse, Catherine Roberts, and Kathy Owens. I'd now ask them and the students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members 35 future leaders of Alberta and perhaps beyond who also happen to be exceptional students at Westbrook elementary school in Edmonton-Rutherford. These students are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise now and receive the very, very warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on to other important visitors, starting with the Minister of Transportation. I understand you have two introductions. Proceed.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very special women. The first is a bright young lady who was recently elected president of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, Terri Beaupre. Terri got her start in politics volunteering for my constituency association in Grande Prairie-Wapiti, and I am so proud now to see her at the helm of the PC Party. I know she's going to do great things.

My second guest, Mr. Speaker, is my wife of 38 years, Sherry Drysdale. She is the reason I'm able to give so much of myself and my time serving Albertans. I'm always happy when I get an opportunity to publicly acknowledge her hard work and sacrifice, and I'm very proud to have her here today. Both of these amazing women are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: You have your second introduction, of course.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a member of my Alberta Transportation staff, Ryan Reichl, who is here today with colleagues from his work unit in the leadership development group. This group is involved in the work of the department and the government of Alberta's leadership program. Mr. Reichl organized this learning experience today so that he and his colleagues could better understand the business of the Legislature.

They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Asia Pacific Relations, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two very special guests from the Asia Pacific Foundation of Canada. This foundation was created by an act of parliament in 1984 and has since been actively working to improve Canada's relations with Asia through research, awareness-building, and business and policy networks. The Asia Advisory Council was very pleased that we were chosen to partner with them to host the very first national conference, Canada's Asia Challenge: Building Skills and Knowledge for the Next Generation, this past October in Calgary. We are joined today by Mr. Stewart Beck, former Canadian High Commissioner to India and recently appointed president and CEO of the Asia Pacific Foundation, and also Mrs. Jill Price, VP of development and corporate affairs. They are both seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this House.
